Mr. McCurdy: Madam Speaker, Bill C-22 which, according to the Hon. Member, was supposed to encourage basic research, has done nothing in that respect. There has been an increase in investment in research by the drug companies, but not in basic research. It is not the kind of research that can give us what we need to support a Canadian initiative, an independent initiative for new industries, and so forth.

As far as grants are concerned, it's not bad, but it's minimal. It would be better if more funding were earmarked for the universities, with more support for all students, not just for scientists, because a country needs science, research and development to improve its economy. However, we also need to balance what science produces with teams of researchers who can help us ensure that science and technology will not affect us in a way that might not be a good thing for the entire country.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Pagtakhan).

[English]

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, the objectives of Bill C-3 as listed in Clauses 7, 10 and 12 are laudable indeed. However, I am deeply concerned that this Bill, which puts the crucial areas of science and technology within the same Department as industry, might conveniently allow the Government to over-emphasize industrial issues and ignore the pressing need to increase expenditure in research and development, as it has ignored this need for the past four and a half years.

If the Government does not improve research and development policies, Canadians risk becoming technologically backward in a world of rapidly unfolding technological innovation. If more research funds are not devoted to science and technology we risk becoming permanently relegated to the kindergarten of science.

My concern is shared by many prominent scientists and economists, such as Polanyi and de Grandpré.

The consequences of continued neglect of research and development by the Government are grave. Canada will be unable to compete in the world market and our standard of living will falter. Given the link between economic and social policies, Canada's social programs will also suffer.

In my reply to the Speech from the Throne I discussed my Party's commitment to our universal social programs. Now I wish to focus on the Government's lack of commitment to research and development in science. May I remind the Government that we need more than a legislative Bill on paper; we need a Government with a will to act.

I am concerned that the new Department that will be created by Bill C-3 will not adequately reflect the necessary link between continued success in industry and greater devotion of resources to research and development which will allow us to create the technology to become more competitive on the international economic scene.

My concern has a genuine basis. In the last four and a half years the Government has not fulfilled its promises in the areas of science and technology. Further, the Government's current obsession with reducing the deficit may cause it to neglect funding of research and development.

Federal expenditure on research and development decreased 7 per cent from 1984 to 1988. In 1984 the Government promised to increase spending on research and development to 2.5 per cent of the Gross National Product before the end of its first mandate. However, funding actually decreased in real terms during this period. To use the words of the Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Andre), this is an example of the Government "saying one thing and acting in another way."

Does the Government know and appreciate the difference between a promise and a commitment? The Government has capped the base budgets of Canada's principal research and granting councils. It has also limited tax credits to companies conducting research.

As if the onslaught on research and development was not serious enough, the Government also drastically cut the budget of the National Research Council. Has the Government forgotten that the National Research Council is Canada's national laboratory and the primary research and development organization of the federal Government?

Instead of increasing the National Research Council's budget by 20 per cent, as the Government had promised, it did the exact opposite. It chopped the budget by 20 per cent. These cuts not only cause lay-offs, but they demonstrated the Government's lack of crucial foresight in developing Canada's future technology.

The Government tax credit system has been plagued by inefficiency and delay. Some prolonged delays, as long as 18 months in the processing of claims, have seriously hindered genuine research efforts. Small companies are hit hardest by such delays. They are forced to restrict their research and development programs because they lack the necessary capital to wait for the decision of the Government.

Members of the House will be the first to admit that the Government's record on research and development is abysmal. I might add that neglecting research and development exacerbates Canada's debt problem, since our inability to compete effectively in the world market will increase our deficit in the long run. The Government does not seem to realize the extremely serious state of Canada's research and development efforts.

Canada was last of eight major countries in total research and development spending. In 1987 total research and development in Canada was approximately 1.4 per cent of Gross Domestic Product, about half that of the United States and Japan. Canada was last in company-funded research and development, with only 3 per cent of Canadian firms investing in any research and development at all. Canada is last in the number of scientists and engineers that we have, which is less than 10 per thousand. It is no comfort that Canada was fourth in government-performed research and development as a percentage of Gross Domestic Product.

Such statistics are frightening when one realizes that science and technology have a greater role than ever before in determining economic prosperity. The research and development efforts in other countries together with the rapidity of technological changes are posing major challenges to the international competitiveness of Canadian industries.

• (1220)

Since research and development is a significant creator of jobs and wealth, the Government's low spending in this area is alarming indeed. Mr. Fraser, President of the Canadian Institute of Advanced Research said:

> We have failed to understand that we are ill equipped to survive in a global economy based increasingly on science and technology-based products.

This lack of understanding is reflected by the fact that this Government has no clear policy on how to promote research. Public policy is essential in promoting and financing Canada's relatively small high-tech industry. Because of the huge investment required and the long wait for profits to materialize, the free market alone cannot be relied upon to finance research. There is a need for more joint industry-government-unversity research and development. Two hundred and forty million dollars to centres of excellence is not enough. I worry that the Government's words are not matched with dollars.

It is absolutely necessary for the Canadian Government to increase spending in the area of research and development. Not only must the Government increase direct support of research and development through larger grants to universities and through better scholarship programs for students, for example, but the Government must provide better successful, loop-hole free investment incentives so that private companies will also increase their research and development spending.

I am also concerned that the Government is not taking enough account of public opinion on the need to increase research and development spending. In 1987, the Ministry of State for Science and Technology found that 80 per cent of Canadians would like to see more development of science and technology. This Government has failed to take into account that public opinion. The public believes that Government should take the lead in this area and share the costs with the private sector and, I emphasize, with the provinces. My Province of Manitoba asks for no less than a fair share of federal support.

The public is also receptive to efforts to improve Canada's scientific capability, to keep scientists and technologists in Canada and to train more of them. Yet the Government has not taken the wishes or the best interests of Canadians into consideration when it decided its spending policy in the areas of research and science. This is one more classic example of this Government's pachydermous insensitivity to the Canadian scientific community!

Canada does not produce enough people with advanced degrees in natural science and engineering. There is a brain-drain of scientists due to the inefficient financing of education and research in Canadian universities. The Liberal Party supports the recommendations of the Lortie Commission. In some research and development areas in high-growth industries the demand for highly qualified human resources exceeds the supply. In the area of basic, as opposed to applied, research, the Government has been even less encouraging toward its human resources. This is alarming as well for without basic science the application of new knowledge is difficult. Yet Canada's support for university research is among the lowest in the major industrial countries on a per capita basis. As a percentage of Gross Domestic Product the funding of research in universities and granting councils is less today than it was in 1970.

This is unacceptable. As Nobel Prize winner, Dr. Gerhard Herzberg points out, it can be historically demonstrated that the truly revolutionary discoveries have come from individuals of great merit pursuing a relatively unfettered path. This Government's research and development program, to the extent that it has one, reflects the Government's preoccupation with profit that takes precedence over concerns about our scientists making progress in the area of basic science.

I submit, Madam Speaker, that investment in research and development should be made on the basis of the common good not on the basis of political expediency. Many Canadian scientists and teachers of science predict that unless more support is given to basic research Canadian universities will lose their stars, those people most likely to make major scientific breakthroughs. Promising scholars may also be steered away from basic research after deciding that there is no career to be had in science in Canada. Indeed, I am concerned that the Government will not do enough to promote both applied and basic research in universities, to encourage industry in Canada to increase research and development activity and to foster their research and development in renewable technologies which are essential to implementing environmental improvement.

I also have some concerns with some specific clauses in Bill C-3, which I will mention only briefly here, but which must be examined carefully at the committee stage. First, I question whether the Minister of this new integrated department will be so preoccupied with industry, market-forces and and profit that he or she will not devote full equal attention to research, science and technology and that the result of the creation of this new integrated department may just be a camouflage which will make it look like the Government plans to address the need to increase research and development while really just allowing the Government to continue stalling in this area.

Second, I worry whether the Minister for Science will act in concurrence with the chief Minister as specified in Clause 4(3) but will not be subject to such control by the chief Minister that the Science Minister is unable to act independently and is instead only a puppet in promoting the needs of science.

Third, I would like to be assured that any recommendations made by the chief science adviser who will be appointed by the Governor in Council under Clause 5(3) will be taken into serious consideration by the Government and not ignored.

Fourth, I am concerned that including the issue of regional development of Ontario and Quebec within the responsibilities of this new department and leaving the regional development of other provinces and territories to other provincial-federal arrangements may lead to an unfair regional allocation of research and development funds. Manitoba and other provinces and territories would not ask that Ontario and Quebec receive less funding for research. We in the West only demand that all regions receive their fair share and are not sacrificed by the federal Government. Any imbalance in regional development is not only unfair, it is unethical.

In conclusion, I wish to ask the assurance of this Government that it will, for once, make an honest effort to stop ignoring the need to push for more research and development for all parts of this country and to lend credence to its words by taking some effective action.

If this Bill passes let it be a redeeming document which will reflect the Canadian commitment to fairness and ethics. Finally, if this Bill passes I hope that the Government will recognize with deeds and not just words the importance of increasing research and development which will allow us to sustain our national pride in our scientific achievements and maintain our economic prosperity which, in turn, will enable us to promote social justice in the form of providing social nets in the areas of unemployment, health and welfare.

The last four years were abysmal for the scientific and technological community as a consequence of neglect by the Government. The Liberal Party is committed to call this Government to task in scientific research to ensure that the next four years will undo the neglect of the past four years.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Portage—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann).

Mr. Holtmann: I listened with interest to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Manitoba Winnipeg North (Mr. Pagakhan), and his concern about the Government's efforts in the area of science and technology. His historic rendition of what happened prior to 1984 brings about an automatic question. I am not sure if he was suggesting that this Government should treat science and technology as it was treated by the former Liberal administration who ran this country so deep into debt that we probably will have to pay forever. Unemployment under that regime increased dramatically. Since 1984 the statistics prove that our employment picture has improved. We have more Canadians working now as a result of this Government, not because of it.

He suggested that Manitoba and Winnipeg have suffered because of this Government, when in fact the new centre for sustainable development will be located in Manitoba and Winnipeg, as was indicated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the Throne Speech, not because of some rhetoric and some words, as was suggested by the Member from Winnipeg North but because we have a science and technology lab now operating fairly efficiently. This was not the case prior to 1984, when money was thrown recklessly from coast to coast with no thought at all. If that is what he really wants Canadians to go back to, I would like to ask him, if he wants to spend money as was done by the previous administration, would the Member want to tax Canadians more for it?

His Leader said during the last campaign that he in fact also wants to reduce the national debt. He had a goal to reduce the national debt. How can the Member for Winnipeg North suggest that automatically a percentage of Gross National Product should be thrown in to science and technology with no regard to how it is spent and no control mechanisms, as we experienced prior to 1984? The Winnipeg Science and Technology Centre was built with nobody prepared to move in upon completion. If the Hon. Member would check the record, he will find there was none. Is that the way he wants Canadians to treat science and technology again, as it was treated prior to 1984? I suggest that the Member for Winnipeg North go back to his polls and find out. He would be very shocked at what went on under the Liberal administration of the day. I would like to know how he intends to spend this new- found money, as it was spent before?

Mr. Pagtakhan: I am indeed shocked that the Tory Government has failed to heed public opinion. I am indeed shocked at that. To the extent the debt has increased, it is this Government that has doubled the debt during its mandate.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Pagtakhan: Let us also realize that for the debt we have created, that for the debt we have in the country, let us not blame the people of our country who have paid taxes to the Government. This debt has also resulted in many assets, in schools, hospitals and our universal social programs.

In terms of the science and technology building in Winnipeg, the building was not quite finished; and for the hon. gentleman to allude that there was no person inside, of course the building was still under construction.

[Translation]

Mr. St-Julien: Madam Speaker, I was listening to what the Hon. Member said, and I would like to ask him whether he knows about the scam of the century that was perpetrated by the Liberals when they were in power. I am referring to the science and technology tax shelters, a program that was supposed to cost the Government of the time $200 million in 1983-84. When we came to power, we were stuck with—The first thing the Minister of Finance did was to get rid of those tax shelters.

Subsequently, we calculated that the scam of the century perpetrated by the Liberals of Canada did not cost $200 million but $3.9 billion, Madam Speaker.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he is aware that of those $3.9 billion, $1.9 billion in Canadian dollars was written off as fraud and losses. We could have built fifty hospitals in this country with that money. He should realize that when we talk about the deficit, we are talking about the previous Liberal government, so I wish he would tell us about the Liberal scam of the century, about those tax shelters.

[English]

Mr. Pagtakhan: The Liberal Party does not, cannot and will never condone corruption in government and tax evaders. This Government was reluctant to act promptly when Members of the Government were being brought before the courts, or had cases before the courts.

Mr. Riis: I think we all recall the scientific tax credit boondoggle that was brought in by the last Liberal administration—

Some Hon. Members: Two million dollars.

Mr. Riis: —that it costs, not as my hon. colleague pointed out, not hundreds of millions, but indeed a few billion dollars. What he failed to mention, just to clarify the record, was that when the administration changed and the Conservative Party took over as Government of Canada, they stopped the program from continuing, but all of the boondoggles that were in stream were allowed to play through. Because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) failed to act expeditiously and in a tough way, as he should have, it cost an extra $1 billion that could have been avoided had he in fact immediately closed that off. We will forget that, Madam Speaker. It is history now.

My question for my hon. colleague is the following: Considering that Canada finds itself now as the western industrialized country that has more foreign ownership and control of its economy than any other nation in the western industrialized countries, would he think that that is one of the main reasons that we have so little research and development going on, particularly in terms of the industrial sector? Companies would tend to do most of the research and development through to production back in their parent headquarters, as opposed to their distant branch plants. Would he agree that because we have a large sector of branch plant economy that that is one of the critical reasons that our record in terms of R and D is so abysmally low?

Mr. Pagtakhan: Certainly we should encourage research in the country. We should not let Canada be a branch plant of any other country in research and development.

Mr. Manley: One thing that has amazed me since coming here is the fact that after four and one-half years Members opposite continue to cite things that happened before 1984, in defence of lack of policy for the last four and one-half years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Manley: We have just heard it a few minutes ago. It is time that they became aware of the record of their own Government, and started defending that.

I would like to congratulate the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Pagtakhan) on an excellent speech. He brings a very useful perspective to this Chamber, that of a medical practitioner as well as a distinguished scientific researcher. I think with that background it would be of value to the House to hear his views on the Government's policies with respect to university research, and what we might do in Canada to encourage more and better university research.

Mr. Pagtakhan: I thank my colleague for his kind words. I can only reiterate that we truly have to develop a science culture policy in this country, not only in rhetoric, not only in words, but in deeds. Canada can no longer tolerate being second-class in research and development. We have a lot of brilliant minds. We have produced in this country a Polanyi. Let us continue to produce more. This Government must put action into its words.

• (1240)

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Madam Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure today to speak on this Bill before the House, concerning industry, technology, and trade.

I listened with some interest to the Minister when he spoke of the Bill. On the surface I agree with him that the main thrust of the Bill appears to be one that is laudable. It speaks in words that would lead us to believe that in fact this Government is going to do something toward science, industry, technology, research and education.

I went back to the prior Bill which this Bill is repealing, the Regional Expansion Act. I looked through that Bill to find what was being changed, what we could look forward to in Government attitude from what was in the prior Bill. I found many of the same words in that Bill as are in this: develop, implement and promote international policies and entrepreneurship. Many of those are words that have been transplanted from that Bill into this Bill.

The Government must do more than talk in platitudes. It must do more than simply set down in words in a Bill what it will do. It must show through action what will happen under this administration. If it could not do it under the former Bill, it does not appear that, without the will and without the drive that is required, it is going to be able to do anything further with this Bill.

For instance, in the matter of research and development, we see that the thrust of this Bill is for increased research, increased development. I would suggest that one goes hand in hand with the other, and hand in hand with education, yet since 1984—I think the figures will prove this—in fact the commitment of this Government to research has dropped substantially.

I was flipping through a position paper from the National Consortium of Scientific and Educational Societies and found some comments that I would like to read into the record.

On one page it states:

> The concern of the member institutions of the National Consortium of Scientific and Education Societies of Canada is both with university education and research. The links between the health of these two economically essential sectors are obvious, and should be. Without productive, high quality undergraduate education, we cannot produce the right kind or number of graduate students. Without the right kind and number of graduate students, the research enterprise will wither. Without research and development, no modern economy can assure or maintain for its citizens an acceptable standard of living—that Canada is seriously underinvesting in research and development. Also any attempt to raise the share of research and development in the national economy must be accompanied by a considerable increase in educated and trained researchers.

I suggest that the Government, while paying lip service to the research community, has been gutting that very institution. We have seen massive cut-backs for the past four and a half years in the area of research and in the area of development. That to us on this side of the House is unacceptable.

In my riding of Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt we have an establishment, the Summerland Research Station for agriculture, which is an institution well respected around the world, not just in Canada. It is a magnificent facility built some years back with the capabilities, with the adequate funding, of doing something in the area of agriculture, for which the Okanagan is famous. Yet within that facility we have major research funding caps.

From my point of view I am pleased to see science, technology, and research coupled with small business. Certainly, in the agricultural area in my region one goes hand in hand with the other. Agriculture, after all, is a small business. The research done in the Summerland Research Station works with the agricultural community in taking fruit products and assisting those small businesses in developing by-products, what we know here and throughout Canada as value-added products. It is a small example of the value of research.

I would suggest to the House that for every dollar that we invest in the research community in the education of our young people and in maintaining that research community, we get back dividends far in excess not just for this generation but for generations of the future. Those dollars, whether they be for research in the agricultural area, the astrophysical area, the area of geriatric research or for medical research, will return dollars. However, we must provide those dollars to our scientific researchers in order that they can spread their wings and make these break-throughs and developments that will lead, in the future, to the cuts that we will be able to make in medical areas. The research that will be done will take away the necessity, perhaps, of so many trips of our aged and aging population to the doctors, the clinics, and the hospitals, thereby repaying a dividend in that area.

I would like to move on the area of small business. I have read Clause 8. On the surface it is laudable and applaudable. Using this Bill, the Minister will be able to strengthen the national economy, increase the international competitiveness of Canadian industry, encourage the fullest and most efficient and effective development and use of science and technology and develop, implement and promote national policies to foster an improvement in productivity and efficiency in industry. He will be able to develop and implement national policies to foster entrepreneurship and to start up growth and expansion of small business and promote and expand tourism. These thrusts are applaudable. However, I would suggest that they must be more than just words.

Small business in Canada since 1980 has created, according to Statistics Canada, just over 70 per cent of our new jobs. I suggest that of the approximately 800,000 small businesses in Canada, the small business persons are the economic backbone of our country. We in this House should do more than simply pay lip service, simply give out the usual platitudes. We should be bending over backward to assist small business, whether it be through financial assistance, assistance through the Federal Business Development Bank, assistance through our chartered banks, assistance through interest rates, or assistance through technology. We must do more for the small business community.

It was interesting in looking through the annual report of the Federal Business Development Bank and analysing some of the figures in it to find that in terms of the loans which it grants, over 82 per cent were over the $100,000 mark. The balance under that mark illustrates to some extent that the small business community is not gaining benefit from the Federal Business Development Bank. In going through facts and figures from small business, we find that 85 per cent of small business loans are made through chartered banks. It is interesting to note the problems that small businesses have in dealing with chartered banks. One of the largest complaints is that they are required to put up collateral much in excess of what would normally be required and much in excess of the loan that they are receiving. For each dollar of loan that a small business in Canada takes from a chartered bank, it must put up in collateral $2.78 worth of assets.

Small businesses are also overburdened with the paperwork required in order to process many of these loans. Mountains of paperwork is involved. They have to deal with matters such as secured loans, mortgages, chattel mortgages, assignment of book debts, and the list goes on. Since most small businesses employ under five people, it is the business person who has to deal with this paperwork. He has to deal with the lawyers and the accountants in order to help them. Therefore, his overhead goes up. It is in this area that the Government could be cutting down on some of the red tape. It should be cutting down on some of the paperwork required. In this way he or she will have the opportunity to pursue their assistance to the economy with the aim of being able to put bread and butter on their tables.

On the surface the thrust of this Bill appears to be laudable. However, there is an unfortunate quirk in it about which everyone in Canada should be made aware. It has been pointed out in the House before. This Bill leaves the economic development across Canada in the hands of three different Ministers. Instead of pulling it all together under the auspices of one ministry, it is spread out among three. If it were pulled together under one, there would be a unified thrust. We must have unity in Canada. We must show unity. We must not have separate ministries for the West, the East or for central Canada. Economics, research and development and technology must be dealt with even-handedly throughout all the provinces and all the regions of Canada.

Unfortunately, this Bill leaves the way open for regional disparities to crop up and cause problems for the generation of the future. Instead of bringing forward a unified Bill which would bring the regions together, the Government appears to be dividing the country into three areas. They are the Atlantic, the West and central Canada. Over the years we have watched the growing disparities between the eastern provinces and central Canada and between the western provinces and central Canada. One of the arguments that we hear constantly on the doorsteps and the streets of our ridings is that we in the West are not receiving our fair share. I am sure the same is true with respect to the East. We need equality with the rest of Canada, a unified Canada that Sir John A. Macdonald worked so hard to bring together. We need a Government that will bring in policies to unify and govern with an even hand regardless of how the electorate voted in the last election or how it is perceived that it will vote in the next.

There are a number of areas in the Bill at which I think the Government should look. In terms of British Columbia and the West, the lumber industry is one of those areas. It can use some of that research and development assistance to create value-added products. Instead of shipping our lumber and logs raw, we should be looking at methods to add value to them. This would assist the people and entrepreneurs in the regions to use what we are producing in our sawmills and pulp mills, in the creation of products that would stimulate the number of jobs in Canada for Canadians, products not only for consumption in Canada but for consumption abroad. If Canada is to survive and thrive in the economics of today's world, we can no longer be hewers of wood and drawers of water. We must progress. We must do it with fervour and with one goal in mind. We must reach that goal. However, we cannot achieve it without the funding and the backing of the Government.

The unemployment rate in my region is enormous. It is over twice the national average. This is an area in which value-added products in agriculture, forestry and mining could add to the employment base.

I suggest that in the future the Government put the Federal Business Development Bank back into the business of making small entrepreneurs its first priority. I suggest the Government reduce the unnecessary forms and red tape and target federal contracts to the small business sector. I suggest the Government establish a more aggressive "buy Canada" program and an export marketing agency to help small manufacturers with limited resources to make contacts abroad. I suggest that the Government prohibit banks from requiring small businesses to meet unreasonable collateral requirements on loans. There should be a push from the Government for a commitment from the banks to stop discriminating against women who seek start-up loans.

Those are some of the suggestions that I put forward. I ask that the Government listen to them in the future before it puts this Bill into law.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): At this point in time we could start the period for questions and comments. However, it is 12.59 p.m. and I would seek the unanimous consent of the House to call it one o'clock. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE ENVIRONMENT

OPPOSITION TO TRANSFER OF TOXIC WASTE TO ABITIBI

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, Québec Environment Minister Lise Bacon should immediately remove the PCBs in Québec schools and hospitals and store them safely in the regions they come from, not send them to Senneterre in Abitibi-Témiscamingue. PCBs in Senneterre are just the thin edge of the wedge. Once they are all disposed of, other toxic waste will follow, as Ms. Bacon knows. Opening the door to PCBs from the South means opening Senneterre's door to all of Québec's toxic wastes. The region is big and we are few, Mr. Speaker, but we are fully alive, in good health and love our environment.

HISTORIC EVENTS

COMMEMORATION OF HISTORIC MEETING IN P.E.I.

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, on September 1, 1864, 15 delegates from the Maritime provinces assembled in the legislative council chamber of Province-House in Charlottetown, P.E.I. They gathered to consider a proposal which would have New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and P.E.I. form a legislative union. To this meeting came five officials from Canada, John A. Macdonald, Georges Etienne Cartier, George Brown, Alexander Galt and Thomas D'Arcy McGee. They came, as an historian of the time stated:

To till the fertile soil of reason and to plant the seeds of a great nation.

This year Prince Edward Island and Canada are paying tribute to the memory of those men who were the fathers of our country who built better than they knew, who created a nation that is the envy of all others. This summer P.E.I. is celebrating the 125th anniversary of this historic meeting. From June through September, there will be celebrations ranging from a world softball championship in Summerside to a royal visit by Prince Andrew and the Duchess of York.

My three colleagues from P.E.I., the Government of Premier Joe Ghiz, and the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly, the Hon. Edward Clark, join me in inviting you, Mr. Speaker, all Members of this House and all our fellow Canadians to come to our friendly shores and join in these historic celebrations.

HEALTH CARE

FUND-RAISING IN UNIONVILLE, ONTARIO

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, last fall two and a half year-old Jeffrey Savage of Unionville was hit by a car and became a paraplegic. His mother, Deb, brought Jeffrey home from the hospital this month. The entire proceeds of the Unionville Village Festival dance in June will go towards Jeffrey's care and rehabilitation as he starts down a new and difficult path.

Earlier this year, 18 year-old Kurt Gengenbach of Unionville suffered a severe spinal injury in a hockey accident. Next week on May 4, over 1,200 people will be attending a fund-raising dinner for Kurt at $100 a plate. On May 7, a "Run for Kurt" will take place starting at Unionville High School. Proceeds from both these events will go toward Kurt's home care and renovations to his home for wheelchair accessibility.

I salute and applaud all those people of my riding of Markham who are participating in these warm and generous expressions of goodwill.

IMPACT OF PROPOSED NATIONAL SALES TAX

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, the Finance Minister's statement yesterday that he will act alone without the assistance of the provinces to implement his pet project, a new national sales tax, indicates the futility of that exercise, and like his equally unmoving determination on interest rates, shows how out of step with Canadians he is on the economy.

Canadians do not want high interest rates and they do not want the new national sales tax program which threatens everything from new home construction, as argued by the Canadian Real Estate Association, to our children's music education.

This Government is continuing to fail to protect Canadian interests. The Free Trade Agreement, high interest rates and the value of the dollar are killing the small manufacturer. At the same time the proposed national sales tax will cripple the consumer. What we need in this country is a real tax reform and a Minister of Finance who understands the Canadian economy and the needs of the ordinary Canadian citizen.

IMMIGRATION

PLIGHT OF SALLY ESPINELLI

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, three months ago the Minister of Employment and Immigration allowed Violeta Juayong to remain in Canada. Sally Espineli, also of my community, was not so fortunate. She was deported eight months ago on the same grounds as Violeta, that she misrepresented her marital status.

Late last week the Canadian Human Rights Commission ruled that discrimination may have occurred in her case. The agony for Sally, and for many others who entered Winnipeg under similar conditions, have continued. I now urge the Minister to show the same humanitarian concern for Sally Espineli, and bring her back to Canada now instead of waiting for the final decision of the Human Rights Tribunal.

My sentiments are shared by all members of my community, by the Premier of Manitoba, by members of the Opposition and also by senior members of the Cabinet and government caucus. I am confident the Minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will do the right and honourable thing and promptly end the human suffering of my community by taking action to rectify this intolerable situation.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

GREATER FREDERICTON FREE TRADE FORUM

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to advise all Hon. Members about the Greater Fredericton Free Trade Forum which is an innovative community approach being taken throughout my riding of Fredericton and York Sunbury towards the realization of the opportunities offered by free trade with the United States.

