We have put an alternate plan before the American authorities, one which we believe to be GATT consistent, involving a landing requirement in British Columbia. That is the plan that we are going with. We do not propose to change it. In our view, and according to the experts who advise us, it is a GATT-consistent landing requirement necessary to ensure proper management of the B.C. salmon resource. That is the plan with which we will be proceeding.

LANDINGS OF SALMON AND HERRING

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the same Minister.

He mentioned salmon but not herring. There is some concern about herring as well. With respect to both, the previous Minister for International Trade said on March 21 in this House that salmon and herring caught off the Pacific Coast will be landed in Canada in order to ensure accurate catch reporting, inspection, grading, and quality control.

Will the Minister assure us at this time that his Government will not sell the B.C. fishing industry down the free trade deal river as it did with B.C. grape growers?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is surprising to see rhetoric take away the common sense of the hon. gentleman. I proceed on the assumption that he has common sense, since he is a lawyer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: It is a large assumption.

Mr. Stupich: That is an insult.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Some things are indefensible.

Mr. Crosbie: His honour will know what is indefensible being a lawyer himself.

The position is that the GATT panel finding was that the regulations with respect to both B.C. salmon and herring were inconsistent and violated the GATT rules. Therefore the regulations as they apply to herring are also inconsistent with the GATT.

In due course we will be proposing other options with respect to herring. It is our intention to deal with that matter. However, it has to be dealt with under a different plan than with respect to B.C. salmon, the landing requirement, and the manner in which it is being proposed at the moment.

OIL SPILL IN VANCOUVER HARBOUR

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. British Columbia Members are very concerned about the repeated oil spills off the West Coast of Canada. We heard again this morning that there was another oil spill on the West Coast, this time right in Vancouver Harbour.

What is the Government doing to clean up this latest oil spill on the West Coast?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, an oil spill of 1,800 litres of fuel oil took place two days ago in the Vancouver Harbour. By yesterday at 5.17 p.m. the clean-up was completed. A summons will be served to the the ship which is called the Lok Pratima. We should have news about the summons in a few days.

I must add that I will be in Vancouver tomorrow—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bouchard: —to meet representatives of the petitioners who are asking for an inquiry about the condition of maritime traffic off the West Coast of Canada. I will be listening to them.

I can tell the House that the review we have undertaken in my Department will include an element of public input. I will have more news for the House later on.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CONNAUGHT LABORATORIES – POSSIBLE PASSAGE OF CONTROL TO FRENCH GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Connaught Laboratories is Canada's leading biotechnological firm. It produces medicines such as insulin and the Salk vaccine.

In a deal concluded on March 12 control of this leading Canadian company will pass from Canadian hands into the hands of the Government of France. Will the Minister tell us what steps he has taken to keep control of Connaught in Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, under the Investment Canada Act this transaction would have to receive my approval. As of today we have not yet received notice from Connaught or Institut Merieux in respect of this issue. If and when it is brought before Investment Canada, a strict test of it being of net benefit to Canada will be applied.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, since the Tory Government gutted FIRA and created Investment Canada in July, 1985, there have been 606 takeover applications by foreigners. Every one of them has been approved. So much for Investment Canada.

Looking at this specific deal there are no conditions contained in it to protect Canadian jobs, to protect Canadian research and development, to insure Canadians exports, or to protect the special relationship of Connaught with the University of Toronto. Will the Minister intervene to protect Canada's interests? Will the Minister please put Canada first?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, over the period of time that Investment Canada has been in existence 1,400,000 new jobs have been generated for Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Many of them have helped to make the Hon. Member's brother look good as Premier of Ontario.

The reality is that in fact Canada has been attracting investment from all over the world. In spite of that Canadians still invest more outside Canada than foreigners are investing in Canada. The proportion of ownership in Canadian shares vis-à-vis the United States, for example, has been increasing. The picture the Hon. Member has portrayed is not accurate.

I reiterate what I said in answer to his first question. The net benefit to Canada test will be strictly applied.

ENERGY

HIBERNIA OIL FIELD DEVELOPMENT—DATE OF CONCLUDING BINDING AGREEMENT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last July 18 regarding the Hibernia project he said that a binding agreement, and I quote, "would be implemented as expeditiously as possible, but in any event no later than March 31, 1989. It is anticipated that it will be done much sooner than that, since most of the hurdles have been overcome".

Last July, the Deputy Prime Minister did not hesitate about giving us a date when we would have a binding agreement. The only problem was the date was not correct. Will he now try again to give us another date as to when we can expect to have a binding agreement?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have answered this question before. The hon. gentleman can read it in the record.

Let me give him the salient points again. He knows that there were three issues. The first was in terms of the legal requirements. The second concerns the testing of financial markets. The third concerns the best industrial benefits with the best modern technology. I think I mentioned that yesterday in the House. That has not changed 24 hours later. That is what we are working on.

When we have a binding agreement I will obviously announce it in the House. I will not give him a specific date. All the parties, namely, the Government of Newfoundland, the Government of Canada, and the sponsors of the consortium are all working toward that goal.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSURANCE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy gives us information but he fails to tell us exactly when we can expect this binding agreement. The Minister for International Trade said on July 19 that they will all be legally bound by the end of March, referring to the companies involved, and: "In the meantime, we are morally bound. We are completely bound".

If the Government is bound, surely it can tell us when the people of Newfoundland can expect a binding agreement to secure this very important project. Or is this just another assurance similar to the assurance the Minister for International Trade gave on unemployment insurance?

• (1450)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member that his Party did not approve the Atlantic Accord. It is the Atlantic Accord, the underpinning of Hibernia, which gives possibility to Hibernia's completion.

Secondly, during the election campaign the hon. gentleman's Party said that Hibernia would not be followed through by this Government after the election. Wrong again.

Lastly, what I am saying to the Member is this. He is a lawyer and I am not, and that might be an advantage, but I will not say for whom. I will say to him that until the legally binding agreements are completed, until we have tested the financial market and until we have the best deal, both for the consortium, for the Government and people of Newfoundland and for Canada, then we will sign it in order that we can have additional Hibernias.

ENERGY ALTERNATIVE PROGRAMS—TERMINATION OF POSITIONS

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, another question for the Minister of the Environment. The Government pledged in the Throne Speech that it will ensure that "environmental issues are fully considered in the course of its decision making". There are now some 300 people working in energy alternatives programs in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Over the last couple of weeks, since the Throne Speech, notices have been given to about 110 of them—that is one in every three—that their positions will be terminated.

My question to the Minister is this. What full consideration of environmental issues was undertaken before these termination notices were sent out?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says there will be cuts in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. The answer is, yes, there will be. It goes back to 1985. I appreciate that he would not have known that, but some of his colleagues could have told him. In 1985, there was a MYOP, a Multi-Year Operational Plan ending in 1991 in which there were going to be reductions. Additionally I say this to the Hon. Member—I am sure the Party would have these clippings—if he goes back to the clippings of January 5 in this community, he will find that this issue was raised and aired at that time, and we repeated the 1985 decisions. So what I say to him is that we are going to move away, as we have since 1985, from a disastrous National Energy Program which people in his province were also against.

ALTERNATIVE ENERGY DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I assume the Environment Minister is pleased that there is now in this House a Member from Alberta who takes alternative energies seriously. I would ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources then—is that all there is? I mean, are we content that we have done the development necessary in energy alternatives? There is nothing more to be done; is that what he is saying?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, what I am content with is that the National Energy Program is finally being killed and put to bed and dead.

The second point I say to him is this. The program was based on a lot of wind technology, in case the Hon. Member missed that at all. There was obviously other technology as well.

So what I am saying to him is that where before we were funding programs—for instance solar panels which were great for heating swimming pools, and I do not know how many Hon. Members opposite in that Party had that problem, we are moving away from that program. What we will do is continue research and development on the warming effect and on CO2 emissions. That work will continue, but I am not going to fund solar panels for swimming pools any more.

BRANCH STAFFING CUTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister and I would like to think that the Prime Minister actually takes the issue of the environment seriously since it is obvious that his Minister of Energy does not. I would like to ask him how he can justify his statement. He calls it in the Throne Speech the environmental imperative. He says it is going to get the top priority. We now know as a result of a copyright story in The Winnipeg Free Press that in fact one-third of the Energy Department that is working on alternative energies is going to be laid off.

Will the Prime Minister give us today a commitment in the House that he will reverse those cuts and he will return to full capacity those in the Department of Energy who are working on the most critical area of alternative energies, or is his commitment to the environment merely bunk and window dressing?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition makes the classical error that if you spend more money and have more PYs, that somehow you are going to do more for the environment, and that does not follow. She refers to a copyrighted story of today. I remind her of the stories of two or three months ago.

So what I am saying is simply this. We will continue on research and development, on alternate energy sources. We will continue working with industry and other provinces in order that we can industrialize some of the technologies that have developed, but I will not fund programs which incorporated this great idea developed by that Party that the more money spent by government and the greater the National Energy Program, that somehow you are doing something for the environment. In fact if she looks, she will find that as the federal Government spent more and more money in the NEP, during the time when you were in office, how come emissions in fact went up rather than down?

CUTS IN ENVIRONMENTAL RESEARCH PROGRAMS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of the Environment, the same man who spoke with the Prime Minister this morning. I know, or I think, that he made a certain promise about the environment. He told us that as the leading Minister, he could deny cutbacks or programs established by other Ministers. I would like to ask him whether he is ready today to cancel the cutbacks in environmental research that were just announced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and whether, together with the Prime Minister, he will show the Canadian people that his statements on the environment are worth at least the paper they are written on.

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of Energy and members of this Government are fully in agreement with the points that the Minister of the Environment made, namely, that we would have full programs within the Department of Environment, and ancillary programs in other Departments, including my own, respecting the environment, but what we have to do, as I have said in terms of these reductions, is to fund research and development. We will fund the application of that research and development in order that emissions can be reduced. We will actively pursue international agreements as the Prime Minister and the Secretary of External Affairs have done. That will be the condition by which we will proceed. We will not simply say that because there was a National Energy Program, because there were PYs, because there was all kinds of money spent, that the environment was not being protected. There is the fault of the former administration. There is the fault of their blinded approach. That is, by spending more public money, somehow the environment—

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—COMPOSITION OF NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Let me take this opportunity to congratulate him on his new responsibilities and to wish him well in those new endeavours.

As the Minister knows, 2,500 Canadians have been diagnosed to have AIDS. Of those, 1,400 have died. That, coupled with the resignation of Dr. Gilmour as the Chairman of the National Advisory Committee on AIDS, has caused a great deal of anguish and uncertainty. I would like to ask the Minister if he could explain to the House why, on his particular committee, there are no victims of AIDS or representatives of groups who work with these individuals who could assist him and the Government in developing sound and pragmatic public policy to address a tragic situation.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first let me thank the Hon. Member for his kind comments and for the thoughtful and very constructive suggestion that he has made.

I am currently considering what structure NAC AIDS should have in the future. It is important to ensure that when we get advice with regard to how best to deal with this problem of AIDS we draw from all sources but in particular those people who are asked to live with AIDS, those people who are helping to provide assistance to those people living with AIDS. They should be fully consulted.

In particular, as we develop a new national strategy to deal with this vital issue of AIDS which has caused so much suffering for so many people, I want to ensure the very broadest possible sources of consultation.

GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT OF FUNDS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his response but I remind him that the seriousness of this issue requires strong and consistent leadership by the Government of Canada. In view of the previous election commitment of additional moneys which would be addressed toward this tragic disease, totalling $168 million, will the Minister indicate to Canadians that on the grounds of compassion, human dignity, sanctity of life, his Government will stand behind that commitment of a minimum of $168 million to address this very tragic situation?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman will know that in the Speech from the Throne the Government talked about a new commitment to AIDS, to ensure that every effort was made to deal with this disease. We have committed ourselves to $168 million over the course of the next five years. We are continuing with that.

In addition, we are redoubling our efforts to ensure that all of those who are involved in this area, including persons living with AIDS and those people who are charged with the responsibility of assisting them, work closely together because if we are to lick this disease we must work closely together at all levels, both public and private, to ensure our success.

PRIVILEGE

USE OF POSTAL FRANK BY MEMBER FOR NOTRE-DAME-DE-GRACE

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine—Lac-Saint-Louis): Mr. Speaker, franking is a special privilege granted to all Members of the House to facilitate and ensure postal communications with their constituents.

It has come to my attention through a report in the Weekly Press in the west end of Montreal that this privilege has been used to circulate partisan Liberal Party materials, not to constituents of the Hon. Member in the riding of Notre-Dame-de-Grâce but solely and directly to Members of the Liberal Party in my riding of Lachine—Lac-Saint-Louis.

I do not believe that the franking privilege was granted for political partisan purposes such as membership development or fund-raising. If this practice in my riding today were to be approved and applied across the country, Canadians would be flooded from every Member with propaganda at their own and taxpayers' expense.

The mailing in my riding of Lachine—Lac-Saint-Louis transferred over $1,000 in costs from the local riding association and its defeated candidate, Victor Drury, to the Canadian taxpayer. I believe that the spirit and morality of our franking privilege has been abused, if not breached, by this action, that my rights as a Member are affected, and that the practice should be discontinued.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de Grace): Mr. Speaker, I welcome a ruling from you, from the committee, or the Parliamentary Counsel. What I did was to send out a notice of meeting with respect to Liberals in the Lachine—Lakeshore riding.

I must say that it is a surprise to me that one cannot send out mailings that are of a partisan nature to anywhere in Canada. For years now all sorts of mailings have been sent into my riding and out of my riding that were extremely partisan, but I will comply with whatever ruling. It was sent in good faith and I will comply with whatever ruling you deem fit.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I did not expect this question of privilege. Perhaps I can make a suggestion that I am sure my hon. colleague on the government side would accept. It is that when the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services is reconstituted perhaps your Honour would see fit to send this question to that committee. It has happened in the past. Members from all Parties have had to agonize over this kind of question and we have always come to a happy ending.

Perhaps with the co-operation of my hon. colleague from the government side, and any other interested Member, your Honour may see fit to send the whole question of the frank to the Members' Services Committee when it is reconstituted. That should be within a very few weeks.

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I suggest the hon. gentleman should have checked with his Leader about how the franking privilege should be used because four years ago the Young Ukrainian Organization brought to me an envelope in which there was a lot of literature from the Government, including a Progressive Conservative brochure encouraging young Ukrainians to vote for the Conservatives. If the Member wants to raise that question of privilege, I suggest he check with his Leader and set an example for everyone in the House.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, I too am surprised at the question of privilege raised by the hon. gentleman. I would ask him to account for why I got letters from the Rt. Hon. Robert Stanfield and the Rt. Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) when they were leaders of their Party, asking for donations to the PC Canada Fund, on their frank.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I attempted to rise quickly because I expected this to go on and on. That is exactly why I made the suggestion that you may see fit to send this to the committee on Members' Services.

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to respond to my hon. friend and have the matter referred to the committee.

Mr. Speaker: I do not know that procedurally the Speaker can necessarily refer it to the committee. However, perhaps I can say that I think it would be a very good idea if the committee took up the matter and all Members who are concerned had a chance to discuss it. I thank the Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) for what I think is a very helpful suggestion.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, this being Thursday, I want to ask the customary question of the Government House Leader as to what business he intends to call for the coming week.

While I am on my feet, I want to ask the Government House Leader specifically whether he will agree to call during Government Orders the motion of the Rt. Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) which, if supported by the House, particularly the Conservative majority, would take away from this House the opportunity to use the notwithstanding clause.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want to advise the House that today and tomorrow we will continue with the seventh and eighth day of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. On Monday, April 17, we will begin second reading of Bill C-2, the Bill on Transportation Safety. In the event that we do not finish that Bill on Monday we will continue with it on Tuesday in an effort to wrap up debate on it. The back-up Bill would be Bill C-3, the Bill to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology. As the week progresses, we will see what we are doing with respect to those Bills and other items.

With specific reference to my hon. friend's request that we subvert the private Members process and bring forward in an unfair manner the motion of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, I should tell him that we are very, very loath to do that for that reason. Also, we are on the record as indicating that the Meech Lake Accord ratification process is going well. Eight out of 10 provinces representing 93 per cent of Canadians, as a matter of fact, have ratified the Meech Lake Accord. We are also on the record as saying that there should be no parallel actions which would in any way interfere with that ratification which I would hope my hon. friend wishes to proceed with. For those two reasons, we will not be dealing with the motion of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the concerns expressed about the effect of the notwithstanding clause on our current constitution, I would ask the Government House Leader if he would be willing to put down the same motion offered by the Leader of the Opposition in the name of the Prime Minister. If that is the case, we would be willing to agree to withdraw the motion that was put down by the Leader of the Opposition under private Members' business.

I do not accept the Government House Leader's argument that to do what I suggested in my first intervention undermines the private Members' business procedure, but in order to remove any doubt on that score, I say right now that we would be willing to give unanimous consent to withdrawing the Leader of the Opposition's motion if in its stead there is put down under Government Orders the same motion in the name of the Prime Minister which could be then called for debate and quickly disposed of, if the Government is willing to support it.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, yes, we are following the rather unusual procedure of proceeding with the Government's business during Government time and according to the mandate given to us by the people.

As I have said before, the Meech Lake ratification process is proceeding. We do not want to interfere with it in any way. We do not want to clutter it up. It is in the Speech from the Throne that we are presently debating that we intend to continue the constitutional process after the Meech Lake Accord is ratified, and we hope that that will be very soon.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, through you to the Government House Leader, I am wondering when we can expect legislation to create a full Department of Forestry. When might such legislation be introduced in the House?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his compliments. We have a Ministry of Forestry and a Minister of Forestry. My hon. friend has quite rightly pointed out that we are the first Government to have given prominence to this very important industry, and I will take his representation under advisement.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, just to clarify the point with the Government House Leader, I think it must be said that at the moment, we have a Minister of State for Forestry, quite different from a full Minister. I think what my hon. friend from Prince George was indicating was that the Government did promise many months ago to name a full Minister of Forests, with the accompanying enabling legislation to set out the parameters of that Ministry. That is the question. We all realize we have a Minister of State for Forestry, but that is not keeping the Prime Minister's promise to have a full Ministry.

Mr. Lewis: I appreciate my hon. friend also adding his compliments to that of his friend with respect to this very important step the Government has taken for the forest industry, and I will take his representation under advisement.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could further enlighten my hon. friend who represents a British Columbia riding. In September last year, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced the establishment of a full Ministry of Forestry, and of course, the operations of Government is entirely a Prime Ministerial prerogative. As a matter of fact, the Ministry of Forestry is operating as a full Department under an Order in Council, and legislation is in preparation in final draft form that will be presented to the House at an early stage.

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Government House Leader could assure us that the fisheries committee would be organized soon. There is a serious problem of overfishing of halibut as represented by the industry and the unions, and they would like an opportunity to make representations to the committee.

Mr. Speaker: It may may very well be an important matter. The Minister may want to answer, but this is getting well beyond the ordinary exchange between the Opposition and the Government on next week's business. The Minister may want to respond, but I certainly do not think he is bound to.

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps I could see the Hon. Member behind the curtains and we can discuss it.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for an address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. John E. Cole (York—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly very pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this debate as our Government begins the second session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament. I would first like to take this opportunity to commend the Government of which I am extremely proud on its past performance, a performance that will be equalled if not surpassed in the next four years, and I am sure many more years to come. I compliment our Government on its achievements in initiating so many new policies encompassing such diverse areas.

When I was asked to speak on the Throne Speech, I asked myself what is a Throne Speech, and I looked up a definition. I quote from the book Government of Canada written by Dawson. The Throne Speech:

> —is a statement, drafted by the Prime Minister and approved by the cabinet, which reviews concisely the state of the nation and recites in fairly general terms the program which the cabinet proposes to Parliament in the upcoming session.

As I see it, the Throne Speech outlined a course of action for the future while reflecting on the past accomplishments of this Government. As a result of the endeavours of our Government, Canada's economy grew faster last year than those of the United States, United Kingdom, Germany, France and Italy. In real terms, our economy grew by 4.3 per cent. The Canadian economy will continue to grow with increased international trade under the direction and leadership of this Government.

Since 1984, Canada's job creation record has been the best of any major OECD nation. The unemployment rate was cut from 11.2 per cent to 7.8 per cent in December, more recently to 7.6 per cent and it was just announced last Friday that it was 7.5 per cent. Under the previous Liberal Government, in 1982, this country experienced record high unemployment. That Liberal Government had allowed youth unemployment to climb to unacceptable levels, while our Government cut youth employment by one-third.

Our Government is dedicated to maintaining for the youth of this nation a prosperous labour market in which to grow and participate with a sense of accomplishment. This Government's dedication is very evident in my riding. For years, the employment situation in York—Simcoe and surrounding ridings has been excellent.

The supervisor of the Canadian Employment Centre for Students recently informed me of the tremendous employment prospects for students this summer. The original function of the centre was to find suitable jobs for students. However, and particularly this summer, its function seems to be finding enough students to fill the numerous vacancies businesses have posted at the centre. The students of York—Simcoe are extremely fortunate because not only are they being given an opportunity to earn money for university and college expenses, but they are gaining valuable work experience and getting a glimpse of the work and business world of their future.

The key words used in the Throne Speech were "building", "preparing", "protection", "caring" and "sustainable development". These words are descriptive of a Government that shows every indication of providing the next and future generations with a standard of living comparable to the one we cherish today as one of the highest in the world. However, our standard of living, the strength of the economy, the unemployment level will mean nothing to our children and grandchildren if we do not make provisions to ensure them of an environment in which life flourishes, not diminishes.

The commitment our Government made four years ago to making the environment a priority was reaffirmed in a mandate outlined in the Throne Speech. As the record shows, our Government's accomplishments in initiating environmental policies and directives have been vast. Agreements have been signed with all the provinces to cut in half acid rain causing emissions from factories by 1994. Actions were taken to have leaded gasoline emissions cut out completely by 1994. Bill C–30 was passed to improve the National Parks Act. Bill C–74 was passed to provide stricter controls on handling toxic wastes from their production to their disposal. In 1987, Canada hosted an international conference on the ozone layer in Montreal. That historic agreement, signed by more than 40 countries, is designed to reduce emissions, which destroy the ozone layer, by 50 per cent by 1999. As well, we hosted an international conference on the chemical contamination of the atmosphere which was held in Toronto in June of 1988.

As the Throne Speech outlined, our Government is going to continually develop policies that reflect the concept of sustainable development where our economic policies are not divorced from their environmental impact. In Winnipeg, there is the creation of a centre for the international promotion of sustainable development. More information and direction will come from the round table on the environment and the economy, which is being chaired by the President of McGill University.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) has been giving me responsibilities to ensure that environmental issues are fully considered in the course of Government decision–making. There will be new regulations to limit the impact of toxic chemicals; actions to protect the arctic environment; new legislation to ensure an appropriate environmental assessment review process; negotiations, both with the United States and globally, to improve the quality of the atmosphere; and initiatives to clean up the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River.

As I stand here reflecting on and listing the many accomplishments and future directives of our Government, words to a song keep running through my mind: "Every generation blames the one before it". Under the leadership of this Government, those words will not be echoed in the minds of our children. If I may plagiarize the words of my wise colleague, the Hon. Don Mazankowski, "today's farmlands", today's environment, "are our children's heritage and we owe it to future generations to be wise stewards of this renewable resource"; of these precious lakes and forests; of this land.

I would like to speak a bit on the topic of a Human Resource Development Strategy and the pending necessity for the training and retraining of Canada's workforce, especially our youth.

Prior to 1986 and in the early part of 1984, businesses were able to select the best qualified, sometimes over qualified candidates, totally ignoring the less advantaged or less equipped candidate, such as high school drop–outs. Fortunately, because of the leadership shown by this Government, we are experiencing record low unemployment. University, college and high school graduates are now able to find jobs better matched to their aspirations. They no longer have to settle for positions that are grossly below their academic credentials and career potentials. In many instances, graduates are able to choose the company they want to work for rather than have the company choose them. The situation has not improved that much for high school drop–outs, but we are making good strides in helping this forgotten group face and conquer the labour market.

The contribution of our Government in helping drop-outs and potential drop-outs is evident in the region of York, which is a major portion of my riding of York—Simcoe. Last August, my colleague, the Hon. Barbara McDougall, in her capacity as Minister of Employment, approved the federal Government funding of a program designed to help potential high school drop-outs in Ontario's York region.

The funding, which came from the innovative program of Canadian Jobs Strategy, has helped to fund a three-year project that established a career centre to assess and give career counselling to potential high school drop-outs. The drop-out rate in the region of York is about 33 per cent. I was astonished when I heard that figure. This program is designed to give students a glimpse of what the future would be like if they dropped out of school and to provide them with an incentive to stay in school. The intent of the program is not to make students feel that university or college, in the traditional sense, is the be all and end all for everyone. The centre does, however, promote the merits of finishing high school.

The funding also helped establish the York Region Education-Industrial Foundation which identifies sectors where worker shortages exist. Employers in York region have identified skilled labour shortages as the most critical problem facing them today.

The career centre, working in co-operation with the education-industrial foundation, helps steer potential drop-outs into trades in which the foundation has identified a need for workers. The centre is also assisting graduates, disabled and minority groups find employment.

This program is just one small example of how employment and immigration, through Canada's Jobs Strategy Innovations Program, encourages the development of new ways to ensure that Canadians have meaningful employment. Its funding of innovative projects designed to keep the Canadian labour market growing demonstrates our Government's commitment to meeting the ever-changing labour needs of Canadian businesses and their potential employees.

I would like to quote the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall).

> The Government knows that Canadians want to work. We will therefore use unemployment insurance funds to actively help the unemployed find jobs. There will be faster, easier access to counselling, training and re-employment programs. The unemployment insurance program will continue to be an integral part of Canada's social system.
> Our goal is to improve the UI system and current labour market programs. These improvements redirect funds to new, more effective ways to help unemployed Canadians.

"Innovative" is a word representative of this Government, and innovation will be needed in designing future programs to meet labour market changes, especially in a time of necessary fiscal restraint. New technology is being introduced in this country at an accelerating rate. New technologies will require more sophisticated skills.

Technology coupled with the aspirations of Canada's youth to surpass the educational achievements of their parents put a tremendous onus on this Government. We are faced with a wide discrepancy between the educational aspirations of young people and the present capacity and diversity of the education system to meet these expectations. More so now than ever, the job market calls for a higher level of skill than was required for earlier generations.

My riding, York Simcoe, which is part of the fastest growing region in Canada, is already faced with an employment crisis. Developers have been "building" and "expanding" in the last few years. Towns such as Newmarket, which had a population growth of 17 per cent from 1981 to 1986, East Gwillimbury, Georgina, and other towns in this area have had major growth spurts. Eighty per cent of the increase in this region is attributed to the migration of young families within the age group of 25 to 44. My riding has a shortage of skilled workers. The 15 per cent increase between 1985 and 1986 in business establishments creates a demand for trained employees that we are still trying to meet.

The migration to my area is due in part to the expansion of the 404 which now ends in Newmarket and to the York-Durham sewage system. The increase is also due in part to the exceedingly high house prices in Toronto. The price of housing in my area is not low.

Another major reason for our continual growth is attributable to the sense of community my riding has maintained despite its rapid expansion. New residents have found that towns like Holland Landing, Sutton, Keswick, East Gwillimbury, Tottenham, and Mount Albert are safe, friendly and family-oriented communities in which to bring up their families. You can still walk down any street in any one of those communities and recognize an acquaintance or a friendly face. These communities all boast strong municipal governments which provide excellent recreational facilities and activities that promote community interaction.

I am proud to say that the majority of people who do approach me are close acquaintances with whom I have worked in either a service organization or a voluntary group, cheered with at a hockey game, or even voted against at municipal meetings. Today, I am proud to demonstrate and represent the community spirit of my riding.

I know all my constituents will be looking to our Government to help maintain and foster the sense of community and sense of family so endeared to them, as I am sure it is to those in the rest of Canada.

Under the direction of the Prime Minister, I can assure my constituents that the Government will introduce legislation to create a child care program that addresses areas where it is required.

Despite the financial difficulties the Government faces, it will continue to provide assistance to families and the elderly, while directing greater assistance toward those with low incomes. We will be initiating legislation to reduce family violence, child abuse, and drug abuse. We will continue with criminal law reform which includes a review of the Young Offenders Act. We will also address the very sensitive issue of abortion.

Our approach to addressing the vast and diverse challenges in our changing Canadian society will be reflective of Canadian values. We have advised Canadians that we will be innovative in our approaches to handling the difficulties facing the Government.

Last November Canadians showed that they believe in the ways that we are trying to accomplish our objectives. In the Throne Speech we have shown that we will do everything in our power to ensure that the next generation will not blame the one before it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt.

Mr. Whittaker: I listened with great interest to my hon. friend on the Government benches as he discussed employment opportunities, post-secondary education, et cetera.

Yesterday I met with a scientific and educational society. Among other things, they were concerned about the loss of funding in the area of research, the loss of funding in the area of educational opportunities, and the brain drain that is occurring both in the public and private sectors. Our good Canadian minds are moving to the United States of America, to places such as NASA, a public facility where they are being offered large sums of money in order to work.

Those people cannot find jobs in Canada because of the Government's policies of cutbacks in the area of research. Over a period of time, research repays great dividends to the Canadian people. Whether it is geriatric research, agricultural research, or astrophysical research, we receive major returns in Canada from those dollars we put in. Yet we have seen a watering down of that in Canada over the last few years.

What will the Hon. Member do? Will he do more than talk about educational increases, employment, and the educational system, and press his Government to ensure that research funding is increased so that we can put an end to the brain drain from Canada and give our youth a future in our research community here in our own country?

Mr. Cole: Yesterday, I also met with representatives of that group. When I spoke to them I was encouraged. One of the ladies informed me that she had just received a research grant of over $100,000. This was a totally new grant from a totally new base. It was an industrial grant that came from the private sector, not the public sector.

When I mention innovative changes and changes coming from within the Government, we should be encouraging those types of changes. We have to ensure that the dollars we are spending are productive for us. If they are not productive, then they must be cut in order that we will have a more productive use of and value from our dollars.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to rise to speak in this debate with a sense that Canada stands today at some historic crossroads.

[Translation]

It is a privilege to speak as the Official Opposition's critic for science and technology, since I am aware that science is very important for Canada if we want to compete in the global economy.

[English]

Canada is at an economic crossroads. We must soon decide how we will maintain our standard of living in light of the fact that we can no longer rely solely on the exploitation of our natural resources. The question we must ask ourselves is: Are we prepared to realize the potential of our far more important resource, our people?

The choice that Canadians must make is clear. We have to change our way of thinking, and our way of understanding economic development within the context of an environmental crisis. We have grown up believing that our natural resources are unlimited, that our wealth and standard of living is assured. This is not true.

As a people we have demonstrated determination, perseverance and ingenuity in conquering a massive continent, overcoming a hostile environment, and building a nation. We Canadians have pursued a path remarkable in its distinctiveness in the new world. History influences us deeply as we continually seek a renewal of the social compact that binds us together.

We are shaped by the strong influences of our two founding linguistic groups. However, we are also influenced in important ways by the special heritage of our aboriginal peoples, and by our more recently acquired multicultural diversity.

We forged a nation where logic dictated that none should exist. We built a new nation without denying our historic ties to our motherlands. We forged alliances, waged war against oppressors, and distinguished ourselves as international peace makers. We have set an example by sharing our wealth, although perhaps not enough, with those less fortunate, or those touched by destruction, disease, drought and famine.

Canada is a unique and special place. The world needs Canada, a middle power committed to freedom, to democracy, to peace; an open nation willing to criticize its friends while remaining loyal to historic alliances; an honest broker between superpowers; a nation able to understand the tensions and stresses of the world because it comprehends within its borders a richness of diversity and experience that mirrors the world at large.

The world needs Canada, and we have worked hard to create a place called Canada. Canada is more than a mere collection of regions, more than a nondescript adjunct to a North American superpower. Our single greatest achievement can be seen in the way we have related to each other.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is also my view that Canada is not only at an economic crossroads but at a constitutional one as well. Although the Prime Minister refuses to admit it, we are now going through a crisis. Canada's future is more in doubt now than it was in 1976 when René Lévesque was elected.

[English]

Matters of human relations are not easy and they are always touched with fragility. There is no human relationship between individuals or between peoples that cannot be severed, no bond of friendship or loyalty that cannot be betrayed. Indeed, it is my view that there is no greater need in human society than the need for reconciliation.

That is why recent events have saddened me so much. I speak of the debate that has occurred in this Chamber and elsewhere on our Constitution. I speak of the legislative and public response of the Government of Quebec to the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in the matter of minority language rights. First, I wish to address the matter of the Constitution and the process of constitutional reform.

For many years the sole exception to Canada's full legal status as a free democratic and independent nation was the necessity to seek the consent of the Parliament of the United Kingdom to any constitutional reform. The abolition of appeals to the Privy Council and the completion of the unification of British North America with the entry into Confederation of Newfoundland in 1949 almost completed the picture. Almost, but not quite. For more than 30 years after 1949, efforts to solve the difficulty of agreeing on how we as Canadians should amend our Constitution thwarted efforts to repatriate.

Agreement on an amending formula was reached in Victoria in 1971, only to be nullified by Robert Bourassa in a decision that I believe contributes directly to the present difficulties.

When the Supreme Court of Canada decided in 1981 that provincial consent was not required by law to amend the Constitution, the federal Government's will to repatriate the Constitution assumed greater importance. The fact that agreement on a new Constitution could not be achieved with the Government of René Lévesque, a government whose purpose though thwarted by the will of the people, was the withdrawal of Québec from Canada is hardly surprising. René Lévesque did not line up with the other Premiers to sign the 1982 Constitution. That would have been like Ronald Reagan singing when "Irish Eyes are Smiling" with Daniel Ortega.

The people of Québec did sign the Constitution. They signed with the pen of Pierre Trudeau. They signed with the pens of Jean Chrétien and André Ouellet. They signed with the pens of all their federal Members of Parliament, men and women elected in Québec by Québecers, and with a mandate to affirm Canada, not to tear it down.

Is it necessary to even bother to seek the consent of the Government of Québec? Indeed it is. Our federation recognizes the mutual sovereignty of federal and provincial levels of government, legislating within their own jurisdictions. Therefore, I believe that where this sovereignty is to be affected the consent of each sovereign government should be obtained. We should not, we cannot continue indefinitely without the sanction of the Government of Québec for the 1982 reforms. But the Government of Pierre Trudeau was right, and courageous in so doing, to not permit the Separatist intentions of René Lévesque to block constitutional reform. In a brave and modern departure from British constitutional tradition, our new made-in-Canada Constitution included a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In addition, it included a clause that preserved the doctrine of the supremacy of Parliament by enabling laws to be enacted and enforced notwithstanding non-compliance with the Charter.

Pierre Trudeau and his Ministers did not favour including the notwithstanding clause. It was forced upon that government by Tory Premiers, such as Sterling Lyon of Manitoba. It was the price that had to be paid to have a Charter of Rights, as the former Solicitor General said in this House last week. the renegade Government of Réne Lévesque responded immediately by invoking the notwithstanding clause in respect of all Québec legislation. Despite the power to invoke notwithstanding, the Canadian Charter of Rights establishes for all Canadians a concisely articulated statement of what we as a people believe should be the limits of power to be exercised by the Government. It also states clearly what we believe to be the overriding rights of the individual. A government invoking notwithstanding must now do so at its peril. We as a people have agreed on the Charter's formulation of basic rights. To suspend those rights must bring with it political consequences in a free society.

The Charter is not only a legal framework. The Charter is a standard, a measure of our freedom, of our respect for the liberties of the individual. It is for us all as parliamentarians, as law makers, as citizens, to point to the Charter, to hold it up, to assert its importance. It must grieve us all that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) would say that the Constitution, including the Charter of Rights, is not worth the paper it is written on.

I need not quote the comments of the Right Hon. Prime Minister in this House last Thursday, April 6, his attempt to rewrite history. It is sufficient to say that his denunciation of the 1982 Constitution was so overstated and hypocritical as to make one wonder at its audacity. The exaggeration on the part of our revisionist Prime Minister is obvious. Notwithstanding took nothing away from the Charter of Rights that was there before 1982. Before 1982 we had no written Charter. Parliament was absolutely supreme.

Mr. Diefenbaker's Bill of Rights, while a valiant and admirable effort, was a mere guide to statutory interpretation in its affirmation of rights. It did not limit Parliament's law-making ability. Of course, notwithstanding mitigated the effect of the Charter. But the Prime Minister is seriously misinformed when he tells the people of Canada that notwithstanding made the Constitution not worth the paper it is written on. Nothing was surrendered, only the gain was not as great as it might have been hoped. There is not one aspect of the Prime Minister's criticism of the 1982 Constitution that could not be applied with equal validity to his own efforts of constitutional reform in 1987, including the continuation of the notwithstanding clause. Why did he not attempt to remove the notwithstanding clause during the Meech Lake negotiations? If the 1982 Constitution is not worth the paper it is written on because it contains the notwithstanding clause, what value has been added to it by Meech Lake?

The Prime Minister was not yet in this House when the 1982 Constitution was voted upon. But every Member of his present Cabinet who was a Member of this House at that time voted for the 1982 Constitution. The Prime Minister's attack last week is simply appalling, incredible, and indeed, disreputable. I would suggest that the example of public debate and consultation of the constitutional reform process in 1981–82 could well have been followed by the Prime Minister in his own effort.

The idea that the Meech Lake Accord was a seamless web, not amendable, nor even capable of meaningful debate by Canadians, is offensive.

[Translation]

I am convinced that the amendments proposed by the Liberal Party are essential and I fail to understand why the Prime Minister still refuses to consider them.

[English]

How is it that in a democratic society 11 men can lock themselves in a room all night, drink too much coffee, and change the basic contract whereby we live together as Canadians, and tell us that no, the other 25 million Canadians can have nothing to say about this? There were no women in that room at Meech Lake. There were no native people. There were no visible minorities. There were no representatives of the North. There was, in short, no respect for the need to have due process in the amendment of the Constitution.

The Prime Minister criticized the 1982 Constitution for having failed to enhance national unity. The divisions in this country provoked by the Prime Minister's effort at constitutional reform make the 1982 reform look like a children's birthday party.

Meech Lake is flawed and, tragically, it may be doomed. The Prime Minister knows it. The Prime Minister knows that the Premier of Québec, by introducing Bill 178, may have sealed the fate of Meech Lake, and yet he will not say so. The Premier of Québec, in claiming that notwithstanding would be unnecessary if Meech Lake were approved, is wrong since the Supreme Court decision was largely based upon the Québec Charter, which is unaffected by Meech Lake. In this action the Premier has confirmed the greatest fears of most Canadians about Meech Lake, and made its ratification exceedingly difficult. That is a great shame. It is a tragedy. I believe that Meech Lake should be ratified, but it must be further amended, because Canada needs to put an end to its pre-occupation with constitutional reform and language rights. Canada needs healing. Canada needs to focus its national will and build toward the future. Canada needs reconciliation, and therefore it needs national leaders who are reconcilers, healers.

Regrettably, the Prime Minister has failed in this task. He has let us all down by turning to partisan attacks when statesmanship was called for. I believe we can be sympathetic to the Premier's position as the leader of the only political entity in North America that has a Francophone majority.

[Translation]

We agree with Mr. Bourassa that the French language must be protected. Québec must promote the French language.

[English]

But I would urge the Premier of Québec, and indeed all the Premiers, to look again at the vision of a bilingual Canada. French language and culture is more endangered in a fortress Québec, unilingual and isolated, than it is in a strong and bilingual Canada.

• (1550)

These are difficult and complex issues. I ventured to speak of them acknowledging my own inability to comprehend them fully, but believing as I do that Canada is a unique and special place, that Canadians are a people of considerable tolerance, and that the world needs Canada.

Canada is at a national crossroads. Unless we find our way here decisions about our economic crossroads may not long be ours to make together.

There are many other things, including the economic crossroads, that I would like to discuss, but my time has ended. Thus I will close on this final word. The world needs Canada. Canada more than ever needs leaders who are willing and able to be healers and reconcilers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Halifax (Ms. Clancy)—Child Care—Request for legislation—Request for action; the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Comuzzi)—Air Safety—Review by Departmental Audit Branch—Minister's intentions; the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Agriculture—Drought assistance compensation payments.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Duhamel: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I attempted to have the Government make a commitment to research and development and to continued support of colleges and universities. Frankly, and I say this with total sincerity and generosity, I was not at all satisfied with the answers I received.

In the Speech from the Throne it was indicated that the Government would be following the recommendations of the National Advisory Board on Technology. I am wondering if my hon. friend, the Official Opposition critic, can give me his evaluation of the Government's performance to date in research, science and technology.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my hon. colleague for the question that he has put to me. It raises issues related to that economic crossroads that I was speaking about that Canada finds itself at.

As I said in my remarks, we cannot any longer count on the sale of our natural resources to ensure our continued wealth and prosperity as a nation. What is critical for us is to go forward in new technologies, to train our people and to build on that key resource—our people. There are many numbers that show that Canada is lagging behind.

We know that the Prime Minister, before the 1984 election, promised to increase the ratio of gross expenditures on research and development to Gross Domestic Product, to 2.5 per cent, roughly double what it was at that time. Unfortunately, the record of the Government has been a failure in respect of that goal. In fact, by 1987 the gross expenditure ratio was 1.38 per cent compared to 1.37 per cent in 1984.

There are many other indicators that suggest that we are lagging behind in research and development. In our expenditure ratio we are last behind Finland, France, Germany, Japan, Norway, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States. Our R and D personnel per 100 in the labour force has barely moved since 1982, in spite of the importance of having these people employed and doing new work.

According to the last year for which there are statistics, 1986, there were eight per thousand R and D personnel in Canada. France has 11.4. Japan has 12.9. The Netherlands has 10.7. Switzerland has 13.9. It is crucial that we begin to find ways to increase our concentration in science and technology, engineering and research. We have to take advantage of our intelligent population, of our vast expanse of educational infrastructure, to ensure that Canada can build the means to compete in the modern era.

Our resources will only last so long. Indeed, when one considers the recent developments in nuclear physics, one wonders whether a major resource, that of petroleum, is going to continue to be a source of earnings for us if the discoveries in nuclear fusion prove to be as exciting as they promise.

We have to deal with these items. We need to deal with them in a way that really takes into account the importance for the future of these types of expenditures, notwithstanding the level of the Government's deficit. Deficits need to be taken into account in deciding how any government money is going to be spent. Spending on research, on education and on our people is essential, otherwise our deficits in the future will only grow. Our economic prospects for the future depend on our ability to grow in science, engineering and technology.

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I have heard quite a few speeches in the House. I want to compliment my new colleague on what he had to say about Meech. I was hoping that he could address himself to this one question.

I would like to know his opinion on whether or not minority rights in Québec were truly protected by this infringement when the Québec Government brought in Bill 178. Could the Hon. Member please comment on that? I think he was leading to it.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! The Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Ms. Duplessis), on a Point of Order.

Ms. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa South started speaking at exactly 3.35 p.m. and it is now exactly 3.57 p.m.. I believe his time has expired, since it was agreed to allow 15 minutes for speeches and five minutes maximum for questions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments had not expired when. . . You are right, the Hon. Member's speech went a little over fifteen minutes, but the period for questions and comments has not expired, so I will allow one more question.

[English]

Mr. Manley: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the graciousness you have shown me. My answer to the question is that where minority rights are not protected by any Government, it is indeed in my opinion the majority who is threatened. Each of us who are in today's majority must know that our own rights are only as safe as those of the weakest person in our society.

In failing to protect the rights of an Anglophone minority in Québec, Mr. Bourassa has made it much more difficult for all of us who believe in and want to protect the rights of Francophone minorities elsewhere in Canada.

• (1600)

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on the Speech from the Throne. I prepared a long speech to explain that first of all, the Throne Speech contains a lot of "rehashed stuff" and that the Government wanted to reduce the deficit but did the exact opposite during its first four years in power.

Second, when the Throne Speech refers to social programs, we know the Government has already cut $13 billion in funding.

However, I think I would rather skip my prepared speech and try to explain, speaking as a Québecer and speaking to all Hon. Members and to English Canada, what it means to be a Francophone Québecer in this bilingual country of ours where everyone dreams of being bilingual.

First of all, bilingualism is for Francophones and unilingualism, for Anglophones. An Anglophone in the House of Commons can show off his few words of French and say: Bonjour monsieur, ça va bien? But a Francophone has to be fully bilingual.

I think it is important for all Members of this House to realize how the population of Québec is made up. Twenty per cent are Québecers but they are Canadians first and Québecers second. They live in the riding or Mount Royal, in Westmount. They are Anglophones. They believe in Canada first, and Québec second. Another 20 per cent are at the opposite end of the spectrum. They are separatists, want nothing to do with Canada and are in a hurry to get out of Confederation. The remaining 60 per cent, and that includes me, are Québecers first and Canadians second, and during the last referendum. . . Mr. Trudeau was able to patriate the Constitution thanks to the results of the referendum in Québec. With other Francophones, I fought the separatists. I wasn't in the riding of Mount Royal then. I fought against Charron and Burns and all those pillars of the PQ establishment. Because of those results, even when no decision was forthcoming from the National Assembly, either from Liberal or PQ members, there was an unwillingness to start the patriation process.

At the time I worked very hard because I was convinced that English Canada, my own colleagues and other Members would say: Yes, stay in Canada, we will try to understand. However, when I consider the reactions to Meech Lake, I get the impression that English Canada still doesn't understand. When I listen to comments on Bill 178, and I hear my English-speaking friends from Québec complain, and then when I look at how Francophones in other provinces are treated—they are in a disaster area and Québec's Anglophones are the best protected minority in the whole world!

We must realize that 60 per cent of the Francophones in Québec are Québecers first and Canadians second, but that 60 per cent said yes to Canada. However, the way things are now, I think if there was another referendum, I would work for the other side. Sometimes I wonder, when I hear some of the Provincial Premiers talk about Meech Lake, what Québec has to gain from being associated with these people. We would be better off with the Americans. We might get more respect and be better understood.

The minority language at risk in this country is not English, according to D'Iberville Fortier, the Official Languages Commissioner, it is French. French is at risk in the other provinces, but can you imagine that even in the very heartland, as Mr. Trudeau said, of the French fact, even in Québec the French community is at risk. Mr. Bourassa had no choice. I agree. He had no choice but to use the notwithstanding clause to protect the French fact. I am not saying that signs are the best way to protect the French fact, but Québec must be able to keep some tools. It cannot leave it up to the Parliament of Canada to protect the French fact in Québec, because history has shown that Canada has not protected French in Québec.

At one time there were more English radio stations than French networks accredited by the CRTC in Québec.

In the 1982 Constitution, Mr. Trudeau, although he did not support the idea, agreed to let the Canada Clause prevail in Québec and the universal clause prevail in the other provinces with respect to the language of education. Although he did not support the idea because he was in favour of free choice, he knew perfectly well that his Members would not accept that, and perhaps if his initial proposal had been successful, it would have caused chaos in Québec with respect to the language of education. In immigration matters, there again, Québec and only the Parliament of Québec can afford the province the protection it needs, and as Mr. Bourassa said: We cannot transfer the authority to protect the French fact in Québec to another Parliament whose members belong mostly to the majority.

The same applies to the language of education and the same applies to culture.

Mr. Speaker, in Québec our most effective tool is the language of work. I was a Member in Québec City when the Government passed Bill 22. I agree a number of mistakes were made in Bill 22 and what happened in the area of language tests was unacceptable. But Bill 101 was the legislation that kept the peace in Québec. It enforced while respecting the rights of the anglophone community, rights of employers and unions alike, and there were no problems.

There was agreement in Ottawa to replace the Quebec clause with the Canada clause. Since we had decided to remain in Canada, it was right that anyone in Canada who had been schooled in English and was transferred to Quebec could have his or her children educated in English. But those who come from other countries to Quebec would have to go to French school and integrate. Language of work may be the area where the Bourassa Government has not done enough to promote the French fact, but I must tell you in all honesty that I do not think that my leader's speech and the Prime Minister's recent speech on the Constitution have done a lot to advance Canadian unity. All that they achieved was to force us Québécois and the Premier of Quebec to oppose any change to the notwithstanding clause. And you know that a minority which feels threatened often is obliged to cling to symbols.

The question of unilingual French signs is a symbol and that is not what will save our language. But unfortunately, what Alliance Quebec and others are doing about Meech Lake just repels the majority of Québécois, who at first were in favour of multilingual signs and who have had to take a harder line against them and want to maintain unilingual signs. I now wonder whether it would be better for the provinces to reject Meech Lake, because the way things are going, if my children some day want to say yes to independence, it would be preferable for English Canada to say no to Quebec's joining the Constitution, because then we could say that the first time, the Constitution was imposed and the second time, English Canada rejected us. We could go to the United Nations and say that we were separating, that we had nothing to do with that country, that we had tried everything.

I am talking to you as I would to an ordinary citizen. My way of talking may not be correct, but I think that I am expressing here the opinion of a majority of Francophone Quebecers who for years and years had to submit and they do not want to anymore. We want to have our own place. We want to have our place and the assurance that Quebec will be French, that my children will continue to want to work in French and I would hope that I can work only in French in Canada and be accepted and I would hope that my children can continue to do the same, that they will not need to think of separating.

But I say to all those who are afraid of Meech Lake, who are afraid of the distinct society, that it is necessary if they really want Canadian unity and if they want Quebec to remain in Canada. I often had conversations with Mr. Trudeau. I understand him, his style; he does not need the distinct society. He can go anywhere in the world and that is fine.

But such is not the case for each man and woman in Québec. Before the people of Québec can feel at ease and at home in this country. . . because a visit to Ottawa will not convince them that they are in their own country. Some of the commissionaires do not speak a word of French, and some of the restaurant waiters and waitresses do not speak a word of French, so better not try to tell the people of Lac-Saint-Jean that this beautiful country is bilingual. And in the national capital to boot! If you go to Winnipeg, Edmonton or even further west people over there wonder what Francophones eat in winter! Québecers want to remain in Canada, but they want the Constitution to make English Canada accept them as they are. We fought against separatism in Québec because at the time—I was right here—Pierre Elliott Trudeau assured us that the Constitution would be changed and that Québec would be understood. Unfortunately, I must say that Pierre Elliott Trudeau and other English-speaking Canadians still do not understand Québec's majority as it is. And if in two or three years. . . Perhaps the Meech Lake Accord is dead right now because of the stubborness of two or three provinces.

Honestly, Québecers will not insist all that much on having Meech Lake, but Canada will lose Québec because we can continue to function. Legally we belong to the Constitution and the day we decide to pull out we will be able to do so politically because we have always sought to survive on our own and not depend on others. But English Canada stands to lose more if it continues to be inflexible and refuses to acknowledge the distinct character. People say: We want Québec in Confederation, we want Québec to promote the French fact, but every time Québec does something to protect the French fact it becomes the target of criticism.

I spoke against Bill 178 because I did not agree when Mr. Bourassa granted what is called multilingual signs inside stores.

I can understand that English-speaking people were "offended", because Mr. Bourassa was wrong when he said: Listen, outside the stores, I cannot authorize the use of signs in languages other than English, because the ban does not apply only to English signs, but also to Chinese, Japanese, Polish, and other languages. However, I cannot stop you from using English signs inside your establishments. I can relate to the English-speaking people who were "offended" by Mr. Bourassa's behaviour. He should have said: As a result ot the Supreme Court decision. . . But we must not forget that, it was as a result of the Supreme Court decision which acknowledged that French was being threatened in the province of Quebec, that the Quebec provincial government used the notwithstanding clause which had been included in the Constitution by a Liberal government. So, Quebec cannot be accused of stealing anything, or of inventing a new strategy.

Mr. Speaker, I know that my time is up. I do hope that the people in English Canada, and maybe even some politicians, whether they be Conservative, New-Democrat, or Liberal, who proclaim out loud that they want Quebec in the Constitution while in fact hiding their true feelings, will come to see, after hearing my speech, the other side of the coin, the point of view of a Quebecer, an ordinary French-speaking citizen of Quebec. And I think that I speak for 60 per cent of all French-speaking Quebecers who agree with me.

Mrs. Dobbie: Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of empathy for much of what the Hon. Member said today and I apologize for my inability to speak to him in his language. I am working on that.

However, will the Hon. Member explain to the House and Canadians why the greatest opposition to the Meech Lake Accord in the Province of Manitoba is coming from his colleague, the Leader of the Liberal Opposition in Manitoba?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that it does not only come from a Liberal colleague; it comes from NDPers, Conservatives and Manitobans. Perhaps what they want in Manitoba is to get even for the CF-18 maintenance, something that should not be considered. Maybe some people are getting involved because they lost the contract that Montreal got. I must say that their own Premier bungled it. He gave the impression that Quebecers stole the CF-18 maintenance contract rather than earned it. But I have the feeling that it is not only. . . If it were only one person on the Liberal side, we could take care of that. But I think that if you are sincere, if you travel around your region, in your area, and I have already been there, people, be they Tories, Liberals, New Democrats or Greens, have the same perception. They are against Meech Lake because they do not want Quebec to be a distinct society within this country.

[English]

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member says may be correct, but I think he will agree that the leadership in opposition to Meech Lake in Manitoba has been Mrs. Carstairs. Would he confirm that? Would it not make a difference in the chemistry in Manitoba if Mrs. Carstairs would support Meech Lake?

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, first of all, when someone has leadership, the Leader of the Opposition does not move things forward; the Conservative Prime Minister does. If he had backbone, if he had courage, he would have moved things forward. I think that Pierre Elliott Trudeau could be blamed for a lot of things, but he always had the courage of his convictions. You could be for him or against him, but you respected that man because he was capable. If you have influence with your Prime Minister, if he is a Conservative Prime Minister with courage, he will take charge and lead proceedings in the House and not let the Opposition guide him. Otherwise, it would be better for him to resign and turn power over to others.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to rise today and join in the debate on the Throne Speech. I appreciate that the Throne Speech touches on many issues, economic and social.

In my capacity as Minister of Justice, I want to address the justice matters referred to in the Throne Speech, one briefly, and another in some depth. The part I wish to address briefly is that comment in the Speech from the Throne:

> My government will introduce further legislation to reform Canada's legal system and sentencing practices.

There have been a number of reports and studies to look into the question of criminal sentencing. There is the Canadian Sentencing Commission's Report and the Report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General which was entitled "Taking Responsibility". I intend to work to determine the status of the various reports, to establish some focus and, from there, put together with my Cabinet colleagues a Government initiative on sentencing which will focus on the need to address the unwarranted disparities which occur in sentences in Canada.

Specifically today, I want to refer to the reference in the Speech from the Throne which states:

> This will require a review of the current Young Offenders Act in order to ensure that it better protects the rights of society while advancing the rehabilitation of young offenders.

In the time available to me I want to examine the history of the Young Offenders Act, to review the difficulties, whether they are real or imagined, and to stake out our position as a Government and review the proposed course of action.

The House will know that the Juvenile Delinquents Act which governed juvenile justice from 1908 to 1984 had become ineffective and inappropriate. The Juvenile Delinquents Act was based on one clear and simple goal, and that was that juvenile offenders should be treated not as criminals but as children needing encouragement, assistance and guidance. Quite frankly, it became out of date.

It was revised by the previous Government and because of some criticisms I think it is fair that we review those briefly.

First, although the police, the courts and social welfare institutions were expected to act in the best interests of the child there was no expressed recognition in the legislation of the principle of protection of society. There was an imbalance between the interests of individual juveniles and the interests of society.

It stated that adolescents should be responsible for their actions and should be held criminally accountable if guilty of offences. The simple transfer of adolescents to the authority of child welfare authorities was not appropriate.

Closed courts denied the public and the media access. The age level at which juvenile delinquents would become subject to the adult court system varied from province to province. Finally, young people were denied fundamental rights which were enjoyed by adults.

The Act was passed by the previous Government and I would say at this point that it had all-Party support. Its two main objectives are to ensure protection of the public and to promote the rehabilitation of young people wherever possible. It is based upon four key principles which attempt to strike that balance between the needs of young people and the interests of society. The first principle is that young people are responsible for their behavior and should be held accountable in a manner appropriate to their age and maturity. Second, society has a right to protection from illegal behavior and a responsibility to prevent criminal conduct by young people as well as an obligation to promote their rehabilitation. Third, young people have special needs because of their varying levels of development and maturity. The fourth principle is that young people, if they are to be held accountable, are entitled to the same rights as adults, to due process of law and fair and equal treatment in accordance with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

To achieve the balance that the Young Offenders Act seeks, young people may require not only supervision, discipline and control but also guidance and assistance. For that reason, the Act provides alternative measures to the formal court process or perhaps no measures at all if the solution is consistent with the protection of society. In addition, the Act recognizes the responsibility of parents for the care and supervision of their children.

I should as an aside point out that I have discussed this with various officials at different levels and I was struck by the comment of one Crown Attorney who said to me that they see many more parents than they did under the Juvenile Delinquents Act because the Young Offenders Act puts an onus on the parents to be responsible for their children and they are seeing more parents in court. I think that is helpful.

The Act also says that young offenders should be removed from parental supervision only when that continued parental supervision is inappropriate. Parents will be encouraged and, if necessary, required to take an active part in proceedings that involve their children.

The Young Offenders Act is criminal law but it is different from the criminal law that applies to adults because of the doctrine of special needs. That doctrine says that the special needs of a young offender must be taken into account in determining the extent and the nature of the criminal law as distinct from or concurrent with interventions by the youth's family and by other systems such as child welfare, education or health.

As I mentioned a minute ago, when the Young Offenders Act was passed, it had broad parliamentary support. This is an issue that does cut across Party lines because there is no fundamental partisan or philosophical differences regarding young offenders. We all want to achieve that balance between protecting public property and persons and rehabilitating young people. We do not want young people to make one mistake and then find that that is just the first of many.

It is fair to say that the implementation process was difficult, especially the implementation of a maximum age of 17 years inclusive. I do not think anyone should be surprised to find that, when replacing a law such as the Juvenile Delinquents Act which had been in existence for 74 years, there were some implementation problems.

In 1985, when the experience of the first year's implementation showed that there were some problems and some concerns, our Government, under the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty), consulted with the territories and the provinces and identified specific problems which were based on the legislation itself. Amendments were passed to address these problems. They did not affect the fundamental principle, but they worked out a lot of the glitches.

The Act has been in force for four years now, and what has happened? What is the real experience of the Act as opposed to a few isolated and perhaps sensationalized incidents? I think Hon. Members will be surprised by some of the comments I will make, because I will talk about the actual experience across Canada.

Notwithstanding the wide range of dispositions available in the legislation and the principle of least interference, it appears that more young people are being sent into custody. Second, the bulk of young offenders commit property-related offences. That comprises about two-thirds of the charges laid. We are finding that a significant number of young offenders enter and exit the system only once.

Only 9 per cent of the offences recorded under the Young Offenders Act are violent offences, and only a minute proportion of those refer to the charge of murder, less than one-twentieth of 1 per cent. Probation is the most common disposition rendered, although there is compensation, community work and similar orders. Detention for treatment is rarely ordered as a disposition.

That is the experience. What are the criticisms? It is interesting to note that some say that the Act is too tough and some say that it is too lenient. The major criticisms have been the treatment order provisions which require the consent of the young person, the fact that children under 12 are excluded from the reach of the criminal law, the sufficiency of the maximum sentence, especially for murder, and the difficulty of transfers to adult court for serious crimes because of the necessity to prove under Section 16 of the Act that the transfer is in the interests of society and, and I think the difficult world is "and", having regard to the needs of the young person. The last criticism is the increasing proportion of young persons being incarcerated.

We have identified these areas in consultation with the provinces and the territories, and we looked at areas where there was a consensus that action had to be taken. In January 1989, all the jurisdictions involved agreed that on an expedited basis the focus of the study should be narrowed to the transfer provisions and dispositions for youth who murder.

We expect that this review will be completed shortly. I have asked that the results be available for discussion at an early meeting of provincial Ministers concerned with juvenile justice, and I can assure Hon. Members that we will act if we can find some consensus. We are looking toward a meeting with the provincial Attorneys General which I believe is in early June in Prince Edward Island.

I want to make one point, if I may, vis-a-vis the current incidents that have been reported in the media. Many of them have occurred in the Province of Ontario. There has been a suggestion that these alleged deficiencies are as a result of the Young Offenders Act. I want to suggest that they may be the result of administrative difficulties rather than deficiencies in the Act.

To his credit, the Minister of Community and Social Services in Ontario, the Hon. John Sweeney, has ordered an investigation into possible administrative difficulties, and I have offered the co-operation of my Department in assisting him in those studies. If we can separate the administrative difficulties from those two items that I referred to, the transfer provisions and especially the sentence for the crime of murder, it would be helpful to try to understand who has the responsibility for what.

I would also point out that in the past the federal Government has cost-shared the delivery of juvenile justice services with the provinces and the territories. The original agreement was to cost-share the first five years and review the actual experience. That review is not completed yet, but I recently announced a one-year extension of the Young Offenders System Development Contribution Program and the Young Offenders Program Development Contribution Program in an effort to maintain that joint responsibility. We are cost-sharing to the tune of some $160 million per annum, and that will continue until we are able to reach some new agreements.

I just want to say in closing that I do not think it will ever be easy to draft a law for young people that will exactly suit every province in this vast country. There are different thoughts as to how young people should be treated. That is the way we are. It will never be easy to draft laws that balance protection of person and property with our concern that we rehabilitate young people so they are an asset to society and not a liability to society and themselves. That is the challenge we face.

We are attempting to meet that challenge in a non-partisan way. It is evident the rehabilitation of young people, the effective treatment of them and the protection of personal property, cut across Party lines.

I am here to take part in the Throne Speech debate specifically in order to show exactly where the Government of Canada is headed in respect to any amendments vis-a-vis this very important law.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson: I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the Minister on his appointment as Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada and to commend him on the approach he is taking on the very difficult and sensitive question of possible amendments to the Young Offenders Act. As one who was involved in the drafting of the legislation and saw it through the Justice Committee, we as New Democrats recognize there have been difficulties. In some jurisdictions, too many people are being incarcerated. In others, we recognize there is a problem of two extremes in the area of murder. The community does recognize a concern that there is a disposition of three years in the case of youth court, or a life sentence with a minimum of 25 years if the young person is transferred to adult court. We want to look at some means of reducing that wide disparity in sentencing and give greater options to the judges. I want to offer my co-operation and that of my colleagues in trying to arrive at an equitable resolution of this difficult question.

In the 1986 Speech from the Throne, the Government promised amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act. A number of concerns were expressed in this area. In the Speech from the Throne tabled on April 3 of this year, there was no reference whatsoever to changes to the Canadian Human Rights Act. In the annual report of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, serious concerns were expressed about the failure of the Government to bring forward long overdue amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act. These amendments are in the areas of equal pay for work of equal value; reasonable accommodation, which affects religious minorities and the disabled; reporting directly to Parliament; and also expanding the prohibited grounds of discrimination to include political belief and sexual orientation.

On the question of sexual orientation, the Government promised over three years ago, and I quote from the Government's response to the Equality Rights Report:

> The Government will take whatever measures are necessary to ensure that sexual orientation is a prohibited ground of discrimination in relation to all areas of federal jurisdiction.

Lesbians and gay men continue to be victims of discrimination. They are fired from their jobs and denied access to housing and services. They are subject to harassment, violence and even death, as we have recently seen in Montreal. My question for the Minister is, does the Government stand behind the promise that was made three years ago to ensure that sexual orientation is a prohibited ground of discrimination in relation to all areas of federal jurisdiction?

When will the Government be bringing forward the long-overdue amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act which have been promised for some time? Will it be in this session?

Mr. Lewis: I appreciate my hon. colleague's kind comments. I welcome his offer of assistance with respect to amendments to the Young Offenders Act.

We have been trying to balance our agenda vis-a-vis items such as the Young Offenders Act and other initiatives in the justice field. I am thinking in terms of sentencing, firearms legislation and abortion. The matter of amendments to the Human Rights Act are on the agenda. We are reviewing the human rights issues my hon. friend raised. We are looking at the current annual report which raised a number of new issues. We will be putting these issues together in the context of our legislative program.

Mr. Karygiannis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the Minister for taking the initiative and putting forward in the Throne Speech that amendments to the Young Offenders Act will be put into place. However, I did not hear the Minister today reassure Members opposite that some measures will be put into place. The Minister said that 9 per cent of the crimes committed are violent crimes. He said he has real experience. I have worked on amendments to the Young Offenders Act. I have received the same kind of letters the Hon. Minister has received. If he is reading those letters, he will see the Canadian public expressing a need for change. Violent crimes such as murder need to be addressed.

Would the Minister say he will take positive steps and not side-step the issue? Will the Minister reassure this House that when the charge is murder and the young offender is over 14 years of age, that young offender will be transferred to adult court? Will the Minister also reassure this House he will reflect what the Canadian public wants, a maximum sentence to be increased from three years to five years less a day? Will the Minister reassure us that those will be the steps he will take after he meets with his colleagues in Prince Edward Island?

Mr. Lewis: I want to assure my hon. colleague that I read as many letters as I can to get a flavour of what people are thinking. That was my practice as a Member of Parliament and I have continued it as a Minister. I would state unequivocally that we are addressing the issue. Through the context of federal-provincial meetings we are attempting to see if a problem in one province is a problem shared by the other provinces and Territories.

Our discussions have been narrowed down to two issues: (a) the transfer provisions which, when they are applied, do provide for a longer sentence than three years; and (b) the sentence for murder. I have given my undertaking to address that issue. I am doing everything I can from the standpoint of the federal Government. There was a consensus among all parties involved that those were the issues to be studied. I am pushing to get a resolution and consensus that I hope will be forthcoming in June. If we get that consensus, I will have some time in the summer to go back to my cabinet colleagues and see what amendments we can draft.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments has expired. I know the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock (Mr. Friesen) has been seeking the floor. Is there unanimous consent to allow him a short question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Friesen: I appreciate the courtesy of the House in granting me time for this question. I was a member of the Justice Committee that dealt with the Young Offenders Act. I appreciate the Minister's observation that more and more parents are involved in court proceedings. That gives us encouragement that they are becoming more involved in their children's lives. I know there are many parents across Canada who have incorrigible children, and it is not the fault of the parents. It is simply that the children are incorrigible.

At the time we were dealing with the legislation and dealing with the clause that outlines the purposes of the Bill, and there were approximately eight of them. The last one, the eighth, was listed as working with the parents or giving parental responsibility for the conduct of the children.

The then Solicitor General, the Member for York Centre, found it impossible to accommodate a simple change that would have put clause No. 8 to clause No. 1. This would have given more direct focus to parental responsibility. I do not believe that it was a monumental request to ask for that type of change of simply moving the order of priorities. I believe it was a mistake not to do that.

I would ask the Minister, given the fact that the legislation already gives focus to that and the fact that parents seem to have found help in the Young Offenders legislation in working with their children, if he would assure us that in the amendments to come there will be an even greater focus on parental accountability and parents' right to work with the courts to ensure that young offenders are held accountable?

Mr. Lewis: I thank my friend for his question. I guess in spelling out principles one has to number them and place them in a certain order. I was not a member of the committee when it was studied, and I cannot give the Hon. Member any focus as to how I might have rearranged the responsibilities.

It is interesting that the one aside I used in my prepared text was to speak of a Crown Attorney who told me that they were seeing more parents coming to court. It is partly a policing matter and partly more effective work by the provinces in looking for new ways of dealing with rehabilitation.

I can say to my hon. friend that I do not believe it has been the thrust of a lot of demands by various provinces and the Territories for an amendment which would rearrange the principles and perhaps give a higher priority, if in fact listing does give a priority to the comment my hon. friend makes, but I will take it under advisement.

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, I bring you greetings from the unofficial rump of the Government. Although we are only 18 strong, we represent significant strength and support for our fellow members on your right. Our comfort level is high as our view is much better from here than is theirs.

It is an honour and privilege for me to rise in the House and take part in the Throne Speech debate. It is certainly a source of great pride being the first Member from Regina to be elected to the Government in 26 years, especially coming during such an historic election campaign.

On November 21, Canadians decided which direction the country would take, not only for the next four years but into the 21st Century. Canadians chose a Government with a vision for the future and rejected the closed isolationist view of Canada put forward by the opposition parties.

Canadians elected a Government committed to building a stronger economy so that we can afford to maintain the type of caring and compassionate society that we now enjoy. We are committed to the enhancement and protection of our environment. We remain committed to the promotion of national unity, not only between English and French, but among all peoples who make up the multicultural mosaic of Canada.

Canadians correctly believed that the Progressive Conservative Party possessed the type of leader it takes to steer our country through difficult times. They saw a leader who had overcome adversity and not lost sight of his dream to build a better Canada, a leader with the integrity, determination and courage to fight and win an election against two opposition parties. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) showed us what it takes to move this country forward. Canadians chose a leader and a Party capable of adapting to the future.

My Leader and my Party are positive about the future of this country. That is why the Speech from the Throne confidently states our objectives and commitments. Unlike some opposition Members, I know that Canada remains a sovereign nation. As Canadians, we would not have it any other way.

We have entered into a trading agreement with the United States that will make Canada stronger and more competitive, and it is this strength that nurtures our sovereignty. I ask Members opposite to join with the Conservatives and the Ontario Liberals in supporting the Free Trade Agreement. It is time to stop fighting the election and get on with building a better Canada. Even the Liberals must realize that blaming every sparrow that falls on the Free Trade Agreement is divisive and counterproductive for this great country that we all share. Surely that is not their objective.

By accepting free trade we have acknowledged the need to compete in a global market-place. This is not a new idea to those of us from the prairies. Saskatchewan farmers have always competed internationally, and they have and will continue to be successful because they are extremely good at what they do.

It is not freer trade that hurts the farmer; it is protectionism and unfair trading practices. It is also protectionism which hurts the development of manufacturing and secondary processing in Saskatchewan and in Canada.

Of course, I have no illusions about members of the New Democratic Party's approach to free trade, or anything else for that matter. As if their ideological approach to the future were not already made clear enough during the election, the leader of the NDP restated it on April 7 in this House when he said: "We are going to oppose with determined vigour every Bill that flows out of this Throne Speech and every Budget item that will come in the weeks ahead", for no specific reason other than opposition.

It does not matter what will come from the Throne Speech or the Budget, members of the New Democratic Party already know they must be against it. Perhaps things will change in November, but I rather doubt it. Members of the NDP will oppose any new initiative. It is not surprising they oppose the Government's new labour force strategy.

As was stated earlier in the House today, it is because the NDP is an old Party with old socialist ideas that even socialist countries today are rejecting them. I am sure that the additional $350 million for job training under Section 26 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, enough to train an addition 60,000 Canadians, will be opposed. It is of interest to note how the New Democratic Party can selectively make use of information to suit its purposes in opposition.

In the House, Members of that Party have been known not only to criticize actions of the federal Government, but also be critical of members of provincial Governments who are unable to defend themselves here.

Criticism was levelled the other day at the Saskatchewan Conservatives. The comparison was made that while under an NDP Government in Saskatchewan, Saskatchewan enjoyed a balanced budget, more social programs and lower taxes. Parts of the statement are true, while other parts are based on a jaundiced form of judgment.

This criticism is not honest in that it makes no reference to the fact that at the time the provincial Conservatives took office, world oil, uranium, and potash prices plummeted. As we all know, Saskatchewan has been victimized by drought. The recession caused the Government of Saskatchewan to invest in job creation programs and technology investment, not the least of which is an $850 million investment in Canada's first heavy oil upgrader in Regina.

At that time the greatest tragedy attributable to the NDP Government in Saskatchewan was that when the provincial Conservatives took office in 1982, the cupboard of the provincial heritage fund was bare. The mice had taken it all. The explanation was that 50 per cent of Saskatchewan's potash industry was to be nationalized for the benefit of future generations. Members of the Saskatchewan NDP went down to New York for a loan. How can a U.S. loan, borrowed when the dollar was in the mid-80 cent range and attempted to be repaid when the dollar was in the mid-70 cent range, benefit Saskatchewan's future generations? Shortly after, world potash prices fell. Instead of owning an asset, Saskatchewan residents found themselves as the owners of a liability.

During the same period, the Alberta Conservatives chose to tax the mining of Alberta resources and not socialize them under the pretext of ownership. History shows the Alberta approach to have been a monumentally better decision for the average Albertan.

The Alberta Heritage Trust Fund has been used to allow Alberta municipalities to pay off large amounts of debt, and to pay for a large portion of the light rail transit systems in Edmonton and Calgary. As well, there is a long list for the average Albertan to benefit from.

No, Mr. Speaker, Members of the NDP do not possess a better way. They have no magic formula. A provincial NDP cabinet minister once conveyed to me a most honest statement. He said words to the effect that he wished people would stop asking the Government to do things for them. He went on to say that what people do not realize is that the more a Government is involved in our lives, the more of our freedoms we stand to lose. This was an honest admission that he detested his Party's basic philosophy. This man has since retired and I have not heard from him politically since. No wonder.

I want no part of a socialist entrapment. Socialists thrive on the takeover of the body; socialists excel at the takeover of the mind. That is the illness of socialism, and I want no part of it. My grandparents came to this country to be free people and it is under this Conservative Government that we will all continue to be free.

We cannot spend our time trying to please the NDP. We must continue to work for the people of Canada. They are the ones for whom we are all here. That is why the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) has announced her intention to revise the maternity, parental and sickness benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Currently, maternity benefits are available to natural mothers only for a period of 15 weeks. With these new changes a total of 30 weeks will be available. Parental benefits will soon be accessible to fathers as well as mothers, whether they be natural or adoptive parents. This will bring the Act in line with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is this kind of action that Canadians want and expect from the Government. So they should.

By developing a human resources development strategy the Government is investing in our strongest asset, our people. We are helping people adapt to a changing environment. It is the type of initiative that will prepare Canadians for the challenges that lie ahead. It is a recognition by this Government that it has a major role to play in maintaining the competitiveness of Canadians, and that skill development is crucial to competitiveness. That is why we remain committed to our initiatives in literacy, education, training and retraining. Our workforce, especially our youth, must meet the requirements of a modern economy. Through the expansion of labour force programs to encourage the continual upgrading of skills, we will maintain a stronger productive workforce, world class and world competitive. These are initiatives aimed at the average Canadian, designed to ensure that the average Canadian will benefit fully from a Canadian economy prepared for the pressures of the new global reality.

As we have in the past, we will ensure that Canada's first Canadians continue to make progress toward economic equality. In 1988-89, some 15,000 native people will receive close to $130 million in federal assistance for post-secondary education. I am confident that the Budget will continue to increase in the future, as it has over the past two years.

It is necessary to make sure that all Canadians share in the benefits of economic success, no matter what part of Canada they live in. That is why we remain committed to regional development throughout the country. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced that the regional economic diversification programs will continue to be funded for an additional five years, to support the efforts of Canadians in expanding beyond our traditional areas of strength. I know that in Saskatchewan we are taking advantage of the federal support to bring to life the ideas that lie at the root of all new economic expansions. We have always been proud of the ingenuity and the pioneering spirit which built our province. We are using those same qualities today to create new industries and therefore new opportunity. I know that the people of Saskatchewan can succeed in their effort to build a stronger and more vibrant economy. I am pleased to be part of the federal Government that will continue to work with us as we strive to achieve our goal.

Yet, as we work to create the kind of rich, varied economy that will bring a better life for all Canadians, there is a burden we must carry that impedes our progress. That burden is the massive national debt. There are those who would try to convince us that the debt is not a serious matter, that other priorities must come first, as if the debt did not intrude on every area of Government decision making. The fact is, the debt is slowly strangling our ability to deal effectively with the needs of Canadians.

It is not the kind of problem that can be casually cast aside and forgotten about. We must deal with it now. Despite our progress over the last four years in reducing the yearly deficits by some $10 billion more is required. I am afraid much more.

The debt is so large that it is almost beyond comprehension. The numbers have been repeated so often that they are becoming meaningless. Surely, though, when we reach the point that 31 cents out of every dollar the Government spends goes to servicing the debt it is time to act decisively and to act together.

Arguments are tossed back and forth as to who is to blame for the state we find ourselves in today. But that is seemingly insignificant. We must either begin to solve the problem or soon control will be lost. And when I say we, I again urge the support of the opposition Parties. I invite real criticism but please do not bother me with useless rhetorical opposition. The debt is our problem. It is Canada's problem. Given the proper attitude, it can be addressed.

Regrettably, debt problems are not new to the agricultural sector in Saskatchewan. The combination of drought and the international agricultural trade war have taken a heavy toll. But the Progressive Conservative Government has been there to support our farmers and have thus supported our consumers. There may have only been a brief mention about farmers in the Throne Speech, but this is a Government that believes in actions not words.

Between 1984 and August of 1988, this federal Government provided $10.3 billion in agricultural benefits to farmers. We have responded to the needs of farmers in the past and we will continue to do so. The Canadian Crop Drought Assistance Program will put approximately $850 million into the pockets of Canadian agricultural producers. The assistance to farmers is much more than drought relief. We are active in developing the rural infrastructure through the Rural Water Development Program. The $500,000 capital gains exemption for farmers and the farm fuel tax rebate are initiatives which highlight our ongoing support for the farmer. We have worked tirelessly on behalf of the agricultural community on the international scene. Through our involvement in the Cairns Group we have lobbied for the kind of international trading rules that will allow our farmers to develop their competitive advantage. In Saskatchewan we have some of the best agricultural producers in the world. Our Government will continue to support them through concrete actions as they have in the past.

Mr. Speaker, our international role is not limited to economic matters. We will continue, as we have in the past, to take a strong stand in defence of human rights. Only the constant vigil of the free nations of the world and the weight of world public opinion can bring true freedom to the victims of oppression. In many parts of the world people suffer under the oppression of war. Canada remains committed to working with the United Nations as peacekeepers to help end this suffering, to do our best to relieve the pain of famine and other natural disasters.

We have a role to play in encouraging East-West co-operation while remembering that we are firmly committed to our allies in NATO. It is important to remember our historical ties with Western Europe, especially now when there is so much hope for change in the Soviet Union. We must do what we can to encourage these positive developments, but not at the expense of losing touch with the real situation. There is a long road to travel before the Soviet Union becomes a truly free society. Until that time we must remain vigilant.

Mr. Speaker, I have only mentioned a few of the areas in which the Government can act over the next four years. Judging from our past record, I am sure we will accomplish a great deal in many other areas as well. The agenda of the government is clear and confident. Our resolve is firm. I believe we will continue to move this country forward by working in the national interest.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg Transcona (Mr. Blaikie) on questions and comments.

Mr. Blaikie: I would like to begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for Regina—Wascana (Mr. Schneider) on his speech, but my congratulations end there. The Member spent a great deal of time talking about the NDP. We are grateful for the attention but it certainly is an indication to us who the Hon. Member regards as the force to be reckoned with in Regina and Saskatchewan. The Hon. Member, we know, is an old partisan of Saskatchewan politics, being a former mayor of Regina, if I remember correctly.

He mentioned that this is the first time in 26 years the people of Regina had elected a Conservative and, after listening to his speech, my colleagues and I are comforted to know this is something that will indeed be something which will only happen every 26 years. The people of Regina are entitled to make this mistake four times a century. It is not something they will do often, especially since the Hon. Member appears to be doing his best to ensure that that tradition will be upheld by distorting the political tradition which the NDP represents and which the Saskatchewan people hold dear.

I hope the Hon. Member goes on ranting and raving the way he did this afternoon, because I am sure this is the kind of thing which will only ensure that very shortly in the Province of Saskatchewan there will once again be an NDP Government.

The Hon. Member mentioned changes to the unemployment insurance. I am thankful he did that because it gives me the opportunity to speak about a change I would like to see to the unemployment insurance, a change which I am trying to promote through the introduction of a Private Member's Motion, which was not drawn unfortunately. I wonder what the Hon. Member's opinion would be of the change I would like to see happen, in addition to some of the positive changes that were made. We in this House think the changes the Government have proposed are on balance a disaster but there nevertheless has been some changes that we approve of which the Member mentioned. I wonder why there was not any action with respect to the concern that a great many people have concerning the UI regulations and parents who have children who are terminally ill, children who are in hospital and who have to be visited. Their parents have to be with them day in and day out in this very difficult time in the lives of these families. These are people who often have to leave their jobs. They are not entitled to unemployment insurance.

I have been lobbied in Winnipeg by groups of social workers and other people who work in hospitals in this situation to have a change made to the unemployment insurance scheme which would make allowance for parents who find themselves in this very painful and tragic situation. I was very disappointed that when the Minister had an opportunity to reform the UI system, and if she wanted to appeal to those who want to make the UI system more humane, this was not one of the other things that she undertook.

I wonder whether the Hon. Member would be prepared to get up to support that particular reform at this time.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, I was heartened somewhat to notice that the Hon. Member way down at the other end of this side of the House made some reference to my ranting and raving. Obviously my statements excited him. I am extremely pleased to know that I could excite anyone down at that end of the room.

He is right. I was a mayor of Regina. He made reference to old, but only in terms of the fact that nine years of service was given by myself to my birthplace. He also made mention of the fact that I am familiar with partisan politics.

I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there seems to be a fair amount of criticism in Regina these days about the unfair comparison between taxes in Regina and Saskatoon. I would say that, yes, I did witness partisan politics for the greater period of the nine years I served there. The majority of my council, while ashamedly admitting they were all members of the New Democratic Party and had philosophies that way, did not admit it during election time. After the election it came out and was truly born. Yes, I am familiar with partisan politics. I watched them for several years.

I am somewhat disturbed that he counters my claims of distortion with claims of distortion and hence the public is left to sit back in judgment and wonder who to believe.

He mentioned the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act to which I made reference and how glad he was that I had raised it because it gave him an opportunity. I consider that to be somewhat of a weak attempt to talk about anything that any Member wishes to talk about at any time, given the fact that the Throne Speech kept itself open to everything. I am glad he is glad about something.

With respect to his specific point, however, I think that it would be pure folly for any intelligent being to give a yes or no answer to effecting any change of government policy, proposed or otherwise, without having the full opportunity to have an open and intelligent debate leading thereto.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to contribute to the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I see that the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is in the House. I am glad about that because most of what I will have to say will pertain to the Government's foreign policy. Perhaps we can have an exchange or two after I am finished.

I would like to begin, though, as is the tradition, with saying how grateful I am to the constituents of the new riding of Winnipeg Transcona for having been re-elected. I will just say only this because we have so little time, and I want to give all my time to the Minister.

We know the origin of the name Winnipeg. But the name Transcona is the name of a railway town that was created in 1911 beside the new shops built for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad. Transcona literally derives itself from the notion of transconti- nental. Members will not be surprised, therefore, and have not been over the years, at the vehemence with which I defend transcontinental rail passenger service. It literally goes to the very heart and history of the community that I grew up in.

Mr. Boyer: So your continental.

Mr. Blaikie: The problem with this Government is that it no longer wants to be transcontinental; it wants to be continental in the north-south sense. However, I will not be distracted.

I would like to address myself to the foreign policy record of the Government. I begin by saying that the Minister knows that on a number of occasions we have had opportunity to co-operate on various issues, but I am going to be critical today because I think the Government deserves a great deal of criticism in a variety of ways.

We know that Canada was just elected to the Security Council of the United Nations. This makes Canada a very important country in the international community. We always have been an important country in the international community, but this gives concrete expression to that importance. It gives Canada a true opportunity to be a leader in the international community, particularly, of course, at the United Nations. It gives Canada the opportunity to be a strong voice for a great many things that need to happen in the world. So my intention here today is to reflect upon just what kind of voice Canada is in the world with respect to international affairs.

As I look over the range of issues which one could talk about I see that the Canadian voice ranges from being in some cases no voice at all to being a hypocritical voice, to being a timid voice, to being a cold war voice, to being a fading voice. I would like to go through all these if I have the time.

What is at stake here is the cumulative erosion of Canada's reputation in the world as a country that shows leadership, as a country that is able to help in many ways to bring about the kind of peace and development that so many Canadians desire for the planet that they live on.

Perhaps I will begin with what I am sure must be a sore spot, even though he cannot admit it, for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that is, where Canada's voice has turned out to be a hypocritical voice. That of course has to do with South Africa and the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in 1985 stood up before the United Nations and in one of those rhetorical moments that the Prime Minister is so famous for said that if there was no progress toward the ending of apartheid in South Africa Canada would move toward comprehensive mandatory economic sanctions.

The world cheered, as did many Canadians. The Prime Minister basked in the glory of that statement for some time. He enjoyed a certain amount of political gain as a result of that statement. However, what has happened is that whatever gain accrued to the Prime Minister was achieved at the expense of Canada's international reputation. Now that the end of apartheid is no closer, that events in South Africa have arguably deteriorated in many respects since the Prime Minister made his statement, particularly with respect to the treatment of anti-apartheid activists in South Africa by the South African Government, and that the Canadian Government has not acted, Canada has been made to look a fool, literally, on the international stage.

I am sure that privately it must really irritate the Secretary of State for External Affairs to have to go around from conference to conference defending the hypocricy of one of his former arch-rivals in the political realm. I do not expect him to comment on that, but this is what I mean when I talk about a hypocritical voice.

When I say a timid voice I am referring to two areas, one in which I think the record of the Government is better than the other. I will start with the better one. It has to do with the Government's approach to Central America. I think the Minister has shown an openness to learning about Central America, appreciating what is going on there and appreciating the deficiencies of American policy in that area that is admirable. However, it has been a timid voice in this respect. The Minister, in the language of the Government, has not been willing to be as explicitly critical of American policy in that area as many people would want him to have been, particularly with respect to the funding of the Contras. Nevertheless, we are now moving to a point where it is conventional wisdom that the United States should no longer fund the invasion of Nicaragua by the Contras.

This is something that Canada could have said a long time ago if it were not so timid a country and if the Government had not been so timid. Could we not have helped that process along much earlier if we had been willing to say that? Having said that, I hope that the Government will try to continue to play the constructive role that it has in the peace process which has been encouraged by the Special Committee on the peace process. I know for instance that the Nicaraguan Government is interested in having Canada play a role in the months leading up to and including the election set for February, 1990. I hope that the Minister will be open to any way in which Canada can be part of the international presence at the Nicaraguan elections, so those elections can be beyond reproach and can be seen to be a legitimate part of the peace process.

I would encourage the Minister at the same time to consider enhancing development assistance to Nicaragua in order to alleviate the severe economic problems that are a result of the war, the embargo and various other things.

I spoke of a timid voice. I am thinking also of the Middle East, Mr. Speaker. Here was a case where the Government was more cautious than the cautious. It was a case of waiting until everyone else had faced up to the changes that had been wrought in the Middle East by the changes in PLO policies. We certainly encouraged the Government, before it did so, to take the steps that it did.

We often criticize the Government for wanting to be in lock-step with the United States on many issues, but here was a case where not only the U.S., but almost everyone else on the block had faced up to this reality, and yet Canada was the last to do so. This again made Canada look far too timid in its way of dealing with these serious regional conflicts.

I have talked about a hypocritical voice and a timid voice. Where there is no voice at all seems to be in NATO one of the various institutions that the Minister and his colleagues like to defend, particularly if they think it is advantageous to them to compare their position to the NDP.

What is the role of Canada within NATO, and when is the Minister going to give us some kind of a comprehensive explanation of what the Government's policy is with respect to the debates that are going on within NATO as to the modernization of nuclear weapons?

I read that the government is in favour of modernization of nuclear weapons. If that is true, I would like to hear what the explanation is and so would the Canadian people. So much is at stake in that debate as to whether or not the Lance missiles are going to be replaced, whether the progress made in the INF treaty is going to be endangered by that kind of modernization.

There are debates going on in NATO about the adoption of non-provocative defence or non-offensive defence. Where is Canada on this? Are we not part of the debate that is going on about how changes in Europe and east-west relations will be dealt with? Why do we have to be reduced to being a spectator? That is what I mean when I say that in this sense Canada has no voice.

Where we do have a voice it sounds like a cold war voice. There has been no repudiation of what was antiquated then, but what is even more antiquated now i.e. the rhetoric of the foreign policy paper of the Government. I believe it was called challenge and commitment or something like that. This was a document which was widely condemned at the time for being anachronistic, for belonging more to the 1950s than to the 1980s. As a result of events that have happened since then, both in the Soviet Union and in the west, the Government's cold war voice has become even less concerned with reality. Again we hear no updating of that.

I read the speeches that Mrs. Thatcher gave when Chairman Gorbachev came to London. The Government is in danger, in fact has been for some time of being to the right of Thatcher and to the right of Reagan in the last few months of his presidency. One wonders, are we simply waiting for Bush to make up his mind so that Canadians will know where they stand in respect of east-west relations. Or is this an opportunity for us to show some leadership in relationship with our allies instead of meekly assenting to whatever way the United States and NATO wants to use us, whether in the follow on Forces attack strategy which compels us to destroy the livelihood of the land of our Inuit people in Labrador through low-level flight testing or in testing the advance or Stealth Cruise missiles which many people contend could be used as a form of a first strike weapon and therefore is destabilizing? Why do we have to be such uncritical participants in all of this?

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I mention a fading voice. By a fading voice, I am talking about when the Budget comes down on April 27 and whether we will see a significant slashing of Canadian support for overseas development and assistance. This has been the jewel of Canadian foreign policy. It has not been as good as we would like to have seen it. There has never been the percentage of GNP in terms of spending that we would want, but certainly Canada has a reputation abroad of being a country committed to overseas development assistance. I can tell you that many people are very worried. We had the North-South Institute and the Canadian Council on International Co-operation expressing their concern yesterday. This really could be the straw that breaks the camel's back, Mr. Speaker.

In addition to all the things that I have talked about already where we choose to have no voice, choose to maintain the cold war voice and where we seem to have a hypocritical or timid voice, if our commitment to overseas development assistance is seen to be a fading voice, then the worries that many people have about the way Canada's international reputation is under attack, both because of sins of omission and commission on the part of this Government, will turn out to be true. I think it is a tragedy. In four years you can do some damage, but this Government has got another four years. Unless they change their ways, we will have had eight years of this kind of approach. By that time we will have gone a long way to changing the role of Canada in the world for the worse.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to seek unanimous consent to go on and on, but I have a hunch I would not get it. The Member from Surrey—White Rock (Mr. Friesen) might give it to me because we gave it to him not long ago, but I cannot be sure of everyone else.

So I look forward to whatever the Minister might have to say. Perhaps we can carry on the debate.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy) on a question or comment.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment on the Government's Throne Speech and the Member's speech itself. In the Speech from the Throne, the Government mentions its commitment to NATO and mentions disarmament. I hope for world peace, the initial statement by the two superpowers to reduce nuclear armaments will continue, but we should always keep in mind that nuclear arms have acted as a deterrent for a third world war.

We should encourage President Gorbachev in his efforts to liberalize the Soviet system with perestroika and glasnost and expand our trade relations with countries as long as they respect human rights. Therefore we should reconfirm our commitment to the Helsinki Agreement on human rights and monitor those countries that don't adhere to it. We should applaud the fact that the Soviet Union removed itself from Afganistan. I hope that this soon will happen in Lebanon where we have foreign troops, Israeli and others occupying that country. On the Palestinian question, our Government makes no mention of the fact that Israel has occupied that part of the world for many years and there is a constant human rights violation there. We should condemn such action and be part of the world community that expresses its condemnation at the United Nations.

We should also press for an international peace conference on the Middle East issue so as to bring justice to the oppressed people of Palestine. I hope the Hon. Member who just spoke would comment on the Palestinian issue.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I did comment on the Palestinian issue in the early part of my speech. We have supported the call for an international conference.

The Hon. Member quoted sentences from the Throne Speech in which the Government welcomed the progress between the superpowers. On the other hand he talked about the need to maintain a strong nuclear deterrent and so on. That is part of the problem. I believe we will not be able to respond adequately to the diplomatic initiatives, as well as others taken by the Soviet Union, if we do not show that we too are willing to change our way of thinking.

I agree that it is a difficult process to decide what action one should take and when, but I am very concerned that the West might be sending the wrong signal, that is, that it is not prepared to move and that it will be all give and no take. That is a concern.

The Hon. Member talked about the Soviet Union. I had an opportunity recently to be in Moscow with other parliamentarians for a Conference on Ecological Problems in the North. This is another area I would have dealt with had I the time. Environmental co-operation between Canada and the Soviet Union is another way in which we can begin to co-operate in the North and in other ways.

The whole question of the global environment is something that must be taken seriously. I got the impression that the Soviet Union is taking the problem seriously, possibly because serious environmental problems are coming home to roost there. I almost detected a sense of panic in their voice about the environment. Whatever sins we may have committed here, I have the feeling they have done some things I would rather not know about.

There is an opportunity for co-operation in the North and elsewhere that I hope will some day trivialize the differences we have had over the years. There is a need for planetary solidarity, a global human solidarity for the survival of us all. I suggest that that struggle for survival will make some of the divisions that we have experienced over the last 40 years seem quite trivial. I hope they will become trivial as changes take place in the Soviet Union and we respond intelligently to them, moving toward a world which is no longer divided between these two armed camps contemplating its destruction.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I was tempted to miss the opportunity for debate but I do not want to do that. I was interested by the one word to which the Hon. Member consistently referred. That was the word "voice". He characterized the role of Canada in the world as being related to our voice and how we express our voice.

Certainly I remember countless occasions on which he has urged me to use Canada's voice to condemn some situation or usually some Government, and usually the American Government. It is a challenge that we have to face if we are realistic about how Canada exercises its influence in the world.

Let us take Central America. It is my view that had I accepted his voice and the voice of his Party over the last couple of years, and had we used our influence to condemn the United States in Central America, that probably would have cost us the capacity to play the very constructive, albeit quite limited and specific role that Canada is able to play in moving that region toward a peace process.

We are there because we have some credentials. In order to maintain those credentials, very often one has to restrain one's voice. One cannot always raise it.

Canada has more to offer the world than advice. We have some very substantial capacities as a nation. We have demonstrated them over time. We have honed them. They are respected very generally, but we can waste them. We can waste them often if we prefer the luxury of expressing an opinion to the harder work of having an effect on actual events.

I have spoken of Central America. The question that is perhaps of the most division between us has to do with the role of Canada to our allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and to the way we should seek to exert our influence on the changing situation in East–West relations. Obviously there are profound and important changes in the Soviet Union. Obviously, as has been demonstrated in Poland and is evident in Hungary and elsewhere, there are important changes in other East Bloc countries.

How do we best encourage those changes while respecting Canadian interests and the values and interests that people have lived and died for in this country and in the Western Alliance for a long time? We certainly cannot assume that perestroika has extended, for example, to the Soviet military. We certainly cannot ignore the continuing build–up in Soviet military preparation in the Kola Peninsula and elsewhere. We cannot be preoccupied with those sorts of things, but neither can we ignore them.

We cannot ignore the reality that the major agreement we have achieved on arms control has been achieved precisely because Canada and other western nations, other NATO nations stayed together to force the Soviet Union to come to negotiation on the INF.

What would have happened had Canada chosen the luxury of expressing a voice rather than being part of the NATO consensus that led to the INF Agreement? Had Canada split from the NATO alliance, would we have had the INF Agreement? I think the likelihood is that we would not.

Those are the kinds of decisions that Canadian policy makers have to confront, precisely because we have more influence in the world than simply a voice. I think the disagreement between the Hon. Member and myself—and I think it is a disagreement reflected in our two Parties—concerns whether we focus on expressing an opinion, which is easy, or whether we attempt the hard work of trying to effect actual changes in difficult complex situations.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Minister chose to comment. I will certainly try to reply.

We do have a difference of opinion, a difference of opinion with respect to the historical analysis of some of the issues to which he referred. I will begin with Central America.

I think it is a caricature of the argument to say that it is simply a choice between expressing an opinion which, according to the Minister is easy, and doing the quiet constructive work that the Minister always talks about. Sometimes expressing an opinion is a very difficult thing if the person or country one is expressing an opinion about will be unhappy with that opinion, as the Americans would have been if the Minister had chosen to express an opinion about the U.S. funding of Contras when we asked him to do so. If the Minister believes that would have been easy, I think he would have to reconsider his argument.

I suggest the reason he did not express an opinion at that time is that it would have been very difficult, not easy, but had we expressed that opinion earlier we may have been part of that group of countries which eventually caused the United States to rethink its position.

It was ultimately Oscar Arias of Costa Rica, which is much more dependent on U.S. aid than Canada, who was willing to say that the Contras should not be funded by the United States. Surely if Costa Rica could take such a step, dependent as it is on the United States, we could have done so. We are not that dependent on the United States yet, although we may be after the Free Trade Agreement has been in place for some time. However, we have that independence now and have not used it.

The Minister talks about East–West relations and says that we cannot ignore the reality of the build–up in the Kola Peninsula and so on. I am not asking him to do that. I am not asking him to ignore any reality but to be part of the new reality. We should take an active, conscious, intelligent debating role in that new reality. Instead the Minister is perceived to be simply a spectator to that debate. If that is a wrong perception, I hope he will show me how. Every time someone tries to engage in the debate, the Minister pours cold water on the debate by caricaturing the debate instead of entering into the very difficult arguments involved.

I am glad to see the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is here, a very unusual event, Mr. Speaker. I hope it was foreign policy that brought him into the House of Commons and some of my remarks about his hypocritical stance with respect to South Africa and the fact that he has made a fool of Canada on the world stage by saying one thing about South Africa and doing another or not doing what he said he would do if apartheid did not come to an end.

I welcome the Prime Minister's intervention in this debate. We could really have some fun if he would get to his feet.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my hon. friend for his kind reference to me. I am here because when I heard that he was speaking, I rushed down from my office.

I want to tell the Hon. Member to check Hansard. He will see that our good friend and his colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin), pointed out in Hansard some years ago, watching me come to the House of Commons, that he had been in the House since 1968 and that I was the first Prime Minister who came regularly to listen to him as I wanted to listen to my hon. friend. I just wanted to put that on the record in case my hon. friend wants to become less bellicose and more peaceful as the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and I are on these matters.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, do I get a chance to respond? You keep turning on the mike behind me. I do not want to turn my back on the House of Commons in order to speak.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) referred to a remark made by the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin), a remark he probably made when he was still the Hon. Member for Regina West. Being in the House is something that the Prime Minister should do more often. It is a habit that I thought he was falling away from.

If this is the beginning of re-engaging the House of Commons and being present for debates, I would submit that that is a welcome trend. It is about time that more Members were present in the House of Commons and that we did have real debates between each other and not proxy debates through Hansard. If the Prime Minister's presence here is an attempt to encourage that, then all the better, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Bob Porter (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to to have this honour and opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne and to take part in the debate that has been going on this past number of days. I would also like at this time to thank those constituents I have represented for the past four years for the confidence they have placed in me again, as we look forward to another term of office, to represent the views and concerns of Canadians from western Canada.

The foundations of some of the initiatives outlined in the Throne Speech were established during the Thirty-third Parliament. One of those was building a stronger economy. Canada has seen the creation of 1.4 million jobs since 1984. This country's economic indicators have led the way among western industrialized nations. Maintaining that economic performance is essential and it will not be easy in a competitive world with inflation and interest rates under pressure.

We are closely tied economically through liberalized trade and commerce between nations. That is a fact of life in today's world. There is no doubt that events taking place in our global economy have an immediate effect on Canada. An example of that effect, which affects us all and certainly those in my constituency of Medicine Hat, is world energy prices. A movement of one dollar up or down results in a change of $150 million in income in the Province of Alberta and that has a ripple effect throughout that economy and that of all Canada.

As a result of the agricultural trade war, primarily between the United States and the EEC, we have seen grain prices halved in some cases. Several years of drought have exacerbated the situation in western Canada. No Government can offset the damage caused by droughts and by volatile world oil prices, but in the past four years this Government has implemented programs that have certainly helped, and they have helped a lot. There has been over $10 billion in assistance to agriculture in the last four years.

I have been involved in agriculture all of my life and I have seen droughts before. I do not recall a special grain program in the past. I do not remember a $1 billion drought package. The outlook is a little better this spring. Conditions relating to that drought still linger on. I hope it does start to rain, not so much for me but for my little grandson who will be four this fall. He has never seen rain out there before.

I would be the first to acknowledge that we have to continue to work toward some long-term agricultural policies. We have done a number of things, including tripartite stabilization programs and improvements to grain stabilization where modifications have been made. New programs and initiatives have to be carried out, they have to be voluntary and they have to be actuarially sound. I think the Grains 2000 option is something that is well worth consideration.

What concerns me, and I am sure most Canadians, is how we maintain let alone improve existing programs and social policies if we do not address the greatest impediment to our future, Canada's national debt. Like many of us sitting here, I have heard all the statistics, I have listened to the debate about our national debt, about when it got started, about how it grew, about whose fault it was. There has even been some pointed remarks about who fathered it. I do not think it matters at this point who fathered the debt, but somebody has to look after the baby.

A lot of things could have been done and should have been done. In 1978, the national debt was around $60 billion. It may be just a coincidence, but that is roughly the amount of funding that came out of western Canada as a result of the National Energy Program. I think many things could have been done with the debt at that time. Unfortunately, we cannot make hindsight retroactive.

As we discuss who is to blame, the debt continues to grow and we all have a share in it. That includes everyone in this House and each Canadian every one of us represents. We constantly hear complaints about someone not getting their fair share. Provinces do not get their fair share, special interest groups are not looked after, your constituency gets more than mine. Believe me, we all have a piece of the action when it comes to sharing the national debt. Anyone who has given any serious thought to where this country is headed has to be concerned. My constituents of Medicine Hat are concerned and I am sure Members on both sides of the House are hearing the same concerns.

Since 5.40 yesterday afternoon, this Government will have had to raise $88 million to pay for the interest on that debt. Since 4.40 today, the Government will have had to come up with $3.6 million. If you give me my allocation of time, Mr. Speaker, it will show that talk is not cheap. It will have cost all of us $1.2 million to service that debt.

Where does the money come from? I guess most of it comes from that 31 cents out of every tax dollar that each of us sends in to Revenue Canada. There are no simple or easy answers. We could get rid of the debt next week if every Canadian man, woman and child sent Revenue Canada a cheque for $12,300. If they sent $100 a month, it would pay the interest. I think there are two chances of that happening, one slim and one fat.

If, through some quirk of circumstance, Members on both sides of the House agree to freeze all spending at today's level, the interest payments alone would double the national debt by 1995. Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that the Members who will occupy this Chamber in 1995 will find the situation any easier to deal with than those of us who are here today? Eight years from now, unless the debt is reduced, the Government will be paying more interest than it currently collects from total personal income taxes from all Canadians.

Rising interest rates are one of the major concerns in my constituency. They add to the price of consumer goods, they cripple small business, they hurt agriculture, they make owning a home or maintaining a mortgage in many cases impossible. Many people remember and are still paying the bills for interest charges of the late 1970s when no effort was made to address the problem. The strength or weakness of our overall economy has an influence on interest rates. Inflation plays a major role. Monetary and economic policies beyond our borders are a factor.

The greatest stimulus to rising interest is our reluctance to come to grips with our national debt. We all know the best place to cut is some expensive federal program, Crown corporation or tax incentive, but let us make the cut where it does not affect me, my family, business, profession, or even my province. Let us have it anywhere else, but let us go for it. The present economic performance and the future economic potential of Canada cannot be sustained if this fiscal indulgence continues to grow.

One area I want to touch on from the Throne Speech is that of the environment. I have raised cattle most of my life. Like most people in that industry, I have developed a close appreciation and respect for environmental issues. You learn to survive and treat the short-grass area of western Canada's Palliser triangle with utmost respect. It is a harsh, unforgiving region for those who abuse it. This land is so fragile that the tracks left by the wagons of earlier settlers can still be seen today. The trails left by thousands of buffalo on their way to water holes still remain. The last signs of a people who took no more from the land than they needed and left it as they found it are still out there on those broad prairies in the form of circles of stone known as tepee rings.

Mother Nature and Father Time can be a fickle pair. They have their own laws; they make their own rules. They are not enforced by legislation nor are they enshrined in any constitution; but we break them at our peril, and the penalties are swift and harsh.

In a time of high technology, fax machines in our offices, mobile phones in our cars, satellites in space, perhaps we should remind ourselves that our very existence on this planet depends on a six-inch layer of topsoil, a little rain, the good Lord and the people who husband this fragile, productive and renewable natural resource. We cannot continue to treat it as we have been. To quote from the Speech from the Throne: "Canadians possess a unique sense of their relationship to the land, whose rich, vast diversity has shaped their values and experiences".

This Government can continue to produce the economic, cultural values that this country of ours has become renowned for. We must work together to make this happen. We are in a very difficult time.

I touched on two issues that are of concern. There are no doubt many more. Every Hon. Member in this House has a concern that affects those you represent. On a global scale, we have concerns with the Uruguay Round of GATT and the effects it will have. In the industry I represent, we need changes to the Meat Import Act so producers trading in the North American market are dealing with the same rules. We are not asking for favours. Canadians can be competitive with any producer or manufacturer in the world, provided they have the opportunity. Those of us in government must ensure that Canadians have the opportunity to bring out the best in themselves and their country.

I want to thank the House for its indulgence. I am confident the Throne Speech tabled the other day will lead the way for this Government to bring about the important changes needed in Canada for all of us and those we represent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): I heard the Hon. Member mention the punitive link between the large federal debt and high interest rates. I do not have an economics degree, but I do have a memory. I remember the last time we had tremendously high interest rates was in the early 1980s. Those interest rates fell, right through to 1986 and 1987. This was a time when the federal debt was increasing. While interest rates were going one way, the deficit was going the other. Yet I am told that high debt means higher interest rates. Our experience in this country does not support that contention. On what basis does the Hon. Member attempt to draw that relationship?

Mr. Porter: I do not have a degree in economics either, but I have been in business all my life. I have attempted to make things work in the real world. I had to go to banks to borrow money. Do you know today that to put a pound of beef on an animal in a feedlot requires $35 in interest costs alone? Those costs are reflected right through the system. They are passed on to the buying public.

When a government pays the amount of interest we are experiencing today, it has a bearing on the overall picture. Other factors come into play, such as global economies and inflationary pressures. Canadians will have to pay for the large debt in increased taxes and cuts in services that Members opposite do not want to see. The more we pay, the less we spend in other areas. This puts pressure on monetary policy. If I have less to operate my business, the banker is more reluctant to lend money. Pressure on interest rates tends to rise because the banks know there is more risk out there. In time, this will put pressures on us.

I do not understand socialist monetary policies. I hope I never have to. I live about nine miles from the Saskatchewan border. I know what a socialist government has done there. I have noticed what it has done in British Columbia. I do not want my family living under those conditions.

I do appreciate your question. I believe the federal debt and the interest charges it incurs have put pressure on our monetary system.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the Throne Speech pronounced by the Governor General on April 3 when she opened the second session of the thirty-fourth Parliament of Canada. The Government, which of course prepared the speech, seems to have asked some unknown up in the attic of the Langevin Building, on the other side of Wellington, to write something which, as far we can see, is completely detached from the realities of this world and bears no relation to the needs of Canadians.

If the Prime Minister had just looked out the window on the other side, he would have been very much inspired by the people I have the honour to represent, the people of Ottawa—Vanier.

There is not a single Member in this House who has not visited my riding. They all know my riding. It is rather special. It is probably the only riding you can reach on foot in a few minutes and which offers good hotels, a convention centre, wonderful museums, an interesting market, courteous and smiling people, and, as in many other ridings, problems that are difficult to solve, because we also have our poor, our needy, our drug addicts, all those people who depend on us for their survival. I have two soup kitchens, Meals on wheels, I have two places where people can get some food, so-called food banks. It isn't easy for a society to admit that it has to dispense food in a country as rich, as full of resources, and as envied as ours.

Mr. Speaker, at the foot of Parliament Hill, just a five-minute walk away, mothers are looking for decent shelter for their children. There are the unemployed and senior citizens—there are 7,500 in my riding—senior citizens who had a difficult time, having experienced the Depression and two World Wars, and now, in many cases, depend on us today for their food and board. There are young people who have lost hope and are involved in drugs and prostitution. They are among the most disadvantaged in our society. They are the forgotten, the neglected Canadians.

Today, our social safety net, and more specifically, our unemployment insurance system, is increasingly at risk because it is in the hands of a Government that does not understand. In my riding they would say this is a Government without a heart.

In the Throne Speech, the Government claimed it wanted to improve the unemployment insurance program's, and I quote:

. . .effectiveness and its fairness.

Now that they have shown their true colours and have proposed their amendments, I cannot help wondering, quite sincerely: Who and what do they have in mind?

I know the number of jobless will increase, as the number of welfare recipients, which will in fact go up dramatically in the next few months. I also know that people will have to wait in line in front of the Sainte-Brigitte Center, in my riding, or in front of the soup kitchen and the Salvation Army where the poor seek haven, people who have no shelter, no place to sleep.

The government has not clearly defined its goals. They want, on the one hand, to tighten the rules in order to limit the number of workers eligible to UI benefits. Workers will have to work longer before becoming eligible and then they will receive fewer benefits. Unable to get unemployment insurance benefits, the jobless through no fault of theirs will wind up on welfare. As we know, Mr. Speaker, welfare services are a provincial responsibility. So, the government is in fact transfering to the provinces a difficult human problem instead of closely exmining it.

Moreover, the expenses incurred by the provinces for welfare will not appear on the balance-sheet of the federal government. Instead, its financial statements may show that they were successful in reducing the deficit. But in fact the public will be misguided because of a little game of hide and seek. The government is passing a problem on to the provinces when in fact they should have solved it since they have the means to do so, Mr. Speaker.

All in all, the taxpayers will not save a penny. Quite the opposite, since they will probably pay more with the federal tax the government has been promising. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is travelling across the country, saying: 'You can expect a tax hike!" I even remember, Mr. Speaker, the fiscal reform he proposed, and the sales tax which will apply to almost all services.

In my riding, people are concerned because during the election we discussed those problems, they came up during door calls. Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that the proposed sales tax is a problem to them, because it is regressive. It applies to everyone regardless of income level. The poor will pay a sales tax just as the rich. Oh, there is to be income tax credits and sales tax credits, of course there will be a system in place! At home in Ottawa-Vanier, Mr. Speaker, I have people who are honest but do not always understand those forms sent by the Governement that must be filled to quality for all sorts of credits, all sorts of rebates. And often the poor are the losers, because the rich, bankers, businessmen will not hurt—they have accountants who prepare their tax returns. The poor will be the losers, Mr. Speaker, they will be penalized. Unfortunately, we have not yet the resources in place to help those people.

In my riding right now, that income tax return is so complex accountants who used to volunteer their services to help senior citizens prepare their returns are telling me this year: "We have no time." It is too complicated! Although they told us they were going to make it simpler for Canadians it is the opposite. They made things more complicated, Mr. Speaker. They finally discouraged those in my riding who used to help people who needed help, seniors who are entitled to income tax credits, the poor who are entitled to income tax credits, and many have-nots who, because they do not understand the documents and forms, do not fill them out and do not apply for credits.

Let me repeat that this Government is hardnosed, Mr. Speaker.

I think we are all aware of the problems, Mr. Speaker.

I see you are preparing to interrupt me. Mr. Speaker, if it were possible, I would like to resume tomorrow morning, as it is 6 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A motion to adjourn the House under S.O. 38 is now deemed to have been moved and seconded.

It is therefore moved that this House now adjourn.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

CHILD CARE—REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION—REQUEST FOR ACTION

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 38 to revisit an issue which I raised in this place on April 4 last. I am talking, of course, about the issue of child care.

On that day I called upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) to introduce comprehensive child care legislation in order to address the critical situation that has arisen. It is a situation critical not just for families right across this country, but also critical for the child care profession in general. My concern stems from a reference that was made in the Speech from the Throne delivered by the Governor General in the other place, and its scant mention of the Government's commitment to child care.

The relevant passage reads as follows: "The Government remains committed to a national child care program". What is of great concern to all Canadians is what the Government truly means by a national child care program. Does this refer to Bill C-144 as it was tabled in the last Parliament? I devoutly hope not. The vast majority of Canadian child care workers and parent groups alike rejected most of the Government's proposals as laid out in that Bill.

I am particularly concerned that the views that were expressed by these groups, from Vancouver to my own riding of Halifax, will continue to go unnoticed and ignored. Even a cursory glance at some of this testimony will underline deeply the rationale behind the recommendations and proposals that all these groups put forward. I will deal with some of these proposals later.

First, I would like to paint a clearer picture of the current status of child care in Canada. Almost two million Canadian children need child care outside the home, some part time, some full time. Under the present system only 10 per cent of those two million children can be accommodated. A staggering number of parents look for such care in vain. The remaining 90 per cent of children who are in need of child care are either looked after by relatives, friends, or babysitters, or unlicensed caregivers, or they are simply left alone, the latch-key children that we hear so much about. These statistics are profoundly disturbing. In 1987 the percentage of children under the age of 13 in licensed child care in Canada was remarkably low.

Let me give a few examples based on 1987 figures provided by the National Council of Welfare. In Newfoundland, where there are currently 30,998 children under the age of 13, only 1,318 of these children are being cared for by licensed child care services. In other words, 96 per cent of Newfoundland children under the age of 13 cannot be accommodated, should the need arise. Similar figures are equally disturbing in my home Province of Nova Scotia, where there are 48,298 children under the age of 13, some 42,901 of whom do not enjoy the possibility of a licensed quality child care space.

In other words, 89 per cent of Nova Scotia's children under the age of 13 cannot expect the benefit of quality care if and when their primary caregiver must work outside the home. What this points to is a gaping child care crisis which will not be cured by vague promises and half-hearted commitments.

Our day-care centers are in a state of crisis. Last Friday, in Montreal, a great many of the 2 000 CNTU-affiliated workers of various day-care centers went on strike for a day to show how impatient and concerned they were about the present situation Mr. Speaker, an action plan or a bill is needed to meet the needs of day-care center operators and those of all Canadian families.

[English]

It is clear that we have a crisis on our hands and that we need immediate action to deal with it. In the few minutes that remain I would like to briefly describe how we find ourselves in this situation and, second, to offer some remedies and suggestions about how we might end the crisis if the political will exists. Sadly the Government's commitment to child care has been, to say the least, intermittent.

In March 1987, the Special Committee on Child Care tabled its final report. The Conservative majority within that committee called for more grants to parents through the tax system in what they called giving parents a greater choice. They simply did not realize, nor does it appear as if they realize now, that this was an inadequate and meaningless solution.

What is needed is more child care spaces. Nine months after the special parliamentary committee tabled its final report, the Government responded by announcing its national child care strategy, three components of which were the following: a $100 million child care special initiatives fund to promote research and development activities in child care, federal-provincial cost sharing arrangements which would increase the number of child care spaces over seven year, and a set of tax measures to increase the annual child care deduction from $2,000 to $4,000 annually.

Since the election the Government has had nearly five months to develop a national child care plan that would incorporate the suggestions and proposals put forward by many interest groups across Canada. After the Throne Speech the Minister of National Health and Welfare, when pressured to state his Government's commitment to a national child care program, responded by saying: "We are continuing to study the issue, but we have nothing to announce at the present time".

I know there are tens of thousands of families out there today who are wondering how long the Minister has to continue studying this matter which has been studied and analysed for years. When is the Government going to commit itself through legislation to a real national child care program that responds to the real needs of all Canadians. The solutions are there. What is left is for the decisions—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Today, Mr. Speaker, the first time I am called upon to reply as Parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I want first of all to congragulate the Hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Clancy) on her being elected to this House on November 21, as well as her appointment as a Party critic on women issues. I am sure she must have been flabbergasted by the approach Liberal had taken to the day-care bill before the House adjourned.

I am sure that in her own riding, before the election, she must have found it absolutely horrible, because she is referring now to a crisis situation, and she might be right to do so; however, I should like to remind our audience that this crisis has been brought to a head by the attitude of a Liberal non-elected Senate who deliberately stopped this Bill before the election. She may say "Ah!" but that is the sad truth, Mr. Speaker.

Also, I urge the Hon. Member to be twice as vigilant, because the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) has just announced a reform of the Unemployment Insurance scheme which will greatly help women, especially in the areas of maternity leave and training programs; and she knows as well as I do that Canadian women, those in my riding, in the province of Quebec and the city of Halifax, need training and re-training. If there are people in our society who need that, women do.

Since she is the critic on women's issues, I would also strongly urge her to contact the school board in her riding or in her province at Halifax. She might suggest that these school boards apply for funds, because money is available from the special project assistance fund for, among other things, helping schools set up day care facilities, as she said in her remarks.

For example, Mr. Speaker, I might mention that the Minister has just announced a grant of $80,391 to the Leeds—Grenville riding school boards to set up the kind of child care services which meet the needs of families in that area. Mr. Speaker, another grant of $120,645 has been awarded to Québec's Association des services de garde en milieu scolaire for a study. That is excellent. And then, Mr. Speaker, $422,207 to the Members of the Ottawa region for three assistance fund projects to help organizations find fresh solutions to the child care problem.

Nova Scotia therefore is also entitled to that money, and I would urge the Hon. Member to get in touch with the school boards in her riding and in her province and take full advantage of our Government's generous contribution under the Strategy. Above all, Mr. Speaker, she ought to appeal to the common sense of Senators so they will not unduly delay the legislative measures passed by the House, legitimately elected by Canadians.

AIR SAFETY—REVIEW BY DEPARTMENTAL AUDIT BRANCH—MINISTER'S INTENTIONS

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, on April 6, I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) what preparations his Department made in anticipation of the removal of government controls in the airline industry.

The question was not answered by the Minister. I come here before you this evening, Mr. Speaker, in an attempt to receive an answer. I thank you for the opportunity to requestion the Minister on an issue that is vital to the air safety of travellers who use these facilities in Canada.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the air corridors in our country are congested. The congestion causes safety problems around busy airports, airports where planes are headed especially during peak periods, airports such as Pearson International Airport.

The situation is not improving. It is deteriorating. The Minister refuses in the face of overwhelming evidence to do anything to change these unsafe conditions.

The major airlines of Canada because of deregulation have been able to create what is known as the hub–and–spoke concept, the hub being the major airport and the spokes being those arms that extend to smaller communities. Some of the spoke communities are communities such as Thunder Bay—Nipigon, the region which I represent, Sault Ste. Marie, Winnipeg, Dryden and Windsor, areas such as these that funnel their aircraft into Pearson.

Since Pearson is a major international airport the traffic is further congested because it is a recipient of many international flights, as well as many flights that generate in other areas in Canada. Pearson can be referred to, and often is, as a main hub in all of Canada.

What bothers me, and I know it bothers many other Canadians from smaller communities, is that this hub–and–spoke concept has deteriorated the quality of air travel in the country without the approval of most Canadians. If you book a flight, Mr. Speaker, to one of these centres I have mentioned through one of the two major airlines available to us, you stand a very good chance of ending up on an airline to which you have no contractual relationship. The plane is much smaller than expected. Even in Toronto one has to go outside the airport and across the tarmac in rain or snowy conditions and climb the steps to get on the airplane. This is very unsafe for our aged and handicapped people.

Although these airlines try to offer the services that the larger airlines offer, services such as beverage services, meals and luggage services, it is physically impossible for them to do this. In fact, many of these aircraft do not have any washrooms. If they do, there are not enough to facilitate the number of passengers on the aircraft.

I can go on and on about these deficiencies on these smaller airlines, but the thing that really hurts me and hurts most Canadians from rural Canada and smaller centres is the very fact that when we book on these flights we pay the very same price as we would pay on an airline that offers a more sophisticated service, especially if it is on one of the airlines in Canada or on the international scene that has a competitive route.

Airline travel in Canada for rural Canadians and Canadians from smaller centres has gone back at least 20 years. The responsibility for this falls directly on the shoulders of the present Government. Once again another institution of the country is sacrificed at the expense of rural and small town Canada.

What is of greater concern is the fact that most of these smaller airlines expanded operations or began operations as a result of deregulation or the operation of the hub-and-spoke concept. This leads me to the question I asked the Minister which he refused to answer. His own internal documents state that he lacked enough inspectors to protect the very safety of Canadians. The document states that regulatory reform of the domestic airline industry was introduced at a time when the Department possessed neither sufficient trained resources, the required planning and operational processes, nor the necessary enforcement capability required to monitor effectively and foster aviation industry compliance with established safety legislation, safety regulations and safety standards.

The Minister has failed to tell Canadians what he intends to do with respect to the safety of air travel in Canada. The Minister said in this House that decisions will be made without delay on the basis of air traffic safety. The air traffic situation is currently unsafe and getting worse. No measures thus far have improved the safety to the Canadian air traveller.

I ask my question again. When will the Minister address air safety with the urgency Canadians expects?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by reiterating something the Minister has repeatedly stated both in this House and outside the House. Canadian skies are safe. To suggest otherwise is both reprehensible and irresponsible, and as such most unworthy of any Member of the House.

I also want to mention that I fly on those small airlines, those commuter feeder lines that serve many parts of the country. I feel very secure and safe because of the care, consideration and individual attention that they give to us as travellers when we are travelling so frequently across the country. I use them every week. I am very pleased that we have the commuter lines because they do provide a necessary service with a very small aircraft which carries often as few as 19 passengers.

On March 29, 1989, the Minister announced the appointment of Justice Estey to review the entire record of the Gander accident investigation with a view to advising the Minister on whether any further investigation or inquiry is warranted. The Minister also announced the appointment of Justice Moshansky to conduct a judicial inquiry into the Dryden accident. These measures were taken in response to the concerns raised about the Canadian Aviation Safety Board which has served to undermine the confidence of Canadians in the board.

In addition, the Minister has reintroduced and referred to the standing committee Bill C-2 an Act to establish the transportation accident investigation board.

Furthermore, while the Minister and his senior officials believe that the inspection resources of the Department of Transport are adequate to the present requirement, nevertheless, the Minister intends to avail himself of the expertise of both industry and government to assist him in ensuring that we have the right resources and that they are used in the right way in order to meet the changing needs of the future.

With specific reference to Lester B. Pearson Airport in Toronto, I would remind Hon. Members that Ministers have just completed two weeks of extensive consultations which will lead to the development of a comprehensive plan for the whole of the southern Ontario airspace. An announcement will be made in due course.

I would like to emphasize that while we do have a shortage of air traffic controllers at Toronto the traffic flow is always matched to the controllers' ability to safely handle the traffic. This means delays, not a decrease in the level of safety.

I would also like to assure Members and the travelling public that every conceivable effort is being made to rectify the shortage situation.

AGRICULTURE—DROUGHT ASSISTANCE COMPENSATION PAYMENTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I put a question to the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) on April 5, asking him if the Government was going to pay the amounts which it promised for drought assistance last November 10.

In that press release of last November 10, it said that it would pay $40 to $45 per acre of wheat in western Canada for the maximum drought damage per acre. In eastern Canada it said it would pay from $50 to $57 per acre where the total crop was lost for corn and soybeans.

The Minister announced some time after that that he was going to pay about 70 per cent in the interim payment.

Since the election is over it has gotten very fuzzy exactly whether it is still $40 or $45. Also, the total amount is fuzzy. I did an open-line show with the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds during the election campaign which was broadcast across Manitoba and Saskatchewan. At that time he said the $850 million was not a cap, that it was just a notional amount of what the Government thought it might be. If it was more than that, based on $40 or $45 per acre, then the Government would pay the extra amount.

More recently it has been very hard to pin the Government down. Is the $850 million a cap? Is it going to pay the full amount?

Thus I put a question to the Minister in this regard and his response was this: "The estimates that we talked about last fall stand exactly the same. Nothing has changed".

He did not say a maximum of $45 per acre in western Canada for wheat loss occurred. He did not say that they were going to pay up to $57 for corn in Ontario, as he said in his press release. It is a great concern that he said last fall that the interim payment was to be at 70 per cent. The interim payment in western Canada was only $12.

Maybe the Government is going to welsh on this deal. Maybe it is only going to pay $20 and say to the provinces, "you pick up half". There was a great kerfuffle. When the Minister announced the program, he said he was going to try to rope in the provinces, but he had not consulted with them. The provinces, even the Tory provinces, said they were not paying any of his campaign promises.

What we would like to get tonight from the Parliamentary Secretary is a clear, unequivocal statement that there is no cap at $850 million. It is going to be based on $40 or $45 maximum in the West and $57 in the East. We want it very clearly spelled out.

This has really been a bollix. They sent out application forms to some people and not to others. Why did they not send out an application to everybody with a Wheat Board quota book and allow individual farmers to make a statutory declaration of what their crop losses were? It could easily be checked against the crop insurance data. Instead they are saying "if you lose more than 15 per cent, then you get a certain percentage based on crop insurance data". However, they are not saying what that data is.

Is it based on the last five years? Is it based on the last 10 years for each township? That is not clear, so nobody knows really where they are. The whole system has really been bollixed.

The drought was last May, June and July. The loss of crop was last August and September. There is no money. Until now farmers have been getting $12 an acre in the West and $16 for the most severe in the East, and the rest comes in July. We do not know what that other amount is going to be.

The Parliamentary Secretary is one of the most outstanding soybean growers in southwestern Ontario, and he knows what his farmers feel about this. They want to know exactly what the deal is, what the amounts are and when they are going to be paid. I just hope that these matters will be cleared up because many farmers are confused.

I recall that our caucus met with the officials of the Department of Agriculture over a month ago. The Hon. Member for Prince Edward—Hastings (Mr. Vanclief) had a number of farmers, I believe a couple of dozen, who had not received an application form. He sent in their names for application forms, and they just starting to get them now. That is a month ago. According to the data which came out for the program, they had to file their applications by March 15. I think we met with the Department about three or four days before that. Many farmers had not yet received their application forms, and those application forms were to be made and filed with the Department by the fifteenth.

This program has been badly handled. The drought was last year. Cash is coming very late. It should have all been on the table by at least January, February or March when the farmers were putting together the funding for this year's crop. I certainly hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will be able to clarify that the deal is exactly the same, the amounts are the same as they were last fall and not just these estimates that we talked about then. Estimates of what? Farmers want to know where they are, whether they are going to be paid and when they are going to be paid.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased once again to try to provide detail on the effective efforts by this Government to deliver the Drought Assistance Program to Canadian farmers.

I would like to say to my hon. friend that it is white beans, not soybeans, but we will let him get away with that.

An Hon. Member: He is an outstanding grower of white beans.

Mr. Cardiff: I would like to say to him also that the deadline for the application has been extended and is flexible for receiving some of those application. The Drought Assistance Program will help producers that were hurt very badly in the 1988 drought. This Government is making every effort to deliver a program that treats producers in many different circumstances fairly, and it is very difficult to find a plan that treats them fairly.

We anticipate that about 120,000 producers may qualify for drought assistance, with over 100 different crops in over 45 different townships. It takes time to develop and deliver a program that deals with so many producers in so many different types of circumstances.

The Canadian Drought Assistance Program administration is working hard to deliver this program to Canadian farmers. More than 145 people are directly involved in its delivery including people on a toll-free line who have been answering up to 4,000 calls a week. Recently in response to the number of phone calls, we doubled the number of operators on the toll-free line to 20 people.

The administration is putting interim payments into the hands of producers as quickly as possible. About 4,500 townships have been designated as drought areas on the basis of preliminary provincial crop insurance data. More drought areas may be designated when final data is available from provincial crop insurance agencies in May.

Personalized applications have been mailed to about 120,000 producers in designated drought areas, and about 100,000 forms have been returned to date.

I am pleased to inform the House, Mr. Speaker, that close to 19,000 interim cheques worth $80 million have been mailed so far to producers. About 65,000 producers will get interim payments. The payments will average $4,300 and will total about $280 million. The timing of these interim payments is similar to the timing of interim payments under last year's Special Canadian Grains Program. Final payments are scheduled to be mailed in July.

We are making progress in other aspects of the program, too. A method for delivering assistance to Ontario horticultural producers has been established. We are working with horticultural groups in other provinces now to establish a method for making payments. Progress is being made with the Province of Québec on a proposal for program delivery. Discussions are continuing with the provinces on cost sharing.

In addition, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that producer review committees will be established in each province. This program may be rather complex, but it is resulting in the individual tailoring of payments and an accurate assessment of each producer's needs. The Canada Crop Drought Assistance Program is fair, well targeted and timely. It is being delivered effectively by this Government.

It takes patience, but we have to recognize that many crops in this country are not harvested in June and July of any year. We have many crops that are not harvested until the end of our calendar year which would be the first of December, and very often not delivered. It is very difficult to establish the amount of profit that has been delivered. Those things all take time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at ten o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House resumed from Thursday, April 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for an address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to ther speech at the opening of the session.

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in the speech at the opening of the thirty-fourth Parliament, the Government stated that culture, together with the economy, social affairs and the environment, is one of the essential building blocks of our national identity. At a time when there is a tendency among the nations of the world to regroup in large economic units, when borders established in the 18th and 19th century are being erased to allow for the necessary circulation of goods, services and information, creators and artists, whom we may have taken for granted in the past, are now becoming increasinly important to their respective communities.

We are entering the so-called information society, which throughout the world is bringing about a likeness in our goods and services. Creators, however, are doing the exact opposite. They explore, search and experiment and in doing so, express what makes them and what makes us unique. Our identity is reflected in their works.

How to reconcile this development of our authentic cultural uniqueness with the imperatives of the information society is the most important challenge we have to meet as Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, Canada's cultural reality is made up of four components. First, a necessary technological infrastructure: our telecommunications; second, a broadcasting system that must reflect what we are; third, an aggregate of cultural industries: publishing, films, recording and design which, unfortunately, do not enjoy a normal, healthy existence as far as their operations are concerned; and finally, the artists and creators without whom none of this is possible and who form the ever fragile foundation of this system.

Mr. Speaker, the Department of Communications assumes the Government's responsibility for these four components. I will touch on them briefly.

First, the telecommunications sector. In 1987, this sector contributed nearly $16 billion to our Gross Domestic Product. Telecommunications is one of our economy's fastest growing industries, with an annual growth rate of 8.4 per cent in 1987 and 6.8 per cent last year, compared with 2.3 and 4.8 per cent for Canada's manufacturing industry as a whole.

The telecommunications industry, with 86.5 per cent Canadian ownership and 79 per cent owned by the private sector, is becoming an increasingly important instrument for our economic development. To own and operate an integrated telecommunications system that is universally accessible and to do so at affordable rates has become one of the essential prerequisites for any advanced economy on this planet, and its importance is increasing. It is not surprising that the Japanese have made telecommunications their development priority. Nor is it surprising that the European community has identified telecommunications as a priority prototype sector for integration in the "single market" in 1992. However, the benefits of our telecommunications system and the information it carries are not purely functional. The sector will, and in fact already does, have an impact on the daily lives of all Canadians. It will affect our social and cultural activities and help very substantially to reduce regional disparity.

Twenty years from now, countries that have not taken advantage of technologies such as high definition television, for instance, will no longer be in the running.

In addition to being the main motor of our economy, these technologies, these electronic media which are already partly responsible for disseminating our culture, will also be the main source of job creation in Canada during the next twenty years.

In Canada and all over the world, technologies are already considered an essential tool for ensuring the competitiveness of companies in every field. Not only will they have an enormous impact on the economy, but they will also considerably alter our social reality, education and training programs, and of course the distribution of our cultural products both at home and abroad. The importance of this technological revolution cannot be overstated.

Now, can you tell which country is among the three or four world leaders in the field of technology development? Yes, it's Canada. We are the best there is in a field generally considered to be a key sector, which should ensure our economic development. All we have to do now is to remain the best. Our strength lies in telecommunications which must become a fundamental part of our industrial development in the present state of the economy, where competitiveness is more and more important.

In this race, we start with a definite lead over all the industrialized nations. We must then improve and strengthen our communications infrastructure so as to meet the economic and technological needs of the 21st century. This infrastructure must be used to link Canadians to each other and to the rest of the world.

Broadcasting is the most popular and powerful vehicle for culture available to us now. Statistics Canada has recently published data showing that 99 per cent of all Canadian families own a radio set, 98 per cent have a television set, and more than 50 per cent have a VCR. That should tell us the tremendous power those media have when it comes to the spread of information, the sale of products and services, the influence on public opinion, the making of stars, and especially a chance to give the majority of people the opportunity to share a common experience.

The Government must therefore undertake to ensure that a full selection of quality Canadian programs reflecting our reality and intended directly for us is available in this country. Our political and cultural sovereignty requires it, if we do not want our culture to become marginal in Canada itself.

It is therefore important for our television broadcasting system to give priority to our own television production and for the Government to encourage its growth. For if television does not show Canadians an image of themselves, if this image is lacking in quality, we can ask how they will strengthen their feeling of belonging. A television set is not just a receiver. It is the primary tool to cement culture in the modern era. As anthropologist Edward T. Hall notes:

> The phenomenon of identification is perhaps the most important psychological aspect of culture, a bridge that links personality to culture.

In 1985, the cultural sector was the ninth largest manufacturing industry in Canada and earned more than $12 billion.

The cultural sector is the fourth largest employer in Canada. Cultural industries, including broadcasting, provide Canadians with more than 105,000 direct jobs. Some 4,000 people work full time in museums and heritage institutions and about 5,000 work there part time. The sound recording industry provides 15,000 direct jobs, mostly for young people. The labour force is growing faster in the cultural area than in other sectors of the Canadian economy.

In addition, the number of cultural institutions is increasing all the time. From 1972 to 1986, the number of arts organizations subsidized by the Canadian Government increased considerably: from 49 to 197 theatre companies, from 63 to 160 music ensembles, from 11 to 41 dance companies. This remarkable growth shows Canada's cultural vitality!

These figures, impressive as they are, must not hide the problems facing cultural industries that we must solve in the coming years. Those industries, needless to add, are in a state of under-capitalization and more often than not have no access to economies that would enable them to compete here in Canada even with the major producers of mass culture events.

The basic problem of our culture industries is that they are working in a distorted market where they are structurally unable to compete profitably with global-scale firms already in the field.

The Government must step in to allow Canadians to do business in our own land, just as the others do in their own country. Let me mention here the Musicaction Program established by the Department of Communications three years ago, which did much to put the French and English-speaking segments of the record industry on their feet again.

For its part, the film industry must cope with a number of difficulties. Of course, Governments afford our film and TV production a kind of support that is unequalled in any other country, to the tune of nearly $200 million through the activities of large agencies such as Téléfilm Canada, the NFB and the CBC, on the one hand and incentives like the capital cost write-off on the other. But we must do more and come up with a series of steps to solve the problems behind the imbalance in the Canadian distribution market, that is to ensure to Canadian distributors the availability of their own market. Right now, our distributors collect only 10 per cent of the total receipts from movie theatres and home videos, even though in 1984 they distributed 28 of the 29 feature films produced in Canada.

As a last example, nearly 80 per cent of book publishers in Canada are Canadians, and they put out nearly 70 per cent of available publications. However, they can fill no more than 35 per cent of the schoolbook, reference book and general material market. Further, most Canadian publishing houses hardly reach the break even point, and in the best of cases only exceed it by 5 or 10 per cent.

It is important therefore to ensure that Canadian products are offered as efficiently as foreign products are on the market. The strength of this country's identity is at stake. The Government of Canada is conscious of the importance of that matter.

But cultural products must be made before they become available on the market. They constitute the output of creative men and women who play a leading or even decisive role in defining and promoting the Canadian identity. Given today's major communication and information networks, these men and women cannot be left to fend for themselves even though they work alone within their own society. To the extent that this society needs them it must ensure their survival. But do they really manage to live off their art? Let us briefly examine the financial predicament of Canada's professional artists.

Every week our creators devote 35 to 40 hours to their art and have to work at something else 10 to 15 hours to make ends meet. Their artistic endeavours barely enable them to survive in a world where, oftentimes, material wealth is the hallmark of success. Canadian annual income statistics indicate that authors earn $15,200, dancers and choreographers $16,800, visual artists $21,500, actors $24,500, and musicians $25,100. No wonder more than half of Canadian creators, when queried, look upon their artistic activities more as a calling than as a business or a profession!

That being the case, we have to see to it that public authorities give some kind of priority to defending the interests of artists and creators. We see our own reflection when we look at our artists.

With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, we intend—as the Speech from the Throne puts it—to improve the distribution of Canada's cultural products in broadcasting, film and video, and provide our authors with a system which acknowledges the significance of their contribution to the life of our community.

Broadcasting is the most popular and powerful instrument of our identify. The Government is committed to ensuring a complete range of quality Canadian programs that reflect our reality and are aimed at us. In that respect, we will continue implementing our agenda, which calls for a systematic, determined strengthening of the legislative framework of Canadian culture.

It is that spirit that the Broadcasting Bill will be reintroduced in this House, as well as major legislative initiatives in the areas of filmmaking, museums and archeology.

We also intend to propose the implementation of Phase 2 of the Copyright Act, which we feel essential in every way, an innovative approach to Canadian artists' and creators' living conditions.

Mr. Speaker, Canadian culture is the first expression of our identity. It is also and perhaps foremost above all the contribution of Canadians to humanity's artistic values and heritage.

Mr. Harb: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Minister's speech with a great deal of interest. He spoke about telecommunications and transmission policy concerning television as well as radio. He then moved on to talk about the educational end of things as well as the arts community in general.

Since we have Crown corporations such as the CBC, the National Arts Centre and the National Research Council, will the Minister agree that rather than cutting funds from these institutions we should be encouraging them and not taking away from them? I was somewhat shocked to learn through the media that the National Arts Centre Orchestra will be privatized. I also heard some discussion about the possibility of passing on the National Arts Centre to the NCC.

I do not know whether the Minister has had time in the past, present, or will have in the future, to sit down to look at this aspect of Canadian culture in terms of what it really means to Canadians. Look at the idea of the arts and how we can use the arts to promote tourism and encourage economic development. When talking about radio and television transmission, consider how they are connected to research and development.

When the Government sits down to have a sober look at what it is doing in the area of culture, will the Minister be working with his colleagues and pushing them to press ahead in areas such as research and development and culture, that is, ensuring that the content of television and radio transmission will focus more on Canadian culture and content?

I think the Government can really take a leadership role when it comes to the arts community. We are in the best position to take that role by maintaining agencies such as the National Arts Centre and by investing more in terms of incentives. If there are difficulties with some of these agencies, I think the best approach is to sit down with management to try to work out the differences rather than to say that we have had enough and it is time now to pass them on to the private sector. If we do pass these agencies on to the private sector and rely solely on the private sector, eventually what we will end up doing, as a Government, is absolutely nothing. We have a leadership role to play. It is important for the private sector to enter into partnership with the federal Government. However, it is also important that the federal Government stay in place as a watch-dog and be there in terms of playing the role of facilitator with these different agencies in order that Canadian culture and unity be promoted. That is what Canada is all about. Will the Minister comment, please?

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. Many matters were raised that could be debated for days.

Let me say first There is no direct link between the amount of money spent in anyone sector and that sector's success or failure. I referred to the Canadian film sector. Of all Western countries Canada probably has invested directly in film making the most public money—nearly $200 million. And this probably is the sector where Canadians have the most difficulty seeing Canadian productions. Two hundred million dollars for 26 million Canadians. But in our movie theatres, 97 per cent of films seen by Canadians are foreign. Three per cent only are Canadian films. Despite the fact that three agencies—Téléfilm Canada, the NFB and to a degree the CBC—are involved in film production. But at the movie theatre level Canadians derive no benefits from that at all. It is not for lack of public money. Would the problem be solved if we were to throw in another $100 million? Absolutely not! The problem is not a monetary one. It's not a funding problem public funds but rather a set up problem, a structural problem in the set up of our Canadian film industry.

This is the reason why we should be cautions, Mr. Speaker, before we ask the Government to invest more money. Throwing more money into a bad policy will not get the positive result we expect. This is why I believe we must work at two levels. Of course a minimum of public effort is needed. In the next few months I will have an opportunity to show that Canadians are making a tremendous effort by investing in their own identity through their culture. But the problem we have is to organize our market and establish creator-to-customer relations in this country. That is where the problem lies. We need legislative and regulatory measures to encourage our creators, to turn our creators and artists into men and women who are proud of their profession and their activities. We will re-introduce copyright legislation and measures designed to enhance the status of artists. The Government will actively promote creative endeavours.

We must also take action to organize our market and make sure that our publishers are in a position to distribute Canadian books and that school books in Canada are produced by—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the Minister to conclude his remarks, please.

Mr. Masse: Well, Mr. Speaker, the conclusion is that the Government must continue to be very active in that field

[English]

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to respond to the Speech from the Throne as a Member of Parliament from an area that lies between London and Sarnia, Ontario. It is a riding that has four Indian reservations within it. I was very disappointed when I read the Speech from the Throne under the theme "A Caring Nation".

I was disappointed because I did not see one word about our native peoples, those native peoples who are today demonstrating in front of this institution on Parliament Hill. They are demonstrating on behalf of their children who are being deprived of an education at the highest level. Certainly at this time in Canadian history such an education is essential to the future not only of our native peoples but of our nation as a whole. This right cannot be limited by Government. This right cannot be held hostage by the federal deficit, a deficit that is being fought on the backs of the poor, the sick, the disadvantaged and the unemployed. If there is any group which needs help under our Unemployment Insurance Program it is our native people who rely on fishing, tourism and other aspects of life that have been built around the social systems which we have in place in Canada.

We have out in front here today Verna Brown of Oneida, Karen Deleary of Muncey, Candess Bressette of Kettle Point with Laura George, Brian Monague, Tammy George, Ron George and Maynard George. We have in our gallery today Wayne Hill, his wife and their two sons. They are here to protest what is happening to the education of native people. They are here to try to convince this Government that their sons deserve an education, an education that should be available to all Canadians, not just the privileged few of families of the elite.

A couple of days ago the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Valcourt) spoke in this House. He said that he will assist business to adapt to changes in our systems brought about by the Free Trade Agreement. In the last few years we have heard a lot concerning bringing about harmonization of regulations between Canada and the United States. When I look at some of the changes that have taken place in the last couple of years, I am shocked that instead of raising the standard on United States products coming into Canada, we are undermining Canadian standards by allowing sub–stan dard products to come in from the United States. In fact the President of Weston Foods said: "Unlike Canadian products shipped south of the border, items coming into Canada from the United States are not stopped at the border if they do not meet federal guidelines".

The Grocery Products Manufacturers estimate there are nearly 300 improperly labelled products on grocery store shelves in Canada at the present time. This is shocking. We have established Canadian standards of great quality that have served this nation well. They are recognized around the world.

I want to give another example of what is happening. In our Canadian beef industry we have various grades of beef that ensure consumers that when they buy Canada Grade A, it is a youthful carcass with tender meat, a shiny bone texture and a minimum fat cover of not less than four millimetres and not more than 19 millimetres. A certain amount of fat is necessary to ensure good quality beef.

I am shocked to learn that there are about one million pounds a week of ungraded—it is called unrolled beef—coming into Canada, beef that is essentially cow beef. I am not suggesting that there is anything wrong with cow beef provided you do not mind the toughness and you do not object to chewing on it for a while. This beef is being offered in our stores without any identification, with nothing to tell the consumers that it is inferior quality. It is being blended with the Canadian beef. That is that we as beef producers from Canada have to compete against. From what I understand only one consumer in 10 will complain. Consequently, consumers are being taken to the cleaners. If you have one consumer who complains, you can rest assured there are 10 unhappy consumers who do not tell their friends and associates where they made their purchase.

We have gone into an agreement with the Americans assuring that any imported goods are stamped with a grade that is equivalent to that of what we have here in Canada, not only to protect the interests of the consumers, but to protect the interests of the purchasers here in Canada. After all the talk we have heard about level playing fields, surely the Government has a responsibility to make sure that these products are labelled with a grade equivalent similar to what we have here in Canada.

To sell this beef under the impression that it is something else can only harm the industry and lead to a drop in consumption. I suggest that this is the most important issue facing the beef industry today in Canada. Measures must be brought in to protect the consumer and the industry as a whole.

I am further shocked at the emergence of imported products showing up on store shelves that do not conform to our Canadian quality standards. Surely if this Government is going to continue with harmonious relations with the United States, it should insist that U.S. standards be brought up to ours and not ours be brought down to theirs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ferguson: The next issue I want to speak about very briefly this morning is the removal of oats from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board without consultation with the Canadian Wheat Board or with the producers. In fact, the Minister has broken the Government's own rules for regulatory reform. I fully realize that this code is not enforceable by law, but the citizen's code of regulatory fairness was established in March, 1986, to give the public access to decision-making before the Government makes regulation changes.

I am sure that the Minister will try to convince us that this commodity of oats only accounts for less than 1 per cent of the value of the Canadian Wheat Board sales. He will try to convince us that it is a very minor issue. But the fact is that if oats go out this year, will wheat and barley follow next year and the year after?

I together with the farmers believe that this is true or else the Minister's resignation would not have been called for. I believe it is the Free Trade Agreement that calls for the free trade movement of grains across our borders when levels of subsidies become equal, and that barley and oats will be next to go. Let me tell you that the subsidy level for oats will be at par this year with that of the United States. For wheat and barley, it will be level next year. It is not much wonder that the farmers of western Canada and eastern Canada are upset that barley has been removed from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. Their information also points out that barley and wheat will have equal subsidies in both countries within a year to a year and a half. When this happens, the farmers of Canada will lose the most sophisticated marketing system in the world, and will be thrown to the mercy of a few multinational companies and the commodity exchanges that have been rocked by recent scandals and investigations.

Just let me quote from a series of questions asked the Ministers of the Ontario Wheat Producers Marketing Board. The first question: What will be the role of the Canadian Wheat Board in the marketing and pricing of wheat with the understanding that import and export authority will no longer be within the Wheat Board mandate? They did not get an answer. Second: What Department or under what Minister will the decisions be made regarding the establishment of the North American price for wheat and equalization of subsidies?

The third question: How much authority will the Canadian Grain Commission have in policing the end use certificate policy? End use certificates will not require the grade of wheat to be indicated. This allows the import of low-grade wheat at lower prices than Canadian wheat of top grade or even lower grade because of quality control disparity trading, creating unfair competition. How will this serious problem be resolved? Certificates will not require the grade of wheat.

I spoke just a moment ago of ungraded beef coming into Canada, what it is doing to our markets and what is happening to consumers who purchase this beef. Now we are facing the same situation with wheat. How much authority will be implemented regarding the import of wheat-based products into Canada, or will there be any authority at all implemented? Who in the federal Government will decide what is a subsidy on either side of the border? Will the federal Government establish a direct payment compensation program to address this discriminatory pricing of wheat other than through stabilization? Will the federal Government permit direct producer input in overseeing price determination domestically, or will it in turn take the route it took with the removal of oats from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board? In fact, the Government broke its own rules of the citizens code of regulatory fairness.

Those are the questions that are asked by the Ontario Wheat Producers Marketing Board. They had another question that is essential to the continuation of that board. Will the Canadian Wheat Board continue with an initial payment pooling system? If so, how will the initial payment be established? Will the Minister put that in writing?

The wheat producers are asking the Minister to put it in writing because they are not satisfied with the answers so far, if indeed they received any answers at all.

Canadian farmers have a right to know. The Government must respond, if indeed this is a democratic country and if the Minister is interested in the welfare of the producers. Instead, is he only interested in the welfare of a few very large multinational corporations?

All the signs that come from the Government and other sources indicate that the Government is moving to dismantle one of the most sophisticated marketing systems in the world. As further processed products are brought into Canada, many of which are of lower quality and consequently lower priced, Canadian production will have to be cut and food processors will be forced out of business. As the food processors are forced out of business, so will the farmers. Scores are being forced out at this time.

It only takes a few percentage points of surplus to wreck a market and destroy an industry. As the old adage goes, two buyers after one cow means a good market, but one buyer after two cows is a disaster.

I was shocked to see some of the explanations and options being considered by the United States. In fact, in a recent document to the United States Senate Committee on Agriculture and Nutrition, the U.S. Trade Representative laid out the options for negotiating the elimination of the Canadian Wheat Board and wheat product licensing requirements, and explained their preference. This document lays out those preferences. It states:

> There are several ways in which the question of restrictive Canadian import licensing of wheat and wheat products may be addressed. The first of these has been incorporated into the U.S.—Canada Free Trade Agreement. The FTA provides that when the level of Government support for wheat in the United States becomes equal to or less than the level of Government support in Canada, Canada shall eliminate any import permit requirements for wheat and wheat products originating in the territory of the United States.

That is what is happening to the Canadian wheat producers. When it happens, the Canadian Wheat Board will be stripped of its powers.

In the last two years, I have had scores of farmers ask me what the Government is doing to our marketing system. The dairy farmers of Lambton and Middlesex Counties and the whole poultry industry are realizing that this cruel big business Government is quite prepared to give away their marketing structures for the sake of making a deal at any cost.

There are only three lines concerning agriculture in the Speech from the Throne. It referred to the industry as being a drain on the nation's economy. I am a farmer. At this time of year I always look forward with anticipation and optimism to the spring planting season and the year ahead. I look forward to the creation of new plant life and hopefully a bountiful harvest. I resent being told that I am a drain on the nation's treasury.

The Government has thrown us to the vultures in this whole free market economy. There seems to be a double standard in the Government. It is okay for the huge corporations to exert more power on the market-place, but if Canada's farmers try to maintain a countervailing force in the market-place they are told to become more efficient.

When I return home to my riding every week-end, I am shocked at the number of farmers who are coming to me for financial assistance. In fact, in my colleague's riding of Essex—Kent, there are 200 farmers being forced off the farms through Farm Credit Corporation actions alone.

I am proud to be a farmer. I am proud of the role we play in society. But I cannot understand why any Government would possibly contemplate destroying our systems and our quality standards to become part of the law of the jungle.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I want to make some comments on the Throne Speech and the Member's speech. I am pleased that in the Speech from the Throne the Government talked about a strong commitment to a strong economy and recognized the importance of deficit reduction. However, we should not forget that in 1984 our total debt was approximately $200 billion. Now, in 1989, it is $320 billion. Annual interest rates on that debt now consume 31 cents of every dollar of Government revenue, and these payments are putting pressure on the Government's ability to meet other priorities.

Canada has been borrowing money solely to pay the interest from previous borrowings. In order to reverse this trend, expenditures must be reduced and revenue must cover the cost of Government programs.

In the Speech from the Throne the Government talks about tax reform and proposes a new federal sales tax to replace the manufacturers sales tax. This new federal sales tax could be a value added tax, or a tax on consumer goods and services.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but I understood that we were on the five minute question and comment period with respect to the speech which was just made by the Hon. Member for Lambton—Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson). So far, I have not heard either a question or something that related to comments made by our colleague.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy) does not necessarily have to ask questions, but I am sure, with the experience he has, his comments will relate to the speech by the Hon. Member for Lambton—Middlesex.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly make a connection with what the Hon. Member was talking about.

Mr. Ferguson: I was talking about beef.

Mr. Kindy: This concerns the value added tax and how it affects farmers. I would like to continue.

I would oppose the value added tax for two reasons. First, it would leave less money in the pockets of taxpayers than the present taxation system. Second, it would require additional staff positions to be implemented.

Canadian taxpayers are already over-burdened. In 1984, a study of the value added tax by the United States Department of Treasury estimated that implementation of a value added tax in the United States would require 21,000 staff positions and would cost some $700 million to the United States Treasury. While administrative costs for implementation of a VAT in Canada would be lower, the reduction in cost would not be proportionate to the size of the Canadian economy, since there are clearly economies of scale in establishing and administering a tax system. If costs in Canada are one fifth of those in the United States, implementing a value added tax would require some 4,000 staff positions and some $200 million in public expenditures a year.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I must give some time, and the period of questions and comments is over.

Mr. Kindy: I would ask the Hon. Member how it would affect farmers if we implemented a value added tax, and what he thinks about it.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, certainly I am against any value added tax as far as farmers are concerned. We have a very difficult time now adjusting our cash flows. That is another added expense to the farm community.

Perhaps I should point out to the hon. gentlemen, that in 1984, when the Government took office, the national debt was $130 billion. It is now at $320 billion, almost double.

We had just gone through a period of recession and had positive growth since December, 1982. Consequently, that deficit and the national debt should have been brought down, not allowed to escalate. I can point out to him that Government expenditures increased dramatically since that time as well.

Two days ago I tabled two petitions in the House. One was on behalf of the dairy farmers in Lambton—Middlesex in southwestern Ontario to point out to the Government that their systems are in jeopardy and the whole industry is in jeopardy. I tabled a petition for beef producers who are upset about the "no-roll", ungraded United States beef coming into this country. If the agriculture industry in Canada is to survive under this Free Trade Agreement, we must go back to the systems we had in place and that have served this industry for many years. We must ensure that the United States raises their standards to our standards and not tear ours down.

Mr. Willie Littlechild (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity to address this House on the Throne Speech. The Throne Speech is a positive plan, a direction for the Thirty-Fourth Parliament. It sets out a plan of objectives and purposes of this Government for the future. This future presents our constituency with its own set of opportunities to participate.

I want to comment on the fundamental objectives in the Throne Speech that present my constituents with both challenges and opportunities. The constituency of Wetaskiwin is very diverse in cultures and economic base, but nevertheless it is very economically active. When I see objectives like building a strong economy, preserving Canada's environment, maintaining a caring, compassionate society, fostering a confident sense of Canada's cultural and national uniqueness, I welcome the opportunity for my constituents to share and participate in the constructive direction of our second mandate.

I want to review each major component of the Throne Speech in retrospect by recalling incidents during the election campaign. With respect to the economy, there were many times when I knocked on doors to find constituents very concerned about the deficit. We have since received calls and letters, as I am sure all my colleagues in the House have, from constituents who say or write: "please do something to reduce the deficit".

With regard to preserving Canada's environment, during the first two or three weeks of my campaign, the number one issue in my constituency was the environment. As we moved to the second half of the campaign, freer trade became the issue.

It is with gratitude that I listened to the Throne Speech, because the most important concerns of my constituency, the economy and the environment, are being addressed by this Government as priorities.

The constituency of Wetaskiwin has some of the most caring and compassionate people in the nation. The family, including children and the elderly, are the strength and base of our communities. Communities like Leduc, Ponoka, Lacombe or Wetaskiwin, communities whether they be urban or rural, agricultural or energy based, all have this same quality of caring and compassion.

In like fashion, Wetaskiwin has the richness of multicultural heritage. My constituency has as diverse a culture as anywhere in the country. The valuable contributions of the German, Swedish, Oriental, Philippine, French and others are evident from one end of the riding to the other. I am proud to say this is possible by working together with the aboriginal people, my people, in Hobbema.

As I listened to the Throne Speech, I was encouraged as I could hear how this Government was planning to involve my constituents in the constructive development of our nation because of its commitment to national unity.

Let me go back for a moment to address some specifics. Shortly after the election, a constituent, Mr. Hitchcock, wrote to me and expressed concerns about the environment. He did so in a manner to remind me of what one of my forebearers said in 1854:

> The shining water that moves in the streams and rivers is not just water, but the blood of our ancestors.
> If we sell you our land, you must remember that it is sacred and you must teach your children that it is sacred— The rivers are our brothers, they quench our thirst—The air is precious to the red man, for all things share the same breath—the beast, the tree, the man, they all share the same breath—
> This we know. The earth does not belong to man: man belongs to the earth. This we know. All things are connected like the blood which unites one family. All things are connected.
> Whatever befalls the earth, befalls the sons of the earth. Man did not weave the web of life. He is merely a strand in it. Whatever he does to the web, he does to himself—
> The white man too shall pass; perhaps sooner than all the other tribes. Continue to contaminate your beds, and you will one night suffocate in your own waste.

These were very prophetic words. I need not mention the Brundtland Commission's reference to native people as being some of the best environmental protectors in the world. That leads me to another aspect of the Throne Speech.

I want to commend the Prime Minister on the inclusion of aboriginal people in the Throne Speech, as we set out on a positive direction for the next few years. I want to refer to the future constitutional development including aboriginal rights. I quote from the Throne Speech:

> My Government is concerned that our native peoples participate fully in Canada's economic development prospects and, to this end, will be extending its programs to assist native economic development.

I welcome this, as one who has constituents among the Four Nations of Hobbema, and look forward to both objectives and to taking advantage of opportunities under the Free Trade Agreement. It has long been my personal belief that education and economic development opportunities for my people are the key essentials to meaningful involvement in our nation. It is only with these tools and skills that we can participate and contribute fully as self-reliant Indian Governments.

I want to compliment our Government's initiative to renew its fight against drug abuse. We have seen its devastation in some communities, and I am encouraged by this commitment as I believe preventative programs for young people.

Another initiative I wish to recognize, because of numerous constituents confiding in me during the campaign, is that of amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Program. I welcome on behalf of my constituents these changes, especially as more resources will be directed toward active training. To quote again from the Throne Speech:

The increasing participation of women in the workforce underlines the need for initiatives that promote equality of opportunity in Canada's economic life.

This will now happen. A recent contribution to the Wetaskiwin and District Chamber of Commerce provides a concrete example. They will be training women, who have been out of work, for job re-entry so they can become participants during this second mandate and beyond. There will be greater opportunities for productive and rewarding experience in the workforce. The Wetaskiwin PALS, a Program for Adult Literacy Skills, is encouraged by the literacy initiatives mentioned in the Throne Speech.

There are many more opportunities to which I can make reference. We realize there are also many challenges that face us in the coming years. We have made commitments to a more competitive economy; a human resources development strategy; a commitment to sustainable development; maintaining our social programs; fostering our national identity; a strong action to reduce the deficit; and a constructive approach in our environmental international relations. We welcome these challenges and endorse the plan of objectives as outlined in the Throne Speech because we see a brighter future for Wetaskiwin.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

INCREASED NATURAL GAS EXPORTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): The National Energy Board has to decide on a proposal to export nine trillion cubic feet of natural gas, about 10 per cent of our total supply. The proposal could mean that future generations of Canadians will be deprived of nine million millions cubic feet of gas. We would remain "hewers of wood and drawers of water".

It is unfortunate that this Government seems uninterested in our future needs. It should at least direct the National Energy Board to make approval contingent upon the condition that exported gas would replace and not add to oil or coal burning. Natural gas pollutes less than oil or coal. Therefore, it contributes less to global climate warming.

The proposal before the NEB should not be examined as a request for export in isolation from our long-term interests, but rather in the context of an energy strategy for Canada with the reduction of global climate warming as a goal.

Unfortunately, this Government is not interested in long-term energy policy, climate warming and the needs of future generations.

VOLUNTEER ORGANIZATIONS

NATIONAL VOLUNTEER WEEK—TRIBUTE TO VOLUNTEERS

Mr. Charles DeBlois (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday will begin the National Volunteer Week, during which we should reflect on the tremendous efforts made by the Canadian volunteers to improve our life.

I am very pleased to honour the volunteers in my constituency, especially the people working at the Volunteer Action Center in Orléans and the Help Center 23, as well as all the volunteers helping the chronic and mentally handicapped patients at the Saint-Augustin and Robert-Giffard Hospitals.

In Canada, the economic value of volunteer work is estimated at some $4 billion, which I hope you realize is an outstanding amount! But the true value of these people's work cannot be measured in economic terms. Instead, we are talking here of some irreplaceable efforts made by millions of Canadians who make a point of improving the quality of life in Canada and to build a more human and friendly world.

Mr. Speaker, the National Volunteer Week gives us the opportunity to recognize the wonderful work of Canadian volunteers and the profound influence they have on our society.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

FOOD BANKS—GOVERNMENT INFORMATION KIT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Agriculture, at the request of the food industry, has prepared an information kit designed to link up food processors, producers and distributors with food banks in Canada.

This move indicates that the Government's view of food banks is as a formal and institutionalized component to Canadian social services. It also indicates that the Government is anticipating an increased demand for food banks because of such policies as the restructuring of the Unemployment Insurance Program.

We are seeing the abrogation of the Government's responsibility to provide jobs and a decent standard of living for Canadians by further relying on the private sector to do a job that rightly belongs to government.

The Government should be putting its resources into programs that will eradicate the need for food banks. Instead, the Government appears to be acknowledging that food banks are an appropriate remedy for its inaction and inability to get Canadians working.

I call on the Government to find ways to end the need for food banks, rather than to look at ways of making them a permanent feature of Canadian life.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—KILLING OF PALESTINIAN CIVILIANS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, there was more killing and bloodshed in the occupied West Bank yesterday.

Surely it is high time for Israel's friends to tell her, in no uncertain terms, that the continual murdering of Palestinian civilians by the Israeli military is cruel, intolerable, and must stop.

ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS

NATIVE FRIENDSHIP CENTRES

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux) will be aware that Canada has over 100 Native Friendship Centres.

Their primary objective is to improve the quality of life for aboriginal peoples in an urban environment.

The Minister will also be aware that, following the recommendations of a 1988 study, the federal Cabinet, prior to the 1988 federal election, decided to renew the Friendship Centre Program on a permanent basis.

The Government is now in the process of reviewing all program expenditures with a view to budget cuts.

In light of the capping on post-secondary funding for natives, concerns have been raised as to whether or not the funding for these centres might fall prey to the same type of action.

In the event of any reduction in this program, the Minister should know that for every dollar cut by the Government the centres will lose three times that in funds received from other sources to support these centres.

Cuts or reductions in support will affect not only the centres themselves, but the economy of the surrounding communities.

I call upon the Minister to reassure the House that there will be no cuts or reductions of the Friendship Centre Program in the April 27 Budget.

CALL FOR END TO STUDENTS' HUNGER STRIKE

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I rise to address myself to the native students who are presently on a hunger strike on the issue of the new post-secondary assistance program.

These students should discontinue their hunger strike and meet with the Minister, as he has suggested.

The students are asking for a delay in the implementation of policy, and bilateral negotiations. The Minister has stated that the policy will not be implemented until September, providing time for the discussions that the Minister has begun. He has also emphasized his interest in the presence of student representatives at that table. I feel that the position of the Minister is reasonable and conciliatory.

I know that all Canadians agree that discussions, negotiations, and even demonstrations are legitimate exercises in a democratic society. Hunger strikes and other forms of coercion are not.

THE LATE ABBIE HOFFMAN

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I rise to mark the death of Abbie Hoffman, notorious anti-war protester, one of the Chicago Seven, and a leader of that heterogeneous but nevertheless united phenomenon called the counter-culture.

Those of us who were affected, indeed inspired at times by the various philosophical critiques of modern society offered by the counter-culture, and by the creative irreverence and questioning of authority of leaders like Hoffman, may have grown to see that the world is a more complicated reality than we thought, and that even counter-cultures are fraught with pitfalls.

However, I believe there are many in Canada and in the United States who are still living out their opposition to establishment values in their work in the church, in community-based organizations, in development and peace groups, in trade unions, in politics, in education, and in the environmental movement.

We have not forgotten, or closed our eyes to the heart of darkness that lies at the center of a civilization willing to destroy and/or poison the earth, to starve children in order to pay the banks, or to send the young off to be killed in wars to protect the business interests of the corporate elite. We may be more mature now, whatever that means, but we will overcome. Wait for it.

CITIZENSHIP

CITIZENSHIP WEEK

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia—Matane): Mr. Speaker, this year, the National Citizenship Week will be held from April 16 to 23.

What better opportunity than to reflect on the tremendous privilege that is ours of living and prospering with complete freedom in our great and beautiful country, a country rich in unique natural, cultural, and human resources.

During the National Citizenship Week, let's not forget to thank and honour the men and women who have built Canada, as well as all the others who keep working hard to make our country a better place to live for our children and grandchildren.

HUMAN RIGHTS

REQUEST THAT CANADA INTERVENE WITH GOVERNMENT OF BURUNDI ON BEHALF OF M. RÉMI GAHUTU

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to a clear case of human rights violation and ask the Canadian Government to urge the authorities concerned to stop such violations.

I refer to the case of Mr. Rémi Gahutu, President of the Palipehutu, who is the main Leader of the Hutu Opposition in exile and is currently the victim of harassment from the Government in power in Burundi.

We have been advised that the Burundian intelligence services are hunting down refugees abroad, especially in Tanzania, offering bounties and bribes to whoever will persecute them. It is not the first time that Mr. Rémi Gahutu is thus subjected to arbitrary arrests and harassment by local Mpanda officials on behalf of the Burundian Government.

I ask therefore the Canadian Government to contact without delay the authorities in Dar-Es-Salaam and insist that they leave Mr. Gahutu and his supporters alone and respect their human rights.

GLOBAL POPULATION AND DEVELOPMENT

AGENDA FOR PARLIAMENTARIANS

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to the attention of colleagues in the House some interesting activities, both past and future, of the international Global Committee of Parliamentarians on Population and Development.

Last April the Global Committee co-sponsored, together with the Temple of Understanding, which is an inter-faith group based in New York, the Oxford Forum of Parliamentarians and spiritual leaders on global survival. This forum was held in Oxford, England, and it was so successful that, in January, 1990, the U.S.S.R. will sponsor a similar meeting in Moscow which will be hosted by an interesting group of three, namely, the Supreme Soviet, the Soviet Academy of Sciences, and the Russian Orthodox Church, to discuss those issues affecting global survival.

There will also be a meeting in Quito, Ecuador, in March, 1990, in which Parliamentarians from the western hemisphere will participate in discussions dealing with the issues of the environment and how that affects population and development.

Of special interest to colleagues in the House, in June, 1989, there will be a seminar on the Hill in Room 200. There will be a dinner and a meeting in the evening where issues of population and development will be discussed.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

SOUTH-WEST MONTRÉAL—ROLE OF GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): In a few weeks, Mr. Speaker, the Committee for the economic recovery and employment in South Western Montreal will make public its report on the economic crisis which is now raging in the South Western part of the island.

For a number of years, the industrial base in that area has been deteriorating, with the result that thousands of Montrealers have lost their jobs. This drain must stop.

It is essential first of all to keep the jobs we have, create new ones, foster economic development, implement without delay re-adjustment programs for workers and make sure that the three levels of Government combine their effort to come up with a true industrial policy for that area.

Therefore, I strongly support the CREESOM initiative and the action of such organization as the Association Urgence Sud-Ouest, PEP, as well as the many South-West community groups and unions organizations whose common pupose is to make our elected representatives, the contractors and public generally more aware of challenges to come.

COLD HYDROGEN FUSION POTENTIAL

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, vast investments in fossil fuels ignore the terrible potential consequences of the greenhouse effect. The energy sources of the future must be renewable and non-polluting. To trivialize wind power or solar power, as the Minister of Energy (Mr. Epp) did yesterday in order to justify heavy cuts in alternative energy research is to fail to provide the type of leadership that the country needs.

The discovery of cold hydrogen fusion, if confirmed, places every nation with electrical power and water and a commitment to research and development on the same starting line. With the potential development of a revolutionary technology it is no overstatement to say that it could prolong the very existence of the earth.

It is a real commitment to research and development that Canada lacks. I have asked the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Winegard) to begin consultations so that Canada can be ready when the race begins for the development of practical fusion technology. I now ask when will the Minister answer, and what will he answer? Will he resort to the trivializing ignorance of his colleague in energy or will he show the foresight that science requires but which is so politically rare?

Shall Canadian creativity at last be unleashed? Or will we be in the grandstand watching the race for a place in creating a sustainable economic future for mankind? Our scientists, our industry, our workers, and our nation await an answer.

STATUS OF WOMEN

CADILLAC—FAIRVIEW—TREATMENT OF APARTMENT SUPERINTENDENT'S WIFE

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, in my riding of Parkdale—High Park, and in every other city in Canada that has an apartment building with a superintendent couple, women are being treated as second-class citizens.

Mrs. Alma Weaver signed a contract with Cadillac-Fairview guaranteeing that she would do the work as specified in the contract and that she would not take a job outside the home. Although she works side by side with her husband, she was not paid a salary. Therefore she was unable to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan, unemployment insurance, or the company pension.

The largest and fastest growing group of people who live under the poverty line is made up of single, widowed and divorced women over the age of 65. If Mrs. Weaver were to lose her husband in any circumstance she would be forced to join this group, because the owners of the building were allowed to hire two people and pay benefits and salary to only one.

What protection has the Minister of Employment provided in her UI changes for the protection of thousands of women like Alma Weaver who is the urban version of the farm wife?

BENEFITS INCREASE ANNOUNCED PRIOR TO ELECTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister but in his absence perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister would address himself to it.

This week we finally saw the ugly side of members of the Conservative Cabinet. They have broken their election promises, what the Minister of Finance called commitments. They have misled the country. They have been complete hypocrites on serious constitutional issues. They are playing tough guys with a group of students who are lying ill on a hunger strike. They have launched a savage attack on the unemployed of the country.

Their harsh agenda is no longer hidden. Canadians are finally seeing the real Tory Party.

Since the Prime Minister refuses to tell us whether he authorized the Minister for International Trade to tell the people of Newfoundland and the people of Canada that there would be no changes to the unemployment insurance scheme, will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether the Prime Minister authorized the Minister of Employment to raise benefits for the unemployed just six days before the last general election?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has been spreading all sorts of information around this week which bears no resemblance to reality.

First, the announcement during the election was the normal annual announcement made by the Unemployment Insurance Commission which relates premiums to average industrial earnings. That was the announcement that was made last November, as it is made every November, and as it will be made next November.

The program that we have announced involves a reallocation of $1.29 billion for the benefit of the unemployed. It is an approach that was advocated by a committee of this House which presented a unanimous report whose authors included Members from the opposite side of the House who suggested to the Government that we should extend the training benefits and the active uses of unemployment insurance.

When will the Hon. Member stick to the facts and the history?

CONTRIBUTIONS – GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, last November's announcement was authorized and even made by the Minister. The Government has just shown all the electoral cynicism it displayed on the subject of unemployment insurance benefits. I would like to know whether the Government will also show the same cynicism regarding premiums—yesterday, it was benefits; today, it is premiums—paid into the unemployment insurance fund by workers in our country? On November 15, the same day, the Conservative Government reduced by 17 per cent the unemployment insurance premiums that employers and employees have to pay in Canada. In effect, that corresponds to a tax reduction which can amount to $184 on the premiums paid for all Canadian workers.

Can the Minister give us the assurance that no change will be made to these premiums, which were reduced in November, in the Finance Minister's Budget?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is the Leader of the Liberal Party who is cynical because in the debate in 1984, he said: "We must maintain our unemployment insurance systems. They must be converted to some extent into training and retraining. We must update our concepts."

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): As I said last time, the Minister has to read the whole quotation. I said that it must never be done on the backs of the unemployed and that training must be the responsibility of employers or the Canadian Government, depending on its income. That was the question.

[English]

PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS – REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT GUARANTEE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Deputy Prime Minister since obviously the Minister does not choose to respond to questions. She comes up with a line.

I know that the Minister of Finance will not customarily reveal his budget posture. However, the Prime Minister allowed the Minister of Employment to cut premiums paid by working Canadians on unemployment insurance, premiums paid by the employers and the employees, during the election campaign, by 17 per cent. The Minister does not appear ready to honour that commitment in this House. The Minister of Finance will not reveal, obviously, what he wants to say in the Budget. But the Tory Government cut those premiums paid by workers by 17 per cent six days before the election.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister guarantee us and Canadians that at least this election commitment will be kept by the Minister of Finance?

• (1120)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, knows full well what the formula is for the premium structure in unemployment insurance and that an independent commission has a mandate to establish the premiums. They have been doing that every year, Mr. Speaker, going back into the mists of time. The Leader of the Opposition knows full well that any changes to funding, any kind of funding, come in a budget, but the legitimate changes that were made last fall were made by an independent unemployment insurance commission, just as they have been done through years and years of unemployment insurance.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION – STUDENTS' HUNGER STRIKE

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs on the unfair practices of the Government with respect to native post-secondary education. Last night I met with several chiefs from the riding of Kenora—Rainy River. People have come from across Canada to support native students who are in their twenty-fourth day of fasting. Can the Minister tell me how I can explain to those Chiefs who have travelled great distances to Ottawa what he means by his words:

> There is no need for them to continue in this dangerous and essentially undemocratic undertaking.

How can the Minister say this when nothing has been resolved? Why, Mr. Speaker, do people in this country have to go to extremes to get their message across to this Government?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate to all Members of this House, to all Canadians and particularly to the native students that are involved in the hunger strike, that they do not have to resort to a hunger strike to have meetings with me. My hon. friend may have met with some Chiefs last night, Mr. Speaker. I have met with Chiefs also. I have met twice with Grand Chief Erasmus and a representation of 12 or 13 other Chiefs from across Canada. We have discussed this issue. Unfortunately there is no resolution to date because their demand is unreasonable.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cadieux: All I am asking is that they do put an end to the hunger strike, that they sit down with me and discuss this policy which I am prepared to discuss with them, this policy that they themselves find unreasonable. First Nations find Circular E-12, which is the old policy, to be unacceptable and totally inconsistent with the principle of First Nations' jurisdiction over education. We agree, Mr. Speaker. We have got new guidelines that are more generous, and I am prepared to look into them again. If they can improve, we will certainly look into it.

BILATERAL PROCESS

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary to the same Minister. We have sat here in the last few weeks and listened to this rhetoric over and over again. I would like to ask the Minister today to give us a hand and commit himself to begin a bilateral process with the Indian people, without restrictions on time and demonstrate respect on behalf of all the people in this House to the native peoples and First Nations of our country.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I do not know, Mr. Speaker, who is getting entangled in which rhetoric. If the Hon. Member, and the others who are yelling across the floor, have been listening to what I have said, I have already indicated that I am prepared to sit down and discuss the new guidelines. In my mind bilateral means that there will be representatives of my Department and/or myself and representatives of the native students and/or the Chiefs obviously. That is bilateral. That is what I have been saying, and that is to what I am committed. As soon as the students put an end to their hunger strike, come and meet with me. My door is open.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEE OF MEETING

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): My question is also to the Minister of Indian Affairs. As we have heard, Mr. Speaker, this is the twenty-fourth day of a fast by 16 young Canadians. I trust that I speak for all Canadians when I say that this is a situation that cries out for resolution. Would the Minister confirm that, upon receiving notification that the fast has ended, he will initiate a substantive and effective bilateral process of consultation and ensure that this process includes recognized representatives of both the Indian leadership of this country and of the students, confirm that there is no predetermined cap on future funding and that it is his intention to seek such funding within the budgetary framework as required to meet the demand? Will he include an effective mechanism to address the treaty applications of this issue within the bilateral process and ensure that during the interim period no individual Indian students will be worse off than they would have been under the old guidelines?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member, for his question which I think was a very reasonable one. I have already indicated from the very start of this unfortunate hunger strike that I was ready to discuss the new policy. I agree with First Nations when they say that the E-12 document, the old policy, obstructs rather than facilitates post-secondary education for First Nation students. We have brought in a better policy. If it can be improved, let us sit down like reasonable people and discuss it. I am prepared to do that, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): I thank the Minister for his response, but I was wondering did the points which I in fact outlined represent his position? If they do, do they also represent the position of the Government?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): My understanding of government operation, Mr. Speaker, is that when a Minister puts down a policy, it is the position of the Government. Therefore, yes, the policy that is there now since April 1, and that will take effect on September 1, is a better policy. But I am prepared to review it.

I have another document, Mr. Speaker, which is the analysis of our policy prepared by the students, and they say, "the new rates proposed in March are higher than those available under the old E-12 post-secondary policy and guidelines".

It is already better, Mr. Speaker. If we can improve on it, let us do it under normal circumstances.

MINISTER'S UNDERTAKING

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): As a further supplementary, I am sure we welcome the intention of the Minister to improve the situation. I would like to ask him again—do the points that I outline accurately represent his thinking on this issue?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): If the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, is referring to my undertaking to sit down with the students themselves once they put an end to their hunger strike, and/or representatives of native people including Chiefs, I am prepared to sit down and meet with them once the hunger strike is over. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

MINISTER'S MEETING WITH SENIOR EDUCATORS

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): My question, Mr. Speaker, is also for the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It was reported last night that he met with two senior educators from northern Ontario at their request in an attempt to end this hunger strike by native students. Inasmuch as a demonstration by natives is currently in progress, I am wondering if the Minister can report to this House on the progress of that meeting last night?

An Hon. Member: He did if you would listen.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I will obviously thank this Hon. Member for his question also which I think is a very reasonable request. If my friends from across the floor really listened to what I said, they would have realized that I referred to meetings with the Chiefs and the Grand Chiefs, not with these two representatives of the universities in Thunder Bay where I am informed, Mr. Speaker, most of the hunger strikers come from. I have met with them and they are as concerned as I am with the process that is being followed in this particular instance which is a hunger strike, and they agree with me that it should end and that we should sit down and discuss the issue, Mr. Speaker.

FUNDS REDIRECTED TO TRAINING – EXPENDITURE LOCATIONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): My question, Mr. Speaker, is for the Minister for Employment. Under the existing Unemployment Insurance Program, the legislation assures that the Unemployment Insurance Fund, that is unemployment insurance money, will go to unemployed workers in the regions where they live, very often the regions with the highest unemployment. Under her new proposals, what will she do as Minister to assure that the $800 million redirected to training and human resource planning will go to these same individuals, the unemployed in Canada, in the provinces where they live? Will she put this requirement in the law as it now is, or will this targeting be left to the discretion of the Minister, which means the money could end up very often in the high growth areas of the country rather than go to the underdeveloped areas of the country?

• (1130)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, let me point out, for example, that the money going into Newfoundland as a region will be higher under this program than it is under the old program.

The training under unemployment insurance is voluntary. We are not forcing people to take training. We are saying that we will provide accessibility to training under this program, which people will want to take. We will do it under the Community Futures Program which benefits the high unemployment regions in this country, as we have been doing under the Canadian Jobs Strategy. The funds will be directed to those who have the greatest need.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, she is taking $800 million out of the fund and redirecting it to matters that are not purely protection for the unemployed. There is no assurance that that $800 million will go back to the provinces and the people who need it most.

WHITE PAPER – REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, the Minister states in her White Paper that a Bill will be introduced in the spring of 1989. We are now in the spring and I presume she will introduce the Bill quickly. She also says there will be major consultation between the Government, business, labour, education and the provinces, but she says nothing about Parliamentarians who must make a decision on this matter.

Will she agree to refer the White Paper she has produced this week to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration as quickly as possible early next week, with a mandate to have a wide range of hearings across the country on this important matter that touches all Canadians?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when we provide so much better training for Canadians and better benefits for workers, I am sure the Hon. Member would like to see the legislation and discuss this when he has all the information in front of him—

Mr. Allmand: No, right now. Before the legislation.

Mrs. McDougall: —that makes some sense for the way Parliament works.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN BLACK COMMUNITY – EFFECT OF CHANGES TO SYSTEM

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the changes she has announced for the Unemployment Insurance Program. The Minister will agree that visible minority groups such as our native and black communities suffer disproportionately the burden of unemployment. In my constituency the rate of unemployment in the black community is often eight times the normal regional rate. Will the Minister not agree that her changes will hit hardest those communities, forcing them on to the welfare rolls, and will cause further ghettoization of these groups in our society?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not what will happen. If the Hon. Member looks at the Canadian Jobs Strategy he will see, for example, that our job training planning since 1985 has been directed specifically at doubly disadvantaged groups, at groups like visible minorities, the disabled and others who have particular needs. We will continue to do that under the new scheme.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): I thank the Minister, but those assurances do not put bread on the table of the groups affected the most, the minority groups in this country.

EXPENDITURE OF FUNDS—REQUEST FOR AFFIRMATIVE ACTION STIPULATION

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, in the documents tabled on Tuesday the Minister slashed benefits and indicated that more moneys would go to training programs. Will the Minister give the House an assurance that she will attach an affirmative action provision to the spending of these funds to ensure that those minority groups who will be devastated by these unfair changes will be given priority consideration, or will she continue to show callousness in the treatment of these minority groups?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe anyone in this Government can be accused of callousness towards minority groups—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: The Canadian Jobs Strategy provides exactly what the Member is asking for. Let me say as well that we have a very large program for social assistance recipients. If the provinces co-operate we will have $200 million more available for social assistance recipients. I would expect, as under the Canadian Jobs Strategy, that those are the people most in need. Many of them are visible minorities. Many of them are single mothers who are also doubly disadvantaged. We are targeting this directly, with an additional $200 million to make it an $800 million program, to groups with particular needs.

ALLEGED WITHDRAWAL OF FINANCING OF PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The newspaper Le Devoir revealed this morning that the Government is planning to withdraw from funding unemployment insurance. Another official quoted said that regional contributions would disappear. This means that every employee and every employer will have to pay 15 per cent more in contributions. Is it fair to pay more for less benefits?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): First, Mr. Speaker, I am a little tired of hearing from the NDP about fewer benefits.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCurdy: I guess you are.

Mrs. McDougall: The size of this program remains the same.

Mr. McCurdy: Let somebody else answer the questions, then.

Mr. Allmand: It is only 11.30.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the House would want to hear the answer from the Minister.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Democracy is really boring, isn't it, Barbara?

Mrs. McDougall: The size of the program remains the same. We are doing something that has been done before under previous administrations. We are altering the balance between the benefits for income support and the benefits for training, which get people off the need for permanent income support. It gives them a better chance at the future.

I should also point out that, as the Hon. Member knows, anything that has appeared on funding is speculation and straight buzz. Anything having to do with funding concerns the Budget and concerns the mandate of the Commission.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I feel for the tiredness of the Minister, but I feel a lot more for the people throughout the country who are going to be hurt by what she is doing.

An Hon. Member: Save it for the convention.

HARMONIZATION WITH UNITED STATES QUERY—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, why does the Minister think she is justified in taking money from the pocket of every taxpayer in this country through increased contributions, in decreasing the amount unemployed people will get and at the same time setting up a situation in which people who are paying for an insurance program must pay more? How can she justify that? Is it simply a question of harmonization with the United States?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's Leader started into this nonsense about harmonization yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: Let me say that the only things we are trying to harmonize are Canadian workers and Canadian skills with Canadian jobs and opportunities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: Let me point out the facts. In Canada we devote 2.24 per cent of Gross Domestic Product to unemployment insurance. The size of the Unemployment Insurance Program remains the same. That compares with 0.83 per cent of GDP in the United States. We spend more in this country, and that will continue.

Let me say more about the selective statistics on harmonization used yesterday by the Leader of his Party who picked five States in the United States that provide unemployment insurance benefits, none of which are equivalent to ours in any way at all. They do not include maternity benefits and parental benefits. My knowledge of the U.S. system began when I looked up a response to this ridiculous statement about harmonization.

AGRICULTURE

REPORT ON MEAT HYGIENE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I want to ask the Minister what action he is taking as a result of the previously secret document on meat hygiene revealed yesterday. This report is a startling document. It suggests that 2.5 million Canadians become ill each year, several hundred die, and losses to the Canadian economy in terms of wages, health care costs and human suffering are over $1 billion. I want to ask the Minister what action he is planning to take as a result of this document?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, this food advisory safety committee was structured in 1986. It was made up of the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Health, consumer groups, unions and members of the industrial sector to look at safety standards, risks associated with the handling of food, and the inspection program.

If the Member wants to refer to the report, perhaps he might want to look at its conclusions. The report concludes that the observation of the committee was that the meat hygiene program is detecting the problems and adequately giving assurance that wholesome meat supply is reaching the Canadian public. It went on to say that there remains a great deal to be done in the area of food-borne disease incidents in Canada, which is not within the mandate of the hygiene program, especially as it relates to the handling of the product at home and in the food preparation area. It said the spread of many food-borne diseases may be prevented by proper cooking and handling of foods.

The conclusion of the advisory committee regarding the hygiene inspection division is that wholesome meat is reaching the Canadian public.

SALMONELLA INFECTION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Of the 14 diseases covered in this report, which was secret until yesterday, I want to ask the Minister about the problem of salmonella infection. The report suggests that half of those people suffering from salmonellosis, some 313,000, are due to the meat inspection regime in this country. The losses involve almost $400 million, and some 300 deaths occur. The report makes recommendations about what should be done about salmonella infection in this country with regard to meat inspection.

With regard to this one disease, can the Minister say he has implemented the recommendations of the report?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): I want to repeat again the findings of the advisory committee. The committee said, and I quote: "Agriculture Canada is ensuring that wholesome meat is reaching the Canadian public". For the Hon. Member to stand up and sensationalize and dramatize this issue not based on facts, based on misinterpretation and erroneous conclusions, is an unfortunate situation. It does not do a great service to the agricultural industry.

With respect to salmonella, three years ago Agriculture Canada and Health and Welfare created a co-ordinating committee to look at critical points such as processing plants, hatcheries and feed mills where contamination could occur. The committee looked at ways and means of reducing the opportunity for this to happen. An action plan was implemented. As the Auditor General said in his report, 95 per cent of the action plan has been completed. There have been increased inspections. The Auditor General pointed out he was impressed by the dedication of the Food Production and Inspection Branch management and the inspection staff and the high regard in which the branch is held internationally. That should give the Hon. Member confidence. I am sure it gives Canadians confidence as well.

SPORTS

USE OF DRUGS BY ATHLETES – UNITED STATES – SOVIET UNION AGREEMENT

Mr. Bob Kilger (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. The United States and the Soviet Union recently entered into an agreement allowing for the testing of each other's athletes for illegal performance-enhancing drugs. The United States Olympic Committee stated they expect other countries to join.

I want to ask the Minister if he believes that Canada should become a participant, and if so, when can we expect an official announcement.

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Stormont—Dundas on his election and his appointment as associate critic for fitness and amateur sport.

The issue of doping is extremely important in Canada. It was important for this Government in 1985 when we brought in the first policy, one of the most severe domestic policies in the world, in the area of anti-doping. In 1987 the Government brought forward an anti-doping strategy under the leadership of the then Minister of Health and Welfare that affords a multi-dimensional approach. In June of 1988 we had the first international anti-doping conference in this country due to the leadership of my predecessor. We have played a leadership role in the world. We intend to pursue that leadership role. We will look closely at any association we can enter into that will help Canada and this Government fight doping in this country.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bob Kilger (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I am neither the critic nor associate critic. I am a co-critic.

In a recent poll, 87 per cent indicated support for frequent and surprise random drug testing and for Canadian amateur athletes, especially before an international competition. Given the results of this survey, I want to ask the Minister if he will act immediately and announce Canada's willingness to join this program?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): I am a little intrigued. When the Member for Stormont—Dundas and his colleague are together, does that make them co-co's?

There is now a commission of inquiry looking into the issue of doping in sports. The terms of reference are very large. As far as the Government is concerned the inquiry is proceeding in a good way. We anticipate there will be recommendations coming out of the inquiry. In the meantime, the Government of Canada intends to maintain its leadership role in its fight against anti-doping in sport, and we will look into any agreement or any action we can put forward to help us in this fight.

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN BANK RATE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The bank rate rose by some ten bases points yesterday. Real interest rates are at the same level as they were in 1981 when this country went into a recession from which many Canadians have not yet recovered. I want the Minister of Finance to explain why he is stubbornly insisting on repeating the Liberal mistakes of 1981 and 1982? Why has he not urged the Bank of Canada to bring down interest rates in this country in order to avert and avoid another recession? Why is he acting like Allan MacEachen?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are doing precisely the opposite of what the Hon. Member is saying we are doing. We are not repeating the same mistakes. The previous mistakes were made in the 1970s when inflation was allowed to get out of control. That led to the problems we ran into in the early 1980s.

The Hon. Member is asking me to ask the Governor of the Bank of Canada to print more money when today we are reminded that inflation is running at high levels. We must ensure we stop inflation from getting out of hand. If we allow it to get out of hand by printing more money, then yes, we will have the same problem we had in 1981 and 1982.

Mr. Nystrom: In 1981, the Minister of Finance, who was then in opposition, said a high interest rate policy would provoke a recession in this country. Now he is nothing more than the clone of Allan MacEachen.

• (1150)

INTEREST RATE INCREASE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago, the provincial premiers, including that friend of the Government of Canada, Robert Bourassa, called for lower interest rates in Canada. And yesterday, the Canadian Catholic bishops asked for exactly the same thing. My question is: Can the Minister now explain to the House why he does not listen to the provincial premiers, why he does not listen to the bishops of Canada, and could he now explain how high he intends to let interest rates rise before acting for the Canadian people?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do listen to the Premiers. I do listen to the Catholic Bishops. I will listen to the advice of anybody who cares to provide me with advice. However, at the end of the road we must decide how to take that advice and how to use that advice. All the advice that is coming to us from those particular quarters can only be interpreted as saying "print more money".

Printing more money will not solve the inflation problem. It will compound the inflation problem. Compounding the inflation problem will lead to higher interest rates. Higher interest rates will lead to the problems that we ran into in 1981 and 1982, and then the high levels of unemployment and the serious recession that we had at that time. That is precisely what we are trying to avoid.

STUDENTS' HUNGER STRIKE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the week ends I want to put a question to the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The Minister can sense, as we all can, that the tensions are rising among our Indian peoples. The Minister has proved that he can be a hard-nosed negotiator.

I want to suggest to the Minister that it is not a crime for native students to protest the policy that, in their view, and in our view, prejudices post-secondary education for the aboriginal peoples. The Minister is not dealing with criminals or terrorists, but he is dealing with young students.

I wonder if the Minister could not make a little more effort to find a formula that will allow him to sit down with those students before this situation escalates even more?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his very serious question.

I want to repeat what the Hon. Member said a few minutes ago in a comment that was made during the answer of one of my colleagues. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said "democracy is boring".

It might be boring, Mr. Speaker, but it works. I believe in democracy. We have a policy that is in place right now. It has been in force since April 1, effective in reality September 1.

As I have been from the outset, I am prepared to sit down with the students, in normal circumstances, and go over the policy. I am also prepared to do that with the Right Hon. Member, if he wishes, with other Members of the House, and with other representatives of the native population. I am prepared to sit down and talk, in normal circumstances, with the students in particular.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER SEEK FORMULA TO BEGIN DISCUSSIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do object, parenthetically, to the Minister taking that remark out of context. It was in response to a remark made by the Minister of Employment who said "I am tired of the NDP". I shouted to her: "Democracy is boring, isn't it, Barbara?" That was the context in which I made the remark.

I believe in democracy as does anybody in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That was a bit of a cheap shot taking that remark out of context.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): All the students want is the Minister to accept the moratorium so that bilateral discussions can begin with them. I find that a reasonable proposition, and I hope the Minister would.

I hope that over the weekend the Minister can find some formula to resolve this matter and begin discussions with the students and with the representatives of the Indian nations.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, perhaps contrary to other Members in the House, particularly those on the other side, if it was a cheap shot, I apologize.

If the Hon. Member really believes in democracy, he will join with me and urge those students to put an end to that hunger strike and then we will discuss.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ENVIRONMENT

ECOLOGICAL INCIDENT IN SHAWINIGAN REGION – GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Marc Robitaille (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, we heard earlier this morning of yet another ecological incident which supposedly happened in the Shawinigan are, at Goodrich?

Can the Minister of the Environment tell us what measures his Department intends to take with regard to this situation?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer on behalf of the Minister. I thank the Hon. Member for Terrebonne who has brought this matter to our attention.

Indeed, an incident was reported to us yesterday by the B.F. Goodrich Company. A harmful substance, which is a regulated substance, has escaped as a result of a faulty check well. It was immediately reported, and the Minister has dispatched someone to the scene to give technical advice and to make an assessment.

No injuries were reported. The gas is dispersed into the atmosphere. The company is required, within 20 days, to give us a full report, which includes any remedial action to make certain that such an accident will never occur again on this particular site.

FISHERIES

SITUATION IN ATLANTIC REGION – GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

Last Wednesday, in response to one question, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans appeared to have said that things with the Atlantic fisheries were not so bad and that the matter would resolve itself.

Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned. Is the Minister telling us that the market forces will eventually succeed to settle the problem? Is he saying that now the fate of the fishermen, the plant workers, and of the communities along the cost is left entirely to the market forces?

Is he, in fact, saying, Mr. Speaker, that we don't need extraordinary measures to settle this matter?

[English]

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by complimenting the Hon. Member for Beauséjour on his designation as the lead spokesperson for fisheries on the part of the Official Opposition.

It is important that all Members of the House understand that there is indeed a serious shortage of fish stocks in Atlantic Canada this year for a variety of reasons. Coupled with depressed prices in the past year in particular this has led to some serious problems in communities in the various regions of Atlantic Canada.

That is why we have taken a number of initiatives to address the question of over-capacity to encourage the more efficient utilization of non-surplus stocks, as I mentioned in the House the other day, such as redfish, pollock, and turbot.

With the assistance of the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration we have put in place a number of initiatives under the Canadian Jobs Strategy directed at finding alternative employment and assisting specific communities that are hard-hit at the present time by this shortfall of fish stock supply.

I should point out to the Hon. Member that only two days ago in New Brunswick my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, together with his provincial colleagues, announced in New Brunswick a $5 million retraining program as one of the measures of assistance that the Government is giving to address this serious issue.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, the measures announced by the Minister are just not good enough.

[English]

PLANT CLOSURES – EFFECT ON FISHERMEN

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Can the Minister tell the House what he is going to do when hundreds of fishermen are idle in port? After fish plants have closed their doors and hundreds of workers are laid–off, what are these people going to do, and where are they going to go?

Surely the Minister is not naive enough to believe that changes to the UIC Act and retraining will bring back prosperity to those communities along the coast? Surely the Minister is not that naive.

• (1200)

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not naive. However, I do believe in the context of the debates in this House this week about the future of the Unemployment Insurance Program that it is important to recognize the need to diversify the economy and the range of opportunities available to the people of Atlantic Canada.

Notwithstanding that fact, I take seriously my responsibility for the conservation of these fish stocks. If we are to see them rebuilt, to restore the abundance which has been the mainstay of the Atlantic Canadian economy, we must all work harder to ensure that these quotas are respected and that in Atlantic Canada where we can help that we assist in the adjustment measures that are necessary in many of these communities.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will close Question Period with one question from the Hon. Member for Mackenzie.

Interparliamentary Delegation Report

FOOD

EXPANDED USE OF IRRADIATION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty). Canada has now expanded the use of food irradiation by changes to regulations in spite of the example of the British experience with this technology which showed that it created more problems to the food system than it solved.

Did the Minister's Department study the British experience with food irradiation? If so, why is Canada persisting in using irradiation after the British tried it and have now prohibited its use?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there is a certain irony in the fact that the hon. gentleman should ask this question when just a few minutes ago there was another question from a member of the Opposition with regard to salmonella poisoning. The only way that we can be sure of 100 per cent eradication of salmonella bacteria is indeed by irradiation.

The Department of National Health and Welfare has indeed taken a look at the international experience. We are also aware of the position taken by groups such as the FAO and the World Health Organization. Our position is that we want to do what we can to ensure that consumers are safe and that they are spared disease caused by food–borne bacteria.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 34(1), I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the report of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, the report of the official parliamentary delegation which represented Canada at the thirty–fourth Commonwealth Parliamentary Association in Australia from September 18 to 25, 1988.

STRIKING COMMITTEE

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the first report of the Striking Committee.

If the House gives its consent, later this day I intend to move concurrence in it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As Hon. Members are aware, when a report of this committee is presented to the House and concurrence of it is sought at the same sitting, it is the custom of the House to have the Clerk at the table read the entire report to the House. Since this report is lengthy and copies of it are available at the table, may we dispense with its reading?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for an address to Her Excellency The Governor General in reply to her speech of the opening of the session.

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, may I at this time convey my sincere congratulations to the Speaker on his convincing re-election as this House's principal officer. To borrow from Gilbert and Sullivan's Pirate King: a first ballot victory,"it is a glorious thing". I look forward to benefiting from his counsel and direction over the coming years. I am certain of the impartiality with which he will discharge his high office.

I understand it to be the custom on these occasions for the new Member to praise the excellence of his riding, presumably best evidenced by the fact that she or he represents it, and the profound wisdom of those who live there, presumably best evidenced in their, occasionally otherwise inexplicable, willingness to elect her or him. If I may, I would prefer simply to describe Edmonton East and some of the elements which make it the unique and challenging place that it is.

Edmonton East suffers no lack of government. First, Edmonton's City Hall, old and projected both, are in Edmonton East. Second, Canada Place, the architecturally striking new federal building, is in Edmonton East. By the way, Canada Place includes the new joint office of the Hon. Members for Vegreville and Yellowhead. This is presumably an attempt to disguise the fact that Edmonton, alone among major Canadian cities of its size, and despite the fact that it is the capital of the most Tory province in Canada, has no direct representative in Cabinet. Regardless, I welcome my hon. colleagues to Edmonton East and hope they enjoy the many fine attractions of the riding.

Third, Edmonton East is the home of the Alberta Legislative Assembly, which I suppose makes me the MP for the provincial Tory Government. This is in some respects a particularly onerous burden but one that I will discharge to the best of my abilities consistent with my own conscience.

Mostly, Edmonton East is the vibrant, throbbing working-class heart of Edmonton. The Gainers Plant, that national symbol of successful worker resistance to the anti-union machinations of a ruthless and intransigent employer, and a former Tory leadership candidate, is in Edmonton East. So is the main Edmonton station for Canada Post and VIA Rail, and a host of smaller manufacturing and commercial firms. As well, a large part of the workforce for the city's east-end chemicals and refineries operations live in Edmonton East.

Edmonton East is also the cultural heart of Edmonton. The city's major theatre, the Citadel, is there, as are several of the smaller innovative theatre companies that continue to make Edmonton the leader in live theatre in Canada. Edmonton East hosts the annual visual arts festival "The Works", and at least part of the Jazz City events. Edmonton's library system, consistently among the most used in all of Canada, is entered in the Centennial Library in Edmonton East. Our three main sporting facilities: baseball's John Ducey Park, the Grey Cup champion Eskimos' Commonwealth Stadium and the Coliseum, home of the present and future Stanley Cup champion Edmonton Oilers, all are in Edmonton East.

Edmonton's inner-city poverty, squalor, unemployment, in some neighbourhoods as high as 30 per cent, broken lives, food banks and other crisis services, these are in Edmonton East, too. Here is where cuts in services and unemployment insurance and hikes in sales taxes are most keenly felt. Here is where the effect of Tory Governments can be seen at its starkest and most terrible.

Finally, Edmonton East is home to a wonderfully varied and vibrant community of communities. The tongues of the earth mingle here in commerce, recreation, worship and family life. Ukrainian, German, Polish, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Greek, Chinese, Vietnamese, Arabic and a multitude of others can be heard frequently on the streets of Edmonton East. All of these heritages, Mr. Speaker, come together to make Edmonton East the place that it is.

From the working class struggles of 66 Street, to the more private but nonetheless real struggles simply to continue waged by the independent businesses on 118th Avenue, to the celebrations in Giovanni Cabota Park, to the average working families trying to keep up a mortgage in Claireview, all of this is Edmonton East. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, it is a singular honour to be granted the job of representing so varied and vibrant a constituency. It is my fervent hope to do just that to the very best of my abilities.

In representing Edmonton East and the people who live there, I will be bringing a new voice into this Chamber, a voice not heard here for decades, a voice not of wealth and power, but of ordinary people and their communities. It is the voice of that other Alberta that does not content itself with Tory shibboleths. It is the voice of that Alberta which is consistently and grievously hurt by this Government's high interest rate policy, and that demands those interest rates be lowered and lowered substantially. It is the voice of that Alberta which knows that passenger rail service is the most efficient and cost-effective means of mass transport that there is, and demands not the dismantling of VIA Rail, but its expansion including the provision of a new high speed link between Edmonton and Calgary.

It is the voice of that Alberta which does not fear the development of energy alternatives as a threat to Alberta's interests, but rather welcomes such development as the only rational course of preparing for the future and fighting the ominous greenhouse effect.

It is the voice of that Alberta that demands new answers to the problems facing Canada's family farms, answers that will facilitate rather than prevent generational transfer of land and that will ensure farmers a reasonable return on their labours.

It is the voice of that Alberta which rejects the doctrine of international fear and hatred and that seeks to extend the hand of friendship to all those on our planet willing to work with us in the creation of a new and better world, while holding out the rod of justice to those who would oppress and deny justice to others.

It is the voice of that Alberta that demands justice, fairness and safety in the workplace. That demands justice for our native people who for too long have been treated as an inconvenience at best and as peoples to be eliminated at worst. It is the voice of that Alberta which demands a thorough overhaul of our entire taxation system so that the concept of ability to pay is once again central, so that profitable corporations pay at least some tax, so that middle and low-income Canadians do not continue to be squeezed again and again by a government terrified of doing anything to distress its major corporate backers.

I will be bringing individual voices to this House as well, Mr. Speaker. I will bring into this Chamber voices of single mothers trying to raise a family and hold a job. I will repeat the cry of the elderly couple trapped, terrified and imprisoned in their home because the streets are not safe. I will throw out the angry snarl of the young person left to grow up without meaning or purpose. I will try to speak here with all these voices. But most of all, Mr. Speaker, I will speak with the collective, growing, ever louder, ever more purposeful, ever stronger voice of that large majority of people in Edmonton East who work for a living, who seek new and better truths and who will build a new and better Canada.

The Throne Speech, Mr. Speaker, where it is not pious wish or half-truth is yesterday's news and tomorrow's cast-off. The people of Edmonton East know better. They can see more clearly and farther. They can hear clearer tones struggling to break through the white noise of such chatter. They will not stand still. They will work together. They will build together.

A century ago, Mr. Speaker, an English Victorian poet by the name of John Addington Symonds wrote a poem about what we could be, about the world we could build. It is called These Things Shall Be, and it reads in part, "These things shall be: a loftier race than ever the world hath known shall rise, with the flame of freedom in its soul and the light and knowledge in its eyes. Nation with nation, land with land, unarmed shall live as comrades, free. In every brain and heart shall throb the pulse of one humanity. New arts shall rise of loftier mould and mightier music thrill the skies, and every life shall be a song when all the earth is paradise".

A utopian impossibility? Of course, but I would rather devote my life to striving after such a beautiful, mighty goal, however impossible, than live for five seconds in inert contentment with the gray chaos and inhuman imperatives of the market-place.

And you know what, Mr. Speaker? I do believe the electors of Edmonton East are similarly inclined. Thank you very much.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Question or comments? The Hon. Member for Lethbridge (Mr. Thacker).

Mr. Blaine Thacker (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I compliment my friend opposite for the many things he said, but I think the underlying thing that he was trying to get across to the House is that he is going to respond to the people. We often hear that from the NDP, that they are going to respond to the people. That people are more important than us, and I agree with that. Let me ask him this question: We know from polls going back for dozens of years that well over 80 per cent of the people believe in capital punishment for first degree convicted murderers. Is my friend opposite going to respond to the people on that, or is he going to impose the NDP ideology on the people?

Mr. Harvey: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. No, it is not my intention to impose NDP ideology on anybody,just as I assume it was not the intent of the Government to impose Conservative ideology when it allowed for a free vote in this House which, with the support of many Conservatives, rejected capital punishment.

An Hon. Member: What will you do for the people in your riding?

Mr. Harvey: What I will do for the people is argue in this House that the social conditions that give rise to the want, deprivation, and death from the inside out that creates murderers be addressed, rather than murdering murderers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. Questions and comments.

Mr. Waddell: Yes, I would like to make a comment and ask my friend a question. I was most impressed, as I am sure most of the Members of this House were, when the Member said that he would be a voice not for wealth and power, but for working people in this House, and that would be a pleasant change from the previous Conservative Members from Alberta. We are glad we have a New Democrat representing Alberta, another voice from Alberta, and an articulate voice with passion. I congratulate him for his speech.

There is only one thing that I disagree with. When he predicted that the Oilers would win the Stanley Cup, I thought the Canucks would win the Stanley Cup who are based in Vancouver East, my old riding area. Perhaps I can make a bet with the Hon. Member. I would expect odds of course on that.

• (1220)

He raised the interesting point of regional theatre being based in Edmonton. As culture critic for my Party, I would like to know more about it. We are sometimes asked to give money to central theatre and institutions but I understand that regional institutions and theatre are growing rapidly.

Would he expand on the subject of theatre in East Edmonton, which is a working class area in the West, far from the central region where governments pour most of their money.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, right now there are a half dozen theatre companies in Edmonton, not counting the internationally successful Fringe Theatre event that occurs annually in the Strathcona district of Edmonton. Of those half a dozen companies, I believe four are located in Edmonton East. Much of their work is presented in the Centennial Library Theatre and in a smaller theatre space just west of the Coliseum.

All of them devote a substantial amount of their time and effort to the production of new Canadian, often Albertan and occasionally Edmontonian, plays. All of them can be seen to be theatre with a definite regional focus in that they are all drawn from that community and therefore must reflect the community of Edmonton, as it is their experience.

Many of those plays are locally generated and of consistently high quality. That is why I can say in the House, and say without fear of contradiction, that Edmonton does lead the country in production of live theatre. I believe most people would acknowledge that.

Let me return briefly to the matter of the Stanley Cup. I understand the joy the Hon. Member must feel at this time: that he may anticipate at least some Stanley Cup action in his town after years of grievous disappointment.

However, I regret to inform the Member that it is, to be charitable, unlikely that this joy will continue much past the next series of play-offs. I apologize for being the bearer of these unfortunate tidings, but I remain unshakeably convinced that the Stanley Cup will continue to reside in Edmonton.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Speaker may interject, I think it will reside in Montreal. This year it will not reside in Toronto.

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate on the Speech from the Throne in my new capacity as Minister of State for Housing. You and other Members of the House may find it somewhat strange, perhaps even astounding that I would want to participate in a debate on a Speech from the Throne when the House will note that there was not a mention of housing in the Speech.

Bearing all of that in mind, and bearing in mind that the lack of a mention of housing in the Speech from the Throne may indicate a lack of government commitment, a lack of government concern or a lack of prioritiy for housing, I must point out that it overlooks the fact that on January 30 of this year, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appointed for the first time in this country a Minister of State for Housing who would be solely responsible for housing, with no other responsibilities.

As the House will know, there have been Ministers of Public Works who are also responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which is the housing arm of the federal Government. We have had before Ministers of State for Urban Affairs. The Mem ber for Papineau—Saint-Michel (Mr. Ouellet), who was in the House until a moment ago, was one of those Ministers. We have had a Minister for International Trade responsible as well for housing. However, until now, there has never been a federal Minister responsible for nothing but housing. I hope that sends a message to the Opposition and the people of Canada, because I know it sends a message to me personally and it sends a message to all of the employees of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the federal housing authority.

The message is that for the first time they have their own Minister, someone responsible for nothing but housing. These people are extremely dedicated to delivering housing for Canadians, to putting a roof over the heads of Canadians. I sense they feel an special glow as a result of the fact that they now have a Minister responsible for housing federally. They are also people who have a deep commitment to housing and making sure that housing in Canada, at the federal level, is delivered in a businesslike manner but at the same time a compassionate manner. They are people who care deeply about making sure there is a roof over every Canadian's head. I think we have sent a message to the employees of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation by this appointment.

It may be understandable as well that some may feel that the appointment of a Minister solely and wholly responsible for housing has been weakened somewhat by the fact that there was no mention in the Speech from the Throne of the issue of housing.

Again, I point out to you that we have been here for other Throne Speeches and have seen some things mentioned that have not proceeded and some things not mentioned that have proceeded.

Of course, back in the last Parliament, in the Speech from the Throne of 1986, the House will recall that there was no mention whatsoever of housing. In the same Speech from the Throne there was a mention of the fact that legislation would be proceeded with and passed on the subject of pornography. In fact, there was action on housing, with the Downsview Airport property being released last September, specifically for the purpose of housing. As far as pornography legislation is concerned, that has still yet to surface and pass into law.

While Speeches from the Throne may be extremely significant, they are certainly not the be-all and end-all of Government policy and the be-all and end-all of government commitment. Having said that, I think it is important for you and all Members of the House to know that I personally place a very major priority in the area of housing in this country, at the federal level. In doing the job and trying to emphasize housing, trying to place that priority, I need the help of you, Members of the House, and that of all Canadians.

I was disappointed to learn that in a poll conducted for CMHC by Decima Research last August, only 22 per cent of Canadians as a whole placed a priority on housing in this country. That is very strange.

In my community of Metropolitan Toronto, the priority was much higher. It was closer to 50 per cent. When one considers that housing is such an important part of the life of all Canadians, the fact that only 22 per cent of Canadians placed this as a major priority is somewhat disturbing to me.

Part of my appeal to you as Members of the House and Canadians is to let us all start to give more priority to the issue of housing. That is the only way we will get action, whether it be at the federal level, provincial level, or municipal level. We need to make sure that all Canadians put that priority where it properly belongs.

When I was first appointed to this job I received a letter from a good friend of mine, a retired professor from the University of Toronto who has had vast experience in the housing area. His name is Dr. Albert Rose. Some know Dr. Rose as the father of the Regent Park Housing Project in Toronto, one of the first geared-to-income housing projects in this country.

Doctor Rose congratulated me on my appointment. He said "Welcome to Canada's permanent housing crisis". That indicates what my role is all about and what the problem is with respect to housing. It is not a flash-in-the-pan problem. It is not a problem of affordability in Metropolitan Toronto or Vancouver. Canada has many problems: The high cost of housing; high interest rates which make it difficult for people to make mortgage payments; low vacancy rates which mean there are no alternatives when tenants are required to move; the homeless; poverty; rehabilitating existing housing; housing for our native people on reserve, off reserve or in our urban centres. There are a vast variety of problems in housing in this country, but they differ widely.

One common thread weaves throughout our problems, and that is the notion of affordability. Traditionally, we were able to find affordability in Canada. People should not pay more than 30 per cent of their income to pay for their housing. The 1981 census indicated that 375,000 families in this country spent 50 per cent or more of their income on housing. Half of those families were young families with children. That identifies why, when we see the poverty line statistics and the problem with food banks, all of these are impacted upon by housing affordability. This is the root of many social problems we have.

How do we solve these problems? All levels of government play a role in housing. Municipal Governments play a role through their zoning by-laws and by controlling densities. They have an impact on the cost of housing and the supply of land available for housing. Provincial Governments play a role through rent control, the rent review process, their over-all planning process and as a partner with the federal Government in providing rent-geared-to-income housing. The federal Government plays a role in providing insurance for mortgages. Some people say this is an inhibitor to affordability. People could not get a mortgage if that insurance did not exist. Under the National Housing Act, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has provided that insurance program and has helped to house thousands and perhaps millions of Canadians. It is interesting to note that 34 per cent of all households in Canada have mortgage insurance through Canada and Mortgage Housing Corporation.

Another role the federal Government has played and continues to play is through the provision of rent-geared-to-income housing or social housing, housing for seniors, families, singles, the disabled, people who cannot afford to pay the full market rents. Over the years, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the federal Government have played a major role. They provide 600,000 housing units geared-to-income from one end of the country to the other. That is being increased and added to each year to the extent of about 20,000 new units. The federal Government has a commitment of $1.6 billion that it spends on providing for rent-geared-to-income housing across the country every year. It is not a commitment you make one year and forget about the next. When you provide a rent-geared-to-income housing unit, it means you must go on and on. There are things the federal Government has done and others that it must do. That brings me to my role in the housing picture.

In viewing my role, I must bear in mind the fiscal framework in which the Government finds itself today. I cannot go out and say there is a pot of money there that I can spend so we can provide more affordable housing for Canadians. I must realistically look at how I can provide more housing with the resources I have available, bearing in mind the horrible fiscal deficit and the fact we spend 31 cents of every dollar to pay interest on the national debt, not providing housing for people.

Hopefully, we can provide more surplus federal Government land geared specifically to providing affordable housing. We have released the lands at Downsview. We are identifying other lands. We are in the process of moving forward with a program to make surplus land available for housing in major centres of concern like Toronto, Vancouver, and Montreal.

We are looking at ways to help first-time home buyers to reducing downpayments on mortgages. We are considering the possibility of using registered retirement savings plans and registered pension plans as a vehicle to aid first-time home buyers. We hope to co-operate closely with all levels of government in an effort to maximize the resources available to us.

Canadians may never solve what Doctor Rose refers to as "Canada's permanent housing crisis"; but it is certainly the duty of all Members of this House to do everything in our power to try. I want to make a commitment to you, Mr. Speaker, and to Members of this House that as long as I am the Minister of State for Housing in this country, I intend to do just that.

Mrs. Catterall: I am pleased to hear the Minister of State speaking on this issue. I bring a perspective to the debate because of having chaired the City of Ottawa non-profit housing corporation executive for a number of years.

I paid particular attention to the Minister's comments on fiscal framework and the percentage of all revenues going to pay for the debt. I believe there is reason to question that figure. I will come back to that in a specific question.

I am concerned about the comments with respect to public pressure. I hope we see policies from the Government based on things other than public pressure, such as the needs the Minister described and the importance of acting on those needs.

The Minister may or may not be aware that the Government over its last mandate reduced the amount of federal dollars going into housing. That has placed considerable pressure on the ability of non-profit organizations, co-ops and municipal corporations to provide housing for their communities.

Something he did not mention is that job generation is one of the prime benefits of investment in housing programs and that housing construction is the highest generator of jobs per dollar invested. If we want to reduce the deficit it would be extremely interesting to see what would be accomplished by having 1 per cent more employment and 1 per cent less unemployment with that 1 per cent paying taxes, not drawing on social benefits, and creating jobs for other Canadians by the purchase of required goods and services.

The land disposal question is the one that interests me most. I wonder if the Minister of State for Housing (Mr. Redway) is aware that in the last Parliament 150 acres of public land, formerly belonging to the Experimental Farm in Ottawa West, were sold on the private market. I am sure the Minister is aware that no conditions were attached to that sale, either that it be housing construction, or that it be affordable housing.

Is the Minister aware that an additional 10 acres in the immediate vicinity is currently on the market, and does he know whether conditions have been attached to that sale with respect to the affordability of housing, or indeed for the provision of housing at all?

Is the policy of the Government now to direct DPW that, in all land or property sales, housing should be a condition of the sale, where appropriate? I doubt very much that that is the case. I wonder why not and when the Minister plans to change that. In relation to that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry that I must interrupt the Hon. Member. There is only five minutes and the Hon. Member has already taken more than three minutes, and I would like to give some time to the Minister to reply.

Mrs. Catterall: The background is so important to the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I apologize. For the two days remaining in the Throne Speech there is only five minutes allowed.

Mr. Redway: Within her comments and questions the Hon. Member has asked a variety of questions. Obviously, I would like to address as many as I can. On the subject of whether or not funds in the budget for housing have been reduced, if the Hon. Member would carefully examine the Budgets of the federal Government over the period of time in which the present Government has been in office, she will find that that budget has increased each and every year.

It may be that it has become more difficult, even with those increases, to produce as many housing units as the City of Ottawa Housing Corporation, or other similar corporations would like to do, and I certainly sympathize with that concern. If the Hon. Member examines the Budget carefully, I am sure she will find that funds have been increasing and have certainly not been reduced in any way.

With respect to the question of housing construction being a job generator, there is no question that the Hon. Member is 100 per cent correct that it is one of the largest generators of jobs in the country, perhaps together with the restaurant industry. In any event, it certainly is a big generator of jobs. Over the last four and a half years, the Government has been trying very hard to bring down unemployment, put people back to work and get them paying taxes to help bring down the deficit. In fact, the Government has been extremely successful at that.

As the Hon. Member is aware, over the last four years Canada has led the western world in job creation, and in increasing its Gross National Product in each and every one of those years. We have been very successful, and I am sure the Hon. Member will applaud the efforts of the Government in that respect.

The question of land disposal does present a true problem. As the Hon. Member is aware, at the present time the policy of the Government, which was brought into effect in 1985, was that surplus government lands would be disposed of at market value.

The reason for that was that there were concerns about the manner in which former Liberal Governments had been disposing of lands, or hanging on to lands that were surplus. As a result, the Government introduced that policy at that time.

The whole question of disposal of lands and whether housing is an appropriate use is one of the areas in which I see myself playing a role. If the Hon. Member is aware of lands from the federal inventory that seem to be on the market or are about to approach the market that we do not have some handle on, I hope she will bring them· to my attention. It is certainly my intention to do the best to make sure that, where needed—and it is not in every part of this country that surplus government land is needed for housing—we will do our very best to ensure that it is made available for badly needed housing.

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, first of all, of course, I would like to take the opportunity to thank the voters of Gatineau—La Lièvre for the confidence and the honour that they have given me to represent them here in the House of commons. They and I would like to wish the Chair health and above all success as a fair and effective arbiter at all times, in spite of difficulties.

[English]

The constituency that I have the honour to represent witnessed, like all other areas of this great and unique land, the rise of a nation diverse in culture and language and dedicated to the concept that this is a country of opportunity and democracy, and equitable to all citizens.

One we obviously take for granted, while the others are at least debatable. A Speech from the Throne should always reflect these primary elements in our society. To what degree they are adhered to is a matter of ideology, or a point of view, if one prefers, but nevertheless a difference of approach.

Throughout our history many a debate has centered around these basic but treasured elements that constitute a truly democratic people. Our growth, notwithstanding a relatively small population and a vast land stretching from sea to sea, has been the more remarkable.

Prior to the First World War we were basically an agricultural society. After the First World War we became basically an industrial society. Since the Second World War we are in the age of information and high technology. We have become the creators, manipulators, and distributors of information with constant innovation necessary whereby scientific research and development are essential or we risk becoming a third-rate nation.

Has the Government lived up to expectations? I doubt it.

In the last four years, the Government, just before the 1988 election, felt it needed the assistance of the business community, big corporations that used exorbi tant amounts of money in the media to help it get the re-elected.

One may wonder why in 1984 free trade was not an issue at all. I could quote the man who is now Minister of Finance and even the Minister of External Affairs. But in barely two years, this Government came up with an option that the people had not consented to in 1984.

On the eve of the 1988 election, it was observed that the big interests in this country needed the present Government to help them protect their privileges and the interests that depended on them.

Unfortunately, the middle class has to pick up the pieces—I refer to the disadvantages that will arise from this agreement for years to come.

[English]

I would like to bring to our attention the fact that we have never had an equitable tax system, and it has become worse over the years. It is probably the most fundamental characteristic of a democracy. Yet the present Government promised to bring in reform. After raising taxes in 1984 we began to hear about reform. I believe that this will require an incredible amount of political will when one realizes that the financial elite of this country have access to the levers of political power more than the middle class.

Does the present Government have the freedom to come up with a true and equitable reform for our tax system? Is the middle class in this country so organized as to protect its interest, to promote and insist that an equitable reform is necessary and should take place? They are being manipulated by financial interest, the financial elite of this country. I think the attention has to be drawn to the fact that the middle class would have to realize this threat against its interest. The business community in this country has never really had to face adverse conditions, when you consider the great benefits in the billions of dollars that they have access to through the federal Government. Yet they have the nerve to point the finger to social programs. We saw their timely questioning of the social programs, naturally after the election, and very shortly thereafter. This continued lack of leadership by the Government to address the problem will lead this country to social unrest, increased poverty, and visible class divisions that are incompatible with this country.

When we consider these obstacles, we have to ask the question, where is the opportunity? What opportunity is there for four and a half million people who live below the poverty line, when you consider that in the 1.2 million jobs created in the last four years, nearly half are slightly above the minimum wage?

[Translation]

Need I also tell you that studies, masses of statistics, show that women on the labour market do not earn as much as men? Is this also a lack of opportunity for women to advance in the working world? I claim that a Speech from the Throne should touch on opportunity, democracy and the freedom to pursue one's own interests; basically, we want every citizen in our country to be treated fairly. And as I said in English, the taxation system is an extremely important factor in our democracy and it must at all times be fair for all our citizens.

[English]

Opportunity is the driving force of a prosperous and contented people. But I feel it is narrowing visibly, and the results are affecting the social fabric of our society. We must remember that when we have growing poverty, and especially growing inequality in our tax system, we are going to have growing unrest. The growing unrest that we knew in the 1960s will seem quite insignificant when we consider that people will rise from all parts of this country and point the finger that they have been treated in a fashion that is inequitable, that the tax system has been geared to the advantage of the financial elite.

I am sure that is not the first time it has been said here in the House, but the fact remains that this margin is growing, and we must address the problem as soon as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we heard in this House a number of speeches stressing the fact that we have a tax system that is unfair, especially to the middle income group. As we know, people in the middle-income group are quite busy earning their daily living. Unlike large corporations, they have no lawyers or other professionals to look after their interests on a daily basis and can make representations to government decision-makers in order to ensure that their interests are always protected or to find loopholes in our tax system. We should not expect that the people who are faced with higher taxes will always remain silent because they are the so-called "silent majority". Sooner or later, those people will rise up, and at that point there will be something akin to a revolution of the middle-class, who will demand explanations from the Government.

Looking at the deficit that is increasing yearly, what leeway will the Central Government have to impose new ones, and especially to tell middle income people: we are going to alleviate your tax burden. We will not be able to do so, and therein lies the danger.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, there are three essential items in our society: opportunity, democracy, which means the freedom to further one's interest, and of course fairness. Those three items should never be lost sight of.

There is another very important item that was not mentioned in the Throne Speech—it is the whole issue of education, the gaps in our education system, the need for reforms and for perhaps more investment into education.

Doubtless an efficient and forward looking education system opens up new opportunities. I remember that a few weeks after the French President Mr. Mitterand was re-elected, the following question was asked of him: In your second seven-year term, what is in your view, the most important item for France? And his answer was that during his second term his only goal, the only thing he would like to achieve was an efficient reform of the education system that would bring France back, well prepared, into the 20th century, and were that goal to be reached, France would be at the top of the industrialized nations.

Of course, I was struck by that comment, and the more I think of it, indeed the best tool we can give our people is to see to it that we have the resources needed to make education in Canada accessible to all, as this is the best way to achieve a fair society and at the same time open up new opportunities for our fellow Canadians, something that will cause the people to be satisfied not only with their Government but its achievements concerning both the nation and the individuals.

M. Boudria: First, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate my colleague the Hon. Member for Gatineau—La Lièvre (Mr. Assad) for his election. As neighbours we share a common boundary, and he happens to live just a few kilometres from my home. I am very pleased to see him as Liberal Member representing that riding. I must admit it is quite a change from the previous representation in that riding, quite a change for the better, of course. Quite an improvement over the Conservative Party Member who used to sit for the riding. The former Conservative Member was not quite as competent as my colleague, and again I extend my congratulations to him.

Like me, my colleague from Gatineau—La Lièvre (Mr. Assad) represents a riding located very close to the national capital. I am sure my colleague knows that the unemployment rate in the national capital region is very low, I mean on the Ottawa side, of course, something like 5.7 per cent.

• (1300)

Outside the City of Ottawa and the neighbouring region of Ottawa-Carleton, however, at least on the Ontario side, the unemployment rate is much higher, so much so that in Hawkesbury in my riding, for example, the unemployment rate now stands at 13 per cent as compared with 14 per cent last month. Our constituents are severely affected by unemployment. What I want to point out to my colleague is the fact that in recent days the Government imposed even stricter restrictions on unemployment insurance, the idea being that in low unemployment regions the thing to do is to tighten up the screw a bit, if I may put it that way, because people really do not need as many benefits. True though it might be in low unemployment regions, Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to admit that. It is certainly not the case in Hawkesbury in my riding or in Cornwall or elsewhere in rural areas where unemployment is rampant. I should like to ask my colleague whether the situation is the same in his riding where rural unemployment is already quite high, and whether he agrees with me that the new measures imposed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall)—henceforth, more weeks of contributions to be eligible for benefits which in turn will be payable over a shorter time—are totally unfair to Canadians living in rural communities, particu larly those in the vicinity of urban areas, because the statistics as I have just described them are erroneous?

Mr. Assad: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his kind words.

The cuts in unemployment insurance benefits are going to affect rural areas. Previously, I had the privilege of representing a rural riding in the provincial government, and every time the unemployment rate went up, the impact was greatest on rural ridings. The cuts that were announced will affect these people first of all.

I would also like to draw the attention of the Hon. Member to a study on unemployment and unemployment insurance benefits, made several years ago by the Fraser Institute in western Canada. The study showed that in urban areas where the unemployment rate was much lower, people were less dependent on unemployment insurance. The study found that in urban centres, unemployment insurance recipients were people who earned $22,000 annually, compared with people in rural areas who earned barely more than the minimum wage. This means that the proposed measures tend to ignore the rural areas that are most severely affected. I think that as time goes by, the Minister responsible will realize that rural areas will be affected far more severely than urban centres, and that adjustments will be necessary.

[English]

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to represent the people of Scarborough Centre in this Chamber. I am truly grateful for the trust and confidence they have shown in me. I am privileged to continue to represent the concerns of the people of Scarborough Centre in the nation's Parliament. It is here in Parliament that ideas, principles and policies are debated. But Parliament without democracy is meaningless and democracy without freedom is useless. Democracy and freedom are not just concepts or words with philosophical meaning, they are living principles that define a society and its heritage.

For over 200 years Canada has shaped, moulded and defended our own heritage of democracy. It is a heritage unlike any other in the world. History has given us a sense of independent freedom and a willingness to challenge new risks. From the native nations who first inhabited this land, to the explorers, to the fur traders, to the homesteaders and the pioneers who came later, Canadians have gained a very special spirit of enterprise and freedom.

History has also given Canadians an appreciation that hard work is rewarded and that taking risks brings new opportunities. Indeed, throughout the 1800s and the 1900s, our founders spent over 100 years working to build a nation that was only completed 40 years ago when Newfoundland voted to join Confederation.

The forces and circumstances that have shaped this country have made Canadians optimistic about their future. History has prepared us for the challenges of the next century. The Throne Speech is the reflection of that spirit. Because the Throne Speech and the policies which flow from it are more than a program for action; they are a confirmation of who we are as a people.

Our history as traders and entrepreneurs has made us a competitive people eager to compete with the nations of the world, and with the United States. Indeed, business people in my riding of Scarborough Centre are already pursuing new opportunities under free trade.

I was pleased to hear that the Canadian Thermos Products Company has announced that it will be closing its plant in the United States and creating 60 new jobs in Scarborough Centre. All the North American market for thermos products will be serviced from Scarborough. CDA Industries, the largest display advertising company in Canada, will soon be opening a new office in Atlanta to expand its markets. The jobs will be in Scarborough. The company will be selling through its Atlanta office. The Warner Lambert and Howden Group have also announced expansion plans because of free trade.

History has not only given us a sense of independent enterprise, it has also given us respect for the land itself. The first Canadians worked with the resources they had to create a sustainable existence. Today, we are again recognizing that humankind and nature exist in partnership. Canadians realize that we are not creators but users and protectors of a very precious natural heritage.

Some 40 years ago, during the Twenty-Third Parliament, a Member of Parliament from Northumberland rose to participate in the Throne Speech debate. He urged: "Today's crisis calls for an immediate uprising of the idea of conservation and development". That Member was my father, Major R. Earle Drope. Permit me to continue a 40-year family tradition by reiterating his call today.

The need to strengthen the partnership between conservation and development is a strong theme in the Speech from the Throne. The Environmental Partners Fund was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. It will help community organizations involve more people in conservation. This program, together with the Environmental Protection Act, the new National Parks Act, the National Acid Rain Reduction Program, and the new Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement with the United States, reflects our appreciation of the natural treasure that we share as Canadians.

The people of Scarborough Centre share that appreciation. For several years now I have been honoured to work with thousands of volunteers in helping to save the Rouge River Valley system as a park. The Rouge River Valley is one vast remaining wilderness area in Metro Toronto containing unique archaeological ruins. Even though the land is owned by the Province of Ontario, our Government understands the natural significance of the area. That is why our Government has offered $10 million to preserve the Rouge River Valley system. That is also why the federal Minister of the Environment has accepted our invitation to tour the Valley this Sunday and see its beauty firsthand. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the province has not yet accepted our offer. In fact, they are still considering it as a potential dump site or route for a major freeway.

Just as my father called on this Chamber to further the cause of conservation and development, I now call on this Chamber and the province to work together to conserve this precious valley for future generations. Canadians deserve nothing less.

The Throne Speech, Mr. Speaker, challenged the free enterprise spirit of Canadians and honoured their respect for our quality of life. But the Throne Speech also issued a challenge to us as legislators. Canadians are eager to take up the challenge of free trade, and the Throne Speech has called on us to help tackle this country's largest economic threat, the national debt. Our success in providing nearly 1.5 million new job opportunities proves that our economic system can succeed if given a chance. Reducing the debt will give it that chance. The largest expenditure this Government will make in 1989 will not be old age security, Medicare, national defence or any other federal program. The largest expenditure our Government will make will be the interest payments on the national debt. Without the burden of the debt, our Government would have a balanced budget today.

Last year, the federal Budget included $33 billion just to pay the interest on the debt. Just think of the other programs we could finance. Still the debt keeps growing larger every year, every day and every hour. In fact in the 20 minutes I have to make this speech today, the debt will have been increased by $1 million. That is just how fast this debt is escalating.

The Throne Speech stated very clearly our commitment to tackle this country's finances. Our actions over the past four years have resulted in a $10 billion reduction in the annual deficit. We must continue to reduce the deficit by reducing the size of the Public Service, selling off Crown corporations that no longer serve a public purpose and reduce over-all spending. There is no other option, Mr. Speaker, if Canadians are to have the economic foundations they need to continue to prosper.

One hundred and twenty-two years of Confederation and centuries of history have given Canadians a unique heritage of democracy and freedom. That heritage is honoured by every person who shares the responsibility of our citizenship. As someone who was brought up in rural Canada, I am very aware that while Canadians share a heritage of independent freedom, we also have a very special ability to work together. Our history is full of examples of families and communities joining together to meet a special need. Forty years ago in the small village of Harwood, where I was born in Northumberland County, the community joined together to build a community hall which my parents spearheaded. Next week I have the honour to go back to that community hall to make a speech.

Today in Scarborough Centre, men and women volunteers visit seniors' homes throughout the riding to perform numerous services. Included is the Wexford Senior Citizens residence in Scarborough where my mother lives. Volunteers arrange events, hold activities and make seniors' lives more pleasurable and more fulfilled.

In concluding this debate on the Speech from the Throne in the 34th Parliament, the second session, let us be mindful of the words of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker in his famous Bill of Rights when he said, "I am a Canadian, a free Canadian, free to speak without fear, free to worship God in my way, free to stand for what I think right, free to oppose what I believe wrong, free to choose those who shall govern my country. This heritage of freedom I pledge to uphold for myself and all mankind".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? The Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duhamel).

Mr. Duhamel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened attentively to the comments from the Hon. Member, and I just have a few remarks which I will perhaps culminate with a question.

Clearly the creation of jobs is something that all Parties endorse. It is not simply, and I say this kindly, one particular Party or the Government that is committed to that. I think the question we have to raise is what kinds of jobs are created with what kinds of opportunities for the future.

Likewise, the reduction of the deficit; I do not hear anyone here saying that the deficit should not be reduced, but I do hear a lot of people asking: How will it be reduced? That is a fundamental question that Canadians are raising today. A little caution on the figure of a $10 billion reduction of the deficit. If my memory serves me correctly, it was roughly $38.2 billion in 1984-85. That means it would have to be about $28 billion today. My information is that this is not so. I would just like to remind everyone here that 1984-85 had two different Parties in office. In fact, the current Government was in office for half a year.

What bothers me when I listen to speeches by Hon. Members on the Government side in this debate on the Throne Speech is that there were very few comments on the importance of research and development, additional funding for colleges and universities and additional aid for literacy training.

I think there is a flagrant contradiction here. The Government often says it is very important to fund these programs so that we will be able to compete in international markets. If we realize that Canada is funding research and development up to only 50 per cent of what is being done in the United States, Japan or Sweden, I think there is a contradiction here.

[English]

The capping of the educational funds for education of native students is another flagrant contradiction. These are people who are struggling for a better life. The Government says that educational research and development are important, but there is a gap. Does the Hon. Member not believe that more emphasis and commitment should have been placed in the Throne Speech to research and development, to literacy and to financing of colleges and universities?

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member and thank him for directing the question to me.

First, let me comment on his remarks about employment. Indeed, the unemployment figures have decreased rather dramatically. Youth employment is something on which this Government has really concentrated. When we look at the statistics, we see that over 100,000 young people under age 25 own their own businesses. It is truly remarkable that the young people of Canada have decided that they want to own their own business and get into the free enterprise system to make it work. I am delighted that has happened.

Second, an emphasis has been put on training. In our community college, Scarborough Centennial College, we put a great deal of emphasis on training for real jobs. Let me give a particular example of a training program there. One of the problems facing our country is child care. In order to provide more spaces for child care, the Government financed a training program through Centennial College to provide training to approximately 25 students per class for persons setting up their own child care centres in their homes and instruction on how to start one's own business. They did not see themselves as babysitters, they saw themselves as providing a service through a business in the community. These are training programs that actually provide jobs.

In terms of the Budget, I think it is recognized throughout the House, particularly I hope at that end of the House, how important it is to reduce the deficit. In the past, over 80 per cent of the reduction of the deficit has been by the reduction of expenditures and 20 per cent has been through the increase of taxes. I believe the wise choices and wisdom of our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who will bring in his Budget in the next couple of weeks, will be truly remarkable. I am sure the Member will be very pleased with the results.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, today I want to devote all of my remarks to one sentence in the Throne Speech Debate. I want to begin by reading that sentence:

> Finally, as my Government renews its commitment to national unity, it believes the ratification of the Meech Lake Accord is indispensable to the further evolution of the Canadian Constitution.

I found that a rather weak statement compared with the other priorities. There is no commitment to call meetings, no commitment to proceed, no commitment to make any effort. There was simply a statement that the Government believes something.

I did some checking and learned, to my surprise, that neither in the Langevin Block nor in the Bunker in Quebec City is there any plan or program to try to get the Meech Lake Accord constitutionalized. In 1980 and 1981, and in early 1982, emissaries were travelling from Quebec City across the country to meet with provincial Governments, or emissaries from the Langevin Block were travelling across the country trying to achieve the same result. I wondered why there was this appearance of the Government losing heart.

It occurred to me that there is a very good reason for that. It is that whether Meech Lake has been a success in the country or not, whether or not it is constitutionalized, in those two capitals, this city and Quebec City, Meech Lake is already a big winner. It is a big winner whether it lives or dies, and neither Government has any energy to expend in an effort to try and see it in the Constitution, as my Party believes it should be, amended and improved, as the nation is demanding that it be.

Why do I say it is a big winner? It is already a big winner for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Either it will go through or it will not. If it does go through, the great conciliator of Canada, who was a successful negotiator in the private sector, will be able to demonstrate that he has the right stuff of Government, that the extraordinary piece of puffery to which he constantly refers about making the country whole again, about bringing Quebec in, is some kind of reality and he will join the big league of constitution makers along with Pierre Trudeau.

On the other hand, if the Meech Lake Accord does not go through, he has an obvious scapegoat and he has already begun defining and building the scapegoat. The scapegoat is that group that his American friends refer to as the "L word", the Liberals. Surely he will not be able to include the Leader of the Opposition in the scapegoat, although he did so during the election campaign and repented on his first few days back in Parliament. The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) has gone to the limit to defend the Meech Lake Accord and support it, to try to see to its constitutionalization. However, there are other Liberals around the country, whose names the Prime Minister is already collecting on some list, to be the villains along with others who oppose the Meech Lake Accord, to blame as the reason why it did not go through. As far as the Prime Minister is concerned, candour and consistency are not his strong points.

This approach I have taken to understanding the Meech Lake Accord applies equally to the view from Québec City. Either the deal will go through or it will not, as I have said. If it goes through, Mr. Bourassa will have proof that a federalist Government of a province can achieve more than a separatist Government; that he was able, when René Lévesque was not, to go through this constitutional stage and successfully negotiate the five point agenda which he brought forward to persuade the country that these five points were important and were adopted by the nation. I would also say that if the Meech Lake Accord goes through, in some ways that I will explain later, Québec would be more comfortable within Canada.

On the other hand, if the Accord does not go through—and from what I have learned, Mr. Bourassa is making no effort to see that it does go through—he, like the Prime Minister, has a ready scapegoat. His scapegoat is one that has been available to some Québecers for generations, for decades. That is, the rest of Canada. They can look to the rest of Canada and I regret to say that they will not have difficulty finding some statements, like those made at the hearings being held in Manitoba and elsewhere, to the effect that French is un-Canadian, that there should be no initiatives taken or efforts made to promote the use of French in the country. There are statements like that and I know my friend will recognize that they are not being made by Liberals, as I gather they are not being made by federal Conservatives. But they exist and Mr. Bourassa will be able to refer to them to explain why the Constitution went down.

There are Canadians providing the text for him to the effect that the fundamental contract and understanding by which French and English were to be preserved, was the basis for the establishment of Canada and must be the basis for its continuation. Mr. Bourassa will be able to beat the jungle drum about the need for stronger government in the Province of Québec, the need for stronger measures like Bill 178, a Bill which, by its own admission and in its terms, violates the rights of English speakers within the Province of Québec and violates the Québec Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It violates the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and I think we will soon see that it violates as well the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Fortunately, the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights has no notwithstanding clause. We may reach a point sometime soon at which the Government of Québec must deal with that. But the point I wish to make now is that a failed Meech Lake is not without some convenience to Québec City and not without some convenience to the Prime Minister.

As our Party's spokesman for Meech Lake over the past four years, I can assure the House I am a keen observer of the Accord and I have thought about it a lot. It seems, in a certain sense, to be a mirage. It looks like an agreement, but the more you examine it the more you find it is full of intentional ambiguities.

I want to say a word about intentional ambiguities. We attempted, as others did across the country, to clarify the ambiguities, to make amendments to make it more clear. But I do not wish to dismiss the concept of the intentional ambiguity. I remember, before my time here, when the International Monetary Fund was established, I heard Louis Rasminsky, who was our representative at Bretton Woods when that was done, observing that one of the great achievements of the establishment of the IMF was that the document establishing it had no unintentional ambiguities. In other words, it had ambiguities but none of them were unintentional.

When a lawyer acts for a client, he does not want ambiguities, intentional or unintentional. You want to be able to tell your client in any situation exactly what his or her rights will be. To do less than that as a lawyer is to fail your client.

In building a constitution for the IMF, to use my example, or for a nation, intentional ambiguities are often desirable. They permit an agreement to be signed. Basically, the parties are saying, I have my interpretation of what this means. You have your interpretation. Eventually it will be settled, but we can live with the ambiguities in the meanwhile. We are ready in the meantime to accept ambiguity for the sake of a deal. Lawyers and clients do not do that, but statesmen very often do.

So I do not mean to criticize the intentional ambiguity, but the trouble with the mirage of Meech Lake is that it is replete with ambiguity. So much so that on just leaving the room, parties who had just risen from the negotiating table were giving their various versions of what terms meant.

"Peace, order and good government" is an ambiguous phrase that if we had forced the Fathers of Confederation to settle in 1867 exactly what this phrase meant, or if we had asked the Fathers of the American Constitution to tell us what "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" meant exactly and what the court would say in every circumstance, they would have a lot of difficulty. But the Meech Lake mirage is too full of ambiguities. Our purpose in the Liberal Party, in the Official Opposition—read our minority report—is to clarify these ambiguities.

If we take the issue of the rights of women versus collective rights of the state as a distinct society, Premier Bourassa was saying the rights of women were not affected by the distinct society clause. But the women in the country, who had competent legal advisers whose legal advice I have read with great care, were able to say there is doubt, there is an ambiguity here. We tried on the Liberal side, in our amendments, to resolve it.

I want to give another example of ambiguity. It was the question of the national purpose in shared cost programs. Premier Peterson was able to say the national purpose will settle whether federal funding will go to a shared-cost program. But in the Province of Quebec, a completely different argument was being made about a very important clause that needed to be settled at the table. Some ambiguity could have been tolerated, but we needed to clear up those fundamental ambiguities.

The Government took the line we were facing a seamless web which could not be touched. In other words, a bubble that at one touch could explode into thin air. I did not look at it that way. I looked at it as a series of ambiguities that people of goodwill could resolve and ought to resolve. If you return to the analogy of what happened in 1981 and 1982, that is what we tried to do. We took amendments right down to the wire because they brought additional support for the package, and clarity to the Constitution of Canada that we were trying to establish.

In what I have said I may have given the impression that it is not important to amend the Constitution. I want to say I think it is extremely important to do so. But the reason why the resolution of the Meech Lake Accord one way or the other is less important than the process we have been taken through is because at the heart of the process the puffery about Québec becoming part of Canada, or about every Québecer being involved in the successful resolution of Meech Lake, is false. Underneath it all, every Québecer knows he or she is a Canadian. Québecers know that Québec is part of Canada and most Québecers are proud of it. I am not saying they are all proud of being part of Canada. We know what the result of the vote was. But I am able to say most Québecers are proud of it. They pay taxes, as the rest of us do, and they benefit from services. To say the passing of Meech Lake was essential because otherwise Québecers and Québec would not be part of Canada is a total fraud.

The importance of constitutional reform is not to make Québec a part of Canada, or make Québecers feel they are Canadians. They already do. The importance of it is to improve the relations by which we live together. That was my own reason for supporting the Meech Lake Accord. I saw in it the beginnings of measures that would bring more justice, equity and clarity into our relations.

I do not have a lot of time, but I would like to give one example. There is something wrong with the way the Supreme Court of Canada is established under the present Constitution. It is not fair to ask a provincial Government to bring its grievance against the federal Government to a tribunal which is wholly appointed by the federal Government. That does not have the appearance of fairness. No one in private arbitration would submit their grievance with another party to an arbitrator chosen by the other party.

So Meech Lake had a point. It provided the machinery which gave the provinces more of a feeling that the arbitration would look fair, and from that would flow a sense of it being more fair. I could give the example of cost-shared programs as well, there being more provincial say over them. So we were onto something with Meech Lake and the point of my intervention today is to say how much I regret its abandonment by Quebec and by the Prime Minister and how much I think we should be determined to try and get through a sensible stage of constitutional evolution, based on the Meech Lake mirage but fleshing the mirage out with the reality of interpretations and definitions and clarifications so we will know, when we get through it, that we have a country and that we are better off.

[Translation]

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I can hardly believe what I just heard in the House today, from someone who claims, as he said, to be —

[English]

Is it true that the Hon. Member is the spokesman? For the record, the Hon. Member acknowledges that he is the spokesperson for the Liberal Party of Canada on the Meech Lake Accord.

He has just given us a speech full of misleading arguments and incredible contradictions, not to support Meech Lake, because considering in the time it took him to praise the benefits of Meech Lake and its importance for Canada, no, not to denigrate the Accord —that was basically what was said by the Hon. Member who is the federal Liberal Party spokesman on the Meech Lake Accord, Mr. Speaker.

To put things in their proper context, I would like to provide a historical perspective. It all started in the 1984 election, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Leader of the Conservative Party, who subsequently became Prime Minister of Canada, promised, in a speech he made in Sept-Îles, to ensure that our Government's first objective in Constitutional matters would be to bring Québec back into the Constitutional fold, Mr. Speaker. That was our objective then and it has been maintained to this very day.

Subseqently, Mr. Speaker, the Premier of Québec submitted five requests to the provincial Premiers at the annual Conference of First Ministers held in Edmonton in the summer of 1986. The provincial Premiers unanimously approved the objective of bringing Québec back into the Constitutional fold. And that is what Meech Lake is all about. The whole point was to bring Québec back into the Constitutional family.

Our Leader, after the signing of the Accord—

Mr. Corbeil: With dignity!

Mr. Charest: With dignity. My colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Corbeil), the new Member for d'Anjou—Rivières-des-Prairies and very well known in Québec, emphasized: "With dignity". That has always been the Government's objective and it still is today. However, the spokesman for the federal Liberal Party of Canada on Meech Lake referred to the Accord as a mirage. Is that what you call promoting the Meech Lake Accord which is essential for our province and for Québecers? You called it a mirage?

He also referred to puffery. I am not sure what that means, Mr. Speaker, but I do know he does not mean it as a compliment to Meech Lake.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say just one thing. First of all I want to tell the federal Liberal Party spokesman that today he betrayed a commitment made by his Leader and his Party to Meech Lake and to Québec. You have betrayed that commitment. Stand up and tell us whether you support it!

Mr. Kaplan: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that we have supported and continue to support this process, as evidenced by our vote on the Meech Lake Accord when this issue was raised here.

I do not feel it is a question of bringing Quebec back into the constitutional fold. It is imporper to say that Quebec no longer belongs to Canada or that Quebec needs to join Canada again. Quebec is an integral part of Canada as a whole, something each Quebecer and each Canadian is well aware of. The question is not to save the nation. Québecers who were here supported the Accord in 1982. At the time the Constitution was patriated, we had the support of all Québecers sitting in this House. But what could we expect from a Separatist Government in Québec? That it should be in favour of re-affirming and patriating our Constitution? Impossible!

We are here to improve our Constitution. We have put forward suggestions to that effect. The Government has even refused to deal with them and it is this attitude which is responsible for the demise of the Meech Lake Accord. They would not accept amendments. They refuse to broaden their outlook. The Constitution can not be amended just to meet the needs of a single province. This is simply not done! A Quebec round is out of the question.

[English]

What you need to have to amend our Constitution is a Canada Round, and that is what we tried to do, building on the structure of Meech Lake. We tried. We were shut off at the pass by a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and by a Premier of Québec who, as I have shown, did not care whether or not Meech Lake went through.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis).

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Minister rises on a point of order.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I think you have come to realize that the Meech Lake Accord issue raised by the Hon. Member is a source of much interest not only among the Members of this House, but the general public as well. I seek therefore the unanimous consent of the House to let my hon. friend deal further with this issue—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam (Mr. Waddell) on the same point of order.

Mr. Waddell: With reference to the 10-minute period, I wished to ask a question. Are there five minutes left?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not a 10-minute question and comment period. It is a five-minute question and comment period for the time being. The five minutes is over. However, there is a request from a Government Minister to extend the question and comment period.

That cannot be extended for an indefinite period. If there is agreement in the House, I could propose to the House that this period be extended for 10 minutes.

Mr. Waddell: I cannot speak for all my colleagues, but I would like to see it extended. I would agree to that, providing we also have an opportunity. I respect the Minister, but he cannot monopolize all the time. He has time to speak, and he could ask a few questions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will agree therefore to extend the question and comment period.

Mr. Kaplan: I should inform the House that I have to leave town, but not until 10 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will extend the question and comment period on the speech of the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) for a short period of time, if Hon. Members will leave it at my discretion.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will ensure that a representative from the New Democratic Party is able to ask a question, and also at least one representative from the Official Opposition.

[Translation]

Mr. Corbeil: Mr. Speaker, if we were looking for an event which occurred over the past few years which could explain why the Liberal Party failed so miserably in Quebec during the last two elections, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) has just identified it very clearly.

I never thought I would hear during my lifetime a York Centre representative claiming in this House to be a genuine Québec spokesman who could better voice Québecers' aspirations than the Québec Premier himself. If the Meech Lake Accord has been signed, Mr. Speaker, it is because the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) who is much more eager to unify than divide—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Corbeil: —has agreed to sit with his provincial counterparts to try and find ways and means to bring Québec back with dignity into the Canadian fold, as the Minister of State (Youth) stated a while ago.

• (1350)

And here we see the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) rising in the House and, substituting himself for Québecers and the Québec Premier, claiming that the Meech Lake Accord which, as the Minister of State (Youth) (Mr. Charest) reminded us earlier, was unanimously concluded by the ten provincial Premiers, was the most important issue which we had to deal with as a priority. What I would like to know from the Hon. Member for York Centre is whether the Federal Liberal Party, or at least what is left of it, still considers now the Meech Lake Accord as the first and foremost constitutional priority?

Mr. Kaplan: I can answer yes and as proof, if I may ask and perhaps suggest a possible answer to the Government, they have lost the need, the sense of urgency that the Meech Lake Accord succeed. As I said, they are doing nothing now to try to have it ratified; they have got enough mileage out of it. We want to see our Constitution evolve. And I believe that if the Meech Lake Accord is not ratified, it will be due to their lack of effort, not ours. We supported this agreement.

[English]

Our Leader has sweated blood over Meech Lake, politically. He has held the Party together over it. I have supported it. I participated in the meetings on Meech Lake that were held on this Hill. I listened. I did not do what the Government did, talk about a seamless web. I listened to groups that came from all over the country.

[Translation]

Including Québec, who had suggestions to give us on improving the Accord. I listened and these amendments—these clarifications—were needed. If the Government were really serious, if it really wanted the Meech Lake Accord to be part of the Constitution, it should have taken the amendments, not just ours, but the amendments suggested by Canadians: the Northern Territories were right; the multicultural groups were right; the women also were right with the suggestions that they made. But they do not want what they created, as I said, a sort of mirage. Because it was not clear enough, it did not have enough support from the Canadian people.

[English]

When the Canadian people looked at that constitutional package the next day, they had questions, and the signatories did not have answers. They were not able to tell us what this paragraph meant with clarity. That is why amendments were needed. The seamless web could have been the occasion of great rejoicing in the country.

I do not want denigrate the political importance of Québec, the Québec Government and Québec City, approving of our constitutional arrangements. That is a very important step. But to say, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) likes to do, and falsely in my view, that this makes the country whole, that this brings Québec in, this type of rhetoric is false.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will take two more questioners. The Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam (Mr. Waddell) and then the Member for the Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand). Debate.

Mr. Waddell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree that it would be more helpful if Members talked about getting Québec to sign the 1981 Constitution, rather than bringing Québec in. There are about 70 MPs supported that. I think that would be a better way of saying it. I have opposed Meech Lake, but I favoured Québec signing the document in 1981.

I should tell Hon. Members that Meech Lake is dead in western Canada. As a matter of fact, it is scary. It is scary because it is the old notion of French and English being accepted anywhere in Canada by a Francophone or Anglophone having rights and being accepted, having equality, no matter which part, as Canadians anywhere in Canada. We are losing that and it is scary. Some of the winds that are coming out of western Canada are quite frankly anti-Québec. Mr. Bourassa has not helped himself, I might say, in some of the speeches he has given, particularly in Manitoba. I deplore that. I think if the Liberal Party wins in Newfoundland next week then Meech Lake will be dead in eastern Canada as well. I think the Government should wake up and understand that is what is happening.

I want to ask the Hon. Member a question, and I will not make it partisan. There is another Liberal view that Trudeau had of Canada that is different than what the Hon. Member has articulated. But he suggested in his speech that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Premier of Québec wanted to have Meech Lake fail, and I wonder if he could explain that because I did not understand what he was getting at.

Mr. Kaplan: I am glad the Hon. Member asked that question because I certainly did not say that. I am glad to be able to make it even clearer that I do not think that they wanted to fail. I think they wanted to succeed. But they are not prepared to do anything to make it succeed because they benefit whether it succeeds or not. That was my point. They benefit politically. The most important thing that I want to deal with, the observation of the Hon. Member, and I think—

—at the same time, I would like to answer the suggestion that I am presenting myself as a spokeman for Québecers. That is not at all the cases. I am a Member of Parliament— Now I would also like to say to the Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam (Mr. Waddell) that I do not want to present myself as a spokeman for the West.

[English]

I do not think one ought to say that Meech Lake is dead. I think that Meech Lake can succeed, and I think we want it to succeed. We want it to succeed—

[Translation]

I feel that it can succeed and that we can have a successful Constitutional state now if the parties—and those are the ones I mean are not interested anymore—if those two parties were ready to have amendments proposed and to consider suggestions to improve it.

[English]

A Québec Round is fine, but how can you validly have a Québec Round that does not take account of the interests of the rest of Canada, that does not deal with the issue about the northerners? How can you say that this constitutional opportunity should not be enlarged? I regret the suggestion that it is dead. I hope that is not what the NDP are saying in that part of the country. I hope that what they are saying is that we have an initiative here that can work. The purpose of my intervention was to call on the Government in Québec City and in Ottawa to do the things to make it work.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) on a question or comment.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, we have just had some very strange statements by the Hon. Minister from Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest), and the Hon. Minister from Anjou (Mr. Corbeil). I would like my colleague, in particular, to comment on some of the implications of their statement.

To begin with, we have Ministers from a Party attacking our colleague here on this side coming from a Party whose Leader just the other day said the Constitution was not worth the paper it was written on. I am wondering whether the Hon. Minister who posed that rather aggressive question and the other Minister support that point of view. Do they support the point of view of their Leader that the Constitution is not worth the paper it is written on?

We also have these questions put by members of a Party where the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) says he is opposed to the notwithstanding clause, and he thinks it should not have been used against Bill 178 in Québec. We have in the same Cabinet, Ministers such as the Minister of the Environment (Mr. L. Bouchard) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. B. Bouchard), saying they support the use of the notwithstanding clause. I would be very interested in knowing where the Minister for Sports (Mr. Charest) stands on this issue, and where the new Minister from Anjou stands. Are they with the Minister for the Environment or are they with the Prime Minister?

We also have this strange phenomena where the Government of Québec says it is not bound by the Constitution of 1982, yet it uses the notwithstanding clause in the Constitution of 1982 to crush a judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada. How one cannot be bound by the Constitution of 1982 and yet use one of the principal clauses to crush a judgment of the Supreme Court is a rather interesting situation. On that point I would like to hear the comments of my hon. colleague.

Finally, with respect to the Meech Lake Accord, the Premier of Québec, Mr. Bourassa, after his election put forward five points for his signing the Constitution of 1982. Those five points did not touch upon at all the use of the notwithstanding clause. At that time he did not think that that was an important issue. He did not mention it at all.

The first Party to respond to the five points of Mr. Bourassa was the Liberal Party of Canada and the Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada. In our convention in 1986 we respected those five points. Unfortunately, when they came about to draw up the Meech Lake Accord they added a hang of a lot more than the five points originally put forward by Mr. Bourassa. It is those additional matters that we are trying to amend.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I am reminded of Senator Lloyd Bentsen's observations about the presidential election when he talked about one of the candidates and said: "You are no Jack Kennedy". By watching the Prime Minister operate, and I say this in answer to my hon. friend, this is no statesman in the Prime Minister that we have been treated to in this alleged attempt to amend our Constitution.

The Meech Lake Accord from the beginning for the Prime Minister was a political vehicle for the Prime Minister. He has made maximum political use of it. It has served its purpose. For we on this side of the House Constitutions matter. Our Party, as Hon. Members will know, has suffered great anguish in reaching the strong consensus we had that we should take Meech Lake seriously, that we should work on it and accept it and explain it to the country. We did that. But for the Prime Minister to value the Constitution one day and to tear it up the next is nothing that anyone should be surprised about. This is not a Prime Minister we have in the House today who is trusted by the Canadian people. He is a Prime Minister, and this is a Government that says one thing and does another.

In this case I was struck by the sentence about the Meech Lake Accord. It made it so obvious that the Government had nothing going to try to make a success out of something that we on this side of the House did and do take seriously. In spite of the words of the Hon. Member from British Columbia, I hope the rest of the country will be willing to see it saved as well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate. The Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert.

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise in the House today to join the debate on the Speech from the Throne which marked the opening of the second session of the 34th Parliament of Canada last April 3. I want to thank my constituents for expressing their confidence in me a second time.

I can recall with deep emotion the first time in 1984 when I rose to speak to Canadians in this venerable House. At the time I explained the four major objectives which had prompted me to run for election in Louis-Hébert under the banner of the Progressive Conservative Party. One of those objectives was that Québec become at last become a full-fledged member of the great Canadian constitutional family. I had faith in our Prime Minister who promised to bring Québec back into Canada's Constitutional fold, and the action he took during his first mandate proved me right.

Owing to his deep convictions and his negotiating skills he was able to secure the unanimous agreement of all his provincial colleagues about the Meech Lake Accord, a historical achievement not only for Québec but for Canada as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you that as a Québecer I stood very proud the day the Meech-Langevin agreement was signed. At long last Québec and all Québecers would regain their rightful place at the Constitutional bargaining table. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) may not be in agreement, but yesterday he should have been listening to his colleague the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) who, for one, understands Québec's reality, understands Québecers, understands how Québecers feel.

That agreement that is good for Québec but above all essential to Canada's higher interests, and which was supported in this House by a majority of members both from the NDP and the Liberal Party, must be ratified without delay. What is at stake is not only Québec's future but the future of the whole Canadian Constitutional process.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, as a proud member from Quebec, I urge every man and woman in Ontario, Western Canada and the Maritimes to openly express their support for that most important agreement for our national unity and Canada's future.

It is imperative that it be ratified in the coming weeks by the two legislative Assemblies of New Brunswick and Manitoba, the only ones who have yet to do so.

As I said, and I can never insist enough on this, the ratification of that historic agreement is in line with Canada's higher interests. It involves our common future from East to West, the future of Canada.

Another theme of prime importance was raised to my great joy in the Throne Speech, that of research, science and technology.

The fact that that important, future-building area was again emphasized is another clear proof that this Government continues to view it as a priority.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I have been concerned with high technology for a long time, and for a number of reasons. I was city councillor of Ste. Foy before I took active part in federal politics, and I had an opportunity to work at various matters of business for the City and the area, this gave me the opportunity to assess the importance of research and high technology for economic development in the riding of Louis-Hébert and the Quebec city area.

In Louis-Hébert we enjoy a privileged environment because of our technological knowhow. The resources and potential are huge and available, and our Prime Minister in 1982 assessed this correctly when he stated during a stay in Québec City, and I quote: "You have everything needed to become Canada's strategic research and development centre".

And the actions taken during our last term clearly show that not even once did that recognition of the Québec city area by this Conservative Government fail. Let us recall the establishment of the high technology park in Ste. Foy, Québec, the location of the National Optical Institute, a promise made by the previous Government but never implemented; continuous and increased support to research at Laval University, the establishment in Ste. Foy of the Energy, Mines and Resources Geo Resource Centre in Ste. Foy, something that over and above its impact on research remedied more than 110 years of injustice to Francophones, and I could go on and on.

A brief analysis shows that we can enjoy in Louis-Hébert the presence of researchers from the Laval University, the I.N.R.S., the C.R.I.Q. and the entrepreneurship of high technology industries like Bomem, Lab-Volt, Didatech, Digitech, Gentec, D.I.L. International, to name but a few.

The riding I am privileged to represent in this House naturally focuses on the development of high technology. For a number of years indeed, everyone active in the community has recognized this and work together to target projects in that direction.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank them for their constant support during these last four years—the people in Laval University, Chambers of Commerce, the C.R.I.Q., the I.N.R.S., people in private enterprise, everyone supported my work and the achievements I referred to earlier, which were made possible by the determination and hard work of all interested parties in the community. This is why I am confident that together, during the next four years, we can carry on whith the work already undertaken and complete other major achievements.

Moreover, my role as Parliamentary Secretaty to the Minister of State (Science and Technology) (Mr. Wine gard) made me realize more than ever how vital the development of research, science and technology is to Canada's future. In an increasingly international world, our businesses must adjust quickly to meet international competition, and this is where the high tech sector, as it relates to business and the economy, becomes even more important. Our Government realized that when, in our first term, it made research, science and technology one of the priorities of this country's business. We put this country on a new course towards the future, and for the first time in this country's history, we established, in consultation with the provinces, a national policy on science and technology.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to recall briefly some important events that have marked the past four years in the field of science and technology. In March 1987, the Federal-Provincial Council of Ministers of Science and Technology was created. The Council is responsible for supervising the implementation of a national policy and for consulting with the various groups working in science and technology in Canada.

The national policy approved by the federal and provincial governments in Vancouver, in March 1987, commits the parties to co-ordinating their efforts in six distinct areas. They are committed to assisting colleges and universities to meet our demand for highly-qualified individuals; to support basic and applied research while seeing to it that both academic research and investments by the private sector in research and development have a sound and durable basis; to promote research in the social sciences, especially on certain phenomena that are present in a society that is increasingly oriented towards high technology; and to promote development of a culture with an increased focus on science.

The Government has established a National Advisory Board on Science and Technology, consisting of 36 representatives from the scientific community, education, industry and labour, and chaired by none other than our Prime Minister.

In January 1988, I had the pleasure of attending the National Conference on Technology and Innovation, with over 200 decision makers from industry, the academic world and labour, and together we spent two days examining how science and technology could best serve the Canadian economy. We considered how productivity could be increased, how to increase the value of our products and especially how to make it easier for new high technology companies to get started.

Another worthwhile initiative was the announcement, on August 4, 1987, of the creation of the Department of Industry, Science and Technology. This new Department will play a major role in the formulation of economic policies geared to the development and implementation of technologies absolutely vital for the establishment of an industrial economy able to compete the international level. It will also have to increase the government's awareness of the needs and concerns of our industrial and scientific communities.

Toward the end of 1987, three committees of the Advisory Council worked relentlessly to come up with recommendations in an effort to guide the government's decisions in the field of science and technology. With regard to universities, one suggestion called for the governement to fund Centres of excellence, create a scholarship program for Science and Engineering students, and increase the budget of three granting councils for research.

And that is why, in January 1988, the Prime Minister of Canada announced that the Governement would spend $1.3 billion in the next five years towards new science and technology projects carried at Canadian universities.

The three major initiatives announced since directly result from the recommendations made by the Advisory Council and show how important university research and studies are for this Government. Let's review these initiatives: there was the creation of national networks of Centres of excellence, for which $250 million were granted, the establishment of a scholarship program in Canada for students in the field of Science and Engineering and related fields, which represent altogether $80 million, and finally a major increase of $200 million in the core budgets of the granting councils.

The purpose of setting-up a national network of centers of excellence is to promote co-operation between universities and industry and prevent the duplication of research as well as encourage the immediate spread of new discoveries, in order to better ensure Canada's long term competitiveness at the international level. So far, this initiative has been an unqualified success.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the number of projects submitted exceeds largely everything we had imagined, and the researchers I met recently insisted that they could never have obtained so much co-operation between the various universities without such a program.

They felt that such co-operation could only prove advantageous in every respect and the scientific community is universally grateful to the Government for providing them with this unique chance to create solid and long lasting contacts with their counterparts everywhere in this country.

So far, Mr. Speaker, university people and private enterprise are enthousiastic about the benefits accruing from the creation of the center of excellence network, and we are now involved in the review of various projects submitted by the ad hoc committees.

We can already foresee the more than positive spin-offs from the creation of centers of excellence and together with the researchers, I am delighted with the valuable impact of this happy initiative.

Mr. Speaker, I wish I could have dealt with all the other achievements of our Government in the area of science and technology. I refer here to the $1,2 billion contract under the Canada Space Program for the construction of a space computerized engineering robot which will generate jobs representing more than 100 000 men-year and will bring in $8 billion in revenues by the year 2000. I wish I could have dealt in depth with the Innovaction strategy, the $90 million invested in micro-electronics, as well as the space agency, with investments of $3 billion over the next decade, which is important not only for Québec, but for Canada as a whole.

My time is running out and I'll conclude by saying—and I am sure you will agree with me, Mr. Speaker—that much has been achieved. But in this field which is progressing daily, much remains to be done, and in view of the strong determination the Government has shown over the past four years, I am sure that during the next four years, with the co-operation of everyone, we will achieve great things, in the best interest and for the future well-being of this country.

Mr. Allmand: Early in her speech, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to the Constitution. May I ask the Hon. Member whether she accepts the policy enunciated by the Prime Minister to the effect that the notwithstanding clause is bad and that we should seek ways to get rid of it? Or does she accept the policy enunciated by the Minister of Environment (Mr. Bouchard) to the effect that the notwithstanding clause is necessary and should be kept in the Constitution? Could she give us her opinion on this issue?

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) for his question. I should like to tell him that a long time ago the Prime Minister had stated that the inclusion of the notwithstanding clause had weakened the Constitution, and if my Hon. friend had read yesterday's Le Devoir he would know that the reason his former leader, Mr. Trudeau, had included the notwithstanding clause in the Constitution was really to have control and to be able to weaken the Constitution if ever something happened which was not to his liking.

The right was granted and the notwithstanding clause was included in the Constitution. As a Québec Member, I can understand why Premier Bourassa would use that clause since it already was in the Constitution. I think that the Prime Minister and the Provincial Premiers figure they will soon be able to discuss that item during new constitutional rounds, but they won't be able to do so until the Meech Lake Accord is ratified by all provinces. That's the important issue here.

I would like to add, as a Member for Québec, that having been excluded of that famous night of negotiations, you remember when Mr. Lévesque showed up here, sincerely wishing to enter the new Canadian Constitution—You remember that the province of Québec was cast aside. Try to imagine how the people of Québec felt, try to put yourselves in their shoes. The people in Québec are saying: We were then excluded, and now two provinces in Canada don't want to see Québec in the Constitution. Try to imagine what could happen. Yesterday, my colleague from Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) went even further! We are faced with a dangerous situation, which could lead to the separation of one province. And that would be the end of Canada. Mr. Speaker, it is very hard to make our English-speaking colleagues understand the situation, because they don't want to hear anything about it. That is the fact, and that is what each and every ordinary citizen of Québec believe.

Right now, Mr. Speaker, we should not try to find out if it was a good idea to include the notwithstanding clause in the Constitution. Right now, Mr. Speaker, the entire population of Canada should unify and put pressure on the two provinces who haven't yet signed the Accord, because that's what is important.

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I stand today in the House to respond to the Government's Speech from the Throne. First, let me take this opportunity to thank the people of Saanich—Gulf Islands for electing me to represent them. It is an honour to serve as a Member of Parliament and a privilege to represent a riding of such natural beauty. The Gulf Islands of Canada have a reputation for their beauty as well as for their arts community and vibrant political community.

The Saanich Peninsula is a farming area and a bedroom community to Victoria. The daffodils we see from the Canadian Cancer Society come from my riding.

As a new Member of Parliament I am not unaware that a Speech from the Throne will be a blueprint for government policy. However, this Speech from the Throne is unusually devoid of real substance. However, it also contains some worrying signals.

The Government has bent over backward to sell the idea that Canada is in an economic crisis. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is busily speaking to business groups across the country, telling them of the doom and gloom on the horizon. It is interesting to contrast these new found sentiments with the rhetoric we were exposed to during the last election campaign.

At that time the Government said all was well with the economy and that we should stay the course. The Government claimed it was fiscally responsible and that the trade deal would not negatively affect our social programs or regional development initiatives. We now see the real agenda.

The announced cuts to unemployment insurance are a direct result of the trade deal. During the election campaign we on this side warned that the deal would adversely affect our social programs. With the announced cuts to unemployment insurance, the harmonization has begun.

We know that these pronouncements were all hot air. The Government has almost doubled the national debt since it came to power. We do not argue that the deficit is a major problem. Where we take issue with the Government is on how best to address the problem.

The big business friends of the Government want cuts to social programs. We will see the extent to which they get their way when the Minister of Finance brings down his Budget. If big business gets its way, and so far all indications are that it will, then we know who will be paying down the deficit. It will be the same people, small businesses, seniors, and average Canadians whom we in the NDP represent. They are the same people who will be adversely affected by the Government's regressive sales tax. They are the same people who are struggling now under the high interest rate policy of the Government.

I listened with interest to the Minister of State for Housing (Mr. Redway) and his analysis of how that new Ministry will affect the housing situation in Canada. If the Government was really sincere about doing something about the housing problem in Canada, it would address the interest rate problem. The sincerity is lacking in the Speech from the Throne.

The Government, which seems so keen on adopting all the bad policies from south of the border, should try to adopt a good idea like the minimum corporate tax. In Reagan's America, a minimum corporate tax was adopted. I call on the Government to have the courage to do the same in Canada so that it is not the same middle class, seniors, and small business people who carry an unfair burden in the tax system.

High interest rates are also contributing to the deficit. All 10 provincial Premiers came to Ottawa a few weeks ago to urge an easing of the high interest rates. Why does the Government not wake up and look beyond southern Ontario?

Unemployment is still unacceptably high in the Atlantic and in the West. On Vancouver Island, where I come from, the official unemployment rate is over 11 per cent. People in my riding welcome growth in Ontario, but they do not accept being treated unfairly by the federal Government because housing prices in Toronto are fuelling inflation there. They are also fuelling inflation in my riding, where people from Toronto are coming to retire early. At least they will have the joy of having an elected representative who will speak out on their behalf.

I noted with some optimism that the Speech from the Throne made mention of the Government's commitment to continue its support in the progress toward arms control. However, the rhetoric was washed away with the reality. The Government will continue to test first strike Cruise missiles on Canadian soil. It will steadfastedly champion a defence strategy right out of the Pentagon Archives, circa 1950, complete with a fleet of nuclear submarines. What is more, later this year in Ottawa the Government will sponsor "ARMX '89", an armament swap and shop. So much for a commitment to arms control. There are a number of contradictions in the Speech from the Throne, but that is one of the more blatant ones.

The Government also talks of a reaffirmation of Canada's role in the international community. Last year, Canada gained a seat on the United Nations Security Council. This was achieved in large measure as a result of support from the less developed nations. Our reputation on the international stage has been built gradually by successive Governments over the past half century, Liberal Governments and Conservative Governments urged on, of course, by New Democratic Members of Parliament.

As with all things of value, the Conservatives of 1989 claimed sole credit. We have seen in this Government a withering away of the independence of our foreign policy. With respect to the free trade deal—it is all intermixed—we cannot see the economics separate from our international foreign policy. "Me too-ism" has struck down our former capacity to act boldly and with purpose internationally.

I have travelled internationally. It is not until you step outside Canada that you realize the extent of Canada's reputation in this area. It is far greater than the kind of money we are able to give, but it is based on that independence of foreign policy.

Over the past few months Canadians have witnessed foreign policy statements made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) one day and completely contradicted by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) the next. The Throne Speech does little to assuage the perception that foreign policy is adrift. Rhetoric and action fail to converge. Whether it be with respect to environment, policy on South Africa, Central America, or a variety of other issues, the Government has provided little in the way of leadership.

The Throne Speech talks about a strong stand in defence of human rights. Again, the Government's record fails to support the rhetoric. I have a great deal of difficulty with the Government's notion that Canada must continue to lend comfort and money to repressive regimes if we are to have any hope of influencing their policies. There are many ways of influencing policies; giving them money is not one of them.

I now move on to overseas development assistance. This is an important aspect of Canada's international reputation, which I hope the Government will deem pertinent enough to support. The Government has given lip service in support of the Brundtland report which recognizes the responsibility of "have" nations to assist in the alleviation of poverty. I think it should be made clear that this should not be done out of a sense of charity. It should be done out of a sense of partnership with those countries. Canada was built in many ways by exploiting the resources not only of our own land but the resources of the Third World. I am not only talking about forestry resources or fishing resources; I am talking about people resources. We have benefited from the cheap labour of those countries.

In 1984 this Government backed away from the international commitment that ODA would reach .7 per cent of GNP by 1990 and instead set the date at 1995. In 1986 the Conservatives fudged again and rolled back the date to the year 2000. The Government should accelerate its plan for ODA and reach the .7 per cent level well before the year 2000.

The Government claims to be a world leader in international development, but ODA as a percentage of GNP has declined since 1984. We are behind Finland. Indeed in 1987 Canada was outpaced by all the Scandinavian countries, the Netherlands and others.

We have a good reputation in the field of development, but it is folly to think we have done our bit. As long as there is hunger and poverty in the world, I am confident Canadians will support more emphasis on improving our international development assistance programs.

I caution the Government, before it drops the axe on international development programs, it would be well advised to examine polling data produced by the North–South Institute. Its polling indicates that 72 per cent of Canadians feel government aid spending was about right or too low. The same poll discovered that 93 per cent of Canadians rank poverty, hunger and disease as the most important international problems. Interestingly, Soviet aggression ranked last on the list. Perhaps the submarine salesmen should take a look at what they can contribute to deficit reduction.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Hunter: I now move on to one hopeful point in the Speech from the Throne, that is the one regarding reproductive technologies and a royal commission on them. I applaud the Government on this initiative, an initiative called for by the New Democrats. We await the terms of reference to govern this commission, but I hope, as the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Burnaby (Ms. Black) called for on Monday, that 50 per cent of the members of that commission should be women. I think that all Members of the House should look into this whole aspect.

I had the opportunity of hearing from one of my constituents who had attended an international conference on this matter. She said that women who have the tragedy of infertility are willing to pay for medical care where, if we submit animals to it, the SPCA would object. It is a tragedy which I hope the reproductive technologies commission will look into.

Finally I want to talk about a subject which I feel is very important, that is, the Speech from the Throne and the environment. Once again, rhetoric and action do not converge. This is an area where we must be careful about the rhetoric being captured by the business community. Sustainable development is becoming almost a dirty word because of who is saying it. I caution people that when they hear those terms they must look behind the language and see the action. There must be an environmental bill of rights to assure Canadians that the Government is sincere in protecting their environment.

In closing, I wish to thank the people of Saanich—Gulf Islands, a politically diverse group that have never before elected a New Democrat. I pledge to work hard on their behalf on issues of national, local and international interest.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a comment on deficit reduction and the debt. One method of reducing the deficit would be to cut expenditures. This could be done by privatizing federal Crown corporations.

The total equity of the federal Government in a list of corporations which I have exceeds $13.5 billion. It costs the Canadian taxpayer another $4.4 billion to have these corporations operating. If those corporations could be sold off, this would generate $17.9 billion for the Government in the first year with the savings on its operation allowance.

The Conservative Government is moving in the right direction by making government more efficient, but we should stop giving hand-outs to inefficient companies and tax remissions to big corporations.

An Hon. Member: Have you got a question?

Mr. Kindy: In the Speech from the Throne the Government talks about expanding our trade. The Free Trade Agreement with the United States will be beneficial to western Canada, and we look forward to widening global and international trade. As a mature and confident people, we know that our economy cannot prosper behind tariff walls and restricted markets. Canadians prefer to support the cause—

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is clear that the Hon. Member is repeating what he did this morning. He is not commenting on the Hon. Member's speech or asking her questions. He is making a new speech of his own.

I was a member of the committee on parliamentary reform that suggested that change in the rules. It was very clear that that period of time after a speech was meant to be used for comments on the speech of the Hon. Member or to ask questions, not to make a new speech. I would ask you as Speaker to keep the Hon. Member within the terms of the rules.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member for Calgary Northeast will relate his comments to the speech of the Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands.

I would also advise Members that there are only five minutes left. I have one more question from the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis, and the Hon. Member for Fredericton would like to say a few words. Therefore, I request that comments be short.

Mr. Kindy: How can we afford foreign aid if we do not have our own house in order? How can we afford all the programs that the Hon. Member is talking about?

Ms. Hunter: I respond with pleasure to the question of the Hon. Member. Foreign aid, especially run under the Conservative Government, benefits the business community. All one has to do is look at the bilateral aid program, which benefits equally the business community of Canada as it does the countries of the Third World. If there was any talk of cutting bilateral aid, we would certainly hear about it from the business friends of the Conservative Government.

I am not advocating cutting aid. I am advocating a sensible policy that is in tangent with our foreign policy.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, of course I deplore the fact that I have only one or two minutes left, but still I want to commend the Hon. Member, particularly for her remarks concerning the international situation. I am sorry she did not get around to the last part because we could spend at least half an hour debating international issues.

When he took the floor, her leader said he wished very strongly that the Right Hon. the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) travel to Moscow at the earliest opportunity, in the spirit of détente which now prevails among the major powers. Had she been able to or had she had more time, I wish she would have spoken at greater length on that issue. That is my opinion. I hope the Right Hon. the Prime Minister will go to Moscow as soon as possible. In addition, I fully agree with her concerning a ban on nuclear tests in Canada. Had I been given an opportunity to make a speech I would simply have told the Government that, since it has its own agenda and that it includes giving the green light to nuclear tests, I for one would wish that in its agenda—not in mine, not in that of my colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), and not in those of the New Democratic Party Members—at least one suggestion might be made to the Government.

I would like to hear some comments on that. We would urge the Government to suspend its nuclear tests in a spirit—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! I recognize the Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands (Mrs. Hunter).

[English]

Ms. Hunter: One of the motivating factors that brought me into politics was my opposition to Cruise missile testing. It brings into question the whole relationship of Canada in the international community.

Once again, the Tory Government is ruining our reputation by bringing about this type of increased militarization of Canada at a time when the rest of the world seems to be coming to some sort of arrangement for a disarmament treaty.

Members opposite are out of sync with the rest of the world. I wish they would read The Globe and Mail once in a while and find out what is going on in the world, so that they could develop their policies with a little more intelligence.

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, I have approximately 60 seconds to deliver 12 or 15 pages, so obviously I will have to go to the punch line very quickly.

To be within the rules, I would like to conclude the debate by saying that the Throne Speech does provide great reason for confidence and the ultimate reconciliation and unity of our country. Clearly there is an unflinching resolve by the federal Government to lead Canadians to a common vision of the nation and to an ultimate reconciliation of all interests, including Québec, as willing partners in one Canada.

I am proud to share that vision and to share the responsibilities which it will demand of all Hon. Members to help convey that vision and challenge of one unified country to every one of our constituents.

In all respects, the Throne Speech presents to each of us an historic opportunity to serve our country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 2.45 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 50(8), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith the question necessary to dispose of the main motion. Accordingly, the question is the following one. Mr. Richardson, seconded by Miss Gibeau moves:

That the following Address be presented to Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To Her Excellency the Right Honourable Jeanne Sauvé, a Member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, Chancellor and Principal Companion of the Order of Canada, Chancellor and Commander of the Order of Military Merit, upon whom has been conferred the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious Speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties with reference to Bill C-2. I think you would find there is agreement to my moving the following motion:

> That, the order for second reading and reference to a Legislative Committee of Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Transportation Accident Investigation Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, standing on the Order Paper be changed to read "second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Transport".

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members have heard the terms of the motion. Is there agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition today on behalf of a number of Canadians who are very concerned that the national unemployment rate remains higher today than before the onset of the 1981 recession. They believe that the Government's programs in a sense work for parts of central Canada, with the emphasis on parts, but really leave the regions out to dry. They are calling upon Parliament to adopt policies and programs that will increase employment in Canada, which of course will include the reduction of interest rates and provide for greater regional investment by the federal Government.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I have a petition signed by 5,266 individuals in Thompson and Wabowden, Manitoba expressing their displeasure and discontent with regard to the Government's attempt to take away their northern tax benefit, to reduce it by one-third this year. They point out in this petition, which is signed by almost the majority of people living in those communities, that the Government appointed a task force on northern benefits, and that that report has yet to be made to the Government, and for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to penalize these communities, along with a number of other communities in northern Alberta and northern B.C., indicates that the Government is completely unfair in its approach to the entire tax system. The undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to direct the Minister of Finance to reconsider this major change of heart for the 1988 taxation year, and that there should be no changes to any taxpayer currently residing in a community within the prescribed areas until the task force has made its report.

PROTECTION OF RAIN FORESTS

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Madam Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition from 132 petitioners in my riding on a topic that concerns all Canadians. This petition deals with the world's rain forests. The world's rain forests are an essential link in the global environment and ecosystems and are therefore important to the future safety of the world and all its creatures. The destruction of the tropical rain forests in areas such as Brazil, Central America, and southeast Asia is of great concern to the petitioners, and in fact to all of Canada.

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to take vigorous economic, political or other sanctions as may be available to the Government and all its agencies against those nations which are destroying the rain forests in our world today.

DESIGNATION OF ROUGE RIVER VALLEY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Madam Speaker, I have the pleasure to present to the House today a petition from a number of residents of Scarborough concerning saving the Rouge Valley. The petitioners are very encouraged today because yesterday the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) toured the Rouge Valley. He said the whole area was a miracle that it should be saved in the form that it is, and he urged the provincial Government to play its part in terms of saving the Rouge Valley as a provincial park. The Minister affirmed the $10 million that the federal Government is giving to the province to save this valley as a provincial park. Of course it is contingent on no dump and no freeway being put through the Rouge Valley. The petitioners join the Mayor of Scarborough, as well as Save the Rouge Valley System Volunteers, and the Coalition of Scarborough Community Associations in supporting saving the Rouge Valley. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to work with the Government of Ontario to establish the Rouge River Valley as a Canadian heritage land or provincial park.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Murphy: I rise to ask the Parliamentary Secretary the same question I asked him on Friday. When does he expect that he will start answering questions?

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, the same answer that was given on Friday applies today—soon.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

TRANSPORTATION ACCIDENT INVESTIGATION BOARD ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Transportation Accident Investigation Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and, pursuant to order adopted earlier today, referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

—He said: Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure today to start the debate on second reading of Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Transportation Accident Investigation Board.

First of all, I would like to inform the House that upon completion of second reading, the Bill will be referred to the Standing Committee for further study.

Madam Speaker, we firmly believe that Canadians will find in this legislation a number of provisions that will reassure them and restore their confidence in the safety of their transportation system, whether they travel by air, rail or ship.

[English]

Unfortunate events in recent months have served to undermine the confidence of Canadians in the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. Two weeks ago I announced two independent inquiries into aviation accidents which occurred in Canada. I asked Justice Willard Estey to review the entire record of the investigation into the Gander accident. He will submit his report to me within three months.

Justice Virgil Moshansky of the Queen's Bench of Alberta was appointed to conduct a full inquiry into the recent tragedy at Dryden. I asked Justice Moshansky to submit an interim report within six months, and a final report with recommendations as required within one year.

Our responsibility, when faced with such situations, is to take all the measures necessary to reassure the travelling public. This is exactly what we are doing today. The confidence Canadians put in the safety of the air transportation system is just as important as the level of safety which actually exists. In this regard I do not hesitate to state that Canada has one of the best safety records in the world for all modes of transport. Maintaining and improving this record is my highest priority. As we all know, this is a task which is never truly complete.

For the first time in history of Government, this Government has enshrined its commitment to transportation safety in legislation. I refer to the National Transportation Act adopted by this House on June 18, 1987, and proclaimed on January 1, 1988. I quote in part from the Act which states: "—under conditions ensuring that—the national transportation system meets the highest practicable safety standards—"

The legislation we have before us today is another major step in a series of initiatives undertaken by this Government since 1984 in support of this commitment. These safety measures include amendments to the Aeronautics Act in 1985, amendments to the Canada Shipping Act in 1987, and most recently the new railway safety legislation.

However, the foundation of a truly safe transportation system rests on our ability to learn from the past. That is to say our ability to learn all we can about the causes of accidents in order to prevent them in the future. This essential element of transportation safety is being addressed today in a logical and comprehensive manner.

Bill C-2 is the result of extensive consultations with interested parties and reflects many of the conclusions and recommendations contained in various safety studies, evaluation reports and inquiries conducted in recent years.

In addition to the valuable comments and suggestions provided by the wide range of transportation interests, we had the benefit of the views expressed in the Dubin inquiry into aviation safety, the Deschênes study on marine casualty investigation, the Foisy inquiry into the Hinton derailment and the Hickling evaluation of the CASB, and the Sopinka review of the CASB.

Madam Speaker, in establishing the Transportation Accident Investigation Board, we have opted for an integrated approach to safety systems, as was in fact recommended by other parties. This means that from now on, a single agency will be responsible for investigating transportation accidents, whether they occur in the air, on our waterways, on our railways or in our commodity pipelines.

The new board will therefore absorb three existing agencies: the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, the Transport Canada group responsible for investigating shipping casualties, and the branch of the National Transportation Agency which is responsible for investigating accidents on railways and in commodity pipelines. This multimodal approach offers several advantages. It will make it possible to pool specialized resources in areas such as engineering, medicine and psychology, while the experiences of each transport mode can be shared as well.

It goes without saying that our various types of transportation will be on an equal footing. I want to make this quite clear, because some concern has been voiced in this respect. By establishing the Transportation Accident Investigation Board, we will also be responding to calls for an independent agency that came from most of the groups concerned. The Board will therefore be separate from any of the departments. It will be accountable to Parliament through a minister designated by the Governor in Council. The independence of the new agency is a guarantee that investigations will be conducted fairly and objectively, since from now on, those who investigate shipping and railway accidents will not be connected in any way to those who determine the safety regulations, thus Madam Speaker, eliminating any possibility of a conflict of interest.

The investigation procedure provided in the Bill meets standards of effectiveness that are essential if the Board is to fulfil its mandate satisfactorily. Investigators, in addition to their guaranteed independence, will have extensive powers. They will enjoy certain facilities for obtaining the information they need to determine the causes of accidents.

However, the role of the Board will not be to assign fault or liability, insofar as safety is concerned here. Thus, it will be limited to indicating breaches of safety, determining the causes of accidents and making appropriate recommendations to improve safety.

We also insisted, Madam Speaker, that the process to investigate transportation accidents be more open. Thus, parties with a direct interest in the causes and effects of an accident will be invited to participate in the investigation. They will be able to delegate representatives and the Board will submit draft reports to them. The reason for this openness, obviously, is the need to search for the causes of an accident as thoroughly as possible.

Now, by creating an agency independent of government departments, by giving extended powers to investigators and by encouraging an open investigation process, we ensure that nothing will escape those responsible for the investigation. That is what it takes to make our safety system the best. That is also what it takes to increase Canadians' confidence in their transportation safety system.

While this new Board would have a mandate similar to that of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, a clear definition of their roles and responsibilities would be beneficial to the board of members, the chairman and the staff respectively. This will remove a source of unproductive conflict which serves to undermine the confidence of Canadians in this agency. Board members will apply their experience and expertise to the setting of the policies and procedures to conduct investigations, the reviewing of the reports submitted by the directors of investigation, and most important, making safety-related recommendations.

The directors of investigation, on the other hand, will have exclusive authority to directly conduct investigations in accordance with the policies and procedures established by the Board members. This clear separation of responsibilities will allow Board members to objectively review the reports submitted by investigators and will remove any perception of conflict of interest which might exist if Board members were actually conducting the investigation. While these provisions will remove one source of conflict, I cannot promise that it will ensure the total absence of dissension in the new Board nor, frankly, would I wish it would do for, as we in the House know very well, disagreements are not only part of the human condition. They can and often do lead to a better result. In this case the result will be a safer transportation system for all Canadians.

Madam Speaker, we have benefited from the experience gained by the Aviation Safety Board since it was created in 1984. This Bill takes account of it to a great extent.

First, we decided to limit the number of members of the new Board to five, whereas the number of members of the Aviation Safety Board was unlimited.

In addition to clearly establishing the roles and responsibilities of everyone at the Board, as I explained earlier, Bill C-2 expressly asks the Board not to hesitate in determining the causes of an accident and presenting complete conclusions, even if someone may later be held responsible.

Bill C-2 formally gives the Board power to set policies on the nature of the transportation accidents that it will investigate and the extent of its investigations.

The Bill also provides measures to further protect human rights when the investigators exercise their powers. Thus, from now on investigators will have to have a warrant to exercise their search and seizure powers.

This Bill, Madam Speaker, is totally in keeping with a series of actions that we have taken in the last several years to improve safety in all systems at Transport Canada. It is based on the experience acquired over many years and we can say that it provides the best possible formula to investigate accidents. The mechanisms contained in it will no doubt enable us to respond to accidents diligently and effectively and, above all, to prevent their recurrence.

I hope that the Hon. Members who will consider it in committee will look at it from this point of view and in light of the prevention objectives that we have set forth.

[English]

I invite Members of this House to give careful consideration to the Bill in committee. I will be pleased to consider any amendment which will serve to advance the cause of transportation safety. Once again I would like to emphasize the importance of this legislation. It is an essential key to a safer transportation system for tomorrow, essential also because it affects the level of confidence Canadians have in a vital sector of our national economy.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I want to assure Members of this House and the travelling public that we will never relax our vigilance nor our efforts to constantly maintain and improve the higher level of transportation safety which currently exists in this country.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Miramichi): Madam Speaker, I take the commitment by the Minister in his final statement at face value. I think that Canadians deserve nothing less. However, I do not agree with the Minister's assessment of what this Bill will do. If he is going to ensure what he just said, this Bill is going to require a lot of reworking. This Bill, called an Act to establish the Transportation Accident Investigation Board, purports to establish an investigative body to inquire into the causes of accidents in the air, on the land and on the water as well as commodity pipelines within Canadian territories.

It might at first blush seem like a laudable idea, but if we look at the raison d'être, it is readily apparent that the genesis had no such nobility at all. Indeed, the motive of the Government is all too apparent: to wit, it is an attempt to sweep under the rug the botched investigation into the crash at Gander and an ignoble attempt by this Government to exonerate itself.

Let us take a quick look at what happened at Gander after that awful crash. First, four of the nine members of the Board issued a dissenting report vis-à-vis the conclusions of the investigators that icing was the cause of the crash. These members are professionals. They were told in a letter from the Minister to follow and support the chairman, no matter what their professional conclusions told them. In other words, the Minister was in effect telling them to put aside their professional conclusions and say, aye, aye, sir, to the new chairman.

The Minister went further. He sent the same letter to Brigadier-General Roger Lacroix even though he was no longer a member of the board. I think that smacks of intimidation and cover-up. All this took place after Mr. Justice Sopinka said there was a rift between members of the Board and aviation investigators, and they were unable to get investigations that they felt were necessary.

Let us examine what Mr. Justice Sopinka said, first with respect to respective powers and duties of the Board and chairman. Mr. Sopinka observed serious problems within the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, including a breakdown in the day-to-day operations, division between members and the chairman, division between members and the accident investigators, and dissensions among members.

The following is the passage that best sums up Mr. Sopinka's comments:

> The main problem, generally stated, is that the CASB is not operating as a cohesive unit in pursuance of its objective of identifying safety deficiencies and making recommendations to remedy them. Rather, it has become fractious to the extent that some of its members are in open conflict with the chairman and there is a rift between members and the accident investigators who view themselves as independent of the board members.

Mr. Sopinka states in a later comment:

> It is fundamental to its image as an independent body that its direction be vested in a board and not an individual.

He was referring to the powers conferred in the chairman of the CASB, and how many of these powers should be conferred to the Board.

Let us refer to Mr. Justice Sopinka's recommendations to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) in February, 1988, regarding Clause 5 of the Transportation Accident Investigation Board Bill, dealing with powers and duties of the chairman.

He recommended that Clause 5 be replaced by the following:

"1. The Chairman is the chief executive officer of the Board and subject to Section 2 hereof shall have the responsibility for the administration of the Board and such powers and duties as are delegated to him by the Board.

2. In exercising the powers conferred on him by subsection 1, by the Public Service Employment Act, and the Financial Administration Act, and by this Act, the Chairman is subject to and shall act in accordance with the general policies, resolutions, rules and regulations of the Board.

3. In the event of the absence or incapacity of the Chairman, or if there is no chairman, the Governor–in–Council may authorize a member to act as chairman for the time being and a member so authorized, while so acting, has and may exercise and perform all the powers and duties of the Chairman".

Clause 5 of the Transportation Accident Investigation Board Act states:

(1) The Governor in Council shall designate one member to be the Chairman of the Board.

(2) The Chairman is the chief executive officer of the Board and has exclusive responsibility for managing personnel matters, financial matters and property matters and for all other aspects of the internal management of the Board, including

(a) directing the staff and apportioning its work, subject to subsections 10(2) and (3);

(b) directing the members and apportioning their work, subject to section (8); and

(c) convening meetings in accordance with section 12 and presiding at meetings in accordance with any by–laws made under paragraph 8(a).

(3) The Chairman may, subject to any limitations specified in the instrument of delegation,

(a) delegate to any member any power or duty of the Chairman related to

(i) convening or presiding at meetings or

(ii) directing the members or apportioning their work, and

(b) delegate to the staff of the Board any power or duty of the Chairman under this Act, except the matters described in paragraph (a)

(4) A delegation under subsection (3) may be revoked in writing at any time by the Chairman.

(5) In the event of the absence or incapacity of the Chairman, or if the office of chairman is vacant, a member designated, either before or after that occurrence, by the Governor in Council shall act as Chairman during the continuance of that absence or incapacity or until a new Chairman is designated.

Mr. Justice Sopinka's recommendation to confer to the Board presently held powers of the chairman was rejected outright. Instead, the chairman's powers, duties and responsibilities have been increased. Therefore, in accordance with Mr. Sopinka's legal opinion, the serious problems of dissension and division caused by the Board's inadequate powers will continue, if not worsen. In no way does Clause 5 of the Transportation Accident Investigation Board Bill address this problem which threatens the independence of the Board. Increased powers to the chairman, as Mr. Justice Sopinka noted, does not allow for an amelioration of the relationship between the Director of Investigations and the Board members.

Mr. Justice Sopinka observed that evidence was being withheld from the Board of the CASB by the Director of Investigations. He further noted that the Director of Investigations placed serious limitations on Board members. Mr. Justice Sopinka commented that: "Because of limitations placed upon the Board members by the Director of Investigations, the Board is precluded from conducting a meaningful review in many instances".

In his summary, Mr. Justice Sopinka stated the main cause of this serious inconsistency to be the fact that the Chairman appoints the Director of Investigations under the CASB Act. He said that this situation was based on the rationale that the Board is an adjudicating body and should be separate from the investigators because the Board adjudicates on the findings of the investigators. Mr. Justice Sopinka totally disagreed with this rationale, and so do I. He noted that this is an erroneous concept. The Board is an investigative body and its report is not a judicial or quasi judicial finding. Indeed, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board Act expressly prohibits the Board from finding fault or liability.

The field investigation and the preparation of the report of the Board are one process and should not be torn asunder.

Mr. Justice Sopinka therefore recommended that the Board appoint the Director of Investigation under the Transportation Accident Investigation Board Act because the Board bears the responsibility, ultimately, for the quality of the report.

It should be noted that the Canadian Bar Association concurred with Mr. Justice Sopinka as well. In a report submitted in April, 1987, to Transport Canada, the Canadian Bar Association, also responding to a request for comments on the draft version of the Transportation Accident Investigation Board Bill, stated that there are three features of the legislation that, in the Canadian Bar Association's submission, jeopardized the necessary degree of independence. The first of these relates to the appointment and role of the Director of Investigation required by Clause 9 of the TAIB draft Act. The clause is strangely silent on the question of who appoints the director. It should be clear that it is the Board for otherwise independence of the Board is directly threatened. This threat is all the more serious when it is considered that the director has the exclusive authority to direct the conduct of investigations by the Board.

Two highly respected legal opinions recommended strongly that the directors of investigation be appointed by the Board so as to establish the Board's ultimate independence in its relationship with the investigative division.

The second recommendation relates to conferring powers or authority on the director in a manner that would have unduly restricted the Board's activities. The Canadian Bar Association summarized it by saying that the director being appointed by the board is a mark of independence showing that a tribunal controls its own procedures. However, the Government of Canada saw fit to do otherwise in total opposition to the opinions of a Supreme Court judge and the Canadian Bar Association, two very highly respected sources of opinion. Instead of adopting these recommendations and granting the power to appoint the directors of investigation to the Board, the Government opted for the status quo.

I will suffer the House to listen to Clause 9 of the TAIB Bill as introduced on July 8, 1988, because I think it is that important. Clause 9(1) provides that such employees as are necessary for the proper conduct of the work of the Board, including investigators shall, be appointed in accordance with the Public Service Employment Act. If a conflict of interest would not thereby be created, the chairman may engage on a temporary basis the services of persons having technical or specialized knowledge to assist the Board in carrying out its duties under this Act and may pay them such remuneration and expenses as the Board, with the approval of Treasury Board, may fix. In this clause as it is drafted, the board does not have the power to appoint the directors of investigation. The Public Service Employment Act confers this authority upon the chairman.

Clause 9(2) also confers upon the chairman the authority to appoint any additional staff as required. Both Clause 9(1) and Clause 9(2) are diametrically opposed to the recommendations of Mr. Justice Sopinka and the Canadian Bar Association. Why has the Government taken that route?

Why would the Government wish to restrict the activities of a board being established for the purpose of maximizing its independence? Why maintain a clause within a Bill that has proven to have contributed to widespread dissension because the director of investigation, supported by the chairman, has withheld key evidence from the Board, thereby seriously restricting its ability to report and recommend safety measures? Is any board in Canada truly independent when staff not only control the procedures but in fact set the agenda? The Canadian Aviation Safety Board has been plagued by this situation for some time and there is no reason whatsoever to believe that the new TAIB will not be similarly affected.

Mr. Justice Sopinka recommended that Clause 9(2) be redrafted by substituting "board" in place of "chairman" in the second line in order to conform with the Public Service Employment Act and the Financial Administration Act. Clause 9(1) remains the same, but as pointed out above, the chairman acts subject to the limitations of Clause 5. Without doubt, had these recommendations been incorporated into the TAIB Bill, the new Board would have had full authority over its staff and would have functioned as a truly independent board of directors.

The independence of the Board from Transport Canada is now in jeopardy because of the following: first, the observer status. Clause 23(2)(a) of the TAIB Bill allows the Minister of Transport to designate an observer at any investigation of any transportation occurrence. This provision recognizes that the Minister of Transport (Mr. B. Bouchard) has the authority to designate an observer at any time for any occurrence, an authority which no other party has. The question is, does this erode in any way the independence of the Board. I believe it does.

Mr. Justice Sopinka concluded that the Board's investigators would not be biased by the presence of an observer designated by the Minister. The Canadian Bar Association did not view this in the same light. The mere existence of the preferred status is undesirable and indeed unnecessary, it says. The Canadian Bar Association felt that because Clause 23(3) empowered the Board to remove an observer and therefore the Minister's representative, why should it not be simply empowered to confer observer status on that representative in the first instance. The Canadian Bar Association concluded that this special status which was maintained in Bill C–142 represents an erosion of the Board's independence because the Minister, not the board, holds the power to designate.

Second, we must talk about the career opportunities of investigators. Mr. Justice Sopinka observed that investigators at the CASB demonstrated favouritism toward Transport Canada at the expense of the board because all opportunities for career advancement rested with Transport Canada. In other words, there is the suggestion that because these investigators, in looking for career advancement, must go to Transport Canada, they have to please Transport Canada. This situation was seen to have contributed to a reduction in co–operation with board members and therefore an erosion of the board's independence. Mr. Justice Sopinka stated that the investigators always had one eye on the job with Transport Canada. He recommended that a new provision be added to Clause 9 that would prevent investigators from seeking employment with Transport Canada for one year after termination of employment with the board. His recommendation for Clause 9(5) is that no person who has been designated under Clause 9(1), while he holds a certificate of such designation or for a period of one year after he ceases to hold a certificate of designation, shall be employed by Transport Canada without the approval of the board.

Some of the most serious problems with the Canadian Aviation Safety Board Act have not been addressed in the proposed transportation accident investigation Board Bill. Strong recommendations submitted by the Canadian Bar Association and Mr. Justice Sopinka among others, recommendations which would have gone a long way toward correcting these problems, have been rejected by the Government. Therefore, it is expected that the dissension, conflict of interest and erosion of the board's independence which plagued the CASB will simply be transferred to the new TAIB. Both the chairman and the director of investigation are perceived to hold too much power in the present board. This situation ties the hands of the board in limiting its role and function while infringing on its independence. Moreover, the TAIB Bill fails to cut some of Transport Canada's conduits to the board which also restricts its independence.

The failure of the Government to adopt recommendations from two of the most respected sources of legal opinions in Canada raises serious questions. Many controversial and contradictory events have taken place at the CASB in recent times. These need no elaboration. Why has the Government chosen not to adopt provisions that would have corrected these and gone a long way toward improving transportation safety standards in Canada?

The concept of an independent Board to investigate transportation accidents in the air was created in 1984 under a Liberal Government. It was an excellent idea which has been applauded by experts all over the world. The new Transportation Accident Investigation Board that the Minister is proposing to replace the Canadian Aviation Safety Board is modelled after the CASB, and rightly so.

Accident investigation is a crucial element in ensuring high levels of safety standards in this country. The recommendations flowing from investigation reports form the cornerstone of Canada's safety regulations which protect travellers on a daily basis. Therefore, this new multi–modal investigation agency must be of the highest standards, employing top Canadian experts who remain thoroughly independent from the Minister. We will ensure that the TAIB is such an organization by the time this Bill becomes law.

The Liberal Party is curious as to why this multi–modal board is being established on such an urgent basis. Is it really to promote increased safety, or is it to effectively wipe out the four dissenting board members who, for the last three years, have been questioning the causes of the Gander crash? Is it to eliminate dissension on a future board, or is it to eliminate dissenters on the present board?

We believe that the CASB would not have had to be eliminated and replaced at this time had the Government done the only right thing several months ago and called a judicial inquiry into the Gander crash, before the dissension on the Board had grown to a point of being unworkable.

This unjustified delay not only compounded the problem of dissension, but contributed to a lengthy public debate and put into serious doubt the ability of the Government to safeguard the high safety standards to which Canadians have become accustomed.

This Bill was read for the first time in the previous session on July 8, 1988. At that time the Minister stated: "The National Transportation Act—places safety at the top of our list of objectives. The Government takes this commitment seriously—". That was a very honourable statement, Madam Speaker. However, since that time Canadians have learned that the Government did not take that commitment seriously. Since then we have learned of the serious shortage of air traffic controllers at Canadian airports, the ironic shortage of inspectors for large commercial aircraft, the controversy over the cause of the Gander crash, the Government's inability to offset the dangerous effects of deregulation, the Dryden crash, and other serious shortfalls.

We can only hope today that the Government is serious about committing itself to high safety standards for Canadians, and is not about to generate more rhetoric without action. The safety of Canadian travellers is far too vital to be mishandled in any way. It is far too vital for political games to be played with the safety of Canadians.

We could go on and on about the Government's negligent mishandling of air safety. It is well documented and requires an immediate remedy on several fronts. Today, our attention is focused on transportation accident investigation and the new Bill C-2 presently before the House.

The Liberal Party of Canada believes that the Government is making a serious mistake by rushing this Bill through the House before Mr. Justice Willard Estey has had an opportunity to review the record of investigation into the circumstances surrounding the Gander crash.

We say this because Mr. Justice Estey's review may—and I use the word "may"—result in a recommendation to the Minister for a judicial inquiry which would have a profound impact on aviation accident investigation, and subsequently on Bill C-2.

In the same manner that the Dubin inquiry preceded the Canadian Aviation Safety Board Act of 1984 whose recommendations form the backbone of that piece of legislation, we strongly believe that a full judicial commission of inquiry into the Gander crash should, by all reasonableness, precede this legislation. Only in this manner can we establish an accident investigation agency that will promote safety in Canada to maximum efficiency, and operate on a day-to-day basis with the least possible opportunity for dissension to arise.

We believe that for reasons of covering up certain compromising events, the Government has refused to call a judicial inquiry over the last several months, and now it is clearly caught in a situation of putting the cart before the horse. From the very beginning of its mandate, the Government has not listened to the people. From day one it has had a hidden agenda, an agenda to sell us out to the Americans. However, in this incident when Americans were killed on Canadian soil, the Government even failed them and their surviving relatives. No effort, no expense, and no fear should have prevented a calm, thorough, and orderly investigation of the crash at Gander.

This Bill should go back to the drawing board. It should be redrafted from a to z. If it is not, it will have a very turbulent flight through the committee stage. We in the Official Opposition will not let this slipshod travesty of a Bill go forward in its present form.

Someone has done a snow job on the Minister. This Bill is designed to be unworkable. The entire Board is a mirage. The investigator is responsible to himself, and the latest government attempt by Mr. Justice Estey's inquiry is not likely to produce much new information because, by his terms of reference, Mr. Estey is not allowed to look at any new information. Again, it looks like a whitewash.

No new information will be heard from anyone. I think that that is important. Who does the Government think it is kidding? Canadians are entitled to better than this from the Minister and the Government.

While the Minister's words were laudatory in his presentation of Bill C-2 on second reading, I would strongly urge him to take the advice of other people to go back to the drawing board and to call a judicial inquiry into the Gander crash, and start over and draft a Bill that will in fact make it possible for Canadians again to have confidence in the air and on the ground.

• (1200)

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I wish to start my contribution to the debate on Bill C-2 by apologizing to the Minister and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Miramichi (Mr. Dionne), for not being here for the Minister's full presentation and the first half of the Hon. Member's presentation. The realities of air transportation do not get one from one's riding through Toronto very quickly these days.

I want to start first by saying a few things about my colleague, the Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin), who just joined us, who has been the NDP's transport critic for over 20 years. He has said, I told you so, to more Ministers of Transport than I think a lot of us could ever remember. And he has usually been right. When he has told the Government, whether it has been a Liberal Government or a Conservative Government, that they were going off on the wrong tangent, or they were doing the wrong things, time proved him correct. I think it is important that we listen to individuals like the Member for Regina—Lumsden, and thank him for his contribution to transportation, to air safety, to rail safety, to all forms of transportation in this country.

I am going to approach Bill C-2 on a fairly non-partisan basis. I think we have to recognize that we are in a point in history when we have to learn from our mistakes. The Hon. Member for Miramichi was castigating the Government over what they were doing, but in fact all the Government has done is to recreate the Canadian Aviation Safety Board legislation under the new Act. That CASB legislation, I want to remind Members, was a creation of the former Liberal Government. They were the ones who put in place the rules that we found so unworkable as we came to examine serious crashes in this country.

Let us be very clear, this is not a Bill that is there to quickly enhance safety in this country, whether it is safety in the air, safety on the rails, safety on the water, or safety in terms of moving commodities by pipelines. This is a Bill designed to pick up the pieces, to find out what went wrong, why it did not go right and who failed. That is the purpose of this Bill. It is an after the fact piece of legislation. Hopefully, because of the work done by the investigators and by the Board, we will find out the why, and be able to make recommendations so that that situation is not recreated on another rail line, on another aircraft, or another pipeline somewhere down the road.

The whole process is a confused one. It is a confused one within the Board itself as it existed under the CASB, which is now being recreated almost identically under the National Accident Investigation Board. There is confusion in terms of the relationship between the old BOARD, THE NEW Board, and the Minister. Is there a conflict of interest? Is there a perceived conflict of interest?

What happens when it comes down to enacting the recommendations of the new Board? And let us say they are not disputed recommendations, that it is a unanimous recommendation that this went wrong and the Government should do this to prevent it in the future. What happens if the Government comes back and says, "Thank you very much, Board, but no, we cannot afford it, or we do not think you are right." It is a very confused relationship, and what I would like to do this morning is to outline some of the concerns and some of the questions that a number of people have with regard to how the CASB has operated, how they see the new multi-modal Board operating, and lay out some responsibilities and some possible roles for the transport committee to take this legislation, to hear from people in the know, people who have been involved in the CASB, people who are railroaders by lifestyle, by profession, who work on the ships, and the engineers, not just in the context of an aircraft engineer, a ship engineer or a pipeline engineer, but those specialists who have an understanding of how things fly, how things move, and what can affect their ability to get from point A to point B safely.

I want to take a look at what has gone on in the past. I think it is important that we reflect on the two studies that have been done for the former Minister of Transport, as it relates to the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and its operation, in particular, the apparent conflict between board members, who I might add were appointed both by the previous Liberal Government and by the current Conservative Government. Those two Parties have some responsibility for at least recognizing that they have had a say in how that Board would function, and who has been on it. I think we have to recognize that.

A counsel for Stikeman, Elliott in Toronto, now Justice Sopinka of the Supreme Court, in a letter to the then Minister of Transport, now Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) on February 3, 1988, wrote:

> The main problem, generally stated, is that the CASB is not operating as a cohesive unit in pursuance of its objective of identifying safety deficiencies and making recommendations to remedy them". Rather, it has become fractious to the extent that some of its members are in open conflict with the Chairman and there is a rift between members and the accident investigators who view themselves as independent of the Board Members.

> The result of this dissension is that many members of the board feel powerless to carry out their mandate. On occasion some of the Board members have been unable to obtain investigation of facts which they consider essential in order to carry out their function. The investigators have taken the position that the material upon which the Board is to operate is the report prepared by the investigators.
> Suggestions or requests that the investigators examine other facts or causes have been met with the observation that the investigation is exclusively within the prerogative of the Director of investigations.

One would ask, why have a board if there is going to be staff who do all of the work? It continues to read:

> I have observed that, in the position they have taken, the investigators are supported by the Chairman. The latter has interpreted the provisions of S. 5 of the CASB Act and the provisions of Public Service Employment Act and the Financial Administration Act as conferring on him virtually exclusive power to run the Board and its staff subject to his right to delegate to Board Members such powers as he deems appropriate.
> This view does not extend to the Board's power to review the accident reports but as I point out because of the limitations placed upon the Board members by the Director of Investigations the Board is precluded from conducting a meaningful review in many instances.

That is the key element in this legislation and any other legislation. When we as a Parliament establish a board, do we establish it as a rubber stamp of a group of bureaucrats who perhaps have expertise in investigating or administering, or do we give them the authority to take charge? In some cases they may do it through their chairman, in some cases they may do it through a director of investigations, or a chief administrative officer.

We have to be clear in this House as to what role we want to impose on them. I think what Justice Sopinka was saying in his letter to the Minister was that it was not clear. There were those who interpreted the Board as a rubber stamp board, that really the power was within the chair and the Director of Investigations, and that the Board itself could not in any way attempt to focus investigations in a certain area, to point out gaps in investigations, and forthwith have the investigators go and check that area. There seems to be a real gap in the authority and the delegating of authority. That is one of the tasks that we have to assume as members of the transport committee who will be charged with the responsibility of reviewing Bill C-2, that is,to take a look at that relationship.

Let me go back again to the letter to the Minister, and I am dealing with another factor. It reads:

> The fact that the CASB reports to Parliament through, and has its Estimates presented by the Minister of Transport, has also been referred to as contributing to the appearance of conflict.
> Finally the view in the industry is that the competence of the investigators and the quality of their investigations and reports has deteriorated in recent years. Some feel that there is insufficient investigation of human factors, and that the Board lacks technical expertise and facilities. The investigators, on the other hand, complain that they spend valuable time attending as witnesses in court or at coroner's inquests.
> Not all of these problems, particularly the last, can be solved by changes in the legislation. Much of the success of the future Board, as in the case of any body or organization, will depend on the quality of people appointed and the resources provided.

I will come back to those aspects later.

I want now to turn to a study done again for the former Minister of Transport by James F. Hickling Management Consultants Ltd. It was submitted to the Minister of Transport on October 30, 1987. At the time the report was held up as an example to say that there were no problems with the Board, that everything was A-okay. However, upon close reading of the report, going beyond some of the summary comments, and if we look at the details of surveys conducted, as well as discussions with board members and with officials and staff of Transport Canada, from commercial aviation and general aviation people and others we find that there is a relatively high level of uncomfortableness with the activities of the Board and its staff.

Let me start out on a positive note. One of the questions that was asked was: "Do you feel that CASB operates as an aviation safety organization separate and independent from Transport Canada?" The vast majority, 24 to 1, said: "Yes". Another question asked was: "Do you believe that CASB is in a conflict of interest with Transport Canada?" Some 18 respondents stated that there was no conflict while 6 responded affirmatively. It is interesting to note that three of the six are from Transport Canada, two from commercial aviation and one from general aviation. It is not as if this was a bee in the bonnet of one group, it was spread throughout the industry. Thus it is safe to say, as is stated in the report's summary comments, that slightly under 25 per cent of respondents believe that Transport Canada and CASB are in a conflict of interest, with both the commercial aviation respondents believing that there is a conflict.

One point mentioned in support of the claim that a conflict exists is that under the Act the Minister of Transport may appoint a representative to attend any investigation. This was seen as an example of conflict inasmuch as no comparable privilege is available to other interests and involved parties.

Another question asked was: "In your opinion are the findings of CASB objective, i.e. are they impartial?" A total of 18 replied affirmatively while 6 replied negatively. Four out of the six who replied negatively were from Transport Canada. We see the development of a pattern in which so far in the public debate there has been a conflict among board members. But here there is an indication that Transport Canada officials, and I assume that these are the people who work directly with CASB or who are concerned about aviation safety, are questioning the objectivity of the Board.

Another question asked was: "Are the findings of the CASB credible?" Sixteen said: "Yes" while seven said: "No". Six of the seven were from Transport Canada. Close to 30 per cent of the respondents questioned the credibility of CASB. Another question asked was: "Are CASB recommendations technically feasible, i.e. can they be implemented?" Eighteen said: "Yes" while six said: "No". Six of those were from Transport Canada.

The respondents were asked: "Are CASB recommendations economically feasible?" Fourteen said: "Yes" while nine said: "No". That is to say that 36 per cent of the respondents believe that CASB recommendations are economically not feasible while 56 per cent believe that they are.

Madam Speaker, if you look at that just on the surface you will say: "There is a problem. CASB is off the mark. They want the sky. They want chapter and verse to ensure that there is no risk whatsoever". I recall a study that I had the CASB initiate. It was a safety study concerning the area of northern Ontario between Wawa and Kenora. There was a belief that in an area referred to as the Wawa triangle there was an extraordinarily high number of general aviation accidents. As a result of a particular crash in the Wawa area the CASB agreed to evolve the study into a general safety study of the region. It found that that part of northern Ontario had a higher level of accidents per capita than the Canadian average. It was not as high as northern Canada. Some of the reasons for this were pilots unfamiliar with the area pushing into the weather and a few other minor reasons. It recommended improvement of weather services.

A report went to the Minister and the Department who came back and said: "No". They argued at the time that in some cases what CASB had recommended was not technically possible at this point in time. In other cases they indicated that they were not prepared to do it. We just cannot assume that CASB is the one at fault when we read this particular statistic in terms of the economic feasibility of the recommendations.

The question of staffing is the nub of the problem in air safety in Canada. The question asked in this respect was: "Are findings and recommendations made available in a timely manner?" Fifteen respondents said: "No" while seven said: "Yes". Some 60 per cent of respondents believe that Canadian Aviation Safety Board findings and recommendations are not made available in a timely manner. This figure is higher for Transport Canada than for other respondents. Non-Transport Canada respondents are evenly divided on the matter. As of last September there were 81 members of the inspection staff. On average they received 600 occurrences to investigate a year. They have a backlog of 1200, to which they have yet to respond. Is that because the Minister of Transport has been unable to acquire the person-years necessary to maintain the level of investigations appropriate given the response time needed? This gives us a sense of how people outside of CASB feel about the operations of the Board.

I would now like to return to the role and size of the CASB as detailed by Hickling Management Consultants. This is the report about which the Government spoke very highly and one which was used as a defence to criticism from the Members on this side of the House concerning the Government's lack of action.

The role of the CASB and the roles of individual CASB members relative to that of the chairman have been the subject of much recent discussion within CASB. Representations have been made to outside bodies by individual board members and by the Chairman of the Board to seek advice , clarification and direction on individual aspects of these two issues.

Dealing first with the over-all role of the CASB, interviews of CASB board members and senior officials suggest different interpretations of the Act with regard to the appropriate degree of involvement of the board members in this investigation function. A questionnaire subsequently confirmed this. From the analysis of the questionnaire it was found that the board members who responded to the questionnaire were evenly split on the key issue of the independence of the investigation function. Results obtained from the questionnaire shed some insight into why some board members felt this independence in Canada had been detrimental to the operation of CASB. With the exception of the above group there was a general consensus that the investigation function should remain independent. It was determined in the international comparison that the U.K. and the U.S. both have independent investigation functions.

Dealing with the role of CASB members vis-à-vis the chairman, one sees that under the CASB legislation it should operate as does a private corporation's board of directors, with major decisions being taken by vote. Another view holds that the chairman is the chief executive officer with authorities conveyed by the CASB legislation and by collateral legislation, the Public Service Employment Act and the Financial Administration Act. The chairman can delegate some but not all the authorities conveyed to him under legislation. In summary, several of the CASB members see themselves as playing a role in guiding the investigations and studying policies to govern the selection of investigating staff.

The report found that there is a fundamental split within the CASB about the respective roles of the chairman and other board members and about the responsibilities and independence of the Director of Investigations. These divisions are so entrenched that if allowed to continue the Board's effectiveness could be seriously impaired.

In this regard some provisions of the CASB Act invite various interpretations. In part, this is because the wording of the Act does not distinguish between "Board" as a synonym for CASB and "Board" as a synonym for the CASB Board. This absence indicates the philosophy underlying the Act.

The more we examine these documents, the more we recognize the confusion that has existed within the Board. What has the Government done? In the wake of the Gander crash and many months later in the wake of the Dryden crash, it would appear that the Government has put them in suspended animation. It has appointed judges to handle an inquiry to see if an inquiry is needed in Gander and to head up the inquiry into the Dryden crash. But what about the inspection staff? Are they going to be the ones who are working for the judge in Toronto who is going to hold the hearings? Is it going to be the same group of people? Does that change the problem? Or is it that they only have one person to convince instead of a group of eight to ten?

Another thing is very clear, Madam Speaker. The night before the legislation was tabled in this House, I went back and compared the Bill that was tabled last year, which the Minister indicates is substantially the same as Bill C-2, the multi-modal Bill, to the Canadian Aviation Safety Act as passed in 1984. I compared the components dealing with the Board. Substantially, there is no change. There is the same level of confusion between the powers. It suggests that the Government intends to leave things as they are. The chairman and the Director of Investigations have the authority. The members of the Board, now limited to an additional four, are there not as aides to focus the investigation, but are there in part as bench-warmers to rubber-stamp the decisions made by the chair or made by the Director of Investigation.

So what the Government has not done, Madam Speaker, is, first, it hasn't learned the lessons of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. It hasn't taken the time to rethink the legislation, listen to the comments of Justice Sopinka and to those of Hickling to bring forth some legislation that more accurately reflects—assuming that it wants to change it—the way in which the Board works and the way in which it relates to the Minister and to this House. It has not done so.

So I think the responsibility then is up to the Transport Committee of the House of Commons. This committee has historical involvement in this legislation in that it was the committee that dealt with the Canadian Aviation Safety Board prior to the establishment of legislative committees when it went through this House back in '83 and '84. There are people there who are knowledgeable about air, rail, road, marine service and to a lesser extent pipelines. We have staff available to us. I hope the Minister is prepared to allow us the freedom to pursue the opportunity we have in this House to take the principle of this Bill, which we all support and examine it. We recognize the need for a clean-up crew. We need to find out what went wrong and to find ways of preventing a recurrence. It is a very noble cause.

Let us invite the members of the Aviation Safety Board to come in and talk to us about their experiences, about what they liked and did not like about the old legislation, how we can improve it. Let us have people who are involved in those sectors outside of aviation—rail, marine, pipelines—come in to tell us what they like and don't like about their past experiences. They are all operating under one form or another of an accident investigation board, whether it is under the Canada Shipping Act or the Railway Act, wherever the legislation falls. They have experience and know what works and what does not work. So let us invite them in.

Let us also contact our colleagues in other jurisdictions. Hickling surveyed at length the United States' and the United Kingdom's experience. I think we should meet with the agencies and the people in Washington who have developed their own system in the context of deregulation and who are learning from their mistakes as well. Then we can build a better Bill. We have to make sure that those who operate these planes, boats and trains, who maintain and operate the pipeline also have an opportunity to raise their concerns. I know they have concerns, Madam Speaker, as we have already been speaking to them.

We have to recognize also that we are dealing with different kinds of employee-employer relationships. It is a different kind of situation in aviation as opposed to railways. I think we have to recognize that we might have to treat different modes in a different way. Does it make sense to throw pipelines in with railroads? I am not sure. Maybe it is because there are not that many pipeline accidents, but I am sure my colleagues from B.C. will provide me with the information that there are more than I realize.

We have to make sure that the employee representatives have a chance to have their say. I know one of the things they are going to raise, particularly on the railroad side, is who gets on the Board. Under the current structure there are the Order in Council appointments, which really means that the Minister of Transport recommends from a list that comes out of nowhere. Someone suggested that it comes from Party lists somewhere else in the country, but we know it just comes out of nowhere. He makes recommendations and appointments are made. The experience on the rail side is that it tends to be old company hacks who have a bias towards the railroads, in favour of the railroads. So the workers are saying,"Hey, every time there is an accident, it is going to be employees who are responsible. It is not going to be the company." So we have to find a mechanism to make sure that the people who are placed on this Board are the appropriate ones for the job.

There is a way that we can do that. In the United States, they have a tradition of review by Congress of presidential appointments. In Canada we do not have that tradition. We did move a little closer to that in the last Parliament where, as a result of the review of parliamentary operations, we did have the opportunity to review after the fact any Order in Council appointments. They would automatically be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport, for example. But usually we would not get those until many months after those people were actually in place. First, they would be appointed. Then they would have to wait to be gazetted. It was only after being gazetted that it would come to us. I think in the case of a board that is charged with accident investigation, unlike boards that are charged with implementation of government policy or a government direction, whether it is a Conservative, Liberal or New Democratic Government, this is more of a non-partisan kind of committee.

I think it would be appropriate to develop a mechanism by which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard), for example, could seek nominations from all sectors. Perhaps he could even make a short list, providing CVs and describing their knowledgeability, and refer that to an all-Party committee of the House which would still have a government majority. We are dealing with the ultimate safety of people who travel and work in our transportation industry. They should have the opportunity to know that, at the very least, these are not back-room decisions and that those appointed to take charge of these very important matters have been scrutinized, not in terms of the fiascos in the United States, but in terms of the ability of these people to do the job.

The Transport Committee, during discussion of this Bill, has responsibility to look at that separation between the Transportation Accident Investigation Board and the Minister of Transport. One of the two reports to which I referred earlier suggested that perhaps it should go through a Minister other than the Minister of Transport.

Another suggestion I would like to make is for a procedure, which I believe is done in other instances in the House, by which rather than reporting to the Minister the Transportation Accident Investigation Board becomes a body of the House and reports to the House through the normal procedures. The report is tabled in the House and referred to the Transport Committee and the Minister of Transport. The response of the Minister of Transport is tabled in the House, not made to the CASB, so that the people who have been elected by the citizens of this country can have an opportunity to judge both the appropriateness of the Investigation Board's findings and the response of the Minister. If necessary, it can go back to the Transport Committee for further review.

In some ways that deals with the kind of question raised by the Member for Miramichi (Mr. Dionne), and the Liberal Party's call for a public inquiry into Gander. Such an inquiry becomes a built-in mechanism. Rather than an opposition Party or an individual having to make such a demand, the process would already exist and be set in motion by whatever procedure must take place in the House.

We also have to look at the responsibility of the Minister of Transport to accept those recommendations or give good grounds for refusing them. One reason that is unacceptable for rejecting recommendations is that there is not enough money. The recent report regarding the lack of separation between two airplanes at Pearson International Airport clearly stated that one reason for that was the overwork of the air traffic controllers.

Obviously there are a number of short and long- term solutions to that problem, but once it is identified as a problem, and not simply an administrative one but one that could lead to a mid-air collision of two large aircraft, it must be dealt with.

We must find an appropriate mechanism, and clearly we have to do it through the Transport Committee where this legislation will be referred. We have to find a way to make the Minister of Transport, the railroads, airline companies, pipeline companies or shipping companies directly responsible for the implementation of those recommendations. It is an important issue for which we must find a solution. We cannot continue leaving it up to the whim of a Minister of Transport or the staff of the Department if we are to protect the travelling public and the people who work in the industry.

We must also deal with the area of separation of investigations. Transport Canada still conducts investigations. Only when the Canadian Aviation Safety Board wants to investigate a separation occurrence does Transport Canada step aside. Is it appropriate to allow Transport Canada to continue investigating matters over which it has direct control?

Transport Canada decides on the rules of operation for Pearson International Airport. It decided to cut back on the number of air traffic controllers entering into the system, even though it was warned that a crisis was developing.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Auditor General had something to do with it, too.

Mr. Angus: Should the Ministry of Transport have any further responsibility for accident investigations, or should it all be in the bailiwick of the new Transportation Accident Investigation Board?

Is it part of that perceived conflict of interest? It is true that the Auditor General referred to it, but with all due respect, the Auditor General is not necessarily always right.

Mr. Blenkarn: He ought to be called before the committee to explain why he made that reference.

Mr. Angus: That is probably something worth-while doing.

We will support this Bill in principle at second reading because we believe the principle is sound. We recognize that there is a limitation in the wording. We have some questions about the marine aspect, as well as some questions about the pipeline side and rail side. My colleagues will address those in debate and we will raise them particularly within the committee.

For example, one minor question that jumped out at me when I read the Bill as I was coming here today concerned the definition of commodity pipeline. For this Act, that definition includes everything but does not include a pipeline as defined in the National Energy Board Act. Does that mean the big ones? Does it mean the big ones are exempted? That is one question we have to ask because, if that is what it means, that part is not worth the paper it is written on.

There are a number of other questions that must be answered. For example, what about the ministerial planes? It is my understanding that they are under DND control and, according to this legislation, if there is an accident at a DND airport the military will investigate it, not the Transportation Accident Investigation Board.

What about the Snowbirds? It may suggest in the legislation that an accident with the Snowbirds at Thunder Bay or Pearson Airport would be investigated by the new Transportation Accident Investigation Board, but it is not clear. If they have an accident at a military base, the military clearly has jurisdiction. We must clear up those jurisdictional questions.

I want to read into the record the Hickling recommendations with regard to the proposed future multi-modal Board. They are worth considering and are a good basis for review by the Transport Committee. The report states:

> These recommendations are based on findings derived from an evaluation of CASB's first three years of operation. They are intended to provide guidance to those charged with framing the legislation, regulations, organization and processes that will govern the operation of the proposed new multimodal accident investigation/safety board intended to address aviation, rail, marine and commodity pipeline transportation.
> Since the lessons learned from CASB may not all be relevant to the design of the multimodal investigation board, these recommendations are presented in the form of a model.
> This model portrays a a proposed philosophy, some key provisions of the legislation and organization and a process that could apply to the multimodal board. Portraying these recommendations as a model is intended to emphasize that they are based solely on experience with aviation safety and some adaptation may be required to meet the requirements of the multimodal board. In what follows, various elements of the model are presented separately. Elements of the philosophy and process models should also be taken into account by those drafting the TAIB legislation.
> 3.2.1. Philosophy Model
> The ultimate goal of any safety board is to prevent future accidents. To facilitate achieving this goal, the occurrence investigation and report process comprises five elements: investigation, assigning cause, identifying safety deficiencies, adjudication and reporting.
> To ensure credibility for the findings and recommendations of the TAIB:
> - the process must afford an opportunity for all pertinent information to be considered;
> - the process must incorporate an adjudicatory function to assess the merits of contending viewpoints on occurrence investigations when such differences arise;
> - the results of the TAIB's activities must be made public;
> - the process must ensure that occurrences are thoroughly and professionally investigated; and
> - members of the board of the proposed TAIB should be selected on the basis of publicly-known criteria that would ensure that board has stature and respect within all parts of the transportation community.
> To ensure objectivity:
> - all the TAIB's constituent elements must be independent of the regulatory function, and seen to be independent;
> - the investigation and adjudicatory functions must operate independently of one another; and,
> - the process must allow responsibility for the causes of occurrences to be assigned unequivocally, without fear of adverse legal repercussions—
> To ensure effectiveness:
> - The process must operate in a timely manner; and,
> - the process must lead to likely (the possibility of) preventive action which would improve safety. The intent of this criterion is to ensure that no more occurrences are investigated than strictly necessary.

It goes on and on, but I realize that my time is now up. I look forward to the contributions of my colleagues on all sides of the House. All of us have the goal of developing an accident investigation board that not only works but works well.

• (1240)

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, when Bill C-2 was introduced in the House about two weeks ago, it was the first time that I as a new Member had to deal with legislation in its initial form. I found that I would have a chance to interpret and work with this legislation in a way different from that which I did in my previous occupation. When Bill C-2 was read for the first time, I reviewed it thoroughly—

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is there not a period for questions and comments following the third speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Normally when the first three speakers are allowed 40 minutes, there are no question or observation periods following their speeches. The floor belongs to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Comuzzi).

Mr. Comuzzi: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I had the opportunity to review thoroughly Bill C-2. I then compared Bill C-2 with the legislation that died on the order paper, Bill C-142, to see what differences there were. I then compared Bill C-2 with the legislation that is currently in operation, the Canadian Aviation Safety Act, and attempted to analyse the differences between these two pieces of legislation with the intention of seeing whether or not the new piece of legislation could be operative.

As I was going through this legislation, my thoughts returned to a time approximately 10 years ago when I was at the University of Windsor in the Faculty of Law. The professors in that faculty instilled in me an interest in statutory law, statutory interpretation and administrative law, and I thank them for that, particularly one of my favourite professors who is now the Dean of Law at McGill University. It is from that perspective that I will make my comments with respect to Bill C-2.

As I was preparing my comments, I found it interesting to read an article in the Saturday, April 15, edition of The Ottawa Citizen in which the Chairman of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, commenting on his annual report, urged Parliament to quickly pass Bill C-2 so that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board will be abolished because the Board is divided. The present Board is made up of nine members appointed by the Governor in Council. As I have stated, I have reviewed the Canadian Aviation Safety Act and I see nothing in that legislation which states that all Board decisions must be unanimous.

In reviewing most Canadian dispute resolution bodies and particularly the appellate court system, I find that these panels usually sit with three, five or nine members. The reason for this is logical and reasonable. Decisions arrived at should be arrived at on the evidence presented and members of a decision-making body may interpret that evidence differently. When decisions are made by these bodies, they are majority decisions based on the evidence presented. If the dissenting members of a panel or bench feel strongly about the issue and want to express their opinions, they usually do so by writing a dissenting opinion and stating their reasons for doing so. This is much the same as what we have seen happen recently with the Canadian Aviation Safety Board with respect to a recent investigation. There was a division of thought between the members of the Board, and as a result, there were dissenting opinions.

I would hope that Parliament is not being asked to change this legislation simply because members of a Board, members appointed by the Government I may add, cannot agree on the cause of an aviation occurrence. As stated earlier, there is nothing in the legislation that which that decisions must be unanimous. I would think it would be suspicious and in fact highly improbable for all boards constituted by legislation to arrive at unanimous decisions. Perhaps such boards that do are the ones that we should be looking into.

If there is dissension on this Board as the chairman has stated, then when and if this legislation receives Royal Assent, when selecting the five-member body to replace the present Canadian Aviation Safety Board, the Board should forgo the usual affiliation appointment process. I would urge the appointment of only the most qualified people to ensure that the Bill we are considering today will be operative and functional.

To be more pragmatic, if the only reason for the legislation is that the Board is divided, there are quicker and more effective ways to deal with this problem than to change the legislation in its entirety. The article to which I referred earlier states that the federally appointed members are deeply divided on what constitutes their duties and their responsibilities. The present act is clear in its definition under the power-granting section with respect to the duties of the Board, the duties of its chairperson and the duties of its investigators. If there is a dispute as to the interpretation of the meaning of sections of the current legislation, that dispute can certainly be settled by an application to the Federal Court for clarification of the duties imposed by the statute on the chairperson, the Board and even the investigators. I find it extremely difficult to reconcile my thinking to that of the chairperson who states that the only solution to this problem is a fast review and quick implementation of Bill C-2.

Certainly, the solution to making legislation operative is in its application by various boards appointed for that express purpose. Boards that are appointed for that purpose cannot keep running to the House to change legislation because, in their judgment, the legislation that they are entrusted to operate is inoperative. Members of those boards must use other means. There are other dispute-resolution mechanisms within our society.

After legislation is passed and becomes operative, as time goes on it may require minor changes or fine tuning, or as social conditions and circumstances change, the legislation may require some changes. Those changes can be accomplished by a variety of means. Changes to legislation can be made by making amendments to the statute or by making further regulations for which all statutes provide in order that the legislation becomes more effective. The legislation can be changed by the practice of the boards, or in the most dire of circumstances, we may have to consider changing the appointments to those boards.

As I stated earlier, members of those boards cannot keep running to Parliament to cancel one Act over another. Acts cannot be replaced with another because of the reasons stated, simply those reasons for the change in this legislation.

The article about the annual report states: "Only expedient passage of similar legislation will resolve this issue considering the depth of division". Can one imagine the floodgates of legislation that would be before the House if every administrative board was allowed to come before the House when it found itself in conflict or divided on an issue on which all board members could not agree?

The fundamental purpose of government agencies and boards is to follow the statutory powers given to them by the legislation, and to perform their duties within the framework of providing natural justice to those who are directly affected by the legislation. The tenets of natural justice do not only apply to those people who are directly affected by the legislation which is being discussed. The tenets of natural justice also apply to the manner in which board members come to their decision and follow the decision-making process.