Fredericton is well located in close proximity to the USA and many of our small businesses have already commenced to expand their horizons in pursuit of business in New England. There is a prevailing mood of optimism and challenge in the business community of greater Fredericton in this regard, and so it was recently decided to make free trade a co-operative undertaking by the whole community.

The movement will be led voluntarily by private business people sharing the support facilities available from our universities, the Research and Productivity Council, CFB Gagetown and our Chambers of Commerce. Altogether there have been eleven Mayors, eight provincial MLAs and three Members of Parliament working together on a non-partisan basis to help organize this campaign.

The purpose of the Greater Fredericton Free Trade Forum is to stimulate the total area to take advantage of the potential offered by free trade—

Mr. Speaker: I'm sorry, but the Hon. Member's time has expired.

ELECTIONS ACT

ENUMERATION PROVISIONS OF URBAN AND RURAL DWELLERS

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold): Mr. Speaker, during the enumeration leading up to the last federal election, many of my constituents were out of town when enumeration took place. There were some people who were in the riding who were not enumerated and for that reason they lost the right to vote. It seems ironic that federal judges and lately the mentally handicapped have won the right to vote from a federal judge, yet urban dwellers such as those in my riding of Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold remained out in the cold.

Rural dwellers can register to vote right up to voting time, but urban dwellers must do so by the seventeenth day before the elections. I think that this is unfair. I believe that urban voters should be able to register to vote right up to election day just like rural people and that way they will not be disenfranchised.

Mr. Arthur Mills of my riding was one of the disenfranchised Canadians. On his behalf and on behalf of Canadians who did not have a chance to vote, I urge that the Government address this problem and correct it before the next federal election.

NATURAL RESOURCES

UTILIZATION OF WESTERN CANADIAN LOW-SULPHUR COAL URGED

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I want to encourage the Government of Canada to do all that is necessary and practical to encourage the utilization of western Canada low-sulphur coal in the central Canadian industrial basin. The western coal would largely displace imported coal from Pennsylvania and elsewhere offshore. The implementation of this recommendation would accomplish two worthy objectives: First, by encouraging the use of a domestically produced coal, our nation's balance of payments would be improved. More important, because western Canada produces coal much lower in sulphur content, the subsequent emissions from the use of western coal is significantly preferred in protecting our environment from the contaminations of sulphur dioxide or acid rain. This suggestion could save Canada $2.4 billion, generate 13,000 permanent jobs and at the same time protect our soil, water and air from contamination.

TAXATION

UNFAIR INCREASE IN TAXATION RATES ALLEGED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, this morning I received a letter from a very troubled resident of Vavenby, British Columbia, who feels he has been excessively taxed. In 1986 on an income of $19,500 he paid $1,035 in income tax. However, by 1988 on an income of $23,000 he was forced to pay nearly $3,000 tax. In three years, while his income increased by 18 per cent, the Conservative Government increased his income tax by 175 per cent. He believes he has been unduly taxed. An $1,800 income tax grab from a man who has worked all his life for his community and his country is not right, especially when he knows that 60,000 large profitable corporations pay no taxes at all. This man from Vavenby,

British Columbia, whose income tax increased 175 per cent in three years says not that only will he not pay more income tax, he cannot pay more income tax. What will he say when he learns on Thursday that he soon will be forced to pay a new national sales tax for the purchase of clothing, books, car repairs, everything? I suggest that a taxpayer's revolt is in the making.

EMPLOYMENT

IMPORTANCE OF CHALLENGE '89 FOR YOUTH

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec–Est): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that my first statement in this Second Session of the 34th Parliament is good news for the young people in my riding.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, with the approval of 131 Challenge '89 projects in Québec–Est, I am proud to announce that 238 students this summer will be able to benefit from a quality well–paying work experience, thanks to a federal financial contribution of $293,639.

The Challenge program, created in 1985 by the Conservative Government, has been very successful throughout Canada. For example, 400 companies in my riding have been able to hire almost 700 students, thanks to this program.

This initiative of my Government must be emphasized and encouraged.

AIR CANADA

DISCONTINUANCE OF JET SERVICE TO STEPHENVILLE, NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, Air Canada's plan to discontinue jet air service into Stephenville is an absolutely devastating body blow to the economy of southwestern Newfoundland.

Of course the move is a direct consequence of the Government's airline deregulation policy, a policy which decrees that the public's right to an adequate transportation network must play second fiddle to the whims and balance sheets of corporations.

It is a policy which is rapidly translating into inferior air service for people in less populated areas; a policy which, together with rural postal closings and railway abandonments, is working wonders in the Government's grand scheme to shut down rural Canada.

There is just one way that Air Canada and its service to Stephenville can be saved, that is through the direct intervention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. B. Bouchard). His colleague, the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), already asked him to instruct the National Transportation Agency to hold public hearings on the matter. I now ask the Minister to do exactly that, with a view to according Newfoundland special designation as the NTA Act provides.

NATIONAL SECRETARIES' DAY

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is National Secretaries' Day and I want to encourage everyone who works with a secretary to take a few moments to consider their value.

I suggest that every Member of the House and every manager in the country assess his or her effectiveness and recognize the contribution that their assistant or secretary has made toward that effectiveness. Receptionists, clerks and secretaries are seldom given the credit or respect they deserve. Yet they are as responsible as anyone for the continued efficient operation of our industrial plants, hospitals, businesses and offices.

Florists and restaurants will do well tomorrow as people recognize National Secretaries' Day, but I would encourage those buying the flowers and lunches to recognize also the importance of the position and the person who fills it.

EDUCATION

LACK OF FUNDS

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (Saint–Boniface): Mr. Speaker, the Government has changed the formula for transfer payments to colleges and universities, a decision that will give these institutions several billion dollars less in financial assistance. The Government's financial support for research and development is half that in the United States, Japan and Sweden.

The Government has capped grants to Native people who are interested in post-secondary education. It has invested less than $5 per person per year in literacy training.

The Government has not changed the criteria for student loans since 1984. Its program to help part-time students is a flop: less than half of 1 per cent of students have applied.

Mr. Speaker, because of the Conservative Government, we can no longer say that education is an investment. Nowadays, education is an investment people cannot afford.

CHEMICAL WARFARE

TREATY FOR BANNING CHEMICAL WEAPONS PROPOSED

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, the revelation that poison gas of some kind was used, fatally, against demonstrators in Georgia is very sorry news indeed. It must be widely condemned as totally reprehensible and never repeated again. Those who made the decision to use it should be brought to justice.

Unfortunately, it seems that the world is on a slippery slope to increased use and increased tolerance of chemical warfare, as we learned to our horror when Iraq employed chemical warfare on his Kurdish population in surely one of the most despicable acts in recent history.

There has been much talk of the need for a treaty to ban all such chemical weapons, as well there should be. It is certainly needed, not just to prevent nations from using such chemicals against each other but also to protect their own citizens. We urge the Government to actively promote such a treaty.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

PROPOSED NATIONAL SALES TAX—POSITION OF PROVINCES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker,—relax Barbara—my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Mrs. McDougall: Relax Michael.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I owe you one.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): My question is directed to the Minister of Finance, the man who has so mismanged the economy of the country that after four budgets he now claims to have a budgetary crisis; a man who, in a short four years, has doubled the total public debt of this country. He is Minister of Finance in a Government that last year spent over $91 million of taxpayers' money on advertising—

Mr. McDermid: Wrong.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —and a Minister of Finance who has just started running public ads at the taxpayers' expense to explain why government spending is out of control.

The Minister stated that the provinces refused to go along with the national sales tax. To what do the provinces object? Is it his new tax on books? Is it his new tax on music lessons? Is it his new tax on shoes, his new tax on auto insurance, or are the provinces really objecting to the fact that this is a Minister of Finance who, in an unprecedented way, has to go to public advertising at the taxpayers' expense to explain to Canadians why he will have to raise taxes?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the preamble by that well-known expert on deficit financing—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The father of it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As the Prime Minister says, the father of deficit financing. I encourage the Hon. Member to read Terry Wills' column in the Gazette of last Sunday which showed how government spending under his stewardship as Minister of Finance went from something like 13 per cent to 23 per cent to 29 per cent—

Mr. Gauthier: You are the pro.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —and then came back to 25 per cent.

Mr. Gauthier: You are the pro.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member behind the Leader of the Opposition says that I am the pro. Let us look at what happened.

Mr. Boudria: You doubled the debt.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In the last four years government spending on programs has averaged 3.5 per cent a year. I will match that 3.5 per cent a year any time against that 25 per cent average—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, when I left the custody of the public finances of this country, the total public debt of Canada was $26 billion, less than the annual deficit of that Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are talking about a Minister who inherited a public debt of $170 billion and now gives Canadians a public debt of $330 billion—double in four years. That is his record.

THE NEW NATIONAL SALES TAX—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance says that the provinces object to his new national sales tax. And of course we would like to know why.

Do they object to his new tax on daycare services? To his new tax on train and bus travel? To his new tax on plumbers' or electricians' bills? Or to his new tax on life insurance and insurance of personal belongings? To his new tax on accounting fees or to his new tax on funeral expenses?

So explain that to Canadians!

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is political opportunism at its best.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: Strike two, Michael.

• (1420)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Leader of the Opposition rises, and in a very self-righteous way, he reads off this list. Let me read off something to him. This is the unanimous 15th report of the Finance Committee of this House, signed by his finance critic and his deputy finance critic in the last Parliament. It says that, in short, a single rate value added tax on the broadest possible base is a desirable objective.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Leader of the Opposition is sitting there in his place saying that all that was said in the last Parliament is behind us, we do not look back, we do not look at anything that was said by the people who represented him on that Finance Committee. Canadians are not going to fall for that one. They know a political opportunist when they see one.

POSITION OF PROVINCES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we opposed a value added tax or a national consumption tax before and during the election campaign. I can understand the Minister being sensitive. He will not only tax funerals, he will tax the reading of the will through this particular sales tax.

I see the Prime Minister coaching the Minister of Finance.

An Hon. Member: He's in trouble.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He's in real trouble.

I would like to suggest to the Minister of Finance one way of eliminating the public debt of Canada—put a tax on every election promise made and broken by the Prime Minister since the last election.

What do the provinces really object to? Do they object to the Minister's new proposed tax on movie tickets, his new tax on clothing, his new tax on cleaning bills, his new tax on car repairs, his new tax on bank charges or his new tax on roofing repairs, or do the provinces really object to a new national sales tax which will increase the cost of a new home by thousands upon thousands of dollars?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition just confirmed what I said when I said that he was a political opportunist. On March 16, 1987, both his finance critics signed this report, and presumably, unless he has totally lost control of his Party, they did so with his knowledge and support.

Then in late September, I believe about four days before the election was called, what happened? The road to Damascus is a long one. He changed his position totally because of the impending election. He saw himself going straight south in the polls and he thought he would have the biggest election defeat ever, even bigger than the one in 1984. That is why the Leader of the Opposition changed his mind then. Now he is grandstanding on the political stage, trying to—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Etobicoke North.

IMPACT OF PROPOSED SALES TAX

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Since sales taxes by their very nature are regressive, lower and middle-income families will pay proportionately more of the new sales tax than will higher income families.

During the recent election campaign the Minister of Finance indicated that the new sales tax rate would be 9 per cent. For a middle-income family, estimates of additional taxes to be paid are $700 annually. Has the Minister recognized the widespread inflationary impact of such an additional tax as well as its greater cost to lower-income Canadians than to higher-income Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wonder who the real Roy MacLaren is. It says here in The Ottawa Citizen of March 21, "MacLaren said he also supports—"

Some Hon. Members: Answer the question!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Hon. Members do not like to hear these things. "MacLaren said he also supports the need for a new broadly based national sales tax—"

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): "—to replace the current narrowly based federal sales tax on manufacturers which he agreed is badly flawed".

I do not want to make this into a partisan game. I do not want to try to gain political points. I think the Hon. Member understands that the existing manufactured sales tax is flawed and must be changed.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What's the record? What's the record since Confederation?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think that the Leader of the Opposition, if he looked into his own heart, would also agree that it was in need of change. I ask Hon. Members opposite to come forward with how they would change the sales tax because they know that there has to be a change in the national sales tax.

MINISTER'S POSITION ON SALES TAX

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that the Hon. Member would ask us how to deal with his problems. He obviously does not know himself.

The Minister is unable to give any assurances to Canadians that the regressive sales tax he intends to introduce will not impose an inflationary burden on them. If we are to believe him, lower-income Canadians will not pay more than higher-income Canadians. Is that what he is saying today? The Minister should come clean and tell Canadians that the burden of the new sales tax will be incurred more by lower-income Canadians than by higher-income Canadians and that it will be inflationary.

Does the Minister not recognize that the current federal sales tax is a hidden tax? Consumers do not see it. Can he now assure the House that any new sales tax he introduces will not be equally hidden? Can he assure the House that it will not be merely an additional and regressive way to increase taxes so as to reduce the Government's deficit?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that I am asking them, because I do not seem to know what I want to do. I know what this Government wants to do. We have made our decisions. Those decisions will be presented in the House on Thursday evening at 5 o'clock.

The Leader of the Opposition keeps referring to his record. He keeps interjecting about the record. Let us look at his record. The inflation rate jumped from 5.1 per cent to 10.6 per cent. The bank rate rose by 4.25 per cent during 33 months in office. Unemployment grew by 165,000. Spending doubled. The Public Service grew by 66,000, and the Auditor General stated that Parliament had lost or was close to losing effective control of the public purse. That is the record of the Leader of the Opposition, and we do not want any more of that.

TAX REDUCTIONS QUERY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. We have just heard the Minister of Finance make some interesting accusations about political opportunism and the importance of staying with words one had uttered in the past when they are applicable to the future.

I have here a news story quoting the Minister of Finance who, in the middle of the fall, 1988, election campaign, was talking about the introduction of a new comprehensive sales tax.

In that article, he said that it would be introduced in the context of tax reform, that its impact would be revenue neutral, which is to say that any additional revenues coming from that tax would be offset by tax reductions, specifically tax reductions for middle-income families. The Minister of Finance has just talked about political opportunism. Does he stand by that commitment? Will the introduction of the new sales tax be offset by tax reductions?

• (1430)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has been in the House since approximately 1968. He knows that tax matters are dealt with in Budgets. Therefore, he knows perfectly well that I cannot give him an answer in anticipation of a Budget two days from now.

ELECTION CAMPAIGN COMMITMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Minister of Finance that what he has said now is not the case. Two days ago he publicly announced that we were going to have a tax increase. He has a right to do that as Minister of Finance. He has the right now to make it clear that he is going to live up to his election promise that middle-income Canadians will get a tax cut. He knows he can say it, and he should say it.

Since the Minister has been so eloquent in his criticism of the Leader of the Official Opposition in quoting words back to him, why will he not come clean on his own commitment to the people of Canada, and in this year 1989 live up to his commitment made in the fall of 1988. Will the Minister do that?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is referring to the concept of fairness.

Mr. Broadbent: Yes.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): What I want to draw to his attention, as I have done many times in the past, is the record of this Government over the course of the past four years in improving the fairness of the tax system by taking out loophole after loophole.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What a joke!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I hear another interjection from the Leader of the Opposition. Let me remind Hon. Members that it was when he was the Minister of Finance that a number of the loopholes that I removed from the tax system were put in by him.

I wish to remind Hon. Members of others, the scientific research tax credit that was removed, the carve-outs, the limited partnership bump, tax benefits for those who were buying yachts and hotels—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance did not even blush when he talked about the Conservatives producing tax reform. I can tell him average Canadians know that between 1984 and 1988 under this Government their taxes went up by some $1,300, while the richest Canadians' taxes went down by a few hundred dollars. That may be tax reform for the Tories, but it is not for the rest of the people of Canada.

TAXATION OF HIGHER-INCOME CITIZENS AND MINIMUM TAX ON PROFITABLE COMPANIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my last question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Instead of taxing Canadian families to the tune of $1,000 with the new sales tax, why didn't the Minister tax Canadians with very high incomes or introduce a minimum tax for profitable companies? That would be progressive, so why won't the Conservatives buy it?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have never made any denial of the fact that taxes went up during the time that we were in office over the past four years.

Mr. Broadbent: Down for the rich, Michael; up for the rest.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let us put this in proper perspective.

Mr. Shields: You're shouting like Shirley Carr down there.

Mr. Broadbent: She's right sometimes.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Revenues went up quite substantially during the last four and a half years, but 80 per cent of the increase in those revenues was because of a healthier economy. There were 1.5 million new jobs created during that period of time.

I want to remind the Hon. Member that when one looks at the increase in revenues and at the number of loopholes, and the changes that we made in the tax system to remove people from the tax system, and I believe it was 850,000 people—

Mr. Riis: Sixty thousand profitable corporations don't pay any income tax.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There were 850,000 people who were taken off the tax rolls while we were bringing in tax reform in 1988. That is reform. That is progress. That is why we are looking forward with confidence to the years ahead.

UNILATERAL METHOD OF IMPOSING TAX—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. For some years now, the world unilateral has been anathema to the Prime Minister, who was tended to condemn every unilateral gesture made by previous governments. Considering that today, the Government of Québec is condemning Ottawa's attitude, how can the Prime Minsiter justify introducing his own tax unilaterally, against the wishes of the Government of Québec, and in the process take billions of dollars out of the pockets of Québecers?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we made it quite clear from the release of the White Paper on Tax Reform in June, 1987, that there were three options that we were looking at. One was a national sales tax, and the other two were federal only forms of taxation.

During the course of this time we have had very good meetings with the provinces trying to get a better understanding of what the operations of a national sales tax would be, and whether or not there was a meaningful commitment on the part of the provinces to follow through on this objective.

As I indicated in the House yesterday, there is a different sense of urgency on the part of the provinces relative to the federal Government.

As the Hon. Member's seat-mate would agree, we must change the manufacturers' sales tax and bring in a fairer tax. The provinces have a sales tax system which is not broken. We felt that we had to move ahead, and that was the decision that we took last week.

JUSTICE OF TAX

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Finance failed to convince his provincial colleagues, who know all the ins and outs, that this new national tax is fair and appropriate, how can he possibly expect to convince the general public that this tax is necessary, fair— Does he—

[English]

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Ask Raymond Garneau.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: According to the former leader— In any case, the last two Liberals who agreed with the Minister of Finance on the VAT were defeated, and that is probably what is going to happen to this Government because of a tax that will go down in history as Brian's tax.

Could the Minister of Finance explain how he expects to convince the House and the general public that this tax is fair when he was unable to convince the Finance Ministers, who must be aware of Canada's fiscal situation? I can't believe it!

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me take a minute to remind the Hon. Member why the two finance critics of the Liberal Party in the last House agreed—

Mr. Lapierre: But they were defeated. They are not here. They paid highly.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —that we should be moving from the existing sales tax to a new sales tax. It is a hidden tax. It is applied in a very arbitrary manner. It is a burden on our exports. It puts imports in a more favoured position than Canadian domestic production. For all these reasons it is a drag on our economy and it is costing us jobs.

Therefore, the Finance Committee, and the provincial Finance Ministers agreed that we must move to a new form of sales tax and scrap the existing sales tax because it is simply not working.

NEW TAX—EXEMPTION FOR MUNICIPALITIES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In 1987, the Minister said that the new sales tax would not increase the tax burden on Canadian municipalities. Yesterday, the Minister mentioned a number of exemptions, including hospitals. He forgot to mention municipalities. Could the Minister of Finance confirm today that Canadian municipalities will be exempted from his new sales tax?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite right. We did make a statement. The provincial Finance Ministers and myself agreed on an approach that we would take to the municipal sector as well as the emanations of the provinces, the universities, schools, and hospitals, as the Hon. Member has pointed out.

At this time I would reiterate that the rebates of sales taxes paid on the purchases made by those organizations, including municipalities, ensure that reform of the federal sales tax imposes no greater tax burden than was the case before sales tax reform.

EFFECT OF TAX CHANGE ON MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is the following. This tax will shift part of the federal Government's deficit to the municipalities, that level of government which has the least flexible means of meeting its tax base. It will also cripple the municipalities' efforts to meet those new social demands that are placed on them.

• (1440)

Will the Minister now tell us that all of those agencies in municipalities old age residences, golden age clubs, all the non-governmental organizations which meet the demands of the municipalities, will be exempted from this tax so that hundreds of thousands of Canadians will not have to face increased taxes to meet demands currently being met by them?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I don't think that the Hon. Member listened to my answer, or possibly he had prepared his question before and didn't change it when he heard my first answer. Let me repeat.

The Government will provide rebates of sales tax paid on purchases to ensure that reform of the federal sales tax imposes no greater tax burden on municipalities than is the case before sales tax reform.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR INCOME TAX REDUCTION FOR AVERAGE FAMILIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Finance announced one of the biggest tax grabs in Canadian history for ordinary people.

Mr. Broadbent: Shameful!

Mr. Nystrom: This national sales tax of 9 per cent will mean about a $1,000 tax increase for the average Canadian family.

The Minister made a promise in the election campaign that this tax would be revenue neutral. I have his quotes here and he said that one thing he would do would be to reduce the income tax for average families in this country. I want to know now whether or not he is going to keep his word, live up to his commitment, live up to his campaign promise and reduce income taxes for ordinary Canadians.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, only the New Democrats would denounce a tax before they have seen any of the details of it.

Mr. Broadbent: Listen to the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, Hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Leader of the New Democratic Party is very anxious.

An Hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke): It is hard to tell. But Thursday afternoon we will give him some answers.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): The Minister of Finance has already announced this to be inflationary as well, Mr. Speaker. He has already made a lot of announcements.

MACDONALD COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister about tax fairness. The Macdonald Commission said, in 1986, that a shift away from a manufacturers' sales tax or national sales tax would shift the burden away from provinces with manufacturing to provinces that do not have manufacturing.

In light of the study by the Macdonald Royal Commission, how can the Minister justify the shifting of hundreds of millions of dollars of tax burdens from have provinces to have-not provinces like Saskatchewan, Manitoba, the Maritimes and Newfoundland? How can he justify this tax shift from the richer provinces to the poor people?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there was another Member from Saskatchewan by the name of de Jong who said on May 28, 1987: "I do not have to be convinced that the sales tax regime which now exists is in need of reform. It is, as I mentioned, very arbitrary and confusing."

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke): If the Member from Regina says that the sales tax regime is in need of reform, maybe he should advise the Member from Yorkton—Melville just how he would reform it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke): We are putting forward a proposal on Thursday. We have indicated that we have discussed this at some length for the last nearly two years. It will be a specific proposal, and I look forward to some more constructive comments from the Hon. Member.

REVENUE CANADA

SPECIAL AUDIT OF AGRICULTURAL EQUIPMENT TRADE-IN ALLOWANCES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. It concerns the business investment tax credit and the heavy equipment trade-in over allowance special audit.

As the Minister knows, there are some 600 taxpayers who were reassessed before this audit was curtailed and they have been awaiting the results of a test case.

Since the test case has been abandoned, and given the long delays in this matter, will the Minister consider instructing his officials to reverse these unfortunate reassessments? What is the Minister's intention now that the test case has been abandoned?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): That is, of course, a very important question, Mr. Speaker, although I hate to interrupt the Minister of Finance who was on such a great roll. I am sure he will get back on it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: As the Hon. Member knows, both my predecessor and I have been working with the agricultural community and the appropriate individuals very closely in assisting them to follow the procedures of reassessment. We were hopeful that the test case which came forward would set a precedent for the rest of the cases. Unfortunately, that test case was withdrawn by those involved and they accepted Revenue Canada's decision.

We are now working with the community and looking for a new test case to come forward. The bottom line is that I am in touch with every affected individual in the agricultural community, working with them to try to find a satisfactory solution.

THE ECONOMY

NATIONAL DEFICIT—GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. During the last election campaign the Prime Minister said:

> We have dealt with the deficit. Our promises are all within Michael Wilson's fiscal framework. Every nickel has been accounted for.

Assuming that the Prime Minister was telling Canadians the truth at that time, could he now explain why his Government is spending taxpayers' money to advertise across the country telling Canadians about the urgency to reduce the deficit?

In other words, why is the Government spending more money to convince itself to spend less money?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I presume from the way the Hon. Member puts the question that he agrees we do have a debt problem and a deficit problem and that it is important for us to get on and deal with them.

The purpose of the advertising is to make sure Canadians understand that and have a full appreciation of the magnitude of the problem. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition wants to get back to what happened in the fall. I thought he was trying to forget that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Through you, Mr. Speaker, I direct a supplementary to the Minister of Finance. I hate to quote the Prime Minister using his own words, because I know how unfair that could be.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): I would like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Over the past 12 months, the Government has spent some $91 million to explain to us the need to cut back. If it were so important to save money today, why did the Conservatives forget all that during the election campaign when they made $19 billion in election promises? And why did the Prime Minister forget all these commitments and all the financial difficulties of the Government during the Lac-Saint-Jean by-election, when $162 million in goodies were given out to get his friend elected to the House of Commons?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there are a range of advertising programs that we have introduced as a Government to advise Canadians of the types of programs available to them. Since we do have these programs it is important that Canadians understand that they are there and understand how they can take advantage of them. Surely it is a responsibility of the Government to do that type of advertising.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—PROCESSING OF VISA APPLICANTS ON CYPRUS

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A spokesman for the Canada-Lebanese Association has criticized the Canadian Government for not offering sufficient aid to Lebanese refugees fleeing Beirut. There are 10,000 to 15,000 refugees in Cyprus who are forced to stay there while waiting for visas. Surely the Government cannot expect one official to process all of the refugees who are applying for visas to Canada.

Will the Government open a full consular office in Cyprus with sufficient immigration officers and support staff?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was interested to note the news report to which the Hon. Member is referring. If the individual who is making those allegations would provide us with names and actual evidence we would be very much interested in having that. We have asked him for that material and to this point it has not been forthcoming.

There are two matters I should report to the House. One is with regard to Cyprus. We are checking on a daily basis, and there is no question that the Canadian officials who are there now are adequate to meet the requirements. If there is a greater requirement we will have officials there in order to ensure that the actual demand is responded to adequately by Canadian officials.

The larger question is how do we try to bring an end to the events in Lebanon which all of us find tragic. This Government is playing an active role. The Prime Minister of Canada has recently been in touch with leaders of the Lebanese community in Canada. He has been in touch with the President of France. We are in touch with other international organizations, including representatives of the Arab League, who, as the Hon. Member will know, are now bringing forward proposals which we all hope might bring some resolution to a regrettable situation in Lebanon.

REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY UNITED NATIONS DEBATE

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that yesterday over 800 Canadian demonstrators in Montreal demanded that the Government increase staff in Cyprus, and urged the Secretary of State to ask for an emergency debate on this issue in the Security Council.

The Minister made reference to France and the initiatives of the Arab League. He knows that France has already tried and failed to get the superpowers and the European leaders interested in promoting a Lebanese peace process. The Arab League has tried to broker a cease-fire but has not been successful.

Considering that the bombing is getting worse and more lives are being lost by the hour, would the Minister update this House on any meetings of the Security Council on this issue? Would he reconsider his position of last week and call for an emergency debate in the Security Council?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As I indicated when the Hon. Member raised this serious question earlier in the House, we keep that matter under regular consideration, and when an occasion arises and it appears to us that a debate in the Security Council might advance the cause of peace and stability in Lebanon, certainly Canada will seek that kind of debate.