Decision-makers are obligated to give reasons for their decisions. After hearing all the evidence, if a decision-maker cannot in good conscience agree with his or her colleagues, he or she is bound by the oath taken not to vote accordingly just for the sake of unanimity. The decision-maker must vote by his or her conscience on the strength and the weight of the evidence which has been accepted. It would be most imprudent for the House to consider this legislation if the only reason for its passage is the division of the Board. The floodgates would open and perhaps never close.

Another perceived difficulty with the present legislation is the Director of Investigations' exclusive authority to conduct probes and report to the Board. Some members on the Board interpret this section to mean that they have a responsibility to satisfy themselves about the work performance of the staff. Other members on the Board should feel that they have a right to actively participate in the day-to-day operations of the Board, including visiting the accident sites.

The sections in the Canadian Aviation Safety Board Act give the Board power to hire employees necessary to conduct the work of the Board. That includes the person referred to in Section 9 who is the Director of Investigations who has exclusive authority to direct the conduct of investigations. With respect, this is the only problem with the present legislation. It is not sufficient reason to request the passage of new legislation. It would be my hope that the purpose for introducing new legislation would be more substantive than the reason we have heard, that the Board is divisive. I invite our friends to inform us of the main reasons and purpose for the new legislation referred to as Bill C-2.

Perhaps one of the reasons for this new legislation is the multimodal requirement for an accident board to investigate all forms of transportation occurrences, not only aviation. I will return to that question later in my submission.

When one looks at the size of Canada and its climate, there are very few problems not affected by geography or climate, or both. In a country as large as Canada, transportation is more than the provision of services for travel by air, land or sea. A country like ours must develop a philosophy and a concept that meets the needs and expectations of all Canadians to develop a transportation system that is economical, efficient, and above all safe.

What is the intent of Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Transportation Accident Investigation Board? As the title states, the intent is to investigate accidents and occurrences that happen on land, sea, air, or on the pipelines.

I am advised that the fundamental function of the Board is to prevent transportation accidents or occurrences, and to investigate the reasons for accidents or occurrences. From the title of the Bill, it is submitted that not enough impetus is given to the fact that there is a dual role, one of prevention and one of investigation. Therefore, the name of the Bill should be changed to better reflect the purpose and the intent of the legislation.

We have also been advised that the intent of the legislation is to create a strong, independent board. In my understanding, an independent board means that it has no allegiance to any Ministry, group, or to any external body. Of necessity, an independent board must make a total break with all forms of Government. It must be completely independent, and its only responsibility is to the Canadian people in dealing with those major issues of safety.

We all agree with the concept and the intention of independence. However, we cannot say one thing and do another. Bill C-2 states that a five-member board is to be established, or not more than a five-member board is to be established. That language is not precise and the Bill should be more specific as to the number of members who should sit on the board.

The Bill also states that a chairperson is to be selected from the five-member board. However, he or she is not elected by the other members of the board. He or she will be appointed by the Minister of Transport. If something happens to the chairperson the Minister appoints a successor, independent of any advice from the board.

As a preliminary observation, we would suggest that the Minister appoint the five-member board and let the board elect its own chairperson. The board will set out by regulation the term of office and the other vital functions that it feels the chairperson should accomplish while he or she sits as chairperson of that board.

Bill C-2 states what the duties of the chairperson should be. The chief executive officer of the board has exclusive responsibility for all personnel matters, all financial matters, all property matters, all internal management of the board, directing staff and the work of the staff, directing and apportioning the work of the staff, and directing and apportioning the work of the board members.

It has always been my understanding that all board members are equal and the chairperson is only the first among equals. Perhaps this is the most fundamental problem with the previous legislation and the proposed legislation before us.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will now interrupt the Hon. Member. There will four minutes left to his intervention when we return, followed by a period of questions and comments.

VIA RAIL

ALLEGED MISINFORMATION ON SERVICE IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, the irresponsible attempt of this Government, and especially of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to cripple VIA rail through misinformation and double speak will have a devastating impact on the travelling population of this country. Nowhere will that impact create more hardship than in Atlantic Canada.

When will this Government stop using hysteria and misinformation and get on with the job of building a comfortable, efficient and affordable rail transportation service for the Canadian public? The time, Sir, is now.

CHILDREN

SAFETY OF CHILDREN

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, this is the National Child Safety Week in Canada. This year, based on the theme "Child Safety: A Shared Responsibility", we will particularly try to make Canadians more aware of a number of situations which present a danger to our kids.

Briefly, let me mention three ways to ensure the safety of our children. First of all, there is public awareness, then safety standards voluntarily enforced in the industry, and finally legislative measures.

Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada is implementing various awareness programs not only for adults, but also for the children themselves. For example, thousands of children have learned to recognize warning symbols on dangerous products by watching a puppet show put on by the Department.

Mr. Speaker, with the support of all Members of this House, I am sure that our children will now feel more safe in their communities.

CITIZENSHIP

CITIZENSHIP WEEK—MULTICULTURAL HERITAGE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, last week, in honour of Citizenship Week, I attended a citizenship court at Vancouver Technical School where 65 new Canadians from 28 countries were sworn in as citizens.

Judge Angela Kan spoke eloquently on the rights and responsibilities of citizenship. She explained the new Multiculturalism Act which allows people to retain their heritage and identity while becoming a part of mainstream Canada. She stressed the importance of learning English or French and urged new citizens to make new friends and participate in community affairs. She urged all of us to participate in human relations and education to counteract prejudice and misunderstanding.

I was reminded how blessed we are to live in a country with plentiful resources, a glorious environment and a rich mix of people. We have a high standard of health, education and social security. We enjoy a parliamentary democracy and our legal rights are protected.

I urge all Canadians during Citizenship Week to count our blessing and to reach out in friendship to those who chose to become Canadians.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

FOURTH ANNIVERSARY—OPPORTUNITIES FOR WOMEN

Ms. Barbara Greene (Don Valley North): Mr. Speaker, today is Equality Day, the fourth anniversary of the coming into effect of Section 15 of the Charter.

Equality Day reminds us of the important principles enshrined in our Constitution which guarantee all individuals equal access to the protection and benefits of the law without discrimination.

A measure of the fairness of our society is provided by the existence of these equality rights. A far more telling measure, however, is the extent of their application. Canadian women are acutely aware of the gap that still exists between equality in principle and equality in practice.

Since September 1984, our Government has worked with women to broaden their access to the kinds of opportunities essential to equality. Employment equity, the Federal Contractors Program, our efforts to open up training opportunities to women, our pension reforms and our recently announced intention to broaden and equalize maternity and parental benefits are proof positive of our Government's commitment to make equality real for Canadian women.

GOVERNMENT SUPPORT FOR TOBACCO FARMERS

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I follow up on what I said in this House on December 23. Tobacco farmers in Haldimand—Norfolk and throughout Canada are seeing major restructuring go on through and in their industry due to the Government's policies. During the election the Government committed itself to a $30 million program for Redux to support these farmers.

To date, these farmers have not seen a penny from this program. I urge the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to obtain approval from Treasury Board for this program quickly and to assure producers that once applications are completed the cheques will be in the mail immediately.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister also take the leadership role in negotiations with the province to eliminate the prerequisite that producers have to sell 25 per cent of their quota to be eligible for the program? The livelihood of many producers has been affected by the Government's policies and many farmers were forced out prior to the present Redux program.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister also give his commitment that his Department will review these matters on a case-by-case basis and consider them for retroactive compensation as well?

The Government has delayed too long, Mr. Speaker. Now is the time to translate promises into action.

LAW DAY—ACCESS TO JUSTICE

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of Hon. Members present that today is the seventh anniversary of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms coming into force. It has become a tradition on this day, April 17, to mark the occasion across Canada by commemorating the anniversary as Law Day. This year's "access to justice" theme is one that I strongly endorse. It reflects the right of every Canadian to have equal access to information about the laws and the legal institutions of Canada.

Information activities have been organized across Canada by the Department of Justice, the Canadian Bar Association and other lawyers to make the law more accessible to all Canadians to expand their knowledge of their rights within Canada's justice system.

As Members of this House, we should offer our active encouragement to the Canadian Bar Association as well as the many community groups across Canada in their endeavours on Law Day. Please join me in extending best wishes to all involved for a successful Law Day 1989.

FOURTH ANNIVERSARY

Mrs. Pierrette Venne (Saint-Hubert): Mr. Speaker, section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms was implemented four years ago today. That particular section guarantees each and every individual's right to equal protection and equal benefit under the law without discrimination. Because of that legal instrument, all Canadians, men and women alike, have access to a greater freedom and a vast number of opportunities.

[English]

Equality Day holds special significance for Canadian women who were among the most active and effective proponents of entrenching equality rights in our Constitution.

While we should not rest on our laurels, we can see that the House has a record number of female Members of Parliament, six of whom sit on the Cabinet. Today, women can be found in every field, every profession, every walk of life. I am proud to be part of a Government that actively supports women in their quest for equality in all walks of life.

SECTION 15—EQUALITY RIGHTS FOR WOMEN

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, today Canadian women are celebrating the anniversary of Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms coming into force. This clause guarantees equality to the women of Canada.

Canadian women depend on the women's Legal Education and Action Fund to use the Charter to promote women's equality. We also need equal access to education and jobs, child care and pay equity. For those programs we need a Government truly committed to women's rights.

How is the Conservative Government celebrating this anniversary? It is funding a gathering of REAL Women, a group opposed to the inclusion of women's rights in the Charter and dedicated to turning back the clock. This action shows us what the Government really thinks of the Constitution and of women's equality.

CROP INSURANCE PROGRAM—CALL FOR REVISION

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, many farmers in the Essex—Kent area are concerned about the poor handling of the drought relief program. This program omitted townships which should have received relief. This was due to a lack of adequate information. As a result many farmers remain uncertain about the relief they will receive. An appeal process was promised, but to date no process has been established.

Farmers throughout Canada, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and many rural groups have requested alterations to the crop insurance program. This program is inadequate.

The federal Government through the introduction of a drought relief program has admitted crop insurance is inadequate. Therefore I call upon the Government to work immediately with the provinces to revise the crop insurance program so that it will be adequate for the farmers of Canada, thus eliminating the need for poorly organized measures such as drought relief which has only been a band-aid approach to the real problem farmers face.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT'S ROLE

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, despite our government's many initiatives over the past few years to improve our environment, a SORECOM poll published yesterday shows that less than a third of the people in Québec believe their governments' contention that say they give as much importance to the environment as to economic growth.

For 92 percent of Québecers, the environment should get the same priority as the economy. Québecers are most concerned about acid rain and air pollution.

The people of Québec want effective clean-up programs and tough laws with drastic penalties for polluters.

Mr. Speaker, our government has provided unprecedented leadership in this field both at home and abroad. Consequently, I have no doubt that in the months and years to come the requirements of the people of Québec will be adequatly met.

CHILDREN

SPONSORING OF WORLD SUMMIT BY CANADA URGED

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, the United Nations Children's Fund is anxiously waiting for the Canadian Government to sponsor a special conference on the dark future of the world's children.

Through the development of low-cost health measures such as immunization and oral rehydration therapy, the annual death of children has dropped from 25 million in 1950 to 14 million in 1988. However, the debt burden has forced Third World Governments to cut health budgets by 50 per cent. It is the children who will pay the price. For lack of a 50 cent vaccine, millions of children will die. Without rehydration therapy another 2.5 million will die.

The Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) fully endorsed the Prime Minister's statement that alleviating poverty must be given a new priority on national and international agendas.

I urge the Government to live up to its commitment to help the world's poorest countries and people by sponsoring a summit for children where developing and developed nations can address the problems of the world's children living in poverty, including those in Canada. Canada could help save millions of children by sponsoring a world summit.

TAXATION

INCOME TAX FORMS—CALL FOR SIMPLIFICATION

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in Canadian homes across this land these days there is no joy. There is no laughter. There are no light hearts. Rather, the lights burn late into the night for stretched out on the kitchen tables of the country the new 62-page simplified income tax guide plagues, torments and mystifies the average Canadian.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) promised Canadians that his new tax reform would make the tax system simpler for all. But it is not simple, it is much more difficult.

In the last reported tax year over one-quarter of Canadians made mistakes in filling out their tax returns. That was before tax reform.

Accountants and tax professionals are thanking the Finance Minister for the favour. Their business is booming. Now not only do Canadians have to pay taxes, they have to pay to pay taxes.

We are calling for the Government to keep its promise. What we have seen in this year's tax form is yet another broken promise by a Government that has a long track record of broken promises.

I call on the Minister to undertake immediately to devise a truly simplified form. I suggest that those ordinary Canadians who are now carrying the largest tax burden be consulted during this process.

EQUALITY RIGHTS—GOVERNMENT'S COMMITMENT

Mr. Dave Worthy (Cariboo—Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I also would like to draw to the attention of the House the fact that today is Equality Day. It is an occasion to celebrate the equality rights of all residents of Canada. In particular it gives us the opportunity to review the progress made in a practical sense by the women of Canada.

Canadian women played an important part in securing the equality rights for all of us here today. Women now represent 43 per cent of Canada's labour force. They comprise almost one-quarter of our country's business owners.

Some 55 per cent of the undergraduate enrolment at Canada's universities is made up of women.

By coincidence today was the day of the swearing in of the new Supreme Court of Canada justice from British Columbia, Justice Beverley McLachlin.

Women's status in Canadian society is continuing to expand and evolve. Our Government remains committed to encouraging and promoting the remarkable potential of Canadian women.

ORAL QUESTIONS

UENMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BENEFITS FOR OLDER WOMEN—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. On this day which is dedicated to equality rights, could the Minister explain to the House why she has cut benefits paid to older women in our country? Will the Minister confirm, for instance, that today, based on her figures, 30,000 women over the age of 55 receive unemployment insurance benefits? And could the Minister explain why those 30,000 women, who have worked all their lives and now have to live on unemployment insurance, will lose part of their benefits to pay for re-training younger Canadians?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has clearly missed the fact that one of the things that we are doing within the new program is extending benefits to older workers through programs for older workers. There will be an extra $50 million for older workers. It is a very important component of the program. It will include older women as well as older men. It is a group in which I have taken some particular interest in the past. I am sure the Hon. Member will support that initiative.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, let it be noted that the Minister does not want to explain why 30,000 women in the country over 55 years of age will be having their benefits cut to pay for retraining for younger people.

TRAINING PROGRAMS—CUTS IN BENEFITS FOR OLDER WOMEN

Right Hon John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps the Minister would like to explain why 78,000 women over the age of 45—and again I am using her own statistics—are having their benefits cut to pay for the retraining of workers half their age. Does the Minister not realize that there are now 122,000 women currently receiving unemployment insurance who previously worked in low-paying clerical jobs? That is to say five times as many women as men are employed in these jobs. Why should women formerly in low-paying jobs and now receiving unemployment insurance be forced to pay for the retraining of the Canadian workforce?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, women are not only participants in this program but contributors to our economy, something which the Government fully recognizes and has done so in a variety of ways. We have instituted the contractors' program, employment equity, and other programs which the Government has put in place to benefit people who were disadvantaged, particularly women. They are important initiatives of the Government. But women of all ages under this program will benefit from the new measures that we are taking.

The women of Canada are best served if we can help them get out of some of those traditional occupations into better occupations. That is what this is all about. I think that the Hon. Member should help Canadian women and support them in their efforts as this Government is doing.

• (1420)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am relying on the Minister's own statistics to put questions, neither of which she has answered, but one more time, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYED 55-YEAR OLD WOMEN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): An unemployed 55 year-old woman, according to her figures, is caught on the unemployment insurance rolls for an average of 25 weeks. That is two and one-half times longer for instance than an unemployed male of, say, 20 years old.

Now the Minister says that the rationale behind her program is that she wants to force an attitudinal change—whatever those words really mean—on our unemployed. What attitudinal problem does the Minister think that these women have that forces them on to unemployment insurance? Does she think that a 55 year-old unemployed woman is twice as lazy as a 20 year-old male? Is that what she is trying to tell us?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, is going out of his way to twist the facts as far as women under this program are concerned. We are doubling the money for training.

We have a program for older workers, and people on this program of every age, of both genders are going to be in a position to benefit from this program.

The average usage by women of this program is still below the maximum number of weeks that will be available to them. During that time they will have access to programs to upgrade themselves, older workers as well as younger workers, that they have not had before and that when Members opposite were in office, they did not bring into place.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

HIRING OF WOMEN—FEDERAL CONTRACTORS PROGRAM

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): My question, Mr. Speaker, on this Equality Day is for the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. In 1984 the Government promised Canadian women both employment equity legislation and contract compliance in those areas of the private sector under federal government influence. Nearly five years later Canadian women are still waiting for meaningful government action on contract compliance. Can the Minister tell us why we must wait and when this waiting will end?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is important for the Hon. Member to know that it was this Government and not that Party when it was in office that brought in employment equity legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: I think that it is important that she know that it was this Government and not those people when they were in office that brought in the Federal Contractors Program. The Federal Contractors Program, which is administered by my colleague, the Minister of State, has been working very well. There have been companies that have lost their rights under contracts because they have not had the appropriate plan. We will continue to ensure, Mr. Speaker, that both the contractors program and the equity program move women forward in this country.

STATUS OF WOMEN

FUNDING OF REAL WOMEN ORGANIZATION

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): The Minister parades one or two examples of government action when thousands of reports come in yearly to show women deserve a little more than this from their Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Clancy: My supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is in the same area, but it is for the Secretary of State. I have received hundreds of letters from Canadian women protesting the recent funding to REAL Women.

When is the Minister going to review this decision? Will he stand up in the House today and announce that this funding will be rescinded, and that instead it will go towards the funding of those womens' groups who truly work for equality for women?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): This project, Mr. Speaker, was funded under the criteria of the womens' program.

Ms. Copps: No way.

Mr. Weiner: It was recommended by the people who have been examining and working with the program for years. We will continue to look with favour on any project that meets the criteria of programs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Clancy: Read the criteria.

THE ECONOMY

SIZE OF DEFICIT—AMOUNT SPENT OF TAX EXPENDITURES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. This Government and its corporate friends have spent a lot of money in the last few weeks trying to whip Canadians into a frenzy, indeed into hysteria, over the size of the deficit in an effort to justify program cut-backs and tax increases.

Mr. Speaker, while all Canadians are concerned about the size of the deficit—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Are you in a frenzy?

Mr. Riis: Contrary to the myths that this Government has been spreading, the deficit has not been caused by federal spending programs. I cite a study released by the Canadian Tax Foundation of 1988 which says:

> Reductions in revenues rather than—increases in expenditures—largely accounted for the deficit's increases.

Mr. Speaker, in the interest of fairness, would it not be more appropriate for the Government to focus on the $30 billion that it gives out in tax expenditures rather than scapegoating spending programs for Canada's families and regions?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member has finally acknowledged that the debt and the deficit clearly are problems. This is not the result of major efforts on the part of the Government to generate this interest. It has happened because we do have a serious problem. I would hope that the Hon. Member would bear that in mind at the time we bring down the Budget in a week and a half.

The Hon. Member has talked about a number of tax expenditures. If he has some tax expenditures that he would like to have eliminated, possibly he could let me know what they are.

During the course of the last four years we have eliminated a very large number of tax expenditures, tax breaks, what he and his Party had referred to as tax loopholes, and more than any other previous Government in Canadian history.

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATE INCREASES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): The Minister of Finance does not have to wait. If he wants to really convey to people that he is carrying out real tax reform and tax fairness then he should consider implementing a minimum corporate tax so that the 60,000 large profitable corporations that do not pay a single penny start paying their fair share.

An Hon. Member: The Americans have got that one.

Mr. Riis: That same Tax Foundation study said that the other major cause of deficit growth is high interest rates.

The Minister of Finance knows that for every 1 per cent increase in interest rates, the deficit will increase by $1.5 billion, which this year could add $30 to $35 billion to the deficit.

Mr. Speaker, can the Minister justify cutting valuable programs that benefit families and regions when the increase in the deficit in 1989 will be caused exclusively by a high interest rate policy that has been condemned by the 10 provincial Premiers, has been condemned by the bishops, by the New Democratic Party and many others?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have to agree in part with what the Hon. Member has said. Spending has been very tightly controlled by this Government. That has been the record that we have demonstrated over the course of the past four years. But yes, there has been a problem with interest rates going up in the last year. That has been the case in Canada as it has been the case in the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries in the world.

The solution to that problem is not the facile solution that the Hon. Member suggests from time to time, that we should just snap our fingers and say that interest rates could go down.

An Hon. Member: Let the market set the interest rates!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member from Saskatchewan says let the market set the interest rate. If we allow the facile approach of the Member for Kamloops, which is to get interest rates down by the snap of a finger, that would involve printing more money, and printing money at a time when last Friday we saw that the inflation rate has been up at 4.6 per cent for the last two months. It has been up over 5 per cent if you take away the more volatile limits of food and energy. Printing money is just going to make that problem far more difficult and far more serious. It will get us back to the problem that we were in in 1981 and 1982. That is something that this Government is determined to avoid.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION—CHAIRMAN'S LETTER—DEFICIT REDUCTION AND FREE TRADE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): We all recognize that the Minister of Finance is keen to harmonize Canadian programs with American programs. May I suggest that one of the programs he might want to harmonize is Canadian interest rate policy with American interest policy, and to drop it 2 percentage points as a result.

Mr. Speaker, my third and final question is this. Having avoided two primary causes of our deficit growth when the Minister said he is not prepared to deal with either of them, it encourages one to become somewhat suspicious that perhaps this whole deficit propaganda program is intended to do something else.

I want to quote from a letter written on February 27, 1989, to the Minister by the President of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association which links deficit reduction and free trade. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Thibeault says that failure to cut the deficit:

> Undermines our ability to make the transition to free trade.

Is it not time that the Minister came clean with Canadians and said that the reason they are creating this hysteria about the deficit has nothing to do with reducing the deficit but it is stage 2, if you like, of the Free Trade Agreement which is designed to cut programs to families and cut programs to the regions of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that I am not prepared to deal with the interest rate problem. I am prepared to deal with the interest rate problem, but in a way that will get interest rates down on a permanent basis, rather than for a very short time, only to find them move right up higher than they are today and on a much more permanent basis as a result of the policies the Hon. Member suggests we follow. That is the type of policy we are determined to avoid.

The Hon. Member says that our desire to get the deficit down is linked to free trade. That is absolutely nonsense. There is a serious problem which the Hon. Member acknowledged in his first question. He and many other Canadians are concerned about the deficit, not because of free trade but because of the high debt which is causing the problem we are facing in the upcoming Budget—high interest cost because we have a high debt. We must get that debt under control.

If we can get that debt under control then we can get a much healthier economy here. That is what he and many others want. I look forward to his support on April 27.

CHANGES TO SYSTEM—EFFECT ON RURAL AREAS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns her unemployment insurance cut-backs which will have devastating effects on rural Canada.

Is the Minister aware that rural areas of this country which have high unemployment rates, ranging anywhere from 12 per cent to 18 per cent, will now be subject to the same cut-backs affecting neighbouring urban areas which, in many cases, have unemployment rates ranging between 5 per cent and 8 per cent?

Does she believe that someone in a high unemployment area in my constituency should be treated the same as someone in Ottawa?

Does she think that the people of Newfoundland living in rural areas should be penalized unduly by her Government? If not, is she at least willing to reapportion the maps and areas in order to ensure that rural residents are not penalized the way they will be under her system?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as usual, the Hon. Member is about five steps behind.

Last fall the Minister of State announced that we would be revising the boundaries for unemployment insurance and that they will recognize regional differences. That is something the former Government did not do. That will be introduced as soon as possible so there will be more equitable treatment of claimants in regions with different unemployment levels.

EFFECT OF CHANGES ON NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

I have a press release from her colleague, the Minister for International Trade, dated April 11. It says in part that in 1990, $830 million will be provided in direct UI income for the people of Newfoundland. It goes on to say that if the Labour Force Development Strategy would not have been in place, that amount would have been $860 million at that time, which means a cut-back of $30 million.

Will the Minister explain to the House why her colleague was saying it was complete nonsense that there would be cut-backs in unemployment insurance during the last election campaign? Is it not obvious that the people of Newfoundland were not told the truth?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, under this program there will be $15 million more going into Newfoundland next year than there would have been otherwise. We also have the Canadian Jobs Strategy that focuses on Newfoundland communities through Community Futures. There is more funding going into Newfoundland, not less. If the Hon. Member would like to go through all the figures with me, I would be happy to do it later.

AIR SAFETY

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—EFFECT OF RECENT GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The provisions implemented on April 7 by the Minister have created further safety problems at Pearson. These measures have saturated air space east of Pearson, forced en route controllers to stack airplanes as far back as Coe Hill, 95 miles from Pearson, and created havoc for controllers due to the reduction in flights from 42 to 32 per hour.

Moreover, en route controllers to date have not received any sort of briefing on these measures.

Is the Minister aware of these unsafe conditions that these two measures he implemented last week are causing? What does he intend to do immediately to correct them?

Hon. Benoit Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will recall that those measures were proposed by the Canadian Aviation Safety Board after the near-miss in Toronto last November. I think he will also admit that we have talked about safety in the Canadian skies for the last two or three weeks, perhaps longer. I hope he is not telling me today that because there are more delays in Toronto we should decrease safety in Canadian skies.

TESTING OF MEASURES PRIOR TO IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the rigidity of these interim measures almost caused a mid-air collision last week.

Why were these measures not tested on simulators in Hull before being implemented, as is the common and safe practice? When will the Minister stop using Canadian air passengers and Canadian airlines as guinea pigs and take appropriate action to ensure the safety of Canadian airlines?

Hon. Benoit Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are used to the contradictory messages from that side of the House. I repeat that the day after it was recommended by the Canadian Aviation Safety Board we put forward new rules to improve safety over Toronto Pearson Airport and the surrounding area. We did it immediately afterwards.

Of course, it is absolutely normal that at the beginning it could create some problems for the controllers. But I believe, and I am sure he shares that concern with me, that what we did was necessary for Canadian air safety. Otherwise, I would like him to tell me whether it is better to neglect air safety to improve the delays? Is that what he means?

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

FEDERAL COURT CHALLENGES PROGRAM

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. On March 31, next year, funding for the Federal Court Challenges Program will run out. Today, on Equality Day, a broad national coalition of respected human rights groups have joined in calling upon the Government to continue and expand this program which is so important to ensure that the Charter is accessible to the disadvantaged and not just to the privileged. Will the Minister assure the House and all Canadians that expenses for cases which go beyond March, 1990, will in fact be covered and this vital program will be continued and hopefully expanded beyond that date?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, the current agreement does not end until March 1990. It will be important for us to have a look at it sometime during this forthcoming year, the fourth year, to review the efficiency and effectiveness of the program. We will be doing that.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, that leaves the uncertainty. Certainly a Government that is committed to true equality would fund Court Challenges and not fund REAL Women, which is a denial of equality.

AMENDMENT OF CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that the Government promised over three years ago to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act in the area of reasonable accommodation, equal pay for women, and adding sexual orientation to the Act, I want to ask the Minister on this Equality Day if the Government remains committed to these important amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act? If so, when will the Government finally act to ensure equality for all Canadians? Why was the Speech from the Throne silent on this fundamental question of equality?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I point out to my hon. friend that recently we had a further report from the Human Rights Commission, with several suggestions.

All of the matters to which my hon. friend referred are under active consideration by the Government.

ENERGY

CANADIAN EXPLORATION INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The difficulties being experienced by small producers and the service sector in the oil and gas industry are putting in jeopardy thousands of jobs in western Canada. Capital is hard to secure, the major companies are reducing capital expenditures, yet the Canadian Exploration Incentive Program is of little use because of the retroactive nature of the exploration definition clause.

The Minister told the small producers and the service industry in Calgary that he would not be extending the Canadian Exploration Development Incentive Program. Why is the Government abandoning the small producers and the service industry at a time when planned exploration is minimal?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Government came in with the CEDIP when oil prices were considerably lower than they are now to meet the requirements of that period of time.

It was the Government's position that we should move as quickly as we could to a market-based economy in the oil and gas industry. I went to Calgary and said directly to the industry, including the juniors, that that would be the Government's position. I said that in Calgary and I repeated it in the House of Commons. The Hon. Member's question is correct. Yes, we are cutting out CEDIP.

SITUATION OF SMALL PRODUCERS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, was it the Minister's intention to abandon the small producers and the service industry? Was it the intention of the Minister of Finance to mess up CEDIP completely?

Ninety per cent of the applicants have received less than 20 per cent of the funds. How can that be when the Government wants to help the small producers and the service industry? Instead of cancelling the program, why does the Government not reduce the ceiling from $10 million to $1 million, thereby servicing 90 per cent of the applicants and saving 65 per cent of the funds?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Government's decision on CEDIP is final. The Government did bring in CEDIP. I think the Hon. Member should know that—

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): It's the Americans.

Mr. Gauthier: Big money, big oil.

Mr. Epp: That is the best speech you ever made. Too bad nobody else heard it.

I am telling the Hon. Member that CEIP is now in place. It is being tested on the money markets. It has had a slow start. I believe sincerely that with the promotion of CEIP and aspects of the flow-through, it can work. I think the Hon. Member has to realize that we have moved toward a program which gives the Government better control over the finances rather than having a demand-driven program which CEDIP was.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR REFUGEE STATUS—APPEAL PROCESS—REQUEST FOR CONFIDENTIALITY OF FILES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and concerns the refugee process.

A lawyer in Montreal called me about a Romanian claimant who was denied refugee status and who wants to appeal to the Federal Court.

Since under our legal system, his complaints and his criticism of the regime in Romania, which has the worst human rights record in Europe, would be public information and thus accessible to Romanian officials, will the Minister change the appeal procedure so as to guarantee the privacy of individuals and avoid subjecting these people to possibly fatal retaliation on the part of the regime concerned? This is a very serious problem which has many implications for everyone in the refugee's riding.

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I am aware of this situation. It is something we are looking into.

Pending the appeal procedure, there is not much I can comment on, but I do want to assure the Hon. Member that we are very sensitive to the situation both in Canada and in that particular case.

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF APPEAL PROCESS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister can comment. This Montreal case does represent other cases. The claimant in Montreal is thinking about appealing his refugee board decision to the Federal Court. If he does, the entire dossier of evidence against the regime, evidence which he deposited with Canadian officials, will become public because of our court system.

Is the Minister prepared to consider amending the refugee appeal system that her Government designed so that any claimant who goes to an appeal before the courts will not have his or her evidence publicly dragged out and therefore possibly utilized against him or her in retaliation by any regime to which the applicant is forced to return, particularly Communist bloc countries? This is a serious question with very serious life or death implications.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first, I am sure that the Hon. Member is aware that courts can hold hearings in camera. They do have that ability. As I said to the Hon. Member, at the moment I am investigating this situation among others.

WITHDRAWAL OF GOVERNMENT FROM FINANCING OF PROGRAM

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration said that news that the Government was going to stop financing the Unemployment Insurance Program was pure speculation.

In that case, could the Government give the House the assurance that it intends to continue paying the cost of extended benefits based on regional unemployment rates?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, any questions that refer to the funding of the Unemployment Insurance Program will have to await the Budget. I have said that before. I am sure the Hon.

Member can wait that long. In the meantime, there is a plan in terms of where regional funds will be spent or at least in terms of what the regional benefits will be because they will go to the high unemployment regions. That is clear from the policy paper, and I would suggest that the Hon. Member read it.

REGIONALLY EXTENDED BENEFITS—GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the arrogance of the Minister suggesting that her critics have not read the document is simply a reflection on herself, not on us.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Langdon: I would like to ask the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member can put the question.

Mr. Langdon: I would like to ask the Minister as clearly as I can, since these regionally extended benefits are in fact part of the present legislation and since she has brought in a White Paper showing that she intends to change that legislation, will she clearly tell Canada whether the Government is committed to continuing to pay for regionally extended benefits, yes or no.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm for the Hon. Member that there will be benefits to every region of Canada, particularly the high unemployment regions for which he expresses so much concern. In terms of some of the regions of considerable benefit, we have taken out the penalty for the repeater provision. I am sure the Hon. Member is aware of that. The other benefits for training and upgrading will be there for all regions of Canada.

FORESTRY

EXPIRATION OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DEVELOPMMENT AGREEMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Guy H. Arsenault (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Forestry). Could the Minister explain why his Government has allowed Forest Resources Development Agreements, in the six provinces where those agreements had expired as of March 31, 1989, to elapse without taking steps to renegotiate them?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should thank the Hon. Member for endorsing the success that has been achieved as a result of the Forest Resources Development Agreements.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): He didn't. He asked why are you letting them go?

Mr. Oberle: The Hon. Member would also agree that a new generation of such agreements and co-operative measures should include new principles that the public and others are demanding. Discussions are under way with the provinces, and the new agreements will also have to conform with the new budgetary disciplines.

The Hon. Member will soon learn what the new agreements will look like.

FUTURE OF AGREEMENTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche): My supplementary question is the following. My teacher background compels me to rate the answer at a fat zero, the same as the Throne Speech.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Arseneault: In a paper on forestry co-authored by the Minister he stated that relations between the federal and provincial Governments need to be improved. Furthermore, renegotiating new forestry agreements with all provinces had to be a main federal initiative.

Will the Government's policy in the future be to allow regional agreements, such as the FRDA, to elapse before it attempts to renegotiate them? If and when the agreements are renegotiated, will they be retroactive to the date on which they elapsed?

There is your question. Answer it!

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Forestry)): You would agree, Mr. Speaker, that our colleague who is a teacher will have a lot to learn in this place.

I have told my hon. friend that discussions are under way. There is nothing to stop the provinces that have received revenues that came from the export tax to start without us, and we will be behind them strongly with a very firm commitment to our forest resources.

BANKS AND BANKING

DOUBLING OF CHARGES RELATING TO NSF CHEQUES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gafgliano (Saint-Léonard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Finance). Last fall, before the election, the Government had started negotiations with the banks to settle the whole issue of double charging for cheques without sufficient funds. Now, after the election, the Government has abandoned small business and supports the banks. Can the Minister seriously claim that a double charge is necessary? Should the person who receives those cheques be penalized as well as the person who writes them? Where is the justice in all this?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I may remind the Hon. Member that it was the banks who voluntarily agreed not to impose charges on personal accounts. They have not done so in the case of small business, and that may be regrettable, but I believe that small business may start another campaign to change this. In the legislation I had the privilege of introducing in this House, we have made considerable progress on the access to information on these charges. We included small business in the Bill in fact,it is very well covered and I believe that both consumers and business will be pleased with a bill of which we are very proud.

PAYMENT OF PENALTIES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of State for Small Businesses to see if I can find a member of the Government who understands small business.

The Minister of State for Small Businesses should stand up today and defend small business. How can he accept that his colleague in the Cabinet introduced legislation that was the same as that introduced in the fall? It does not address the problem of a cheque deposited at a bank to a person who has no funds, and who has to pay a penalty in the same amount as the person who issued the cheque with no funds. Should it not be the person who issued the cheque with no funds who is penalized?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member just asked the same question, so I will have to give him the same answer.

Considerable progress has been made with respect to the treatment of disclosure of banking charges. I hope that what we have done with the banks—and the results are already visible—will also be taken up by the other institutions, and I believe this is an important step forward. Once again, this is a very important step which benefits both small business and consumers.

TAX REFORM

NORTHERN TAX BENEFITS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister knows that he has cut off many northern communities from the full benefit of the Northern Benefits Program. How can the Minister cut off this deduction from people in communities in northern B.C., northern Alberta, and northern Manitoba, before his own task force on northern tax benefits has reported to the Minister?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what is happening now is simply following through on what was proposed at the time that the announcement was made, which I believe was almost exactly one year ago.

TASK FORCE REPORT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that as people fill in their tax forms this month, hundreds of communities across northern Canada are suffering because he has not waited for that report to be made.

This morning I presented a petition signed by over 5,000 residents of my riding which stated that that is not fair.

Why would the Minister not wait for that task force, which travelled the country, to report, before he denied thousands and thousands of Canadians that benefit?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member goes back to the situation as it was in 1984 when we came into office, my recollection is that there was a very limited northern benefit. It was only provided to certain people who lived in northern and isolated regions of the country. We expanded that quite considerably. We found there were some difficulties as a result of the broad expansion that we made in that benefit. It was for that reason that we asked the task force to study the program and come back with certain recommendations.

However, at the time that that was done, we acknowledged that there was some inequity there. We said we would put in place some adjustments to address that inequity. At the same time we said that we were going to phase those out over a period of time. That is continuing.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ROUGE VALLEY – PROTECTION AS WILDLIFE RESERVE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Yesterday I accompanied the Minister on an extensive tour of the beautiful Rouge Valley system which has its source in the Markham and Whitchurch–Stouffville areas of my riding.

Will the Minister confirm that he is committed to protecting this rare wildlife preserve by helping to have it designated as a provincial park?

Will he use his influence with the provincial Government to stop renewed efforts to create a garbage dump on the site and to build a major north–south, six to eight–lane expressway, which would run right through the middle of the park?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I confirm that the Hon. Member and I were together in the Rouge Valley yesterday. It was an occasion for us to renew and confirm the Government's commitment to the protection of the Rouge Valley. If the Ontario Government decides to protect the area there will be $10 million from the federal Government for it.

CRIMINAL CODE

VIDEO CASSETTES – OBSCENE MATERIAL – REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to work together with the Minister of Justice.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fretz: On March 27 charges of distributing obscene material were dropped against two Ontario video firms. In his ruling the judge stated that Canada's Criminal Code's obscenity provisions do not cover video cassettes. He stated that "the wording is too vague to permit its application".

What steps will be taken to ensure that videos will be subject to the same regulations which prohibit the distribution and the sale of other obscene material?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the House that video tapes have been the subject of successful and unsuccessful prosecutions.

I cannot comment on the case in question because the appeal process still has to follow its route. But I would say that it is a little premature at this time to state that all cases involving video tapes cannot be prosecuted.

POINT OF ORDER

OLDER WORKERS—GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I regret that in answer to a question from the Leader of the Opposition I referred to the funding for older workers under our program as $50 million. I am sure he will be delighted to know that the amount is actually $100 million.

TRANSPORTATION ACCIDENT INVESTIGATION BOARD

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard (Roberval) that Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Transportation Accident Investigation Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House recessed for lunch, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Comuzzi) had the floor. There were four minutes left for his intervention.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, at the break we were discussing the duties of the chairperson under Bill C-2. All power seems to be vested in the chairperson. The chairperson acts not only in that capacity but acts as chief executive officer and top administrator in personnel and financial matters. The chairperson also directs the director of investigations. I would suggest that this is much too much responsibility for one person to handle.

It will be our recommendation in committee that the functions and the duties of the chairperson and the chief executive officer should be divided, and further that the board should be responsible for hiring the chief executive officers.

Carrying on with the intent of the legislation, Madam Speaker, transportation occurrence under the definition section should be defined so that the jurisdiction of the board can be properly and clearly carried out. "Accident", I think, is self-explanatory, but "occurrence" must be defined so that the new board, if and when it becomes operative, is aware of its responsibilities and more importantly aware of its total jurisdiction so that it can act in the best interests of Canadian travellers.

Earlier I said I would I return to the multi-modal concept. We have been advised that the previous legislation, aviation safety, was unworkable. Yet we are asked to consider new legislation today that not only deals with aviation but it is to be enlarged to deal with accidents and occurrences that happen in rail, pipeline, commodities and marine areas. How can we enlarge the scope of this Bill when, by admission, the board had difficulty with investigating aviation accidents and occurrences? Does this make sense? We should broaden Bill's scope rather than limit it and get the proper Bill working right now.

It would be trite to say that this legislation affecting the safety of Canadian travellers and those who visit our country should be clear, operative, functional and understandable. It should address the transportation concerns of all Canadians considering our philosophy and the concept that our transportation problem must be addressed.

As this legislation goes to committee, we will follow it very closely and the remarks we have made here today will be followed through committee and we hope will be reflected when the Bill returns to the House for further discussion.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Any questions or comments? Debate.

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to speak in support of Bill C-2, an Act to establish a Transportation Accident Investigation Board.

This Government recognizes that a thorough and objective accident investigation is crucial to transportation safety. From such studies we learn, document, and implement improved procedures and endeavour to find better and safer materials and technologies.

Transportation has played a crucial role in the development of this nation. Canadians have come to depend on, and expect, safe and efficient modes of transportation. Our record has been enviable. However, we cannot rest on our laurels. We must remain ever vigilant, incorporating new technologies and procedures where applicable and establishing appropriate institutions as required.

Our Government has endeavoured to improve transportation safety at every opportunity. The revision of the Aeronautics Act in 1985, the upgrading of the safety amendments to the Canada Shipping Act in 1987 and the Railway Safety Act in 1988 are a testament to this fact. In keeping with this determination, the proposed TAIB legislation will create a new, independent board entrusted with the authority to investigate and report on accidents involving the marine, rail, and commodity pipeline modes of transportation as well as that of air mode. This multi-modal board proposal was developed in response to the evident need to separate accident investigation from the safety regulation function in all of these vital modes of transportation in Canada.

In drafting the TAIB Bill we have had the benefit of experience since 1984 with the CASB Act and we have learned a great deal from that experience, including the difficulties which have led to so much recent concern.

As well, following circulation in June, 1987, of some preliminary suggestions and the tabling last July of former Bill C-142 we have had the benefit of advice from many sources. We received valued comments from all elements of the transportation industry as well as from organizations as the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Maritime Law Association and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce.

The Deschenes study on maritime casualty investigations has been very helpful, as has the Hickling evaluation of the CASB. Comments from the Hon. Mr. Justice John Sopinka, before his appointment to the Supreme Court of Canada, have also been of great assistance.

Serious consideration was given in the determination of the structure and composition of the new board. The creation of one multi-modal board offers distinct advantages which other formats do not provide.

It affords consistency in the application of standards while, at the same time, respecting the unique requirements of the individual modes. The multi-modal format will ensure consistency of treatment for those involved in transportation accidents in all modes. Each mode can learn from the experience of the others, and much scientific, medical and other expertise can be applied across all modes.

To ensure that the respective differences between modes are considered the Bill provides in Clause 10 that three separate directors of investigation will be designated; one each for air and marine investigations, and one for rail-commodity pipeline investigations.

While ensuring recognition of the uniqueness of each transportation mode's needs, the Bill also provides that in appointing members to the new board the Governor in Council must appoint those who, and I quote:

> —will ensure that the members are, collectively, knowledgeable about air, marine, rail and commodity pipeline transportation.

With these measures, I believe we can be confident that appropriate attention will be directed to accident investigation in each transportation mode as required, and yet we can rest assured that no one mode will be afforded a disproportionate degree of resources.

The new board will be independent. It will have jurisdiction to investigate a wide range of accidents, incidents, conditions and situations, and be mandated to report publicly on all findings as to the contributing factors and causes of accidents. Most important, the new board will be required to make recommendations to avoid repetition of similar accidents in the future.

The issue of board structure and composition was given very serious consideration. Independent advice was sought as to the most effective and efficient composition of the new board.

The TAIB Bill precisely clarifies the respective roles and responsibilities of the board members, the chairman, the directors of investigation and the board staff.

The chairman will be the chief executive officer of the board and will supervise and direct the work of the board and the staff. The board chairman will have the responsibility for the internal management of the board, including personnel, financial and property matters.

As with any other deputy head of a federal agency, the duties of the chairman will also include such responsibilities as directing and apportioning the work of the members and staff, calling and chairing board meetings, approving budgets and so forth.

The present Bill is drafted to give board members, acting as a unit, full responsibility for establishing the board's policies in key areas. The board members will be fully responsible for board activities. This responsibility will include the establishment of general policies to be applied when determining the causes of accidents, when finalizing board reports on those accidents and when making recommendations to improve safety.

It is intended that the board members shall apply their background and expertise not to conducting investigations for which very competent staff will be employed, but to weighing the contributing factors identified by the investigators.

The board as a whole will have the over-all responsibility for accident investigation, for making findings as to the contributing factors and causes of these accidents, and for issuing reports which contain recommendations based on their findings.

The board as a whole will determine which accidents are to be investigated while the directors of investigation will be responsible for directing the content of those investigations.

The board as a whole will review the reports of the accident investigators, obtain information from them as board members may see fit and, ultimately, determine the final board findings as to the causes and contributing factors, and approve final board reports.

Most important, board members are to make appropriate recommendations based on their findings and designed to prevent repetition of similar accidents.

As I noted earlier, board members set policies, by-laws and regulations for conducting the board's business. The Bill makes clear that the chairman must act in accordance with these policies, by-laws and regulations.

To carry out the actual investigation of accidents the Bill specifically establishes three positions for directors of accident investigation. These persons will be charged with directing the conduct of accident investigations on behalf of the board. They will have exclusive authority to carry out this function. However, they will exercise their authority in accordance with the policies established by the Board. Investigative staff will report to them. Their reports will be reviewed by the board members. The directors of investigation will then be required to conduct such further investigations as the Board may request.

The Board will be entitled to adopt and issue the investigators' report as its official report, or the Board may disagree with it in whole or in part and issue a final board report independent of the investigators' findings. The investigators' report would remain on record as submitted to the Board and be part of the record that may be accessed by the public.

The delineation of responsibilities between the board members and the investigators is obvious and deliberate. It is the duty of board members to review the reports of investigators and then make their determinations on the basis of this material and any other relevant information that they may have. Consequently, it is essential that the board members be able to review the reports of the investigators objectively.

With the deliberate provision of this separation of duties, board members will be free to disagree if they wish with investigators' reports, and there will be no question that the board members have been unduly influenced by investigative staff, or vice versa. This arrangement will enable board members to conduct their review and make their findings objectively. Parties with a direct interest who then make representations to the Board on review of circulated draft reports, or at public inquiries, can thus be confident that their representations are given equal weight by board members along with the reports prepared by the investigators.

Establishment of an independent board to investigate accidents for the rail and marine sectors, as well as the air mode, is clearly desirable. The TAIB will be completely independent and separate from any Department of Government. It will be handed a clear and precise mandate to investigate accidents and practices in each of the critical transportation modes in Canada.

The clearer definition of the roles of the board members, chairman and directors of investigation in the proposed TAIB Act should enable the new board to function effectively, efficiently and expeditiously.

The Board shall act as an impartial arbiter. It will not seek to lay blame or liability. Its sole purpose is to determine cause and to recommend changes to ensure future safety. It will judiciously investigate accidents in an open and public fashion. Interested parties will be welcome at investigations and will be in receipt of the Board's draft reports.

Quality accident investigation is essential to ensure improved transportation safety. The new board will improve the quality of accident investigations in rail, marine, as well as air. This will lead to even better safety recommendations to help us avoid similar accidents in the future.

We all want to be confident that investigations are conducted fairly and objectively. The total independence of the new board will provide this objectivity. The investigators in the rail and marine modes will no longer be linked to the safety regulators. Potential conflicts of interest will be eliminated.

The Canadian transportation community at large strongly supports the creation of an independent transportation accident investigation board for all modes.

I truly believe that all Members support the basic objective of the Bill, that is, to improve the quality of accident investigation policies and procedures so that our transportation system can be made even safer for the future.

I hope that the Bill will be considered quickly so that this objective can be realized as soon as possible.

I look forward, along with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) to working with the Standing Committee on Transport to ensure that, in all respects, this Bill will achieve its objective to the fullest extent possible. If that means considering some modifications to the provisions of the Bill, we are prepared to do so.

As a Government we will not compromise public safety for expediency. TAIB is not a stop-gap measure or an interim solution. Rather, it is a product of the Canadian Government's constant effort to improve safety in all modes of transportation. The new Transportation Accident Investigation Board embodies lessons we have learned, and attempts to anticipate foreseeable needs.

As a responsible Government we have observed, listened and now we have tabled this legislation. I trust that all Members of the House will respond in kind with equal appreciation for the need for swift passage of this critical Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there questions or comments? The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park.

Mr. Flis: Madam Speaker, I was pleased to hear that the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin) welcomed the contributions and recommendations of John Sopinka and the Canadian Bar Association, two outstanding authorities in this area and especially outstanding in terms of drafting Bills. The recommendations that both John Sopinka and the Canadian Bar Association made to the Government were that this Bill does not provide the Board the independence that it needs, that there is too much control and too much power given to the chairman and directors of investigation. We saw this in the Canadian Aviation Safety Board in its consideration of the Gander investigation where information was withheld from the members of the board because the chairman and the directors of investigation had too much power unto themselves.

Since the Minister of State for Transport stated in the House that the Government found the recommendations of the Canadian Bar Association and John Sopinka very helpful, can she tell us why her Government did not implement the main recommendations of these two bodies?

Mrs. Martin (Lincoln): As I also mentioned, during the consultation we heard from the Hon. Justice Sopinka, from the Bar Association and from other groups and interested parties as far as the safety Acts were concerned. We took into consideration all the input we received, not just the two that the Hon. Member mentions. In taking those into consideration, we have drafted a Bill that we feel will make for a well-rounded, operable board that will look into all modes of transportation accident investigation.

Certainly as that Bill comes before the standing committee, there are opportunities for making recommendations and making suggestions. We will have a lively debate at that point during committee as to the changes that may be necessary to the Bill. We do feel in the drafting that we have taken into consideration all input, partly from the Bar, partly from Justice Sopinka, and also from the other groups as well. It is from all the input that we have that the Bill has been drafted, not just the two reports that the Member mentions.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, the Minister has made much about the independence of the Board. She mentioned something about the findings being made public and available, et cetera. I would ask if she could explain why the Minister should be entitled to an advance copy of the confidential draft for the Minister's response. In fact, a reasonable opportunity—Section 24.2—must be allowed for the Minister to respond before it is publicly released.

What about the accident investigations that involved pilots, air traffic controllers, railway conductors or engineers? Are they not just as entitled since they are the subject of the investigations? Why not keep them independent? Nobody gets a copy of the report, including the Minister, until the report is made public by the Board?

Mrs. Martin (Lincoln): I think the Hon. Member will notice, as he studies the Bill, that the draft reports are going to be circulated for comments to all Parties with a direct interest, not just to the Minister. We are making it open and objective for those people who make appearances before the committee. The Minister of Transport, who is a very competent Minister of Transport, I might state, has a responsibility for safety as a Minister in the Transport Department, and he is entitled to that draft report, as are other interested parties that are going to be involved in these investigations.

Mr. Pagtakhan: I have the same question on the same section of the Act. My question is, will the Government ensure that the copy of the draft report be included and hence be compared with the copy of the final report, where made public, so that we can truly test the objectivity of the investigating board?

Mrs. Martin: As I mentioned, those people who are interested in the report will receive the draft report, those who have been part of the investigation, people that we have gone to. Naturally if they receive the draft report, they will receive the final report and will have no problem comparing them.

Mr. Angus: Madam Speaker, my question through you to the Minister of State for Transport is: In my presentation earlier today I talked about the potential role for the Transport committee in actually being given the freedom to fully examine this legislation, the freedom to consult whoever the committee deems appropriate, whether they be in this country or the United States or elsewhere. I am wondering if the Minister of State for Transport could give us a commitment today that because the very nature of this Bill is not partisan in the sense that it is an implementation of a government philosophy, economically or what have you, that this should really be an all-Party Bill? Will the Minister give us the commitment that maximum flexibility will be allowed the committee to chart its own course, to decide on who to call, the duration of its hearings and all the matters that it deems appropriate?

Mrs. Martin: Madam Speaker, I am very much encouraged by the support from all sides of the House for improved investigation boards in all modes of transportation. I look forward to that co-operation in committee to make sure that we can move this quickly. As the Hon. Member knows, the chairman of a committee is the individual who is responsible, along with the steering committee if he forms such, to decide what action the committee will take, who they will hear and what time frames they will work under. I am sure that the chairman of the committee will have the co-operation of all sides of the House to make sure that we get the right information from the right people in the right time frame so that we can move this Bill through and have a good Bill when we are finished with it with the necessary changes that will make it function properly.

Mr. Comuzzi: Madam Speaker, three very short questions to the Minister of State. I was interested in her remarks about the records that will be accessible by the public. My question is: How soon will they be accessible to the public, when and where?

The second question is with respect to the multimodal concept and her comments that they should ensure consistency. My question is: Consistency in what area?

The third question is also to the Minister and is with regard to the duties of the chairperson and chief executive officer. Does she not feel that those duties are so onerous that that position should be split into two separate categories?

Mrs. Martin: Madam Speaker, if I could start with the last question first. As far as it being a very large task for the chairperson and chief executive officer that is going to depend on the individual who is in the chair and his or her abilities to function there. We feel that the right individual would be capable of handling both parts of it. If we find in the future that that does not prove to be true, we may find it necessary to make changes. But with the right person at the helm, I think it can be done.

As to the consistency in all modes, by having one investigative body or one board looking at all investigations, we can make sure that there is consistency in application of investigation methods in the assessing of the material. The information that comes through will be done by one board in all modes. They will be able to share from each other's responsibilities and each other's expertise in making those decisions. We feel over all that it will make for a more knowledgeable board by sharing of expertise.

As to the first question about records and how soon they will be available to the public, I am sorry, I don't understand what the Hon. Member is referring to. I would like further explanation on that, if I may, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Commuzi: Madam Speaker, I thought that the Minister had said in her remarks that all the transcripts or the records would be made available to the public. Did I not hear that properly? I am wondering if I heard that properly.

Mrs. Martin: I believe what the Member is referring to is the statement that the draft reports would be available to the interested parties that were involved in the investigation for perusal prior to the final report. At that time they would have an opportunity to look at it. Certainly when the report is made public, the investigation reports are part of that public tabling of the information that would be available to those who are interested.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Madam Speaker, I have the feeling I have been here before on the same subject several times since 1968. While some of my colleagues on all sides might think that I have been here too long, I want them to know that I do not think so.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Until I do think so, I am going to stay, the Lord willing.

• (1530)

I have heard much about the independence of accident investigation boards, whether it be airline investigations, railway accidents, pipelines, or marine accidents. There has always been a question about their so-called independence.

Too often the boards were run by those who formulated the laws and regulations and were charged with the responsibility of enforcing them. They were also the judge and jury, and not too often convicted themselves.

We hear much about the independence of this board. Frankly, I believe it should be able to present its report and make it public the day it is ready, press conference and all. If there is anything fundamentally bad or perceived to be bad about it, those concerned can appeal. If that does not work, they can go to the Federal Court, just like any other citizen of this country. I see no reason why the Minister should get an advance copy of the report.

While I have not yet read the whole Bill, clause by clause, I have found nothing that says anyone else concerned can get a confidential copy of the report in advance. I suggest that provision of an advance copy to the Minister weakens the independence of the Accident Investigation Board.

While some may disagree with me, particularly those in the trucking industry, I think the legislation should also cover trans-boundary, international and interprovincial trucking. One day a semi-transport with a couple of pup trailers will plow into the ground floor of an apartment block and everyone will ask what happened. It is inevitable.

With Bill C-19 we were promised that there would be a uniform set of regulations to which all the provinces would agree. The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) will recall the committee dealing with Bill C-19 when the Canadian Truckers Association begged the Government not to bring that legislation into place until everything else was in place first and there was agreement with the other jurisdictions in the 10 provinces and two territories on a uniform set of regulations, rules and conditions under which interprovincial trans-boundary trucking could operate. We still do not have such agreement. It is a jungle out there.

I understand that my own province refuses to even discuss the subject with the federal authority. According to the Constitution of Canada, going back to the BNA Act, the national government had jurisdiction under international and trans-border trucking until the early 1950s, when it gave it up to let the provinces administer it. Since then we have seen them run off in 10 different directions, and it still continues in spite of what the Government told us.

A Transportation Accident Investigation Board that will cover air, rail, marine and pipeline will have to be a large operation. Someone who is an ideal investigator of an aircraft will not be very good with pipelines, and vice-versa. You cannot hire these kinds of people at the Canada Employment Centre, or off the street. They have to be experts. It will have to be a large operation, which I support, but there must be a commitment to it by the Government. There had better be a lot of money provided for this in the Budget to make sure there is the capacity to appoint and hire the best possible people for the board.

I do not want a repeat of the past. I remember a famous incident when an alderperson from Edmonton was put on the Board of Directors of Air Canada. When asked about her qualifications she said that she had flown a few times. We certainly do not want someone on an investigation board who is not knowledgeable about the industry. The people appointed to these boards should be experienced and competent.

There have been five Ministers of Transport since 1980, and almost as many Ministers of State for Transport. Jean-Luc Pépin opposed deregulation and that was the end of him. It was the Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy) who started all this nonsense of the nirvana of the marketplace, private enterprise and deregulation. In spite of the warnings from the experts outside Parliament, that government proceeded with deregulation in 1982, before there were any laws or regulations. The Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and now the Member for Roberval (Mr. Bouchard) were the succeeding Ministers. All five of them told us repeatedly in the committee that there would be no compromise on safety, security, inspection, enforcement and investigation.

This time we will not take those assurances at face value. If we cannot take the Government's word, it had better state in the Budget how much money it will provide, how many people it will involve, and what kind of people. If it is in the Budget, we might believe it.

We were accused of trying to frighten the public. Every Minister since the beginning of deregulation was repeatedly warned about the inadequacies of the system. These warnings were not just from Members of Parliament; they were from expert witnesses who knew what they were talking about. There were scores of hearings, including hearings on cabooses, hearings on the Freedom to Move White Paper, the National Transportation Act and the Trucking Act. There were hundreds of witnesses and on these and other occasions it was pointed out that safety and security inspection and enforcement was insufficient. Yet there was a lack of follow-up action.

I would like to remind Hon. Members of one witness in particular. One sure as heck could not call him a raving socialist. He was the immediate past head of the American Federal Aviation Administration, a Reagan appointee. He appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport and not only urged us but pleaded with us not to deregulate until we had everything else in place in all modes of transportation. He admitted very plainly and honestly what had happened in the United States and told us not to make the mistakes they had made, but to learn the lessons of the American experience. I could not find a Minister and I could not even find a small majority of the Transport Committee who would agree with the man.

This man told us to have in place, before deregulating, enough controllers, enough inspectors, enough enforcement, enough runway capacity, enough terminal capacity and enough passenger and baggage security capacity. He told us to have that in place first and then to deregulate. The truckers told us the same thing.

Representatives of the Canadian Air Transport Association, Canadian owners and pilots, air traffic controllers and the machinists' union appeared before the committee and most of them said they were in favour of deregulation but did not think we were ready. Boy, were they right.

We were told ad nauseam that there would be no compromise on safety. But what do we continue to get under the last four Ministers of Transport? There have been cut-backs, reductions and restraint. This is after they have told us that there would be no compromise. That is why we will not accept the Minister's word or the Government's word this time. It had better be in writing, on paper and irrevocable.

If the Treasury Board or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) refuses to grant the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) and the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs.

Martin) the kind of wherewithal that is required, then I think those Ministers should ask why and resign to the applause of the entire nation.

No matter what one thinks of the deficit or the national debt, in the last four years Ministers of Transport have done nothing but play fast and loose with the well-being of the travelling public in the name of restraint, cut-backs and the deficit, and with the safety and security of the facilities for the workers in the transportation industry. From what I have seen in some sectors of the transportation industry, I am amazed that the industry has done as well as it has with the tools given to it to do the job.

I do not see how we can have an effective accident investigation board without that kind of sign-on-the-dotted-line commitment. I do not want to have to go through this again. I have been through too many hearings, too many debates, too many pieces of legislation and way too many Ministers who never did follow through and do the job. In my experience so far with this Minister, the same thing applies. He is a nice fellow. There is nothing personal about it. It ain't his cup of tea. It is not what you could call his long suit, and I am not talking about his underwear!

We have to try to put the round pegs into the round holes and the square pegs into the square holes. In the transportation industry in Canada since the late 1970s, the opposite has been the case. This time, I hope the Government will put its action where its mouth is. We have heard all of this before ad nauseam.

I remember the days of Otto Lang, the late unlamented. It was very interesting this morning to listen to my good friend from New Brunswick who led off for the Official Opposition. I was hoping he would have the courtesy to blush. He was chairman of the Transport Committee when the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy) brought in deregulation. Butter would not melt in the mouths of the Liberal members of the Transport Committee. They were telling us how good this was, but the Tories kicked the heck out of them. Then the Liberals got defeated and the Tories came in. I'll be darned. For the first year of the new Parliament, back in 1984, I sat here listening to Liberals making Conservative speeches and Conservatives making Liberal speeches. I must confess I got a little confused.

The Government is really not committed to treating transportation as a public utility. It is not prepared to treat it as something that must be regulated. We must make the transporters perform. I have no objection to the transporters getting a reasonable return on their investment, but we cannot leave it to them. We cannot have airlines in charge of the inspection of passengers and luggage at airports. That has to be done by the Department of Transport. We cannot have the railways inspecting their own equipment with their shortage of car inspectors.

The Government has allowed the owners and operators of the transportation industry to have their way. As long as they can make a buck, they are called successful. This Government or another one like it, God forbid, will kill more people because this Minister and the previous three Ministers as well as the previous Government have in fact compromised on safety, security, inspection and enforcement. Unless the Government comes up in the Budget with all the wherewithal to do it right, we will not believe it and we will fight it to make it do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Madam Speaker, I listened very carefully to the speech by the Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party, and I remember that a few years ago when an accident happened in Gander and also recently with the accident in Dryden, all the Opposition Parties screamed bloody murder and asked for a royal commission of inquiry. Today, we have introduced a Bill that will separate investigators from the people who enforce the legislation, and they don't like that. My first question is: I would like to know what they don't like about a system which, once and for all, will separate investigators from those who enforce the regulations. My second question is, whether they have an alternative policy. If they do, I wish they would let us know because they keep criticizing the Government but never suggest any concrete alternatives. My last question is this: If a socialist party ever came to power, what amounts would it appropriate in this area?

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I apologize to my colleague. I missed his first couple of sentences. He said something about Gander, which I do not pretend to know anything about.

• (1550)

The hon. gentleman asks what we would do. As I said in my speech, and I meant it, we would ask the Government to treat transportation as a public utility. It is something that everyone in Canada has to use both directly and indirectly. It cannot be left up to the whims of the operators and owners of each mode of transportation, whether they are publicly or privately owned, to operate what is first in their best interests, the bottom line. That cannot be allowed.

I forget the other question of my hon. friend, however, not once did I mention the words NDP in my entire speech. If my hon. friend would like me to give him a 40-minute exercise in NDP transportation policy, I would be delighted and willing to ask the House for unanimous consent for me to have another 40 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Minister of State for Transport.

Mrs. Martin (Lincoln): There were a couple of points raised by the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin) on which I would like to reassure him. First, he was talking about the ability and the competence of the people. As I mentioned in my remarks, there is a clause that calls for the appointments to ensure that the members are collectively knowledgeable about air, marine, rail, and commodity pipeline transportation. That is contained in the Bill to ensure that that will take place.

As far as resources are concerned, at the current time there are approximately 300 people who are now involved in accident investigation activities among the three modes. There is absolutely no intent to decrease the resources that are devoted to accident investigation.

The Hon. Member mentioned that expertise is required. The vast majority of those people who are currently doing the investigations will no doubt be transferred to the new Board so the expertise will continue. We will not necessarily be hiring these people through the local employment office, I would like to add.

Transportation is indeed the Minister of Transport's cup of tea, and it is my cup of coffee. I am looking forward to becoming involved very thoroughly in carrying this Bill through to the end and seeing it implemented and carried out in the future.

Mr. Benjamin: I appreciate and thank the Minister for her attempts to reassure me. I recall when I was assured there were enough railway inspectors that it turned out there were 19 for 100,000 miles of track in Canada and over 150,000 units of rolling stock.

We were repeatedly assured there would be enough air traffic controllers. Does the fact that there is a backlog of more than 1,200 investigations not tell the Minister of State something? Does that not make the Minister and the foggy bottoms in the Department of Transport realize and understand that they are not only away behind but they have to do more than catch up?

Of course, some people will be recruited from the Department of Transport and from the National Transportation Agency. I expect that expertise will have to be found in other countries and brought in. Those people are not hired down at the Canada Employment Centre. The Minister will have a sweet time getting this set up. I do not believe there are enough bodies in the Government. If all the Minister is going to do is hire ex-railway officers or airline officers, then the problem has not been solved.

Mrs. Feltham: The Hon. Member mentioned in his speech that he had not read all of the Bill. I would like to refer to page 6 which states:

> 4.(2) The Governor in Council shall appoint as members persons who, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, are collectively knowledgeable about air, marine, rail and commodity pipeline transportation.

The Hon. Member was also concerned about the object of the Board. On page 8 it refers to what the Board must do and how it must report. In Clause 7(2), it states in part:

> —the Board shall not refrain from fully reporting on the causes and contributing factors merely because fault or liability might be inferred from the Board's findings.

The Bill in its present form sets out what the Board must do and will continue to do.

Mr. Benjamin: I thank my colleague for that comment. However, I wish to suggest to her that we have had that before where, in the opinion of the Government, someone is qualified.

If my hon. colleague had been here for the number of years that I have, she would find out how that did not work. That is another reason the Standing Committee will now insist on sitting down with every appointee, and I do not care if it is in camera or not, to see whether or not the Standing Committee is prepared to recommend them. Too often the opinion of the Government is more designed to hand somebody a job than it is a matter of competence, background, and experience.

Mr. Belsher: I have listened with interest to the speech of Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin). As transportation is one of his fortes that he has studied for a great many years, I would like to remind him that it sounded like we had deregulated safety. Nothing could be further from the truth, and the Hon. Member knows that.

Mr. Benjamin: Compromised on it.

Mr. Belsher: Canada has a very good safety record. In fact, it is one of the top safety records world-wide in any mode the Hon. Member cares to choose. Certainly there are accidents, and that is what the Bill is all about. We are trying to prevent accidents. We want to ensure that we have the right means in place to prevent accidents.

The Bill addresses the need to improve on safety and to ensure that it has been properly studied. The Government did bring forward the Aeronautics Act amendments in 1985, of which the Hon. Member was a part and studied that legislation. There were also the Canada Shipping Act amendments in 1987, and the railway shipping Act of last year. The Hon. Member was also a part of those.

The Hon. Member talked about interprovincial trucking. Highways are a provincial matter. Each province has its own police force which works within its own province. It makes no difference whether the truck is going from one province to the next. Why should it not be maintained and the safety part adjudicated from within each individual province? Why should we attempt to put this into an intermodal scheme of things when it is already under the jurisdiction of each individual province?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): A short rebuttal from the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden.

Mr. Benjamin: Thank you for your patience, Madam Speaker, with all of us. In my opinion, in some respects safety was deregulated when the exit and entry regulations for airlines and charter aircraft were cancelled. It was left wide open. As long as someone could get a bank loan, lease a couple of airplanes, and hire a laid-off crew at half the wages, he was in business. There may have been no mechanics or hangar, but he was in business. How many dozens have started up? It is even worse south of the border. It seems to me that that is deregulating safety.

The same thing has applied in other sectors of the transportation industry. They are fundamental to the national economy, and whether they are privately or publicly owned, by their very nature they are natural monopolies. Therefore, they have to be regulated and controlled, particularly in the areas of safety, inspection, security enforcement, and all the other things I have mentioned.

There are not only one or two items that crop up now and again. It is a large ball of wax, and so far all the Government has done is melt it.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand)—Unemployment Insurance—Funds redirected to training—Expenditure locations—White Paper—Request for referral to parliamentary committee; the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey)—Energy—Energy alternative programs—Termination of positions—Alternative energy development; the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Nault)—Aboriginal Rights—Post-secondary education—Students' hunger strike— Bilateral process.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard (Roberval) that Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Transportation Investigation Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I rise today to address the legislation before us, that is, the establishment of a new Transportation Accident Investigation Board.

I must begin my remarks by saying that the Minister's decision to model this new Transportation Accident Investigation Board after the CASB is on the right track.

However, I believe the Minister is putting the cart before the horse. Accident investigation is of primary importance to ensure high levels of safety standards. Many recommendations stemming from investigations have contributed to this country's high level of safety regulations which protect air travellers on a daily basis.

Why is this Government rushing the creation of this new board? Why will this Government not wait for the findings of the judicial inquiry into the Dryden crash? Why will it not wait to hear from Justice Estey's review of the circumstances surrounding the Gander crash?

The logic is that an inquiry always precedes legislation, similar to the previous process when the Dubin inquiry into air safety provided the building block for the Canadian Aviation Safety Board Act. Or, is it that this Government is not interested in the findings and recommendations of the Estey review and the Dryden inquiry?

A recent Angus Reid poll indicates that Canadians think air travel in this country is less safe than it was, and an overwhelming majority wants this Government to show some leadership and do something about it. The poll also suggests that Canadians want firmer regulations of air travel. Air safety should be this Government's first priority. Let me tell the House why.

On Friday, March 10, I received word that Air Ontario's Flight 363 crashed in Dryden shortly after take-off. Some 24 people lost their lives and many more were injured. The victims' families want to know what happened. They want to be reassured that our airways are safe. They want to know that regulations have been followed.

In the days following the crash we heard of a three-year old Transport Canada report which pinpointed the Wawa to Kenora region as one of the most dangerous flying zones in the country. We also heard again in the same report that northern Ontario's accident rate is higher than the national average. This is frightening, and it is totally unacceptable.

It is unacceptable to the people of northern Ontario, and it should be a top priority of this Government. This is also why members of the Liberal Party believe that this legislation could have waited until all the facts are in. This new Transportation Accident Investigation Board will not address the immediate issue of air safety in this country. It will not address the immediate issue of air safety inspectors, nor will it address the immediate issue of air traffic controllers and the perilous effects of deregulation.

Deregulation of Canada's air industry has created some major difficulties with respect to air safety in this country. This Government accelerated the legislative process of deregulation and this led to several key mistakes in the final legislation which have left air safety in peril. I know and I need not be reminded that deregulation was introduced by a Liberal Government. The Liberal Party supports the basic concept of deregulation, but it was totally opposed to the rapid process adopted by this Government. This Government's failure to include a key clause in the final legislation, which could have protected remote and distant communities such as those located in northern Ontario from loss of services as a result of deregulation, has contributed to today's problems with aviation safety.

Bill C-2 will not restore faith in air safety. Canadians want assurances that our airways are safe. They want regulations which will protect them, and rightly so. I can tell Hon. Members of the House that this Government's failure to include this key clause has led to a loss in service. It has led to inadequate weather reporting facilities in my riding and across the whole northern part of this province. It has led to higher air incidences, and it has led to the loss of lives. I encourage the Minister to fly into my riding on a Saturday and see for himself the level of service being provided to northerners.

When this Bill was originally introduced last July, the Minister said at the time and I quote: "The National Transportation Act places safety at the top of our list of objectives. The Government takes this commitment seriously".

What has happened to this commitment? Given the crash at Dryden, the inefficient numbers of air safety inspectors, and the lack of air traffic controllers in this country, I fail to see this Government's commitment to air safety. How will this piece of legislation reassure Canadians that air safety is a priority with this Government?

I would like to turn to the new Transportation Accident Investigation Board's mandate. This legislation was to establish this Board as a totally independent body. It must be of the highest standards employing Canada's top experts in the field of transportation safety. Failure to provide these basic principles will lead to another situation such as we have seen with the Gander crash investigation.

Members of my Party cannot emphasize strongly enough the importance of waiting for the results of the judicial inquiry into the Dryden crash and the judicial review of the Gander crash before rushing ahead with this legislation.

The Dubin inquiry on aviation safety formed the basis of the legislation creating the Canadian Aviation Safety Board Act, 1984. It boils down to basic common sense and logic. Waiting for these results will provide the Government with the necessary recommendations to create an accident investigation agency which will promote safety in Canada to the maximum efficiency and to ensure that the day-to-day operations of this agency will proceed with the least possible opportunities for dissension to set in.

It is also my hope that this Government will be bound by this new Transportation Accident Investigations Board's recommendations, such was the case with the CASB. The only difference is that Bill C-2 should ensure that the recommendations to the Government are adhered to.

In March 1987, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board completed a study of aviation accidents in the Wawa-Kenora region. The conclusions of this study indicated that situations involving pilots operating under visual flight rules pushing on into bad weather appeared to be a factor in the higher accident rate in this region. Further, this was some indication that weather facilities in northern Ontario, particularly 24-hour weather observations sites were not sufficient to counteract the difficulties of weather forecasting. Based on these findings the board made two safety recommendations and recommended that the Department of Transport and the Department of the Environment expedite the installation of automatic weather observing and reporting facilities in the Wawa-Kenora region. It also recommended that the Department of Transport institute a promotional campaign to improve pilot awareness of the extra efforts needed to conduct their safety operations throughout that region. Neither of these recommendations were acted upon. Had the Government listened to the experts, the Dryden crash could have possibly been avoided.

In closing, I urge this Government to listen closely to the recommendations being made by Members on this side of the House. They are sound and valid recommendations. I urge this Government to wait for the findings of the Estey review on the Gander crash and the judicial enquiry of the Dryden crash before proceeding with this legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments.

Mr. Johnson: Madam Speaker, I am surprised and appalled at some of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Nault). He has suggested that we should delay the formation of this Board and keep the CASB for just a little while longer. Surely, this is in complete contradiction to what he wants and what this country needs.

Is he and his Party willing to take responsibility for any delay that would occur by such a move? Surely if we do not have the proper structures in place to investigate accidents of all kinds in transportation we will not be able to save lives, and such a delay would surely contribute to additional loss of life.

I would like to comment that in addition we are not rushing with the creation of this Board. In fact the creation of a multimodal accident investigation board has long been part of the plans of this Government and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard).

• (1610)

In Hansard for July 6, 1986, we find the following from the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I do apologize for interrupting the Hon. Member. Is that just a comment and a question or is the Hon. Member rising on debate?

Mr. Johnson: I will put my question, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We will be expecting the question so that the Member will have a chance to answer before the time runs out.

Mr. Johnson: Madam Speaker, my question is very simple. As the Hon. Member knows, we have not been rushing the formation of this board.

Is he willing to take responsibility for any delay that he suggests?

Mr. Nault: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. First, Canadians do not believe that the new investigation board will do anything for the situation facing us today. Safety in the air is not there at present. Whether the Government installs the investigation board now or after the results of the two inquiries will make no difference to the situation.

To put in legislation to meet the people's needs the Government should wait for the reports. By doing so information will be at hand to have legislation with some teeth to it to investigate properly, avoiding the same thing a couple of years down the road that we are going through now.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Madam Speaker, I would like the previous speaker to clarify his point. He said that the Government in cutting back and freezing the hiring on air traffic controllers for three years in 1985 created a desperate shortage in air traffic controllers and is creating a serious safety problem in Canada. There is a similar situation with weather facilities and the air space organizations. The failure to put parallel runways in Vancouver and all these cost-cutting measures are what are putting Canadian lives at risk. It is not the fault of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board which is continuing to function, to investigate accidents, and report on them and in spite of the Gander situation and in spite of this legislation. The accident investigation is going on and the professionals doing it are doing it competently. It is really the Government's restraint program and creating an unregulated environment that has created a disastrous aviation situation. Is that about what the Member was indicating to the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Johnson)?

Mr. Nault: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. In a nutshell, that is the problem in northern Ontario. The recommendations being put forward by the CASB are not being followed through. It is easy to have recommendations put forward by different investigation boards but if they are not followed through, it does nothing for anybody. That is the problem.

In northern Ontario recommendations and reports are being handed to the Government and to the Minister but nothing is being done. We saw the magnitude of the Dryden crash which has created deep concern in the people of Northern Ontario and the people in my riding about it being unsafe to fly in airplanes presently.

We ask the Government to put in legislation to meet those concerns. By not waiting for the reports, not waiting for what we are asking for, it will do nothing for northern Ontario. We will have what has been done previously and that is pay lip service to the problem. People running the airlines in northern Ontario are cutting costs to compete in a jurisdiction that is not able to compete with the hub of central Canada. That is our problem and we see it every day.

We should allow the have-not regions which do not have the capabilities to make a profit to revert to regulations allowing them to have safety first not safety last as it may be at this time.

Mr. Casey: Madam Speaker, I have just a few comments. In listening to the Hon. Member from Kenora—Rainy River, he mentions rushing and asks why we are told we are rushing with this Bill. As a new Member, it occurs to me that either we are rushing into something or we are going too slowly. We are never going at the right speed. I say this is the right speed.

The Bill is well thought out. It will provide uniform quality accident investigation facilities for an accident no matter what type of accident there is. Up to now an accident occurring on rail gets a different quality of investigation compared with accidents concerning air or marine traffic. Under this program all accidents will get the same attention as air traffic or any other type.

The Hon. Member demands leadership. This Bill is exactly that. It is leadership. It will provide uniform quality accident investigation.

Mr. Nault: Madam Speaker, I thank the new Member for his remarks. The biggest problem with this situation is that when we get back to the Bill we will see that nothing has been changed from the CASB. There will still be problems with board members not having the ability to make their feelings known or to play a part in the investigation itself. We are back to square one.

We want an independent body to review accidents and review situations like the Dryden crash, to take recommendations and allow us to improve our airways in Canada. To put this Bill in place now will just replace the same problem we had before. People cannot agree because they do not have the power and the ability to tell Canadians what is going on in the industry in Canada.

Mr. MacDougall: Madam Speaker, I also come from northern Ontario. When the Hon. Member refers to air travel in northern Ontario, could he clarify whether he is meaning services such as Nor Ont Air, Air Ontario Beaskin or Frontier? The list goes on. Is the Member saying he is not satisfied today with the services those companies are giving to the residents of Northern Ontario safety-wise?

Mr. Nault: Madam Speaker, I am not satisfied with the service that we are getting in northern Ontario. I do not know how long it takes the Hon. Member to get from Ottawa to his riding but it takes me six hours. That is totally unacceptable. I am not saying the situation is totally unsafe. I am saying that the mechanisms are not in place to make it as safe as it was previous to deregulation when there were enough inspectors working. We just have to take a look at the Dryden accident. We are being told that the recommendation of the CASB was simple. Pilots should visually inspect wings before taking off. That recommendation should have been circulated to the airlines because of weather patterns in northern Ontario. That courtesy should have been extended to people in Northern Ontario. I see now that my time is up.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise in the debate today on second reading of the legislation of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) to create the Transportation Accident Investigation Board.

Before I start I want to pay credit to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), who was our lead speaker for our Party this morning. He raised a number of important concerns. As well I mention the dean of transportation in the House from our side, the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin), who brings us a great deal of knowledge and experience.

I have a few brief comments to make before I discuss the legislation before us. It deals perhaps in some ways with safety by rail but it is also a much broader issue that has been raised by many members in Question Period and in other Debates, namely, VIA Rail and its possible future expansion—unlikely as that may be considering the responses from the Minister of Transport. I am speaking particularly of VIA Rail service in northern British Columbia. I had an opportunity to ride from Prince George to Goat River and return Friday evening. I want to thank the crew of that train with whom I had a chance to talk about the service, as well as the passengers who expressed their opinions to me in terms of how important this service is.

I also wish to thank VIA officials in Montreal who gave notice of my trip and ensured that I had all of the proper paperwork in place to be on board that train. Perhaps safety was involved with this trip. I say that because I had the opportunity to go up to the head-end of the train. Frankly, some of the equipment that the Liberal Government before this Government put in place has forced the railway to run with old furnaces on rails. That is a safety hazard. According to the press release of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) the new Transportation Accident Investigation Board will investigate causes of accidents, make recommendations to correct safety deficiencies, prepare public reports on its findings and, where possible, suggest ways to prevent recurrences.

According to the press release what the legislation will do is combine three existing organizations. They are the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, the Marine Casualty Investigations Branch of Transport Canada and the Railway Pipelines Investigation Directorate of the National Transportation Agency. As the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) said this morning I suppose most Members wish that we would not have to have such boards to investigate accidents, especially when they have to pick up the pieces and to take a look at what are often tragic accidents that happen in transportation in Canada. Of course we have to have a body to review such accidents to ensure that we learn from them and to ensure that regulations and legislation in the future will be introduced by the Government so that these carriers will not incur damage.

I would like to give an example as to why this legislation is important. In doing so I will reflect on some of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin) about responsibility. Whose responsibility is it to ensure that these carriers operate properly and that we do not end up with major accidents?

My example concerns a situation in my riding which is in northern British Columbia. It was brought to my attention by representatives of Lodge 1415 of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of the United States and Canada. They have an interesting situation similar to many communities where there is an interchange between two railroads. In this case it is the British Columbia Railway owned by the Province of British Columbia and Canadian National with which we are all familiar.

In this case under the authority of the National Transportation Agency CN used to be required to have its trainmen inspect the cars before they were sent off on a train. These people are certified under the National Transportation Agency. For those who are familiar with northern British Columbia and Prince George, these trains are made up in the B.C.R. yard which is just south of Prince George. CN sends a locomotive and cabooses over to the B.C.R. yard and then takes the train from there to Winnipeg. Because B.C.R. is a provincially regulated railway the need to have certified inspectors look at those cars is avoided.

The Brotherhood of Railway Carmen think that this is important. They have raised the matter on a number of occasions with the National Transportation Agency. I will be raising it on their behalf again. I have told them that this legislation will be before the House today and likely tomorrow. We felt it would be a good idea to raise this issue in order to point out the concerns that there are.

The carmen conducted a survey concerning one particular train, Train No. 358 which goes from Prince George to Winnipeg. They had their brothers and sisters in Winnipeg report to them on the condition of the train when it arrived, especially in terms of any particular problems that there were with it. In this way they built evidence with respect to the safety of the railroad, which is their paramount concern. If they are required to be certified to send trains out why is the National Transportation Agency allowing a train to travel from Prince George to Winnipeg without being inspected?

In the month from January 13, 1989, to February 12, 1989, a survey of Train 358 was conducted. Normally it has about 75 to 100 cars on it. This survey was conducted by the Brotherhood. The results are as follows. Some 44 cars were reported in bad order, 22 of them for wheels. I asked the members of the brotherhood which of these bad orders were of particular concern because of potential derailment. Wheels are the most important aspect of the train to be inspected. Nine cars were cited for defective loads such as shifting of loads, bands coming loose and what have you. Eight cars had defects in connection with their braking systems. One can understand the concern over a braking system not working. Five cars had various defects concerning draft gears and couplers.

The people who conducted this survey feel that these 44 cars in one month on one train in the state in which they were in is unacceptable considering that these cars are travelling half way across the country in bad order status. However, we are at a point at which the Government and its regulatory agencies have allowed the carriers to govern themselves, to find ways to avoid just such situations as the one I have cited. What we have to be cognizant of when we are discussing the legislation that we are discussing today is what we have to face in the future.

It states in the Minister's release: "—and where possible suggest ways to prevent recurrences". In the case which I have cited I hope and trust that that will not occur after an accident has happened. I certainly intend to pass this information on to the Minister. A situation such as this should be investigated. There should be a report so that those people who are servicing the trains know and feel confident that they are safe and that all the communities along the line from Prince George to Winnipeg can be assured of rail safety.

If there are Members in the House who have concerns in other locations of the country then it is our duty to bring them to the attention of the Minister at the earliest possible opportunity.

I have one other situation which I would like to raise with Members in order to give them an appreciation of just what we are facing in terms of rail safety. I have more information from the same Brotherhood of Railway Carmen. They have particular duties to inspect trains to ensure that they are safe. In the particular case which I would like to cite now a worker alleges that there is a problem in identifying roller bearing noise when a train is going through inspection. I have spoken with the worker and he is prepared to provide additional information to investigators. In this case the worker alleges that the crew that was inspecting the train suggested that there was a problem with these roller bearings, that it was not identified by supervisory personnel and that the train or car went out. In this particular case we are talking about a north-east coal train with which people from western Canada are familiar. The train proceeded and in fact ended up derailing.

These employees of the railway feel that there is a concern about the safety of equipment and its reliability which may lead to derailments that we all hope will not happen. In this particular case it was on the British Columbia Railway again, a provincially regulated railway. It is of particular interest to us because the equipment is actually inspected by Canadian National Railway employees.

Let me get then to the legislation before us and before it goes to committee where there will be opportunity for people to air their views and, I hope, to call witnesses to look into this legislation. I hope there will be sufficient opportunity to research the area so that we end up with some good legislation.

One of the concerns we have is that while the legislation lays out in detail some of the membership requirements, as Hon. Members opposite have said, it is important that they be collectively knowledgeable about transportation issues. That is very important, Madam Speaker. But one of the issues I would like to raise is that there should be a section in the legislation, a direction to the Government to seek out all interested parties to see if they are interested in sitting on the board. I hope the Minister will attempt to include this.

One of the comments from my meeting on the weekend with the Railway Carmen is that nobody ever asks them. As the people who basically do that day-to-day work, through their organizations—perhaps a professional association or a union—they should have an opportunity to make comment and to sit in on the deliberations.

I would certainly encourage amendment to the legislation that gives direction to the Minister to seek some wide membership and to make sure all of the interested parties have an opportunity to participate in the discussion and the appointment of members.

I think a general concern of all Members should be that bodies such as the Transportation Accident Investigation Board be perceived as independent. I know it is often difficult for the Government to appear not to politically interfere. They have not had a particularly good record in that case. But in the future, I think boards like this that often have to review very tragic circumstances, should be above board and be given every opportunity to make comment. That is not going to necessarily be a part of the day-to-day goings on in this House, such as we see in Question Period, though ultimately it is this House's responsibility to deal with those issues. Let us keep it at arm's length. Let us keep it professional, and offer an opportunity for all to have input.

Equal access should be given to all interested parties to the findings of any investigation. These interested parties should be clearly named by group, whether we are talking about a private company, union representatives, family members or accident victims. I think that is important.

I should say this Bill is long overdue because of the circumstances in our rail, air and water. I am not as familiar as many Members are about air transportation. However, having had to experience it in the last short while, I can certainly vouch that I have been commuting the hard way. It is not just the six hours to Prince George, B.C. It is sitting on those planes for what ended up last Friday to be a lot longer than that, spread over two days to get home. But we appreciate the work that the crews of these airlines and these railroads do to ensure that we, as travellers, can get home, not just Members of Parliament but Canadian travellers and our many visitors and to know that they are travelling in a safe and comfortable way.

The experience of the United States is a perfect example of some of the problems we may face in this country with deregulation. Undoubtedly, the additional airline traffic that we are seeing now at Pearson International Airport means that the Government and Transport Canada and boards like this will have to be ever vigilant to ensure that the proper regulations are followed and that when something does happen, this type of board is given the opportunity and the resources it needs to make a thorough investigation. I think our Transport critic from Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) made that point very clear. It is important that a body like this and the Government have the resources to carry out any of those necessary changes.

What is going to happen on Budget night? We do not know what the impact is going to be on this legislation. It may render this legislation useless. We hope that does not happen, but that could be the impact of the Budget of the Minister of Finance on April 27.

We hope that does not happen with a number of issues, be it in forestry or unemployment insurance or regional development. We do not want to see perhaps well-intentioned legislation, such as this, damaged by Government Members opposite voting it down by supporting a Budget that may gut the usefulness of this legislation and this board. I would like to hear assurances from the Minister that this will not happen and that we will have the resources to ensure that proper investigations are carried out.

These kinds of boards are critical because they give that independence to the kinds of unfortunate accidents we have seen. I look forward to following the proceedings in the Transport Committee, although I am not a member of that committee. As you can see, Madam Speaker, from the representations made to me, the people who work in the transportation industry in my riding are concerned. It is opportunities like this and in correspondence with the Minister and department officials that we can raise the concerns of the people who work in the industry so that, hopefully, we will not need to have very many investigations under this board. I trust it will have a boring future and, if needed, the Government will give it the resources to be effective.

Thank you very much, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Ricard).

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Madam Speaker, I noticed in his speech that the Hon. Member made a reference to routine inspection on trains. If I understood correctly, he would like the Bill tabled in the House today to contain a chapter or section requiring railway companies to make routine inspections on trains, in addition to the inspections after an accident. Perhaps the Hon. Member would care to expand, since I am not quite sure what he meant in this respect.

[English]

Mr. Gardiner: Madam Speaker, it would seem to me that regulations governing the routine inspection of trains is something that should be governed by the National Transportation Agency. After this, I intend to pass on the concerns that have been raised with me by the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen to the Minister. I am not going to wait for this particular legislation to go through before raising these concerns. I think it is the responsibility of the Minister and the National Transportation Agency to raise those issues with the railroad and with the people who work on the railroad. They should be raised as soon as possible.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Madam Speaker, I must congratulate my colleague from Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. Gardiner) on a brilliant and intuitive speech on the matter of safety. I ask him to enlarge upon his comments and his hope that there will be a boring future for this particular organization. Would he comment in the light of the fact that most of the transportation safety problems in this country today result from the Government's policy of Public Service cut-backs—air traffic controllers, air worthiness inspectors— cut-backs at every level. Cut-backs in the Public Service are a major cause of public safety problems.

The second thing is budget cuts. There is no second runway at Vancouver. They propose closing down weather facilities. They are closing down flight service stations at Tofino. Instead of expanding to meet the rising passage of traffic, the rising number of aircraft, the Government is contracting its services or freezing them and creating an enormous dilemma.

Would he expand on how Government policy is working directly opposite to the safety of the travelling public?

Mr. Gardiner: Madam Speaker, my general comment still stands. I hope a body like this has a boring future and its members do not have a lot to do. Perhaps it will render the clause in the Bill that discusses remuneration as one of the smallest Budget items this Parliament will have to deal with in the future.

It is important that we look at the impact of cut-backs on air traffic controllers. I understand that two years ago departmental officials and others brought to the attention of the Government the concerns they had over transport safety and the problems that would result from all modes with the lack of regulatory authority to watch over what is happening in that field.

There is the example of the tragic VIA Rail accident in northern Alberta that led to an inquiry and produced further information about the need to investigate the problems that exist. I am not suggesting that anything specific happened, but I read the report on the VIA Rail accident and only suggest that it symbolizes the problem we have had with railway safety and safety in other areas. The cut-backs that we may face on April 27 from the Government could put us further in the hole as far as transportation safety is concerned in this country.

Mr. Coté: With respect to the financial conditions, I think resources have increased since 1984.

M. Côté: Madam Speaker, I would like to make a brief comment.

I would like to go back to one of the Hon. Member's remarks he made earlier with respect to the independence of this Board, when he stressed the various problems involved in controlling the safety aspect and gave serveral examples.

It seems to me that the very purpose of the Bill before the House is to make the distinction in safety management between accident investigations and enforcement of safety regulations.

The Hon. Member is very critical of both compliance and enforcement where our safety regulations are concerned. I would like to ask the following question: In the present circumstances, how can we have strict compliance with and enforcement of safety regulations when we consider that at the present time, this Board is strictly unimodal and that investigation and enforcement may be a source of conflict of interest?

I will rephrase my question: How can he claim that safety regulations can be followed and enforced today, if the whole purpose of the Bill is to separate the two aspects as much as possible?

[English]

Mr. Gardiner: Madam Speaker, I am not sure if I caught all of the Hon. Member's question but I will do my best to answer. First I will deal with having good people on the board to ensure that policies are followed. We should follow a practice that I hope is used by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), that good, qualified people are appointed to these boards. They should be people who think independently and can be assured that when they are presented with advice and information from various departmental officials they can make an independent decisions about what they recommend. We hope that is what the Prime Minister does when he chooses members of his Cabinet. We trust that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) will do that when he considers appointees to this particular board. I hope he will be mindful of my comments about direction and ensuring a broad base of representation on the board. I hope he looks hard to find good people.

The Hon. Member asked how one applies the rules and makes them work. That responsibility comes under the National Transportation Agency. I believe this body should review some of the authority that the National Transportation Agency has, just to see if the rules are carried out effectively on the ground.

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in debate on Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Transportation Accident Investigation Board, and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof. Like the Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin), I too have been here before. Except, unlike the Hon. Member, I had an opportunity to take a leave of absence for four years from the House and observe the work of the Government and the workings and process of the House from the outside. That was good experience.

I was actually pleased when the Government was elected in 1984, because it promised it would consult grassroot Canadians.

An Hon. Member: We did.

Mr. Flis: They say they did. I had the good fortune of being Vice-President of the Canadian Polish Congress for two years. The Government swamped us with requests for input, requests for input on the multicultural Bill, on immigration matters, on transportation matters. What the Government does not realize is that these organizations do not have paid researchers and advisers. They do not have professional writers. Weeks and months were spent responding to the Government's request for input. What was done with that information? Nothing. It wasted Canadians' time.

The Government said it was consulting us and wanted our input, but what did it do with it? It paid no attention to us. If it implemented one suggestion from all these Canadians, then Canadians would say the Government is legitimate. It had all of that input, as it does from Justice Sopinka and the Canadian Bar Association on this Bill, but not one of their recommendations have been implemented. It makes the whole democratic process a farce and the Government should resign now. The first one who should resign is the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard).

In November, 1983, I was the Parliamentary Secretary to the then Minister of Transport whose duty it was to monitor Bill C-163, an Act to establish the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, through all of the parliamentary stages. The Act came into effect in October, 1984. There was much debate at the time about whether the Government of the day should be implementing a unimodal transportation investigation agency or a multimodal board. The consensus of the day was that we should establish a unimodal agency. Of course, the logical travel mode to begin with was aviation, since Justice Dubin's Inquiry on aviation safety made this recommendation. He recommended separating safety regulations from accident investigation and establishing an independent investigating body.

The three Parties agreed that we should begin with a unimodal agency and, when such a board proved to function well, we would move to a multimodal investigating board as recommended by Bill C-2. When one looks at the previous legislation, Bill C-163 and Bill C-2, one sees that in most articles they are identical. Therefore, the Official Opposition agrees with the intent of Bill C-2, as stated in Article 7(1): "To advance transportation safety".

However, the fly in the ointment is that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board is not functioning well, as was demonstrated in the investigation of the Gander crash. To this day, three years after the crash, Canadians do not know the cause of the crash. Five members of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board concluded that it was caused by icing on the wings. Four members suspected that there may have been an explosion on board which had nothing to do with the icing theory.

The Conservative Government demonstrated that it cannot manage a unimodal board. How can it manage a multimodal agency? Why did the Government not call a judicial inquiry to answer the questions raised in the minority report of the four members? Transport Canada, in a leaked document, also did not agree with the icing theory. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) flip-flopped in his assessment of the findings on the cause of the Gander crash. With so many unanswered questions, why is the Government rushing this Bill through the House on an urgent basis?

The other week, all three Parties expressed condolences to the families of the victims of the Dryden crash. Had the icing recommendations of the CASB reached the appropriate people, maybe condolences would not have had to be expressed in the House. I see nothing in Bill C-2 that would guarantee that the recommendations of the TAIB will be received by the principal players and implemented where and when necessary. The public and the Public Service working in Transport Canada have lost confidence in the Minister and in the Government.

Less than a month ago, we saw the headlines dealing with this issue. I do not have time to quote all of them, but I would like to share with Hon. Members this headline from The Ottawa Citizen which reads: "Senior bureaucrat resigns over air crash controversy". The article reads: "Another senior Transport official, said Lafrance, quit because he had lost the confidence of the Minister and the Deputy Minister. Lafrance also recently told the Minister that the Department had issued special wing icing warnings to all commercial airlines in January. He later admitted his Department had not sent the warning to Air Ontario until mid-March, five days after one of its planes crashed and killed 24 people at Dryden, Ontario".

Now the Minister has appointed Mr. Justice Willard Estey to review the record of the investigation into the circumstances surrounding the Gander crash. The reference given to Mr. Justice Estey was that he could call witnesses who were not heard from before and could call for evidence in addition to going through the existing testimony. I was disappointed when I heard that Mr. Justice Estey will only review the evidence on hand. If he does that, naturally he will come to the same conclusion that the Minister wants; that is, he will support the icing theory.

There were witnesses to incidents just prior to the crash who were not called in to testify. As an example, a truck driver saw a ball of fire under the plane. Will that lead us to suspect that the crash was caused by icing on the wings, or was there an explosion? Why is Mr. Justice Estey not calling this truck driver to give evidence about what he observed?

What is the Government trying to cover up? Were unsafe explosives on board, was it sabotage? The mother of the killed pilot wants to testify before the inquiry of Mr. Justice Estey. Now she cannot. Why not?

How can the Government have the gall to bring in a multimodal transportation Bill when it cannot tidy up its act in one mode of travel? Look at what is happening at Pearson International Airport. People are losing confidence in air travel and in the Government. There is a shortage of air traffic controllers. There is a shortage of inspectors.

Why is there a shortage of air traffic controllers? Not long ago, during my time as Parliamentary Secretary, almost entire classes of air traffic controllers were being failed. Then there was some intervention and the same people re-wrote the exams and passed them. My own son wanted to be an air traffic controller. He wrote the exams and passed them. Six years later, he is still waiting to be called in for an oral interview. That is how the Government is running transportation in Canada.

We have a Government that cannot respond quickly to oil spills caused by marine accidents. We have a Government that is abandoning sections of VIA Rail routes. This is causing low morale, and we know what low morale does. Low morale will lead to more accidents. There appears to be no Government commitment to an adequate, safe transportation system.

Our Party is recommending that we wait for Mr. Justice Estey's findings and then bring in Bill C-2. By forcing the Bill through now, the Minister is putting the caboose before the engine, or does the Minister have a hidden agenda in this Bill? Is he trying to eliminate the four dissenters from the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, four members who truly want to make air travel safer by obtaining the true cause of the Gander crash?

Looking at the expertise of the dissenting members, it is no wonder that Canadians and Americans are placing a great deal of importance on this minority report. Let us look at the qualifications of some of the members who submitted the minority report. Les Filotas has a Ph.D. in theoretical aeronautics. He is the most highly qualified Canadian in aeronautics. Captain Ross Stephenson is a Captain with Air Canada with over 30,000 hours of flying including 9,000 hours on the DC-8. If anyone would know whether to pursue the icing theory or the explosion theory, it would be Captain Ross Stephenson. Mr. Mussallem is an aeronautical engineer who also spent several years as a pilot with Wardair. With experts like that submitting a minority report, surely to goodness the Minister should have called a judicial inquiry right away. Now he wants to deal with a multimodal board. He should clean up his act in one mode first.

Let us look at Bill C-2. Clause 4 establishes a board to be known as the Transportation Accident Investigation Board consisting of not more than five full-time members appointed by Governor in Council. There are nine members investigating one mode and the Bill is recommending that a maximum of only five members shall explore all modes of travel. The Bill goes on to say that the Governor in Council shall appoint as members persons who, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, are collectively knowledgeable about air, marine, rail and commodity pipeline transportation. I challenge the Minister to find five people who are experts in all aspects of each mode.

Clause 5 of the Bill states that the Governor in Council should designate one member of the five to be chairman of the board. Here the Government is appointing five top-notch Canadians to this board and then telling them they are not competent enough to choose their own chairman, that the Minister will do it for them. Sure, the Minister will do it for them because then he will have the chairman in his pocket. That is the problem with the CASB. Mr. Justice Sopinka and the Canadian Bar Association challenged the Government on that clause of the Bill. Government Members are thanking everyone for input. Why do they not use some of that input?

Clauses 9 and 10 of the Bill provide that such employees as are necessary for the proper conduct of the work of the board shall be appointed in accordance with the Public Service Employment Act. That is just a nice way of saying that again the Minister will have a hand in selecting staff.

• (1700)

Under the title directors of investigations and other investigators it states:

> 10(1) From among the employees appointed under subsection 9(1) there shall be—

The Bill does not clarify who appoints these directors of investigations. Will the power lie with the director of education and the chairman, bypassing the wishes of the members? When members ask for more information or ask that certain parts of an accident should be investigated further, will the chairman and director of investigation say: "Sorry, there is no need for it"? That happened in the Gander crash. This is why we are asking why the Government is rushing the Bill through. What is the Minister's hidden agenda?

I would like to compliment the Government on parts of the Bill. For example, I am pleased that the Government built in a review process. Section 63(1) states:

> The Governor in Council shall, in January 1994, appoint one or more persons to carry out a comprehensive review of the operation of this Act for the purpose of assessing its effect on the safety of air—

That is a good recommendation with which we agree. If the Government feels that a review process is important in 1994, does it not feel that there should have been a review process on the Canadian aviation safety Bill? That is why we are suggesting that we should wait for Justice Estey's report.

Before Bill C-163, the CASB Bill, was implemented we had the investigations and the knowledge of Justice Dubin. That is why it was a good Bill. There are many things in that Bill that have to be ironed out, studied, changed, or amended.

When the Minister gave a background to the release of the Bill, he stated: "the Bill tabled today is much improved as a result of these extensive consultations over the past year. The Bill also clarifies the confusion which has arisen over interpretation of the CASB Act with regard to the roles and responsibilities of the chairman, board members, and investigators." This Bill does not clarify that. The confusion is still there, and the confusion will continue to plague the new Board just as the CASB was plagued with this confusion.

As I mentioned in one of my questions, one of the biggest errors that the Government has made in bringing forward the Bill is that it did not accept the recommendations of the Canadian Bar Association and Justice Sopinka. In the document entitled "Review of John Sopinka's Recommendations to the Minister of Transport" and the submission of the Canadian Bar Association to Transport Canada, it states: "The Government's failure to adopt recommendations from two of the most respected sources of legal opinion in Canada opens an avenue to raise serious questions. Many controversial and contradicting events have taken place at the CASB in recent times. These need no elaboration. Why has the Government chosen not to adopt provisions that would have corrected these and gone a long way toward improving transportation safety standards in Canada?"

The Official Opposition agrees with the intent of the Bill. However, we do not agree with the hidden agenda of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard).

Mr. Belsher: I have listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Flis). He makes much ado about the fact that all the recommendations from Justice Sopinka were not used. Nonetheless, a great many people were consulted about the legislation that we have before us today.

There was general recommendation made that it was good to separate the Board from the investigating arm itself so that the Board would function as a board to ask the correct questions of the investigators.

At the time Justice Sopinka was asked for his comments he was not a justice but a very highly respected lawyer. On Section 4 which provides for five members, Justice Sopinka stated that he agreed that the Board was too large. There should be at least one member from each mode of transportation so that at least one person with experience in each mode can be appointed.

For a five-member board the composition should be aviation, two; marine, one; railway, one; commodity pipeline, one; making a grand total of five. Therefore, it is false to give the impression today that we have not been listening to what Justice Sopinka has said. Certainly, all the recommendations of each individual person who reviewed the draft Bill were not followed. However, by and large the thrust of them were. I am glad to hear that both opposition Parties have at least said that the thrust of the Bill was in the right direction.

Mr. Flis: I still stick to what I said about not accepting the recommendations of Justice Sopinka and the Canadian Bar Association. That was already in the Bill, and it was not a recommendation from Justice John Sopinka.

I would like to answer the Member with a rhetorical question. How can a board of five be operated when all that is needed for a quorum is two members? Again, this Board of five members will have the same problems as the board of nine members under the Canadian Aviation Safety Board.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): I am pleased to see the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr.

Flis) back in the House after his sojourn. His contribution in a previous Parliament was notable.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member to respond to suggestions that the purview of the committee should be expanded somewhat. There is a definition in the aviation accident area that aircraft is too limited. There have been suggestions that sport parachuting should come under their purview. The ability to investigate accidents involving military aircraft doing aerobatic demonstrations in public areas, hang-gliders, and ultralights where there have been a number of deaths in Canada, is a regulatory vacuum area.

Would the Hon. Member like to comment on the example of sport parachuting where the government restraint program has wound up cutting the Canadian Sports Parachuting Organization out of the umbrella group? It has lost its funding and lost its technical adviser, making the sport somewhat more hazardous. Yet there is no over-all investigative body. How would the Hon. Member approach expanding that section to a little broader examination of safety questions?

Mr. Flis: I thank the Hon. Member for those kind comments. That is why it is always a pleasure to return to places like this.

The comments of the Hon. Member agree with what I have stated. The Government does not appear to have a commitment to safety in transportation. What can a captain who has been flying nothing but jumbo jets know about gliders? That sector of sports and transportation should be represented.

Is it represented in this Bill? No, Madam Speaker, it is not. This is something that we should raise in committee. I hope the Government does not attempt to bulldoze this Bill through committee as quickly as it is attempting to force it through the House.

I stress that we should be waiting for the recommendations and comments of Justice Estey. We should consider representations such as those we have heard from my colleague in the New Democratic Party.

We agree with the intent of the Bill, to make transportation safer. Let us work together in committee. That is why I enjoyed the transportation committee; when we got out of this place we sort of put aside our partisanship politics and we tried to work together to improve a Bill.

Some Members of the House will recall that the Canadian Aviation Safety Bill went through quite quickly, but there was that agreement too. Let us see if a unimodal board will work. If it does, let us expand it to involve all modes of transportation. Maybe the Bill is okay. Maybe the Canadian Aviation Safety Board is okay. Maybe the fault lies in the incompetent Government opposite.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Madam Speaker, I have another question for the former Parliamentary Secretary who is knowledgeable in these areas. The problem is that the development of aviation safety is based on the Government responding to the recommendations of an accident investigation agency and the failure to do that because of cutting of personnel, cutting of budgets and basically almost leaving the private sector to handle many of these things.

I would like to make a suggestion that has been made to me, that the Transport Committee should immediately have the report of these agencies referred to it, that the Transport Committee should be monitoring the recommendations and the implementation of the recommendations, and that it should be required to present a report to the House of Commons on implementations of recommendations put forward by the safety agency.

How would the Hon. Member respond to that suggestion which has been brought forward on a couple of occasions, that monitoring must take place and a report to the House from one of its own agencies rather than the Public Service?

Mr. Flis: I think if that were implemented, Madam Speaker, what it would avoid is what happened in the Dryden crash where Air Ontario got the recommendations five days after the crash. I think we need a better watch-dog on transport matters, and what better watch-dog than the Transport Committee.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): I have one short question for this knowledgeable individual in this area if he is willing to share his expertise with the House of Commons.

In the United States there seems to be a trend and a discussion in Congress of breaking off the FAA from the Department of Transport in order to give a higher priority to aviation in the sense that it can compete for its resources and regulatory changes as almost a department, rather than a subsidiary group of an enormously large department.

There has been the suggestion made that this multimodal approach is almost going in a direction counter to where it should be going, that the problems of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board should be resolved by legislation and changes, and that a unimodal approach should be continued and enhanced rather than amalgamating it all into a very narrow board where they would have to compete internally for resources in each area and then go forward to the Ministry and to the Government to compete for a much smaller piece of the pie.

Is he familiar with the fact that there is talk of breaking the FAA out in the United States into a separate agency and allowing in Canada almost a move in the opposite direction of trying to integrate aviation and the other forms of transportation together in a much smaller body where they would be much more limited?

Mr. Flis: I thank the Hon. Member for the series of questions. I do not think that following trends that are happening across the border is always the correct direction to go. I think deregulation took place much faster in the United States than in Canada. We recommended deregulation. It was a limited regulation which we monitored to move slowly. Unfortunately, when this Government got in it just opened the doors and let the airline companies dictate regulations. This is why we have such a mess at Pearson and so on.

I think we are going in the right direction with a multimodal Board, but I think we have to make sure that we have more resources. I hope the Government does not think that it is going to try to operate a multimodal board with the same people resource and the same financial resources as they did for a unimodal board. I give the Minister at least that much credit for his thinking.

We can proceed in the direction we are going, but we should do it a little more slowly. I think we should wait for Justice Estey's recommendations. Maybe after we hear from him we may have to seek further information. Maybe we have to ask for a more in-depth inquiry such as the inquiry by Justice Dubin.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for North Island—Powell River.

Mr. Ray Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Madam Speaker, it has been an interesting debate to this point in time. It certainly raises many questions in the House that cause us all great concern. The whole question of safety in transportation is foremost on the minds of almost everybody in this country at the rate that we move here.

I am often surprised that highways are not the greatest national concern, considering the carnage and destruction on highways. Yet we as a national legislature pay very little attention to what causes the greatest number of deaths and injuries and destruction of property in this country. We spend an enormous amount of time on the others not without justification, but certainly it is always surprising.

I personally have misgivings about the Bill before us today. I think that by moving into a multimodal approach, especially with the experience that the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Flis) referred to, there has not been great success with handling that approach and there is the suspicion that it is going to be there to submerge politically embarrassing issues rather than to serve the needs of safety.

Next, we should not lose sight that safety is a multifaceted thing, from the aviation point of view, the people who are involved in air regulation, air worthiness, personnel licensing, people involved in enforcement, air navigation, airports, all the way down the road. However, when something does go wrong in the system, the bottom line is the accident investigation group. They are the ones who take a look at the failure of the system, where it occurred. They examine it impartially, without finding blame but just to find out what went wrong, and then refer it back to those other safety agencies to rectify the situation.

Ultimately when there is an error in the system we cannot shy on the resources. When the Dubin commission started there was a profound belief that government was politically interfering with the results of aviation investigation, to the extent where it was suggested in this House, in committee, and in many other forums that the air administrator of the day was in fact rewriting the accident investigation reports when he did not like them, before submitting them to Parliament or to the public.

I think that day has changed considerably with the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and Justice Dubin's inquiry and recommendations, the attempt to give independence to that Board. Another about the Aviation Safety Board is that there really seems to be a severe problem of personalities in that the Board has not been able to take up the challenge and resolve the personality issues involved in it so that it can move forward over a couple of nasty accidents. We as legislators and Canadians should see it in the broader perspective that the Board in its short growth period or period of adaptation in fact has done a good job over all.

It has handled hundreds if not thousands of cases without controversy, without problem. It has given good recommendations and in fact did the job. It certainly hit a major stumbling block with the Gander investigation. When it comes down to the bottom line we have to ask: Can it be expected to answer all the questions?

Out of the Gander investigation certainly procedural changes will follow. There may be new investigative techniques to create retrospectively a situation that will help us come forward with a solution. There were certainly security questions at the other end. Whether there was a bomb on that aircraft was not the issue, but certainly the security to stop the potential for it occurring was resolved.

Everyone involved in that Gander crash learned something about it. Indeed the Safety Board learned something about it as did those who investigated it. Unfortunately it probably means the end of that organization as a result.

There is a lot of concern about the name of the board. It should be called the transport safety board or something along that line to enhance the idea that the board is there to prevent accidents and to promote safety and that the bottom line accident investigation is about safety. The job is not only to investigate accidents. It is to investigate near misses and listen to suggetions that could in the future cause problems if not investigated.

We should be expanding the terms of reference of the Bill, particularly on the aviation side. Members of the Canadian Sport Parachute Association suggest that the Board should investigate parachute accidents because some of them have involved inferior, faulty equipment or not up-to-date equipment. The Board should be making recommendations so that operators are use up-to-date teaching techniques and the most advanced equipment to ensure safety in ultralights, hang-gliders or balloons. There is a whole host of things not strictly classed aircraft so we should have expansion of the Board's purview.

I come back to the parachute situation. The Government turfed the Canadian Sport Parachute Association out of the Fitness and Amateur Sport umbrella, cutting funding and, as I understand it, making sure that the organization could not continue to hire a technical advisor to make the sport safer. The direct result will be an unsafe situation with more fatalities.

I have mentioned the Transport Committee. There is a problem monitoring. If these boards continue to investigate accidents and make recommendations for implementation, who does the monitoring? The Minister through the Department of Transport authorizes monitoring. Information and implementation recommendations go to the Minister. If the Government is in a restraint mode, cutting personnel, resources and the budget, people will not hear about anything nor will they be able to raise the matter with the Government.

We should ensure that every report is referred to the Transport Committee to monitor the implementation of the recommendations. Thereafter the Transport Committee should be required to report to this House so that if the recommendations are not implemented there can at least be a public debate in a public forum about the lack of responsiveness toward it. Otherwise the whole system collapses. When there is an accident, the Board investigates and says the probability of having that accident occur again will be reduced by these changes. The Government says that they only happen once in a while and it is too expensive to implement so it will not do it right now, that no one can monitor that situation, but if the Transport Committee does it we would have a much safer situation. I urge the Committee to consider that suggestion.

Throughout the afternoon I have raised with a number of my colleagues in this House the problem of restraint being the major problem in transportation safety. On the one hand we have a conundrum which the Government has created by opening up access to promote transportation services through deregulation. There has been encouragement in the private sector to own and operate private aircraft. In centres like Toronto, and in Vancouver particularly, this expansion has created a nightmare because the Government has failed to put in the facilities required. Vancouver desperately needs a second runway. It needs air space reorganization. Vancouver is about 20 to 40 controllers short, and Toronto is about 60 controllers short.

Toronto has had to modify procedures to make its runways safe because there are not enough controllers to do it. That is strictly restraint. The Government on the one hand asks everybody who wants to provide avaiation services to come in, and there has been a whole blossoming of new entrepreneurs in the aviation business. On the other hand the Government is not willing to provide the resources, namely air traffic controllers, air worthiness inspectors, maintenance people, adequate airport facilities, adequate navigation facilities, and adequate weather facilities. The Government is also talking about cutting a flight service station at Tofino. There is no other opportunity on the other side of the mountains on the west coast of Vancouver Island to get flight services, weather reports and some assistance if one is in difficulty. I urge the Government not to cut that service. Here is the great contradiction and it is time the Government woke up to it. If it is going to encourage a rapid, dramatic expansion in aviation as a result of deregulation, the Government must provide services and the resources to make sure the expansion is carried out safely.

This new multimodal Board is to be made up of five people. Many are saying the board membership is too small. I for one cannot see how a board that size can in any way give proper direction to four agencies—air, marine, rail and commodity pipelines. There are a number of aviation incidents, as I understand it, backlogged in the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. It does not have the resources to move them forward quickly enough to get the investigations done and the process out. We are looking at a far greater board with a potential for part-time members. When we talk about five people doing the task, it is impossible. Everything will be backlogged. If there is a single problem with a single accident and it is referred back, the whole system will be tied up.

There is also a problem with the Board in terms of competition for resources internally which could rip it to pieces, say the background of each of the board members, one from commodity pipeline, one from rail, marine, air and maybe the chairperson of the committee will double up with somebody else. It is a concern that there will be disproportionate allocation of resources as louder voices get those resources. Fights will begin on the Board. There will be lack of agreements, and further personality breakdowns that we have seen with the present board. The Board should be bigger, and it should have the capacity to deal with reporting accident outcomes and recommendations in a timely way. With a board made up of five people there is a great deal of skepticism that this can take place. Is there a need to proceed right away on this issue?

The query by Mr. Justice Estey into the Gander accident will likely provide us with some excellent insights into the dilemmas faced by the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. Once we have had an opportunity to look at that report, we will be in a better position to deal with this Bill. We have not had wide consultation on the Bill. The Bill has been changed. There are other people with lawyers looking at it who want to come forward with views. Since there is such a broad area of subject matter, we should move this Bill to committee now before giving approval in principle. We should allow the committee to take a look at the subject matter so that those who want to appear before the committee to make their points and proposals for changes to be made can do so.

If changes have to be made as a result of Mr. Justice Estey's report and as a result of the subject matter study, why can the Bill not then be brought back in, in a redrafted form, by the Government, given approval in principle, and moved quickly through to second reading? I agree with previous speakers that we should not be jamming this Bill through quickly.

Who will this committee report through? There was an indication in the speech of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard), and I do hope it is the case, that he will not be the Minister of the Crown responsible for it. We hope it will be the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) or some other relevant Minister who takes the responsibility of reporting this to the House of Commons. The Board can then have the true appearance of an arms length situation and we do not have the suspicions that Transport is once again dabbling in the internal workings of the transportation safety system or the transportation accident investigation system. It is critically important that whichever Minister of the Crown reports to the

At this point, I would like to draw my remarks to a close. I think that the name of the board should be changed to the Safety Board, since that is what we are trying to enhance. The Minister of Transport should not be the one responsible for reporting this Bill to the House. It should be someone else, such as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis). I think the Transport Committee should be charged with the responsibility of monitoring the implementation of those recommendations, not for just receiving the report but having the responsibility for making a report to Parliament annually concerning the implementation of those safety recommendations.

With respect to the restraint program, the Government has to get its act together. There cannot be on the one hand unbridled deregulation and, on the other, the cutting of personnel budgets and services. That will make the situation a worse nightmare than it already is.

I return to the situation at Toronto Airport, which is about 60 controllers short. In Vancouver the situation will not resolve itself until after 1990. There is also a desperate need for a parallel runway there. I believe this is the only airport in Canada where there is an intersecting runway situation. Two airplanes can be cleared to land on the same runway and should both overshoot then the contract they have signed not to encroach on other people's runways becomes void. Two airplanes will fly at each other because of something that may have occurred on a runway. It is an absolutely ludicrous situation and potentially very dangerous. The airport has to be upgraded. The airspace has to be reorganized to make it an operationally safe place. The main point is that it needs the human and physical resources to carry that out.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard: Madam Speaker, I would just like to comment on the reference by my Hon. friend to the number of members on the Board. He said that five members was not enough. But it says in subsection (2) that the Governor in Council shall appoint as members five persons who are collectively knowledgeable about air, marine, rail and commodity pipeline transportation.

Fortunately, not many transportation accidents in Canada require an investigation of that caliber. And I wonder what the Hon. Member means when he says we don't have enough members. How many people would he like to see on this Board, since we have people who are specialists in each field?

[English]

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Madam Speaker, I am absolutely astounded by the Hon. Member's comment. First, there are thousands of accidents, incidents and occurrences. If someone does not investigate and draw a conclusion as to why they occur and then make recommendations for the situation to change we may find much larger and more serious accidents occurring. This board is not going to just look at accidents. I hope it will be looking at occurrences and incidents that have not become accidents.

As an example I refer to a near-miss between two jetliners. We must consider what created the situation. The potential is for 500 people to die if it reoccurs. We are not simply looking at accidents. Luckily, we do not have a large number of Ganders or Drydens. But we do have situations on almost a daily basis in cities like Vancouver and Toronto which, if they escalate, will have the potential for becoming major accidents. This is what I see the board becoming involved with.

I would see the number of members on the board being doubled. If we are looking at accidents or incidents involving rail, marine or air transportation, one good accident will likely take the single board member with the expertise in that area. What if we were to have something the same size as the oil spill at Valdez? That would be the end of our marine investigator for a good long time. What would then happen if there were another marine accident?

The point is, what if one of these people gets sick and the one with the key expertise is not able to be present throughout a major part of the investigation? Would the investigation be shelved? Would the person come back after the report is written and say: "You did this without my expertise. Therefore, I am not prepared to get on board and authenticate it"? An enormous great battle would occur afterward. So I say there are not enough people on the board. I think most people would like to see a larger number. Perhaps the number could be doubled to 10 so that there would be a back-up in the case of a large accident which would take a member of the board away. What will happen if a person gets ill or the backlog gets too heavy?

Mr. Casey: Madam Speaker, I have a few observations to make on the remarks of the Hon. Member. He mentioned restraint. He mentioned one member of the board not being available. But he failed to mention that there will be approximately 300 people employed by the board. There will not be just five people but 300. If one person is away I am sure it would not hurt the board too badly.

The Hon. Member urged the Government not to show restraint in this area. The Government will not be showing restraint in this area. There are approximately 300 people working in this field now and there will continue to be as many. There is no intent to decrease the number at all.

The Hon. Member brings up the too-fast, too-slow question. He says we are going too fast but we are going too slow all at the same time. I heard one Member say that we do not have good enough service and another saying we have too many airplanes in the air. It is a little confusing at times.

One thing that the Hon. Member did not mention is that we cannot stay with the status quo. Things are changing. Payloads are changing. Toxic wastes are changing. Volumes are changing. We cannot stay with the old legislation which addressed accidents in the old way. We have to have changes.

This Bill shows leadership. It provides for the necessary changes. There are no guarantees that it will be perfect. But in the legislation there is provision for the requirements to be reviewed after two years to see if they are operating properly. In January, 1995, there will be another review of operations under the Act. Those provisions are built into the Act, so I think it is quite safe.

The Hon. Member mentioned hang-gliders in his remarks. He feels they should come under transportation. That begs the question, should sailboards come under transportation, as well as bicycles and water slides? Perhaps the Hon. Member could answer those questions.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Madam Speaker, I am sorry that the Hon. Member has chosen to trivialize the issue. People have been killed. This is a national problem. In my remarks I came back several times to the parachute association and the deliberate pushing by the Government of that association out from under the fitness and amateur sports umbrella. The immediate response of the association was that it had to let its technical adviser go. Concerning the number of deaths we have had in Canada, people have said to me that if the correct technical advice were there and some mechanism existed to ensure that the operators used modern techniques and equipment, then many deaths would be unnecessary. Anything that the Hon. Member says to trivialize that is unacceptable to me. I am sure he did not mean that.

When I talked about restraint I was not talking about restraint on the Aviation Safety Board or the Accident Investigation Board. What I was talking about is a Government that is criminally negligent by cutting back in its hiring of air traffic controllers for three years in an environment in which it deregulated aviation. We now find ourselves in a terrible situation in many airports, particularly in Toronto and Vancouver.

Someone said that a professional pilot and his family were in the plane that crashed in Dryden. As soon as the plane started off the runway this pilot said: "Put your heads down. This plane is going to crash". I would tell the Government, if we have to look forward to the same kind of management that we had in air transportation and the cuts that occurred between 1985 and 1988 with air traffic controllers and failing to address the problem of the parallel runways at Vancouver, then members of the Government ought to put their heads down because this system will crash.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Debate. The Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Fontana).

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to make some opening comments with respect to Bill C-2, introduced by the Government some two weeks ago, an Act to establish the Transportation Accident Investigation Board. I listened with great interest this morning to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard). His words were, I believe, laudable and sincere. He sang a good tune, but upon review of this proposed Bill, I am not sure he is singing from the same song sheet.

The public has lost confidence in this Government, its boards and agencies, especially as it relates to safety in the air, rail and seas of this country. Safety, safety, safety is on the minds of a confused and troubled public. We on this side for the past four months have spoken about air safety on a daily basis. I would agree that safety is and should be a non-partisan issue. Therefore, I hope this Government will have the political will to put in place a law that will in fact speak to safety for a multimodal transportation network in this country, and how to prevent accidents from occurring. We hope it will be a positive and a pro-active approach as opposed to reactive one, one that speaks of prevention, not only investigation. Changing the name of a board and the members of a board without giving it a clear, independent, responsible and accountable mandate will not stop one accident from occurring. We need a board that will have the opportunity of reviewing and investigating all aspects of our transportation safety systems, not only to investigate tragedies after the fact.

Safety speaks to preventing tragedies from occurring. Madam Speaker, my colleagues on this side of the House have addressed other concerns, but I wish to address some concerns with respect to Clause 7. It says the object of the Board is to advance transportation safety. It says:

> (a) by conducting independent investigations and, if necessary, public inquiries into transportation occurrences in order to make findings as to their causes and contributing factors;
> (b) by reporting publicly on its investigations and public inquiries and on the findings in relation thereto;
> (c) by identifying safety deficiencies as evidenced by transportation occurrences;

Madam Speaker, you will note that all of the objects of this speak to advancing transportation safety after the fact. This afternoon, the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin) indicated a willingness for additional input before the Bill is enacted. The Minister of State for Transport indicated some positive input from various law societies and Chambers of Commerce. But what about the people on the front lines, the workers, the inspectors, the supervisors in our aviation, railroad and marine industries?

Madam Speaker, the most serious problems with the Canadian Aviation Safety Board Act have not been addressed in the new proposed Accident Investigation Act. Strong recommendations by the Canadian Bar Association and Justice John Sopinka, which would have gone a long way to correct these problems, have been rejected and not incorporated into this retread of Bill C-142 which was introduced in July of 1988. The dissension, conflict of interest, the lack of independence are simply being transplanted into this proposed new board. So much for public input. Both the chairman and the director of investigation seem to have too much power in respect to the board, a board of only five members that must be knowledgeable on all aspects of air, rail, marine and pipeline.

We on this side of the House are prepared to work with the Government, but this new multimodal investigation agency must be of the highest standard, employing top Canadian experts and independent of the Minister. The public will not settle for anything less.

In July, 1988, the then Minister of Transport said:

> The National Transportation Act places safety at the top of our objectives. The Government takes this commitment seriously.

Since then, Canadians have witnessed incident after incident in our aviation industry and on our railroads. We still have shortages of air traffic controllers, a shortage of inspectors for aircraft and railroad rolling stock. The Government must not wait for this Act to be passed before putting in place those actions necessary to restore public confidence and public safety. Let us hope that this new board means more to the Government than merely a new name, a new face with an old mandate. Let us hope we are not replacing the board with a transportation czar that merely wants four rubber stamps for the Minister. We on this side of the House are prepared to take on the challenge of really coming to grips with all the real problems if the Minister and the Government are willing to do so. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher).

Mr. Belsher: Madam Speaker, in listening to the Hon. Member and also the Member that spoke before him, much has been made about the name of the Bill by the word "safety". Really, the reason the Minister has not chosen to put the word safety into the Bill is because it would give a different connotation as to what the Board is all about. The name Transportation Accident and Investigation Board reflects more precisely what the principal activity of the board is in its investigation of accidents. The use of the name safety, such as Transportation Safety Board, would give the impression that the Board's mandate is actually wider than it really is.

The main objective of the board is investigation of accidents, and it is to make recommendations to improve transportation safety in all modes. The responsibility for implementing the improved safety regulations lies with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard). It is he, not the board, who is responsible for the safety and the regulations that go into that.

So why the Member keeps harping about the word safety having to be in the name is really sending out the wrong message. We want a board that will review what the investigators are doing, to make sure they have asked the right questions to make the recommendations to the Minister as to what regulations should be improved.

Mr. Fontana: I am not sending the wrong message. In fact, I think the message that I and my Party are sending is that safety should come first.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fontana: If the Hon. Member is suggesting that the Minister of Transport is ultimately going to be responsible for all safety action in the air, on the railroads and on the seas, then I think that is really asking too much of the Minister. I heard the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin) suggesting this afternoon that there has to be a separation between investigation and safety. I, and I believe our Party, do not agree with that position. I believe that prevention is where the Government should be going. This board should put its stock in prevention so that we can act before tragedies occur. Surely safety, prevention and investigation of those things that make a system unsafe should be something that this board should be looking into. I hope the board, and through the committees, we are able to develop a clear mandate so that the board can investigate accidents after the fact as opposed to being pro-active and looking at ways of preventing things from occurring because of bad safety practices of an agency or company.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): I would like to ask the Member to respond to a comment that says regional safety officers of Transport Canada should in fact be moved out of Transport Canada and placed under the auspices of this board in order to continue the arm's length relationship between safety and some of the enforcement practices of Transport Canada. There have been suggestions that the safety officers could be more effective if they were seen, not as enforcement officers, but officers responsible for education in the promotion of safety. There is a bit of jading of the response. I would ask the Hon. Member how he feels about that. Secondly, when they are talking about the mandate of the board, it is to deal with aviation occurrences, which is designated as any accident or incident involved in the operation of an aircraft.

• (1750)

It is contemplated that the Board will look at incidents, not just accidents, that can be used to develop and improve safety. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on whether the regional safety officers should be placed under the auspices of the Transportation Safety Board rather than Transport Canada.

Mr. Fontana: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member who spoke before me talked about prevention. Obviously, his idea of the regional officers being responsible or associated in a preventative way could be considered by the committee. That is a positive point we would consider.

I want to make a comment to him with respect to occurrences being defined as incidents. Let us be clear. If that is the intention of the Government, that is exactly what it should spell out as a clear mandate. The last thing we need is another board that is confused by its mandate and what it can or cannot do. If it is possible for it to investigate possible incidents or things that are brought to their attention by a railroad worker or someone in the industry who finds something unsafe, then let us be clear in the legislation. Let us put it in.

I believe he was talking about prevention. I think the board has to be much more than essentially an investigative arm of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard). I think it has to be pro-active and look for prevention.

Mr. Belsher: Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member would examine the legislation he would see what the scope of the board's mandate really is. The board may exercise its mandate for any of the modes we talked about. It is free to decide the extent of any investigation and how different investigations will be conducted. It can decide, for example, if a public hearing is to be held on an issue. It will set the rules of how the investigation should be held and what should be taken.

When it comes to carrying out the recommendations to see that they have been followed, that is the responsibility of the Minister himself. The board is the one that carries out the responsibilities. It has the mandate. That is what is in the legislation.

The board has exclusive jurisdiction to investigate the transportation occurrences for any of the modes involved, marine, air, railway and commodities transported by pipeline.

Mr. Fontana: Madam Speaker, I look forward to the Hon. Member's work on the committee, to essentially spell out what in fact he has indicated. I do not see that in the Bill. Perhaps there is a way of clarifying the issue.

I am sure that all Parties in the House have one mission, which is obviously to make safety paramount in the air, on the rails, on the seas and especially with respect to pipelines. If there is a way of clarifying that mission, that he believes the board has, then I and our Party are prepared to support it. Let us clarify it so there are no questions afterwards about what this board can or cannot do.

Mr. Comuzzi: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Unfortunately, I cannot recognize the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Comuzzi) at this time. Resuming debate.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, the legislation before us today is very important. We know there have been a lot of problems under the existing board. There has been concern with regard to political interference as well as controversy with regard to how the board is working in relation to the staff. I am concerned that this legislation will not resolve any of those problems.

We know that there must be a competent board that can study the situation. We have to know that the people who are appointed to the board are not appointed because they happen to represent a certain region of Canada but have no knowledge about transportation.

My hon. friend, the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), points out the fact that although they may be Conservatives does not necessarily mean they are knowledgeable about transportation. Our former transport critic, the Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin), correctly pointed out earlier today that having someone on the board who admits that their only knowledge about air transport is having taken some flights, does not give much security to Canadians.

I come from a riding where people in a number of my communities have no choice but to travel by air. There are no roads or rail lines and air transportation is their only means of getting in and out of the communities. We know that as a result of deregulation, problems with air transportation increase daily. For example, Canadian Airlines International was supposed to have started its new schedule in my riding on April 2. It admits that it could not implement the schedule on time and, for that matter, has told us it would like to put the new schedule in place for May 2, one month later.

However, it cannot tell me when the planes will be flying to and from my riding. Canadian Airlines International is one of our two major airlines, responsible for flights right across the nation, but it does not even know when it will be flying into communities only two weeks from now.

How can there be any sense of confidence in our airlines when they cannot even plan their schedules as a result of this new climate of deregulation?

Last week our transportation critic released a number of documents in the House of Commons which show that it was known that deregulation would result in the same problems the Americans have experienced. The documents released by my colleague, the Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), show that the industry and the department knew that safety would be threatened and that, as a result of trying to maintain their profits, maintenance would be an area where the airlines would cut back. That is happening now.

Canadians are very apprehensive about flying. They are very concerned about whether or not we have safety in the air. We hear about near misses at Pearson. We know that if you fly through Toronto you might as well add an extra hour or two to your day and perhaps miss your connecting flight.

We are in a situation where we know the Government has been cutting back. My community faces the same problem. It has been cutting back in renovations at airports and there are air strips maintained by the federal Government which have been unsafe for three or four years. The work has not been done.

A couple of years ago in my riding a PWA jet, as it was known then, could not land safely on the airstrip. That is what we are dealing with now.

I see it is six o'clock. If the Government calls this legislation for tomorrow, I will be glad to take my 18 and one-half minutes left to me at that time.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS – POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION – STUDENTS' HUNGER STRIKE – BILATERAL PROCESS

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, over the weekend most of the native students protesting against the Government's cut-back to native post-secondary education assistance ended their fast. The Government, more particularly the Minister responsible for Canada's Indian and Inuit people, can no longer put this matter off. It is time for the Government to stand up to its commitment of beginning a bilateral consultative process on the issue.

The Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux) has repeatedly said he is committed to a bilateral consultative process with native leaders. He also said that he is prepared to meet with whoever wishes to discuss the cut-backs and that he is prepared to review the program as soon as the hunger strike ends. It is now up to the Minister to make the first move and to invite native leaders and students to meetings which will begin that process.

It is now time for the Government to show some leadership. It is now time for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to negotiate in good faith with the Indian people of Canada on the Native Post-Secondary Education Assistance Program. This must be a priority for the Minister.

Post-secondary education for our native peoples is the key to self-determination and economic self-reliance. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Cabinet have repeatedly said that the country's future is dependent upon economic development. Does this Government have one opinion for non-native people and a different one for native people?

There are 46 native communities in my riding. Many of them have very active economic development projects in the works which will ensure economic self-reliance in the years to come. Jobs have been created for the people. Welfare pay-outs have decreased. Drug and alcohol abuse is also on the decrease. These results have largely been achieved by people who have been through the post-secondary education system and have returned to their communities with the skills and knowledge to carry out these projects.

By restricting the number of students under the Native Post-Secondary Education Assistance Program, by limiting the funding by capping it at $130 million, and by removing incentives for masters and doctorate degrees, the Government has gone at least 10 years back in time. The changes in this policy will restrict the development of Canada's First Nations and will condemn many of them to continuing dependency on the Government from birth until death. Under this Government, Canada's First Nations people will not achieve self-determination and economic self-reliance. The Government has, in essence, put an end to many young native peoples' futures.

The success stories of the Native Post-Secondary Education Assistance Program are many. Indian and Inuit lawyers, doctors, teachers and administrators, to name just a few, have come through the system. Those who choose not to return to their communities pay taxes to the Government. Canada's native peoples want to make a contribution to society. They do not want hand-outs. They do not want to be totally dependent on the Government.

The Government knows full well that this issue is a long-standing one. Since it first announced its intentions to review the Native Post-Secondary Education Assistance Program in 1987, native peoples have been asking for a full bilateral review. Why has the Government waited until things got out of hand? Why has the Government announced changes to a policy without consulting the people it will most affect? Why must our First Nations resort to hunger strikes to get their message across? It is because this Government and the Minister of Indian Affairs have not been listening to native people.

A bureaucracy, concerned with its own future, is dictating the policies of the Government when it comes to native people. When will the Government learn from its mistakes?

Finally, 10 students have demonstrated their good faith by ending their fast. I call on the Minister of Indian Affairs to demonstrate his good faith by living up to his commitment and beginning immediately a bilateral consultative process with the First Nations people of Canada on the issue of native post-secondary education.

Mrs. Dorothy Dobbie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, on April 14, 1989, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Nault), raised several concerns on which I wish to comment. The Government announced changes to the E-12 guidelines in May 1987 and indicated at that time that a process would begin to develop a new policy. An intensive consultation period began in July 1988 and concluded on December 31, 1988. During this period, meetings were held with over 500 Indian groups and individuals. We received important and useful feedback which resulted in many changes to the draft which was circulated in 1988.

For example, up to 5 per cent of the students will be eligible for scholarships of $3,500 for successful study in a range of programs supporting self-government and economic development. As well, the new policy includes an annual scholarship of $1,000 based on academic achievement.

The Post-Secondary Education Assistance Program which the Government maintains for eligible Indian students is fair and generous. It provides assistance for a range of expenses which include tuition, living allowances, seasonal travel and books and supplies. Some 84 per cent of the students will obtain higher benefits under the new rates for living allowances.

Interest on the part of Indians in post-secondary education has increased steadily since 1964 when fewer than 170 Indians enrolled in university. The program budget reflects these increases. In a letter to the chiefs and councils of March 20, 1989, the Minister indicated that the budget for the program rose from $9 million in 1977-78 to close to $130 million in 1988-89.

The Government is committed to Indian post-secondary education. We have a generous student assistance program already in place. Should an Indian student's application be deferred, it would be given top priority the following year. In such a case, this student, like any other Canadian student, would have access to the Canada Student Loan Program to help offset expenses. In addition, if this student qualifies, there are provincially administered student loan programs and university and college scholarships and bursaries available. Access to a post-secondary education for eligible Indian students is therefore clearly not in question.

In conclusion, the Minister will be meeting in the near future with the chiefs and the students who have ceased their fasting in order to seek resolutions to the concerns raised.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—FUNDS REDIRECTED TO TRAINING—EXPENDITURE LOCATIONS—WHITE PAPER—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Madam Speaker, I hope I receive a better answer to my question than the one that was just given to my hon. colleague from Kenora—Rainy River. It is interesting to note that very often Parliamentary Secretaries come into the House and give an answer without even listening to what the Hon. Member has said. They read out answers prepared by bureaucrats in the Departments.

On Friday, April 14, I continued to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) questions with respect to changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act which she announced on Tuesday, April 11. On that date, the Minister announced that she was redirecting $1.3 billion from the unemployment insurance fund to other programs. In other words, she was taking money away from a fund contributed to by workers and employers to protect the workers who are put out of work against their will.

Of that money $450 million was redirected to improvements in the Unemployment Insurance Act and we do not have much complaint with that. These are improvements with respect to parental benefits, senior worker benefits, and benefits for persons involved in labour disputes. However, we do not give much credit to the Government for that because the courts of Canada have all ruled that those benefits must be covered. Even though the Government made appeals to higher courts to contest those rulings, it has now seen the light and is covering those things. That is good and we have no disagreement with that.

With respect to $850 million that is being redirected to such things as training, labour resource planning, consultation, apprenticeship and co-operative education, we feel that although these are all good things which should be financed and improved, they should not be financed with moneys from the unemployment insurance fund. This is a new use of unemployment insurance moneys and we object to the use of these funds for these purposes. This is a regressive and inequitable way of funding programs which benefit all Canadians.

The programs that are being funded out of the unemployment insurance moneys do not just benefit the unemployed, they benefit the economy in general. To use unemployment insurance moneys is unfair because it reduces the money available to people who are unemployed and will cover people who have not even paid into the fund.

For example, the program will cover apprenticeship programs, co-operative education programs and entry programs, all of which are excellent programs. However, why should workers who have been paying for years into a fund to cover themselves for unemployment pay for those programs?

This is where there is some misunderstanding. Right now, unemployment insurance moneys are used for training programs but in order to qualify for those training programs, one must be a claimant under the unemployment insurance program, a beneficiary of the unemployment insurance program. Under the new proposals, one would never have to have contributed at all but would still qualify for those programs. We say that these proposals are wrong because labour-intensive industries will subsidize high-tech industries and underdeveloped regions of the country will subsidize developed regions, unless it precisely states in the legislation, which is the question I asked on Friday, that those moneys for training must go to the provinces and the regions where workers paid into the funds and that is not left to the discretion of the Minister.

We also oppose the program because through their contributions workers in low-skilled service industries will be paying to train high-skilled workers.

We object to this program and we want to receive some answers. All last week we asked questions, and today we asked questions. We are not receiving any answers from the Minister with respect to these issues.

I also want to know from the parliamentary secretary why the Minister has now announced that she is going to launch herself on a tour of the country to sell these programs. When I asked her on Friday to refer the matter to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, in order that parliamentarians from all Parties can also consult with the people throughout the country, the Minister said: "No, wait for the legislation". The Minister is not waiting for the legislation. She is going to be out there using taxpayers' money selling this program to the people in the country. If we are to be fair about this, parliamentarians in the Standing Committee should also be out in the country consulting with the people in the regions who will be affected. I want to hear some answers from the Government.

Mrs. Dorothy Dobbie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will be delighted to know that he is going to receive just as good an answer this time as he did the last time.

I welcome the opportunity to expand upon the reply given by the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) to the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) on April 14 last.

On April 11, the Minister tabled a policy paper outlining a major federal government initiative of labour force development and unemployment insurance program.

The highlights include proposals to increase assistance to employers for human resource planning, special help to displaced older workers, more job related training for young people, and more generous benefits for both new parents and workers aged 65 and over. These measures will be financed through a reallocation of resources in the UI program.

A particularly important feature of the strategy is the increased role which is accorded to employer and employee organizations in government decision making about labour force programs.

The objective of the Government is to mobilize a national effort and to challenge Canadian business, unions, provincial and territorial Governments, educators, interested groups, and individual Canadians to give priority to increasing the skills levels of Canadians and finding the best combination of policies, programs, and employment practices to ensure that all Canadians can achieve their potential.

I can assure the House that the combined resources of the UI program and the Canadian Jobs Strategy will be maintained and used more effectively to help the Canadian unemployed.

The views of Canadians on the new labour force programs will be sought, and their suggestions will influence the final design of these measures. The labour force development strategy is designed to achieve four goals: a substantial increase in the private sector's role in training workers and in ensuring that training is more responsive to current labour market needs; a realignment within the UI program so that more expenditures are directed to active training and re-employment measures for the unemployed; in compliance with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, a significant improvement to UI benefits, to better respond to the needs of working parents and to encourage the full participation of those workers over 65; and a reduction of work disincentives that are currently in the UI program.

The Government intends to launch a major consultation effort in all parts of the country before implementing the new training programs. Our goal is to take the advice of those who have the greatest interest in the design of training programs, namely, Canadian employees and employers. This process will commence immediately and will continue for the next several months.

The size of the unemployment insurance program will not change, but the benefits available under UI will improve. More unemployed Canadians in all parts of Canada who need training to find good jobs will be able to use their UI benefits while they are on training.

I can assure the Hon. Member that the $800 million in redirected funds will improve the employment prospects of unemployed Canadians in each and every region of the country.

ENERGY – ENERGY ALTERNATIVE PROGRAMS – TERMINATION OF POSITIONS – ALTERNATIVE ENERGY DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I cannot cover a lot of ground in a few minutes this evening, however I would like to pose some questions to the Government on energy conservation, alternative energy, and developing a more environmentally sustainable energy future.

There is no doubt that more Canadians than ever before are concerned about protecting the environment. They listened carefully when the Brundtland commission called for major changes to ensure that the environment and economic development are seen as two sides of the same coin. They have followed reports about the damage to the ozone layer, and they take note when scientists advocate sharp reductions in the emissions of carbon dioxide to tackle the greenhouse effect.

The more visible and spectacular environmental disasters, such as the PCB fire in Québec, and the recent oil spills off the west coast, have only reinforced the public's already deep-seated and justifiable concerns about the environment.

By contrast, it seems fair to say that Canada's Government has lagged far, far behind ordinary Canadians and is now scrambling to catch up with public opinion. There is still a huge gap between what the Government says and what it does. The Government's words indicate that it is aware that Canadians are concerned about the environment.

The Government supported the goal of sustainable economic development. The previous Minister of the Environment called for a "fundamental shift in attitudes and practices at all levels". The current Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) made a brave start by stating that his Department would conduct environmental audits of previously approved projects. The Government's recent Throne Speech spoke of "the environmental imperative", stating that we face "an environmental challenge of unprecedented magnitude" and must strike a "new environmental agenda".

It would seem that on the whole the Government is saying a lot of the right things. However, Canadians are sophisticated and they know that actions speak louder than words. They are interested in looking beyond words to examine what lies behind all the rhetoric.

What does lie behind the rhetoric? Let us look at the evidence from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, where a great deal of valuable work on conservation and energy alternatives has been done in the past. What one discovers is a distressing list of program cuts. What are these cuts? I will give a sample. A listing of others is available in a background paper that I have prepared for anyone who wants one. I would cheerfully hand over to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary a copy for himself and for the Minister.

What did the Government cut? CHIP helped three million families upgrade the thermal efficiency of their homes. It was terminated in 1986. The Canada Energy Audit Program provided help for low cost changes to conserve energy. It was ended in 1986. This Solar Energy Demonstration Program to develop cost effective applications of active solar energy ended this year. The Remote Community Demonstration Program to provide energy saving advice and financial support to 370 remote communities ended two weeks ago on March 31. The Forest Industry Renewable Energy Program to encourage biomass energy facilities, similarly shut down on March 31. All of those programs and more are gone.

Spending on energy conservation and alternative energy programs declined from $400 million per year in 1980–1984, to $150 million per year in 1985–1987, to only $50 million per year today.

This leads to my first question: What conclusion can Canadians reasonably draw from these massive cuts and the Government's public announcements other than that this Government's main intention is not to tackle today's environmental problems in a meaningful way but rather to conduct a successful public relations exercise merely to try to give Canadians the impression that it takes environmental concerns seriously?

On a more positive note, let us look to the future. When it comes to protecting the environment hundreds of energy related initiatives, low-tech, cheap, easy and effective initiatives, are just crying out for attention. The way to start is clearly by conserving energy. For example, encouraging the use of compact fluorescent lights in the ceilings of public plazas reduces electricity costs by approximately $70 per year and can reduce the need to burn coal and the subsequent emissions of SO_2 and CO_2. High efficiency refrigerators can save approximately $30 per year in electricity charges and can cut coal consumption and consequent CO_2 and SO_2 emissions. R-2000 super energy efficient houses with heat recovery ventilators can cut heating bills in half. Promoting the use of the many alternative energy sources is another area for progress.

Examples include developing the ethanol fuel industry in Canada, using corn, and barley. Other agricultural products and forestry by-products would complement our fossil fuel sources and would provide jobs and much needed economic development in rural areas from the Maritimes to the Pacific. A recent U.S. Congressional study shows that 10 per cent ethanol blended gasoline would also reduce CO_2 emissions.

Another example is actively promoting wind power in Atlantic Canada and in southern Alberta, particularly where the wind streams off the mountains. This simply makes good sense. As a special House of Commons committed on alternative energy pointed out in 1980, the possibilities for alternative energy sources are huge—heat pumps, hydrogen, and photovoltaics. We need not wait in the hope that desk-top fusion will provide yet another technological fix. We should proceed, with vision and commitment to our environment, to make some of these possibilities a reality.

This brings me to my second question: What new programs has the Government formulated, or is now formulating, to replace the massive cuts this Government has made to the energy conservation and alternative energy programs in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources?

Finally, since my time has all but expired: What plan of action has the Government devised to promote environmentally sustainable energy development in Canada? If no plan currently exists, what concrete steps have been taken to develop one in the near future?

I reminded the Government that Canadians are watching and waiting for substantive answers to these important questions and for action. They do not want even further evidence of inaction or confirmation of their suspicions that this Government is only trying to give the impression of caring about the future of our planet and that that suspicion is unfortunately correct.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would first like to welcome the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey) in his role as critic for the NDP. After his few comments, I imagine over the next period of time there will be quite a few evenings that we will be here together.

Given the recent round of publicity on this issue, I am pleased to be given the opportunity to clarify some of the misinformation that is being perpetrated by various reports. I would like to reiterate a point made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp) when he initially responded to the Hon. Member in the House in last week's Question Period on Thursday, that is, that these resource deductions are nothing new. They were announced back in 1985 in an Energy, Mines and Resources planning document entitled "A Multi-Year Operational Plan" which projected reducing resource requirements to the year 1991, given the Government's move away from the costly energy conservation and renewable energy programs announced under the former Liberal Government's extravagant National Energy Program.

In September 1988 the Government announced the Energy Efficiency and Diversification Initiative Program in support of energy conservation, renewable energy, and alternative fuels for transportation.

The primary objectives of the EED are to enhance Canadian industrial competitiveness, physical environment, quality of life, and energy security throughout the promotion of efficiency and the energy consumption and diversification of energy sources and technology.

The EED is designed to address the kinds of energy and environment issues raised recently in the press and by various Members of the House. The EED initiative is clearly consistent with this Government's commitment to the environment. I make that very clear, Madam Speaker. It is an important energy policy initiative which we feel is a key part of the solution of these problems.

Unlike the programs under the former Liberal Government, EED is based on the principle of co-operation with the industry and the provinces. EED is not a rich giveaway program like that of the notorious National Energy Program. Instead, under the EED we are working closely with the industry and the provincial representatives to obtain a maximum leverage on the EED's dollars. The emphasis under EED is on supporting research and development on energy efficiency and alternative energy and technology for the type that will be critical to dealing with the many environmental problems.

With the current EED which constitutes and focuses on the programs from the old regime there is no longer a need for as many employees to be involved in the administrative work and such matters. Instead, the EED ensures that Energy, Mines and Resources will retain a strong in-house technical capacity in the important areas of alternative energy which in turn will be an important part of the Government's many environmental initiatives.

This Government, this Minister, and every one of us in this House are concerned about the environment. In our Department we will ensure that environment is a very high priority.

MORATORIUM ON DEVELOPMENT OF NUCLEAR ENERGY RESOURCES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 on behalf of a number of constituents who are concerned that scientists in Canada have failed to develop a safe method for the disposal of radioactive waste. They are concerned that Canada's nuclear reactors are already storing significant amounts of spent nuclear fuels.

The petitioners are calling upon Parliament to establish a moratorium on the development of nuclear energy reactors.

REFORMS TO PENSION SYSTEM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have a second petition which points out the fact that 60 per cent of women aged 65 years and over live below the poverty line. The petitioners point out that one out of three women in the labour force has an opportunity to participate in private pension plans.

The petitioners are calling upon Parliament to introduce reforms to our public pension system which ensure that all women, whether or not they are in the paid labour force, receive pensions which allow them to live in dignity.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—JURISDICTION RESPECTING OATS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to rise today pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present to Parliament a petition signed by a variety of farm people from Saskatchewan, in particular Mr. Lowell Monkhouse of Regina.

The petitioners are asking that Parliament instruct the Government not to remove oats from the marketing jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, and to place oats and barley under the Canadian Wheat Board Act so that in the future Parliament, farmers and their organizations must be consulted before changes are made to the marketing of these products.

The petitioners are asking the Government to back off from its stated intention of removing oats from the Canadian Wheat Board.

REQUEST THAT NUCLEAR SUBMARINE FUNDS GO TO MEDICAL RESEARCH

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table a petition on behalf of the Farmers' Wives of my riding of Saint-Laurent who ask the federal Government to cancel the construction of two nuclear submarines costing $2 billion each and to invest these $4 billion in research to find cures for AIDS, cancer and cardiovascular diseases.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): For the last two days, Mr. Speaker, I have been asking the Government when it will start answering Questions on the Order Paper. I have been told both times that it will be soon. I gave notice that I would want a definition of soon today.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I anticipated that my friend would ask this question. I looked up the word "soon" in the world-renowned Cooper dictionary. It says that soon is a block of time of indefinite dimension.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

PUBLICATION OF HANSARD

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): I rise, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order this morning. When Members took their seats and opened up their books at their desks, Hansard was missing. There has been a problem today. I think most Members want to review Hansard before Parliament commences at eleven o'clock. I understand that was impossible to do today, and it has been difficult to do so on a number of occasions. I simply wanted to raise this because for us to do our work effectively and efficiently, it is important that we have a chance to look at Hansard. This makes it a little tough to look at it before eleven o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to advise the Hon. Member that Hansard has just arrived, so he will get his copy. We will check to see if we can get it a little sooner for Hon. Members. We will try to expedite it sooner than eleven o'clock or 11.10 a.m.

The House resumed from Monday, April 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard (Roberval) that Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Transportation Accident Investigation Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Resuming debate. When we finished the Hon. Member had 14 minutes left in debate. The Hon. Member for Churchill.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock last night I was just finishing my introductory remarks on the legislation. I was pointing out our concern with the fact that this legislation really is not doing anything new. All the problems that we have had with the present Board looking into accidents and air safety will still exist under this legislation.

We still do not have any guarantees that the Board will be competent. We have had at least one political appointee in the past who indicated that the only thing she knew about air safety was the fact that she flew a lot. That is not going to inspire confidence in Canadians. We are concerned that this legislation does not require appointees to be competent and knowledgeable about a very important area.

We have read during recent months about the problems existing within the present Air Safety Board; the divisions, the fights between staff and the Board, the fact that there is a majority and a minority on the Board that cannot agree with each other. We now have a new piece of legislation setting up the Transportation Accident Investigation Board when we have not learned from the errors and problems that we had in the past.

Our critic, the Member from Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) said yesterday that we should have recognized that there is a problem with the existing Board and its structure. We have not done that. One of the things that is objectionable in this legislation is that this Board will not have an arms-length relationship with the Minister. The legislation specifically requires that the Board report to the Minister with a confidential draft report. We are talking about air safety. We are talking about something that affects the lives and safety of Canadians.

There is no reason for the Minister to have a confidential draft report. The people of Canada have a right to know whether or not the planes are safe and why accidents occur. They have a right to know why people have died. We do not want the Minister to be interfering with the operation of this new Board. The report of this Board should be made directly to Parliament and to the people of Canada. There should be no political interference whatsoever with this Board.

That is one of the problems that we have had with the existing operation. We had people in the Minister's office interfering with the decisions that were made. We had the Board worried about the politics of what they were going to say in the reports. We had the division that we talked about earlier between the Board members and the staff.

Canadians are frightened about what is happening in the air. They are concerned with the fact that there are not enough inspectors, not enough air traffic controllers and they are concerned about the fact that anybody who tries to fly through Toronto knows that it is going to be a disaster. We have had a lot of accidents over the last couple of years. Yet we are not setting up a competent board that will be responsible to the people of Canada rather than the Minister.

This legislation is fundamentally flawed. It is good news that this legislation is being referred to the standing committee rather than the legislative committee because we believe that the people who served on the standing committee in the past know a lot about the problems that exist. They recognize the fact there have to be changes in this legislation.

I hope that when this Bill goes to committee there will be changes. I hope that the government members, many of whom are from ridings that are concerned about air safety, many of whom recognize that there are problems with the existing Board, take their responsibility very seriously, and not think that because they are government members they have to support the Minister. There are flaws. We are talking about an issue of safety. We are talking about making sure that our planes are safe, that people again have confidence with regard to flights, landings, air traffic control, icing problems, that they are confident in what is going to happen. People are frightened now.

I see that the Parliamentary Secretary is here today. As a Parliamentary Secretary, he is not eligible to sit on the committee. However, I am sure he will be sitting in the wings and watching the progress in the committee. I hope that he will take a message back to the Minister and back to the Cabinet indicating that this legislation, as it stands, will not resolve the fears and concerns of Canadians.

There have to be amendments. As New Democrats, first of all, we want to make sure that there is removal of political interference that has existed with the CASB. We want to make sure that the members of the Board are chosen from a list of candidates proposed by interested parties, proposed by those people who have some knowledge and understanding with regard to air safety problems.

We are saying that is the approach that should be taken rather than having more political appointments, rather than having the President of the Conservative Association of Edmonton East, Edmonton West, Vancouver, Sault Ste Marie, Saskatoon, Clark's Crossing or whatever the rest of them are called. We do not want the presidents of Conservative associations any more. We want competent people on this Board. There are interested and concerned groups who are concerned about air safety who could put a list together of competent people. The Minister could pick from that list. That is an approach that should be used for a lot of boards, especially when we are talking about something as complicated as air safety.

Let us take the political appointments, the slush funds and everything else out of air safety to make sure that the Board will be competent. We indicated earlier that the Board should have an arm's length relationship with the Minister. We must no longer allow the Minister to receive a confidential draft report. People should feel confident that when the Transportation Accident Investigation Board has made its report, it was not a political decision, that the Board was competent and made its decision on the basis of its investigation, rather than on whether the Minister liked the draft report.

There are very important considerations that we believe must be addressed. We hope that at the committee stage, during clause by clause study, we are in a situation where government Members will accept those types of amendments.

We also want to ensure that access to the findings of the investigation is given to all interested parties. We do not want some closed door, behind the scene investigation. If there is an investigation into an accident, not only should the report be made public, but informational documents should be made available to those people concerned. That is the only way to have any faith that the investigation was thorough and it is the only way that people who are directly concerned with an accident will know what process the Board went through, what information was given to the Board and perhaps what information was not given to the Board.

It is ironic that many years after the tragedy at Gander we still do not know what happened. We do not know why the accident occurred. It is ironic that after all this time, a judge has been asked to look into the investigations that took place so many years ago. If we had the amendments we are talking about now, that would not be necessary because the report would be made not just for the benefit of the Minister but also for the public who would have access to the background documents. We believe this legislation could be improved by making sure that information is given to the public.

We also believe that the structure of the Board should include some constitutional autonomy from political interference. We believe that is necessary and what Canadians want after all the problems we have seen in the past.

We support the Bill in principle. We do not like certain aspects of the Bill. Our critic and former critic pointed out the areas where we believe there should be improvements. However, we believe the Bill is necessary and should not be stalled. We hope that at committee stage the Government will be willing to accept the amendments we outlined earlier.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his knowledgeable comments. He is a northerner who very often uses small planes in the course of his duties. I think of the people in the rural areas, certainly on the islands along our coast and in the territories, who rely on small planes, often charter planes. What is his opinion of the safety record of these aircraft?

The dramatic accidents we have been so concerned about are connected with larger aircraft. However, we remember what happened in Alberta when Grant Notley and others were killed in an accident involving a small plane. Does he have any other ideas how safety can be enhanced for small aircraft in particular?

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I thank our deputy whip for her question. It is a very good question and it gives me an opportunity to talk about some of the concerns we have with regard to small aircraft and the problems that exist not only in my riding but in other areas which should qualify for the northern tax benefit. Thanks to the Hon. Member for Prince George—Peace River (Mr. Oberle), who did not do a very good job in Cabinet for his constituency, they do not qualify.

We know from the first Dubin inquiry that there is a real problem with small planes and regional carriers. Safety is often a minor concern. Often planes are overloaded and maintenance is not kept up. I know from the tragedies that have taken place in my riding that there are too many deaths, too many accidents that could have been avoided had there been proper inspections to ensure that safety was not ignored because of the profit line.

I have flown in planes which I am not overly confident should have been in the air, and I have said so to people. I am also concerned that one of the areas that the Government has cut back over the years is fire-fighting service at airports. It has cut back in the services for smaller airports across the country, especially in remote areas. I know that our critic will expand upon that today, and point out that there is even more information coming out to indicate that the Government, in its desire to cut back the deficit is cutting more money from fire-fighting and those very essential services we need at our airports in Canada.

There is a problem relating directly to the question by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), where many of the small companies working in the North, the Vancouver Island area, northern Ontario, northern Saskatchewan and the interior of British Columbia are not being inspected. Quite often, safety is being threatened because those companies want to keep the planes in the air much too long. We also know that there is a real problem due to the Government cutting services to those airports throughout the country. Every time it cuts back one more fire-fighter, every time it cuts back on a position and takes away an ambulance or fire truck, every time it refuses to spend money to renovate an airport or maintain an airstrip, people are being put at risk. That is one of the tragedies of the cut-backs being implemented by the Government.

Mr. Cole: Mr. Speaker, I have a question with regard to the reporting mechanism. The Bill states:

> —the Board shall, on a confidential basis, send a copy of the draft report or its findings and any safety deficiencies that it has identified to the Minister of Transport and to any other Minister or person who, in the opinion of the Board, has a direct interest in the findings of the Board,—

Is the Hon. Member suggesting that those people who have commented on this question and taken part in this investigative process should not be given the opportunity to see that their facts as they have related them have been reported correctly? Should people within the industry, the pilots and air traffic controllers who have witnessed incidents, not be given the same opportunity as any other person involved in the investigative process, including those in the ministry? I would suggest that union officials, pilots involved or other members of the industry should all receive the report as suggested in the Bill. They would then be able to make comments on it before it became public.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, we have no problem with having those who are directly involved or concerned with an accident being informed. As Hon. Members probably heard me say, we believe that those documents should be made available to those people. Our concern is that for some reason, we are putting this in a category which creates political interference.

We understand that, as suggested by the Hon. Member, the pilots, union people and those involved in the investigation should have access to those reports and should perhaps help to amend the reports where necessary. However, that same argument cannot be made for the Minister's office. That is the same problem we have had in the past. We do not want political interference in what should be a quasi-judicial system.

I have served as a vice-chairman of the Manitoba Police Commission. I know how important it is for these bodies to have complete independence from political interference. That is why I believe this legislation is flawed. I know that as soon as a board has to report to a Minister, before it puts its final report out, the focus of the board will no longer be on the accident and the investigation of that accident. It will become a political concern because it is reporting to a political master. That creates a real problem and I have seen it before in my own life.

We have to make absolutely sure that this Board is separate from the Minister. One problem with reporting to the Minister before the report is made final is that quite often, it is the Minister's Department that is at fault. Perhaps there were not enough officials involved, no one checked into something or there were inadequate services provided. We are talking not only about a Minister who is responsible for air safety but about someone who, through his Department, may be the offender, the one who may be the guilty party, the person who is actually responsible for the accident. For the Board to have to give a confidential draft copy of the report to the Minister beforehand takes away any semblance of a quasi-judicial system. It puts political interference exactly where it should not be.

We know that many of the accidents have occurred because the Department was not up to snuff. We know that some of those accidents have occurred because the Department was not doing its job. We know that some of those accidents have occurred because of cut-backs in the Minister's Department. How can we possibly trust that Department to police itself? The Board is supposed to be independent. Let us keep it that way.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have before us today Bill C-2 which represents an essential building block in Canada's regime for maintaining and improving the safety of our transportation system. The Bill is based on a most important principle which is that the accident investigation should be done separately from the writing and enforcing of safety regulations. Both functions are crucial if we are to have a safe transportation system.

Writing effective safety standards and regulations requires predicting what might go wrong and how best to prevent it from happening. Enforcing those standards involves monitoring of the safety procedures of transportation companies and, through independent inspectors, requires knowledge of the standards and how they can be implemented effectively.

Accident investigation, on the other hand, is a rather different story. Obviously, if an accident occurred, something went wrong. If an incident occurred, something almost went wrong. The job of accident investigation, then, requires identifying what went wrong and drawing lessons for the future.

What went wrong can involve a wide variety of things. Sometimes humans make mistakes and sometimes equipment fails. My key point, however, is that sometimes what went wrong is the result of improperly written regulations or improper enforcement of those regulations.

Can we expect those who write and enforce regulations to conclude from an accident that they blew it, that the regulations they wrote are wrong or at least inefficient or that they did not enforce them properly? In such situations, some will of course rise to the occasion and admit mistakes. However, human nature being as it is, there is a clear potential at least for conflict of interest when the regulators of safety are also accident investigators.

This potential conflict of interest has been recognized by independent studies. The Dubin inquiry in the early 1980s pointed to the problem in the air mode. This led to the Canadian Aviation Safety Board Act passed in 1983.

The Deschênes study on marine casualty investigation recommended separation of the two functions in the marine mode. The Department responded by making the separation within the Department through administrative action, but a complete separation depends on passage and implementation of Bill C-2.

In the rail sector, the former Canadian Transport Commission and more recently the National Transportation Agency have been responsible for both safety regulation and accident investigation. However, with the implementation of the new Railway Safety Act this year, the job of regulating rail safety has become a direct responsibility of the Minister of Transport and his Department. The rail accident investigators remain with the agency pending creation of the Transportation Accident Investigation Board.

To conclude this chapter, Bill C-2 will separate the two key duties of safety regulation and accident investigation in the rail and marine modes as well as in air. This will remove the potential conflict of interest which exists when the same body is responsible for both.

This aspect of the Bill will also help ensure the independence of the Board. In arguing that the Board will not be independent, as the Hon. Member who spoke previously did, Members on the other side seem to have missed this. Other aspects which contribute to the independence of the Board which they may have missed include, for example, first, a broad mandate to investigate any accident, any incident or near accident or any situation which may endanger safety. There are no limits on the Board's independence to interpret this wide-open mandate. The Bill clearly places responsibility with the Board to set policies on what transportation occurrences will be investigated and how the investigations will be conducted.

Second, the Board has exclusive jurisdiction to make findings regarding the cause of accidents and to make recommendations to prevent similar accidents in the future. Third, the Board can decide whether or not to hold a public inquiry into transportation occurrences. Fourth, although the Board reports to Parliament through a designated Minister, the duties of the Minister responsible for the Board are limited to tabling the annual report and the report of the annual audit.

Having said that the responsibility for safety regulation and accident investigation should be separate, however, let me also say that the two must be complementary. They cannot function totally in separate spheres. When something goes wrong and an accident occurs, the regulators must be in a position to take immediate remedial action if necessary or to impose sanctions if appropriate. Therefore, there must be co-ordination and co-operation between the Accident Investigation Board and the safety regulators in Transport Canada. Bill C-2 provides mechanisms for this necessary co-operation and co-ordination.

Clause 14 of the Bill is so worded as to make the TAIB the only federal agency designated to make findings and report on the causes and contributing factors with respect to any transportation accident, and to make recommendations based thereon to improve safety.

If more than one federal agency had the mandate to investigate any given transportation accident to determine and report on its cause, there could be several reports with perhaps varying conclusions with respect to the same accident. This could cause confusion and lack of public confidence in the findings of any of the agencies involved.

As mentioned at the outset, this is not to say that other agencies are not interested in or have no role to play with respect to any such transportation accident. It is well recognized that the Department of Transport, as well as others, must also be able to obtain whatever information about the accident is necessary to carry out their responsibilities for safety regulation, and for disciplinary or remedial action.

In order to make clear that transportation safety regulators and others are not prevented from investigating any transportation occurrence for their purposes, subclauses 14(4) and (5) have been included in the Bill. These subclauses permit the Department of Transport's Coast Guard, for example, to investigate for marine safety regulation or enforcement connected with its responsibility under the Canada Shipping Act.

There are many other clauses in the Bill which are designed to ensure co-operation and smooth co-ordination of the Board's activities with those of other federal agencies. The most important of those clauses are as follows. Clause 15(1) states, in part:

> Where, at any time during an investigation into a transportation occurrence under this Act, a Department—investigates that transportation occurrence or undertakes remedial measures—the Board and the Department shall—ensure that their activities with respect to that transportation occurrence are co-ordinated.

This clause specifically requires both the TAIB and the Department concerned to co-ordinate their activities.

The interests served by good regulation and appropriate remedial measures requires that accident investigation be carried out in an efficient and effective manner, and that the various activities with respect to a transportation accident are carried out with the minimum of overlap and confusion.

Clause 23 provides that:

> —a person may attend as an observer at an investigation of a transportation occurrence conducted by the Board if the person
> (a) is designated as an observer by the Minister of Transport in order to obtain timely information relevant to the responsibilities of that Minister;
> (b) is designated as an observer by the Minister responsible for a department having a direct interest in the subject- matter of the investigation;

Clause 24(5) requires that the Board shall during its investigation notify forthwith in writing the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) of any of its findings and recommendations, whether interim or final, that require urgent action.

I expect that with this set of specific requirements and with the efforts of the new Board and the other agencies involved, a high degree of co-operation and co-ordination with respect to the investigation of transportation accidents can be achieved.

Thinking back to the debate yesterday, I recall that the opposition speakers continually referred to the recommendations of Mr. Justice Sopinka and questioned why the legislation did not follow his recommendations.

I would like to state again that Mr. Justice Sopinka was one of many parties consulted in the development of the final Bill. His recommendations were carefully considered and many were accepted. For example, the Bill makes much clearer the respective roles of the board members, the chairman, the Directors of Investigations and the investigators. It clarifies that although the Board is not investigating to find fault, it should not refrain from fully reporting on cause merely because fault may be inferred from the findings. It confirms the importance of the Minister of Transport having an observer at an investigation. It provides for a five-member Board, and it enables investigators to testify by affidavit. Those were all recommendations made by Mr. Justice Sopinka.

Where the Government differs from Mr. Justice Sopinka is in the approach taken in assigning the respective responsibilities. I believe that the Bill contains the best solution, given all of the extensive consultations. For example, Mr. Justice Sopinka would have made the chairman responsible for the administration of the Board, but given him only whatever powers and duties the Board chose to delegate to him. That approach works well in the private sector where profit is the bottom line, and where shareholders can replace board members at any time. It is not well suited to an independent government agency accountable to Parliament for its mandate, for spending of taxpayers' dollars, and for respecting the merit principle in staffing.

The Bill gives the chairman, as the chief executive officer, the usual powers of a deputy head of a Department under the Financial Administration Act. These include responsibility for personnel, financial and property matters, and generally all other aspects of the internal management of the Board.

The Bill makes equally clear that it is the board members who set policies, by-laws, and regulations for conducting the Board's business, and the chairman must act in accordance with these.

Mr. Justice Sopinka also felt that the board members should have more direct control over the investigators, and more direct involvement in investigations. Other interested parties, however, have argued that the separation between the professional investigators and board members appointed by the Government should be maintained as it was meant to be in the CASB Act.

In response, the Bill does two things. It gives the Directors of Investigations exclusive authority to conduct investigations and submit their reports to the board members. The board members, however, are given the explicit power to make policies on the conduct of the investigations; policies which the investigators must follow. As well, when the investigators report, the Board may ask them to conduct further investigation with respect to any aspect of the accident, and the investigators are obliged to do that further investigation.

In sum, Mr. Speaker, a number of Mr. Justice Sopinka's recommendations were accepted outright. The intent of some others was accepted but achieved in a different way, taking into account the views of others, particularly those in the industry who actually operate the transportation system.

Finally, I would like to address the question of timing. We have been accused of going too fast. "Wait for another year or two", members of the Opposition have stated. The improvements to accident investigation which this Bill will bring should not wait any longer. In addition, as the Minister of Transport has said, and as the Opposition has agreed, the Canadian people's confidence in the existing Aviation Safety Board has been compromised. The new Board to be created by the Bill will restore that confidence.

Under this Bill, Canadians can look forward with confidence to having an effective, credible Transportation Accident Investigation Board which will contribute to making our transportation system even safer in the future. I hope that it will receive due consideration and be passed as soon as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions or comments, the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. McCreath).

Mr. McCreath: I would like to compliment the Hon. Member on his speech. I certainly found it very helpful in understanding this complex but important piece of legislation. I would like to ask a fairly general question.

Tragically, we have seen some serious air crashes in recent years either in Canada, or accidents that have involved Canadians. There have been investigations conducted or are under way with respect to the recent crash in northwestern Ontario, and also the crash two or three years ago in Gander, Newfoundland.

Over the past years, a number of people of Indo-Canadian origin have approached me about the tragic Air-India crash that took place nearly four years ago. It was a foreign carrier. It did not crash on Canadian soil, but it did originate in Canada and carried a large number of Canadians who were tragically killed. I wonder if the Hon. Member would tell me, under this new system that will be put in place with this Bill, how a crash that takes place on foreign soil might be handled differently than has been the case under the previous arrangements.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher).

Mr. Belsher: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the Hon. Member for his question. This investigating Board that we are talking about under Bill C-2 is a Board which is to set the policies of how the investigators should investigate accidents. I think what is happening in the debate that has been taking place yesterday and this morning is that people are calling them the investigators.

This is a Board which sets the policy and should act as a Board to make sure that the regulations that we have in place in Canada for transportation safety, whether it be marine, rail or aviation, are the right regulations, and when an accident occurs to check out and follow-up on what the investigators have found. They should evaluate whether or not they are satisfied that the conclusions that the investigators have arrived at are actually based on the facts which lead them to feel that action should be taken and changes should be made to the regulations. Their mandate also states that when they send recommendations forward that require action, the Minister must act upon those within 90 days or give written reasons if the Minister is not willing to accept the recommendations that they have found. These are all made public so the public have a chance of seeing that.

There is also one other aspect that the Board has been given in this Bill, and that is where they deem it necessary to have a public inquiry carried out they may so designate an accident to take the form of a public inquiry. The Board is not constrained in its activities.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Langlois).

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Belsher) and is in two parts. Could he tell us why the directors of investigations have exclusive authority to direct investigations on behalf of the Board? Could he also tell us whether the members of the Board can themselves conduct investigations?

[English]

Mr. Belsher: This is something that we try to spell out in this Bill clearly, that they are not the investigators. I believe this is where some of the confusion has happened with CASB people, namely, that they wanted to get involved with the investigation itself. The investigators are the professional staff that are in the Department who carry out the investigation. It is the Board's responsibility to evaluate the investigation and to also go back and send them to do further investigation. In this Bill they may order the investigators to carry out further work on that. I can compare it to a university or a community college, the Board is not the chief executive, not the administration of it. The Board has helped to set the policy, and then requires the people who carry it out to fulfil their function. This is where this Bill clearly sets out the differences. They are not the investigators, but they are the ones who oversee the investigators, and set the policies which the investigators should follow.

Mr. Comuzzi: Mr. Speaker, my question is to my hon. friend. We all know that the three major issues in this new legislation, if it is going to work in contrast to the Canadian Aviation Safety Board legislation, are the independence of the Board; the composition of that Board; and the duties of the chairman. Once we establish that we have those three things under control, this legislation can be functional or the Canadian Aviation Safety Board legislation can also be functional.

What I want to ask the Member is, what are we going to get today from this Government to ensure that the composition of the Board will be one of complete independence. That there will be no political overtones in the membership. That if this legislation should pass that only those members who are completely qualified to act in this very responsible position will be the very best people whom we can find in this country, regardless of political affiliation. That is question number one.

Question number two would be the appointment, and perhaps the question of independence. The appointment of the chairman should be made, and I would like your comments, by the Board after the Board is selected. As I said yesterday, and the Minister of State replied, the duties of the chairperson on this new Board would be so onerous that perhaps the duties of that chairperson should be split, so that we have a chief executive officer who should be appointed by the Board. That is the third question. If you agree with that, the chief executive officer should be appointed by the Board and report to the Board through its chairman.

Those are the three questions and I think if we could answer those, it would give us a lot more assurance in going into the committee as to where we are going to go with this Bill C-2.

Mr. Belsher: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will deal with the last question first, and that is the appointment of the chairman. The chairman must be a very highly skilled person so that he can give direction to the chief executive officer. That individual will not be so skilled as to have the oversight, the wherewithal, the knowledge of aviation as such, or of rail of marine situations. It is an administrative role. However, the composition of each of the other members, as I think was suggested in Mr. Sopinka's report, is that in a five-person board that it be relegated on the basis of the chairman, two from the aviation side, and one from each of the marine and the rail side, so that there is a co-ordinated blending of the skills that the people have.

Furthermore, we passed legislation some two to two and a half years ago that gave the right to a standing committee to call before it any Order in Council appointments. I can see a role that the standing committee could possibly follow in something like that, so that when the reports come through, the committee could make recommendations back to the Minister for the composition of the Board and the competence that is there.

Mr. Butland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question. I excerpted a few words from the hon. gentleman's speech, and he spoke of human mistakes and equipment failure. I would like to point out a couple of facts in air safety that I do not think have been divulged in the past few days of debate. One of them is the Government's radar modernization program. I am told by reliable sources that in the case of American-Canadian skies the Canadian software is not compatible with the American aircraft, causing a great deal of extra concern with regard to air safety.

Second, with regard to the reclassification of northern airports across this country, the difference of two feet, on the old measurement scale, can result in a decrease of five firefighters in my particular constituency. I believe it is the same for 16 other airports across the northern part of Canada. My question is very specific. The principle of the Board, I think our Party agrees with, but will the Member not accept the fact that the present government policies of cut-backs exacerbates the problem. That is the real problem rather than the creation of the safety Board.

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not accept the fact that it is because of government action that we are less safe. There have been additional moneys put into the transportation industry over the last years. The Opposition asks the Canadian public to believe that we have cut back in numbers. When it comes to controllers, we have not been able to bring on enough new ones. It takes two years to bring them on stream. Over the last several months action has been taken to get faster relief. The industry has grown faster than what the system was able to take. I certainly do not buy the premise he has been putting forward to Canadian people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allotted for questions and comments has now terminated. Is the House ready for the question?

The Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, we are not quite ready for the question yet. There are a few more remarks that ought to be made.

It is a pleasure to rise to say a few words regarding Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Transportation Accident Investigation Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof. Basically, we are examining a Bill that would give the authority to investigate accidents.

It is interesting to note that this Bill was introduced about nine months ago, at which time the Minister stated that because of the National Transportation Act the Government places safety at the top of its list of objectives. That was a comment made by the Minister. It is one I think we all appreciate hearing. A great deal has transpired in the last nine months. Hardly a week goes by when we do not see images on the late night news of chunks of planes falling off, or wings falling off, or planes crashing into trees, or all sorts of marine disasters.

One gets the impression that safety in terms of transportation has not been a terribly high priority of the Government. I do not have to even mention the whole matter of the shortage of air traffic controllers at our Canadian airports. I appreciate the straightforward comments made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Belsher) who agrees that indeed there has been a serious problem in terms of air traffic controllers and the inadequate number of people to fill those positions. However, the Government has now recognized that some special steps have to be taken. He did not mention the chronic shortage of inspectors for large commercial aircraft. Those of us who fly a good deal get on aircraft now on a daily or weekly basis feeling somewhat less secure than we did some years back knowing that some problems exist, to say nothing of the controversy concerning the Gander crash.

I notice that when Mr. Justice Sopinka was looking into the way the Canadian Aviation Safety Board handled that operation he created a very abysmal picture of competency. He indicated that he has observed serious problems with the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, including a breakdown in the day-to-day operations, divisions between members and the chairman, division between members and the accident investigators, and dissension among members. Specifically, he stated that the main problem, generally stated, is that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board is not operating as a cohesive unit in pursuance of its objective to identify safety deficiencies and make recommendations to remedy them. Rather it has become fractious to the extent that some of its members have been in open conflict with the chairman. There is a rift between members and the accident investigators who view themselves as being independent of board members.

I emphasize the Canadian Aviation Safety Board for two reasons. First, I realize that this is past history now as we move into consideration of this Bill but that it is legislation that the Liberals introduced. It is interesting to hear the views of members of the Liberal Party, particularly the new Members who have been saying that this is the past and it has been horrific. They must be reminded that it was their Party who introduced this process. I feel that we have to accept some responsibility for the ill deeds of the past.

I think that it is safe to say that this Bill really re-creates the Canadian Aviation Safety Board legislation under a new Act. We welcome that new Act. However, I wonder about the wisdom of the timing. We have much to do in this session of Parliament. We also have to remember that two very important investigations are going on today, one into the Dryden crash and the other into the Gander crash. I suspect that out of those investigations will come important recommendations that will be germane to the analysis of this legislation. It may be in the best interests of Parliament to wait until we have preliminary reports from those investigations to see what recommendations they will be making.

We are pleased that we are dealing with this legislation. We were very enthusiastic about the legislation being directed to the Standing Committee on Transport as opposed to following the traditional route and being sent to a legislative committee. We were happy because we recognized the tremendous level of expertise of the members of the Standing Committee on Transport.

As we speak there are at least 1,200 investigations that have been completed or have yet to be dealt with. There are now 1,200 independent investigations sitting out there in limbo. This means that there is some interest in moving expeditiously over the next number of weeks to have the Transportation Accident Investigation Board in place. Goodness knows we cannot continue in this rather ad hoc way in which we have been going over the last number of years.

It is important to recognize that this legislation comes after the fact. It will not do anything in the short term to improve the whole matter of air, rail and water safety. It is a process that will determine what went wrong, where the responsibilities lie, what the problems were and so on. At best it looks forward to recommendations to avoid problems in the future.

I would be remiss if I did not make at least one critical comment of the Government in terms of this legislation. That is to say that when we look carefully at why we are facing many of the problems we see in terms of aviation, marine and rail safety, to say nothing of moving commodities through our pipelines, it is because of the deregulation mindset that the Government has perpetuated and imposed on Canadians for many, many years now. I refer to the idea of turning over these critically important sectors of our economy to deregulation , particularly important because we are dealing with the second largest country in the world geographically. Transportation is critical in that light. We have seen the effects of the deregulation of the industry in the United States which had a jump on us as a result of the Reagan administration. The results have been abysmal. The number of accidents has increased. Safety has been jeopardized. That is just a fact of life.

There are countless examples to demonstrate that. Yet the Government blindly fell in line with the Reagan initiative and has now accomplished the same thing. We are now seeing the results. We are now seeing a less safe environment. We are seeing the benefits of deregulation when we fly through the Toronto airport and sit on the tarmac for two or three hours waiting for a turn to get into the air.

Those of us from remote communities have seen quality service reduced to minimal service. We have seen small communities that used to have a number of flights in and out that now maybe have one flight in and out. In other words there has been a real deterioration of service, to say nothing of the fares. The illusion was that with deregulation more competition results and fares decrease. I do not think there is anyone who believes that anymore. We saw in the United States after a while the sifting out of the smaller airlines. These companies go by the board and we end up with a handful of monopolies. Up go the fares, and the travelling public is held at ransom. Those who must travel, particularly into the remote areas of the country, are most affected. That is another question perhaps for another time. I could not help raising it because part of the problem in terms of safety is a reflection of the changes that have occurred as a result of deregulation.

I want to emphasize that in terms of the principle of the Bill, which is what we are debating here today, we in the New Democratic Party support the principle of this legislation. We support this legislation which is creating this new Board which will be mandated to independently investigate and publicly report on transportation accidents involving air, rail, marine or commodity pipelines and to identify safety deficiencies and make recommendations to reduce such deficiencies in the future. We applaud that, Mr. Speaker. We say that that is a good principle to pursue. We support the Bill because it offers an opportunity to tighten the investigation and accident report procedures as well as a chance to disband non-functioning bodies such as the Canadian Aviation Safety Board.

However, Mr. Speaker, it needs work. There is no question. We are debating the principle of the Bill today as opposed to the various clauses. We will be dealing with those at the appropriate time. I simply want to flag that this Bill needs reworking. It needs to be improved. It needs to be tightened. It needs to be more effective, more efficient. This Bill needs to reflect what Canadians demand now of the Government in terms of safety in air, rail, marine and related commodity pipelines.

Because of the excellent speeches that have been made by others in our caucus, primarily the transportation critic, I do not need to restate what he so ably stated yesterday. Let me simply summarize that we need a board that is independent. We do not need a board made up of political hacks. I say that with some hesitancy. Yet in some cases that is the fact. Mr. Speaker, in the Parole Board area, Canadians want the security to know that people who have been convicted are not out on the street prematurely. These people are back on the street prematurely before they have been appropriately rehabilitated because we have Parole Boards that have made errors in judgment. One of the reasons for these errors in judgment is that some members of Parole Boards are nothing more than political hacks who have absolutely no background in the area of justice or corrections. I say that with some hesitancy, but that is the fact. They have absolutely no experience in making decisions regarding the safety of Canadians on our streets.

Mr. Speaker, we now have an opportunity to create a board that is independent of the Minister and that reflects the concerns and priorities of Canadian citizens. So we will be looking very carefully at the ways and means of assembling that Board with respected, qualified individuals who would have the confidence, not only of the Government, but of the people of Canada. I think that is critical. It must act at arm's length. Right now, goodness knows, if there is a flaw in this piece of legislation, it is the fact that the Minister has so much power. Can you believe something as peculiar as when an air or marine disaster occurs and the Board and its investigators do their work. It then makes a recommendation. Before that becomes public, it has to be vetted by the Minister or by other senior people, for example, air controllers. Let us say that an air disaster or a near disaster was a result of understaffed airports in terms of air traffic controllers. We know government policy has been to cut back. So the Minister would say,"Well, listen, we cannot say that. So you have to alter the report to reflect government policy".

Let us say there have been cut-backs in areas of fire protection in remote airports and that there was a problem after an investigation was done that identified the cut-backs in fire protection as crucial in this case. Again, Mr. Speaker, the Minister would be reluctant to criticize his colleagues in Cabinet and his Government. So he would ask that that would be deleted from the report. That is not what the people of Canada want. We cannot afford to play politics with the lives of Canadians, particularly the future lives of Canadians as we are trying to improve the safety system of air, rail and marine travel.

I could go on for an hour, Mr. Speaker, and identify these problems, as you well know. But it has been done by others and will be done at the appropriate time in committee. I simply flag this area as one of real concern.

Not only do I speak of the independence of the Board, Mr. Speaker, but of course implicit in what I am saying is the membership of the Board. Who are the members? Do they reflect the industries that are concerned here in terms of the transportation sectors? What elements of those sectors are represented on the Board? Are the unions represented? Are the people who actually carry out the day-to-day work in transportation areas involved? No, I don't think they will be, Mr. Speaker. Is that fair? Of course it is not fair. I think our job will be to build fairness, justice and equity into the composition and the mandate of the Board. Obviously if the Chair is an appointee of the Minister, maybe the Minister's pal or neighbour or from his constituency, he will be reluctant to criticize the person who gives him the job or who allows him to maintain the job. Again, it is absolutely critical that this Board be independent in dealing with the lives of Canadians.

I want to simply conclude my remarks by saying that again we support the principle, but have grave concerns about a number of elements of the legislation. Knowing the decency of the parliamentary sector and how interested he is in safety in these areas of transportation, I am sure he agrees with the points that we have been making and will do whatever he can to draft the appropriate amendments to the legislation.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I simply want to mention one aspect of marine safety that I think all of us are concerned about. That is of course the movement of petroleum products along our sensitive coastlines. I think we have seen examples both in the east and west, on the Great Lakes systems and elsewhere. Because of inappropriate legislation, of inappropriate enforcement mechanisms, because of lack of technology and response, we have had ecological disasters or near disasters. That has to be the concern of all serious-minded parliamentarians. So I simply flag that as something that we must address.

We must carry out a public inquiry into what is happening on the West Coast. You know the area, Mr. Speaker. It is a part of Canada where the word beauty really describes the environment. The West Coast ecological area is pristine, beautiful and of course one of our major economic characteristics in terms of future economic expansion, in terms of international tourism.

So I call upon the Government to consider a public inquiry. The Parliamentary Secretary knows the area well. I know how well and strongly he feels. I am sure he is lobbying the Government as much as anyone, and I wish him luck in his efforts. I know in this Party we have done and will continue to do everything possible so that the people of Canada will have a chance to participate in what is going on in terms of water safety on the West Coast.

Back to Bill C-2, Mr. Speaker. I conclude my remarks by saying we look forward to moving this into the Standing Committee on Transport with the appropriate amendments. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Saint-Hubert (Mrs. Venne).

[Translation]

Mrs. Venne: Mr. Speaker, the competence of Investigation Board members was just called into question. From clause 4(2) of Bill C-2, it is obvious that:

> The Governor in Council shall appoint as members persons who, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, are knowledgeable about air, marine, rail – transportation.

So—

[English]

Everyone is well aware of the importance of appointing Members with backgrounds appropriate to enable them to carry out their responsibilities and establish the credibility of the new Board.

[Translation]

I would therefore ask the Parliamentary Secretary to further explain clause 4(2) of Bill C-2 to the Opposition Members, since they do not seem to understand that it will certainly—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): You are not to put the question to the Parliamentary Secretary, but you are to put the question to the last speaker. So maybe he will be able to answer it. The Hon. Member will carry on.

[Translation]

Mrs. Venne: Mr. Speaker, so I shall then ask the Opposition Member to explain to me his point of view since he does not seem to understand that clause 4(2) clearly states that Board members are knowledgeable—that is, that people will really be appointed on the basis of ability.

• (1220)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member's question. She has a lot more faith in the system than I have.

I understand what the Bill says in terms of competence. All Bills say that. All Governor in Council appointments are prefaced with the remarks that competent people are being appointed.

Let me relate one incident. It concerns an acquaintance of mine who happens to have been appointed to the Board of Air Canada. When the appointment was made and it went through the appropriate committee process, I asked what her qualifications were. I was not aware that she was an expert in air travel or that she was knowledgeable about the technologies involved. She was not sure herself, and her response was that she guessed it was because she flies a lot. That was the justification coming from the individual herself.

We could go through a long list of very embarrassing comments about people, where I think we will have to agree that political appointments are made.

As I indicated in my presentation, there are appointments to the Parole Board which were made strictly for political reasons, where the appointees do not have a shred of experience in the area of corrections yet make decisions on which a criminal should be allowed out of the system earlier than others. It is a long list.

I want to respond to my hon. friend, the Parliamentary Secretary, who indicated that we ought not to have any concerns because any concerns about a certain appointee can be referred to the standing committee. Of course, the standing committee always make a decision based on the number of government Members who have a majority, but if it wants, the committee can bring someone forward. That is fair enough, but all it can do is talk to the person. It has no vetting power and no influence. It is always after the fact. As a matter of fact, it is often months after the appointment is made before it is gazetted and before the parliamentary standing committee could even have an opportunity to examine a particular appointment.

I do not think the process is very well equipped. I will admit that it is better than it used to be, but it has a long way to go in terms of protecting the public from inappropriate appointments, particularly those based on politics more than expertise.

Mr. Butland: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments just to reinforce what my colleague has suggested about deregulation. My comments are pertinent, perhaps, and quite parochial nevertheless since there are other communities across northern Canada that have suffered and will continue to suffer certain ills. The first is a loss of jet service to many of these communities and the concomitant consequences of that. The second is the reduction in safety, which is proven on a regular basis. The third is the issue that my hon. colleague just mentioned. The return fare from my constituency to Ottawa has gone up four times in the past four months. It is presently $460 return, I suppose at the taxpayers' expense. Nevertheless, if one compares that to the Toronto to Florida fare, which is something like $100 return, it is a result of this market-driven economy and a direct result of deregulation.

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is the question leading to something that concerns the Bill in front of us? He is talking about deregulation which was in former legislation. We are talking about a Bill to create an accident investigation board.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) could perhaps answer that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the intervention by my hon. friend. The point we are trying to make is that the reason we have to improve the investigation service which was inadequate under the previous Liberal Bill is the increased number of accidents and increased number of disasters or near-disasters. I mentioned that there are 1,200 pending investigations that have not been completed. Part of that is because the airlines and other forms of transportation have been deregulated, which makes the situation less safe.

The removal of cabooses on the trains was part of the deregulation process. Part of the Government cut-back process was to replace the caboose with the infamous black box which everyone on the railway system who actually operates the railway says is not in the best interest of long- term safety. That is the point we are trying to make.

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, the concept of an independent Board to investigate transportation accidents in the air was created in 1984 under the Liberal Government. It is an excellent idea which, at that time, was applauded by all nations in the world.

The new Transportation Accident Investigation Board that the Minister is proposing to replace the Canadian Aviation Safety Board is modelled after the CASE, and rightly so. Accident investigation is a crucial element to ensure high levels of safety standards in this country. The recommendations flowing from the investigation reports form the cornerstone of Canada's safety regulations which protect travellers on a daily basis. Therefore, this new multi-modal investigation agency must be of the highest standard, employ top Canadian experts and remain thoroughly independent from the Minister.

The portion of the Bill dealing with conflict of interest is interesting. I note that the legislation states these people would be appointed through Governor in Council appointments. This concerns me because my constituents and other Canadians have said they are worried about the actions of the previous Board and its political independence.

I am concerned about the Government's intention in this legislation when it indicates that the responsibility for appointing these people will be with Cabinet. I was interested to read about the qualifications of these appointees. It states essentially that these people would not only have to be well versed in one particular area such as air, the sea,rail or pipelines, but would have to be well versed in all these areas. I am not sure how the Government could find a person knowledgeable in all of those areas. I question the nature of that requirement in the Bill and the real political purpose behind it.

Obviously, we on this side will do all we can to ensure that the Transportation Accident Investigation Board is an organization that can be respected by Canadians everywhere. The Liberal Party is curious as to why this multi-modal Board is being established on such an urgent basis. Is it really to promote increased safety, or is it effectively to wipe out the four dissenting board members who have been questioning the causes of the Gander crash over the last three years? Is it to eliminate dissension on a future board or is it to eliminate dissension on the present Board? We seriously question the need for this legislation to come through at this time. As my hon. friend said, we on this side question that because we are not quite sure whether this is the time to raise this issue.

We believe the Canadian Aviation Safety Board would not have to be eliminated and replaced at this time had this Government done the only right thing and called for a judicial inquiry into the Gander crash several months before the dissension on the Board grew to a point of being unworkable. This unjustified delay not only compounded the problem of dissension, but contributed to a lengthy public debate and put into serious doubt the ability of this Government to safeguard the high safety standards that Canadians are accustomed to, and in fact demand.

When this Bill was read for the first time in the previous session on July 8, 1988, the Minister said,"The National Transportation Act—places safety at the top of the list of objectives. The Government takes this commitment seriously—" This is a very honourable statement. However, Canadians have learned since that this is not in fact the case.

Since then, we have learned of the serious shortage of air traffic controllers at Canadian airports, the chronic shortage of inspectors for large commercial aircraft, the controversy over the cause of the Gander crash, the Government's inability to offset the dangerous effects of deregulation, the Dryden crash and other serious shortfalls. Today we can only hope that the Government is serious about committing itself to high safety standards for Canadians and is not about to throw out more rhetoric without action. The safety of Canadian travellers is far too vital to mishandle at this time.

The problems at Pearson International Airport are very well documented. We on this side of the House decided it would be best if we got the views of members of the public on how they felt air safety is being dealt with, specifically as it relates to Pearson. More specifically, in my area, there is an airport in southwestern Ontario that we feel would be helpful in alleviating some of the problems at Pearson. I am talking about Mount Hope Airport in Hamilton.

The constituents of my riding and indeed of ridings throughout southwestern Ontario feel that there has been a lack of government attention to the needs of our area as they relate to air traffic and indeed air safety. In fact, the Town of Haldimand, which is in my own riding, presented me with a letter dealing with air safety and how Hamilton Civic Airport will help deal with this. The resolution, as passed by the Town of Haldimand Council on January 16, 1989, reads as follows:

> WHEREAS the Hamilton Civic Airport is in a strategic position to service Southern Ontario with cargo and passenger service;
> AND WHEREAS the Metropolitan Area of Hamilton boasts a population in excess of 500,000 people who will benefit from the use of this facility;

AND WHEREAS there is currently a critical over crowding occurring at Toronto International (Pearson) Airport which could be alleviated if Hamilton Civic Airport handled some of this traffic;

THEREFORE be it resolved that the Council of the Corporation of the Town of Haldimand petitions the Minister of Transport to review the Federal Government policies to establish policies to enhance the operation and facilities at Hamilton Civic Airport to encourage better utilization of this excellent facility for the benefit of the industry and population within the greater Hamilton Metropolitan Area.

AND FURTHER THAT this resolution be forwarded to our Minister of Transportation Canada, Minister of Transportation of Ontario, our Federal and Provincial Members of Parliament—

And it goes on.

This was dated January 25, 1989, and was forwarded to the Minister of Transport as it was to local Members of Parliament.

Further, I received a similar resolution from the City of Nanticoke which is also in my riding. It shows the concerns of these people and of the local politicians about how air traffic is being handled throughout our area. The letter from the City of Nanticoke reads:

This office wishes to advise that the Town of Haldimand's request for endorsement of their resolution regarding the above captioned facility has been considered by the City of Nanticoke Council and as a result of their deliberation the following resolution was passed:

"That the Town of Haldimand's resolution regarding the utilization of Hamilton Civic Airport (Mount Hope) be supported."

It is clear that local Governments are now becoming aware of the situation and are really concerned about how the Government is handling it. Not only should the Government be concerned about air, land and sea safety, but it should do something immediately and directly toward alleviating the problems at Pearson International Airport and using Hamilton Civic Airport, an airport which has been there for years, to help alleviate these problems.

I could go on about how we on this side feel about the Government's negligent mishandling of air safety. It is well documented and requires remedy in several places. However, today our attention is directed toward this Bill. I am sure Hon. Members are aware of the Angus Reid poll which indicated that the Canadian public thought that standards for Canadian air safety were in fact lower than they had been in previous years. In fact, as we learned recently, travel agents across Canada are finding that business is slowing down because of the problems with air safety. People are becoming afraid to fly. I question whether or not this Bill will do anything to solve that problem. As the Minister of Transport said, the Government was prepared to take some action in this regard. To date, we have not seen anything concrete from the Minister.

The Liberal Party feels that the Government is making a serious mistake by rushing this Bill through before Mr. Justice Willard Estey has had a chance to review the record of the investigation into the circumstances surrounding the Gander crash. We say this because Mr. Justice Estey's review may result in a recommendation to the Minister for a judicial inquiry which would have a profound impact on aviation accident investigation and subsequently on this Bill, just like the Dubin inquiry preceded the Canadian Aviation Safety Board Act of 1984. Those recommendations formed the backbone of that piece of legislation.

We feel strongly that a full judicial commission of inquiry into the Gander crash should by all reasonable courses precede this legislation. Only in this way can we create an accident investigation agency that will promote safety in Canada to maximum of efficiency and operate on a day to day basis with the least possible opportunity for dissension to set in. We believe that for reasons of covering upcertain compromising events, this Government has refused to call a judicial inquiry in the last several months and is now caught up in a clear situation, as we say in my riding, of putting the cart before the horse.

I would like to speak for a moment about the review of Mr. Justice John Sopinka on the previous Bill, Bill C-142. Hon. Members are aware of Mr. Justice Sopinka's review and of the comments he made about the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. I question whether the Government has actually read that review.

Mr. Justice Sopinka said that the main problem, generally stated, is that the CASB is not operating as a cohesive unit in its pursuance of its objective of identifying safety deficiencies and making recommendations to remedy them. I question whether or not this Bill setting up this agency will not eventually lead to the same thing. I question whether or not appointments of political hacks to the Board will indeed be the proper way to go.

Mr. Justice Sopinka went on to say that, rather, it has been fractious to the extent that some of its members are in open conflict with the chairman and there is a rift between members and the accident investigators who view themselves as independent from the Board. I have read through the Bill and I cannot see anywhere where a solution to these problems has been adopted. Clearly, the way this Bill is set up, that could happen all over again. In fact—

Mr. Belsher: You're reading it through Liberal eyes.

Mrs. Maheu: We don't wear blinkers.

Mr. Speller: In fact, the situation exists and this Bill goes nowhere toward solving those problems.

• (1240)

In conclusion, the people in southwestern Ontario who have had to deal with this chaotic air system at Pearson want action, and they want action in the form of a Bill that will assure them that it will again be safe to fly in the skies.

Mr. Langdon: I would like to echo the point which has been put so forcefully by the Hon. Member for Haldimand—Norfolk (Mr. Speller). Certainly, people from southwestern Ontario, and people from the parts of our province who have to travel through Pearson Airport, have faced dangers over and above what people should have to face in using air travel today. We are not talking about some type of pioneering mode of transportation. We are talking about a mode of transportation which a Government has a responsibility to see is operated safely.

Anyone who has followed the recent course of events at Pearson, the long delays which have taken place, the cancellations, the near misses, knows that all of them can be traced back to the false economies that the Government made in not taking on more air traffic controllers to do the job that is necessary with respect to safety. For our constituents, this has represented what they see as a complete dereliction of duty on the part of the Government.

Would the Hon. Member agree with this perception of complete absence of serious concern which should have been there as soon as the decisions were taken to start down the road toward deregulation? If the Hon. Member does agree with that, does he also feel that those Ministers who took the first steps toward deregulation should also have taken the first steps to see to it that air traffic safety was put fully into the equation right from the beginning?

Mr. Speller: I thank the Hon. Member for his comments. He will be aware that we on this side did take those first steps. When the Hon. Member asks whether or not I feel there have been concerns expressed, I believe there have been many concerns expressed. Unfortunately, the action has not been there to follow those concerns.

The Ministers rise daily and state that they are concerned about the situation at Pearson and are concerned about air safety in Canada. In fact, there does not seem to be the actions there to follow through on those concerns.

Mr. Walker: I would like to thank my colleague for an excellent analysis of the Bill. I am happy to see that the Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport (Mr. Belsher) was present to enjoy it. I am sure he will pass on the comments of the Hon. Member to the Minister to ensure that they are fully understood.

There were two or three points raised indirectly in the speech of my colleague. I would like to go back and discuss them a second time because they are important points.

First, I wish to address the size of the five member board. My suspicion is that for a multimodal board, if that is the route that the Government wishes to go and on which we do not agree, five members is a very small number. How will the Board approach situations? Can that Board handle such situations where, unfortunately, there may be two or three accidents at a time which are quite widely dispersed throughout the country? Will five members have the expertise, the time, and the experience available to relate to these problems?

Second, does my colleague believe that this is the type of board that, as the Bill suggests, should be located in Ottawa close to the Department of Transport, or could the independence of the commission be guaranteed by locating it elsewhere in the country away from the Department so that Canadians are assured that an independent group is carefully looking at what the cause of the accidents might be?

Third, in the Bill it states that public inquiries are an option. It seems to me that one of the big changes that we have tried to insist upon in the Government, both in environmental matters and in other matters, is that as a matter of fact public inquiries be considered as a way of proceeding. The fact that these are optional under the Bill surprises me. Does my colleague have any comments on that?

Mr. Speller: I agree with my colleague. I was concerned when I read the section in the Bill that only called for five members to be appointed by the Governor in Council. I was more concerned on the qualifications of the members. This was the point I raised earlier. I have now found the clause in the Bill which states:

> 4.(2) The Governor in Council shall appoint as members persons who, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, are collectively knowledgeable about air, marine, rail and commodity pipeline transportation.

I do not know where five members will be found to do that. It might have been better for the Government to get a few more experts in certain areas and increase the numbers on the Board.

As the Hon. Member mentioned, perhaps there is concern in other parts of the country that the Board may not be as independent if it is located close to Ottawa and the Department of Transport. In fact, Winnipeg might be a very good location for the Board.

We on this side are very concerned about the independence of the Board and the make-up of the members. Anything that will help to alleviate the concern in the public that the board is not independent will be a good step forward.

Mr. Belsher: It is interesting listening to the debate between Members of the Opposition Parties. Members of those Parties are giving out erroneous information to the Canadian public. Certain things must be recognized. Last year Pearson Airport had a 10 per cent increase in traffic, and the incidents that occurred at Pearson are actually down approximately 40 per cent. Are Members opposite listening? There has been a 10 per cent increase in traffic, but the incidents are down. Members opposite are attempting to tell everybody that everything is very unsafe. I notice that they still fly and come through Pearson on their way to Ottawa.

What we are talking about in the Bill is an investigation board that, when accidents occur or incidents occur, has the power to command that the Department people involved conduct the investigation, send them back to do things, make sure that the regulations in place are being followed, and if improvements can be made, then to make those type of adjustments.

That was not clearly spelled out in the CASB Act. The Bill now makes it clear that the Board must not hesitate to define and report fully on the cause of an accident, even when a person may incidentally be blamed thereby. This brings it out into the forefront and also gives the Board that power. When recommendations have been put forward and a Minister is not willing to follow those recommendations, he must give written reasons as to why he has not followed those recommendations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity to speak to this Bill. As Members who were here in the last Parliament, and indeed in two Parliaments before that will know, transportation safety has been an ongoing interest of mine, particularly when it comes to rail. I hope that the comments that I have to make today will be useful in terms of debating the whole matter of transportation safety in all modes.

I thought that the response just given by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Belsher)) was offered in a somewhat facetious manner. He pointed out the fact that Members of the Opposition still continue to fly through Toronto is some sort of proof of the insincerity of their criticism. This is really a threadbare argument. The fact is that many people in this country have to fly through Toronto if they want to do their job, if they want to continue living up to their responsibilities, whatever those responsibilities might be, whether they are in the business sector or politics, or whatever the case may be. For the Minister to suggest that because people have not reached the point of refusing to fly through Toronto there is not a problem, I think, with all due respect to the Parliamentary Secretary, is a particularly ignorant form of argument. I hope it is not repeated in future.

I fly from Ottawa to Winnipeg on a direct flight and I am very glad that I do not have to fly through Toronto, not just in terms of safety, but also in terms of delays, and planes being backed up for landing and backed up for taking off. If Tory Members who have to fly in and out of Toronto think that that is just great, that that is something they are willing to put up with in order to preserve the sacred ideological call of deregulation, then that is fine. Suffer, baby. The rest of us and the rest of Canadians ought not to suffer because of the ideological fixations of a Conservative Government.

The root of this matter is ideological. The root of everything that we are concerned about here today is the whole question of deregulation, a fixation, a trend which goes back to the Liberal Government of 1980 to 1984. I see the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Walker) starting to look a little uncomfortable. He knows that it was his political mentor, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), who started this trend toward deregulation. It was the Liberals who were first fascinated. They were saying: "What is going on? What are the Americans doing? We should do that too." The Liberals were as prone to that sort of thing as the Tories.

The Tories have finished the Liberal agenda on deregulation. They have completed what the Liberals started. We have a transportation system which is now fraught with confusion and danger. This Bill is designed as a kind of remedial action to pick up the pieces, to figure out what went wrong as a result of deregulation, not to address the root cause, not to address the fundamental problem of deregulation in and of itself, but simply to expedite the investigation of accidents that occur as a result of the kind of transportation system that the Conservatives have created through deregulation.

It is not going to work. It is not going to work because the fundamental problem of deregulation is not being addressed. The fundamental problem of putting airlines, railways, trucking companies, bus companies, and everyone else involved in the business of transportation in a position where they are in a kind of cut-throat relationship with each other, within modes and between modes, is going to create problems. I see it most clearly in the rail sector where the CPR and the CNR have been put in a position where they have to ruthlessly compete with each other. That means cutting corners, laying people off, not making investments that need to be made, not doing inspections that should be made, not doing maintenance that should be done.

They are competing with each other. As a group they are competing with the trucking companies which have also been put in a position where they are competing with each other. Almost anybody can get on the road if they have a couple of wheels to rub together. What have you got? You have a decrease in safety on the highways as a result of the new regulations with respect to trucking. You have problems in the rail sector. At a moment when the Government is doing a lot of talking about the Brundtland Commission, the environment and everything else, we are in a deregulated policy framework that encourages trucking as opposed to rail. We know, and no one has ever disputed this, that rail traffic is an environmentally more suitable form of transportation than trucking.

This is one of the things that needs to be said in this debate, that to have this debate without debating deregulation is woefully inadequate. One of the things that bothers me about the Board, and it is a problem in many areas of Canadian life, is that boards accumulate political appointments. There is no guarantee that this Board will be any different.

I was reminded of that just a couple of weeks ago when I appeared before the National Transportation Agency. That is the Conservative substitute for the CTC, which in my judgment was not independent enough of the Government. It was an independent body, a quasi-judicial body which was replaced by the National Transportation Agency, which is much closer to the Government. That closeness could not be better demonstrated than by the fact that the chairman is a former Government House Leader for the Conservative Party, and an author of a report that at one time recommended severe cut-backs in VIA Rail.

It is a problem for many boards in Canada that they do accumulate political appointments. What happens is that people get appointed to these areas, but they do not necessarily know anything about them. They become dependant on the bureaucrats and the special advisers. Then the Government has special access, if I understand this legislation correctly, to draft reports. If there is something there that the Government does not like, it will have an opportunity to change it, or at least to try and change it.

These are some of the problems that we see with this legislation. It does not go to the heart of the matter. It does not solve the problems that were identified with the old board that this is replacing with respect to aviation safety. It does not address the whole question of deregulation. One of the things that I am particularly upset about in the last little while has been the decision of the courts to overturn the Larson report on the caboose decision. We see that the railways took the report of Mr. Larson, the arbitrator, after the railway strike, to court. The court overturned the report, which got in the way of the railway's plans to get rid of the caboose. This is very unfortunate. It is an example of the kind of thing that we have seen over the last few years.

I see, Mr. Speaker, you are getting itchy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am not getting itchy. I love to listen to the Hon. Member. He will have 10 minutes in his debate after three o'clock, plus 10 minutes questions and comments.

It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

EMPLOYMENT

LAY-OFFS AT DOMINION TEXTILE IN MONTREAL—IMPORTANCE OF TRAINING PROGRAMS

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, Dominion Textile of Montreal announced in February that it would have to lay off 425 employees this year because of the Free Trade Agreement. What can these employees expect? The Government is not acting!

Enough time has passed since February to set up programs to help all workers stay in their community and find a job that pays the same or requires the same skills.

The Government must assume its responsibilities and ensure that these training programs encourage the diversification and development of local economies.

Let the Minister of Employment and Immigration clearly indicate what training programs will be provided for the Dominion Textile workers and all other Canadians affected by the Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. Speaker, reassigning unemployment insurance funds to vague training programs for non-existent jobs is not enough!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—REMOVAL OF FOREIGN FORCES URGED

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I rise to again draw the attention of the House to the tragic situation in Lebanon.

On Sunday, I attended a rally of some 500 persons in Halifax, organized by the Canadian Lebanon Society. I spoke with people whose relatives are living in shelters, and whose lives are imperilled on a daily basis.

Lebanese Canadians are convinced that Lebanese of all factions and religions can work together to work out their problems, if only the foreign interventionists can be removed.

I join with Lebanese Canadians of Nova Scotia in urging the Government of Canada to use its best influence and its position on the Security Council to introduce into the United Nations, or to inaugurate whatever measures are necessary to bring about the removal of all foreign forces from Lebanon, and an end to the slaughter of innocent people.

At the same time I would urge the Government of Canada to consider re-establishing effective consular services in Lebanon for the benefit of Canadians wishing to travel to and from that troubled land.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

FUNDING OF POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, later today the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux) is to meet with representatives of native students, some of whom had been on a hunger strike for over three weeks. Other students continue that fast as they seek appropriate access to the tools that will allow them to reach their educational potential. These students believe, and we on this side concur, that post-secondary education funding is an obligation of Canada as a result of the treaties entered into between our Governments and the First Nations.

Yesterday, I provided the Minister with a copy of a petition signed by educators at Confederation College and Lakehead University in Thunder Bay, the home institutions of the hunger-strikers, a petition which I indicated supports the students' cause.

I call on the Minister to agree to place a moratorium on the changes that will limit access to post-secondary education by native students and to provide for a full consultation with those to be affected. It makes economic sense to invest in education so that First Nations' peoples can effectively meet the needs of their communities today and in the future.

THE LATE RANDY BERFELO, FORMER MAYOR OF HAY LAKES, ALBERTA

Mr. Brian O'Kurley (Elk Island): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the constituents of the riding of Elk Island I would like to recognize the passing of a former Mayor of the Village of Hay Lakes, Randy Berfelo. Mr. Berfelo will not only be missed by the community of Hay Lakes but also by many others across the riding of Elk Island.

TRIBUTE TO FATHER CLAUDE PIEL

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Brome—Missisquoi): Later on this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State (Mr. Weiner) will present civic merit certificates to 25 Canadian men and women to highlight their outstanding contribution to the well-being of their fellow citizens. By their voluntary work, these Canadians have shown an uncommon desire to improve the quality of life in their communities.

As Member for Brome—Missisquoi I am both happy and proud that a resident of my riding, Father Claude Piel, has been selected to receive this great testimony of appreciation.

A native of Brittany, Father Piel is a member of the Immaculate Conception Regular Canon Congregation. Since he first came to Canada in the early 1950s, he has always been known for his selflessness, his dedication to work, and his desire to improve the lot of his fellow man. More specifically, he has worked with the mentally handicapped and paved the way for their social rehabilitation. He did all that in addition to his duties in two major parishes.

Mr. Speaker, I echo the words of congratulations the Secretary of State will have for all the recipients this afternoon, and I extend special greetings to Father Claude Piel, an immigrant who became a great Canadian.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—CALL FOR SPECIAL MEETING OF UN SECURITY COUNCIL

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, the senseless killing of children and innocent adults and the destruction of property and essential services in Lebanon is a sad commentary, to say the least, on human history. In the last 41 days it is estimated that 262 people have been killed and 932 wounded.

Now is the time to find out if there is a will and a sincere desire on the part of other world nations to try to bring an end to the 14 years of bloodshed and civil war.

Any member of the UN Security Council has the right to ask for a special session of the Security Council to discuss an important issue. It does not have to come from the beleaguered country.

Therefore we call upon the Government of Canada to request a special meeting of the United Nations Security Council immediately to debate the issue of war-torn Lebanon with the aim of giving the UN Secretary General direction and support to undertake negotiations for meaningful peace.

CITIZENSHIP

AFFIRMATION OF CANADIAN IDENTITY

Mr. Gus Mitges (Bruce—Grey): Mr. Speaker, as this is National Citizenship Week it is a most appropriate time to reflect upon the many advantages our citizenship grants us.

Our citizenship is the envy of the world. It offers people a chance for social and personal advancement, and has given them scope for their talents and energies. All Canadians are guaranteed equality of access and opportunity.

In Canada, there are no degrees or levels of citizenship. We are all blessed with the right to freedom of thought, religious belief and self-expression. We are free to think what we want and to make active representations of those views within the political structure.

Another distinctive feature of our citizenship is its affirmation of the cultural heritage of all Canadian citizens.

Multiculturalism and the cross-cultural understanding that it engenders are now proudly recognized as fundamental components of our national identity and add much to our sense of being Canadian.

Citizenship Week is an ideal time to think about our Canadian identity and of how our civic values further this nation's evolution as a compassionate and caring society.

Let us use this week to celebrate our glorious birthright and to share our pride and our hope for the future.

CHILDREN

CALL FOR CANADA TO SPONSOR WORLD SUMMIT

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the United Nations Children's Fund is seeking a sponsor for a summit for children. Hopes are being pinned on the Canadian Government taking the lead on this international initiative since Canada is perceived as being neutral and has credibility that will provide the conference with the profile it needs to be successful.

The Government must realize that by further reducing Canada's commitment to the Third World and by attacking social programs at home it is sacrificing the growing minds and bodies of the next generation on the altar of adjustment policy.

The New Democratic Party supports the UN's call for a summit for children and urges the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to respond to the United Nation's request.

On behalf of my colleagues I have introduced a motion asking the federal Government to begin negotiations with the provinces in order to provide a Children's Bill of Rights for our country.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

ENVIRONMENTAL SITUATION—TRIBUTE TO THE TOWN OF REPENTIGNY

Mr. Jean-Marc Robitaille (Terrebonne) Mr. Speaker, quite recently at the Lanaudière economic summit, Repentigny Mayor and l'Assomption RCM Prefect Jacques Dupuis had this to say to the Repentigny Chambre of Commerce, and I quote:

> All projects initiated by Repentigny and, I believe, l'Assomption RCM, will reflect our major concern over the environment.
> All projects supported by the Repentigny Mayor and l'Assomption RCM Prefect will respect the environment and the quality of life.

Mr. Speaker, such is the dynamic approach of the Town and Mayor of Repentigny who is showing that it is possible to plan for economic development and still keep environmental considerations in mind. It is only a matter of wanting to do it.

Therefore I commend the Town and the Mayor of Repentigny for their leadership, and I hope all municipalities throughout Canada will take similar action.

MINES AND MINING

OPENING OF COAL MINE IN PICTOU COUNTY, NOVA SCOTIA—IMPACT ON CAPE BRETON

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the recent announcement by Westray Incorporated of their intention to open a new coal mine in Pictou County, Nova Scotia, with the assistance of the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia is frightening news for the employees of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. One of the founding principles of the Cape Breton Development Corporation was that it was to be the sole supplier of coal to the Government of Nova Scotia's wholly-owned Nova Scotia Power Corporation. Now that the federal and provincial Governments have broken this undertaking, much economic hardship will occur to the people of Cape Breton.

Why, Mr. Speaker, is the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia putting one poor area of a small province against another poor area of the same province? Should this particular operation proceed, it is inevitable, Mr. Speaker, that a coal mine in Cape Breton will be closed, throwing countless miners out of work. It will substantially reduce the revenue for the Cape Breton Development Corporation. It will also reduce a market for their particular product. I urge, Mr. Speaker, that the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia withdraw their proposed financial assistance to this particular operation and stop playing the cheapest political game in town which is setting one poor area off against another poor area.

THE BUDGET

FUNDING FOR RECONSTRUCTION OF TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, I know that all Hon. Members await the Finance Minister's Budget next week with both a sense of concern and resolve. We all know that priority choices will be difficult to make. Many essential decisions will be even more difficult to take. I want to mention one such priority briefly, Mr. Speaker, which is of great concern to New Brunswickers. That is the pressing and serious need for reconstruction of our Trans-Canada Highway from the Québec border to the Nova Scotia border which is indisputably the worst highway in the country. While I realize that highways are essentially a provincial responsibility, it is obvious that in the long run, with the total cost of the Trans-Canada Highway itself, not including connectors, estimated in the range of $15 billion in 1988, it would be impossible to conceive such a major undertaking without the federal Government's participation.

I would suggest it is important for us to recognize such a priority even though it may presently be impossible to determine the timing or the terms of such a commitment. What is clear and compelling is the fact that New Brunswick's Trans-Canada Highway is virtually obsolete, totally inadequate and truly dangerous. The time will come and soon when New Brunswick and Canada will have no alternative but to find a way to rebuild it completely. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MEAT INSPECTION PRACTICES AT THE BORDER

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): The Government is showing a cavalier disregard for the health of Canadians in the confusion it is allowing to continue around meat inspection practices at the border into Canada. On April 1 a truck crossed into this country carrying meat and chemicals in the same shipment. The Government owes it to Canadians to explain to them what action was taken and how quickly it was taken to make sure that contaminated meat did not reach Canadian consumers. Was this meat immediately tracked down, and if not, why was it not?

In January inspectors were ordered to cut by 75 per cent the inspections of meat coming into Canada. Adequate notice has been given to the Department that this order is contrary to the Meat Inspection Act. No response has been given to a letter asking for clarification. Instead, the spokesperson for the Government went on radio and said that the directive does not mean what it says. The Government must clear up this confusion so Canadians can have confidence in the meat inspection process in this country.

TRIBUTE TO IAN MILLAR, WINNER OF WORLD CUP IN EQUESTRIAN EVENTS

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to bring to the attention of this House the flawless performance given by Canada's Ian Millar and Big Ben at the World Cup in Tampa, Florida. Mr. Millar, who resides in North Elmsley Township near the Town of Perth, Ontario, has made show jumping history by becoming the first equestrian jumper to win the Volvo World Cup two years in a row. CANADA POST

PRIVATIZATION OF MAIL SERVICE

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, today the Minister responsible for Canada Post says he is examining the ending of Canada Post's 120-year monopoly on delivering letter mail and continuing his slow, inch by inch, piece by piece privatization of the Post Office without public discussion or debate in this Chamber. The Minister is reported to have said that he is not working on a proposal to privatize letter mail delivery, but he is considering it because others are suggesting it.

Mr. Speaker, it is time the Government put an end to the slow privatization of the Post Office and stopped considering foolish ideas like this one.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

M. Taylor: I call on the Minister to put his foot down and to say no to the private sector, which has no desire to ensure equal or adequate service to rural, remote or regional areas of this country. There must be no privatization of letter mail and the Minister must tell Canada Post management to work towards making the existing service better rather than continuing their plans to turn it out for their corporate friends to deal with.

GOVERNMENT SUPPORT URGED

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Nuclear submarines are important to the nation. So is VIA Rail. One is estimated to cost $8 billion, the other $3 billion. The difference is that the lesser of the two has a good chance for a significant cost-recovery. I urge the Government to give VIA that chance.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

ALLEGED CONCESSIONS TO U.S.—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

A year ago, the Minister for International Trade declared he had not bothered to read the Free Trade Agreement we signed with the United States. Today, I think the Prime Minister should realize that apparently, his Minister has yet to read the Agreement, because yesterday he stated and I quote: "Never have two countries managed to agree on what constitutes an anti-trade subsidy". In that case, Mr. Speaker, why didn't the Government say so during the election?

Why did the Government sign a trade agreement that says the exact opposite? And finally, why did the Government make major concessions in the areas of energy, investment and so forth, promising us we would obtain concessions in return on the issue of subsidies?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Perhaps I lost something in the translation of this question, Mr. Speaker, but it is the most confused question I have ever heard the Leader of the Opposition ask, and that is really saying something.

All that I stated yesterday was that I don't know of any two countries—you can answer the question if you like, or perhaps you can understand the question better than I can, Mr. Speaker— that have yet managed to agree on a common definition of what is a trade-distorting subsidy. If that is what the hon. gentleman is referring to, we all know that in the negotiations leading to the Free Trade Agreement, we could not agree with the United States on the common definition of a trade-distorting subsidy.

Ms. Copps: You signed it anyway.

Mr. Crosbie: And therefore the agreement provides for a period of seven years for us to try to negotiate this question. That is what we intend to do.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I can really understand the Minister not understanding the question when he has not read the document.

PARTICIPATION BY THE PROVINCES IN THE NEGOTIATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister suggest that the subsidy negotiations are virtually impossible when his predecessor and the Prime Minister signed an agreement which was open-ended? A very important part relates to the subsidy negotiations with the United States. The Minister refused to give us a plan, a blueprint or a statement of objectives of what he has in mind. The Americans have been perfectly frank and clear in what their objectives are. The only thing the Minister said yesterday is that he does not intend to allow the provinces to be at the negotiating table.

Now the Americans, and he knows it, have stated it quite clearly that they consider virtually every one of the provincial regional development programs and the federal provincial programs to be against this agreement in terms of offending the definition of subsidy.

Why is it then that he will not allow the provinces to have a say? Why will he not allow the provinces to participate in the negotiations that will have a vital effect on them?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): The Hon. Member wants to refight the past election. Why he would want to do that is beyond me because he was trounced. If he keeps refighting the last election, he will be trounced again and trounced repeatedly. So why he is on this tactic this afternoon, I don't know.

• (1420)

Why he is on this tack this afternoon, I do not know.

Ms. Copps: That is not what Rideout said.

Mr. Crosbie: This agreement is no more open-ended than the Member is open-mouthed. It takes two parties to agree. There is no provision—

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister ought to take him out behind the woodshed, talking about trouncing—

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

SUBSIDY NEGOTIATIONS—REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY INPUT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that type of answer is not going to give the country much confidence at all, particularly the working people of this country who are dependent upon these negotiations on subsidies.

The Americans have made it quite clear what they want out of the subsidy negotiations. They set it forth in the presidential interpretation when their legislation was tabled in the U.S. Congress.

They want cut-backs in unemployment insurance. They want cut-backs in the ERDA agreement. They want cut-backs in Crown corporations. They want cut-backs in freight rate assistance. They want cut-backs in our stabilization programs. They got those before we even sat down at the negotiating table with the United States.

Could the Minister, in a rare display of commonsense, give us a rational answer? What exactly is the Government's plan? The negotiations on subsidies are vital for the future of this country. Why will the provinces not be involved, as he has said?

Will he give this Parliament an opportunity to participate and review these negotiations as we did not have on the negotiations for the agreement itself? Will he make this a more public process because of its vital nature for the future of Canada? I put that to him seriously.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition is fascinated by what the Americans want, by their timetable and by their agenda. We are setting our own agenda. He can go along with the American agenda; we are going with our agenda.

INTERPRETATION OF UNFAIR SUBSIDIES

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. The U.S. Government has made abundantly clear in its recent countervail actions against Canada what it considers trade distorting subsidies to be and which Canadian programs fall into that category.

Will the Minister make clear to Canadians today what interpretation of unfair subsidies his Government intends to defend in the subsidy negotiations with the Americans?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we are going to maintain our position with reference to what is a trade distorting subsidy and what is not. We will start by asking the Americans for an inventory of their subsidy practices so we can have a look at theirs.

At Montebello on the weekend it was resolved that the way ahead for Canadian Liberals is to return to the tried and true values of the past. You are a forward-looking group, that's for sure.

PARTICIPATION OF PROVINCES IN NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. G. Francis LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): I have a supplementary for the same Minister, Mr. Speaker. The Government still refuses to disclose its position on the Canadian definition of a subsidy. We know the American definition. Canadian programs that would be affected include federal-provincial regional development agreements and provincial programs. Why not ask the provinces to participate directly in these negotiations since they are directly concerned?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that interprovincial trade and international trade are within the constitutional jurisdiction of the Government of Canada. We are quite willing to consult and, in fact, we are consulting with the provinces before negotiations, after negotiations, and during negotiations. But the Government of Canada will conduct the negotiations. That is our constitutional responsibility and our constitutional jurisdiction. We will not share that with anyone else.

We are the Government of Canada and we have responsibility in international trade. Consultations, yes, that is what we are doing with the provinces. We will continue as we did so successfully in the last four years as contrasted with the previous 10 years which created chaos in Canada because the Liberal Party was completely centrist and would not consult with the provinces at all.

TAXATION

NATIONAL COUNCIL ON WELFARE REPORT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I was in Newfoundland on the weekend and I heard—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: A first-time visit?

Mr. Broadbent: Wait for it.

While I was there I heard an interesting old quote by the Minister for International Trade in which the National Council on Welfare has a real interest.

A few years ago the Minister for International Trade said, with reference to his own Party, that: "If the people of Canada knew what we were going to do in advance they would never vote for us". It was one of those rare moments of candour coming from the Minister for International Trade.

Today the National Council on Welfare has produced a study of what the Conservative Government has actually done with the tax system since the 1984 election. The net effect has been for taxes on the rich to go down by over 6 per cent while taxes on middle-income people went up 17 per cent and personal taxes for the working poor in Canada went up by a whopping 60 per cent.

Since he has always talked about fairness before Budgets, is this what fairness has meant for the Conservatives, and is this what the working poor and average Canadians will see in the coming Budget?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had occasion to look at the document to which my hon. friend refers, but in general terms he seems to be talking about the working poor and greater social justice. He would probably agree that over the last four years the creation of 1.4 million new jobs is the greatest contribution to social justice that a Government could make.

The number of Canadians living below the poverty line has fallen by 549,000 since 1984, including 179,000 fewer children and 61,000 fewer senior citizens. I know my hon. friend would agree that those are very important social policy considerations.

I think we have made much progress toward a greater degree of social justice. We can surely do a lot more, and hopefully the Budget and the actions of this Parliament over the next four years will improve upon an already enviable record.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ADOPT COUNCIL'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, that is just what I was alluding to. In the past the Prime Minister has said there would be fairness and improvement for the working poor, for the average family. Notwithstanding the number of working poor having gone down, the reality today is that there are about four million Canadians living in poverty and the Conservative Government has increased their taxes since 1984 by 60 per cent, increased the taxes on the average family by 17 per cent, and reduced them for the richest Canadians. That is a reversal of where a commitment to social justice should lead a Government.

Since all of these Canadians are living at the poverty level and the tax system is working increasingly in an unfair direction, will the Government for once listen to people like those on the National Council on Welfare who have produced this assessment and bring in their practical reforms, instead of just listening to the big business community that has virtually written the Throne Speech and no doubt will write the Budget as well?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is offended by the input of the business community. We are not offended by the input of the business community at all. The business community, like the labour community, represents a very major contribution to our national well-being and we welcome the input of all citizens. We do not denigrate anyone in terms of their contribution to the Budget process.

My recollection is that the data provided some time ago by the Minister of Finance indicates that subsequent to tax reform some eight Canadian families out of ten would be paying less tax; nine Canadian senior citizens out of ten would be paying less tax since tax reform, and 850,000 Canadians were removed from the tax rolls entirely. That is social justice.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: We went through this whole routine before. This Government, after its first two years in office, increased the number of Canadians on the tax rolls by over one million and then changed the tax system to bring them back off the rolls. It is the Government that has been playing around with the numbers. I have something very concrete to ask.

SALES TAX INCREASE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Since the last election, the Government, according to this study, has increased sales tax by 5 per cent, and during the election campaign, the Minister of Finance suggested that under a Conservative Government, the new sales tax would go up to 9 per cent, which means another $1,000 per year for the average family.

My question is just this: Can the Minister guarantee Canadians that the Government does not intend to introduce this new sales tax and, instead, will introduce a new tax on profitable companies which are not paying a cent of income tax at the present time?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there have been some sweeping changes with respect to Canadian corporations, and an increasing number of corporations which formerly were exempt from income tax now pay their fair share with everyone else in Canada. We are talking about a major tax reform that was announced by the Minister some time ago. We still have a long way to go in this area, but we intend to deal with this problem.

Regarding the fundamental question put by the Hon. Member, the Department of Finance has already announced that, after adjustment for inflation, personal disposable income in Canada after taxes has increased by $1,100 since 1984. Those are hard facts. That is social justice which benefits those in our society who are less well-off.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

FIRST-CLASS MAIL—REPORT OF POSSIBLE PRIVATIZATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the Government's latest attempt at destroying one of our national institutions, this time the Canadian postal service.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, losing the Post Office is nothing to laugh about. Numerous media reports today confirm that the Minister responsible for Canada Post, in cahoots with the right-wing Fraser Institute, is planning to privatize first-class mail in Canada.

Given that this policy is contrary to the Government's own Marchment Report and that it would effectively put an end to rural mail service in Canada, if not totally destroy the Canadian postal system, will the Prime Minister tell the Minister responsible for the Post Office to hold his horses and cut out that kind of nonsense right now?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I suggest the Hon. Member should re-read the article. If he reads the article in question, he will see that all I said was that I have an open mind to any changes in—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: I have an open mind to any changes in Canada Post's operations which will lead to a more efficient, more effective organization, including opening it up to more private sector competition.

I realize that a closed mind is more appealing to Members of the Liberal Party, but I think that to fulfil one's responsibilities, one should be open to new ideas. The fact that things worked last century does not mean that they have to be strictly adhered to this century. We can always improve.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why the Minister speaks of an open mind and attends a conference sponsored by the Fraser Institute.

FRASER INSTITUTE'S INVITATION TO MINISTER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. I have here a program of the Fraser Institute Conference which indicates that the Minister responsible for Canada Post will be the guest speaker at a conference to be held shortly on the privatization of the Canadian Postal Service.

In view of the fact that the Fraser Institute is a far right organization which is against daycare, against bilingualism and against social development, does the Prime Minister agree with his Minister's behaviour? Why does he not forbid forthwith his Minister to appear at this Conference?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, that attack on the Fraser Institute is something I will let the Fraser Institute deal with. I find it pretty shocking that a Member of this House should say that it is forbidden to listen to the ideas of a think tank from Vancouver, that it might have some ideas which will contaminate.

Mikhail Gorbachev can listen to new ideas; the Liberal Party apparently cannot.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: I would suggest that the Hon. Member should return to Hawkesbury and talk to his constituents. I have an article here from the Hawkesbury paper which says that a bunch of people were asked if mail service is getting better. Marilyn Hill said yes, Gaston Laviolette said yes, Chantal Letourneau said yes, Monique Fournier said yes. The Hon. Member's constituents say yes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER'S REPORT

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Chief Electoral Officer tabled his report to Parliament. He concluded that the last election was a mess.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Milliken: The results indicate that he was right.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Milliken: Thousands of Canadians were left off the voters' lists, inexperienced Deputy Returning Officers were appointed at the last minute and millions were spent on third party advertising, making a mockery of the spending controls in the Elections Act. To quote the Chief Electoral Officer, the election system is on the verge of collapse.

After four years of indolence, when will the Government act to deal with the recommendations of the Chief Electoral Officer?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that the Hon. Member would associate himself with the conclusion of the Chief Electoral Officer, albeit in a perhaps somewhat different context.

Quite frankly, what is at issue here is the failure on the part of the Hon. Member's Party and the New Democratic Party to agree on changes that were incorporated in Bill C-79, notwithstanding the fact that I appealed to the two House Leaders and their critics on no less than four occasions and had many, many discussions with them about cleaning up the Elections Act and putting in place those necessary changes which were enshrined in Bill C-79. That in fact was the big issue that denied many citizens of Canada the right to vote in the last election.

COMPOSITION OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister knows perfectly well that we on this side of the House cannot hold up legislation. It takes three to make an agreement in this House and the Deputy Prime Minister had it in his power, as he knows, to agree with the proposals put forward by this Party and by my friends on my left. Having said that, after four years, the country is now looking for some leadership on this issue.

The Deputy Prime Minister knows that in the Speech from the Throne, there was an announcement of a Commission of Inquiry to be appointed to inquire into the Elections Act. Could the Minister tell us when he will discuss with his opposition counterparts the make-up of the committee, its terms of reference and the proposed date for its report?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, indeed we have been waiting for the report of the Chief Electoral Officer to look at some of the recommendations that he has brought forth. I have discussed some of the proposed terms of reference with him. We are in the process of defining those terms of reference, and I would hope that we will be in a position to discuss this with Members opposite in the very near future.

To reiterate, I wish to state that the Chief Electoral Officer said that 85 per cent of the problems would have been cleared up if Bill C-79 had been passed. The opposition Parties failed to concur with the Government on that particular issue—

Mr. Gauthier: Wrong. You are the Government.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and they bear the responsibility.

Mr. Gauthier: Two hundred and eleven you had.

REVENUE CANADA

DEDUCTIBILITY OF UNDER-THE-TABLE PAYMENTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday his Minister of Finance challenged us in the Opposition to come up with a tax measure that could be eliminated in order to salvage some expenditure cuts in next week's Budget.

I have here a copy of a January, 1986, circular from Revenue Canada. It allows both individuals and corporations to deduct from their income tax certain bribes and certain kickbacks.

In fact, on kickbacks and bribes Section 5 states: "An unvouchered expenditure that maybe described as an under-the-table payment is not deductible unless the following conditions are met: (a) the recipient therefor is identified, and (b) the expenditure was made or incurred to earn income and the amount was reasonable in the circumstances".

Can the Prime Minister explain why under-the-table payments, kickbacks and bribes are still deductible under the Conservative Government? Can he explain why, after more than four years as Prime Minister, he has not moved to end this offensive program of his Party?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite certain from what document the Hon. Member is quoting. Let me assure him, and I know that he is going to come across the floor—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Jelinek: A good way to run for the leadership.

I can assure him that, over the last five years, the Government has been taking every step to make the system fair for Canadians. As a result, the returns have come in thus far in record numbers. Let me assure the Hon. Member that Canadians are better off under tax reform than they were before.

In any event, I would be very happy to study the circular and come up with a specific answer to this questionable circular when I have had a chance to look at it.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the "questionable circular" comes from his own Department. If the Minister will check Sections 1 and 5 he will find that under-the-table payments, bribes and kickbacks are all tax deductible under certain circumstances, a practice, by the way, which has been ended in the United States.

My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister, as the Head of Government.

PRACTICES NOT RECOMMENDED – GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): In view of the fact that the Canadian public finds bribes and other under-the table payments extremely degrading, Mr. Speaker, my question is this: Is he going to put an end to this practice now? And will he make public next week how much this practice costs Canadian taxpayers every year?

[English]

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the Government, under the leadership of the Prime Minister, has done more to clean up what was left with us from the previous Liberal administration than any Government in the history of the country. The Canadian public know it, and that is why we are back here and not on the other side.

In response to the Hon. Member's specific question, I will repeat what I stated earlier. I will be glad to look at the piece of paper that the Hon. Member handed to me. I will look at it and return with a specific answer for him tomorrow.

REVENUE CANADA

USE OF SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Revenue Canada.

Less than one year ago the Government made a commitment to eliminate the use of Social Insurance Numbers as a federal identifier for other than the basic requirement originally intended.

Last fall the Government moved to require it for anyone who deals in bonds, T-bills, interest-bearing accounts, and generally all commercial paper. This has greatly upset a good number of people who now feel, rightly so, that they could be made vulnerable to fraud and theft.

Will the Minister instruct his officials to comply with the announcement from Treasury Board last June, and eliminate the need and the requirement for SIN disclosure, along with the offensive fines and other punitive threats that have been made for non-compliance?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, let me assure the Hon. Member, and all Canadians, that no taxpayer need be worried about vulnerability as a result of providing their Social Insurance Number with their tax returns.

As the Hon. Member knows, Canadians have been required to provide the SIN number since 1967. Every individual Social Insurance Number is protected under the security provisions of the Income Tax Act.

We are constantly working in conjunction with the Minister of Finance and with Treasury Board to try to improve the situation, and I am satisfied that we have made a great step forward in improving the situation thus far, and will continue to work on it further.

The bottom line is that no Canadian need be worried about their confidentiality.

INTEGRITY OF PROGRAM FOR FISHERMEN—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last week, in her reply to one of our colleagues, the Minister stated that the unemployment insurance scheme for fishermen would remain intact. The words she used were "full and unchanged". Yet, during her press conference, the Minister changed her tune. She said that changes would be forthcoming following consultations with the Minister of International Trade and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Could the Minister enlighten us and come clean with us?

Will changes to the special program for fishermen be announced in the Budget speech? Could she tell us whether she has bad news in store for some 30,000 families in the Atlantic area who news on unemployment insurance? What is the truth?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I stated that fishermen are not included in the manpower strategy.

[English]

The comment that I made was that a policy regarding fishermen would involve a number of Departments. I did not in any way suggest there were any changes contemplated at this time.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is the following. The fishermen and all those families who depend on UIC would like to know what the Minister meant when she said that the changes to UI for fishermen are going to involve different kinds of changes and would only come after discussion with the Minister for International Trade and the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans to determine what changes can and will be made to this program.

What did the Minister mean by those words, and why did she use them?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thought I answered that question in response to the first question of the Member. I was asked specifically about the program for fishermen. I said it was outside this program. I said that if and when any changes were contemplated it would involve discussions with other Ministers. I do not see anything remotely threatening in that statement for the people involved in the fishing program under UIC.

TRANSPORT

ATLANTIC FREIGHT RATE ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Atlantic freight rate assistance programs are not promises or a commitment but a negotiated constitutional right. The Deputy Prime Minister, when he was Minister of Transportation quoting the Prime Minister, assured Atlantic Canadians that the freight rate subsidy program would be maintained. Freight rate subsidies create millions in sales and affect over 12,000 Atlantic Canadians. My question to the Minister is this. Will the Minister give his commitment on the floor of this House to the continued maintenance and present funding levels of the maritime freight rates?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have said many times that questions of this kind, which inevitably have a financial impact and therefore relate to the Budget, will be answered when the Budget is presented on April 27. I have no other answer to give than that.

[English]

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ON FUTURE OF PROGRAM

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplemental question. This Government is unnecessarily fueling business uncertainty in Atlantic Canada. This issue cannot be subjected to the whims and fancies of the budget process. We need a clear, unequivocal commitment.

Will the Prime Minister please give Atlantic Canadians this Government's assurance that maritime freight rate assistance programs will not be touched?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will give the same answer in English that I gave in French. I am particularly—

Ms. Copps: That bad!

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): —if the Member from Hamilton East would shut her mouth it would be easier.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister could complete his answer.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to be a member of this Government which has done much more than you did in five years for Atlantic Canada. I think that we have a lot of programs, and of course you were against the most of them. It is normal. I repeat concerning the earlier question you raised, that this question if it has to be answered will be answered in due course on April 27.

PROPOSED CHANGES—EFFECT ON COMMUNITY WELFARE ROLLS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is a very straightforward question, as I always ask.

Can the Minister tell this House what the cost of her proposed changes to the UI will be on the welfare rolls of communities like Belle Island in Newfoundland, and Sudbury, Ontario? Does the Minister from Rosedale not recognize the devastating impact that her proposed changes will have on these communities, which are already strapped for money?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will ignore the fact that the Member got my riding wrong, and simply suggest to him that there are enormous benefits for small communities in this new program. I think he should be congratulating us. There are many communities in his part of the world that will benefit from the increased funding to Community Futures.

As for Newfoundland, let me just reiterate that there will be $15 million more going into Newfoundland as a result of this program than would have been going in otherwise, including a $50 million enhancement of the Community Futures Program. There will be resources for entry level skills training. There will be $350 million for non-apprentice trainees. There will be an additional $50 million for the provision of training and work experience to social assistance recipients. There is a $100 million towards new services for displaced older workers. There is $45 million self-employment entrepreneurship in the building programs.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mrs. McDougall: Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to hear some more, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUIREMENTS FOR PROJECTED FUTURE JOBS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): I direct a supplementary to the same Minister, Mr. Speaker. According to a planning document prepared by the Minister's Strategic Policy and Planning Division, published in August, 1988, the top 10 occupations facing the greatest job growth in the next six years include sales persons, food serving occupations, cashiers, janitors and cleaners. The document goes on to say that "by and large low to medium skill levels characterize these occupations with most requiring little or no post-secondary education or training." Does not the document from the Minister's own Department reveal what a farce those changes are? Aren't they simply designed to trample workers into low paying jobs, or in Joey Smallwood's words, resettle them in Toronto?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that one of the things that the Hon. Member must take into account is that the kind of training that we are providing for people is to get them out of low paying unskilled jobs into better jobs. If the Hon. Member would just raise his sights and help the people in his community take advantage of the program to get them out of low paying jobs, and particularly the women of his riding, then I think that they would all be better off. We are prepared to help them on this side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON – REQUEST FOR UNITED NATIONS EMERGENCY DEBATE

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It pertains to the serious situation in Lebanon.

Yesterday Lebanon experienced its worst bombing in 14 years. The latest outbreaks of violence have claimed hundreds of lives, and countless casualties. Our Party has always said that violence and aggression are not the route to national reconciliation. The situation has intensified and is growing worse each hour.

Is the Secretary of State prepared to exercise Canada's right as a member, both of the UN and the Security Council, and call for an emergency debate in the Security Council regarding this crisis?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the great seriousness with which the Hon. Member and all Members of the House take the situation in Lebanon. His question was precise as to whether we would be prepared to exercise our rights. In the appropriate circumstances we would, of course, be prepared to do that.

I think one of the elements of this tragedy that is of concern to us all is that this is not a matter that debate will resolve. It is very important that there be diplomatic pressures and such others as may apply, upon the Arab League or others who may have influence in Lebanon. We are following all of those examples.

I give the Hon. Member my assurance that if the point arrived where we thought it would be helpful for there to be the kind of debate that he has recommended, we would certainly initiate that debate.

ASSISTANCE FOR REFUGEES

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): My supplementary is to the same Minister, Mr. Speaker. The people of Lebanon are crying out for help. It has taken two months and a special appeal from the Red Cross of Canada to offer any kind of help to that country. While we applaud this gesture, though late in coming, I ask the Minister what immediate steps is the Government undertaking to ensure increased assistance is made available to the refugees who are fleeing Lebanon to neighbouring countries?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Hon. Member just referred to the announcement that was made by my colleague earlier this week of a substantial Canadian contribution to the International Red Cross to deal with precisely that problem. We will continue to look for other ways in which Canada might be able to be of help in resolving the problems of refugees in Lebanon. We will also look for ways in which we might be able to encourage the forces of peace in that country, and in very many ways the ultimate responsibility for that—I don't mean to shed the responsibility of Canada or others—rests with the Lebanese themselves. We certainly want to do everything we can to encourage all elements in that country to recognize the tragedy of this situation, and to take actions to bring it to an end. To the degree that Canada can help we shall help.

AIRPORTS

PROVISION OF RESCUE SERVICES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In the spring of 1987 I and my colleagues called upon the Government to provide for a rescue component, as well as a firefighting component, at major Canadian airports. At that time the Government said it was not necessary.

A few days ago, thanks to the Minister of State (Transport), I received a copy of a consultant's report, commissioned in the fall of 1987, and received by the Department this past December. That report recommends that rescue staff be added at a number of major Canadian airports, in addition to the firefighting staff. Will the Minister accept this recommendation and immediately request sufficient additional dollars and person years from Treasury Board to provide this lifesaving service?

• (1500)

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, as well as to the Hon. Member, the report was sent out to interested parties who had taken part in the consultation process. They have provided their input to me as well as to the Department. It is being studied. Action will be taken on it.

REGIONAL AIRPORTS—FIRE-FIGHTING SERVICES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of State for Transport.

The report recommends that the way to pay for this provision of rescue services is through the elimination of fire-fighting services at a number of regional airports throughout Canada, airports such as those at Baie Comeau, London, Norman Wells, Prince Rupert, Stephenville, Whitehorse, and Yarmouth. Will the Minister not indicate that they were prepared to go to Treasury Board for additional moneys and additional person years? At the very least will the Minister repudiate this part of the recommendation and say that in no way, under any circumstances, will the Government of Canada eliminate or reduce the ability of Transport Canada to provide fire-fighting services at these small regional airports?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, in sending out the report for consultation I made a point in the letter that I sent out with it in which I stated that I did not agree with that recommendation.

EXTERNAL AID

REQUEST THAT WORLD SUMMIT BE HELD FOR BENEFIT OF CHILDREN

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for External Relations and concerns a world summit for children.

The Third World's foreign debt burden has forced governments to reduce health expenditures by 50 per cent. Children suffer as a result.

Will the Minister honour the commitment to help the poorest countries and people with a summit where developed and developing countries could deal with the problems of the world's children who live in extreme poverty, even in Canada?

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, Canada has already done much to deal with the various problems set forth in the UNICEF report. I think it is worth pointing out the wonderful work UNICEF does to aid women and children, particularly in Third World countries. And I would like to add that Canada is the fourth largest contributor to UNICEF.

Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague refers, as does the report, to the disastrous effects of the debt on children and on Third World countries. In this regard, I would mention that I was very glad to table yesterday in the House the Bill that will cancel the debt of some sub-Saharan African countries, as a result of the Government's commitment.

Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague referred to health. There too, we have contributed $120 million to a universal immunization program.

I think that those are all very concrete actions to help the poorest and especially children in Third World countries.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard (Roberval) that Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Transportation Accident Investigation Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When debate ceased for Question Period and the House recessed the Hon. Member for Winnipeg Transcona (Mr. Blaikie) was on his feet. Other duties require that the Hon. Member be out of the House. I suggest that we continue on with the regular schedule of speakers.

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to be able to say a few words in connection with Bill C-2. I understand that at this time we are discussing the Bill in principle as opposed to in detail. However, I would like to bring a few matters to the attention of Members on the government side. Hopefully, someone there will listen to some of the concerns I am going to express and perhaps take them into account when the matters are discussed in committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The only reason I interrupt the Hon. Member is so that we can have a little more quiet in the House. I think that would make it easier for the Hon. Member to speak and for the Speaker and everyone else to listen.

Mr. Wappel: Madam Speaker, as I was saying, Scarborough West forms part of Metropolitan Toronto. Metropolitan Toronto is very concerned about transportation, as I am sure are other areas, but specifically Toronto since it has the Pearson International Airport. There are many rail lines going through it. It is located on Lake Ontario. It is a port both for Great Lakes shipping and international shipping. Needless to say the people of Toronto and the people of Scarborough West are very concerned with transportation safety.

That being said, I would like to discuss some of the specifics of Bill C-2 beginning with the stated purpose of the Bill. It is to advance transportation safety. Who could possibly be against such a purpose? We are all interested in the advancement of transportation safety.

How will this Government advance the safety of the Canadian public? We have before us Bill C-2, which is a rather lengthy document. The first thing that it proposes is the establishment of a Transportation Accident Investigation Board.

I would really appreciate it if some Hon. Members would allow me the courtesy of making my remarks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair has tried to bring all Hon. Members to attention. I would like the Hon. Member to notice that the noise does not come from only one side of the House.

Mr. Wappel: Madam Speaker, I am delighted with any noise on this side of the House.

As I was saying, there is to be a proposed board. This proposed board it is suggested will apply its efforts to three separate areas. They are aviation occurrences, marine occurrences and railway occurrences. I have a conceptual problem with this idea. The types of occurrences that will occur, hopefully very infrequently, with respect to these different types of transportation are so completely different that it seems foolhardy to group them all together so that they fall within the jurisdiction of one five-member board.

I raise this matter because this Bill was brought forward in order to replace an Act which the Liberal Party brought forward in 1984 which established the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. I mention that board specifically because in that legislation we were dealing with aviation safety. We were talking about a board which was established for the specific purpose of dealing with safety in aviation. We now have a board which will be established for the purpose of dealing with all types of transportation. If it is possible for the members of the board to deal with those types of transportation, then that is fine. But what kind of qualifications do the board members have to have? Other Hon. Members have already referred to Clause 4(2). All that is required is that the members of the board "—be collectively knowledgeable about air, marine, rail and commodity pipeline transportation". That seems to me to be a requirement for a Renaissance man. I would be very interested to see if we can find people who are collectively knowledgeable about those four different types of transportation.

Can you imagine, Madam Speaker, the difference between the problems experienced by an aircraft which develops trouble and the problems experienced by transporting commodities via pipeline and transporting them via a rail system? There is such a vast diversification of potential problems that to force the five member board to have a collective knowledge of all of these different types of transportation is dangerous. I would ask the Government to consider having three different boards to deal with the three different areas: aviation, marine and railway and commodity occurrences. That is the first comment I would like to make.

The next comment is about how this Board is going to be constituted. A chairman will be appointed. There are no qualifications set forth on the appointment of the chairman. Under that chairman, there will be three branches, each of them headed by a director, the so–called director of investigations. There is no definition of the qualifications of a director of investigations.

Indeed, we are going to have the situation of the chairman who has no specified qualifications appointing the three directors who have no specified qualifications. Then there will be other investigators. It is interesting that in this Act the word investigator is defined as any person referred to in Paragraph 10 1(a) or (b). If you look at Paragraph 10 1(a) or (b), it does not give any further help as to the definition or qualifications of an investigator. Accordingly, I suggest that there be some discussion and some fix in the Act about the types of qualifications necessary. If we are going to have a multimodal situation and one chairman, we may end up with a chairman whose major interest is aviation. The chairman has the exclusive responsibility for managing personnel matters, financial matters and property matters as we see in the Act. He has as well the exclusive responsibility for directing the staff. Here I think it is important to note in Section 5 (2)(a), and apportioning its work; (b) directing the members and apportioning their work.

I suggest that there may be perhaps an unintentional but nonetheless human bias for someone who is particularly interested in aviation to apportion work in the aviation area as opposed to railway transportation investigations or commodity and other types of investigations. Along with that, that person would be appointing the various directors of investigation who no doubt would have the focus that the chairman would want at that particular time. I would suggest that there should be some direction in the Bill as to who can be appointed and on what qualification.

One of the speakers this morning indicated that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board has been compromised. I agree with that comment. It is most unfortunate, but there is no question that there is a lack of confidence in transportation safety by Canadians today. He went on to say that this Act will restore that confidence. I have difficulty understanding the logic behind those remarks. I do not understand how replacing one Act by another Act in and of itself is going to restore confidence. To restore confidence we need an Act that makes some logical sense, one that is promulgated and implemented in a logical and consistent fashion independently. It will then demonstrate that it deserves the confidence of the Canadian public.

With respect to some of the other difficulties that I have discerned in my review of Bill C–2, what happens if there is a transportation accident? Take an aviation accident. That accident is then brought to the director of investigations for the air. That is in Section 10(2). That investigation department conducts an investigation, brings forward its findings to the Board which consists of up to five members who are collectively knowledgeable about air, marine, rail and commodity transportation. They then digest this report. Do they make it public? No, they do not.

What is the next step as this Act states? The next step is to prepare a draft report. Where does that draft report go? The Act states that it is a confidential document. It goes directly to the Minister of Transport. Why? Obviously it is so that the Minister of Transport can see that draft report before anyone else sees it. The Act is quite blunt in that it then gives the Minister the opportunity to make representations with respect to it. It is only after the representations have been made and the Board has considered them as they must do under the Act that a final report is made public.

Is that a problem? I suggest that it could very well be a problem because of the need to perceive that such a Board investigating accidents is independent, that it is not under the thumb of any particular Minister. Not only must it be independent, it must be seen to be independent. I have a real difficulty where the Act requires that the draft report be submitted to the Minister for his review and recommendations before it can be made public. The perception might be that if there is a minority report, if there is a report that perhaps could embarrass the Government of the day, that the Minister concerned would have the opportunity to make representations which may be perceived by the public as attempting to influence the final report. If the public is not confident that the Board is independent of the Minister, we are not going to have confidence in the Board and its reports.

It seems that it is designed to breed allegations, to breed questions in Question Period, to breed non-confidence as opposed to confidence.

There is also a potential for conflict in Section 24. In Section 24(2) the Act requires that the Board shall—and of course this is mandatory—"on a confidential basis" send a copy of the draft report to the Minister. It is clear that the draft report is to be confidential. It is clear that it is a mandatory requirement. There is no discretion on the Board. It must do this.

Two sections later, however, in Subsection (4), we see that the Board shall again mandatorily receive the representations made pursuant to Subsection (2). What are they supposed to do with those representations? They are supposed to keep a record of those representations. If you are going to keep a record of representations, one presumes that that record is going to be public. How can you have a public record of representations dealing with a confidential report? Surely the representations that are going to be kept by the Board dealing with the confidential report are going to be talking about matters in the confidential report.

I find it difficult to follow the rationale there. If we are going to have confidentiality, then we have to remain completely confidential. I suggest that that is not going to build confidence.

The final thing that is going to build confidence is the bottom line. What is the bottom line here? The bottom line is very clear. Whenever a safety board delivers its report, that safety board's report should be listened to. What is the use of this board and that board and the next board delivering all kinds of reports if no one reads them, if no one follows the recommendations contained in them? It is key that we have a commitment to a board whose reports are going to be followed.

We have seen that that has not been the case in the past with the Government. The Canadian Air Safety Board has made specific recommendations with respect to Pearson International Airport, for example. Has the Government listened to those recommendations? No. If we want to have confidence in the new Board that this legislation will create, there must be a commitment by the Government that the report of these boards will be heard and implemented.

With those words, I look forward to the committee work on this Bill. While the spirit is there, the flesh is weak.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Hon. Member deals with safety. There is a situation concerning airport safety that has existed for more than a decade. It involves the federal Government's responsibility for sharing in airport infrastructure.

At Campbell River there is an airport road which is in disastrous condition. The medical association of Campbell River has said it cannot, in many cases, advise patients to use that road for Medivac. Ambulance drivers do not want to use that road. People who work there have raised the problem of road safety many times.

Does the Hon. Member believe that this Board should be able to examine questions of infrastructure when it concerns a serious situation like that of the Campbell River Airport road?

Let me provide a bit more information. Because this road connects to a provincial highway, the provincial Government offered to pay a third of the cost. The MLA, Colin Gabelmann, worked very hard and secured support for that. Mayor Bob Ostler and the Campbell River council offered to pay a third of the cost because some of it was within the district of Campbell River. Ultimately, the greatest part of the road joins the federal airport to a provincial highway. It is in such disastrous shape that the medical association, those associated with the hospital, and those transporting patients for Medivac will not propose the use of that road in many cases.

Should the matter of airport infrastructure and safety be a subject of investigation? Should the federal Government be paying for those costs of road structure and maintenance, sharing it with them, particularly because that is exactly what it did at Williams Lake? It covered the entire cost to join that airport to a provincial highway, which is essentially the same distance.

Mr. Wappel: Madam Speaker, as I understand the Hon. Member's question, it deals with whether the Board should be concerned with the infrastructure. Clause 7 of Bill C-2 describes one of the objects of the Board as identifying safety deficiencies as evidenced by transportation occurrences. Admittedly, we are talking about aviation, marine, railroad. However, I think the Board should be given a broad enough mandate so that wherever road systems infrastructure or any kind of infrastructure that is involved in any of those types of transportation impacts in any way on any potential safety, clearly the Board should have the mandate to make recommendations in order to avoid that kind of problem in the future.

Mr. Walker: Madam Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for his excellent comments on this legislation. He has accurately pointed out many of the pitfalls. I want to draw the attention of the House to the comments by the Member for Winnipeg—Transcona (Mr. Blaikie) to show the difference between quality research and quality thought and a Member who simply stands up to ramble on. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Transcona mentioned in his speech that I was nervous when he stood up to speak. Let me say that I am quite nervous when he stands up to speak, lest other people think that he represents Winnipeg.

I have a specific question for my colleague. Did he notice whether the legislation would make public inquiries or public hearings optional, with a decision to be made by the Board? It seems that one of the great changes in the decision-making in this country is to encourage Governments to be more open and forthright from the beginning, and sometimes to mandate this requirement. Would he comment on how he thinks the Board should proceed with regard to public inquiries?

Mr. Wappel: Madam Speaker, public inquiries are very important and serve a purpose. We must recognize that not every incident of every branch of these three transportation investigations will require a public inquiry. Sometimes even the tip of the wing of an aircraft going into the safety zone miles away from another aircraft is deemed to be a so-called occurrence, yet that may not require a public inquiry costing hundreds of thousands of dollars of Canadian taxpayers money.

Having said that, it seems to me the Board should be encouraged, wherever there is a major safety violation or major accident, to have a public inquiry so that Canadians see that the facts have been put on the table and appreciate that the Board is doing all it can in order to come to a conclusion.

For example, we know that the Canadian public has some serious concerns with what happened in Gander. We do not have a public inquiry. That seems like the kind of incident that cries out for a public inquiry. While you cannot mandate a public inquiry for every incident, it seems the Government of the day should encourage as a policy matter that any kind of severe accident like that, with loss of life or major loss of property, should have a public inquiry so that the Canadian populace will know exactly what happened and get to the bottom of it.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): I have another question concerning the one I asked the Member about the Campbell River Airport road and its infrastructure. While embellishing many of the worth-while comments he made previously, the Member neglected to look at the question of infrastructure funding. I remind him that the previous Liberal government had this matter under close scrutiny and was on the verge of basically approving funding to share in the one-third-one-third-one-third proposal.

Both the district of Campbell River and the provincial Government have this money available and are prepared to proceed if the Conservative Government would simply show the same level of concern and commitment to the safety in that particular area. I am one who is very concerned about the area of Medivac as well as highway safety. If we could ensure that the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) would give this matter his undivided attention and respond directly to the provincial Minister of Transportation and Highways and the mayor of Campbell River, the matter might be resolved. Would the Hon. Member comment on that?

Mr. Wappel: I have a brief comment, Madam Speaker. Of course, I am not familiar with every area of Canada, much as I would like to be. I am not familiar with the comments the Member has made with respect to the area to which he has just referred.

I appreciate the short history lesson about what this Liberal Party believed in the past and where we are going in the future. My only comment would be that I think we are discussing safety and I am beginning to see that the Hon. Member, with due respect, is wandering from the subject of safety and going on to subjects of funding, which I do not think are appropriate and which I have not developed, and about which I have done no research. Therefore, I would rather not make any comment with respect to those.

Mr. John F. Brewin (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I want to address a few remarks to Bill C–2. The one aspect of the Bill that is of particular interest to those of us from Vancouver Island is that which would afford this new Board the role of conducting independent investigations of marine incidents. Clause 7 of the Bill provides that the object of the Board is to advance transportation safety by conducting independent investigations and, if necessary, public inquiries into transportation occurrences. Those occurrences, as defined by the Bill, include marine occurrences related to an activity of a vessel or a ship.

Under the Bill, the board is given the power to decide whether a public inquiry is to be held. It is not imposed upon the board that it must hold public inquiries, but it is given the responsibility of deciding in appropriate circumstances whether public inquiries are to be held.

With that preamble, I would like to address two points. First, the Bill does not spell out the implications of a public inquiry and what that really means, nor have we heard anything about it from the Government. We have seen examples in the past of inquiries which simply give a nod in the direction of public input. We on this side of the House will make proposals at committee stage that will provide that the elements of the public face of the inquiry be spelled out in greater detail. I am thinking particularly of a point made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) yesterday.

Yesterday was Law Day and the Minister made a speech at the National Law Day dinner which was held at the Chateau Laurier Hotel. He made the clear and I think uncontroversial point that it is not enough to provide on paper for justice but it is critically important that all people in the community be given genuine and real access to justice. In one context, that may mean access to legal assistance, but in the case of inquiries under this Bill, it seems to me that the Government will have to provide a genuine opportunity for interested persons to participate in a real and effective way in the inquiries provided for in the Bill.

Let us use the example of the west coast oil spill. I will be getting into this in greater detail later. If there is to be a public inquiry into the west coast oil spill, we see it as being necessary that it will not simply be a pro forma opportunity for members of the public to show up at an inquiry in Ottawa. The inquiry should take place in locations to which interested people can conveniently travel. It means that funds should be set aside under the terms of the board for those interested parties to prepare for the hearings, to retain research assistance, if necessary to retain legal counsel and to have an opportunity to introduce witnesses and to cross–examine witnesses put up by either the big companies that will have an interest in these kinds of inquiries or even by Government agencies.

All of these things cost money. If there is to be a genuine form of public access, however, it is our submission that it will be necessary for the board to provide funds for that kind of assistance to interested groups. For example, if we do end up with an inquiry into the west coast oil spill, funds should be made available to environmental groups and others from Vancouver Island to retain the necessary expertise to make a meaningful commitment and contribution to that inquiry.

Some 12 or 13 years ago, or maybe even 15 years ago, I had the opportunity while working with the British Columbia Government to be Chairman of the Rent Review Commission. We entered into a comprehensive study of rent control and made very sure that not only did tenant groups have the kind of support of which I am speaking, but even the developers who opposed rent controls. Of course, there are different kinds of inquiries. Some inquiries would not need the full-blown treatment of which I am speaking. In today's paper, we read that the Dubin inquiry has already run up a bill of $750,000. Not every incident will require that level of investigation, but there are some that will. Where they do require it, the public should have that kind of assistance and support if the inquiry is to be meaningful.

The second point I wish to make relates to the west coast oil spill. We on this side of the House have been pressing since Parliament resumed at the beginning of April for a full public inquiry into the west coast oil spill. Since Parliament convened, there have been two further threats to the environment posed by the spillage of fuel or the threatened spillage of fuel on the west coast. In each case, the Minister has advised the House that the situation is under control, that they are looking into it and no one need worry.

On the last two occasions, however, he has added that he would be prepared to see some form of public input into the review of the standards and controls on tankers passing through Canadian waters on the west coast and he has promised the House that will take place. It seems to me that a Government that can produce a Bill of this kind, providing for public inquiries into marine incidents, something which would clearly include oil spills, ought without any further delay to direct a public inquiry into the west coast oil spills and the tanker and barge traffic up and down the coast. There is no excuse for any further delay.

The Minister met this weekend with representatives of a group of 158 prominent British Columbians who have been calling for a public inquiry. He was quoted in the newspapers as saying that he was prepared to have some public input into the departmental inquiry, but he still failed to make a commitment to the House, to the people of Canada and particularly to the people of the west coast of Vancouver Island that there will be a full, public, open, accessible inquiry located at least in part on Vancouver Island into this massive threat to our environment.

Returning to my original point on public inquiries, it seems to me that the whole point of the exercise is that the people who are affected must have the power to influence the outcome of the inquiry. If Canada is a genuine democracy, that means that these kinds of inquiries and investigations cannot be intended to cover up problems or to protect the reputations of major companies or even Government Departments that may have failed. Rather, the intention is to help those who are most interested and affected to contribute in a genuine way to solving the problems that need to be addressed. It is their lives and their environment and they are the ones who should have major control over the direction and nature of the inquiry. It is for that reason that we call on the Government not only to introduce at committee stage clear and specific provisions for genuine public enquiries but, as a measure of good faith, to immediately establish a proper public inquiry into the case of the west coast oil spill.

I have not been paying much attention to the clock, but if I still have a few minutes let me add a comment on another aspect of the Bill. I wish to speak about those provisions in the Bill for the appointment of board members. Being a new Member, I may stray just a tad into a clause-by-clause discussion, but I will try to make my comments as general as possible to avoid what may be a breach of the rules. I am sure either you or my colleagues, Madam Speaker, will correct me if I do not succeed.

I would like to comment on the provisions of the Bill for the appointment of the board, at least in general terms. I think this raises a question which we in this Parliament will have to press the Government hard to address in better terms than it has in the Bill.

Those who have had an opportunity to read Jeffrey Simpson's book on patronage in Canada will appreciate that this country needs substantial changes in how boards are appointed. One probably does not even have to read Jeffrey Simpson's book to appreciate that. The public is looking for quite a different approach to how boards are appointed.

I would certainly concede that a Government is entitled to have those who reflect at least in part its perspectives on boards which are policy oriented. There needs to be some provision for that interest to be taken care of. However, in taking care of that interest, we must guard against a tendency to abuse the privilege. We also must consider the other interests involved, that is, the interests of the public in having an independent, honest, open exercise of public responsibility.

The provisions of this Bill still give the Government yet another vehicle for patronage. It is a system which must end. When we get to committee stage this corner of the House will have proposals to offer in that regard.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): I would like to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. Brewin), for raising a critical matter in transportation safety, which is the question of the spillage of oil. The Hon. Member has raised this matter in conjunction with a very serious oil spill on the west coast of Vancouver Island. He and other Members of the House know that on Vancouver Island and the coast of B.C. there is currently under way a massive petition by citizens who are demanding a public inquiry.

Every municipality, city, regional board, native community and tribal council is writing to the Ministers involved urging that a public inquiry take place. Today there is a delegation headed by Richard Lucas, the co-ordinator for the Nuu-chahnulth people, on that clean-up. He is here in Ottawa attempting to meet with Ministers about the clean-up. I would add that with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), he has basically had no luck at all at this point. He is here to urge that a public inquiry be held so that the livelihoods of the Nuu-chahnulth people and the other citizens who live there are not destroyed in the same manner as those who live in Valdez.

I ask my colleague if he could comment on the refusal of the Prime Minister and Ministers to meet with these people who have firsthand experience and who will be the first line exposed to the damage created by the transportation safety problems. Why will the Ministers not meet with them, hear their concerns, and launch that public inquiry? The Minister of Transport is quite prepared to go around the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and appoint a public inquiry into the Dryden accident, which certainly is serious, but oil spills are serious too and the potential for enormous destruction is serious. A public inquiry must be appointed. The Government Members must meet with the people who have suffered the damage, who have been involved in the clean-up and know firsthand what has happened.

Would the Member join with me in urging those Ministers and the Prime Minister to meet with the delegations that are here now and those who are on their way?

Mr. Brewin: I thank my friend for the question. We are working together with the other Members from Vancouver Island, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett), the Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands (Ms. Hunter), the Hon. Member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Skelly) and the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Cowichan (Mr. Stupich) to press the Government on this issue.

Frankly, it is difficult for me to understand why the Government has not moved more quickly on this. The only excuse Government Members might have is that they are still poring over the map to try to figure out exactly where the west coast of Vancouver Island is.

However, we were pleased that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) went to Vancouver on the weekend. We hope that effort will have moved him closer to a decision to proceed with the public inquiry.

There cannot be a public inquiry in the case of every single event that comes along, and we on this side of the House understand that. However, the potential for major damage is so great that we should take the lesson that has been learned with relatively minimal damage to our shores and to our environment to get to the heart of what will be necessary to avoid a major catastrophe in the future.

Three or four tankers per day go by the City of Victoria through the Strait of Juan de Fuca. Each one is a floating invitation to an oil spill disaster. So far we have been fortunate, but inevitably there will a disaster somewhere in the Strait of Georgia or in the Strait of Juan de Fuca. There will be a serious oil spill off the coast, unless steps are taken now.

The tankers that are used are beginning to age. The potential that they have for leakage increases as each year goes by. It is critical that we look at the technology for transporting oil, and that we look at the technology that is being used in barges.

The other day a tug had an explosion on board 14 miles off the west coast of Vancouver Island. The barge had to be cut loose and was floating around the ocean for a number of hours before it was rescued. Fortunately, the seas were relatively calm, and because the Government has been sensitized to these issues, it was able to jump on the problem fairly quickly. Perhaps next time we will not be so lucky.

The case is overwhelming for an immediate major investigation which would take the form of a public inquiry in order that the people can have some confidence in the results and give their input. I hope the initial indications that the Minister has given that he is beginning to see the need for at least some public input will flower into a commitment in the next day or two for a public inquiry. The time is long overdue.

Ms. Mitchell: I also wish to rise on the same point. All of us from British Columbia, and I hope all Members of the House, are extremely worried about the lack of protection, the lack of planning, the lack of resources, and the lack of safety measures to both prevent and contain future spills.

The Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. Brewin) knows that there is a particular vulnerability on the Gulf Islands, to which I have a special attachment, and to the San Juan Islands, a group of beautiful islands between Vancouver Island and the mainland.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member particularly about the risk connected with the Cherry Point refinery where spills could happen. As the Hon. Member pointed out, there is frequent transport of oil through those straits, which is a very dangerous and narrow passageway into the Cherry Point refinery. The risk element is very high. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on that. It is bad enough on the west coast of Vancouver Island. However, in the centre area where there is no sweep out to the sea it would be worse, if that is possible.

Since the Hon. Member is a lawyer of some renown, I would like to ask him what responsibility there is for payment on the part of offenders. In the past history it was American companies that were responsible for the spill that hit our coastline of British Columbia. Does the Canadian Government have a fund from which to immediately pay volunteers who help with the clean-up, something which has not been the case in the past? I understand Canada has some type of legal fund but that it is not available to pay helpers in the event of a spill.

Another issue I would like to mention while I am on my feet is the need for a standard policy of double-bottomed tankers as part of the safety measures.

• (1550)

Mr. Brewin: My colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), has hurled a number of specific issues at me, on each of which I could speak for considerable length, but it may divert us. I suppose I should divert myself as far as I possibly can from the individual issues, but let me deal with a couple of points. I presume I only have a couple of seconds left.

First of all, one of the things about this Bill is that the findings of the Board are not binding. There is to be no civil or criminal liability assigned by the Board, nor are its findings to be construed as such. As the Member by implication has pointed out, the Government needs to bring forward some companion legislation to deal with the sharing and burden of costs of these oil spills.

The Exxon company is going to be facing hundreds of millions of dollars of costs, which of course it will just pass on to the consumer after its insurance runs out. Apparently even the limits of its insurance will not cover what is done.

The next oil spill may be caused by a company with very few assets, and then the public will be stuck with it. One of the questions for a public inquiry would be: What insurance is being carried? What guarantee is there that there will be any company standing behind the insurance or any funds standing behind the insurance? What about the volunteers? What about the tourist industry, the home owners, the native fishermen and other fishermen on the coast, all of whom may well suffer damages?

In the west coast oil spill which happened in December and January, we on this side have proposed that the Government immediately establish a compensation fund. I think my colleague from Comox—Alberni is going to be introducing a motion if he has not done so already.

An Hon. Member: It is done.

Mr. Brewin: "It is done", I am told. It calls on the Government to establish a compensation fund so that those who are hurt do not have to go into American courts and go through international lawsuits and the complexity of that. The people should pay, the Government should compensate the people who have been damaged, and then the Government should take on the responsibility of suing. There are thousands of aspects to this thing, all of which should be handled by a public inquiry.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, this afternoon I would like to deal with two issues. First, I will speak to the Bill before the House, and second, I would like to deal with the tragic accident that occured in Gander, Newfoundland, on December 12, 1985.

First of all, in referring to Bill C-2, Madam Speaker, we should remember it was not the Conservative Party that dreamt up this whole business of having a commission of inquiry on air accidents. In fact, it was the former Liberal Government which in 1984 proposed and, in fact, established the Canadian Aviation Safety Board.

Today, the Government is proposing to establish a new transportation accident investigation board, which will replace the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and also be responsible for other, similar types of accidents.

Madam Speaker, investigations are essential in order to maintain safety standards in this country. In 1978 we had the tragic crash in Cranbrook, British Columbia, and the Progressive Conservative Party, the Official Opposition at the time, asked the Government to set up a royal commission of inquiry. A few months later, the Government was defeated in a general election, and the new Conservative Government set up the Dubin Commission which reported several years later. On the basis of that report, the Government, in 1984, established the Canadian Aviation Safety Board.

[English]

I have here a speech from the Hon. Member for Vegreville, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), in his days as the transportation critic, opposition critic as he was in those days, for the Conservative Party. It is dated February 22, 1979. Let me read some of it. I think there will be a sentiment of déjà vu in what I will read. The Hon. Member for Vegreville said at that time, and I quote from Hansard:

> I turn now to the question of air safety. In spite of the minister's assurance, it is clear that events of the recent past, and specifically over the last 12 months, have given Canadians clear evidence that there is serious erosion taking place in public air safety in Canada.

He adds further:

> Rather than acting responsibly, this minister chooses to gloss over the issue and play the old reassuring game that all is well. I suggest that constitutes a clear of dereliction of duty on his part. We again call for a full public inquiry into the whole area of air safety so that all the facts may be known and corrective measures put in place. That is a minimum.

Ten years later that judicial commission of inquiry is something for which my colleagues and I in the Liberal Party have been asking, specifically in the area of the Gander air crash.

Just to refresh the memory of all Hon. Members on the Gander air crash, the crash in question occurred at approximately 6.45 a.m. on December 12, 1985, approximately one kilometre from the runway at the Gander International Airport. An Arrow Air DC-8 crashed to the ground. It had 256 passengers, eight of them were U.S. servicemen returning from a mission in the Sinai Desert. The remaining eight people were crew members. All perished in the crash. All were citizens of the United States of America.

Following that very tragic air crash we had the Canadian Aviation Safety Board do an investigation of the incident in question. I do not mean to complain about the quality of the investigators themselves. I have no reason to believe that anything went wrong in terms of the quality of the individual investigators, whether I am speaking of Mr. Tom Hinton of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, Mr. Peter Bogue, or others. However, I am saying that the investigation was handled by the Board and by the Government in such a way that the CASB no longer enjoys the confidence of the Canadian public. Very few people now believe anything that has come out of the report of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board on the Gander air crash.

First, we had internal division within the Board. We had an interim report of the Board. We had a dissenting interim report of the Board. We had the Board that attempted to constitute itself in an evidence review committee to oversee the evidence, and at a subsequent meeting the chairman used this power to vote twice in order to dismantle the evidence review committee that had been established at a previous meeting.

We had an eminent lawyer, now a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, who prepared a report basically stating that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board was in a grave state of disagreement and that things need to be patched up and repaired immediately. We had all of those things occurring. Afterwards, of course, we had the final report of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board supported by five members and the minority report supported by four members. The only reason there were four on the minority side was because one of the dissenting members by then had quit. Otherwise, we would have had five people supporting the report, five dissenting, and probably again a situation where the chairman would have had to cast a second and deciding vote in order to break the tie.

What we have is obviously very tragic in terms of what happened at the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. Even more fundamental, there are families of American servicemen, families wondering what exactly happened to their loved ones and why 256 people died in the most serious accident ever to occur on Canadian soil. I do not have the answer to that question. However, the probable cause of the accident, as was determined by the Board, has been determined by many people as not being a likely scenario at best. It is difficult to say what caused the crash.

I have certain items that I would like to bring to your attention, Madam Speaker. First, there is another company that frequently transports troops from the United States. It is known as Transamerica Airlines. At one point in time that airline was transporting American military personnel and had an unusual incident happen. A parcel fell out of the bag that a military person was carrying in which it was identified that there was a detonator cap. The military authorities immediately made the discovery of live ammunition as being part of the luggage of this particular military person. At that point in time the authorities asked everyone on the plane to leave it. They then told all the passengers that if they wanted to they could immediately surrender all arms and ammunition that they had on board and that they would not be punished. However, if they failed to do so within the space of a few minutes then of course they would send in the sniffing dogs and anything that they found. Then the military people in question would be charged for illegal possession and illegal transportation of these arms and military hardware.

Do you know what was found, Madam Speaker? On board that flight was found six rolls of detonator caps, eight static fire blasting caps, three 20–millimetre projectiles, nine 20–millimetre practice rounds, five .50 calibre machine rounds, one .308 millimetre shell, one .208 millimetre shell, nine slap flares, one green smoke flare, one 45–70 line cutter, one simulated grenade fuse, one practice bomb, one smoke–bomb, one signal flare, and eighteen 5.56 shells.

Following that incident Transamerica complained bitterly to the United States military. The United States military established procedures at that point to ensure that nothing like that would happen again.

I have in my hand an internal document from the United States military. It is dated July 28, 1986. I would like to read what it states. It is written in military jargon and I may not be able to decipher it all. It is also a very bad photocopy of an original document. The document was sent by Lieutenant–Colonel M. L. Becker of the United States Air Force. The subject of the document is hazardous materials prohibited on PAX aircraft. It states:

> On two MTMC arranged commercial air movements that have moved in the last 60 days, hazardous items were found in the stowed baggage of troops. On 26 Feb. 86, a quantity of hazardous munitions items was identified which included 20 mm, 50 calibre, 40 mm and 5.56mm ammunition; detonating cord; nine slap flares; smoke flares and grenade simulators.

Perhaps if I had the attention of all Members who are busy conversing on various issues, such as the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), we could proceed with this debate. The document states further:

> The procedures require that troop commanders check to ensure stowed and carry–on baggage does not contain hazardous contraband. This procedure further requires commanders to certify on the passenger manifest that anti–hazard inspection was made and baggage was checked.

I draw the following sentence to your attention, Madam Speaker, because I believe it is of the utmost importance. It is:

> In light of the fatal air crash of a DC–8 in Gander, Newfoundland, on 12 Dec. 85, request that all concerned with the movement of troops aboard commercial aircraft, contracted by MAC or MTMC, do their part to ensure that hazardous items do not get aboard aircraft.

What does that mean? Anyone who would be reading that document for the first time could be led to the following conclusion. I took the document and handed it to someone asking them this question: "Do you remember what caused the Gander crash in Newfoundland?" The individual told me: "No". I said: "All right. Take this document, read it and then tell me if you know".

The person read the document and said: "Oh, yeah, I know what caused it. It is obvious from this document. It says here that in light of the DC–8 crash in Gander, Newfoundland, they should not allow live ammunition to get on board airplanes any more".

In other words, it was the accidental explosion of such ammunition that had caused the air crash. That is what I read from that United States military document. Is that what caused the crash in question? I do not know. I say to you, Madam Speaker, that that possible theory, that evidence which is in the hands of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, does not form part of the conclusion that the Board made. It is interesting to note that in the minority report there is reference to the fact that it could have been an explosion on board that caused the crash of the plane in question.

Mr. Belsher: On what evidence?

Mr. Boudria: I thought I just read to the Hon. Member across the way a letter from the United States military. Perhaps I could provide him with a copy of it. The Member across the way asks: "On what evidence?" I could ask the very same question in regard to the majority report of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. As a matter of fact, I am not the only one who questions that evidence. On March 8, 1989, the Minister called a press conference and basically said that he supported the majority report of the Board and that he was going to implement a number of measures to fix things up. At that same press conference I said that the Minister should have questioned not only the recommendations of the report but the report itself. The Minister said that there was nothing wrong with the report, that there was no reason to question it. A few days later The Ottawa Citizen got hold of an internal report from the Minister's office which stated the same thing that I was saying and the exact opposite of what the Minister was saying.

It stated that in fact the theory of ice on the wings was questionable, if not to say not supportable at all; that there could have been a number of other things that caused the air crash; and that in the view expressed in the internal document from the Minister's office there seemed to have been a kind of bent to the report of only exploring that theory rather than other possible theories. I cannot say what caused the crash in question, nor am I an investigator, but I can read documents. I know when the Minister's own staff is questioning a report. I know when the United States military has documents, copies of which I have, which allude albeit in an indirect way to a possible other cause, that there is indeed a possibility that there were other causes for this tragic air crash.

After the document from the Minister's Department became public, what happened? The Assistant Deputy Minister in charge of the Department that was producing the document was fired, or forced to resign. Thus General Lafrance resigned his position as Assistant Deputy Minister of Transport.

The Minister called another press conference. This time with all due respect he was a little less arrogant than at the one on March 8 in which he was condemning the Opposition for asking the questions that it was asking. It was quite an exercise. The Minister was eating humble pie at the press theatre across the street. He described that he would have an investigation into the Dryden air crash and that he would commission a judge as a form of consultant in order to determine whether there should be an inquiry into the Gander crash. Now why should we have an inquiry to determine whether there should be an inquiry? I am not sure. But to that end Justice Estey was appointed. He is an eminent judge. I have no difficulty with the qualifications of the individual except that he is not a Royal Commission of Inquiry. As a matter of fact, Madam Speaker, there is no mechanism by which I know that I, as a Member of Parliament, could even give a copy of the letter that I have just read to you to Judge Estey. The families of the victims at Gander have asked to provide information, to make requests, to make a brief, to submit items to Judge Estey. It was not possible for them to do so.

I have a briefing book here, Madam Speaker, which contains several hundred pages of material on Gander. I would like at least to give a copy of it to Judge Estey, as I have to a number of Members of this House. It is not even possible for me to do that under the structure that was established by the Minister of Transport. So I say to you, Madam Speaker, there are many things more that need to be done.

Simply moving with this item at the present time, although not a bad one, is not sufficient to remove the doubts in the minds of many Canadians and Americans about that particular crash and about airline safety generally. Indeed, the very prestigious US magazine, Aviation Week Space and Technology on February 6, 1989, was asking for exactly what my colleagues and I in the Liberal Party have been asking for, which is a Royal Commission of Inquiry into the Gander air crash.

I want to conclude, Madam Speaker, by once again making this formal request to the Government across the way to institute immediately a Royal Commission of Inquiry into the most tragic event ever to have occurred on Canadian soil, the most tragic air crash which killed 256 people. I mean of course the Gander air crash of December 12, 1985.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments?

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): I wish to compliment the previous speaker on the very sensitive and eloquent manner in which he raised the important details of a very tragic accident. He noted questions that still have to be answered concerning that accident. I would like to inquire if his remarks included a concern for other transportation safety matters that a number of Members in this House have raised. One is the matter of proper inquiries into oil spills. I know that his Party has shown concern and been very vocal on this. I would point to the question of the four serious oil spills off the coast of Vancouver Island, most notably the one through December and January and the response of the Government to that. Most of the organized communities and citizens who live there are demanding that the Government implement a public inquiry into it.

I would certainly like it to know whether the Member agrees with the citizens and communities on the need for that public inquiry and possibly an expanded role for a transportation and accident investigation group on the oil spill question.

One more item that I would like to have him comment on is the oil spill in December and January which washed up on Long Beach Park. The Government was not prepared to do anything in terms of an investigation, inquiry, and recommendations, until it washed up on a national park. They are still cleaning it up. The Government has withdrawn many of its resources, but it did give a substantial contract to the Nuu-chahnulth Tribal Council for beach-walking programs and clean-up programs that are still going on. That of course extends from Sooke to the Brooks Peninsula on Vancouver Island. But they denied the Kwagwelth Tribal Council to monitor their beaches and undertake the same kind of clean-up. Clearly the issue is that the Kwagwelth people, although they depend on the food and resources that are on those beaches, do not luckily have a national park there. Unfortunately because they don't have the national park, their resources can be spoiled and coated with oil. Yet the Nachalnov people, because it did include the park, were given a substantial government contract to find that oil and clean it up so that the damage does not occur.

I wonder if the Member would be in a position to comment on the equity of that type of situation in addition to the response. In particular does he support the call for a public inquiry into protection, prevention, and the necessity for proper investigation of oil spills off the West Coast of the Island?

[Translation]

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, first of all, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question. Of course, when we are talking about toxic spills, whether they involve oil or other products, the federal Government must act when it has jurisdictional authority.

[English]

It is not good enough either, Madam Speaker, to pretend that we get an undertaking from someone in the corporate sector that in the unlikely event that there is a spill, that they will make sure to clean it up. Surely the Valdez incident would tell us that those kinds of undertakings are sometimes not worth the paper they are written on. If that particular incident has demonstrated anything to us, it is that not only must the rules be there, but that we should ensure that those who are charged with the application and the follow-up on those rules have the necessary equipment to do it.

In fact it was quite obvious after some hours that, first, the Exxon Corporation in that case did not really have much of a will to do anything in the beginning. Secondly, when they did muster the will necessary, that they in fact could not get the equipment there on time. Had they been able to get the equipment there on time much of the damage, which will be felt for years to come, could have been alleviated.

So we must ensure that there is that mechanism there, not only in principle, but in reality as well.

I want to bring a different item to the attention of the Member in the area of spills. That is the spills of toxic substances in our waters generally. In the constituency that I represent is the St. Lawrence River, and there is the proud Indian community of Aquasasne on Cornwall Island which is partially in my riding and partially in the riding of my hon. friend. Across the river on the American side, there are a GM plant and two aluminum plants. Material is seeping into the St. Lawrence River sometimes by spills, sometimes from storage right on the shore which later leaches into the river system. It does not matter. One way or the other it still has the same toxic effect. We know the PCBs are in the St. Lawrence River and exactly where they are.

We know that the amount of leaching is increasing, but no one is doing anything about it. The Aquasasne community that lives there used to produce cattle and milk. They used to live off agriculture on the island. There got to be so much fluoride poisoning that they had to cease that. Then they were living off fishing and acting as guides for tourists. Now you cannot eat the fish because it is so polluted from those contaminants that I described that were either spilled, leached or otherwise got into the St. Lawrence River. We have social problems in that same community, and we wonder as a society why it is happening. Well, if we had to have a recipe for a disaster, we could not have planned it any better.

It is a most unfortunate event there, but it was caused by that kind of negligence to which the Hon. Member has referred. It is happening in my own constituency, this time not as a result of an oil spill, but as a result of a spill of a different kind.

Mr. Walker: Madam Speaker, the House will recognize that the Hon. Member has evolved as the ranking expert on having a public review of the investigation of airline crashes, particularly the one at Gander. In light of his expertise on this, would he comment on how this Act would pertain to the investigation of that particular crash if it was in place at the time?

I understand that when a military vehicle is involved the Government wishes to shift emphasis and have the Department of Transport as the leading and co-ordinating agency. Does my colleague believe that that would strengthen or weaken the role of the Government in reviewing accidents?

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I do not know if it will make that much difference. Of course, when we are dealing with military personnel there is always a certain sensitivity on the part of the military authorities, but I do not think that is justification for having different people do the work.

In the case of Gander, the United States military became involved very quickly. As a matter of fact, the day after the accident there was a request, a copy of which I have here, by a Major General John Crosbie of the U.S. military who wanted to bulldoze the site immediately. I have a copy of that letter.

Why did we see those kinds of activities? Is it because someone wanted to ensure that the site, which was for all intents and purposes a grave, was ploughed over as soon as possible in order not to disturb the people who died there, or was it for another reason? What could have been the reason for wanting to bulldoze over the site immediately after the accident, even before all the pieces had been picked up? Thankfully, the bulldozing was refused. If it had been accepted, much of the evidence, whatever little we were able to get from the accident, would not have been found. It would have been buried.

In the case of Gander, the autopsies were all done in the United States. The bodies were taken to the United States and autopsies were done there. While I objected to that process, even I have to recognize that, effectively, there was no way in which 256 autopsies could be done at that particular location. No one in that province had that kind of capacity.

There was an arrangement between the United States authorities and Canada by which all the bodies were flown to the United States and the autopsies were done there. Strangely enough, the autopsy reports which are compulsory for the issuing of death certificates in Newfoundland have never been brought back. Surely there has to be something wrong with that.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE RAISED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38(1), to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. Brewin)—Royal Canadian Mounted Police—Bus Hijacking—Timing of Information; the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi)—Immigration—Refugee claimant applications backlog; the Hon. Member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. Gardiner)—Forestry—Federal-Provincial agreements—Administrative responsibility—Request for consideration at First Ministers' Conference).

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard (Roberval) that Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Transportation Investigation Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I only have a few comments because many of the points we sought to raise during this debate have been made by other Members. I want to re-emphasize our concern that the questions of safety are addressed properly by the Government. Our desire to debate this in detail is very much influenced by this concern. While we appreciate the anxiousness of the Government to assure Canadians that it too is concerned, we think the Government has moved too hastily with this particular legislation.

Some of the principles that are at stake here are worth reviewing to make sure that Canadians understand them. First, by switching from a single purpose agency to a multimodal agency to review investigations, the Government runs the risk of having a group of people who must respond to crises of a completely different order. While it is very convenient, I am sure the Minister took the advice of his Ministry which has its own parallel organization. The Department of Transport has a surface section, an air section and a marine section. Lo and behold, this legislation proposes a parallel organization.

Our fear is that while it may be convenient from a bureaucratic point of view, the risk one runs is setting up an organization that is too close to the original Department so that there will develop a buddy system which is contrary to the purposes of the legislation.

The second concern we have from an administrative point of view, in principle, is that there is a small number of people appointed to the board with such wide ranging responsibilities. If there are five people appointed, one of them must be the chairman. I assume one will take responsibility for air, another for surface, including pipeline and rail, and a third would take responsibility for marine, with an extra member performing various duties. It does not take much imagination to see that with a series of crises occurring in the country and an investigating time of some two or three years, which is not uncommon, the five members will not be able to pay attention to crises as they evolve. This means that people at the second tier will have to address the issue, which raises another problem of public servants investigating public servants.

I suggest the public needs reassurance that we are moving away from investigating ourselves and having others study the question. The principle of parliamentary government is to invite as many Canadians as possible to review our activities rather than doing it among ourselves.

The third principle that is not explored enough, although the Government attempted in its various ways to pretend it understood the issue, is the requirement of public investigation and public inquiry. We hope that as we review this legislation at its various stages in the House it will be improved by ensuring immediate publication of information, the holding of public inquiries under all circumstances as needed, so that the public not only feels that the Government is looking after its interests but their concerns from one region to another can be addressed.

There is the question of where this organization should be headquartered and whether it should be kept close to the Ministry of Transport or physically removed. In the past, the Government followed a pattern with the establishment of CN in Montreal, the establishment of VIA Rail in Montreal, and the establishment of Air Canada in Montreal. It took the strategy that it should separate Crown corporations and independent agencies from the Ministry of Transport. I will be interested in seeing future announcements from the Government about where this should be located so that Canadians understand the independence of the organization.

I hope the Government understands that although it has moved quickly to take the show away from its opponents in terms of the headlines, that it has left behind an awful wake. It is the responsibility and duty of the Opposition to continue to remind the Government that appearances are not everything and this legislation needs some substance.

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Madam Speaker, I wish to raise a number of concerns that have been expressed over the last couple of days of debate on this Bill. We on this side of the House are in favour of the thrust of the Bill in principle. However, it is essential that our concerns be re-emphasized for all in the House, particularly for the Minister responsible for the legislation.

The main point to be emphasized is that nothing will have changed with the appointment of this board. The investigation board itself should be totally separate from the Ministry of Transport and from the Minister in charge. If it is not, we will have exactly the same situation we have at the present time. We will have an unworkable system, the system that now exists under the Canadian Aviation Safety Board Act. In that case, people on the board cannot get along with each other. They are coming out with different recommendations based on their investigations.

An example of a problem with this Bill is that the National Energy Board is exempted from this legislation. Yet under this legislation, the National Energy Board regulates the flow of such volatile and flammable materials as gas and oil. If there is an accident with any one of those materials, it will be an accident of major proportions.

As I understand it, the National Energy Board essentially regulates itself. It makes its investigations and appoints from within itself. It appears that the board, as with so many of the other boards that have been set up by this Government and Liberal Governments of the past, does not stand alone. There is, I suggest, a substantial conflict of interest between the members of the board and the Minister in charge.

Again, the same situation will exist under this Bill. Board members will be appointed from lists of Conservative Party hacks, people who are owed favours and people who do not necessarily have any expertise other than taking flights or riding on the rails, as my hon. friend pointed out earlier.

We feel that the appointees to this board should be at arm's length from the Government. They should be people who are not at the beck and call of the Party or of the Minister. They should be people who can investigate and come up with recommendations without fear that they will lose their plum jobs on the investigating board.

It cannot be emphasized enough that we must have a board that stands alone, a board that will never be influenced by those on the other side of the House or by the Minister, a board that can come up with recommendations without fear of repercussion from the Government and without the threat of losing their jobs. I suggest that the committee ensure that there will be independence on any board that will investigate air, rail, marine or commodity pipeline accidents or incidents as stated in the Bill.

Another aspect of this Bill relates to deregulation. This is something that is near and dear to my heart, as it affects my riding of Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt. I see deregulation as being a problem for small communities that are not on the regular rail or air corridors but have spur lines or small air services. In my area, the Canadian Pacific Railway is now in the process of shutting down a line between Spences Bridge and Okanagan Falls, a line, I would suggest, that assisted in opening up the interior of the Province of British Columbia. Because of deregulation in transport and because of competitiveness, the rail company now feels there is no reason to keep the line. It has down-graded the service given to the area to the extent that industries can no longer viably use that transportation service. The final crunch was the closing down of the rail line.

There is a similar situation with small airports in the interior. In the case of Penticton, just two short years ago there was jet air service into that airport. That was changed to Dash-7 and Dash-8 service and there is now a 19-passenger aircraft coming into the area.

This feeds on itself. As the routes become less competitive and less money can be made through deregulation, fewer and fewer people want to go to these places. They want to go where the money is, so the routes are closed down. The Government, looking at these areas, feels that not enough traffic goes into them and will no longer provide the services. We then get cut-backs in air traffic control. We can no longer get flights after 7 p.m. because the Government is not willing to staff them. There are no flights in after dark because there is no air traffic control. The fire department in the area has been cut back with a resulting loss of jobs. Perhaps that means nothing to a community of one million or even 100,000, but certainly for a community of 60,000, the loss of those jobs means a lot.

Those of us from the Province of British Columbia, particularly the interior of the province, object to this whittling away of our services. The Government is whittling away services through deregulation and Government cut-backs to the airports and transportation services. This makes it more and more difficult for those of us who live in those areas to have viable industries, to continue to build population and to give jobs to our children in the future. It has wide and vast ramifications for those in small communities throughout the Okanagan region.

Madam Speaker, the thrust of the Bill before us is a good one. Something must be done, and it appears that the Government is coming part way. That is to be applauded, but improvements can be made. I implore Government Members to look at those projected improvements that will be put forward by those on the committee and to listen carefully to those on the opposition benches who know and are experienced in this area and who are willing to help the Government. I ask Government Members and the Minister not to turn their backs, to listen to what is being said and to listen to how this is affecting others. If they listen, I am sure they will find the ideas are plausible. They will find that the suggestions we have come up with are workable. They will find that we have the best interests of Canadians at heart as well.

I ask the Government to please listen so that we can help the Government ensure the safety of Canadians through this Bill, through proper appointment of the board, for all Canadians into the future.

• (1640)

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): I wish to put a question to the previous speaker who gave an informed and eloquent speech on the problems of safety created by the Conservative Government. Would the Hon. Member comment on the proposition that the Conservative Government is driving up the costs to general aviation so drastically that it is creating a major safety hazard? I would like to give a couple of examples for the Hon. Member to ruminate upon.

First, a voltage regulator used in smaller aircraft, which is made by the Ford Motor Company to put into a car, costs $14. If it is put into an airplane and bought from the Cessna dealer, it costs $140. The same applies to an alternator and many other common components. Those costs are so high that other items are neglected by owners.

The second issue I wish to address is cost-recovery programs put in place by Transport Canada. They drive up the costs enormously. At airports such as the one in Ottawa, the cost of parking an aircraft has gone very close to $1,000, which is unconscionable gouging of the operators of general aviation.

In Vancouver the necessity to instal an encoding altimeter in aircraft has been moved up to July, 1989. It should cost every aircraft owner who wants to use that airport somewhere between $500 and $1,000 to instal it, because they have determined that it is a major installation, rather than allowing it to be installed by an AME. Indeed, the process of moving that requirement up from 1990 to 1989 will cause enormous hardship to aircraft owners.

Again, the Conservative Government cost recovery is unnecessary and thoughtless regulation. In the case of the encoding altimeter, hundreds if not thousands of aircraft will be denied access to Vancouver because for those encoding altimeters there are not enough avionics shops in British Columbia to service the aircraft and instal them in the limited time available.

This type of regulation and this type of cost recovery, the failure to deal with the major problems at Vancouver, the parallel runway, enough air traffic controllers, and proper reorganization of the air space, means that the Government will deny access to an airport which is absolutely unjustified. It is going to drive up the costs enormously to the operators of smaller general aviation type aircraft. The proposal is to drive that sector out of business by cost increases and by regulation that is not required, and also deny them access to airports that, if proper resources had been expended on them, would be accessible for aircraft of all types for many years to come.

The basic concept I wish to relay to the Hon. Member today is, does he believe that these are justified, and does he believe this is not only driving people out of general aviation but also causing a major safety hazard?

Mr. Whittaker: The Hon. Member raises an interesting proposition, one that we have seen over a lengthy period of time but particularly throughout the last four years. The small business person, in this case in aviation, is forced through regulation to add increases in costs. I would suggest the subsequent cut-back in similar areas that we have seen in the United States with deregulation, and increases in costs, means a subsequent drop in service and maintenance of airlines. We see the airlines attempting to make do with the bail wire mentality of keeping aircraft up in the air at all costs, the idea being that in order to make a living, one must continue to keep flying regardless of the safety factor. With deregulation there is a tendency to cut back on many of these things. The Government adds to this problem through its attitude toward safety in that there are not sufficient safety inspectors or adequate numbers of air traffic controllers. The Hon. Member raised an interesting point about the parallel runway in Vancouver.

Recently I sat in an airport waiting room and timed how often planes were landing on one of the runways. They were landing approximately once every 1.32 minutes. I kept timing them for approximately one and a half hours. That was on one runway on one approach. Those planes were large. To my mind, it is obvious that in airports such as Vancouver there must be a large parallel runway with the addition of extra air traffic controllers. I would suggest that there have to be more air traffic controllers not only for Vancouver, but also for the inner harbour in Vancouver and in Victoria where there has been an increase in air traffic over the last little while.

If the Government were serious about safety in the area of air traffic, money would be available, cut-backs would not have been made when they were made, and there would be additional money available for schooling to ensure a supply of sufficient air traffic controllers, not only in places such as Pearson International Airport but throughout all the airports in Canada, particularly in the Vancouver area.

Ms. Hunter: I would like to turn to a different aspect of the Bill regarding identifying safety deficiencies and making recommendations to reduce such deficiencies.

The proposed Transportation Accident Investigation Board is mandated to do such investigation. In relation to the oil spills and the unresponsiveness on the part of the Government to our requests for a public inquiry, I believe that the board, which does not assign blame but which shall make recommendations, is what we are trying to get across to the Government. We are not so concerned about assigning blame. We want to know how we can prevent such accidents as the ones that occurred on the west coast of Vancouver Island and in Valdez from occurring again.

My riding of Saanich—Gulf Islands will be affected in a myriad of ways. From initiatives taken by Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line in Vancouver there will be an increase in tanker traffic through the Gulf of Georgia which washes up on the Gulf Islands. If this public inquiry is not called, and does not make recommendations about the safe transportation of goods, then it is likely that such increased tanker traffic will ultimately lead to another oil spill that will wreck the lives of my constituents and the economy of my constituency.

I call on the Government to consider the double hulling of tankers, to call a moratorium on offshore drilling and to pour money into financing research in tracking oil spills effectively.

On numerous occasions we have called for a public inquiry. In my riding which is between Vancouver and the State of Washington, there is a refinery at Cherry Point that has regular tanker traffic. This Transportation Accident Investigation Board would certainly be a neutral, non-threatening vehicle for the Government to utilize to conduct that public inquiry.

I ask the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt (Mr. Whittaker) if he would address his comments to this aspect of the Bill.

• (1650)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There is very little time left but I will give time for rebuttal to the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt (Mr. Whittaker).

Mr. Whittaker: Thank you, Madam Speaker. This is the area of the Bill dealing with marine transport. I see the way the Bill is set out and the way that the Board is structured as a problem for such investigations as requested by the Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands (Ms. Hunter).

I refer back to earlier comments that what we need is a structure set up within this Bill for an independent board that can make proper investigations without having it stalled or short-shifted by simply saying the legislation is not available, we have our board in place. In the case of marine traffic, with oil spills such as we have seen over the last little while on the west coast of Vancouver Island and on the West Coast of Canada, there should be the ability to appoint a public board of inquiry that, regardless of political affiliation, can properly bring recommendations back to Parliament after having looked at everything within.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Rideout).

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think that we on this side of the House are agreeable that an independent board to investigate transportation accidents and incidents is welcomed. I am most concerned, and I think my colleagues are concerned as well, that when you look at the definition of a transportation occurrence and you consider the magnitude that that definition strikes, one has to become somewhat concerned that a board consisting of five members will not have the capabilities to deal with the many incidents they will have to investigate. It is not just a matter of air investigations, but rail, oil spills, all of those sorts of things are going to have to be investigated. We are concerned on this side of the House that this board will not be able to do that. We think that the thrust is in the right direction. But we are concerned about the speed or the urgency which the Government seems to be attaching to this particular matter.

We feel that, fortunately for Members opposite, they are picking up the direction that the Liberal Government gave many years ago and are now seeing the way and the light and are moving in a positive and proper direction in that sense. However, we are worried that as they proceed in haste, they may be making mistakes.

We view the effects of things like deregulation and the ramifications that deregulation has on the transportation infrastructure as being one of paramount concern. We are concerned on this side of the House that when the pressure comes on the infrastructure, safety will be sacrificed on the altar of expediency.

I should tell you that in my experience as a municipal politician I have seen what can happen when deteriorating infrastructure strikes communities across this country. I speak with some experience in knowing terrible road conditions, terrible water and sewer conditions that strike municipalities all across this country. I could think of a classic case in Saint John, New Brunswick, where they had half the city without water for over a day. Those situations strike at the safety of citizens and I am concerned that with deregulation and the pressure that is obviously impacting on the transportation infrastructure, we may face and are now facing the same types of concern for safety.

We see a great deal of confusion and charges and countercharges amongst the present board. Our view is that a strong and independent board is absolutely essential if it is to function properly. Given the increased mandate of this board, we are very concerned that it will not be able to carry out the mandate which it has been assigned.

As mentioned earlier by a number of speakers, we are very concerned about the urgency in which the Government is now presenting this legislation. It is coming very quickly. While we agree it is important that there be some sort of improvement in what is going on, when you look at the Estey review of the Gander incident, the Dryden crash, just to name a few, we wonder why we are now proceeding with haste. The haste should have perhaps occurred a year or more ago.

Quite frankly, we wonder whether the Government is simply papering over the old board, just putting it aside by creating this new board, and not dealing with the inherent problems that were obvious with the old board. If that is the case, those problems will not disappear. They will still be there, only to arise again. I think there were inherent problems in the old board, just changing the faces does not necessarily help the problem. In fact, one may wonder if the Government is not just putting a clean sock on a dirty foot.

We have not solved any of the problems at Pearson International. We have not solved any of the problems all across this country as far as air traffic is concerned. We also have a public that is both inconvenienced and worried about its safety. I do not think we are getting into the nub and substance of the issues that face us.

In New Brunswick, we are concerned that budget cuts will affect a number of transportation industries. I am thinking particularly of budget cuts that the Government is talking about with respect to VIA Rail. If massive cuts take place, and we have all heard the rumours of a $160 million or a $180 million as far as VIA is concerned, we wonder if that will affect the safety of the VIA operation. We are very concerned that again safety will be sacrificed on the altar of the bottom line, for what we consider in New Brunswick as a vital transportation link all across this country. We feel that VIA Rail should be strengthened, that more money should be invested in that operation, and that improvements should be made with respect to the outmoded equipment that is presently being utilized by VIA. If that were done, we feel we would not face the necessity of investigation upon investigation of rail crashes and accidents, and the risk to people who travel with VIA. We are also concerned when we hear that there are to be cut-backs in grants and support to provinces.

For example, the freight rate subsidy is one question to which we could not get a clear answer from the Minister today in Question Period. If those subsidies are cut, if that support mechanism is in fact removed or lessened, that will have a very serious impact on the Canadian National Railway, a very large employer in my riding. We are concerned again that if CN is cut back and they do not have the revenue and the support mechanisms in place, they as well will be forced not to be as safety conscious and the board that we are discussing in Bill C-2 will have to be investigating more and more accidents.

We are concerned as well when the Government will not come forward and provide the necessary assistance to a province like New Brunswick, a province with the worst Trans-Canada Highway in Canada. That again is an example where if you allow the infrastructure to deteriorate and go to pieces, like our Trans-Canada Highway has, very unsafe conditions will result. We have frequent accidents on our Trans-Canada Highway, and most of them have been attributed by experts to be caused by the lack of upgrading and proper Trans-Canada facilities in our province. If there are cuts in the directions that have been clearly indicated by the Government, then this board is going to be investigating more and more safety-associated accidents.

We are going to have more rail accidents. We are going to have more passenger train accidents. We are going to have more air accidents, all because in our view there are greater pressures being put on air infrastructure, on road infrastructure, and on rail infrastructure. We applaud the general direction of this Bill. We are supportive in that regard. However, we are concerned that the Government is going too quickly and that it has not thought through exactly what should take place. We urge the Government to ensure that there is a strong board made up of strong independent members and that there are the resources necessary made available to this Board so that it can do the job and do it properly.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Madam Speaker, will the Hon. Member confirm that his major concern is that the Government is creating an accident investigation Board today while at the same time, because of a number of the Government's failures, it is creating an enormous safety hazard.

The Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Rideout) mentioned that budget cuts and Public Service cuts were two major concerns. He said that the same is true for an ill-conceived cost recovery program and that the enormous cost of aviation is removing the ability of many people to afford upgrading safety systems while paying higher parking rates and more for radio licences.

The Government has taken action by increasing taxes on aviation fuel. This has moved the price out of reach, as well as the supplies. Yet at the same time the Government has failed to permit wider use of motor fuels in aircraft. I am certainly not aware of any Saskatchewan farmer who has crashed his airplane because he has been using his tractor gas.

In the House we see two west coast Members of Parliament. I refer to the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) and the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock (Mr. Friesen) laughing and joking about the matter. The serious matter they have not commented on is the improvement to Vancouver airport. I refer to the second runway. The Government has been absolutely silent on the matter and is creating an enormous safety hazard in the area. At the same time those two Members voted, along with other members of the Government, to freeze hiring of air traffic controllers for three years, something which has created a desperate shortage and which has placed the travelling public from the ridings of Surrey—White Rock and Fraser Valley East in a serious safety situation.

Would the Hon. Member not agree that these Hon. Members have not had the fortitude to stand up in the House to justify their actions on the issue of a second runway for this airport, or on the need for effective hiring of air traffic controllers? They have not commented on the brutal cost recovery program that is harming safety and killing general aviation in the long run. I would like to see them stand up to make a comment in the House rather than pass their leisure time in here telling funny stories and whatnot. This is a sad and serious situation. I hope the Hon. Member will comment on it. I know that he is as concerned as I am and that he would like to hear their approach to a solution.

Mr. Rideout: Madam Speaker, I was most intrigued with the second question asked by the Hon. Member. I will leave it for Members opposite to comment on since the Hon. Member is calling upon them to justify their irresponsible actions. I would rather not go any further on that.

I welcome the question as it relates to cut-backs, increased taxation, and all those measures which have the effect of making every company so bottom line conscious that things like safety start to slip through the cracks. That is my concern. I have seen it happen in municipalities. I know from where I speak in that regard. Safety is a soft cost. It is something which is looked at second. As VIA, Air Canada and all those organizations are looking at how to make their bottom line look better, and when Air Canada is privatized and wants to make its stock look a lot better, I am concerned that we will see safety sacrificed on the altar of bottom line.

The result will be that this Board will have a lot more work to do. I think that it will be investigating a great many more accidents. I fully support the Hon. Member to my left in his comments in that regard.

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Rideout). Since he comes from the East Coast he is probably aware of some of the problems with which we are concerned on the West Coast. In particular I am talking now about the Port of Vancouver, part of which falls in the riding of Vancouver East.

As I understand it the Board is to have appointees who represent the different modes of transportation, although only one from each mode. Does the Hon. Member think that in the situation such as we have in Vancouver East it will be possible for such a Board to plan effectively, having four jurisdictions and three or four different modes of transportation?

Will it be able to deal not only with major crises which may arise, but will it be able to prevent them, something which is even more important? The situation in Vancouver East is that there is a transfer point for dangerous goods in the riding. The dangerous goods come in on rail tracks which are in the heart of Vancouver East, one of the most highly populated areas in downtown Vancouver near Chinatown. The goods are transferred from there to ships and barges. They are also transported by air. There is a great danger of accident. There have been some dangerous goods spilled on the railway tracks in the past. There are some very risky situations. Furthermore, the Vancouver City Council has taken away our fire boat, which is a means of fire protection from the water. That is another issue on which I wish the federal Government would intervene and do something about.

With increased transport and the exchange between helicopters and float planes which my friend tells me are coming in, in increasing numbers, there is a great increase in the risk of accident. I honestly do not feel confident nor do my constituents feel confident that this Bill and the proposed Board is going to be strong enough to deal with all the different complex modes of transportation. Also involved in the situation is the City of Vancouver, the Regional District of Greater Vancouver, as well as provincial and federal jurisdictions. I would appreciate the Hon. Member's comment since he probably has similar concerns coming from the East Coast.

Mr. Rideout: Madam Speaker, I share the concerns mentioned by the Hon. Member. When one considers the Department of Transport and the wide number of items with which it deals, one wonders whether one committee dealing with safety in all of those aspects can really do the job. One also wonders whether a five-member Board can really do the job. We on the East Coast are just as concerned.

I recall hearing stories about PCBs being shipped over in the holds of Air Canada planes. There is the potential for all types of disasters to arise as a result of that, which cause citizens in the East Coast concern as well. We have similar type situations with both truck and rail traffic in shipping from the Ports of Halifax and Saint John. There are dangerous commodities involved. There are problems which could ensue. As I have indicated, we are concerned with the cut-backs and with the lack of support to the regional areas of the country that safety will become a greater problem. We do not have confidence in the Government that it will be able either to have an independent board or to deliver on its supposed promise concerning safety.

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Madam Speaker, I had originally not intended to take part in this debate. I thought rather that I would leave it up to others in our caucus who have more expertise and experience in the area of transportation safety. There is no question that the debate has been handled competently by my colleagues. It was only when the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. Brewin) and some other Members raised parts of the Bill relating to the power of the chairman of the Board to involve himself in a public inquiry if the Minister fails to do so under the Inquiries Act that I decided to participate.

When it was drawn to my attention by the Hon. Member for Victoria that the Bill also applies to marine incidents I felt compelled to address a number of issues around those parts of the Bill which I think are important.

• (1710)

We on this side of the House whose constituencies have been affected by the recent west Coast oil spills have had difficulty in persuading the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) and other cabinet Ministers involved to strike a public inquiry into all aspects of the west coast oil spill that took place between December 1988 and January 1989. A public inquiry is desperately needed into a shipping incident off the West Coast which resulted in a tremendous amount of environmental damage, a tremendous amount of damage to my constituents in the fishing and aquaculture industry and in the tourist industry which will be affected by this spill both now and for some time to come.

This section of Bill C–2 gives us an additional opportunity where the Minister appears reluctant to strike an inquiry under the Inquiries Act to have the chairman of this safety Board take a look at the possibility of striking a public inquiry so that there can be full public involvement into accidents and damage which result from marine incidents.

I do not know why the Minister of the Environment feels so reluctant or so fearful of calling a public inquiry into the west coast oil spill. He knows, as most people on the West Coast and most people in this House know, that an in–house ministerial review is not sufficient to determine what the problems were with respect to the oil spill and what the causes were with respect to the caused the marine incident which ultimately resulted in oil spilling on to the oceans, crossing international boundaries, affecting Canadian waters and affecting the shores of Vancouver Island.

It is insufficient to have an internal ministerial inquiry to try to deal with all the causes of that problem and to deal with the adequacy of the response. What we have there is a case of the Ministry examining its own reaction to the oil spill. Needless to say there is concern on the part of the people of the West Coast of Vancouver Island that this is going to result in a cover–up, that adequate measures are not going to be taken, and that fault is not going to be placed where fault should be placed. Therefore we will not be able to react adequately to an oil spill in the future or to improve our reaction to such a spill in the future.

I welcome this provision in Bill C–2 to allow the chairman of the Board to strike an inquiry where he feels it is necessary and where the Minister has neglected to call an inquiry under the Inquiries Act. When I looked at the advantages of a public inquiry in this case, I cannot understand why the Minister of the Environment is so fearful of calling an inquiry. It simply does not make sense. We have the advantage of the volunteers who were the very first people on site when the oil came ashore on the west coast of Vancouver Island. They are not part of the current ministerial review, yet they have a great deal to say in a very informed way that would be helpful to the Ministry, to the Minister of the Environment and to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) in their response to oil spills in the future. Those volunteers are excluded from the ministerial review, but they should be part of a full public inquiry into the incident which resulted in our West Coast being fouled by oil between December 1988 and January 1989. I cannot understand what the Minister has to fear from a full public inquiry into this incident.

First, he is ignoring the valuable input of those volunteers who did a great deal of work for which they should be congratulated. They were the first on the scene and were able to alleviate some of the problems which may have resulted had they not become involved in the clean-up right away when it was first coming on to the beaches.

The second advantage of a public inquiry is that we can hear from people who are experts in the development of oil spill response equipment. In my constituency offices on the West Coast, I have received a number of suggestions from inventors and entrepreneurs who have developed oil spill response equipment. Had the Government paid attention to these people prior to the last oil spill, they may have had the resources and the wherewithal to deal effectively and to prevent damage of the magnitude that eventually occurred because of the inadequate response of the various federal agencies that took place on the West Coast.

There has been an excellent proposal from a gentleman in my constituency by the name of Mr. Bedford who has developed a method of locating chip barges and hog fuel barges along the West coast of Vancouver Island. Those resources are there already. Chips and hog fuel can absorb a great deal of the lighter elements in the oil so that it can be captured, collected and burned before it creates a problem on our beaches. Yet Mr. Bedford does not get a hearing from the provincial Government or from the federal Government. In the absence of a full public inquiry, Mr. Bedford does not have an opportunity to present his proposal to the people who are concerned about oil spills, to the people in the Ministry of Transport or in this Board who might take a look at the proposal and discover it would be valuable to locate on the West Coast to prevent any further damage of the magnitude that took place as a result of the last oil spill.

Another gentleman who my colleague from North Island—Powell River mentioned in the emergency debate is a Mr. Wiley. He has developed a method for cleaning up oil spills in tidal waters offshore of the west coast of Vancouver Island. Again Mr. Wiley has not had an opportunity to present his proposals for oil spill clean-ups to a public body so that he can be cross-examined and suggestions can be made, suggestions for improvements to these techniques, and ultimately suggestions for the deployment of this equipment in various centres up and down the west coast of Vancouver Island so that these pieces of equipment will be there in the very likely event that another spill will take place, because as the experts have pointed out to us, it is only a matter of chance. As was mentioned by another of my colleagues, as we allow these tankers with vast quantities of oil to run up and down the coast from Valdez, Alaska into Cherry Point within a very few miles of the West Coast of Canada, which is a very delicate and sensitive coastal environment, there is bound to be another disaster, and in fact another disaster of major proportions, similar to what we are seeing in Valdez, Alaska within the last week or so.

We do not need simply to place the blame. Surely fault has to be placed because the response time of federal government agencies to the oil spill was inadequate and the quality of response was inadequate as well. We want to see where we went wrong and what we can do in the future to ensure that we do not go wrong the next time, and we know that the next spill is going to bring us much more serious damage, much more serious problems than the last oil spill brought to the west coast of Vancouver Island.

There are many advantages of a public inquiry that will bring benefits to all of the people living on the West Coast. It will make us better able to deal with oil spills or marine incidents the next time. I think that such a provision in this legislation is absolutely necessary. The chairman should be as independent as possible so that when the Minister is fearful of calling for a public inquiry because he does not want blame to descend on his Ministry, he will be sufficiently independent that he can call a public inquiry and the full facts of the marine incident which resulted in the oil spillage will be brought to the attention of the public. Also the full details of how to respond to a spill and how to correct a previous response will be brought forward so that we will be better able to deal with an oil spill next time.

I share the concerns that have been expressed previously by my colleagues. I strongly support the idea of a public inquiry process being inserted in the legislation. If the legislation is passed quickly, I hope we can overcome the unnecessary delay that has been developed by the Minister of the Environment over this oil spill issue. The delay has been damaging in itself. We should be getting to these issues right away, while they are still fresh in people's mind, while they are still able to make a contribution to a public inquiry.

I hope this portion of the legislation is passed quickly so that we can have a board in place which will strike an inquiry into that oil spill which took place off the west coast of Vancouver Island. At least then we can have an independent inquiry which we are all desperately seeking.

Mr. Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Madam Speaker, I have three short questions. The first concerns the matter of very serious importance. The Hon. Member for Comox—Alberni (Mr. Skelly) represents in this Parliament the people of the Nuu-chahnulth Tribal Council. They are currently working on a government contract under which they are becoming familiar with the beach areas. It is a voluntary organization for clean up. That contract is an important part of having a group of people available for the next oil spill.

The Government has denied the Kwagwelth people, who have oil washing upon the shores of their complex beaches, the same type of contract to clean up the oil and develop the expertise to clean up the resources. I want the Member to comment on that. It is absolutely necessary that the Government treat equally the native people on the West Coast who are exposed to these hazards.

Richard Lucas, a person from the Hon. Member's riding, is here in Ottawa. He co-ordinated the Nuu-chahnulth Tribal Council clean-up contract. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has refused to see him. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) has refused to see him. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) have refused to see him.

However, to compliment the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp), he has made provisions to have discussions with this person who has first-hand knowledge. I suggest to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Comox—Alberni who has also heard the complaints, that the only way the Government will listen to the people from the West Coast of British Columbia is if, per chance, the next oil spill happens to circumnavigate the globe, wash up the St. Lawrence River and on to the shores of Charlevoix. That is the only way we will get a fair hearing on the next oil spill. That comment is being made by people up and down the coast of British Columbia.

People who come here as a delegation must be given a hearing by those responsible for launching a public inquiry and allocating the resources for the proper protection of the people in British Columbia. Will the Hon. Member for Comox—Alberni not agree?

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Madam Speaker, given the nature of the question and the questioner, the question is in such terms that it would be very difficult not to agree. However, this is another of the problems that faced us during the development of this oil spill and the understanding that damage was taking place off the west coast of Vancouver Island. Once we found that the oil was coming ashore it was very difficult to establish contacts with the Ministers involved. We tried to phone the Ministers and we tried to contact them at their constituency offices, in one case, in Vancouver. It was very difficult to make contact with the Ministers involved.

When a disaster like this takes place, I think it is very important that the first contact that is made is between the Ministers who have jurisdiction over the clean-up and the issue, who should then get in touch with Members of Parliament in the area, members of the local Government in the area and make sure the information they have is made available to the people in the area and that the issue is treated on a non-partisan basis.

I think the agreement between the Nuu-chahnulth Tribal Council and the federal Government to monitor the beaches is an excellent one. I think it is based on some very good precedents. For example, there are archaeological observers or wardens who monitor the archaeological sites up and down the coasts. There are environmental wardens and fisheries wardens in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans who, as volunteers, basically monitor what is happening in the fishing industry and are able to report back to the paid staff in the Ministry so that they can be kept informed because they cannot always be in every part of the province or coast at once.

To have people from the Nuu-chahnulth Tribal Council hired virtually as coast watchers to make sure that damage is not taking place which the Ministry is not aware of is a good idea. It does not make any sense at all for the Government not to hire the Kwagwelth on the same basis that it hired the Nuu-chahnulth Tribal Council whose land occupies the southern part of Vancouver Island below the Brooks Peninsula. The Minister has left the northern part of Vancouver Island virtually uncovered when there should be a similar force monitoring that area.

I cannot for the life of me understand why the Minister does not treat the Kwagwelth Indians as fairly as he has treated the Nuu-chahnulth Tribal Council.

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to debate this legislation, in all likelihood being the last Member to speak at this stage of the Bill. I must admit that I will stray somewhat from the topic, as I did this morning in my questioning, because I am not an expert on the CASB. However, I feel somewhat knowledgeable about the status of deregulation.

I suggest that the Government was ill prepared for deregulation, and myriad newspaper clippings indicate that it was indeed ill prepared. Let me just cite one of the hundreds of clippings: "Ex Pilot Claims Some U.S. Airlines Prefer Profit to Safety". I suggest that is coming true in Canada as well.

I believe the Government is as ill prepared for deregulation as it was ill prepared for the Free Trade Agreement. It is most unfortunate that the skies will not be any safer today than they were yesterday, nor will they be any safer tomorrow as a result of this new multimodal investigation agency. That is what is unfortunate about all of this.

Our Party welcomes the Bill in principle, but that is not the crux of the problem. The Bill does not solve the crux of the problem, which is deregulation. Deregulation has not lived up to some of the billings of the Government despite the warnings given by everyone else.

Cost cutting is the bottom line. I refer once again to northern communities that have suffered the loss of jet service. There is no competition in the northern communities. We have been subject to fare increases which, as I indicated this morning, have risen four times in four months in my constituency. It costs almost $500 now to fly return 450 miles from Sault Ste. Marie to Ottawa. It is cheaper for me to fly from Toronto to Vancouver. It is almost cheaper for me to fly to Europe than to go from Sault Ste. Marie to Ottawa. I think that is a shame.

Safety is decreasing at an alarming rate each day. The Radar Modernization Program, of which the Government is extremely proud I am told, is already outdated. I have it from good sources that it is not compatible with the American system and the Canadian radar cannot track some American airplanes flying over northern communities. There are some 6,000 flights daily over my community and certainly that causes us great concern.

Certain airports in northern communities have been reclassified from category 6 to category 5, with no appreciable difference in the aircraft, resulting in five or six people losing fire-fighting jobs. The Dryden tragedy is an example of the safety concern. A stewardess who perished on that aircraft suggested to her husband that she was prepared to quit in the very near future if things did not change. Less competition has resulted in a loss of 14 employees in my constituency in the past several months. Employees of Canadian partners will soon be out of work. Air Canada shut down a ticket office. One might say that this only affected two employees, so what, they can move to Toronto. I am reminded of the U.I. program. I suppose people from northern Ontario and other regions of Canada can move to Toronto get jobs. People who have worked for 15 or 19 years for Air Canada do not want to move to Toronto. They want to remain in their communities.

We will accept the new legislation after it is further discussed because we know the board will be a busy body. It will probably be too busy. It is our desperate hope that it will not be busy.

Daily we read horror stories in newspapers across Canada. Just a couple of weeks ago, our local paper had an article saying that passengers had described the Convair as ready for the bone yard and rickety, and Mr. McKnight, who just recently resigned from his Air Ontario post, said that these planes were built in the late 1950s and they have a high level of vibration. That is of grave concern to everyone in northern Canada.

We suggest that the airways are no safer today. We are concerned about ground safety as well. I am not sure that the investigation board should not look into the Minister's Department to see about its status.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there questions or comments? Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Considering the lateness of the hour and the fact that we have now completed this debate, I think that if you put the question to the House, the House would agree to call it six o'clock and proceed with new legislation tomorrow morning.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the suggestion made by the Parliamentary Secretary. Is there such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Then it is six o'clock.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When we do these things unanimously, we sometimes forget the consequences, the consequence of this being that there are Members of the House who have an adjournment debate at six o'clock. Perhaps we could stand the House for a few minutes to give those Members, who I am sure are watching television, a chance to get here and speak on the adjournment debate.

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like Hon. Members to know that the two people from our side are here and are prepared to speak if that is the desire of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are the Parliamentary Secretaries on the Government side present?

Mr.Cooper: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I would be prepared to change the order, should the Hon. Member who is not here not be present when his name is called.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—BUS HIJACKING—TIMING OF INFORMATION

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Madam Speaker, on April 10, I raised the issue of the bus hostage-taking which had occurred the previous Friday. To put it succinctly, I asked the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) how they managed to lose the bus for two hours. The Minister, in effect, answered that he did not know, he would ask the Commissioner of the RCMP to find out.

The facts that have emerged, such as we can tell at this stage, suggest a high level of confusion among a number of police forces. According to the reports, the Ports Canada police learned about the hostage taking from a passenger on the bus itself at around 11.45 that morning, and it was at about 1.45 p.m. that the bus showed up on Parliament Hill and reported its presence. The RCMP here in Ottawa had apparently not even heard of the incident. They moved quickly along with the security staff on the Hill. As we know, the incident was from that time on effectively handled. However, there were two missing hours about which questions have arisen, and I certainly accept the assurance of the Minister that a thorough internal investigation will be undertaken. I will look forward, as will all Hon. Members, to hearing from the Minister the results of that inquiry. I would look to the Parliamentary Secretary to assure us that the report will be presented to the House and made public in due course.

By the way, I am not sure whether or not this is the first opportunity we have given the new Parliamentary Secretary to strut his stuff. I certainly congratulate him on his appointment and look forward with some trepidation to working with him. The trepidation is based not on his charming personality but on the fact that he holds views, at least as previously expressed, with which I have often found myself in profound disagreement. We will sort all that out, I hope, in the next few years.

Underlying the question of what happened from the time Ports Canada police found out about this is the issue of co-ordination between the various police forces. Ports Canada police is one of 46 federal agencies empowered by legislation to have police powers and to act as a police force.

A few years ago, the Secretariat of the Solicitor General General undertook a study, the Federal Law Enforcement Under Review, or FLEUR for short. It reported in 1986, though the report was initially never made public. It reported that there was absolute chaos within these various federal agencies. There was poor management or no management at all. There was no consistency of rules over, for example, who could carry guns, under what circumstances could they use guns, what they would report and how they would handle various incidents. All of the various agencies seemed to be operating on their own.

The report finally surfaced, partly due to badgering by journalists from The Globe and Mail and other newspapers under access to information legislation. We now understand that a committee of Deputy Ministers has been established and the Deputy Solicitor General will take some responsibility for chairing it. Ultimately, there will be some effort at co-ordination.

I say to the Parliamentary Secretary and to the Solicitor General through him that we will watch that committee very carefully. It will be very important that some very real resources be given to that committee, that it is not just a pro forma exercise done simply for window dressing. This is a very, very important issue.

At the federal level, there must be tremendous consistency in dealing with the issues of co-ordinating our law enforcement agencies across Canada. We on the West Coast, as the Parliamentary Secretary will recognize, know of problems we have had with wildlife officials in their attempts to enforce the law or to harass fishermen, depending on one's point of view. They have been agitating to carry guns. Under what circumstances do they do that? Who is in charge of all of this? The FLEUR report indicated that no one was. It is critical that there be quick and immediate provision of serious resources by the federal Government to implementing recommendations of the FLEUR report and carrying it through. That cannot wait. We will also ask and press for consistent and regular reports to the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. That should be done and I look to the Parliamentary Secretary to give us an undertaking that that will be done and that we will hear regularly and consistently on the progress of the Deputy Minister's consideration.

Let me mention another report that is relevant. I refer to the Senate report of a couple of years ago. After the assassination in the Armenian-Turkish issue the Senate made a report and I have seen a copy of it. One of the recommendations of that report, which is a couple of years old, is that the Solicitor General's Department be responsible for co-ordinating response to hostage-taking issues. That was a very clear and specific recommendation.

I put the following question to the Parliamentary Secretary. Was that recommendation implemented? Did the new Solicitor General (Mr. Blais), when he took office in February, understand that report? Did he take any steps to implement the report? If he has not, why not? Will he?

These are issues which should be undertaken and commitments made now that the Government will no longer allow hostage-takings and the chaos in federal law enforcement to continue, and that today we will get a commitment from the Government that this issue will be taken seriously by the new administration of the Department of the Solicitor General and that we will get action now.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): I welcome the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. Brewin) as the critic for the Solicitor General and thank him for his guarded compliments. I know that any time he throws a compliment my way something is brewing! We will follow that in the future.

Mr. Wappel: Bad pun!

Mr. Friesen: I agree with the Hon. Member that the law enforcement agencies that worked on the case here in Ottawa deserve all the compliments we can throw in their direction. The RCMP and the Ottawa police forces work together very well. We are thankful that nothing untoward happened beyond what did happen.

I am sorry that the Member raised the question at the adjournment debate today. He asks a very legitimate question regarding the co-ordination of these law enforcement agencies. The newspaper reports indicated that there was a problem with co-ordination between the time when the hostage-taking first began and when it ended here in Ottawa. The public itself is concerned about that lack of contact or lapse of contact from the beginning to the end.

The Hon. Member mentions the FLEUR Report. As he indicated, there were more than 40 different Government agencies involved in it. As I stated, I am sorry the Hon. Member raised this issue so soon after the event, because it is a serious question and deserves a full answer. However, if the Hon. Member wants a full answer, it is not adequate or fair to raise it one week after the question was raised in the House. We can possibly provide a partial answer, but if the Hon. Member wants an adequate answer, then surely he has to give FLEUR an opportunity to do the investigation that will provide us the answer the Hon. Member is seeking, which is some type of assurance that there will be lessons learned as a result of this and that there will be an adequate reporting made of it.

I am not blaming the Hon. Member for this, because it is early in the session. However, I am saying to him that one week is not very much time when we are looking at a cross-section of agencies involved in this activity.

I take his point very seriously. It is important that the Canadian people have an assurance that this type of reporting and integration will take place. When the agencies work together as an out-growth of the FLEUR Report, it is important that there will be a reporting of it. I give the Member the assurance that I will be happy to work with him to ensure that those agencies work together in a co-ordinated way in order that the people of Canada will have confidence in the integration of all of these agencies.

IMMIGRATION-REFUGEE CLAIMANT APPLICATIONS BACKLOG

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Madam Speaker, I am grateful to have this opportunity during the adjournment debate to pursue a question that I posed to the Government, namely, the Minister for Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) on April 11. The question was in regard to the refugee backlog that has been completely mismanaged and ignored in terms of any agenda of priority that the Government may have had for the last session and also for this session.

It is useful to keep in mind that when the Government took office in 1984 there was a backlog accumulating in the number of 8,000 to 10,000 individuals. At that time the Liberal Government commissioned Rabbi Plaut to come up with recommendations to change the system to prevent the backlog from mushrooming.

As we debate this evening, the backlog numbers approximately 110,000 individuals in this country. It is an absolute shame that the Government has allowed that backlog to reach those numbers.

Last December 28 the Government added insult to injury when the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced programs or an initiative to speedily clear up the backlog. A few weeks ago, on March 31, the Government called a press conference and indicated that no processing on that backlog had started. For three months there was absolutely nothing done to ease the pressure of that human backlog that is festering. On top of that, the Government has suggested that the processing will not start until this summer at the very earliest.

Canadians, myself and my colleagues on this side of the House, are beginning to ask if the Minister will come in the summer and tell us that the processing will start at Christmas, or in the following year? I believe it is time the Government commenced its easing of the backlog. It is a sore point, not only in terms of the credibility of our system, but it is also very unfair to 110,000 individuals, some of whom have been in the country for two and three years and separated from their families and who simply want to know what the future holds for them. If they are to be accepted, then that is one set of equations. If they are not to be accepted, then obviously they will be deported and have to pick up their life from that point in time.

It does not behoove the Government to continually blame the Opposition, the constituency, the churches, or the social service agencies when the problem is staring at Government Members in the reflection of that giant mirror.

Time and again we have suggested to the Government that it attempt an administrative review, something which has been turned down, and to become sensitive and interested in the backlog that has not become better, but has become worse. In terms of undermining confidence in the system, it does us a disservice.

I urge the Parliamentary Secretary who will be responding for the Minister to come to grips with this problem. It is not good enough to simply say: "We are thinking about it. We are putting it into motion. It is going to take us some time for the administration of the exercise to take shape." We have not been articulating this problem and frustration for the last week, the last month, or for two months. It has been an ongoing situation for the better part of close to three years.

Madam Speaker, I think it is a tragic situation for the majority of these claimants who come from Quebec and Ontario. It is a tragedy for their families. It is a tragedy for our refugee system. It is a tragedy for our country because it is unable to give these people an answer, a future. While the Government is saying that we need more people and more immigration, it does nothing about this backlog, and it has taken a very negative stance toward new claimants.

With my party colleagues, I think we have a human backlog, a backlog of refugee claimants in this country who are waiting for this Government to act realistically and sensitively.

That is why we kept hammering away at this issue during the election campaign last year. We also put the pressure on in committee and in the House during oral question period, in the hope that the situation would improve.

Today, we are not getting any answers from the Government that would be satisfactory to the people who are part of this backlog.

I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary's reply will be able to give these people some glimmer of hope, some confidence in our system. I hope we will get that kind of response today.

[English]

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Madam Speaker, when this Member decides what side of the street he wants to work on, I hope he lets the people of Canada know.

A year and a half ago when we were debating Bills C-84 and C-55, this Member, together with his colleagues, did everything they could to block the Bill while so-called refugees were streaming into Canada at a rate of 2,000 a month. Yes, 2,000 a month, and the Member made sure, with his colleagues, that while we passed the legislation in this House in September, it did not pass through the Senate until the following June. Now he wants to know why is the Government not doing something about the backlog that he helped create. So will he tell us which side of the street he is working on? He had better make up his mind.

I am glad that not all the people in Canada think as he does. I want to refer the Member to The Globe and Mail of yesterday, to Jeffrey Simpson's column, in which he says:

> The four Toronto lawyers who are always yakking about Canada's immigration policies—Lorne Waldman, Mendel Green, Barbara Jackman and Marshall Drukarsh—find the backlog clearance program "impractical, improper and inhumane". They consider it immoral that Canada might deport thousands of people who, in the lawyers' words, will not "meet the credible basis test for a refugee claim on the humanitarian and compassionate guidelines".

There is no doubt that we could hurry the process up. But if we failed on one point, this Member would be screaming his head off that we were violating somebody's human rights. He would be the first on his feet to say that we were not doing our job. So we will make this system work, and it is working. He should know that the flow of bogus claims has gone down. It is working. In the meantime, the process is established, the applications are being received. He knows that the appeal process is working. What bothers him is that Bill C-84 and Bill C-55 are doing the job, that genuine refugees are coming into Canada, as they should be able to, but that the bogus claims are being turned off and the system is working.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. Gardiner).

FORESTRY—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENTS—ADMINISTRATIVE RESPONSIBILITY—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION AT FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Thank you, Madam Speaker. I rise today in this adjournment debate to pursue further some of the questions I put to the Minister of State Forestry (Mr. Oberle) on April 10, in particular regarding the administration of forestry agreements with the provinces, the funding of such agreements, the creation of the Department, and a major study I made reference to. I look forward to the comments from the Parliamentary Secretary this evening.