He asked for an update on developments. I should give him two. The Government of Canada is giving priority to family and relatives who are already in the system. I believe that that will be of some interest to the persons who were expressing their concern in Montreal and elsewhere.

I can report to him that tomorrow the Committee of Six Ministers established by the Arab League will be presenting its recommendations to the full Council of the Arab League. I think the Hon. Member would agree that that is one avenue that is worth pursuing.

The Government of Canada is encouraging the Arab League, as we continue to encourage the French, the Americans and others, at the highest levels of our Government, to ensure that there is the quickest possible progress made toward achieving some peace in Lebanon.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

MODERNIZATION OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): My question is also for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister will know of the discussions that are going on in Washington today with representatives of the German Government concerning the issue of the modernization of nuclear weapons in Europe.

Given the concern that many Canadians have over this issue and the threat that it poses to that which was accomplished by the INF Treaty if this modernization were to go ahead, and the inadequate response that that would be to things going on in the Soviet Union, I would like to ask whether the Minister is prepared to say today that the Canadian Government has changed what appears to be its position on the modernization of nuclear weapons, and is now prepared to support what appears to be the German position and reject the modernization of nuclear weapons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is making reference to discussions that are occurring in Washington now. The Foreign and Defence Ministers of the Federal Republic have been meeting with their counterparts in the United States. I do not think that either of us knows the exact nature of the discussions that were put forward at that time. We have both read news reports, and I expect to be fully briefed on those discussions before I comment upon them in any detail in the House of Commons.

With regard to modernization, it is the position of the Government of Canada that it is important for us to have together modernization and negotiation—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The New Democratic Party which made light of the two-track decision which led us to the elimination of INF missiles is now continuing to make light of an approach in the Alliance—

An Hon. Member: Joke, joke.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —building on the kind of solidarity that has proven effective in the past. We believe that that kind of solidarity in the West, that proved effective in the past in eliminating a range of nuclear weapons, can help the West and help the East move together to achieve reductions in over-all levels.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of solidarity within NATO. It is a question of a debate within NATO with a number of countries on either side, and us asking the Canadian Government to take a particular position. I wish the Minister would stop hiding behind solidarity and start doing some thinking on his own for a change.

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

TEST BAN TREATY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): I would ask the Minister a supplementary question with respect to the nuclear arms race. The Minister will know that a conference has been triggered, thanks to the appropriate number of signatures being gathered at the UN, to reopen the whole matter of a comprehensive test ban treaty, something on which the Government of Canada has also been taking the wrong position. I am asking the Minister today whether his Government is prepared to reconsider the position it has been taking on this and actively promote the arrival at a comprehensive test ban treaty.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows more than he lets on. He knows that agreeing—

An Hon. Member: That wouldn't be hard.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —that agreeing to that particular proposal with regard to the comprehensive test ban negotiations would not in fact move that process forward. He knows that. He knows it would be another empty gesture. The Hon. Member and his Party seem to believe that it is enough in foreign policy to make empty gestures on the floor of the House of Commons.

An Hon. Member: Absolutely.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is not enough in foreign policy. What one has to do is try to follow concrete proposals, often in alliance with our allies, that will in fact achieve substantial reduction. The Hon. Member and his Party made light in the past of the two-track decision that led to a reduction in nuclear weapons. We believe—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior.

TRADE

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORT TAX—EFFECT ON NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Réginald Bélair (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of International Trade. Levesque Lumber, a sawmill situated in northern Ontario, has announced that it will be laying off 350 workers for at least two weeks in order to reassess its financial situation.

An Hon. Member: That is free trade.

Mr. Bélair: The owner has clearly indicated that the 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber is a major contributing factor to its financial demise. This is casualty No. 7 in northern Ontario. Seventeen hundred jobs have been lost and there are more to come. What steps has the Minister undertaken in order to start the healing of this wound inflicted upon the sawmill workers of northern Ontario and of Canada?

• (1500)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): I thank the Hon. Member for his question.

An Hon. Member: How's the beach-ball?

Mr. Crosbie: You can't be away for a day, Mr. Speaker, but they are looking for you.

It is a coincidence, but the principal owner of Levesque Lumber Limited wrote me, as it happens, in December and he told me that the tax in question, the 15 per cent export charge, was one of about a dozen factors that were giving him difficulties in the sawmill and logging operation business.

The export charge is something we have been turning over to the Government of Ontario. The Government of Ontario has jurisdiction in the area of forestry. There were a number of factors affecting the competitiveness of northern Ontario mills in the U.S. markets, such as timber allocation policies, chip prices, and the market for softwood lumber generally.

So we are very sympathetic naturally to hear this news, but it is totally unfair to blame it on just one factor of probably a dozen affecting the situation.

Mr. Bélair: The Minister indicates that there are a dozen factors affecting this closure. Mr. Levesque is also on the record as saying the surtax is crippling his sawmill and that is the first reason it is closing as of Thursday.

DROP IN SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Réginald Bélair (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

I also hear some Hon. Members from Québec. It will soon be your turn to ask your Minister the same question.

My supplementary question is the following, Mr. Speaker: Exports of softwood lumber to the United States from the sawmills of northern Ontario have dropped from a peak of 87 per cent in 1986 to 8 per cent in 1988.

In the context of free trade, which your Government praised so much, does the Minister not find this tax to be illogical, senseless and devastating for the lumber industry?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if the concept of free trade had never been thought of, if I had never existed and the honourable gentleman had never existed, the mill in question would have had difficulty and would now be closing down. That is the unfortunate fact. There is no point attempting to blame it on the Free Trade Agreement. There is no connection.

The softwood lumber tax has no connection with the Free Trade Agreement, and the honourable gentlemen opposite have no connection with reality.

PRIVILEGE

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT—RIGHT TO SPEAK AND VOTE ACCORDING TO CONSCIENCE

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Mr. Speaker, as I rise today, it is not lightheartedly; it is after deep reflection. I rise on a point of privilege.

To start I would like to quote from the House of Commons Office of the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel the definition of privilege. The official definition of privilege is found in Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice:

> Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions, and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals. Thus privilege, though part of the law of the land, is to a certain extent an exemption from the ordinary law.

I will deal specifically with breaches of privilege, the one of obstructing, molesting, or attempting to intimidate a Member in the discharge of his or her duties as it relates directly to me. I quote again from the December, 1988, Parliamentary Privileges Booklet, page 15, line 21:

> Direct threats, however, whether oral or written, made to a Member on account of his or her actual or intended parliamentary conduct is a contempt of Parliament.

My complaint relates to threats or intimidation by another Member of this House on April 11, 1989 in the afternoon of that same day, by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

I want to put it in chronological order.

On April 5 the first draft of Standing Committees was given to Conservative Members. I had requested and was put on the Committee of Health and Welfare.

On April 11 the Conservative Members of that committee had an organizational meeting, which I attended. In the afternoon of that same day I was approached by my honourable colleague, the Member from Calgary West, and we had what he described as a friendly chat.

During that conversation he made it clear that he was not happy with my voting record in the Thirty-third Parliament and therefore could not trust me as long as I had this independent attitude. He threatened and told me he would take me off the committee unless I gave him a commitment to behave as a good boy, and if I would change my attitude he would reconsider and put me back on the committee and I would again be in his good graces. This friendly chat that took place can be confirmed by other Members.

Another means of intimidation was undertaken through the circulation of lists with names of Members who abstain on votes. The circulation of this list creates caucus peer pressure and in this way becomes a subtle form of intimidation.

I quote again from the December 8 Parliamentary Privileges Booklet. On page 15 it states:

> Direct threats, however, whether oral or written, made to a Member on account of his or her actual or intended parliamentary conduct, is a contempt of Parliament.

The intimidation was done in two forms: one directly by threatening me to change my voting record, and indirectly it was done by publishing my name in pamphlets that were distributed to other Members.

Mr. Speaker, you are the embodiment of the spirit of parliamentary reform as exemplified by the McGrath Report, because you are the first Speaker of the House of Commons who was elected by Members of this House in a secret ballot, so as to be the servant of this House and its Members, but not to serve the Government or the governing Party of the day. You have the mandate to protect the spirit of parliamentary reform.

I would like to point out that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who is also the Hon. Member for Charlevoix, after the McGrath Report was released said that one of the accomplishments he and his Government would be remembered for, and maybe the only accomplishment, would be parliamentary reform. So he certainly believed in this parliamentary reform and was very supportive of the recommendations of the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons presided over by the Hon. James McGrath. I would like to quote this report, chapter 2. It is the confidence convention which is re-examined, particularly page 9 that deals with attitudinal change:

> Free votes have customarily been allowed on such matters of conscience as capital punishment, but our proposal extends and goes beyond that principle. Implementing this practice would call for a change in attitude on the part of governments.
> It would also call for a change of attitude on the part of opposition Parties, which would cease to be able to extract the maximum political advantage from defeat of government measures. They also would need to reciprocate by relaxing discipline of their own supporters.
> But if neither government nor opposition Parties could be persuaded to change their attitudes, it would still be open to Private Members to take the initiative by changing theirs. Once elected, Members of Parliament are legally and constitutionally entitled to act independently.

On line 24 the report continues:

> Rigid discipline is hardly compatible with the philosophy of a democratic political party, and reasonable latitude consistent with loyalty to the Party should be permitted the individual members of any Party.

I would like to quote again from page 10 on the positive effect of dissent:

> The expression of dissent can have positive effects for both the institution of Parliament and its Members. It may have a direct and sometimes observable impact on public policy. As a result of defeated measures, the threat of defeat, or simple dissent not entailing defeat, governments might modify or withdraw certain measures. This opens the way for the House to become more vital and significant in influencing policy than it has been for a long time and a more accurate reflection of Canadian opinion. Private Members should take the lead in impressing this on the leadership of their respective Parties.
> One Member taking an independent stand might end up paying a heavy political price, but a sizeable body of Members following the same line could not be ignored. Private Members could exert their own pressures, even cross-Party pressures, but this kind of initiative would require new procedures and new attitudes—Ideally, we would like to see a change of attitude on all sides.

Those quotes, Mr. Speaker, are made in the spirit of putting you in a position to understand why I raise this serious question on a point of privilege.

In that spirit of parliamentary reform, I have served my constituents in the Thirty-third Parliament. As Vice-Chairman of the Official Languages Committee I voted in the House against Bill C-72, because I felt that it discriminated against unilingual Canadians, and I brought in some amendments to protect unilingual Canadians from being discriminated against.

As a member of the Standing Committee of Justice and the Solicitor General, I voted on many occasions with the opposition Parties, when I felt that it was in the interest of improving a given Bill. When the Meech Lake Accord came before the House, I voted for the amendments and recorded my final vote as an abstention.

On Bill C-71, the War Criminals Act, I did not give unanimous consent because I wanted this Bill to go to committee and be studied clause by clause instead of being rushed through Parliament without being debated properly.

During the election campaign of November, 1988, I made a commitment to my constituents that I would continue to represent them in the spirit of parliamentary reform. I made it clear to the electorate of Calgary Northeast in my literature and at the door that I will oppose any tax reform that will be done on the backs of small business and the consumer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kindy: My voting record is indicative of the fact that I believe in parliamentary reform and the independence of a Member of Parliament to be able to represent the views of his constituents, in my case the constituents of Calgary Northeast.

Nothing I have done violates the law or the spirit of the Constitution in our parliamentary system. I have exercised my rights as a freely elected Member. I have spoken and voted according to my conscience in my honest judgment. I have acted within the spirit of parliamentary reform, whole-heartedly supported, as he gave us reason to believe, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). As a consequence I have been subjected to improper pressure in an attempt to force me to be a good boy—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kindy: —in other words, to perform my parliamentary duties as a puppet instead of as a representative of the people who elected me. I believe this to be a serious infringement of my rights as a Member.

I hereby submit supporting evidence to the table.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think I should say to Hon. Members that the Hon. Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy) has raised a matter which is obviously of great concern to him. He is rising on a question of privilege. I think that probably in this case it would be appropriate if Hon. Members allowed others to intervene and give them the courtesies that ought to be extended in a matter of this importance.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Boo!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is particularly encouraging to have the Whip of the Official Opposition join in the applause.

It is a very unique experience for members of any Party to be asked to take on the appointment of Party Whip on behalf of one's colleagues in the finest of British parliamentary tradition. This is a role which arose a long time ago on the basis of a perceived need in parliamentarians who have long passed on. It has continued over the ages and continues around the world because there is a role and there is a place.

I think that the role and the place begins on behalf of the institution of Parliament. It is the institution of Parliament which protects us all in a society and protects our democratic traditions and tries to make sure that a Parliament functions as well as it can at any particular time in any particular place on behalf of the citizens of a country.

I have listened with great care to the Hon. Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy). Mr. Speaker, when you examine the rules and the precedents you might indeed find that the Hon. Member has a grievance. I think it will be difficult for Your Honour to find that this is indeed a question of privilege.

One of the fundamental traditions of parliamentary procedure and really the basis of privilege is open and free access. When one is chosen by one's electors, one has open and free access to this Chamber and to the proceedings of this Chamber as expressed in committees. We all know and understand that every one of us has the right to attend all committee meetings which take place in the name of Parliament. We all have that right.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: Membership on a committee is controlled in our Parliament by a Striking Committee with members from all Parties represented on that Striking Committee. It is a responsibility of us all. There are seven of us in this Chamber who serve on the Striking Committee. I have the honour to serve as the chairman of the Striking Committee. That was determined by a free and open vote of the committee members. I appreciate their trust in me as a member of the Striking Committee and as its chairman.

Our job in the Striking Committee is to put forward for consideration by all of us, members of all three Parties, names of people to serve as members on standing committees. Indeed, under parliamentary reform that membership is of a different order than it was prior to parliamentary reform. I take great pride in serving in the Party which brought about parliamentary reform.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: Membership today in a standing committee, for those Members who are new to the Chamber, is very different from what it was before. The membership belongs to the Member. Once a year there is an occasion, just after Labour Day, for the Striking Committee to meet to change committee memberships. In between the membership belongs to the Member who was appointed by this House to the committee. This House concurred unanimously in our recent report which set up the membership that now prevails in our standing committees.

The potential for public scrutiny of those assignments is of that order. That is what parliamentary reform said it should be. It said that it should be a striking committee. It said that the report should be public and in the hands of all Members of this Chamber. The Members, all of us, had to concur in that report to set up these committees. There was not a voice raised in dissent, including the voice of the Hon. Member for Calgary Northeast.

What are those new responsibilities? Because the membership resides in the Members, we have an obligation in our Standing Orders for the Member to put forward to the Clerk a list of personal substitutes. Failure to put forward that list automatically ends the membership on the committee. That is because the seat belongs to the Member and the Member has to put forward substitutes.

Would any of us in this Chamber want to put forward names of Members who would not accept the obligation of providing their substitute lists, of contacting those substitutes so that they can substitute on occasions when they are absent? The lists are created to represent regional interests, to represent Party interests, and to ensure that standing committees have a screening mechanism on behalf of all of us to examine the very serious issues which face us. Attendance, previous record of attendance and conversations about future attendance are central to the obligation that goes with committee membership. There is a responsibility. We on the Striking Committee have a responsibility to put forward no names for any committees of this Chamber when a Member indicates to us that he is not willing to accept the responsibility of membership which relates to attendance and the substitutes when the Member will not be present.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: It is not my habit or my pattern—and I feel somewhat ill at ease standing in this Chamber today—to make my conversation with Members public in any way, shape or form. I say that because I have many conversations with many Members. However, I cannot let go unchallenged the assertion that it is necessary to be in my good graces. That is simply false. I serve on behalf of this caucus in the position of Whip. I serve on behalf of all Members in this caucus to do what is best for this Parliament and for the people of the country.

• (1520)

As long as I hold this office, it will not be necessary for me to like a member of my caucus, to enjoy their company, to be a friend, but it will be my responsibility to make sure that my suggestions are put forward in good faith in the belief that the Member will fulfil the obligations that go with membership on a committee or any other role. I would like to make it clear that I have published no list. What happens inside my caucus with my caucus members in the finest tradition of this place is secret. It is confidential to the members of my caucus, and I will not talk about the existence of a published list because I have published personally no list—

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: —anywhere, anytime. I have shared information in the best form possible with members of my caucus on many issues, and I will continue to do so in the belief that all members of my caucus have an obligation to keep it secret and will indeed keep it secret.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: To fail to do that is to give in to threats. There lies the denial of the privileges of all of us when one or more people in our society, in this Chamber or outside of this Chamber, threatens any of us in any way possible that would interfere with our capacity to do this job. Stealing in secret in a caucus, and a failure to hold to that principle, is the real threat to the continuance of this Chamber and to our processes that have grown over so many years. Secrecy in caucus must be preserved.

There are many members of this House in all three Parties who have a well-deserved reputation for independent thought and independent action. In most cases, it is well vetted independent thought and independent action. I challenge any Member of this Parliament to conclude that anybody in our caucus has denied access to committee membership or anything else on the basis of past behaviour and being outspoken. We simply have to look at the chairman of the Finance Committee. That proposal came out of the striking committee.

We have other members who took a different conclusion and acted in a different way than I did when the last Parliament faced Bill C-72. If you look around, they have roles, they have responsibilities and they have memberships in this Parliament on the committees. As long as I am Whip for the Party, it is the responsibility, the willingness to be responsible, to do a job that counts, and that is all that will ever count. If that is a barrier of some kind, if that is an infringement on a Member's privileges, then it is not the Parliament and not the place I thought it was.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to what was said by the Hon. Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy) and the Government Whip.

I indicated my support for the Whip, and I think we should understand it is not necessarily the easiest position in the world for a Member of this House. He must not only have the confidence of his Leader but also gain the confidence and support of his fellow Members.

I do not believe there are grounds for a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, but there are certainly grounds for a serious grievance. I must say that we try to deal with our problems in the privacy of caucus, and I think that is where this problem should be dealt with. Perhaps the Conservative Caucus should settle their own problems, but I will be interested to hear your ruling on the question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: This does not represent all-Party agreement, Mr. Speaker, but there is a tradition in this House that the Whips are also officers of the House. I believe that if a Member wants to get up and complain about what happens in his caucus, that is properly a procedure of the caucus. It is something that should be done in the Conservative caucus or within the Liberal caucus or within the New Democratic Party caucus.

Mr. Rodriguez: This does not happen in the Liberal caucus, does it?

Mr. Murphy: Actually my good friend from Nickel Belt who ran against me for Whip at one time—

Mr. Rodriguez: I would have made a better one.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that I have more than one dispute to settle.

Mr. Murphy: Well, we certainly are not going to kiss and make up, but I can tell you that the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has been a very constructive and supportive member of our caucus. On the question with regard to the Liberals, I remember before we had parliamentary reform that the Whip of the Liberal Party lost his position as the chair of a committee because he would not go along with the Government of the day.

It is very important that all Members have access to committees, all Members can go to committee as the Conservative Whip indicated. It gives a Member a chance to talk to witnesses. It gives a Member a chance to speak at the various committee meetings. But it is a fact that not all members of a caucus will be a member of a standing committee. One-third of our caucus does not have regular membership on standing committees, but all of them have the opportunity to be alternates for the committees that they wish to serve on.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank Hon. Members. I have listened with great interest, and I will consider the position and report back to the House as soon as possible. I have another question of privilege. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg Transcona (Mr. Blaikie).

CHERNOBYL NUCLEAR ACCIDENT—REQUESTS FOR INFORMATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege arising from answers given to me by the Minister of Energy, the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) in his former capacity as Minister of Health and Welfare. It is appropriate that I rise today because tomorrow will be the third anniversary of the horrendous nuclear accident at Chernobyl in Ukraine. My point of privilege arises out of answers given to me by the Hon. Minister in this place.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): When were those questions asked?

Mr. Blaikie: You wait for it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Three years ago?

Mr. Blaikie: In the aftermath of the Chernobyl explosion and fire, many Canadians were justifiably concerned about possible health effects that the fall-out may have had on them. I, as the NDP Environment critic at the time, asked the Hon. Member about what the Canadian Government was doing to measure the fall-out and what was being found. The Hon. Minister was consistently adamant that he was being forthcoming with all information that he had at the time, and that he was not holding anything back. In a response to a question that I put to him on April 27, 1987, a full year after the accident, the Hon. Minister told me, and I quote from page 5234 of Hansard:

> I am not witholding any information which has come to me or that I know is within the Department.

Prior to that on December 11, 1986, the Hon. Minister tabled in the House a document entitled the impact of the Chernobyl nuclear accident in Canada. This was done in response to demands that I had made for more information. But this document did not contain any of the detailed information I and other Canadians were looking for; specifically what sorts of isotopes were being looked for in the fall-out, what had been discovered, where they had been discovered and in what quantities. I raised my dissatisfaction with the Hon. Minister in an adjournment debate on March 12, 1987. At that time he told me, again I quote from page 4135 of Hansard:

> I wish to convey very directly that there is nothing that we are hiding in terms of information. As I have previously stated, if there is additional information that can be made available, I will make that available.

I have discovered that there was in fact additional information available. It was within the Minister's Department. The Health Physics Journal received a study conducted by two Health and Welfare scientists called "transfer to milk of iodine 131 and caesium 137 released during the Chernobyl reactor accident". Dated September 30, 1986, it details a search for iodine and caesium in the air, precipitation, grass, and a dairy herd in the Ottawa area. This study has the level of precision and accuracy that I had been searching for and asking the Minister for, and that had not been made available by the Minister. If this study was submitted by two Health and Welfare scientists—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is making a case which is based on the fact that, as a consequence of questions put by him and answers made by the former Minister, certain information was given to him and was given to him, as I understand it, with an assurance at that time by the then Minister that all information available was being made available to the Hon. Member.

The Hon. Member now says that he has found out that there was some other information. That is not something that comes to the Speaker as any great surprise in this place. I am having difficulty in seeing just how the Hon. Member can say that this is a matter of privilege. It certainly is a matter which ought very properly to be raised in Question Period, in the "Late Show", or in some other way. But it is difficult for the Chair to see that it is a question of privilege.

There may be a perfectly logical explanation for the fact that more information has come to light or that information was there that the Minister did not know about, but I have difficulty, under these circumstances, in seeing how it is a question of privilege. The Member has been very careful not to allege that the Hon. Minister in any intentional way misled him or the House. I note that.

I will hear the Hon. Member but I want him to take into account my concern as to where the argument is going.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I was being too methodical for my own good. That is precisely what I want to allege, that we were being misled. That is the case I was building.

It is not much longer, but that is the case I intend to make.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Chair had better know what the charge is. A charge of deliberate misleading is a very serious one indeed. The Hon. Member might look very carefully at the letter he properly sent to me. He said: "I was misled", and that may be, but for the Hon. Member to say now that the Hon. Minister deliberately misled him, that is indeed a very serious charge. I am sure the Hon. Member would want to consider very carefully whether he wishes to proceed in that way.

He may in fact have been misled. There is a big difference between being misled and being deliberately misled, because deliberately misled means the Hon. Minister has been acting with dishonest motive. That is a very serious accusation.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I intended to make the case as to why we were misled. I notified the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), who is here, and if I were able to complete my argument and the Hon. Member for Provencher was able to get up and say that he did not know of these studies, then I would not be in any position to accuse him of deliberately misleading the House.

I have not made that accusation, as you noted, but I think, with respect to this issue, I asked the Minister numerous times whether this was all the information that was available. It was not as if this was a one-shot affair. This went on for over a year, in which I tried to get from the Minister certain information with respect to isotopes that may have been detected not only from Chernobyl but from the "Mighty Oak" test at Nevada.

I would have proceeded to say that the Minister said they had detected no fall-out from the "Mighty Oak" test when, in fact, at the same time the Minister was telling me that, there was a study in the hands of his own Department which has since come to my attention which said there was fall-out detected from the "Mighty Oak" test.

If there is not a question of privilege, I want to know what was going on. Why was the Minister giving me answers that were patently false? He was either deliberately misleading the House or he did not know what he was talking about. When it comes to something like that, he should have known what he was talking about. I would like to be able to make the case, cite the studies, and table them. I have them here if you will permit me to do so.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is a veteran Member of this place and certainly is highly respected by all his colleagues. I will certainly accept the material he has. I have no quarrel with what the Hon. Member has said so far, as his recitation of the facts go.

I will hear the Hon. Minister, but I think perhaps it might be helpful to me if the Hon. Member did file with me the background material, which I will look at. I think he has made his point. I have his point.

I must also say that I accept, with some gratitude, the fact that the Hon. Member has not strayed too far in making an allegation at this time. I also respect the fact that the Hon. Member has indicated that he would be prepared to listen to what the Hon. Minister has to say. The Hon. Member may complete his remarks and file the material.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I will file these studies with the Chair. But I also ask if I could not be permitted to tell the story as I see it so the Minister would be responding to the whole story instead of trying to respond to things I have not said yet.

Mr. Speaker: I might say to the Hon. Member that the difficulty facing the Chair is that this is getting way beyond raising a question of privilege. This is getting into extensive debate. I really feel it is leaving argument and getting into debate.

I would seek the Hon. Member's co–operation. I have his point. If I need some more help I will come back to the Hon. Member. I would like to hear the Minister.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I thank you for your indulgence in letting me reply to the point made by the Member for Winnipeg—Transcona (Mr. Blaikie), even though it falls in a capacity that I once held and I do not now hold in the House.

Mr. Speaker: I should make clear to Hon. Members and the public why the Minister, who is no longer in the portfolio he was at the time of the alleged incidents, is responding. This is a question of privilege and the Hon. Minister, of course, has every right to come into the House and respond to the question of privilege that is raised.

Just so that everyone fully understand this, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Transcona would not be able in Question Period to put questions to the Minister because the Minister now holds a different portfolio. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Transcona fully understands that, but I want Members and the public to understand that.

Mr. Epp: Thank you for making that explanation for me, Mr. Speaker.

I received notification from the Member for Winnipeg—Transcona (Mr. Blaikie), when I came into the House today at approximately 2.10 p.m. that: "I will be raising a point of privilege concerning answers you gave me on Chernobyl". He signed the note.

I can only make one or two points. Shortly after the Chernobyl incident took place I was obligated to go to Geneva to the World Health Conference. I told my officials that I intended to make everything public that we had in respect of the Chernobyl incident.

The reason I raised the Geneva situation is that even from Geneva, where I was for three nights, I believe, I reported to the national press here in Ottawa on any details that I was picking up in Geneva. That was obviously an issue at the World Health Organization in Geneva at the time, events just having happened shortly prior to the convening of the annual meeting of the WHO. As well, I was getting information from Canada with respect to my Department.

The Hon. Member is correct. When I returned, he and I had a number of exchanges, both inside the House and outside the House, about information relating to the effect of Chernobyl on Canada, principally Canada's North and its effect on the food chain in the North relating to the absorption of radioactive materials through lichen, eventually to the caribou and then humans.

Additionally, there was a very close monitoring by the radiation unit of the Department of National Health and Welfare of any other radiation that might be occurring in other parts of Canada. There were geographic divisions of Canada relating to the type of fallout that might be possible, and we were monitoring that on a constant basis. I was receiving a 24–hour report, and if anything untoward was happening, I would receive a report more frequently than that.