First of all, I just want to comment. I have just come from a seminar that is in process, sponsored by Mr. Speaker, regarding Canada's role and responsibility in the crisis that our world's tropical and temperate rain forests are facing. What it points out to this House, and I think to all Canadians, is that forestry is a global issue as much as it is an issue here in Canada.

The point that I raised during my question was that following rumours and stories that were occurring during the November election campaign, the forestry agreement in British Columbia and other agreements in the country were going to end up being administered by some of those co-ordinating agencies that the Government has created. I refer specifically in western Canada to the Western Diversification Office, in the Maritimes to the Atlantic Opportunities Office, and to the federal agency in northern Ontario.

The question I put to the Minister on April 10 was seeking an assurance from the Minister that his Department, and his Department alone, would continue to administer those forestry agreements. I think it is critical that the number one industry in this country deserves its own department and is the prime agency when it comes to administering those agreements.

At the same time I raised an important question about the need for adequate funding to those agreements. As Members know, we currently have some six agreements that have expired with the provinces in this country. It is shocking that we have reached a stage where to date there were no official negotiations taking place between Ministers, that those agreements were allowed to expire. Now, of course, we are told to wait until the Budget on April 27. I fear for that wait. I think I have reason since, following the Minister of State's comments in the House on April 10, he said I would be pleased with the results after the Budget. A short few days later the Minister is suggesting that the agreements will have to conform to the new budgetary disciplines. I suggest to you that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has talked to the Minister of State for Forests, and I suggest to you that it is the Minister of Finance who is running the Forestry Department. That is just not good enough for this country.

Another issue that has been on the agenda of this House, certainly in political campaigns and two election campaigns, is the creation of a fully legislative department and a national forests act. We are told the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has written letters, and yes, it will be done, and he made reference to that just recently when the Minister of State was appointed. I think we need an answer from the Minister, and from the Prime Minister, about what the Government's intentions are, specifically when the Government's own Minister says, and I quote from the Prince George Citizen of January 31, "However," he said—and this is in reference to the Department—"it is not a high priority of the Government". This is a Government and a Party across the way that has talked about creating a full department for two election campaigns and I do not know for how many years. But there was no reference in the Throne Speech to the creation of the department. We deserve more, Madam Speaker, and we are going to continue to pursue the Minister and the Prime Minister to ensure that we see that legislation in this House at the earliest date possible.

When I raised the question with the Minister, and I was able to cover a lot of ground when I had an opportunity to question him, I mentioned that a report is currently being prepared, or in the final stages, from his Department regarding the future of Canadian forests. I am pleased that we have been able to ferret out some information from the Department about this study. It is a critical study. It has been in the works now since 1986. It is a $300,000 study. You can appreciate with that kind of money what kind of study it is. It is pointing out how critical and important the forest industry is to this country, and the work that we have to do in the future. I am now told by the Minister that we will see the report in May. I look forward to its release. We can then discuss it in the Standing Committee. We can review the legislation put forward by the Government to create this department and also take a look at the report in terms of what it has to say about the future of the industry.

• (1800)

In closing, I wish to say that forestry is important to my riding, to British Columbia and to all provinces. There is a commitment from all Members of the House to forestry. We will hold the Government to its agenda. I look forward to continued and further action from the Government on this issue.

[Translation]

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry)): Madam Speaker, first of all, I would like to take this opportunity to say it is truly a pleasure, as parliamentary secretary, to be able to work together with the Minister of State (Forestry), the Hon. Member for Prince George—Peace River (Mr. Oberle). As a man and a minister he is very responsible, very much aware of the problems in the forestry sector in Canada and very much involved in promoting an industry that is so important to our country.

Not long ago, the Minister said, in referring to the various agreements signed in Canada, that the federal Government, working with the provinces of this country, had invested over $1 billion in our forests and federal–provincial agreements. As you know, Madam Speaker, one of the most important agreements, worth over $300 million, was signed with British Columbia.

I can also inform the Hon. Member that under these agreements, the Progressive Conservative Government has made a commitment to place tremendous emphasis on promoting the industry as such. We are proud to say that 80 per cent of these funds are invested in the field, in sylviculture and forestry generation.

Madam Speaker, we have made considerable progress under these agreements, and we believe in them. We prepared and sprayed more than one million hectares, and more than one billion seedlings were transplanted. This is very important work, Madam Speaker, and it must be allowed to continue. And I think that the Minister is quite aware of the agreements and works conscientiously with his colleagues in every province.

Regarding the province of my New Democratic colleague who asked the question, we can say, Madam Speaker, that this $300-million agreement has produced tremendous employment benefits: nearly 100,000 jobs were created. We can also say, Madam Speaker, that it brought major gains to British Columbia because thousands of hectares were replanted. That represents 850,000 days of work for British Columbia workers.

Madam Speaker, I think that as a responsible Government, we must first, as the Minister said, consider the national debt, but at the same time we must also look at—and the Minister said so, he repeated that we must be aware of the situation and continue to work together with the provinces to promote the growth of this highly important natural resource for the Canadian economy, namely forests, and to ensure that they continue to be a major source of wealth for our workers and businesses as they have been in recent years.

That is how, Madam Speaker, with the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Oberle) who is doing spectacular work to promote forestry, we will be able to give all Canadians and the Canadian forestry industry the best resources, the best technology, and together we will be able to move forward to the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6.05 p.m.

BOSTON MARATHON—CONGRATULATIONS TO ODETTE LAPIERRE

Mr. Charles DeBlois (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, I want to pay tribute today to a top athlete of whom all my constituents in Montmorency—Orléans are particularly proud. In the famous Boston Marathon, which was run for the ninety-third time on Monday, April 17, Odette Lapierre of Beauport came in eighth among all female competitors and first among Canadian women.

Ms. Lapierre's performance is even more remarkable in that she could not train during the winter because of a leg injury. That did not prevent her from beating the gold medal winner at the Los Angeles Games, American Jean Benoit-Samuelson, to the finish line, with a time of 2:35:50.

I therefore call on my colleagues in the House of Commons to pay close attention to this courageous athlete who will represent Canada at the next Commonwealth Games in New Zealand next January.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

SMALL BUSINESS

EFFECT OF COPYRIGHT AND TRADE MARKS ACTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): The most important job of a Member of Parliament is to stand up and defend the rights of small individuals or businesses in this country who are treated with indifference by Government.

I would like to bring to the attention of this House the plight of Cynthia and Fred Brick, who own a very good furniture store that has been operating in the Province of Manitoba for the last 19 years. Because of the inadequacy of the Copyright and Trade Marks Acts, they are threatened with being put out of business by a large national franchise firm. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Valcourt) refuses to do anything about it.

The family has already spent $80,000 on legal fees in the fight against this case. The Minister, when he was responsible for small business, lent his support but now refuses to do anything.

I ask the Minister, and I plead with other Members to support it, that when the matter comes before the Advisory Committee on Trademarks and Copyrights, the Bricks will be allowed to appear before the committee, present their case, and have the Minister take immediate action, so that this very fine family and their firm can continue to operate in the Province of Manitoba.

IMMIGRATION

SUCCESS OF REFUGEE DETERMINATION SYSTEM

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, Jeffrey Simpson, of The Globe and Mail was "right on" in his recent remarks about the Government's new refugee determination system, when he said:

> At last, Canada has a refugee-determination system that is fair and efficient. Now the task is to carry on with the new policy without listening to the criticisms from a few immigration lawyers in Toronto.

Many of my constituents in Markam and Whitchurch-Stouffville have been very upset at the serious abuses and queue jumping which have made a mockery of our refugee system over the past few years.

The new system is indeed working. As Jeffrey Simpson said:

> The word is obviously spreading that Canada, while still appropriately eager to accept genuine refugees, is no longer a pushover for economic refugees and other bogus claimants.

EMPLOYMENT

CUTS IN TRAINING COURSES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall)—absent her fashion cigar—admonished the Member for Nickle Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), to stop complaining and to help his community take advantage of the Canadian Jobs Strategy, so that his people can get into higher paying jobs where they will be better off. How hypocritical, and how completely asinine are the policies of this Government. As the Minister spoke, the Government was cutting 13 training courses at St. Clair College in Windsor. All were heavily subscribed, half had 100 per cent placement. One hundred people destined for those higher paying jobs promised by the Minister will have their hopes dashed. Thus this Government, which claims the flag of competitiveness and a better trained and educated workforce, shows that it is nothing but rhetoric, and strikes another blow at a community college system already critically bled by Tory leeches.

MEECH LAKE AGREEMENT

ABSOLUTE REGOGNITION OF QUEBEC'S STATUS AS A DISTINCT SOCIETY

Mrs. Nicole Roy-Arcelin (Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, although eight out of ten provinces have already approved the Meech Lake Accord, there are prophets of doom in the House and in the country who are again raising the spectre of disunity. Blinded by irrational and illogical thinking, they are unable to recognize Quebec's cultural and linguistic uniqueness which make it a distinct society. It is nevertheless the crowning glory that gives Canada its beauty.

Mr. Speaker, in the 1981 (sic) referendum, Quebec said yes to Canada and its continued membership in this voluntary democratic union can only be based on the absolute recognition of its distinct character by its Canadian partner.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my constituents in Ahuntsic, I say to all those who want to turn back the clock: Canada will be even greater by accepting Quebec as a distinct society.

TAX REFORM

IMPACT ON SENIOR CITIZENS

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter that the Government may choose to forget but one that all Canadians are being reminded of. I am referring to tax reform and the many surprises Canadians, particularly seniors, find in store for them as they fill out their 1988 tax returns.

An area of major concern is the handling of medical expenses, and the impact of converting from tax deductions to the 17 per cent tax credit.

For an individual with high medical expenses, such as a senior citizen requiring substantial care, the additional tax payable caused by this measure is in the thousands of dollars. In Ontario, an individual with $30,000 in medical expenses would pay an additional $5,400.

Why did the Government use a 17 per cent tax credit for medical expenses rather than the 29 per cent used for charitable donations? Why is it socking it to seniors once again?

I call on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to rectify this dreadful situation.

FOOD

RED MEAT—ALLEGED MISINFORMATION ISSUED BY CBC

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth—Wellington—Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, last Friday morning I awoke to an unbelievable newscast from the CBC. It said that every year two million Canadians become sick and hundreds die from eating red meat.

The numbers came from a study of illnesses from food poisoning, and had been adjusted by a factor of 350 because of the assumption that many such cases are not recognized as food poisoning and are not reported.

As a veterinarian, my knowledge of the quality of red meat produced in Canada made me realize immediately that the newscast was in error. But would the average consumer know this? No. He or she would not. The consumer should know that the red meat produced in Canada is of excellent quality, but the improper handling of meat or any food product can lead to bacterial build up and food poisoning.

What a shame that once again the Canadian food industry and Canadian farmers were victimized by a sensational headline.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—CALL FOR ASSISTANCE FROM CANADIAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, we read with remorse about the worsening conditions of countries in the Middle East. The wars rage on and leave in their path the destruction of both property and life.

The people of Lebanon are under siege by the army of Syria and the lives of innocent men, women and children are sacrificed daily. Schools, hospitals and factories are being bombed indiscriminately.

In my riding of Essex—Kent, and the immediate surrounding area, some 15,000 Lebanese descendants fear for the lives of their friends and relatives in their homeland. These are lives that need not be wasted by the ravages of war.

I ask the Government to be steadfast in its commitment for peace and to voice that commitment to the United Nations. I ask the Government to take immediate measures to improve the immigration practices and to help with the transportation of those in need, and to assist innocent victims in being taken safely out of the areas of danger.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PROPOSED CHANGES IN PROGRAM—IMPACT ON RURAL AREAS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, while the Minister responsible for unemployment insurance attempts to rationalize cutting benefits and privatizing training programs, I want to cite an incident in my riding that illustrates one of the fundamental problems for working people in rural areas.

A constituent of mine lives outside town. She has no car and there is no public transportation. She works fairly regularly and has been able to hitch-hike to work.

However, when she experiences a periodic lay-off and wants to look for work, she is told that she is not eligible for unemployment insurance because she does not have adequate transportation. That is obviously an assumption in policy created by someone with no understanding of rural life.

A similar instance is that of farmers who have been asked to leave farms in order to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits.

I call on the Minister to ensure that there is regional consultation in the unemployment insurance policy development and that rural Canadians are considered an important part of the workforce, as they are. It is time for the Government to understand the real needs of all Canadians.

CANADA POST

POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF POST OFFICE AT NEUSTADT, ONTARIO

Mr. Gus Mitges (Bruce—Grey): Mr. Speaker, the village of Neustadt in my riding of Bruce—Grey has had a post office for 120 years, and it is now in danger of losing it.

Neustadt is a municipality on the move. It is undergoing a dramatic transformation from a farm village to a crafts and tourist village, which has increased business and tourist use of the post office facilities. It is also the birthplace of the Rt. Hon. John George Diefenbaker, former Prime Minister of Canada. The home where he was born is being restored, which has generated and attracted a great deal of attention from all across Canada.

With the increased business being generated for the post office in Neustadt, Canada Post should allow its post office every opportunity to become a profit-generating enterprise and continue to be part of the lifestyle of its citizens.

I call on the Minister who speaks for Canada Post in the House, and I also call on Canada Post itself, to continue the Neustadt post office as a full-time, full-service post office.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

RENEWAL OF AGREEMENTS WITH NEWFOUNDLAND

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I want to know if all the economic and regional development agreements with Newfoundland which expired on March 31 this year will be renewed. I particularly want to know why the Government of Canada is engaging in an unfair game of economic treachery with the poorest province in our country, the people of Newfoundland. Why have the regional development agreements not been renewed? Why is that arrogant Government making the people of Newfoundland pay to reduce a deficit for which they are not responsible? I ask that of the Prime Minister.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, if I may reply to the right hon. gentleman, I would remind him that what his statement represents is absolute balderdash. This Government has in the past demonstrated a tremendous commitment to regional and economic development. At the present time in Newfoundland there are many economic co–operation agreements still in effect. For example, we have agreements involving ocean industries, highways, harbour resources, livestock, agri–products and so on.

The fact that some of these agreements have recently been mentioned, a couple of weeks ago, indicates that the process is still alive and well in Newfoundland.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister for International Trade sat through that response very uncomfortably. I can understand that. I doubt very much if he will retain his patience as this exchange continues.

EXPIRY OF AGREEMENTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the people of Newfoundland and Labrador are used to the kind of deception just practised by the Minister. They want to know about the $22 million mineral development agreement with Newfoundland which expired on March 31. Will it be renewed? The $21 million tourist development agreement with Newfoundland expired on March 31. Will it be renewed? The $28 million Burin Peninsula agreement expired on March 31. Will it be renewed? The $52 million pulp and paper agreement with Newfoundland expired on March 31. Will it be renewed? If not, why not? Will the Minister please reply?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is transparently obvious why the Leader of the Opposition has worked himself up into this semi–righteous mode of indignation today. One can easily understand his new–found interest in Newfoundland.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: It will be interesting to see if his enthusiasm continues later in the week.

This Government has nothing to apologize for in terms of its commitment to regional development. As the Prime Minister indicated, we have practically doubled our commitment to regional development in all of Atlantic Canada. As the Prime Minister indicated today, there are absolutely silly reports that the federal Government plans to slash regional development funding to harmonize with U.S. programs and so on. That is an absolute lie which has been put out. This Government has a continuing commitment to regional development in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade used almost the same vocabulary during the election about unemployment insurance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If anyone is going to be indignant tomorrow, it will be the people of Newfoundland and Labrador. They will have something to say about it.

ASSURANCES REQUESTED THAT AGREEMENTS WILL BE RENEWED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): During the very course of this election, this Government in Ottawa sold out Newfoundland fish to France. It cut unemployment insurance, it stalled on Hibernia and now it has refused to say whether or not those agreements will be renewed. I ask the Minister to answer that.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if there was a question there but it gives me an opportunity to reply to the hon. gentlemen and remind him that this Government has done more to assist Newfoundland than any other government in history.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NEWFOUNDLAND—REPORTED CUTS IN PROGRAMS

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Despite the Government's cynical manoeuvre of delaying the federal Budget until after tomorrow's election in Newfoundland, Newfoundlanders and all Canadians now know that they will be the victims in the Government's deficit-cutting mania. If the Government is not planning to make the drastic cuts to regional programs suggested in today's St. John's The Evening Telegram—

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member would want to put his question.

Mr. Leblanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, if the Government is not planning to make the drastic cuts to regional programs, will he assure the House and the people of Newfoundland before they vote that regional development programs for Newfoundlanders will not be cut?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have already read a list of some of the agreements—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Didn't take you long. It is pretty short, isn't it?

Mr. MacKay: Well, it is longer than yours.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: I applaud the interest in regional development of my colleagues opposite. I can understand why they have that interest. However, they should recognize and be fair about the fact that this Government has given more assistance of a better type and quality than any other Government in history, and they will have to wait for a few more days, as will people who are interested in other areas of Government, the proper way to do this under the budgetary process, to get all the answers they want.

ASSURANCE REQUESTED THAT NO CUTS WILL BE MADE

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, in The Evening Telegram article, the spokesman for the Government estimates that the budget for the Industry Department will be slashed, leaving only $250 million in discretionary funding, from a $1.3 billion annual budget for regional development programs. Is the Prime Minister prepared to deny these revelations and confirm to Atlantic Canadians that spending on regional development programs will not be slashed in next week's Budget?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should realize that it does not do much good to read reconstituted articles from The Toronto Star, even if they are reprinted in Newfoundland or in any of these, as we would say, upper Canadian papers that are speculating.

Mr. Crosbie: Where are your Newfoundland Members? All five of them have disappeared. Where have they gone?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: The Hon. Member will realize that the commitment—Mr. Speaker, I don't believe they want to hear the answer.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister's colleague seems to have gotten into this question period. The Hon. Minister may want to respond.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, all I can tell my colleagues opposite is that this particular effort for this current year in regional development assistance is the most comprehensive of any year yet. They will have to wait until after the Budget is brought down and they can ask their questions then.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

FUNDING FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—REQUEST FOR DELAY IN IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As the Minister will know, until April 1 of this year, the Government had in place an educational program for the aboriginal community at the post-secondary level that was at least working and acceptable. Then the Government of Canada unilaterally imposed changes to it.

The Minister met with young students as well as other aboriginal leaders yesterday to discuss the situation. The consequence of the meeting was that the Minister told them that this program would still be put in place on September 1 and yet he contended that he was willing to have discussions.

Since the Minister's new program has been universally rejected by the aboriginal community, why does he not accept their reasonable position to hold off implementation of that program for the coming year and in the meantime, have discussions that will hopefully lead to an agreement between the aboriginal community and the Government of Canada? Surely that is reasonable.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated on a number of occasions already, a year ago my predecessor announced that there would be a review of the E–12 guidelines that were in force at that time. There was a discussion paper circulated throughout Canada on this particular subject. There was a consultation process that was supposed to take place from July until October and was extended until December. Following the recommendations we received through that consultation process, important changes were brought to the discussion paper, as indicated in the policy that I announced on March 20, which came into force on April 1, but in fact will apply as of September 1 for school year 1989–90.

Notwithstanding that, I am prepared, as I have indicated from the outset, to sit down again with the leaders and chiefs of the native people and the students, if they wish, in order to review the possibility. Particularly, if there are inequities, we will look into them. However, over–all, the new guidelines are more generous, better and fairer than the ones that were in force at that time. If Hon. Members would look at the First Nations' document on education, they would find that it indicates that E–12 is inadequate and inappropriate.

REQUEST THAT NEW GUIDELINES BE SUSPENDED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the aboriginal community had suggestions and criticisms to make about the old program, but as he also knows, by and large it was working and was acceptable to the aboriginal community. He knows as well that the new guidelines he is now talking about have been universally rejected from the West Coast of Canada right through to the East Coast by the aboriginal people. Just for once, why will he not listen to them instead of his advisers here in Ottawa? That surely is the issue.

I appeal to the Minister, who has been reasonable in past portfolios and who has considered the constituency he is supposed to represent in Cabinet. Since the aboriginal people of all people in Canada at long last deserve justice, why will he not keep in place the existing program, suspend his new guidelines and hopefully negotiate a program that is acceptable to everyone?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, again, as I have indicated, the First Nations themselves found that the E–12 guidelines, the old guidelines, were inadequate and inappropriate. We have a program here that we feel is more generous and fairer for all native students across Canada. We are talking about a program that went from $4.2 million at its start in 1975 to $130 million today, for 15,000 students, representing an average of close to $9,000 annually for each student. It covers tuition fees, books, accessories, travel assistance and allowance for cost of living including food and day care.

I believe that these new guidelines are better than the ones that were there before. I have already met with the leadership four times in the last two weeks and I am prepared to continue the process. If there is more that we can do, we will do it.

REJECTION OF NEW GUIDELINES BY ABORIGINAL LEADERSHIP

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows full well that the guidelines may be acceptable to him, but without exception, the aboriginal leadership from coast to coast has rejected the guidelines. Surely among those people who have rejected it are a great number of reasonable human beings, and they are the people affected by these guidelines. The Minister should be listening to them.

Since the Minister has now said to all of us in the House something about what has happened in terms of spending for aboriginal peoples, I would like to read to him and ask him for his response on an observation made last week, not ten years ago, by a Canadian Human Rights Commissioner who said: "An Indian youngster in Canada has a better chance of being sent to prison than of completing university". That is a national disgrace. In this context, why is the Minister even contemplating putting a ceiling on post–secondary educational spending? Is it not better to spend money on education than on welfare for aboriginal people?

• (1430)

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is fair to say that obviously I agree with the quote the Hon. Member has just given us, and I took good note of it last week when it was given by Commissioner Yalden. That notwithstanding, this budget has increased 30 times since its inception. We are now giving an average of $9,000 per year per student.

If I can sit with the leaders and the students, obtain the appropriate data, as they are reasonable and I am reasonable, I will be asking for more if the need increases over the years.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

FUNDING PROGRAM FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—REQUEST FOR NEW DEADLINE

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Over the last few weeks in the House we have repeatedly heard the Minister tell us that he has met with the chiefs and the leaders of the native peoples. He has stated that he has listened, but obviously he has not. If the Minister had been out there today, as I was, to listen to the leaders of the native people, he would have found out that those individuals are not pleased with his policy.

Based on that fact, would the Minister today, instead of saying he is meeting and not listening, change the deadline to April 1, 1990, in order to give the First Nations the time needed to collect data and develop a policy which will be of benefit to the native peoples and to the Government.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, since I have been in all those meetings, I can assure my hon. friend that I have been listening very carefully. If the Hon. Member had been listening very carefully, he would know that, on average, we are giving out $9,000 per year per person in total grants in this particular program today.

As I have indicated, there has been a consultation program from July until December. We still have five months until September 1 in order to review the policy as it is. I am prepared to do that. I am prepared to listen, and I was prepared to listen yesterday when the natives walked out on me during that meeting.

EFFECT ON WELFARE ROLLS

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Based on the fact that $316 million were spent last year on welfare for native peoples, and because of this new policy, the estimate is that that will go up to $400 million in the upcoming year, as a result of this policy, can the Minister tell us how many more native people will be unemployed, how many more of them will turn to drugs and alcohol abuse, and how much will this affect the deficit in the years to come?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this policy has gone from $4.2 million to $130 million over the years. I think that is an indication that certainly this Government in particular believes in post-secondary education.

We also believe in graduating from post-secondary education, and fulfilling the goals of the First Nations, which is self-government and self-sufficiency.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CHANGES IN PROGRAM—SHIFT TO WELFARE ROLLS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last week the Minister of Employment announced that she will take $800 million out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund, and thereby reduce the coverage for unemployed workers with that unemployment insurance program.

Over the weekend, Conservative Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia said that such a move by the federal Government would simply shift the burden for unemployed workers from the unemployment insurance program to provincial welfare rolls, a consequence which most provinces cannot afford.

When does the Prime Minister intend to meet with the provincial premiers with respect to this matter? Will he be ready to offer them additional moneys to take care of the additional unemployed who will have to be taken of under welfare programs?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, very shortly I will be meeting with my provincial counterparts. We will be discussing the new program and the benefits that it has for the provinces. I would remind the Hon. Member of the additional funding that we have put into this program for social assistance recipients. It has been a very successful program that was introduced by the Government, and it is going to be expanded from $600 million to $800 million, if we get the full funding on the provincial side.

There will not be an increase in the welfare rolls as a result of this program.

ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Premier of Nova Scotia states that there will be an increase in the welfare rolls as as result of this program. One cannot take $800 million out of unemployment insurance without cutting the coverage, and that is what the Minister is doing.

We are not opposed to putting people back to work. We are opposed to cutting programs which take away the right of people to pay for their food and rent.

I want to ask the Government, especially the Prime Minister because he is responsible for over-all policy, how are the provinces going to pay for this additional welfare? Will the Prime Minister offer additional moneys to the provinces to take up the burden that he is shifting to them?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is totally ignoring the fact that the social assistance recipient program that we have funded in the past has taken people off the welfare rolls. There are fewer people living in poverty today than there were when this Government took office, there is more training for people today, and there are more jobs for people today.

Let me remind the Hon. Member of what the parliamentary committee, of which the Hon. Member was a member, has stated.

Mr. Allmand: Talk to the Premier of Nova Scotia about it, Barbara.

Mrs. McDougall: It stated "That Section 39 (Training) of the Unemployment Insurance Act be amended and alternate provisions be made to more clearly assist claimants to use their benefits to develop suitable skills". "Unemployment insurance can be more than just earnings replacement while unemployed. It should be a vehicle to help people realize better and more stable employment opportunities in the future".

That is exactly what the Hon. Member signed, Mr. Speaker.

FREEZE IN FUNDING OF PROGRAMS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, today members of the Government have stated that the stories about regional development cuts are false. They stated that the regional development help is more comprehensive than that from any Government in the past.

If this is so, why has the Government frozen almost $1 billion-worth of renegotiations of economic and regional development agreements with provinces from the East Coast to the West Coast to the Arctic?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in the Throne Speech there are comments indicating the commitment of the Government to regional development as evidenced by the Western Economic Development Office, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, the expansion and continuation of regional development programs of FEDNOR and the Quebec programs through my Department.

In the Prime Minister's comments during the Throne Speech debate he again indicated the Government's commitment to co-operative regional development efforts.

The statements made by the Government are there. They stand on their own. I do not know why the Hon. Member won't take them as given.

Mr. Langdon: Because, Mr. Speaker, I have been here for the last four years and I have seen statements like that turned upside down by the Government within months.

REQUEST FOR CONTINUATION OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister. Why is the Government not continuing negotiations on the science and technology projects connected with the general agreement signed with Quebec last year? Why?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, we are. The Hon. Member shakes his head. I do not know what he is talking about or what he is alluding to.

The fact of the matter is that our discussions with the Quebec Government were left to an entente last year. There are some things that the Quebec Government needs to get back to us about, but it is not complaining about any lack of progress. I do not know why the Hon. Member is.

CHANGES IN PROGRAM—EFFECT ON FISH PLANT WORKERS

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As a result of the recently announced changes to the UI program there will be some 30,000 fish plant workers, most of them women, who will have to find additional employment if these proposed changes go through. In Newfoundland, fish plant workers receive benefits. With the minimum requirements across Canada going up, where will these workers find the extra work to qualify? Can the Minister assure this House that Atlantic Canadians will not be tossed on to the welfare rolls?

• (1440)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this Government has the best job creation record in Atlantic Canada of any Government in the history of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: Let me just remind the Hon. Member that there is $15 million more going into Newfoundland as a result of this program. There is $15 million more for Newfoundland next year.

Let me just read from The Gander Beacon in Newfoundland:

> —18 trainees from the Gander–Fogo–Lewisporte area graduated from a six–month federally funded training program.
> The program, run by the Newfoundland Career Academy, trained 18 young people to enter the work–force in banking, clerical and retail positions.

The local administrator said:

> All of us involved with the program are happy with the results.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF REVIEW

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, continuing with the fishermen, the Minister of Employment and Immigration confirmed on April 11 that there would be a review of the unemployment insurance scheme for fishermen.

Many of these fishermen are unaware of this review and what it could entail. They are concerned about how they will be affected. Will the Minister explain to all Canadian fishermen what this review will consist of, when it will take place and when we can expect a report.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will ignore the fact that I am being royally misquoted and simply say that there is no contemplation of any changes for fishermen under this program.

HOUSING

EXEMPTION OF SALES TAX FOR CERTAIN TYPES OF HOUSING—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Housing). The Minister is of course aware that members of the Canadian Real Estate Association are here in Ottawa, and that they are concerned about the fact that the Government might impose a national sales tax on the housing sector. The Minister may have said recently, on more than one occasion, that the new national sales tax would not increase the cost of housing, but he obviously has not convinced the sectors concerned.

An Hon. Member: He is reading!

Mr. Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Yes, and quite well too.

Will the Minister give the House the assurance today that this new sales tax will not apply to new homes, homes up for resale and rental accommodation?

[English]

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, real estate industry builders, salesmen, and all members of the real estate industry have been making submissions with respect to the national sales tax for some time. It is of great concern to all of the industry and it is certainly of great concern to me and the Government. I know the Minister of Finance is taking all of these representations into close and careful consideration.

As the Hon. Member is aware, the Minister made a statement in November with respect to the imposition of the tax and the question of affordability. I am sure that that undertaking will continue to stand.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is backing off from very clear statements of protection for affordable housing that he made on a number of occasions prior to the election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TAX REFORM—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, there is a chronic shortage of housing in this country. Canadians cannot afford shelter. Shelter is in jeopardy and thousands of Canadians will lose any possibility of owning a home if this sales tax goes through. This Minister and the Minister of Finance stated that there will be no negative impact on affordable housing from sales tax reform.

Will the Minister of Finance be more forthcoming than the Minister of Housing? Will he explain how the price of housing will not go up if the sales tax is imposed? Will he also tell us whether this sales tax will be imposed on mortgages, insurance on mortgages, materials that go into new housing and on real estate and legal fees? In other words, will he tell us that the cost of housing will not go up because of this hidden tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is great to see the Hon. Member in full flight. I know that that will be put to good use in the months to come.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member has asked a serious question. I have made clear statements in the past as to the impact of the new sales tax on the affordability of housing. I stand by those statements. They are there in print for the Hon. Member to see if he cares to look at them. The Hon. Member is asking some very specific questions about the formulation of a tax. He knows that I cannot be any more specific at this time.

REVENUE CANADA

COLLECTION OF TAX ON KICK-BACK PAYMENTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. He is aware that as Minister of Finance he allows individuals and corporations to deduct bribes, kick-backs and under-the-table payments from income tax. Yesterday the Minister of National Revenue, to his credit, said he found this practice to be offensive.

Since the Minister of Finance is responsible for tax policy in this country, does he agree with his colleague that this is, indeed, a very offensive practice, and will he put an immediate end to it?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I said that I found the interpretation of the Act offensive as outlined in a circular first presented in 1976 by the former Liberal Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: I also said that I would look into the matter. Since yesterday I have had an opportunity to review the situation personally and find that the interpretation is not only offensive but morally and ethically unacceptable. As a result, after discussions with some of my Cabinet colleagues, particularly the Minister of Finance, we have concluded that the Government will be making some legislative changes in order to allow us in Revenue Canada to change the offensive wording of the interpretation.

I am, therefore, today withdrawing this circular to begin the process of rewording it in accordance with legislative changes.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his promptness. Perhaps the Prime Minister could learn from that example.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COST OF TAX LOOPHOLE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Finance. I think Canadians have a right to know how much this particular tax loophole has cost them in the last number of years.

Can the Minister give an example of the size of savings to individuals and corporations by this tax loophole that he allowed for over four years as Minister of Finance in terms of briberies and kick-backs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of National Revenue has stated very clearly that this matter came to our attention yesterday. We made a change and we announced it one day later. I think that gives the Hon. Member a very good indication of how seriously we take this question of tax loopholes, things that we find offensive. We have been doing a great deal to get them out of the tax system. As I have indicated, I appreciate the Hon. Member's support.

What the Hon. Member has asked is the tax cost. I do not believe that it is a significant amount of money because that is certainly not the way business is done in this country and there will be no value in this from the standpoint of the Tax Act in the future at all.

MINES

REINSTATEMENT OF CANADA-QUÉBEC AGREEMENT ON MINERAL DEVELOPMENT—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Canada-Quebec Minerals Development Agreement has been relatively satisfactory in meeting the objectives that were set. The agreement expires in 1990.

Mr. Speaker, my question is this: Could the Minister inform the House whether the agreement will be renewed and whether it will include the financing of a minerals research laboratory by Canmet in Abitibi-Témiscamingue?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has taken a great interest in mining development not only in Canada, but particularly in northern Québec. I remind him that the MDA with the Province of Québec expires in 1990. There has been some very good technology out of that agreement, particularly in the Member's riding, with mining technology. He has been very instrumental in getting that development. I congratulate him. Obviously the representation that he has made I will take into consideration.

PUBLIC SERVICE

VISIBLE MINORITIES—HIRING—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Today, people talk about equality for all Canadians. Although last year, almost 17 per cent of all applications for employment with the Public Service came from visible minorities, these represented less than 5 per cent of total recruitment for the Public Service. What does the Minister intend to do to end this flagrant discrimination?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the Hon. Member by quoting a number of statistics that basically apply to employment equity programs that have been established since 1985. For instance, the number of women in managerial and senior positions increased from 7.3 per cent to 10.3 per cent; the number of native people, from 1.5 per cent to 1.6 per cent; the disabled, from 1.5 per cent to 2.6 per cent. For visible minorities, the figure almost doubles, rising from 1.7 per cent to 2.7 per cent. Our policies are working. I admit that progress is slow, but as with any policy that affects Public Service employees, it takes time before improvements can be made. However, I think this is already quite a lot, over a two-year period.

NATIVE PEOPLES AND VISIBLE MINORITIES

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I don't think the Minister can hide behind figures and gutless programs. The Minister knows very well the findings of the Human Rights Commission. In federal government Departments the representation of native peoples is abysmal. Women professionals make up under a quarter of the Public Service.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Ms. Catterall: Visible minorities are negligible in the blue collar categories.

An Hon. Member: It sounds like a speech to me.

Ms. Catterall: It is cruel and deceitful to encourage people to apply for jobs—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put her question.

Ms. Catterall: How does the Minister explain that in 1988, 12 per cent of all applicants to the Public Service were hired, but only 3.3 per cent of visible minority applicants were hired? What concrete steps will the Minister take immediately to end discrimination in hiring against visible minorities and native Canadians?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): This Government is deeply committed to equity in employment practices. I think we have shown that, and I think the numbers have shown that. I am willing to make the commitment that we will not let up on our effort to ensure that all target populations, and I think the Hon. Member has mentioned most of the populations within the Public Service, will be well treated and well represented. The policies have been put in place to do just that.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—PLIGHT OF REFUGEES

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In response to my question yesterday when I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs what this Government is doing to help the thousands of Lebanese refugees who have fled to neighbouring countries, he said:

> I don't mean to shed the responsibility of Canada on to others.

But, Mr. Speaker, if he does nothing, he is shedding this Government's responsibility.

I ask the Prime Minister again, what is the Government doing to help those refugees who are no longer in Lebanon?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said yesterday that he has been in close touch with the situation in Lebanon, and we are doing what we can to assist. In response to the special appeal of the International Committee of the Red Cross, we are providing $500,000 to Lebanon. At the United Nations our own mission is consulting with the five permanent members of the Security Council to see what might be done from the vantage point of the Security Council. We would be prepared to support any proposal for a meeting of the Security Council in Lebanon if it appeared that this would be helpful. As the Secretary of State of External Affairs said yesterday, we are doing what we can to assist in this situation.

PROVISION OF CANADIAN CONSULAR SERVICES

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): That is an excellent example, Mr. Speaker, of how this Government is not doing enough for the refugees in Lebanon. My supplementary is to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Since the fighting flared up in Lebanon last month, although thousands have fled, thousands more are trapped in the City of Beirut with no food, water or electricity. The bombing and shelling continue. What is the Prime Minister doing to provide consular services that are more accessible to the people in Lebanon? He knows he cannot ask them to travel to Damascus. Will he take the suggestions made by my colleagues from Essex—Kent and Montreal—St. Denis and open a temporary office in Cyprus and ensure safe transportation and protection for Lebanese refugees wishing to emigrate to Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that the Hon. Member know that within our country we took the action on April 6 of not removing people to Lebanon. I want him to keep that in mind because I have asked my officials under our own programs to look at anything that we can extend by way of our services to these refugees in question. Also, I should point out that private agencies could help with this, and we would solicit their support in assisting refugees in Lebanon.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON PROSECUTION OF NATIVE PROTESTERS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will be aware, I am sure, of the judgment brought down in the provincial court of Newfoundland which acquitted four Innu protesters of the charges brought against them by the Crown. I would like to ask the Prime Minister if the Government would be willing today to give a commitment not to appeal the decision of the provincial court, to drop the charges against the other protesters, to declare a moratorium on low-level flight testing and to reach the negotiated settlement with the Innu people that the judgment recommends?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the decision having been rendered by the magistrate, the matter now reverts to provincial hands because of their responsibility for the administration of justice within the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador. My understanding is that it is up to the Crown Attorneys in that area to act in light of the advice, I suppose, they will supply the Crown.

LOW-LEVEL MILITARY FLIGHTS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): This is an opportunity for the federal Government to show leadership. It is obvious that the case has come about as a result of a complaint lodged by the Department of National Defence. It is a Canadian Armed Forces base. It is a Canadian federal policy to have that low-level flight testing there. It is about time the Prime Minister took his responsibility in this matter and answered the questions that I asked him today in the House. Furthermore, we know that the Minister of National Defence is in Brussels at a NATO planning group. Isn't this the opportunity for the Prime Minister to tell that Minister to inform our NATO allies that the deal is off, the low-level flight testing is no longer acceptable in this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asks me a question with regard to the administration of justice. The implication of the second question is that we should step in and try to order the Attorney General of Newfoundland and Labrador to follow a given course of action. Of course that would be most improper for the administration of justice. With regard to any issues that involve NATO or low-level flights, that is an entirely different matter. It would be resolved in an entirely different forum.

What is being sought, of course, is justice and fairness for the native peoples of Labrador, and economic growth and expansion for the people who need work in Labrador. That is what we are looking for.

REGISTERED RETIREMENT PENSION PLANS

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATIVE PROTECTION

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

As many Hon. Members are aware, registered savings plan funds which are invested through a life insurance company are essentially removed from any claim or demand by creditors. This is a situation made possible, I understand, by the provisions of the Insurance Act. However, RRSPs which are held or invested otherwise, such as through a trust company, are generally available to satisfy demands of creditors in a bankruptcy or similar situation.

Many Canadians feel that RRSPs are the savings plans of last resort and their security for providing retirement income should not be at risk, irrespective of other financial contingencies which may happen in our lives.

In the reform of laws dealing with bankruptcy, as set out in the Speech from the Throne, will the Minister's Department undertake to consider seriously the merits of removal of RRSP funds as vulnerable assets, much in the same manner as they are protected from creditors under the Insurance Act?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Boudria: Say yes or no.

Mr. Valcourt: That is about all one could answer.

Mr. Boudria: I did not think that one could answer both.

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question. The question he raises is an important one. As the Government indicated in the Speech from the Throne, we will proceed with a reform of the Bankruptcy Act. We know that many previous Governments have attempted to reform the Act without success. Hopefully, in this Parliament, with the co-operation of all Members, we can reform this important law for all Canadians.

The specific issue that the Hon. Member raises is certainly one that we will consider because of its importance.

THE BUDGET

DESIGNATION OF ORDER OF THE DAY

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 83(2), I request the designation of an Order of the Day to allow the presentation of a budget speech on Thursday, April 27 next.

I have a second motion which reads as follows:

That, notwithstanding any standing or special order of this House, at 5:00 o'clock p.m. on Thursday, April 27, 1989, the Speaker shall interrupt any proceedings then before the House and proceed forthwith to the consideration of Ways and Means Proceedings No. 1, for the purpose of the budget statement of the Minister of Finance;

That, immediately following such budget statement, the House shall revert to the routine proceeding "Introduction of Government Bills" and, following introduction and first reading of a Bill or Bills, the Speaker shall recognize a member of the Official Opposition in debate on Ways and Means Proceedings No. 1; and

That the House shall not adjourn until the adjournment of the debate on Ways and Means Proceedings No. 1, following which the Speaker shall adjourn the House until the next sitting day.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have a third motion which states:

That, on Friday, April 28, 1989, the House shall meet at 11 o'clock a.m., with Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 31 at that time, Oral Questions at 11.15 o'clock a.m., until 12 o'clock noon, followed by the Daily Routine of Business;

That, immediately upon the completion of the Daily Routine of Business, the House shall proceed to Government Orders, Ways and Means Proceedings No. 1 (the Budget motion);

That, during the debate on the Budget motion, on that day, there shall be one speaker for the Official Opposition followed by one speaker for the New Democratic Party and, that both speakers will be allowed whatever time is necessary to complete their speeches; and

That, immediately upon the completion of the speech by the New Democratic Party speaker, but in any event not later than 3.30 o'clock p.m., the Speaker shall adjourn the House until Monday, May 1, 1989, at 11 o'clock a.m.

Mr. Speaker: I should point out that with respect to the Minister's motion concerning a designated day, it requires, of course, consent. The other motions of course do not require such consent.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I rise reluctantly on a point of order. I understand that my House Leader has had discussions with the Government House Leader and the House Leader for the Liberal Party. Regretfully, we were not given the actual text of the motions in advance, which is the normal procedure. We support the motion since I understand it is consistent with what was agreed to. However, in the future I would ask that the office of the House Leader be given an advance copy as per our understanding.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan. I am sure someone would have noticed the import of his intervention.

Mr. Charest: With respect to the point raised by my colleague from the New Democratic Party, it is well taken. I will ensure that the next time an advance copy is delivered to his House Leader, which was not the case this time.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Minister.

Does the Hon. Government House Leader have unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

DROUGHT RELIEF

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that the drought of 1988 is still in a situation in which many things have not occurred, many constituents in my riding are petitioning the Government to ensure that drought relief is given to all townships on all crops in the country. I believe that there has been an administrative nightmare, a lack of administration, and as a result many people in my riding are very concerned.

I present this petition to you, Mr. Speaker, in light of that feeling.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—JURISDICTION RESPECTING OATS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from several hundred farm families from the southwest of Saskatchewan who note that the federal Government's decision to remove oats from the marketing jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board will reduce severely the income of oat producers in Canada, and place them at the mercy of the grain speculators.

The petitioners call upon the Government of Canada to leave oats under the Wheat Board's jurisdiction. They also call upon Parliament to place the marketing of canola under the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board as well.

• (1510)

VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present a petition to this House from citizens of the Prince George, B.C. area, who express their concerns about the continued improvement of VIA Rail service in northern British Columbia.

EXTRADITION OF ACCUSED OR CONVICTED PERSONS

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present a petition on behalf of about 400 residents of the Town of Strathroy and the surrounding area who have availed themselves of their ancient right to present their grievance to this House. They are upset about the fact that some persons convicted or accused of murder are not being returned to the United States. This could make this country a haven for such dangerous fugitives and reduce confidence in our system of justice.

These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to pass and implement laws and procedures to provide immediate extradition of such convicted or accused persons, without recourse to such long delaying tactics.

AMENDMENT TO CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition from 52 petitioners of the National Capital Region. The said petition deals with equality rights in Canada.

In March, 1986, this Government accepted a report and its recommendations that the Canadian Human Rights Act be amended to prohibit discrimination. Whereas the Government has yet to introduce legislation, the petitioners call upon the Government of Canada to act and bring forward such amendment to the Canadian Human Rights Act.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of the Chair in the presence of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) one of the Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers we have before us today, more specifically, the one identified as P–3, presented on April 7, 1989, on page 13. I noticed this morning, while looking at the Notices of Motions, this one quite clearly is unacceptable to the Government. I think if you were to refer to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition rules, pages 137 and 138, it is quite clear that this Notice of Motion is not acceptable to the Government.

As far as the three other notices are concerned, I would ask that we allow them to stand.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Government House Leader has indicated citations in support of his position. I am aware of those citations, and I was aware of them when I submitted the motion for consideration to the House. I feel obliged to stand to speak to the matter. I want to indicate very briefly that I had expected the Government would be anxious to provide this information, in light of the circumstances that were raised in my point of order, not only because of the seriousness of the allegation but because of the—

Mr. Charest: Point of order.

Mr. Milliken: I am on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Charest: Just to make it very clear, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands has admitted that he produced this Notice of Motion quite clearly knowing that it was not acceptable. The rules in Beauchesne are quite clear. It is also clear, and the Hon. Member has said that he knows the reference in the rules very well, that such Notices of Motions are not amendable, neither are they debatable.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister could have contained himself he would have been aware that I was not in fact debating the motion. What I was saying was I thought the Government would have been anxious to table the documents in order to not only provide some evidence to back up the position it has taken, but to assist the Chair in dealing with the question of privilege that was raised in this House last week, and which is under consideration at this time by Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Charest: That is a little pretentious.

Mr. Milliken: I thought the Government would be anxious to help. I realize the Deputy Government House Leader thinks that this is pretentious, but I think it is a serious matter. I think he might have given more consideration to it. In light of that, I am prepared to withdraw the notice at this time because I recognize that it may not, and I say may not, be in accordance with the rules.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that Motion No. P–3 be withdrawn?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C–7, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (pari–mutuel betting), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce this afternoon for second reading Bill C–7, which provides for changes in legislation governing pari–mutuel betting in this country. This legislation was introduced in the last Parliament, and it subsequently died on the Order Paper. It was preceded by a a discussion paper which was circulated by Agriculture Canada, which outlined in broad detail the proposal.

This document was circulated in a very broad way for industry and for the public to respond to. I must say that there was broad industry support for this proposal, and indeed very little objection at that particular time. I think it is important that the Bill be proceeded with some degree of urgency. I hope that I have the co–operation and the support of all Hon. Members in seeing that this legislation is passed through in an expeditious fashion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: As Hon. Members may be aware, the racing industry is suffering some difficulties. Bill C–7 offers a way to support this very important sector of the Canadian economy. I intend to deal with some of the difficulties that the racing industry is facing in Canada.

The proposed changes to Section 204 of the Criminal Code will permit pari–mutuel betting on horse races viewed in theatres, owned or leased by acting associations. Such theatres would have to be licensed by the appropriate provincial authority. The intent of the legislation is to provide the racing industry with a new marketing opportunity. It will help broaden the industry's economic base, which has been shrinking by increased competition from other forms of entertainment and wagering dollars. The jobs that are associated with this industry are very important.

As a result of this legislation not only will jobs be created but jobs will be preserved. Benefits will be gained throughout the country, including the new betting theatre segment. Betting theatres, also known as teletheatres, will create new jobs in cities where horse racing is not otherwise available. The jobs will be associated with the control of telecommunications, pari-mutuel services, and concessions. Service jobs will be created in the food and beverage sector, and facility support services. Horse men will benefit also from the increased purses. The industry will obviously be able to get increased purses to meet their increased costs for track maintenance and horse care. Higher incentives will maintain the scale of racing in Canada. At the same time, many Canadian thoroughbreds and standard breds can race abroad if they are outstanding performers. With increased domestic support, Canadian breeders will be able to produce outside racing stock.

Given these likely benefits, it is appropriate to take a few moments to outline the size and importance of the Canadian horse racing industry.

To begin with, it is a large proportion of the over-all Canadian horse industry. Racing's help, therefore, contributes directly to the over-all industry.

• (1520)

It also contributes to its over-all well-being by spreading the cost of supply of goods and services. The horse industry in Canada generates about $4 billion in economic activity. About 100,000 people are directly employed in the horse industry, 42,000 of them in racing. A further 20,000 people have jobs in services directly related to this industry. These include concessions, sales of feed, tack and other equipment.

Within the racing sector, capital investment is substantial as well. For example, the industry's inventory of all forms of land, equipment and buildings is at least $3.4 billion. Annual capital expenditure is estimated at $380 million.

Another significant factor is that the horse industry's balance of trade favours Canada. Americans wager approximately 20 times as much money at Canadian tracks as Canadians bet in the United States.

As we go through these statistics we recognize that racing is big business in Canada. To some it is a way of life. It is part of a culture, and many people are in it for the love of it.

However, there are some strains and there are some concerns within the industry. It is fair to say, I believe, that from the standpoint of the racing industry it is important to take action now if the industry is going to be strengthened and preserved. We know that the United States has recently introduced betting theatres close to the border, in states such as New York, Pennsylvania, North Dakota and Washington. Furthermore, legislation is also being considered in Michigan and Minnesota.

As I said earlier, we now have a very favourable balance of trade in the United States with this business, but these new theatres south of the border may tip the current positive balance of trade in favour of the United States.

Canadian breeders and owners of standard bred and thoroughbred horses have greater penetration of the U.S. market than the other way around. There are two reasons for this. First, there are more opportunities for competitive racing in the United States and purses are in U.S. dollars, so that returns are obviously higher.

Since 1980, the Canadian racing industry has been under severe economic pressure. The causes are inflation, rising costs and a steep decline in industry income.

Other kinds of entertainment wagering such as lotteries have become a bigger part of Canadian life than they used to be. The returns to horse racing have shrunk as those to lotteries in particular have grown.

In 1987, Canada's provincially controlled lotteries made sales of $3.34 billion. This was an increase of some $700 million or 26 per cent over 1986. The likely reason for the growth is the wide variety of games available and because tickets are available at more than 34,000 locations across the country.

Competition is likely to become even more fierce in the future. Some provinces, such as Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, have already legalized some casino-type gambling. Others are likely to follow suit. These and similar forms of entertainment wagering will further increase the pressure on horse racing and its jobs as time passes by.

As an example of what is happening, we can look at Saskatchewan's recent experience. In 1987, more than $213 million went to casinos, bingo and other games of chance and lotteries took in over $93 million. Pari-mutuel betting, on the other hand, brought in only $12.5 million. Although final figures are not complete for 1988, this trend is continuing.

Other levels of Government have given the industry some support. Every province, for example, applies a tax on pari-mutuel betting. During the past five years, provincial Governments have set up programs to rebate a part of their revenues directly to the tracks and horsemen.

These funds have been transferred in such ways as to provide for purses for breeder stake races, for equipment and capital, for improvement programs, assistance on overnight purses and advertising programs. As you can appreciate, these programs vary from one province to another, but considering the scale of the assistance it is not likely that further support from provincial sources will be possible.

Over the years, the House has also broadened its legislation to provide the industry with the means to promote growth and competitiveness.

For example, we supported such initiatives as intertrack betting, separate pool betting, foreign race separate pool betting, telephone account betting and additional exotic pools. All of these have served to increase the marketability of entertainment wagering on horse races, so they have all been helpful and of some use to the industry.

During 1988, intertrack betting was conducted at eight tracks. Some $146.7 million was wagered. That is an increase of almost 13 per cent over 1987.

Separate pool betting was available at another 19 tracks and attracted wagers of $21 million.

Foreign race separate pools were set up at 18 tracks across the country and attracted $10.4 million in bets on races originating at U.S. tracks. Six tracks offered telephone account betting resulting in more than $28 million wagered, which is a 20 per cent increase over 1987.

These means of betting continue to be of help. Raising association commissions on these additional amounts have helped them in meeting their continuously rising operating costs and have added to the horsemen's purses.

Much has been done, but more needs to be done. As the proposed theatre betting legislation will be implemented, again horsemen will be guaranteed through ensuing regulations a negotiated partnership with racing associations for the scheduling of races for intertrack, separate pool and theatre betting. They will also negotiate cost and revenue sharing.

Track commission rates have been adjusted to help cope with the cost squeeze caused by inflation. In 1982, the track commission rate was increased to a maximum of 15 per cent, although larger tracks were authorized at a lower rate. The allowable commission rate was again increased in 1984, and by 1985, the maximum rate was set at a flat 18 per cent. With the exception of a few large tracks, most racing associations are now operating at the 18 per cent commission level.

These adjustments mean that there is no leeway for future commission increases to meet any further rise in costs. The combined take-out by the tracks, provincial Governments and the federal operations levy has reached its probable upper limit. In other words, even a small increase in the take-out is likely to have a very negative impact on total amounts wagered.

Government has already given what support it can. On the market side, however, there are still opportunities to serve existing patrons in an improved fashion.

The intent of the legislation is to permit racing associations to bring their sport to patrons at locations other than racetracks. Teletheatres will allow the industry to take horse racing entertainment to cities where there are no tracks. Another application could see races transmitted live to teletheatres in densely populated areas even in close proximity to a track.

The teletheatre concept has been tested successfully in the United States. Teletheatres offer a potential for growth by catering to infrequent race-goers and some new fans. They increase customer convenience, offer the more pleasant surroundings of a theatre environment and increase the ability of the industry to compete head-to-head with other forms of entertainment in the theatre's immediate marketing area. Recent U.S. surveys have revealed who teletheatre patrons are. Half, we are told, have been to a race track one to five times within the previous 12 months. Thirty per cent have not been to a track in the previous year and one in 10 is a person who has never been to a race track.

The figures support several conclusions. Teletheatres will encourage the return of infrequent racegoers. They will cater to regular race patrons and they will assist the industry in attracting new fans. The U.S. experience has been very favourable. The Canadian industry believes it can administer betting theatres at least as well as U.S. operators and all segments of the industry support the initiative.

From the standpoint of the provinces, provincial interests are protected by the requirement that each theatre location be licensed by the provincial Lieutenant Governor before the federal Government will issue a teletheatre parimutuel betting licence. This is in recognition of the provincial responsibilities for horseracing. Furthermore, no association will be allowed to conduct theatre betting within its federally assigned market area unless it has reached an agreement with the horsemen to share the costs and revenues of theatre betting. As well, the two parties must agree on the scheduling of races at betting theatres.

More particularly for the future, I want to assure Hon. Members that the teletheatre concept will not evolve into on-street betting shops. Such establishments are not desired by either the Government or the industry. Rather, teletheatres will be required to have such minimum facilities as seating, food and beverage concessions, restraint in betting activity and, of course, live video coverage of races. In other words, teletheatres will be extensions of race tracks rather than replacements for them, and I think that is important to bear in mind.

The horseracing industry is labour intensive. It employs many skilled and unskilled workers, many of them in rural areas. As I said earlier, there is a commitment to this industry by many people and a love for the industry on the part of those who are involved in it. To them, it is more than simply a job. These jobs would be extremely difficult to replace if ever lost. As I said earlier, we are not only providing the potential for the creation of new jobs but we are in fact ensuring the preservation of existing jobs. We believe that the creation of teletheatres will protect these existing jobs as well as create new employment within the industry.

For these reasons, I would hope that we can garner the support and co-operation of all Hon. Members, particularly Hon. Members opposite, to give favourable and expeditious consideration to the legislation before us. I believe the House should act on the opportunity to assist a very important sector of the Canadian economy, an opportunity which is being provided at no expense to the public.

As I said earlier, we are not only preserving an industry but indeed promoting it. We are helping it along and providing the assurance that jobs will be maintained and created. As well, in strengthening this industry, we are in fact preserving a bit of Canadian culture, something that is quite fundamental to Canadian life. I would hope that I can call upon the goodwill and support of all Hon. Members in moving this legislation forward.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to join in this afternoon's debate on Bill C-7 which provides for amendments to the Criminal Code with regard to pari-mutuel betting. At the outset, I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) that since the agriculture committee is to be organized later this afternoon or this evening, we might by unanimous consent consider referring the Bill to the agriculture committee rather than to a legislative committee in the hope that it might more expeditiously handle the Bill.

Bill C-7 does two things. It amends Section 204(2) of the Criminal Code and Section 204(8) of the Criminal Code and provides that pari-mutuel bets can be placed in a teletheatre as well as by telephone, as is allowed at the present time. That is the amendment to Section 204(2).

The amendment to Section 204(8) provides for the Governor in Council and the Lieutenant Governor to authorize the making of regulations by the Minister of Agriculture at the federal level and provides for the Lieutenant Governor in Council and such other persons or authority in the province as may be specified by the Lieutenant Governor in Council to issue licenses for the associations. At the technical level, those are the two amendments provided for by Bill C-7.

The impact of this legislation on the racing industry will go very far. The impact will be very important, particularly for the remote areas of Canada which do not have the population base to successfully operate race tracks on a long-term basis.

I am thinking particularly of the situation with Sudbury Downs in northern Ontario. The track has been closed, though I understand arrangements have now been made to have a racing season this fall and to have a simulcast racing operation this summer. That situation is typical of the difficulties that are faced in a number of areas of Canada, areas that simply do not have a large enough population base to support a race track.

Under this legislation, the Sudbury race track could perhaps establish teletheatre operations in the other four large cities of northern Ontario, Sault St. Marie, Thunder Bay, Timmins and North Bay. Perhaps such operations could be established in smaller communities such as Elliot Lake, communities which would be large enough to justify the establishment of such a facility. That is generally considered to be one of the most important aspects of the Bill. It will provide assistance to these tracks which are having financial difficulties. However, the Bill goes beyond that. It will help not only remote tracks like Sudbury Downs. I am not sure that if the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mrs. Marleau), were here, she would want me to talk about the Sudbury track as being remote. However, Sudbury does not have a large enough population base to make the track operate on a financially viable basis at this time. Adding to it the population of all the other large cities in northern Ontario could be very helpful in making it a viable operation.

As I understand the legislation, smaller local race track associations throughout Ontario and perhaps in other provinces as well will be able to operate teletheatres. Places like Kingston, Belleville and other communities which do have very short racing seasons will be able to operate teletheatres throughout the season. Perhaps it will make the race tracks more viable by providing a longer racing season and will also provide more revenue, not only to the track but to the horsemen. However, if a signal from one of the larger tracks in Toronto is being received by racing associations in other communities, the percentage of benefit to local horsemen and local tracks will be cut in two because it will have to be divided with the originating track as well.

In 1985, legislation was passed with respect to inter-track betting. That has been an existing situation where there has been a track meet and a betting situation. To have it operate in other seasons has not been permitted, as far as I understand from the legislation. There is a general upgrading and improvement in the benefits. A person may ask why, if the industry was viable a few years ago, it is not now. The problem is that this industry is a form of entertainment. It is competing with many other forms of entertainment. I looked at a report or an over-view conducted by Woods Gordon in 1985 on the economic impact of horse racing in Canada. This report is slightly dated, however I believe the impact and the percentages would be very similar.

The report suggests that in 1983 the expenditures on horse racing were approximately $31 per annum, per family, I assume. By comparison, for government-operated lotteries it was $138 per year. At that time other raffles got $32 per year. The report also lists other entertainment activities, such as live arts performances, movies, and professional sports.

The actual penetration and the escalation in costs for horse racing have pulled away the profits from this industry in areas with a smaller population, such as Sudbury Downs and other smaller areas across the country. I believe that the legislation will benefit those operations.

The Minister mentioned the 100,000 jobs involved in the horse racing industry. At least in the smaller areas, the vast majority of those jobs are not on the track but are on the farms that provide raising and breeding areas, and the production of feed and hay. It is a broad-based industry in terms of providing employment, and a very important industry in that regard.

The Minister also made reference to a booklet published in 1987 regarding teletheatre wagering and the consultation that has taken place. Many of the racing commissions have expressed concern about the legislation. Generally speaking, in the past the federal Government has had the responsibility for pari-mutuel betting. However, the general operation of tracks is carried out by provincial Governments or provincial racing commissions. Some provinces see this as diminishing their authority to oversee and manage the whole horse racing industry. Concerns have been expressed by the owners and breeders that they should have an important role. I am sure that in committee stage there will be an opportunity to explore those concerns.

As I understand the proposed regulations, there will have to be an acceptable agreement between the horsemen and the track. This agreement will have to be acceptable to the federal Government, to the horse racing section of the Department of Agriculture. To some extent that should allay those fears and concerns. However, many of the provincial regulatory bodies still feel that their over-all control will be diminished by the legislation.

The federal Government will set out the home market area in which teletheatres can operate. Beyond that, the provincial regulatory body will have some jurisdiction, but not with regard to setting the home market area. Regulations will be enforced by the provincial Government. However, it will not make those regulations and it will not necessarily have input into them, although it probably will have some input since it controls the agencies and the regulatory body. Provincial agencies have expressed the concern that there will be no provision for a competitive process for the operation of the teletheatres.

Those are the concerns expressed by some provincial Governments. I hope we will have an opportunity to hear them at close range when the Bill is considered by the Standing Committee or the legislative committee, whichever it goes to.

In the second part of the proposed Bill it authorizes the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) to make regulations which will define teletheatre betting, teletheatre licensing, and the theatre market area. The regulations will allow for ownership or leasing of theatre facilities by a racing association. Under the regulation there will be provision to prevent a teletheatre from becoming a betting shop, and certain criteria and standards must be met. That is very important, otherwise it could deteriorate solely into a betting theatre.

In some states in the United States it is like cable television. The teletheatres can become as important as the race track. It is very important that there be co-operation between the two levels of Government to ensure that the teletheatre is not wagging the race tracks, and that there is good co-operation between the two levels of Government in that regard. The regulations also provide that there be an agreement between the horsemen and the track whenever a teletheatre operation is established.

Those are some of the regulations that I am told will be brought into play when the legislation is adopted by the Government and the Department is able to put in place those regulations. Those are the main points that I wished to raise. There is concern from the provincial regulatory agencies that they be addressed in the committee hearings. They have the over-all responsibility for enforcing the operation of the race tracks in their provinces.

This legislation can be beneficial to the racing industry to extend its approach across the country in an expanded market area, providing entertainment and ensuring that horse racing continues, not only so that jobs are provided but that entertainment is provided. We have to assume that betting will take place, whether it is buying a Wintario ticket or by going to the Saturday night bingo. It is important that if we are to have betting that it should be on a controlled basis where there is some benefit to Government. In fact, most benefits in horse racing go back to the patrons and the tracks. Provincial Governments do very well out of the whole arrangement. My understanding is that the federal Government barely breaks even. Its operation is to ensure the reliability and the policing of pari-mutuel betting. Most of the tax benefits go to the provincial Governments. In any event, it is a vital industry. There are 100,000 jobs in the horse racing industry which encompass farming operations, breeding operations and the livestock industry which supports and encourages it. If you compare the horse racing industry with a number of other major industries in Canada, a very large number of people are involved.

I hope we can devise a Bill that will protect the rights of society and that we do not descend to a situation of uncontrolled gambling shops but provide a high-quality pari-mutuel teletheatre arrangement which will be beneficial to the industry without any adverse effect on the community at large.

We want to see this legislation go to committee where it can be given more detailed study. From the briefing that a couple of us in our caucus had, it is obviously quite a complicated industry even though the amendments before us today are quite simple in themselves. We want to see this Bill move on to committee stage.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I appreciate the Hon. Member's comments and his obvious support for the Bill. In light of the support and the fact that this measure has been around since 1987 in at least a proposed form, would he consider moving the Bill through all stages today?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, we believe that generally the Bill is beneficial but it is a measure that has never been debated before. There have been concerns expressed by some provincial agencies. We want to see the legislation dealt with expeditiously but we prefer to see that done in the committee, as proposed before the House today.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, just a further point of order. This Bill would normally go to a legislative committee but the offer was made by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) that it go to the Agriculture Committee. If it is the intention of the Opposition to have the Bill dealt with in committee, I would certainly support the suggestion of sending it to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. If there is agreement from the New Democratic Party and the Liberals, perhaps we could make that agreement right here.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, our Party would be quite willing to send the matter to the Standing Committee on Agriculture rather than to the legislative committee.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I wrote to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) because of the concern we in the Sudbury Basin had about the closing of Sudbury Downs. The owners of that track have long requested and supported teletheatre betting. In fact, horsemen who operate at the track and the owners of the track negotiated the collective agreement which provided for 50 per cent of the revenues from teletheatre betting to go to them in increased purses. I want to let the Deputy Prime Minister know that if we on this side had received the support of the Liberal Party, we would have liked to see the Bill go through all stages. It is long overdue and it will really help northern Ontario which has the one standard bred track, a B track, in Sudbury which has a very small population. This Bill would put racing entertainment into all corners of northern Ontario.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in light of that very convincing support, maybe the Hon. Member from Algoma and his Party may want to reconsider. I always find the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) very persuasive, very articulate and very emotional when he has to be. Today he made his point in a very clear and coherent fashion without any emotion. I appreciate his support. I think he has hit the nail right on the head. It is important that this matter be moved very quickly.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have been following this conversation with interest.

I take it the Government is now proposing that the order on second reading be changed and that the Bill be referred to the Agriculture Committee. With that I agree. I have no difficulties that debate continue and when debate on second reading is terminated the Bill can go to that committee.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I rise on second reading debate on Bill C–7, to amend the Criminal Code with regard to parimutuel betting at race tracks. This is one of the items that reinforces the variety of the agriculture critic. This Bill comes under the aegis of the Department of Agriculture because of its role in monitoring race tracks, the way animals are treated, testing for doping and so on. RCMP officers are used at the tracks to provide the legal overview. I understand those members of the RCMP are temporarily paid by the Department of Agriculture so they too become members of the vast Department of Agriculture for the period of time they are thus engaged.

Horse racing in Canada, as we all know, has been a longstanding form of entertainment for people. It is something that we brought from our European and Asian roots as well as from our North American roots. Regardless of our ethnic background, horse racing has been very much a part of our culture. It has continued to be the case in Canada from the days when furlong races occurred between the cross–roads of Ontario and Quebec farms because the survey system was measured in furlongs. Many races are still held on a furlong and a fraction basis. That tradition remains with us.

The racing industry has been used as a means of developing competition, both as to who can develop the best training techniques, who can produce the fastest horses and who can provide that last little technical advice at the jockey level to produce a winner by a nose instead of a loser by half a length.

So it is something that we have grown up with, that we are interested in maintaining. It still attracts the attention of a great many Canadians. It is still one of the largest spectator sports in this country because of its entertainment value. But because it has developed as an industry, as often happens when you are attempting to develop something that is faster and better than somebody else, there is the element of competition that makes it a business. Part of the financing of that business has always been the sale of breeding stock, with the owners and producers of the very fastest horses getting a premium price for the seed stock that they have raised and produced.

Over time most cultures have developed a tradition of having little wagers as to which horse is going to be the fastest, just as often happens with any competition. This has probably been more prevalent in horse racing than in many other sports. Horse racing has probably taken wagering to greater heights than a lot of other sports in that it has always attempted to keep the wagering above board and legal.

As we all know, some of the small country tracks do not permit pari-mutuel betting. The wagering still goes on for nickels and dimes and sometimes fairly large paper money, but it is always done between individuals or small groups of individuals to add to the spice of each particular race.

A few years ago, the Government introduced changes to the pari-mutuel betting Bill which would permit the use of the teletheatre as a means of extending the racing season and making it possible for people to observe races outside the country and to place bets in those teletheatres. For those for whom the betting is very important, this permits them to be involved a little more in races such as the Kentucky Derby, some of the big stake breeders' cup races, the Breeders' Crown, and the standard bred side.

Of the 18 tracks that permit betting on foreign races, last year $10.4 million was bet on foreign races which was a 34.4 per cent increase over 1987. That aspect of the tele-betting is just beginning to start. People are just beginning to remember that there are tele-betting shops for foreign racing and are beginning to take advantage of it. The implication to the racing industry of the expansion of the types of betting possible is such that it means larger amounts of money for the racehorse owners who do share in the revenue from the betting, both in tele-betting and in regular betting at the tracks. So this permits them to eventually have larger purses, and in fact that seems to be happening to some extent. We note that last year the gross purses available under the licensed tracks in Canada went up from $159 million or thereabouts in 1987 to $178 million in 1988, an increase of almost 12 per cent.

So it has increased the revenue to the racing industry and permits more purses and larger purses so that the owners of the race horses can have more funds available to them for expansion of their industry. This industry has very few other places to go. As I say, it is very large in the entertainment field in terms of attracting a lot of spectators. In this day and age about the only expansion that they can make is to big screen television.

They have done a reasonably good job of getting horse racing included in our national sporting events. Though, to be fair, CBC, CTV, the national networks only carry a very few races in the course of their sports broadcasting during a year. They carry the Queen's Plate, the Kentucky Derby and only a few other races on an annual basis. It is not attracting the attention of the television networks that Hockey Night in Canada does, or some of those kinds of television spectaculars. As a result, the opportunity for the racing fraternity to get into commercialization or the advertising that might accrue from more televised broadcasting of their races, has been more or less cut off from them. So they have retaliated and responded by making proposals to extend the season for particular race tracks by going to television betting, so that people can go out to the track, have a meal or a drink, do some visiting and place bets right through to the last races in the season.

We are told that this gives opportunities for tracks, particularly in the more sparsely-settled parts of the country, to extend the season. For instance, in my area the racing season could begin at Lloydminster with television showing in Saskatoon and Regina. Followers of the races could begin by following the season on television in Saskatoon and Regina, watch the races in Lloydminster and, as the horse owners shift into Saskatoon and end up in Regina, the televised section could go back to the cities that no longer have the live races. This could extend the betting season for the general public. It gives an opportunity for increased revenues for the participants and horse owners.

This is an era when some parts of the country are having difficulty maintaining economic viability. You only have to go through the racing figures to see that those provinces that are having the most economic pressure are having it reflected in the take at the tracks. For instance, Saskatchewan, New Brunswick, Manitoba and British Columbia have been under some economic pressure. It is no surprise that the amount of betting being done at tracks in those provinces went down slightly last year, reflecting that. So there has been economic pressure put on the racing industry from competition, from the general downturn in the economy for some of them and competition for leisure dollars which race track owners are hoping to be able to offset with the move into more televised betting and the use of the telephone into those betting stations.

For those who look at racing from the point of view of gambling dollars, there is more competition with the increase in casinos and bingos across the country. The money being spent at those options are increasing in most of the provinces. Thus, pari-mutuel betting is up against that type of direct competition. That competition probably draws a slightly different kind of crowd in that most people who have been involved in race track pari-mutuel betting like to see the horses and like to see the race. They like to be there or at least close enough to see it on a big screen. It is a little different from watching cards. Some people have to see the horse, which is the main kick.

This is permissive legislation which requires the acceptance of each of the provinces and their respective racing commissions. We are hopeful that the legislation will recognize that to the point that each province will be cognizant of it and form their own policy groups, probably made up of their own racing commissions, representatives of Agriculture Canada, the race tracks or the race track owners in the particular province and the provincial horsemen's associations which are racing at those tracks. It would be much simpler all round if these four groups were involved right from the beginning in setting the policy for each province. However, I am not sure that this point has to be stated in the legislation. We understand that some of the groups may want to put that point forward as the legislation goes to committee.

There have been a few concerns expressed in this regard. However, the reception from the horse racing community has been positive. Those involved in it have been under considerable pressure in some parts of the country as a result of the general economic downturn. Some of them have felt the pressure from Revenue Canada with changes in the interpretation of who is a farmer and who is not. That is something important to the over-all health of the racing industry since the smaller race horse operators are very much a necessity in terms of keeping the industry alive. They have to be able to increase and improve the breed. They also have an important role to play. It is not a question of the top breeders who have to be maintained. We also have to maintain the balance of the system. It has to be kept in relative good health, otherwise moderate to good horses have no other place to go.

Without the small operators and the small tracks the industry could not survive. It is a question of general genetics and so on that only a few of the top horses ever actually make it into the top sales and record books. For that reason we are supportive of this initiative. We will be supportive of it as it leaves the House in the form of legislation. We hope the initiative will strengthen the industry both by lengthening the season through the use of telephone and television and that it is successful in its attempt to increase revenues at the farm level where the horse owners need it.

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to take part in this debate today. I want to say that I am further pleased that there has been all-Party agreement that the Bill should go to the Agriculture Committee of the House of Commons as soon as possible.

First, I want to say that the Canadian horse industry and the racing industry is perhaps one of the best regulated industries of any country in the world. It has gained reputation for its excellence, not only for the horses but for the horsemen we have in Canada. Horse racing has always been referred to as the sport of kings. It is also the poor man's sport. I well recall the first year I went to high school. I rode a horse in those early years, a horse that was not broken until it was seven years old. We had a lot of exciting times en route.

I am also extremely interested in the Bill since over the last week or two I have discussed it with some of my neighbours, some of whom are involved in the industry, people such as Bernie Geerts, the Warners, Dr. Chris Deuzeman, Cecil Maddock and, last but not least, the Campbell family. I refer here to Ray Campbell and his son Rob, but more particularly to Duncan Campbell of Ailsa Craig who was inducted into the Canadian Horseman's Hall of Fame on January 21, 1983. Duncan Campbell is 89 years old and still owns a race horse.

This remarkable family, headed by Duncan, along with his two sons Ray and Jack, still race and train race horses. Grandson Jim is an excellent trainer and grandsons Rob and John are drivers. John Campbell of Ailsa Craig is one of the leading drivers in North America to date this year. He was the leading driver in North America for the last three out of four years. I am proud to reflect on the exploits and the tradition of excellence displayed by the Campbell family.

I support the principle of the Bill. However, there are some areas of concern which I believe will be resolved when it is referred to committee. The first area of concern, and perhaps the most important, is one on which I will dwell for only a few moments. It is the indication that the Minister will decide the market area. I, for one, would like to have a very clear understanding of how this decision will be made and what will be taken into consideration as the basis for it. I refer here to the example in southwestern Ontario where we have race tracks at London, Hiawatha at Sarnia, Windsor and at Dresden mid-way between Sarnia and Windsor. Dresden Raceway runs about 24 race dates per year. It is not the typical city track that we see outside Toronto, or at Flamboro', Fort Erie or Woodbine. This track is in a rural area originally established to coincide with the fall fair.

It is the type of track that does not have a fancy dining lounge. However, there is a series of excellent restaurants in the community and surrounding communities. Its clientele is quite unusual and there is an atmosphere of neighbour meeting neighbour. It is an atmosphere of "We'll see you at the races". It is a picnic-type atmosphere which means so much to the area. It is noted for its good racing and its Sire Stakes.

As we put this Bill into legislation, it is important that we look to see the impact it may have on an operation such as this one, which is surrounded by three much larger cities. If the teletheatre is introduced we will see how it will impact on this track. Will there be opportunities there for the people who attend the races and for the horsemen who race there to have their share of the action so that they will not be elbowed out by larger places?

I have had very positive comments about the test markets at Hiawatha at Sarnia where last winter there was a test that was successful. However, it was not as successful as it could have been due to cut-backs in staffing at the Blue Water Bridge into Michigan. There were long line-ups in traffic. As a result, about 70 per cent of the clientele came from the Ontario side while only 30 per cent was from Michigan. It was really not an accurate test. Although it was not accurate, I believe it will become a positive feature of that track, in particular for the older people who want to attend a race and to see a horse running. In Toronto, people who may own or have an interest in a horse can simply go to the Hiawatha track, to London or Dresden and in the teletheatres watch their horses race. I want to make sure that this is clearly spelled out either in the legislation or in the regulations. I would be most interested to see draft regulation as to how this area will be dealt with.

Another area I want to examine for a little while in committee also—and the Minister made mention of it in his address—is that this is not an off-track betting shop concept. I want to look at it to make sure that it will have a positive impact on the industry. In this context I would like to relate to the impact of such betting shops in the State of Massachusetts which destroyed the industry. We want to make sure that does not happen here in Canada.

I would suggest that we should look at what has happened to the race tracks of Foxboro and Yonkers in Massachusetts through the introduction of the betting shop concept. I do not want to spend much time on this, but I just want to reiterate that the Canadian racing industry is one of the best in the world.

I agree in principle with the intent of the Bill. I will want to examine further the proposed regulations and the areas to be regulated to ensure the continuing viability of this industry.

With those few brief remarks, Mr. Speaker, I will look forward to studying this matter in committee.

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga West): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to rise today to make a few remarks in this debate on Bill C-7. I want to say at the outset that I am solidly in support of this piece of legislation.

My riding of Mississauga West will probably never have theatre betting because some 25 miles in one direction we have the Greenwood race track, some 15 miles in another direction we have Woodbine race track, some 30 miles in another direction we have Mohawk, and 80 miles in another direction we have Fort Erie race track. They are not going to set up a theatre betting shop in my riding and take patrons away from the race track who normally attend.

This Bill is designed to help tracks that are in trouble. I have spoken to tracks right across Canada. Tracks in Québec want this legislation. Sudbury Downs is closed today and cannot open until this legislation goes through. Manitoba wants it very badly. Assiniboia Downs in Manitoba is in a lot of trouble. Managers and owners of tracks in British Columbia have come to see me and have requested that we put through this Bill.

What we are talking about here today are jobs and a very fine industry. I know of what I speak, because from 1964 to 1971 I was a veterinarian at race tracks in Ontario. It is a very well run industry. It employs about 100,000 people who would have difficulty finding employment somewhere else. They have grown up in the racing industry. It is a family. I was very shocked to hear the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) state that he wanted the provinces to have a say in this regard. The provinces have every say in it.

The amendments before the House recognize the responsibilities and the interest of the provinces. No theatre could operate without first being granted a licence by the province. I really do not see what the problem is. I commend the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Althouse) for their insight in wanting to see this Bill go through all stages today. It is a very important Bill. It is connected very closely to agriculture.

Some great race horses have been produced in Canada, not the least of which was Northern Dancer in 1964, one of the finest race horses this world has ever known. It is nice to hear about the great racing families. There are great racing families all over the country, not only in Lambton—Middlesex. There are the Waples and Sandy Hawley who came out of Whitby and has gone on to be a riding champion in the United States.

We know that we have a small amount of illegal bookmaking on sporting events and race tracks. The police are doing everything they can to control it. There is only a small amount of bookmaking, but the Bill will assist in cutting down on the amount of bookmaking. It will make races available to people who do not have them.

I am thinking of Sudbury Downs. What is to stop having the races shown by satellite in a nice theatre not only in Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario but in Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan. This money could go back to the horsemen, keep the industry alive and keep the purses up.

What has happened in the racing industry is that it costs $50 a day to keep a horse at the race track and pay a trainer. It was once known as the sport of kings, and we all know that the Royal Family is still interested. However, today it is the sport of the common man. In my riding we have fire-fighters who own race horses. Many people form syndicates; three or four people get together and buy a race horse. There is nothing more thrilling than to see your colours come across the finish line.

I would love to see this Bill go through all stages today. The province is protected in every way possible. The province will issue the licence. We know that there is competition for the betting dollar from bingos and from lotteries. Something like 38,000 stores are selling lottery tickets, pushing all kinds of lottery tickets. We are talking about the viability of an industry, an industry that has a good image and a lot of integrity.

Let us talk about the betting dollar for a moment. Canadians in 107 race tracks across Canada last year bet $1.7 billion. The federal Government gets a bit of that, three-quarters of 1 per cent, which is just enough to support what it does for the racing industry. We control the pari-mutuel wagering. We control the photo finish cameras and the big contracts which go out to Mendelssohn Films and others. We also control the drug testing. It is very sophisticated drug testing. They can tell us within hours when a horse was given something. I have been in these testing labs at Can Test and Man Test. They can tell us what a horse is being fed. If a horse gets linseed oil to help his coat, they can tell us. They can tell us everything a horse has been given and when it was given.

The integrity of this sport is really great. All around the tracks they have patrol judges who watch the races. They make sure that there is no cheating of any kind. The racing industry is a sport with a lot of integrity and a lot of people really enjoy it.

I was interested in the comments of the Hon. Member for Mackenzie on the traditions. I am sure he and I remember in the winter-time when cars did not run on country roads. Everyone had a driver and farmers used to race to town to get their groceries.

The provincial Governments get approximately 10 per cent of every dollar that is bet, that is, a $170 million are going into the tax coffers.

This is a very important Bill. It is a very tiny little Bill, some page and a quarter. It is an amendment to the Criminal Code.

• (1630)

If we cannot get all-Party agreement to put the Bill through all stages today, I recommend that we go immediately to the Standing Committee on Agriculture where, with a few witnesses, we can ascertain that it is absolutely necessary for the viability of the racing industry. I thank you for allowing me to make those remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I just heard the Hon. Member for Mississauga West (Mr. Horner) refer to horse racing as the sport of kings. I suppose Members are wondering why a socialist would be speaking in support of this Bill. In fact, I feel some connection to the race track. Politicians have been called all parts of the anatomy of a horse, so I feel comfortable speaking to this Bill.

As a matter of fact, I remember a story about a chap who was at the race track. He was in line at the $50 win ticket window. The fellow ahead of him in line asked for a $50 ticket on number two to win. The fellow standing behind him tapped him on the shoulder and said: "Number two won't win". The fellow said: "Is that right?" and turned around to the ticket seller and said: "Give me another $50 ticket on number two to win". The guy behind him tapped him on the shoulder again and said: "I know that you bet on number two but I suggest that you don't". The other chap said: "Okay, give me another $50 on number two to win".

Finally, the fellow was so frustrated that he took him out of the line and said: "Look, there are six horses in this race. I told you that number two cannot win". The other fellow said: "How do you know number two cannot win?" And the other guy said: "I own number two". The other fellow said: "Well, it will be one slow race because I own the other five".

I know the common conception that is held by those who have no appreciation of the sport. Let us consider the contribution racing has given to this country. We have heard about the contribution in terms of the taxes that are collected. Over $100 million in taxes is collected in Ontario. Look at its contribution to pride in Canada, with Northern Dancer, the greatest stud there ever was.

Let us consider the contribution made by the jockeys like Sandy Hawley and Michel Lachance. Look at the contribution we made to track and field in Canada. All the veterinarians here will know what I am talking about.

I am supporting this Bill because we have a race track in the Sudbury area called Sudbury Downs. The population in the Sudbury basin is some 160,000. We do not have millions of people like there are in Mississauga West. We have a small population and the track must increase its revenues. If there are not enough people to come to the race track we must take racing to the population centres in northern Ontario.

That is what this Bill will provide. It would allow J. C. MacIsaac to show through satellite his racing in theatres in Thunder Bay, Sault Ste. Marie, Timmins, North Bay and any other community.

The track has not opened. There are some 300 people, including the grooms, the trainers and the drivers, who depend directly on the track for employment, as well as the farmers, the breeders and all the students who work part time when the track is operating.

Mr. Mayer: The people who supply the oats.

Mr. Rodriguez: The suppliers of feed for the horses.

It is important to the community. The track pays $176,000 in municipal taxes to the community in which it is located. If the track is closed it cannot pay any municipal taxes.

While I do not see this activity as a major thrust toward tourism for creating challenging and interesting jobs, it is a priority for the region. Racing is a jewel in that presentation of tourism. It is another form of entertainment to attract tourists into the Sudbury basin.

I totally support the Bill. It has been long overdue. The horsemen at the track have already negotiated a contract with the Sudbury Downs whereby 50 per cent of the take from teletheatre betting would reflect itself in higher purses. Sudbury Downs needs to offer higher purses so it can attract more horses and provide more competitive racing that would result in greater attendance and greater revenues through the betting windows. I see this Bill as the saviour of Sudbury Downs.

The Bill states that the Minister will define the racing area for the track. Surely it will not be done unilaterally. Surely it will be done in consultation with the various racing commissions across the country. One has to assume that common sense will prevail because no one wants to kill the goose that lays the golden egg. I am quite sure that when the regions or areas for the teletheatres are established they will take into consideration where the track is located and what areas racing should be shown.

This is the shortest speech I have made. It is because I recognize the importance of getting the Bill through very quickly. I would have preferred to see it go through all stages, as I proposed, but I have to settle for second best. Sometimes one bets to win, but one has to cover one's bets by betting to place and sometimes to show. I will accept the Bill going to the Agriculture Committee. Hopefully we can expedite it back here and have it passed, because Sudbury needs the Bill.

Let me say to the owners of the track in Sudbury that if they read this debate they will see that there is a commitment on the part of all Parties to support the principle of the Bill. All the Parties are prepared to work to get the Bill through the House.

The owners have an assurance that this Bill will be passed, and now I hope they will not delay any longer but will make provisions to open the track so that those trainers and drivers who are waiting on the grounds for this decision can begin getting some income from their labour.

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour to stand here today and agree with my friend from the right and my friend from the left. I am sure it is fairly unusual. As the Hon. Member for Sudbury, I wholeheartedly support the Bill. I certainly would like to see it passed as quickly as possible.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga West (Mr. Horner) stated that this is a sport of kings. I have known people interested in this sport. Even some Members of Parliament own horses and are very interested in the sport. There are those as well who benefit from the sport such as veterinarians, and I believe that the Hon. Member to my right is one of them. A member of my own caucus is a member of that same profession, and they certainly benefit from the sport. All kinds of people enjoy the benefits of horse racing, particularly horse owners and track owners. The people who attend race tracks, if they can take away a few winnings, enjoy it. It certainly provides for a very enjoyable evening.

It was with great sadness that I heard earlier this year that Sudbury Downs was not planning to reopen its doors. Today I am told that because this Bill has been tabled and there is hope that it will move forward quickly, it will reopen its doors this year. Everyone in Sudbury is very happy about that. It means the preservation of a number of jobs. We in Sudbury and area all appreciate jobs, believe me.

I would like to correct one Hon. Member. The Hon. Member to my left said that the Sudbury area has a small population. Small is only small in terms of how it is qualified. I always resent people telling me that I come from a small population base when that population base is 150,000. It is nice to tell people that it really is not that small. When it is compared to a population base in the millions such as that of southern Ontario, I suppose it is small.

I do take some offence to being told that Sudbury is remote. The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) realizes that even though we live in northern Ontario, we do not consider it to be remote. I invite everyone to come there and enjoy what we have to offer and to spend their money, to visit Science North and to enjoy our great tourist attractions including Sudbury Downs.

I am certainly happy to support this Bill and I would hope it passes as quickly as possible.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the whole of this debate. All speakers from all Parties are in favour of the Bill. However, I am glad that the Bill is to go through the normal process that should apply to all legislation except in the case of dire emergencies.

If this Bill were truly as urgent as the Government says it is and as high a priority as it portrays it to be, it could have brought the Bill forward in the last Parliament. The Government could have brought it forward a year and a half or even two years ago and it could have been law long since. The reason the Bill is not now the law of the land is because the Government has given it a low priority. Instead of seeking to deal with it the way legislation is normally dealt with which is to say through parliamentary channels, the Government has tended to adopt a last minute strategy. Bills are presented as being urgently needed to be passed within hours or all opportunity to see them become law will be lost.

The Government should get serious about this Bill. It should encourage it to go through the normal process with at least one hearing so that we can hear about other aspects of the Bill than the main focus of the agriculture committee which is to ensure that the agricultural industry in every sector is healthy, and I wish the committee well in that goal.

For my part, I hope to be able to attend the meetings of the agriculture committee. Although I am not the agriculture critic for my Party, I am the justice critic and this is an amendment to the Criminal Code. I am also interested to know why it is that a number of provinces including the Province of Ontario are objecting to this Bill. I would like to hear their points of view. As well, I would like to hear why the United Church of Canada objects to this Bill. To view these objections and the process implied by these objections as somehow being an obstruction is totally unworthy.

We are parliamentarians here. We ought to recognize that there is a right way and a wrong way to deal with legislation. We know that there are serious voices like at least one or more provincial Government and a very important religious institution that wish to be heard. We should not urge each other to try to rush the Bill through without giving it the minimum amount of debate.

We in Canada have reasonable procedures and I think we should follow those reasonable procedures. Normally, a Criminal Code amendment would go to the justice committee, but that is a technicality. I intend to participate in the process of the Bill as it goes through the agriculture committee, and I would urge all Hon. Members, particularly new Members, to take our rules seriously. Let us not depart from them. Let us not seek unanimous consent to try to depart from procedures that have been established and tested by time without a very good reason for doing so.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, I suppose almost everyone has his or her favourite story relating to the sport of kings. I do not know if I can proffer a story as colourful as that of my Hon. friend from Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). I certainly cannot match his colourful oratory.

I live very near Assiniboia Downs in the City of Winnipeg. It is located in my riding of Winnipeg—St. James. I have visited Assiniboia Downs many, many times, being about only five minutes from there. I have at times zipped out to Assiniboia Downs after dinner in the evening to catch a couple of races.

I recall a number of years ago being at Assiniboia Downs with a friend of mine. He and I were having a chat between races and we were set upon, as it were, by a young boy of I would say about ten years old, and he turned to my friend whose name was Joe, by the way, and asked him: "Who is going to win the next quinella?"

My friend Joe did not have much patience, but the young boy persisted. Finally Joe sort of shooed him away and said: "Oh, go away, it will be one and ten."

You probably know the end of the story, Mr. Speaker. One-In-Ten did come in and the boy collected hugely while on the other hand, my friend Joe did not collect a nickel because he did not bet on one and ten.

I am sure that that does not match the story told by my friend from Nickel Belt. I do not know whether his story is true or apocryphal, but mine is true.

I rise this afternoon in support of this initiative perhaps because my closeness to Assiniboia Downs which is of course the major race track in the Province of Manitoba. I support this initiative and the proposed legislation. I certainly would not want to hold it up, but I agree with my hon. friend from York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). We should take our parliamentary business seriously. We should take the democratic process seriously, and we should not rush this through.

I listened to my hon. friend from Mississagua West suggest quite seriously and sincerely that this Bill should be put through all stages this afternoon. I think that that would be moving much too quickly. The Government did have its time to do this earlier. For some reason, it neglected its business. We can wait a few more days before this piece of legislation is enacted.

After all, people are entitled to express their views, to bring forward their opinions and to ask questions. I was speaking to one of my colleagues from Prince Edward Island this afternoon and he told me how important the racetrack in Charlottetown is. In that relatively small city within that relatively small community, last year alone, wagering amounted to some $6 million at that race track. That is a lot of money and that is a lot of jobs. It is a significant industry in the area. I am sure the people from that area would have some questions, views and opinions, and we should afford them the opportunity to make a presentation at the agriculture committee if they so choose. Surely, as parliamentarians, we should afford them that opportunity. That is the least we can do, even though there is all-Party agreement that this Bill should go forward to its conclusion.

• (1650)

The Bill is important to the industry. It is certainly important to Assiniboia Downs and to the racing industry in the Province of Manitoba. For example, it is a vital tourist attraction. Our city is only a few miles from the United States border. There is no major league racing, if I can put it that way, in the State of North Dakota. Thousands and thousands of visitors and tourists flock north from North Dakota, South Dakota, and the State of Minnesota to the Province of Manitoba and to Assiniboia Downs to enjoy an afternoon or an evening at the races. This legislation will ultimately enhance the business and make this industry more attractive.

In my province, Assiniboia Downs and the racing industry employ roughly 3,000 people. That is very significant. We as parliamentarians have a responsibility to support that type of industry. I have been told that if the Bill goes through, which I am sure that it will, it could add 500 to 600 jobs to the industry. Again, I consider that significant. We should throw our support behind it as much as possible.

Over half the population of the Province of Manitoba resides in the capital City of Winnipeg. The other half of the population, approximately 500,000 people, is scattered throughout the rest of the province. There are many race fans in the cities of Brandon, Dauphin, Thompson, Swan River, Flin Flon, and The Pas. As this industry expands and grows it is not hard to envisage that there could be theatre betting established in the City of Brandon or in the City of Dauphin. I feel strongly that they are entitled to it.

Going out for an evening at the races is a pleasant pastime. Many times I have gone to Assiniboia Downs to enjoy the races. I do not only enjoy the races, but I enjoy the restaurant facilities and the company of friends. It is an evening out, a real social occasion. It is not only watching the ponies running or betting. It is a full package. It would go over very well in communities such as Brandon, Dauphin, The Pas, Swan River, or wherever the industry feels that it can reach out. We should support this type of initiative.

I want to say one more thing about giving people the opportunity to express themselves. Almost nothing in this world can be construed as motherhood, and there are people who are down on wagering of this nature or who are down on any type of betting. The business of racing, the sport of kings, has its detractors. Those people have a right to tell us their concerns and reservations. We should facilitate hearing those people. Like my friend, the Hon. Member for York Centre I would like to hear from the United Church of Canada if indeed that particular church has reservations or concerns. In the fine tuning of the legislation, if that comes to be, if we can fine tune it perhaps to alleviate some of their concerns then we have done our work.

While this piece of legislation deserves our support, let us send it to the agricultural committee where the democratic process can go forward. There is still time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand there is unanimous consent this afternoon to refer the Bill to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Cardiff: Co–operation has been achieved this afternoon from all Parties of the House. I want to thank all Members who participated in the debate for that co–operation, and in the spirit of co–operation I would ask the Speaker to call it six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 11 a.m.

The House adjourned at 4.56 p.m.

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

CONCERN OF CANADIANS REGARDING TRAGIC EVENTS IN LEBANON

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the recent tragic events in Lebanon are of concern to all Canadians, and I am sure all Members of the House share the Government's sense of compassion for the many victims of latest troubles.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has already stressed this great concern on several occasions.

On March 31, Canada participated in the Security Council meeting on Lebanon and we expressed our support for the statement issued by the president of the Security Council at that time.

Mr. Speaker, what has been happening in the last month in Beirut is of course only the latest stage in the civil war which has rent that country for the last 14 years, and it cannot be seen in isolation.

Throughout these events, Canada's support for the sovereignty, national unity and territorial integrity of Lebanon has been steadfast, and that remains the fundamental basis of our position.

As part of this, we have repeatedly supported the principle of the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon.

[English]

We believe that all Lebanese parties must make further efforts toward national reconciliation and, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) stated on March 30, we do not consider that violence is the route to national reconciliation. We have therefore called upon all the parties concerned to redouble their efforts to achieve national reconciliation.

The complexity of the Lebanese problem hardly needs underlining. It is known to have defeated the well-meaning efforts of numerous outside parties, but this is no reason to stop trying. This is why we have supported the efforts of the Arab League Ministerial Committee, led by the foreign Minister of Kuwait, Sheik Sabah. Our support for his efforts has been conveyed directly to the Government of Kuwait and we have urged the parties concerned, particularly Syria and the Lebanese parties, to co-operate with the Arab League efforts. We also welcome the latest initiative by President Mitterrand.

Over the years, Canada has done its part to help alleviate the suffering of Lebanon and the Lebanese. Canada has given refuge to thousands of Lebanese who have chosen to make their homes with us. We are proud of their contribution to our national life, which is indeed reflected in the composition of the membership of this House.

• (1110)

We are also proud of Canada's record of humanitarian assistance to Lebanon given with a view to helping those parties directly affected. Likewise, Canada has provided peace-keeping troops, both at the beginning of the mandate of the United Nations forces in south Lebanon or UNIFIL, and in our ongoing participation in the United Nations Truce Supervisory Organization, UNTSO.

[Translation]

In view of the latest developments, we have taken, or are taking further measures to help in a practical way.

As already mentioned, we support President Mitterrand's initiative. In this connection we are also pursuing discussions with the permanent members of the Security Council.

On April 17, I announced tangible Canadian support for Lebanon in the form of a grant of $500,000 in response to a special appeal by the Red Cross. This money will be used to provide food, clothing, medicine and other necessities to those who have suffered from the latest events.

Lebanon, along with Canada and France, is a member of la francophonie and at the forthcoming summit in Dakar, we will be exploring other practical ways to increase international support for Lebanon.

In view of the current situation, the Minister of Immigration has decided that removals of unsuccessful refugee claimants to Lebanon have been temporarily suspended pending clarification of the situation there.

Moreover, because of the deteriorating situation in Lebanon an Immigration officer has been sent to Cyprus to help ensure that our capability of processing Lebanese immigration applications is not interrupted by the current events.

Our embassy in Damascus remains in a close touch with events in Beirut as is possible. Indeed one locally-engaged member of the staff was in Beirut as recently as April 10.

[English]

With these and similar measures, we continue to do what we can to offer practical help to Lebanon and the Lebanese people. Ultimately, however, what is required is a political solution. For this, we must in the final analysis look to the Lebanese themselves and to others directly involved, especially Syrians, to demonstrate that their professions of support for the principles of national unity and independence are more than mere slogans. They must be matched by a genuine commitment to national reconciliation and by compromises which can lead to the election of a new president acceptable to all Lebanese communities.

As a first step, Canada repeats its call for agreement to and respect for an immediate cease-fire. The Government would welcome the views of other Hon. Members of the House and indeed of other Canadians on this tragic situation.

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I have risen in the House twice this week to address the situation in Lebanon. Many of my colleagues have also raised concerns about this same situation. There has to be an end to the pain and suffering that the people of Lebanon are living through day in and day out and Canada must fulfil its responsibility as a member of the international community by providing whatever assistance possible.

To my question about Canada taking the initiative and calling for an emergency debate in the Security Council, the Secretary of State insisted that a debate was not warranted at this time as, according to the Minister, it would not have any effect on this situation. Canada does have a part to play. One of the reasons I hope Canada lobbied so hard to get a seat on the Security Council was to play an active role in crises such as these. We now have this seat and we must not be meek in fully utilizing our position to maintain the level of influence in world affairs that Liberal Governments had developed in the past.

I have asked both the Secretary of State and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) what the Government is doing to help those refugees who are no longer in Lebanon but who have fled to neighbouring countries. I have not received a satisfactory response from either of them. In fact, I did not get a response from the Prime Minister at all.

While we applaud the aid that Canada has offered Lebanon through the Red Cross, I suggest that Canada can do more. Earlier this week, I asked the Government to provide additional funds for those people fleeing the crisis in Lebanon who are now in neighbouring countries. This should be aid over and above the half million dollars that is to be put to use in Lebanon.

To the suggestion from my Liberal colleagues and I that Canada open an office in Cyprus so that the refugees from Lebanon would not have to go to Syria to obtain visas, there was no response. The suggestion was not even addressed. It is irresponsible to expect people fleeing a situation in which Syria is directly involved to be forced by the inadequate policies of this Government to have to go to Damascus in order to receive help in coming to Canada.

We as Parliamentarians have an obligation to take actions that will result in the restoration of peace in Lebanon. We cannot sit back and watch events unfold with eyes glazed over, unable to comprehend the reality of the vicious wars that have engulfed Lebanon for far too long.

The time for action is nigh. Why does Canada, under this rudderless Government, always wait to see what the rest of the world is doing and then say: "Me too"? Why can't the Government show some leadership? Why can't Canada take the lead and let other countries follow us?

Canada is highly respected around the world for its fairness to all people regardless of where they live and under what political system. We are highly regarded for our humanitarian response to people finding themselves in crisis situations, be it caused by earthquakes, floods or war.

Canada, under Liberal Governments, has always demonstrated an open-door policy to refugees from around the world. That is why we have been pressing the Government, through private Member's statements and in Question Period, to do something quickly to help the Lebanese refugees, be they caught within the walls of Beirut or outside the borders of Lebanon.

[Translation]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) for her speech on Lebanon this morning. As the Minister said, the events in Lebanon are a matter of concern to us all, and the Members of the New Democratic Party wish to express their compassion for the victims of this civil war, a war that is having increasingly tragic consequences.

We are pleased that the Canadian Government has taken some measures to help Lebanon, such as offering $500,000 in aid, and we support the efforts of the French Government, both diplomatic and humanitarian.

[English]

I am thinking particularly of the actions being taken by France to evacuate the wounded. We know that is a very dangerous undertaking on the part of the French and we appreciate that it is being done.

Having said a word of approval about what the Government has done so far in terms of the $500,000 in aid, I also want to say, along with my Liberal colleague, that this is not enough. There are many other things which the Government could have been doing up until now which it has not done.

We second the hope of the Government that the Arab Ministerial Committee will be able to bring about the kind of political negotiation for a context in which a peaceful and political solution might be found. We share the view that Syria and all Lebanese parties will have to come to their senses, that this kind of violence is not the way to create the kind of Lebanon that anyone wants for the future.

We also believe that the Canadian Government could have used its position on the Security Council to have shown leadership. This is a criticism that we have offered before, not only with respect to Lebanon, but with respect to other issues. Why did we lobby for two years to get on the Security Council if we were not going to be a country that takes initiative on the Security Council, whether it is calling for an emergency debate on Lebanon, or whatever the case may be. We did not go on the Security Council only to be spectators, or to wait and see what other people were going to do and then give our support to a French initiative, as in this case, or to an initiative from another country in another case? That has not been Canada's historical role. We hope that the Canadian Government will finally seize the opportunity to show the type of leadership that it so desperately wanted when it sought to be on the Security Council.

We share with all Canadians our feeling for the suffering, not only the obvious suffering of the people of Lebanon, but also the suffering of the Lebanese community here in Canada. Not so long ago this anxiety brought itself to Parliament Hill in the form of the hijacking. People must have a tremendous anxiety about what is going on in their homeland and what is happening to their friends and relatives. As the Hon. Liberal Member has stated, we urge the Government to do more in terms of facilitating and expediting the matter of dealing with the refugees seeking to leave Lebanon from Lebanon, and also those people who are in third countries. The Government must make every possible effort to deal with those refugees who are of concern to the Lebanese community here, and to everyone else.

The Government mentioned la francophonie. Both with this issue and other issues, I hope that the Government will do its best to make that a political forum to deal with this type of situation, in the way that the Commonwealth has become a forum for dealing with issues such as South Africa. At its last meeting matters such as human rights violations were very low on the agenda, and it was not a conflict-oriented agenda. If it is going to fulfil the role that it can fulfil in the world, that is something that the Government must seek to make of la francophonie.

Finally, we join with everyone else to plead with the people of Lebanon. It is an intractable situation that, for years and years, has defied the best efforts of many countries, nations, and leaders. We say to all parties in Lebanon, particularly to Syria, that it is about time that they saw that this type of violence is not the way toward the Lebanon of the future that anybody desires. The international community is waiting and is there to help sort out the problems, if the parties to the problems will show the appropriate willingness. We hope that the Government will do everything in its power to bring about that type of situation.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 34(1), I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the report of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, the report of the official parliamentary delegation which represented Canada in Grenada and St. Vincent and the Grenadines from February 10 to 19, 1989.

PETITIONS

UTILIZATION OF PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present another petition in support of the Port of Churchill. This petition has been signed by a number of people from The Pas, Manitoba. The petitioners indicate their support for the full utilization of the Port of Churchill. They believe that it will improve the economy of Canada's prairie provinces, and that there is a need for the federal Government to develop the obvious potential of Canada's only inland seaport.

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to direct the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board to ensure that, at the very least, 3 per cent of Canada's annual grain shipments be shipped through the Port of Churchill, and that the Government aggressively pursue additional ways to utilize this important seaport to ship exports other than grain.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT CREDITS FOR NUCLEAR SUBMARINES BE ALLOTTED TO MEDICAL RESEARCH

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): I also have a petition in which the undersigned ask the House that the federal Government be urged to increase its contributions to the provinces for the financing of health services in hospitals; to cancel the construction of two nuclear submarines worth $2 billion each; to invest these $4 billion in research in order to find a cure for AIDS, cancer and cardiovascular diseases; these funds would also enable all hospitals in Canada to acquire the equipment and instruments they need to alleviate the suffering of their patients.

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray that the health of Canadians will be a priority for all Canadian parliaments.

OPPOSITION TO TAXATION OF MUSIC LESSONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to S.O. 36, I have a petition signed by several constituents from Ottawa—Vanier and other areas, to the effect that a sales tax on music lessons would hit middle-income families which would then no longer be able to afford them. A sales tax on music lessons would penalize our young Canadians, talents would remain undiscovered, and the future of Canadian music, both nationally and internationally, would be seriously threatened.

Music teachers also play an active part in the education departments of all Canadian provinces. Their knowledge and expertise give students the skills and ability they require to be admitted to the music departments of our universities.

Therefore your petitioners humbly pray Parliament to consider music lessons as an educational process, thereby exempting them from the sales tax to be included in the next Budget on April 27.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I have received an application for an emergency debate. The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 52 to seek leave to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent and pressing concern, namely, the proposed changes in regulations affecting post-secondary education programs for aboriginal Canadians.

These proposed changes have been universally rejected by the aboriginal community across Canada. The proposed regulations, together with the attendant proposed cap on funding, would have the opposite effect of what the Government claims. If this capping is proceeded with, instead of achieving genuine equality of access to higher education, it will have the exact reverse effect.

If you rule in favour of the motion, Mr. Speaker, I would be only too happy to participate in the debate and put forward more relevant information in this context. It is time for more justice not less justice for aboriginal Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: I should say to Hon. Members and to the public that I am quite sure there is great concern about this issue. As is appropriate, some time ago I received notice of the application that has just been heard. I have given it some very careful consideration. It is also important to understand that the Speaker must exercise some care in the granting of an emergency debate, that the issue is not whether the matter is important, but whether it can be pursued in this House in another way.

• (1130)

I say to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), who has eloquently spoken on this issue, as have other Members, that the Speaker views this matter as one of very great concern and importance. It is not very often that the Speaker will indicate to Hon. Members what I am about to say but, I think on this issue I will. As the Member for Vancouver South and as someone very concerned with this matter, I have also as a Member of Parliament been involved and am involved in ongoing discussions concerning this issue. I say that to indicate that I have some very great concerns, as have other Members.

It is, however, my duty to rule procedurally on this issue. I have to say that at least under the circumstances at the moment, it is not appropriate to proceed with an emergency debate. However, for all of us who are deeply concerned about the issue and who feel great concern for some of the young people involved, the fact that I cannot rule for an emergency debate does not mean that it is not unimportant. It is a very difficult issue for all of us in this House.

I thank the Hon. Member for Oshawa for bringing the matter forward.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Given the very strong feelings on this issue, the fact that the matter should be debated in the House and that the Government should present its case for capping post-secondary funding, could you ask the House for unanimous consent to debate the issue when Orders of the Day are called later today?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member I know rises with concern and sincerity, which concern is shared by Hon. Members on all sides of the House, but we are confined in applications for emergency debates to a statement by the Member who is applying. The reason we are so confined is that the Reform Committee, which did such useful work in the last few years, made it very clear that in applications for emergency debates, it is for the most part not appropriate for even the Speaker to give reasons why the Speaker approves or disapproves or allows or does not allow an emergency debate.

Furthermore, the rules are very clear that only the Member who is applying for the emergency debate is permitted to speak on it, and there are certain restraints on what the Member can say. The difficulty with this is that the Hon. Member who has just risen—and I understand and sympathize with his concern and sincerity—is starting to argue a case. The difficulty is that under the rules we are moving into debate.

As was pointed out by the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) some days ago, this creates a situation in which the other side of this question cannot be heard. In other words, I cannot recognize a Minister of the Crown to argue in reply the merits of the issue being raised. I am in a position, as Hon. Members know, in which I will have to come before this House very soon with some statements in connection with what is and what is not appropriate in an application for an emergency debate.

I reiterate that I think all Hon. Members in this Chamber believe that this is a very serious matter. I have indicated that I would not do this very often, but as I am involved in this as well as other Hon. Members, I do not think it is appropriate for the Chair to entertain any further argument on it. There are other places, and there will be other places today, where the issue can be raised, and I am quite sure Hon. Members will do so.

I hope the Hon. Member will accept that I do not dismiss the matter lightly but I am bound, as you would have me bound, by the rules of this place. I want Hon. Members and the public to understand that.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There was a question about whether there is unanimous consent in the House to have a debate. I would support that and I wonder whether you could—

Mr. Speaker: This is exactly why we have the rule. The Hon. Member indicates he would give unanimous consent to debate this issue. That may well be, but the appropriate way is for the House Leaders of all three Parties and one of the Members of this House who is not in any of those three Parties to be approached and if there can be agreement, of course, the Chair will co-operate, but it is not appropriate to be debating that as a consequence of an application for an emergency debate. There is another way to do it and I would ask Hon. Members to co-operate in that way.

I recognize full well that the Hon. Member by giving his indication that he would give consent is again responding to a matter which is causing great concern to all Members of this House on both sides, as has been clearly indicated by exchanges in the House over the last number of days.

[Translation]

I wish to inform the House that because of the Minister's statement, Government Orders will be extended today by 19 minutes, as of one o'clock this afternoon.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Harvie Andre (for the Prime Minister) moved that Bill C-3, an Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, to repeal the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the agenda set forward by the Speech from the Throne lists as its first priority the building of a strong economy, fully competitive in world markets. The Speech from the Throne also highlights the environment in which we must achieve that objective: an environment of liberalized trade, requiring outward-looking trade policies; an environment of trading blocs; an environment of world-scale enterprises which have been launched to take maximum advantage of the increasing globalization of economic activity. In short, the Speech from the Throne recognizes that to succeed, Canada's economic effort must be characterized by excellence in its every facet.

We must achieve excellence in our national scientific effort, our research and development performance, and our development and acquisition and application of technology. We must achieve excellence in the innovation and creativity of our business and industrial management, and in the marketing of our goods and services on a world-wide scale. We must strive for excellence in human skills development at all levels of the education system, as well as the shop floor, but there is one over-riding requirement. Not only must we achieve and maintain excellence in these separate endeavours, we must also integrate them into a national effort, shared by the science, technological and business communities in partnership with Government at all levels.

Such an integrated national effort characterizes the thrust of the united Europe we will face in 1992, the Japan of today, the so-called Asian tigers of today and tomorrow. To compete with these world economic powers, and to maximize the opportunities arising out of the Free Trade Agreement with the United States, Canada can afford nothing less than to mount its own integrated national effort. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to point out that as Minister of Industry, Science and Technology, I am responsible for one of the main ways to ensure the success of these efforts.

This is the new Department, Industry, Science and Technology Canada, which under this Act will have a clear mandate to direct the federal Government's efforts in science, technology and business and industrial development.

[English]

Industry, Science and Technology Canada, ISTC, is already up and running. It was built out of the integration of the Ministry of State for Science and Technology, and the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, once the responsibility for regional economic development in Atlantic and western Canada was transferred from DRIE to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and the Department of Western Economic Diversification respectively.

Further, central to the beliefs of this Government is the recognition that industrial policy and science and technology go hand in hand, and ought to be considered together. Making science and technology an integral part of industrial policy allows Industry, Science and Technology Canada to become the industrial policy centre for the Government.

The Department has already begun its work. It is clear even at this early juncture that the new approach is working.

Canadians have the will and the ability to succeed in the tasks ahead of us. ISTC staff have the spirit, the energy and the dedication required to lead the way. I am confident that we will increasingly witness the benefits of the integration of economic development efforts that have just begun.

The mission of Industry, Science and Technology Canada is to act in full partnership with the private sector, the science community and other levels of Government to promote international competitiveness and inter-industrial excellence in Canada, to renew and rebuild our scientific, technological, managerial and production base, and to bring together in a concerted way the talents required to guarantee Canada's place in the first rank of industrial nations.

I would like to focus for a moment on one of the key words in this mandate statement. The word is partnership. Partnership means that we will participate with, and lead, rather than dictate to Canada's industrial sectors. It means we will act as a reasoned advocate within Government on its behalf. We will make every effort to ensure that Government policies, for example, in taxation, regulations, transportation and other areas of particular concern to effective science and business development are designed with the interest of these communities in mind. Partnership and advocacy mean that we must establish and maintain a very strong and comprehensive business, science information and intelligence base, so as to better inform both Government and the private sector.

Our knowledge of developments in the science, technology, business and marketing realms must be second to none and available to all.

Finally, partnership means ongoing communication, continuous dialogue with the communities we are in partnership with in the achievement of our economic goals. Consultation with our industry and science partners has in fact been instrumental in putting together the slate of programs and activities that Industry, Science and Technology Canada is carrying out.

Business activity can be viewed as a continuum of effort from basic research, through applied research, product development, production and marketing. Traditionally, Government industrial assistance has concentrated on the production portion of this continuum. We have over the years traditionally provided assistance to firms to build production facilities, and in bad times to support production facilities that would otherwise be forced to adjust to economic realities. The bulk of Government industry support funding has been spent in this way.

Our new approach to economic success says that this is no longer sufficient. We have to adjust our priorities, not only because our resources are increasingly scarce but primarily because success demands excellence in our activities all along the continuum, from science to marketing. We must work harder and smarter to keep up in with scientific research and maintain research and development. We have to acquire and apply technological advances to our products and production methods. We need the capacity to move a product from the laboratory bench through to production more quickly at the highest possible standard of quality and design, and at a price that will help ensure acceptance in the international market-place.

Further, today's global market requires businesses to have strategic and financial planning capability, to permit management of technological developments and market opportunities, rather than reaction to them. Businesses must master marketing excellence in the international market-place which today knows no geographic or cultural boundaries. It is to meet these needs in all sectors of Canadian business, including the increasingly important services sector, which provides so much of our unemployment, that the activities and programs of ISTC have been designed.

[Translation]

A list of activities has been drawn up to link pure science and commercial success. The Government has recognized that we absolutely must invest in Canada's scientific and technological base to ensure our economic future.

Various initiatives show this: the creation of the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology chaired by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the allocation of $1.3 billion announced by the Prime Minister in January 1988 at the National Conference on Technology and Innovation.

[English]

There is no aspect of economic development today that does not depend on science and technology. Awareness of the vital role of science and science skills is a prerequisite to increasing our capacity to exploit technology. Success in this endeavour will require a concerted effort with the business and science communities.

One of ISTC's principal concerns is to mobilize this effort. A departmental priority is to bend its efforts toward promotion of a more science-oriented culture in Canada, to ensure an adequate supply of highly-qualified personnel in order to exploit the potential industrial benefits of technology, and to develop industrial opportunities directly from scientific endeavours.

ISTC has responsibility for national leadership under the national science and technology policy, and implementation of Innovaction, Canadian Strategy for Science and Technology. Innovaction initiatives include the federal microelectronics strategy, the Canadian manufacturing and advanced technology exchange, the national network of centres of excellence, the Canada scholarships program, funding the University Research Granting Councils and a public awareness program for science and technology.

Under Innovaction $240 million has been devoted to the national network of centres for excellence program. Two-hundred million dollars has been added the base budgets of the University Research Granting Council. The $80 million Canadian scholarship program is now beginning its second successful year of encouraging young people, particularly women, who are under represented in these fields, to take up careers in science and engineering.

Following naturally upon our efforts in the science field, the Department has launched a major effort to promote the development and application of strategic technologies. Strategic technologies are those like biotechnology, advanced industrial materials, information technology that will impact, not only on one sector or enterprise, but also on a broad range of industry and business in one way or another. In order to ensure that Canadian firms benefit from all that these technologies have to offer, we have, in consultation with business, developed government-wide strategies in these fields. A cornerstone of these strategies is the concept of strategic technology alliances.

The Department is moving to support alliances among companies, among groups of companies and research institutions and between groups of Canadian companies and foreign partners. These alliances may be established to plan and to perform precompetitive research and development or to develop leading edge technology applications.

Another key thrust of ISTC will be a series of industry sector competitiveness initiatives. ISTC is joining in partnership with selected industry sectors to carry out new initiatives to improve competitiveness.

[Translation]

In the past, the Government relied a great deal on general funding programs in its efforts to help industry adjust to change. Our new approach is to use more effective instruments designed in cooperation with industry and based on a more balanced set of policies, services and financial assistance programs that are more oriented to the needs and possibilities of a particular sector.

[English]

Pursuing the logic of our widened purview of the whole continuum of business activity, we have redesigned and rebuilt our services to business in all parts of Canada. A major activity of ISTC is business development and information services. We recently announced the establishment of international trade centres in our provincial offices. These centres will assist Canadian businesses wishing to penetrate export markets and provide a one-stop shopping service that our exporters have long been seeking.

One of the important functions of the provincial offices of the Department is to be the first point of contact with Government for the business community. As part of that function they will act as gatherers and disseminators of necessary information on market prospects and requirements. The total effort of the activities I have described is to provide leadership, advocacy, support and encouragement for development of the standard of excellence required by our entire economic thrust, from science to success in world markets.

While I have been talking about the concerns and responsibilities of Industry, Science and Technology Canada, in terms of the broad spectrum of industrial and commercial activity, there are a number of departmental priorities that deserve special attention. ISTC places a high priority on entrepreneurship and the dynamism of the small business community. The national policy on entrepreneurship announced last year will focus the direction of much of the Department's programs and activities.

Another area of special attention is the tourism sector to which ISTC will devote a dedicated effort to promotion of Canada's attractions in foreign markets. ISTC is also responsible for programs to assist native economic development in Canada. As the Speech from the Throne noted, the Government is concerned that our native peoples participate fully in our economy and will be extending its programs to assist native economic development.

[Translation]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, ISTC is responsible for economic development programs in Ontario and Quebec. Because this is a large task and because we wish to distinguish regional development from industrial policy, we are setting up a separate agency, outside ISTC, which will serve the regional development interests of Ontario and Quebec.

[English]

I began my address with a reference to the opening of the Speech from the Throne. I would like to end with a quote from its conclusion:

> As a strong, skilled and confident people, Canadians will find a greater place in world commerce and trade, in technological innovation, and in scientific development and discovery. The first task—will be to help prepare the way for this viable and dynamic Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Minister on his nomination to a position which is among the most important in the Cabinet. That said, Mr. Speaker, he does not really have the means to do his job.

[English]

As the Official Opposition what we are trying to do, quite frankly, is to assist the Minister in getting the means at his disposal to do the job which he has created for himself and which has been set out for him. We are very upset at what we have seen in terms of the lack of priority in funding for his operations. We do not think that he will have the means or ability to carry out his mandate, a mandate which is perhaps the most important of any in the Government today.

The number of employees in the Minister's Department is being cut from 2,618 to 2,260. The operating budget of the Department is being cut from $216 million to $179 million. The money the Minister will have available to carry out his mandate is being cut from $965 million to $427 million.

Let us first look at regional development programs which are a critical part of the mandate of the Department. The Economic Regional Development Agreements have been cut. It is important that we make a distinction here in what is happening in the Department and what is happening with other development agencies such as ACOA, FEDNOR and the Western Diversification Fund.

On January 18, 1988, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) said in this House: "The Economic Regional Development Agreements will continue at the same rate of spending now in effect". As of March 31, 1989, there was a total of $1.613 billion in ERDA agreements which had expired and which have not been renewed. This is in spite of the fact that regional economic disparities remain one of the great blights on the Canadian economic scene. For example, in the Province of Newfoundland today the unemployment rate is 18.8 per cent. There are now more Newfoundlanders living outside of Newfoundland than in Newfoundland because they cannot find jobs there.

Cutting back on regional development programs such as ERDAs is a travesty to the Canadians in those regions. It is also a travesty for all right-thinking Canadians because if we are to have a strong economy in the future we must have strong regions. Our economy can be only as strong as its weakest region. Our workforce can be only as strong as our weakest Canadian. Our commitment to create these opportunities must be matched, Mr. Minister, by the funding necessary to make things happen. What is happening with these agencies that have been hived off from your purview which can no longer be part of the incredible mandate which you have—

• (1200)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member would address the Chair.

Mr. Peterson: I would be very pleased to address the Chair, Mr. Speaker.

During the last election, what happened in these agencies was that one-third of the $1.5 billion allocated to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency for a five-year period was spent in the eight months leading up to the election. How can we have an industrial strategy and policy for all of Canada when these funds are taken out of the purview of the Minister responsible for creating these types of new economic opportunities right across Canada?

For example, the Minister responsible for the Western Diversification Fund is the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer). The Minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is the Minister of Public Works (Mr. MacKay). The mandate is not with the Minister opposite whose job it is to create industrial opportunities right across Canada.

When we have cut-backs coming out of their Departments which will see funding reduced from $1.3 billion to about $250 million according to officials from his Department, we have great cause for concern. It is another example of how pious rhetoric becomes empty in the execution.

There is going to be some sleight of hand carried on in terms of the figures that are presented to us. They are going to say that they have cut by more than 60 per cent the funding available to this Minister to do his job, but they have given it to the regions. We had a solemn commitment from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that he made on his way to the Economic Summit in Venice when he announced that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency would be funded with "new money to the tune of $200 million a year". We are going to count every penny to make sure that no money disappears as this shell game is being played by the Minister's office.

Let us look at the issue of industrial adjustment due to the Free Trade Agreement with the United States. Long before this deal was signed, we had warnings from the Economic Council of Canada, from the Bank of Nova Scotia and from others as to what industries in Canada were going to take a tremendous beating because of this Free Trade Agreement: textiles, footwear and clothing, household furniture, major appliances, food processing, auto parts, electrical and electronic equipment just to name a few. Industrial restructuring, worker adjustment was foreseen long before the deal was signed.

The Macdonald Commission said:

> A Free Trade Agreement should incorporate explicit provisions that reflect the proportionately greater cost for adjustment that Canadians will face. Since investors, workers and managers will begin to plan their strategies for adjustment even before a final agreement is reached, it is essential that an overall adjustment assistance framework be worked out well in advance of concluding a formal treaty.

What has this Government done? Nothing. It appointed the de Grandpré Commission well after that agreement was concluded. That Commission reported only a short time ago. It emphasized a lot of the programs that have been put forward by the Official Opposition for worker assistance, for worker adjustment. This was information that the Government already had. Has the Government introduced or implemented one of those recommendations to assist in this adjustment?

On November 24, 1988, the Right Hon. Prime Minister said:

> I want to tell Canadians we shall ensure innovative and generous adjustment and retraining programs will be introduced whenever and wherever required with the chief priority being the well- being of the individual Canadian worker and his family.

As yet we have seen no provisions that match the rhetoric.

In the Minister's speech, he did not mention the tragedy that is being faced by so many workers who are being thrown out of their jobs today. I could go down the list, but to date we have identified probably 4,000 to 5,000 jobs that have been lost in Canada directly attributable to the Free Trade Agreement.

An Hon. Member: How many created?

Mr. Peterson: The Inglis plant in Toronto is a typical example. It was producing one of the finest washers in Canada. It will be closing and production is going to be shifted to Whirlpool's head office plant in Ohio. It will serve the Canadian market fully out of there. The Minister talks about being able to intervene in a constructive way in the Canadian economy. Has he even met with the union that is trying to keep the plant going and take over production for all of the North American market of the line that is being discontinued? Would he be good enough, if he has not already taken the initiative, to sit down with these people and try to work out something that will be good for Canadians?

In Bill C-3 there is a section which talks about special assistance that will be available by order in council to industries or companies selected by the Government. What is the record of intervention by this Government on behalf of individual companies and individual workers in difficulty?

Let us look, for example, at Lumonics, a world leader in laser technology. It could not get the funding in Canada to carry on the expansion that it needed to become a big player on the global scene. In desperation it sold out to the Japanese corporation Sumitomo. If we cannot give the edge to these Canadian threshold companies that have developed the world's leading edge in technology so that they can be Canadian controlled and tackle the world market, we are in desperate shape. We will not have an industrial policy for the benefit of Canadians. It is far too easy to cheaply sell our world class technology, developed in Canada with public money, to foreign firms.

Connaught is Canada's leading biotechnical firm. It is the maker of the Salk vaccine and many other medicines that are sold around the world. Under this Government, 51.6 per cent is being bought out by a French company that is controlled by the French Government. It is a fundamental strategy of its public policy to control this leading player in the world technology scene.

I believe the federal Government is ceasing its involvement in a program where it provides generic programs and assistance to all Canadians who meet the criteria and gives the back-up which only Governments can give, be it an American Government, French Government, Japanese Government or any other Government. The federal Government is abandoning its supportive role for industry and instead has decided that it will intervene on a case-by-case basis. The Government has also dramatically reduced the funds that will be available to less than half their present levels.

The Government knows that when it attempts to intervene on a case-by-case basis it will run up against the Free Trade Agreement. The moment it gives specific assistance to any particular company, the Americans will cry foul. That type of subsidy will become countervailable under American law and the Government will say it cannot take action because it signed a sacred accord with the Americans which now prevents it from pursuing the policies that it would like to pursue. It will say that it can no longer pursue these policies to assist specific Canadian industries and firms because these will contravene the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

One of the major tools that was critical to the Government in order to go about the pious tasks outlined by the Minister was the ability to assume a creative role of intervention, assistance and support in working with Canadian firms.

I also see a danger of favouritism. The assistance programs provided for under Clause 9, known as special assistance, are made by Order in Council rather than by meeting broadly publicized criteria for which any Canadian can apply. They are direct political decisions. The possibility of favouritism is great.

We have seen in the past that the Government is not above using economic levers to achieve other policy objectives. We have seen frigates being awarded in return for support for a free trade agreement. We have seen offers being made of extensions of the Trans-Canada Highway if there is support for Meech Lake. This is the wrong direction for adjustment assistance to take.

It may be argued that the Government will exercise its discretion in a non-political way. The one case in which the Government has intervened directly in recent days on behalf of a company is in the case of American Express. In spite of the fact that five of the nine guidelines for the admission of foreign banks to Canada were offended and broken, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced that American Express would be allowed to come to Canada, that is until we raised a clamour in the House. That is the type of political patronage and opportunism for friends that the Government is prepared to carry out. It has demonstrated that this will be its hallmark. American Express was the company that led the fight in the United States for free trade.

The Minister did not address the issue of foreign ownership. Presently, there is a $25 million threshold under Investment Canada. There were 606 applications made to Investment Canada over the period July, 1985, to December, 1988. All of those applications for the change of control of a Canadian company were approved by Investment Canada. We do not believe that opening up Canada for take-overs by foreign firms will be in the long term economic interests of Canadians.

We have seen their record of performance. Foreign firms do not export as much as Canadian firms. Their level of research and development is abysmal. We cannot work with them in the same way to ensure that their loyalties are primarily to Canada rather than to their foreign parent corporation or to the host country of their foreign parent corporation.

According to the Free Trade Agreement, rather than the $25 million threshold, there is a $150 million threshold so that any take-over of a company with anything under $150 million assets will not be subject to review.

When an American firm takes over a Canadian firm, as is happening at an accelerated rate, we can no longer impose conditions to ensure that it has a world product mandate here in Canada. We can no longer ensure that Canadian supplies are used in the production of goods in Canada. We have given up the right to give duty draw-backs to encourage manufacturing by foreign firms in Canada.

Once those firms are here they are given national treatment and are treated just the same as Canadian firms, which means no conditions can be imposed upon them to ensure they do not sell out the Canadian operation to other foreigners.

Even in the United States today there is a growing awareness that corporations should have some degree of local control. The Florio amendment in the United States led to the review of all high technology take-overs in the United States. The U.S. Committee on Foreign Investment has wide discretionary powers and has become actively involved in screening foreign take-overs. This is what has happened in the Fujitsu bid to take over Fairchild, in the key semi-conductor area in the United States. If the United States considers semi-conductors to be critical to its economic future, why does this Government not consider biosciences and the medicines produced by Connaught or the laser technology by Lumonics to be critical to our economic future here in Canada?

The Minister talked at great length about the need for science and technology. He is not alone in talking about this topic. On March 4, 1987, the Prime Minister at the University of Waterloo, said: "For some years I have been speaking and writing about the urgent and pressing necessity of increasing our national commitment to our R and D." He said as well that that was why his Government put science and technology at the top of the national agenda. He has been controlling that national agenda since 1984.

What has happened to R and D? In 1984, the Prime Minister promised us that he would double it by 1988. It was then at about 1.4 per cent of Gross Domestic Product. It is now at about 1.35 per cent of Gross Domestic Product. It has gone down in spite of these pious declarations.

The Prime Minister might try to tell us that this is the fault of the private sector. What has happened? The Government commitment and share of the total spending on R and D has gone down from 37 per cent in 1984 to about 30 per cent in 1988. So much for the Government's pious commitments to more R and D.

Again, we have grievous concerns about the extent of research and development that will be done by foreign firms in Canada. When you look across the spectrum, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure you have done many times, you will see that in almost every industry in Canada, the level of research and development that is undertaken by foreign controlled firms fall well short of that which is undertaken by Canadian controlled firms. In mining, it is less than half; in wood-based products, it is about two thirds; in metals it is about 80 per cent; in machinery and transportation, it is about 20 per cent. For equipment that is electrical or electronic, the percentage of sales that goes into R and D by Canadian controlled firms is close to 15 per cent. For foreign controlled firms, it is less than 3 per cent. I could go on and on.

This is the kind of problem we are facing. The Minister, in his speech today, did not come to grips with it at all. He did not once mention the question of foreign control.

Clause 15(2) of this Bill deals with the provision of loan guarantees, stock options and other ways that the Government might intervene to assist certain Canadian firms. I did not hear once from the Minister about his philosophy how he expects and wants Canadian firms to play a role of partnership with Government.

On this side of the House, we have very big concerns about straight grants, straight loan guarantees or straight loans to private sector firms. These loans or grants put the Government in a no-win situation. If the companies are successful, the Government does not get its money back. If the companies fail, the Government's money is gone forever. If we are to have a strong partnership between Government and the private sector, we believe that the Government should consider very closely the use of stocks and shares or stock options. If the companies do not work out, the Government stands as a secured creditor with other creditors. However, if the partnerships do work effectively, all Canadians can benefit by the increased value of the shares. In other words, the Government can make a profit. It will have more funds to re-invest in other Canadian enterprises.

We have seen a tremendous preoccupation on the part of government Members with cutting the deficit. They have been born again. This is the Government that talked about the deficit in 1984 and which, in its four short years in office, doubled our national debt. Now it has a tremendous fixation with the concept of a quick fix for the deficit problems. It even has a Minister responsible for privatization.

Again, we do not see this being put forward as part of the Government's national strategy for promoting Canada's economy by the Minister. It falls into the hands of another Minister. We want to put the Government on notice that there might be some good Canadian companies it intends to privatize which are producing at good profit levels.

Let us suppose that the Government sells off a good Canadian Crown corporation for $100 million. Let us suppose that the Government uses all that money to reduce the deficit. What the Government is saving is the interest rate at say 10 per cent on $100 million. If the company that was sold was producing income levels of more than 10 per cent and, in addition, was paying income tax or other taxes of any sort, then Canadians would be the net losers. We want the Government to take a very business-like and pragmatic approach to how it deals with these assets, and we also want the Government to look at whether or not the assets have an ongoing role in Canada's public policy.

In conclusion, the Minister's speech contained very little with which we could disagree. It contained a lot of pious declarations about the need for a strong economy for Canadian firms to be competitive. It is not with these sentiments that we disagree. We disagree with the hypocrisy the Government has displayed in taking concrete action to support these pious words.

We have heard the Prime Minister's declarations in the past regarding research and development. We heard how it was so important to our future. Yet, in his four years of Government, it has decreased. We have heard pious declarations about ensuring that Canada's economic regions that are less favoured than others are given fair opportunities. Now we see an incredible cut-back in funding to those regions. We have heard the Government's commitment to keeping jobs in Canada for Canadians. Yet under the Free Trade Agreement, at least 5,000 have been lost in the last couple of months. No programs have been put in place. There have been no consultations with these firms to help see what could be done. There has been no examination by the Government of what might possibly be done with companies such as Inglis, working to ensure its production in Canada on an on-going basis.

The Minister spoke about his Government's role in providing an infrastructure for Canadian businesses and for Canadian economic opportunities. He talked about transportation. Again, the Government's actions do not meet its words. The Government is closing down VIA Rail, and in June it will be closing down Air Canada's flights into Stephenville, Newfoundland.

We heard the Minister's pious declarations about how the Government is going to work to ensure that there are generous tax policies in the Budget that will assure there will be research and development here in Canada. This Government cut the funding and tax incentives for research and development. The Government was criticized by its own commissioner, Mr. de Grandpré, who stated that in terms of government support for R and D we are at an all-time low, and at a comparative disadvantage with every other industrialized country in the world. We in Canada are going backwards. The performance does not live up to the rhetoric.

In conclusion, we urge the Minister to stand up for a strong Canada and a strong economy. It is not a shame or a crime for governments to sit down with business and plan our economic future. Some businesses have their own plans for the future five or ten years, and those that do not seldom survive. The Government can play a unique role in our economy that business alone cannot. Canada does not have the large defence spending that the United States has, nor do we want it. The Government has a role to play in encouraging research and development, and encouraging education and training that will make us world leaders.

It is a travesty that 70 per cent of Canadian young people leave high school and go into the workforce without post-secondary education or any type of job training. We cannot compete with the Japanese and the Americans with a record that is so abysmal in this area. Our most important and precious resource is our human resource. The Government pays lip service to that, but it has capped the educational spending for native Canadians, the people who are most desperate to have the education.

The Government has a critical role to play in ensuring that incentives are there for Canadians to invest in our businesses. We await the Budget with bated breath to see what the Government will do to encourage worker participation in investing in companies, and to see what it will do to encourage outside investors to invest in Canadian companies that will carry us to new leading edges in technology. We want to see what special provisions will be made to encourage Canadians to own and control their own companies. We do not believe that the Government has been correct in stating that the marketplace alone will dictate, and that we do not have a role to intervene or interfere. We believe that Canada can only be strong if it gets rid of the syndrome of selling off its best companies to foreigners. There is more foreign control in Canada than in any other developed country in the world.

We will continue to maintain our low levels of research and development, and exports, and keep selling off our new leading technology firms, such as Lumonics and Connaught, unless the Government recognizes the realities and acts for the benefit of Canadians. Unless the Minister is prepared to match his rhetoric today with concrete actions in the future, and unless the entire Government is prepared to stand behind the policies to which the Minister has paid lip service, but for which he does not have the means, the programs which have already been cut will suffer even greater cuts, if we believe the officials in the Minister's Department. Unless the Government will look at the concept of creating a strong Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time expired approximately one minute ago. I would request that he conclude his remarks.

Mr. Peterson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I apologize to all Members for speaking over my time.

In conclusion, above all else we want the Government to stand up for Canada and to put Canada first.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this Bill comes before us and provides us with the opportunity to give an over-all assessment of the industrial policy and the regional development policy of the Government. In that sense, it is an important Bill with respect to broad areas of policy and broad areas of principle, despite the fact that in other respects it is simply a reorganization of the Department which is at issue.

Members of the New Democratic Party recognize the incredibly serious challenges which face the country in the industrial sector and in economic planning over the next 10 to 20 years. We are facing an international context which is becoming very much tougher for a country such as Canada.

In the immediate post-war period, having escaped World War II's direct damaging effect on our industrial infrastructure, Canada could expect to be a powerful and significant player in the international exchanges that are made economically throughout the world. On the basis of that, and on the basis of the tremendous resource exports that we developed in the period after World War II, for a far too brief period of time Canada achieved a level of full employment which gave to the people a sense of security, and a sense that their lives could be built without the constant threat of being dismissed, or being faced with shutdowns or disruption to their lives which would force them in turn to disrupt their families and their communities.

Those times, unfortunately, have disappeared. They have disappeared in large part, I think, not because of changes in the world economy, though those changes have taken place—they have been the challenge—but because both the Parties in this House that have formed federal Governments have not been prepared to meet those challenges and do something creative to give us the kind of industrial base which would provide full employment for Canadians. In my view, it is perhaps the most fundamental, the most damaging and the most shameful dereliction of duty on the part of the Liberal and Conservative Parties when they have been in power. They have not been prepared to say that the industrial future of Canada matters, first of all, and secondly, that Government has a responsibility to provide leadership in setting it right. Instead federal Governments have sat back and have left the initiative to the private sector. Governments have been prepared to have programs but those programs have essentially offered give-aways and bribes to private companies to do things which the private companies most likely would have done in any event. So we have faced a situation where the abdication of responsibility has been massive.

It is time that this Ministry of Industry, Science and Technology, which is finally being established, takes as its responsibility a commitment to Canada to see to it that industrial development becomes a priority which is thought out, worked at systematically, and which is built in this country so that we have a real future for the hundreds of thousands of unemployed people and for the many of those who will be coming on to our labour markets in the future.

There has been a great debate in some parts of the world about whether the manufacturing sector matters in the future of our economies, those of western Europe, North America and Japan. This question, by being asked, has demonstrated the lack of responsibility which has been there on the part of many Governments throughout the OECD countries to answer that question by saying, yes, manufacturing does matter; building an industrial base in this country and right across it does matter because that is the basis upon which we will achieve the full employment which matters to people and to communities on a human level.

As I think of this Government's record so far, I have to say that the record is poor. It is a record which has taken some initiatives, but the Government has not pursued those initiatives. It has not had a sense of priority concerning the structural base of our economy. One simply has to look at the revolving door of Ministers who have had responsibility for this area of policy over the last four and a half years. We started with Sinclair Stevens. We moved to Michel Côté, to the present Minister responsible for the Treasury Board, and then we moved to the present Minister. I congratulate him on his appointment, but I challenge him to take this Ministry seriously, to see to it that there is a long-term commitment on the part of the Government to building a solid industrial basis from which we can develop a full economy for Canadians.

One can think of sector after sector in which this has not taken place. For myself, coming from Windsor, it is perhaps the failures in the auto industry which have struck me most forcibly. Again, it has been a failure on the part of the Government and the previous Government. The previous Liberal Government of Mr. Trudeau set up a task force on the auto industry which brought employers, employees and parts producers together to make recommendations.

They made a series of excellent recommendations, perhaps the most fundamental of which was that there should be a notion, a commitment to Canadian content to which all significant importers of automotive parts and vehicles into this country should commit themselves. This would have given us from 40,000 to 60,000 extra jobs in Canada. That suggestion was ignored by the Liberal Government of the past. It has been ignored by this Government since 1984, despite the fact that a Parliamentary committee chaired by the present Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Andre) came to the conclusion that, yes, there did have to be much more pressure put on Japanese and Korean car producers to ensure that they met commitments to Canadian content in this country.

Now that the Minister is in a position to take some responsibility for the Government's actions, I ask him to make certain that he will himself push to see that the unanimous recommendations of the committee get taken seriously and are put into effect. One can make the same point with respect to the forestry sector of our economy, because what we have seen from the Government is a series of actions which have hurt rather than helped the Canadian forestry sector. This is a series of actions, the worst of which, frankly, was the voluntary acceptance of a 15 per cent export duty which seriously damaged employment prospects and growth prospects in the forestry sector right across this country.

• (1250)

The same point can be made with respect to pulp and paper, where the very serious implications of a takeover of Consolidated Bathhurst by Stone Containers of Chicago seem not even to have been looked at by the Minister who is responsible for Investment Canada, that is, the Minister who is responsible for this Bill.

The same point can be made with respect to steel. The steel industry has faced constant threats, constant retaliatory action from the United States in terms of trade, especially with respect to specialist steel. This Government has not at any stage taken action to pull together the steel industry of this country to try to work out a joint strategy, not just to trade but a joint strategy with respect to future investment, to future support for that industry, to future training assistance, if that were required.

I have just come back from talking with one of the largest steel companies in this country, and there is certainly not, from what they tell me, any sense of interaction between Government and the steel industry with respect to the whole broad set of production, employment, technology and environmental issues which face this industry in the future.

The same thing is true of textiles. With respect to textiles there has been consultation. There has not been agreement. The textile industry has felt itself to have been sacrificed in the negotiations over free trade.

An Hon. Member: And the printing industry.

Mr. Langdon: That is not the only industry. As my colleague has suggested, it is true of printing. It is true of the food industry, food processing.

An Hon. Member: Apparel.

Mr. Langdon: It is also true of most of the apparel industry, which is quite opposed to the approach which the Government has taken in the negotiations over free trade as they affect apparel.

I suggest to the Minister, who is throwing out interjections, that he should spend some talking to the apparel industry. Some of them are small businesses, I say to the Minister. That is what that Minister is responsible for. It is not just the typical manufacturing industries with which Government should be concerned. It is also industries which are less traditional, like tourism. The tourist industry has essentially been abandoned by this Government. There are various ERDA agreements which funnel assistance through the provinces. But the tourist industry is no longer even eligible for help from this Ministry with respect to the kinds of grants and assistance which the Ministry provides to other parts of the economy.

Finally, in looking at some of these sectors, I note the machinery sector of our economy. Surely, by this point we have to realize that you cannot be a sophisticated high technology industrial country without giving real support, real help in the development of a machinery sector. The machinery firms in my constituency tell me absolutely bluntly that what they get from this Government is nothing but hassle. They get harassment in terms of tariff decisions, which I have to spend a good deal of my time trying to straighten out. They get harassment in terms of taxation problems, which also end up in my constituency office. If we did not have at least a few people on this side of the House who are concerned about this sector of our country's economy, so basic to building up a future for us in Canada, the machinery sector would be in much worse shape than it is at this stage.

An Hon. Member: Nonsense!

Mr. Langdon: What do we aim at as a Party in the face of this kind of consistent pattern of failure on the part of the Government in trying to carry its sectorial policies forward? For ourselves, we see the necessity of a highly competitive, high-tech entreprenurial basis to much of our economy so that it can compete internationally. There is no disagreement with respect to that, despite the attempts of the Government to suggest that somehow the New Democratic Party is representative of 20th Century Luddites. But we have a commitment which this Government has not demonstrated to that kind of high-tech part of Canada's economy.

Secondly, we have a commitment to seeing to it that the the raw material resources of this country are used fully within Canada, instead of being made inputs to the United States manufacturing machine. We want to see the jobs from processing here in this country. We want to see a potential for zinc, which is dug out of the ground in northern Ontario or in the Yukon, to be used in zinc alloy production in Canada. We want to see copper used as an input to copper wire production, heavy electrical cables, in this country, not outside of this country so that the jobs disappear along with the resources. We also want to see that the basic building blocks of a solid industrial core are developed within Canada.

I mentioned the machinery industry as one of these basic building blocks. The chemical sector is another sector that deserves to have much more attention paid to it than has been the case on the part of the Government. If we take these basic building blocks and develop them, out of that will come the type of full employment which is so crucial to our country's future. As the previous speaker has noted, we have perhaps the world's worst industrial adjustment system, with respect to adjustment compensation to workers who are hit by trade changes which this Government has put into effect. Compensation simply does not exist.

We also had very little in the way of adjustment planning to respond to the threats of free trade. All we have to do is look to Europe where we can see that there are all kinds of creative, exciting and workable industrial adjustment interventions that our Government could be taking but is refusing to take. Instead, it is leaving things very much to the mercy of the market.

On our part, we also believe there have to be rules concerning plant shut-downs. It is unforgivable that an American company should decide to transfer production from its Canadian subsidiary in Toronto to its American subsidiary as a consequence of free trade and be able to get away with it scot-free. That is what has happened in the case of Inglis. That is what is happening in the case of Gillette. It is what is happening in the case of Northern Telecom. It should not be possible in a humane country, a country which has labour laws that make sense.

[Translation]

I want to tell this Government that we must change the rules dealing with the problem of plant shut-downs throughout the country.

It is also very important, Mr. Speaker, that we, in Canada, have control over our own economy.

[English]

In case after case, the Government has decided simply to let slip absolutely crucial surrenders of control in key parts of the Canadian economy. Mitel is now controlled by a British firm, despite a tremendous amount of government money having gone into the establishment of it. I have talked about Stone Containers and its takeover of Consolidated Bathurst. The loss of Connaught Labs, a part of this country's technological history, a part of our employment future, is something which is unforgivable.

The fact is that Investment Canada, for which the Minister is responsible, has operated simply as a rubber stamp with respect to takeovers. As I view these various takeovers, there has not been a single one rejected during the period of Investment Canada's existence. How can one take seriously an investment review system that has not found it necessary to review even one of thousands of takeovers and say: "That one does not make sense for Canada."? What we have here is in fact a rubber stamp.

We also must have serious support for small business. I direct these remarks directly to the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Hockin) who is now in a position to take some serious steps in this ministry, see to it that it does actually operate to help small-scale firms in the country. The member of our Party who is responsible for small business will be talking about the subject in more detail. However, I hope the Minister will take this task seriously. What I see in my constituency, which is full of small businesses, is that Government does not provide the type of help and support to them which is essential.

We also have to see creative reviews of public enterprise in Canada. There is a pathological rejection on the part of the Government of anything that smacks of socialism despite the fact that in country after country we find effective, profitable and humane public enterprises that are doing an excellent job for people. We in Canada have a long tradition of building such enterprises, mostly at the provincial level, because the federal level has not been prepared to do much except act as a band-aid merchant. The reality is that there is a potential there and I hope the Government recognizes it.

Perhaps the most important point to stress is that any industrial policy which is going to make sense for Canada has to be one which stresses regional fairness. Personally, I must talk about my visit to Cape Breton Island where I saw the tremendous differences in opportunities that exist for people in Cape Breton as compared with those for people in Ontario. It is simply not right. It should not be possible in a country like ours to have this kind of disparity going on generation after generation, so that there are people in Cape Breton who survive perhaps six or eight to a family on the single old age pension cheque of one member of the family who is old enough to receive that pension. It is not right.

It is not right either that on Vancouver Island we have rates of unemployment that are at the immense levels they are in parts of the island. The damage which has resulted from the lack of a serious strategy in the forestry sector is evident on Vancouver Island. The Government has to respond to that.

I could also speak personally about canvassing in Edmonton, the Acting Speaker's home area, and finding people as I went from door to door who had been out of work for months because of the collapse of job opportunities in that city. I could also talk personally about the tremendous disparity that one finds even in the richest part of Newfoundland, in St. John's itself. The difference between life in St. John's for a person graduating or leaving high school and the opportunities that are available to the same person in the City of Toronto are differences which simply should not exist in a humanitarian and fair country.

[Translation]

I can say the same thing about the Province of Québec where, in many communities, the unemployment rate is so high that young people cannot find jobs. That situation is just as unacceptable in the rest of the country. We cannot have a united country if young men and women are discriminated against and if people living in Québec do not enjoy the same opportunities as residents of Ontario. It is unfair!

• (1310)

[English]

I think the worst thing about this Bill, and the reason we will be opposing it, is that this Bill is part of an ongoing attack with respect to regional development in this country. We already have a freeze with respect to renegotiation of economic and regional development agreements with the provinces throughout this country. Seven provinces and two territories are affected. There are 44 sub-agreements to a total of $918.3 million which has lost its reality as of March 31 and which this Government is not carrying forward to renegotiation at this stage.

We also have stories now circulating with comments coming from the officials within the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, as it still is, saying that there will be more cuts and that these cuts are going to affect the hard-hit regions of this country, regions that were promised prosperity, thanks to free trade. They are now being given the reality of cut-backs, more unemployment, more broken promises as a consequence of what has taken place on the part of the Government. But most of all what we have in this Bill is one more step with respect to the dismantling of any over-all responsibility in this country for regional development. In that sense, this Bill is one more backward step for regional fairness in Canada.

All of this breaks the promise that was made last October in Saint John by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who said, "The federal Government has a responsibility for regional development in the interest of national unity as well as in the interest of fairness. We cannot have two Canadas in the economic sense any more than in the constitutional sense".

This Department used to be responsible for all co-ordination. That is destroyed by this Bill. It is not part of this Bill. We will therefore fight this Bill, and we will do so at this stage by moving an amendment. I move, seconded by the Member for Mission—Coquitlam (Ms. Langan):

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:
> "this House declines to give second reading to Bill C-3 because it fails to clearly define federal Government responsibility for regional development and specifically fails to reflect the requirement of s. 36 (1)(b) of the Constitution Act, 1982 that Parliament is committed to "furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities"."

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) for bringing forth the motion so the Table and the Chair could take a look at it before he reads it. Therefore, I have read the motion and find it in order.

Therefore I shall call it 1.17 p.m. The House will now adjourn until two o'clock this day.

At 1.17 p.m. the House took recess.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

EXTRADITION OF LEONARD PELTIER—FBI AFFIDAVIT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, in 1976, Leonard Peltier, an American Indian, was fraudulently extradited to the United States as a result of a false affidavit submitted by the FBI to A Canadian Court. This fraud was only discovered after Leonard Peltier was returned to the United States and tried in the American courts.

It is totally unacceptable that Canada should tolerate such action from the United States, its neighbour and ally.

This week, the Committee for the Defence of Leonard Peltier is demonstrating on Parliament Hill, asking the Canadian Government to demand the return of Peltier to Canada for a new and fair hearing.

The committee is also making an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada to cancel Peltier's extradition order and have him returned to this country. I ask the Government and the House to pay serious attention to this sad episode in Canada-U.S. relations and to support the corrective action proposed by the Leonard Peltier Defence Committee.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

ATLANTIC CANADA—CALL FOR CONTINUATION OF FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, since 1984 Atlantic Canada has experienced tremendous economic growth under this Government. Many of the difficulties we experienced in the past have been addressed. I do not want to see this trend diminished in any way.

Our present interest rate policy, which I do not question, is being used to combat inflationary pressures. Inflation, however, is not the problem in Atlantic Canada. Continued growth will be our challenge in the coming years.

To achieve this it is imperative that the economic initiatives and infrastructure programs currently in place for Atlantic Canada be continued and enhanced.

I urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to recognize the fragility of Atlantic Canada in his upcoming Budget and ask him not to impose austerity measures which, coupled with high interest rates, will destroy that which we have achieved in the past four years.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR AND GUATEMALA—HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, the people of Central America continue to serve on the front lines of the struggle for social justice.

As you may be aware, in El Salvador last night treasury police officers entered an office of an organization involved in refugee settlement and detained approximately 50 peace brigade workers, among them an Australian woman and her three-month old baby.

In Guatemala, the human rights abuses continue. It is into this atmosphere that four members of the RUOG the Guatemalan opposition, have re-entered Guatemala in order to participate in a national dialogue to bring about peace.

I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to make it clear to both Governments the importance that this country places on human rights in that region, in particular to condemn the action of the treasury police in El Salvador, and in Guatemala to give clear assurances that the rights of the four members of the RUOG will be preserved.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

PERFORMANCE OF HURRICANE GROUP OF AMOS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Harricana group of Amos is taking on the automobile subcontracting market and wants to increase its forestry equipment exports to Latin America and Asia.

The Arcand brothers are also interested in investment opportunities in Chile, which is undertaking a major forestry development program.

Last year, sales of the Harricana group amounted to $41.2 million, up 74 per cent from the previous fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians and Québecers should watch the performance of the Harricana group managers and employees in Abitibi.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

HOUSEKEEPING RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, last year some Members of the House and the RCMP were made aware of circumstances concerning alleged breaches of trust with respect to House of Commons budgets and funds.

Another Member of the House has now been charged with Criminal Code offences and it is essential that we in this House assure to the accused a fair hearing and that innocence will be presumed until then.

However, every healthy institution, and in particular the institution of this House of Commons, must have the means of assuring its own good order and discipline. Even a local hockey team has the means of applying order and discipline in its organization.

Initiatives to deal with such matters are met by Government statements in sequences such as: "Under police investigation," "sub-judice" and, after the trial, "The matter is closed".

We, the Members who sit in arguably the most powerful institution in this country, are seen by our voters to be totally impotent.

The subcontracting out to provincial courts of serious matters such as these detracts from the strength and honour of the House and its Members.

I respectfully suggest that the burden of such housekeeping lies with the Members here. Whether such business constitutes a matter of privilege or simply doing the work we are paid for and sworn to do, the voters of my constituency and of the country will not want to be stonewalled for another three years.

YOUTH

CO-OPERATIVE EDUCATION FUNDING PROVIDED BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. John E. Cole (York Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I want to announce today on behalf of my colleague, the Hon. Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest), the approval of $9 million to advance more than 50 co-operative education projects across Canada. This amount is added to the $26 million that has supported 193 projects since 1985.

Co-operative education is an academic plan that formally integrates a student's classroom studies with work experience in appropriate fields.

The principle of co-operative education was first adopted in Canada in 1957. Since then, co-operative education has grown gradually and spread to both universities and colleges in various regions of Canada.

With the introduction of the Canadian Jobs Strategy funding by Employment and Immigration in 1985, co-operative education has experienced accelerated growth. Today there are 38,000 students enrolled in co-op programs in 75 post-secondary institutions.

Co-operative education will play an important role in the future development and adaptability of our workforce. It is a well suited mechanism to assist young Canadians in preparing themselves for the workplace of tomorrow.

Co-op education serves as a major bridge between the classroom and the world of work. Our Government is committed to programs that ease the school-work transition.

Our support for co-operative education illustrates our Government's commitment to the human resources strategy and the training measures announced on April 11, when the Government brought forth its labour force development strategy.

Most important, we see our support of the co-op education movement as an investment in people that will pay valuable dividends in the future.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

OPPOSITION TO POSSIBLE PRIVATIZATION

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post is cutting its ties with the Canadian people and moving silently toward its ultimate goal, the complete privatization of the postal system.

The evidence is clear and overwhelming. Late last week the Post Office in Port Coquitlam, British Columbia, removed the Canadian flag flying over its two postal operations and replaced it with Canada Post's own ugly grey corporate flag. This has been repeated in Winnipeg and Halifax and is spreading across the country.

At the same time Canada Post has adopted a new logo. Look at it. It removes the name "Canada" from the very presentation at the post office. Canada Post, not "Mail/Poste", must remain a Crown corporation. It must continue to be accountable to the people of Canada. It must continue to provide satisfactory services to all areas of the country, and it must continue to fly the Canadian flag at every location in every community in this wonderful country.

CITIZENSHIP

NATIONAL CITIZENSHIP WEEK

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, April 16 to 22 is National Citizenship Week. If some people wonder exactly what we are celebrating in National Citizenship Week, it may be because their citizenship seems as natural to them as being born; they became Canadian citizens at birth without even realizing it.

I believe that our fellow citizens who were born in other countries are perhaps in a better position to appreciate what Canadian citizenship really means.

Canada has rightly been called the world's first international country. We owe this reputation to our respect for the various cultures in our society.

National Citizenship Week no doubt gives us the best possible opportunity to reflect on how lucky we are to be citizens of Canada and to live in one of the most beautiful countries in the world, a land of democracy, peace and freedom.

THE MEDIA

COVERAGE OF ABORIGINAL PEOPLE'S EDUCATION FUNDING CAMPAIGN

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Government has found a powerful ally in its indifferent and insulting treatment of native students and the native community. It is the media.

The media, like the Government, pretends that a new policy to deny natives full access to education is inconsequential, when it should be front page news.

The native community's peaceful but powerful demonstration against this outrage has received little attention.

Post-secondary education is essential for native people to have access to employment, to develop future leaders, to promote independence and self-government. Increased investment in education will reduce welfare costs, imprisonment, and the tragically high rate of native youth suicide.

The Government and the media pretend not to hear the outcry from native people who are fighting for their future.

I call on the Government and the media to recognize the voice of the native community and support the obligation of Government to provide full access to education.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SITUATION IN LEBANON—CANADA'S ROLE

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, this morning, the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) commented on the situation in Lebanon. I think the Government should take advantage of the unanimous feeling in the House now that Canada is a member of the United Nations Security Council to take a determined stand and urge the United Nations to put pressure on all warring parties in the Middle East, in order to put an end to the situation in Lebanon and get rid of all foreign troops in that country. I think that Canada now has a good opportunity to take this initiative and that Canadians of Lebanese descent realize that the Canadian Government is concerned about this problem in the Middle East and that it wants the Lebanese to live in safety and peace, in their own homes.

PAROLE

OPPOSITION TO EARLY RELEASE OF DANGEROUS OFFENDERS

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, each of us in this House has recently read about dangerous criminals who, while on parole, commit violent crimes. These unfortunate and despicable incidents occur all too frequently. These crimes could be avoided if the Canadian parole system regulations were toughened. We must prevent the early release of dangerous offenders who have committed senseless and brutal crimes.

My constituents have expressed their disgust at the persistence of these unnecessary and tragic offences. We must all take responsibility and work toward a system in which dangerous offenders are not allowed to repeat their violence.

I call upon the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) to review immediately and tighten up the regulations so that all Canadians are better protected from violent and dangerous offenders.

NARCOTICS

COCAINE USE IN ONTARIO

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, there is a lethal epidemic sweeping the Province of Ontario, one that is fast becoming a national tragedy. The epidemic I am referring to is the use of cocaine and a cocaine derivative called crack.

A recent report from the Centre of Forensic Sciences stated that a total of 95 deaths in Ontario last year involved cocaine—nearly five times the 20 deaths recorded in 1985. These figures provide graphic evidence of the increase in human wastage due to drug abuse.

The figures tell another story as well. Many of the recent deaths have been attributed to pure or nearly pure cocaine hitting the drug market.

According to Metro Toronto Drug Squad intelligence, cocaine purity is up and prices are down. A gram of the drug now sells for between $100 and $150, half of what it sold for in 1985.

These figures tell me that we are losing the war against drugs, especially the battle against cocaine. The extent of the problem can best be illustrated by the fact that for the first time in the history of the Metro Toronto Police cocaine busts outnumber arrests for marijuana. So far this year, 824 seizures of cocaine have been made compared to 520 of marijuana.

With the phenomenal rise in cocaine use, can the drug wars be far behind? I urge the Government to step up its campaign against drugs before Toronto becomes Washington North.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

FUNDING OF POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, years ago when I was going to high school in Thunder Bay, I rode the bus with a number of young native people of my age from the Fort William Indian Reserve. None of those young people made it through to grade 13.

Last fall during the federal election campaign when I had the opportunity to speak to the first of what has become many rallies at the Indian Affairs office in Thunder Bay, I was very, very pleased to see in the crowd not only the children of those people with whom I went to school going to university and college but their parents going back to school as well. That was the result of the old E-12 guidelines that allowed full access by aboriginal peoples to post-secondary education.

I call on the Government to give these people the chance they want and deserve for their future. Suspend the current guidelines, give them a year to negotiate and develop a program that will meet everyone's needs, particularly those of the aboriginal peoples.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CAMPAIGN TO CLEAN UP HAZARDOUS WASTE SITES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, Canadians across Canada are pleased to know that the Government is committed to protecting the environment.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) in this House, along with his provincial counterparts, has established a five-year fund to clean up hazardous waste sites in Canada. Some $250 million will be available to cover the cost of cleaning up sites, the owners of which are not known. In cases where owners can be found, they will be forced to pay the clean-up costs.

I am of course very pleased with this new development in the fight against dangerous material, whether it be on the ground or in the air. Acid rain has been one of my causes throughout my career in the House.

The diplomacy the Minister has demonstrated in getting the provincial Ministers to agree has given me hope that we will soon have more agreements that are honest attempts at solving these very difficult problems.

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF FREE TRADE AGREEMENT ON FARMERS

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the Deputy Prime Minister and part-time Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) an article that was in The Toronto Star a few days ago saying that firms are telling staff to shape up or lose jobs to free trade. The food conglomerate H. J. Heinz Company of Canada has said that it will find it necessary to move to the United States. In fact, a person from Nabisco Brands Limited, Ray Verdon, has said that he advised firms to cut costs, for example, by using potential U.S. sources as low-cost suppliers.

I stand today to call on the Deputy Prime Minister to do the right thing, to bring in programs to help farmers who are adversely affected by free trade.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CHANGES TO SYSTEM—EFFECT ON NEWFOUNDLAND AND BRITISH COLUMBIA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I will put my question to the Prime Minister. I have listened carefully, as have Hon. Members of the House, to all of the Minister's answers.

The Minister tells us that a cut of $800 million in direct benefits going to the unemployed is not really a cut.

She tells us that the training programs she has announced will not come into effect for four years, according to her paper, but somehow magically they will be in full effect next year.

She tells us that money spent on training people with jobs is actually training people without jobs.

Let me ask the Prime Minister about another one of the Minister's far-fetched statements. How can the Minister for International Trade, in his press release of April 11, tell the people of Newfoundland that they will receive $30 million less under the new program while the Minister for Employment and Immigration has said repeatedly in this House that the people of Newfoundland will receive $15 million more under the program?

Will the Prime Minister at the same time be good enough to tell us, since the Minister has been so precise—erroneously—about the people of Newfoundland, how much the people of British Columbia will receive next year? She gave us a precise figure for Newfoundland. Perhaps the Prime Minister can give us a precise figure for British Columbia.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, the reform we announced last week is primarily aimed at getting Canadians to work. We want Canadians to have jobs. We are giving them the kind of training they need to respond to new needs. Since 1984, training has been the cornerstone of our employment strategy, and it works: 1.15 million jobs have been created since 1984!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is not an answer, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND—AMOUNT OF EXPENDITURES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Let me put another question to the Prime Minister because he has been listening to the Minister of Employment and Immigration just as I have. I am sure he has been listening carefully.

The Minister said that the overall amount in the Unemployment Insurance Fund remains the same. She also said in the House that women will now receive more money. She said that men will receive more money. She said that younger workers will receive more money. She said that older workers will receive more money. She said that visible minorities will receive more money, and urban centres will receive more money, and rural communities will receive more money. She said all of that in the House of Commons.

• (1420)

I want to ask the Prime Minister, if the amount of money remains the same, as his Minister insists, and all those people listed in the House receive more money, who is going to get less?

Would the Prime Minister ask his Minister to produce the document so we could have a balance sheet of who gets more and who gets less?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, the people in the regions that I represent will get more: more programs and more training. The reform we announced last week is designed for the labour force and was introduced in response to the various committees that came to see us and deplored the fact that the Unemployment Insurance Program was too passive. We have made it an active program, and the Canadian worker will be the winner in this process. We must put a higher value on work and that is what we are doing.

REQUEST THAT FINANCIAL DATA BE TABLED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): At the personal level, Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of respect for the Minister, but in the absence of her colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and especially because the Prime Minister refuses to answer my question, I will put a question to the Minister.

The policy followed by her colleague, the Minister of Employment and Imigration, seems to be the following: Every time there is a provincial election, she says that that particular province is going to receive more money. When there is no election, as in Québec at the present time, the Minister does not know how much money the province is going to get. My question to the Minister is therefore this: If her colleague is able to give me erroneous figures for Newfoundland, would she give me some figures for Québec? Who will end the suspense? Will she give us the documents today that will tell us who is going to get more and who is going to get less? Can she produce a document here in the House to clarify the situation?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to set the record straight. Last week we announced our Government's policy. I would also like to say that elections will be held in Québec, perhaps very shortly. The reform we announced is part of an ongoing consultation process with the provinces, something we did not see very often before 1984. When it is time to disclose the figures, we will announce them, as is customary, before the legislative committee.

TRANSPORT

ATLANTIC FREIGHT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Industry has developed in the Atlantic region over many years with the help of the Atlantic Freight Assistance Program. It is absolutely essential for the manufacturers and the producers in Atlantic Canada. In my Province of Prince Edward Island hundreds of jobs depend on this program.

Can the Minister assure the House that this program will not only be maintained but improved upon even after April 27?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, indeed I cannot give that assurance, in the same manner that I could not give any assurance this week to the colleague of the Hon. Member.

However, everything that deals with that issue will have to be answered within the process the Hon. Member has referred to, that is the Budget on April 27.

IMPORTANCE OF PROGRAM TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister.

How many more times will the axe fall on Atlantic Canada? Our potato producers, our food processors, our fish processors, and other Island exporters need to know what the Government has in store for them right now.

Can the Minister assure the House that Islanders, and Maritimers in general, will not suffer reductions to the Atlantic Freight Assistance Program in the future?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I said earlier and at various times in the past namely that I think the people of Canada, and particularly the people of Atlantic Canada, are very proud of the achievements by the Conservative government in the past four years, which cannot be compared to what was done before.

However, I have to say this: We will continue to act as a responsible government. With regard to the policies you were refering to, the Minister of Finance will answer your questions of April 27.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION – REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF NEW GUIDELINES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In March of this year the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development announced a new program for post-secondary education for aboriginal Canadians.

The Minister reiterated in the House yesterday that this program will be put in place on September 1. It is in place already, but it will be carried forward, including the new term, starting in September of this year.

Without exception aboriginal Canadians from one coast to the other have condemned this process, and have appealed directly for a withdrawal of the September 1 deadline, in order that on a bilateral basis a new comprehensive program could be agreed to.

Given his previous commitment to aboriginal Canadians, will the Prime Minister now intervene on their side and say no to the September 1 deadline imposed by his Minister?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated on numerous occasions, I am prepared to enter into the bilateral process in order to review the guidelines that will come into effect on September 1.

I was also very pleased to learn that the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs has decided to review the policy. Obviously, I will be appearing before that committee.

I also welcome the opportunity of discussing with my House Leader the possibility of entering into a debate on an opposition day as early as tomorrow.

REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY DEBATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pick up on the last point made by the Minister, and return to the Prime Minister or to the House Leader.

Earlier this day Your Honour ruled against an emergency debate, adhering to the rules, but indicating that there might be another moment to discuss what the Speaker himself has called an important matter.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister, or the House Leader, in view of what the Minister has stated, will they agree that, when we reach Orders of the Day this afternoon, to debate this important matter this afternoon, which we can do in the House by common agreement?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend the Minister has indicated, the Government is prepared to allocate a day, preferably tomorrow, wherein a debate on this important matter can take place, with the motion properly framed. This will give our colleagues the time this evening and tomorrow morning to prepare for the debate. We would welcome such a debate.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, we too would welcome that debate. I suggest that it would have been preferable to be able to use some government time, but that does not matter as long as the occasion arises for the debate to take place. The important thing is for the Government finally to attempt to defend an indefensible policy, and to do it in the House of Commons.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET STUDENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my last question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Native students have stated that they want to talk directly with the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister agree to talk with the students affected by this program?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Minister responsible is handling this issue with great openness and, I trust, generosity to our native people, as he should.

However, his requirements are minimal. He says that his door is wide open. Furthermore, he meets with native leaders on a regular basis. He met with some students and he says that his door is wide open to receive the delegations. On the other hand, he asks that they end their hunger strike. That does not seem too much to ask. And the reason for my optimism, once the strike is over, are the measures that the House has approved in the last four years.

This program that is so important for our future native leaders was increased from $53 million in 1984 to $130 million this year. The number of native students eligible for this program has increased from 8,000 in 1984 to 15,000 this year.

I think that this program was endorsed by all parties here in the House of Commons. It is an indication of our general position in favour of native young people. We want to do more.

And the Minister has shown not only great leadership but also generosity toward the native leaders in order to put an end to this tense situation as soon as possible and to do more in future.

HEALTH

THALIDOMIDE—TASK FORCE REPORT—COMPENSATION FOR VICTIMS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He will know that the report of the Thalidomide Task Force is both a comprehensive and a demonstrative document which outlines the extraordinary needs of some 120 courageous young men and women. The Minister will also know that these individuals face enormous difficulties in education, transportation, career related matters, and in a host of health related issues.

Would the Minister indicate to the House when he will be announcing a compensation package which has been sought for many years by these victims and by those individuals who have ably represented them over the years?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question on a very important matter.

I had the opportunity to meet with the members of the Thalidomide Victims Association. I do not think anyone who met with them would be anything but struck by the sincerity of their condition and also the seriousness of it as well.

The Government is currently considering the request that has been made. There have been a number of requests that have been made for extraordinary payments to people who have been damaged in a number of different ways through medications and through other procedures. We are considering those, and when we have an announcement to make we will be making it.

REQUEST FOR EARLY ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. I remind him of a quote from a statement which was made by a former Minister in the Diefenbaker Government. On January 29, 1963, the Hon. J. Waldo Monteith said:

> It is our job to ensure that thalidomide victims are cared for in the best possible manner, that their needs are met to the fullest extent we can devise and to ensure, as much as possible, that a similar tragedy will never occur again.

I ask the Minister, not on the grounds of legal precedent but on the grounds of a moral obligation on the part of the Government of Canada, will he come forward quickly and announce a compensation package, not in six months, not in nine months, but will he indicate a date of a possible announcement for a compensation package for these survivors?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this tragic circumstance occurred back in the early 1960s. The Thalidomide Task Force Report was received on February 14. We have been studying it very actively since then as we have been studying other requests for extraordinary payments in cases where people have been suffering.

An Hon. Member: Look at it on its merits.

Mr. Beatty: The Hon. Member shouts across the floor "look at it on its merits". That is precisely what we are intending to do.

Mr. Nunziata: Don't be patronizing.

Mr. Beatty: We want to ensure that in any action taken all people with cases to make are treated fairly and equally.

IMMIGRATION

LEBANON – PLIGHT OF REFUGEES – CONSULAR SERVICES IN CYPRUS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for External Relations. It concerns the deteriorating situation in Lebanon which is producing a flood of very desperate refugees in record numbers.

This morning the Minister announced that a single immigration officer will be sent to Cyprus to facilitate applications to Canada. However, with all due respect, I suggest to the Minister and the Government that that does not come close to meeting the magnitude of the problem.

I ask the Minister, given that people cannot be expected to travel safely to Damascus, Syria, where we have a full consular operation, and given that one immigration official in Cyprus will not come close to meeting the flood of applications that can be expected, will the Minister, at least on a temporary basis, establish a full and proper immigration consular operation that will be capable of meeting the demand, instead of placing one person in an untenable situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, an External Affairs official was sent to Cyprus. And very special steps have been taken so that no one is sent back from Lebanon until further notice. As my colleague said yesterday, the government put a stop on April 6 to the removal of people to Lebanon. Immigration services are provided and, of course, any organization, any individual can, under the special program, sponsor a Lebanese relative at his or her request. Special steps have therefore been taken. We are closely monitoring the situation and we can give people the assurance that we will take the humanitarian stance for which Canada is well knoun.

[English]

UNITED NATIONS HIGH COMMISSION ON REFUGEES – REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY MEETING

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the special program on this side of the ocean where we try to sponsor people from here, but the problem is not in Canada. The problem is on the other side of the world where people cannot make their way to Damascus; and one person in Cyprus, with every respect, does not come close to the reality and the emergency of the situation.

I ask the Minister to reconsider her stand. I further ask the Minister, given that my colleagues earlier this week have asked for leadership by this Government at the United Nations, and given that the United Nations' High Commission on Refugees has only a skeleton staff of three people in Lebanon to deal with the flood of human misery, will the Minister give the House her undertaking that she will ask the UNHCR to convene an emergency meeting in order to try to reinforce this commitment in Lebanon, so that an international commitment can address this human tragedy, and so that other countries will be encouraged to try to land people who are desperate and needy?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, in addition to the special steps I referred to earlier, mention must be made of our cooperation with the Red Cross and the substantial sums of money that were sent to help the victims of strife in Lebanon. Obviously, such situations are regrettable and the Canadian government will do everything it can.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

INDIAN HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

We hear a lot of soothing talk about the Government's generous approach to Indian education, and its sensitivity to the needs of Indian people. Why is the Minister cutting and capping funding for community education programs for Indian health workers and Indian alcohol counsellors on Indian reserves across Canada?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we have extensive programs to provide assistance in the whole area of health and in the whole area of dealing with problems related to alcoholism and other things. This is a program that we feel is important and we intend to continue it.

Mr. Funk: Mr. Speaker, it seems that somebody might have told the Minister that he looks cute when he dances.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

TRAINING OF COMMUNITY HEALTH REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): I have some specific questions, Mr. Speaker. Why is the Minister not providing any funding at all for the training of the 538 community health representatives on Indian reserves? Why has he eliminated funding for 839 alcohol and drug abuse counsellors, and why is he abolishing completely the National Native Council on Alcohol and Drug Abuse on June 15 without anything to take its place?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we have extensive programs designed to deal with the problems of alcoholism and drug abuse. It is a priority for us. Indeed, in the Speech from the Throne we indicated that in the whole area of drug abuse the Government would be enhancing its efforts.

We are committed to operating in this area. We have obligations particularly in the area of native health, and the Hon. Member should be supportive of those efforts.

AGRICULTURE

SASKATCHEWAN—PROVINCIAL SUBSIDY TO BEEF PRODUCERS

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Premier of the Province of Saskatchewan, who is also the Minister of Agriculture, said this week that he will pay the Saskatchewan beef producers $2.5 million in subsidy in addition to the red meat tripartite program payments. This is contrary to that federal-provincial agreement. It has angered beef producers in Ontario and Alberta, as well as the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. What is the Prime Minister prepared to do about the breaking of the rules of this agreement?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a very important point. In fact, he is correct in his assertion.

We have had some discussions with the Minister of Agriculture, the Premier of Saskatchewan, in an attempt to resolve this particular issue. It seems to have occurred as a result of some misunderstanding with respect to the application of the bridging agreement.

I am confident that it can be resolved so that the general phasing down of provincial subsidies in conformity with the establishment of a level playing field right across the country will be achieved. Those discussions are going on.

Mr. Vanclief: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the beef producers in the rest of Canada look forward to that action by the Minister. They will be disappointed if it does not happen.

ONTARIO—LATE RECEIPT OF DROUGHT ASSISTANCE FORMS

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): The deadline for the return of Canadian Crop Drought Assistance forms for Ontario was March 15. As many farmers in Ontario were still receiving the forms as recently as last week, what assurance will the Minister give to the producers in Ontario that their forms will be honoured? How does he propose to notify these farmers that that will happen? Some are not even sending them in since they received them some 30 days after the deadline, which is outlined very clearly on the form.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the deadline that we put on the forms were for applications that were sent out automatically without producers requesting them.

The Hon. Member should tell his constituents that we are going to honour every form that is sent in as long as the process is under way. We are going to be making every effort we can to continue with interim payments as long as it is practically possible and as long as it does not interrupt the process so that it delays the final applications.

This program is designed to be fair. We are going to do everything we can to accommodate farmers when they send in their requests, no matter when we get them, as long as that does not interfere with the over-all operation of the program and does not jeopardize everybody's ability to receive the money as quickly as we can get it to them.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS

LONG-DISTANCE SERVICE COMPETITION

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. Rogers Cable admits its investment in CNCP is the first step toward competing in Canada's long-distance telephone market. Given that most Canadians know that long-distance competition favours big business, not the little guy, will the Minister assure Canadians that his Government supports affordable phone service across the country? Will he reject a national policy of long-distance competition if it raises local rates and cuts a lifeline for a grandmother who cannot afford to pay?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, several years ago, the Government announced its policy on that issue which involves universality among other things. Now, if some groups want to get in touch with the CRTC, that Commission has the legal authority to answer the Hon. Member's questions.

[English]

AFFORDABLE TELEPHONE SERVICE

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the same Minister. A Manitoba Government official said today that local rates there could jump by as much as 50 per cent under the Rogers plan. Given that this could happen in many parts of the country, which would be a disaster if it did, will the Minister assure Canadians that rather than blind faith in telephone competition his national priority is affordable telephone service for all Canadians?

[Translation]

The Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the honourable member that Canadian telecommunications policy is being set and shall continue to be set in the interest of Canadians.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CFB GOOSE BAY—LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS—TREATMENT OF INNU PROTESTERS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked a question of the Right Hon. Prime Minister having to do with the future of Innu protesters in Labrador. At that time the Prime Minister tried to fob off the question by pretending that this is a matter of provincial jurisdiction and that it is not really something about which he ought to be concerned.

I presume that the Prime Minister will know that since I asked him that question 75 Innu natives who went to the Canadian Armed Forces Base to present a letter peacefully were rounded up by the military police who are employees of the Government of Canada, the federal Government, the Government which the Prime Minister leads.

Is the Prime Minister now prepared to take his responsibility as the Prime Minister of the federal Government and to intervene in this matter to bring an end to the low-level flight testing, to declare the moratorium that people have been asking for, and to reach the negotiated settlement with the Innu that the court judgment of the other day recommends and that many people have been recommending to the Government for many years now?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as was said yesterday, the Government is obviously reviewing the decision. As yet we have not heard from the Province of Newfoundland with respect to its wishes.

With respect to the base at Goose Bay, yesterday, indeed, about 75 Innu went to the base. They presented their letter to a member of the Armed Forces. We have received that letter. It has been distributed to all the commanders. They were escorted off the base, as we have to ensure that our property and our personnel are properly secured. No arrests were made and no charges were laid.

OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY—SETTLEMENT OF ISSUES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, of course what is in dispute here is whose property we are talking about. It is the Innu who have a counterclaim as to whose property we are talking about, something which ought to be dealt with before there is any more low-level flight testing, or before the Government pursues its plan to have a NATO base in that area.

Yesterday I asked the Prime Minister particularly with respect to the low-level flight testing. I hope he will have the courage to get up to deal with this question—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Blaikie: —instead of fobbing it off to one of his Ministers. Yesterday, he fobbed it off on to the provinces. Today, he will not even stand up to answer the question.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister would want to respond.

Mr. Blaikie: The question is coming, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister tell the House to what forum he was referring when he said that the matter of low-level flight testing will be dealt with in an entirely different forum? Should that not be a forum in which the interests, the concerns and participation of the Innu people are involved?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to draw to the attention of my hon. colleague—

Mr. Blaikie: I didn't ask you. I asked the Prime Minister.

Mr. Andre: That is why you should not have let him speak. You should not have given him a second chance.

Mrs. Collins: The Hon. Member had some time to ask his question—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I think that this is an issue which should be dealt with in all seriousness.

Mr. Blaikie: By the Prime Minister.

Mrs. Collins: I am sure my hon. colleague would like to listen to a response to his question.

As he knows, of course, low-level flying has been taking place for over 25 years in the Goose Bay area. In 1986, my predecessor established in conjunction with the federal Minister of the Environment, a federal environmental review process. This is a process by which we can determine the facts, the facts of what the environmental and the social and economic implications of low-level flying may be in that area. That process is ongoing. The environmental impact statement is being prepared.

Mr. Blaikie: Stop until it is completed.

Mrs. Collins: Indeed, the Inuit have submitted—

Mr. Blaikie: The Innu, not the Inuit.

Mrs. Collins: The Innu have submitted their impressions and their understanding of the environmental impact assessment. Hearings will proceed this fall. They will be full public hearings. That will be the forum, the very forum which my hon. colleague asked for, in which a full discussion can take place and in which rational decisions can be made to come up with a conclusion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINORITIES

QUERY WHEN MINISTER WILL MEET WITH ALBERTAN FRANCOPHONES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. Last year, Alberta and Saskatchewan passed bills repealing minority language rights in those provinces. We know that Saskatchewan signed a memorandum of understanding with the Federal Government to try and compensate a little for the harm done to its minority by that bill. Alberta Francophones have been trying for some time to meet with the Secretary of State, who is responsible for promoting and protecting minorities. When will the Secretary of State meet with these people to discuss an agreement between Alberta and the Federal Government which would help them survive in their own province?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, it will be a pleasure to accept the organization's development plan today. I will review it with my staff and officials from my Department. I will then be happy to meet with Mr. Arès to discuss the final development plan. Those who know me are aware that I am always available to meet with groups. Since my nomination, I have met with the Société franco-manitobaine, the Fédération des francophones hors Québec, Alliance Quebec and, on Saturday, I will meet with French-speaking residents of British Columbia.

[English]

MINORITY LANGUAGE RIGHTS – REQUEST FOR FEDERAL – PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I thank the Minister for that answer. You were going to jump over Alberta going to B.C. Now that you are going to stop over, I am happy to hear that.

I want to ask the Prime Minister a question. We have a serious question in Canada dealing with minority language rights in our provinces. We know that there is a crisis in many provinces at this time. I have asked, and the Liberals have asked, before for a conference of the Premiers of this country to discuss the distressing situation of some minority groups in Canada. I am wondering if the Prime Minister read the Official Languages Report. The Commissioner recommends a Royal Commission, or at least a federal-provincial conference, on that question, to settle once and for all the future of minority rights in this country. Will he accede to that request, not from us, but from the Official Languages Commissioner, and call a federal-provincial conference on that question?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend referred to the comments of the Commissioner of Official Languages. Indeed, on April 7, the Commissioner wrote to the Government saying that, "The new Act for which the Government was responsible is eloquent testimony of your Government's commitment to greater linguistic harmony and equality".

That commitment is of course the position of the Government of Canada, and I know it is the position shared by all Parties in the House of Commons.

There are challenges facing minority language groups across the country which vary from province to province. We have a large French-speaking minority in the Province of Ontario, an English-speaking minority in the Province of Québec, and so on. I had occasion on April 14, 1988, in the Province of Saskatchewan and in the presence of Premier Devine, to make a comment dealing with precisely this issue. I think it would perhaps answer my hon. friend's question, and I ask for his indulgence to respond in the same way.

Saskatchewan is 97 per cent English speaking. Let us assume that the population were 97 per cent French speaking in Saskatchewan. How would you want them to be treated? What rights would then be fair for the English-speaking minority in Saskatchewan? I suppose that you would want the rights in regard to the courts, the legislature, in regard to schools, all the rights of Canadian citizens.

If you want to understand how you should deal with minorities, ask yourself what it would be like to be in the position of a linguistic minority and treat that minority with all of the generosity that you would want extended to yourself.

That is my position, and that is the position of the Government of Canada, and I believe it to be the position of all Members of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

EXPENDITURE ON BOOK

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. His former Minister of Energy collected an Oscar. I guess he now wants to go for a Pulitzer.

I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he is not a little bit embarrassed about $191,000 of taxpayers money being spent on a coffee table item at the same time as the Minister of Energy is sending out lay-off notices to 110 scientists who are working in renewable energy resource in this country.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member makes a point of the publication of a book—a French copy and an English copy. I repeat to her that in the past Governments have published books as well in respect to government policy. For example, I remember receiving from the former Government a copy of a book on the Constitution. So what I am saying—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Get serious.

An Hon. Member: You are making a fool of yourself. Sit down.

Mr. Epp: So what I say to the Hon. Member is that the book has been published. The Government of Canada has purchased a certain number of books for part of the delegate package for the World Energy Conference in Montreal in September of this year. Additionally, that book is available at various bookstores across the country.

[Translation]

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister to please tell his former Minister, who sees himself as the new Napoleon, Little or Great—excuse me, Mr. Speaker—

Some Members: The Sun King!

Mrs. Copps: —to end his delusions of grandeur, that he is not in Hollywood any more.

How dare he ask Canadians to consent to sacrifices from April 27 onward when his own Minister has his portrait enlarged at the Canadian taxpayers expense?

How can he justify such abuse on the part of the so-called Napoleon the Little or the Great?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I really have nothing more to add from my first answer, other than to say that there are some people who are interested in the area of energy related to the publication. As I have said, we will make that book available to delegates to the World Energy Conference.

Ms. Copps: You are laying people off.

Mr. Epp: I am saying to the Hon. Member that it was not long ago here in this House that there was a strong push from the Opposition that we make more moneys available to Canadian publishers and to Canadian artists, and that has been done.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

TRADE

EXPORT TAX ON TREE BASKETS

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. This Government has made much of the benefits of the trade deal entered into between Canada and the United States. Both during the election last fall and in this Chamber since, the Government has claimed this agreement will produce great benefits for Canadians. However, since the January 1 implementation of the trade deal, we have witnessed job losses in Canada and increased costs to Canadian manufacturers.

An Hon. Member: Speech, speech.

Ms. Langan: One example is a B.C. firm which exports wire baskets used in the transport of large trees that is now required to pay an export tax of 5.1 per cent.

• (1500)

Will the Prime Minister explain how our provincial and Canadian manufacturers can be competitive under the trade deal they are now facing tariffs they did not face before?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism): Mr. Speaker, let me remind the Hon. Member that as a result of the Free Trade Agreement tariffs between Canada and the United States will be totally eliminated in 10 years. When they are gone we will also find that GATT tariffs will be coming down extensively as well.

I should tell the Hon. Member that we have had an enormous number of expansions and investment in the last three months alone, including Campbell Soup Company, MTC Electronics in Richmond, B.C., Cargill in High River, Alberta, Rose Works in Belleville, and the list goes on.

Right across the country there are hundreds of millions of dollars worth of expansions as a result of the Free Trade Agreement.

SITUATION OF EXPORTING COMPANIES

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, will the Government assure Canadians that those companies that did not face tariffs before the Free Trade Agreement was in place will receive some attention so that they will not face tariffs today that will make them uncompetitive?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to changes that came through the harmonized tariff reforms. In those reforms the Canadian tariff system was brought in line with the rest of the world. That was long overdue. We also set up a consultation process so that if there was any tariff increase as a result of the harmonized process, a consultative mechanism with the industry would take place in order to determine whether that could be ameliorated in any way.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it being Thursday, I wonder if the Government House Leader would inform Members of the House what the Government's menu is for the next week? Possibly he can give us an indication as to the legislation until next Wednesday at least.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we will continue debate on Bill C-3, the Bill to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology.

Tomorrow will be an opposition day. We would welcome an opposition day debate on the subject of post-secondary student assistance for native people.

On Monday we will continue debate on Bill C-3 to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology. That will continue through Tuesday, and once we have finished second reading debate on Bill C-3 we would move to Bill C-8, an Act respecting worker adjustment, and Bill C-9, the Bill respecting bank charges. I think that would take us through until Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I object strongly to the Government coming into the House and saying there is going to be an opposition day and it would like to participate in a certain debate. The Opposition will decide what the subject will be on that day. I hope the Government will keep its hands out of this business of telling the Opposition what to do. We can handle that, thank you very much. You stick to handling your business; we will handle ours.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the Hon. Minister, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a point of order under the business question. We agree in principle with the comments made by our colleague from the Liberal Party, that it is not the Government's role to decide what will be the content of an opposition day motion.

Having said that, however, and my Leader having raised with you earlier today the urgent necessity for a debate on this matter, we would be quite prepared as a Party voluntarily to offer one of our votable opposition days—of which we only have two—for the purpose of allowing a debate on post-secondary education. We believe it is crucial that we have such a debate so that we can put all the points on the table and perhaps assist in moving the Government toward the appropriate decision.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the Hon. Minister, I think these discussions should take place behind the curtain—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, no. That's not going to go.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): —if there are any further negotiations to carry on as far as the subject of what is said in the House is concerned. But I will recognize the Hon. Minister.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I understand the problem.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): All right—you are not going to try this. You started it.

Mr. Lewis: I was obviously not trying to suggest that the Government has any ability to draft opposition day motions.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why did you mention it, then?

Mr. Lewis: I was simply indicating the readiness on our part to debate this very important subject, which was the subject of an opposition request for an emergency debate. Obviously one of the Opposition Parties felt it was important enough to call for an emergency debate. That was turned down by the Chair. We understand that. We were simply offering our readiness to debate that very important subject.

Obviously, tomorrow is an opposition day. The Opposition can choose whatever subject it wishes for debate. We are more than ready to meet them on any subject.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I agree with you thoroughly that negotiations on House business should be done in another place. But the Minister is the one who started the whole ball rolling by doing something which I find not very tasteful on his part, starting by refusing to go along with an emergency debate—

Mr. Lewis: I did not refuse. That is the Speaker's decision and you know it.

Mr. Gauthier: You can call—let me finish. The Government—you let him talk—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will let you finish. Order, please. The Hon. Member.

Mr. Gauthier: The Liberals in this House have been raising the issue of post-secondary education for native people for the last 15 days.

Mr. Lewis: The NDP raised it. You did not raise it today.

Mr. Gauthier: We have raised it consistently. We raised it today. We are indeed ready to debate that at any time but it is the Government who can order people around here as to what the Orders of the Day will be and has the ability to call a day on its time to discuss a very important piece of business or present corrective legislation. If the Opposition has to come in and criticize the Government for its lack of action on this subject, which we will tomorrow—

Mr. Lewis: You are getting around to it, now.

Mr. Gauthier: We have been asking the Government to suspend the moratorium. The Government has not acted on that. We will call it to task tomorrow.

Mr. Lewis: We made up your mind, eh?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the charade that the Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux), and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) tried to parade in the House, in trying to use an opposition day which is usually at the discretion of the Opposition, trying to toss off the fact that we should have had an emergency debate—

Mr. Lewis: You are criticizing a decision of the Chair.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am not criticizing the Speaker but the Minister of Justice, as House Leader, who could have agreed to it. We brought this issue up for the last three weeks. This kind of cheap grandstanding will cost the Government some co-operation in this House in the next few weeks, I will tell you that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I suggest that we proceed with Orders of the Day.

POINT OF ORDER

REVENUE CANADA—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a serious point of order that I believe reflects on the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Jelinek). In this morning's The Globe and Mail his Parliamentary Secretary is quoted as saying that Canadian firms do pay bribes and make kick-backs to make their businesses operate. The article states:

> "It is normal", said Mr. Della Noce—Mr. Della Noce said there is no problem because whatever bribe is claimed as a deduction the Canadian firm or individual must indicate who received it.

It seems to me that this reflects upon the Canadian business community. I would like to know whether this is a reflection of the policy of the Government of Canada. It is a serious issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to ask that question tomorrow during Question Period.

• (1510)

Mr. Jelinek: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not find it a point of order. It is a point of debate. However, I will allow the Hon. Minister to answer, if he would like to. The Hon. Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Jelinek: It is incumbent upon me to answer since this accusation is made. If the Hon. Member had continued quoting from the same Globe and Mail article, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Della Noce) further states: "I don't know where, or when, or how often".

If the Hon. Member is asking for government policy, the government policy stands as it was stated yesterday in the House of Commons by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who categorically stated, as published in Hansard on April 19, 1989: "That is certainly not the way business is done in this country".

That is the policy of the Government of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Hon. Members will have noticed what happens when points of order are allowed which should have been part of Question Period and raised earlier today.

I would hope that that is resolved and we can now move to Orders of the Day.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-3, an Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, to repeal the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Langdon (p.724).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The debate is on the amendment of Mr. Langdon.

Mr. Benoît Tremblay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as part of today's debate on the Bill to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, I welcome this opportunity to draw the attention of the House to the issue of regional economic development and the role the new Department will play in this area.

In 1984, the federal Government realized that despite the very substantial efforts and monies expended on regional development so far, serious regional economic disparities continued to exist throughout the country.

In the fall of 1986, a new, decentralized approach to regional development was announced in the Throne Speech. This approach consists in correcting the imbalances between regions, stressing the most disadvantaged areas and using the federal Government's scarce resources more effectively. More specifically, and this was a major change, Mr. Speaker, which is reflected in this Bill, programs will be adapted to local circumstances and needs; the regions concerned will be more involved in decision-making; and all local resources will be explored when developing strategies.

On the basis of these principles, new, decentralized initiatives for regional development have been designed, according to the needs of the various regions.

Unlike the formula used previously, the Government's new approach is based on delegation of authority to the regions for the development, co-ordination, and funding of their programs. For the first time, Mr. Speaker, the federal Government has truly established a partnership with the regions. The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is responsible for regional development in the Atlantic Provinces, the Department of Western Economic Diversification covers the four Western provinces, and Industry, Science and Technology Canada is responsible for regional development in Ontario and Québec.

Mr. Speaker, each of these three agencies has received a clear mandate for the development of the region for which it is responsible, for co-ordinating its activities and designing and financing programs adapted to regional needs.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill will complete the process of reorganization that is necessary to implement the objectives of regional development in Canada. Industry, Science and Technology Canada is now establishing an organizational structure, separate from the rest of the Department, that will be responsible for regional development in Ontario and Québec.

In Ontario regional development activities are adapted to the circumstances in the various regions in that province.

Activities include managing current programs for business development, such as FEDNOR, an initiative to promote the development of Northern Ontario; administering the economic and regional development agreement between Ontario and the federal Government; preparing regional development policies and methods for Ontario's subregions; establishing and implementing new programs adapted to the needs of the subregions; and finally, defending the interests of Ontario subregions when national policies and programs are being designed; co-ordinating all federal regional development activities in that province; and monitoring and analysing the development of the economies of the provinces in the subregions.

Among all Canadian provinces, Ontario of course has been enjoying the most prosperous economy in recent years, but this has not always been the case. In 1980–81, for example, Ontario lost 31,000 residents to immigration. In 1986 it recorded a positive immigration of 40,000 people. Regional development assistance must be tailored to that reality, and the need for federal help in terms of regional economic development is much less significant. Still, economically speaking Ontario can be divided into three major regions: the industrial core centred around Toronto and the metropolitan area whose growth these past few years has been the fastest among industrialized nations and whose unemployment rate is certainly half that of other Canadian major urban areas; the centre of Ontario, a much more heterogeneous aggregate of rural and urban regions; and, finally, Northern Ontario whose economy is resource-based, where unemployment has been severe for years, and where personal income is relatively much lower than in other communities.

Mr. Speaker, this is why FEDNOR has been set up to meet the needs of Northern Ontario. It enables the region to take part in the preparation and administration of programs and to be party to the decision-making process.

FEDNOR was given a five-year mandate and a budget of $55 million. It provides financing solely for private sector profit-making undertakings, particularly small- and medium-sized businesses. The amount of financial assistance is geared to projected economic fallouts, viability, risks, credibility, and needs.

FEDNOR's mission is to promote the diversification of the local economy, the on-site processing of natural resources, the development and acquisition of new technologies, as well as the higher competitiveness and productivity of businesses.

FEDNOR has a three-pronged program. The Basic Industrial Program is designed to help Northern Ontario's new and long-established concerns involved in manufacturing, processing or aquafarming or offering repair or other services. It supports projects aimed at establishing, expanding or upgrading various facilities, carrying out feasibility studies, as well as corporate innovation and marketing activities.

The Small Rural Business Assistance Program is for new or existing businesses in the rural regions of Northern Ontario. It is open to people dealing in manufacturing and processing, forestry and aquafarming, as well as to such services as retail sales, wholesales, warehousing, repairs and the like. Applications under this program are also accepted for projects related to the establishement, expansion or upgrading of facilities.

And finally the Loan Insurance Program which provides new or existing companies with loan insurance covering up to 85 per cent of loans made by recognized lending institutions for establishing, expanding or upgrading facilities.

• (1520)

Thanks to these programs, companies in Northern Ontario, especially the small and medium-size businesses, are getting the type of financial assistance they need to stimulate local economic activities which will benefit the people in the area.

Based on local participation and under the direction of an advisory committee made up of 12 local representatives, FEDNOR demonstrates the value of the new decentralized approach of the federal Government in the area of regional development, as well as our goal of partnership with the regions.

The Government and ISTC have also taken an entirely new approach to regional development in Québec.

To be fair and efficient, the new federal programs take into account the fact that Québec is made up economically of two broad groups of regions whose types and levels of development differ considerably.

In spite of a relatively rapid growth over the past few years, economic disparities between most Québec regions and Canada as a whole, but especially Ontario, persist, and in some cases are getting worse. That is why the approach to regional development covers the whole province of Québec.

FIRST of all, there is the industrial sector of Québec which is based in the Greater Montreal area, and covers most of the Southwestern part of the province. This economic region is very well integrated in the North American economy, but is lagging far behind its competitors in the Southwestern area of Ontario and the Northeastern part of the United States. Moreover, the proportion of jobs provided by traditional industries is much higher than in the other areas I have just mentioned.

The second part of the program is aimed at the outlying areas which extend from the East to the North West and whose economy, based on resources, is similar to that of the Atlantic provinces. With the exception of Eastern Québec, these areas have received no special attention under the previous regional development program.

The comparison with other parts of Canada clearly shows the need for special regional development action in Québec, both in the natural resources regions and the central regions.

On June 9, 1988, the federal Government and Québec signed a five year agreement whereby they will invest $440 million and $380 million respectively to promote the economic development of the Québec regions. Moreover, the federal Government has implemented a $40 million program to help the forest industry in Eastern Québec. The federal Government and the province have earmarked each $75 million to refinance the auxiliary agreements over the next year. Also, they have just added to these agreements a special program for Montreal East.

The new agreement for the Québec region development has six major objectives:

> – mobilize the local contractors; –encourage the development and processing of natural resources; –promote technological development; –increase the local businesses' competitiveness; –encourage economic diversification; –make it possible for these regions to integrate in the Canadian and North American markets and fully benefit from the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States.

There have been consultations—that is new, Mr. Speaker—to make sure that the people in these areas fully participate in the planning process, and the final text of the agreement takes into account the needs and priorities mentioned by the business people and the authorities in various parts of the province. In each of the regions with a resource base economy, an advisory committee made up of business people and area leaders will ensure the participation of the region in the decision–making process.

The agreement is based on the above principles of decentralization, consultation, and focusing on the areas that are the most in need.

One of the agreement's major goals is to accelerate economic growth in resource–based areas through five components—technological research and development, business enterprise development, resource development, human resources development, and infrastructure strengthening.

First, technological research and development. Since national policies and programs aimed at promoting innovation, technological transfer and research and development cannot always be adjusted to the conditions and needs of small businesses in resource based areas, a program to support research and development has been negotiated. Administered by the various Canadian departments and agencies concerned, will complement any national program in the areas involved without endangering national goals.

The agreement calls for the completion of joint industrial research activities and also joint or supplementary programs for mining and forestry. Further, a federal program for food testing has been announced, and another one involving fisheries and agriculture will be put in place.

Second, business enterprise development. The growth of enterpreneurship and small businesses is the best guarantee for diversification and economic expansion in resource based areas. Programs under that component will supply support similar to that offered in the Atlantic area.

A federal business development program has been established under that element of the agreement. Further, the province will initiate a business diversification and expansion program.

Third, resource development. Resources are the mainstay of regional economies. The activities of departments who deal with national resources often are not enough to solve certain development problems in a given area or to enable it to give its full measure. Programs under that component will be administered by the departments concerned and will endeavour to correct the situation.

Since my time is fast running out, Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize this Government's efforts toward the central areas. The special needs of Québec's central région also were considered. A federal productivity growth program has been set up. A joint innovation program with the provincial Government is under consideration and the new agreement provides that the province will establish an industrial ajustment program.

In addition, special programs for the Montreal area and disadvantaged regions within central Québec are provided for. We must also recall, Mr. Speaker, the federal Government's special initiative for the sub-region of eastern Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, with these programs, Québec will finally be able to benefit from the type of regional development assistance that only an effective federal approach, in consultation with the community, can provide.

In conclusion, I wish to say a few words about the Department's regional development activities. If you believe the Opposition Members, the federal Government has reduced its regional development expenditures in Ontario and Québec with this new approach. Nothing could be further from the truth. In fact, regional development expenditures in Ontario and Québec have increased considerably since the present Government took office. In the five-year period that preceded our taking power, these expenditures averaged $189 million a year for Québec and $68 million for Ontario. Over the last five years, from 1984-85 to 1988-89, they rose to $246 million a year for Québec and $108 million for Ontario.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the Government spent $1,231 million for Québec and $539 million for Ontario over the last five years, compared to $944 million and $338 million respectively for the previous period.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology gives great importance to regional development in Québec and Ontario. Work in this area is managed by a separate section of the Department, with qualified personnel in each province and the participation of local councils and communities and even more resources than were allocated to regional development in the past.

• (1530)

Mr. Speaker, if I have a second, I would like to add that the Free Trade Agreement puts the Government under no new constraints as regards business. We have the same rules and obligations as we had and have under GATT.

As well, we have added the ability to solve conflicts much more easily, to reach an understanding under the Agreement before going to court, but also to appeal to the bilateral commission if U.S. legislation threatens to change the rules of the game. That seems to me to be an important gain, both for the whole Canadian economy and for the regional economy.

I would like to add that the regional development responsibility of the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, comparable to that of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and the Western Diversification Department, involves the fundamental role of defending regional interests and, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that this new organization based on partnership with the regions will help us rely more on regional dynamism and ensure the prosperity of Canada's regions.

[English]

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to enter the debate on Bill C-3, realizing the necessity of launching Canada in new directions. We must understand the implications of the changing global economy and Canada's place in it if the Government is going to play a role in ensuring Canada's continued prosperity.

[Translation]

This Bill goes far beyond the establishment of a department. It gives the government the means to establish the programs and policies which are essential to the well being of Canada.

[English]

Within the mandate of this Department are those policies which will determine whether Canada's future is full of hope or despair.

[Translation]

It is essential that Canada recognize the importance of science, engineering and technology if we are to be competitive in foreign markets.

[English]

The reality facing Canada today is that we cannot continue merely to rely on the exploitation of our natural resources if we are to maintain our standard of living. In a world in which sustainable development has become a global imperative, in which the continued burning of fossil fuels endangers our health and well-being, we must change our way of thinking, our understanding of economic development in the context of impending environmental crisis.

We have grown up as Canadians believing that our natural resources are unlimited, that our wealth and standard of living is assured. This is simply not true. Our natural resources are limited in supply, and the world demand for them is changing as more and more people consider a clean and healthy environment to be the most important natural resource of all. The question we must now ask ourselves is: Are we prepared to invest in realizing the potential of Canada's most important resource, its people?

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Manley: The natural wealth we have enjoyed has inhibited an appreciation of the necessity of investing in people, in education and skills, in innovative technologies. All we need to do is to look around us to understand the importance of science, of engineering, and of advanced education, whether it be the common use now of a personal computer, the production of information technologies, or the fusing of two atoms to create energy.

Unfortunately, Canada is being dragged reluctantly into the 21st century. Whether we like it or not, we are engaged in a world-wide race for technological leadership, a race that is being intensified by a number of factors including, for example, international trading competitiveness characterized by the rapid and, in historic terms, relatively easy flow of goods and services between nations, the explosion of information technologies.

Wealth is no longer simply a matter of control of durable goods. Just as brains over brawn has characterized human evolution, so will the innovative use of knowledge prevail over the mining of wealth and the production of goods over the next century. The activities of trans-national corporations, multi-national trading companies and international financial institutions, these corporate entities with the ability to move capital rapidly between nations, limit significantly the ability of nation states to control matters within their own jurisdictions, and involve national governments in major technological enterprises. The United States, through defence procurement, especially in the strategic defence initiative, has created the greatest industrial boondoggle in the history of the world.

In Canada, we have the recent example of the proposed acquisition of Connaught Laboratories by Institut Merieux, a corporation controlled by the Government of France. These factors alone emphasize just how important this Bill really is. Unfortunately, Canada is not well positioned at the present time in the new technologies race.

As Geraldine Kenney-Wallace and Fraser Mustard recently wrote:

> Canada's status among developed nations has been largely won by trading grains, fish, metals, lumber, paper, oil, gas and electricity. The domestic manufacturing base, long protected by tariffs that encourage the building of branch plants, grew strong after 1945.
> In contrast with other small countries, such as Switzerland, Holland and Sweden, however, Canada has not developed a similar number per capita of world-scale home-based multinational corporations.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), both as candidate and as Leader of the Government, has had a lot to say about science and technology, giving the nation's science community much cause for hope. As candidate for the leadership of his Party, he wrote:

> The starting line for me is the technological dimension. Either we go into the game and become important players in this major league, or we become a nation that will, during its entire lifetime, play in the Junior B circuit. Research and development and the resulting innovations, are the lifeblood of a successful economy and country.

The Prime Minister also set an impressive target for levels of performance for research and development at 2.5 per cent of the gross domestic product of Canada, a target he set in 1984. His commentary was accurate and the goal of increasing our level of spending on research and development was achievable. Unfortunately, we also have the Government's record. In November, 1984, $46 million was removed from Environment Canada's budget.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Manley: Since that time, over $70 million was lost, when you take into account the effects of inflation. Because of this, over 336 jobs, mainly in scientific and technological fields, have been eliminated.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Manley: Also in 1984, the Conservative Government announced the elimination of the energy division of the National Research Council. And there are other examples. But still the Government rhetoric was compelling. For example, the Government asked the university research granting councils to submit their five-year plans for their financing needs. In response, the research councils had their base budgets frozen, and inflation eroded them for three more years until a recent announcement of some increase in the base budgets.

Everyone who has been following the course of events has warned the Government about the consequences of undermining the research and development effort in Canada. We have had more than our fair share of forums and advisory councils. By way of advisory bodies the Government has assembled eminent Canadians through the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology chaired by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Unfortunately, its proceedings are secret. There has been the Advisory Council on Adjustment, the de Grandpré Commission. We have had for many years the Science Council of Canada. There are many advisory services in the Public Service of Canada. In Ontario, we have recently had the excellent work of the Premier's Council.

In terms of forums the Government has spent a great deal of money and taken people's time on at least two occasions to host the National Forum on Science and Technology and the National Forum on Post-secondary Education. If only some of the recommendations of these organizations and forums were acted upon I am convinced that we would not today be looking at the dismal statistics that I am compelled to cite.

Federal government expenditures on research and development as a percentage of total R and D spending have fallen since 1984 from 37 per cent to 30 per cent in 1988. According to the de Grandpré Commission, Canada has the lowest gross research and development expenditures as a percentage of GDP as compared to eight comparable countries. Industry funded R and D in Canada as a percentage of GDP is the lowest. Government funded research and development in Canada as a percentage of GDP is the second lowest. In terms of government performed R and D as a percentage of GDP, Canada is in the middle. Canada's higher education research and development as a percentage of GDP is the lowest. In terms of domestic patents granted per 100,000 inhabitants, Canada ranks second lowest. In terms of international patents granted, Canada is the lowest. With respect to advanced degrees awarded, Canada is in the middle. Canada has the lowest number of technology intensive industries with positive trade balances. Only 2 per cent of Canadian companies invest in R and D and two-thirds of this R and D is carried out by less than 7 per cent of this group.

The facts drown out the Prime Minister's protestations as to the importance of science and technology. Rhetorically, he has said the right things, but his rhetoric has not been translated into action. All the Government has to offer as a strategy for developing the Canadian economy is megaprojects and market forces. When it comes to building a science culture and an industrial base which is at once innovative and able to interact with the results of fundamental research, this is simply not adequate.

There are also many things for Canadians to be encouraged about. We have in place in Canada an excellent educational system with a population that has historically shown a willingness to support a high priority on education. We have a small but excellent governmental science community. The National Research Council enjoys a proud history of achievement. It is now called upon to evolve, but it must not be abandoned.

We have a vibrant, exciting and eager group of small and medium-sized high tech companies in Canada which have an international outlook, experience in world trade and excellent prospects if they are given the proper support. We have a peaceful, well-educated population by world standards. Given the proper tools and encouragement we can work smarter than anyone else.

With these strengths on our side, I ask myself where this Government is taking us, driven as it is by a preoccupation with deficits. Our existing significant investment in universities is being allowed to deteriorate as these institutions are under-funded. As a percentage of GDP, the funding of research in universities by the granting councils is less today than it was in 1970.

[Translation]

Under the conservative government, funding for basic research has been cut. A short-sighted government is only interested in applied research.

[English]

NRC is in a state of disrepair, lacking a president, smarting from budget cuts, stripped of the space program, waiting for the next shoe to drop. Our fledgeling industrial high technology sector is being cherry-picked by smart foreign investors while the Government of Canada stands idly by. Investment Canada has no teeth and no will to act. The Government has no vision. The established fact that foreign-owned companies tend not to do research in Canada is not even on the Government's agenda.

[Translation]

And small-and medium-sized businesses involved in research are harassed by accountants from Revenue Canada, a department which does not understand research.

[English]

As Denzil Doyle has pointed out, our annual trade surplus in resource-related products has only grown from about $10 billion to about $16 billion since 1976, while our annual trade deficit in medicine and high-technology products has grown from about $8 billion to about $18 billion. We had a trade deficit in computers alone of close to $5 billion last year. That means as many as 200,000 lost jobs to bright and technologically aware young Canadians.

In its recent report "R and D Outlook 1989" the Conference Board of Canada states that the general outlook for R and D spending is less positive now than it was a year ago. In considering this Bill, the question to be addressed by the House is whether the creation of this new department will assist Canada in moving forward in industrial policies and in the development of strategies for science, engineering and technology that will enable this country to create its own advantages in the global economy. I sincerely hope that the answer to that question will be in the affirmative. I hope that the move of science into a fully fledged departmental responsibility signals a greatly increased priority for it in the Government's agenda. However, the signs are that the contrary is true.

The Minister of this new Department is not a member of the Cabinet's Planning and Priorities Committee. Rather, he is one of those whose job it is to find cuts. The Government denied research, science and technology a standing committee of the House, preferring instead to structure a committee whose mandate is so broad that the concerns of the science community can only hope to be heard and addressed in a most peripheral way. There is the fear that to tie science to regional development is to link the two so that already scarce resources allocated to science are sought to be stretched even further to achieve regional development objectives.

The over-all objective of a science policy has got to be the promotion of Canada's ability to participate competitively in an international economy, increasingly driven by technological innovation. More particularly, I believe that the objective should be to enhance the climate for technological innovation in Canada. Government should seek to stimulate and to reward innovation and should be willing to share its cost.

I believe there should be an objective of training and retraining a workforce of technologically literate workers. We require a new generation of blue and pink collar workers whose special skills will lie in the areas of working with and applying new technologies to existing jobs and in occupations that we have not even thought of yet. High tech requires trained and skilled technicians and precision machine shops. To a great extent we lack these important skills in many regions of Canada. We must have a strategy to increase in absolute and relative terms our ongoing investment in research and technological innovation. We must use our relatively small size to our advantage by encouraging co-operation between the key players. I believe the Centres of Excellence Program will contribute to this. However, that program is under-funded by the Government and has created and will continue to create tensions and rivalries in the scientific community that did not exist before.

We must improve existing incentives for the performance of industrial research. We must remove the obstacles to fair tax treatment of industrial consortia, wrestle to the ground the intractable problems of the definition of scientific research and experimental development in the Income Tax Act. We must use government procurement strategically to help create a viable advanced technology sector. We must apply strategies to accelerate commercialization of domestic and foreign technologies. Research, including applied research and international marketing, is expensive and receives direct or indirect government support in other countries. Our advanced technology must receive comparable support if it is going to gain a foothold in the global market. We should not use scarce resources to re-invent the wheel. Rather our fundamental research should be world-scale and push back the frontiers of discovery.

Fundamental research has a key role in the development of a scientific community and in setting a standard for a science culture to develop in this country. We do need to innovate, to tinker, but in our rush to be relevant, let us not abandon the pursuit of excellence in science.

Science and technology are not only crucial to our economic well-being, but could also be key to solving some of our important environmental problems. To bring the world into ecological balance will require a multiplicity of new and improved technologies. The countries that are quick to meet their own needs are also the ones whose industries are likely to grow and supply markets around the world.

In addition to a science culture in Canada, we must also beget a generation of entrepreneurs. We must recognize that entrepreneurship is a culture process and has a social value. Entrepreneurs are risk-takers. They are men and women who take a chance, and in so doing provide a pay cheque for others. They should be recognized as economic heroes.

In recent years, practically all new jobs in this country have been created in the small business sector. Working in a small business, self-employment, entrepreneurship, owning and building a company of your own, must become credible options to young people. Entrepreneurs are not born. They are developed.

[Translation]

We do not intend to oppose this Bill just for the sake of opposing it, but we do intend to closely monitor all its results, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

We in the Liberal Party will support the Government if it endeavours to build the scientific base this country so desperately needs. But we will not stand idly by and be silent if the Government in its mandate continues to package its rhetoric and endeavours to sell it to us as policy. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Boyer).

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Ottawa South has given a thoughtful speech and clearly has done a lot of research and has even developed some of his points quite extensively. I think there were parts that included rhetoric as well, just as it is something for which he was criticizing the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government.

But rhetoric aside, I noted and listened carefully to his emphasis on the point that we must do more in Canada to train workers, whether blue or white collar workers, to put a greater emphasis on training of the workforce. I think that is something that many of us recognize as competition increases globally. Canadians have to match the skills not only of other Canadians, but workers in other countries. Given that the Hon. Member for Ottawa South has stated that point so clearly and forcefully, I just wanted to ask if he would confirm his support for the initiative announced in this House a week ago Tuesday by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) to transfer more funds and have greater emphasis on worker training under the unemployment insurance plan.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question and the opportunity it affords me to restate some of the concerns I have about the ability of Canada to provide for its scientific and technological business community the kinds of human resources that are going to be required if we are to compete in the world.

I had occasion to travel to British Columbia recently where I was able to meet with many of the advanced technology companies that are in Vancouver and Victoria. I repeatedly heard the concern expressed that the infrastructure does not exist in British Columbia to support the development of many of the companies that are there that have good products and good ideas. One critical shortage lies in the area of precision engineering machine shops. These are required if products are going to be refined and honed so that they can be tested and marketed abroad. I think that as a country we need to take a very serious look at many of educational objectives.

Many of us in this House are products of a culture that promoted the white collar above the blue. My friend who asked the question and myself are both products of legal training, and maybe that is in part a result of that. But now the time has come to stress to our young people the important jobs, the jobs of the future, are jobs that are skilled and that require scientific and technological understanding. I think that objective in our educational system is one that the federal Government needs to play a role in achieving, partly through programs that do exist but also through the support of community colleges which have been reduced in recent years. Those colleges are prime places in which to develop the kind of skilled workers that we need.

I regret the suggestion that it somehow would benefit our science community if funds were diverted from people who are unemployed in order to train people for other jobs, some of whom are already employed. I think that the need for training and skills development is clear. But where does the money come from? What I suggest to the Government is that investment in people, in science, in education should not be regarded as expenditures, but rather as investments. It will cost us much more in the long run if we do not make them than it costs in the short term to spend that money. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for a supplementary, then I will recognize the Member for Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold (Mr. Parent).

Mr. Boyer: Just to complete the point, I really did hope the Member would focus with some precision on the point, because it is not theoretical or academic at this stage. We have before the House the proposals of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. We are looking at transferring funds while maintaining the integrity of the unemployment program and improving it, looking at putting additional funds from that fund toward the training and retraining of Canadian workers, something that the Hon. Member for Ottawa South has been advocating for these last 20 minutes or so on the floor of the House.

He dismisses that initiative with the suggestion, vague as it was, that funds could somehow come from somewhere else without telling us where. I really hope that if he is speaking for the Liberal Party on this, he could serve us all on the floor of the House by bringing some specific and clear comment on that point. The decision does have to be made and it is worthy of the best thinking of all Members in the House.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Speaker, I felt that the answer that I gave was precise enough. It is clear that it is not acceptable on this side of the House to reduce the amounts of money that are available for benefits under the unemployment insurance program and to move them elsewhere. Those benefits are required by the unemployed in Canada. To reduce those amounts that are available as benefits by increasing the qualifying period and reducing the number of weeks for which benefits can be received, is to attempt to take money from people who need it the most. That is not acceptable. It is up to the Government to decide where the money should come from. This is not a cafeteria where we can choose one plate and put another one back. My point is clear. Training schools development is crucial to Canada. Where that money comes from is the Government's choice.

• (1600)

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I have a question related to the supplementary question asked of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa South (Mr. Manley). It would seem to me that the national revenues would be a good place to get the money. I have been here for a few years, but it is new to me to hear an Hon. Member say that we should be making money on our Unemployment Insurance Program. Surely unemployment insurance is just that. It was set up so that we could take care of people who are not as fortunate as others because they are in between jobs.

My question deals with the youth component. He referred to community colleges. He said that many of our schools do not fulfil, as adequately as many of us would like, the stated objective of preparing people to take their place in society. Does my hon. friend think there should be more money taken from national revenues and placed in the hands of the community colleges so we could indeed fulfil the mandate to have people who are trained and educated take their place in a high-tech society?

Mr. Manley: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question which deals with my previous comment that indeed it is in the community colleges, as well as other technical environments, that we are going to be able to give to our youth the kind of skills and abilities that are needed as part of our over-all endeavour to convert products from the laboratory table to products that we will sell in the world market-place. If that is going to happen there must be qualified people.

The statistics I read in my remarks indicate many ways that our allocation in some of these areas is inadequate. We are not producing enough people with those kinds of skills. I have heard repeatedly in my travels and discussions with advanced technology companies that they cannot find, in many cases, people with the required skills. I think that funding to community colleges is key to that. I think it is an inexpensive way to deliver the kinds of education that is required for the next generation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are terminated. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Calgary Southwest on debate and then the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Shuswap.

PROCEEDINGS ON AJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTION TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing (Mr. Axworthy)—Aboriginal Peoples—Suspension of hunger strike—Minister's undertaking / Request for commitment on funding / Negotiations with elected native leaders; the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus)—Air Safety—Request for replacement of Minister / Request for public inquiry; the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Cowichan (Mr. Stupich)—General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade—British Columbia Fishery—Processing of fish in Canada / Landings of salmon and herring.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INDUSTRY, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-3, an Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, to repeal the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Langdon (p.724).

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary Southwest): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to have the opportunity to comment on this historic legislation to create the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology.

The mandate and objectives of the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology are to strengthen the national economy, to increase international competitiveness of Canadian industry, to encourage excellence in the development and use of science and technology, and to promote economic growth and development in slow areas, areas such as Ontario and Québec as well in outlying areas far from the central region of Ottawa.

I disagree with the amendment that was put on the floor of the House. This Government has recognized that those sitting in central Canada may not have all the tools, knowledge or facts about how to treat areas far removed, be it western Canada or Atlantic Canada, Newfoundland, northern Ontario or northern Québec. We need to have the people in the areas who are knowledgeable and understand our differences.

During the last session of Parliament our Government created three economic development programs. One was the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency which was established in June 1987. Some $1.5 billion was transferred from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to this agency. The head office was set up in Moncton, where people from Atlantic Canada could explain their problems to people in Moncton who are knowledgeable about Atlantic Canada. In that way they could attempt to diversify and to establish agencies and companies to create jobs that are meaningful to the people who live in Atlantic Canada, rather than central Canada deciding what is good for them.

In July 1987 our Government announced the formation of FEDNOR, the northern Ontario special diversification agency. It was funded with $55 million over a five-year period from the Department of Regional and Industrial Expansion. Sault Ste. Marie has the head office, with satellite offices in Sudbury and Thunder Bay. These offices allow people to have direct input into the difficulties which people in northern Ontario face.

Northern Ontario is very different from southern Ontario, and it is the duty of the Government to recognize and understand the disparities between all regions and to use the people in the local areas to give us information.

Our Government also created the Western Diversification Fund, with its head office in your City of Edmonton, Mr. Speaker. I know you are pleased to see that we announced $1.2 billion of new funding over five years for that specific agency. This will facilitate the West in diversifying.

I am very proud of the West, where we have agriculture and petroleum as our main industries. We are attempting to increase tourism, which is so important to the area.

Far too often, people in central Canada were telling people in the West what we should be doing. Westerners now have the opportunity to inform the Government and be able to have assistance in setting up new businesses. We will not compete with other companies in Canada to destroy employment levels. We want to increase our exports while cutting our imports. We are looking for new diversification, and this is what makes the Bill so interesting. This legislation strengthens science and technology but also strengthens regional development.

Prior to 1984 ERDA agreements were very popular. They were administered through the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. At that time Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia were not represented within the Liberal Government. It appeared that the funding which came to the West was extremely limited. I believe Alberta received one ERDA agreement for less than $35 million.

I am not suggesting that I am not pleased to see funding go to areas like Québec and Ontario. It is important because we need their economic activity to balance regional disparity. I am glad that southern Ontario is active and that Québec is improving.

However, prior to 1984 the West was simply not recognized. That is what this Government has fought for. It has listened to Members of Parliament from the outlying regions and realized that one of the biggest mistakes of the federal Government was not to listen to other knowledgeable people in the field.

We are dividing a Department to make industry, science and technology a Department that deals with the specifics of industry involvement in science and technology across Canada, while regional development is handled elsewhere.

I truly support the Government's action. I look forward to working with my Western Diversification Office, as I am sure my colleagues from the East Coast are working with their ACOA office. It is working and this is the right way to go.

• (1610)

We have to find ways to improve the science and technology sector, there is no doubt about that. We have learned that we cannot separate or compartmentalize various groups. We cannot have science working here, research working over there, and industry working over there. Over the past two or three years, we have communicated with industry, with post-secondary institutions, and with junior colleges and research centres. We have worked with the various agencies and with provincial Governments.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) formed an advisory board on science and technology, bringing together 30 of the best men and women from across Canada to tell us their concerns and how we can best address them. We communicated with all these groups so that we could get the best of all worlds.

We have limited funds, and I think all Canadians recognize that now. The level of the deficit and the debt is of major importance. Of equal importance, however, is bringing together these various communities so they can zero in on how best to teach science and technology in the universities and how best to apply it to the industries so we can become more efficient, more productive and can go into the 20th century fearing no other country.

The face of international trade has changed over the last number of years. Indeed, it will change more. A great deal of our international trade was with the European community, and when the EEC was formed, we saw 12 countries come together to form an economic union. There are 350 million people involved in the EEC. It has a tremendous market-place and science and technology expertise to draw upon from various countries. It has done extremely well and has been very successful.

Canada realized that we were slowly losing our trade with western Europe. The Free Trade Agreement with the United States is one step, but we are now looking to the Pacific Rim, Japan, Korea, Indonesia and Thailand, as well as pursuing trade with our colleagues in South America. The outstanding and phenomenal Free Trade Agreement will secure our market-place with our friends south of the border, but Canadians realize that they themselves have to become more efficient. I am very pleased that we are now starting to focus on a Department that can draw the best knowledge from all areas.

I know the Hon. Member across the way mentioned that not enough has been done in areas of concern to his Party, and I agree with him. There is a lot more to be done. His concerns are also my concerns. We have started out investigating the problems, calling for all sorts of communities at all levels of education and industry to participate in finding recommendations that will solve the problems.

I suppose it was in the early 1980s—and you can correct me if I am wrong, Mr. Speaker, because you have been here for quite a few years longer than I have—that a program was implemented by the former Government for scientific tax credits. I believe the way that Government wanted to increase science and technology was by giving tax credits to industries that came forward with new ideas and technologies. There was an envelope of $350 million for that particular program, and in 1984 when the Conservative Government took over, it took us a year and half to resolve the difficulties with the program and less than a year to cancel it because it was being totally abused. Canadians were developing things that had already been developed or were submitting proposals that were not scientific or would not advance technology. They were simply there to grab funding.

We are dealing with taxpayers' dollars. It is the job of all Hon. Members from all sides of the House to look after the taxpayers' dollars and to see that they go into the right places, the places of need. By the time we had researched many of the proposals under that project, we found that it had cost the taxpayers $1.9 billion. Very little science and technology expertise came out of that, though perhaps a few good proposals did.

Let us put the money to good use. Let us not direct it from the Government. Let us direct it from all areas of the community so everyone can benefit and so we can get the best bang for our buck.

We must strengthen our performance in international trade. That is one of the directions being taken by this Bill. I mentioned the enhancement of the science base which will be done through the centres of excellence which were announced by the Government. We put $240 million into the centres of excellence program, an extra $200 million into the granting councils over the next few years, $80 million into Canadian Scholarship Programs as well as $500 million into technology. This indicates to me, and I think to my colleagues on this side of the House, that we do take science and technology extremely seriously.

Again, I do not suggest that this is enough, but it is a start. We have to monitor the situation constantly, and watch how well we are performing and look for ways to make changes if so needed, or improve what we have done.

Greater attention has to be paid to developing our human resource base, and through these grants that have been made to the universities and the different agencies, we can reach out to people who are on scholarships or at universities, people who can utilize this funding. We are involving private enterprise which probably has the best knowledge of how to go about the development of science and technology.

We are creating a climate for interaction. Whether dealing with science and technology, the energy industry or the transportation industry, we have to talk to the people. That is what we have done. We talked to the people about this Bill, about the Western Accord, about the Atlantic Accord, and about the Newfoundland Accord. We are talking to the people about some tie-ups we seem to be having at Pearson International Airport, but we have resolved many of those. We are going to the people to see how they believe we should alleviate the problem.

We are not coming down from the top; we are coming up from the bottom. This is what Canadians want. We are letting them speak. We are here to represent them; we are not here to tell them how to go about their business. We are interacting and we are fostering a spirit of entrepreneurship. There is nothing greater than entrepreneurship.

Let me tell Hon. Members about a contract let by the Western Development Agency. A gentleman who lives on the outskirts of Edmonton put forward a one-page proposal to the Western Diversification Department. Fine pipe used in the petroleum industry for seismic gets all curled up and is then no good. This gentleman developed a little gadget that would straighten that pipe so it could be used over and over again. He has gotten into business and is hiring people. With this development of technology, he has created a superb business from a waste product that we had no further use for.

It is the little guys that count as well as the big guys. That is exactly what this Bill will do. It will diversify out to the regions so that we will know what the people need.

• (1620)

Entrepreneurship is alive and well in the West, and it is alive and well in Atlantic Canada. People in northern Québec have many areas of potential. Sometimes they need a little help with an extra tool or a boost with a loan or a loan guarantee. However, most of the loan guarantees through the Western Diversification Office and FEDNOR will be paid back. It might not be for five or six years. Realistically I know that not everything is 100 per cent successful, but hopefully most of them will be successful and we can almost have a self-sustaining fund where the Government has put the money into the various agencies. Western Diversification is proving this quite nicely. Over time we will be receiving money back from successful companies. Westerners do not want grants or giveaways. They just need a little boost like my colleagues in northern Québec where there are difficulties. We are facilitating those people to become job creators. Perhaps through their own business they may create 2, 52, or 1,052 jobs. That is how we all started.

Separating regional development from science and technology and from ERDA agreements has to be the manner in which to proceed. We have put more emphasis on science and technology, and that will allow this specific Department to get right into this issue. There is no need to have Industry, Science and Technology if industries are not working with the researchers. I am very pleased to support this Bill, and I look forward to seeing it go into committee where we can have further debate.

There is no doubt that it has taken us three or four years to come up with this answer, which is the correct one for the moment. Obviously the world will change in a few years. At that point in time perhaps we will have to take another look, and perhaps it will be changed again.

The Minister has done a good job. He took DRIE and MOSST and created this new Department. The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) is also the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology. Under him is a specific Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Winegard), the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Hockin)—a specific Minister to keep hands on western diversification, a specific Minister to keep hands on FEDNOR, and a specific Minister to keep hands on ACOA. This means that those Ministers have a lot more direction and control over exactly what is going on.

Over the last three or four years I am pleased to see that we have taken the fine words of advice from the Prime Minister's advisory council and from people across Canada. We are not telling Canadians what to do. We are working for Canadians to create a better country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Restigouche.

Mr. Arseneault: Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to hear that the Government is concerned with regional disparity. I am very displeased with some of the actions taken to solve those problems. First, the new recommendations of the Unemployment Insurance Program will certainly affect the area I come from. Restigouche has 15.3 per cent unemployment. One can talk about training, but if there are no jobs to train for, I do not think we are going to get much benefit.

I was also glad to hear that the Member is quite concerned with ERDA. Perhaps the Hon. Member should transmit that message to the Government. For example, six out of 10 ERDA agreements for forestry have not been renewed. They expired on March 31.

How can the Hon. Member stand up and place such importance on the ERDA agreements when the Government has not renegotiated and signed those forestry agreements with the six out of ten provinces where they have expired?

Mrs. Sparrow: I certainly appreciate the questions of my colleague. In regard to diversifying into the outlying areas in western and Atlantic Canada, Newfoundland, northern Québec, and northern Ontario, I do recognize that some ERDA agreements have been terminated. There is no doubt that there is still time for negotiations and time for further development in that area.

The Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), together with the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology and the Prime Minister, are very concerned with the high unemployment and the situation that exists in certain regional areas of Canada. The Budget is coming down one week today. I believe that any negotiations or issuing of new ERDA agreements will be held off until after April 27. At that point in time perhaps we could address this particular question.

The Hon. Member raised the question of unemployment insurance. In her policy statement on unemployment insurance the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) did not make massive changes. We are attempting to provide funding to retrain people. I take seriously the statement of the Hon. Member that there is nothing to retrain them for. I would certainly have to look into that further and more seriously.

Whether a person comes from New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, P.E.I. or Alberta, people in Canada have the spirit to get out and work. Unemployment insurance has a job to do. It has to help people who perhaps have lost their jobs. In my estimation it is not an income supplement. It is not a guaranteed income. It has to be used to retrain people. There is no sense in collecting the insurance, not taking part in retraining or returning to school, and then being faced with having to go out and seek employment when unemployment insurance terminates. I know much of the employment in the area of the Hon. Member is seasonal. I recognize that forestry and fisheries are seasonal. The area of the Hon. Member has specific problems that perhaps some areas of Canada do not have.

When a person collects unemployment insurance, he or she has to retrain. Industries are changing across Canada. What is good today may not be good tomorrow. People across Canada realize that unemployment insurance is not an income supplement or an income guarantee. It is there to help between jobs when a person is suffering. It is also there for retraining. I have to support the Minister of Employment and Immigration. She is attempting to address this issue. She has given us some excellent policy statements, and I stand behind those.

Retraining is the only manner in which the Hon. Member's constituents can get jobs. I hope to be working with people in ACOA. There is always room to improve. Nobody has the perfect solution. Perhaps we can improve ways of administering funding, or the types of industries that are being supported in order that there can be a broader base in eastern Canada.

Mr. Foster: I am pleased to have the opportunity to say a few words concerning regional development in the Bill which will be reorganizing the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion.

The Hon. Member for Calgary Southwest (Mrs. Sparrow) mentioned the FEDNOR program. This is a very modest program of $55 million over a five-year period for some 90 per cent of the land mass of Ontario and the whole of northern Ontario. That amount of $8 million a year in grants and some $3 million a year in loan guarantees do not go very far when we are trying to restructure industries. What we are concerned about is whether that modest $55 million allocated for the next five-year period will survive the slaughter house that will allegedly take place a week from tonight. A report in The Toronto Star earlier this week said that deep cuts ahead are feared for the regions. It is suggested that the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion's budget will be cut from $1.3 billion to $250 million a year.

• (1630)

Would the Hon. Member reassure us on this side of the House that programs like FEDNOR will not be cut back? That is our first and primary concern.

The second concern relates not only to the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion but to the ERDA agreements themselves. In northern Ontario we are very dependent on the forest industry. During the last five years we have had a program for forest renewal and development in which the federal and provincial Governments each put $75 million over that five-year period. That program has run out. There has been no authorization by the Government of Canada to the officials in the Department in Sault Ste. Marie to start negotiations with the Province of Ontario. If that program is not renewed, we will see a major decline in our capacity to provide forest renewal in the years ahead. That is one ERDA agreement that has not been renewed, but there is a tourism development agreement that runs out this year as well as a native economic development agreement. If one reads the Speech from the Throne one is not sure whether any of the ERDA agreements will be renewed.

I agree that the Department is important in regional development, but ERDA agreements are important from two points of view. First, they allow the federal Government to put money into regional development programs. All the levers of economic development are not with the federal Government. Often they are in areas of provincial responsibility which allow the Government to put those funds into provincial areas. Second, it allows the Government to bring up the slow growth areas of the country to a more national average.

I would be very concerned that all we have is this Bill before us today, and we will not have ERDA agreements which allow the federal Government to put money into areas of provincial jurisdiction which are very important for economic development in a region. I hope the Hon. Member can reassure me that those funds and programs which lapsed this year will be renewed.

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my hon. colleague for his questions. We have worked together on a few committees and I have always enjoyed our association.

As I recall the first thing the Member mentioned was something from The Toronto Star about gross cuts. I do not take my direction from The Toronto Star, and I do not think the Government of Canada takes its direction from The Toronto Star. Obviously the paper is speculating. What it says is totally hypothetical, and the paper is out to tell Canadians that everything will be cut. That is simply not true.

The Member said that in the Speech from the Throne there was no sure word that these ERDA agreements would be capped, renegotiated or kept intact. When I read the Speech from the Throne I found nothing that said they would be dismantled or not be renegotiated.

I think the Hon. Member is repeating hypothetical statements. Obviously I do not know what is in the Budget and if I did I would not be here. I ask him not to speculate and not to listen to what The Toronto Star reports. I tell him not to worry in thinking that the Throne Speech says programs will be cut when they are not.

Northern Ontario has forestry ERDA agreements, but there are other forestry areas across Canada that are also extremely important. I know that northern Ontario is the Member's region and I support the Member discussing the problems of his area. There is room for negotiation. Whether at the same magnitude, I do not have the answer.

FEDNOR was announced in July 1987, I believe. This was a brand new Department which took six months to get on stream. Anything brand new takes a while to get organized, but it is operating well and effectively. We are always, however, interested in finding ways to improve it. I am interested in the Hon. Member's suggestions and would like to co-operate with him on how best to make FEDNOR work and work better.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's time has expired.

Industry, Science and Technology

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to Bill C-3 today, particularly to its amendments. I oppose the thrust of the Bill and the three vital flaws that I see which run counter to the stated objectives in the Bill. They are as the Bill states: to strengthen the national economy and to increase international competitiveness of Canadian industry.

By repealing the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion it is my belief the Government is signalling very clearly that it is willing to fragment the very necessary regional development tools and programs which our country has required and will continue to require to reduce the significant economic disparities present across the land. Instead of the co-ordinated program of regional development what we will end up with is a kind of hodgepodge of programs tucked away in various legislative areas with very little co-ordination or overlap.

I come from a constituency out West, Okanagan—Shuswap, in the southern interior region of British Columbia. We are still struggling, believe it or not, with unemployment levels that exceed 17 per cent. In fact, the latest figure indicates that in the northern part of my riding the unemployment level exceeds 19.6 per cent. We have real problems of regional economic disparity.

In Atlantic Canada we see that the situation is very similar to what we have out West. Both the West Coast and the East Coast remain resource driven economies that are in desperate need of economic diversification. We need a far greater commitment from the Government toward regional development than we have had in the past. We do not need the kind of legislation such as is intended in this present Bill which really serves to fragment further regional development programs and efforts.

Second, the Bill proposes that the responsibility for regional development in Ontario and Québec shall fall under the auspices of the Ministry of Industry, Science and Technology. This implies that the economic development of the West or of Atlantic Canada with respect to science and technology will not be a primary mandate of this particular Ministry. This sends a signal to the scientific community across Canada that concentrated growth in this industry can be expected to take place in Central Canada. Once again, we see evidence that the Government is intending to provide favouritism to Central Canada at the expense of its regions, such as the West and Atlantic Canada. It makes me wonder whether the Government has ever realized that there is life west of the Rocky Mountains.

There is a good deal of scientific research going on out West and a good deal of potential for increased research efforts. As has been the case for so long, the attention has been centred in mainly two provinces, Ontario and Québec. We are losing scientific talent from the West, simply because of a chronic lack of research and development capital. We are losing prime opportunities for economic diversification and technological advancement in our western provinces because of this Government's centralist attitude toward economic development and reducing regional disparities.

• (1640)

I trained as a biochemist. I worked for some time in the research community in British Columbia. I noticed first-hand a chronic lack of research funding, not totally the fault of this Government. Much of the blame has to placed upon the shoulders of the provincial Government. Certainly, there has been a chronic lack of funding by both institutions with regard to research and development.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. MacWilliam: Not wanting to move back East, I eventually moved out of the scientific community and finally ended up in politics and came back East anyway. That is life I guess.

My story raises a very serious point. There continue to exist major inequities in the disbursement of our federal research and development capital across this country. I was talking to members of the scientific community, and they left with me an interesting document. It is entitled, Coherent Educational and Scientific Research Policies for Canada. An interesting point made in the article demonstrates that public funding for full-time enrolled students across this country, declined by 11 per cent, from 1977 to 1986. In equivalent dollar values, it was an 11 per cent decline.

I heard many of the members on the government side pay tribute to the priority that science, technology and education will be given by this Government. Those comments sound very hollow in the reality of what has actually taken place over the past years.

There is another interesting aspect which is most telling. I will quote directly from the article, which talks about enhancing the research and development effort of Canada. It states that by any yardstick, Canada's research effort is inadequate. Compared with similar economically developed countries, the share of gross national output devoted to research is far too small. This fact is widely recognized to the point that the Prime Minister pledged to double Canada's spending on research and development during his Governments first term of office.

We are at the beginning of his second term of office, and we are nowhere near to beginning on the road to doubling this research effort. There is a very interesting table in this report. It shows eight of the western democratic nations and the percentage that is spent in research and development in terms of the Gross Domestic Product: Sweden, the United States, Germany, France, Norway, Finland and Canada. Canada is at the bottom of the list.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. MacWilliam: This is significantly below the research and development efforts of all those other nations. I would say to the Members across the floor of the House that the lip service that they have paid in terms of their commitment to research and development efforts in education, ring very hollow in the face of the reality of the problems in education, science and research development.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacWilliam: It is time they put their money where their mouth is, and committed more funds both to post-secondary education and scientific research and development.

This proposed legislation is only going to deepen the inequities caused by the Ministry of Science and Technology in concentrating its efforts in Ontario and Québec at the expense of the other regions. This is a major disappointment to our scientific community and to our technological industries that are located elsewhere.

I have concerns about the intention of this proposed legislation to roll into the Ministry of Industry, Science and Technology, responsibility for tourism development. It is a strange place indeed for tourism to be located. Maintaining the Department of Tourism as a type of sub-Ministry, buried within the bowels of this larger Ministry, fails to acknowledge the growing importance of this industry in Canada today. It fails to recognize the commitment that this Government made back in the election campaign. In the election campaign of 1984 the commitment was to increase the profile of tourism by creating a separate Ministry of Tourism, highlighting tourism and giving it the funding necessary to do the job.

Since that time, we have had speaker after speaker from this Government praise the importance of the tourism industry.

I have gone over the debates of the House of Commons since 1985, all summarized in the tourism debates. Time after time we have seen Ministers and back-benchers on the government side get up and praise the tourism industry, and the fine job that it is doing across Canada, and the commitment that the Government will make to increase its tourism efforts.

An Hon. Member: Some day.

Mr. MacWillian: My colleague says: " Some day". We on this side are still waiting for that day.

There was a most illuminating comment made on October 23, 1986, by my colleague, the Member for Beauséjour, (Mr. Robichaud), in his comments, in the Commons debates. I would like to read these comments into the record. Mr. Robichaud stated: "The Government has bragged about having created an independent portfolio for tourism". What happened to the Department of Tourism in the Cabinet's last shuffle? In June last, the Prime Minister simply struck it off. The Department of Tourism is no more. We now have a Minister of State for Small Business and Tourism (Mr. Hockin). TIAC chairman, Walter Tilden, expressed his disappointment by stating that: "It would appear that the Government does not know what to do with tourism. The executive director of the Tourism Industry Association of Canada, John Lawson, also expressed disappointment by stating:

"We are back to a combined Ministry. It is a clear sign that tourism is once again relegated to a backroom". Those comments were made on October 23, 1986. Unfortunately, I would like to submit to you that things have not changed. The Government is once again relegating tourism to the backroom of economic development. The Hon. Minister of State is probably reluctant to make an issue out of this. I do not blame him. One does not want to bite the hand that feeds you. I would like to help out my colleague, the Hon. Minister, in our mutual attempts to increase the economic clout of his Department. It is easier for me to criticize the Government, than it is for him to do so.

Canada's tourism industry has a bigger international market than lumber, newsprint, or crude petroleum, and it outperforms wheat and natural gas combined. We are not talking about a small economic impact. It has a growth rate which, for the past 10 years, surpassed that of the major industrial sectors. It pumps $21 billion into the national economy, $6.3 billion of which is foreign revenue. Nationally, the industry employs 600,000 people directly, and another 500,000 indirectly. Over 600,000 tourism businesses are in Canada, the majority of which are small and mid-size operations, where 80 per cent of our job creation takes place. Tourism revenue pumps $9 billion annually into government coffers. Some 6.7 cents of every dollar spent in Canada is spent on its tourism products. Through this legislation the Government wants to delegate the Department of Tourism to the back-burner of economic development by hiding it within the proposed Ministry of Industry, Science and Technology.

• (1650)

Tourism is Canada's fastest growing industry. Throughout every province it has ranked first in the creation of new jobs. There is no other industry which has contributed more to Canada's regional development. I do not think that the Government will give my colleague, the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. Hockin), the opportunity to oversee a Ministry of full status.

Tourism is already the largest industry in Canada. From 1975 to 1985 the workforce in tourism-related industries has in fact grown by some 90 per cent. By the year 2000 it is expected that it will be the leading industry in Canada. I wish to read to Hon. Members a statement from a 1988 Tourism Canada publication entitled The Challenge in Tourism Product Development. This is from a Ministry circular. It states: "Given the growth potential and the significant economic contribution in Canada the key question is whether or not Canada can in fact meet the expectations of the market-place in the future, particularly with respect to the quality of its tourism product which will play a large part in determining the future success of the tourism industry". The key comment that this publication makes is with respect to whether or not we can meet the expectations of the market-place and that in Canada it is critical that we become globally competitive in the tourism industry.

Although tourism is a growth industry, our international tourism deficit has increased over the last few years. It is also steadily growing. We have reached an all-time high in our tourism trade deficit. We now have a deficit that is at $5.2 billion annually. That figure is taken directly from this Ministry circular.

I submit that to remain globally competitive in the international tourism market-place we will have to do better than we have in developing and marketing our tourism product. It will take initiatives that can only be developed if we have a full-fledged tourism Ministry, not a miniscule Department that is buried in the confines and the bowels of some other Ministry.

The Tourism Industry Association of Canada has repeatedly called for the establishment of a separate Ministry of Tourism with an equal status to other major economic sectors. Over the last 10 years the federal investment in tourism marketing has not even kept pace with inflation. We have now reached the point at which some individual states in the United States of America spend more on tourism marketing and tourism development than does the Government of Canada. I suggest that our efforts have to be doubled and redoubled. It is not enough for an industry that is poised throughout the world to become the largest world-wide by the 21st century. I think we will have to do a lot more in order to catch up to this very rapidly changing global market in tourism.

The tourism industry is not satisfied with anything less than a full-fledged Ministry of Tourism. The Government made a public commitment eight years ago to highlight tourism and to give it the promotion that it deserves today. This Bill clearly demonstrates that the promise has been broken and that tourism will continue to be treated as a junior Department with a budget that is inadequate to do the job.

In summary, once again the Government is demonstrating its modus operandi of the last few years of not spoiling a good election promise by actually doing something about it. I would like to recommend that the Government consider the striking of the Department of Tourism as an adjunct to the Ministry of Industry, Science and Technology, as is recommended in this legislation.

Finally, I would like also to recommend that the Government introduce further legislation that would in fact establish a separate and full-fledged Ministry of Tourism. I would add that we have to provide the legislative clout to ensure that the tourism industry receive the kind of attention and the kind of federal commitment that it deserves today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James).

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Shuswap (Mr. MacWilliam). I am pleased that a member of the socialist Party is so concerned about entrepreneurship. It is absolutely refreshing that the Hon. Member is concerned about tourism and the wherewithal of the people who are in business in that sector. That is excellent.

However, I am a little concerned about some of the things that may be missing in his analysis of what is going on, especially with respect to the regional initiatives that we are taking. In tourism a regional approach is needed. I did not hear him giving any accolades to the Government for taking such initiatives. It is certain that tourism has a different complexion in different parts of the country. It needs local initiative, not only through the DRIE Department, which will soon be the Department of Industry, Science and Technology but also through the Department of Employment through the community futures program, which also has direct local input of which tourism operators can take advantage through training or special initiatives.

The Hon. Member also forgets the extensive study the Government conducted especially on the American market so that we could identify the kind of wants of the tourists there. It is our biggest and closest market. A whole new approach in terms of the proper type of advertising to attract American tourists to our market is necessary.

I have a real problem about Hon. Members talking about adding Ministries, and then after a full Ministry is put in place they will be saying that the Government has too many Ministries. I hope that the Hon. Member will reflect upon the regionalized approach we are taking to business in our country. I want to tell the Hon. Member that I sat on the DRIE Committee throughout the last four years. We worked very hard at allowing for a regionalized approach.

I would like to conclude by talking about this centralist Canada stuff. Southwestern Ontario has areas that need assistance on a regionalized basis. Just because Ontario has a fairly buoyant market does not mean that every community or area in southwestern Ontario has that same buoyancy. We need an opportunity to have self-directed funding to areas in Ontario.

Mr. MacWilliam: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments made by my colleague, particularly his comments about finding so many new and refreshing ideas in the New Democratic Party. I want to say to the Member that if you look really close you will find that there are lots of refreshing ideas on this side of the House. I am glad you are paying attention to them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to ask the Hon. Member to direct his comments to the Chair.

Mr. MacWilliam: That was through you, of course, Mr. Speaker.

I also want to add that I do not know where in the House it came from but I did get an urgent message in the middle of my speech stating: "Mr. MacWilliam, your fly is down". I do not know quite where it came from but I am somewhat suspicious indeed.

• (1700)

I hardly even flinched, too,I was really trying not to look and see.

As to my second comment to the Hon. Member regarding the regional aspect of tourism development, I want to say to the Member that I appreciate his comments regarding the necessity for increased regional emphasis on tourism development. The points he made are very valid. However this Government has not committed itself to the extent of the agreements that he is talking about now, the ERDA agreements, in terms of the tourist industry subagreements and in terms of the forestry industry regional development agreement. Half of those agreements are expired. The other half will be expired within the next year or so. Would the Member on behalf of his Government make a firm commitment that these regional development agreements will have a full commitment from this Government in the future?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will entertain another question or comment from the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Tremblay) and a very short reply from the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Shuswap (Mr. MacWilliam).

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Shuswap (Mr. MacWilliam), this is a Bill that concerns regional development and provides for creating a separate section of the Department to take care of regional development in Ontario and Québec, a section that would perform more or less the same functions as those of the Department of Western Economic Diversification and the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

These functions include a number of important responsibilities, one being to express the views of the regions concerned when national policies are get. Furthermore, these new agencies for the management, co-ordination and planning of regional development have additional resources which they have been given to enable them to have access to national programs.

We are not talking about excluding people from national programs. Our perspective is to have additional resources that will enable the regions—.

Mr. Speaker, the Government's objective is not to create components—to put regional development in separate compartments but to rely on the dynamic energy of the regions, with some help from the federal Government, to have access to all national programs.

I hope that some day—there are regions that today are getting special funding and that will no longer need it when they have become as dynamic as Southwestern Ontario and, I hope, your own riding.

[English]

Mr. MacWilliam: Mr. Speaker, the Member makes comment with regard to regional economic development. His argument is somewhat suspect because in fact the legislation in front of us states very clearly that the mandate of the proposed Ministry of Industry, Science and Technology regarding the regional component concerns itself with only two provinces: Ontario and Québec. By implication that mandate excludes subsequent regional development vis-a-vis science and technology for other provinces. The necessity for that co-ordination of regional development efforts, has not been recognized. There will be three agencies for regional economic development: one through the Ministry of Industry, Science and Technology; the second agency with funds filed through the Western Diversification Fund; and the third industry for the East, the Atlantic Opportunities Agency.

We have three agencies with basically the same mandate. There will be less opportunity for the co-ordination of regional development efforts as a result of the separation of the mandate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate? Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St. Julien), the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis), the Government House Leader wishes to rise.

Mr. Lewis: There have been discussions with the Official Opposition which has the opportunity to frame the motion for debate tomorrow during the allotted opposition day. I understand that the motion which has been placed with the Table calls for two days' debate to which the Opposition is entitled to under the rules, with a vote at the end of the second day. We feel that the subject matter of the debate is important. It is important also that Members who may be in their ridings have a full opportunity to come back and enter the debate on the second day, and there should be some certainty as to when the second day is. For that reason I am rising now to indicate that Monday will also be an allotted day, which will enable the debate on this particular motion to take place on two consecutive days and give all Members an opportunity to return and participate in the debate. As I understand, there will be a vote on Monday evening.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On the same point of order?

Mr. Gauthier: I would like to explain that the Liberal caucus feels very strongly about this issue. If I was upset earlier this day, it was basically because as Whip and Deputy House Leader, I have to forewarn our Members of subject matters coming up.

I had been told earlier this week that there would be no opposition day this week, therefore I had let some Members go to their ridings which are far and difficult to reach such as Members of the Northwest Territories. They have an interest in the subject and would like to discuss and debate it. I have now had time to talk to them and ask them to come back to the House tomorrow and Monday. They will be here.

Therefore perhaps we are innovating, Mr. Speaker, in the sense that we have called for two days. According to Standing Order 81(14), the duration of debate on this motion is to be two sitting days commencing on Friday, April 21, with all questions being put no later than 15 minutes before the time of adjournment on the second day.

I have a certain number of Members who are interested in the subject. They want to raise the matter and discuss it thoroughly. I am happy that the Government has seen fit to call the second day on Monday, the 24th of April.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): So agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, we would probably agree to it, but in the absence of our House Leader, I would like a minute or two to speak with the Government House Leader or the Whip of the Liberal Party. Perhaps some of our Party were consulted, but the Deputy House Leader was not here at the time.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, it was not a matter which is debatable with House Leaders. It was a question of when it would be best for the House to hear the two days. Since the motion was framed for two days and put down for two days, it then became a question of our deciding as a Government when to allocate the second day. We felt that allocating it immediately, that is on Monday, would be in the best interest of all Parties.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): So agreed?

• (1710)

Mr. Lewis: With respect, Mr. Speaker, it is not a matter for agreement. It is more a matter of the designation of opposition days, which the Government is doing. We are officially designating Monday as an opposition day, during which the second day of debate on the Official Opposition motion will take place.

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, during its first mandate, the Government had an opportunity to thoroughly examine each and every area of activities, each and every industry. Our goal was to take stock of the situation as it existed in Canada and determine our strong and weak points in order to develop strategies to successfully meet the challenges of our world and those of future generations.

As each Member of this House could realize, the Government has done away with the practice of developing policies in isolation, because, in this respect, past federal Governments have had a very poor record. Since 1984, this Government has defined itself as one of openness and consultation. That is why we have set up consultation mechanisms wherever the efficient intervention of the State was required.

Mr. Speaker, the tourist industry was certainly no exception. During our research and consultations, we have come up with extremely eloquent data. For instance, in Canada, no industry creates as many jobs as tourism. Some 600,000 Canadians earn their living in that industry and hold a great many types of occupations.

Mr. Speaker, 600,000 people are working in the tourist industry. That represents approximately 5 per cent of the jobs nationwide. In terms of revenues, I have checked the lastest available statistics, those of 1987, and I have found that foreign tourists had spent nearly $21 billion in Canada.

I will go further and say that the tourist industry creates more jobs than the airspace, financial services and agricultural industries. I would go even further. Tourist-related activities rank second, right behind the automobile industry in terms of total production and job creation.

Finally, the tourist industry outmatches the car industry in terms of economic growth as well as job creation. Tourism certainly deserves our full attention, for it is much more than just a pleasant distraction. We must see it as a dynamic economic force in full expansion.

As a consequence, the Government had no choice but to take action and make sure that the tourist industry maintains and even accelerates its growth. As I was saying a while ago, our initial approach to this issue was based on consultation with the main players in every region of this great country.

For example, our Government has organized the national convention on the tourism of tomorrow, which brought together the private sector and all levels of government to review their respective priorities and strengthen their co-operation.

We have also established the tourism ministers conference and the Tourism Marketing Council, among other things.

The Canadian Government has sponsored the most ambitious study ever done on the American pleasure travel market. We were more than willing to share the findings of that research with the provinces and the private sector. As far as tourism is concerned, the Government is convinced that any action to strengthen an industry must be taken in a true spirit of solidarity.

As I was saying, tourism is one of Canada's most important economic activities in terms of sales, revenue in strong foreign currency, tax revenue and job creation. Are we to believe that the growth rate of our international tourism will keep on climbing? Among factors conducive to tourism, the sustainable economic prosperity of industrialized countries comes in first place.

Until now, it is the industrialized western countries which have done the most for tourism development. But the Communist countries are now experiencing a remarkable economic expansion. No wonder many analysts predict that by the year 2000 tourism will be the biggest industry in the world.

Canada's performance since 1980, Mr. Speaker, is quite impressive, especially in comparison with our main competitors. Those are not my words but those of the World Tourism Organization, which reports every year in American dollars the international revenue of major countries, excepting the transportation cost of international travellers.

Indeed, from 1980 to 1987, Canada's international tourism revenue increased by 8.2 per cent annually on average, compared to 6.2 per cent for the United States and 5.2 per cent for the United Kingdom, for example. In fact, our country is ninth in the world for international tourism revenue.

I do not think it is an exaggeration, Mr. Speaker, to predict that Canada made the right choice in time and that its future prospects are excellent. But there is no question of stopping along the way and presuming arbitrarily that the game is already won. We have realized that as the number of travelers increases, so does the competition.

We must also recognize that tourists are more and more demanding. If we do not act to meet their expectations, we will have to forget about the exciting prospects the future holds in store for us.

Obviously, it is in our country's interest to have a well-articulated tourism development strategy that leaves nothing to chance. For this, Mr. Speaker, we need to know our major tourist attractions perfectly and do everything to market them.

So what are these combinations of attractions, events and services that have come to be called "tourism products"? You will see that we are very well endowed in this regard. Canada can pride itself in four major tourism products which have proven themselves over the years. First comes our outstanding strong point, traveling tourism.

Certainly, the diversity of our scenery, our wild coastline and millions of acres of almost undisturbed nature put us in a class by ourselves.

Mr. Speaker, keep in mind that Canada has a network of 34 national parks and wildlife reserves. These parks would play a larger role still if they had improved animation services and close at hand top-quality lodging facilities, and if they were open for a longer period.

No-one maintains that Canada's climate is ideal for year-round tourism, but that is no reason to go into hibernation the moment the first snow flake hits the ground. On the contrary, we ought to take the initiative and make the best we can with the kind of activities which are appropriate on colder days.

Mr. Speaker, this bring me to our second, most sought-after product: open air tourism, sports, and adventure. We are highly competitive in that sector, what with land and water excursions, hunting and fishing, safaris and other activities which attract higher income travelers.

The third element of potential growth has to be urban tourism. In recent years our infrastructures in urban centres has undergone tremendous development. Such industrial and cultural centres as Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver and Ottawa offer top-notch attractions in gastronomy, entertainment, quality accomodation, and shopping opportunities, to name a few. Urban tourism is growing, and although some progress has been made our major cities still have a long way to go to project a stronger image and appeal.

Mr. Speaker, this gives you an idea of the state of tourism in Canada, and it could be the starting point of the Government's strategy.

As I pointed out earlier, Mr. Speaker, Canada's advantages are well known the world over. I might add that our country's excellent reputation as a pacific and welcoming nation can only serve the interests of the tourist industry.

Canada can rightfully be looked upon as a haven of peace, and our hospitable climate is attracting international tourist. Still, Mr. Speaker, competition is becoming stiffer because, not unlike Canada, the goverment of all industrialized countries strongly support tourism and spare no effort to lure the traveling public who is increasingly being sought after worldwide.

Our research indicate that the number of tourists who might visit Canada is likely to increase significantly over the next six years. We estimate that if we make a concerted marketing effort and accurately pinpoint the winning destinations we might be able to double our income from international tourism by 1994 and reach $14 billion.

Among other things, our free trade agreement with the United States will make it easier for Canadians and Americans to visit one another. That is a factor which ideally underlies our strategic approach to tourism, for obviously the United States is our best costumer.

We intend to intensify our efforts in areas of highest growth potential, namely the South Atlantic States, those among the Central Atlantic Coast, New England and the Rockies.

In addition to the expected flow of neighbours from down South, we have noted a seemingly irreversible movement of Asian tourists to whom Canada's natural beauty is a tremendous fascination.

In that respect an estimated 10 million Japanese tourists could cross over next year, almost double the number in 1985. To Canada this is a potential market we have no intention of neglecting, Mr. Speaker, especially since the Japanese of all international tourists are the ones with the highest per capita expenditurrate.

Far from us to neglect more traditional European markets. More French visitors come here each year, just as West German and British ones. Those are nations higly sought after by every country having even a small degree of sophistication in their tourist infrastructures. We not are the only ones in the race, Mr. Speaker, but if Canada can intensify its development and marketting efforts abroad, we will increase in proportion our share of the international market. Like my colleague Tom Hockin, the Minister of State (Small Business and Tourism), I think we will have to predict future trends and thereby get ahead of the competition.

Being a with a country relatively small population and rather modest promotion and advertising financial resources for that reason, we will have to be innovative and creative if we are to catch the imagination of potential tourists. There again the collegial approach, the sharing of our talents and initiatives will play a capital role.

We also identified the nature of the basic problems we must tackle to improve our tourist industry's performance. Those problems arise mainly in the areas of finance, human resources and technological adjustment.

Concerning finance, the Government is committed to gradually eliminating the imbalances that historically restricted small entrepreneurs from accessing major sources of financing. The new order that is being established in the tax regime, combined with financial circles increased awareness of the tourist industry's spinoffs, certainly will help support the initiatives of those who believe in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the quality of service, a matter directly linked to the scarecity of skilled human resources, also is a major concern.

In fact, fewer young people are available, and fewer are interested in a career in the restaurant and hotel industry, for instance. However, we cannot provide first class service without professional, well-trained staff.

We all have a responsibility to make the tourism industry more attractive to Canadian workers. We need innovative ideas and effective marketing programs to reverse a trend that is worrisome, to say the least. The Government has guaranteed its unconditional support for all types of employers who for a long time have been anxious to improve the quality of service in the tourism industry.

As for adjusting to new technologies, Mr. Speaker, our hotel chains, airline companies and travel wholesalers made that adjustment a number of years ago. Our transportation, accommodation, guided tours, entertainment and restaurants are first class, except for a certain lack of co-ordination between these sectors. We have the tools to take care of the necessary planning, but there is a certain form of misplaced individualism that seems to undermine this kind of co-ordination. We hope that our appeal for better co-operation will be answered, Mr. Speaker.

If we are prepared to tackle the problem head on and organize more package tours, Canada's reputation as a host of international calibre will continue to improve.

Mr. Speaker, I have tried to summarize the pros and cons of tourism in Canada. I have made an attempt to zero in on our priorities and determine what obstacles had to be overcome. I would now like to comment briefly on the fundamental goals of the federal Government's tourism development strategy. Mr. Speaker, we must concentrate on increasing our international revenues, which means that the federal Government is helping Canada's tourism industry with a view to attracting tourists from outside Canada. More specifically, we want to improve the development of markets and products in the tourism industry; enhance the effectiveness of our international marketing activities on the principal world markets; enhance our competitive position at the international level; and help the industry to improve its human resources in management and to find the financing it needs.

To be even more specific about the measures the Government will take, it will continue to: prepare surveys and studies in order to refine its knowledge in the area of research on international tourism; acquire and maintain a thorough knowledge of the subsectors of the tourism industry, in order to make more services available; and finally, set up and manage an international marketing program.

From the various working assumptions I just mentioned, Mr. Speaker, I think we can conclude it is imperative for the Government to co-ordinate its initiatives for product development and international marketing with its partners, whether these are provincial and territorial governments, municipalities or the private sector.

It is clear that this philosophy applies to any financial participation on the part of the federal Government, which must be reflected at other levels of government and other decision-making levels.

Mr. Speaker, I think the path we must follow is clear. It is the path of partnership, flexibility and dynamic programs that will guarantee the success of our strategy and a flourishing tourism industry.

Mr. Speaker, without wishing to digress, I would like to conclude by reminding Hon. Members that the Government has made an undertaking to encourage and stimulate entrepreneurship, which is one of the most consistent motors of economic growth. Many small businesses depend on a flourishing tourism industry to be successful.

On the other hand, the tourism industry has the necessary dynamics to attract intelligent entrepreneurs who are not afraid of taking risks but can also count on finding exactly the kind of structure they need.

One last word, Mr. Speaker, to stress the important social role of tourism in Canada. Environmentally, this is a clean industry of which our fellow citizens may be proud. Mr. Speaker, tourism has become very important to Canadians.

In concluding, I want to say that thanks to the strategy I mentioned earlier, we will give this industry the attention it deserves. With so much in our favour, I am convinced that we will help enhance Canada's prestige internationally, and that in doing so, we will be able to inject across this country, the capital we need to fully develop our economic potential.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make come comments on Bill C-3, the Bill which establishes the Department of Industry, Science and Technology and repeals the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act.

As we know, the Government provided some substitutes for the West and created the Western Diversification Agency, which certainly was helpful. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), when he announced that agency, said that it would be new moneys. Up until now, it seems that new moneys have not been forthcoming. I hope that in the Budget the Government will provide those funds for the Western Diversification Agency.

At the same time, I would like to mention that the federal Government, as yet, has not signed an Economic Regional Development Assistance Agreement with Alberta. Alberta has been short-changed in the last five years by that agreement. Alberta received only $35 per capita. Québec, for instance, received $90 per capita for a total of $600 million, while Alberta only received $85 million.

This Bill not only repeals the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act but creates in Part III a regional development agency for Ontario and Québec. I hope that in the new Budget we will see a provision for Economic Regional Development Assistance Agreements to be signed with the provinces and the moneys provided so that everyone will be treated equally.

• (1730)

I have a letter here that I would like to put on the record. It is from the Intergovernmental Affairs Minister in Alberta. It shows that on a per capita basis Alberta received substantially less than all other provinces in the first five years of the ERDA phase. This pattern was set by decisions of the former Liberal Government in 1983-84. However, very little progress has been made in the past four and a half years to effect a fair share for Alberta.

The Government certainly has an obligation to sign a new agreement and give Alberta equal treatment with other provinces.

Mr. St-Julien: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy). I want to mention, first, his comments about la belle province of Quebec where he was twice a candidate. So he is well aware of our potential.

Regarding agreements that should be renewed, I think he reads a great many newspapers these days, and we know that what newspapers convey is sometimes hypothetical or speculative. I believe our Government will listen to the people of Canada and in the next budget we will remember all the regions, the East, the West, the North and the South.

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the speech of my colleague and neighbour since he represents a riding in Abitibi that is next to mine in Témiscamingue. He made a long plea to the effect that tourism is an important economic and job-creating activity. If there is a region where little money has been invested in the past, it is Abitibi-Témiscamingue, in northern Quebec, a remote area where the Liberal Government never cared to put money to develop tourism.

So I would like to ask my neighbour, the Hon. Member for Abitibi, how, from the $75 million the Government has allocated for North-West development, we can expect tourism to be developed in a region such as Abitibi-Témiscamingue?

Mr. St-Julien: Mr. Speaker, as my colleague from Timiskaming has mentioned, we have known since 1984 that nothing much was being done in the large regions. We know that Témiskamingue and Abitibi cover—I am saying this for the benefit of my colleagues opposite and my neighbours—an area of 800,000 square kilometers, which is over half the Province of Québec. And, as my colleague has mentioned, we know that, under the new program for outlying areas, the people involved in promoting tourism in our region, including the Abitibi-Témiskamingue regional tourism association in Rouyn-Noranda and the convention bureau in Val-d'Or, will try to get as much money as possible for the outlying areas, the resource regions.

If we have received those funds for tourism development, it is due to the Hon. President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) who has been looking after the remote and poor regions of the country. The same goes for other regions such as Vancouver and the Maritimes. The Hon. Members have to do their job, pressure the Government and find good projects. That is why my colleague from Témiskamingue was saying: "We are ready because we understand the Government's message, we understand that there are good programs in place, while that wasn't the case under the old Liberal Government that lasted 20 years. And nothing much was done in Abitibi-Témiskamingue."

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on policy, regional development and funds allocated to regional development under this Government's policy. It is very clear that at various times, depending on the prosperity of different regions, Mr. Speaker, the funds allocated per capita in each province will vary, for a good reason: the main purpose of regional development policies is to reduce inequalities. There was a time when southern Ontario received fairly large amounts several years ago, while the West was booming—

An Hon. Member: No!

Mr. Tremblay (Rosemont): Under the regional agreements, it is true. It was $536 million, just for the sake of comparison, over the last five years. It is clear that if a region becomes much more prosperous and another one has difficulties, like Western Canada, the allocation of funds is changed to restore the balance.

But there is an even more important factor: that is why coordinating agencies like the Department of Western Diversification have been created. You must not take only one factor but the whole set, and the agreements cover only part of the regional development funds. The Western Diversification Department has very large funds and works with all governments and Westerners to promote development. And I am convinced that the Department is open to continuing discussions on the agreements.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence on a very short question and a very short reply.

Mr. Volpe: Mr. Speaker, I could not resist the opportunity to rise and express my dismay at the presentations we have had over the course of the last couple of minutes. I want to applaud the Hon. Member for some of his valuable and valid positions. I was almost ready to accept that there was some merit to what the Hon. Member was saying.

Quite frankly, I was rather confused, and I saw some Members opposite express the same type of confusion, about the nature of the distribution of wealth. While there are many valid projects and programs that deserve attention, I noticed the Hon. Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy) and other Members opposite questioning the validity of the position of the Hon. Member—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the Hon. Member direct the question to the Hon. Member for Abitibi?

Mr. Volpe: Does the Hon. Member believe the concept of the distribution of wealth and equality through ERDA represented by a perception of how one must most quickly pillage the Treasury? If in pillaging the Treasury—

Mr. Horner: You ought to know all about that.

Mr. Volpe: The Hon. Member says that we might know about that. We have had four years of observing the masters at work. We want—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope that the Hon. Member would put his question, because one of his colleagues wants to speak next.

Mr. Volpe: I will give him an opportunity to do that quickly. I know the Hon. Member has something right to say.

My hon. friend was talking about the redistribution of all this wealth. Is the Hon. Member going to make strong submissions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) so that the ERDA agreements to which he alluded will be applied properly and vigorously?

[Translation]

Mr. St-Julien: Mr. Speaker, I wish to say very briefly that since 1984, thanks to our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the funds have been distributed fairly throughout Canada and in all sectors of our great country. Were we to receive $75 million tomorrow morning for the regions of Abitibi and Témiscamingue, we would know how to use them there.

But I thank our Government, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for the next budget.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard (Mr. Gagliano).

• (1740)

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take part in this debate and state that earlier this morning my colleagues in the Official Opposition set forth our position with respect to the over-all objective of this Bill to establish the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology.

First, Mr. Speaker, before talking about small business as an economic sector I want to say that this Government has already begun tearing down the old department by creating the Atlantic and Western Canada agencies. After that, as you may recall, we witnessed the fiasco or scandal of the Minister of Regional Development, particularly when an inquiry had to be launched because he had spent more money that had been allocated to his budget!

So in that sector, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has had its share of problems over the last four years. And today they would have us subscribe to this new philosophy—indeed this morning the Minister used such words as 'consultation, excellence, leadership, entrepreneurship'. Mr. Speaker, that is just another smokescreen, nothing but pious wishes, but what he is actually trying to say is that we are fresh into our new mandate, we have four years to make studies, but nothing concrete will ever come out of it.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to quote from page 3 of the Bill, subclause 8(c):

> (c) develop and implement national policies to foster entrepreneurship and the start-up, growth and expansion of small businesses.

Mr. Speaker, in Canada today there are 850,000-odd small businesses with fewer than 50 employees and, in the last few years, these 850,000 businesses have created 85 per cent of all new jobs in this country. Therefore any economic policy we plan to develop in this country ought to take into account the fact that we need small businesses operating in a stable environment and that growth has to come from that sector.

Mr. Speaker, the total lack of coherent policies concerning small- and medium-sized businesses is a telling example of the philosophy of the Conservative Party and their public administration approach which favours wealthy people and major companies to the detriment of ordinary Canadians. During the few days after the Speech from the Throne I tried to find one single concrete initiative I might mention today to prove that sometimes—not often, but still—the Government shows some kind of interest in small- and medium-sized businesses. Not one did I find, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Not a one!

Mr. Gagliano: Not one single concrete initiative during four years, Mr. Speaker, but I did remember something. Last summer —

As you see, Mr. Speaker, I woke those Conservatives over there. Look at them. They cannot bear to hear the truth, Mr. Speaker!

Last summer, the former Minister of State (Small Business), flanked by two Conservative Government big guns—not just anybody, Mr. Speaker, but the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who will be hitting all Canadians with his Budget on the 27, and the Minister of Regional Industrial Development (Mr. Andre)—to announce the entrepreneurship institute.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Tremblay) is waking up too. Earlier he said to his colleague: No, no, not those figures!

So Mr. Speaker, the occasion was so important those two big guns attended the press conference. And as I recall, we were given a beautiful entrepreneurship package on creative design. But once the creative design on the cover was turned over, there was nothing in that document to put small business back on their feet, give them expansion tools as he is now saying, and after almost a year he is still using that phrase.

But we noted a marginal aspect of that announcement, the announcement of that intrepreneurship centre to centralize research in that area, and during the press conference and in the press releases the Minister flanked by his two big guns told us it was done rapidly.

This has not been heard of since, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, if the idea was so good, if the Government really was serious about doing something for small business, they already would have done it. There was not one word in the Throne Speech. Finally, Mr. Speaker, this morning the Minister referred to it. Words, words, no action.

During the elections, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of International Trade promised $57 million to promote trade with the United States and the large regions in the world. Think of that! That minimal amount was spread over a number of years. So can you imagine what those $57 million spread over a number of years will produce?

Mr. Ricard: It is better than nothing.

Mr. Gagliano: The Hon. Member for Laval suggests this is better than nothing! Of course it is better than nothing! But there is something we should be clear about, Mr. Speaker. Is that one of those election commitments they can no longer honour?

An Hon. Member: As always!

Mr. Gagliano: Once the election is behind us, promises apparently are forgotten. If by any chance, by coincidence, the Government honour their commitment, and it would be a rare occurence indeed if that election commitment was honoured, how will that figure be distributed, Mr. Speaker? What will be the small and medium businesses' share of those $57 million? Small and medium businesses need tools, moneys to help their exports, not the large corporations, the Government's friends. They already are established on the markets. But looking at statistics, small businesses are not in exports at all.

An Hon. Member: Right!

Mr. Gagliano: So the $57 million is a drop of water in the ocean, Mr. Speaker.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I really woke them up now. During their first term, the Conservative Government invested all their time and energies into the Canada U.S. Trade Agreement. But it's well known that agreement will be of benefit essentially to large corporations. There will be no problem for Northern Telecom nor ALCAN, who already are world scale corporations, established in different countries, Mr. Speaker. But not so for small businesses, because they will not have the means to export, and the Government will not supply the tools they need to do so.

Tell me, Mr. Speaker, how a company with less than 15 employees will be able to compete on these new markets which are supposed to be, from what the government says, a godsend and the perfect solution? We have already started to see what consolidation can do, and how some companies can destroy others. If that trend continues, Mr. Speaker, in just a few years, we will lose control over the mean which could help Canada to open up to the rest of the world, and also lose our ability to compete and stay competitive while keeping our Canadian identity. But because of the laisser-faire policy of this government, we will without a doubt be controlled by various interests and we will definitely become a colony again, just as it was in the beginning.

Mr. Speaker, as I have said, small businesses create 85 per cent of all new jobs in Canada. The government should realize that by slowing down the economic growth of these small- and medium-sized businesses, the economic welfare of our country will suffer. We have often suggested to the government ways to really help small businesses without spending too much money. All we have to do is help them deal with temporary problems, often of a structural nature, which take up too much of their time and affect their productivity.

An Hon. Member: Give us examples!

Mr. Gagliano: My hon. friend would like me to give examples. Be patient and you will get them. Four years ago—I give you some, but you never used any. Therefore, wait patiently. I will suggest some to you, and I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will see that it is brought to the attention of his Minister.

If the Government tried to copy the American way, for instance, it could—These days, Mr. Speaker, the Governemnt is always copying the American way; if indeed we must, why do we not amend our Small Business Loans Act to make it competitive or in harmony with the American legislation which has a treshold of $500,000 in guaranteed loans, while even today, our Small Business Loan Act provides for a treshold of $100,000.

In 1984, the Conservative Government broadened the definition of small businesses, but kept the same ceiling, $100 000 while lowering the guarantee to 85 per cent. For this reason, it is useless to our small businesses. That is one of the recommendations we have been making for quite a long time.

Perhaps the Hon. Member sitting on the Government side should remember that the Official Opposition had a task force which travelled to throughout this country, made recommendations and published a report. We acted differently from the Government which carried out a consultation through out Canada, prepared a report and then put it away somewhere because it just could not bring itself to implement it. But we had a report printed and, if my hon. friend have not read it, I could provide them with a copy.

During the election campaign, I am sure they were aware for instance of our election platform on small and medium-size-businesses, our so-called RSSP. We are all aware that small businesses are faced with a major capitalization problem. They not only need loans, which they must pay back, but also capital stock. In fact, we are proposing a national REA. Take Quebec's case: It is the REA Program which has made it possible for a number of small and medium sized Québec corporations to operate nation wide, with Québecers providing the necessary capital.

For the past two years, we have been suggesting in the House a savings shares program for small businesses. It was part of our party platform. We have also suggested to the Government—during the debate on the tax reform, we took part in real battles in the House. The Government says it wants to help small businesses! Under the tax reform, the tax rate of small manufacturing businesses has increased from 10 to 12 percent. What do government members have to say about that? What did they do when we fought to get an amendment on that? They voted with the government for a 2 percent increase with tax rate of small businesses. Is this the way they stand up for small business! How can you talk about the Department of Industry, Science and Technology helping small business to compete with the Americans? Another vital sector, the manufacturing sector, has also been hit with a tax increase. That's a shame, Mr. Speaker.

Under this same tax reform, the government proposes a $500,000 capital gains exemption on sales of small business shares. We told the government that if they travelled around the country and talked to small businessmen, they would learn that shares are rarely sold in the small business sector. Capital assets are sold, not capital actions. Consequently, the Income Tax Act should be amended so that this $500,000 capital gains exemption apply to sales of capital assets of small business and not only of capital actions.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the government refused. That is another policy suggestion of ours that they only applied during the election campaign, during the by-election in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean.

One morning, in fact, the Conservative Party incumbent received an application from a group in Lac Saint-Jean wishing to start a business incubator. No program existed, there was nothing. Of course, he got approval from the Government, money, everything. The Conservatives did not come out later to say, since there had been an application during the campaign in Lac Saint-Jean, why not make it a national policy? Why not? That should be one of the roles of the new department.

Consider that incubator policy that could help our young university graduates getting into the labour market, who do not have the financial means to start a business, who lack the capital to pay the rent, hire a secretary or buy the essential equipment nowadays, computers, Fax machines and copiers.

They could have common services, and those with human resources could create services which would make us competitive and innovative. That is how this new Department could innovate.

However, I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary in this Department will speak a little louder on behalf of small business, because the present Minister—And I wonder why John Bullock, Chairman of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, who fiercely defends small business once said: "The Department and the Minister of State for Small Businesses should both be abolished!"

Mr. Speaker, I wondered, but now I really understand what John Bullock meant. The judge put questions to the present Minister, but he did not even answer. That's right! For this Government, small business is no longer important. In fact, it is just something insignificant. It is the same great John Bullock who the other day withdrew from the Trade Alliance saying: "Finally I understand that this Government's philosophy is to listen only to the big guys and to forget about the little guys!"

Mr. Speaker, that is not just anyone! John Bullock is someone who has always defended the Government's policies over the last four years. And finally, he also saw the light. Now he is getting ready to attack, because—Imagine what is going to happen to small Canadian businesses when the new federal tax—I will have the last laugh, not Government Members when the new federal sales tax is implemented. Imagine all those small businesses up to their necks in red tape, Mr. Speaker!

This Government keeps talking about its grand design. It thinks it can solve the world's problems with big words. If you listen to all the speeches, you realize that for the past week, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) has defended her program, and that practically everyone has come out against her unemployment insurance reform.

And there too, Mr. Speaker, they talk about training. Just imagine, they are going to take the money, about $800 million, from the Unemployment Insurance Fund, and we must not forget that one-third of Canada's labour force works for small businesses, so they are the ones that contribute to that Fund. Now the Government is going to take the money to pay for training in big businesses, because how can you provide training in a small business when there are only two, three, four or five employees, and when so many small businesses are really that small.

Mr. Speaker, you are signalling that my time has expired, and I am sorry about that because I have a lot more to say on the subject, but I have always been respectful of the Chair, and I will conclude, if I may, by saying that for four years, this Government never stopped helping the rich and big business, and always forgot the little people. And now, it is starting all over again: Plus ça change, plus c'est pareil! Their second term is worse than the first, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES—SUSPENSION OF HUNGER STRIKE—MINISTER'S UNDERTAKING—REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT ON FUNDING—NEGOTIATIONS WITH ELECTED NATIVE LEADERS

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, when I first rose in this House to question the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux) over changes to native education policy two weeks ago, I was optimistic. I believed that the Minister was a reasonable person and in the interest of resolving the dispute he could agree to two simple things. First, there must be negotiations with the people affected by the policy. Second, the changes should not be implemented while negotiations are taking place. This seemed reasonable to me.

This Government claims to be willing to discuss its policies with anyone affected by them. Surely the same courtesy should be extended to native people as well. After all, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has entertained a steady parade of business groups and Conservative think-tanks during the preparation of his Budget. In fact, the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) recently defended meetings with the infamous Fraser Institute in the name of open consultation.

It seemed reasonable that the new policy dealing with Indian post-secondary education would be put on hold while the negotiations took place. If fair and open negotiations are to take place it seems that both sides must be willing to change their position and not come to the table with preconceived ideas, otherwise no true negotiation can take place.

Last week, I rose again to question the Minister on this matter. My optimism was dimmed somewhat but I still believed that the Minister was open to reason. I asked him to reconsider his refusal to begin negotiations, emphasizing the increasing danger to the health of the fasting Indian students. Incredibly, it is necessary to continue this debate. As we all know, there will be a debate on the subject over the next two days.

In good faith most of the fasting students called off their fast last weekend. In return, they expected the Minister to keep his promise to begin bilateral negotiations.

In this spirit of renewal they met with the Minister on Tuesday, along with representatives of Indian leadership. However, the Minister betrayed this spirit of renewal. He stated at that meeting that he would not impose a moratorium. On the one hand the Minister insists on good faith, his willingness to compromise and his openness to new ideas. Yet, on the other hand, he presents native people with a fait accompli. How can Indian people engage in meaningful negotiations if the policy is all ready to be implemented and already decided upon? By making up his mind before hearing the analysis offered by First Nations from across the country the Minister is not negotiating in good faith in this issue.

Earlier, the Minister refused to negotiate when the students were fasting, saying he would not be held hostage. Yet at the same time he wants to hold the negotiating process hostage to his own artificial deadlines. He makes up his mind and then asks for native contributions. The Minister has made a mockery of the consultative process that the Government represents as part of its strategy.

In response to the Minister's stubborn refusal to negotiate in good faith, several students have continued their fast. Melinda and Debbie Sault are on their twenty-ninth day of a hunger-strike. I spoke to their mother just a few days ago. I have spoken to other hunger-strikers in Saskatoon also. They are concerned with their weight loss. They are concerned with their health. They are concerned, as doctors are, that permanent damage to their health could occur as their bodies start digesting themselves.

This has been a life and death situation and remains one for these young people. Yet the Minister has turned a deaf ear to their plea. All they want is to negotiate and to delay implementation until negotiations are complete. Is this unreasonable? I think it is not. I do not think any person giving it a moment's thought would think it an unreasonable request. Yet the Minister has continued to deny them.

The support for Indian post-secondary education is a moral and historical obligation of the Canadian Government. Our country is built on an enormously valuable land-base provided by our First Nations. In return, natives were promised many things, including education. This year, 15,000 students attended post-secondary institutions. Yet native participation in post-secondary education in Canada is still far below the rate for non-Indian students. The program has grown over the past 10 years. Many students have graduated. Some 90 per cent of those graduates find jobs. Education is the key to native future, to the future of our first peoples. Yet the Government wants to cut off this future.

The decision of the Minister and the previous Minister to cap funding for native post-secondary education is both unjust and immoral. However, given that morality and justice are foreign to this Government, let me turn to an argument based on economics to which it seems to be much more in tune.

In the name of financial efficiency the Post-secondary Assistance Program has been kept. No longer will funds be provided to meet demand but individual bands will be required to allocate funds only to some students. Rationing of education will take place. The bands will be divided. The budget is limited, and that ends the thinking process of this Government.

If this is false economy, what is more expensive, four years of education or 40 years of welfare? Native people are mired in poverty and unemployment. Education is a proven way out. Educating native people today will save millions in welfare, penitentiary and health expenditures tomorrow. Where is the good business sense this Government claims to have? Where is the compassion the Government claims to have?

Mrs. Dorothy Dobbie (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, on April 7, 1989, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing (Mr. Axworthy) raised concerns about the bilateral process for reviewing Indian post-secondary policy. I would like to provide some background to this matter so that there might be a better understanding of the commitment by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux) to a joint review of the policies with the Indian leaders, students and Department officials.

The new policy has major improvements over the previous program. These have resulted from consultation with over 500 Indian bands, with tribal councils, with students and educators. These are consultations which took place in 1988.

The program provides tuition assistance. It provides a new approach to the provision of living allowances. It provides adjustments to the rates of assistance, including special allowances for high rental areas. In addition, up to 5 per cent of the students will be eligible for scholarships of $3,500 for successful study in a range of programs supporting self-government and economic development. Also, the new policy includes an annual scholarship of up to $1,000 based on academic achievement.

The Government is committed to Indian post-secondary education. In the Minister's letter to the chiefs and councils on March 20, 1989, he indicated that the budget for the program rose from $4.2 million in 1975-76 to over $130 million in 1989-90. It is the Government's intention to continue to meet any future increased demand for post-secondary assistance through controlled budgetary increases.

The objective of the new policy, which is to apply to students enrolling this September, 1989, is to produce more graduates, and to encourage students to take programs of study which would assist Indian self-government and economic self-reliance.

The previous policy was deemed inadequate by the Assembly of First Nations in its review of education. Now, as a result of the new policy, Indian education authorities have increased control over their own administration of student assistance programs.

The Minister has indicated on many occasions that once the hunger-strike is over he is ready to undertake a bilateral process of discussion over the next few months to review the policy, to try to resolve any outstanding concerns and issues. These discussions would involve both the students and the Indian leaders. The Government is looking forward to a continuation of this very successful program.

AIR SAFETY—REQUEST FOR REPLACEMENT OF MINISTER/ REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to participate in the adjournment debate this evening. However, before I do, I want to make a couple of brief comments unrelated to the subject matter at hand.

First, if I could be a bit of a John Warren, I would like to let people know that immediately after the adjournment the Newfoundland election will be carried on the parliamentary channel, followed by the rerun of Question Period today. I say that just in case anybody is out there watching.

Second, I want to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher), on his appointment as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. The Hon. Member was involved considerably in the Transport Committee in the previous Parliament. I know that he will bring to his new position an understanding of the issues as well as with respect to how the Transport Committee works. I look forward to working with him.

• (1810)

I did something that I don't like to do, Mr. Speaker, and it is something that I haven't done in a previous Parliament. I requested that a Minister of the Crown be removed from office. I did it after great thought. I did it not because somebody else had already suggested the same thing time and time again. Too often in this House the immediate reaction is that if we don't like something that has happened, it is off with the head of the Minister.

I think what has been happening in Transport over the last five years is a lack of control. It has been getting worse. In our parliamentary system, it is the Minister who is ultimately responsible for what happens. Now the current Minister is a gentleman. I have no hesitation whatsoever in saying that. He is stuck with a real problem.

It started with the Deputy Prime Minister, then Minister of Transport, who followed the lead of the Liberals in deregulating air transportation and other modes. The Minister for International Trade did not appear to care about what was happening within the Ministry. Now a Minister has inherited a Ministry that is driving the ship. In a lot of ways, it is providing him with advice that is less than appropriate for what has happened in the industry.

Why do I say all this? When we were dealing with the White Paper Freedom To Move, when we were dealing with Bills C-18 and C-19, there were two favourite expressions. The Government, Minister after Minister, said that this new policy of leaving it to the market-place as opposed to public convenience and necessity would in no way endanger safety, that safety was the number one concern of the Government. In no way would they allow any of this to have a negative impact.

The Liberal Party, in their re-found, reborn-again opposition to deregulation—they were the ones who started it in Canada. There is no question about that. The Member for, I believe, Fort Garry was the one who, as Transport Minister initiated it. We were saying, "Listen, there are going to be some problems created. When it comes down to a decision between meeting the bankers' demands and being concerned about safety, even though you don't like to do it, and we were thinking of the small carriers on the air side, one would end up having to meet the bankers' demand of payment versus that extra $500 cost for de-icing a plane or replacing a wheel-bearing." Even though the specs said it was good for another 200 miles, the industry norm was replacing it then. It was held off. We suggested that those kinds of things were going to happen. We were pooh-poohed. We were told at the time that that is not going to happen. These companies are responsible. They would never jeopardize safety.

As we have seen in the United States where equipment is being used for longer and longer periods of time, we have major structural failures. We have one airplane that looks more like a convertible, another that loses a door, others that have cracked wings. All of these planes are in the 20-year age group ,which under a regulated environment in the United States, because of the stability of the industry, and stability means a decent bottom line, means that those planes would have been replaced at an appropriate time.

Instead, because of the nature of the competition, drastic reduction in fares in some cases, and we have seen in the States the number of airlines going out of business, that kind of competition has pushed the carriers to the limit. They have used their equipment longer than they should have. We are seeing the results of that.

In Canada, while we in the Opposition were being pooh-poohed when we warned that this could potentially lead to accidents or failures of equipment, deaths or injury, Transport Canada was saying to the Deputy Minister of Transport that resources were not available to deal properly with the deregulation of air in Canada. It said:

> The shortage of trained, experienced inspection staff and other personnel has seriously impacted on the Directorate's ability to effectively perform its mandated tasks. The increase in the certification workload under economic regulatory reform, resulting from the need to service new and expanding air carriers, is affecting the Directorate's ability to effectively complete its ongoing inspection program, and thereby assure industry compliance with established legislation, regulation and standards.

It goes on and on. This is an internal audit branch document, a preliminary review of aviation regulations given to the Deputy Minister of Transport in June, 1987, the very same month that this House passed Bills C-18 and C-19.

It was October of that year when the first part of those Bills was proclaimed. This Government knew, at least at the bureaucratic level. I cannot believe the Deputy Minister did not advise the Minister at the time that this document existed and of the warnings that were out there. Yet the Government did nothing about this. It did not make sure there were air traffic controllers. It did not make sure there were inspectors, et cetera.

I look forward, Mr. Speaker, to the response from the Parliamentary Secretary. He knows, I know and you know that we are going to continue this battle another time as we put in place the preventive measures necessary.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, let me say thank you to the Member opposite for his warm greetings at the beginning of his dissertation. I do look forward to continuing to work with him on the Transport Committee. I must say though in response to his question that I can only reiterate what has already been stated repeatedly both in this House and elsewhere. Canadian skies are safe. Events in recent months have served to undermine the confidence of Canadians in the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. In response to these concerns, on March 29, 1989, the Minister announced the appointment of Mr. Justice Estey to review the entire record of the Gander accident investigation with a view to advising the Minister as to whether any further investigation or inquiry is warranted. The Minister also announced the appointment of Mr. Justice Moshansky to conduct a judicial inquiry into the Dryden accident.

Earlier this week members of this House completed second reading of Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Transportation Accident Investigation Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof. This Bill is now before the Standing Committee on Transportation which will begin its deliberations next week. As a member of that committee, I would invite the Hon. Member to join with us in our efforts to provide Canadians with the best accident investigation body possible.

The Minister is prepared to consider any amendment which will serve to enhance transportation safety. Furthermore, while the Minister and his senior officials believe that the inspection resources of the Department of Transport are adequate to the present requirement, nevertheless the Minister intends to avail himself of the expertise of both industry and Government to assist him in ensuring that we have the right resources and that they are used in the right way in order to meet the changing needs of the future.

With specific reference to Lester B. Pearson Airport in Toronto, I would remind Hon. Members that the Ministers have recently completed extensive consultations which will lead to the development of a comprehensive plan for the whole of the southern Ontario airspace. An announcement will be made in due course.

I would like to emphasize that while we do have a shortage of air traffic controllers in Toronto, the traffic flow is always matched to the controllers' ability to handle safely the traffic. This means delays, not a decrease in the level of safety. I would also like to assure Members and the travelling public that every conceivable effort is being made to rectify the shortage situation.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE—BRITISH COLUMBIA FISHERY—PROCESSING OF FISH IN CANADA/LANDINGS OF SALMON AND HERRING.

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, it would appear that the Government has in fact reached a final decision as to its response to the GATT ruling of 1987 which found against the current regulations which have prevented the export of raw, pink and sockeye salmon and of herring from British Columbia. However, a number of issues remain. For example, in the new regulations which we are told are to be issued, there is the question of which specific provisions they will contain in terms of grading and inspection of the fish landed.

• (1820)

The concern has been raised that all that will occur is that raw fish will be landed at landing stations in British Columbia only to be purchased by American buyers and shipped directly to the United States.

The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), has given the House his assurance that the so-called "Murphy 2" proposal will be rejected by Canada. This proposal would have permitted Canadian fish caught by Canadian vessels to be shipped directly to U.S. ports where a Canadian official would be able to count the fish for the purpose of our conservation efforts. For Canada to even entertain such a proposal is totally unacceptable to British Columbia's fishermen and to the industry.

On another point, what effect have the efforts of the U.S. Trade Representative, Carla Hills, had on influencing the Canadian Government? According to a statement from the U.S. Trade Representative's office on March 28, hearings will be conducted into which Canadian fish products will be targeted for further trade sanction actions.

The list which was released by the U.S. trade office lists 18 fish products. I will just mention those that are appropriate to the B.C. coast. They include salmon, whether it be canned, filletted, smoked or salted; turbot, filletted; other fish roe; other fish, filletted; other fish, minced or not. It would seem to include almost every commercial product processed in British Columbia.

In the communiqué issued by the Trade Representative's office, the public, particularly the U.S. industry, is being invited to propose additions to the list just in case anything was left out.

If the Government accepts the provision whereby fish would be landed in Canada without any processing whatsoever, only to be sold in the U.S. in the hope of avoiding U.S. trade action, I believe it is being extremely naive.

Section 304(e) of the American implementing legislation of the Free Trade Agreement states the following:

> (1) Within 30 days of the application by Canada of export controls on unprocessed fish under statutes exempted from the Agreement under Article 1203, or the application of landing requirements for fish caught in Canadian waters, the President shall take appropriate action to enforce United States rights under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade that are retained in Article 1205 of the Agreement.
> (2) In enforcing the United States rights referred to in paragraph (1), the President has discretion to—
>
> (A) bring a challenge to the offending Canadian practices before the GATT;
> (B) retaliate against such offending practices;
> (C) seek resolution directly with Canada;
> (D) refer the matter for dispute resolution to the Canada-United States Trade Commission; or
> (E) take other action that the President considers appropriate to enforce such United States rights.

Thus, within a month of any new landing requirements, regardless of how ineffective they might be, the Americans are more than likely to begin the process of trade action against them.

Fishermen, as represented by their unions, and our fishing industry have joined in expressing concern that Canada may give in to the United States pressure with respect to the West Coast industry. The fear is that our Government may do this in the hope that the United States will not take any similar steps with regard to the East Coast.

If they win, the next time the Americans could demand that East Coast restrictions be brought into line with the GATT. Article 1205 of the trade agreement states: "The parties retain their rights and obligations under GATT and agreements negotiated under GATT". Thus the exempted provincial provisions could be open for challenge before GATT.

Given the precedent of giving in on the sea regulations, they are more likely than ever to fall by the wayside as well.

As Geoff Meggs, editor of The Fisherman in British Columbia, said: "If we have lost our right to process our own fish then how can we require that Canadians catch the fish in the first place?"

On March 21, 1988, the former Minister for International Trade told the House that salmon and herring caught off the Pacific Coast will be landed in Canada in order to ensure accurate catch reporting, inspection, grading and quality control. Will the Government today declare forthrightly and unequivocally that it intends to live up to those words?

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliament Secretary to the Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite knows that this complaint which originated with the U.S. fishing interests in Alaska, was that Canadian processors were buying up substantial quantities of Alaskan salmon and herring while U.S. processors were denied any access to unprocessed salmon and herring from Canada. The U.S. took the issue to the GATT where a clear finding was made that the Canadian export restrictions on unprocessed Pacific pink and sockeye salmon and herring violated international trade rules.

In March, 1988, the Government announced that it would remove the GATT inconsistent export restrictions. The Government's announcement also stated that concurrent with this removal, new GATT-consistent regulations would be introduced to ensure that salmon and herring caught off the Pacific Coast will continue to be landed in Canada, to ensure that our well recognized fish conservation and management programs are not compromised.

The Government undertook an extensive consultative process in 1988, to seek industry's views respecting the development of a GATT-consistent landing requirement which would ensure maintenance of the conservation and management system related to Pacific salmon and herring. An industry advisory committee was created which, in September, 1988, submitted a series of recommendations for consideration.

The recommendations were subjected to an extensive review and analysis, including an evaluation by eminent independent GATT experts, to ascertain if the proposed landing requirement system would be GATT-consistent. The answer was yes, and the system, developed with the industry and the independent GATT experts, was discussed with the United States and is now part of the regulatory amendments.

Throughout this issue the Government has maintained the position that Canada will fulfil its GATT obligations while at the same time safeguarding the essential interests of the West Coast fishing industry through GATT-consistent regulations.

The regulatory package requiring the landing of both Pacific salmon and herring at shore based landing stations has been fully reviewed and supported by the industry and the Province of British Columbia. The Government has been moving on a fast track to implement the new regulations and it is expected that they will be completed before April 26, 1989.

With respect to the Pacific herring roe extraction activity, the Government is determined to ensure that this activity will continue to be carried out in Canada through measures that are GATT-consistent. Various possible measures are under consideration in consultation with the industry.

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION FUNDING—NATIVE PEOPLES

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River) moves:

That this House recognize that the Government's arbitrary and misanthropic policy of unilaterally capping future funding for post-secondary education for Canada's native peoples severely undermines the right and efforts of these peoples to enhance their capacity to make meaningful and lasting improvements to their economic and social conditions and to establish their self-reliance, thereby condemning them to unacceptable living conditions and driving them to desperate measures; and

That this House urge the Government to terminate its plans to cap this funding and to take steps to establish effective bilateral consultations on this and other matters vital to the improvement of the lives of and the ending of discrimination toward these Native peoples.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise in the House today in order to debate the issue of native post-secondary education assistance. What does not please me is having to debate this issue at all. The Government's lack of sensitivity to Canada's First Nations people and its lack of understanding of the issues facing them are appalling.

Under a former Liberal Government, funds were committed to the Assembly of First Nations to allow this organization to conduct an intense and thorough review of education for native peoples. This Government lived up to the former Liberal Government's commitment by channelling the necessary funds for this review. This review was recently completed at a cost of $6 million.

What I fail to comprehend in all of this is that the Government, so apparently concerned with spending, has not given this review any consideration whatsoever. The Minister's officials initiated their own review of the E-12 guidelines, knowing full well that AFN was conducting a similar review. Does the Government not trust the native people of Canada to come up with a policy which would be of benefit not only to the native people but also of benefit to the Government?

It is obvious to all members of my Party that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux) has been sandbagged by officials in his own Department. A 1972 policy adopted by a Liberal Government advocated Indian control of Indian education which would see Indian communities taking over the responsibility of education. This policy was developed after the 1971 subcommittee on Indian education heard from the National Indian Brotherhood, now known as the Assembly of First Nations. The NIB had prepared a policy paper which laid the groundwork for federal acceptance of the 1972 policy. This is what consultation does. A Government demonstrates leadership by consulting with the people most affected by a given policy.

Many Hon. Members will no doubt recall the Penner report on Indian self-government which was tabled in this House in November 1983. I need not remind Hon. Members that this report was unanimously endorsed by all three Parties. The Penner report identified education as a critical area of concern. Witnesses appearing before the subcommittee on Indian self-government stated time and time again that First Nations must have control of legislation and policy in order to ensure the survival and development of Indian communities.

In the closing chapter of the Penner report, it states:

> The Committee is strongly convinced that a major change in the orientation of federal policy must occur. The federal Government must establish new relationships that will enable Indian peoples to break out of the vicious circle of dependency, poverty and despair that now grips them.

This statement is a strong one. It is obviously not a statement the Government understands. If the Government really understood the meaning of establishing new relationships, it would have taken the time to properly consult with First Nations on changes to the E-12 guidelines. This Government could have avoided the backlash against this new policy for native post-secondary education. Had the Government taken the time to negotiate on a bilateral basis, many students would not be risking their lives today by fasting.

Both opposition Parties in the House have raised this issue no fewer than 15 times in the last 14 days of sitting. The Minister claims to have listened to the native peoples of Canada on this issue. If the Minister had really listened to the Indian people, this debate would have been totally unnecessary.

The Government fails to understand that post-secondary education for our native peoples is the key to self-determination and economic self-reliance. Yet the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and members of his Cabinet have repeatedly stated that the country's future is dependent upon economic development. This seems to be a contradiction in terms. Does the Government have one opinion for non-native people and a different one for native people?

The policy is not only restrictive, but it is regressive. By capping the funding for native post-secondary education assistance at $130 million, the policy will restrict the number of native students enrolling in post-secondary institutions. This policy is regressive because it has undone everything which has been achieved by our First Nations in the area of education since 1971.

The changes in this policy will restrict the development of Canada's First Nations and condemn many of them to continuing dependency on the Government from birth until death. Under this Government, Canada's First Nations peoples will not achieve self-determination, nor will they achieve economic self-reliance. This Government has in essence put an end to the hopes and aspirations of many young native people.

I represent 46 native communities in my riding. Many of them have very active and successful economic development projects in the works which will ensure economic self-reliance in the years to come. Jobs have been created for their people. Welfare payments have decreased and so has drug and alcohol abuse. These results have largely been achieved by people who have been through the post-secondary education system and who have returned to their communities with the skills and the knowledge to carry out these policies.

It is no secret that the unemployment rate in our Indian communities runs anywhere from 80 per cent to 95 per cent. It is also no secret that many of our Indian peoples do have not have the minimum number of weeks required to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. The proposed changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act will make matters even worse for our First Nations' peoples. As a result, many of them are on welfare. Last year some $316 million was spent by this Government on welfare pay-outs to Indian people. The changes to the native post-secondary education funding combined with changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act will result in welfare pay-outs of more than $400 million in the next year.

If this Government was committed to deficit reduction, it would lift the cap on native post-secondary education funding. It would not restrict the number of native students enrolling in post-secondary institutions, and it would soon see a dramatic decrease in welfare pay-outs to the Indian people.

The success stories of the native post-secondary education assistance program are many. Nine out of ten native students graduating from post-secondary institutions are employed. For Hon. Members on the opposite side who fail to understand economics, this means that 90 per cent of them have jobs. I remember clearly the words of the Prime Minister during the 1984 election campaign: "Jobs, jobs, jobs". Surely the Prime Minister and his colleagues can understand this.

Indian and Inuit lawyers, doctors, nurses, teachers, and administrators, to name a few, have successfully completed their studies, thanks to a post-secondary education. Those who have chosen not to return to their communities now pay taxes to the Government. I am certain that the Prime Minister and his colleagues understand this.

Canada's native peoples want to make a contribution to society. They do not want Government hand-outs, and they certainly do not want to be dependent upon the Government from birth until death.

I have been listening very carefully to what the Indian peoples have been saying on this issue. The Minister has not been listening, contrary to his very own popular belief. Yes, the Minister has met with the First Nations leaders, and yes, he has stated that he is committed to a bilateral process and the Minister has stated that he will listen. However, I do not believe the Hon. Minister understands what is at stake. If the Minister and his officials had only undertaken a full bilateral consultation from the very beginning, we would not be here today debating this very critical issue.

Once again the Minister will tell us that he has consulted with the Indian people. I have yet to come across a single individual from the native community who supports the restrictive and regressive changes to native post-secondary education funding. Not one.

In fact, I have received well over 1,500 individual petitions from native communities, and more than 100 letters from various native groups and associations, all of which are in my riding. I will bet that the Minister's office has been bombarded with letters and petitions opposing the changes to native post-secondary education assistance. How can the Minister and this Government state that they have consulted with the Indian peoples?

The priorities of this Government are misplaced. Let us compare what it costs to put a young native student through college or university with what it costs to support that same native student on welfare. At today's rates a young native student can get a good, solid education for approximately $35,000. Once that young native student graduates, he or she finds a job and is self-supporting.

Now let us look at what it would cost the Government to support that same native student by way of welfare. If the Government had to support the student by way of welfare for the rest of his or her life, and providing that the individual remained unmarried, it could cost the taxpayers close to $300,000. Imagine what the costs would be if that same individual were to marry and have three or four children. Where is the logic?

When it comes to paying the costs for holding native youth in jail, there is no shortage of government money. There is no shortage of government money either when it comes to paying a lifetime of welfare and poverty.

This Government has under-estimated the strength of Canada's aboriginal peoples. We have seen demonstrations at Indian Affairs offices across the country, resulting in the arrests of several native people. We have also seen protests by our First Nations here on Parliament Hill, and we have seen hunger strikes by native students frustrated by this Government's new policy. The First Nations will continue to oppose the policy of the Government with respect to native post-secondary education. The opposition Parties will continue to oppose this policy. The Government will not be let off the hook until the Minister of Indian Affairs agrees to some serious bilateral negotiations, without deadlines and restrictions, with the native leadership.

The Minister of Indian Affairs will not lose face by admitting that he has made a mistake. In fact, if the Minister will only compromise on the question of bilateral negotiations without deadlines, he will be respected and admired for his commitment to the Indian people of Canada. I am afraid that if the Minister does not move quickly on this issue, he will lose all credibility with the people for whom he is responsible. If that happens, the Prime Minister will have no other choice but to remove him from his duties.

Support for the First Nations' views on native post-secondary education is growing. Many non-native Canadians have had an opportunity to truly look at both sides of this issue and have come to understand and support First Nations in their fight against these restrictive and regressive changes.

The native leadership and students have received support from the Canadian Federation of Students, from university professors, from teachers, from labour organizations, from churches, from social justice coalitions, and from our very own Human Rights Commissioner. How can the Government continue to ignore the importance of this issue? How can this Government implement changes to a policy without proper consultation? It is time for the Government to live up to its commitment of a bilateral negotiation process with the native leadership and the students. It is time for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to make peace with the native peoples and negotiate in good faith without time limits.

I sincerely hope that the Government, and in particular the Minister who is here today, will have paid close attention to what I have said and I hope that it will pay close attention to what Hon. Members speaking after me will say.

The future of Canada's First Nations youth lies with the Government. Let us all hope that the Government will not take away their hopes and aspirations but instead will give them a secure future filled with dreams and ambitions.

Mrs. Dobbie: Mr. Speaker, will the Hon. Member tell me why he believes that $130 million is not a sufficient amount to cover the education of the students who are in need of help for post-secondary education in the coming year? Why does he think that $130 million is an insufficient amount of money to cover these educational needs? If the Hon. Member does have an indication that that is insufficient, can could he tell us from where he got his figures? According to our estimates, that is a sufficient amount of money to cover the needs of every Indian student seeking post-secondary education in the coming year.

Mr. Nault: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question. I am pleased she asked that question because I was hoping it would come up.

It must be obvious to the Government that it did not consult with the native communities on this particular new policy, otherwise the Government would not have to ask this type of question. I have met with many native leaders in the last few weeks on this issue. The question has been put to them very succinctly. There will not be enough dollars to pay for the future generations of the First Nations people. It is obvious these individuals will not get into the system because they will not qualify under the policy of the Government.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): How much?

Mr. Nault: I will tell the Hon. Member right now that during the next few weeks, I, as a member of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs, will ask the Minister that particular question, namely where he gets his numbers. There seems to be a conflict of information right now. We will soon find out from him, the man with all the numbers, exactly where he got his numbers and we will be more than pleased at that time to give him ours.

Mrs. Dobbie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member did not answer the question. He seems to be basing his estimates on very vague unsubstantiated ideas.

An Hon. Member: Where did you get your numbers?

Mrs. Dobbie: I ask the Hon. Member to answer the question and tell us why he does not think $130 million is enough to cover the post-secondary education needs of the Indian students for the coming year? Will he answer that question?

Mr. Nault: Mr. Speaker, I will answer that more specifically. Last night I met with a native student who has been unable to go to school this semester because she could not get a grant. She could not get the money from Indian Affairs to attend. She is sure that she will not be able to attend next year for the same reason, that she will not be able to get the money.

I would be more than happy to give the Hon. Member the name of the person because the student happens to be in a riding of an Hon. Member sitting on the other side of the House. As a member of the Blood Tribe, this person can tell you there is not the money in the program to put people through university next year.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, will the Hon. Member explain to the hon. lady on the other side of the House who just asked the question that the amount of money allocated is not enough because the number of Indian children wanting to go on to university is increasing, the total population of Indians is increasing and because of Bill C-31 which was passed a few years ago. Would he explain that to her and also explain that if the Government would cancel one nuclear submarine at $1 billion, the Government could cover this whole matter very easily.

Mr. Nault: We will be all in favour of that, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the Hon. Member for his statement.

First, the Government seems to have lost the understanding and the feeling for what is taking place in the native community. There was a population explosion in the native community as in the non-native community in the last few years that has caused this great need of money for native education to the tune of what individuals on the opposite side of the House are saying is a phenomenal amount of $130 million. I have been told by the native communities in the last few days that that explosion has stopped. The birth rate of the native people has levelled off as it has in the non-native society. The amount of dollars needed will peak very quickly and then will drop in the years to come. We have almost come to the point where we need that money to put the new generation through the university and college system. In the years to come the demand will start levelling off. Now is not the time, because of the population growth in the native community, to cap the amount of money. Now is the time to put dollars into the system so that children can go to college and university to get an education and help their own people.

If the Minister and his Party would have consulted with the native community, or if they had travelled to just one reserve, they would have heard this exact same thing.I would love to take them with me to Kenora—Rainy River and into one of the reserves up North to see the population. The majority of the population in reserves up North is made up of young children. That growth in the population will soon end. Now is not the time to make cuts in post-secondary education.

Mrs. Dobbie: Mr. Speaker, will the Hon. Member tell us what he means by the word "cap" in light of the fact that the budget has continued to expand 10 per cent over the past two years and will continue to expand in the future according to the needs of the Indian population? Perhaps the Hon. Member can explain to us what he means by the word cap when there is no cap on the program.

Mr. Nault: Mr. Speaker, obviously I have difficulty because the Hon. Member does not even know what a cap means. A cap means when you put a top on something and put a stop to it. The Hon. Member says that the money has been raised 10 per cent in the last couple of years—

Mrs. Dobbie: Each year, per year.

Mr. Nault: Each year? Does that mean that that is enough? Does that mean that now, because there is a population explosion in the native community, that just 10 per cent will do it? What if the population explosion is at 20 per cent and 20 per cent more children want to go to university and college? Is 10 per cent enough? We are saying you do not need a cap. What you need to do is assess on an ongoing basis—

Mr. Cadieux: That is exactly what I have said.

Mr. Nault: If you need more money you get it from Treasury Board. Why are you putting a cap on it?

Mrs. Dobbie: There is no cap.

Mr. Nault: There certainly is a cap.

Mr. Cadieux: No.

Mr. Nault: If the cap is on there because the Government said $130 million is all these students will get for the upcoming year—

Mr. Cadieux: No.

Mr. Nault: If the Hon. Member did not think there was a cap, why is the amount of money at $130 million? Why not say that is what we are starting with and if we need $150 million, the Government will be more than willing to go and get it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is over. Resuming debate.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by expressing my appreciation to the Minister who has agreed to switch the order in speaking today. I think this could be mutually beneficial. I welcome the opportunity to speak now in part because I wanted the Minister to have the opportunity to reply to matters just raised by the person who led off this debate for the Liberal Party and by myself.

Having said that, I want to stress that in my judgment we are having this debate today in the House of Commons not primarily because people on the Opposition side of the House or people on the Government side of the House in some abstract way decided as a matter of equity that we ought to be debating the condition of the aboriginal community in Canada, but more specifically because of the condition of education at the post-secondary level in which aboriginal Canadians are involved. The reason we are having this debate, and it is crucial for us in Parliament to understand this, is that 31 days ago some young aboriginal Canadians decided to embark upon a kind of protest that regrettably, in terms of human reality in this country, they knew would be necessary to provoke the Parliament of Canada into having a serious debate on their condition. I am convinced we are having the debate because some young Canadians of aboriginal ancestry in Thunder Bay decided, to put it bluntly, to raise a little hell. I am convinced that is why we are having the debate.

The reason is that they perceived that in a policy, initiated some two years ago and finalized in one sense in March of this year, the Government has as its ultimate objective, if it were carried through, not to increase opportunities for young aboriginal Canadians but to curtail opportunities that have been growing in recent years. In short, this policy which ought to be aimed at greater equality is going to lead to more inequality. Young aboriginal Canadians were right in initiating a protest. We are right in having this debate today. I hope the Government will do the right thing by reversing its policy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: As I have already indicated, when you look at what started 31 days ago, a lot of Canadians could be excused for thinking it was a protest about some obscure Government regulation or set of regulations, labelled E-12 guidelines, emanating from one part of the federal bureaucracy. As we know, that is not the case. The details involved in this issue are important. The particulars involved in the dispute about post-secondary education are important.

What is fundamentally involved in this issue, as aboriginal Canadians first and foremost understand, and as parts of the trade union community, the university community, and Members of Parliament are finally understanding in this debate, is whether we are going to perpetuate inequality in Canada as it affects aboriginal Canadians, or whether we are going to move forward to a greater degree of equality. That is what is at stake in this debate.

I would like to put it in that kind of perspective. We as a nation outside the aboriginal community take pride in our democratic institutions. We teach our children that whether it is the Parliament of Canada, our judicial system, our federal system, or our range of liberties, our freedom to be what we want to be, this is a good and just country. It has its imperfections that all of us, certainly on this side of the House, are constantly preoccupied in trying to remove one by one. The basic structure of the common reality that most of us share is one that makes us the envy of a good part of the people on this planet.

If most of us can look with pride at what has been achieved, and point to particular instances that are a source of that pride, can any Canadian seriously point with pride to the aboriginal reality of Canada? I know that one of the most moving documents to have emerged, in its plain, sparse and lucid language, certainly in my lifetime as a politician, describes that reality. I am speaking about sections of the report of the Human Rights Commissioner, whose report came down just some two weeks ago, implemented. This is a document that should become required reading in every school across Canada.

Last week the Human Rights Commissioner issued in part his assessment of the human rights aspect of the existence of aboriginal Canadians. Without exception, we see this as some kind of report card. In the large majority of aspects of human existence, according to the assessment of the Human Rights Commissioner of Canada, the existence of our aboriginal peoples has to be seen as one of profound injustice. It is an existence that none of us, on either side of the House or outside the House as Canadians, should be viewing with pride or with anything less than an attitude that says something has to be done and done quickly to remedy the injustices.

He said the following: "The grand promise of equality of opportunity stands in stark contrast to the conditions in which many native people live". He went through them item by item and aspect by aspect of human life. For example, an Indian girl born in 1980 can expect to live nearly seven years less than her non-native school-yard girlfriend. Unemployment, the exception for most Canadians, is the norm for aboriginal Canadians. Imagine someone in Toronto or Winnipeg, in a non-aboriginal family, growing up and expecting an unemployment rate in those cities of 60 to 90 per cent? If that were the situation in any of our urban communities, there would be a revolution. That is the reality for aboriginal Canadians.

Apart from labour and the right to get a job, what about income? If an Indian is lucky enough to find work on a reserve, he or she can expect to earn barely in excess of half of the average income of the general population, some 54 per cent. Off the reserve, as the Human Rights Commissioner has pointed out, aboriginal Canadians are under-represented in terms of their percentage of the population in virtually every sector of the Canadian economy in the workplace. Is it any wonder that so many aboriginal Canadians live on welfare, and that so many end up in prison? It happens to be the case that 55 per cent of the on reserve population will receive some form of social assistance.

As the Human Rights Commissioner has pointed out, it is the case that "an Indian youngster in Canada has a better chance of being sent to prison than of completing university". I would be surprised if that were said of a part of a population in any other part of the world. I remind all Members of the House that these are aboriginal peoples. There is a certain historical myth about two founding races in this country. When it was developed it was said to be that the English and the French were the founding races. That in itself is illustrative of racism. The founding people of this country are the aboriginal peoples, and they are the people who have been most unjustly treated. If you look at the reality described in these statistics about opportunities to work, income, who is in our prisons and who is collecting welfare, the picture is unbelievably bad as it affects our aboriginal community. There is one exception to that. It is the one we are talking about today, that is, the educational opportunities available, and available just recently, to young aboriginal Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in 1960, only 60 natives were registered in Canadian universities and only 3.4 per cent of native students finished high school. At that time, native youths were taken from their homes and sent to boarding schools in faraway communities. These children had to adjust to a new school environment in a strange language and culture. Children had to learn under such conditions.

Mr. Speaker, it is not surprising that this approach was a failure. The Government finally began to do what we now take for granted. It built schools in native communities. It put an end to the practice of punishing young native children when they spoke their mother tongue in class.

Today, we finally see young native university-trained teachers return to the village of their birth and teach the rising generation. And it works, Mr. Speaker!

The new generation of native teachers now takes part in curriculum development and language studies and they are models for their students.

Today, ten times as many students finish high school as in 1960.

[English]

From 1960 until two years ago the federal Government offered post-secondary assistance to any aboriginal student who met the entrance requirements. There was real progress during this period. In short, the program, to use the language of the city, was open-ended. It was designed to meet all the needs demonstrated by the aboriginal community. If there was a desire to go on to further education, then at long last during this period the federal Government said that the federal Treasury would ensure that money would be available for students' access to that education. As long as there was a need, the commitment was to ensure that that need would be met. This program has its flaws, as was pointed out to the Government by members of the aboriginal community as well as by those outside who were doing an assessment of it. However, the crucial point I want to make is that the program was working. As a result of it, there are today some 15,000 aboriginal students in universities and colleges across Canada. The number is increasing every year.

Having said that, it is also important to know that even these numbers represent a participation rate at the post-secondary and university level of 4 per cent of the native population compared with 27 per cent for the national average. The program was a start in the right direction. Aboriginal people were prepared to accept it and prepared to build on it.

However, two years ago the program was working so well the Government decided to fix it. At a time when aboriginal people were finally starting to use the program, the Government decided to limit financial accessibility. The Department of Indian Affairs introduced a fixed annual budget and introduced a ranking system that discouraged enrolment flexibility. The latest round of changes which were announced in March of this year and which took effect in April saw a capping of the program. Aboriginal people, students and adults alike, feared that this was a major step in the wrong direction. They were right. We are going to do everything we can to get the Government to reverse itself.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In this context, in the last 24 hours the Minister has said that there is no such gap. He knows that the language, to put it euphemistically, has been quite ambiguous. However, according to his own correspondence, he also knows that the desire was to limit spending, and I use those words with care and precision. This is what he stated in a letter written this year to the chiefs and councils: "The time has come for a major reappraisal to determine how the program could produce larger numbers of graduates within a budget that could not continue to grow at the pace of the last decade". Those are the words of the Minister. He said that the budget could not continue to grow at the pace of the last decade. We say that is a wrong policy. As long as there is a need, as long as students want access, we hope the budget will continue to double, if it needs to, in order to provide that access.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That is the point. If the Minister is prepared to get to his feet today and say what he said in that letter is no longer Government policy, that all the funds that are necessary without qualification are going to be made available, then we will support him in that change and say so publicly.

It is precisely to this kind of letter written last month—not last year—by the Minister that the young students and the aboriginal community have been reacting. Canadians with a sense of decency and commitment to equality have been reacting to it as well.

What the Government was doing and saying in justification of the program was that it hopes to save money. The Government has been using some figures. Well, I have some figures as well.

It costs an average of $7,200 to pay for one year of post-secondary education for a native student. It costs $14,000 to cover the cost of training a young man or woman to become a nurse or, in short, to become a self-supporting contributor to the whole of the community instead of being dependent upon it for the rest of his or her life. Surely there is a moral and economic improvement involved in this that constitutes an immense improvement over life of petty crime and welfare dependency. I say to the Government so preoccupied with cost-cutting, a Government that seems to be run by accountants instead of human beings concerned with improving human welfare, that surely it makes more sense to provide money for education than it does to build prisons. Surely it makes more sense to educate aboriginal Canadians than to keep them dependent upon welfare. Surely it makes more sense to treat an aboriginal Canadian as having the same right to human dignity that comes from self-fulfilment as a white person in our society. As soon as we understand that, we will make sure that the money is available.

Mr. Thacker: What a hypocrite.

Mr. Broadbent: The Hon. Member says that I am a hypocrite. I want him to get to his feet to demonstrate what he means.

Mr. Thacker: I will. You just sit and listen to me.

Mr. Broadbent: I have been told that there are just a few minutes remaining in my allotted time. I want to conclude my remarks with two points.

First, we believe that there should not be a cap where there is a legitimate need for aboriginal Canadians for education. We believe it is long overdue. The rest of us pay for that. They have paid for it indirectly themselves as ultimate contributors to Canadian society. However, we believe that we have an obligation in the Parliament of Canada to make sure that money is available for that.

Second, in terms of the process itself, we believe that the desire of the students initially supported by aboriginal leaders for the Minister to suspend implementation of this program for the coming academic year makes sense. Keep the old regulations in place for the coming year. Work out with the aboriginal community during the coming months a new set of regulations or proposals that are acceptable both to the aboriginal community and to the Government of Canada. Surely that makes sense.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I conclude now with this point. A former Member of Parliament, Jim Manly, who was for many years the critic for my Party on Indian Affairs, once used what I think is a wonderful metaphor for the rest of us to consider. It was a metaphor involving a canary. Jim used to put it something like this. He said that when miners went into the mines they took a canary with them. They used to look at the canary and observe it. As the canary began to weaken they knew it would not be long before they would begin to weaken; that if the canary died then they would die. I would like to extend Jim Manly's metaphor in this way.

• (1050)

We should begin to see aboriginal Canadians as our canary. Whenever they suffer, we are going to suffer. Whenever they experience inequality, we experience inequality. The real objective ought not to be to contain the canary. The real objective ought to be to set the canary free. The real means of achieving that for aboriginal Canadians is for them, as they have been doing, to produce their own generation of leaders. The programs that have been put in place have been producing not hundreds, but thousands of new, self-possessed, competent, committed leaders in the aboriginal community. We should do everything we can to further that process, not inhibit it. We should not take steps that would lead to the suffocation of this canary, but to its liberation. When it is liberated and not until then will the rest of us will not be able to regard ourselves as a truly free people.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). He stood in this House today and indicated his great concern, which I am sure many of us in this House have, with regard to our aboriginal Canadians, a good number of which I represent in my constituency. I visit and talk with them quite often.

Did not the Hon. Member for Oshawa this morning in his statement give some false impressions or try to capitalize on the plight of some natives? He indicated his Party is perceived now to be the only one concerned about native Canadians. As a matter of fact during the Thirty-Third Parliament, his Party never once put forth an emergency debate in this House with regard to natives. Yet today he wants to be the champion of natives.

Let me ask him some questions in view of his statements. How can the Hon. Member say that the budget has been capped when in fact the increase has been 10 per cent per year? That is a fact he forgot to mention this morning.

Further, I would like to ask the Hon. Member how can he say the budget is capped when the total post-secondary education for native people has increased by 34 per cent of all secondary education over the last two years? How can he stand and tell Canadians we have cut their budgets? In fact, we have not. If he looks at the real facts about post-secondary education among natives, how can he say to the people of Canada that we want to cap this budget when the Minister has said in this House that he is actively pursuing increases to this budget? I would like some answers, and so would Canadians.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to that particular well-informed question. I would like to respond. I first of all never said that we were the only people concerned. In fact, I went out of my way to say that there was a policy that was started in 1960. We were not the Government then. I gave the Government at that time credit, some Members here were Ministers of the Crown in that Government. I am prepared to do that. I have as recently as yesterday paid public tribute to the Minister involved in the issue as a man who has shown humane concern, not only in his present portfolio, but in his previous one. What the Member says about that is just totally wrong.

I have referred to the issue of capping. Indeed, I used that language. In reports I have had and in discussion with the Minister, as well as the document I put on the record that the Minister wrote—at least he signed it, he is responsible for it—it said: "They want a budget that could not continue to grow at the pace of the last decade". That clearly aims in the direction of a cap.

The Minister will comment on it. According to the students, and I have not seen him deny this publicly, he has refused unequivocally to say that there will be a total open-ended budget. Whatever the need, it should be met, not in terms of moving people from the back of the line to the front of the line, but from the point of view of removing the line. That is our policy.

What we now have with the present Government is not 10, 12, 20, 30 or 40, but hundreds of students who cannot get into post-secondary education because funds have not been available. That is the reality. The funds have been there have been inadequate. We are saying, meet the need, provide the funds, have an open-ended budget. As long as there is need for education, make sure the money is available. That is my reply to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We have three minutes left in the question and comment period. We will give a minute and a half to the Minister of State for Indian Affairs and a minute and a half to the Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I do not have more time to ask the Hon. Member questions on his comments because they are extraordinary. I would like to ask the Hon. Member if the implications of his statement are in fact true? Are there only two approaches to funding programs in this Government, one to be totally open-ended and the other to be capped? The Hon. Member suggests that the Minister's comment that a budget item could not continue to increase at the rate of the last decade somehow implies that this is a cut-back when the rate of the last decade is an increase of 30 times. Is this necessary to meet the needs of these programs? I think the comments are absolutely extraordinary.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member, and unfortunately there is not a great deal of time, what provisions in the new guideline he disagrees with. The new guidelines provide the opportunity for the Minister to make reasoned and informed presentations to Treasury Board. For the first time we will begin to assemble the kind of statistics that we need. Two-thirds of these funds are administered directly by bands.

Eighty per cent of the students who are funded under these guidelines will in fact receive more money. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that we should not implement these guidelines and deny those 80 per cent of students increased funding, many of whom live in high rent areas like Vancouver and Toronto? I would like to ask the Hon. Member if in fact he has read the guidelines. His comments in this House today reflect not only a considerable amount of intellectual dishonesty, but a great deal of ignorance about what this has said. I think it is not intellectually sound. As someone who began her career in post-secondary—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. The Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: I really liked that question from the Minister. It certainly shows what performance we can expect from her in the exercise of her ministerial duties.

I was using the Minister's language when I talked about open-ended. What we on this side of the House mean by open-ended is that so long as there is a need by an aboriginal student, we should meet that need. What we are saying is that the language used by the Minister, I say categorically, is unacceptable. It was the Minister who said that the time had come for a major reappraisal, and the objective is to have a budget that could not continue to grow at the pace of the last decade.

I heard the Minister's question. I wish she would listen to the answer. We do not agree with that. She is right. We believe it should continue to grow if there is a need.

• (1100)

All we want the Minister to do is admit he was wrong—

Mrs. Dobbie: He wasn't.

Mr. Broadbent:—and to take back those words and say that if there is a need they will meet the need. Then we will be onside. The Government is wrong on this with human priorities, not this side of the House, I will tell you.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 31

[Translation]

POLITICAL PARTIES

FINANCING

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, like the Hon. Member for Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead (Mr. Gérin), who is a Conservative, I would like to vigorously denounce in this House the unacceptable attitude of the Mulroney Government in going against the will of its own Members by turning over the thorny issue of political party financing to a commission of inquiry.

It is quite obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the Mulroney Government is once again acting inconsistently in this important debate which should have involved the elected Members of all political parties, those who suffer from the lack of sound, firm regulations on this subject.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that the Mulroney Government is trying to postpone tabling a bill, although one had been promised for the beginning of its second term.

Another fine promise that has not been kept—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired. The Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboine (Mr. Wilson) has the floor.

YOUTH

PROGRAMS ENCOURAGING TOLERANCE AMONG CANADIANS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, one of the most enjoyable occasions afforded Members of Parliament is surely the privilege of meeting participants in youth exchange programs such as the Forum for Young Canadians, Adventures in Citizenship, the 4-H Movement, Terry Fox Youth Centre and others.

Young people, leaders in their schools, come from cities, towns and villages across Canada and, in some cases, from beyond our borders. They arrive as strangers and depart as friends.

These programs are rich and varied, but their common goal is to increase tolerance among Canadians and to bring us closer together. Participants are moved by a common desire for knowledge and the pursuit of a greater understanding of themselves and others.

Canada has an abundance of natural wealth, but its most precious resource is its youth, young people such as those in Ottawa this week.

We extend our sincere congratulations to the sponsors of these very worthy programs, and to the participants we extend our very best wishes for the future.

SCIENCE

SUPPLEMENT TO LE DEVOIR ON 57TH ACFAS CONGRESS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, today's Le Devoir contains a special section which gives the whole program of the 57th convention of the Association canadienne française pour l'avancement des sciences.

I want to congratulate not only Le Devoir for publishing that information to the public at large but also, as a scientist and a Member of Parliament, a society trying to make everybody understand the importance of science for the future.

May it inspire the rest of Canada!

MULTICULTURALISM

WESTERN CANADIAN SUDETEN–GERMAN ALLIANCE

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, as Citizenship Week draws to a close I want to offer greetings and congratulations on behalf of this House to the Western Canadian Sudeten-German Alliance on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of their arrival in Canada.

In 1939 our country offered refuge to over 1,000 Sudetenlanders who were suffering from the political oppression of Nazi Germany. One hundred and fifty-two families settled in British Columbia and Saskatchewan. In spite of their former urban way of life, they managed to transform thousands of acres of bushland into productive farmland.

Sudetenlanders have made a significant contribution to Canadian life by becoming professionals in education, community service, and government.

Let us join all Canadians in recognizing the tremendous achievement of our Sudeten community and in congratulating them on their first 50 years as part of our Canadian family.

Clearly our multicultural identity is strengthened by their being here.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

THE ARTIC–IMPORTANCE OF DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S.S.R.

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the Soviet Union has recently expressed its willingness to initiate talks with Canada and other countries to restrict military activities in the Arctic. That idea was launched in the fall of 1987 by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and was recently taken up by a Soviet official in charge of disarmament.

Since the Government was foolish enough to allow the testing of sophisticated American cruise missiles and is even contemplating the purchase of nuclear submarines, Canada would be well advised to take part in those talks. Otherwise, the Soviets would be forced to intensify their military presence in the Arctic, thereby increasing the number of cruise missiles and Soviet nuclear submarines in that area.

During the upcoming talks between the Soviet Union and other nations, the Canadian Government should strive to conclude agreements on arms limitation and disarmament—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! I regret having to interrupt the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

VIA RAIL

WINNIPEG–CHURCHILL SERVICE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, VIA Rail is a hot topic in the news these days. As usual, VIA being in the news is not necessarily good news for the people of northern Manitoba.

After the NTA hearings, the public relations people cited the Winnipeg—Churchill run as follows: "Apart from providing a social service, it is hard to justify that route". The Ottawa Citizen, upon receiving that information said that the Winnipeg—Churchill run is a horror story. Other papers, taking VIA's PR lead, have agreed.

I think it is important that the truth be told. For many people in northern Ontario, VIA Rail is still the only available form of transportation to other communities. It is in effect the lifeline to the North. VIA takes people to their grocery shopping. It takes people to the doctor. VIA takes people to their friends and family.

For years we in the North have watched in anger as stations have been closed down and the frequency of trains has been cut back. Train fares, of course, have continued to rise.

It is important for people in the House and for those newspapers who have taken the PR press releases and used them for their information to know that local passengers have stood at train stations in the middle of the night waiting for the next train and seats have not been available.

Tourist operators have come to me and said they want to book sleepers on that train but VIA will not provide the necessary sleepers.

VIA has said the train is not being used. It had better provide the service, then it will have the usage. If the Government's slogan is "use it or lose it", make it usable.

THE ENVIRONMENT

CONTAMINATION OF SOIL AND WATER IN SECTOR OF ROUYN-NORANDA AND VAL-D'OR

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, a serious study put out this week, by the Environment Protection Committee for Rouyn-Noranda points to the clear conclusion that the soils and streams in the Rouyn-Noranda and Val-d'Or areas are contaminated. This would be caused by a strong presence in our environment, of heavy metals and very toxic wastes, in concentrations well beyond the standards of the Québec Minister of the Environment.

If this is the case, clearly the very health of my fellow citizens is in jeopardy. I therefore urge the Canadian Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) to contact without delay his colleague from Quebec to verify these allegations, and if they are found accurate I would ask the Governments involved what concrete steps they intend to take in order to solve that serious problem.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R. – SOCIETAL CHANGES – PRIME MINISTER'S PENDING VISIT

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Mr. Speaker, there are real changes taking place in the Soviet Union. Perestroika and glasnost are real.

Some recent events tend to confirm that. For example, results of the elections held on March 26 show that one prominent official candidate of the Communist Party, Anatoly Gerasimov, First Secretary of the Leningrad City Committee, got only 15 per cent of the vote, and this week the Soviet newspaper Moscow News condemned the use of what it calls poison gas during the riots in Georgia last week, in which 19 people lost their lives.

Those are real changes that are taking place. Democratic principles seem to be working.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), during his projected visit to the Soviet Union, should support President Gorbachev in his efforts to liberalize the Soviet system. We should applaud those changes and build closer relations with that country.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

TRANSPORTATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, once again the Government is scaring the people of Atlantic Canada with more rumours of cut-backs. This time it is attacking the Atlantic transportation industry by removing two vital subsidies, the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act.

We know that transportation is the cornerstone of regional economic development and these programs have been just that in Atlantic Canada for over 60 years.

The assistance programs provide reduced freight rates for shippers so that they may compete with the markets throughout central and western Canada. Without these programs the ability of Atlantic Canadian shippers would be impaired. Freight rates would increase by at least 35 per cent to 40 per cent, and over 12,000 jobs would be lost. I call on the federal Government to keep its word. In 1985 the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) promised that the federal Government had no intention of cutting back on the program.

• (1110)

The federal Government must maintain these programs, and Hon. Members can be assured that all the Liberals in Atlantic Canada will fight for them.

PENITENTIARIES

SAINT-VINCENT-DE-PAUL PENITENTIARIES – PUBLIC ACCESS

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): How would you like to spend a day in prison? Not to worry—not as a prisoner, but rather as a tourist!

From June 3 to June 30 1989, Saint-Vincent-de-Paul will host a major tourist, cultural and educational event, with more than 100 young students working there and more than 300,000 people visiting.

After 117 years of history, Mr. Speaker, the old Saint-Vincent-de-Paul penitentiary will be open to the public at large, and I invite not only hon. members but the Canadian public to visit that historical place in order to better understand human realities.

Thanks to the strenuous work done by committees from the correctional service and local people, the premises will be set up to show that hidden side that people at large never had an opportunity to see. Tickets will be available through the Ticketron network for approximately $1.

I would invite the general public to take this unique opportunity to visit the beautiful city of Laval to celebrate the beginnings of a national historical museum. This old dream of mine today is partly achieved.

AIRPORTS

AVAILABILITY OF FIRE-FIGHTING SERVICES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week I raised in the House the matter of a proposed policy for Transport Canada dealing with crash-fire rescue.

I am sure that the people who fly in and out of the following airports will be interested to know what the proposal of the Government of Canada is: Abbotsford, Baie Comeau, London, Norman Wells, Prince Rupert, Quesnel, Sandspit, Smithers, Stephenville, Terrace, The Pas, Wabush, Watson Lake, Whitehorse, Williams Lake, Yarmouth, Sarnia, and Campbell River are all on the hit list.

In order to facilitate deficit reduction elsewhere, these airports will be asked to give up their fire-fighting services so the larger airports in Canada can receive needed rescue services from crash-fire rescue crews.

These are very important services that the Government two years ago said were not necessary. Sypher Mueller International has concluded that the Government was wrong and recommended that these services be placed in those airports to ensure that when there is a crash, something none of us want to see happen, the airports will be protected, but the price is too much to pay.

AIR TRANSPORT

JET AIRCRAFT NOISE LEVELS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, during the first week of February one of my constituents rented a sound pressure level monitor from McMaster University. He wanted to test the loudest jet aircraft noise over the town of Ancaster as compared to his three children, aged five to seven, jumping up and down and screaming at the same time as the next scheduled jet came overhead.

The youngsters went into the next room and did their thing with the door open, as the jet roared overhead. The plane registered twice as loud as the three kids screaming.

The day before yesterday, an ancient Lancaster bomber cruised along Highway 53 at approximately 500 feet, rattling windows and knocking things off peoples' mantlepieces.

I use these examples to illustrate why thousands of my constituents in Ancaster and Dundas are just a wee bit upset about the lack of enforcement of noise abatement bylaws, and apparent confusion over jurisdiction in these noise sensitive areas. Because our airport is about to take off, I am urging that something be done soon by Transport Canada and the region to straighten out noise abatement procedures in the Hamilton—Wentworth area.

EDUCATION

STUDENT LOAN REGULATIONS

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that post-secondary education in Canada is becoming a matter of increasing public concern, it was with considerable dismay that I read in The Canada Gazette of March 18 that the Government is proposing an amendment to the Canada student loans regulations which will reduce amounts available to students and set lifetime limits on student loan borrowing.

Young Canadians in the gallery take note. This lifetime cap of $20,000 for undergraduates is less than 50 per cent of the maximum amount currently available.

There are several problems here. One is that the caps are too low.

A sum of $5,000 per year will not allow a student to attend university full-time, especially since many students are not able to find employment to supplement this amount.

Another is that family income tables have not been adjusted for several years. This impacts negatively on a student's capacity to obtain student loans.