I said repeatedly to my officials at the Department of National Health and Welfare that the way I was going to handle the Chernobyl incident was to make available to the public, either through the House or through press conferences, every scintilla of information that came to hand in the belief that if information was given to Canadians, they could then make informed decisions. The Government would not use any governmental privilege to hold back any material.

All I can say as a Member of the House is that those were my instructions. To my recollection, everything that came to hand I made public. If there were other studies that have become public or have been drawn to the Hon. Member's notice, I was not aware of them, and that is where I stand as a Member of this House.

Mr. Speaker: First, I thank the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis), but I do not think I need to hear further argument.

I am not taking the situation lightly. I do not think anyone in the Chamber is. It is a matter of very grave concern to all of us. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Transcona has come before the House on a question of privilege and he has raised what he certainly deems to be a grievance. I have to find that it is not a question of privilege but that it is very much a situation which the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Transcona may properly be able, if he wishes, to pursue further in another way.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Transcona has been very careful, and I have thanked him for that, not to make a charge against the Minister in his former capacity as having deliberately misled. It may well be that given the facts that have been related by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Transcona, someone should have been a lot more careful in providing information that the Hon. Member was looking for. I have to accept, of course, the word of the Minister, which is the tradition in this place. That does not mean that someone somewhere might not have been a lot more careful than he or she may well have been, but I will invite the Hon. Member to pursue the matter in another place. He is extremely diligent in doing so and I know he will probably assist us all in finding the answer.

It is not a question of privilege. It certainly is a grievance and the Chair can understand it. I want to thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Transcona for courteously accepting several of my interventions. I know it is not always easy, when one is making an argument, to have the Speaker interject, and I appreciate the Hon. Member's courtesy. I think the matter is closed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the Motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-3, an Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, to repeal the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and on the amendment of Mr. Langdon (p.724).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt (Mr. Whittaker) had just completed his presentation. We will resume debate with the Hon. Member for Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup (Mr. Plourde).

[Translation]

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to draw the attention of Hon. Members to one of the most ambitious projects of the Government of Canada, the national policy on entrepreneurship. It is ambitious because it required a series of consultations that were almost unprecedented in this country.

We are not talking about a policy designed to camouflage reality and with practically no long-term benefits. It is not an opportunity for politicians to enhance their public image and dazzle the public with a shower of millions of dollars in grants.

There is quite a difference, Madam Speaker, between the usual financial assistance given by the Government to sectors where such assistance can be justified and adopting a genuine policy with guidelines that may influence the course of events for years to come.

In this particular case, I defy anyone to say that this is an exercise in deceit. The national entrepreneurship policy is the result of intense consultation for more than two years with every possible party with a concern in this area, all of whom were able to make their priorities known to federal officials.

We systematically reviewed all our small business assistance programs to determine their relevance and to make any changes suggested by those on the receiving end. The decision to carry out this review was not made on the spur of the moment. We felt that the sweeping changes taking place in our economic and social climate made it incumbent upon us to get involved. There is so much going on in this world of ours that we cannot afford to leave Canada's small business people to their own devices, and we must not forget, Madam Speaker, that the Government appreciates the decisive role played by small businesses across this country. Small businesses are the principal generators of employment, and they are started by people with a great sense of innovation and drive, the real go-getters.

Experience has shown time and time again that small businesses have the peculiar ability to adapt quickly to change. The reason is that in small businesses, the decision-making process is often simplified. Small businesses learned years ago to adjust to changing circumstances and to get their share of the pie through sheer tenacity. Small businesses may be well managed and well motivated, however, but that does not make them any less vulnerable when confronted with the tremendous technological upheaval that has taken place during the last decade and is expected to accelerate as we near the year 2000.

Madam Speaker, we not only have a duty to preserve existing small businesses, we must prepare for the next generation, since the Canadian economy is largely dependent on this type of enterprise.

Entrepreneurship is a dynamic mechanism that makes it possible for companies to renew themselves. It is not the prerogative of a small group. In fact, it should be possible for every business.

Aware of changing circumstances that demanded new solutions, the Government decided to make entrepreneurship one of the linch-pins of the Department of Industry, Science and Technology.

• (1550)

I wish to recall this policy statement here, because from it flow all the measures taken by us and by our partners to enable small businesses to grow and to create a vast pool of entrepreneurs.

The policy of the federal Government thus involves mobilizing entrepreneurship for the purposes of the economic, social and cultural development of all regions of the country, with the participation of the private sector, provincial and territorial governments and the academic community.

This definition well summarizes the Government's deep and irreversible commitment to those who contribute day after day to building a strong Canadian economy.

The Government takes seriously the hopes, concerns and plans of Canada's entrepreneurs and the purpose of the new policy we have adopted is therefore to promote and encourage entrepreneurship while eliminating obstacles to the creation of businesses.

Among other things, this means that we wish to sensitize all kinds of potential entrepreneurs and not only those who were called "family heads" in the past. The target group of potential entrepreneurs has grown considerably in recent years.

I do not have to stress, Madam Speaker, the most spectacular rise of women in the business world. Examples of successful women have become so numerous and commonplace that very few people now pay much attention to it, except perhaps in some professions traditionally considered male bastions.

We have other target groups that previous Governments did not always deal with properly. For example, I want to talk about the young people who aspire very early to economic independence, native people, seniors, the elderly and new Canadians.

If our social climate provides enough encouragement to entrepreneurship, we will see a flowering of "entrepreneurial culture".

We have agreed to adopt many initiatives. I shall mention only a few, Madam Speaker.

First, the creation of a national entrepreneurship development institute is one of our top priorities. This institute will be a focal point for research, information and creative ideas on entrepreneurship. All those interested will have easy access to it, whether they are in business or teaching.

The national institute that we will establish is not meant to take the place of the educational programs offered throughout the country. Its role will rather be complementary; it will expand on and modernize the very concept of entrepreneurship and make it more attractive.

Unlike the United States, very few Canadian educational institutions emphasize the entrepreneurial spirit. As a result, students attach little importance to self-employment and business creation in choosing their career.

It is not surprising that in such a context, Madam Speaker, many professions are subject to strict quotas and it is increasingly difficult for students to have a university education in many so-called classical disciplines.

We must therefore keep a critical eye on all obstacles to entrepreneurship and consider fiscal measures to stimulate the entrepreneurial spirit. Among the obstacles most often mentioned is the flood of federal paperwork that has caused many nightmares for small corporations that have neither the time nor the resources to handle it. Too much paperwork is also damaging to the perception of the Government too many people still have, namely that governments hurt more often than help those who call upon them.

In this regard, the federal Government adopted a plan of action in May 1987 to reduce paperwork, resulting in the creation of an advisory committee on the subject. Through that committee, small businesses can propose ways to gradually reduce forms, statistical research and other forms of red tape.

Parliament will now receive an annual report on the status of small business in Canada, which will give all those concerned the information they need to take stock and plan for their future.

The Government also favors promoting regional development by emphasizing regional decision making so that small businesses will have more say in the matter and be able to influence the development of programs affecting them.

We also have the firm intention of promoting entrepreneurship in the public opinion, which is one way to reach non-traditional groups of entrepreneurs I talked about earlier.

Madam Speaker, with advertising campaigns and the establishment of prestigious forums to spread our message, we will show Canadians the benefits of owning a business.

Certainly, the Department of Industry, Science and Technology will continue to give its Canada Awards for Business Excellence, which bring to the general public's attention the exceptional accomplishments of big and small entrepreneurs. We have noticed that these awards are increasingly coveted, and the growing number of competing companies confirms their validity.

With respect to another issue, I would be remiss if I did not stress that a new national entrepreneurship policy would never have seen the light of day had it not been for the favourable federal-provincial climate of co-operation. As it happens, the various levels of government meet regularly and, generally speaking, their exchanges take place harmoniously, a far cry from the pre-1984 power struggles. There can be no doubt that the stabilization of relations with our partners is the major factor behind the implementation—in relatively short time—of a multi-faceted entrepreneurship policy.

Madam Speaker, I would remind you that thanks to a program developed with the co-operation of Supply and Services Canada, small businesses can more easily bid on public contracts. In addition, the program designed to promote sub-contracting makes allowance for the establishment of new positions for small business ombudsmen within the Supply and Services Canada purchasing system.

In my estimation this goes to show that the Government of Canada did not limit the scope of its entrepreneurship policy to the department directly involved. On the contrary, we step in whenever we can foster the spirit of entrepreneurship, even at the risk of playing havoc with certain programs sponsored by other departments.

And so it will be at every stage of implementation of the entrepreneuship policy. The active participation of all kinds of agencies will become ever more necessary, and they will co-operate even more closely regardless of the progress which may or may not have been accomplished thus far. The innovation spirit of our policy will enable us to extend throughout the country the scope of successful endeavours adapted to other levels.

Such is the case, among others, of the Canada investment opportunity network which proved to be quite effective in Ontario and which is being extended to the rest of the country.

Operated with the participation of various chambers of commerce, it brings together people who have challenging ideas and others who are looking for promising investment opportunities. Combining new ideas and capital investment will give renewed vigour to the creation of new businesses, and that can only benefit all Canadians.

I must simply say a few words about the small business and entrepreneurship office whose mission is to support the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Hockin) in Cabinet. The office is responsible for formulating and evaluating policies that are relevant to small business and to national programs for this sector.

• (1600)

Here we have an agency with very concrete terms of reference, since it has the authority to order studies, to carry out analyses and to make recommendations for scrutiny by the Minister or Cabinet. The entrepreneurship and small business office embodies and consolidates the Government's principal instruments for supporting small businesses.

Madam Speaker, some Hon. Members may still wonder why we are putting so much energy into defending and promoting small businesses. My answer is that 98.8 per cent of Canadian businesses are small businesses. If we don't take care of them, we are headed for an economic impasse.

The term small business designates companies that employ fewer than 100 employees in the manufacturing sector and fewer than 50 in the services sector. The total number of small businesses across the country is 812,000, while the total number of companies registered in Canada is 822,000.

They are found in all industrial sectors, and in fact they are the majority. In the primary industries, small businesses represent 99.9 per cent of all companies: transportation, communications, mining and manufacturing, construction, finance, and so forth, and it is accurate to say that small businesses still represent over 98 per cent of the total number of companies.

In the past we have often said, with the figures to prove it, that small businesses were the best job creators.

However, small business' contribution to research and development is often overlooked. Our studies in this respect prove there is no doubt about that. The percentage of spending on research and development is higher among businesses with fewer than 50 employees. In fact, we found that the smaller the enterprise, the greater the relative share spent on research and development.

We concluded that because of their energy and drive, small businesses were far better able than we expected to adapt to technological change.

This is good news for free trade, whose initial consequence will be to stimulate the growth of small businesses eager to enter the North American market. This means that our exportable small businesses will have to follow the technological change that will prevail in the United States, especially in the so-called vulnerable sectors.

The Government is not overly concerned by that indirect effect of free trade, because our small businesses have shown long ago that they can adjust faster than big companies to market fluctuations and technological changes.

Certainly, Madam Speaker, our small businesses will have to change, by specializing and offering unique services, for example. They must also improve productivity and aim for excellence at all times.

As we said before, the Free Trade Agreement is not a seven-headed ogre waiting to devour the weakest in the coming months. Custom duties are being eliminated over a ten-year period and protective mechanisms have been put in place so that less competitive sectors will have time to adjust to the new trade environment.

In addition, the Department of Industry, Science and Technology will propose new programs to give small business better access to new technologies. They will therefore have time to improve their productivity and competitiveness as free trade is being gradually implemented.

Madam Speaker, Canadians have been informed, I am sure, of the main recommandations made by the Adjustment Committee in what the media dubbed the "de Grandpré Report".

It is not my responsibility to elaborate on its detailed contents but I want to bring to your attention the excellent grade the commissioners gave the Canadian Government for its series of measures already in place to make adjustment easier.

In fact, there are more than 400 programs to help employers and employees flexibly join a labour market where technological change is an everyday reality. Many of these training and adjustment programs are sponsored by Employment and Immigration Canada. Madam Speaker, it is not an exaggeration to say that the Government correctly foresaw the major world trends that would affect our country's labour force.

Since 1984, "adjustment" is part of the vocabulary of our elected officials and has guided their most important policies. In large part, this explains why the de Grandpré Report did not recommend a thorough overhaul of our programs.

One minute more, Madam Speaker, and I am through. The Government foresaw the arrival of a one-way technological wave. We had to follow along because the survival of the Canadian economy depended on it. Gradually, we made some changes like reforming the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to be in step with the new world economic realities.

Today, Madam Speaker, we have resources and policies that let us look ahead with optimism. Everything is already in place. We just hope that all Canadians, men and women, will follow along and support us in reaching our economic destiny which is so promising.

Mr. Harb: Madam Speaker, first, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for his speech. He is certainly aware of what is happening in this field. He is certainly very interested in this subject.

I have in my hand a report published by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce which contains several recommendations that a task force made for industries and to inform politicians on the federal level.

[English]

I will just quote a couple of paragraphs from this report. First, it talks about bureaucratic objectives rather than market impulses which have prevailed in Canadian science and technology policy. Further it reads:

> Without a private sector agenda and forum for discussion, the government programs that have emerged do not necessarily stimulate entrepreneurial initiative. In most cases they provide funds for technology development and innovation—

It goes on to the point where the task force suggests the following:

> It is the opinion of the task force that despite the proliferation of activities during the past year in the area of technology policy, business has lost ground in defining the agenda.

The Government has done quite a bit over past few years in setting up the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology, chaired by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney); in setting up InovAction—the Canadian Strategy for Science and Technology; in setting up the federal-provincial science and technology subagreements; in setting up the industry led advisory boards which were established by the National Research Council and so on; and in setting up the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology.

Those are all very commendable initiatives. Unfortunately, in the area of research and development, when we compare Canada with the rest of the industrialized world, we are falling way behind with the amount of financial support from the private sector and the number of scientists per million that we have.

While industry over and over again, both in the private and in the public sector, is suggesting that rather than throwing money at the problem the role of the Government should be to provide tax incentives and to act as a facilitator to the industry. Therefore, it is entrusted in seeing more focus on the area of development rather than on pure science and research. Pure science does not lead to anything unless it is put into application.

• (1610)

Does the Hon. Member see the Government moving in the right direction in putting more funds into setting up an agency, or does he see it working better with the private sector, and also the other partners in the provinces?

[Translation]

Mr. Plourde: Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Centre (Mr. Harb) just said, I think my speech more or less reflects the 28 years I spent in the private sector and in manufacturing. When we consider an issue as general as basic research or technology, we must consider what part of the country we are talking about. We know for instance that Ontario, the province where the Hon. Member's riding is located, receives the lion's share of federal funding for research and development. Our counterparts in Québec have complained that the federal Government does not invest enough money in research and development, and I must say, Madam Speaker, that I am enclined to believe what the Government of Québec has told us in this respect. These are things that might be changed in the weeks to come.

I also wanted to say that I am from a riding Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup that qualifies as a remote area. We have no businesses with 2,000, 3,000 or 4,000 employees in Eastern Québec. We have small businesses. As a person who has been exposed to and has promoted this kind of business in the past, I can say that research and development was done by the businesses themselves.

I have nothing against what they teach in universities. In the speeches I heard this morning, there was great emphasis on putting a lot of money into the universities for research and development. I agree, but money should also go to industry.

In concluding, Madam Speaker, I would like to give you an example. In 1984, when I was the elected representative for Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup, I decided we should do something about the peat lands. As you know, the area is very rich in peat. Before, people used to bag peat moss and export it to the United States for use in horticulture. However, since 1984, we now have a peat research centre that belongs to Tourbière Premier and is going to expand within the next few months. We also have a research centre that was developed at the Rivière-du-Loup Cégep, also for peat. Since 1984, Rivière-du-Loup no longer has any doubts about the peat market, because through the research and development done with industry and with the help of the public sector and the Cégep we have no universities in our area we managed to develop a market that has now become quite substantial.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Nepean (Mrs. Gaffney).

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): It gives me a great deal of pleasure to address the House this afternoon on Bill C-3. In the Government's repeal of the Department of Regional and Industrial Expansion Act, the federal Government's creation of the Department of Industry, Science and Technology may appear to be constructive enough. Its aims, some of which include the development, implementation and promotion of national policies to foster international competitiveness of industry, enhancement of industrial, scientific and technological development and so on, as outlined in Part I of Bill C-3, might also appear to be attractive.

The object is obviously an attempt to elevate science to full department status. The question remains as to whether the Government's restructuring is merely cosmetic. Staff morale continues to be low, and at the committee level there is not much hope for any positive change in the Government's commitment to science and technology.

The Government's track record in the area of science and technology, and research and development has been for the past four years, to say the least, dismal.

Let us look at the Government's actual performance in this area. Research and development is the essential impetus for technological development, the foundation of today's high technology companies. As the high tech capital of Canada, therefore research and development is particularly important to my Nepean riding which represents more than 100 high tech companies. Nepean is the home of Canada's largest research and development organization, Bell Northern Research.

This company has pioneered fully digital telecommunications technology, and employs 4,200 people locally. Northern Telecom, also in Nepean, of which BNR is a subsidiary, is Canada's largest telecommunication equipment supplier, specializing in voice and data communications, and employs 1,400 people locally. CDC, Computing Devices of Canada, employs 1,300 people in Nepean. They produce advanced electronic systems for military and commercial use world-wide. Gandalf, which specializes in information networking systems such as modems, multiplexes, data switches and large network processes, employs 650 people in Nepean. These are only four of over 100 companies working in the technological field, our largest employers that were developed in full co-operation and assistance from government, not in spite of them.

Beyond Nepean's boundaries in our sister cities are high tech companies of international status, such as the Mitel Corporation, Digital, Cognos, Lumonics and Systemhouse, just to name a few. Practically all of these companies started out in someone's garage or basement. Most were on the receiving end of research and development grants from the then Liberal federal Government. Young companies today need the same infusion of money through research and development, or start-up grants, as their counterparts did, if they are to survive in an international market. It is an international competitiveness, as the Canadian market is not sufficient to sustain the high tech industry.

Ottawa Carleton Regional Government, along with Carleton University, Ottawa University, Algonquin College and leaders in the high tech community have created an organization called the Ottawa Carleton Research Institute. The institute monitors what is happening in the high tech field. The industry works with the universities to ensure that our students are being trained in the latest technology.

On December 1, 1988, the Province of Ontario formed TRIO, the Telecommunications Research Institute of Ontario. Its new president comes from Bell Northern Research. Its role is to understand university-driven technology. Coupling the institute with industry will give businesses the opportunity to better position themselves vis-a-vis technology. However, the Government has proceeded to cut back in different areas in Environment Canada at a time when Canadians are more concerned with the environment than ever before in history. The Government has cut back on energy research, completely wiping out the energy department at the National Research Council when it should be cutting back on Canada's reliance on fossil fuels and developing environmentally cleaner energy sources.

A program also being worked on by Energy, Mines and Resources when major cut-backs happened at EMR caused the cancellation of this research. With the lessons of the softwood lumber a recent and bitter memory, and the needs of the forest industry and what the forest industry does for Canada as outlined in "Wood Leader", it is important that Canada increase the yields from its forests by increasing the effort and money put into research and development.

• (1620)

The Government has cut back at Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. when it should be looking at the exciting opportunities presented by the recent developments in fusion technology.

The Government has cut back in every area of basic research. Those areas particularly hard hit by cuts to government point to short-term gain for long-term pain.

In addition, the Government has allowed important issues to be governed by politics rather than what is best for the industry concerned, and I might cite a few examples. The CF-18 contract was taken away from Manitoba. The space agency was moved from the National Capital Region in spite of repeated briefs from the industry that it was in the nation's best interest to locate in the nation's capital. Canada now has the exclusive role of being the only country in the world where the administering body to the space industry is located outside its capital.

The fact is that research and development has suffered badly under the present Government.

Total expenditure on research and development as a percentage of the Gross Domestic Product has decreased from an all-time high of almost 1.4 per cent during the Liberal administration four years ago to a low of 1.35 per cent during the past four years. This Government must be committed to increasing R and D expenditures to at least 2.5 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product in line with that of other major industrial nations in the world.

Canada presently ranks last among the G-7 nations. As well, research and development expenditures were roughly half those of other nations in the world.

The Government has consistently spoken the praises of R and D on the one hand while decimating Canada's effort on the other, from the well publicized cuts to the National Research Council of over $100 million to the reduction of the R and D tax credit to 75 per cent.

In my riding Northern Telecom Electronics cut 60 jobs at its Nepean plant, and several other firms have also laid off many employees.

High interest rates threaten the viability of other high-tech companies, and in terms of government investment Nepean has lost millions of dollars of research and development related activity over the past four years.

The $90 million animal virus laboratory slated for Nepean was initially cancelled and is now moved elsewhere. Government cuts to research and development tax incentives have cost companies like BNR and Gandalf millions.

In terms of the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, another warning sign to note is the fact that the 34-member National Advisory Committee on Science and Technology, chaired by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and touted as a signal of his commitment, has not met since last summer.

The Liberal position in the area of science and technology and research and development is clear. We condemn the Government for breaking its promise to double Canada's R and D effort to 2.5 per cent of the GNP and for the measures announced since September, 1984, which are undermining R and D, long-term economic growth, and the competitiveness of Canadian business in world markets.

We condemn the Conservative approach to R and D funding in Canada as inefficient and damaging to Canadian industries, particularly to small business, which brings me back to my original point.

Is the federal Government's action in its creation of this new Department merely cosmetic? Is the Government addressing the real issue? How does the Government answer to the research and development cut-backs it has implemented? How does the Government plan to deal effectively with the issues of decentralization and regional development?

The federal Government's credibility, in its consistency on science and technology research and development policy, is at stake. In the creation of the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, in conjunction with its actual track record in this area, the Government has given and taken with the same hand.

The cut-backs at the National Research Council should be rescinded and the commitment to provide funding for basic research should be reaffirmed, and the base budget of granting councils must be increased above inflation, along with university research. The Government must look for imaginative ways of increasing the technology transfer to industry and assisting industry in the critical early stages of the start of a high-tech company.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments? The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I want to start off by congratulating my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nepean (Mrs. Gaffney). I am sure that I speak on behalf of all of us when I say that Members of Parliament, particularly those from eastern Ontario, are very proud to have elected such a fine Member.

My question is particularly on eastern Ontario. Given that our colleague who just spoke has been a long-time resident of eastern Ontario, and as a matter of fact chaired with great distinction our municipal council here in Nepean, undoubtedly as someone who sat in the municipal office and who knows the area so well she will probably be aware that in eastern Ontario under previous Governments there used to be a consideration of the fact that largely rural eastern Ontario is disadvantaged vis-a-vis the rest of the province.

In other words there were programs in the past, because there was more than one, that recognized the fact that rural Ontario by and large was not doing as well economically as some of the adjacent urban areas, particularly Ottawa and Toronto and southwestern Ontario. In order to assist the rural parts of eastern Ontario previous Governments had regional development programs like we have in the Atlantic, like we have in western Canada, and there was a recognition that, in Ontario, northern Ontario and eastern Ontario needed special incentives to attract industry to these areas.

I wonder if she noted in the last Throne Speech, as I did, there was a mention of northern Ontario, which is fine and of which I approve. However, eastern Ontario was omitted completely from any consideration in terms of being mentioned as an area that needed further economic development. I want to bring that to the attention of my colleague and ask if she has noted that, as I did, particularly in light of comments made by a certain Member from the Mississauga area shortly after the last election to the effect that eastern Ontario was not going to be rewarded for having chosen to elect 12 out of 14 Members who are of a political persuasion different from that of the present Government.

I ask my colleague if she would agree with me that eastern Ontario certainly deserves all the consideration that it traditionally received from all Governments, be they Liberal or Conservative, and if she agrees with me as well that rural eastern Ontario is still disadvantaged economically and requires special attention from this new Ministry which we are talking of establishing so that we can attract industry into eastern Ontario and get our fair share of the economic pie.

Mrs. Gaffney: I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I think all of us from eastern Ontario very much noticed the absence of any initiatives taken in eastern Ontario. A lot of people think of eastern Ontario as the Ottawa—Carleton area. Eastern Ontario runs all the way from the Hon. Member for Pembroke's riding, the Renfrew area, all the way through to the St.

Lawrence River, Hawkesbury, Cornwall, and it is not just this particular area right here where the nation's capital is situated. My riding is part of this Ottawa—Carleton area, and I sometimes think that we are probably better equipped to survive or initiate development than our friends in the far rural areas further away from the nation's capital than we are. Maybe we became winners in this area under a Government that was conducive to development in this area and that recognized that this was an area that was prime for development.

The municipalities bordering the City of Ottawa had the initiative, the foresight and the planning principles in place to enable them to move ahead. As a member of the very innovative council in my municipality, we were able to entice industry into our community. However, our rural neighbours do not have the financial resources to do that. They have to rely on Government more than we do in an urban setting.

Members of my caucus and I, as well as other members of the national caucus, were disappointed to see that there was not a greater emphasis placed on development in the rural municipalities of eastern Ontario. That was a grave oversight on the part of the Government. It is not too late for the Government to rectify that. I encourage my colleagues across the way to take note of rural Ontario.

Mr. Brian Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise this afternoon to speak on Bill C-3, an Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, to repeal the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts.

In the debate today Members on this side of the House, and I hope Members opposite, will have an opportunity to bring out some of the concerns we have with respect to economic development in Canada, which is the subject matter of the motion we are debating this afternoon. To give a brief description of this legislation, it is to establish in law—to create—the Department of Industry, Science and Technology which will replace the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, which has had most of its functions replaced by the Atlantic Opportunities Agency and the Western Diversification Office. As the previous speaker said, these two entities will be meshed together in an attempt to have industrial policy in science and technology within the same Department.

It is creditable that the Government should undertake such a measure. As the debate goes on, it will be carried by our critics who are stick-handling this particular discussion from our side of the House. I refer to the Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair (Mr. McCurdy) and the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) who will be discussing the Bill further as it proceeds through the House.

We are debating today a motion moved by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor. I would like to read it since it points out the importance that Members on this side of the House place on the debate we have leading up to the Budget on Thursday in terms of our economic development. The motion states:

> "this House declines to give second reading to Bill C-3 because it fails to clearly define federal Government responsibility for regional development and specifically fails to reflect the requirement under s. 36(1)(b) of the Constitution Act, 1982 that Parliament is committed to "furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities"."

The concern now is with respect to what we will see in the Budget on Thursday night. In my discussion I would like to focus on what my research has turned up in terms of the vehicles for that economic development which I suggest will be threatened on Thursday night by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) as well as what may be suggested in the future.

I want to focus on what is a critical development tool in my Province of British Columbia. I think the same applies to other provinces as well. I refer to the forestry agreements which come under the umbrella of economic agreements which the Government currently has up for review. It is revealing that at this point in time there are economic agreements in limbo with some six provinces. In fact, official negotiations have not even started in those agreements. Particularly revealing is the importance that this has to all Members in those areas, be it with respect to tourism, mining or forestry. It is shocking to see that we have reached such a stage in economic development in Canada.

In British Columbia prior to the election we talked about the silent 19 Tories who had nothing to say about B.C. Their number has been reduced. They are now invisible. They are now the invisible 12. We will have to send out a search and rescue team quickly to find those Tories from B.C. They are not representing the interests of their constituents in this House, especially when the Minister of Finance will start to dismantle economic agreements and forestry agreements on Thursday night.

These economic agreements are vehicles by which different levels of Government can participate in economic development in a particular area. In British Columbia there is a forestry resource development agreement. We have a science and technology subagreement. We also have an agriculture subagreement, as well as agreements in mining and other areas. There has been a great deal of debate about what the Government will do with economic development in the Budget. There has been written notice given to the House that something is afoot in terms of how these agreements will be rewritten. I refer to a letter sent to me on April 18 by the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Oberle) who stated: "A full year remains in the present agreement and formal negotiations for new agreements cannot be undertaken until such time as a new economic regional development agreement policy framework has been approved by Cabinet". What is that new economic regional development agreement policy framework that is being discussed?

The Budget on Thursday will be more than a Budget of numbers. It will create a furore in the country, a furore such as Members opposite claimed was created by the National Energy Program which was introduced by the Liberals when they were in office. It is extremely important that all Members pay careful attention to the debate that follows the Budget.

We also know from comments made by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Andre) that the Government will try to change the agreements because it is not getting the credit that it wishes. I have a clipping in my hand from The Ottawa Citizen in which the Minister is quoted as having said: "Candidly, some of our members are ticked off".

Do you know what the debate comes down to, Madam Speaker? It comes down to who gets the biggest four-by-eight on a project site. It is the Government's own fault if it cannot turn its incredible and massive public relations operation to obtaining a nicely painted four-by-eight on a site for which it feels it should get credit. It is ludicrous to think that for some PR we will see a complete rewriting of economic development agreements. That is the level to which the debate has sunk when we talk about economic agreements in the country.

I would like to comment briefly on one particular subagreement which is critical to a great many smaller communities, such as the ones in my riding. I refer to tourism. There is a sense in my province that when it comes to assistance from the federal or provincial Government for tourist development projects or destination points, that if one is not a Whistler or a site like it then it is difficult to get the ear of the Government. If one has a development like Whistler and one needs $6 million, the Government's response is: "The cheque will be ready on Friday. Is that too late?" As most Hon. Members know there is a host of smaller tourist facilities throughout my province, as well as throughout many other areas of the country, which need some help with landscaping, sewer or electrical access and that type of thing.

If there is not a complete emasculation of the economic development agreements this Thursday night, then those types of discussions can take place, at least in British Columbia where we have an economic agreement in place, unless something happens to it. It is regrettable that the economic agreements which are currently in place are in limbo in six provinces. There are six provinces in the country which have economic agreements between the Government and their respective provincial governments that have lapsed. No official negotiations have taken place with respect to them. It is incredible that such a thing would happen and we all wonder what is going to happen after Thursday night. The importance of tourism to the provinces is to ensure that the money gets out of, in our case in British Columbia, the lower mainland, that the interior, Kamloops, the Shuswap area and North Peace, has the opportunity to access some of those funds.

I know the Member from Okanagan—Shuswap (Mr. MacWilliam), the tourism critic for our Party, raised this matter last week in the House in the debate on this motion. He put very clearly how important those opportunities are for a lot of the small tourist operators, many of them run by volunteer organizations that struggle from grant to grant, from employment program to employment program, and put in many hours of volunteer work to ensure that their particular sites are well taken care of and ready for the tourists that come and visit their area.

The economic agreements, I suggest to you, are the nature and reason for our motion. To express our concerns about what has happened to date with those economic agreements is all the more pointed out by a letter of April 12 from the Canadian Forestry Association to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) expressing concern about the renewal of those forestry agreements. The Forestry Association is making that their number one priority, because of the concern in our provinces regarding forest regeneration, the silvicultural work that has to be done in each of these areas.

On this side of the House we think that on Thursday night the Budget is going to be about more than just numbers. The correspondence that I have received from the Minister indicates there is going to be a wholesale change in the way the economic agreements currently exist between the federal Government and the provinces. It is a wholesale change that we will want to watch closely to ensure that in western Canada, at least, the right that we have in terms of the re-investment of tax dollars into our region is taken care of. We want to make sure that is done effectively.

Earlier in this session I put a question to the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Oberle) that he would give this House his assurance that it would be his Department and his Department alone that would administer the federal-provincial forestry agreements. We did not get that commitment.

I am concerned that what is going to come out of the Budget on Thursday night is going to be a funnelling, if you like, of the complete administrative control to the various agencies like the Western Diversification Fund and the Atlantic Opportunities Agency. Those are the agencies that are going to become the new channels for federal power in this country. I have some concerns about that.

In our province we have a Premier in Victoria who has created states throughout our province. Granted, in one or two places it is working. In others, it has created a whole new level of government that the various agencies have to go through. What we are seeing there and what we are going to see here is the "Zamming" of Canada from this Government on Thursday night.

I know the debate will continue, after this motion has been disposed of, into the discussion around science and technology and the concerns that we have on this side of the House about the research that is needed in that field. But I would like to suggest to the Government before closing that it has a mandate to follow through on another election promise they made, a promise they made two elections ago. That was about the introduction of legislation to establish a Department of Forests and to create a National Forests Act. We know that the Minister of State has said that it is not a high priority of the Government. That is from the January 31 issue of The Prince George Citizen. That is regrettable, but I checked the status of Bills and motions. We have gone as far as Bill C-10. Let us see if tomorrow we can bring forward Bill C-11, legislation to enact the National Forests Act and the Ministry of Forests so we know we can start debating that legislation as well.

In closing, I want to say that I look forward to some of the future debate on this legislation. I know the Member from Prince George—Peace River (Mr. Oberle) is aware of the work that is being done in our community for a northern university and the role that science and technology can play, and some of the representations I have made to him about the need for a forest research centre in Prince George. I think we will hear more about that in the future as we discuss science and technology as it relates to the forest industry in this country.

Most of all, I urge all Members of this House and the Canadian public to watch and listen to the Budget closely on Thursday night because I suspect that we will have a full plate to deal with. I trust this Government will listen to the concerns that we raise and that they will hear Canadians and their concerns about economic development in this country. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-3, an Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, to repeal the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Langdon (p. 724).

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, it is great to hear the Member speak in the House. I know that he represents northern B.C. He and I have been working on a project dealing with the fact that many northern communities are being denied the northern tax benefit. Madam Speaker, you will remember that last week I presented a petition signed by over 5,000 people in the communities of Thompson-Wabowden complaining about the fact that they are being cut back by one-third on the northern tax benefit. Since this Bill deals with regional development, I wonder if the Hon. Member could explain the feeling of the communities in northern B.C. about this unfair treatment by the Finance Minister on this very important issue.

Mr. Gardiner: Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) for that question because I know he has been doing a lot of work in this area. He has been the leader in our caucus in discussing the northern tax allowance and its benefits to residents of not just northern Canada, but remote and isolated areas. In some parts of our various provinces, you do not necessarily have to live in the north to be remote and isolated.

The question the Member puts in regard to the feelings in northern British Columbia about the northern tax allowance I can respond to very easily. They are concerned. If there is one consistent question that was asked of me during the election campaign and since, it is: What is the status of the northern tax allowance? When are we going to expect something from this Government? We expected something, and got a report on the status of that northern tax allowance, which was very much like closing the barn door after the horse has gotten out. In this case it was a confused horse. All Members know the confusion that this Government created when they were implementing that tax benefit.

It is a question that people are asking because they are concerned about how unfair the Minister has been in already cutting a third when he wanted to hear from his commission that travelled throughout the country about the northern tax allowance. Unless the Minister of Finance deals with this matter on Thursday night, the unfairness will continue. I think the Member for Churchill should be congratulated by all Members who have areas like that in their ridings for the ongoing work he is doing in this field.

• (1650)

Mr. Hopkins: Madam Speaker, when this Bill was first introduced in the House by the Minister—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. Is the Hon. Member rising on debate or question and comment?

Mr. Hopkins: I am rising on a question, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Please proceed. I apologize.

Mr. Hopkins: The Minister said: "To remain competitive in today's international market we must adjust our priorities and spread our resources more evenly along the continuum from science to marketing".

What does the Hon. Member think the Minister meant when he said "adjust our priorities"? What are his priorities in this Bill? How will he spread resources more evenly when he is reducing them? What does he mean by "from science to marketing" when the Government is putting far less emphasis on science than we have seen in this country for years?

Mr. Gardiner: Madam Speaker, being a new Member to the House, I was not here when these comments were made. In any case, they certainly sound like wonderful words. We have learned to expect that from the Government when it states its intentions. It is an excellent question to ask how it will be accomplished.

I suppose I can give the same answer as Ministers opposite give: "We will have to wait until the Budget to find out because, as you know, I am not allowed to reveal that information". That is the answer we get from Members opposite.

I suggest that one of the vehicles for achieving that goal and making those wonderful words into policy of "tech transfer", is the vehicle of the economic agreements and various technological subagreements that exist in there.

If there is going to be a complete new framework, as was stated to me in the letter from the Minister of State for Forests (Mr. Oberle), we will have to study that closely to ensure that the laudatory words we heard when this legislation was first introduced in the previous Parliament are carried through.

Mr. Kristiansen: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. Gardiner) for his remarks on Bill C-3. My comments arise from a meeting I attended in Nelson, British Columbia, last week. It was a week-long convention attended by well over 200 people in the mining industry from the Chamber of Mines in eastern British Columbia. It was the largest convention of its kind since 1933 in the southeastern part of that province. They expressed very strong concerns relating directly to this Bill. My first comment concerns the mineral development agreement. The Canada-British Columbia Mineral Development Agreement at $10 million is the smallest of the eight subagreements made under the $580 million Economic Regional Development Agreements in British Columbia.

The B.C. Mineral Development Agreement, from a Canadian perspective, is very small. The agreement is larger than those of only two provinces, Saskatchewan and Prince Edward Island, when the mining industry in British Columbia is one of the key employers and producers of wealth in the region.

Furthermore, the geoscience data-base in British Columbia is inferior to that of several other provinces. For instance, 90 per cent of the province remains to be mapped at a scale which is required for basic exploration in the province. Yet, this is one of the smallest agreements in Canada.

The Chamber of Mines in eastern British Columbia had several concerns, particularly with regard to Bill C-3. According to Bill C-3, the Government is eliminating the current regime for regional economic expansion. It is likely that the Budget on April 27 will result in a further removal of this whole area of regional subagreements under the Western Economic Diversification Fund, as far as western Canada is concerned.

I want to refer briefly to the British Columbia-Yukon Chambers of Mines letter written to me on March 28. It states:

> We believe the Western Diversification Fund's policies and objectives are not compatible with the current structure of Mineral Development Agreements inasmuch as the Western Diversification Fund's mandate is to diversify through industry with industry delivering the product.

In a letter dated February 28, addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp), the Chamber of Mines of Eastern British Columbia said:

> We have a concern that your government may confuse MDA funding with funds allocated by the Western Diversification Office. Sir, the policy and objectives of the two programs are totally incompatible: the fundamental objective of MDA is to deliver basic geoscientific data to a variety of users including government (as well as to industry to foster the discovery and development of new mines).

Does the Hon. Member share these concerns of the miners and the mining industry in British Columbia? How does he view the presumed intent of the Government to lump this in with regional development programs under the Western Diversification Fund?

Mr. Gardiner: Madam Speaker, I thank my colleague, the Member for Kootenay West—Revelstoke (Mr. Kristiansen) for the question. It points out to the House the concerns that I have raised about the changes that are likely imminent under the regional development programs of the Government.

The question is similar to the one about forestry, when we asked the Minister if he could give us the assurance that his Department alone would administer the forestry agreements with the provinces. The same question could rightfully be put in terms of the mining subagreement.

Certainly in British Columbia, New Democrats are not taking this sitting down. Just yesterday we announced an action plan in terms of forestry. New Democrats, with my colleagues from the Kootenays, are looking as well at the mining subagreement to make sure the Government understands the importance of those agreements and how they are administered. It should not take comments lightly about how Members on this side view those agreements and how they can be implemented.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, I have a great deal of concern about Bill C-3. I think it will reduce the emphasis on regional development in this country. I believe this Bill is another step in the Government's attempt to gloss over the whole question of regional development. I believe this legislation is an attempt to isolate regional development to Ontario and Québec, while leaving Atlantic Canada to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, western Canada to the Western Diversification Office and northern Ontario to its own fund. The Government's attitude seems to be that the regions should take care of themselves with those funds so it may concentrate on southern Ontario and Québec. That attitude will do a tremendous amount of damage to this country.

Canada depends on regional development to keep it as a unit. Rather than Balkanize Canada, the Government should see the country as a whole to determine what areas need the most attention.

Canadians in Atlantic Canada, western Canada, and northern Canada will not have their lives pigeonholed with these various development programs. The Government cannot shift its responsibilities to these various regional development agencies and still maintain this country as the great unit it has been since Confederation. That concept which the Government is trying to create is totally unacceptable. The Government will try to make Atlantic Canadians believe that this approach will be beneficial to them.

It could be beneficial to Atlantic Canadians if the Government really wanted to develop the concept of regional development. It could be beneficial if the Government, without political patronage, wanted to develop Atlantic Canada and do what was best for the various areas of Atlantic Canada. The same is true of western Canada and northern Canada. The Government should treat these regions as a part of Canada. However, this is not what is being done.

I am afraid that the concept of regional development is being gradually whittled away. The thrust of this originated with the Free Trade Agreement. There is no definition of a subsidy in the Free Trade Agreement. The Government wants us to believe that regional development will not be considered a subsidy. However, that is not what the Americans are saying. They are saying that regional development is considered a subsidy. This is evidenced by the decision taken regarding Sydney Steel Corporation.

A countervail has been placed against Sydney Steel Corporation by the United States Department of Commerce, a countervail in the amount of 103.55 per cent. How was that figure reached? The Department of Commerce listed every bit of government assistance the Sydney Steel Corporation receives, either federal or provincial, and applied a certain percentage of countervail against each item. It came up with the figure of 103.55 per cent.

Sydney Steel Corporation is in an area that is undergoing economic difficulties right now. The programs Sydney Steel took advantage of were programs that were made available by the federal and provincial Governments. It is a provincial Crown corporation which did not break any laws, but if this American countervail is ratified, Sydney Steel will suffer but not as a result of Canadian law. The company took advantage of Canadian programs that were made available and it obeyed the laws of Canada. As a result of the Free Trade Agreement, it will be punished retroactively by the laws of the United States of America.

Regional development is becoming something that is determined by the United States of America. Any industry that locates in Atlantic Canada, northern Canada or western Canada and receives a subsidy from the Government or the respective province will be seen by the United States as a company that is receiving a subsidy. Because it is seen as a company that receives a subsidy, the company will be countervailed against when it exports into the United States. It will be punished by that agreement which was supposed to be of such benefit to all Canada, an agreement that was supposed to help Canadians living in the regions that were undergoing economic difficulties. Instead, we are being punished by it.

We in Atlantic Canada were told that the trade agreement would be the salvation of the economy because we would be able to ship things made in Atlantic Canada by water to the eastern United States. That would be wonderful if we could do so without punishment. It would be of tremendous benefit. I do not hesitate to say that.

Before Confederation the natural markets of Atlantic Canada were in the eastern United States and the West Indies because goods were shipped by water and water transportation is the cheapest form of transportation. If a company locates in Atlantic Canada and receives assistance from the federal Government or the province, and if in turn it is judged by the United States to have received a subsidy because of regional development assistance and is countervailed against with a 7 per cent penalty, how can we expect the company to compete?

What is the Free Trade Agreement doing for Atlantic Canada? It is a catch-22 situation. We will be worse off if the United States perceives that we have broken an agreement that was entered into between the two countries. It would not be a rule of thumb of the U.S. Congress. It would be a determination by the United States that we breached an agreement entered into with the United States.

We have entered into a trade agreement with the United States. That could be very beneficial, but if you went to a lawyer, Madam Speaker, and said that you wanted an agreement that would allow you to carry on your business in a certain way, an agreement on which you could rely, and then you went back in a month's time and the lawyer said that the agreement was ready but there were a couple of clauses that had not yet been defined, but told you to sign the agreement and he would fill in the definitions later, you would get another lawyer. If you did not, one would wonder why you did not. However, this is what Canada did. It has said it would sign the agreement without specifying that regional development is not a subsidy.

We are now subject to the American determination of a subsidy and the Americans think that regional development assistance is a subsidy. I say this because of the Sydney Steel Corporation example. The Department of Commerce of the Government of the United States, not an ad hoc body, has put a percentage figure beside every subsidy Sydney Steel receives from the federal and provincial Governments, added up those percentages and came out with the figure of 103.55 per cent for a countervail. In today's competitive market, if it were a 5 per cent countervail, it would be difficult for Sydney Steel to sell its products in the United States. However, the countervail is 103.55 per cent.

Two of the items included in that list are ERDAs and General Development Agreements. Those are the backbone of the regional development program. What could be less offensive than an ERDA or a GDA? This is funding entered into through an agreement between the federal Government and the provinces. Since Nova Scotia is considered to be a province that is having more economic difficulty than Ontario, for example, the federal Government may contribute more to an agreement with it than it would to an agreement with Ontario. These agreements cover various aspects of the economy including agriculture, fisheries and forestry.

Included in that list compiled by the United States Department of Commerce is the assistance Sydney Steel Corporation receives under ERDAs and GDAs. These are considered subsidies by the Government of the United States. That is a frightening situation of very great concern.

The Government has stated that it is not going to sign any ERDA agreements until after the Budget. Why is the Government saying that? As the lesser of the two evils the Government would like us to think that because it has to get into a cost cutting mode it is going to cut out regional development assistance. However, what the Government is not saying is that it is not a question of cutting out regional development assistance in the Budget. It is a question that it has already given away the right to regional development assistance through the Free Trade Agreement with the United States.

The Budget has nothing to do with it. In the matter of regional development we are going to be restricted to infrastructure agreements with municipalities and agreements that do not relate in any way to specific industries that may, will, or, by some hope in the future, have any trade with the United States. If those industries in Canada receive any assistance they will be countervailed by the United States.

That is treachery against the areas of the country that were hoping to increase their economic performance and to reduce economic disparity instead of having that economic disparity widen. It is treacherous that the Government signed an agreement without having all of the definitions filled out and meaningful clauses put in. The Government bailed out on the "have not" areas of the country.

The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) is now saying that it will take seven years to define a subsidy. He also stated: "What two countries have been able to agree on what is a subsidy?" That is cold comfort now, after we entered into the agreement which was finalized four months ago.

The Minister tells us that it will be the full seven years and that we should not expect a definition of a subsidy because in his opinion no two countries have ever been able to agree on the definition of a subsidy.

That certainly is cold comfort for people in Atlantic Canada, northern Ontario, and large parts of western Canada who hoped to be able to close the economic disparity gap. They were told by the Government that that gap was going to be closed. Instead it is widening, and the Government is fostering that at the present time. That is the problem and that is the misleading that has been going on.

What are the ramifications going to be? Those people who would have established in Atlantic Canada because they were on tide water and could ship from a port in Atlantic Canada to tide water in the United States and take advantage of one of the cheaper means of transportation, will not be able to do that now. If they receive assistance from the province or the federal Government to relocate in Atlantic Canada, they will not be able to ship into the United States without a countervail because the American Government will consider that they have received a subsidy.

In this Act the Government is belittling the whole scheme of regional development. Gradually it is erasing it from the vocabulary of Canadians. This is happening at a time when it is particularly difficult in areas such as Atlantic Canada. In Atlantic Canada, northern Canada, and western Canada people have to deal with higher interest rates. The Government is now telling us that we have to deal with those higher interest rates because we have to cool down the economy in southern Ontario.

Why is the Government now saying that the economy in southern Ontario has to be cooled down? The Government previously stated that it could not reduce the deficit more because that would cause a decline in the activity in southern Ontario and in other parts of the country. It would throw cold water on the economic revival. That is why the deficit could not be further reduced. Yet we are now being told that the deficit has to be reduced more and that we have to cool down the economy in southern Ontario. Right across the country people will have to bear the brunt of higher interest rates.

The other side of the coin is extremely interesting. While the economy in southern Ontario has to be cooled down, the economy in Atlantic Canada certainly does not need to be cooled down. Far from it. It needs to be fostered by the Government with some action instead of platitudes and excuses.

However, we are going to have the economy in Atlantic Canada cooled down anyway because high interest rates apply across the country. Because of the Government's policy of deregulation in the airline industry we now have Air Canada and Canadian Airlines International forming subsidiary companies. In northern Ontario and in western Canada those subsidiary companies are being formed. In Atlantic Canada we have Air Nova, which is a subsidiary of Air Canada, and Air Atlantic, which is a subsidiary of Canadian Airlines International. Air Canada and Canadian Airlines are to cut down service to some of the less populated areas, not in the major centres.

However, they are also stating: "Lucky you in Atlantic Canada, because you are going to get more flights". We are to get a Dash-8 service sponsored by Air Nova or Air Atlantic. Jump up and down because this is a great day is what they would have us believe.

There will be more flights, but there will be less capacity for cargo. The big problem is that Air Canada employees in those areas where service is being phased out will all have to take severance pay, early retirement, or move to some other location. The people who will work for Air Nova and Air Atlantic will be replacing those employees who worked for Air Canada and Canadian Airlines. They will only be paid 50 per cent to 60 per cent of what Canadian Airlines and Air Canada employees were paid. They are only to receive 50 per cent to 60 per cent for doing the same work that was done by employees of Air Canada and Canadian Airlines. They will be doing the same work done by those people employed in Halifax, Montreal, and Toronto. The same work is being done in the major centres, but those people in the major centres are paid considerably more.

That is the Government's idea of regional development. This Bill is only another step further along the road to widening the disparity gap between the major centres and those areas undergoing economic difficulties at the present time. It is a big step backward and another step backward fostered by the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Renfrew.

Mr. Hopkins: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned the regional development policies of the Government as being a Balkanizing factor in Canada, and they certainly are. The Government is bringing in a new system with all of western Canada under one agreement and all of Atlantic Canada under one agreement, lumping regional development in Ontario and Québec and indeed splitting Ontario and Québec. The Ottawa Valley is a good example. The Québec side of the Ottawa River was previously designated under DRIE and is now under Regional Development, and the Ontario side is not.

Would the Hon. Member agree that what the Government is actually doing is downplaying the whole scenario of regional development assistance simply because in a very sneaky, underhanded manner it wants to get away from being seen to be giving subsidies to any industry whatsoever? It wants to get away from being seen as giving subsidies to the forest industry for research and development, which relates directly to this Bill. The Government is simply bringing in this new Department to downplay and get rid of all subsidies. It is afraid that the United States will complain on a continuing basis if there is more subsidization of Canada's regions.

• (1720)

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for his question. He has made a very pertinent and important point. The Government in the Budget will be cutting back on regional development. It is going to try to cut back on regional development in many ways. We will be told that it is a cost cutting measure and that we have to reduce the deficit.

What the Government will not be telling us is that we are losing regional development because that has already been negotiated away in the trade agreement with the United States.

The most insulting thing that gives us a picture of what this Government thinks of our great nation is that it has set aside some funds in the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, in the Western Diversification Fund, and for northern Ontario. Then it said: "Now, look boys and girls, go away. Don't bother us anymore. Here is your money. We are going to bring in this Bill for a Department called Industry, Science and Technology which will have the real big money, the real meat. We are going to work on Southern Ontario and Québec and allocate this whole Department to them, parcelling pockets of funds to these outer areas."

The very Bill leans toward the Balkanization of Canada. It makes Canada become a country with two levels of economy.

What did the Government do through its decentralization of airlines and through the closing of the Gainers plant in Cape Breton, when the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency gave Gainers money to locate in another part of Nova Scotia but did not allow the workers to transfer? I hope that situation will be changed.

The Government is fostering two levels of success in this country. It is saying to the people in the areas undergoing regional economic problems right now that they cannot aspire to get to the premier level of economic success because the Government is grading, creating, two levels of success and they have been relegated to the second level.

Mr. Malone: I would have preferred it, Madam Speaker, had the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), when he looked under the bed this morning, not seen so many spooks in addition to dust.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Speak about your own province.

Mr. Malone: There is a fine idea coming from a Member opposite who says that we should speak about our own province.

When the Member from Cape Breton—The Sydneys says that there are two levels of success because of the trade arrangement in this country, he fails to realize that the arrangement does away with the history of this country which had two levels of success in place. It was the discriminatory freight rates that worked against both East and West and toward the centre. It disappeared with Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 and the protection of tariffs in central industries which kept the Atlantic provinces and the West from developing their capacity.

Since free trade, there has been, at least in Western Canada, an avalanche of opportunity into the west coast market for Canadians. In High River, Alberta there is a brand new, technical, huge, ultra-modern meat packing plant going into place. Under the old freight systems and with tariff barriers against them, they moved raw product out and did away with the manufacturing potential for Atlantic provinces and Western Canada.

Basically, more than anything else, from where would the Hon. Member find confidence in economics to come to the conclusion that his region could never survive if it were not for subsidies? Surely this is a land that is equal and I believe better than anywhere else in the world. Given fair opportunity and market size we can penetrate that market.

Why sell potatoes from Prince Edward Island when we can sell potato chips? Why sell any product that comes from a province without value adding, manufacturing and processing to another level and keeping the jobs at home?

I come from the Province of Alberta. We export ethane and methane through pipelines at 16 per cent and 18 per cent tariff rates. Because there is a tariff imposed against us we cannot manufacture the product. Down that pipeline not only goes natural gas but the jobs of our sons and daughters.

Surely the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys would realize that there are opportunities in his region of Canada, as long as they have the confidence to believe they can add to raw product manufacture and sell it at another level. We all know the citizens in their area have the ability to do so.

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), although I have a good deal of respect for him, that he is not aware of what is going on in his own province.

We were told when we were in government between 1980 and 1984 that we were picking winners and losers and that we were doing things to detract from the western sedimentary basin and from the conventional industry in Western Canada, which is exactly what this Government is doing at the present time. It is concentrating on the major projects and ignoring the conventional industry in western Canada, which is causing a very serious economic problem in the western sedimentary basin.

Small companies cannot get the funding from the banks. Big companies are using their money for mergers and buy-outs instead of exploration. The service industries are unable to work. Rigs are standing idle.

What is the Government trying to do? It is trying to get us to believe that it has brought in the Canadian Exploration Development Incentive Program and that it has spent much money. The Government spent money but that money did not go to the smaller companies as the Government would have us believe.

Some 90 per cent of applicants under the CIDA program got less than 20 per cent of the funds. The Government will now wind up CIDA, patting itself on the back and saying "aren't we great, look at what we have done." The Government could do something sensible and reduce the ceiling from $10 million to $1 million and still satisfy 90 per cent of the people who apply under the program and save 65 per cent of the money.

The program cost so much money because government made a complete mess of it. The Government costed it in a way that defies even someone with Grade 5 arithmetic. The Government made a mess. It is trying to punish the small producer and the service industry in western Canada for their mistakes yet is patting itself on the back. At the same time it is a Government in charge of the country's economy.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Churchill.

Mr. Malone: Surely I can respond to that.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, perhaps you could point out to the Conservative Member that Conservative Members are allowed to get up in the House and debate anything they want. If the Member wished to respond to Liberal Members he, as a Member of Parliament I presume duly elected by his constituents, could rise and speak to them.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: How did you get in?

Mr. Murphy: By a big margin. All the area that used to be part of the riding of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp) voted solidly for me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: For that matter the only problem I had during the campaign was in Barons River. One person living in that community spoke Cree to me and gave me heck. He was an elderly native person. I did not know what he was saying, but I knew I was in trouble. My MLA from that region translated. He said that he was giving me heck because I had not been there for the last eight years. I said, the last eight years? I have not been the MP for this region for the last eight years. It is the Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) who has been your MP. It is he you have not seen. I would like to thank the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for the solid vote he has created for me in my riding. I think he could not have done a better job if he had tried. And this legislation, Madam Speaker, is going to do the same type of thing.

• (1730)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: I will certainly refer to Madam Speaker throughout my speech.

Madam Speaker, this legislation states it is an Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, and to repeal the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. When we saw this legislation, we wanted to support the idea of creating a department which was responsible for science and technology because we believe that is important in this nation. We support that part of C-3, the legislation that is before us today, but we cannot support the further dismantling of regional economic expansion in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murphy: When the Liberals were in power from 1980 to 1984, they destroyed the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. They deliberately took it apart and that department no longer existed. They created the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Mr. Speaker, I was the critic for regional expansion at that time and I will tell you—

An Hon. Member: You did not know what was going on.

Mr. Murphy: The Liberal Member stated I do not know what is going on. He can go to the other House, the other chamber, and talk to the senator there who was the Minister—

An Hon. Member: Don't believe it.

Mr. Murphy: He was the Liberal Minister at the time and he told me it was a mistake that the Government made. It was a mistake the Liberal Government made when they destroyed the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

An Hon. Member: There is no such thing.

Mr. Murphy: He has admitted that. He is in public on that.

Mr. Speaker, what this legislation is doing is taking us further down that road. That is why my colleague, the Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), seconded by the Member for Mission—Coquitlam (Ms. Langan), offered this reasoned amendment to the House. The amendment states:

> "this House declines to give second reading to Bill C-3 because it fails to clearly define federal Government responsibility for regional development and specifically fails to reflect the requirement of s.36(1)(b) of the Constitutional Act, 1982 that Parliament is committed to "furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities".

What has happened is that this legislation makes it even more difficult to have a voice in Ottawa, a mandarin in Ottawa who is committed to regional economic expansion right across this country.

That was one of the problems when we went from the old Department of DREE to the new Department of DRIE, the one that is now being eliminated by this legislation. What happens is that there are a lot of voices in Ottawa speaking out against regional economic expansion. There are corporate interests in Ottawa, lobbyists in Ottawa, speaking out against giving money, grants and tax benefits to the disadvantaged parts of our country.

An Hon. Member: Washington.

Mr. Murphy: As my colleague for Kootenay West—Revelstoke (Mr. Kristiansen) pointed out, we will now have a situation where a lot of our plans, a lot of lobbyists from the United States will be here also speaking against our regional development programs.

It is no accident that all the ERDA agreements have been allowed to lapse. It is no accident that this Government has refused to sign agreements that are very important to Atlantic Canada, very important to Québec and Ontario, and very important to western Canada. In my own region the Northern Development Agreement was allowed to lapse at the end of March of this year. It is not because the Government did not have time to plan. It had all the time. This Government has been in power for over four years.

An Hon.Member: Too long.

Mr. Murphy: Not only that, the Northern Development Agreement originally expired in 1987.

An Hon. Member Those were the good old days.

Mr. Murphy: They fought for a two-year extension because they needed more time to do the planning and to make sure a new northern development agreement was in place. The Province of Manitoba agreed to the two-year expansion. The native groups that were affected agreed to the two-year expansion. Those two years have come and gone and now the agreement has gone as well.

That is an agreement which created many opportunities for people in northern Manitoba. I would just like to talk about some of them. It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, that when the legislation came down and the Northern Development Agreement was first put in place, the Government had money to put out a brochure called "Update", which stated that the NDA is part of long term strategy. It is such a long term strategy that they could not even put a new agreement in place after a two-year extension. There is no long term strategy. There is no planning. We have obviously lost any emphasis, any strategy, any focus for regional development.

We do not have voices in the Department working in Ottawa, represented at the Cabinet table doing the work to make sure these regional development agreements are continued and expanded. Instead, what you have is other loud voices, actually working and making sure that we do not have the types of regional development programs we need in this country. That is why this legislation is flawed.

We know that as a result of the Free Trade Agreement the very nature of our regional development programs and subsidies is threatened. We know that over the next number of years this Government will be negotiating from its weak-kneed position with the United States over what type of regional development programs we will be allowed to have. The fact that the Government has allowed the present agreements to expire, the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is going to use the deficit as an excuse for reducing these programs, is going to hurt the regions of our country. It is going to make it that much more difficult for a young boy or girl in the poorer parts of this country to get the training and the jobs, to have the economic opportunities in their own communities that they want to have.

I mentioned earlier that I would talk about some of the things that happened under the regional development agreements in my area, programs that have been allowed to expire. For example, we did not have an airport in the community of Tadoule Lake, a community that was hundreds of miles away from the nearest community. If there were an accident and someone had to be flown out, we had to hope that the lakes were frozen and we could land a plane on skis. Or we had to hope it was a calm day in summer so one could land a float plane. There was no other way in or out of that community. So the Northern Development Agreement helped to create and build an airport there.

We have other communities that do not have airstrips. If the new Northern Development Agreement were in place, those communities could have their airstrip and someone's life could be saved. If we do not have a means of getting people in to help, and people out when the need is there to get medical attention, obviously their lives will be threatened in break-up and in freeze-up. So that is a need that used to be met through our regional development programs but which is not happening at the present time because this Government, even after a two-year extension, would not negotiate a new Northern Development Agreement.

It is always interesting that when the Government has programs there is always a federal Cabinet Minister who is always so happy to announce a program, happy to announce a grant and say how wonderful the program is and how the program is uniquely suited to help the people in this community. I have press release after press release after press release from various federal Ministers saying exactly that.

Here is another project which is extremely important to the communities in my riding, a commercial complex opened in the community of Pukatawagan. That does not sound like much to people living in large cities, but this community of over 1,400 residents did not have a commercial complex, did not have a restaurant, did not have a place to do laundry. All of that was made possible through the Northern Development Agreement.

Library specialists were helped to graduate through a northern development program. Funds were used to help an aquaculture project in Norway House. Money was provided to The Pas Indian band to defray management training costs. Money was used to help a fish farming business in Wabowden. Money was used to help native art. Money was used for a number of other programs. Money was used for the friendship centre, to make sure there was a place for people to stay when they came into the larger communities. Money was used for another market which, again, a Conservative Cabinet Minister found it important enough to get out and make the announcement. Money was used to provide worker advisers for the Limestone project in northern Manitoba, the huge hydro-energy program. Money was used for a wild rice processing plant.

There are many, many more but I would run out of time and would not have a chance to talk about anything else, but all of those programs and all of those opportunities, basically for native people in my riding, existed because the federal Government recognized that they had a responsibility.

An Hon. Member: A Liberal Government.

Mr. Murphy: Did someone say a Liberal Government recognized this?

An Hon. Member: What Government was it? Was it an NDP Government?

Mr. Murphy: No, it was not. I will go back further in my notes.

In 1981, when the Liberals were in government, we had to fight like hell to get that agreement renegotiated.

An Hon. Member: No doubt you were responsible for it.

Mr. Murphy: Was I responsible? The speaker who wants to speak so much was not in the House at the time. But if he had been here he would remember that we got up in the House of Commons. Herb Gray, the Deputy Leader of the Liberal Party, was the Minister responsible and had refused to meet with the provincial NDP Government in Manitoba to renegotiate that agreement. They had refused to meet time after time. The agreement was not negotiated. What we had to do in order to get a meeting between the federal Liberal Government and the provincial NDP Government was to bring provincial Cabinet Ministers up into the Opposition gallery and point them out in the House and say, "Mr. Gray, will you meet with the provincial representatives of the people of Manitoba"?

An Hon. Member: How dreadful.

Mr. Murphy: That is what we had to do. The new Hon. Member should learn that he should not make too many comments without knowing some history.

An Hon. Member: They met right away.

Mr. Murphy: Yes, they met right away because they had no choice. And the cameras followed them, the provincial and the federal Cabinet Ministers. They met in a room downstairs which is now a washroom, but they met and they did get that agreement.

Mr. Epp: It was used for a good purpose.

An Hon. Member: Then there was a vote.

Mr. Murphy: We had to fight to get that agreement in 1981 and here we are having to fight not the Liberals this time, we are having to fight the Conservatives for this agreement. But it is not just this agreement, and I do not want to talk just about my riding because it is the same problem right across this country.

When we did have a Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the Department the Liberals dismantled, it was a lot easier to negotiate these federal-provincial agreements. It was a lot easier to find a Minister who would negotiate with the Province of Manitoba, it was a lot easier to find a Minister who would negotiate with the Province of B.C. or the Province of Nova Scotia, or the Province of P.E.I., because there was someone in the Cabinet who knew that his or her responsibility was regional economic expansion.

We knew, when we created DRIE instead of DREE, those voices that were concerned with industry would win out and that those voices that were concerned with regional economic expansion would lose. It was very clear.

The senior officials here admitted that they did not like the focus on regional economic expansion. They did not want to be in a situation of telling a company they should locate in Cape Breton, or that they should locate in P.E.I. or they should locate in northern B.C. or northern Manitoba. That was their attitude. They said "We will give the company the money but we will not tell them where to locate". That did not help. That created more jobs in central Ontario, but it did not help the regions. That was the problem.

Here we were, using money that used to be allocated for regional economic expansion, where we would grant money through a corporation to set up in Cape Breton, set up in Nova Scotia, set up in New Brunswick, but now that money was still being given to firms but they were going to end up locating their plants in Ontario.

That happened where we went from DREE to DRIE, and now we are going to a situation where we are even getting rid of DRIE, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. We are going to eliminate any reference whatsoever to regional economic expansion in this new Department.

That will hurt the regions in the long run. When the House of Commons also decided to get rid of its own Standing Committee on Regional Economic Expansion, the same thing happened because we lost the focus. We lost the focus on regional economic expansion. Again, that is something that happened under the previous Liberal regime and I think there are members of the Liberal Party who regret that now, because what used to happen—

An Hon. Member: There are very few of them here, very few left. They are almost all new, newer than the New Democrats.

Mr. Murphy: There are a few of the old ones here.

But I will tell you that when we used to have a standing committee that was specifically set up to deal with regional economic expansion, because it only had one focus it was easy to get that committee to travel across the country. It was easy to get MPs who would hold hearings in Corner Brook, hold hearings in New Brunswick, hold hearings in parts of Québec, hold hearings in western Canada. That committee had a focus and it knew it should be out there hearing from people who were receiving grants and hearing from people who were not receiving grants and to look at the situation right across this country.

That committee did a lot of good work but it had a lot of reports. We do not have that committee and we do not have Members of Parliament travelling as a standing committee investigating regional economic expansion and the problems in the regions. All of us in this House are much poorer for that.

With the reorganization of the Cabinet, which is what this legislation does, we are going to suffer again. Now we are in a situation where we are going to have a bureaucratic decision-making process, decisions made behind closed doors, and quite often decisions made for political reasons rather than regional economic expansion reasons.

There is really no focus. You have an Atlantic committee or an Atlantic agency which is supposed to help develop things. However, it does not really report to the House of Commons. It does not really report to the Members of this House. The same thing is true of the Western Diversification Office. Again, it does not really report to the Members of Parliament.

We have lost control of our own regional economic development, and this process is going to destroy the regions of Canada.

I do believe, Madam Speaker, that it is a result of the Free Trade Agreement. I do believe the quotes that have been mentioned by other Members, when we talk of Mickey Cohen, the former Deputy Minister, when we look at the American agenda, when we know that the Americans do not like our system of regional development grants and assistance programs. We are aiding and abetting them. We are aiding and abetting their ability to run and control our Government and our country. That is why we have to oppose the legislation as it now stands.

Mr. Gardiner: Being a new Member to the House I am certainly pleased to hear the Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) who I understand has put in some ten years of fine service to his riding and to this House in the anniversary coming up with a number of Members. I certainly respect the work he does with our caucus and all of the work that he does in this chamber.

My question to the Hon. Member in light of the debate today on Bill C-3 is in regard to the cost-shared forestry agreement in Manitoba. There were some $27 million that went into the development of the forestry resource in his province. Unfortunately, that is now in limbo because the Government has not done anything about it. Does the Hon. Member think that if there were a full department of forests and a Minister responsible for forests and that if we had a commitment to a national forest Act, we may then have a chance to rescue this agreement before facing the possible emasculation of economic agreements on Thursday night in the Budget?

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question. I should point out that he might be a new Member but he has been around the Hill for almost all of those 10 years. He used to work for the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). I know that in that capacity he was very interested in the forestry portfolio and very concerned that we did not have a full department at the federal level.

His question is valid. He points out a serious problem that exists. We do not have forestry agreements in place, not only in Manitoba but in other provinces as well. There really is not anyone speaking up in the inner Cabinet, in the powerful committees that have been set up to represent the interests of those of us who come from ridings and provinces in which the forest industry is very important.

Madam Speaker, you know that the forest industry is one of our most important industries, not only for its raw resources or the jobs that it creates but because it has been a steady source of income for all Canadians. We have not managed that resource very well.

One of the advantages of the forestry agreements is that they have enabled us to perform reforestation and to undertake training. This has ensured that we have people in place who know how to manage our forests and how to make sure that we were doing a better job. Unfortunately, by allowing the agreements to lapse and by allowing the Thursday night butcher to control everything the Government does, we will all be in a situation in which the forests of our nation will suffer. Those who work in the forests and those who work with the natural resources that come from our forests will lose their jobs as a result of that.

Mr. Kristiansen: Madam Speaker, I know that my colleague from Churchill has been a Member for some 10 years now. I know that he was not able to maintain that record and reputation in his area without being fair. I am sure that he would want to be fair to the Government since there is at least one element of Bill C-3 before us which I think we have agreed is a positive one, that is, the one which places more emphasis on the area of science and technology. Many of us have looked forward to a priority being placed on that area.

As I read the legislation and consider some of the other actions of the Government, I begin to wonder if they do not fit in with Frank R. Scott's poem about William Lyon Mackenzie King who once said that he never let his on the one hand know what his on the other hand was doing. While the Government is placing more emphasis on science and technology in the legislation before us and giving it full ministerial status, it has at the same time refused to intervene in the case of Connaught Industries. Mérieux of France, a state corporation, is being given a free hand to take over a major Canadian company that has made a significant and great contribution to research and development in the area of pharmaceuticals. This is an area which is vital to the future progress of much of science and technology and industry in Canada.

The Government is so committed to privatization and the idea that if it is foreign-ownership then it must be good because it will bring us new foreign technology and management. The Government thinks that that will give us broader entry into world markets. However, the Government is blind. It is like Lord Nelson at the Battle of Trafalgar. The Government sees the flag flying and the French colours and thinks that because it is foreign it must be good. The Government puts the telescope to its blind eye and charges ahead.

The Government is so committed to foreign ownership as a way of improving the status of our research, development, technology and trade that it has given over a private Canadian corporation, which has done an excellent job in research and development, to a French state corporation.

Perhaps my colleague can comment on this. I never thought I would see a Conservative Government embrace state technology and state ownership so overwhelmingly, even if it is foreign state technology. Does the Hon. Member think that in Conservative minds, even if it is a state corporation from abroad, it is preferable to a Canadian privately owned corporation, which in this case has done an excellent job of research and development?

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question.

Mr. Boudria: Remember, you have to be fair.

Mr. Murphy: I can be fair to the Conservatives. They just do not like it when I am fair to them. That is the problem.

It is obvious that socialism is okay as long as it is not Canadian socialism. The humour about the situation is ironic and tragic. Every time we have a choice between making decisions in Canada and letting others make decisions for us this Government has always sided with letting others make the decisions.

In the free trade debate the Conservatives talked about how they were creating new opportunities for Canadians and how great it would be for our young people. They said that they will have all sorts of wonderful opportunities and that they will be able to do things in Canada. Who will they be doing them for? They will be doing whatever they are being told to do by, in this case, the French, and in other cases the Americans, and in even other cases by European nations. We will be in a situation where there might be jobs in Canada but they will not be jobs for Canadians. The management and the scientific and research decisions will not be made by Canadians. The benefits of the research, the technology and what is done in Canada will be exported. If any main office is given an opportunity, and that main office is located outside Canada, then its primary interests will be outside Canada. If some Canadian in some firm which used to be independent and which has been bought out develops a new technology, a new device or a new mechanism, the main office will not let that stay in Canada for the benefit of Canadians.

It will be brought back to the main office and jobs will be created there. The money that we use for our research technology and our scientific development, the money we use to educate our youth will not be to the benefit of Canadians. It will be for the benefit of others who will be controlling our economy and our minds.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments has expired.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My colleague from Renfrew has quite a profound speech he wants to make. I am now wondering about the wisdom of having him start at 5.59 p.m. Perhaps we could call it six o'clock and then my colleague could have a full 20 minutes tomorrow.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I too rise on a point of order. We would be quite happy to vote on the amendment at this point and then go back to the main motion for further debate, allowing the Hon. Member to speak tonight.

Mr. Hopkins: May I call it six o'clock, Madam Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—CHANGE TO SYSTEM—EFFECT ON RURAL AREAS—EFFECT OF CHANGES ON NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I rise today to express my dissatisfaction with an answer given by the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) to a question that I raised in the House of Commons on April 17.

The Government of Canada, on April 11, established what it called its labour force development strategy. That is a euphemism for cutting back on UIC. This plan is in conflict with solemn promises made by the Government of Canada during the election campaign. I am sure, Madam Speaker, you being the non-partisan person that you are would want to be apprised of what the Minister responsible for external trade said during the election campaign. He said, and I quote:

> No one is planning any changes in the unemployment insurance program. There hasn't been any change proposed to us since we dealt with the Forget Commission. We are not contemplating any changes.

That is from The Evening Telegram of St. John's, Newfoundland of October 14, 1988, page 3. Now it is quite clear to me that no changes were planned to the unemployment insurance program.

As it turned out there were changes planned which will have a profound effect in many areas of our country, in particular on the people of eastern Ontario who are so ably represented in this House by my distinguished colleagues sitting around me.

In the Ottawa area, according to Employment Insurance Canada, the unemployment rate is 5.7 per cent. At the present time one must work 14 weeks in order to receive 46 weeks of unemployment insurance.

Under the proposed system one would have to contribute 20 weeks in order to receive 35 weeks of benefit. That is in conflict with the promise made to us by the Minister for external trade.

However, it goes beyond that. The fact that this Government has broken a promise is something that we expect from these Tories, but I refuse to accept the unfairness of this system. Even if it were true that where unemployment is lower warrants a tightening up of unemployment insurance rules, and I am not even saying that that in itself is an acceptable way of doing things, it certainly is not true in the constituency that I represent.

In Hawkesbury, Ontario, in my riding, the unemployment rate is 12.6 per cent. In Cornwall, in the riding of Stormont—Dundas ably represented by my colleague, the unemployment rate is 11 per cent. In Pembroke, so ably represented again by my colleague from Renfrew, the unemployment rate is 9 per cent. That 9 per cent unemployment rate has factors in it such as those living closer to Ottawa. The point is that the people of my riding are being asked to receive less unemployment insurance benefits because they are allegedly living in an area of low unemployment. I have just demonstrated that such is not the case. Unemployment is very high in the constituency I represent.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration, in an answer to a question I raised in the House on April 17, said that her colleague, the Minister of State, "announced that we would be revising the boundaries for unemployment insurance and that they will recognize regional differences".

Part of that answer may be correct. However, my question was specific. I want to know whether those boundaries will be changed before the new rules are applied. I want an ironclad guarantee for my constituents, as well as the constituents of Stormont–Dundas, Renfrew and elsewhere in eastern Ontario, that those rules will not be changed, the ones pertaining to UIC benefits, until they redo the map. Otherwise people living areas of 12 per cent and 13 per cent unemployment, such as the one my colleagues and I represent, will be punished by this unfair measure of the Government.

Today I am asking the Government to take this occasion to reassure my constituents about this very vital issue.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to expand upon the reply given by the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) on April 17.

The Hon. Member raised the issue of regional economic boundaries and wanted an assurance that people in rural areas would not be adversely affected by the proposed unemployment insurance changes.

With respect to regional boundaries, I want to inform the Hon. Member about the study initiated by the Hon. Minister of State for Employment and Immigration (Mrs. Vezina) in August 1988. I can assure the Hon. Member that this study of regional boundaries is still taking place. I am positive it will be completed long before the legislation passes the House.

About 23 per cent of unemployment insurance beneficiaries reside in rural areas, traditionally characterized by high unemployment rates. The proposed changes do not impact on high unemployment regions, and rural centres will continue to receive the same protection under the unemployment insurance program.

Indeed, the proposal will not increase entrance requirements nor reduce benefit entitlement where unemployment is highest. Moreover, the proposal eliminates the repeater provision to make it easier for seasonal workers to qualify.

I also want to bring the attention of the Hon. Member to aspects of the Labour Force Development Strategy announced by the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration on April 11. The Hon. Minister then proposed, among other things, additional funding for human resource planning, business development centres in designated communities, as well as assisting displaced and older workers. These initiatives and others take into consideration the specific labour market conditions of rural areas.

Adjournment Debate

CANADA–UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT–EFFECT ON AGRICULTURAL WORKERS–SUPPLY MANAGEMENT SYSTEMS

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Madam Speaker, on April 4, in the House, I specifically asked the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to set up programs which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had promised to Canadians during the election.

The Prime Minister said at that time: "I want to tell Canadians we shall ensure that innovative and generous adjustment and retraining programs will be introduced whenever and wherever required".

Quite frankly, the Hon. Minister did not answer my question. I cautioned those in the House on April 20, 1989, that the food conglomerates like Heinz and Nabisco were threatening reduction in their labour force caused by free trade. In fact, the Council of Canadians, in its third report card on the Free Trade Agreement, listed 26 companies with a possible loss of 7,619 jobs due to companies moving to the United States or being taken over by mergers with other companies.

One does not need much imagination to estimate the dire consequences and complete demolition of communities around which these companies are built and of employees which make up these companies.

The Deputy Prime Minister has refused to recognize what is happening and is completely ignoring the need for any of the "innovative and generous adjustment and retraining programs" promised by the Prime Minister. The time is now, not tomorrow, not next week or the week after, for the Government to bring in the programs that were promised during the election.

My supplementary question concerns the well organized supply management systems we have in Canada, which I stress duly comply with the GATT laws. Unfortunately, the Deputy Prime Minister and the de Grandpré report totally ignored the importance of supply management to Canadians and Canadian farmers.

I am of the opinion, which is supported by many supply managed industries, that we should not dismantle these effective and working organizations. The Deputy Prime Minister stated that de Grandpré fully endorsed the concept of supply management. That is just it. It is a concept. It is a form only.

In reality free trade undermines supply managed systems at every opportunity. By introducing an unworkable two–price proposal, de Grandpré continues to chip away at the supply managed industries.

According to the Canadian Dairy Commission, the two–price system would create an artificial incentive for highly processed products. If dairies made cream cheese, for instance, they would pay the regular price for milk. However, if they made pineapple flavoured cream cheese, they could claim to be engaged in further processing and pay the lower rate.

Furthermore, such a system would be a nightmare to monitor. It would be impossible to regulate the procedure that de Grandpré has introduced. We do not have enough people now to monitor our present inspection system without creating another one.

The Consumers' Association of Canada does not think very much of the two–price proposal either. It believes that the recommendations amount to protecting processors and producers by dipping into the consumers' pockets. The National Farmers Union observes that the proposals are an attempt to Americanize Canadian agriculture. The Chicken Marketing Board is doubtful if a two–price system would work.

The report urged the chicken, turkey and dairy boards to hold meetings within six months with provincial agencies and processors to discuss a two–price system. If the boards refuse to consider a two–price system, the Government should permit higher annual levels of imports to help the processors. Talk about holding a club over the heads of producers. That is what chicken producers feared from the free trade deal in the first place. In fact, there is already a lot of U.S. produced chicken moving into Saskatchewan and it has already depressed prices.

The Deputy Prime Minister went on to say that the fact of the matter is that the supply management service is in place, and that what we have to do as a Government and as an industry is to ensure that the systems are preserved and enhanced. This a flagrant dichotomy if there ever was one. The national and provincial farm organizations representing poultry producers strongly oppose free trade. The Ontario Chicken Producers' Marketing Board, the Turkey Producers' Marketing Board and the Ontario Egg Producers Marketing Board maintain that the national supply management programs have served producers, processors, government and consumers well. They do not support this attempt to attack the supply management system.

The Ontario Hatcheries Association also supports the maintenance of supply management. Marketing boards opposed to any changes in the present tariff and non-tariff barriers include asparagus producers, tender fruit producers and grape growers. All these groups have pointed out that Ontario is at a significant climatic disadvantage when competing with American states, not to mention the variance in operation costs, wages and employment benefits.

Our system is a good one. It is not only good but it is functional. When I asked the Deputy Prime Minister for his response, he said that he was considering the de Grandpré proposals. That is not good enough. Throughout the election campaign, we listened to the Deputy Prime Minister say that he would have programs available for farmers. To date, we have seen nothing.

A couple of weeks ago, I became the godfather of Michael Barilla, a person from Hagersville whom I would be proud to see grow up to be a farmer. I cannot ask him to do that today, particularly with a Government which is not prepared to help farmers.

I see that you are signalling that my time is up, Madam Speaker. I would like to end by saying that we on this side of the House are prepared to do something for farmers. We are prepared to stand up for farmers and we are prepared to propose policies that we feel will help the farming community.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I would first like to thank the Hon. Member for Haldimand—Norfolk (Mr. Speller) for his concern regarding supply managed commodities under the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. I would like to assure the Hon. Member that Canadian farmers will continue to benefit from supply management programs in the new trade environment.

The Hon. Member said that the Government has done nothing for farmers. I can proudly say that the Government has probably done more for agriculture than any Government in history that either I can remember or the Hon. Member can remember. We have done what we said we would do for agriculture.

Under Article 710 of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, both countries maintain the rights outlined in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. These rights, which were reaffirmed just last week in Geneva, allow Canada to continue to operate domestic supply management systems.

In other words, we have retained our right to add products to the import control list if they threaten to undermine an industry operating under supply management. We have exercised this right. Since the agreement went into effect at the beginning of the year, the Government has expanded the import control list to include yoghurt, ice cream, and other dairy products, to ensure that our dairy markets are not disrupted.

The slight increase in import quotas for chicken, turkey, and eggs under Article 706 of the agreement should not be interpreted as a threat to the supply management programs operating for these commodities. The quota changes simply reflect actual imports required to meet domestic consumer demand over the past few years.

Mr. Speller: Come on.

Mr. Cardiff: That is correct, and the Hon. Member knows it.

The changes will have no impact on prices. Domestic producers still retain the exclusive right to supply almost all of the domestic market. Steps are also being taken to strengthen the supply management powers of the Canadian Broiler Hatching Egg Marketing Agency.

The Government intends to extend the authority of the agency to include the movement of chicks from unregulated provinces into provinces where the marketing of hatching eggs is regulated by the agency. This action will complete the national supply management system for broiler hatching eggs and chicks introduced when the agency was established in 1986. The Government established that agency.

My colleagues and I made a commitment to producers of supply managed commodities. We told them we would ensure that strong supply management systems continue to exist in this country as long as they are favoured by a majority of producers. The Government stood by this commitment when the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement was negotiated. It continues to stand by it and the farmers.

Adjournment Debate

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—IMPACT OF—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE WOMEN WILL NOT BE PENALIZED

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rose in the House last week to question the Minister for Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) who is also the Minister responsible for the status of women. I asked her for guarantees that women would not be unduly hurt by the new cuts to the unemployment insurance program. She was unable to give me those guarantees.

How will these new outrageous UI penalties help women? How is cutting women off UI and plunging whole families into poverty good for women? The Government made these changes to help itself, certainly not to help women or other workers.

I am very much afraid that women will be penalized for quitting their jobs because they are being sexually harassed. They will have to suffer the new seven to twelve-week penalty. I am afraid that women who refuse employment while on UI because they cannot find child care or because the hours of work do not allow them to take care of family responsibilities will be punished by the Government through these new penalties. I am afraid that women who are fired due to some type of sexist discrimination will have to forgo UI benefits for which they have paid through their premiums. These women and their families will face up to three months with no income.

Women are not supposed to suffer penalties for those reasons. However, it is left up to an employment officer in a Canada Employment Centre to decide whether a woman has just cause to quit, or whether her refusing employment was for a good reason. I wonder how much training in women's issues these employment officers have received.

I would like to read into the record a letter sent to me by a woman in British Columbia. This letter was sent to her by an officer with Employment and Immigration in the UI program. Rose Marie Roux has given me permission to use her name. The letter is dated April 10, 1989 and it states:

Dear Rose Marie Roux

The following information is required to establish the permanency of your relationship. It is not to be construed as a moral issue.

Are you living common-law with your fiancé? If so, how long have you been living together? Have you set a definite date for your wedding? When was this date established? What is the date of your planned wedding? Are there any children involved?

Yours truly,
P. McLeod
Insurance Agent

This letter was sent from the Canada Employment Centre, 124 East Fifteenth Street, North Vancouver.

This is an invasion of privacy. It shows the insensitivity of the present system, yet the Minister did not choose to improve the system. Employment officers will be making arbitrary decisions about women's lives. The Minister was unable to guarantee that women would not fall through the cracks of the new system.

Women treated unfairly have the right to appeal, but what will they live on during the long appeal process? What will their children eat, Madam Speaker? These are serious questions that were not addressed by the Minister.

I am also very concerned that a woman unfairly treated at work and then unfairly treated by UI may just give up. Will she take on the UI system by herself? I raised these concerns in my supplementary question to the Minister but she skirted around them and was unwilling to give us a straight answer. The Minister patted herself on the back for bringing the unemployment insurance parental leave benefits in line with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Denying benefits to natural fathers while giving them to adoptive fathers is discrimination that should never have taken place in the first place.

The Government's policy forced a decision on young families that it must be the natural mother and not the natural father, if that was their choice, who could care for the children. Is this what the Minister was being self-congratulatory about, the fact that for years this Government practised an unconstitutional policy? Perhaps it was the fact that it took the case of Shalom Schachter, who took the Government to court on this issue and won, thus forcing the Government to change its discriminatory practices. Maybe the Minister is proud of the fact that the Government initially appealed the Schachter decision to try to rob further natural fathers of the benefits which they should have been receiving all along.

What is lost in the whole parental benefits debate is that the Minister cut adoptive leave benefits from 15 weeks to 10 weeks.

The Minister stated that her new UI scheme would benefit immigrant women and that this Government had done a lot for immigrant women. That may be the Minister's position, but the National Organization of Immigrant and Visible Minority Women does not think so. It does not think the Government has done anything positive for immigrant women. If the Government cares so much about immigrant women, why does it not remove the long-standing discrimination against immigrant women inherent in its language training programs? How can immigrant women benefit from the Minister's job training if they do not have language skills?

I am concerned about the type of job training the Minister speaks about. Does the Minister mean subsidization of wages for for low skill occupations? The Government has been less than honest all along about the UI program. The Conservative Party did not campaign on the platform of "elect me and I will slash the UI program", but that is what it has done.

Of course, more and better training is necessary, especially after the devastating effects of free trade on women's jobs in Canada, but these training programs should not come at the expense of those in our society who can least afford it.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, one of the difficulties in replying to these matters is that those raised by the Member on the late show are not the matters that were addressed when the question was first raised in the House.

I welcome the opportunity to expand on the reply given by the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) to the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Burnaby (Ms. Black) on April 12. The Hon. Member wanted an assurance that women will not be adversely affected by the proposals contained in the policy paper tabled by the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration on April 11.

Women will be among the chief beneficiaries of the amendments introduced in the UI program as part of the labour force development strategy. The changes brought to maternity and parental benefits represent a breakthrough for Canadian social policy.

In 1988 more than 120,000 families benefited from the income protection offered by the UI maternity benefits. The changes we have proposed will enhance the protection currently available to women by making receipt of these benefits more flexible and by providing 10 weeks of parental benefits to new parents. These measures also correct some of the unfairness which existed in the application of the current program.

For example, women who must claim both sickness and maternity benefits in the same year will no longer have their duration of benefits limited to 15 weeks. They will now benefit from the full income protection they are due.

Thousands of women have benefited from programs offered under the Canadian Jobs Strategy introduced by this Government in September 1985. During the 1987–88 period more than 160,000 women, youth and disadvantaged workers participated in programs under the job entry component of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. The increased emphasis on active spending will further benefit women by providing them with opportunity to acquire the skills necessary to get a good job.

Another element of the labour force development strategy is an expansion of the program to encourage self-employment and entrepreneurship.

I might note that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business tells us that there are more women entering business as entrepreneurs in the last couple of years than there are men. These programs will also benefit women.

A recent study by Statistics Canada showed that since 1975 the number of self-employed women has been rising three times as fast as the number of self-employed men. By 1986 women's share of total self-employment had reached 27 per cent, up from only 19 per cent in 1975.

The measures introduced regarding voluntary quitters without just cause will have no effect on women who must leave the job with cause. Women who face circumstances such as sexual harassment, the transfer of a spouse to another city, or unsafe working conditions, will continue to have full access to UI benefits.

I can assure the Hon. Member that the labour force development strategy is intended to benefit women. These new proposals, combined with the Government's commitment to employment equity goals and action plans in the private sector, will ensure the continued integration of women in the labour market.

INDUSTRY

CLOSURE OF LASER SAILBOAT COMPANY, HAWKESBURY, ONTARIO

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, earlier this year, the world famous Laser Sailboat Company of Hawkesbury, Ontario, was forced into receivership, and closed its doors. In March, the receivers and creditors found a purchaser for the financially beleaguered company.

The purchaser in question, Pearson Yachts, at the urging of the Ontario Development Corporation initially promised to keep 20 to 30 jobs in Canada to build both the Pearson and Laser sailboats.

However, Pearson has now changed its mind and will manufacture all its boats in Portsmouth, Rhode Island. Without a foreign investment review mechanism which this Tory Government cancelled, there appears to be no way to force Laser to stay in Canada much less in Hawkesbury.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Boudria: I call upon the Government of Canada to intervene and to set in place mechanisms to keep Laser in Canada. Laser is as Canadian as the Maple Leaf. Let us keep it in Canada, and especially, let us keep it in Hawkesbury.

FISHERIES

EFFECTS OF DRIFT-NET FISHING

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, the practice of drift-net fishing in the North Pacific is one that threatens both the environment we treasure and a salmon resource many British Columbians rely on for their livelihood. It is estimated that these nets kill at least one million seabirds each year, along with 20,000 porpoises, tens of thousands of seals and a number of whales. Over 30 different species are involved in this eco-system that is being plundered daily by drift-netters.

In addition to the environmental tragedy, it is estimated that between 20,000 and 30,000 tonnes of salmon are caught illegally each year while fishermen drift-net for squid. This has fuelled a thriving salmon industry in southeast Asia, where a tin of sockeye can sell for half the price it does in B.C. When only half of the 30 million pink salmon expected to return to B.C. rivers actually make it, it is not difficult to see that a tremendous problem exists. In order to get maximum benefit from the tremendous job the Government has done in the area of salmonid enhancement, we should start getting tough with the nation showing a reckless attitude towards our environment, while taking a resource that rightfully belongs to Canada.

FISHERIES

FISH-PROCESSING INDUSTRY IN B.C.—ALLEGED LOSS OF JOBS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Last year the Minister for International Trade refused to stand up for B.C. fisheries and shore-workers to oppose the GATT ruling that denied Canadians the right to process our own fish. The Minister of Fisheries promised an alternative protection so that no jobs would be lost.

Bowing to American pressures, the Mulroney Government agreed to conform without a fight to protect thousands of jobs for B.C. shore-workers.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Ms. Mitchell: In Vancouver East alone, hundreds of native and immigrant women will lose decent paying union jobs as a result.

Yesterday's announcement put it in writing. The Government has removed export restrictions on unprocessed herring and pink and sockeye salmon. This sell-out breaks all Conservative promises to preserve B.C. shore-workers.

British Columbians must strongly protest the sacrifice of our fishing industry to U.S. pressures and demand the resignation of the responsible Ministers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SMALL AND MEIDUM-SIZED BUSINESSES

GALA PRIMAS '89

Mr. Jean-Marc Robitaille (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, the first gala recognizing the excellence and dynamism of businesses in the des Moulins region, Gala Primas 89, was held in my riding this March.

On this occasion, small businesses in my constituency, like Servtrotech, Celtech, Techni-Quilles, the des Moulins Restaurant-Hotel, Confection Magi-Ro, the F.L. Group and Habitations du Boisé d'en haut, were recognized for excellence in their respective fields.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, Denis Boisvert had the pleasure of seeing his company, Fibrex, which specializes in the manufacture of fibreglass articles, awarded the "business of the year" honour.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to point out to this House the excellent initiative of the des Moulins Chamber of Commerce and its president Claude Hamer, as well as the wonderful work done by the organizing committee chaired by Mr. Harvey. They did an outstanding job.

Mr. Speaker, the Gala Primas is now a reality in my riding and in a few years, it will surely become an excellent tradition for all the dynamic small businesses of this region.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

ERDA—RENEWAL OF AGREEMENTS IN P.E.I. REQUESTED

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, the people in my province are hoping the Finance Minister's (Mr. Wilson) axe will miss a set of spending agreements that help keep the Prince Edward Island economy afloat. Seventy-eight million dollars in ERDA programs expired March 31, and all Islanders, including farmers, fishermen and tourist operators, are awaiting the Government's verdict on their future.

One such program, the Tourism and Marketing ERDA, is a target for government cut-backs. Such a cut would cost jobs and expansion in an industry which is helping Prince Edward Island catch up with the rest of Canada. I urge the Government not to cut this program or any other ERDA but rather to renew these agreements and index them to inflation. Only by such an action will this Government prove to the people of Prince Edward Island that it is serious about regional development.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

DECISION TO BAN ARMX EXHIBITIONS IN OTTAWA

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock): Mr. Speaker, Ottawa City Council, smug and secure behind the protection which this country and its alliances provide for it, last week voted not to let ARMX have exhibitions here in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: I hope I get extra time for that, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Solid support.

Mr. Friesen: They did this in their belief of support for peace and respect for human rights. Presumably, in the interest of consistency, peace and respect for human rights, the next move will be to disarm the Ottawa Police Force, an area—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Friesen: —that is much closer to their responsibility.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

AGRICULTURE

EFFECT OF GATT DECISION ON SUBSIDIES TO DAIRY FARMERS

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 31 to express my dismay about the Government's betrayal of our Canadian dairy industry at the mid-term review of multilateral trade negotiations of GATT concluded in Geneva this month. Not only have subsidies and returns been frozen but the dairy industry itself has been under attack from a U.S. challenge to the inclusion of ice-cream and yogurt on the Import Control List. If this challenge is successful it will have a devastating impact on other sectors of the agriculture economy because of the precedent that it will set.

• (1410)

I ask the Government to stand up to the United States negotiators and to expose the hidden, indirect subsidies that are available to their farmers through feed companies, grain elevators, fertilizer companies, et cetera.

For example, a dairy farmer in St. Clair County, Michigan with 44 cows will receive approximately $10,000 worth of subsidies in the form of feed. A wheat farmer with 40 acres of wheat will receive three tonnes of ammonium-nitrate fertilizer, all paid for by the United States Treasury.

This is not a level playing field but a massive erosion of the most sophisticated marketing system of any country in the world. We lost our two-price wheat system. The Government took oats from under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. We are losing our wine industry, and now dairy and poultry are being challenged through GATT.

I call on the Government to promote and to strengthen the Canadian farmers who supply our Canadian consumers with a continuing supply of high quality food.

LA FRANCOPHONIE GAMES

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, a delegation from Canada will be in Morocco July 8 to 22 for the first Francophone Games. The delegation will be in three distinct parts: Canada, Canada—Québec and Canada—New Brunswick. This formula recognizes Canada's traditional participation as a single entity in the French-speaking world and international games, as well as the presence and special recognized contribution of Québec and New Brunswick in the Francophone community and its institutions.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat the words of Québec's International Affairs Minister, Paul Gobeil, who says he is satisfied with the agreement because it allows Québec to keep its place in the French-speaking world and it shows other nations that we are a united country where Québec, a Canadian province, has a place within the Canadian federation.

LANDING AND INSPECTION REGULATIONS – ALLEGED LOSS OF JOBS IN B.C.

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the federal New Democrat caucus I move for the removal of the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon) from Cabinet for failing to bring forward regulations which would have saved the B.C. fishing industry.

The landing and inspection regulations which were brought forward by the Minister will lead to the wholesale exportation of the herring and salmon industry worth $750 million, and will cost us thousands of jobs in B.C.

In the absence of Canadian grading and gutting rights, foreign buyers will intercept B.C. salmon and herring when they are landed. Canada's sovereign rights have been trampled and British Columbians will be the losers.

We point to the fatal flaw in Chapter 12 of the Free Trade Agreement wherein Article 1203 gives protection to the fishing regulations of Quebec, P.E.I., Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and New Brunswick—but not to B.C.

The new Conservative regulations will see foreign buyers snapping up B.C. fish prior to proper grading and processing. While B.C. presently leads world markets in price and quality, the new regulations open the door to low-quality grading and processing outside the B.C. industry.

Up to 7,500 jobs are at risk. Entire coastal communities are placed at economic risk. An entire industry could collapse from the piranha-like activity of foreign buyers—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

HOUSING

OPENING OF NON-PROFIT HOUSING DEVELOPMENT IN ST. ANDREWS, NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, it was indeed an honour and privilege for me to participate recently in the opening of Quinn House in St. Andrews, New Brunswick on Saturday, April 22.

This non-profit housing development was built and funded by the Government of Canada, the Province of New Brunswick, and the New Brunswick Masonic Charities and Housing Company Limited.

The New Brunswick Masonic Charities and Housing Company is an offshoot of the Grand Lodge of Free Masons, which was formed specifically with the role of providing low-cost housing for senior citizens. I am delighted to see this kind of co-operation between the federal, provincial and non-profit organizations.

I call upon Canadians to get involved in the field of non-profit housing because working together we can improve the quality of housing for all Canadians.

FISHERIES

EFFECT OF NEW REGULATIONS IN B.C.

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, the new fish-landing regulations in British Columbia are the latest example of the Government's rushing headlong to satisfy, to pacify, to please its American masters at whatever the cost. We saw the same type of pandering on the Free Trade Agreement. We saw it in a similar vein between Canada and France in relation to Newfoundland a couple of weeks ago.

At least the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon) has been consistent this time. He is socking it to B.C. the same as he socked it to Newfoundland the first time around. The Fish Council of B.C., the Native Brotherhood, and at least one of the unions find this completely unacceptable. It is no wonder. It gives complete and unfettered access to unprocessed fish by the Americans—not at all what the Government promised to deliver.

It is the latest example of how the Government has caved in to the Americans one more time.

NATIONAL DEFICIT—ELECTION CAMPAIGN PROMISES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I just caught the Prime Minister's attention. He was doing a head count.

My question is on a serious note. It is addressed to the Minister of Finance. On November 10, 11 days before the last election, the Minister of Finance had this to say: "Conservatives have made spending commitments—"—not promises but spending commitments—"in those reserves, we have sufficient money to handle the announcements."

Those announcements amounted to $17 billion. Eleven days before the election the Minister of Finance said that he had sufficient financial reserves to cover those announcements. Then suddenly after the election, and as he comes up to his Budget, he says that we have a debt crisis in Canada.

That is nothing of course compared to the Prime Minister. Late during the campaign he said: "We have dealt with the deficit."

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): "You've got promises, all are within Michael Wilson's fiscal framework. Every nickel has been accounted for."

Every nickel has been accounted for. What a phoney—what a pair of phoneys!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What kind of deceitful scam was the Minister practising at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer, the Canadian electorate, when he was so free with his vocabulary during the election campaign?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in the lead-up to that same campaign we had 40 promises, which added up to some $24 billion from that Party.

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Duhamel: What about yours?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): They should think back to that time, Mr. Speaker. I know that it bothers Hon. Members opposite.

Let me remind them of the child care announcement. What did we do? We started off at $5 billion—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Duhamel: What about your commitment?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Before the sun had set on that day, we were up to $7 billion. A couple of days later, it was up to $9 billion. Members opposite seem to have short memories.

Let me also remind Members opposite that any time that I was asked a question on the deficit—and I got a number of questions on the deficit—

Mr. Marchi: Your nose grew!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Starting back in 1984 with the economic statement on November 8, 1984, going right through every Budget, I talked about the importance of debt, the importance of addressing the deficit, of getting the annual deficit down each year. I said that that commitment continues. That commitment will continue in the next mandate—

Mr. Marchi: There goes the nose again!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —because we in this Party understand its importance and are committed to dealing with it.

• (1420)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister ought to recognize that the Canadian people are going to hold him accountable for the finances of this country. During the election campaign on several occasions, he called me a liar. Before he stands up tomorrow afternoon in this House, let him look in the mirror.

INTEREST RATE INCREASES—ELECTION CAMPAIGN PROMISES—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has the nerve to tell Canadians that he misled them during the election because he did not know that interest rates would go up. He made so many erroneous statements last year that he forgot a few. Last year, he told Canadians that interest rates would be around 7.8 per cent when he brought down his Budget in 1989. Well, it is 1989, and interest rates are as as 12.6 per cent.

The Minister did not tell us the truth during the election campaign. Could he explain to the House today why he misled us about interest rate levels during the election campaign?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let us not go back and relive the election campaign.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I will say to the Hon. Member, the Leader of the Opposition, that character assassination did not work in the election campaign, and it is not going to work here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Leader of the Opposition talks about projections of interest rates. He knows the difficulty of projecting interest rates. I think that before the Leader of the Opposition laughs too hard and too long, he should go back to some of the things he said when he was Minister of Finance because he was far, far more off-track with his projections than I ever was.

But let us go back to the fall. We had a mixed period in the economy. There were some signs of a strong economy, but some signs of a weak economy. We had a period of four or five months when there was no employment growth. Housing starts were on their way down. We had the uncertainty about what was going to happen in the United States. The election was just under way in the United States. No one understood what was going to happen then. Those are the uncertainties. Those are the unknowns that people have to encounter in making these projections, and the Hon. Member understands that.

Mr. Simmonds: Your nose is getting longer and longer.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Since we started this year we have had quite an increase in the interest rates, and that is what has led to the problems that we are facing today, problems that we are determined to face and which the Party on the other side totally ignored, totally swept under the carpet and never faced up to.

ELECTION CAMPAIGN STATEMENTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, all that is from a Minister of Finance who in four short years has doubled the public debt of this country from $170 million to $330 billion. I ask the Minister, why is it that he having had possession of the public books of this country, having known what the public debt was last year in the fall during the election campaign, having known the extent of the national deficit, having known that interest rates were going up, why did he not come clean with Canadians then rather than telling them now suddenly that we have a debt problem?

An Hon. Member: You are still a loser, John.

Mr. Simmonds: Your nose is getting longer.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The nose of the Hon. Member from Newfoundland is right across the floor of this House. It is so long from the things that he has been saying.

Let me give the Leader of the Opposition a simple—no, no, we will give him a simple lesson. We will give the Leader of the Opposition a simple method in fiscal policy, something that he never learned when he was the Minister of Finance himself. The Hon. Member says that the debt has gone up during our term of office.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Double the money.

An Hon. Member: More than double.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I ask the Members opposite, why does the debt go up?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You tell us.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The debt goes up because there are annual deficits. We have brought the deficit down every year since we have been in office.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): And if the Hon. Member, the Leader of the Opposition, is so concerned—the Leader of the Opposition knows what a wooden nickel is because that is all he has been handing around for the last four years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

IMPACT OF HIGH INTEREST RATES ON ERDA PROGRAMS

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Governor of the Bank of Canada has recognized that the high interest rates policy that this Government has been pursuing has a particularly adverse impact on the less affluent regions of Canada. He has urged the Government to offset that adverse impact with regional development assistance. Regional development programs have, however, either been suspended or cut by this Government, not increased to offset the impact of high interest rates. Will the Minister assure Canadians today that regional development programs will be fully maintained?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): The Hon. Member understands that the day before a Budget, I cannot get into things that are possibly going to be referred to in that Budget. For that reason he knows that I cannot give an answer to that. But the point that I want to make is that we on this side of the House understand that the right way to get the interests rates in this country down is to follow good economic policies, policies that are going to lead to a reduction in the inflationary pressures, and that will get down the interest rates on a permanent basis. That will lead to a healthier economy.

CUTS IN PROGRAMS IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has said that we must wait for the Budget to hear about regional development programs being cut, but the fact is that in Atlantic Canada, for example, regional development subsidiary agreements have already been suspended or terminated in Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. Those are not programs for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, they are programs for joint federal–provincial funding. Will the Minister assure Canadians today, without waiting for the Budget, that federal support for these programs will be restored and fully maintained?

• (1430)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that that question is any different from the previous question. The answer is still the same.

FISHERIES

FISH PROCESSING INDUSTRY IN B.C.—EFFECT OF GATT REGULATIONS ON JOBS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In today's Canada Gazette there is a regulatory announcement that will directly and negatively affect 7,500 existing jobs in British Columbia.

My question pertains to a commitment made by the Government of Canada in the fall of 1987, following a GATT ruling on the West Coast fishery in which the then Minister of Fisheries made the following promise to me in the House about fish processing jobs: "Fish processing jobs are not going to be jeopardized in any way". This was repeated by the Minister for International Trade last spring.

I have obtained from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans this morning an assessment of the regulations that were tabled today. Its own assessment points out that they will affect the raw material supply for processors which will lead directly to the export of jobs in this industry from Canada. A commitment was made in the House in the fall of 1987 to protect this industry. It was repeated in the spring of 1988. Why has the Government completely abandoned its commitment to 7,500 working Canadians in British Columbia?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, this gives me an opportunity to review some of the history of the GATT panel which was brought against Canada. Canadian processors were buying Alaska salmon and Alaskan processors were asking for the same privilege. At that time a GATT panel was brought against Canada and they found in November, 1977, that Canadian regulations were not in accordance with the GATT. Accordingly, in March, 1988, Canada adopted the request of GATT, but at the same time made a commitment to the fishermen and the fish industry of the West Coast that regulations would be brought in, which have been brought in, to land salmon and herring in British Columbia for conservation purposes. That has been undertaken and our commitment to the fishermen on the West Coast has been upheld.

Mr. Broadbent: Just a minute ago, in reference to another question, the Minister of Finance said that the Leader of the Opposition had a short memory. Let me say that this Minister has a short memory in terms of the promises made by the Government of Canada on this issue.

LOSS OF JOBS FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA TO UNITED STATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the promise not by one Minister but by two Ministers, was that the new regulations that would be brought in to protect the jobs in British Columbia would ensure that grading and quality control would continue to be done in Canada. According to the regulations that have just come out, the Government has yielded to American pressure to abandon that and to get rid of those two specific commitments that would have kept those jobs in Canada. It will lead very directly, as he knows, because it is part of the Free Trade Agreement, to the transfer of these jobs directly from British Columbia to the United States. Why?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I seem to remember that this was the same Leader who predicted the loss of 200,000 jobs when the Minister of Finance brought in his economic statement in 1985. That is how accurate he is in predicting job loss.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: I can tell the Hon. Member that there will not be job losses—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: —that the salmon and herring industry will remain viable on the West Coast. The landing requirements are perfectly GATT-consistent.

I might also say that this is the same Leader who went around the country saying that our salvation in trade is in the GATT. The first time a GATT panel comes against Canada he wants to forget it.

ELECTION CAMPAIGN COMMITMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister may not like my predictions, but I have a document from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans which I received this morning. Its words, not mine, are as follows: "This will affect the raw material supply for processors". The same paragraph states: "The revocation of the export restrictions could result in an increased number of landing stations and—"please note: "—the export of large quantities of unprocessed fish". When large quantities of unprocessed fish are exported, British Columbia jobs are exported with them. That is the reality.

My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Since it was not that Minister but the Minister for International Trade and the Minister of Fisheries who made the commitment in the House that these jobs would be protected and the new regulations would keep these jobs in British Columbia, why has the Government of Canada sold them down the drain?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government has not sold out the West Coast fishermen. That is a silly statement by the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party, and he knows it.

An Hon. Member: You gave it away.

Mr. McDermid: He is grandstanding on this and he knows it. We brought in requirements consistent with GATT, the GATT which he supports, to land the salmon and herring for conservation purposes in this country. That goes a long way to help the fishing industry on the West Coast, and the Hon. Member knows that. He is just grandstanding today.

REQUEST THAT NEW REGULATIONS BE REVOKED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am reluctant to direct a question to the same Minister, so I will direct it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Prime Minister. We cannot get a proper answer from that Minister who said this decision will help the fishing industry in the West Coast.

I have a statement by the President of the Fishery Council in British Columbia, by the Native Brotherhood of British Columbia and by the United Fishermen and Allied Workers, the three major organizations in British Columbia that speak for the fishing industry. They say that we will lose $200 million worth of products and 1,000 jobs. That is the statement by the industry.

Therefore, will the Government change the regulations and restore to that industry the viability which is taken away by this decision?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a question from the Hon. Member. He and I have debated trade issues over the last two and a half years. I notice that his figure of 1,000 jobs is 6,000 less than that given by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. You should get together on your estimates.

Mr. Allmand: Answer the question.

Mr. McDermid: The estimates of the Liberal Party have been wrong all the way along with respect to job losses and all these agreements that this Government has negotiated over the years anyway. It is not a surprise to me today.

The Hon. Member is another great supporter of GATT. He travelled throughout the country. I saw him on the The Journal and elsewhere telling us that the GATT is our salvation. But the minute something is brought against us by the GATT, he is on his feet telling us to forget the GATT and get rid of it. You can't do that.

Mr. Allmand: He never said that.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I just want to correct the record. They are not my figures, they are figures obtained directly from the representatives of the fishing industry in British Columbia, the people who know what is at stake. Their jobs are at stake. It is clear that the industry involved finds that these regulations will be punitive and that there will be a major loss of jobs in British Columbia. I point out to the Minister that the Government gave away the right to impose an export tax, which is a legitimate means under the GATT to protect Canadian workers and the Canadian processing industry. The Government is responsible for this decision. The Government must rescind the decision.

REQUEST THAT REGULATIONS BE CHANGED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will he take a stand to change these regulations and preserve those jobs?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note what the Hon. Member is quoting because it says nothing about salmon at all in this press release from the Fisheries Council. It just refers to herring. The herring season is now over, as the Hon. Member will know if he knows anything about the West Coast fishery. We have made a commitment to the herring fishing and processing industry that we will bring in GATT consistent measures to ensure that the herring roe industry on the West Coast remains viable. We have made that commitment to them and we plan to stand by it.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PRIME MINISTER OF NEW ZEALAND

Mr. Speaker: I wish to bring to Hon. Members' attention the presence in the gallery of The Right Hon. David Large, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE BUDGET

SALES TAX REFORM

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Minister of Finance is so out of touch with reality that he does not realize that the majority of Canadians, not counting the working poor or those people on fixed incomes, can just barely cope from payday to payday as it is now. How can ordinary Canadians cope with this new sales tax? Does the Minister not feel ashamed of himself to have to lay out $162 for a new pair of Hartt brand shoes when that is the average unemployment insurance cheque for a family for a whole week? He should come in barefoot to deliver his budget because that is how many Canadians will be after this tax.

Some Hon. Members: Take them off!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): But keep your socks on, Mike.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member would like me to take my socks off. The Hon. Member is making an interesting observation. He is criticizing, before he has even seen the details, the reform that we propose to make in our sales tax system. I do not want to embarrass people who are sitting in the gallery, but the sales tax reform that was introduced in New Zealand some three years ago has been a great success. It has been regarded as being fair and equitable and it has been regarded as being an important element in improving the efficiency of the economy. These are all the reasons we want to proceed with sales tax reform and help the people to whom the Hon. Member is referring.

Some Hon. Members: Ask him the question.

Mr. Speaker: I am terribly tempted to let the right hon. gentleman enter into the debate. However—

REFUNDABLE SALES TAX CREDIT

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, this is not New Zealand.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: The Minister is talking about a tax rebate, but how are ordinary Canadians supposed to live in between the rebates? As well, the tax is on all services so that means that transportation is taxed and handling is taxed. It means that the people who live the furthest away from an industry will pay more of the tax.

I would like to ask the Minister who has fancy luxury Hartt brand shoes how he expects Maritimers and Newfoundlanders who presently pay the highest sales taxes in Canada—in Newfoundland it is 12 per cent—to pay any new tax, especially more of a new tax than other Canadians? The only heart and soul this Minister has is in his shoes.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my shoes were made in New Brunswick.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): What has the Hon. Member got against the artisans of New Brunswick? I am trying to support an industry in his region of the country.

As I watched the histrionics of the Hon. Member, it occurred to me that we should make sure that acting lessons for politicians are fully taxed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member raises a serious question. He is asking about the refundable sales tax credit. I have talked about the refundable sales tax credit for two years now. I have said that this is an important part of sales tax reform. It will be paid regularly to people in lower income brackets. An important point for the Hon. Member to note is that it will be paid in advance so that people will be in cash before they have to pay the tax.

FISHERIES

FISH PROCESSING INDUSTRY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to a matter that is very important to all British Columbians, particularly West Coast fisher-people. There are women who work in the industry as well as men. I must say that British Columbians who are watching this on television must be dismayed because the Prime Minister did not budge in his seat when these questions were directed to him.

My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Today, when these regulations were promulgated, it was noted in the regulations under consultations on page 3 that consultations had been carried out with the Departments of External Affairs, Privy Council, Justice and Finance, all of whom support this initiative. When these negotiations were taking place, New Brunswick was excluded, Newfoundland was excluded, Nova Scotia was excluded, Prince Edward Island was excluded and Québec was excluded. The only province that was not excluded was British Columbia. Why was that decision made by the Government?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I assume the negotiations the Hon. Member is talking about are the free trade negotiations, although he did not say that in his question. I assume that is what he is talking about. However, this has nothing to do with the Free Trade Agreement. This is a GATT panel that was brought against Canada long before the Free Trade Agreement was being negotiated or signed.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, that is why I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs the question. The Secretary of State for External Affairs made a public statement in the Province of British Columbia on December 18, 1987, that there is no room to move within the terms of the Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. Andre: This is GATT, Davey, GATT, G-A-T-T, GATT.

Mr. Barrett: For reasons internal—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Barrett: All the nonsense will not pacify the people of British Columbia.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to let the Hon. Member put his question. I would ask Hon. Members to let the Hon. Member who is putting his question, put his question, and I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

• (1450)

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, the concern is for the people of British Columbia, not the Members here in the House.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that for reasons internal to their country they, the Americans, were prepared to give the East Coast and were unprepared to give the West Coast. You admit in this statement that it was the Free Trade Agreement—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Barrett: Why didn't you protect British Columbia?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should understand that we have been having consultations with the fishing industry and with the Government of British Columbia for the last number of months.

Mr. Barrett: They rejected it.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member may be speaking a little early when he makes statements like that.

I can say that our Government made a commitment to the fishermen and the processors on the West Coast that we would bring in regulations for landing requirements which means that every salmon caught, and every herring caught, will have to be landed in British Columbia for inspection and for grading—

Mr. Broadbent: For quality control.

Mr. McDermid: —and for biological testing. Those consultations took place with the British Columbia Government.

Mr. Barrett: Those jobs are gone, and they disagree with you completely.

Mr. McDermid: If the Hon. Member looks at the press release, he will notice that they are not concerned about salmon at all. They are talking about herring. We have made a commitment to the processors of the herring roe industry on the West Coast that we will in fact bring in GATT-consistent regulations to protect that industry.

Mr. Barrett: Let's hear from the Prime Minister and the Minister. That's nonsense, absolute nonsense. You don't give a fig about British Columbia. You don't care about British Columbia, and he doesn't know where it is.

Mr. McDermid: The former Premier of British Columbia is sitting there babbling like an idiot.

Mr. Barrett: He is the Prime Minister of the whole country, not just Québec. You stand up and speak for British Columbia. Shame.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

INITIAL PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds.

Farmers in my riding and across the country are preparing to seed their crops. In the past the Minister has made it a practice to announce initial Wheat Board payments in late April in order to help farmers make better informed business decisions.

Is the Minister prepared to announce the initial payment, and if so, can he share it with the House?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, we have just released the initial payments—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: A very succinct answer. The Hon. Member for Cariboo—Chilcotin.

DISABLED TANKER OFF B.C. COAST

Mr. Dave Worthy (Cariboo—Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment.

I understand there is a possibility that there is a tanker floating off the coast of British Columbia. I would like to know the following.

First, can the Minister confirm this? Is there a risk to the waters or the coastline of British Columbia? What action is being contemplated?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I heard from the former Premier of British Columbia that he is very worried about what happens in his province, and I would like to answer the question that concerns British Columbia.

This morning at 11.13 the 70,000 tonne dead-weight tanker, Exxon Philadelphia, was broken down and drifting away from the entrance to the Strait of Juan de Fuca in a northwesterly direction. It is presently approximately 12 miles off shore. There is no pollution and there are no injuries. The vessel is reported to be carrying 70,000 tonnes of crude oil from Alaska to Anacortes, Washington.

Three Canadian naval destroyers which were exercising in the Strait of Juan de Fuca have been dispatched to the scene. The current draft prediction is that with the existing weather conditions the ship will drift only two nautical miles.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO TANKER SAFETY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. I think the Prime Minister is aware of the Valdez oil spill, and he is aware of the oil that washed up on the West Coast of Vancouver Island. He is also aware of the two leaks from the Stuyvesant. I hope he is now aware of the Exxon Philadelphia floating 10 miles off Vancouver Island.

Will the Prime Minister show the initiative to have a public inquiry into tanker safety on the coasts of Canada?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we know about the concern in British Columbia and throughout Canada over the dangers presented by maritime oil traffic. We share this concern. We are actively exploring the ways to have public input in the review presently under way.

Mr. Speaker: I want to return to the question put by the Hon. Member for Red Deer. I may have cut off the Minister. If the Minister wants to complete his answer, and do it very quickly, I will hear him.

INITIAL PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, this is an important question for many western farmers. In order to let Members of the House know, we are happy to announce that initial payments are out. They are $155 a tonne for hard Red Spring wheat, $150 a tonne for Durum wheat, $85 a tonne for barley, and $115 a tonne for malting barley.

People should know that grain prices are improving, and this is good news. These are the best initial payments that we have been able to announce for four years.

If Members on the other side are not interested, I am sure Members on this side are, as are the farmers who will be affected by those prices.

GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, and it does not concern shoes but intellectual honesty.

During the election campaign, the Prime Minister said there was no problem with the deficit, that everything was under control in Canada and that his Government was keeping it that way. Even the Minister of Finance failed to warn Canadians of the threat that now exists. The only person who had any intellectual integrity on the Conservative side was the Chairman of the Finance Committee, who said that the new tax proposed by the Minister of Finance would cost $10 billion.

My question to the Minister of Finance is this: Why didn't the Minister of Finance have the courage, why didn't he do the honourable thing and tell Canadians during the election that his Government would bring in a budget that would come down heavily on families with middle and low incomes, on the elderly and all consumers? Why did he hide the truth?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, these comments are utterly false, and the Hon Member knows it.

[English]

The Prime Minister, myself, and other Members on this side have stated warnings on many occasions, starting in 1984, of the dangers of the debt and the importance of reducing the deficit.

Members opposite have not done one thing to give us any support in getting the deficit down. Every time we have brought in a Budget, the Leader of the Opposition and all Members on the other side have done everything they could to stop us from bringing in these deficits and stating that the policies that we were bringing in were wrong.

Does the Hon. Member have anything that he wishes to say about the debt, or is he going to shove it under the carpet as the Leader of the Opposition has done for many years?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, this is the second time his Government deceived Canadians—it was primarily the Minister of Finance who deceived the elderly in his 1985 Budget—during an election campaign.

This is the second time Canadians are being deceived by the Minister, who represents Bay Street.

Mr. Speaker: Please put your question.

REQUEST AS TO WHY MORE INFORMATION WAS NOT GIVEN TO POPULATION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Why didn't the Minister of Finance tell Canadians during the election campaign that he would use his Budget to come down hard on all Canadians, in order to pay for the profligate spending by the Prime Minister and his Government?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is saying that we misled the House, that we misled the public.

Mr. Simmons: That is right.

Mr. Speaker: I have been listening very carefully. The allegation was not that the House was misled.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): During the election campaign, I was asked on many occasions about the deficit and the debt. Each time I said we are committed to continuing the work to get the deficit down because the debt is a problem.

I want to go back to something which the Leader of the Opposition said.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Members on the other side do not like me bringing these things forward.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra has said that we must keep the debt from growing. The Hon. Member knows that the only way to do that is to keep the annual deficit at zero. He has never said what he would do to keep the deficit at zero. What taxes would increase and what expenditures—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver): Mr. Speaker, I am in a bit of a dilemma here. I have a report to present, but I am under instructions from this all-party, non-partisan committee to do it with some pizzazz. Until such time as I can determine how to bring in a brass band with rockets, flares, dignity and decorum, I am not sure I can carry out the wishes of the committee.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cook: Therefore, sir, I have the honour to present the first report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges, Procedures and Private Member's Business. I will present it to the clerk with some flair.

PETITIONS

MORATORIUM ON HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present a petition on behalf of a number of British Columbians who point out the high unavoidable risks of a catastrophic oil spill associated with off-shore oil drilling. They indicate that the small oil spill washing up on the West Coast of Vancouver Island right now demonstrates just what a catastrophe a large oil spill would create if one occurred.

The petitioners are calling upon the Government of Canada to encourage that the current moratorium continue on all hydrocarbon exploration and development activities in the coastal waters of British Columbia.

I have a second petition from British Columbians. They point out that the South Moresby Park Agreement that was signed by the Government committed itself to spending $20 million or more to explore for minerals and hydrocarbons in the first national marine park. The petitioners believe that this is unacceptable. It would create a precedent that renders the whole concept of park creation meaningless.

The petitioners have asked the Government of Canada and Parliament that hydrocarbon exploration activities do not take place in British Columbia's coastal waters and they do not want the Government to be paying for such activities.

HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT—ALTERNATE USE OF FUNDS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the same Standing Order to present two petitions signed by persons in the Vancouver-Victoria area of British Columbia who are extremely concerned about the growing number of oil spills off the West Coast of Canada due to the tanker traffic.

They call on the Government to no longer continue to finance any kind of hydrocarbon exploration and associated activities in those coastal waters. The want the Governments of British Columbia and Canada to pursue alternate sources of energy. I have two petitions signed here under the Standing Order.

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, I have here certified petitions from British Columbia residents who are deeply concerned about recurring oil spills off the coast of the Province of British Columbia. In particular, they are concerned about the recent spill off the coast on the west side of Vancouver Island and the current problem off the coast of Vancouver Island today. These people are petitioning and beseeching this House to be concerned about the problem and to take some action on it. I hope that the words of Canadian citizens taken in this petition will fall on open ears of this Government and that it will proceed to take some action to ensure the safety of those pristine coastlines in the Province of British Columbia.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition signed by British Columbians. The petitioners point out the dangers of oil exploration and the shipment of oil off the West Coast. They also point out that the continuing consumption of fossil fuels is having a global warming effect. They suggest that moneys instead be spent on alternate energies.

It is with great pleasure I introduce these petitions.

MORATORIUM ON HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to table today, pursuant to Standing Order 103, petitions which have been certified correct for tabling in the House. These petitions are from a large number of British Columbians who are concerned about the catastrophic oil spill that we had recently in British Columbia, in particular the oil spill that is still washing up on the west coast of Vancouver Island, and as we have learned today of the Exxon Philadelphia floating without power off the coast of Vancouver Island.

The petitioners are concerned the risks out-weigh the benefits and that the current moratorium on all hydrocarbon exploration and development activities in the coastal waters of British Columbia never occur and the present moratorium be made a permanent one.

Mr. Speaker, I have several thousand petitions that have been provided to me from residents all over British Columbia asking the federal Government to continue in perpetuity the moratorium on off-shore oil exploration and development in the Canadian Pacific. The reasons being that it would be unavoidable are that there would be a catastrophic oil spill associated with off-shore drilling and extractions on the seismicly active, storm-swept high energy coast off Vancouver Island and the Queen Charlotte Sound. They also point out that even the small oil spill that has hit and is continuing to hit the West Coast of Vancouver Island vividly demonstrates what a large oil spill would do to the sea life there.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want in any way to restrict Members from presenting petitions, but Hon. Members will be reminded that a short statement describing the petitions is sufficient. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I also have petitions with over 1,000 names on them from Vancouver, Vernon, Port Coquitlam, Burnaby and North Vancouver, British Columbia.

• (1510)

They are also extremely concerned about the recent oil spills off the West Coast of Vancouver Island in January, and the devastating consequence that oil spills have for seabirds and sea life, not to mention the lives of thousands of natives and non-native residents living along that coast. They ask that since the risks outweigh the benefits that there be a moratorium on exploration and development activities in the coastal waters off B.C., that the money instead go toward promotion of energy conservation and ultimate energy.

REGULATORY CONTROLS FOR OIL TANKERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of residents in my riding from Port Moody, British Columbia, including the mayor and alderman. The petition notes the recent oil spilled in the ocean off Washington coast and the fact that the British Columbia coastline has been despoiled from Sooke to Cape Scott as a result of this oil spill.

The petitioners pray and call upon Parliament to formulate plans and responsibilities for clean-up of all types of oil spills on open waters, including negotiating with the United States of America for a bilateral agreement, and that the date of July 1, Canada Day, be given for completion of that agreement. Further, that regulatory controls be developed for oil tankers and oil rigs which would serve to prevent such spills from re-occurring.

I agree with the petitioners and I would like to present it.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is very conscious that on this important matter there are a number of petitions being presented today, and there may well be more. I draw Members' attention to the rules which bind us all. I am reading from the annotated Standing Rules.

> When presenting a petition during Routine Proceedings, the Member may make a brief summary of the Prayer of the petition, state the parties from whom it comes and the number of signatures it contains, but may not make a speech or enter into debate on or in relation to the petition. The Member should also indicate that the petition has been certified in order, pursuant to the Standing Orders.

I would ask Hon. Members to co-operate with the Chair in this regard.

NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—ALTERNATE USE OF FUNDS

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 to table two petitions that ask the Government of Canada to give priority to the health of all Canadians by asking the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to cancel the construction of two nuclear submarines and instead to invest the money in research to cure diseases.

Two petitions come from the Haitian Association, Salvadorans, Chilians and the local community service centre and another petition is from a women's group in my riding of Saint-Laurent.

OPPOSITION TO TAXATION OF MUSIC LESSONS

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have a petition from 59 petitioners with regard to the proposed sales tax on music lessons. They have asked that the Parliament of Canada not consider music studies for addition to the sales tax because they consider them as an educational process and therefore music education should be exempt from the proposed sales tax.

MORATORIUM ON HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 36 to present a petition signed by several hundred members of the Province of British Columbia in which they express their concerns about the risk of catastrophic oil spills on the West Coast, and in particular, the spill that took place and affected my riding in January of 1989. They call on the Government of Canada and British Columbia to extend the moratorium on oil drilling off the West Coast indefinitely in order to avoid further damage to the coast.

DISCRIMINATION BASED ON SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from some of the residents of Kingston and the Islands, wherein they recite the fact that in 1986 the Government accepted a report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of this House, recommending that an amendment be made to the Canadian Human Rights Act, prohibiting discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation in all areas of the federal jurisdiction, and requesting the Government and this House to proceed with amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act in accordance with the report of the committee.

MORATORIUM ON HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 36 to present a petition to this House from residents of British Columbia who are concerned over this Government's approach and attitude toward future hydrocarbon exploration off the coast of British Columbia.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and the honour to present petitions pursuant to Standing Order 36 that have been duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions. The petitioners, all who are residents of British Columbia, raise concerns about large scale oil pollution on the West Coast, having experienced, unfortunately, a number of incidents over the last little while, and call for very specific action by this Parliament and by the Government of Canada to protect them.

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 36 to place before you a petition from people who live in British Columbia who have expressed concern about the oil spills off our beautiful coastline, and who have also expressed concerns about the impact on the livelihood of not only the people who work in British Columbia and on those coastlines but in fact the wildlife and marine life on those coastlines.

The petition calls for a moratorium on the hydrocarbon exploration. It has been certified by the Clerk.

HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT—ALTERNATE USE OF ENERGY

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 36 to present a petition from British Columbia residents of the lower mainland who share the concern of my constituents regarding the so-called small oil spill that washed up on the British Columbia coast in January. The events of today once again demonstrate the reason for the concerns of these people. I ask the Government to please use any funds that are going to be used for development for alternative and sustainable and environmentally benign sources of energy.

MORATORIUM ON HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a privilege for me to present these petitions under Standing Order 36. The petitions have been certified and the people who have signed this petition come from British Columbia, from Vancouver, New Westminster, Burnaby and Coquitlam. They are asking that the federal Government continue in perpetuity the moratorium on offshore oil exploration and development in the Canadian Pacific off B.C. They are very concerned about the effects of the devastating oil spill, what has happened to the coastline in B.C., and they are taking their right in bringing these petitions to Parliament.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, as a Party person who grew up in British Columbia, the north part of the Saanich Peninsula, it is a particular pleasure for me to stand in the House today and present this petition on behalf of the people of British Columbia who are well aware of the damage which the oil spills have caused, and are asking that there be a moratorium placed on the offshore exploration of hydrocarbons in perpetuity and that the federal Government give a promise to the people of British Columbia that that will be the case.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour and privilege to present a petition signed by several hundred residents of Vancouver Island. By the way, Mr. Speaker, I have a sister and brother-in-law who live on that island. The petitioners wish to remind Members of the House of the dangers of oil spills on the West Coast and particularly around Vancouver Island. The petitioners ask that the money currently being spent by the federal Government to subsidize offshore oil drilling on the Pacific coast be used instead to promote energy conservation and the development and use of alternate sustainable and environmentally benign sources of energy.

• (1520)

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty under Standing Order 36 to present a petition from 75 people, a petition which has been duly certified by the Clerk. They are people from parts of British Columbia and Ontario who point to the great risks of oil exploration and development on the West Coast, and the underlining of that by the oil spill washing up still on Vancouver Island. They also point to the need to reduce the use of fossil fuels to protect the atmosphere.

They petition that the Government promise to discontinue all subsidy to oil exploration and development on the West Coast and to use the money instead for the development of renewable energy sources.

MORATORIUM ON HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am proud to present under the provisions of Standing Order 36 a petition from numerous residents of the Province of British Columbia. The petition has been certified to be in order by the Clerk of Petitions.

It is a petition asking the federal Government to continue in perpetuity a moratorium on offshore oil exploration and development in the Canadian Pacific.

I would just say briefly that it is a shame that the Governments of the day did not listen to the then Government of the Province of British Columbia. If they had they would not have this kind of mess to put up with at this time.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—JURISDICTION RESPECTING OATS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition sent to me from farmers in west central Saskatchewan which has been duly certified.

They are critical of the Government's decision to remove oats from the marketing jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, something which they say will severely reduce their income. They petition Parliament not only to reject the Government's decision to leave oats under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board but to place the marketing of canola under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board as well.

HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT—ALTERNATE USE OF FUNDS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition to present pursuant to Standing Order 36. It has been confirmed to be in order.

It is from residents of Vancouver with regard to oil spills off the West Coast. The petitioners believe that the risks outweigh the benefits. They ask that the current moratorium continue on hydrocarbon exploration and development activities in the coastal waters of British Columbia. They ask that the Canadian Government indicate to industry that this moratorium will not be lifted in the future.

They further ask that the money currently being spent by the federal Government to subsidize offshore oil drilling on the Pacific coast be used instead for the promotion of energy conservation and the development and use of alternate sustainable environmentally benign sources of energy.

MORATORIUM ON HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I too rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 to join with my colleagues in presenting a petition on the subject of a moratorium on offshore oil exploration and development.

The petition is signed by a number of residents from British Columbia. It has been duly certified by the Clerk.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, thank you. Perhaps I would have been recognized earlier had I confessed to being a relative of one having lived in British Columbia.

I have a petition here that is duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions as is appropriate in the circumstances. The petition comes from about 200 citizens of British Columbia. They do not speak just for British Columbia. British Columbians often foretell the concern of Canadians all across the land on environmental questions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: This petition asks that there be a moratorium on all hydrocarbon exploration and development activities in the coastal waters off British Columbia and that the Canadian Government indicate to industry that this moratorium will not be lifted in the future. Further, they ask that the money currently being spent by the federal Government to subsidize offshore oil drilling off the Pacific coast be used instead to promote energy conservation and the development and use of alternate sustainable and environmentally benign sources of energy.

That is a point of view to which all Canadians could agree.

Mr. Cid Samson (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, although I must admit that I have only been to Vancouver once and that I never really had the opportunity to see the beautiful shoreline, I would like to have that opportunity some day.

I too rise with honour as is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 36. I would like to submit to the House a petition duly certified and signed by a number of residents of British Columbia.

They ask that the current moratorium continue on all hydrocarbon exploration and development activities in the coastal waters of British Columbia and that the Canadian Government indicate to industry that this moratorium will not be lifted in the future.

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I too have the pleasure of rising to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36. It has been duly certified.

This is a petition signed by a large number of British Columbia residents, several hundred of them. Many of them are from my riding of Surrey North. They express their concern about the continued problems of oil pollution on our West Coast,the threat that that has to our marine life, to tourism, and to the jobs and livelihood of a large number of British Columbians. They request that the federal Government and the other Governments continue the moratorium on hydrocarbon exploration and development. I concur with their request.

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, I also rise under Standing Order 36 with a petition which is my honour and pleasure to present.

The petition points out that there are high unavoidable risks of a catastrophic oil spill associated with offshore oil drilling and extraction on the seismically active storm swept high energy coast off Vancouver Island in the Hecate Strait in the Queen Charlotte Sound. They ask that the current moratorium continue on all hydrocarbon exploration and development. They state that the risks far outweigh the benefits. I concur in that and am pleased to present this petition.

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present a petition on behalf of residents of western Canada, particularly residents of the West Coast.

They point out the high unavoidable risks of a catastrophic oil spill associated with offshore oil drilling. They call upon the Government to extend the current moratorium on all hydrocarbon exploration and development activities in the coastal waters of British Columbia. Further, they ask that the money currently being spent by the federal Government subsidizing offshore oil drilling on the Pacific coast be used instead to promote energy conservation and the development of alternate sustainable and environmentally benign sources of energy.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present a petition on behalf of residents of the Vancouver area who also have a concern with respect to oil spills on the West Coast of British Columbia. They request a moratorium on all future drilling and hydrocarbon exploration in favour of more economically and environmentally sound measures.

POINT OF ORDER

CORRECTION TO HANSARD—INCORRECT IDENTIFICATION OF MEMBER

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a correction to Hansard.

On Friday, April 14, 1989, as reported at page 520 of Hansard it is indicated that I put a question to the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey) with respect to capital punishment. It is a question which purports to favour capital punishment.

It was not me who asked the question but another Hon. Member. I believe it was the Hon. Member from Lethbridge. I would ask that this be corrected on the record.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

STATEMENTS BY MINISTERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order since the Government House Leader is in his place.

During Question Period we all appreciated hearing statements by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) and the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer). However, I would suggest that since under Routine Proceedings there is an opportunity for Ministers to make statements, it would be a good idea for Ministers to make a statement during that time rather than using Question Period. Obviously, these were not legitimate questions.

However, as I say, we did appreciate the fact that the Ministers took the time to make a statement in the House. I am suggesting that next time perhaps this should be done under Routine Proceedings where it would be more appropriately received.

• (1530)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my hon. friend's comments. There were two questions asked. We only get two on this side, and sometimes not that many. They were considered to be of sufficient importance, just as my hon. friend considers the topic of their question to be of considerable importance, that they should have been asked during Question Period. In fact, we on our side were quite shocked that the Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) did not see fit to rise and ask a question about that very serious matter occurring down on the Strait of Juan de Fuca. We wanted to get it out to reassure the people of British Columbia that we were taking care of the matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) on the same point of order.

Mr. Riis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order. I appreciate my hon. friend's comments. I do want to point out that the Member from Skeena (Mr. Fulton), the environmental spokesperson for the Party, actually did raise that question. The Government was complaining that they had two questioners during Question Period. We also had two questioners during Question Period. We are an opposition Party, and Question Period is, if you like, set aside for opposition Members to ask questions. If he is complaining that he only had two of his Members, who actually probably should not be asking questions, I am saying that the reason we are concerned is that we want the Ministers to be making statements, but making them at the appropriate time.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to suggest very courteously that one of the ways of correcting that is to shut down the amount of time a question takes; then you get more questions.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BANK ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C–9, an Act to amend the Bank