Third, this proposed program is not only inflexible but is totally at odds with the Government's stated concerns for retraining. The lifetime cap will effectively prevent people from returning to university.

This appears to be another ploy to force the provinces to increase their provincial bursary programs and allow the Government to shirk further its responsibility to the youth of the nation. I ask the Minister responsible to give this matter his immediate attention so that students can plan for the upcoming year.

PAROLE

SURVEILLANCE OF INMATE RECEIVING MEDICAL TREATMENT

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House I expressed my conviction that regulations of the Canadian parole system should be tightened up to prevent dangerous criminals from repeating their crimes.

Next week convicted murderer Daniel Gingras, who escaped while on a day pass visiting West Edmonton Mall, is scheduled for surgery at the Royal Alexandra Hospital.

While prisoners cannot be denied medical attention, it is imperative that society be protected.

Edmontonians are concerned about their own personal security and want to know what measures are being taken to ensure that this prisoner does not escape.

I urge the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) to provide the most extensive security measures possible and to reassure Edmontonians that Gingras will not have the opportunity to escape again.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PROPOSED CHANGES—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, late last night I returned from Newfoundland.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mifflin: I returned with good news. I am very pleased to report to the House that Newfoundland has a new Government, a resounding Liberal victory! I would ask Hon. Members to join me in extending our congratulations to the Premier-elect, Clyde Wells, to the Government-elect, and to all the candidates for a hard-fought fight and a well won battle.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mifflin: My question relates to one of the major issues of the campaign, and indeed it is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that the Prime Minister and the Minister for International Trade, six months ago, promised Newfoundlanders and indeed all Canadians that there would be no change to the Unemployment Insurance Program, and in view of the fact that six months later we heard about sweeping changes, will the Deputy Prime Minister please instruct the Minister of Employment and Immigration to withdraw these changes?

Newfoundlanders have spoken and the message is clear. They have passed judgment on these changes and they don't like them.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, last week it was announced in Newfoundland that there would be no more unemployment insurance, which is not true! The safety net continues to exist. The unemployed who lost their jobs through no fault of their own will continue to receive their unemployment insurance benefits today, tomorrow and the day after. The only losers in this context are workers who quit voluntarily and workers who cheat on the system.

[English]

FUNDING OF CO-OPERATIVE EDUCATION PROGRAM

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, my next question is again directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister of Employment and Immigration stated that the money that was being switched around in these sweeping changes was to be used for the unemployed—those without jobs.

I note that the Minister of State for Youth intends, according to what I have heard, to tap into the savings, for other than those who do not have jobs. Can the Minister reassure Hon. Members that this money will be used for those who are unemployed?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, just to make things clear, the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act that will enable the Government to make some savings through the account, and the savings will be used for unemployed people only. That is correct.

The Hon. Member should know, and I presume he must know, that these global changes through the system will enable the Government to have more flexibility through its Canadian Jobs Strategy program which will enable the Government in the next four years to quadruple the amount of money that will be put into co-op education while trying to target more specifically students at the secondary level, those potential high school dropouts, the most vulnerable people in society and within the labour market.

• (1120)

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUNDS

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that such logic could drive one in any direction, to any distance, and to any conclusion which hope, fear, and any other passion might suggest.

My supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the statements made that no change will be made, can the Deputy Prime Minister reassure the House that the Minister of Finance will be instructed that no changes will be made to the federal government contribution to unemployment insurance funds?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat all the benefits Newfoundland will enjoy as a result of the unemployment insurance reform announced last week: access to employment, access to better paying employment and access to training.

As for your main question about what will happen on April 27, I would ask you to be patient and to wait until the Minister of Finance brings down his budget. You will get your answer in a matter of days!

YOUTH

FUNDING OF CO-OPERATIVE EDUCATION PROGRAM

Mr. Maurizio Bevilacqua (York North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up on a very important point raised earlier. My question is directed to the Minister of Youth.

As the youngest Member of Parliament I am deeply offended and, frankly, disillusioned by the announcement made yesterday by the Minister that the Government intends to steal money from the unemployed to pay for co-op education for young people.

How does the Minister justify breaking a sacred campaign promise made by the Prime Minister that the Unemployment Insurance Program would not be changed?

How can the Minister pit two needy groups in our society, the young and the unemployed, against each other?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, first let me congratulate the Hon. Member on his election to the House of Commons, and welcome him here. I am sorry that after a few days in the House of Commons he has already declared himself disillusioned. I am also a young Member of Parliament, and I am not disillusioned at all.

The Hon. Member should know, if he is so interested in the issues related to youth, the real issues related to youth are that those in our society who are the most vulnerable are the young people who drop out of high school, and the young people who have the lowest level of education in our society.

After four or five years of Progressive Conservative Government we have the lowest unemployment rate for young people in the last 17 years.

The money used in co-op education will be used under the CJS Fund, and money made available because of the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

REQUEST THAT FUNDING BE MADE AVAILABLE FROM GENERAL REVENUES

Mr. Maurizio Bevilacqua (York North): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I would advise the Minister that I also agree with co-op education, but I do not agree with it being done on the backs of unemployed Canadians.

Not only is the Minister breaking a sacred promise made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign, but he is also breaking the promise made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration who stated that the money that she is taking away from the Unemployment Insurance Fund will only go to train unemployed people.

How does the Minister justify breaking this promise? Will the Minister get serious about co-op education and fund the program from general revenues, rather than taking funds from the unemployed people who desperately need them?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, let me applaud the Hon. Member for actually stating, I presume on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada, that this is the first time they are actually for something, including co-op education. That is something new.

Let me assure the Hon. Member that it is quite clear that the money that will be saved through UI reform will go to people who are unemployed. That initiative will enable the Government to have more flexibility through the Canadian Jobs Strategy which will enable the Government to quadruple the amount of money that will be put into co-op education, which the Hon. Member is for.

May I conclude by asking the Hon. Member to stop fighting change, and stop being a dinosaur. He must accept the fact that we live in a new world where change in inevitable, and this country has to face up to that.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—FEDERAL FUNDING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Approximately half an hour ago the Minister of State for Indian Affairs stated there was no cap on the Government's program as it affects post-secondary education for aboriginal Canadians.

Would the Minister comment on the accuracy of that view?

As the Minister knows, a good part of the motivation for the concern of students affected is that there has been a cap.

I refer to the letter of the Minister dated March 20, 1989, in which he stated: "The program will have to live within its annual allocation—". If that is not a cap, what is it?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated on numerous occasions, both inside and outside the House, two years ago my predecessor announced that the program would have to function within budget. This is exactly what the program has been doing for two years. Annually a budget is determined with respect to this particular program.

As I have indicated on numerous occasions, if the needs increase, in my humble opinion the funding for the program will increase in order to meet those needs.

MINISTER'S LETTER—BUDGET FOR PROGRAM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, on page 1 of the same letter the Minister talks about the need to stop the growth of the budget because it cannot "continue to grow at the pace of the last decade". I have already quoted him as saying that it has to live within its annual allocation. In the same paragraph the Minister states that this will mean that a "number of students will temporarily have to seek those sources of support available to—other Canadians", because there will not be spaces available.

The Minister cannot have it both ways. He has just stated in the House that if there is going to be a need, and the students have that need, presumably they will not have to seek other sources. In the letter the Minister states that they have to seek outside sources. Is the Minister now saying that they will not have to seek outside sources, and that the Government will provide all the money needed for a young aboriginal person who wants to attend post-secondary education? Is that the policy? If so, make it clear, please.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we must also look at the guidelines. The guidelines state that assistance will be provided within the limits of funds voted by Parliament.

Mr. Broadbent: That is a cap.

Mr. Cadieux: That is voted annually. That is why each year we will look at the needs and determine what funds we need to meet those needs.

If the Hon. Member also wants to quote from my letter, he should also quote the second to last paragraph which states:

> But no program design endures forever. In light of the many constructive responses the Department has received, I am instructing my officials—

Mr. Keyes: Dispense.

Mr. Gauthier: Table it.

Mr. Cadieux: Hon. Members opposite do not want to hear the truth.

> I am instructing my officials to review the policy periodically to ensure that it keeps pace with the changing needs and aspirations of students in your communities.

Obviously the increase in the number of students will justify the increase of funds for this particular program. I have been saying that from the outset.

FUNDING REQUIREMENTS OF STUDENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the reality is that the Minister has not been saying that from the outset.

Without exception the aboriginal Canadians with whom I have spoken, and there are many fair-minded Canadians among them, do not understand the Minister to have the policy he now states. They understand his correspondence to state that there is a cap.

I want to clear this up. Is the Minister saying, unlike what he states in his letter, that any student in the coming academic year of 1989-1990 who wants to go to post-secondary education will receive funding this year from the Government of Canada? Yes or no?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have been saying from the start that there is an annual budget and that we will be seeking funds on an annual basis with respect to the demand increases that will come from year to year. That is why there has to be an exchange with the native population, which I have encouraged from the start, which I have instructed my officials to continue in order to ensure that we have the appropriate data to seek the appropriate funds to continue a program in which the Government believes. This program has gone from $4.2 million to $130 million, which is an increase of 30 times.

FINANCE

INTEREST RATES INCREASE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Yesterday, the Bank of Canada raised the bank rate to 12.61 per cent. The real interest rate in Canada is now over 8 per cent, the highest level in 20 years. The spread between Canadian and American interest rates is more than 2 per cent, compared with historical spreads of 1 per cent.

Why is the Conservative Government attacking Canadian consumers with this high interest rate policy?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I don't think Canadians want to go back to the severe recession we experienced under the Liberal Government in the early eighties.

As you know, current interest rates are part of the Bank of Canada's general policy to fight the threat of inflation.

As for the spread between Canadian and American interest rates, let us not forget that while today, the spread for 90-day commercial paper is 2.6 per cent, in the early eighties it was as high as 4 per cent.

We intend to continue to support the Bank of Canada in its efforts to ensure that interest rates will go down in time, and do so permanently, in the best interests of Canadian consumers.

[English]

MORTGAGE AND CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I come now to the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. All Canadians are affected by the high interest rate policy of this Government. One year ago an $80,000 mortgage was financed at 9.75 per cent.

An Hon. Member: Who is talking about high interest rates?

Mr. Gauthier: Today that same mortgage is renewed at 13 per cent, an additional cost of $2,000 a year.

We also know that on June 1 the interest rate charged on credit cards will rise to more than 20 per cent. Why is the Government maintaining this high interest rate policy which is difficult and disastrous for Canadian families?

[Translation]

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I must say that the Government has been monitoring the economic situation in Canada very carefully. In four years we have shown that we have been able to deal with the situation. However, losing control of the economy and letting interest rates become even more devastating as a result of increased inflation will certainly do nothing to improve the situation to which the Hon. Member is referring.

REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF CANADIAN RESEARCH COMPANIES

M. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Andre).

Given the fact that branch plants do not do research, that there is a lack of risk capital for Canadian research companies and that foreigners take over Canadian firms like Lumonics, Connaught Laboratories, what does the government intend to do to protect our research companies?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, that question begs a speech of at least 40 minutes to go over all of the things this Government is doing to demonstrate our commitment to research and development—the establishment of the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, the establishment of NAPS, the $240 million to Centres of Excellence, the $200 million extra to granting agencies, and the $80 million for the Canadian Scholarships Program. There is a whole range of programs to indicate our Government's commitment to science and technology and industrial development in this country.

ACQUISITION OF COMPANIES BY FOREIGN INTERESTS

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, the Minister had the opportunity to give a 40-minute speech yesterday and he did not address the question of Canadian ownership. He has pointed out the problem himself. He is quoted in Computer Dealer News for March 9, 1989 as saying:

> If three or four branch plants close, due to free trade and the economic restructuring we're witnessing, that will, perhaps, facilitate the creation of one Canadian firm to fill the void, one that will conduct R and D.

I think this is known as the Khmer Rouge method of developing a research community.

> Branch plants just don't do research.

Does the Government think that Canadian control of our research companies is important? If so, what is it going to do about these sell-offs?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Investment Canada Act provides that only those take-overs which are a net benefit to Canada, including research and development, are allowed to proceed. The Act is there.

If the Hon. Member has some evidence of where, in fact, the Act does not provide that, let him bring it forward, but these blanket, wildly unsubstantiated charges are absurd.

I would remind the Hon. Member that it was his Party which fought Bill C-22 to the bitter end, a Bill which has brought about hundreds of millions of dollars of research and development in this country. I am glad to see that the new Member is showing a break from that terrible Liberal tradition of saying one thing and acting in another way.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INTERROGATION OF SCIENTIST BY MILITARY POLICE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. An Alberta scientist, Dr. Mendoza, whom I had telephoned about atmospheric nerve gas tests in Alberta, was recently taken to a motel room in Medicine Hat and interrogated by military police. He was denied the right to legal counsel at the interrogation.

According to Dr. Mendoza the interrogation focused on my communication with the scientist, a communication that I would point out was never made public.

Why was the scientist denied legal counsel? Is it the view of the Government that communication between Members of Parliament and public servants is somehow improper?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the Member, as I am sure he is aware—I think he has had correspondence with Dr. Mendoza for some years in official capacities—that we have within the Department of National Defence a regular review of security clearances. Dr. Mendoza has had those interviews, voluntary interviews, I might advise the Member. Of course, for any further concerns that Dr. Mendoza may have there is an appropriate grievance procedure in the Department through which he may address those grievances.

BURGLARY OF MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT'S OFFICE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

My office was broken into here on the Hill on March 6 and the confidential files, including my communication with Dr. Mendoza, were gone through. A few days later Dr. Mendoza was interrogated without legal counsel. According to Dr. Mendoza the military police described revelations about Suffield as being politically embarrassing.

Do the military in Canada work for the Conservative Party or for the people of Canada? Don't Albertans have the right to know that the air they breathe is being used for open atmospheric nerve gas tests?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, the allegations made by my colleague are quite serious and I advised him yesterday that I would check upon them with the Commissioner of the RCMP. I discussed the matter at length with him this morning and he has advised me that he has been in touch with the Toronto and Ottawa City police concerning the pattern which according to the Hon. Member does exist in the various break-ins. I have been informed by the Commissioner, and I made a careful examination of the information given to me, that no pattern emerges out of these break-ins, Mr. Speaker, and that the Hon. Member has not asked directly any police force to investigate what happened in his office.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AID FOR LEBANESE PEOPLE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for External Relations. Canadians are concerned about the tragic events that are taking place in Lebanon. There has been a fresh outburst of armed conflict in that country, centred in Beirut. Bombardments affect the civilian population indiscriminately, claiming thousands of victims. Could the Minister inform the House about the measures taken by Canada to offer help to the people of Lebanon, the victims of this terrible war?

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question, which gives me an opportunity to inform the House and all other Canadians about the measures Canada has put in place to help the Lebanese people who are now suffering the consequences of a devastating war. I think that at this point, Mr. Speaker, we should make a distinction between the assistance extended to the Lebanese that remain in their country and the assistance given to those who are trying to escape the combat zones.

At the present time, our embassy in Damascus is able to provide all immigration services. We have four officers on the spot, and I can give the Members of this House and all Canadians the assurance that our services are able to cope with the demand. Yesterday, we heard from our representative in Syria that Lebanese citizens can enter Syria on their Lebanese I.D. Card or passport.

People living in the Christian sector of Beirut, have passports that will get them to Cyprus. As for the services we are able to offer in Cyprus at the present time, I said yesterday in a statement in the House that we had a consular officer on the spot, and I can inform Hon. Members that in Cyprus, it is estimated that since the beginning of March between 11,000 and 15,000 Lebanese have applied to emigrate to various countries. In fact, most have already left Cyprus. As for applications for admission to Canada, all I can say is that we are able to cope with the demand for the time being—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mrs. Landry: Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I would like to add that as for the services we are offering people in Lebanon, I announced this week that half a million dollars—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry but I will have to interrupt the Minister. The Hon. Member for Saint-Laurent.

IMMIGRATION

SITUATION OF THOSE CLAIMING REFUGE STATUS

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, my question was meant for the Minister of Employment and Immigration, but in her absence it is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

We have waited long enough for news about the hearings that are supposed to take place in Montreal and Toronto to deal with the tremendous backlog of refuge claims!

The Minister knows perfectly well that the backlog of refugee claims in our large urban areas is a very real problem. Why the delay in establishing bodies that will decide whether these refugees will be allowed to stay? When does the Government intend to deal with the ever increasing problem of refugees waiting to have their claims heard, both in Montreal and Toronto?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my colleague who is responsible for Immigration, I would like to reassure Canadians and tell them that since we introduced our new refugee status determination process, things have become much easier. The figures prove that the system works well, and I can give Canadians the assurance that although there is still room for improvement, current evaluation reports are very positive.

[English]

PROCESSING OF APPLICATIONS

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In a press release on March 31 we were informed that the Immigration and Refugee Board is developing new facilities in Montreal and Toronto. What does the Government plan to do to alleviate the refugee backlog in Montreal and Toronto? Why is the Government planning two different systems, one for Montreal and Toronto and one for the rest of Canada? Why does the Government not have a policy that treats all refugee claimants equally?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, we have a system in use across the country, in Montreal as well as in Toronto. I repeat, the measures we have put in place during the last few months are working well, and we are satisfied with the results.

PUBLIC WORKS

DEVELOPMENT OF WELLAND CANAL LANDS

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Public Works. On Tuesday, April 19, the Welland Canal Development Board held a press conference at which it released the contents of a report that suggested how the Welland Canal lands could be developed. Even though I am a member of the board I have not yet received a copy of the report, a report which cost $30,000.

Has the Minister been apprised of this report? Does he agree with the recommendations of it, one of which is that the Welland Canal lands be sold to the highest bidder?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this question affords me the first opportunity I have had to congratulate my colleague on his re-election to the House.

I wish to inform him that, yes, I have been apprised of the report. I also wish to reassure him that this consultant's report was only intended to identify potential development of the land. I emphasize the word "potential".

I understand his concern that any private development might impinge on the public use of the land. I am pleased to tell him that there will be further consultations. Nothing definitive will be done without input from the City of Welland and, as far as I am concerned, from the Hon. Member himself.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC MEETINGS

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister assure the House and, indeed, the people of my riding, that in future all of the meetings of the board will be held in public so that indeed the public can be apprised of what is going on and how the deliberations are proceeding?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, prima facie that sounds like a reasonable request. I will look into it and report back to the Hon. Member.

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT SPECULATORS' TAX BE INTRODUCED

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Housing. There have been repeated calls to cool off the hot real estate market in Vancouver and Toronto by imposing a tax on speculative real estate profits. Yet the Minister of Housing keeps saying that he will have to do more with less in terms of solving the critical housing crisis in Canada.

If the Minister is short of funds why is he ignoring the money that could be realized from the imposition of a speculators' tax on real estate property?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Hon. Member is aware, I had an opportunity to visit Vancouver last month to see for myself the red-hot real estate market in Vancouver. It is certainly one of the hot spots of housing in the country.

At that time I had the opportunity to meet with the Minister of Housing for the Province of British Columbia, the Mayor of Vancouver, the Mayor of Coquitlam, and other providers of market and social housing in and around the Vancouver area, in an effort to try to come to grips with and to see if there is not a way to solve the problems, and have the federal Government made a part in that process.

One of the suggestions of the Hon. Member has to do with land speculation tax. That is a very interesting possibility.

When I was a Private Member I urged the Province of Ontario to institute such a tax. Perhaps the Hon. Member might like to urge the Province of British Columbia to do the same.

My advice at the moment is that that sort of a tax would have to be imposed by a provincial Government. However, if my advice changes I will certainly advise the Hon. Member.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the same Minister. He is undoubtedly aware that in the last few days a piece of property was sold by the B.C. Government to a numbered company for $2.2 million and resold the same day for $10.5 million.

When the Minister was a back-bencher he advocated that the federal Government introduce a speculation tax. Will the Minister explain why he has changed his mind, and that it is not the federal Government's responsibility but a provincial responsibility?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, as I explained to the Hon. Member, my current advice now is that such a tax is one that must be levied by the provincial Government. If my advice changes, the Hon. Member will certainly be advised. I share his concern about property flipping over at a great rate at very inflated prices.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Redway: There is an awful lot of excitement from Members opposite, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McCurdy: All the fire is gone!

Mr. Redway: Certainly, part of my discussions with the Province of British Columbia and with other jurisdictions is to try to co-operate to prevent things like that in the future.

THE ENVIRONMENT

CONTAMINATION OF SOIL AND WATER IN THE ROUYN-NORANDA AND VAL-D'OR

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. A recent study tabled some months ago with the Québec Environment Department and made public by an environmental group in my region this week would show that the ground and streams in the area of Rouyn-Noranda and Val-d'Or are seriously contaminated by heavy metals. So, Mr. Speaker, since this is a serious situation that may endanger the health of my fellow citizens, I would like to ask the Minister whether he intends to verify these allegations with his Québec colleague and, if they are accurate, what does he intend to do to remedy this serious problem?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we are very concerned about the situation revealed by this study. I asked my officials to make the necessary checks and I intend to open discussions with my colleague, the Québec Environment Minister, on this subject.

[English]

FINANCE

FORTHCOMING BUDGET—EFFECT ON POOR

Mr. Bob Wood (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. There was a symposium on poverty in my riding recently. Research conducted by the Nipissing University revealed that one in every five children in my riding lived below the poverty line. That works out to roughly 4,000 children. My question is this. What can the parents of these thousands of children, where the household income of 900 of these children was less than $5,000 per year, expect from this Government in the Budget on April 27? What hope can be offered to the poorest of my constituents?

[Translation]

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that this Government has always been attentive and will continue to be attentive to the neediest. And I will point out to him that the recent tax reform reduced income tax for 9.7 million households and that 850,000 low-income Canadians no longer have to pay income tax or they receive refundable credits. Income tax was reduced for some 1.3 million households with at least one person 65 or over. And I could go on, as the Minister of Finance did very eloquently a few days ago. So we are and will continue to be very attentive to the poorest members of society.

[English]

PLIGHT OF THE POOR

Mr. Bob Wood (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister obviously does not seem to know by his answer the meaning of the word poverty, it is kind of hard to tell that to the kids of Nipissing.

My supplementary question is this. Other than a likely value added tax on goods they cannot already afford, could the Minister indicate to the 250 families in my riding, who were forced to rely on the food banks in North Bay and in northern Ontario to feed their families last month, what concrete steps will this Government take right now to demonstrate that their plight really has been taken seriously?

[Translation]

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Finance, will show very clearly in the Budget what he intends to do. As for the tax you talked about, if you are talking about the value added tax, the White Paper has already indicated and my colleague the Minister of Finance has said several times that basic groceries would not be taxed.

[English]

So I would like to repeat that my colleague, the Minister of Finance, has indicated very clearly that basic groceries would not be taxed whenever the value added sales tax is put in force in Canada.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPLACEMENT OF FULL-TIME JOBS

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence, is addressed to the Associate Minister of National Defence. In its desperate effort to increase its job creation figures, the Government has replaced full-time jobs with six-month service contracts on Canadian Forces bases throughout this country, and particularly in Kingston and the Islands. By doing this, the Government is able to claim that it has created two new jobs every year. Now that the election is over, will the Government abandon this short-sighted policy?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thought the Hon. Member would be congratulating us on the tremendous creation of jobs that this Government has undertaken in the past five years. I thought he would be congratulating us about the effort in all Departments of Government to conduct our work in the most efficient way possible. If this can be done with contractual arrangements, obviously we will look into that and use that wherever feasible and practicable to help the Government to save money.

REHIRING OF SIX-MONTH CONTRACT EMPLOYEES

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, if I thought that the project were saving money I would not be asking the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

Mr. Milliken: The fact remains that the administrative costs of this program are very great because job interviews have to be conducted on dozens of applicants every six months. A full-time person who filled a job before was able to do the job perfectly adequately. Now we have this rotating six-month arrangement. People on six-month contracts are frequently rehired because obviously they are the most experienced of the applicants the next time around. They sit idle for six months and then work for six. However, because they only work for half the year, they cannot get mortgages or bank loans or any sickness or other benefits. This is unfair.

Why will the Government not change this unfair policy? That is my question to the Minister.

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I was not quite sure what that question was all about. Obviously in our Department, as in every Department, we look at our requirement for personnel and the time frame for which we may need those personnel, and make the most appropriate arrangements. In this particular case we want to have the opportunity of reviewing those jobs on a regular basis. We will continue that practice in the public interest for the greatest efficiency and operation of our Department and of the Government.

MULTICULTURALISM

HEAD TAX PAID BY CHINESE IMMIGRANTS—REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State who is the Minister of Multiculturalism. Early in this century the Canadian Government introduced racist legislation requiring Chinese immigrants to pay a Chinese head tax. This was followed by the discriminatory Chinese Exclusion Act. The Minister is aware of the proposals of the Chinese Canadian National Council which are very important symbolically in today's context to reaffirm Canada's complete rejection of any form of racism.

Will the Government on behalf of all Canadians and all Parties in this House now acknowledge the injustice of the Chinese head tax and take action as proposed by CCNC with appropriate compensation to elderly survivors who were forced to pay this tax solely because they were Chinese?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, I certainly have met with members of the community and the leadership of the CCNC on a number of occasions. They have presented their proposals and certainly have helped explore and explain the issue as thoroughly as possible. Those initiatives have now been brought forward. They are under review and discussion.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT ON ISSUE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister had promised, after Japanese redress was settled, that this would be the next item for action. The Chinese Canadians in my riding and those throughout Canada are very concerned that this promise be fulfilled. In view of increasing racism in many of our communities it is particularly important. Will the Minister now assure the House and assure Canadians that he will personally take this matter to Cabinet and ask the Prime Minister to make a statement in this House, with the support of all Parties, to erase this past shame and tell the children of today that such discrimination will never again happen in this country?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1200)

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, I met my commitment to the community completely in my meeting with them and the manner in which I brought the issue forward. I want to tell her that from coast to coast the activity of this Government is being applauded in the area of multiculturalism, in showing the vision and helping in the understanding of all Canadians to create a more fair, more open, more accessible and more tolerant society.

People from coast to coast have realized the significant progress. I ask her to look forward to new legislation that will be brought forward creating the new Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship, initiatives in race relations and the establishment of the foundation and heritage languages. There is much activity to help Canadians understand their cultural and racial diversity and how important it is to our identity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will close Question Period with one question by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

FUNDING OF CO-OPERATIVE EDUCATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I was a member of two committees of this House that strongly recommended co-operative education, but we never recommended that it be paid for with unemployment insurance money. In the overwhelming number of cases, those who are eligible for co-operative education were not contributors to the Unemployment Insurance Fund and not eligible for unemployment insurance. In these circumstances, how can the Minister justify funding co-operative education with moneys that are supposed to help people when they are unemployed?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, let me repeat that the money that will be saved through the changes implemented in the Unemployment Insurance Act will go to unemployed people only. Those changes will enable the Government to have more flexibility in the Canadian Jobs Strategy which, in turn, will enable the Government to quadruple the amount of money we will put into co-operative education.

If the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace (Mr. Allmand) took the time to reread his own report, the report that the committee on which he sat filed in 1987—

Mr. Allmand: It never recommended paying for co-operative education.

Mr. Charest: —I think he would find that his own words were: "If we have the courage to seize the opportunities which this kind of expenditure provides, unemployment insurance can be more than just earning replacements while unemployed. It should be a vehicle to help people realize better and more stable employment opportunities in the future". That is what you said in 1987—

Mr. Allmand: Not co-operative education. For beneficiaries of the fund.

Mr. Charest: Why are you changing your mind today?

Mr. Allmand: Read the report.

PRIVILEGE

BREAK-IN INTO MEMBER'S OFFICE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wrote to the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police at the beginning of March requesting an RCMP investigation into what I viewed then and still view today as a pattern of burglaries which now include my office here on Parliament Hill, the Canadian Environmental Law Association offices in Toronto, Science for Peace offices in Toronto, the Ontario Environment Network in Toronto, and the Green Party headquarters in Vancouver.

Following the break-in into my office on Parliament Hill, I met immediately with the Speaker and Sergeant at Arms, and then with House of Commons Security on a number of occasions regarding the break-in.

I believe my privileges have been affected because I have learned this morning that, according to Dr. Mendoza, my communication with him, which was completely proper, is now the focus of an investigation by the Department of National Defence. I have a right, as a Member of the House of Commons, to communicate with public servants and citizens generally about my duties and this should not be hindered. In fact, information that was not public but was tampered with in the break-in of my office has now been used in an investigation of a respected Canadian scientist.

Also this morning I received a call from an ex-serviceman who is concerned about the loss of a kidney which might be linked to Canadian military experiments, but expressed fear of giving his name, phone number or address to me as a result of the recent publicity surrounding these events. This directly affects my ability and capacity to assist Canadians, which I should properly be able to do. I believe that the combination of these events clearly constitutes privilege. If the Speaker considers that there is a question of privilege in relation to these matters, I am prepared to move the appropriate motion at the appropriate time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has a problem with the matter because the Chair does not feel it is a question of privilege arising out of Question Period. Therefore, the proper notice has not been given to the Chair.

However, if notice is given in the proper form, obviously the Chair would be willing to entertain the question of privilege at a later time.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I did not make it as clear as I should have. If the Speaker looks at the "blues" of the remarks by the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais), he will see that the Solicitor General indicated that, coming from his meeting with the Commissioner of the RCMP this morning, the RCMP are not undertaking an investigation of a pattern in the break-ins because I, as a Member, have not been in touch with the Toronto or Ottawa city police. I do not think in any way it is my role or duty to be asking for investigations of burglaries in Toronto or Ottawa.

I believe the Speaker, the Sergeant at Arms and House of Commons Security, if they believe they need assistance for fingerprinting or further investigations here on the Hill, are perfectly capable of doing so.

I think my privilege relates directly to the remarks of the Solicitor General.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Solicitor General want to respond? The Chair recognizes the Solicitor General.

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Briefly, Mr. Speaker. I would like to read the blues to check what I said because the words reported by my colleague from Skeena (Mr. Fulton) are not quite accurate. I mentioned—I would not want to comment on what was said during Question Period concerning inquiries which have nothing to do with the Hon. Member for Skeena.

As to his own situation, his own allegations concerning his personal situation, what I said—I would want to check the blues, Mr. Speaker, and I do not know whether it is possible to find out how long that would take, but I would rather not comment on what I said. We will see what I said and take it from there, Mr. Speaker. However I do not think that what the Hon. Member has just said exactly reflects my own words because the issue is getting complicated. I prefer checking the blues if that does not take too long, I do not know but I would rather look at them, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) would agree, the Chair would propose that the Hon. Member for Skeena give a formal notice to the Chair as to the matter of privilege. In the meantime we will look at the "blues" and Hansard. We will then discuss the matter again whenever the Member for Skeena would wish. Is that agreeable?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

THE LATE JAMES EDGAR WALKER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): I rise to share with the House sadness at the news of the death of James Edgar Walker, a former colleague and friend who was known by Canadians as Jimmy.

Jimmy was much loved in this place on all sides and in the community which he represented so ably here from 1962 to 1974,namely the riding of York Centre in North York which I now have the honour to represent.

Jimmy died in a hospital bed in Toronto on Wednesday. He was 77. His beloved wife Lillian and his sons John and James were close at hand. He came to the House in 1962, a veteran of World War II, and a veteran also of North York municipal politics, already well known and respected in our community of North York.

He filled many assignments here with distinction during his long career, but there is no doubt that the most difficult and challenging one was that of Chief Government Whip in the minority Liberal Government of Lester Pearson. Jimmy's assignment was bringing out the troops, often for surprise votes at all times of the week and at all times of the day, under unrelenting House rules, which have long since been repealed because of their inhumanity.

This assignment took its toll on Jimmy and that should be recounted here, as should his service to Prime Minister Trudeau as Parliamentary Secretary. I do not know of anyone around here today like Jimmy. In the days when social service was not a normal part of a Member of Parliament's job, he was deeply involved in problem-solving for his constituents. He cared for his people and their needs, and his colleagues here all benefited also from his friendliness, and from his availability to give advice and to help us. He was always optimistic and he was always positive. He spoke well of everybody.

I think that Jimmy could have been elected to this place forever, whatever stripe the Government happened to have. His decision to step down in 1974 and to encourage me to come back to Parliament in this seat, gave me an opportunity for which I will always be indebted to him. To his family, Lillian his beloved wife, to his sons John and James, we send our sympathy.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government of Canada I want to join with my hon. friend, the Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), in paying tribute to a very dear friend and very outstanding and special Commoner, Jimmy Walker, who has departed. I concur with all the sentiments that have been expressed by the Hon. Member for York Centre. In so doing, I simply want to reinforce the fact that to me and I am sure to many others, Jimmy Walker was considered a very decent person and a very honourable man, one I would consider a friend.

• (1210)

I recall when I first came to the House in 1968, Jimmy Walker was one of the first Members to come across the floor to introduce himself. I learned at that time that he was born and raised in Vegreville and we became very, very close friends from that day hence. As the Hon. Member for York Centre had indicated, he was always there to lend a helping hand and to reach out, and he certainly did that for me. He was a friend. He was always helpful. He reached out to help other Hon. Members from all sides of the House. I think that was really one of the very basic qualities of Jimmy Walker. He really was that kind of a person, always seeking ways and means of helping people.

When I came here in 1968, I presume his role as Whip was a little easier than it was during the minority years. Nonetheless, being a government Whip is never an easy job. He discharged that responsibility in a very exemplary fashion.

As a Member, he defended his principles and ideals with vigour but he did it with dignity and honour. We all come here as members of a certain political Party, but Jimmy was certainly not noted for his partisanship. He was very even- tempered and he was more interested in the final results. He set an example in maintaining the very highest and finest traditions of parliamentary democracy.

He was a great House of Commons man, he was a tremendous people person and he dedicated his life to helping people. He was a family man, he had a distinguished military career and he was a very successful business person. He was a great Canadian, but I think most of all, we can hold Jimmy Walker up as a clear example of what a Member of Parliament should be. In so many respects, I think he epitomized the finest qualities of a Member of Parliament.

On behalf of my Party, and I know on behalf of all Hon. Members, I join with colleagues opposite in expressing our deepest sympathy on his passing. He was a great Canadian who will be sadly missed.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I would like to associate ourselves with the words of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) and say a few words about the passing of Jimmy Walker. The Leader of my Party, myself and those others of us in the NDP who knew him were very saddened to hear about his passing. He was a Member of Parliament from 1962 to 1974.

I can remember when I was first elected with the Hon. Member for Vegreville in 1968, Jimmy Walker was one of those friendly Members of Parliament who came across and made himself well known to members of other Parties. He was certainly very well liked and highly respected by those of us on the opposition side. I recall him being a conciliator, a bit of a peacemaker in terms of the operations of the House of Commons. He was the Parliamentary Secretary to Pierre Trudeau, and I think that showed the respect that the Prime Minister of the day and the Liberal Party of the time had for the conciliation abilities of Jimmy Walker.

If I remember correctly, Jimmy Walker was a progressive Liberal, a person concerned about the disadvantage in society and what he could do for people who were less fortunate. He retired in 1974, and as his successor said, there was no doubt that if he had run again in 1974, he would have won the seat. However, he retired to become a citizenship judge. Those of us who knew him will miss him.

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION FUNDING—NATIVE PEOPLES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Nault:

> That this House recognize that the Government's arbitrary and misanthropic policy of unilaterally capping future funding for post-secondary education for Canada's native peoples severely undermines the right and efforts of these peoples to enhance their capacity to make meaningful and lasting improvements to their economic and social conditions and to establish their self-reliance, thereby condemning them to unacceptable living conditions and driving them to desperate measures; and
> That this House urge the Government to terminate its plans to cap this funding and take steps to establish effective bilateral consultations on this and other matters vital to the improvement of the lives of and the ending of discrimination toward these Native peoples.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, before dealing with the post-secondary education program, I would like to start by commenting on certain remarks made by the Leader of the NDP with respect to Mr. Yalden's report tabled last week. I think the Leader of the NDP, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), accurately summarized certain statements in Commissioner Yalden's report, which we have of course read very carefully.

I believe Mr. Yalden described a situation that does in fact exist. Unfortunately, I feel that he failed to mention certain improvements that have been made over the years. I also believe that although governments have made considerable efforts in recent years to deal with the situation, a great deal remains to be done, and that being understood, I partly agree with Commissioner Yalden's comments, and I am sure that in the months and years to come, there will be many opportunities to discuss these issues.

[English]

With respect to this particular subject of post-secondary education, I am obviously glad to have the opportunity to address this issue fully in the House today. It is plagued by serious misunderstandings. I hope that the remarks made here today will give all students, including the ones who are on the hunger strike, Members of the House, and all Canadians a much better understanding of the new policy and guidelines on Indian post-secondary education assistance.

• (1220)

I am obviously very concerned with respect to the hunger strikers. I know that they sincerely believe in the validity of their actions. I have asked them to believe in my desire to hear their views fully and to respond to them.

I believe that we are far closer on this issue than the controversy today suggests. We share common objectives and equally strong commitments to meeting them. Over the months ahead we can sit down and work out specific concerns with the program. Today I particularly want to focus on the program and the guidelines, and attempt to explain them fully, and to explain why changes were necessary and why they are beneficial.

The Government is proud of this program, as are Indian people of their graduates. We need to overcome the serious misunderstandings that have arisen and have now become so charged with emotion and controversy. I want to establish good communication, and an effective working relationship with Indian people on this issue. I hope that the debate in the House today can serve those objectives. I want to reassure Indian people across the country who are concerned about this program that I recognize their concerns and have always been ready to discuss them. As I have indicated from the outset, I am ready to start a bilateral process as soon as possible to formally address these issues and other related ones.

We are facing difficult times. Several major issues face us. The Post-Secondary Education Assistance Program is one of the most important of those major issues. We have to deal with it. I know that education is the best way to heal the social malaise and physical hardship that now afflict too many Canadian Indians. I know that the greatest hope for strong, vital Indian communities in the future is education. I know that Indian people have the talent, will, and commitment to make education work for them. I know that last fact because assistance for Indian post-secondary education is one of the most successful programs the federal Government has ever undertaken.

Under the previous policy, the number of post-secondary students increased from 3,500 in 1977-78, when the E-12 guidelines were introduced, to some 15,000 in 1988-89. During the same period, the budget for this program grew from $9 million to close to $130 million. Nevertheless, even the most successful policies need updating and revising from time to time to meet changing needs and emerging trends.

In this case, there is a need to increase the number of successful graduates of the program. Further, there is a need to encourage more Indian graduates who are able to help make self-government and economic independence a reality for their people.

One year ago, my predecessor launched a consultation process to consider revisions to the previous policy. A draft policy proposal was sent to all regions of the country. We were committed to formulating a policy that met Indian needs and Indian aspirations.

The concerns and recommendations of these groups are reflected in the revised policy. For example, the old policy system of limiting the length of student support to a specific number of student months has been changed to a system which provides for up to five years for a four-year program, and up to four years for a three-year program.

The previous wide range of regionally determined rates of assistance has been replaced by a nationally consistent rate structure. Average rates provided to students in most categories under the old guidelines have been increased under the new policy.

The earlier draft policy identified only a $1,000 scholarship for studies for self-government and economic self-sufficiency. A strategic studies scholarship of up to $3,500 per year has been developed under the revised policy. An academic achievement scholarship has been added which is up to $1,000 annually for qualified students. A special allowance has been provided in high-rent cities for single parents with dependants, and married students with both dependent spouses and children. Tuition fees are now covered regardless of time spent in post-secondary education. One result is that there is no limit to the number of degrees for which tuition, books and supplies are provided.

Those are ways in which our consultations with Indian people have helped make this policy a vast improvement over the old policy. However, those are only part of the whole range of benefits that would be available to eligible students under the new policy.

To summarize all those benefits, I would like to underline the following. Complete tuition assistance is provided to eligible full-time and part-time students. This includes fees for registration, tuition, and the cost of books and supplies required for a particular course of studies. Full-time students who must live away from their permanent places of residence may qualify for travel grants back to their homes once every semester for themselves and any dependants who reside with them. Students living away from home will be eligible to receive monthly allowances to help cover their living expenses, for example, food, rent, hydro, daycare, calculated by the Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto according to the costs of living in Toronto, which are higher than anywhere else in Canada. In addition, under certain circumstances provisions have been made for increased allowances in high-rent areas.

The following is an illustration of some examples of levels of assistance. A single student living away from home will receive a maximum monthly living allowance of $675. A married student with an employed spouse and three dependants will receive a maximum of $1,205 per month. A single-parent student with three dependants will receive a maximum of $1,355 per month, plus a rental supplement where applicable.

Students will be eligible to receive funding to complete community college diplomas, certificates, undergraduate degrees, Masters, Ph.D. or professional degrees. Student allowances will be provided for the official length of each successive academic program: three years for a three-year program, four years for a four-year program. An additional year may be provided for a particular student to complete a degree or diploma program at each level.

Therefore, successful students will experience no difficulty in obtaining support through all the academic levels to the conclusion of a professional degree in law or a graduate program such as a Master's degree or a Ph.D.

Administering organizations, bands, tribal councils, education authorities, or other Indian organizations may also offer special incentives to eligible students in addition to the allowances provided under the basic policy.

For example, academic achievement scholarships of up to $1,000 may be granted to community college or undergraduate students who attain an average B or higher. Strategic studies scholarships may be granted for undergraduate students which may be worth up to $3,500 to encourage them to follow courses such as commerce, public or business administration, economics, applied and physical sciences, mathematics, computer science, forestry or engineering, courses that would contribute directly to achieving self-government and economic self-reliance in Indian communities; and awards of up to $1,500 for full-time students enrolled in advanced or professional degree programs such as Master's or Ph.D. programs.

Under the new policy, those administering organizations will have an even greater opportunity to participate directly in the post-secondary education process.

• (1230)

The new policy is sufficiently flexible to allow administering organizations to establish their own operating procedures provided these are consistent with the policy and respect the maximum rates and limits of assistance. To ensure fairness and equitable treatment under the policy, administering organizations will have to have an appeal process in place. The new policy also requires the establishment of a student registry that will greatly improve the data base for the program.

We need to work together with administering groups to establish an improved system for research and data collection. Two-thirds of the program is managed by bands, tribal councils, education authorities and other Indian groups. It has been very difficult in the past, Mr. Speaker, to obtain full statistical information. Therefore, cost projections from year to year have been based on historical trends in expenditures rather than actual demand. We need better information in order to plan and to forecast demand and costs. Because the new policy relates to support for individual students, provides incentives and scholarships and has a rate structure based on individual student costs, the budget for this fiscal year has been set on those criteria. However, if the data indicate there should be changes in financial resources in the future, I am prepared and will ask Cabinet for increased financial resources for the coming years to meet those growing demands.

I would like now to say a few words about treaties. I recognize how strongly Indian people feel about treaties. For Indian people treaties are fundamental to their existence as a people. They represent the contract that the great chiefs and their people signed with the Crown. They form the basis of the historic relationship between Indian people and the federal Government. My Government respects and values that relationship and so provides elementary and secondary education to Indians who reside on reserves. This commitment has been formalized in the Indian Act. In fact, my Government goes beyond the Indian Act and provides educational and support services far beyond what is required by the law. Our support includes pre-kindergarten, kindergarten, and post-secondary programs. With our elementary and secondary education programs I believe that my Government is observing the full spirit and intent of the education references in the treaties, but I do not agree that post-secondary education is a treaty right.

We must strengthen our policy commitment to encourage Indian people to attend colleges and universities and to graduate with the skills that much of the rest of this country takes for granted, skills necessary to develop the special potential of this vital part of our population. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we must all maintain our strong support for this program and to improve it in every way possible.

I have indicated my willingness to review the specific terms of the new policy. We have approximately four months before the program becomes operational. We should use that time to correct any inequities in the new policy that together we can identify. If it is determined that more is required to complete the review, then we will determine it at that time and take more time if necessary.

I am willing to sit down with the chiefs and student representatives to design a bilateral process of consultation on post-secondary student assistance as they have requested. I believe that this policy is better than the previous one. However, there may be some areas where there could be further improvements, or areas where there are unintended inequities. I have stated from the beginning that I am prepared to look at these if they can be demonstrated.

In this great country we share, there is a tradition of democratic processes. These include discussion, negotiation and, yes, even criticism. The goal we all strive for is a fairer, more productive Canada for all its citizens and I am prepared to contribute to that and to obtain the appropriate means in order to ensure post-secondary education for our native people.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, in this morning's Ottawa paper I was amused by a clipping under the heading "Indian Affairs stonewalling either dumb luck or genius". The writer was Frank Howard who was calling the Indian and Northern Affairs Department trying to obtain some accurate data on this whole issue which was brought to the nation's attention by the hunger strike. Of course, it took an opposition day to get the Minister on his feet to give us some facts and figures.

Mr. McDermid: That is not right. Be fair.

Mr. Flis: Let me quote the reporter:

> In the face of Indian hunger strikers, the Department has been inept in its media relations—or maybe not.
> It seemed inept earlier this week when I was looking for numbers about the make-up of the 15,000 or so people claiming access to some $130 million per year for keeping them and their families on campus.
> I wanted to know how the money was being spent, how many of the recipients were in community colleges, specialized institutes, post-high school re-entry courses, university under-graduate courses, graduate courses and so on.
> The department's first response at the bureaucratic level was that questions could only be answered by the Minister's office.

Since you are rushing me, Mr. Speaker, could the Minister tell this House what percentage of the students who enter post-secondary education actually graduate with some sort of a degree or a diploma? Second, what is the make-up of the approximately 15,000 students who claim access to this annual $130 million cap which the Minister has put on?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, I obviously welcome the Hon. Member asking this question. Of course, he is entitled to make whatever comment he desires. I would point out to him that I have been on my feet for a while now answering the concerns of the members of the Opposition but I have not seen the Hon. Member on his feet asking questions.

Mr. Flis: You will.

Mr. Cadieux: That being said, I only say this because of the particular comment made by the Hon. Member which I thought was unfair, and unfortunately I am just as fair as he is.

With respect to the particular newspaper article, I respect the views of all people of the press and I am sure they express what they have to say in their own articles whenever they want to.

If the Hon. Member listened very carefully to the comments that I have just made, let me stress that I indicated that 66 per cent of the program is administered by the bands and councils themselves. We do need an enhanced co-operation and communication in order to establish as precisely as possible the correct data with respect to this program. There was not a sufficiently good system of control with respect to the moneys invested in this most important program. That was one of the flaws of the old policy. What we want to establish is a better system to evaluate the needs and the costs so that I can go on an annual basis to Cabinet and request the appropriate funds in order to meet the needs of post-secondary education of our native people.

Mr. Flis: You did not answer my question.

• (1240)

Mr. Fee: I would like to commend the Minister for his presentation. He has done an excellent job of presenting it, and his sincerity in presenting it is evident. There have been a number of criticisms that have come out. We have read them in the media. We have heard them in the House. There is one that he did not mention in his comments, and I would like him to elaborate on the criticism that I have heard from a few people, that this program appears to dictate to certain Indian students which educational institutions they will attend, and what courses they will take. Will the Minister comment on whether that is his intent?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, we do not dictate which course a student has to attend, or which institution a student has to attend. We recognize that there are domains that perhaps are not gone into sufficiently by Indian students. Bearing in mind the ultimate goal of self-government and self-sufficiency, we have designed some incentives in this particular program, in order to encourage students to consider these particular programs and courses, so that they can obtain degrees in those domains in order to help, enhance and achieve the ultimate goal of self-government and self-sufficiency.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): One of the things that the Minister did not mention was the objective of equality in terms of participation rates for native students and non-native students. Mr. Yalden had discussed this in his Human Rights Commission report. The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) discussed this in his speech, that if we are to obtain equity between the participation of native students in post-secondary education, which is now around 4 per cent, as opposed to the population of Canada as a whole, which is around 27 per cent, a substantial amount of Canada's resources has to be allocated in order to achieve that equity. That should be our goal. I believe the Minister indicated that at the close of his statement.

I am wondering exactly what the Minister's goals are. When does he intend to achieve that equity, and over how short a period, because we should be talking about a relatively short period, the shortest period feasible? Is the Minister willing to allocate resources, in order to achieve equity over the shortest period possible? Is that his goal?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated at the beginning of my speech earlier, when I addressed Commissioner Yalden's report, unfortunately the Commissioner did not acknowledge in his report things that had been done. It is a fact that more has to be done. I appreciate that particular question. We have to bear in mind what has been done. In 10 years, we went from 3,000 students to 15,000 students. There was a fivefold increase. Right now what we are trying to establish and determine, in co-operation with the bands and councils that administer two-thirds of our program, is the obtaining of the most accurate data, so that I can have the needs, evaluate the costs and request the appropriate money.

Mr. James: The new post-secondary policy that we are talking about today has been criticized by some people as reducing the length of time that support will be forthcoming to the students and that this could possibly restrict their long-term education goals. I ask the Minister, what does the policy really say? I think there is some confusion there.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, the policy does not restrict Indian students is obtaining degrees. The policy states that if an institution, college or university determines that a given course should be completed in three years, then that course should be done in three years. Notwithstanding that, recognizing and acknowledging that in certain circumstances there may be difficulties or problems with respect to a given student, for example, if the institution recognizes that a particular student needs an additional year in order to complete that particular course or obtain that particular degree, we will acknowledge that. We will acknowledge that also for whatever consecutive degree a student wants to obtain.

Mr. Harb: I would like to congratulate the Minister. I enjoyed his speech very much, especially when he indicated his intention to meet with the different groups, and when he spoke about the consultation with the different groups. I am interested in seeing some sort of an administrative support system to make an assessment of the program on an annual basis, so the Ministry could have the information the Minister was talking about. In light of the fact that we do not have all of the data, for example, what the success rate and the attrition rate are, I believe it would be very difficult for the Ministry to embark on a capital project without having all of the elements. In view of the fact that over the past four years we have been fishing in the mud, will the Minister tell the House what his intention would be over the next three months in order to get out of this dilemma, and in order to give the House a proper assessment of the actual costs for the program, over the next year, or over the next five years? The more money we spend on education, the less money we spend on welfare and UIC. Will the Minister please tell us his intention?

Mr. Cadieux: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his most reasonable comment. The intention from the very start is relatively clear. We want to pursue this very successful program in post-secondary education for Indian students. I believe the numbers speak for themselves. As we have already indicated on numerous occasions, it went from $4.2 million to a $130 million, and from 3,000 students to 15,000 students. We are committed to pursuing this program. We recognize also that education is a solution to improving the situation of our native people.

What I have indicated from the outset when I announced the policy, is that it would have to be reviewed regularly. What I have also announced and agreed to since then, is to establish a bilateral process in order to obtain the data that we absolutely need to establish on a year-to-year or on a five-year prediction, the needs that we are going to encounter, so that we can plan and receive the appropriate funds, in order to recognize and enhance this post-secondary education program. My intention from the start has been to sit down in normal circumstances, go over the data and information plan and go to Cabinet to plead this case.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand).

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me focus on the key issue in this debate. We have here a growing number of young Canadian Indians who want to go on to university and college, to improve their human condition, to get off the welfare merry-go-round, and to escape poverty, but the Government is putting restrictions on their ability to do this. That is the issue in this debate. The Government is doing this by capping the funds available for Indian post-secondary education, at a time when the Indian population is expanding and more Indians are qualifying for university. What kind of perverse logic is that? It is almost as if the Government would prefer to continue paying out welfare moneys rather than help people get off welfare.

In a recent article in The Globe and Mail by Peter Desbarats, the dean of journalism at the University of Western Ontario, Mr. Desbarats said the following: "For centuries we have been telling native people that education is the road to self-reliance. As soon as they started to follow this advice in significant numbers we backed away from it. Surely, the impact of this type of hypocrisy on the Canadian native population will in the long run be more costly than the relatively small amount of money it will save".

In 1982-83 I had the good fortune to serve on the Special Committee for Indian Self-Government chaired by my former colleague, Keith Penner, the Member of Parliament for Cochrane—Superior. I say "good fortune" because during those two years we had the opportunity to travel across the country and to meet Indian people in all parts of this land, to visit their lands and to find out about their dreams and their ambitions. When we published our report in 1983, before making recommendations we catalogued some of the social conditions faced by Indian people in the country at that time. I would like to detail some of them.

In terms of child welfare the proportion of Indian children in care had risen steadily to more than five times the national rate—five times higher than the non-Indian population. In terms of housing, nearly 19 per cent of on-reserve homes had two or more families living in them, these conditions affecting 40 per cent of all status Indian families. Facilities: fewer than 40 per cent of Indian houses had running water, sewage disposal or indoor plumbing facilities. The national level of properly serviced houses is over 90 per cent. The average income of Indian people is one-half to two-thirds of the national average. The death rate, despite improvements over the past 10 years, is two to four times the rate for non-Indians. The infant mortality rate among Indian children is 60 per cent higher than the national rate. The life expectancy for Indian people is 10 years less than for non-Indian people.

That was in 1983. The conditions have not improved that much since that time. If we look at the report of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, which was published just a few weeks ago, we see that Mr. Yalden stated: "The situation faced by Canada's native peoples is in many ways a national tragedy. The grand promise of equality of opportunity that forms the central purpose of the Canadian Human Rights Act stands in stark contrast to the conditions in which many native people live".

Mr. Yalden went on to state: "Native peoples are drastically under-represented in employment in virtually every industrial sector and every occupation, even in locations like Winnipeg or Regina where there is a high concentration of natives. Within federal government Departments themselves, where programs to promote native hiring have been in place for some time now, the representation of native peoples is abysmal in all but the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs". Those are the social conditions that are facing the native people of Canada.

I spoke a moment ago about the dreams and ambitions of Indian people. I just want to refer Hon. Members to a special study that was done with respect to our Indian people by The Free Press of Winnipeg on October 14, 1988. In carrying out this study the newspaper conducted an inquiry among Indian children as to what their ambitions might be. I would like to quote from some of the letters that were sent in by Indian children on the reserves.

Anne, a 13-year old girl, wrote: "When I grow up I would like to be a store manager and I would like to help the old people find what they want. First I will finish my education and go on to high school and university. Then after that I would come home and be a store manager".

Linda, 12 years old, wrote: "I would like to be a police girl because I do not like people getting drunk and if they do I will make sure they are not getting hurt and my family will be very proud of me, of being a cop, that I will be a cop forever and I will never break one rule. I won't drink".

Candice, who is 11 years old, wrote: "When I get out of school I will go to school at Brandon University. I am planning to be a teacher when I grow up. My Mom is a teacher".

The citations by young Indian people with respect to their ambitions and with respect to their dreams goes on.

One must not forget in this debate that in the last Parliament we passed Bill C-31 which greatly added to the number of status Indians in Canada. The estimate is that the number of people who have been added to the rolls of status Indians as a result of that law is between 30,000 to 80,000. We cannot get an exact figure, but it is relatively high.

In the debate so far there seems to be some confusion on the government side with respect to capping. Some have said that there is no cap. Then, earlier this morning in answer to questions from the Leader of the NDP the Minister admitted that there is a cap. There is a limit on the amount of money available to the students for post-secondary education. No one has said that the Government has cut back on the funding. We have not said that. Of course there have been increases in the funding. However, there has been a limit on the increases in the funding. The increases have not been sufficient to cover those people who are qualified for university and accepted by universities.

I would now like to refer to a brief that was sent to us by the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians who stated: "The new policy and guidelines would create undue hardships for Indian students. The capping of the funds available, combined with demographic realities that accelerate demand for post-secondary education by Indian students, would severely limit the financial resources available on a per-student basis, and effect a reduction in the numbers and success rates of students enrolled in universities, and other post-secondary institutions already under-represented by 50 per cent in comparison to enrolment rates of the general Canadian society. Indian participation in post-secondary education should be promoted and increased, helping to raise, not lower, the proportion of Indians in post-secondary education".

With respect to this capping, as I have said, there is some misunderstanding. Perhaps I could put it this way for purposes of the Government and the public. Let us consider a program such as Old Age Security. Under that program when someone turns 65 he or she receives Old Age Security, whatever the fixed amount is. No matter if the health rates improve or if the population increases, as soon as someone turns 65 and no matter what the numbers are, they all receive Old Age Security. We do not say to them: "There is only a budget of so much and, unfortunately, the budget level has been reached and now we must reduce the Old Age Security. It is first in, first served". We have a program which states that no matter how many people turn 65 they will receive the old age security pension. That is a program without limit, without a cap.

In the program that is put before us and what the Minister is doing is putting a limit on the amount of moneys available for Indians in post-secondary education. He is saying that they will only be admitted into the program up to the point of reaching that limit. What we are saying, and what the Indians are saying, is that all Indian students who are qualified and are accepted to university should have the right to go to university without limit.

This is not a great number of people. It is increasing, certainly, and I mentioned the figures in that regard. However, the total number of Indians and aboriginal people is at most one million. A few years ago we had about 300,000 status Indians. Perhaps that number has gone up to 400,000. There are 15,000 Indian students in post-secondary education. In the City of Montreal we have more students in post-secondary education than 15,000. That is not a great number. So perhaps there is another 1,000 or another 2,000. Surely a rich country such as Canada can afford to pay for that. There should be no capping with respect to these people.

I do not doubt the Minister's sincerity, but he is part of a Government. He is subject to the restraints of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and so on. When he is enunciating a policy, he has to enunciate it in the context of what they will permit. Unfortunately, it is a very narrow approach that they are taking. Those young people who are risking their lives in this hunger fast have not been risking their lives for nothing. They are risking their lives because they understand that they will not be able to get the education they need. That is a serious matter.

Once again, I say there should be no cap. All those Indian students who are qualified and accepted by universities should be given the financing necessary to pursue their studies. The alternative open to them, Mr. Speaker, is welfare. When I was sitting with the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government, we heard people asking, Why should there be a special program for Indian post-secondary education? Why should they have a program that is different from any that we non-Indians have? The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that such a program is part of our settlement with the native people, with the aboriginal people, for occupying this land that once was all theirs. At one time, all this land that is now Canada was the land of the aboriginal people: the land, the water, the mines, the resources, the oil, the gas. It was all theirs. We came from Europe and elsewhere and occupied the land in great numbers, and very often pushed them off to the less productive lands.

In turn for taking a lot of their land, we made agreements, sometimes in treaties, sometimes not in treaties, on the basis of their aboriginal rights to pay them back for that land. We have not paid very much. Part of the pay-back is funding for post-secondary education. If we look at the result of the takeover of this land by the European peoples, who is rich and who is poor? The people who owned the land in days gone by are certainly not the rich people. They are not controlling this country and this land. So the least we can do is have a generous program for education, especially post-secondary education. This is small payment for the lands that we took, lands which are making most of us rich. That is a small compensation that we who have come from European stock and other stock can pay to these people who once owned and occupied all of this land.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say this. In a recent report on aboriginal justice, it was pointed out that a native child today has a better chance of ending up in jail than receiving a university degree. George Erasmus, the President of the Assembly of First Nations, has pointed out that there is no cap on native welfare programs, but there is going to be a cap on native education programs. It will be far cheaper in the long run to help Indian people with their education than to perpetuate the cycle of welfare and dependence. In considering these matters, I would ask the Minister and the Government to reconsider their foolish policy of limiting this money for our Indian people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Dobbie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member enjoys quoting from The Globe and Mail. I would also like to quote an editorial from The Globe and Mail of April 20, 1989, where it states, "We have trouble finding Ottawa's position unreasonable". The Globe and Mail goes on to say that "the principle of imposing a budget on the program and making students more accountable for completing their degrees within a reasonable amount of time is not the ogre its critics make it out to be."

I would like to know how the Hon. Member can argue that the program has been capped or that it has been decreased when it has been increased so significantly.

Mr. Allmand: Obviously the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary was not listening to me. At no time did I say the Government has cut back on the program. They have not. They have increased the program. We admit that. But they have not increased the program to the limits that are necessary, and they have put a cap on. That is clear in the letter that was written by the Minister to the Chiefs of Canada. This was quoted earlier by the leader of the NDP and by my colleague. It said:

> The time has come for a major reappraisal to determine how the program could produce larger numbers of graduates within a budget that could not continue to grow at the pace of the last decade.

They are increasing the budget, but they are increasing it with a cap on it. The Hon. Member referred to The Globe and Mail. The Globe and Mail congratulates the Government for putting a cap on it—that great Tory newspaper. In an editorial of April 20 headlined "Native students and higher education", they say:

> This month, Ottawa did to this assistance program what it has done, or will be doing, to other programs it finances. It set a global budget for the spending, to control expenses and impose some discipline on students taking advantage of the program.

So The Globe sees that they are doing that and congratulates them for it. I do not agree with The Globe, Mr. Speaker. What we are saying is that this is not the kind of program where there should be a limit. This should be like the old age security program. In the old age security system, if you turn 65 you qualify and the Government has to provide the money. We are saying that if you are an Indian student and you qualify for university and you are accepted, you should get the money.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I have always found my hon. friend for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce to be very reasonable. We have served on committees together on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I find it difficult to understand why he continually refers to a budget item as a cap. He says it should work exactly the same way as old age security. I know he recognizes that when budgeting takes place in the Department responsible for old age security, we have the data, we have the figures, we know what to budget for, as his Government did, and as our Government has done. What we are budgeting for is old age security. How much is the Government going to spend? With the best available data that the Indian Affairs Department had, they budgeted $130 million for post-secondary education feeling that they had covered every student. This was the budget. This is what they felt was needed for every student who qualifies for post-secondary education to be included within that $130 million.

The problem that we are having is getting all of the data together. That is the push that the Department is trying to make now, to gather the data together. Surely, the Hon. Member does not believe that we should just submit a zero figure, or a question mark, when we are budgeting. Surely he does not believe that. It has to be a budget item. That is what it is, a budget item. It is not a cap. If the budget is out, it will be increased the following year.

If the budget is too much the following year, it will be reduced. But we need the co-operation of the bands who administer the funds in most cases. We need to have the figures on those students who are streaming in. If you go to any school board, they budget. If you go to any university institution, they budget. That is what we are talking about; it is a budget. It is not a cap. If more money is needed, more money will be put in the budget. That is what it amounts to, and I would ask him to comment on that.

• (1310)

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the Minister and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development do not have full control over that matter. Even if their forecasts were good and they could forecast exactly how much money they would need for all the Indian students who might be qualified for university, they have to go Treasury Board, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Privy Council Office. I served in that particular ministry. I know.

We also know that right now the priority of the Government is to cut the deficit. It will be making cut-backs in all kinds of departments. It is the Government that budgeted. We do not know whether that is what the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development recommended. All we know is what has come from the Government. It has budgeted an amount of money that many people say is inadequate.

For example, Chairman Beth Brown, president of the Canadian Student Federation said that under the old policy, enrolment of native students in post-secondary schools rose to about 15,000 from 2,500 in 1974. She says that the restraints that are being proposed means that 1,100 students would not be able to attend college or university in September. That is what the president of the Canadian Federation of Students says.

I also remind the Member that in the days when our baby boom children were going to school, we did not put a limit or cap on our public school system.

Ms. Dobbie: We had a budget.

Mr. Allmand: If there were children ready to go to school, we built the schools, hired the teachers and made sure they had a place to go to school. We did not say that because of the budget it is too bad, that child got in first and that kid cannot come in. There was universal access to education at the public level. We took care of all the children who wanted to go to school. That is what should be done with native people in this country.

Mr. McCurdy: I am sure my Liberal colleague has noted the difference between referring to The Globe and Mail in respect of a news report and referring to The Globe and Mail in terms of support for Tory policy and ignoring what Indian journalists might say in their newspapers about their rights.

It cannot have been missed by anyone that there are any number of programs which exist without caps. Nobody questions the necessity of having budgets, but budgets are always over-run on the basis of supplementary estimates when it is found that the cost exceeds what was budgeted. For instance, as prisons expand, the ones that incarcerate Indians and others in the population, there are infinite funds for that. Of course, there is the Canada Assistance Program which feeds the welfare budgets of our municipalities all across this land. No one has ever said that should be capped. Indeed, one might recall that there should have been a bloody cap on the amount of this country that was taken from the Indians in the first place.

Does my hon. colleague not believe that it is more than fair to have a program which will make it possible for every aboriginal person to have access to post-secondary education? After all, they gave a whole country away in order to have it.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, that is what I thought I had said, but I appreciate the vigorous way in which it was seconded by my hon. friend, the Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair (Mr. McCurdy).

He referred to my citation of an editorial in The Globe and Mail. The only reason I did that was to indicate to the Government that it is not only the Opposition Parties that know there is a cap being applied. The Globe and Mail, the Government's great supporter, also recognizes that a cap is being put on. The Globe and Mail, because of its small "c" conservative policies, congratulates it for the cap. We do not congratulate the Government for the cap. There is a place for caps in some types of budgets which vary from year to year.

I point out again that the path to self-reliance for our Indian people is through education. The way for them to get beyond those social conditions that were described to us when we travelled throughout this country is through education. The way to do it is through education, and we should be more than generous in assisting that.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate. In my nine years in public life, I have never found that debates in this House have done anything more than inform Canadians and give them both sides of the story. I think it particularly helps the Government to set out all the facts and give the background on an issue. It gives greater balance to Canadians who are discussing the issue, whatever it might be.

We come from a huge country, with many interests being represented. This Parliament administers and allocates $132 billion. In each one of those interests and those budgetary allocations there are strongly held views that there should be more or should be less, or that new programs should be established and existing programs should be cut. This is where that entire process takes place and where the final decisions are made. That is the nature of democracy and the nature of government in Canada today.

Today we are dealing with the issue of native education. I happen to represent, as part of my riding, the largest Indian reserve in the land. It is one of the most progressive native communities in this country. They are great farmers and great ranchers. A few weeks ago an agreement on an irrigation project was signed to help irrigate their land and produce food, not only for Canada but the world. That is a genuine achievement of a band that is ready for self government in every way. If I had my way, they would have a lot more of it than they do today, but even on that issue within the blood group itself not everyone is in agreement with the concept of self government. It is necessary to meet, talk and debate.

I believe all Members are concerned about the specific students who are on a hunger strike. In a free democratic society that is not the way to show one's concern or point of view. Certainly, one is free to do that. In a society, one is free not to eat. One is free to starve to death if one wishes, but that is not the way we ought to do it.

In this vast country with its many interests, everyone would do that if it were a strategy to which governments would succumb. We are multicultural. Immigrant groups could be starving to death. Refugee groups could be starving to death. Some of us feel strongly about the entrenchment of property rights. Some feel strongly enough that they would starve for that right, just as some of our ancestors fought and died to get the entrenchment of property rights in their constitutions. There are people who feel very strongly about both sides of the abortion issue.

The fundamental point to determine is how a society resolves that. In a totalitarian state that is controlled by one party, the party will make the decision while the citizen has no say. In a totalitarian state with a military junta, a few generals will make the decision. In a monarchy, a family compact will make the decision. However, in our western world where we have a democracy, the citizens elect 295 people to come here. We have strongly held political views which sometimes cross Party lines, but this is where the issue must be resolved. Not only we as Members but the Government itself is accountable to the people every four or five years.

Personally, I do not believe that hunger strikes are the way to pressure for change. I therefore sincerely urge the students to stop their hunger strike and meet the Minister. I believe other Members should be encouraging that as well.

I believe the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) and the Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) should have stood in the House and rejected this method as the way to resolve the issue. They should have asked the students to give up their hunger strike, to talk with them so that their views could be presented within the parliamentary process. They did not do that. I think they took advantage of these young students on this particular issue.

Let us deal with the program involved in this issue. It is a program of enormous success. When we came to government, some $50 million to $54 million was being spent on the program. This year the amount is $130 million. In the last four years, when other programs have received less, this program has more than doubled, as it should because of the success that the native students are achieving at the high school level. They are qualifying to go on to college and university.

Once students, native and non-native, graduate from high school and decide to go to post-secondary education, all are subsidized up to about 90 per cent in terms of the cost of that university. For natives and non-natives, all of that tuition is subsidized. Non-native students pay for their books, their travel, their room and board, their clothing and all of the rest of it. This program provides for natives something that non-natives are not entitled to. This was a policy decision made by this Parliament and I think it is a wise policy decision, one which I am prepared to talk to non-native students about.

There are many, many thousands of non-native students who come from families that are desperately poor. In some families, the fathers, mothers, sisters and brothers work to help those young people get through university and college. For native students, we use the Consolidated Revenue Fund to help them.

I do not believe that anyone in this Parliament is opposed that policy. We believe that these funds should be set aside so that natives get tuition fees and books and supplies for their whole life if they wish to go to university that long. There is no limit to funding for tuition, books and supplies. There is a limit for the extra expenses of transportation, day care, room and board and the like.

The policy provides that a native student can have up to five years to finish a course that most would finish in four years. Again, that is because of the unique situation from which they come. For a three-year course, they can have up to four years. That is not unreasonable, but I submit that Hon. Members ought to consider that there is a possible defect in this when it comes to the Charter of Rights.

If a non-native student were to bring a Charter action under the equality section against that policy, who knows what a court would ultimately do. This would mean that society would either have to provide this funding for all students, native or non-native, and some might want that to happen, or else it would have to cut the program out entirely.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Read the Charter.

Mr. Thacker: My friend is no doubt referring to affirmative action, but we never know if a court will go along with that. Is it fair to non-native students who come from desperately poor families that native students receive this funding and they do not? A court might find that to be not equal treatment, in which case the program would either be totally lost or would have to be provided for everyone. Even members of the NDP realize that there is not enough money in society to provide that degree of help for every student, native or non-native.

There are other issues at play as well. There is the question of self-government. It is my own personal view, and I believe it is the policy of Parliament, that natives should move to self-government as quickly as they themselves can be ready for it. That is why under the program there is an extra supplement for natives who will take programs that will assist in self-government and in self-management of the reserves. That is a good policy. I personally believe that self-government is a good policy and we should be pushing it forward more quickly.

There is also the question as to whether or not post-secondary education is a treaty right. Natives have always held the view that it is and are pushing it vigorously. I do not believe that there is a Party in this House or in the country that has ever adopted the position that post-secondary education is a treaty right. Is that the view of Members of the NDP? I do not think they have formulated that policy.

The Liberals formed the Government for many years and we all have a policy for giving extra assistance to natives, but I do not believe it is a Party policy that post-secondary education is a treaty right. To the extent that Hon. Members are misleading natives on that, they are not correct. They should not be doing that. It is not fair to do so unless a Party is prepared to state that that is its policy. If it is, that policy should be announced so the Canadian people may judge it.

Members of the Opposition are using the political cliché of a cap on the budget. It is a very effective tool that Members of the Opposition have adopted, and I praise them for it. When we were in opposition, we tried to use those little clichés that would crystallize things, and so they are using the word "cap" as if the program had been capped. That is nonsense.

Indeed, we as Members of Parliament have an obligation to budget properly and to account for that budget. In this case, two thirds of the post-secondary education budget is operated by agencies not attached to the Department but by native agencies themselves. To make an annual budget, the Department makes estimates and then spends them. If the money runs out, it comes back for supplementary estimates.

We as a Government have an obligation, but Members of the Opposition do too. Are they calling for wide open spending without knowing how many students are involved and how the money is spent? If that is what they are advocating, that is irresponsible to the Canadian public as a whole. We have an obligation to account for the money and that is what the policy does. The Minister has quite properly taken that view. Give us the data. If there are more students and they need help, we will go to Cabinet and to Parliament with supplementary estimates.

Members of the Opposition are saying that they do not need data, that they do not care how many students there are. They are saying that if these agencies want $200 million, we should give them $200 million. Is that really what opposition Members are saying? Of course it is not, because they are responsible Members of Parliament as well and have to account to the public.

I would like to deal further with the role of the Opposition. It is proper for us to have strongly held views that may differ. However, on one issue we should all be unanimous, and that is in the way we express dissent in a democracy. I would like opposition Members to ask publicly if they believe that a hunger strike is the way to go. Why have they not asked those young students that question? They should encourage those students to talk to them, they should offer to help them present their case and then hope they will vote for them in the next election. However, they should say that in a democracy, with great respect, we do not starve to death. That is not an appropriate way to do it, because if everyone does that, our whole society will go into a state of chaos. I would like opposition Members to rise and tell us their view on that point.

Mr. Harb: Mr. Speaker, I am quite disappointed in the statement of the Hon. Member. Obviously he did not listen to what the Minister said. He did not listen to the admission of the Minister that the Government failed in establishing a data base to obtain statistics pertaining to the program. The Hon. Member also said that 90 per cent of fees for all students across Canada is paid by the Government. Is that an accurate figure?

I was disappointed that the Hon. Member spoke of education as being related to a treaty. In my view, education is the right of every Canadian, native or non-native. The educational system should be revamped to the point where there would be no differentiation between native and non-native students. If that means that the Government should invest more in education, then let it do so because that is the only way to go.

The Hon. Member said that Members of the Opposition should call on the Indians to stop their hunger strike. It is not our duty to tell those students what to do. They know best what to do. They have been trying for months and months to deal with the Minister. Obviously the Minister stonewalled and the Indians did not achieve their goal. Now it looks as if the Minister is indicating that he seems to be coming to an agreement to at least discuss the matter.

I must commend the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux) for admitting honestly to the House the failure of the Government over the past four years to address the issue and to set up a proper support program. However, I was very disappointed in the speech of the Hon. Member because obviously he did not listen to the Minister on this matter.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I suppose I reciprocate the Hon. Member's disappointment. I am quite disappointed in his so-called question or comment, because I thought he would have understood far more than he appears to have done.

I must say that the Hon. Member's election brought us some glee. We wish we could have had a Conservative elected in Ottawa Centre, but at least the man he defeated was a thorn in our sides, and we welcome the Hon. Member as an alternative to the former Member.

The policy has always been subject to change. I think the Hon. Member got sucked into this capping argument, that somehow there was a sum of money that would never increase and was fixed for all time. That was never the purpose. I will grant that members of the Opposition led Canadians to believe it, and many do believe it. However, that simply was never correct. In the second last paragraph of his letter announcing the policy, the Minister made it clear that it would always be subject to review. However, we need the data.

• (1330)

Are members of the Liberal Party saying that the Minister should be allocating unlimited resources to two-thirds of the agencies that administer this policy, without having any checks or balances, without knowing how many students, or without knowing how much is spent on room and board? That is irresponsible.

If Members opposite are not saying that, what is their criticism? If we have the data which shows that more students require it, then the program will be increased.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair on a question or comment.

Mr. McCurdy: The Hon. Member was very careful to draw a picture which contrasts the treatment accorded to native people in terms of free post-secondary education with the situation for the rest of the population. I was not able to understand whether the Hon. Member thinks that this is unjust, or whether he was attempting to draw divisions between native people and the rest of the population and suggesting that it was unfair for the majority that native people should be accorded this. Was the Hon. Member suggesting that free post-secondary education ought to be available for everybody, as it is for native people? If the Hon. Member meant the latter, then we could support him. Our Party stands for free access to post-secondary education for all Canadians of post-secondary age.

I am also disappointed that the Hon. Member suggested that what he expressed or fought for as a member of the Opposition is somehow different now he is a member of the Government. I would like to assure the Hon. Member that when we on this side become the Government we will be saying exactly the same thing as we are saying right now.

The Hon. Member also said that we should have talked to the native students so that they would vote for us. I would point out to the Hon. Member that we do not talk to native people because they are going to vote for us. We talk to them because we believe in what they believe in, in terms of justice.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member who thinks that we are making too much of the term "cap" to dispose of it and answer the question clearly. If we want to resolve this problem we can do so very easily. We can understand that there will have to be budgeting for native post-secondary education. I hope the Hon. Member can answer my straightforward question on behalf of the Government. Were there to appear more native students than are budgeted for, and assuming the Hon. Member has all the data he needs, in the coming year will the Government provide sufficient funds to ensure that no native student is denied access to university because of the cap that exists on this budget?

Mr. Thacker: I am always impressed by the sanctimony of the members of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. McDermid: And the volume.

Mr. Thacker: And the volume. Members of the New Democratic Party seem to think that the louder they speak the more sincere they are and that Canadians will love them more.

If I were an aboriginal person in this nation listening to the NDP, my instant reaction would be to ask what has happened in other countries where the socialists are in control. For example, what about New Zealand, Australia, or Scandinavia? Are the native people there better off than here?

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Free post-secondary education for everybody.

Mr. Thacker: One will find that natives return to Canada and are glad to be here. Would the Hon. Member like to go to the ultimate socialist state in eastern Europe, to the Soviet Union? The aboriginals here are treated far better, and so they ought to be because we are a free society where they can express their views. Their members are being elected to the House of Commons on an increasing basis. They are doing better.

Mr. McCurdy: Sanctimonious!

Mr. Thacker: I am proud to be Canadian.

Mr. McCurdy: You ought to be proud to be sanctimonious, too.

Mr. Thacker: I think as Canadians we should be immensely proud of what we have done. We took on the English and the French problem. We took on the Catholic and the Protestant problem. We have done more in this country as a multinational culture than any other country in the world. I am immensely proud to be Canadian. I am sorry that members of the NDP here today do not seem to be proud to be Canadian.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James.

Mr. Harvard: I think the Member has shown his true blue colours today. He is flying high. He commenced his speech a few minutes ago by giving us a short lesson in democracy. I do not know what that had to do with the issue. Instead of giving us a lesson on democracy, perhaps the Hon. Member should give us a lesson on sanctimony. The Hon. Member is an absolute pope when it comes to sanctimony. I cannot believe my ears.

What I found most striking about the remarks of the Hon. Member was the insensitivity of what the Hon. Member was talking about. Not only was he attempting to give us a lesson on democracy, but he was attempting to give those Indian students a lesson in the efficacy of a hunger strike. I do not think those Indian students need to take any lessons from the Hon. Member.

In his remarks, I noticed the total and complete absence of comments about the low income of the Indian population, which is nothing when compared with the income of the non-native population. The Hon. Member mentioned nothing about unemployment rates which are so much higher than for the non-native population. The Hon. Member talked about Indian reserves. In my capacity as a journalist, I have visited Indian reserves many times, and it saddens me to find unemployment rates of 85 per cent and 95 per cent. In his remarks the Hon. Member did not say a word about the life expectancy of native people. He did not even say anything about the expectancy of educational opportunities. Earlier today in a speech it was pointed out that 4 per cent of the native population go to university, while 27 per cent of the non-native population go to university.

My simple and straightforward question is the following: Where does the Government stop in its obligation to provide educational opportunities to native students? What is the Hon. Member's personal cap, because he is obviously fond of a cap?

Mr. Thacker: Here we have a Grit speaking, a member of that great Liberal Party that governed this country almost exclusively for the last 100 years. Where are the native students? It was under the Liberal Government that the natives wallowed and did not have a chance to get ahead. Even in the last four years the amount spent by this Government on post-secondary education has more than doubled, when everybody else was taking less. This is a good program.

I lived through the period when the Liberal Government brought in the National Energy Program that killed thousands and thousands of westerners. Here is the great moralist up there, type of thing.

Mr. McCurdy: Talk about the issue. Shame on you!

Mr. Thacker: My final comment is this: The reason I like the House of Commons is because a day like today provides an opportunity for the Government to get back. Canadians can see how insensitive, how silly most of the arguments are, and how the opposition Parties try to take cheap political advantage of any issue, no matter who might be hurt out on the streets.

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commence my remarks by saying how proud I am to be a Canadian, and how proud I am to be a Member of the House representing 8,000 Indian children in the riding of Prince Albert—Churchill River. I say it is historic because even though the issues may seem relatively small, that they are just some departmental guidelines, they have come to symbolize the gulf that exists between this Government and the aboriginal people as to what the historic obligations of the Government of Canada are. I also say it is historic because for many Canadians who do not have the opportunity of close contact with the Indian and Inuit communities, this is the first time there has been enough media coverage of a major issue of importance to the Indian community for them to know what is going on.

As I was going through my files on this issue, I realized that I first became aware of this matter in May of 1988 when the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) answered my request for a copy of a purported Government document known as the Buffalo Jump Plan, an internal document of January 19, 1988, from the Department of Indian Affairs. This document has some very interesting things in it that are germane to this debate. Under communications, it outlines what the Government is supposed to say as it implements this plan. It says:

> Confirm the themes of—we honour our commitments, we're fair, we are making progress. We're not seeking dramatic change, but rather to be fair and businesslike. When it can be done it will. Both for Indian and general audiences, it is good to emphasize the fairness theme: it's fair that Indians be well educated, fair that Indians take charge of looking after their own children, fair that the Indians govern themselves.

Those are the fine soothing words the Government is instructed to use to cover up what comes next.

What does come next in this document? First, no to C-31:

> Be prepared to stick with C-31 as it is.

That is where the Government took on its obligation to provide funding for the people coming into the treaty under Bill C-31. Here the Government says no. Section 14 says that there will be fewer schools. It says:

> We can build better schools, but fewer. Need to consult so as to balance the good news ("better") with the bad news ("fewer"). Should get our material out before AFN tables their long-promised report on Indian education.

They are playing games with that issue. Then we get into child abuse. It reads:

> Cannot avoid support on child abuse, since anyone would see this as part of "basic care".

What they are talking about doing is going to the Governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan, redirecting off-reserve welfare assistance to provide funding for better child care services in those provinces.

The situation is so bad and the Government is so concerned on that one that it is prepared to take money from social assistance rather than big corporations to use it to counter the problem of child abuse. Then we get to the Student Grants Program. Here we see the first hint of what is happening:

> Agree to consultation in 1988, for implementation of amended program criteria in 1989.

This is the pre-election program of the Government.

> Important to sustain rate of funding increase in 1988-89 while consultation proceeds.

So we have a scam here. What the Government has done is artificially inflate the 1988-89 budget to come up with that figure of $130 million so that it looks like the Government is being very generous and so people would not notice when the Government starts its capping and cutting and whatever else it is planning to do with the new guidelines, which means that there is no longer a treaty obligation to provide post-secondary education. That is why the Indian and Inuit people feel so strongly about the issue. They feel strongly about it because they know what is happening with post-secondary education guidelines. They know that is part of the Government's plan and it is the Government's plan they have to stop and stop now. They have to stop this plan because it directly threatens them with having to go to court to get their treaty rights recognized.

Let me go to another section of this document where it reads:

> Wish to proceed under Treaty Land Entitlement. Wish to proceed pragmatically (no announcements) with selected negotiations based on land entitlements to date of first survey. Not prepared to go further unless forced to by courts eventually.

If eventually somebody takes this to the court the Government is prepared to talk about treaties but not until that time. That is why the people in the Indian world see these guidelines as being so sinister. It is because they are part of this plan and no one has told them that this is not the plan of the Government. In fact, they have reason to believe, as we do, that it is the plan of the Government.

I think this all goes back to the basic constitutional framework of this country. The Minister made what I think is an appalling statement when he said that he unilaterally felt that post-secondary education was not a treaty right. It is not the job of the Minister or of any Minister or any individual or any Party to determine what are the treaty rights in this country. Section 35 of the Constitution Act of this country states that those rights will be determined in consultation, in negotiation, formal nation to nation consultation between the Governments of Canada and the Governments of the First Nation. That is the only way you can determine what treaty rights are. For two years the Government has had that particular consultation on hold.

Perhaps it might be worthwhile to go through some of these historic obligations to show that this is not just some archaic or arcane type of document that someone filed some place in the distant past. It says some very important things. Reading from The Royal Proclamation:

> —the several Nations or Tribes of Indians with whom We are connected and, who live under our Protection, should not be molested or disturbed in the Possession of such Parts of Our Dominions and Territories as, not having been ceded to or purchased by Us, are reserved to them, or any of them, as their Hunting Grounds.

I think that is very germane also to the Innu issue, if I may digress, where it says that they will not be molested or disturbed on their lands until their lands have been formally ceded or bought. That is something that has not happened. This is what commits the Government to making treaties. It also says:

> We have thought proper to allow Settlement; but that, if at any Time any of the Said Indians should be inclined to dispose of the Said Lands, the same shall be Purchased only for Us, in our Name, at some public Meeting or Assembly of the Said Indians, to be held for that Purpose by the Governor or Commander in Chief of our Colony respectively within which they shall lie—conformable to such Directions and Instructions as We or they shall think proper to give for that Purpose—

In other words, when this land is ceded there are instructions which either they or the Government, the Indian people or the Government, lay down in treaty and they then become part of the constitutional framework of this country. The Government either does not know that or is totally ignoring it.

That brings us back to the now infamous guidelines. The Indian people are convinced on the basis of the treaties which do exist that post-secondary education is an obligation of the Canadian Government which they pre-paid with their land. It is a pre-paid obligation. There is no such thing as this being subject to a budgetary whim of this House. It is a pre-paid obligation which they paid for by allowing their lands for settlement.

Further to that, all the numbered treaties that I have read, and I believe I have read them all, state specifically that education is a treaty right. The Commissioner who signed those treaties said in his comments on the treaty that what he meant by that and what he had agreed to was that the Indians would have access—in the words he used, "the cunning of the white man". There can be no other interpretation of that, I believe, in the framework of 1989 than to mean that this means post-secondary education, because that is how you happen by "the cunning of the white man". That is why the potential threat of budgetary limits is so alarming to the Indian community. A budgetary limit would mean that what is theirs by constitutional right would suddenly become subject to the budgetary mercies of the government of the day. With this Government, in the post-free trade environment in which we live with big business on a rampage, there is no good reason why the Indian people of this country should have any faith or confidence in the budgetary mercies of this Government.

Mr. McCurdy: Or anybody else.

Mr. Funk: Or anybody else for that matter. I do not have time to go into all the details of what is wrong with the guidelines. Those have been discussed very well elsewhere by Sharon Ironstar and others of the fasters, by the Indian leadership, by other colleagues in this House and the co-ordinated action across the country which some of us who have been here have not been aware of, but there has been an extensive program of education across Canada, and those have dealt with many of the issues, as has the Minister.

I would like to zero in on two myths, the soothing language which has become the heart of the Government's defence in this issue. First is the myth of generosity. The Government has made much of how generous it is being in these post-secondary guidelines which it is coming in with now. I would point out that some former colleagues of mine in private life—I did research into these issues—did an analysis of these guidelines for the Prince Albert District Chiefs and they found in the guidelines the proposed increases from 1982 to 1989 represented an increase of 6 per cent to 10 per cent over 1982 levels. That is 25 per cent less than the rate of inflation over that period of time. It leaves every one of these people under the nationally defined poverty level. Although there is perhaps no big argument that some of these allowances are in fact adequate, many of them are not. It certainly is wrong to describe this as generous. It is not. It is niggardly.

• (1350)

Then there is the myth of consultation. I enjoyed speaking to the rally on Friday afternoon on the Hill—

An Hon. Member: Shame, shame!

Mr. Funk: —and describing to the people my brush with this Government's consultation process. The consultation process that I experienced happened as follows: On December 16, representatives of the Federation of Saskatchewan Indian Nations met with us and presented us with their arguments and documents, outlining point by point what is wrong with these guidelines and the consultation process, and asking for our commitment to do something about it. On behalf of the Saskatchewan New Democrats in this House, I wrote a letter to the then Minister of Indian Affairs, the Hon. Bill McKnight, in which I pointed out:

> The proposed changes totally ignore the fact that the issues involved are addressed directly in Treaties between the Indian people and the Crown, and they cannot be addressed in a unilateral fashion.

That is what I did, and what my colleagues did. We were very surprised when we met for the first time with the Indian students and they hauled out the list of people that had been consulted. There on the list was the Saskatchewan NDP caucus. This is the consultation. We wrote them a letter saying we fundamentally disagree and the Government is saying that they consulted with us. No wonder the Indian people in this country think this was a bogus process. It was a bogus process. I know that.

Maybe the Minister who is caught in the middle of this mess should consider who it actually is that is holding him hostage. Is it the Indian students, or is it the people that penned the infamous "Buffalo Jump" document and committed the Government to this suicidal course of action? I believe he is being held hostage by somebody other than the students. I believe that the people who wrote the "Buffalo Jump" are the people who are holding the Minister hostage.

Allow me to summarize my remarks by repeating that I believe the evidence which says that post-secondary education for the original people of this country is a constitutional obligation of the Government of Canada, and the Minister has no unilateral right to change that.

I believe these guidelines represent an abrogation of this historic and constitutional obligation. But by way of trying to contribute constructively to this process, and realizing it has been difficult for a lot of people, particularly the Minister who is caught in it, I tried on Friday to table a five-point program which, if the Minister were to accept it, would lead to a rapid resolution of this issue. Hopefully, the Minister will still do that.

That is why I stand in the debate to support this motion. I think it makes economic sense to not proceed with these guidelines because we are talking about future burdens on future taxpayers of this country. There is no greater burden on the future taxpayers than to save $30,000 to educate a person now and then have to pay $500,000 in welfare over the next 65 years. It makes budgetary, fiscal and economic sense to not proceed with these guidelines and to have a bilateral process of consultation, because that is what the Constitution obligates us to do. If we are going to do that, it makes sense to not proceed with these guidelines until such time as that consultation is complete.

In conclusion, I would like to take a moment to recognize the contribution of other people to this debate. I would like to acknowledge my many teachers through the years, particularly the Indian people I have known who have taught me their ways. I would like to thank the Indian leadership and the students for being open, honest and very forthcoming in our discussions with them. I would like to thank my colleagues in the NDP caucus, because I believe we have exemplified what team work can do in bringing an issue before the people of Canada. I would also like to thank all other Hon. Members on this side of the House and the other side who have taken a serious enough interest in this issue that we are having this debate. I would finally like to acknowledge the Indian children of this country. It is because of their hopes for the future that all of this is worth it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Minister of State for Housing (Mr. Redway).

Mr. Redway: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the course of the Hon. Member's comments, I recall him making the statement that as a result of the passage of Bill C-31 there were no further funds allotted for post-secondary school education. In fact, Bill C-31 was passed in 1985. During the fiscal year 1985-86, out of a total of $71 million that was allocated for post-secondary school education for native people, $1 million was allocated as a result of Bill C-31. In the fiscal year 1986-87, out of a total of $96 million allocated in that post-secondary budget, some $9 million was allocated as a result of Bill C-31. In the fiscal year 1987-88, out of a total of $107 million, $11 million was allocated as a result of Bill C-31. In the immediate past fiscal year, 1988-89, out of $130 million allocated, some $26 million was allocated as a result of those reinstated under Bill C-31.

I wonder if the Hon. Member could tell me if I misunderstood his remarks, or if in fact he would agree with the information I have supplied the House. If he does, I wonder if perhaps he might re-examine some of the other facts and figures he has presented before the House today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Prince Albert—Churchill River (Mr. Funk).

Mr. Funk: I thank the Hon. Member for the opportunity to clarify my intention in the remarks that I made. I do not believe that I said there was no money for post-secondary education under the Bill C-31 program. I know there was money in that program, and I did not mean to suggest otherwise. What I did mean to suggest was that there is a general pattern of implementation of the infamous "Buffalo Jump" document. What I said is prepared to stick with C-31 as it is, no amendments before the next election, possible commitment or minor adjustments later. I believe that is the policy of the Government, that there has not been new money under C-31.

While we are talking about C-31, in many ways it crystallizes some of these issues. In my own constituency there are 5,000 people in the C-31 category that are living in no-man's land. The Government has granted them status but there has been no parallel provision for them to be absorbed into the bands which they want to belong to. The bands are reluctant to be pushed into this because there is no money for them to provide the services which those people then come to expect. That is one of the sinister aspects of these guidelines. If there is a budgetary limit, if in fact the first 15,000 get funding and the next 2,000 have to wait until next year, the pressure is on those bands to determine who will get that money and who will not. The presence in my constituency of 5,000 C-31 people just increases those pressures and makes it that much worse.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Minister of State for Indian Affairs on a question or comment.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member has made reference in his address to something called the infamous "Buffalo Jump" document. I assume he is talking about a discussion document that was put out by the ministry in May of last year on the issue of revised post-secondary guidelines. I would like to suggest to the Hon. Member that if he reads the guidelines that were actually implemented, on April 1 of this year, he would notice that they are very different from the guidelines that were put out for discussion in May of last year. The reason for that difference was a response to those initial proposals through the consultative process. Perhaps the Hon. Member would be gracious enough to concede that in fact the Government did enter into a very extensive consultative process on the basis of which it has quite considerably amended the new guidelines on post-secondary education.

• (1400)

I would also like to comment on the Hon. Member's suggestion that because his Party did not agree with the guidelines it is not entitled to be included among those who were consulted. I think many people in the House will find that a very novel definition of consultation. The Hon. Member seems to say that somehow if someone does not agree with someone after a discussion then one cannot say legitimately that there has been consultation.

If the Hon. Member feels that all the people who consulted with him must be agreed with, I find that very promising. If there should ever be the opportunity, and if in some strange event he should ever be part of the Government, I will look forward to consulting with him on many issues.

Mr. Funk: Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Minister that if I am ever part of a Government it will not be because I have crossed the floor.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Funk: For the information of the Minister, although I did not deal with the specific reference to guidelines in the document, I was referring to a scenario which I think is quite clear.

The scenario is that in fact the Government would be seeking what might be considered to be an inflated level of funding in the election year and that the consultation process would proceed against that backdrop. I contend that that was an unrealistic impression the Government was trying to leave, and not a totally accurate one. We have seen the results of that as the figure of $130 million is repeatedly pointed to as an indication of how fast this has increased in the past.

With reference to the consultation process, I agree with the Minister that it is useful to listen to dissenting views. However, to be considered part of a process that the Government takes some pride in—in fact to call it consultation—when someone writes the Minister a letter, is not accurate.

I would assume that consultation would include some back and forth, that the Government would provide us with some information and that we would get back to the Government with some information and so on. That was not the case. I was surprised that on the basis of one letter we should be listed as having been involved in the consultative process, along with the Assembly of First Nations, the Prince Albert District Chiefs, the Inuit Tapirisat and all the other people. If this is how we had been consulted I was left to wonder how they had been consulted. Indeed, the Indian leadership and the students say that they have not been consulted.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, does my hon. colleague agree that this new attack, what some perceive to be a new attack, is part of a Tory strategy which has been ongoing for several years and that we are seeing the usual shell games trying to cover up real budget cuts?

Does he think that this indeed relates to the over-all philosophy of the Conservative Government which is that it has abandoned the very concept of universal access for natives?

I would like to give one illustration from my riding of Vancouver East which many native people say is the largest reserve in Canada. The Native Education Centre in my riding serves students from all over British Columbia. It does an outstanding job in both academic upgrading and in practical courses, as well as in programs for native training. There is a course for native child care workers, administrators for bands, as well as people training in high technology of different kinds. The institution has had a very good success rate with highly motivated students who attend regularly.

In 1987 the budget of the institution from DIA was $125,000. In 1987-88 that budget was cut by 60 per cent. The next year there were no funds at all for a very major educational institution which has made a terrific contribution to the education of native people in British Columbia. As a result of a very strong process in which a number of us were involved, the Government found $82,000 in 1989.

I would like to point out where the money for this came from. The Government took the money out of moneys that were designated for students. That is what I mean when I say a shell game. I wish I had time to give the rationale that the Minister gave, which was incredibly ignorant of the real situation people are facing.

I think the Hon. Member heard my question earlier so I will sit down.

Mr. Funk: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for her question. It is quite correct for her to assume from what I said that in fact I see what is happening here as part of a larger Tory agenda. We hear all kinds of fine language in the House about the Government's concern, commitment and so on, in this case to the future educational needs of Indian people and the Indian community. In fact, the reality on Indian reserves is dramatically different. When we look at the budgetary process that is going on here now, short months ago the Government promised all types of money to projects such as Hibernia and Fort McMurray. There was money to burn. Just a few short months later there is no money at all. We are being told to brace ourselves for next Thursday when the Budget comes down. This is why I think Canadians are responding to the issues raised in this debate. They are wondering: "Are we next?"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park.

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, you are probably wondering what a Member of Parliament from a Toronto riding such as Parkdale—High Park knows about this debate on post-secondary funding for natives. First, let me establish my credibility about why I want to participate in the debate.

I had the good fortune of being born and raised in the Province of Saskatchewan where my parents started on a homestead. They farmed there for 25 years. As a young boy going to school I grew up with Indian children and their families. We did similar things to what the First Peoples did. In order to supplement our farm incomes we had to trap. As a young lad we trapped weasels to get $4 or $5 a pelt. That was good money in those days. We would snare jack-rabbits, skin them and sell the pelts.

Mr. McDermid: Don't tell the NDP that.

Mr. Flis: The Hon. Member from Brampton does not even want to listen. He is an urban boy who cannot relate to this type of pioneer life. There are probably not too many Members in the House who can, which is why I am sharing this with all Members of this House. I am sharing it to establish my credibility.

What did we do for dessert? We picked Saskatoon berries and so on with the Indians.

We took that life-style away from our first Canadians. What did we replace it with? Since we took it away from these people I think the best replacement, the best investment, is a post-secondary education.

Not all the children in my family could go on with their educations. My oldest brother had to work on the farm. He could not go on to post-secondary education. I am pleased that my parents and my country allowed me the opportunity to complete my post-secondary education at the masters and other levels. That education allowed me to go in to teaching with the Toronto Board of Education where I spent over 30 years. Most of those 30 years were spent working with exceptional students, the physically handicapped, the emotionally disturbed, the mentally handicapped, and with students who had learning disabilities, a new group that has been discovered in this category of exceptional students.

The Toronto Board of Education is a leader in North America, and probably in the world, as far as opening up new opportunities for students with all these different handicaps is concerned. People with mental handicaps never went on to post-secondary education.

Today I am very pleased that community colleges are accepting them. Students with learning disabilities are now going to universities. Many of them are very bright but have some learning disabilities, and experts to this day do not know the cause of them.

I would like to compliment universities such as York University, the University of Toronto and others that have set up special departments to accept these students into post-secondary education. Ten years ago these students would never have found themselves in a university setting. Today they have the same opportunity as many other students. At a time when universities are opening their doors to students of all abilities, of all handicaps, the Government is closing doors to the children who have the first right to attend post-secondary education.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Flis: I could not agree more with the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) when he said a native child today has a better chance of ending up in jail than receiving a university education. This is a sad commentary for the Government and for this country.

I wanted to participate in this debate because of the students who went on the hunger strike. Is it not sad that it took a hunger strike to bring this debate to this House today? I was involved in a hunger strike five years ago. Three people in Etobicoke—Lakeshore went on a hunger strike. They had come to Canada as refugees. Their spouse and the children were caught in Poland; Poland would not allow them to join their families here. We went on a hunger strike. I saw the physical and emotional damage that was done to these hunger strikers.

I felt for the Indian students while they were striking. I would not recommend to these students to continue such tactics because if your health goes, and heaven forbid even if your life goes, you will be no good to this country. We need your talents. We need your expertise.

I had a hand in ending that other strike. I was the liaison person between the people on strike, our External Affairs Department and the Polish Embassy in Ottawa. I had to take messages back and forth. I was pleased when the strike finally ended.

Today I am pleased to announce, Mr. Speaker, that within a year after the hunger strikers agreed to end their strike all three families were reunited, and we have three additional happy families living here in Canada.

Let us hope that this incident ends the same way, that it ends in happiness and ends with greater opportunities for our First People at the post-secondary level.

Once again we see an example of the lack of commitment of the Government to the people in our country who are most in need of our help, our support and our generosity.

In 1984, a national review was undertaken on the First Nations educational systems. This review included recommendations from aboriginal and non-aboriginal peoples. A lot of time and energy was spent on this review, and it was forwarded to the Department of Indian Affairs in December 1988. It was in good faith that the First Nations did not expect the Government to implement any changes to the education system until there had been bilateral consultations based on the review which would subsequently lead to action that was palatable to all parties involved.

This did not happen. The Government has not responded to the review. In fact, it has once again chosen to renege on its promises. It is becoming painfully obvious that this is not an election year and because this is not an election year, the people in this country who are most in need are paying for it.

On March 20 of this year, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux) decided that it was time to stop playing nice guy. He announced changes to the guidelines for First Nations' post-secondary education. He announced these changes, not in consultation with the people who would be affected by them but in consultation with his departmental officials in Ottawa. There is nothing wrong with consulting with departmental officials. I pay a high tribute to the people working in our Public Service in all Departments, but surely the Minister could have consulted with the users of the program.

These changes come at a time, in the National Chief's word, "when the First Nations are looking to the future and are planning a long-range holistic approach to education, a time when the First Nations are striving for self-government and self-reliance".

What is happening today is a travesty. If the Government is cutting back in the area of post-secondary education, what is going to happen to the other levels of education? We already know that at present there are 85,000 students utilizing educational facilities. At a minimum we would expect over 3,000 classrooms to house all these students. That is not the case. There are presently only 2,000 classrooms.

In 1977 there were 3,500 students eligible for post-secondary educational programs. Today, as we heard from the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), they number around 15,000. The numbers are increasing. The funding is being cut back. With all due respect to the Hon. Minister, the funding over the years has not taken inflation into account. Therefore any comparison is not being done in real dollars. The 10 per cent he talks about does not cover increases in educational costs, inflation increases, et cetera.

In 1987, the Government brought in new guidelines. At the same time, they introduced a cap on the budget. They promised at that time that were they to bring in more changes they would be brought in, in consultation with the First Nations. This is not what they did. They unilaterally imposed new guidelines. They unilaterally implemented changes to a program which they obviously did not understand.

Ever since the election all we have heard about is cut-backs—cut-backs in our unemployment insurance programs, cut-backs in programs that affect those who need them the most. This type of behaviour is not going to win them any votes. In fact, this behaviour has already cost them a few points in the polls. It will be very interesting to see where this Government which makes its decisions based on public opinion polls will end up in those same polls after next Thursday when the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) goes to work on the rest of the people of this country with a hack-saw.

We all know and accept that post-secondary education is an investment in the future. We have heard this from our previous debaters. This Government continues to talk about its commitment to the First Nations of this country. It continues to talk about its support for Indian self-determination, for Indian self-reliance.

I have been an educator for many years. However, it does not take an educator to know that there is an undeniable link between education, especially post-secondary education, and better employment opportunities. It boggles the mind to see what this Government is doing. It is inconceivable to me, and obviously to my colleagues here, that the route to the well-being of the First Nations is being nipped in the bud.

I will not repeat, Mr. Speaker, what the Members for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, Kenora—Rainy River, Oshawa and others have shared with this House about the difference in mortality rates, welfare rates, alcoholism, and suicide rates between the people of the First Nations and the rest of Canadians. I urge the Government to rethink its policy on post-secondary education. I urge the Government to give the First Nations a chance to prove that they are capable and competent; that they contribute to this country as much as you or I do, Mr. Speaker; that they are not a burden on society; and that they are the First Nations.

• (1420)

Mrs. Dobbie: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks of my colleague opposite. Prior to 1984, there were fewer than 3,500 Indian students enrolled in post-secondary education in this country. Can the Hon. Member tell us why his Government failed to deal with the problem during its many years in power?

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, when we were in government no native students went on a hunger strike.

Mr. James: What kind of answer is that?

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I listened with considerable attention to the comments of my hon. friend today. Would he clarify for me and other members of the House whether it is the official position of the Liberal Party that post-secondary education is a treaty right? Yes or no?

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question because the Hon. Member and I worked on many committees together. I am surprised he even asked that question because it is a Canadian right.

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments. I want to bring it to the attention of the Hon. Member and the House that while we are concerned about funding of post-secondary education for native children because it is crucial for the equality of opportunity for native people in Canada, we must also be concerned about young native people who never make it through high school.

I am dealing with a particular case in my riding of which I believe the House should be aware. I hope Hon. Members opposite will bring it to the attention of the Government. It is the case of a young 12-year old status Indian boy who is suffering from foetal alcohol syndrome with an attention deficit disorder. This is causing severe emotional and behavioural problems. This boy was adopted at the age of one by a family living in my riding.

They are having extreme difficulty and are meeting nothing but road blocks with the federal and provincial Governments in trying to get the help this boy needs before he reaches an age where he cannot be helped, which is within the next two or three years.

The parents are at their wits' end. This young boy may never have a chance even to grow up properly, let alone go to university, with the limited funding that is available.

They have been told that the cost of the residential treatment recommended by professional advisers is $50,000 a year. That is more than the total income of the family, which is needed to provide for them and their other two adolescent children.

This morning, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Nault) spoke about the devastating cost in dollars and human potential of not providing what is needed. The funding to provide adequate treatment for this child is not available under health funding. Funding is not available because he is a status Indian. This young life will go down the drain. The cost of providing treatment for him, to give him a chance at the opportunities we are discussing today, is less than the cost of one year in prison, less than the cost of 30 days in a hospital.

The parents have approached the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In September 1988, they were told that there is no help for their son. They approached the Department of National Health and Welfare and were told there is no help for their son. They cannot turn him over to the Children's Aid Society because he is a status Indian and the band would have to be consulted on his care.

I ask Hon. Members to bring this problem to the attention of the Cabinet and to save this one young life and many others like him who will never have the opportunities we want for all our native peoples.

Mr. Flis: I am glad my colleague has raised this point. There are thousands of cases such as this one. Because we do not have early identification, the students are spotted too late to bring them help.

I think any system of education that is funded by the federal Government should provide the same opportunities as any child gets from Kindergarten to Grade 13.

I urge the Member to take this case to whatever board of education is involved. It is under provincial jurisdiction. She should turn to the Director of Special Education and get help as soon as possible.

This student will never make post-secondary education, yet he could be a brilliant and gifted student. However, because of the problems—

Mrs. Dobbie: What does that have to do with the topic?

Mr. Flis: The Parliamentary Secretary asks what this has to do with the topic. The whole topic is that you are cutting off post-secondary funding for our native children, for our Indian children—

Mr. McDermid: She is talking about provincial education.

Mr. Flis: Does she not realize that these students eventually reach the age where they have to be provided with post-secondary education, or are they writing these people off? Because they have this handicap, because this student in particular has a multitude of handicaps, what does the Government want to do, kick him deeper into the gutter? That is its approach and I say shame.

Mrs. Dobbie: Get on the topic.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have been sitting back listening to the debate today and have found it very interesting. I listened to my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Flis), whom I have known for a number of years. I was surprised at his last statement, which forced me to my feet. I think it was very unfair. It was not like him to come out with a statement like that. It was very unfair.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mrs. Catterall) raised an educational problem which he properly identified as a provincial educational problem. I say to the Hon. Member for Ottawa West that there are ways to approach these problems. We are all concerned about them. We all have, in our ridings throughout the country, problems in education with special needs for children from all walks of life.

The Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park made the statement—if he checks the "blues" I think he will see that it is fairly accurate—that the Government is kicking people further into the gutter. That is very unworthy of the Hon. Member. I think, when he reflects on it and realizes what he said, he will apologize to the House because he knows it is not true.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I make no apology. I welcome the Hon. Member's intervention. If I hit a sore spot, I apologize for that, but the case that was described was clearly implicated with medical problems which become federal jurisdiction, requiring residential help and so on. If I am not mistaken, I believe some help should be provided under the Health Act.

It is time we stopped passing the buck, at the provincial level or at the federal level. This is a student who everyone recognizes needs help. Surely we can get the three levels of government together—municipal, provincial and federal. Can we not put our resources together to help this youngster, regardless of cost because the investment now will pay dividends in the future?

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I listened with considerable interest to my friend, Hon. the Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Flis). The point I want him to clarify is related to the question I asked first. It is a very simple question.

• (1430)

Is it the official position of the Liberal Party that post-secondary education is a treaty right, paid for exclusively by the federal Government? That is an important question because that is the underlying problem we are facing with treaties.

If it is the position of the Liberal Party that it is a treaty right, then I would accept the comments the Hon. Member has made. If it is not the position of the Liberal Party, if the Hon. Member wants to waffle and say it is a Canadian right or something like that, speak with a forked tongue in his answer, or if he wants to say that it should be referred to the courts, then everything the Hon. Member is saying about the situation we are now facing is blowing in the wind. It is making politics out of a very serious situation.

The Hon. Member must answer that question and state emphatically one way or the other where his Party stands on this issue. We have to use the budgetary process in an attempt to determine how many students in the next fiscal year will be using the system so that we can budget for it. The budget was not cut. It was submitted to Treasury Board at $130 million. Not one cent was cut from that budget. It was not rolled back. It was based on the very best information available to the Department of Indian Affairs at the time the budget was submitted.

Again, what is the position of the Liberal Party? Does the Liberal Party adopt the official position that post-secondary education is a treaty right? If the Hon. Member cannot answer that question he should say so, but if he does answer it, he must answer it emphatically. If the Liberal Party does not adopt that position, then everything the Hon. Member has said is blowing in the wind.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I already answered that question. The Hon. Member forgets that his Party forms the Government, not ours. I already told the Hon. Member that this is a people's right. It is the right of every Canadian. The question he put is very irrelevant. He is trying to get his Government off the hook of providing additional funding for the many more students who are reaching the post-secondary level. He is trying to get his Government off the hook on which it was elected. He should not be playing constitutional games.

Students went on strike. They did not ask that question. They are asking for an opportunity to go to university or college, to have some education after high school. That is what they are asking for and they have the right to it.

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to contribute to the debate on the topic before us today. As a preface to my comments, I would like to compliment members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for picking this topic and for devoting two opposition days to its discussion.

In his comments this morning, the Minister said that this was a topic plagued by misunderstanding. Hopefully, through our discussions today and the subsequent ones on Monday, we can help to educate the people in the House and in the country a bit better, and this topic will be a bit better understood by everyone.

I am very concerned about the perception that some Hon. Members opposite are trying to establish, either by rhetoric or in some cases by volume, that they are the only ones who are concerned about aboriginal post-secondary education. We on this side of the House are every bit as committed to improving the economic situation of aboriginal peoples as anyone on the opposite side. However, we recognize that we have another responsibility, a responsibility to ensure that the moneys we spend on behalf of all Canadians are spent as effectively as possible.

This morning, the Minister also reflected on a view that is well shared by his colleagues on this side of the House. He said that we are as proud of this program as are the Indians of their graduates. I think that is a very profound statement and it does reflect our feelings.

The funding level of this program has increased significantly under this Government. This has resulted in significant progress on behalf of the Indian and Inuit people. The Government, through the Minister, has reinforced its commitment to the program and to supporting reasonable levels of funding based on consultation and negotiations with representatives of the native community.

It is not enough to say simply that because a program is good it should have open-ended funding. This program is a good program. It should be continued. The program is a fair and a generous one because the Government believes in the importance of the post-secondary needs of Indian students, and we are prepared to support them.

I would like to take a moment to put the current funding levels for native post-secondary student assistance into perspective. In terms of financial support to Indian students, this program is one of the most generous in the entire world. The student assistance program in Canada provides a significantly greater level of support than similar programs in other countries.

Let us compare it to the United States. Last year, the federal Government post-secondary grants to American Indians totalled $32.9 million. That supported 15,000 students. This represented 25 per cent of the funding that is provided in Canada to support for an equal number of students.

Our new policy is generous. It is fair and it can be administered by Indian authorities. It can be administered by Indian authorities in ways which best meet the needs of their students.

The Government assists Indian and Inuit students this generously because it believes in making an investment in Canada's future. Educated people prosper. Economic development opportunities open up and welfare rolls decrease.

Assistance for post-secondary education is one of the most successful programs the federal Government has ever undertaken. Since the introduction of the previous policy, the E-12 guidelines, the numbers of post-secondary students has increased from around 3,500 in 1977-78 to some 15,000 in 1988-89. In the same period, the budget for the program has grown from $9 million to close to $130 million.

The policy has been successful. Every member of the House appears to recognize its value. Nevertheless, we recognize that even the most successful policies must be updated and revised to meet changing needs and emerging trends. In the case of post-secondary education, there was a clear requirement to produce more graduates to ensure that there would be more Indian students who entered colleges and universities to complete their studies and then help make self-government and economic independence a reality for all Indian peoples. The objective of this policy is to help Indians gain access to a post-secondary education so they can pursue individual careers and contribute to the achievement of Indian self-government and economic self-reliance.

I would like now to take a couple of minutes to explain some of the benefits available to eligible students. To begin with, complete tuition assistance is provided to eligible full-time and part-time students. This category of benefits includes student fees for registration, tuition, and the cost of books and supplies required for a particular course of study. A simple example is that if a student in nursing requires a stethoscope, it is an eligible expense and it would be covered.

Full-time students who are required to live away from their permanent places of residence may receive a wide range of benefits. For example, they may qualify for a travel grant back to their homes once every semester for themselves and for any dependant who lives with them. These students will also be eligible to receive allowances to help cover their living expenses including food, rent, heat and electricity. In areas where rental costs are higher than normal, Indian students may receive a special rent supplement.

Let me cite some examples of the level of assistance. Beginning the next academic year, a single student may receive a maximum monthly living allowance of $675. A married student with an employed spouse and three dependants may receive a maximum of $1,205 per month. A single parent with three dependants will receive a maximum of $1,355 per month, plus a rental supplement where applicable.

Students will be eligible to receive funding at three levels. To complete community college diplomas or certificates, undergraduate degrees, and Masters' or professional degrees. Students allowances will be provided for the official length of the student's program, three years for a three-year program, four years for a four-year program, and so on. When required, an additional year may be provided for a student to complete a degree or diploma program at each of the three levels.

Let me put those rates into perspective. A single mother with two children in her first year of a Master's of Psychology program at the University of Regina will receive a grant of $1,205 per month to support herself and her family. Her tuition, books and supplies are paid for. She is also eligible to obtain a scholarship of up to $1,500 for the year. Expenses for travel between Regina and her normal place of residence, if it is outside Regina, will be provided once each term for her and her dependants.

A single student from a reserve in Ontario in his second year of a Bachelor of Arts Degree at the University of Ottawa would receive funding to pay his tuition, his books and supplies, and his travel from the reserve to Ottawa once each semester. In addition he is eligible to receive a grant of $675 per month from the Post-secondary Student Assistance Program to defray living expenses. If this student in his first year maintained a grade average of B-plus, he would also be eligible to receive a scholarship of $1,000 per year.

A married student with three children whose wife and children are dependent upon him for support, in his first year of studies at a Montreal CEGEP where he is hoping to complete the required courses in Business Administration, would receive a grant of $1,355 per month from the Post-secondary Student Assistance Program, above and beyond the funding he receives for tuition, books and supplies. He would also receive an allowance to enable him and his family to travel to and from his normal place of residence once every semester. If he maintains a grade average of B or better during the year, he may also be eligible to receive a scholarship of $1,000 for his next year of study.

These students may not be millionaires, but it is a significant level of support. Grants for single students living away from home are equivalent to a full-time job paying $4.96 per hour. Grants paid to single-parent students with three dependants would be equivalent to a full-time job paying $12.14 per hour.

Successful students will experience no difficulty in obtaining support to the conclusion of a professional degree like a law degree, or a graduate program such as a Master's degree or a Ph.D.

Under the terms of the new program, administering organizations such as bands, tribal councils, education authorities, or other organizations, will have an even greater opportunity to directly participate in the post-secondary education process. The new policy is sufficiently flexible to allow administering organizations to establish their own operating procedures, provided these are consistent with the policy and reflect the maximum rates and limits of assistance.

The Post-secondary Student Assistance Program is designed to encourage improvements in the level of academic achievement, resulting in a generation of Indians and Inuit who are better equipped to face the future.

I would like to assure you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. colleagues, that the only "cap" Indian students will see in this program is a mortar-board.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James on a question or comment.

Mr. Harvard: I appreciate the comments made by my hon. friend. He certainly brought forward to the House an impressive list of figures and benefits that are available to Indian students. I am sure he brought those forward sincerely and respectfully. However, I do think that he misses the point of the entire debate. The major point of today's debate has to do with capping the educational opportunities of native students. We are not saying that it is not a budgetary matter or not a money matter. We have conceded or gone along with the point of view of the Government that there has been an increase in funding. We believe our point, which is sustainable and unassailable, is that there is a capping element which will ultimately limit the educational opportunities of native students. We do not think that that is a good policy, particularly for native students. However, it is not a good policy for the native community, and ultimately it is not a good policy for the country.

It has been demonstrated that the native population is under-represented in almost all major areas of the economy. I believe that all Members would like to see more native accountants, lawyers, engineers, and architects. We would like to see natives better represented in the professions, and throughout the economy. We find the unemployment figures that natives face every day loathsome, horrendous, and appalling. They face despair and desperation in their home communities on the reserves. One way to break out of that and to give them hope and the opportunity to produce and give their all to the country is through education. On this side of the House we feel that we cannot afford to miss this opportunity. We cannot afford not to give native children this opportunity.

Does the Hon. Member not understand how this policy will backfire? Ultimately it will not only harm the native students, but it will harm the country. We want to get natives off the welfare rolls and make them productive. We believe that there is a great risk that the Government's policy will backfire.

Mr. Fee: I appreciate the comments of my hon. colleague opposite. I would like to assure him that the comments and the figures I shared with him and with the House were presented sincerely and respectfully. I would also like to assure him that my colleagues and I share his objective of seeing the natives take their proper place in our society and that they contribute far more economically to the country than they have. We are seeing an increased number of natives join us in the House, and I think that is good and healthy.

The numbers of native students availing themselves of the opportunity to participate in post-secondary education speak for themselves. We are not discouraging that by any means at all. The Hon. Member stated that there should not be a cap. Nobody on this side has said there is a cap.

Ms. Blondin: Then impose a moratorium.

Mr. Fee: We are trying to establish a reasonable budget so we know where we are going. The Minister has offered to meet and to negotiate. He has said that if we can prove there is a need, he will fight. From the comments that have been shared by myself and other Members, the Minister will have support in that fight for extra money, if we have the proof that the students are there who actually need it.

The Minister involved is one of the first cabinet Ministers I met after I received my nomination last year. My riding of Red Deer in central Alberta has very few Francophones. There are a large number of students enrolled in French immersion. That is the only way to learn French, because there are not enough people who speak French on the street. Red Deer is not exactly a hotbed of labour activity. Yet in his capacity as Minister of Labour, a French-Canadian cabinet Minister came to Red Deer to present a cheque and a grant to the Canadian Labour Congress and to meet the press. A man who is willing to do that will not be afraid to negotiate with people and meet them anywhere. I am convinced that this Minister's door is open, that he is honest and sincere and willing to meet people and discuss issues with them. There have been numerous discussions with native groups throughout the past year. He has already changed the original policy based on those negotiations.

Personally, I am convinced if the need is proved he will change it again. I do not think that it is a good policy for government to spend money open-ended on any program regardless of how good it is. We cannot write a blank cheque. We have to know where the money is going.

• (1450)

Mrs. Blondin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. It is anticipated that there will be 30,000 new registrations next year of native students. The Hon. Member has indicated there is no cap.

Will the Member reassure this House, according to the conversations and reassurances he has had with his Minister, that the policy cap will not kill the possibility for post-secondary funding support as the Member has described so eloquently for those 30,000 registrants?

Mr. Fee: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question and the numbers. I am not sure whether or not they have been shared with my colleague, the Minister responsible. The Member says 30,000 new registrations. Is that over and above the 15,000?

Mrs. Blondin: New.

Mr. Fee: One of the things the Minister has emphasized over and over are his attempts to meet with native groups to establish a statistical base on which we can put this program. I have not seen that number. I do not know from where the Member is coming, so it is very difficult for me to react to a hypothetical situation.

Mrs. Blondin: I feel the same about your numbers.

Mr. Fee: If the question does come up and if there is statistical backing, I am certain the Minister will address it properly. I have full confidence in him.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment my colleague, the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Fee), on a very excellent presentation and ask him whether he would elaborate on a point raised by one of his questioners, I believe it was the Member from Winnipeg—Strathcona, with respect to the desire to see more native students in the professions.

It seems to me that one of the very important elements of this program is a desire to provide even stronger financial incentives for students to engage in the professions in those areas of expertise which will contribute very strongly to native independence. Would the Member comment on that?

Also, the Member gave some very interesting figures. They are certainly available. The policy is not a secret. It is well available, and I wish it had been read by Hon. Members before engaging in debate on the issue over the past few weeks.

Perhaps the Member would advise the House from where the figures on levels of support came. It is extremely important for Members of this House to understand that these figures did not come out of thin air. They are very careful analyses of the kinds of expenses the students might incur. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Red Deer would elaborate on those to some extent.

Mr. Fee: Mr. Speaker, it is almost more fun answering questions from the other side of the House because they put you on the spot much more than questions which come from one's own side.

Every one of us here has heard discussions today that if we do not expand this program and leave it open-ended, we are encouraging a continuation of the unfortunate situation that exists in all too many Indian reservations today, a situation of welfare payments and substandard living standards. The two are related. We can help, but an open-ended chequebook or an unlimited amount of money is not the answer. We have to make effective use of the moneys that are there. We have to encourage students to get into programs which will benefit them and their people. The intent of this program is not to say you have to go here or you have to go there. It is to encourage people to go to places where they can best benefit and their people can best benefit from the results of their training.

The statistics we have, as the Minister pointed out, are all available in the informational sheets from the Department. They have resulted from a very careful analysis that has been done. I have checked them. I think they are quite reasonable from what I have seen, and I would encourage any of my friends opposite who have not read them to avail themselves of the opportunity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now over. We will resume debate with the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I am not rising to participate in the debate. I am rising in light of the hour. We have a speaker on this side ready to proceed, the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. Volpe). He will have only five minutes which will cut his speech into one and three-quarters.

In the circumstances, might we consider calling it three o'clock today so that he can commence his speech Monday morning and avoid an interruption over the weekend? I hope that will meet with agreement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it three o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence will have the floor on Monday morning. We will now call it three o'clock.

Therefore this House stands adjourned until Monday morning at eleven o'clock.

The House adjourned at 2.55 p.m.

PETITIONS

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK—PRIORITY TO SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36. The petitioners state that, in many respects, small businesses in Canada still pay an average tax rate that is higher than Canada's larger businesses. Both the chartered banks and the Federal Business Development Bank give larger firms preferential treatment in financing. The petitioners raise a number of related concerns. The petitioners are asking Parliament to put the Federal Business Development Bank back into the business of making small entrepreneurs its first priority, reducing time-consuming Government red tape for small businesses, and targeting more federal contracts to the small business sector.

LABELLING OF PRODUCTS TREATED WITH PESTICIDES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition which is also in the appropriate form. The petitioners point out that the human health effects of consuming products treated with pesticides are poorly understood and potentially very harmful.

The petitioners are calling upon Parliament to require all foods treated with pesticides be so labelled, that such labelling include a comprehensive list of all the pesticides used, and that the Government implement a program to encourage and assist farmers to produce a pesticide-free fruit and vegetable sector.

DESIGNATION OF ROUGE RIVER VALLEY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I am very pleased to present a petition to the House of Commons concerning the Rouge River Valley. Some Members have heard of the Rouge River Valley. It is made up of 5,000 precious acres in Scarborough on the boundary of Metro Toronto. It is in the national interest to preserve this wilderness area which contains endangered wildlife species.

The concern of the petitioners, Mr. Speaker, is that the Province of Ontario, which owns this land, is threatening to put a freeway or a garbage dump in the Rouge Valley. On Saturday there was a rally concerning this and I am very pleased to say that the native groups in Ontario have come on board and support the preservation of the Rouge Valley because of the archaeological aspects.

The petitioners join the Mayor of Scarborough, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard), the Save the Rouge Valley System group and the Coalition of Scarborough Community Associations in asking Parliament to work with the Government of Ontario to establish the Rouge River Valley as Canadian heritage land or a provincial park.

OPPOSITION TO TAXATION OF MUSIC LESSONS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present a petition. Many weeks ago I met with Mrs. Louise Clark and several other music teachers who are very concerned that a sales tax may be imposed on music lessons. Their position, of course, is that music is education, and not a service.

Therefore, I present this petition which asks the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to withdraw that proposal from the forthcoming Budget if, indeed, it is in the Budget.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81--POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION FUNDING--NATIVE PEOPLES

The House resumed from Friday, April 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Nault:

> That this House recognize that the Government's arbitrary and misanthropic policy of unilaterally capping future funding for post-secondary education for Canada's native peoples severely undermines the right and efforts of these peoples to enhance their capacity to make meaningful and lasting improvements to their economic and social conditions and to establish their self-reliance, thereby condemning them to unacceptable living conditions and driving them to desparate measures; and
> That this House urge the Government to terminate its plans to cap this funding and to take steps to establish effective bilateral consultations on this and other matters vital to the improvement of the lives of and the ending of discrimination toward these Native peoples.

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the issue of post-secondary education funding. First, let me give a bit of background. Changes to the E-12 post-secondary education policy for native students went into effect April 1, 1989. Native people, educators and counsellors across the country have protested against these changes. They feel there is no reason to change a system that has been working sufficiently for First Nations. Protests against these changes have been held across the country since March. There have been letter campaigns, awareness campaigns, a demonstration on Parliament Hill and most recently a national hunger strike. To me, this action is unnecessary. This situation could have been avoided. If the situation is abnormal and out of hand, why did the issue get to a point of people fasting and going on hunger strikes?

The students have asked for three things to make the point very clear that post-secondary education be recognized as a treaty right where there are treaties and an aboriginal right for all native peoples; that a bilateral consultation be established and that a moratorium of one year be imposed on the implementation of the changes to the policy guidelines.

The Department of Indian and Northern Affairs is proposing policy changes concerning Indian post-secondary education which were to have been implemented April 1, 1989. The post-secondary education budget has been capped without proper consultation with Indian leaders and educators. We recognize that there were 500 consultations. We also recognize that information has not been made available for public consumption.

A priority system for student assistance has been unilaterally developed and a formula funding system for schools has been arbitrarily imposed. This new policy will seriously affect the number of Indian people entering such institutions. This is a key concern. It will also negatively affect students presently enrolled. Students who have been accepted at recognized post-secondary institutions are being denied the opportunity to pursue post-secondary studies because of budgetary restrictions. Travel allowances will not adhere to the student's choice of university or college. This is regressive and restrictive. This is not in keeping with providing a challenge to native peoples to go to where their potential will take them for the very best education they should get. An adherence to a list of approved institutions and disciplines will be required for funding. Cut-backs are designed specifically to reduce the number of Indians entering post-secondary institutions.

There has been much discussion about whether there are cut-backs and how to determine the difference between a cut-back and a capping. With there having been no increase over the last two to three years, that to my mind constitutes a cut-back and is a restriction in the minds of the beneficiaries of the program.

The policy recommendations signify further limits to the possibility of involving more Indian control over education. In the area of consultation there is also a dispute between native people and the Ministry over the quality of consultation that took place prior to the implementation of these changes. Native groups who believe this policy should be a treaty right did not want to jeopardize their position by participating in a consultation with the Ministry, so DIAND received very little feed-back and input to the policy from those people affected. The first five drafts of the policy were done without any consultation with native people. As well, the Minister is not able to document the consultation received or even provide statistics on the alleged problems with the old guidelines which should have justified the need for these changes.

This is not a new problem. This is not a problem that the Parties and the leaders have jumped on. It is an old problem. It is something of which the leaders, the Parties and the Members Of Parliament were aware. In a letter to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), Keith Penner, the former critic for aboriginal affairs, said that without consultation with Indian leaders and educators the post-secondary education budget has been capped, that a priority system for student assistance has been unilaterally developed and a formula funding system for schools has been arbitrarily imposed. These measures have resulted in a limitation of access to a program that was previously accessible to all Indian students who qualified for assistance under its provisions. Now Indian students who are eligible for assistance under the program and who have been accepted at recognized post-secondary institutions are being denied the opportunity to pursue post-secondary studies because of budgetary restrictions.

Mr. Speaker: I regret having to to interrupt the Hon. Member, but at least for the moment we have a matter that is going to require me to consult with officials and staff. I would ask the Hon. Member to stay in her seat and I will get back to her for debate as quickly as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Attention, please! I wish to report that we have a problem.

[English]

As Hon. Members know, we have a fire alarm. I do not think there is anything to be alarmed about. However, it is appropriate that Hon. Members vacate the Chamber. We will resume at the call of the Chair.

I regret having to interrupt the Hon. Member, but one can understand why.

Thank you very much for your cooperation.

The sitting is suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 11.41 a.m.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I want to advise Hon. Members that the fire alarm to which we have just responded seems to be a false alarm. There is no indication anywhere in the building of a fire.

I want to thank everyone for co-operating so expeditiously, and thank all of the internal security staff for once again doing their duty in such an expeditious manner.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your comments. Since the debate has been interrupted for approximately 22 minutes, and since this is an allotted day and we do not want to lose the debating time, on behalf of the Government I suggest that we would be amenable to a proposition that would extend the debate beyond one o'clock in a manner similar to the provisions of Standing Order 33 for Statements by Ministers, in order to pick up the lost time.

Mr. Gauthier: We agree to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, it is a great idea.

Mr. Speaker: I thank Hon. Members. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Ms. Blondin).

Ms. Blondin: Mr. Speaker, I was about to refer to a quotation on the issue of post-secondary education. Its importance can be expressed by the native population across Canada far more eloquently than by myself, so I will rely on a lot of material I have accumulated from those particular groups during my research.

The first is a quotation from the priorities outlined by the Saskatchewan Indian Education Council of the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians, which was addressed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux). This group has an outline within the presentation entitled "Misplaced Priorities". They state:

> Another thing wrong with the policy and attitude of government is that its priorities are misplaced. The Government says these are tough times, and everyone has to tighten their belt. We agree—because if Canada wanted to spend wisely and prudently, the First Nations would be a lot better off than they are now.
> Look at the way priorities are set now:

When it comes to paying the costs of holding our youth in jail there seems to be no shortage of money.

When it comes to paying for a lifetime of welfare and poverty, the money is there.

The first priority should be money for our youth who want to move ahead to get an education.

Surely a government should understand investment, even if it doesn't seem to understand human suffering and wasted lives. It should know that a bit of money invested today in education will save a lot on social assistance funds in the future.

This brings to mind the remarks of another senior elder of the population. He said: "If it costs $30,000 for a majority of the native students who are educated and get post-secondary education, that is paid back through the tax system in spades". It is not as if they are ripping off the taxpayers.

The Saskatchewan Indian Education Council went on to say:

What does it cost for education for a young man or a young woman to be self-supporting? $30,000? What does it cost for that same young man or woman to be supported for the rest of his years on welfare, or to be counted as a casualty of one of the unemployed—$50,000—a half-a-million dollars?

These are questions people ask.

And that doesn't count for the cost of foster care and social disorganization—not to mention the cost of losing the contribution to society of a productive, capable human being. It is incredible that Canada would be willing to support a young person on welfare, but prohibit the same money being used to support that your person's education.

If there ever was a shortsighted policy that would be paid over and over for generations ahead, it is one the Department has invented for post-secondary education.

We would think, too, that a Canadian Government and the people of Canada would want to see that its money was well-spent. It hasn't been well spent under the past policy, and it won't be well-spent under the new policy.

The policies force us to waste money. The most effective solutions cannot be applied because they are 'against policy'. Students are forced to take inappropriate decisions in order to conform with an inflexible policy.

What seems to be the most important priority for the Department is maintaining control, maintaining poverty, maintaining Indians in their place. There is no better evidence to this harsh statement than the policy which the Department is trying to force on the First Nations.

Let's sit down together and decide where the priorities lie, and how we can most efficiently and effectively conserve valuable resources.

These statements can easily be misconstrued or misinterpreted. But if you take the time to listen, what people want is to play a meaningful role in a bilateral process that is being discussed. They want to have input into a policy that is workable for them. They are the ones who have to deal with this particular policy. They are the ones who are going to the post-secondary institutions under this policy. They want their leaders and their students to participate in a meaningful dialogue in order to come up with a meaningful policy that they can live with and work with.

I want to remind the House of the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at the First Ministers Conference in April, 1985. He said:

As a Canadian and as the Prime Minister, I fully recognize and agree with the emphasis that the aboriginal peoples place on having their special rights inserted into the highest law of the land, protected from arbitrary legislative action. Constitutional protection for the principle of self-government is an overriding objective because it is the constitutional manifestation of a relationship, an unbreakable social contact between aboriginal peoples and their governments.

In seeking constitutional change, I recognize that this alone cannot resolve our economic problems. Constitutional change is not enough to reduce disparities and correct injustices. Rather, improvements to the economic and social circumstances of aboriginal peoples must be pursued at the same time as changes to our Constitution are sought to define the rights of aboriginal peoples. Action is required on both fronts and the two set of endeavours, while separate, are mutually supportive.

Why do we have the statement in 1985, and why do we have a Minister whose actions are contrary to the statement of support for the aboriginal peoples in adherence to the contract between the aboriginal peoples and the Government?

I want to bring forward another article that came out of a book from a group of 38 elders who were asked to repeat their life history. Many of these elders received their education on the land. Many went to residential schools and many did not have the benefit of a full education, going only to Grade 8. For example, Willy Minoza who was born in 1924. "In 1936, my father died and my mother was not able to look after me. So I went to the mission." Willy feels that the mission failed to give him the educational background that would have enabled him to succeed in the white man's world. He says, "Our lives run parallel with the white man's, parallel and never touching. It is unlikely that we will ever be able to do and have what white people have, and for me there is no use in trying to change things. I may as well live out my days in my own way rather than to struggle to no purpose." He goes on to say, "When they tell us the land is ours, I don't believe what they say. If it was ours, then we would have control, and we don't. If we had self-determination, then we would have a chance."

As a young aboriginal person I have dealt with many of the students across Canada. I have taught elementary school, high school, junior high school, in the colleges and the university. I feel that we deal with the same kind of hopelessness. We have to compel the young native people to overcome the kind of attitude that is being perpetuated by a lack of trust between the Government and the native people. I think the one key to self-determination and self-sufficiency is through education.

To put a cap on the education program is a move that is regressive, that holds back native people. You may sit back and say that we have a cadillac approach to education. I do not believe that. Many of the native students come from large families where wealth is shared with everyone. I know that for a fact. I come from a family of 18. I feel that the native population rallies around this issue and they support one another. We cannot afford to have a priority or a waiting list. We need every native individual that is qualified and able to get a post-secondary education enabled to do that. We do not need impediments. We do not need a Government that will not work with the people. We need a Government on side that recognizes its mandate to work with the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

We should not lay blame and control the dialogue and have the native people pitted against the non-native population on this issue.

An example of native people getting support from students and from other groups across Canada is a statement from Milasapina College in B.C. It says, "Milasapina College strongly supports the Nanaimo Indians band's protest of proposed First Nations post-secondary funding capping by Indian and Northern Affairs for the following reasons: One, post-secondary education is one of the most important tools in providing the profile of native people in society. Native bands have indicated for many years that post-secondary education is their number one priority. Three, caping the funds needed for post-secondary education is certainly going to limit who gets educated, and will possibly direct people into select programs. Four, all Canadian peoples have a right to an education, and because of their unique constitutional status, the aboriginal people have a very special right to that education. Five, at Milasapina College, the number of native students have increased from 11 students in 1974 to 150 in 1989 on all four campuses."

It is interesting to note that over the years, there has been waste. There have been periods of times in which the program funding has not been maximized or used efficiently, but it is now at this critical time that people of my generation and the younger people that I see coming up are starting to reap the benefits of that program. They are starting to re-invest into society in a positive way. This particular cap is an impediment to that positive movement.

I want to read a letter from John D. Whyte, the dean of the Faculty of Law of Queen's University. It is entitled:"Statement of support in the face of government cut-backs in native Canadian post-secondary student assistance program". He states:

> Any adjustments to the government program of funding higher education for native students which limits access to university training constitutes a devastating blow to the program of producing social justice for native people.

According to the Human Rights Commissioner's Report, this is the essence of where the Government has to go with aboriginal peoples. Your efforts have to be directed at helping, not impeding. That is what the people are asking for. We are not asking for something that we are not entitled to.

I would also like to read another letter that comes from Joanne Martin, National Affairs for the Canadian Union of Educational Workers. She sends greetings of solidarity to the Assembly of First Nations. She states:

> "We support your demand that the federal Government rescind the changes made to the Post-Secondary Education Assistance Program and your call for a moratorium on changes to the old policy. We call on the Government to commence negotiations with the Assembly of First Nations immediately. In solidarity and friendship, Joanne Martin."

I have files full of these letters from people across Canada who believe that this change is going to affect the way in which native people can participate equitably in society. I have met with the students on the fast. I have personally, for health reasons, asked those students to come off the fast. I have also done that because I believe this is not a problem that resulted from the fast. This issue was there before, something that the leadership recognized. When I first got here in December, my first delegation was from Saskatchewan. They immediately provided me with documents on this issue expressing their concern. I then had my staff meet with a group of university students. I have met with people all across Canada from B.C. to Newfoundland on this particular issue. They all expressed their particular concern.

In closing, I would like to say on the issue of treaty rights that many people will say it is not a treaty right. The Minister has agreed to provide a forum for discussion, once the situation normalizes itself. Well, I am not sure that this opportunity will come this week. We will soon be consumed with budgetary discussion. The importance of this item will be diminished by all of the activities evolving around Budget, but I can tell you that it will not diminish in the hearts of the people it affects. It will not diminish in importance with the leaders. It is something that the leaders believe in and will struggle to obtain equality in. I want to thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure Hon. Members will notice that the Chair did not interrupt the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Ms. Blondin) although she went beyond her time because I was judging the mood of the House and I felt that it was the wish of Hon. Members to allow the Hon. Member to continue. I thank the Hon. Member.

Questions or comments?

Mrs. Dobbie: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member opposite and I agree with many of the things she said about the need for equitable, good and consistent post-secondary education for Indian students. However, I would like the Hon. Member to answer a question. Is it her Party's position that education is a treaty right?

Ms. Blondin: Madam Speaker, it is my Party's position and my position that we must look for a forum in which to review the status of treaty rights where treaties exist. We do believe that it is an aboriginal right and a human right for all Canadians to have a proper education. Because of the unique constitutional status of aboriginal peoples, they have a unique right.

Mrs. Dobbie: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member did not answer my question, but I would take her answer to mean that her Party does not believe that it is a treaty right.

My second question deals with some comments the Hon. Member made in her remarks. She suggested that there have been cut-backs to the program and I would like to know how she can substantiate that when there has indeed been increases of 10 per cent in the program in each of the last two years.

Ms. Blondin: Madam Speaker, there are a number of issues that come to mind when talking about the cut-backs that I deem to have occurred. There has been a budget of $130 million for the last two years with a 10 per cent increase which makes for approximately 3 per cent over the last three years. That is hardly equitable according to a cost of living adjustment.

Ms. Campbell: Thirty-four per cent since 1984.

Ms. Blondin: In my discussions with the Minister, I found that there was an underestimation of the number of people who were to be reinstated. The department estimated that there would be 30,000 people, and apparently the figures have now skyrocketed to between 50,000 and 80,000. Those are the figures I have heard in the last 10 days.

I do not have the responsibility for the data base. The Government has the budget and the money to formulate a data base but could not even construct a data base to make a positive, equitable change.

Mr. Nault: Madam Speaker, I would first like to congratulate my colleague for making a very well-put speech. Second, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. Considering government Members have asked us over and over what the figures are, almost to the point where we wonder whether they know the figures themselves, could the Hon. Member give us some examples of individuals we have been made aware of who will not be able to attend post-secondary institutions because of this?

Mrs. Blondin: Madam Speaker, I do not have a copy of the list of students who will not be able to attend post-secondary education, but I believe that there have been three regional reports showing that in one area, there is a waiting list of 500 native students who qualify but who will not be able to attend post-secondary education facilities because of the capping.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I too want to pass along congratulations for the Hon. Member's well-argued reaction to the Government's behavior surrounding the question of capping post-secondary education funds for native students. The last question asked of the Hon. Member dealt with the number of people who will be unable to pursue post-secondary educational goals.

One of the bands in my constituency, the Neskainlith Indian Band, has been a very progressive band in the last number of years. It is a small band and it has a list of 30 young people who have now qualified for entrance to post-secondary institutions. The band has been informed by the Department of Indian Affairs that it will be lucky to receive funding to send five students. This means that 25 young people from that small band in rural western Canada who have worked to qualify for post-secondary education will not be able to have that opportunity.

In the best interests of the pursuit of native self-government, self-reliance and self-determination, education at the post-secondary level is absolutely mandatory. My colleagues and I in the New Democratic Party find it unacceptable that these opportunities would not be provided for native young people.

Ms. Blondin: Madam Speaker, all I can say is that I agree that the situation is unacceptable.

Mr. Sobeski: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member stated that funding for the program has not increased over the past two years. The program budget has increased by 10 per cent per year for the last two years. How can the Hon. Member make such a misleading statement?

Ms. Blondin: Madam Speaker, I think that the misleading information is coming from the Government. I did mention the 10 per cent increase in my remarks, but I also mentioned that the budget remains at $130 million. A 10 per cent increase over the next three years could be far more easily negotiated between the various groups on a per annum basis and would be preferable to a 10 per cent that remains static over the three years. I do not see that as being a major increase or as keeping up with the times and with the challenging demands of getting a state-of-the- art education in 1989.

Mr. Soetens: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Ms. Blondin). A member of her own Party asked her to give some examples of some hardship cases or cases that were not being handled properly. Of course, she did not have any information available and could not answer that question. Perhaps I could ask her a question so that I could hear her input on this issue.

There was a release issued by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux) citing some examples of students who are funded. Susan, a single mother with two children who attends the University of Calgary receives a grant of $1,305 a month, plus all her tuition fees, books and all the accessories she needs plus transportation back and forth to her permanent residence. Another student is married and has three children and is also attending university and receiving $505 a month for living expenses over and above all the tuition fees. Does the Hon. Member believe that these students are being poorly funded in their endeavours to get a university degree?

Ms. Blondin: Madam Speaker, the issue is not about students on an individual basis. If we looked at every case in any crisis situation, I am sure we could find positive elements.

The issue is that we do not want a waiting list to be created by the capping. That is the issue.

Mr. Kristianson: Madam Speaker, I would first like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Ms. Blondin) on her comments and on the obvious feeling she has imparted to them. My constituency of Kootenay—West Revelstoke is perhaps one of the few hinterland or resource ridings in Canada that has no Indian bands or reserves within its boundaries. However, I have worked for a number of years at different times in the past with a number of band councils, particularly in British Columbia and Manitoba, and I am aware of some of the history of the issue.

The problem that I see and I think many of us see is that the Government continues to deal with this in a narrow, legalistic way, saying it is not capped in a narrow definition of the term. Government Members continually ask, as they asked of the Hon. Member, whether or not her Party or our Party or any Hon. Member believes that these potential student rights are a treaty right.

• (1210)

For decades in the past, in coastal areas of British Columbia, our white, Christian churches imparted the belief to many native students that there was nothing in their background to be proud of, and that they should be ashamed of their families and their history. Now we have finally reached the point where they are proud of themselves and proud and aware of their history, in the same manner that the rest of us have had that luxury for years and years. They are now claiming what is a moral imperative and a right which must be recognized, not in its narrow legalistic terms, but by realizing if they are now prepared and want to exercise their abilities to the fullest of their potential that nothing should stand in the way. I believe that that is the argument we are all making. We have heard enough of the narrow, legalistic defences brought forward by the Government.

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Madam Speaker, before I begin I want to make a brief comment on two things stated. The previous speaker suggested that the issue of treaty right is a narrow, legalistic approach. I wish to advise the Hon. Member that the question of whether or not post-secondary education is or is not a treaty right is the fundamental basis for the current dispute between the Government and Indian people over this policy.

As a matter of policy, the Government has shown a deep commitment to post-secondary education for native students, and the question of whether or not it is a treaty right underlines most of the argument we are hearing now. The Hon. Member, like myself, is from British Columbia which is not a treaty province, but I can assure the Hon. Member that if he had accompanied me to Saskatchewan yesterday he would not have made the remarks that he did.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Ms. Blondin) objects very strongly to the problem that we do not have a data base. Yet she denounces the very guidelines that, for the first time, will enable us to establish the data base of aboriginal students in Canada. This will enable the Government to plan both fiscally and educationally. I find that rather an extraordinary position for the Hon. Member to take.

I would also like to remind the Hon. Member that, in response to a question from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mrs. Dobbie), the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), a former Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, stated in debate on Friday: "At no time did I say the Government has cut back on the program. They have not. They have increased the program". It would sometimes be a welcome development in the House for members of the Opposition to have the good grace to recognize that.

The Opposition paints a very gloomy picture of the conditions of native people in Canada and, yes, it has been well documented that Indian living conditions, for example, lag behind those of the general Canadian population in many ways. What I find disappointing about the Opposition's view of Indian conditions is its lack of balance and perspective. There appears to be a belief that aboriginal people are totally dependent on the federal Government. The Government is supposed to provide shelter, the Government is supposed to provide employment, the Government is to develop the human resources of native communities, and the Government is even to provide self-government.

Anyone who knows the native people of Canada knows that they are not sitting back waiting for Government to save them. More and more Indians and Inuit are taking their futures into their own hands. Indian political leaders and ordinary community members are the people who are building self-government. The right to self-government is part of every Canadian's birthright, and aboriginal Canadians are no exception.

Indian entrepreneurs are building businesses and creating employment across the country, from Sumas Clay Products near Vancouver to Econobois in Huron Village, Québec; from Six Nations in Ontario to Eskasoni on Cape Breton Island, the elders are forming the young in the ways of their native cultures, as the schools are preparing them for a modern technological society.

Health is more than pills and hospitals; it is sound lifestyles. It is communities such as Alkali Lake in my own Province of British Columbia renouncing alcoholism through the courage of their own members.

So let us not insult aboriginal Canadians by portraying them as passive wards of the state. That era of total dependence is thankfully passing into history. Nevertheless, the fact remains that Government has an important supporting role to play in native development.

Social indicators show that Indians generally face worse living conditions than other Canadians. For example, life expectancy for Indians is about eight years shorter than the Canadian average. Death by suicide is about two and a half times more common among Indians than among the general Canadian population. Death from injury and poisoning is four times more common. The unemployment rate of on-reserve Indians is several times the Canadian average. These facts are undeniable. They represent unfinished business for Canadian society, and we acknowledge that.

Yet why must there always be this litany of negativism? Rather, we should take heart in the stunning progress which has occurred over the past generation, and especially in the past 10 years. We need historical perspective in order to understand and deal with the remaining problems.

Since 1960 Canadian society has opened up to Indian people politically, economically, and socially. Indians themselves have acted with initiative and determination. Moreover, federal government programs and budgets benefiting Indians have expanded rapidly. The result has been a generation of remarkable advance.

Until 1961 Indians did not have the right to vote in federal elections. Today Indians participate in Canadian political life at all levels. Indians have served and continue to serve as government Ministers and elected and appointed representatives. In the four constitutional conferences on aboriginal self-government native leaders negotiated directly with the Prime Minister and the provincial premiers.

In 1960 most Indian communities were still directed by Indian agents, officials appointed by the federal Government. Today the Indian agents have long disappeared, and Indians directly administer over two-thirds of the funding provided by the Indian and Inuit affairs program of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Some bands, such as the Cree and Naskapi in northern Québec, and the Sechelt in British Columbia have established their own self-government structures outside the Indian Act, and several more communities are developing their own arrangements in consultation with the federal Government.

In the area of education we have seen that in the 1960s Indians had little role in their own education. Many students were sent to church-run residential schools where their language and culture were discouraged, and where they were cut off from their families and their communities. Few Indians graduated from high school, and virtually none went on to post-secondary education.

Today there are approximately 250 band-managed schools, up from 135 in 1980-81, serving over 26 per cent of Indian students. Indian language, culture, and tradition are increasingly being integrated into the curriculum, often employing Indian elders as instructors. The proportion of Indians on the staff of federal schools has tripled during the last two decades.

There is significant evidence of improved educational performance. For example, in 1984 the Canadian Education Association reported: "a sharp improvement in academic achievement" of Indian students.

Improvement in post-secondary education over the years has also been dramatic. In the 1960s not more than a few hundred Indian students were enrolled in post-secondary studies. In 1975-76, 2,071 Indian students were assisted with a budget of more than $4 million. On a personal note, I might add that as a professor of Political Science in the University of British Columbia in that year, I had the pleasure of teaching one of those students who went on to successfully complete the program in native law at the University of British Columbia. Since then the number of students assisted has grown to the point where last year over 15,000 students were funded from a budget of $130 million.

The new program provides a range of monthly grants for living expenses ranging from $290 per month for a single student to $1,405 for a single parent with four dependants. In addition, the program covers the cost of tuition, travel, books and other special equipment required for the course. No other country offers its native students such a generous program.

The policy was changed to improve the effectiveness of the program and to encourage more Indian and Inuit graduates to pursue careers that would contribute to the achievement of Indian self-government and economic independence, reflecting two important goals of native people. The new program rules support those goals more effectively than the old. The new policy does not cut back on funding. There is no cap on the budget of the Post-secondary Student Assistance Program. As other colleagues have stated, the budget has increased by 10 per cent in each of the last two years to keep up with the growing demand for funding.

• (1220)

If the data indicate that more increases are required in the future, my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux) has stated on numerous occasions that he is prepared to seek increased financial resources. The old policy limited the length of student support to a specific number of student months. Under the new policy there will be no 48-month limit on assistance about which we keep hearing. That was only a proposal for discussion which was changed after last year's consultation with approximately 500 bands, tribal councils and student groups.

Taking into consideration the views of these groups, the new policy provides funding for the time it normally takes to obtain degrees right up to the doctorate level. Additionally, the policy will provide funding for an extra year, if necessary, in order that students can complete each of those degrees.

Previously there was a wide range of regionally determined rates of assistance. The new policy establishes a national standard rate structure providing more equal treatment across Canada. The new policy improves an already successful program and reflects many concerns expressed by native groups before and during the consultation held last year. It increases funding assistance, and promotes self-government and economic self-reliance through strategic study scholarships of up to $3,500 per year. It promotes excellence through academic scholarships of up to $1,000 per year.

I want to add my opinion to that of my colleagues that I believe this new policy is fair and a great improvement over the previous guideline. Education is definitely seeing some progress.

Concerning the area of housing, in the 1960s most Indians lived in seriously inadequate housing. In 1965, for example, fewer than half of on-reserve houses had electricity and only one in six had a safe water supply. Piped water and sewage systems were virtually non-existent. New houses being built did not meet basic national building standards, let alone satisfy the special needs resulting from the traditional life style and harsh climate of many communities. Crowding was a serious problem. Today, two-thirds of Indian homes have sewers or septic tanks, electricity is available in virtually all communities. With the assistance of federal funds of $118 million allocated for on-reserve housing together with loans guaranteed by the federal Government Indian bands build about 3,000 new homes and renovate another 3,500 each year. This total consistently exceeds the minimum targets that have been established.

More than 30 per cent of the current housing stock has been built in the last five years alone and a further 35 per cent has been renovated. Housing is being built to national building code standards using Indian labour and materials where possible and is being designed to meet cultural and climatic conditions. The health of Canadian Indians has improved considerably over recent years. These changes are the result of improved living conditions, better access to quality health care and greater community involvement in health education and delivery. Life expectancy is a significant indicator of over-all quality of life in a given population.

Between 1978 and 1985 life expectancy at birth for Indian males increased from 61.6 years to 64 years and for Indian women from 68.9 to 72.8 years. The rate of increase for both sexes is about double that for the general Canadian population. Although life expectancy for both sexes still lags about eight years behind the over-all population, the gap is narrowing.

Twenty years ago few Indian businesses existed except for family farm operations and some local stores. Most reserves imported goods and services. Employment was generally limited to traditional activities such as trapping, fishing and hunting. Indians had little control or involvement in planning or managing their own economic development programs. Isolation from urban centres, relatively low levels of education, especially among older workers, lack of business experience and capital and legal obstacles all imposed barriers to on-reserve economic development. However, progress is being made. Today, there are over 5,000 Indian businesses most of which are located on reserves and are individually owned. About half of these businesses have been established in the last five years. The Government has been instrumental in helping them get started with money and advice but the vast majority are now self-sustaining.

In 1986-87 alone the Indian and Northern Affairs Economic Development Program helped over 900 Indian businesses through a combination of equity contributions, direct loans and loan guarantees. Indians are now able to meet many of their local reserve needs for transportation, construction and the supply and distribution of basic commodities. Reserve-based enterprises are active in the mainstream of Canada's strong resource sector with significant involvement in the oil, gas, minerals, forestry, including sawmills, and agricultural sectors.

The economy of Indian communities has benefited significantly from the devolution of government-funded Indian programs such as band administration, social welfare, education and economic development to the community level. To date, this political development has led to more than 8,500 jobs being created by band governments.

Over the last decade there has been a major increase in the involvement of Indians in the planning, management and provision of economic development programs. To date, the federal Government has aided Indians in assuming control of such programs by providing assistance to Indian financial and sectoral economic development institutions, tribal level development corporations and band economic development officers.

In the early 1960s, Indian culture was only beginning to emerge from a long period of neglect. Indian language and religion had increasingly fallen into disuse. The younger generation was mostly ignorant of the traditional practices and pursuits that had for centuries sustained Indian communities.

Today, Indian culture is being reasserted as a key to community pride and self-reliance. Native language programs have been instituted in the schools along with programs on Indian culture and history. About 50 per cent of Indian students now receive instruction in their native languages. There are numerous aboriginal newspapers, several of which are multilingual, publishing in a native language as well as either English or French. An extensive network of aboriginal radio and TV services provide native language programming to aboriginal communities. The work of Indian artists is increasingly being accepted by the mainstream art community. Works by native artists hang in galleries across Canada, including the National Gallery in Ottawa.

Indian communities are gaining control of their future. Individual Indians have choices never before available to them. They can choose to live on reserve close to their traditional lands and pursuits or they can choose to live in the cities and participate in a broader society. Moreover, they can choose a lifestyle which draws upon what both worlds have to offer.

The important advances made by Canada's Indian people can be attributed to several factors, one of the most important is the determination and preservation of a new generation of Indian leaders and professionals. In Government today there are not unlimited funds nor is progress as quick as many demand. The fact is, however, that federal expenditures for aboriginal affairs have increased significantly in recent years. In 1984–85, total federal expenditures for aboriginal peoples were $2.7 billion. By 1988–89, these expenditures reached $3.4 billion. As a percentage of total federal expenditures, excluding public debt costs, expenditures for aboriginal affairs increased from 3.13 per cent in 1984–85 to 3.42 per cent in 1988–89. This represents a very significant re-direction of Government resources, especially during a time of expenditure restraint.

Indian living conditions have improved significantly in the last quarter century. Although much has been accomplished, of course, more remains to be done. Indians are still among the most disadvantaged of all Canadians. Nevertheless, the momentum for change, established over the last 25 years, is clear and strong. The federal Government is firmly committed to working with Indian communities to achieve further improvement in the years ahead. Such improvements will come with the direct involvement of educated professionals, hence the importance of the post-secondary student assistance program. This policy equips the Indian youth of today with the knowledge and skills necessary to enhance self-government and economic self-sufficiency tomorrow.

Ms. Blondin: Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the Hon. Minister's report is so positive in what developments have taken place over the last 25 years, can she tell us how she can justify the Human Rights Commission report on native people?

• (1230)

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): It is very clear that we have in Canadian society a standard of living, which is really unequalled in the rest of the world. We aspire to have all Canadians live at that standard. There is no question. At no point in my remarks did I ever suggest that Indian people were not among the most disadvantaged of Canadians or that they did not have difficulties. What I am trying to suggest is that there has been a momentum for change, largely stimulated by the efforts and the initiatives of Indian and Inuit people themselves. I think it is very important that there be a corrective in this House that recognizes that change. There is a great deal yet to be done. The Government has committed itself very strongly to the Post-Secondary Funding Assistance Program as a very fundamental component of the strategy for the advancement of Indian people.

What I wanted to speak about today was also the extent to which the administration of affairs for Indian people has been devolved to their own communities, the extent to which progress has been made. It is very important to recognize that we are moving in the right direction. Yes, we have a long way to go and we are committed, as has been shown by our policies. Much of the progress that has been made can be traced to the last five years of significant financial allocations, and significant program improvements. Our Government's record is there, and it is clear. Yes, we have much more to do. I believe that we are moving in the right direction and are committed to that program.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Comox–Alberni (Mr. Skelly).

Mr. Skelly (Comox–Alberni): The Hon. Minister denied that there was a cap being placed on the budget for the post–secondary education program. The Member will also recognize that the participation rate for native students is 4 per cent, while the participation rate for the population as a whole is something in the neighbourhood of 27 per cent. It is obvious that there is a racial bias against the participation of native Indians.

The time to place a cap on the budget for post–secondary education is not when there is such a substantial degree of inequity between the participation rate of natives and the participation rate in the population as a whole.

The Minister has said in her speech, before she went on to other issues, that there was no capping of the budget. I wonder if she could explain the following statement made in the Minister's letter of March 20: "A budget that could not continue to grow at the pace of the last decade", in other words, using everything but the words,"the budget is being capped." The growth is being curtailed in that budget.

In many other places in the same letter, Madam Speaker, the Minister is making the same statement about the budget being curtailed, such as that we "will have to live within its annual allocation, which may mean that a small number of students will temporarily have to seek those sources of support available to all other Canadians".

The participation rate figures suggest that Indians are being denied access to those sources of support available to all other Canadians. Will the Minister admit that the budget is being capped, in the former Minister's own words, although he does not use the word "capped", and that he is doing it at a time when there is a significant inequity between the participation rate of native students and the participation rate in post–secondary education of Canadians as a whole?

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): I welcome the opportunity to address the Hon. Member's comments because the Leader of his Party raised the issue of the Minister's letter on Friday during this debate. Unfortunately, there was not enough time to pursue his remarks.

The Minister comments in his letter that the budget cannot continue to expand at the rate of the last decade. In the last decade, or if I can just expand, since the program began, which is really 14 years, the budget increased by a factor of 30, when the student enrolment increased by a factor of 7.5. That is an enormous increase. It is now timely, I believe, and that is the view of the Government. It is time to look at the program and to see whether it is getting the results and whether it is as effectively managed as it could be. The purpose of the new guidelines is to try to ensure that. We have, for example, no firm data that enables us to plan carefully in advance for the demands on the post–secondary program.

We believe, from what we have been able to ascertain, that the demographics of the student population is shifting slightly. The enormous initial demand from mature students is levelling off. Those are the students that tend to have dependants, and require a greater level of support. The balance of the age groups and students will change slightly, that we will see more young, single students coming into the stream. They do not get support at the same level because they do not have dependants, and they do not require child care and increased levels of support for housing.

We are trying to get hold of the program to understand who our clientele is and what the future demands are going to be. That is the purpose of the program. I do not think that to suggest that the program budget cannot increase 30 times in the next decade is in some way an implication that we do not want to support native students. We have many programs in this Government to which we allocate budgetary funding. We want to do it on the most accurate basis. The problem that we have had in the past is that sometimes we have had indications of funding needs in one part of the country, and those funds have not been used, and in other parts of the country students have been kept waiting.

We have made the commitment that there will be no denials of funding. There may be deferrals for a term. We are hoping that there will not be deferrals. We are hoping that in fact we can have a system where our information is sufficiently complete so that all of the students will be able to study as soon as they are ready to do so.

I would think that there would be an attempt to try to understand a very important part of the budget, to get some control of it, to find out what the demand is, so that the Minister can always be well supported when he goes to Treasury Board. In an era of difficult fiscal restraint, we are looking at an enormous national debt, when all of the Departments of the Government have an obligation to the Canadian people to manage well. I find it extraordinary that the Hon. Member would be opposed to provisions which will enable the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development always to present a well substantiated request to Treasury Board, a well substantiated proposal for funding of this program. The commitment of the Government to this program is not simply theoretical or rhetorical. It is palpable. It has grown by 34 per cent since we came into Government. That is the proof of the pudding.

I think it is extremely important to understand that there are other issues surrounding this particular debate. Certainly, the question of treating the post-secondary assistance program as a budgetary matter, as opposed to something that is open-ended and funded with a blank cheque, is a reflection of the position that the treaty Indians take, that post-secondary education is a treaty right. There is a philosophical issue underlying this. It is a serious one. It is one that will not be resolved in the near future.

I think that to suggest that the Minister's letter suggesting a concern that a program cannot expand by a factor of 30 in the next decade, is in some way a reflection of a hostility to the program, or a desire to cut it back, is ridiculous. Clearly, what we want is a program that meets the needs and that our Department can fund with some knowledge and some assurance, and where our requests for funding will be met with approval and respect by Treasury Board.

Mr. Casey: Throughout this debate there seems to be a difference of opinion on access to the program. I would like clarification. I would like to know if students are in fact being denied access to the program now, and will they be denied access to education under this program in the future under the new policy?

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): There are two aspects to that question. One is the question of funding, the other is the question of administrative efficiency. We have had students who have had to defer. There was no denial of funding. Every student who qualifies will be funded. The question is whether they will be funded at the moment when they are themselves ready to go on to higher education. We want to have a program where we know where the demand is. Two-thirds of the budget is administered by bands. We have to know where the demand is, what is the demographic make-up of the student population, so that we can plan and make sure that at the beginning of a fiscal year we have the funds in hand in the right places to make sure that every student has access to that opportunity.

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to have this opportunity to speak in this debate and to discuss this extremely important issue. Over the weekend I took the opportunity to read through some of the statements that have been made by the Minister and by other participants in this debate. I noticed that the Minister's speech in the House was designed to reassure us and to try to cool out the issue.

In opening his remarks, he said he believed that we were closer together on this issue than the controversy would seem to suggest. Then he did what the Minister of State for Indian Affairs (Ms. Campbell) did, which was to read through a series of programs and post-secondary education guidelines. He then came to a point in his speech at which he said he did not believe that post-secondary education is a treaty right. When everyone who was listening to the debate felt that perhaps we were getting closer together, we ended up poles apart.

In his letter of March 20, 1989, the Minister clearly stated that he believes that references to education and to schools in the treaties could not refer to post-secondary education. He was making an absolutely unilateral interpretation of a treaty. As the Minister of State just suggested, that is where one of the problems lies in the debate concerning this issue. It is what relationship post-secondary education has to treaty rights and aboriginal rights. It is an issue which needs to be clearly negotiated and discussed between the natives involved and the Ministry.

As far as the Indians are concerned, the suggestion that post-secondary education is not a treaty right or an aboriginal right is dead wrong. Indians perceive post-secondary education funding to be a part of the obligation that has been established between Canada and the original owners of the country. They are as convinced of that as they are convinced of anything. For the Minister to state as he did in his letter, and as he repeated again in his speech on Friday, that he does not believe that the references in the treaties refer to post-secondary education is a beads and blankets approach to the interpretation of those treaties.

It is unfitting of a Minister in this day and age. It does not recognize the more modern treaties that have sought post-secondary education on the part of the participants in those treaties and agreements. The Minister seems to have gone back to the 1900s in order to get his interpretation of what the natives and the signatories to those treaties actually meant when they agreed to schools on reserves and to education provisions.

The Minister's statement ignores the spirit and the intent of the treaties which was to provide Indians of the day and, supposedly, future generations of Indians the same quality, the same type and the same access to education that was available to non-Indians throughout Canada. The Minister is attempting to freeze those treaties in time. Unfortunately, that creates a problem in the debate around native post-secondary education.

Around the time of the 1890s Ministers did not seem to have very much compunction about unilateral interpretation of provisions of treaties. Where treaties provided for education or schools on reserves, the Ministers of Indian Affairs during that time, as well as the Superintendents General of Indian Affairs, decided that they could re-jig that requirement in a treaty and provide for residential schools, in some cases hundreds of miles away from the reserves where the treaties required them to locate residential schools.

We all know from the reports of Superintendents General of Indian Affairs exactly what was the purpose of residential schools. The parliamentarians, the politicians and the administrators in the Department of Indian Affairs of the day felt that until they could remove Indian children from their culture, their family life, their communities and their language and deprive them of those three things, they would not be able to convert those Indian children into non-Indian children. That was the fundamental reason behind the residential school system. It was to take kids away from their parents and to destroy their family life and all of the cultural reinforcers that they had in their own communities in their own language on the reserve. It was to destroy their culture and try to mass produce them as white Indians.

The program was an abysmal failure. Fortunately, it was an abysmal failure from the point of view of those who wanted to foist the programs on the natives. It did not work in spite of the attempt to destroy culture among native students because the reinforcers were there. The parents constantly came back into the lives of their children. The language persisted. The concept of community, self-government, nationhood and ownership of land persisted, in spite of legislation passed in this assembly over the years to try to deprive Indians of those rights.

In spite of the residential school system, the culture of native groups persisted. That is a very positive failure, if I can put those two words together. The failure of the residential school system has allowed Indians of the day an idea of what their culture, self-government and languages are.

The residential school system was a unilateral interpretation by the federal Government and authorities of the Department of Indian Affairs as to how they could meet their obligations under the treaties that they had signed with Indians and Indian nations. When natives look to the recent unilateral interpretation by the Minister of Indian Affairs when he said that those references and treaties do not apply to post-secondary education, it is no wonder they suspect the motives of the Minister as being precisely the same as the Minister of Indian Affairs who set up the residential school system in opposition to the treaty provisions many, many years ago. They have a legitimate right to be suspicious of the Minister in his unilateral interpretation that those references in treaties do not apply to post-secondary education.

As the signatories of the day understood the treaties, they were to be living documents. They were not designed to freeze native Indians in time. They were not beads and blankets documents. They were designed as the basis of a continuing, growing and evolving relationship between Indian nations and the Canadian nation. They were designed as living documents to reflect the circumstances of the day. If it was appropriate in 1850, 1860 and 1870 to provide elementary or secondary education or schools on the reserves, then it is appropriate in interpreting those treaties today to understand them in a different set of circumstances. It is legitimate for natives in treaty areas to consider those references in treaties related to education and schools to refer just as accurately to post-secondary education as they referred to elementary and secondary education in previous times.

For the Minister to attempt to freeze those treaties back in the 1900s is unfitting of him. It is unfitting of the Government. There absolutely needs to be a process of interpreting treaties, especially as to what they mean in the current time today. There has to be some new type of agreement signed between the treaty nations and the Government to determine a process by which treaties are reviewed, by which they are brought up to date and by which their spirit and intentions are agreed upon in modern circumstances. Those things absolutely need to be done. What the Minister has done in his letter of March 20 is interpret and state his belief that the provisions in the treaty do not provide post-secondary education. He has done it unilaterally. He has no right to do it as a right of his office. He can only do it through a formal structure established between himself as a representative of this Government and the Indian nations.

• (1250)

When the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs (Mrs. Dobbie) asks us if our Party believes that post-secondary education is a treaty right, it is not our Party which can state that. It is to be decided through a process of interpretation by the signatories of those treaties. It is an obligation. There has to be a forum established to do that in which the people who signed the treaties are represented equally, and where the decision gives equal representation to both sides involved in the signing of that treaty.

That issue has to be resolved. One of the major difficulties that the Minister has thrown in the path of resolving this problem, one of the major roadblocks created, is his firm and adamant statement that he does not believe that those treaty provisions relate to post-secondary education. He has created a problem that is going to be very difficult to negotiate.

I understand that some of the prairie treaty people and the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians are developing documents which will set up a process for interpreting treaties so that we can use them as living documents and make them apply to today's circumstances. Any reasonable person sitting down to interpret these treaties would agree that, while they may have referred to elementary or secondary education in the 1850s, they would certainly refer to higher levels of education now. Before the Minister makes any change in the post-secondary education financing programs of this Government, he has an obligation to put in place a method, a process, a forum for discussing how these treaties are to be interpreted. It is a key issue in this debate. It is an issue that treaty natives and natives across this country fear. If the Minister is allowed to interpret these issues unilaterally, as was done with the residential school system, it is going to mean a terrific amount of damage done to native communities.

The Associate Minister is from British Columbia. She is aware today of some of the serious problems that have been caused in native communities because of the residential school system. I suggest that she look at programs that are going on, for example, on the Cowichan reserve today and on reserves in the Shuswap area. The residential school system, by taking a whole generation of children away from their parents and their communities, has deprived those children of an understanding of family relationships, of how relationships occur between parents and children. It has contributed to a great deal of child abuse, sexual abuse, suicide on reserves. There is a whole generation of children who have grown up and become parents without a complete understanding of how families operate and interact.

Fortunately we are seeing native social workers who have gone through post-secondary education, native doctors and psychologists, native counsellors who have gone through and understand the system themselves. They are able to counsel and help these people to restore the family relationships that have been broken up by our residential school system. These communities are beginning to see the light at the end of the tunnel where they can function as normal, healthy communities and families again. A terrific amount of damage has been done by unilateral interpretation of the provisions of the treaty. It is time to sit down with the natives of the treaty nations to develop a formula, a process, a forum for interpreting those treaties that give equal weight to the native view.

I questioned the Minister before on the human rights aspect of this case. Quite apart from the aboriginal rights or treaty rights, there is the human rights aspect of this case. Canada is not internationally acclaimed for the way it treats its minorities. It is not a shining example to other countries because of the way it treats its minorities. As Mr. Yalden referred to in the annual human rights report, the main embarrassment of this country is the way that we treat native Indians.

As I pointed out to the Associate Minister, when you see figures which indicate that 4 per cent of native students participate in post-secondary education, whereas the participation rate for the population as a whole is 27 per cent, it is a clear indication of racial bias in this program. There is a clear obligation on this House to correct that racial bias. How do we do it? We do it as many other countries have done and as this country has done on many occasions: through an affirmative action program. If there is a deficiency, if there is an inequity of participation rate of certain racial groups, that inequity must be eliminated. We have an obligation to do that.

I hear the objections that we do not have the money right now, that these are pretty tough times. I read that line in the Minister's speech last Friday. Well, these are tough times. I recall during the 1984 election campaign the Prime Minister of this country saying that we will go after equality for women when the economy turns around. I want to ask you, Madam Speaker, would Abraham Lincoln have been known as the great liberator if he had said: "We will free the slaves when the economy gets better"? This is unfit business for Canada. When the participation rate of native students is at 4 per cent and the participation rate of the population as a whole is 27 per cent, we have an obligation to redress as quickly as possible that glaring inequity. It is going to be pointed out by people across this country and around the world in describing the way that we treat our native citizens.

The difference here is a racial difference. There is a racial bias in access to post-secondary education in this country. That is something that we are obliged to correct immediately. If we are to retain our stature as a democracy in the western world, we must correct it immediately. You do not correct a problem like this by cutting funding, by limiting funding or even by using words and phrases in Minister's letters which suggest that funding is going to be limited. We know, your Alberta caucus knows, those in the Gallery know that when you talk about limiting funding, you are talking about reducing the flow of the participation rate of native students. That is precisely what you are talking about. You are talking about slowing down the program. That runs absolutely counter to what we should be doing as a country to make this a place that we can be proud of, where we practice racial equality rather than just preach it.

• (1300)

I strongly support the motion that was presented by the Liberal Party. I hope the members of the Alberta caucus of the Conservative Party will vote for it because they have expressed concerns about it. I hope they will be able to convince the balance of the Conservative caucus to support this motion unanimously.

Mrs. Dobbie: Madam Speaker, I am interested in the rhetoric and history, flawed as it might be, that we were subjected to by the Hon. Member for Comox—Alberni (Mr. Skelly). I must say that I believe the Hon. Member is talking through his hat. I take exception to some of his remarks because I believe they actually promote racism.

Let me point out that this program is one of the most reasonable and responsible in the world. For the Member's information, the funding in Canada for our 15,000 students is about four times what it is in the United States. In the United States, the budget is about $32.9 million for their 15,000 students enrolled in post-secondary education. Here in Canada, that budget is $130 million. Why is the Hon. Member trying to deny that this program is responsible, reasonable and fair?

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Because it isn't, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Member compares our program with that in the United States. Maybe it is the goal on the Government side to harmonize our program with the United States. I hope that is not the case.

The question is not who does what and who does it better, the question is how much better do we have to do in order to achieve equity? When we are seeking equity in a democratic society, where we have the right of access to post-secondary education on an equal basis, not on a racial basis, we have to spend the money that is necessary to get that equity. That should be the objective.

The objective should not be to cut back access to the program or to delay equity, as the Minister suggested when he said: "Maybe we could talk about this over a 10 year period". People want equity now. People deserve equity now. They have been waiting for 120 years to get equity. Now there is a program in which they have an opportunity to achieve equity. But they know, I think you know, and we know they are not going to get that equity if you cut back on this program. You know it.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, I was very amused by the Hon. Member's comment about harmonizing our policy. I hope he does not do too much damage to his tendons with all that knee-jerking. I suspect there will be a great deal more.

I want to associate myself with his remarks about the effect of the residential schools. I do not think there is any doubt that they have played havoc. While there are native people who say the schools worked for them, they certainly have been a serious impediment to the development of some of the social and familial strengths that native communities require. That is something we can certainly agree upon.

However, I want to comment on his remarks about the role of post-secondary education and the general educational situation. I suggest that our policy is certainly a very strong program of affirmative action. There are no other Canadians who have this assistance from the federal Government for post-secondary education. I reiterate that it is a policy to which the federal Government is deeply committed. The fact that our philosophic underpinning is not that of the treaty nations, that we do not see it as a treaty obligation, does not mean that we do not see it as a vitally important policy and important part of our desire to see native people assume their rightful role in Canadian society.

We must also recognize that when we look at the relative participation rates of native and non-native students in Canada, the difficulty is a reflection of problems before the post-secondary education level.

When we are dealing with the post-secondary program we are talking about students who have completed high school successfully and have met the entrance requirements for post-secondary institutions. There is another problem in Canada in getting native students to that level. That is not something which is the subject of this particular program. I think it is important to distinguish with regard to that problem, which I agree is serious.

There are initiatives in which the federal Government has been involved. I am grateful to see initiatives on the part of many provincial Governments to try to deal with it directly because it is their level of responsibility. The federal Government contracts with provincial Governments to obtain educational facilities for native students where the bands do not choose to have a band school.

It is a very difficult issue and one should not confuse the two. I certainly share with the Hon. Member a great deal of concern for the extent to which, even now, native students are not getting to that level of preparation. That is a continuing challenge for Canadian society, but not a basis on which to suggest there is a racial bias that is somehow reflected in this program. This program deals with those students who have made it this far. They are a source of great satisfaction to all Canadians.

Yes, their numbers are too small and that is an additional challenge for us, quite aside from this post-secondary program.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Madam Speaker, I am not sure if the Minister is admitting that the Government is not putting enough money into education programs at the elementary and secondary level as well, but I would agree with her if she is suggesting that. I hope that in her next meeting with the Minister she can persuade him to make sure more money and more resources are allocated to elementary and secondary education for native Indians as well so that even more people can be qualified to come through this program.

Not all of the complaints of native communities rest with the post-secondary program. A lot of the complaints rest with the elementary and secondary programs where their funding is now being attacked and underfunded by that ministry as well.

There are some serious problems at both ends of the schedule. By referring strictly to post-secondary education funding in this debate, we were only conforming with the motion that was put on the floor. If the Minister wishes to amend the motion so that we can discuss all aspects of Indian education funding, that would open it up to perhaps four or five more opposition days. We would certainly be prepared to take part in that debate.

Mrs. Dobbie: Madam Speaker, I want to make a comment regarding some figures that the Hon. Member opposite quoted a few moments ago. He suggested that 27 per cent of all Canadians were enrolled in post-secondary education as opposed to 4 per cent of the native population. My figures are somewhat different. According to Statistics Canada data for 1987-88, 5 per cent of all Canadians are enrolled in post-secondary institutions and 3 per cent of Indians are enrolled in post-secondary institutions. That is a difference of 2 per cent, not 23 per cent as suggested by my hon. colleague opposite.

Second, the Hon. Member spent close to 10 minutes of his speech saying how he felt about treaty rights and so on, but he did not answer the essential question. The essential question is: Does the Hon. Member's Party recognize post-secondary education as a treaty right for Indians?

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Madam Speaker, I did not consider it an essential question. During my speech I talked about whether our Party agrees with that. There is certainly no question that natives, especially in the treaty areas, believe that post-secondary education is a treaty right, and that is their interpretation of the treaty. The Government, on its side, has said through the words of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux), that it is not a treaty right, in his belief.

I said that rather than this Party stating whether it is or isn't, because we have no more right than you to interpret a treaty unilaterally, there should be a forum set up between native nations which have signed treaties with Canada and Canada to work out interpretations of the provisions of the treaties so that those interpretations reflect the circumstances of modern times. That is the position of this Member, and I am certain it would be the position of this Party as well.

• (1310)

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I am very happy to have an opportunity to join in the debate on my Party's motion concerning Indian education because I represent some 12 Indian bands across the Algoma Manitoulin district right from the Batchawana Band in Sault Ste Marie to the Wikwemikong Band on the eastern end of the Manitoulin Island. I do not think there is any issue on which we have received stronger representation in the last year and a half than the question of Indian post-secondary education.

I do think we have made remarkable progress in many aspects of Indian affairs over the last 15 or 20 years. However, there has been progress made in the field of education. Now a cap is being put on this funding when the problem has always been to provide support for education at the local level for those students who are successful in passing grade 12 or grade 13. It is hard to believe that the Government is capping that funding and capping it in this way.

Last week, chiefs, councillors, students and band members from most of the reserves in the Algoma-Manitoulin area attended the protest here on Parliament Hill. They were protesting this cap which is discouraging for those students who have been successful in completing grade 12 or grade 13. As well, it is discouraging for the students who are in secondary school. For example, I received a letter just last week from Kelly Esquimaux, a student at the Manitoulin Secondary School and a resident of the Sucker Creek Reserve on Manitoulin Island. She writes:

> I am writing to you in regard to the recent aboriginal education assistance cut-backs. I am a high school student at Manitoulin Secondary School and I will be attending college in the fall which means these cut-backs will be affecting me. As MP of my district, I was hoping you would be able to help me and my people fight these cut-backs. Prime Minister Mulroney is being very unfair. An agreement was made and now he is breaking it. Please help us. Thank you. Yours truly, Kelly Esquimaux.

I have received a number of letters like that, letters which portray the uncertainty and concern felt by students in post-secondary education institutions and those in high school at this time as well.

I received a letter from the United Chiefs and Councillors of the Manitoulin district, a district with some six Indian reserves. It is a long letter which outlines the whole problem with the capping of post-secondary education funding. This letter was written to the former Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In summary, it reads:

> We believe the Government is interested in cutting the deficit at the expense of the First Nations education. The Government should look at other means to decrease the deficit problem rather than at the expense of First Nations. Further, we conclude that your department is not committed to the education of First Nations as you previously stated. Mr. Minister, to proceed with your department's present course of action will undoubtedly eliminate forever any hope of establishing a trust relationship which is crucial and fundamental in creating a sound working environment.

That letter is signed by the six Chiefs of the First Nations of Manitoulin District.

This is a very important matter. It is one that cuts right across the entire district that I represent. A letter was sent to me by the social counsellor for the Garden River Indian Band located just outside of Sault Ste Marie. The letter points out that in 1976, when the control was under the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, there were only 35 students from the Garden River Band attending high school and that year, there was only one graduate. Today, with the control under the responsibility of the Band Council and its education committee, there are 85 students attending high school in Sault Ste Marie. Usually 10 to 12 students graduate each year and on average, 12 to 14 students start in kindergarten. This speaks of the success Indian bands have been having. However, if 12 to 14 students are entering elementary school and 10 to 12 students are graduating, will that be the end of the road? Will those 12 or 14 students be able to go on to post-secondary institutions?

The letter points out as well that all of the students who graduated in the previous year are employed. These students attended and graduated from Sault College or colleges like Lake Superior State College. These people have been trained as child care workers, law and security people, civil engineers, nurses, business administrators, RNAs, heavy diesel mechanics, finance and sales managers, computer engineers and lab technicians. These people are all employed, and that is the crux of the argument. If the students do not go on to get a complete education which will help them secure jobs, will they be able to enter the workforce? Of course, these are the arguments that were made last week when the Assembly of First Nations held its protest here.

There were other concerns expressed by the Garden River Band social counsellor. She said that her concerns are three-fold. Maintenance rates have been reduced for single students and single students with dependants. Tuition assistance for students attending foreign and private institutions has been reduced. The maximum length of assistance has been reduced from 96 student months to 48 student months. She goes on to point out that many of the students from the Garden River Reserve attend Algoma College or Sault College in Sault Ste Marie, but five students are in second year at Lake Superior State College which is just across the river in Sault, Michigan, and two are in their first year. For these students, tuition support will be cut off by up to $900 per year. She points out that already, some students have to supplement their books and supplies by up to $200 in United States funds per year.

I am sure that measure was taken because the Department was thinking that students can get training at the University of Toronto rather than some university in the United States and why should we pay for that additional tuition. However, the practical results are that students in Sault Ste Marie, rather than being able to commute back and forth to Lake Superior State College in Sault, Michigan, will not be able to do so because of the cut-backs in funding of tuition and supplies for those attending foreign colleges.

These are some of the concerns which are being expressed to me and I hope that the Government will be prepared to lift the cap that has been proposed on post-secondary education. It should be left the way it has been in the past. A notional amount has been put in the Estimates and if the number of students applying for assistance were to go beyond that, the Department would go back to the Treasury Board to get additional funds. We are talking here about the future of literally thousands of students who have grown up with the least opportunities. Those who have struggled through the system and graduated from high school to prepare themselves to go on to university should not be denied that opportunity. I do not know the exact numbers. I am told that something in the range of 2,000 would qualify. If they qualify, it is not a cost to the Government now, but rather an investment in the future to ensure that these students will have a productive job and a productive lifestyle and will not be a burden on the state in the years to come because they have been able to receive that extra training at college or university.

I hope that the Government recognizes the wisdom in the recommendation in the statement which is before the House today, and puts a moratorium on the capping of the budget for post-secondary education. In the long run not only will the Government be doing the best thing, but it will be doing the proper thing for these students who will not be denied an opportunity to go on and take post-secondary education, not only this fall but in the years ahead.

With your permission, Madam Speaker, I will call it one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When we resume after Question Period there will be eight minutes in which the Hon. Member can complete his presentation.

It being 1.22 p.m. I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.22 p.m. the House took recess.

ARMENIA

TRAGIC HISTORICAL EVENTS

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the House that today, April 24, is the seventy-fourth anniversary of the first genocide of the twentieth century, when 1,500,000 Armenians were massacred by the Turkish-Ottoman Governments between 1915 and 1922. This crime against humanity must not be forgotten and must remain etched in our collective memory. Otherwise, this horrible crime may be repeated in other countries of the world. In 1939, Adolf Hitler asked: After all, who today remembers the Armenian genocide? The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that we do!

HUMAN LIFE

IMPORTANCE OF ORGAN DONATIONS

Mr. Jacques Vien (Laurentides): Mr. Speaker, we take the opportunity to remind Hon. Members of this House that this week, April 23-29, is Organ Donor Awareness Week. The Department of National Health and Welfare is co-operating with various voluntary and professional organizations to inform the public and health professionals of the benefits of organ and tissue donations and transplants. They encourage families to discuss organ donation and to make a decision before a tragedy occurs and health professionals to reflect on how they participate in the organ donation process.

We ask you to think about organ donation and to sign a donor card or the designated part of your driver's licence if you have not already done so. Talk about it with your family, your friends, your constituents and your colleagues and ask them to follow your example. By so doing, you will be giving or encouraging others to give the most precious gift of all, the gift of life.

MULTICULTURALISM

CONTRIBUTION OF ARMENIANS

Ms. Barbara Greene (Don Valley North): In the course of my work I am always struck that people of many and diverse origins view Canada as a land of opportunity and Canadians as a people who are committed to freedom and democracy. Most important, we are seen as a county whose strength and vitality have their roots in Canada's multicultural reality. Canada is a home to people, cultures and traditions from around the world.

Many Canadians, including those of Armenian origin, came to this country to escape injustice. They have made a valued contribution to the political, social and economic fabric of Canada.

Today as our Armenian Canadians commemorate tragic events, including the 1915 genocide experienced elsewhere, we salute their efforts as Canadians, to ensure that future generations are spared the denial of human rights they suffered in other countries, in other times. Together we are working to shape a nation that is strong, self-confident and caring, a nation that looks forward to an even brighter and more promising future for all of us who live together in our unique and multicultural traditions.

EMPLOYMENT

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM—BUDGET CUT-BACKS

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to condemn the attitude of the Conservative Government which this year cut 46 per cent in financing for the summer employment program for students. Funding has declined from $2,487,610 last year to $1,343,710 this year, and that is just for the area between St. Albert and Pembroke, in Ontario, which also includes the riding of Carleton—Gloucester.

Mr. Boudria: And Glengarry—Prescott—Russell!

[English]

Because of the exceptional reduction in the grants given to Challenge 89, close to 1,000 students will have trouble saving enough money for their studies in the fall.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Bellemare: Must the students pay for the defeat of the Conservatives in the Ottawa area?

HOUSING

EXPANSION OF HOME-BUYING OPPORTUNITIES

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): The budgetary constraints in which the Government finds itself call for innovative ways to alleviate the housing crisis in Canada. One of the ways this could be done is to allow the use of retirement funds for home purchases. Under current regulations, many low, and middle-income first time buyers are denied access to RRSP funds for home purchases, while individuals with large RRSP holdings are able to make this kind of investment. By relaxing the barriers which prevent the investment of less than $25,000 in RRSP money in a principal residence, including eliminating insurance requirements on retirement- based mortgages, we can give home buying opportunities to many more young families. Expanding regulations that allow the investment of employer contributing or administered pension plans would also serve to open up a very tight housing market. Allowing Canadians to invest in their own futures is a sound idea, one that would not require any additional tax expenditures. This makes the plan preferable to RHOSPs or other tax deferred plans. This is a bold idea, but it is a new idea we will have to explore in order to solve the present housing crunch.

STATUS OF WOMEN

FUNDING OF REAL WOMEN'S ORGANIZATION

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): This past weekend the Government sponsored a conference for REAL Women. The Secretary of State (Mr. Weiner) has said that this group meets the women's program criteria for funding.

The criteria do not include bashing the female Supreme Court Justices. They do not include spreading lies and hatred about lesbians and gays. They do not include absolutely ridiculous seminars on how children in day care will all become psychopaths. It does not include raving about pre-marital sex.

The criteria do state that the project should deal with how barriers to women's equality should be addressed. This conference denied that any barriers exist.

Women's program officials have told equality seeking women's groups that their funding could be cut by up to 65 per cent in the coming budget.

This Government is funding anti-child care, anti-employment equity groups, and cutting back on equality-seeking women's groups. This clearly represents the Government's true agenda for women. It is a back-to-the-kitchen agenda.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

VALDEZ OIL SPILL

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): In the April 8 issue of The Economist, you will find the following on the Exxon Valdez oil spill:

> Do not be taken in by oil company promises that opening the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil exploration will never harm the 170,000 cariboo that go there to calve. Oil deserves to be found and pumped out if, and only if, it can be sold at a price that covers the cost of appropriate environmental safeguards, by a company with a powerful incentive to keep those safeguards working.
> Modern business diffuses personal responsibility too rapidly. If you fine an oil-spilling company 10 times the value of the spilt oil, its insurance rates merely go up. Directors and employees of companies which profit from things that are very unlikely to turn very unpleasant should be personally exposed to fear of these unpleasantnesses. They should lose their jobs when the 'impossible' happens just as the president of Japan Airlines quit when an aging jet crashed. That sense of personal responsibility would do much to keep the safety drills slick, the captain sober, the otters swimming.

Even The Economist is turning green!

ARMENIA

CALL FOR INDEPENDENCE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): It is now 74 years since the horrific genocide in 1915, when at least 1.5 million Armenians were massacred. Armenians in Canada, and in other countries around the world, are still waiting for Governments to officially recognize that the genocide did, indeed, occur. In February, 1988 over 30 Armenians were killed while peacefully demonstrating in the City of Sumgait. Last month I visited Soviet Armenia to talk to Armenians who survived the devastating earthquake which occurred on December 7, 1988. Between 50,000 and 100,000 Armenians lost their lives as a result of this earthquake. Despite these historic tragedies, Armenians around the world continue to dream of a free and independent Armenia. Nothing will deter Armenians from this dream of rebirth. Nothing will crush their spirits or their souls.

ARMENIA

CALL FOR RECOGNITION OF ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, today marks the commemoration of the seventy-fourth anniversary of the Armenian genocide as the Hon. Member just noted.

In the period of 1915 to 1923 over one million Armenians were killed and millions of others were driven from their homeland by the Turkish-Ottoman Governments. This certainly represents one of the saddest chapters in the history of the 20th century.

The international community has often been slow to recognize such realities and Canadian Governments over the years have been no different. The time has come for the Canadian Government to recognize and condemn the Armenian genocide, to urge the Government of Turkey to do likewise and to provide redress to the Armenian community.

I know that I join with many other Canadians in noting the importance of recognizing the Armenian genocide and other events, both past and present, in which minority peoples are oppressed and persecuted. To remember such things, as Canada should in a regular way on April 24, is to keep hope alive that some day the earth will be rid of such injustices.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

POSSIBLE RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT ON P.E.I.

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, once again the Prince Edward Island way of life has been threatened by the federal Government. As we speak, hearings regarding railway abandonment on Prince Edward Island are taking place in Charlottetown. This time it is the operations at the Kensington and Borden subdivisions that are being threatened.

CNR has deliberately downgraded the railway system on Prince Edward Island, with abandonment as the final goal. Now that we have almost reached this stage, what is being done to replace the present system? Nothing. The federal Government has left the province responsible for upgrading the highways. The provincial Government cannot afford to complete this task, especially with all of the cut-backs that we hear will be announced in Thursday's Budget speech.

What about the employees and their families who will be affected? Many have lived and raised their families on P.E.I. for many years. They have given the better part of their lives to CN, but the compensation package they will receive from CN is grossly inadequate.

Given this, I call on the Government to ensure that the province is adequately compensated and that the affected employees and their families will be taken care of by CN.

HEALTH

ORGAN DONOR AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, this week is National Organ Donor Awareness Week. The Department of National Health and Welfare is joining professional and voluntary health organizations in activities to heighten public and health professional awareness of the benefits of organ and tissue donation and transplantation.

Families are encouraged to discuss and make a decision about organ donation before a tragedy occurs. Health professionals are urged to examine how they may participate in the organ donation process.

You are invited to consider organ donation and to sign a donor card or the consent portion of your driver's licence if you have not already done so. Discuss your decision with family, friends, constituents and professional colleagues and ask them to follow your example. By doing so you will be giving or encouraging others to give the most precious gift of all, the gift of life.

PENSIONS

INDEXATION OF CN AND CP PENSIONS

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Pacific Pensioners National Council held their annual convention this past Friday here in Ottawa. This organization represents CP pensioners from across the country. The focus of this year's meeting was the plight that many of the CP pensioners are in. This plight of the CP pensioners, which is very similar to the problems of the CN pensioners, is due in large part to their having no adequate indexation of their pensions. Because of this there are CP and CN pensioners across the country living in poverty.

How can this Government allow this to happen when these Canadians have contributed so much to the building of this nation? Surely this Government, which pays so much attention to enlarging or ensuring the large profits of major corporations, can also ensure that pensioners receive adequate indexation of their pensions. I call upon the Government to act quickly on behalf of CP and CN pensioners to right this wrong.

ARMENIA

RECOGNITION OF ARMENIAN GENOCIDE URGED

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it was a pleasure for me together with my Liberal colleagues and, indeed, Members from all sides of the House, to gather at 12.30 p.m. at the foot of this great parliamentary institution to join with 2,000 Canadians of Armenian descent. They are here not only to remind us of the purge of the evil, the genocide, that happened to their brothers and sisters some 74 years ago, but also to be vigilant, to send forth a message from Parliament Hill to reach all corners of the world where human rights and human dignity are stepped on, that at least Canada, morally and ethically, will stand up to say that that is wrong and that it recognizes it. Two thousand people were outside. There were 2,000 people last year and the year before, but we need to go further than simply having those people come to our institution to remind us to recognize it.

• (1415)

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that there is an emerging consensus on all sides of the House for this Parliament to stand up and boldly recognize an evil for what it was. I believe there is a consensus to have the Secretary of State for External Affairs Minister (Mr. Clark) and this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) move on the promise that they made in 1984 to move through the United Nations and mobilize international leadership and international opinion, because it is not weakness to recognize what has happened, it is strength.

I urge this Government to pick up the pieces and to coalesce the emerging feeling that all Members share on this issue. Let us stand up. Let us pass a resolution through the House of Commons and let that set the tone and example for other Governments and other countries around the globe.

ELECTION IN NEWFOUNDLAND

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns unacceptable statements, in fact, a threat made by the Minister for International Trade regarding the result of last Thursday's election in Newfoudland and Labrador.

The Deputy Prime Minister knows that the people of Newfoundland and Labrador exercised their democratic right to elect a Government of their choice, and their choice was the Liberal Party led by Clyde Wells last Thursday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I know the Prime Minister has already extended his congratulations to Mr. Wells. Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware or does he approve of the following statement made by the Member for St. John's West, Newfoundland's sole representative in the federal Cabinet, and I quote: "We'll play ball with them if they play ball with us. However, if they want to re-open old issues like Meech Lake and so on, then we will have to reassess the situation."

That is the Member for St. John's West speaking in Florida, one day after the Newfoundland election.

Ms. Campbell (S.W. Nova): In Florida?

Some Hon Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: Now I ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether or not he will give Newfoundlanders and Labradorians an absolute commitment today that threats or blackmail have no place in the relationships between the federal Government and any newly elected Government of any province in Canada? May we have that assurance today?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, indeed the people of Newfoundland did exercise their democratic right and we will certainly respect that right and abide by it.

The point the Hon. Member makes is rather interesting. It seems that he wants to continue the provincial election campaign here on the floor of the House of Commons.

An Hon. Member: What about in Florida?

Mr. Mazankowski: I want to assure the Hon. Member and all the people of Newfoundland that it will be business as usual. We will exercise our responsibilities in carrying out national policy and national programs that will be good for all of Canada and good for the people of Newfoundland. I think, as the Hon. Member knows, that federalism is a two-way street, and we hope and expect that the Government of Newfoundland will co-operate in working with the federal Government to make it better for the people of Newfoundland and all regions of Canada.

Mr. Tobin: I hope that the Member for St. John's West is tuned in from Florida and that he will accept the gentle chastisement just offered him by the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ENERGY

HIBERNIA AGREEMENT—QUERY REGARDING GOVERNMENT'S CONTINUED SUPPORT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to take the Deputy Prime Minister at his word. Indeed, the election should be over and it is back to business, to use the Deputy Prime Minister's words,"as usual".

During last fall's federal electoral effort the Prime Minister said: "Our promises are all within Michael Wilson's fiscal framework. Every nickel has been accounted for." In January, after that said electoral effort, the Prime Minister said: "We are expecting difficulty on the fiscal side."

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister today whether or not the Government of Canada stands behind the $17 billion in promises made both before and during the federal election campaign.

• (1420)

Specifically, will the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House today, and through the House the people of Newfoundland and Labrador, that the Government of Canada stands behind the Hibernia agreement announced last July in St. Johns, Newfoundland, by the Prime Minister of Canada and by the former Premier of Newfoundland and Labrador? Will he give us the assurance today that it is business as usual?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the Hon. Member that we do not accept the $17 billion figure that he put forward in the preamble to his question. That was a figure used by the Liberal Party, and not one accepted by the Government.

On the more substantive part of the question, I want to say to the Hon. Member, to all Hon. Members, and to all the citizens of Newfoundland and Labrador that the Hibernia project was a project and that is a project which the Government believes is important, both for the national interest as well as for Newfoundland and Labrador. It was not constructed on a partisan basis. It has not changed because there was an election in Newfoundland.

The federal Government intends to proceed, as we have stated before, on our obligations on Hibernia. We would expect the Newfoundland Government to do the same.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL REASSURANCE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, I get awfully worried when I hear a Minister say the Hibernia project "was a project that is a project," and was a project that we are standing behind. It frightens the daylights out of me.

Let me put my question clearly. Last July, in St. Johns, Newfoundland, the Prime Minister of Canada, the Premier of Newfoundland, and the Minister representing Newfoundland in the federal Cabinet, announced that the Hibernia deal was done, the Hibernia project was going to go ahead, the federal Government was putting the federal Treasury behind the project, and that a legally binding agreement would be signed by March 31. It is now April 24 and there is no legally binding agreement.

I ask the Minister of Energy again, will he stand in the House today and say, days in advance of the federal Budget, that the Hibernia project is a go, that the federal Government is not backing away, and that the Government is prepared to sit down to discuss with the new Liberal Government in Newfoundland the details of that project, including the royalty regime for Newfoundland which is one of the worst in Canada's history?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that I scare the daylights out of him. That is not a great achievement. There is not a lot of daylight to scare out of him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: That is the difference between you and me. You are all daylight, Jake. You have daylight between your ears—I do not.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): This is a matter of judgment.

Mr. Epp: Judgment has not been something with which he has been associated.

As I said in my first answer with respect to whether or not the Government of Canada is obligated to the Hibernia project, the answer is yes. I hope and expect that the present Government of Newfoundland when it takes office will be obligated also to the Hibernia project.

There is a concept of parliamentary democracy, namely, that one takes the responsibility which previous Governments have signed in good faith. I expect the Government of Newfoundland also to follow that tradition, that precedent.

What I am also saying to the Hon. Member is this. Prior to the Newfoundland election I put before the House the issue of the legal requirements which will be completed some time in the autumn of this year, and the fact that we had to test the financial markets. I have put that forward very clearly. In terms of the design, I have put that in front of the House.

What I do expect from Newfoundland, and from the Hon. Member, is support for Hibernia, rather than the question that has come from that side of the House on Hibernia and not this side.

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—RELATIONS BETWEEN NEWFOUNDLAND AND FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, the day after the Liberals formed the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador the new Premier, in response to a question put by the press, said that he would like to see some changes to the Meech Lake Accord. From the everglades of Florida a cabinet Minister, speaking on behalf of the Government, emerged like a crocodile from the mud and threw a threat at the new Liberal Government in Newfoundland.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Baker: What did the Minister mean when he said, speaking on behalf of the Government: "We will play ball with them if they play ball with us. But if they want to reopen the Meech Lake issue, we will have to reassess the situation"?

What kind of ball was the Minister for International Trade referring to, speaking from Florida? Was it beach-ball, or is this hardball, which is not fair ball to the people of Newfoundland and Labrador?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we may want to entertain a statement on Motions from the Hon. Member so that he can clarify his position and the position of the federal Liberal Party with respect to Meech Lake.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: We are talking about blackmail. Do you know what blackmail means?

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member earlier said: "Are you going to keep your word?" I ask them are they going to keep their word with respect to Meech Lake?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, today in Newfoundland we are awaiting the signature of this Government on four regional economic development agreements which should have been signed last month. We are awaiting the transfer of $800 million compensation for the closure of our railway. We are awaiting the economic agreement on Hibernia. The list goes on.

At this crucial moment when these economic agreements are being reviewed, and when other provinces have exactly the same position as the Premier of Newfoundland has on the Meech Lake Accord, why is the Prime Minister allowing a Minister of the Government to bully Newfoundland? Is this punishment for Newfoundland tossing out the PC Government?

PC stands for passé composé in Newfoundland. This Government is going to be decomposé if it keeps threatening us like this.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I always thought that PC stood for perfect Canadian, and we have a great many of them over here.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I should welcome the Hon. Member back. We missed his colour and his excitement. We hope that he will be with us for a little while because it looks like we are going to have some interesting times.

As I said earlier, federalism is a two-way street. We intend to uphold our responsibilities and obligations. We hope that the new Premier of Newfoundland will do likewise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ECONOMY

FORTHCOMING BUDGET—MINISTER'S STATEMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. On the weekend in Ottawa the Minister was threatening once again to impose a Conservative view of fairness on the whole of the country when he said that in the coming Budget, when it comes to tax increases and cut-backs in programs, Canadians could expect the Government to be fair.

Considering that he said the same thing in 1984, not long before he brought in his subsequent Budget, a Budget that increased taxes on the poor by 60 per cent, increased taxes on the average family by 17 per cent, and reduced taxes on the rich by 6 per cent, will the Minister of Finance guarantee Canadians that Thursday's Budget will not be a repetition of that concept of fairness?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is referring to comments that I made on a television program over the weekend wherein I was making the observation that the federal Government debt is at very high levels and that the problem must be addressed. I would expect that he also would agree that it must be addressed. It is not a partisan issue. It is not an ideological issue. It is pure arithmetic that leads to the obvious conclusion that something must be done about it.

On that same program I made the point that we are going to be very sensitive to the ability of people to support that effort of getting the deficit down. We would expect that the broad range of economic policies, including getting control of the government debt, will lead to the same sort of economic performance that we had over the last four years, which the Hon. Member continues to ignore, yet there it is staring him right in the face.

Some 1.5 million jobs were created since September, 1984. That is the program that we want to continue over the next four years.

• (1430)

INTEREST RATE INCREASES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Government has sanctioned, because it has done nothing to the contrary, the continual increases in the interest rates that the Bank of Canada has imposed on the people of Canada. The last time we saw this kind of steady escalation, as the Minister will recall when he was on this side of the House, was the early eighties which led to the most serious recession in Canada in the post-war period.

Since the Government has stood back, watched and actually supported this action by the Bank of Canada, does the Minister not at least fear that his Budget, which he has said is going to provide us with tax increases and program cuts, combined with a high interest rate policy, could be just enough to tip this country into a serious recession once again?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are not as a country in a position where we can ignore the debt problem that has grown up over the past 20 years. It is something that must be dealt with.

The Hon. Member refers to the interest rate problem. He is pointing to a symptom of the problem, not the cause of the problem. The cause of the problem is inflation and an economy that is growing faster than the capacity of the economy to handle.

What we would expect as a result of this Budget is that we would put a better balance between the monetary policy of the Bank of Canada and the fiscal policy of the Government of Canada so that we can see some opportunity for interest rates to come down. That is the objective that we are following in this Budget.

[Translation]

ALLEGED CONTRADICTION OF MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I agree there should be a balance. However, the Bank of Canada has continued to raise interest rates, while on the weekend, the Minister of Finance himself suggested raising taxes and cutting expenditures. That's no balance. It's a contradiction. Once again, with developments like this in an economy that is beset by problems, shouldn't the Minister of Finance be concerned about the fact that this approach might start a recession?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the problems of the economy are clearly a concern of the Minister of Finance. The problem of inflation is going to be a fundamental objective that we will be addressing in this Budget, which is something that I have talked about on a number of occasions in this House.

The Hon. Member points back to 1982. If he thinks back to what he is saying about 1982, the previous Government ignored the problem of inflation, swept the problem of inflation under the carpet and let the—

An Hon. Member: Remember the 6 and 5 program.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke): No, 6 and 5 came after the recession, I remind the Hon. Member. It was the problems that the previous Government swept under the carpet before the recession which led to the high rates of inflation. The high rates of inflation led directly to the high interest rates, and those high interest rates were what absolutely destroyed the economy in 1982. We on this side of the House have the sense to learn from past mistakes so we can avoid the problems of 1982.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA MINISTER OF STATE

Mr. Speaker: I would like to bring to the Members' attention the presence in the gallery of the Hon. Dr. Terry Huberts, Minister of State for Vancouver Island Coast and North Coast and Minister responsible for Parks in the Province of British Columbia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINORITIES

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government is clearly developing a tendency to indulge in arm twisting. It has a team of bouncers to take care of the provinces. The Minister for International Trade blackmailed Newfoundland a few weeks ago, and in Manitoba, the Secretary of State was putting pressure on the Francophone minority by promising federal grants in exchange for support for Meech Lake. Will the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister demand that the Secretary of State extend an official apology, since he should not be blackmailing the minorities of this country?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, I had a very successful meeting with the Société franco-manitobaine. We discussed many subjects, and there was certainly no pressure on any aspect. The only reason I was there was to promote our linguistic duality and to support official-language minority communities.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, that isn't what the notes tell us, but let's leave—

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE ON MINORITY LANGUAGE RIGHTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I want to direct a supplementary to that same Minister. He said lately that "Within the English community in Québec, there is a feeling of frustration, a feeling of isolation". In his report the Commissioner of Official Languages also states the same thing.

Many people in this country cannot have their children educated in their own language, cannot go to courts in their own language, and cannot communicate in their own language. It is time for action. I ask the Minister will he comply or will he at least meet the requirements of the day and have a federal-provincial conference called immediately to look at and study attentively the problems of minority language rights in this country?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, I had an excellent meeting last Friday with the Commissioner of Official Languages, Mr. Fortier; who has brought forward many good recommendations. I have asked a number of my officials to give me a very immediate review of those recommendations to see how some of them can be best implemented.

We understand that this is a very sensitive issue. It takes principled leadership and a serene and respectful manner. Both communities, the Anglophone community in Québec, and the majority Francophone community in Québec very much are saying the same things. What we are trying to do is to find opportunities for more dialogue, opportunities to give both communities sustenance and to make sure that they both understand that this is what our distinct society is all about.

HOUSING

COST OF HOME OWNERSHIP

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Housing. Today Canadians are dismayed about whether the Minister's priorities have changed since he became Minister. In a Toronto newspaper today, the Minister made the outrageous statement that Canadians can no longer assume that 30 per cent of their income will get them reasonable accommodation.

It was not long ago that the Minister could be counted on as someone who was willing to stand up for the Canadian dream of owning a home. Now it turns out that the Minister will be remembered as the person who sold it out.

My question is this. Why is the Minister now telling Canadians that they have to abandon the great national dream of owning their own home unless they are prepared to pay more than 30 per cent of their income towards the cost of putting a roof over their heads? Doesn't this Government have any heart left?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member has been reading the newspapers. I hope that he will try to read them a little more carefully than he appears to have done this time. Certainly no one is telling the Canadian people that the dream of owning a home has come to an end, certainly not me and certainly not the Government. Our goal is to try to make sure that every Canadian does have a roof over his or her head and a roof that is affordable to them.

The indication that the Hon. Member refers to in the press today was aimed at just dealing with the facts of life as they are in the country at the moment. Many, many people, as the Hon. Member knows, pay more than 30 per cent of their income towards the cost of housing. I want that to come down. So does the Government. That is what we are aiming to try our best to do.

HOUSING CO-OPERATIVES

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): The reality of the situation is this. Does the Minister not know that people in Vancouver, in Toronto, in London and other cities across this great country have to go to food banks because more than half of their total income has to go towards rents?

The Minister says that everybody is getting squeezed by the Budget. If the poorest people in this country are squeezed any harder they will not stand a chance of ever getting back on their feet. Will the Government fight the deficit solely on the backs of the poor?

• (1440)

Does the Minister plan to cut housing co-operatives and social projects, and leave the families who live in them to fend for themselves?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member and all Members of the House will have to await the Budget on Thursday before we know, before I know, before everyone knows exactly what are the terms of the Budget.

I can assure the Hon. Member that this Government and this Minister will do everything they possibly can to assist Canadians to have housing that is affordable to them.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT BANK OF CANADA ROLL BACK INTEREST RATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I am sure you are aware, like everyone in the country, that the Budget on Thursday will bring about tax increases and program cuts for ordinary Canadians.

Since interest rates in this country are now more than 3 per cent higher than those in the United States, instead of raising taxes for ordinary people and cutting back on programs for ordinary people, when will the Minister tell the Governor of the Bank of Canada, John Crow, that the time has come to roll back interest rates so they are at least on a level that is near the rate in the United States?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is getting quite selective. If he looks at the market rates of interest he will see that they are in the 2 per cent to 2-1/4 per cent range, not the 3 per cent range he has indicated.

The substance of his question is that the Governor of the Bank of Canada should just roll back interest rates. I ask him to consider how the Governor of the Bank of Canada would do that. The way I suggest he would do that is to print money. We all know that printing money leads to inflation, more inflation leads to higher interest rates, and that is exactly what we are trying to avoid.

We are trying to avoid the problems we got into in 1981 and 1982 when inflation ran at 13 per cent and led to 22 per cent and 23 per cent interest rates at the time.

Surely the Hon. Member would like us to learn from mistakes of the past.

INTEREST RATE FORECASTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister talks about mistakes of the past. I remember very well the Budget last year when the Minister forecast interest rates in this country of 7.8 per cent for 1989. The interest rate is some 5 per cent higher, adding billions of dollars to the interest payments on the national debt.

Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Finance tell us what guarantee we have that his forecast will be any more accurate this year than it was last year, or can we expect another multi-billion dollar mistake to be paid for by ordinary Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, over the past four years since we have been in office I think the record of the Government in making projections on the level of the deficit and the level of economic growth and of interest rates has been as good as any Government in many, many years.

If the Hon. Member wants to go back and look at what the consensus of private sector forecasters has been over the same four-year period, recognizing that forecasts are made for the future and are sometimes hard to predict, the record of this Government is better than the consensus of private sector forecasters during the four years we have been in office.

TAXATION

PROPOSED NATIONAL SALES TAX – ROLE OF PROVINCES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Without the co-operation of his provincial counterparts, a fair and equitable national sales tax may never see the light of the day. Some Premiers have been highly critical of a national sales tax program.

I understand that the Minister met with his provincial colleagues recently. Could he tell us if he has made any progress? Will he have the co-operation to ensure that all Canadians will be part of a fair national sales tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, a national sales tax is quite a complex undertaking. As he said, we have had consultations with the Finance Ministers of the provinces for about two years now. We have thoroughly assessed the issues that are exposed in the analysis of a national sales tax.

I think there is a very clear understanding of the urgent need for the federal Government to reform the federal sales tax a hidden tax which is very destructive in the economy today.

I have tried to assess the urgency, the commitment of the provinces to changing their sales tax and I have to say that at this point in time I think a national sales tax is out of reach. However, I do believe that it is essential that the federal Government move ahead with its sales tax reforms so I have advised my colleagues in the provincial Governments this morning of our desire to proceed with federal sales tax reform and acknowledged the very great commitment that they made to the national sales tax objective. Unfortunately, however, that is out of reach at this point in time.

TRADE

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORT TAX

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade I will direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the softwood lumber export tax.

Last Friday afternoon the G.W. Martin Company in Sault Ste. Marie and Searchmont laid off some 300 workers, and another couple of hundred are being laid off in the bush operations. This brings to over 1,300 the number of workers who have been laid off since the Government imposed the export tax on January 1, 1987. This company complained that it had spent over $1 million on export tax and was shutting down because of losses in the operation of these two mills.

Can the Minister tell these laid-off workers exactly what action the Government plans to take to provide some relief to them for the loss of jobs and the losses to the communities throughout northern Ontario?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, everyone is aware of the critical situation in which the solid wood producers find themselves in the present circumstances, particularly here in Ontario.

There are a number of factors, only one of which concerns the softwood lumber tax. There is no doubt that the Province of Ontario, which has benefited from this tax immensely, has flexibility that, if properly managed, could offer some relief to those who are the worst affected. An industry that is investing in the current year roughly $6 billion in expansion, that is the industry in total, is hardly one that is in dire straits.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that these employees who have been laid off are in dire straits, as are many other workers in northern Ontario.

REQUEST THAT TAX AGREEMENT BE RENEGOTIATED

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, why does the Government of Canada steadfastly refuse to renegotiate and eliminate this export tax? There is a solid provision in the Memorandum of Understanding, under Section 8, to renegotiate the tax if circumstances have changed. Clearly, circumstances have changed in northern Ontario. Companies are going broke, workers are being laid off, plants are being shut down, and whole communities are being shut down because of this tax.

Surely that is reason enough to go to the Americans to renegotiate this? If they refuse, then there is provision under Section 9 of the agreement to do away with the tax unilaterally. I think it is about time the Government did one or the other.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend demonstrates knowledge of the provisions in the Memorandum of Understanding. As soon as the provinces have taken measures to offset the tax, as every province has done in Canada except Ontario, we will have a basis for negotiating out of the agreement.

If he wants to help his constituents in northern Ontario, perhaps he ought to make a trip to Queen's Park, as I have advised him to do, to encourage the Government there to do what every province has done, and put us on a basis to permit us to get out of this agreement.

MULTICULTURALISM

CHINESE CANADIANS – APOLOGY SOUGHT FOR PAST TREATMENT

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have an urgent question for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. Since September of 1984, Chinese Canadians in my riding of Hamilton West as well as those in ridings throughout Canada have been pleading for a bipartisan parliamentary resolution for an apology from the Government, acknowledging the injustice and the appropriate remedial action to be taken by the Government over the head tax and the Exclusion Act forced on Chinese immigrants early in the century.

I ask the Minister whether he intends to introduce such a motion in Parliament, a motion which I am sure would have the full support of all Parties, acknowledging the disgraceful way Canada treated one of its earliest immigrant peoples, peoples who are largely responsible for building Canada from coast to coast.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. Of course, it is the same question that was raised by the Hon. Member from Vancouver at the end of last week.

I indicated clearly that I have met with members of the community, in particular representatives of the CCNC on a number of occasions. I appreciated very much the manner in which they helped us in our understanding of the issue. I met my commitment, which was to present the proposals they brought forward to the Government. Those are now under review and discussion.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, there have been repeated requests, and of course a litany of denials. Just last week, the Minister, as he reminded us again, said that he met his commitment to the community completely in his meeting with them. The Government has given the the Chinese Canadian community nothing but meetings. The chronology since 1984 names Jack Murta, Otto Jelinek, David Crombie, and now the present Minister.

Besides the money the Chinese community is seeking in compensation, will the Minister not agree that his first order of business in this matter should be a parliamentary resolution acknowledging these past injustices?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, for some 47 years the country waited to see what would happen to a dark stain that had been placed on our record as a people. We as a Government addressed ourselves to the matter. We brought forward redress and an apology to Canadians of Japanese origin. At that time we brought out a very important initiative on race relations. A foundation will be established, with legislation to be brought forward soon.

Our commitment to multiculturalism and the creation of a fairer, more open and more understanding society is firm. There has been the establishment of a new Department by the Prime Minister, there has been legislation on race relations and heritage languages, and a new Citizenship Act or amendments to it will be brought forward soon. We have nothing to be ashamed of for what we are doing as a Government.

ALLEGED REDUCTION OF PERSON YEARS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Yvon Côté (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board.

Some medias are predicting that major cuts will be made in the Public Service; furthermore, it seems that these cuts will be included in the Budget Estimates.

I would therefore like to know from the President of the Treasury Board when his Estimates will be tabled, so that we can find out more.

[English]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we are continuing the program that was announced several years ago to reduce the number of person years in the Public Service by 15,000 overall, keeping in mind the importance of safety, health, security, and service to the public. I am happy to say that that has all been done with minimal lay-offs.

In terms of targets for the current fiscal year, I will be tabling the Main Estimates this Friday, April 28, and details will be contained therein.

THE ENVIRONMENT

SPILLAGE OF TOXIC MATERIALS INTO SAINT-MAURICE RIVER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Cid Samson (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment.

Page 518 of the Sinclair Report states that the Belgo and CIP plants in the St. Maurice Valley failed their toxicity tests conducted by the Department from 1978 to 1985. That same page also says that factories are dumping non-filterable toxic substances into the St. Maurice River and that in sufficient quantity, these substances are highly toxic to health.

The people of Québec are rightly concerned. My question therefore is: Has the dumping of non-filterable toxic substances been stopped? And when will the Minister start prosecuting?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, concerning the recent dumping mentioned in the press, we filed a first complaint for failure to notify Environment Canada and RCMP investigators are completing their investigation to determine whether or not there are grounds for prosecution, depending on whether the PCB standards issued by Environment Canada were respected or not.

NEWCASTLE, N.B.—POLLUTION OF WATER SUPPLY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of the Environment. Residents of Newcastle, New Brunswick, are justifiably afraid to drink the local water supplies because of toxic pollution. Has the Minister ordered an investigation into the source of the pollution, and who will pay for the urgent clean-up of this water supply?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the first information we have about this contamination is that it has been found in the Mitchell Avenue well. We suspect that it might be related to the exportations of an industrial wood plant in previous years. We are waiting for more information.

For the time being, people are being warned not to drink or use this water for cooking purposes. The City of Newcastle, with the help of the New Brunswick Government, is distributing bottled water to them. We are monitoring the information and are advising people on how to conduct the services there. We will have a more detailed report in a few days.

SMALL BUSINESSES

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses. Given that interest rates are at their highest level in years, that many small businesses must borrow to purchase stock for the new season and that small businesses cannot afford to do so at these impossibly high rates, what measures will the Minister be taking so that small businesses do not have to suffer because of the Government's misguided plan to curb inflation on the backs of small businesses?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that the first thing we will do is make sure that interest rates stay a full 7 per cent or 8 per cent below where they were in 1982.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hockin: Perhaps the Hon. Member wants to know precisely what the Government has been doing. The Small Business Loans Act has been very, very successful in the last three years. We will be improving it still further. As well, the Federal Business Development Bank is putting together a whole new menu of approaches for the small business sector, and financing opportunities there will be announced shortly.

LOAN GUARANTEE PROGRAM

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, in addition to the high interest rates that are killing the small business community of Canada, small businesses are being devastated by the reduction of the loan guarantee program to 85 per cent, something which is nothing less than a swift kick in the pants to small business. Is the Minister prepared today to reinstate the loan guarantee to 100 per cent before the small business community collapses, taking the whole economy of Canada down with it? If not, why not?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, one reason why not is that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business disagrees with the Hon. Member. It likes the present scheme and wants to see it extended.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

NATIONAL FRIENDSHIP CENTRES—FEDERAL FUNDING

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. The directors of National Friendship Centres have been advised by the Secretary of State that those 99 centres across Canada will have their first budget this year slashed by 15 per cent in an effort to reduce the federal deficit. There was no consultation, no one's advice was sought. Once again the Government did not allow native people the opportunity to provide input. How can the Secretary of State justify slashing these funds for aboriginal peoples' programs?

• (1500)

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, I have visited a Friendship Centre. I recognize their benefit. I can quietly tell Members of the House that they provide a very efficient and effective service to the community, and a very needed service.

I do not know from where the Hon. Member gets her information. However, I would hope the Hon. Member would wait for the Minister of Finance to speak on Thursday before she presumes anything.

Mr. Speaker: Given the time I must move on to the Hon. Member for Surrey North, with a single question, please.

HOUSING

PERSONAL HOUSING COSTS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Housing.

Canadians were shocked and dismayed by the Minister's statement today that 30 per cent of personal income is no longer a realistic figure for meeting personal housing costs.

The Minister continues to back away from the positions of principle he took as a back-bencher.

Can the Minister tell the House what his new target figure is? Can he explain why he has abandoned the CMHC figure which until very recently was 25 per cent, not 30 per cent?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, for a long time it has been traditional to consider 30 per cent as the amount that Canadians would normally and reasonably spend on housing. That certainly is and continues to be the target of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It continues to be the target of the Government, and it continues to be my target.

Unfortunately and realistically, and I know the Hon. Member is well aware of this when he looks at his own city and other communities, that figure of 30 per cent does not hold true these days. Notwithstanding that fact, it certainly is the target. The aim is to provide affordable housing for Canadians, and to try our very best to ensure that Canadians do not have to spend more than 30 per cent of their incomes on affordable housing.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION FUNDING—NATIVE PEOPLES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Nault:

That this House recognize that the Government's arbitrary and misanthropic policy of unilaterally capping future funding for post-secondary education for Canada's native peoples severely undermines the right and efforts of these peoples to enhance their capacity to make meaningful and lasting improvements to their economic and social conditions and to establish their self-reliance, thereby condemning them to unacceptable living conditions and driving them to desperate measures; and

That this House urge the Government to terminate its plans to cap this funding and to take steps to establish effective bilateral consultations on this and other matters vital to the improvement of the lives of and the ending of discrimination toward these Native peoples.

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to the issue before us, which is a most important one.

I would like to remind Members of the House that my riding of Regina—Wascana is the home of Canada's first fully accredited Indian university, named the Saskatchewan Indian Federated College. It is affiliated with the campus of the University of Regina.

The school population has virtually exploded in recent years, to our benefit. Currently there are expansion plans, and I have not heard that this position has been withdrawn. Given the tenor of the current debate before us, my wish is that this goal will soon come true, and I assure them that I will work toward that goal with them as best I can.

In March the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux) introduced a new policy for native students attending post-secondary institutions. Without question this program is the fairest and most generous of its kind in the world. It is a responsible program, and that is why I am pleased to address the subject.

Federal funding for post-secondary education has increased dramatically over the past decade, which has been alluded to by Members on both sides of the House. Let us not forget that there has been a dramatic increase in the funding. In 1977–78 when the previous E-12 program was first adopted, the federal Government provided approximately $2,600 per capita in assistance to approximately 3,500 Indian students. In 1988–89 the budget for the program was close to $130 million, and provided close to $9,000 per year to each of some 15,000 students.

The Government's Post-secondary Student Assistance Program is among the most generous in the world, and it is a significant improvement over the provisions of the previous E-12 program. I defy anyone to show us a program that is more generous.

The objective of the new policy is to help Indian and Inuit students gain access to a post-secondary education in order that they can pursue individual careers and contribute to the achievement of Indian self-government and self-reliance while building a better Canada.

I would like to take some time to explain the benefits available to eligible students. Tuition assistance is provided to eligible full-time and part-time students. This category of benefits includes students' fees for registration, tuition, and the cost of books and supplies required for a particular course of studies. In other words, if a science student is required to have a lab coat, that coat would be an eligible expense. If an economics major is required to have a calculator, the program would cover the cost of the calculator.

In addition to tuition assistance, full-time students who are required to live away from their permanent place of residence may receive a wide range of benefits. For example, they may qualify for a travel grant to return to their home once every semester for themselves and any dependants who reside with them. I see little restriction in this policy. These students are also eligible to receive allowances to help cover their living expenses of food, rent, heat, hydro, day care, and other related expenses. In areas where rental costs are higher than normal, Indian students with two or more dependants may receive a special rent supplement.

Beginning in the next academic year single students may receive a maximum monthly living allowance of $675. A married student with an employed spouse and three dependants will receive a maximum of $1,205 per month. A single parent with three dependants will receive a maximum of $1,355 per month, plus a rental supplement where applicable.

It is true that under the new program some students may experience a decline in the level of assistance that they receive. I would like to stress that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has already made it clear that Indian administering organizations will be given significant latitude in dealing with the special needs of these students. Students will be eligible for post-secondary assistance for the official length of the program that they are pursuing. For example, if they are studying for a medical degree they will be assisted for the full length of the course of study. The program also provides for an additional year of government assistance where it is justified.

It is true that the federal Government will no longer fund students permanently, regardless of their progress. The new policy also enables administering organizations to offer special incentives to eligible students. For example, academic achievement scholarships of up to $1,000 may be awarded to community college, CEGEP and undergraduate students who maintain an average of B or higher.

Undergraduate students may also be eligible for strategic studies scholarships which may be worth up to $3,500, to encourage students to pursue courses of study that will directly contribute to achieving self-government and economic self-reliance.

Incentives are available for full-time students enrolled in an advanced or professional degree program such as a Master's or a doctoral program. These students are eligible for a one-time contribution of up to $1,500.

Despite the significant range of levels of assistance available to Indian post-secondary students, some would argue that that is not enough. These people want the federal Government to guarantee individual natives a free post-secondary education. They want the federal Government to fund each individual for as long as it takes. Unfortunately, that is not a realistic situation.

I can think of no other group in Canadian society that has access to such a focused generous program, nor can I identify a group that is as needful for this type of assistance. Education will open the door to a more fulfilling future for Canada's Indians. We have a social obligation to contribute to that progress.

• (1510)

Mr. Schneider: We have an excellent track record in supporting post-secondary education for Indian students and the new policy will only enhance that record. There is not a Canadian who upon a fair evaluation of the Minister's proposals can say this is not a responsible approach to Indian and Inuit education.

Mrs. Gaffney: Madam Speaker, the Member from Regina stated that no other group of people in Canada has such a generous access to funding for post-secondary education, and yet a single native student receives a maximum allowance of $675 per month in comparison to $900 per month for students from developing nations under the Government Commonwealth Programs. I would like the Hon. Member to speak to this, please.

Mr. Schneider: Madam Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for the question, particularly as we know one another from a previous jurisdiction. I am pleased to see her in the House of Commons, and I say that sincerely.

The Member makes specific use of a singular statistic and, by placing the question before me, attempts to get me to agree with her selective use of statistics. In the course of my remarks to the House, I did allude to several programs of benefit that are available to our native Indian and Inuit community. It simply does not stop at one single item. I know there are other questions. I cannot elaborate on everything, but I am happy to repeat what I said earlier.

Very, very briefly, there is a matter of tuition and a matter of articles required within the university or college jurisdiction. There was funding available to allow the individual as well as those dependants living at home to leave their place of educational learning to return home. The list goes on and on. To re-emphasize, $2,600 per capita was spent some years ago. Today approximately $9,000 per individual Indian student is made available. I think that speaks well for the Government and for the commitment of this Government which truly represents the people of Canada.

Mr. Soetens: Madam Speaker, there has been a lot of rhetoric on this particular issue for the last few weeks, both inside and outside the House. It brings to mind a certain clarification that I would like to have and it might help those who are participating in this debate to understand as well. The policy relates to a concern expressed by some students who are saying, in fact, that the policy forces students to attend specific universities and to take specific courses defined by the Government, a program in which the students themselves argue they have no input.

Can the Hon. Member please clarify whether the new announced policy really imposes these restrictions on individual students?

Mr. Schneider: Madam Speaker, I take this question with a certain degree of pleasure in that it does have a tendency to remove these clouds of suspicion, at least to those who are listening to the Government policy. The clouds of suspicion, of course, have been placed there appropriately by the Opposition—appropriately at least in their minds—and from our position, of course, are certainly not justified.

To get to the meat of the question, there are four points I want to make very clear to this House, to members of the Opposition and to Canadians generally. Students, of course, are free to attend the university of their choice and to take whatever course of study they wish, a freedom I would suggest that has yet to stand the test of equality anywhere else. They can do this without any restriction on the living allowances to which they are entitled provided they are within the over-all limits stated in the policy. Canadians, of course, charge us with the responsibility of making sure that the policies we provide have some sense to them.

The policy states that tuition support and travel allowances will be limited to the costs at the nearest university offering the course of study comparable to the one chosen by the student. I think that is fair. Incentive grants are provided to students who choose to enrol in some specific courses, but again we emphasize that students are not obliged to take these courses.

Mrs. Catterall: Madam Speaker, on Friday in the House I brought to the attention of Hon. Members the case of a young native boy, the adopted son of two non-native parents. His parents are desperately seeking financial help to provide the residential treatment their son needs for severe emotional and behavioural problems. Some Members opposite insisted on casting the issue as an educational one, and that is why I am returning to it.

This is not an educational issue, an issue which is the responsibility of the province or of the local school boards. It is rather a question of health care and equal access for native children to care and to opportunities. The boy suffers from foetal alcohol syndrome, a medical condition which affects native children disproportionately and results in severe problems. The condition leads to erratic and violent behaviour. This boy has been professionally diagnosed several times as needing residential treatment.

Funding could be available through the province if the child were not a status Indian. His parents then could enter into an agreement to allow the Children's Aid Society to take over the care of their child and he would get the residential treatment and the help needed for his medical problem. But that cannot happen because the minute his parents do that the Children's Aid Society is obliged to consult with the band from which the boy came. The parents jeopardize their custody of the child to provide the care he needs for his medical problems.

An Hon. Member: This is a long question, Madam Speaker.

Mrs. Catterall: With respect, Madam Speaker, my understanding is that this period is for comments and questions. This is a comment.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member is quite right in saying that this period is reserved for questions and comments. The Chair was listening rather carefully to what the Hon. Member was saying. I must admit that I was, up to a point, wondering about the relevancy of the comment being made by the Hon. Member, a comment which was very interesting and I am sure is raised for a very good reason, but I have to wonder about the relevancy of this comment to the motion before the House now. The Hon. Member may want to link this to the motion before the House so that the Hon. Member from Regina—Wascana can answer.

Mrs. Catterall: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to draw the relevance of the question to you as I did on Friday when I first raised it. This debate has been very wide ranging. One particular speech this morning from the opposite benches referred to Indian businesses, Indian culture, elementary school programs and newspaper and television programs. The question of post-secondary education is a wide ranging subject tied to a whole cultural tradition.

In debate this morning the matter was referred to without interruption from the Chair. There is a serious issue of how many young native children never have the opportunity to access the program under discussion, whatever its faults and shortcomings may be.

This boy is 12 years old. He desperately needs help. He has only a few short years in which to get that help to allow him to complete a normal education and be able to take advantage of this and other programs. Should this boy be denied the opportunity to grow up whole and healthy? I plead with Hon. Members opposite who are still in the House, and particularly with the Minister, to look into this particular case and into cases of treatment for children in this age bracket also in this situation who, without help, will never get anywhere. I ask him to confer with the Minister of Health as to why mental health is not in the Health Act of Canada.

An Hon. Member: This is a long question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will allow a rebuttal from the Hon. Member. One minute, please.

Mr. Schneider: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was hoping I would have five or ten minutes to give an answer.

• (1520)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will allow rebuttal from the Hon. Member. One minute.

Mr. Schneider: I was hoping I would have five or ten minutes, because I would like to open my remarks by congratulating the Member beside us, who is also well known to me in "Another World" I am convinced that her contribution to Government is going to be as significant as it was before. The matter that she raises is one that seems to be before our concerned Governments throughout Canada.

As an example, my wife is in charge of a special program in Regina called the Balfour Special Tutorial Program, whose prime focus is on the education of pregnant girls. In that program, there are, as well as non-natives, native girls who have problems. I suggest some of them have children who have problems similar to what the Member cited.

What is the resolve? The resolve, with respect to the definition of a status Indian not being able to receive the same kind of attention as someone else unless status is given up, certainly sounds like a situation that bureaucracy itself has placed before us. Given the presence of our Minister, who saw his way here to the House to listen to this debate today, I am sure that he has borne this comment in his mind and it will be in his mind when this matter comes to his personal attention. I would encourage that this matter be documented and in fact sent on to him.

It does raise a suggestion and a question, that each and every one of us in Canada must regard the decision that was made to place our native population on reserves, and isolate them from society. They now want to come back to urban society to claim their rightful place in this community. It charges us all with a responsibility to make sure that this transition does happen and happens effectively.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing.

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Madam Speaker, I would begin by stating something that I mentioned to the Minister on Friday. I appreciate the sentiment with which his statements were made. I sensed a distinct desire on his part to find a resolution to this situation, and a sympathy and sincerity in dealing with that. I much appreciated that. There is, though, still much left to be resolved.

I want to make mention of a couple of comments from across the country. In my City of Saskatoon, the Star Phoenix, not known for its agreement with my Party, said today:

> It is high time Indian Affairs Minister Pierre Cadieux relented on his stubborn refusal to negotiate a better deal for Indian post-secondary students and stopped making deceptive statements about universal access. The logic is overwhelming.

The editorial went on:

> Beyond honouring a treaty obligation, the investment in Indian post-secondary education promises to pay dividends in reduced welfare and prison costs in the future, to say nothing of the positive contributions native doctors, lawyers, teachers, scientists, etc.,will make to Canadian society.
> With so much at stake, it is understandable the native community is fighting to resist funding ceilings which amount to quotas, living allowances cuts which will effectively rule out university attendance for many of them and performance demands which almost guarantee failure. The sooner Cadieux admits the short-sightedness of his department's money-saving tactic, the better for all Canadians.

As we have seen, unlike the rather unimaginative editorial in the Globe and Mail last week, Peter Debarats made some similar comments. I do not want to continue with the litany of problems with the Indian population and the circumstances in which they find themselves. We have heard that on a number of occasions in this debate. I think it is important that they be stated, but I would like to go on to point out some concerns with the guidelines.

The Government side has consistently said that these guidelines are better than the old E–12 guidelines. I would like to challenge that. It is not only Indians who question that these guidelines are better. I think the terminology and the facts speak for themselves.

The original E–12 guidelines were also problematic, and going back to them will not solve an enormous amount. At least they are better than these new guidelines which were adopted without effective consultation, and they should not be produced before that appropriate consultation. The original E–12 guidelines were also not subject to satisfactory consultation. They also were deemed to be undesirable by native students and native leaders.

In 1987, the former Minister of Indian Affairs made the matter worse and set the tone for these guidelines by essentially capping those funds, setting priorities for selecting students, placing a 12–month Canadian residency requirement, and removing half salary allowances for graduate students. These changes were made without effective consultation with native leaders. The present guidelines proposed by the Minister also were introduced without effective consultation. None of the 560–odd organizations and individuals consulted on these guidelines were in agreement with the changes.

I will just state what I see as the problems with the changes, and then ask two or three questions. The old E–12 guidelines provide that training and living allowance "shall be" provided. The changes in the new guidelines introduced the terminology "may". Special shelter allowance was available under the E–12 guidelines under certain circumstances. There is no allowance for that under the new guidelines. Tuition allowance, the previous guidelines point out that full fees "shall be paid". Under the new guidelines we have the terminology full fees "may" be paid. Under the old guidelines books and supplies "will" be paid "in full". In the new guidelines, moneys "may" be provided "toward" the cost. Students "shall receive "in full" travel allowance, under the old guidelines. They "may" qualify for a travel grant under the new guidelines.

There are a number of other indications of movements away from the old E–12 guidelines to a less desirable standard under the new ones. We have an increase in the global amount available to students. There had been no increase prior to these introduced changes on April 1 since the introduction of the first E–12 guidelines. A small increase of 6 or 7 per cent does not make up for the cost of living increase over time from the beginning of the previous guidelines to the introduction of these new guidelines, of something approaching 30 per cent.

In real terms, the new guidelines do not add anything very significant to the pockets of Indian students. Indeed, because of some allowance they were entitled to before, which they will now not be entitled to but may receive, they may in fact end up with less. Computations made by Indian groups indicate that almost all of the categories of students receiving assistance under the guidelines will in fact receive in total less under these guidelines than under the old guidelines. There is a movement away from seeing the moneys available as of right to the students to discretionary moneys available under certain circumstances. The terminology "may" is introduced in most of these new guidelines.

Rather than continue the rhetoric, I would like to pose three questions to the Minister. I do not expect him to answer them today, but I think it does suggest that the problems which these new guidelines give rise to. He said there is no cap on the guidelines. He said that there is no monetary limit available for financing post–secondary education students. The program just must work within a budget. Let me pose this question: Supposing, instead of the 15,000 students now who are now applying for money, 15,050 apply for the money, and there is only enough money for 15,000. Is the Government committed to ensuring that the funding will be available to provide for those other 50 students? If they are not committed to ensuring that funding will be available for those other 50 students, quite clearly there is a cap on the program.

With regard to Bill C–31, adding members to band lists, with regard to the demographics of the Indian population, 25 per cent being under 18, 50 per cent being under 25, as well as the backlog from those who did not make it through the previous education system, I wonder what steps the Minister and the Government are making to ensure that the required funding will be available once all of the students reach university and other post–secondary institutions. I think the question remains. Will the Government commit itself to ensuring that no Indian student wanting post–secondary education and qualified to undertake it will be denied the funding to do so? I think we still do not have an appropriate answer to that question.

• (1530)

There is much more to be done with regard to ensuring that these guidelines are appropriate and acceptable to the Indian population, to Indian students and leaders. That has not been done to date. There has not been effective consultation. We must ensure that that takes place. We must ensure that issues which separate the Government and Indian leaders are debated and resolved in the appropriate fashion.

To that end, I would like to move an amendment to the Motion which is on the floor. I move:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words following "desperate measures" and substituting the following therefor:
> "That this House call upon the Government to put a moratorium on the implementation of its amended post-secondary education policy for native students while the Government enters into bilateral negotiations with elected representatives of Canada's native peoples".

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there questions or comments? The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

Mr. Angus: Madam Speaker, I have a short question to ask of my colleague. Much has been said in the media during the last two or three weeks about the change from the E-12 guidelines to restrict the number of years that a native can participate in the program. Formerly, it was 48 months. I gather it is now 40.

As my Party's post-secondary critic, will the Hon. Member indicate to us what the ramifications of that change will be, particularly in terms of a native coming from a very remote reserve, perhaps from northern Ontario or northern Saskatchewan? In this case the person is arriving at a university or college for the first time. What kind of social pressures will be encountered? Is it realistic to expect a native Canadian to go through university in 40 months when, quite frankly, a number of non-native Canadians have not been able to do that?

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Madam Speaker, I thank my colleague for his question. It is an important one coming from a Member who is from a province with a large number of native students and who was formerly employed at a university. It is of a great deal of importance.

Essentially, many Indian students would be coming to university to study in a second language as well as in a second culture. It is no surprise that many of them find some difficulty with that and need some extra time in order to cover their studies. Therefore, any pressure or limitations placed on them is undesirable.

As the guidelines indicate, many of them will come with dependants, with children or spouses who are dependent on them. That also places extra pressures on them since there is inadequate funding available for child care and the other responsibilities of a family member performing an education function.

Clearly, it is a problem for students coming from Indian communities to universities or other post-secondary education institutions to have pressure put on them to finish their studies in a shorter period of time, rather than being given enough time to settle in and learn appropriate language skills as is necessary and so on.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): If there are no further questions or comments we will resume debate with the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields).

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Madam Speaker, I am happy to participate today in this debate. I am truly saddened by the political use of the situation, something which I feel to be very serious. This is a situation which is fraught with misunderstandings. In my view, the emotions on both sides of the issue have gotten out of control and are at a point where people are not listening to what others are saying.

First, I would like to say something about the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux). I have worked with this gentleman over the past four or five years in another portfolio and, indeed, in the present portfolio which he holds. I find him to be an honourable gentleman, one who speaks straight and calls it as he sees it. He tries his hardest to listen to the other person's point of view.

I have had countless meetings with him since this issue came to the fore in the last two to three weeks. I want to say that I have found his comments to be helpful. In my discussions with him I found that he was there to listen.

I also went over and visited with the students who are participating in this hunger strike or fast. I found that a great deal of emotion exists. I tried my hardest to make them understand that there are two sides to the issue. I thought that there really was a possibility that the students could sit down with the Minister upon stopping their hunger strike.

Basically, the students are demanding four things. First, they have said that they would like a moratorium set in place for a year on the issue of the new guidelines and before the new policy comes into effect on September 1. Second, they have said that they want to negotiate the capping or the cut-back in funding. Third, they want to have a bilateral process between the students and the Minister or the Minister's staff to try to work something out that would be suitable to all. Fourth, they would like to see a national student organization established.

I would like to go over these issues point by point. I think it is unfortunate that Members in the House either purposely or inadvertently are distorting the issues and really clouding what is happening. Let us look at the removing of the cap. Somehow during the debate that has somehow evolved into a cut-back.

• (1540)

The Ministry of Indian Affairs had to set up a budget last year so that the Department could take to Treasury Board a realistic budget stating how much money the Department is going to spend over the next year. All Members should recognize that any time a Minister is responsible for a department, he surely has to put in place a budget. Surely he has to say,"This is how much we have to set aside, President of the Treasury Board. This is how much we have to set aside for this specific activity."

For 1987-88, with the best available information the Department had at that time, it submitted a budget. Unfortunately, there was a shortfall affecting 899 students of which 137 were Bill C-31. This was a combination of regionally administered and band administered post-secondary education support. The Department then sat down, recognizing that they had a shortfall in their budget, and said, "We made some errors. Let us try to get better information from the bands who administer the funding and let us put in a better budget for the following year."

So for the fiscal year 1988-89, the budget was submitted. Much better information was available. It was able to bring that down to 243 students, of which 0 were Bill C-31, that had to be deferred to the following semester. These deferrals occurred because the Department did not have all of the information. It still does not have all the information. So it is an estimate of the amount of funds that is going to be spent on post-secondary education for the following year. This year the Department submitted a budget figure of $130 million for post-secondary education under this program. Not one cent was cut back from that figure submitted by the Department. The Department was not asked to trim anything off the submitted figure. The $130 million was the figure that the Department, preparing their budget, estimated would cover every native or Indian student in Canada who wanted to participate in post-secondary education. That is the estimate, $130 million. I submit that we will know if that estimate is correct—in fact, it may be oversubmitted—but we will not know that until students enrol in September and again in January for the various semesters and until the fiscal year is over.

I therefore submit, Madam Speaker, to you and to my my friends in the House that it is incumbent on the Department to submit a budget item. It is incumbent on the Department to submit to Treasury Board an estimate of the funds it is going to spend. One can see from the pattern that they are trying very hard. We have a problem in that though. That problems exists in gathering the data from the bands.

Sixty-seven per cent of all the funds budgeted for post-secondary education are administered by Indian organizations. One hundred per cent of the 243 student deferrals in the 1988-89 fiscal year which ended March 31 occurred in Manitoba. The Manitoba Indian organizations administer almost 100 per cent of the post-secondary education budget in that region. There is a difficulty, and I am not blaming anyone. I want that clearly understood in this House. There is obviously a problem that exists in Manitoba in two-way communication that will bring any misbudgeting into line.

What has the Minister said in this House repeatedly? He has stated emphatically that the budget is in place, the objective is to cover every single Indian student who qualifies to partake in post-secondary education. That is the objective of the Minister. That is the objective of the Department. And that is the objective of every Member in this House of Commons.

They say there could be a shortfall. There well could be. But there could well be a surplus. We will not know until this fiscal year is over. So to talk about a cut-back or a cap is just not true. Any budget item submitted is the best possible guess using the best possible information at your disposal to say to Treasury Board, this is how much money you have to allocate. There would be a cut-back if it came back from Treasury Board and they said, no, you cannot have $130 million, you are going to have to cut it back to $110 million. But that did not happen. Not one cent was taken from the original submission to Treasury Board of $130 million. It was approved. So we will have to wait and see.

Let us go then to the bilateral process. The Minister has said to the students and the Indian organizations that he is prepared to sit down between now and September 1 in a bilateral process to discuss the policy and make any changes that would improve the delivery of the policy, the delivery of the system or indeed change the policy before September 1. He has asked in return that the students stop the hunger strike. That is a reasonable request, in my view.

What the Minister has really said goes back to the moratorium. The Minister in effect has agreed to a moratorium on implementing the policy between now and September 1, a moratorium on the policy he has in place now that has been submitted and been published. This is all in place. He will sit down with the students or student organizations between now and September 1. In effect, that is a moratorium. He has said that he is not going to throw out the policy and go back to what was in existence two years ago, because this policy recognizes the cost of living increases that some of the Members have been talking about and has actually increased all of the assistance, whether it is training allowance or whatever, to all of the students in every category.

I have seen one situation in which a student will have a reduction. I discussed this with the Minister. He said that the program could be flexible enough to accommodate any variances that might exist. The students now have an opportunity to sit down with the Minister to examine the Post-Secondary Education Assistance Program and to point out those areas which they believe are wrong or unworkable and have them changed. This can be done between today and September 1.

When I visited the students they asked why the Minister would publish this now and not sit down with them. They asked why this is done without their consultation, and there was an argument about whether or not there was consultation. Much of the policy itself was sent to the bands.

I have not been privy to the information about what the responses were, but the students who will be going to university in September had to know what the guidelines would be. All of them got an increase in their student assistance. I asked the Minister about the student whose assistance will actually drop and was told that he would be very flexible when sitting down with the students and would try to correct this problem.

My appeal to the students is that the time has come to sit down with the Minister. Now is the time to work on this policy because there is, in effect, a moratorium in place now. There is a moratorium until September 1.

The students say they would like a national student organization. I met with those students and found them to be articulate and bright. Some of them have real leadership qualities. If they want a national student organization, I suggest they go out and organize one. Of course they will have more strength with a national student organization.

When I was going to university I saw student organization develop in Canada, but it was developed by the students. The Government will not organize a national student organization; the onus is on the students to do it. "You have the intelligence. You are bright. You have the initiative. You have the leadership. Go ahead and do it".

I want some reason to come into this whole question. I would like my friends from the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party to look at this as an issue about which no Member can claim sole moral integrity. We can all work together.

I believe our record has been exceptionally good in dealing with land claim settlements and many other issues we faced when we took office in 1984. I have sat on the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I worked well with members of the Official Opposition and of the New Democratic Party. We were able to resolve some very serious issues, and often there was full agreement.

I travelled across the country on a special committee. Keith Penner, a former Member, did extremely well in the committee. There was a consensus to help native people.

Obviously, education is key to the development of native people. I have seen this development in many of the ridings, but education for many bands in many areas is still low. There is a lot of work to do. As has been stated over and over again, our Government is committed to supporting Indian students and post-secondary education.

There is no cap. We have not put a cap on post-secondary education for native students. Like every other Department, there is a budget which was arrived at with the best information possible. The budget figure was submitted on the basis that it would account for every student who qualified to go on to post-secondary education. It even allows for students who come from some of the communities with what they think are university entrance qualifications but are not. We have even accounted for community colleges so they can prepare themselves much better for a full university load.

I plead with all Members of the House to work together to try and resolve this issue. Our message to the students should be that it is time to stop the fast. It is time to come to the House of Commons, sit down with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux), and resolve the situation as it should be resolved.

Ms. Blondin: Madam Speaker, in his remarks on the issue of post-secondary education funding and capping, the Hon. Member focused on the students who are on the hunger strike. This is an issue that the leaders were concerned about prior to the hunger strike. Does the Hon. Member not believe that the Minister has an obligation to negotiate with the leaders in good faith? What is stopping the Minister from negotiating with the leaders about the requests that were made by the leaders prior to March 22?

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the comment by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Ms. Blondin), but I would ask her to listen to what I said. There is no capping. In my view a cap means to spend a certain amount and no more.

The budget has increased every year. Capping the program would mean that $130 million would be spent next fiscal year, the following fiscal year, and the year following that. That is not the case. The Department, with the best available information it had, set a figure because Treasury Board asks the Department how much it will spend, by category and by program. Within the program of post-secondary education, with the best information available, the Department said that it estimates it will spend $130 million this fiscal year, 1989-90. Based on the information it has, it should cover every student who wants and qualifies for post-secondary education. There is no cap.

The Minister has met with the Indian leaders in the community. The predecessor to the Minister, who is now the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight), met with Indian leaders across the country in implementing this very program and discussed it with them. The present Minister inherited the job some two months ago and is following the program.

I hope that answers my hon. friend's question. There is no cap. It is a budget item, based on the best information available.

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member suggests that Indians should trust the Government on this issue because they were consulted. That point needs clarification.

• (1600)

Why should the Indians trust this Government? The Government said it consulted with 500 groups about this program. We have been unable to find one of those groups which supported the program or even felt it was consulted in the process.

One of the groups that was supposedly consulted was the New Democratic Party Saskatchewan caucus. We were never asked a question about it. We have never been told the result of any of those consultations. As far as we know, everyone consulted was against the program.

Indians thought the old program was bad and they said so. However, when they saw the new program, they felt that though the old program was bad, it was better than the new one. There was no cap on the old program. It allowed any number of students to be funded. The new program limits the number of students who can be funded. There is a cap in dollars.

One can put only so many through the educational system for so many dollars. If a cap is put on the dollars, it is put on the number of students that can enter the system. If the number of students who apply next year doubles, will the Government fund twice as many students with twice as much money?

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, my hon. friend said that the NDP caucus was not consulted, yet it submitted a letter expressing its concerns during the consultation process. It was consulted. The Hon. Member may just check it out, but a letter was written.

Mr. Hovdebo: I wrote the letter.

Mr. Shields: The Hon. Member says that he wrote the letter but he says that they were not consulted. I do not know what he is talking about. Obviously he does not read the letters he writes.

I would like to talk about the trust factor for a moment, if I may. I agree with the Hon. Member that Indian people have no reason to trust any Government for a number of things that have happened in the past. However, I think they have a lot more reason to trust this Government when they look at its record over the past four years.

I would like to point out some of the things the Government has done.

Mr. Hovdebo: Answer the question.

Mr. Shields: The bands will receive additional funds to defray costs arising from the reinstatement of Indian people or registration changes under the new Indian Act. There has been a new Indian Act passed. Bill C-123 clarifies the responsibilities of the Minister with respect to Indian minors trust accounts and increases the preferential treatment—

Mr. Hovdebo: Answer the question.

Mr. Shields: The Hon. Member says that I should answer the question. I am trying to answer the question, but the Hon. Member keeps interrupting and will not listen. That has been typical of this entire debate. No one is prepared to listen to another point of view.

Mr. Hovdebo: Will you fund twice as many students?

Mr. Shields: We are finding that the NDP, that socialist Party, will do anything to attempt to use in a political way a situation that I think is reprehensible.

I saw those same people go across Canada during the last election campaign scaring the living bejeesus out of all the senior citizens by telling them that they would lose their homes and their old age security because of free trade. I find that to be absolutely despicable, and I find them doing exactly the same thing today. They are doing exactly the same thing on an issue that should not be treated that way. Reasonable people should be trying to work out a solution to a very serious problem.

Mr. Nault: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it would be to the benefit of the House if we would stick to the amendment to the motion which the Hon. Member was supposed to be speaking on. In his ramblings of the last 20 minutes, I fail to see where he has even touched on the amendment to the motion.

Mr. Andre: You are pretty junior around here to be talking about the rules.

Mr. Gauthier: He is starting off pretty good.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

Mr. Nault: Harvie, I catch on quickly.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq.

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, after listening to the last speaker it would seem that he is prepared to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux) to reconsider the capping. The Hon. Member said that there is no capping, so I would urge him to tell the Minister not to cap the post-secondary funding.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this important debate, and I would like to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Nault), for sponsoring this significant motion on native post-secondary education. At the same time, as he has also acknowledged, it is unfortunate that this debate had to occur at all.

We would not be engaging the Government in this manner if we thought its policy was the right one. Fundamentally, what is at issue here is who decides what is best for aboriginal people, the Government or the aboriginal people themselves.

What is happening now in the case of post-secondary education is a classic conflict with respect to decision making between a Government that makes and imposes unilateral decisions and the aboriginal people who must live with those decisions.

The Government has characterized its new post-secondary program as being better and more generous than the program preceding it. It has said that it has consulted with Indian people. If that were the case, why have Indians across Canada risen up in protest? Why have several Indian students felt compelled to take the drastic step of a fast or a hunger strike to call attention to this situation?

The Government has tried to tell aboriginal people that it knows best what is good for them, and it has tried to convey that same message to the Canadian public. The aboriginal people of Canada are not buying that message, we on this side of the House are not buying it, and more and more Canadian people are not buying it.

The importance of obtaining higher education is a relatively new priority for aboriginal people. For the vast majority of us, until quite recently getting an education meant alienation from our people and our communities.

For years, young Indian and Inuit children were taken from their parents and sent away to residential schools where they received instruction in a foreign language about a foreign culture and where they were punished for speaking their own native language. When these children returned to their communities, they experienced great difficulties communicating with their parents and fitting back into the life-styles and ways of the community. They did not feel at ease in the non-aboriginal community. Is it any wonder that under these circumstances, most aboriginal people did not wish to pursue higher education? The costs in terms of loss of language, family, culture and identity were simply too high.

Fortunately the Government began to make greater efforts to reduce those human costs. It began building more schools in the communities where the people lived. It began to pay more attention to the fact that most Indian and Inuit were not even completing high school. More funding was provided to improve the large discrepancies in educational attainment between aboriginal and non-aboriginal people.

As educational services became more relevant to Indian and Inuit students, people began to realize that obtaining a higher education could be of benefit to themselves and to their communities. Education came to be looked at as the way out of the poverty and despair that continued to characterize their communities.

As more aboriginal students made it through the elementary and secondary levels and obtained the prerequisites for post-secondary studies, more decided to pursue higher learning. In 1960-61 only 60 Indian students were enrolled in university. In 1986-87 over 13,000 were enrolled in post-secondary institutions. In 1985-86, 933 Indian students graduated from universities and colleges. As more and more students entered the post-secondary system the budget increased. The Indian population has also increased. In 1961 there were approximately 192,000 Indians. In 1987 there were close to 416,000.

It is important for Hon. Members to realize that the aboriginal population is growing at a faster rate than the non-aboriginal population, and the Indian student population even more so in recent years due to the passage of Bill C-31. That Bill passed by the House in 1985 restored Indian status to thousands of Indian people who had lost it previously due to discriminatory provisions in the Indian Act. The Bill also made it possible for many others to obtain Indian status for the first time. Consequently, between 1985 and 1986 the Indian population increased by 7.7 per cent. Between 1986 and 1987 the population growth rate was 7.2 per cent.

Of great significance is the fact that the Indian population is very young. Sixty-four per cent are under the age of 25. Even the Department of Indian Affairs recognizes that the Indian leaders are coping with a baby boom which is creating major demands for education, employment, housing and other services.

The disparity between aboriginal and non-aboriginal economic conditions continues. Incomes remain substantially lower. The average income for Indians on reserves is 54 per cent of the average for the general population.

The recent report of the Canadian Human Rights Commission had a blunt message for the Government about the conditions of the aboriginal peoples. The report stated: "The situation faced by Canada's native peoples is in many ways a national tragedy. The grand promise of equality of opportunity that forms the central purpose of the Canadian Human Rights Act stands in stark contrast to the conditions in which many native people live".

Despite the continuing social and economic discrepancies between aboriginal and non-aboriginal people, acknowledged most recently by the Canadian Human Rights Commissioner, the Government has decided to restrict the access of native people to the program which offers the best hope for the future.

The Government states that it has increased the post-secondary budget, and that Indian students can still get a post-secondary education under the new government guidelines. What the Government does not say is that the budget increase is below the increase in the number of students who are applying for funding. Therefore, a large number of Indian students will only be able to get their post-secondary education when it is convenient for the Government, and not when it is convenient for the students.

By placing a ceiling on the amount of funding available in a given fiscal year, by capping the program funding, the Government is restricting access. Students who apply for post-secondary assistance after the funds have been totally utilized will be turned down. That is a fact, and it has already happened. That is what the Indian students are protesting. Over the past two years hundreds of Indian students have been denied access to post-secondary institutions when they wanted to go, due to the lack of funding in the Department's program.

The Department of Indian Affairs refers to them as "deferred" students. These students meet the program criteria and have been accepted into the post-secondary institutions, but their applications for assistance have been refused because the Department has run out of money. They are told that they have to wait until money becomes available, either because some other student drops out, or because a new fiscal year brings a new budget. How can any student plan for the future under these circumstances?

With respect to the Government's claim to have consulted with Indian people about this policy, I would like to put this issue into proper perspective.

The Government's tinkering with this program began in late 1986 when it imposed a deadline for the receipt of students' applications. Many students were not even made aware of the deadline until it had passed.

Then in May, 1987, the previous Minister of Indian Affairs announced interim changes to the Post-secondary Education Assistance Program. He imposed a cap on the program budget at the time and instituted a system of priorities for student assistance. Student applications were placed into five categories and priorized by the Department of Indian Affairs. Those in category one would receive assistance before those in category two, and so on. Students in category five would only receive funding if there was any money left over after all other categories had been funded.

Hon. Members should know that these changes were imposed on Indian people with no consultation whatsoever.

The Government knew that some students would not receive funding as a result of these interim changes to the program. In his letter of May 12 to the Indian Chiefs and Councils, the previous Minister of Indian Affairs, while announcing an increase in the budget, also stated: "Unlike the practice in previous years there will be no further increases later in this fiscal year. As a result, we may find ourselves faced with more eligible applicants than we can support".

The Minister also specified: "No appeal can be launched against a decision by the Department, a band council or tribal council who refuse assistance to a student on the basis that funds are no longer available regionally for student allowances".

Hon. Members should also know that the Minister was making these unilateral changes to the Post-secondary Education Assistance Program without waiting for the results of a major study on education being conducted by the Assembly of First Nations. Funding for the study was promised by the previous Liberal Government, and this commitment was upheld by the new Government's Minister of Indian Affairs, the former Member for Rosedale.

In his announcement of May, 1987, the Minister also stated that further modifications to the program were necessary. Naturally, Indian people expected that their study, when completed, would figure prominently in future directions for the program. Unfortunately, according to the Assembly of First Nations, this is not the case. The new program guidelines do not have the support or approval of the Indian people.

The Government must change the way it deals with aboriginal people and their concerns. What it calls consultation is very much one way, the Government's way. If Indian people had truly participated in decision-making on this issue, we would not be debating this issue today.

There has been much discussion about figures and data over the past few days. In his speech last Friday the Minister referred to the need for better data in order to forecast demand and costs better. The Minister would be well advised not to rely too much on his departmental officials to obtain that data. It will probably be inaccurate, as it has usually been.

As an example, I refer to his Department's forecasting of the number of Indians who would be eligible for Indian status as a result of the passage of Bill C-31. Those forecasts were grossly inadequate. His predecessor admitted that in this Chamber in response to a question posed by the former opposition critic for Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the former Member for Cochrane—Superior. This colossal miscalculation was noted in the Fifth Report of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development which was submitted to the House last August.

The report noted that although the Department had originally estimated 65,000 applicants, it had been obliged, on the basis of applications pouring in, to revise that number upwards to 118,000.

When that Bill was in the House and in committee, Indian people told the Government and the Minister of the day that the Department's figures were far too low. The Government did not listen. The Cabinet allocated funding for reinstated people on the basis of a totally inaccurate estimate. This is but one example of the unreliability of the departmental figures. It is no wonder aboriginal people are skeptical about the Department's ability to plan and budget properly.

• (1620)

I urge the Government to accept the call to terminate its plans to cap this funding and allow all interested native students to continue post-secondary education. Is the Government afraid that we might get too educated or that it might get too many educated natives who will understand their rights and demand fair treatment from the Government?

Mrs. Dobbie: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the comments of my hon. colleague opposite. I commend him for seeking and winning a seat in the House. It is a pleasure to have him here. I listened with a great deal of interest to what he said, and with a great deal of empathy too. I might say also that the Minister feels that empathy and that interest in the concerns of the native people in this country. He is very concerned that the educational system, the post-secondary educational system for natives, be one that is relevant and meets the needs of native students in Canada. He has, therefore, met with the leaders of the community throughout the past two months. He has met with the students who have come off the hunger strike. He has illustrated and demonstrated repeatedly, and he has said so in this House, that he is prepared to adjust and to improve the program wherever necessary. He has said that his door will always be open to good suggestions for improvements.

I really cannot understand why anyone in this House would believe that a moratorium would serve any useful purpose whatever. I think it would be pointless. I think we must work together, as the Hon. Member has suggested, consulting and dialoguing to find the correct solutions for the best interests of all the individual natives in the country.

Ms. Blondin: Madam Speaker, I was listening with great interest and satisfaction to the presentation made by the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Anawak). I commend him on his excellent presentation. Does the Hon. Member, feel with his background in business, that in view of the broad economic and community infrastructure created for native peoples across Canada, we can afford to have students on a waiting list for post-secondary education created by the capping of post-secondary education funding?

Mr. Anawak: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question. I really do not think that anything can be beneficial to the native people if they are held back because of cuts in post-secondary education funding.

We are getting to the point where we are demanding that we have equal access to the business community, to all the other things that are available today, to ensure that we are not a burden on the rest of the Canadian taxpayers.

Perhaps I could ask the Hon. Member who spoke earlier whether she thought we had the right to post-secondary education. Let me point out that from my perspective I think we earned that right by the Indian people coming here 40,000 years ago, with the Inuit following 4,000 years ago, and being here to welcome the Hon. Member's ancestors 500 years ago when they came.

• (1625)

[Translation]

Mr. Côté: Madam Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member's speech, and I think his comments were made seriously and in good faith. If I am not mistaken, the Hon. Member said at one point that certain authorizations or decisions emanating from the Department were not appropriate to the needs of the community. Let us suppose that is true, that the decisions were inappropriate. I would nevertheless like to point out that the Bill on the Table is aimed at giving our Indian communities more authority, and I wonder how appropriate the Hon. Member's own comment was, since from now on, the Indian community will be able to participate directly instead of going through the Department. It will now be able to take part in the decision-making process.

My question to the Hon. Member is: Does he realize that from now on, two-thirds of the programs may be administered by the Indian community?

[English]

Mr. Anawak: Madam Speaker, who administers the fund is not the point. At issue here is whether or not those funds are adequate. They are not adequate. The Department has simply transferred to Indian bands the responsibility for managing inadequate dollars. The bands are also administering the Department's programs and guidelines, not their own programs and guidelines. Further, the Minister of State for Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Ms. K. Campbell) earlier today referred to the need for the Department to obtain better data to be certain where the demand is because two-thirds of the bands administer the program. Since the initial limit on funds and interim changes were made to the program two years ago, Indian bands, organizations and individuals have expressed their disagreement with the policy and have told the Department that the changes are restricting access to the students.

If, despite these representations, the Government still does not know where the demand is, why did it proceed to make further unilateral changes to the program? Why did it not wait until it had determined, through proper consultation with the Indian people, the real nature of the demand and the need?

Mr. Kristiansen: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Anawak) for his comments. Let me state a concern. If the Government sets what appears to be arbitrary and unrealistic time limits on aboriginal students for completing degree programs and says that those native students left over after the cap is reached can apply for mainstream programs, what happens to people from a different culture and a different area if they are thrown into the pot with other students, many of whom come from families with long, academic, mainstream backgrounds?

I know from my own experience, both as a union representative and as a union minority relations officer in the western forest products industry, that even those within the majority cultures who come from families who do not have an academic background have larger drop-out rates and a more difficult time adjusting to the academic mainstream than do students from families whose ancestors have had post-secondary education. I know also, from that same experience, that problems of those who come from other minority cultures are compounded when added to the same problems facing working-class family students who do not have an academic historical background.

Can the Member give some idea of the impact that he has seen among people, especially in the far reaching areas of this country, perhaps even some individual or case histories? I just wonder if the Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Anawak) can perhaps give some individual or collective case histories, and some idea of the impact he has seen among people, especially in the far-reaching areas of this country's North, and the difficulties that those students have in adjusting to the kind of problems that even those of us have who come from the majority culture and urban areas when adjusting into the academic mainstream.

• (1630)

Mr. Anawak: I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his comment and question. In the North, and I say the North because that is the area I am most familiar with, we have been used to the education system for only the last 30-odd years. We have been introduced to that education system only in the last 30-odd years. What normally takes hundreds of years, we have been forced to go through within a space of three decades.

Hon. Members should be aware of the ramifications of going from totally living off the land—a hunting economy—to 35 years later living in a time of fax machines, television, instant communication, and the impact it has on that culture. Because of that, only now are we getting to the point where my generation is saying the importance of education cannot be under-emphasized. My parents did not realize the importance of education, of English education, which we now do. They realized the importance of education of our culture, and I must say I was fortunate in having been part of that generation that was taught the Inuit culture as well as taking part in this change. But it is true that there is a tremendous impact. I can count on one hand the number of Inuit lawyers or Inuit doctors, partly because of the problem we have in adapting to the education system and to the cultural change that we have had to go through.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in this debate, because I have several Indian families in my riding, and especially because of the fact that for twelve years, when I was an insurance broker and businessman, I did business with the Indians on the Kahnawake reserve, and I have always had a keen interest their circumstances, both present and future.

Madam Speaker, a number of serious allegations have been made in recent weeks about the Government's commitment to providing funding for the post-secondary education of Indians and Inuit. Today, Madam Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to set the record straight and give the House the assurance that we will continue to promote the interests of Canada's Indians and Inuit through education.

Here in Ottawa, Madam Speaker, a small group of Indian students have put their physical well-being at risk by starting a hunger strike to protest against the Post-Secondary Education Assistance Program announced last month.

These students are trying to obtain a moratorium on this policy. Such a moratorium is unnecessary, regressive and might be harmful to the interests of the majority of the students.

Madam Speaker, I am troubled by this gesture, and I find it hard to understand what they are trying to do. The new policy is clearly an improvement, if we compare it with the previous program known as the E-12 guidelines.

When the Post-Secondary Assistance Program was announced, the Government indicated that it would always be willing to consider recommendations from the Indian community.

Madam Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development also offered to work directly with the Assembly of First Nations, other Indian leaders and student representatives on a joint policy research and development program.

Under this proposal, all aspects of the program would be examined. Meanwhile, the new Post-Secondary Education Assistance Program would be available to students for the academic year 1989-90.

Madam Speaker, Hon. Members are aware that the Post-Secondary Education Assistance Program is one of the most successful programs ever undertaken by this Department.

Under the E-12 guidelines, the number of post-secondary students rose from 3,500 when the program was introduced in 1977-78 to about 15,000 in 1988-89. During the same period, the program's budget rose from $9 million to nearly $130 million.

Madam Speaker, we realize that even the most successful programs need updating and revising from time to time to meet changing of needs and emerging trends.

Madam Speaker, in this case, there was a need to increase the number of graduates, in other words, to ensure that larger numbers of Indian students finish their college or university education. And that, Madam Speaker, bearing in mind that the program's budget has to reflect today's economic reality.

A year ago, this Government announced that a consultation process would be initiated to make changes in the E-12 guidelines.

As part of this process, a draft policy was sent to all regions of the country, and meetings were held with Indian groups.

Madam Speaker, we were clearly committed to formulating a policy that met Indian and Inuit needs and aspirations.

Between July and December last year, representatives of Indian Affairs and Northern Development consulted with about 500 bands, tribal councils and students' groups.

These groups expressed their concerns and their recommendations were given serious thought. Following these consultations, the draft proposal which had been distributed in July 1988 was thoroughly revised.

Hon. Members who are familiar with the national study of the Assembly of First Nations on Indian education may have noticed that most of the study's recommendations concerning post-secondary education have been incorporated in the new policy. For instance, the Post-Secondary Education Assistance Program provides incentives and scholarships for students who want to take a course of study that would contribute directly to achieving Indian self-government and economic self-reliance.

Under the new policy, Madam Speaker, administering organizations have an even greater opportunity to participate directly in the post-secondary education process. The policy also establishes uniform rates of assistance which apply across the country, instead of the regional variations contained in the E-12 guidelines. Madam Speaker, the new policy also provides direct support to a number of Indian post-secondary institutions.

The new policy is a definite improvement over the E-12 guidelines in practically all respects. Tuition fees are now covered, regardless of time spent in post-secondary education. Allowances for living expenses are generally higher. These allowances range from $200 up to $1,355 per month for a married student with a spouse and three other dependants. Fifty dollars per month is provided for each additional dependant.

Madam Speaker, the new policy also provides for higher allowances for students living in areas where rental costs are highest.

Madam Speaker, these increased allowances are the direct result of the consultation process that I already mentioned. Moreover, the limits on student aid have been restructured. A student can now receive assistance for a college program, an undergraduate program and a program leading to a graduate diploma or a professional degree.

Students can also receive assistance for studies leading to a second bachelor's degree when a first bachelor's degree is a prerequisite. The new policy also presents an innovative system of incentive awards. The E-12 guidelines did not provide this kind of incentive. Indian and Inuit postgraduate students will receive a scholarship of up to $1,500. In addition, they will receive a special incentive award of up to $3,500 a year that will be given to students in programs that foster Indian self-government and economic self-reliance.

The new policy, Madam Speaker, also provides for scholarships to recognize academic success that will be awarded to students who maintain a B average or higher in their college or undergraduate program.

Madam Speaker, it is ironic that we are criticized for having set specific fields of study for the special incentive awards. The Assembly of First Nations recommended that we take such an approach. The changes to the program will ensure greater fairness and uniformity in administering this program. They will make it possible to put greater emphasis on academic success and obtaining a diploma. They will also enable Indian organizations to exercise greater control and provide better support for the objectives of Indian self-government and economic development.

Madam Speaker, this program is essential for Indians to take charge of their future. It is a good program. It is a generous program. In reality, it is the best in the world. A moratorium at this time would only benefit a limited number of students; a much larger number would suffer. We must therefore go ahead with this program and we intend to do so. I urge the Minister to do so.

• (1640)

[English]

Ms. Blondin: Madam Speaker, I would like to preface my question with a few comments. First, I would like to quote the words of the Minister of State for Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Ms. Campbell) when she was talking about the independence of the aboriginal community. She said: "The essence of democracy is that communities make decisions on the management of their affairs right in the community—. I have the highest confidence in the ability of the Boothroyd Band to manage its own affairs—".

How can the Hon. Member justify the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) allowing an unprecedented move to erode the unique constitutional status of aboriginal peoples by making a move to change this program policy without an adequate database and proper consultation with the aboriginal peoples of Canada? How can he justify that?

[Translation]

Mr. Jourdenais: Madam Speaker, I thank my colleague for asking me such a question. I just said in my speech that under the new policy, the Indian bands and organizations would be responsible for administering the program and they can do so now. If I understood the question correctly, she says that we did not consult. I also said in my speech that we consulted the bands as well as another organization whose name I forget—I apologize. But with the new policy, Indians will be able to ensure their own security, they will be able to choose themselves and decide on their appeal process, their own guidelines, manage their budget according to their own rules and procedure. What more does she want, Madam Speaker?

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, as always, I listened very dutifully to the Hon. Member's comments.

Mr. Côté: Towards the end!

Mr. Prud'homme: I heard someone say "towards the end", and it was my old friend—I prefer to call him by name Mr. Lopez.

Madam Speaker, we can listen—

An Hon. Member: Not him, the new Member!

Mr. Prud'homme: Oh, the new Member for Richmond (Mr. Côté) says it was towards the end.

The Hon. Member should realize that we can listen to a speech in our offices, and I always listen to my hon. colleagues. If we are interested in commenting, we rush to the House.

I think that the Hon. Member's remarks were eminently sensible, although it sounded very paternalistic.

I would like to ask him: Does he realize, or would he care to comment—I could speak until my time expires but I would rather ask him: These people who were forgotten, these people who have been frustrated and ignored,—I know what he is going to say, but I want to have my say as well—don't we have a collective responsibility across this country to pay more attention to these people who were the first citizens of this country? I know and the Hon. Member knows, being a Francophone, a Québecer and a French Canadian—I prefer the term French Canadian myself—that our ancestors took this land. Doesn't that give us an additional obligation? An obligation to understand, first of all, that these people want to be themselves? The Hon. Member knows I support the clause in Meech Lake which says that Québec is a distinct society. If anyone is truly distinct and has the right to be recognized as such, I think our first citizens are in that category.

If we accept this as a given, we must be consistent and say that this is certainly one area where we cannot afford to cut back.

Mr. Jourdenais: Madam Speaker, when I saw the Hon. Member come in the House, I knew why. I know the Hon. Member very well.

He said a few things that struck me. I know he is going to accuse me of petty politics, but he said that the people who arrived in this country 5,000 years ago as his colleague pointed out, and he is mixed up, because he said 40,000, 5,000—but in any case, they were already in this country before we French Canadians arrived—

Mr. Prud'homme: Well before!

Mr. Jourdenais: Well before. He said they had been frustrated and ignored.

Was the Hon. Member not part of a government that frustrated and ignored those people for twenty years? Could he explain this extraordinary about-face in the Liberal Party which is now saying that we must help them, we must do this, we must do that? Something they conveniently forgot when they were in power.

Between 1977 and the present day, we have increased the budget by $130 million, and the Minister has even said that if it were necessary, he would go to Treasury Board, and he said that from now on, under the new program, there would be no more frustration as my hon. colleague said so eloquently.

I know that the Hon. Member has been here for 25 years. He is our most senior Member. I know that he sets himself up as a champion of minority groups. We talked about this last week when we met. However, I wonder—I have followed his career, as I said earlier, but I did not follow every single debate in the House. I did not have the privilege, since the proceedings were not televised at the time. I met him several times at conferences. But I never heard him defend the Indians the way he just did here in the House today.

Mr. Prud'homme: On a question of privilege, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I take those comments very personally, because for 25 years I have been repeating the same thing across this country, that we must respect our first citizens. I did not start today. I am sure the Hon. Member didn't follow me around every day to find out what I was saying. I suggest he take a look at my speeches in the House. Not that I want to bore him with all that, but I do take this personally, and I know that he would not really want to challenge something I would be able to prove. He can say that my Government may have been negligent, That is fair ball. We may not have done everything we should have done, but he should remember that his Party has been in power for five years.

If he wants to criticize me personally, I protest, because I could name a number of occasions on which I spoke, across this country. I travelled across Canada in 1972, and I repeated the same thing to the Committee on the Constitution. So I don't think I need any advice in this respect.

I suggest that the Hon. Member join me in explaining to Canadians where our responsibility lies, and I think that we should each do what we can. Let the Hon. Member say, and I agree: The Liberals could have done more. But we were judged accordingly. Canadians turfed us out and they put their trust in you, so it is your turn to try, and try harder.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think that the Hon. Member for La Prairie might wish to answer this question raised by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis and we can continue the debate right after. The Hon. Member for La Prairie has the floor.

Mr. Jourdenais: Madam Speaker, I understand the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis. Since I have known him for five years in the House, I have seen him in action, for every time that minorities were an issue or he had a question or wanted to express his opinion or defend them, he always rose and he always has the Standing Orders at hand.

I told him that it was the Liberal Party. If it seemed to be only you, let us say that I probably made a mistake, because since we have been working together, although we do not belong to the same party, we both have the same idea.

From now on, with the new program for Indians, I can guarantee you that we will stop disregarding them the way the former Liberal Government did, as you just said.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments is now over. Resuming debate. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

• (1650)

[English]

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I want to first of all congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Nault), for putting forward this exceptionally important motion which has occupied the attention of the House during the past two days. At the same time I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Anawak), our colleague in the Senate, Len Marchand, for his efforts in the last few days to help resolve what has become a very sad situation. May I also pay particular tribute to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Ms. Blondin), who is our Liberal critic on aboriginal affairs. She has lately put in very long nights attempting in a reasonable way to make our Government see the unreasonableness of its policies. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic is doing the job with our native people that the Minister should be doing.

I want to congratulate these Hon. Members, but I do so with a good deal of sorrow because it is unbelievably regrettable that in a country as rich and generous as Canada, we have a Government which refuses to provide basic rights to our native peoples.

What is happening in this country today is quite straightforward. The Conservative Government since the election has dropped any facade of moderation. It has stripped away the election rhetoric. It has become a right-wing bully-boy. The velvet glove of campaign promises has been replaced with the brass knuckles of tough-guy politics.

The Government is engaged in a three-part strategy. First, dishonour those election commitments where they cost too much; thereby, of course, bringing discredit upon the whole profession of politics in this country. Secondly, to act vindictively toward any people, any group of people or any province that may disagree with the Government. The recent outburst from the Florida Panhandle of the Minister of Trade in respect to the election of Clyde Wells as the new Premier of Newfoundland is typical. Thirdly, make the most disadvantaged, the most defenceless, the most impoverished, those without clout, make those people in our country pay first for four and a half years of Conservative economic mismanagement.

I suppose you might say that that is a harsh indictment. But it is one that the Government has brought upon itself. Listen to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) used to say. He told the First Ministers' Conference in April, 1985, and I use his words, "As a Canadian and as a Prime Minister, I fully recognize and agree with the emphasis the aboriginal peoples place on having their special rights. Improvements to the economic and social circumstances of aboriginal peoples must be pursued at the same time as changes to our Constitution. Action is required on both fronts."

The Prime Minister also said, and I quote him once again, "Policies regarding aboriginal people will be made after open public consultation, especially at the grass roots level". That was what the Prime Minister used to say up to and during the election campaign. How can he possibly reconcile those words with the policy of capping funding for native post-secondary education? I have heard the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux) say in this House that he has consulted over 500 native groups across the country. What he does not say and what we have learned is that not one of those 500 groups agree with this particular policy.

So there we have it, part one of the current Tory strategy: break your word at every opportunity. You can get away with it. Then we move to part two of his strategy: the tough guy vindictive attitude.

[Translation]

A group of native students is on a hunger strike to protest a policy that is contrary to the Prime Minister's own commitments. These students are on a hunger strike to draw attention to the urgent need for funds for post-secondary education. What is the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux) doing? Will he sit down with these students to discuss their legitimate concerns? Does he remember that he too was once a student and that he was a student protester? No! He treats them as though they were guilty of a criminal offence. He is inflexible. He tells them to go back to school. He makes them understand that he, the Minister in the federal Cabinet, is the one who matters and that the students do not have the right to speak on behalf of the native people of the country. He makes them a promise. He tells them that if they end their hunger strike, he is ready to negotiate with them in good faith. Some students take him at his word. They suspend their strike. They meet the Minister and he answers them, in effect: What you are doing is useless. I do not intend to change my policy.

These young men and women, already on the 32nd day of their hunger strike, are endangering their health. The Minister is deaf to all pleas and absolutely refuses to be moved.

The Government and the Minister are so afraid of being weak that they forget that it shows greater strength of character to be open to forgiveness and pity.

[English]

So we come to the third part of the Tory strategy: make the weak and the poor, the dispossessed and the disadvantaged pay for the Government's mismanagement. Make the most disadvantaged people in the country pay for deficit reduction. As the Commissioner for Human Rights said in his last annual report—these are Mr. Yalden's words—"An Indian youngster in Canada has a better chance of being sent to prison than completing university". What an indictment. In the face of that indictment, what does this Government do? They cap appropriation for native post-secondary education and they deny hundreds of native Canadians the opportunity to go to university.

Let us have a few facts on the floor of the House, Madam Speaker. Today, more than half of Canada's native population is under 20 years of age. Any government that wanted to call itself enlightened would see that native post-secondary education is a tremendous opportunity to end the cycle of poverty among our aboriginal people. It is bitter irony that the results and achievements and participation of Indian students under the program are the very reasons the Government gives for denying other Indian students access to the program.

• (1700)

This program has been a success story. The Minister likes to boast about it. He tells the House how much more money has been spent on it. Why? It is because the native young people of this country finally recognize that the one way out is education. They have flocked to this program because they know they can have a better life than their ancestors have had since the white man came to this continent. That is what they are concerned about. It has been the success of the program that has prompted the Government to cap it.

The income level of native Canadians is only 50 per cent of the national average. The unemployment rate among native Canadians averages 55 per cent. We know that it is well over 90 per cent on some reserves.

What does the Government do? It reduces levels of assistance to individual students, making it difficult or impossible for many to complete their education.

I want to bring some more alarming statistics to Your Honour's attention. Only 20 per cent of native Canadians have finished high school, compared to 75 per cent of all Canadians. Nearly 40 per cent of native Canadians have less than Grade 8 education. Violent deaths among aboriginal peoples are three times the national average. Infant mortality is 60 per cent higher than the national average. Hospital admissions are two and one-half times the national average. The life expectancy of native peoples is 10 years less than the national average.

What does the Government do? It does a cost control exercise on the one program that was providing native people with the initiative, the gumption, the hope, the commitment to broaden their aspect of life and become more fully Canadian and able to participate with what the country has to offer. It is one program that was really working, because 90 per cent of all Indian young people who have achieved post-secondary education are employed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I cannot understand it. I have had the opportunity to serve in this House for a long time. I was at a funeral this morning for the late Jim Walker who entered this House with me in 1962.

The Government's policy is not only immoral. I do not often use that word because we have arguments in this House that go right to the heart of matter, but this one is immoral. It is not only unfair. It is not only stupid. It is also lousy economics.

The Minister, who is entering upon this portfolio, should be looking for ways to enhance his credibility with his constituents, the native people who he represents on the floor of the House of Commons.

This is a program of native post-secondary education which is working and produces a healthy, trained group of young Canadians from the native community. It is a program from which 90 per cent of them are now gainfully, usefully employed.

Given a choice between that and the foolish alternative of limiting native post-secondary education, what would that do? It leads to more unemployment. It leads to more violence. It leads to more drug abuse. It leads to far higher cost in social assistance. The Government has chosen the wrong course of action, a disastrous course of action.

[Translation]

Nevertheless, it cannot be said that the program is not working. In 20 years, the proportion of native students attending university has increased from 1 to 12 per cent. Of course, this is still less than the national average, but the progress is encouraging. We can be optimistic, the potential is there and solutions are in sight.

The Government cannot say either that it did not know that passage of Bill C-31 would result in increased demand for post-secondary education for native people.

[English]

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) tries to take credit on the one hand for Bill C-31, which has encouraged approximately 110,000 native people to seek reinstatement under the Indian Act.

On the other he is saying, now that we have this increase in population, that we cannot afford the primary program which allows the next generation to succeed. That lack of logic does not persuade me and should not persuade the Minister. That is why the Human Rights Commissioner called the treatment of our native peoples a national tragedy.

Despite this two-day debate, the Government seems hell-bent on perpetuating that national tragedy. Are the requests by the Assembly of First Nations so unreasonable? Is it so unreasonable to request a moratorium on the new policy until next April 1? Is it so unreasonable to remove a cap on post-secondary education all together? The Conservatives' own Member, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Littlechild), did not think so when he marched against the Government's policy on March 22. I give him credit for guts.

I say to the Minister that if the Government will not listen to the students, if it will not listen to the leaders of the native people, the Assembly of First Nations, if it will not listen to us here in the Opposition, surely the Minister might listen to his own Member of Parliament who knew what he was doing and is close to his people.

I am simply saying to the Minister that of all the promises to break—and there will be a good many of them broken here Thursday afternoon when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stands up—do not break the ones given to our aboriginal peoples. Of all the groups in the country with whom the Government wants to get tough, do not get tough with young people who are pressing for justice. Of all the programs that are up for review, do not cap the one program which is really working, which is truly working in bringing an end to over 200 years of injustice and discrimination, poverty and despair among our native people.

There is still an opportunity for the Government to bring some honour to itself in this sad affair. There is still an opportunity for the Minister to regain credibility with the constituents he should be representing in the House. I urge the Minister and the Government to seize that opportunity.

Far more important than the Government's credibility, than the Minister's sense of esteem with the native people, far more important, there is still an opportunity for the Government to provide more hope for our native people. I urge the Government to provide that hope.

This is as human an issue as we have had for a long time in the House of Commons. This is why our Members are so incensed by it, and why members of the New Democratic Party are concerned. This is why we asked for a two-day debate to use the precious time given to us as Opposition in the House of Commons, because nothing is more important to us than the fiduciary relationship we have——our position of trust, especially towards the next generation, which is already disadvantaged.

[English]

I want the Minister to take this all very seriously because nothing has gripped our sense of purpose more than this debate and this particular subject.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Dobbie: Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the right hon. gentleman's discussion of the issue. My question for him is one to which I have not been able to get an answer from his colleagues.

I am sure the right hon. gentleman is aware of the fact that one of the three demands of the students is recognition of post-secondary education as a treaty right. Will the Right Hon. Member answer the House once and for all on whether or not his Party supports the idea that has been dodged so artfully by his colleagues over the last few days? Does he support post-secondary education as a treaty right?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, I will answer the Hon. Member directly. However, I want to preamble what I have to say by suggesting that whether or not this is a treaty right it is a human right for every young person in this country to have a right to education.

Her Government has never recognized the inherent constitutional rights of our native peoples, the rights that preceded the arrival of the British Crown on the northern half of this continent.

There are those bands who sincerely believe that in the way their treaties were drafted, education is among those treaty rights. Coming back to Ottawa the other day, I was on the airplane with the Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn and we argued this particular issue.

• (1710)

Many of the bands feel that within their particular treaties, education is among those rights guaranteed by the British Crown. We would have to examine the whole panoply of treaties. We have consistently felt, however, that fundamental to the rights of any young person is the right to education, particularly for Indian people living on the reserves. It is the only way to break out of the cycle of poverty and despair. The Hon. Member raises her eyebrows but I am saying that the only way out is education.

The program started 20 years ago and it is working. The reason the Minister has to cap it is that it is working. There is not a fraud here. There is not a crime here. There is not a group deceit here. There is a desperate attempt on the part of a whole generation of young Indian and native peoples to join us within the full rights of Canadians. That is what this is about.

Frankly, I would be prepared, if I were given the brief, to argue the treaty rights as including education. To be absolutely frank to the Hon. Member at this stage, we must go back and examine the language of every one of those treaties.

Mrs. Dorothy Dobbie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise today to speak on this issue. I have listened very carefully over the last few days and have heard many, many comments. I have heard a lot of misinformation and much of the misinformation came this afternoon, shockingly enough, from my right hon. colleague across the way.

I would like to set the record straight on a couple of things. Consultation did take place with over 500 groups. The Right Hon. Member is mistaken when he suggests that not one of those groups supported the new policy. That simply is not so.

I would also like to remind the Right Hon. Member that the Minister has met with the students who stopped their strike, and he listened very carefully to what was being said. He did this in preparation for further dialogue with the students. If we do not build that kind of relationship in which there can be honest and open dialogue, we will not resolve the outstanding questions, and there surely will be outstanding questions. The Minister has established a relationship with the native community that will be very productive for us in the future.

We have all listened over the last few days to my colleagues who have been discussing the Indian Post-Secondary Student Assistance Program with a great deal of vigour. As they have pointed out, in many cases it is one of the most successful programs the Department of Indian Affairs or this Government has ever undertaken. It was originally designed to encourage registered Indians and Inuit to get a post-secondary education to help them achieve economic self-sufficiency.

Under the new program the objective is to encourage graduation, to get them out of school and into the jobs in order to pursue those 90 per cent of opportunities we just heard about. However, they must do so with the qualifications and skills that are necessary to get those jobs in the first place. Of course, the ultimate goal is Indian self-government and economic self-reliance, a worthy goal that I am sure my right hon. friend will support.

In fact, the program is an excellent one. It is carefully tailored to meet the needs of Indian students. To help dispel the confusion over the program, confusion that has been again created today, I would like to go over some of the highlights of it because they bear repeating.

First, the budget for the post-secondary education program has increased significantly in recent years. There has been a steady increase in funding which has grown from $4.2 million in 1975-76 to $130 million this year. In addition, specific additional funding has been provided to meet the needs of students who have regained Indian status under Bill C-31. In fact, during the past two years alone, the budget has increased by 10 per cent in each of those years to meet the needs of additional students.

Each year carefully compiled estimates are made of the number of students expected to apply for entry into the program in the coming year, and the appropriate funds are budgeted according to those estimates. That is a reasonable approach. Under the new policy students will be eligible to receive funding while they attend such things as upgrading classes. They will be eligible to receive funding to go to community colleges or to obtain undergraduate degrees. Should they wish to obtain advanced or professional degrees, there will be funding for that as well.

Student allowances will be provided for the official length of the program—three years for a three-year program, four years for a four-year program and so on. In addition, a year at each level may be provided when required for a student to complete a degree or diploma program.

Under the old E-12 guidelines tuition assistance had specific student month limits which governed tuition allowances and registration fees for individual designated periods, and the maximum limit of possible assistance was 96 student months. Under the new program there are no time limits to tuition assistance. There are time limits governing living allowances, but these limits continue to provide support for a student from the first year right through to the doctorate level.

Students are also eligible to receive support for university preparation if it is required. We want students to plan their programs with an eye to completing their studies to a successful conclusion that will allow them to play a vital and active role in Canadian life. The program is designed to achieve this.

The new guidelines also provide a national standard rate structure for living allowances which replaces what went before, a confusing and wide range of regionally determined rates. The new program will guarantee equal treatment for students across Canada. Just in case there is a problem, the new standard rate generally represents an increase over average rates provided under the old policy.

For example, a single student living away from home now gets an average of $675 per month compared to $667 last year. In addition certain students, with dependants, studying in very high rental areas will be eligible for an increased monthly allowance to cover additional housing needs.

My colleagues have previously pointed out that grants for single students are equivalent to a full-time job paying $4.96 per hour. The grants paid to a single parent student with three dependants are equivalent to a full-time job paying $12.14 per hour, but I think these points bear repeating. That is not all. There are also annual scholarships of up to $3,500 for those who successfully undertake studies in areas which will aid Indian self-government and economic development. Students who follow programs in commerce, business and public administration, economics, science, mathematics, computer sciences, forestry and engineering will have an additional incentive to pursue these studies with great vigour.

Our program is gearing up for excellence, and we are determined that native people will be equipped to manage their own affairs, equipped with the appropriate education. In pursuit of this goal, students who work hard and do well are also eligible for annual scholarships of $1,000 based on academic achievement. These awards are available to up to 5 per cent of the student enrolment in each category. This is a significant improvement over the old policy which did not provide for this kind of support and encouragement.

Perhaps one of the most important aspects of this policy is the fact that it can be administered by Indian leaders themselves, the people who are in a position to see that the program meets the real needs of the students it is designed for. This kind of self-supervision can only enhance, in my opinion, the effectiveness of the program and contribute to the dignity of those who are enrolled in it. I think that is extremely important.

As for the amount of funding, we have heard a great deal about that in the last couple of days. We have heard much negative comment from our hon. colleagues opposite. I can only report that this student assistance program is one of the most generous of its kind in the world.

I pointed out earlier today that there are 15,000 students in the United States who shared a total funding of $32.9 million last year. That compares to Canada's 15,000 students, the same number of students, who will share $130 million in funding this year. Canadian Indian students receive almost four times the support of their American counterparts. Clearly that demonstrates the new policy is a reasonable one and a responsible one which represents a great improvement over the previous guidelines.

• (1720)

The Government is not only listening to the concerns of the Indian and Inuit people. It is also responding to those concerns. The Minister has repeatedly stated that he is totally open to all suggestions for improvement to the program. I do not know how he can make it any clearer. He has demonstrated his willingness to make adjustments where shown to be desirable and sensible.

The Government has played a leadership role in improving opportunities for access of Indian and Inuit students to post-secondary education. It is no accident that enrolment has risen from fewer than 3,500 in the late 1970s to more than 15,000 today. We heard the Hon. Member congratulate us on the success of the program that brought the numbers to 15,000.

Our policies have been instrumental in opening forever the educational doors that were closed to our native communities in the past, including the period of time when Members opposite were in a position of power and in a position to make decisions that would have had a long lasting beneficial effect on the native peoples of the country and perhaps would have had them advance far beyond where they are now. However, we are starting with something, and I think we are making tremendous progress.

In the last few days we have heard a great deal of lip-service in the House, but we are doing more than simply paying lip-service to the importance of post-secondary education in the economic, social and political development of Indian and Inuit communities.

We have developed policies and have provided funding to ensure that there will be more Indian doctors, nurses, engineers, commerce graduates, lawyers, teachers, and other professionals. The new policy builds on previous successes and significantly enhances the opportunity for Indian students successfully to complete courses of study which will allow them to engage in useful and rewarding occupations that will put them in the mainstream of Canadian life. That is the point of this program.

Indian students must have access to post-secondary education today if they are to take advantage of tomorrow's employment opportunities. We all agree with that. We all feel strongly that if they are to be able to develop and operate their own businesses and institutions of self-government and contribute to a better quality of life in their communities, as well as play an active role in Canadian society, the educational system must be relevant and must produce graduates.

The Indian and Inuit people have a great deal to offer and much to contribute to Canada. Their affinity with the land and their understanding of the natural order of things have much to teach us, and we must be prepared to listen. When listening we must open our hearts and our ears in order to get a better understanding and thereby benefit from this experience. The Government and the Minister realize this. I believe the Minister is wise in his knowledge that productive dialogue can only take place in an atmosphere free from coercion.

In conclusion, it is important to commend the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux) for his dedication and leadership in introducing this policy for post-secondary student assistance. The program is one of the finest and most successful that Canada has ever developed. If Hon. Members opposite were to search their hearts and be honest, I believe they would admit that it is a generous, fair and reasonable program. The Minister is also to be congratulated for his commitment to Indian and Inuit people in general, and for his leadership and his commitment to post-secondary education.

The negative reaction that we have seen and heard in the media is most unfortunate, and it is most unfortunate that it is based on inaccurate information and inaccurate perceptions. There is still a perception that the draft policy which was used as a basis for the consultations which were carried out was used as a basis for the final policy. I would like to make it very clear and set the record straight that the final policy has been revised and improved as a result of that consultation process.

The Minister has repeatedly stated his willingness to make more changes and further improvements should they be needed. He is willing and eager to sit down in a calm and rational fashion to discuss additional changes and improvements. The consultations are not over. They are ongoing and continuing. The policy has changed and it will continue to change with the times.

In 1977-78 it cost $9 million to send 3,500 Indian students to university or college. That has been improved and 15,000 are covered under a budget of $130 million. The program will be continually improved as the need arises. It must be continually reviewed to address appropriately the changing needs and the aspirations of Indian youth. It is a reasonable and a responsible program that offers a better way of life, a life of independence and dignity for the coming generation of native people. I believe that the Minister and the program deserve the full support of the House.

Mrs. Finestone: First, I listened with a great deal of interest to the very fine speech given by our own colleague, the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Anawak). I only wish that the Hon. Member who just completed her remarks had listened a little more closely.

Second, I wish that the Hon. Member had sat in on the hearings or read the transcripts of the hearings held by the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs. I was a member of that committee when it changed the Indian Act to recognize and acknowledge women in the Indian society.

I certainly recall the two meetings of the First Ministers' Conferences in which I was in attendance. I was also part of the committee that looked at employment equity and, sad to say, recognized the inadequacies of that Bill, as well as the Indian Act.

We now recognize something that the Member does not seem to have thought about, the fact that we have had a very large increase in a young population. We have a vibrant source of new employers and new employees in Canada, and the Hon. Member does not care to acknowledge the aboriginal people's potential contribution to the growth and development of this land, which is their land. This is our land; this is their land. They are part and parcel of that land.

If the theory the Hon. Member was propounding were applied to the Unemployment Insurance Act, we would only pay off the first half or quarter who applied. If the theory were applied to those who are now arriving at age 65, perhaps old age security would not be paid after the month of March or April because the funds would have run out.

Is that the way the Hon. Member is suggesting, first come first served? Is there to be a cap because there are too many bright, young, competent people who have evolved through a system which has only been in operation a bare 20 years?

It is effective, but it is being capped because it costs too much money. If the cap were removed and all the brave young students were served—and I do not particularly agree with the procedure used—it would cost the equivalent of one five-thousandth of the national debt. If the moratorium were taken off, it would cost one-fiftieth of 1 per cent of the national debt.

Would the Hon. Member tell me why those young people, the future of the country, are being attacked for that type of extra money which is equal to one-half the money the Government spent on advertising in the past year? What is the Hon. Member's point, and what is her beef?

• (1730)

Mrs. Dobbie: Madam Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member is the one who doesn't listen or she would not have made some of the comments that she did.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Dobbie: All students who wish to apply for post-secondary education in Canada will be accommodated. There is no question that there will be dollars to pay for those students to go to school. If the estimates are not accurate—and we have said from the very beginning that there is a possibility that the estimates may be lacking because we do not have the kind of tight data we need—some applicants may have to wait a year to get into the program. But I wish the Hon. Member would stop trying to twist the facts and pay attention to us when we say that all students will eventually be accommodated, that no students are being turned away or deprived of a post-secondary education.

We are not talking about theory here. The Hon. Member mentioned a theory. I think we all agree, and I listened very carefully to her remarks, that education is a fundamental need, a fundamental right of all human beings. There is no question about that. Indian youth and adult Indian students are as entitled to post-secondary education of a high quality as anyone else in this country. If we can do anything at all to make it easier for them to access that, we will. As I have said, and as the Minister has said repeatedly, there is plenty of opportunity to make adjustments where it is required. If a student feels that he has in some way slipped through the cracks, the Minister's door is open. He will listen and he will try to accommodate. Surely there is not much more that this Government could do to accommodate the needs of Indian and Inuit students in this country.

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Madam Speaker, I might ask one question that has been asked a number of times but to which we still have not had an answer. If I heard correctly, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary said that under this program some students will have to wait a year to go to a post-secondary institution. If that is what she said, might she say it again so we can all hear it clearly?

There is another question that has been asked three or four times. Supposing under the present scheme the number of students who apply are in excess of the number of dollars available for post-secondary education. In other words, there is not enough money in the present $130 million to enable whatever number of students who apply to go to a post-secondary education institution. Will the Government automatically increase the budget to make available sufficient funds for students to gain access to post-secondary education? Or will the Government prevent some students from gaining entry to post-secondary education institutions through lack of funding? Can we not have a simple answer to a simple question? Will there be some students left without adequate funding to go to post-secondary education institutions if the $130 million does not cover those who apply? If there are a few extra students, will they get funding? It is a very simple question and it has been asked about eight times, yet we still do not have an answer.

Mrs. Dobbie: The answer has been given before, Madam Speaker. The Minister has given the answer repeatedly, and the answer is simple. First, some students may have to wait up to a year. Will there be money to take care of their needs when the appropriate time comes after that period when the next budget is set? The Minister has stated that he will find the funds to cover the needs of the students. He will go to Treasury Board and ask that the budget be set at a higher rate for the subsequent year.

I think Hon. Members opposite have to agree that it is only good, sound, sensible management that sets a budget for any program. We do not write blank cheques for anything we do in this country. If we do, we end up in the kind of trouble that we are in right now, so far in debt that we are becoming a laughing stock to the rest of the world. This Government is trying to run a fair, reasonable and generous policy under guidelines that will allow for planning and for appropriate budget-setting for the future. There is nothing unreasonable and nothing difficult about that.

• (1735)

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to be the final speaker on this very important two days of debate in this House. I do so as the Member of Parliament for some of those people who were on a hunger strike, for some of those who are currently on a hunger strike, and for approximately 800 students at Lakehead University and Confederation College in Thunder Bay, 800 individuals who have chosen to pursue a new future for themselves and for their communities. They see this policy, this change brought in by the Conservative Government to the E-12 guidelines, as limiting the abilities of their brothers and sisters, both literally and in blood, from getting the same kind of access they are now enjoying.

There is nothing that provides greater pleasure than going to the graduation ceremonies at Lakehead University each spring and seeing, year after year, more and more native students graduating. They are graduating from special native study programs, aiming to return to their reserves to work in concert with their peers, their elders and their children. As well, they are aiming to get into the so-called mainstream by applying for jobs outside the reserves to provide services to native and non-native alike. As Bob Rosehart, the President of Lakehead University is quoted as saying in Saturday's Star: "These people provide the very positive role models that the communities themselves have been seeking, to say, yes, we can do it. It is not only possible for us to go to Thunder Bay and get an education at the post-secondary level and to come back with a diploma or a degree, but we can bring back with us the knowledge that will assist our communities, be they reserve-based communities or non-reserve communities, in improving our ability to be self-sustainable as a society". That is why it is important that we maximize this investment by the Canadian taxpayers in the educational system.

Just before I spoke there was an exchange between one of my colleagues and the Parliamentary Secretary, who clearly said there would be up to a one year delay for those people who wish to take post-secondary education under this program, but because of a funding cap they would be unable to do so. Who will be the ones delayed? Will they be the high school graduates who come from far northern or remote communities? Will they be told they will have to wait for another year? We know, and there are those who have more expertise in this than I, that the moment you break the educational pattern, the chances of going back to school are virtually nil, particularly for females.

Will it be the adult students who, after years of welfare perhaps, or employment that is not conducive to their community or because we, as a society, have destroyed their natural resources, be they fish, animal, forests or what have you, all of a sudden finally get it all together and say, yes, I have the motivation to go back to school and learn something I was unable to do as a child? More than likely, some did not even complete high school, if they ever went to high school. Are we now to say they will have to wait one more year because we do not have enough dollars and cents. We do not have that extra $9,000 to take them from their remote community to a Thunder Bay or to a Saskatoon or some other city with a university or community college? After those individuals have developed their own motivation, because they know the resources are there, are we going to say no? And does that really mean that we are saying no forever because they will ask, why bother?

• (1740)

Every time we throw another road block in the paths of native Canadians we are doing them a disservice. We should be bending over backwards to give native Canadians full access to our post-secondary education. Not just for a B.A. With all due respect for those who have their B.A., what can you do with a B.A.? You do not even need a B.A. to run for Parliament. You can actually be a high school dropout and get here as well. But the important thing is that they have to have the ability to go on to get into the professions. Doctors, lawyers, accountants, pharmacists and nurses, the whole gamut are important for these communities to have the skills practised by people who are their own, so that they understand the nuances, understand the needs. That is why this is so important.

A lot has been said about the Minister's desire or willingness to keep talking between now and September, and that if the Minister can be convinced that there is a need to change it, he will change it. But the reality is that those individuals who are planning to go to first-year university or first-year community college next year must plan that now.

Our kids are waiting for decisions from the universities as to whether they are accepted. Native kids are too. They need to know that the dollars and cents are in place so that they can make that commitment, so that when school starts on September 4 or 5, they will be there. They need to know about accommodation. They cannot find accommodation the week before university starts. They need to line that up months ahead. If they are coming from one of those small isolated reserves in northern Canada, in northern parts of the provinces, or in an area that is distant from the educational centre, and they are moving not just themselves but are moving children and spouses, they need the time to properly plan and make arrangements in order to have appropriate accommodations for their needs.

That is why we have said put it on hold for now, put a moratorium in place, at least on the negative aspects of the changes, so that the First Nations for the students can work with the Minister and the Department to develop appropriate guidelines that will allow an implementation in September of 1990 so that we do not disenfranchise or delay anybody and that those natives who wish to go to secondary education can do so.

If there is some abuse, as the Minister has suggested in his letters to the Chiefs, then let us deal with that. George Erasmus indicated quite clearly in the Star on Saturday that they are prepared as a community to work out the rules so that nobody gets a free ride per se. The ministry quite clearly does not have any proof of anybody taking advantage of the program, for example going for eight years and not getting any final diploma or degree, but if those things do exist, let the First Nations work out the rules with the ministry. The important thing is that we do put a moratorium in place, that we give the native people a chance to work it out with the Minister so that we can give those young people who are still fasting a chance of success, so that they can stop their fast knowing full well that their cause has been just and that we as a Parliament of Canada have listened and will act in a very positive way.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the business of Supply pursuant to Standing Order 81(14).

The first question is on the amendment of the Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing (Mr. Axworthy).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment, which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

The next question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to dissent with that suggestion, I just simply wish to add my vote with the negative.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we agree to apply the last vote to this particular motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House agreed to apply the division just taken to the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Paul Dick (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Government of Canada and as Minister of Supply and Services, pursuant to Standing Order 32(2) of the House of Commons—

[Translation]

—I am pleased to have the honour to table the 1988 annual report of the Royal Canadian Mint in both official languages.

PETITIONS

INCREASED TAX BENEFITS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of petitioners who believe that the tax burden on average families is roughly $1,000 greater than it was in 1984. They point out that millions of dollars have been taken from Canadian families through Government cuts to benefit programs. They also point out that one in six Canadian children is living in poverty.

Therefore, the petitioners are asking Parliament to provide tax relief and fairness to Canadian families and ask that it considers the advisability of increasing benefits paid through the family allowance and the refundable child tax credit.

EQUAL PAY AND OPPORTUNITIES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, another group of petitioners are concerned that women working full-time earn on average only 66 per cent of what men earn and that more than 18 per cent of women working full time and almost 79 per cent of those employed on a part-time basis earn less than $10,000. They point out that only 22 per cent of women employed full time earn $25,000 annually or more. They list a set of other concerns in terms of the bias against women in the workplace. They call upon Parliament to introduce and systematically enforce legislation guaranteeing Canadian women equal pay for work of equal value and equal opportunity for employment.

OWNERSHIP OF PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour today to present a petition on behalf of a number of Canadians in which they argue that the Government of Canada has failed to take measures to remove Canadian petroleum assets from foreign control. They further point out that the Government of Canada has weakened its ability to ensure that Canadian gas and oil is developed in the national interest. On the basis of these two factors, they petition Parliament to ensure that 100 per cent of the ownership of Petro-Canada remains in the hands of the Government of Canada.

STARRED QUESTION

Question No. *43—Mr. Wappel:

Did the Minister of State for Multiculturalism, upon announcing National Citizenship Week, issue an information package entitled Citizenship Activity Guide and, if so, what was the (a) per-unit (b) total-production cost (c) total number of units produced?

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. Part (a) is 61 cents; (b) $36,500 and (c) 60,000 copies.

[English]

I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, April 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-3, an Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, to repeal the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act and to make consequential amendments to to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and on the amendment of Mr. Langdon:

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

This House declines to give second reading to Bill C-3 because it fails to clearly define federal government responsibility for regional development, and specifically fails to reflect the requirement under s. 36(1)(b) of the Constitution Act, 1982, that Parliament is committed to "furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities".

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When Bill C-3 was last before the House, the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard (Mr. Gagliano) had completed his speech. The question and comment period is now available to Members. Otherwise the Chair is prepared to recognize Hon. Members for debate.

• (1110)

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in today's debate, a debate on a Bill to create a new Department of Industry, Science and Technology. Throughout the next few minutes I would like to bring forward a western point of view.

I want to to point out strongly that I do not want to sound parochial in this matter. After all, westerners, and particularly the good people in my province, feel that they are Canadians first, that they have a lot of faith in this country. We do have in our part of the country some very special concerns. I believe that these concerns must be addressed, and they ought to be addressed in this particular debate. I will touch on some of these concerns as we go along.

We recognize the crucial need to strengthen the economy, particularly in the regions. One way to increase the strength of the economy is to increase our commitment to research and development. In my opinion, that should be at the very top of our list. In an age of technology, research and development ought to be a top priority. One way of doing that is by providing adequate funding, not just bureaucratic shuffling. That is what we see in this particular Bill, bureaucratic shuffling, no real commitment to R and D. I believe this is consistent with this Government's record. I want to point out that since 1984 there has been an appalling neglect of R and D funding.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has made some pretty big promises in this regard. For example, he promised a doubling of research and development spending in the first four years of the first mandate of the Government. The Prime Minister did not keep that promise. I want to point out one particular fact. As a percentage of Gross Domestic Product, R and D spending slipped from 1.37 per cent to 1.35 per cent. So much for promises. So much for commitment to managing change in this country.

This is something I want to point out because it was stressed very heavily by the Conservative Party in the last election campaign. We all remember what the Prime Minister said. He said that it was his Party that was best equipped to manage change. How do we manage change in Canada? One way we do that is by staying on the leading edge of technology. It is central to economic growth. It is central to productivity. What have we received from the Government in this regard? We certainly have received promises, shrinking commitment to R and D. We have received bureaucratic games, shuffling people around, creating new positions, renaming Departments. That is not very impressive.

From a western perspective, there are a number of concerns that we have. The western economy, as most people understand, is based on resources and agriculture. That kind of an economy is at the mercy of external forces. We can do almost nothing about these external forces. There are many factors that come into this picture. For example, commodity prices can go up and down in just a matter of minutes. There is the ever present threat of a drought. We had one in the West last year, and it could happen again this year. Oil prices can go up and down at just about a moment's notice. We in the West are always in a rather precarious situation. We need to diversify. We have to give our economy more legs on which to stand. That is why industrial, scientific and technological development is most crucial to the West.

Adding to our concerns is the fact that our existing industries, ones that are there already, have been hit by a spate of recent mergers. I would like to mention a couple of them. One is the Molson merger. The other is the purchase of Wardair by PWA. These consolidations have led to fewer jobs. To make matters even worse for our region, high tech firms in the West have closed. Some of them have moved to eastern Canada. I believe that the Government has to take some responsibility in this regard. We have to point out the Government's lack of commitment in the encouragement of secondary industry in the West. That has to be told to the Canadian public.

The Government is weak in this area of encouraging secondary industry in the West. Instead of encouraging development of secondary industry in our region, the policies of the Government appear to have the opposite effect. They appear to have the effect of centralizing industry in central Canada. Instead of recognizing the importance of regional development, instead of developing policies to spur regional development, what do we get? We get bureaucratic shuffling and the renaming of Departments. That is not good enough.

The Government wants to create a Department which would be the focus of developing industrial policies. Fair enough. This particular Bill does not mention the West or what the role of the Department of Western Diversification will be. It does not specify what the role will be of that particular Department. That raises concerns in our minds. We must ask what will be the benefit of this new Department of Industry, Science and Technology to the West. What will be the benefit to our region? We fear that the concerns of the West will be overlooked. We fear this because the mandate for economic development in the West falls outside of the scope of this new Department, outside of its particular mandate. We fear that the economic development of the West will somehow become peripheral and secondary to that of central Canada. It is significant that only the Provinces of Ontario and Québec are mentioned in this legislation. Our information is that the focus of industrial development will be fixed in central Canada and that the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology will institutionalize that focus.

• (1120)

How then will the West fit in? That is the question. Can the Department of Western Economic Diversification deliver? Can it really get for the West the West's fair share? Will the Minister of that particular Department have the stature and the clout to ensure that the West gets its fair share?

There is another question. We consider this one crucial. The spending authority of the Department of Western Economic Diversification ends in just three years' time, in just 36 months. What happens then? Will we be left out in the cold? That is a real fear. That is exactly what has happened to the ERDA agreements. They have been left to wither on the vine.

We need to know the future of the Western Diversification Office. If it loses its spending authority, who then is left to pick up the pieces?

The Government could dismiss these concerns as just so much political talk, but these concerns are very real. We already know the Government's track record. We know of its insensitivity to regional development, particularly in my home province of Manitoba. We know what has happened to the ERDA agreements.

I would like to single out the ERDA agreements because in the recent past they have been a cornerstone of regional economic development. They were even recognized by the Prime Minister in an October 3, 1986 speech when he described the agreements as historic. Perhaps, instead, he should have said that they were history.

These agreements ought to be renegotiated. They should be renegotiated. We consider that the time to do that is now. The time is crucial. If the provinces want to renegotiate the agreements and they are ready to renegotiate, then why is the federal Government not ready?

I want to remind the House of something that was said by the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne). He said: "It was the Progressive Conservative Government that was not afraid to sit down with the provinces and see what, exactly, they wanted". So why now at this particular time is the Government suddenly afraid to sit down with the provinces calmly and with a spirit of co-operation to renegotiate these agreements with the provinces? I suggest that if the Government wants to be taken seriously on this particular matter, it should be prepared to do so, and to do so right now.

The then Minister for International Trade in 1985 made one of those statements that often comes back to haunt him. He said: "The ERDAs would continue at the current rate of spending". I think that commitment was about as real as the Government's commitment to the UI system. The ERDA agreements were particularly important to my Province of Manitoba and were used in many projects such as reforestation, transportation, mineral and agri-food development. The ERDA agreements were good for the province, good for the region, good for our people, and are needed more than ever right now because of the difficult economic times that we face.

There is another matter which I consider particularly relevant in this debate, the matter of federal procurement in our region and in my province, for the Government has not delivered to the Province of Manitoba. It has not come through. Statistics on this issue are revealing.

While Manitoba is ranked fifth in terms of population with 4.2 per cent of the country's total population, my province's share of federal Government contracts is below 3 per cent. It is distressing to note that while a quarter of federal procurement in 1986–87 was for items valued in excess of $50 million, Manitoba did not get one contract worth that much. That does not do anything for western alienation.

There was an interesting article in the Winnipeg Free Press the past weekend. There are revelations in the article that I believe should be inserted into the House of Commons record. I want to refer specifically to the article in the Winnipeg Free Press where that particular newspaper looked at federal and provincial spending records and estimates, Statistics Canada summaries of transfer payments and federal employment, Government records of supply and services purchases, and a province-by-province breakdown of spending through Ottawa's Western Diversification Office. These are some of the findings by the Winnipeg Free Press.

First, the Manitoba Government received an estimated $10.58 of every $1,000 Ottawa spent in the year ending March 31, 1989, compared to $10.74 spent in the year ending March 31, 1984. That was the last full year of Liberal Government in this country.

Now that may not sound like very much but if Ottawa had continued, according to the Winnipeg Free Press article, giving the same share of total spending to the provincial Government, the Manitoba treasury would have received an added $307 million over the past five years. Three hundred and seven million dollars to a province like Manitoba is a lot of money.

Second, employment in Manitoba dropped by 2,446 people between October, 1984, and March, 1988, as Ottawa slashed the number of civil servants nation-wide. In Manitoba, the cut in the yearly federal payroll is about $71 million at today's average rate of pay. Seventy-one million dollars is not chicken feed to a small province like Manitoba.

Third, Manitoba municipalities have suffered as Ottawa cut support for local Governments through the country. Between 1984 and 1987, which is the last year of complete figures, average federal support for Manitoba municipalities dropped by 2.9 per cent or $600,000 a year, a significant contribution to the municipalities of the Province of Manitoba.

Fourth, Manitoba's share of federal supply and services purchases dropped to 2.84 per cent in 1987, compared with an average of 3.3 per cent during the eight years before the Prime Minister took office. That drop cost Manitoba suppliers $93 million In government business during the past three years, which is not chicken feed.

There is one more point that I want to raise that was contained in the Winnipeg Free Press article over the weekend. Per capita funding for Manitoba-based projects through the Western Diversification Office stood at $40 by April 7 compared to $43 in Alberta, $77 in British Columbia, and $118 in Saskatchewan. Manitoba would have received $28 million more had its share of funding corresponded to Manitoba's share of western Canada's population. Lamentably, those figures point out that my Province of Manitoba is not getting its fair share. All Manitoba has always asked for is its fair share.

An Hon. Member: Where is Jake Epp?

Mr. Harvard: Good question. Where is Jake Epp? Jake Epp is supposedly the senior Minister of the province, and I do not think he is delivering.

Am I almost out of time, Madam Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I know the Hon. Member is fairly new to this place, but he should know at this time that Hon. Members do not refer to Members or to Ministers by their name, but by their title or by the name of their riding.

There is a minute left in the Hon. Member's presentation.

Mr. Harvard: Thank you. I apologize for that error. I forgot. From now on I will refer to the Minister of Energy.

I just want to say in conclusion that in my opinion the Government has not delivered and has not come through. We have seen the Government abandon the ERDAs. We have seen a lack of commitment to research and development. We have seen a failure to provide Manitoba with its fair share of federal contracts.

• (1130)

In this particular Bill we see the Government's affinity for bureaucratic shuffling and renaming of Departments. We have truly seen the Government's approach to regional development. It is not good enough. We in the West have reason to have doubt. We have reason to be skeptical. We deserve something better. The regions deserve something better. The people of Canada deserve something better.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On questions or comments the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for South Shore.

Mr. McCreath: Madam Speaker, I compliment the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Harvard) on his remarks. I must say that he leaves me in a little bit of doubt as to whether he is in favour or not in favour of the Bill.

I ask him to refer to Clause 7 of the Bill. Does he oppose what I consider to be the most laudable and comprehensive objective set forth in the Bill? It suggests that the Minister's responsibilities will strengthen the national economy, increase the international competitiveness of Canadian industry, and encourage the fullest and most efficient and effective development and use of science and technology. Clause 10 refers to the encouragement and pursuit of scientific knowledge, expanding Canada's intellectual resources in science and so on.

I am unclear as to whether the Hon. Member supports the Bill and intends to vote for it or whether he opposes it. That is my first question.

Second, he makes reference to the fact that the Bill refers to Ontario and Québec and to regional development in Ontario and Québec. Surely, the Hon. Member recognizes this reference undoubtedly stems from the fact that we have the excellent programs that the Government has put in place in the area of western economic diversification. Indeed, in Atlantic Canada, we have benefited significantly and look forward to continuing to benefit from the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

Does the Hon. Member seriously think that the Party which forms the Government, which enjoys and has for so many years enjoyed the support of western Canadians, would forget for one minute to safeguard the economic development interests of western Canada, not to mention Atlantic Canada?

Mr. Harvard: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the comments of my hon. friend. I suppose that his question is rhetorical. He asks whether the Government would abandon the West. On the surface one would say that, surely, it would not be good politics to abandon the West. However, the fact is that we have been shocked in the past. We have to be ready for almost anything that comes our way, particularly when it might represent or be tantamount to a punch in the nose.

My hon. friend may not remember that I represent the riding of Winnipeg—St. James. The people of Winnipeg—St. James will not forget for a long time what the Government did in terms of the CF-18 affair. We thought that we had won a contract. We thought that the Government had a commitment to the tendering process. We thought that the Government would not use politics and interfere with that time-honoured process. However, it did. A company in my riding, in my city, won a very rich contract fair and square. Yet the Government through sheer politics, through nothing more than a bid to garner votes in another province, interfered with that process and took that contract away from us. That was terrible. We are not going to forget it for a long time.

When the Hon. Member asks will the Government ever forget about the West, will it ever abandon the West, the answer is: "Yes, the Government will do that". We will not have short memories.

The Hon. Member also has to remember this. Perhaps he was not listening as closely as he should have been. The mandate of the Western Diversification Office will run out, according to legislation, in three years. What will happen after that? That is a responsible question on our part. It is a concern that we have. Who knows, the Government could just wind down and then what will happen? We have a legitimate concern.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, I would just like to make a comment by way of responding in part not only to what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Harvard) said but also to what the Member across the way said about western Canada.

There is a tendency in this House, and I have seen it ever since I came here in 1979, to talk about western Canada as if it is some sort of homogeneous lump that does not have debates within itself about what is the appropriate policy for western Canada. I recall at the time of the National Energy Program when people would get up to say: "Western Canada is against the National Energy Program" when there were many western Canadians who were for the National Energy Program. Western Canada came to be identified in the Tory minds with the boardrooms of Calgary, Alberta.

The point I want to make is that western Canadians have delivered the Conservatives a message. It is that there are almost 40 members of Parliament not from the Government side who come from western Canada. There are some 19 New Democrats from B.C., 10 New Democrats from Saskatchewan, one New Democrat from Alberta, two New Democrats from Manitoba, five Liberals from Manitoba and one Liberal from B.C. The Hon. Member pretends that the Government has some kind of monopoly on western Canada. The fact is that the Conservatives were almost shut out of Winnipeg. For him to try to refute the thesis that western Canadians, in particular Winnipegers, were not particularly offended by the CF-18 decision, is the height of folly as far as I am concerned. People were offended. They showed that on November 21, 1988 by returning record numbers of non-Conservatives to the House of Commons from western Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Benoît Tremblay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I would like to make the following comment, if you allow me.

I think that this Government in no way claims to have a monopoly on what should be done for regional development in Canada—in the West, the Maritimes or elsewhere.

As proof, unlike the previous Government, which had the habit of defining all regional development policies and procedures centrally, this Government has in fact decentralized, created advisory boards with people in the regions and reestablished the dialogue with the provincial governments; the regional policies have come out of consultations and cooperation with the local community.

Certainly, one can always do more for regional development. What this Government is trying to do by way of regional development policies with local people is to set long-term policies and strategies supported by local people so that everyone works together developing the economy. This approach yields results. Just look at the lower rates of unemployment and increased income.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There is one minute of rebuttal left for the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James.

Mr. Harvard: Madam Speaker, I simply want to point out one matter as it applies to the Province of Manitoba. In Manitoba we call it the politics of punishment. We have discovered that in the wake of the November 21 election the Government, and in particular the Prime Minister, is prone to wanting to punish our province. Canadians know that there were an additional four Liberals elected in the City of Winnipeg in the election. There is plenty of evidence to indicate that the Conservatives take umbrage with that and that they are already punishing the Province of Manitoba. For example, there are a couple of projects that were promised for the province. It now appears that one or both are now on hold. We are being punished for that. Again, we have our doubts and we are skeptical. That is why we want strong legislation to protect us in case the Prime Minister and his Government want to be vindictive and bully a province such as the Province of Manitoba.

• (1140)

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise in this Chamber to engage in the debate on Bill C-3 which creates a new Department of Science and Industry from the old Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. In addition to the creation of a Minister of Science and a focus on science, there is the concern of this Party with respect to this Department's responsibilities for regional development. Others of my colleagues will consider the deficiencies in that aspect of the Bill which limits this new Department's regional development responsibilities to Ontario and Québec.

However, even with regard to those aspects which are favourable to its science and technology function, I find it extremely difficult to understand how it is going to be possible to integrate the science policy and regional development policy aspects of this new Department's responsibilities. There is a clear necessity for balanced development of science policy throughout the country if it is going to be appropriately integrated into industrial and economic growth. I hope that Members on the government side will address those questions, and perhaps some of my colleagues, in looking at the regional development aspect, will themselves consider it.

From the point of view of those of us who are very much concerned about the lack of an appropriate focus on research and development in this country, the creation of this new Department is a step forward. We certainly welcome a Minister of Science with a higher profile who will begin to accord the kind of recognition to science, research and development that we need. It certainly is an improvement over the old Minister of State status which was practically no status at all.

In contemplating what alternative actions might have been taken to bring about this increased profile to science to ensure that the Government gets proper advice, that there is within the government bureaucracy a commitment to the development of a science, research and development policy, one might have considered the alternative suggested by many of those preoccupied with basic research in universities, that a Department of Science, Research and Post-Secondary Education might have been created. This would have at least recognized the important role that universities play, not only with respect to providing the basic and fundamental research underpinning for any research enterprise in the country but also the critical role that post-secondary institutions are going to play in respect to providing the manpower, the scientists and the technicians that are going to be necessary for future growth.

I am saying this in the context of a situation evolving in this country where we are suffering a severe shortage of trained personnel in those areas. Put another way, we are in a situation where not enough opportunity is being provided to young people who wish to become scientists. We are not providing enough appropriate support to the scientists we have to ensure that they will stay, either as scientists or as university teachers.

We are going to be facing a period in the 1990s when we are going to be suffering a severe shortage of university research scientists. We are not providing them through the pipeline of the universities. Since the United States is going to be facing the same problem, we are going to be facing a severe competitive situation in that respect.

I would have to concede, however, that a concept of a science and university or a research and university linkage in the designation of that kind of Department would be well taken. On the other hand, we could have had a free-standing Department of Science, Research and Development. We could have had a Minister who was quite independent of any other Minister, one who could have been equally able to address industrial and economic needs as well as the question of post-secondary institutions, basic research and so on. We could have had a Minister who accorded the kind of weight and importance to basic and fundamental research policies that most of us who understand science realize are necessary in order to ensure that we will have a viable scientific climate in this country. Basic research, if it is not there, is going to cost us dearly in the future.

I do not think that there is any compelling reason for opposing the Bill because we do not have a free-standing Department of Science, Research and Development, but one which is linked with industry. That is as acceptable as any other alternative except that one must worry about the bias which has been so frequently expressed by this Government which seems to disregard the role of basic research, which seems to disregard the role of the universities in ensuring that Canada has a viable research and development climate. We cannot borrow the findings of basic and fundamental research from other countries.

When I express this concern about this bias, it is not something that I draw from the air. The former Minister of DRIE said on a number of occasions that that science will be supported by a government which accords with industrial priorities. It was said over and over again that science which is identified by politicians as being capable of generating industrial growth of new products in a relatively short time is the science that would be supported. This is expressed in a number of quite concrete ways. The granting councils, which are supposed to supply the essential funding to the universities for basic fundamental research, have not in the last several years received any significant increase in funding except that which accrues to them through the matching grants. It is strictly in the area of science by virtue of a granting program according to which moneys provided by industries to the universities will be matched by grants from the granting councils, which in turn will go to the universities. The bias is clear.

There is nothing inherently wrong with ensuring greater co-operation between the universities and industries in respect of research and development. There is something wrong and we have a serious problem when recommendations are ignored such as that made by the Lortie Commission—which derives from the National Advisory Council on Science and Technology, which advises the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)—that the amount of money provided to the granting councils should be doubled over two years, and thereafter increases to those granting councils be 1.5 times the increases the Gross National Product.

Scientists who understand the role of basic research recommend that the Government take certain actions, but the Government has failed to do so. Again, we must caution that the twinning of science with industry will not so bias our emphasis as to cloud our minds, as the Tory minds are already clouded with respect to the role of basic research. The Government has not done especially well even with respect to its primary concern with basic research. Let me cite another example in this respect.

One of the flagships of government policy has been the new centres of excellence. I believe the centres of excellence reflect a step forward in a number of respects, but when one considers the criteria to be applied in the selection of which centres of excellence will be funded, overwhelmingly the criteria are those which correspond to direct industrial, relatively short-term needs. If the Government evinced an appreciation of the appropriate role of basic research in order to give some balance to this, the centres of excellence would also have criteria that would have been applicable to basic research emphasis in some centres of excellence.

Let us examine what this may entail. I suppose there is not a Member in the House who is not aware of the excitement being generated in the scientific community over fusion research. I was shocked to read in the Toronto Star last week that for some months Canadian scientists at Electrofuel, a small laboratory in Toronto, were working on cold fusion and had generated perhaps some 15 patents and may even have beat the Utah investigators except for the fact that they were inadequately funded. This tells me that whatever might be the outcome of the scientific interaction to occur with respect to coal fusion in terms of its mechanism, it is an example of research that bureaucrats or even eminent scientists cannot identify as an area of appropriate emphasis.

In the past I have cited the instance of genetic engineering, in which no one I know would have given significant funds to research on snake venom, snail juice or bacterial viruses. Yet those are areas which have led to great breakthroughs in genetic engineering. We must ensure that Canada is not deprived of those possibilities inherent in basic research.

The Government has not even done its job with respect to its preoccupation with industrial and applied research. The extent of this failure was dramatized only in the last few days by the revelation that Connaught Laboratories, a great historical institution in this country which derives from the discovery of insulin in Canada, is to be sold to Mérieux of France. At the same time, Lumonics, one of the most advanced and third largest laser technology firms in the world will be sold to Sumitomo. One of the interesting aspects of Lumonics is that it is part of a centre of excellence in Ontario. It challenges one's imagination to come to grips with this small fact, but in Ontario there is a centre for advanced laser and lightwave research which is funded by the Government of Ontario. Government funding provided the laser technology in the first place. Lumonics is being funded as part of a centre of excellence in Ontario. The federal Government, and now the provincial Government, contributed to the technological development of this place. Now it will be sold.

If the Government is going to come to grips with research and development policy, surely one elementary, fundamental premise must be that when the technology and R and D in this country are developed here and funded by this country, they must be owned in this country. Yet this self-evident, elementary fact of research and development policy is not minimally recognized by the Government or Investment Canada. I have no doubt that it does not even ask the question.

It is not the first time that we have lost technology that was developed here. If we are to go beyond the empty promises of the Prime Minister, then this new Department had better come to grips with those elements of appropriate research and development policy that are necessary to increase the rate of expenditure from the present 1.35 per cent of GNP to the level maintained by other industrial nations, which is about 2.5 per cent. Sweden is approaching 3 per cent of Gross National Product in this area.

The twinning of science and industry in this Department at least calls attention to the absolutely critical requirement to place strong emphasis on the area of creation of new knowledge and new products if we are to get beyond our resource dependency.

I repeat, ownership is fundamental. What has the Government done? It signed a deal with the United States so that any of the companies in this country worth less than $150 million, those companies which do most of the basic industrial research and development, can be bought by Americans without even a review, and take our research and development, take our technology, and take our jobs back to the United States.

If Lumonics and Connaught had available to them some funding from the federal Government, or some federal mechanism to obtain the funding in order to pursue their markets and expand their technologies themselves rather than selling out to foreigners to do it, we could have saved Connaught and Lumonics. However, no such mechanism exists.

According to the subsidy rules to which the Government will almost surely agree with the United States under the Free Trade Agreement, we will not be able to be selective in ensuring that Canadian companies are getting the funding to develop the technology that is necessary for their survival and for the new products we will need in order to be competitive.

One of the key elements in generating research and development and new technology in a country is procurement.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Ask the Japanese.

Mr. McCurdy: Ask the Americans. There is defence procurement. There is space agency procurement.

Yet the Government says that when there is a contract to be let, anyone can bid on it. Americans and Canadians will bid on the same basis. The elephant and the mouse are on the same basis for procurement contracts in this country, for contracts that ought to be generating technology in Canada. The Government has taken away ownership, it has taken away procurement, it is taking away the granting and subsidy mechanisms. What kind of research and subsidy mechanisms and what kind of research and development policy will there be? Basic research has been deprived of funding. There has been no decision on how research in industry will be encouraged.

• (1200)

If this new Department is to do any good, it had better start coming to grips with the situation that finds Canada's relative position constantly deteriorating. This is true in government laboratories where morale has been virtually destroyed by the stupidity of the Government's policies and the lack of a long-term plan and it is true of the universities which are being robbed of test tubes, for God's sake, because of the niggardliness of the Government. Every time industry develops something, we sell it off.

We think that the symbolism in the Bill is good. It is probably a good thing that a message will be sent out to the general population that if we are to have economic growth, R and D had better be carried out in Canada. However, the Government will run into trouble because calling attention to that significant, fundamental relationship between research and development, knowledge, economic growth and jobs ought to put pressure on the Government to stop the BS and do something with respect to science, research and development in Canada. Canada's future is at stake.

Mr. Holtmann: Madam Speaker, once again, it was interesting to hear my colleague from Windsor—Lake St. Clair address the House on an issue that I am certain many Canadians find very important. I do not know if he excited anyone with his almost hysterical approach to a subject matter that I can assure the Hon. Member the Prime Minister takes seriously. After all, it was the Prime Minister who established a council of science and research at a very high level and he himself is very actively involved in it. After many years of Liberal rule, he wanted to find the true direction Canada should take in terms of research and what the country's priorities should be. Instead of rhetoric, he actually sat down with some of the most progressive intellects in that field. The Hon. Member forgot to mention that. This exercise had never been conducted by any Prime Minister before. I wanted to make him aware of that.

The Hon. Member seemed to be rambling all over the field, not really saying anything about what Canada ought to be doing. Let me take him back to the days of the Liberal regime. At that time, in Winnipeg, Manitoba, the Liberal Government spent something like $34 million on a national research building and allocated $25 million to operate it. The building was not completed when the Tories took office. The former Liberal Government had no plans for the place. It had no idea where it was going. It was simply a pile of federal money going into a building, without being sure what kind of research ought to be done. Is this what the Hon. Member wants to go back to? That Liberal Government then said to the Canadian people that it was doing a lot for research because it had allocated "X" number of dollars and built a building.

Let me tell the Hon. Members what the Tories have done in Winnipeg. They have gotten free enterprise, the business community and the manufacturing sector to occupy 75 per cent of the building and pay 75 per cent of the cost of research rather than having the Government of Canada pay for research that it does not even need or know about. Industry is now doing its own R and D, something which was lacking for so many years. The Hon. Member would like the Government of Canada to say, "We will do your R and D, we will throw money at whatever you propose". He is telling us that what is going on today is wrong.

I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the Government seems to have a lot of direction. It can fill the building with private enterprise without spending taxpayers' dollars. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on whether or not he would like to go back to that old system.

Mr. McCurdy: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member, not atypically, either did not hear or did not understand what I said. I clearly did not say that we should go back to the admittedly disgraceful record of the previous Liberal Government with respect to science, research and development.

The Hon. Member suggests that I did not mention the National Advisory Council on Science and Technology, but I did. There are a number of things that the Government did for which I congratulate it, including elements of this Bill. However, I am sure that the Hon. Member will recall, as I do, that before he came into office, indeed in 1983, the Prime Minister said that Canada was in the bush leagues of science and that by 1990 if not by the end of his first term, government expenditures on science, research and development would be doubled so that 2.5 per cent of GNP at least would be devoted to research and development. However, in fact, not a single additional penny of government money has gone into research and development. Right now, we stand exactly where we did when the Prime Minister made that statement.

The Government has thrown some money at science and technology. Canada has probably the most generous tax concessions, which result in indeterminate work by industry of any other country in the world, and it has not corresponded in any way to any coherent policy of science, research and development. The Government, on behalf of which that Hon. Member speaks, did that.

The Hon. Member can jump up and speak about what his Government has done to save a pretty building in Winnipeg from disuse as much as he wants. However, that will not convince anyone that the situation in science, research and development in Canada is not exactly where the Prime Minister found it when he came to office, in the bush leagues of the industrial nations of the world.

We plead with the Hon. Member, through you, Madam Speaker, to get himself into gear and to see if he cannot convince the Government that it must have a coherent policy, one that will overcome some of the negative elements of R and D which have been introduced and imposed upon Canada as a result of a Free Trade Agreement that is supposed to enhance competitiveness but very likely will abort it.

Mr. Tremblay (Rosemont): Madam Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague from Windsor—Lake St. Clair (Mr. McCurdy), who I think appreciates the centres of excellence program started by the Government. As my colleague pointed out, this is certainly a most welcome initiative that provides impetus not only to each university centre but also to inter-university relations in Canada.

I also think that our colleague considers connecting industry and research—not only immediate applied research, but also basic research—to be a good thing.

Madam Speaker, there is not just money—and I would like to have my colleague's comments. For example, on what the Government able to do with Bill C-22? I would like my colleague to take account of the very large investments that exceed what we anticipated when Bill C-22 was passed.

I also share my colleague's concern about new blood. I suppose he will understand that the Canadian bursary program is meant precisely to provide new people in the coming years.
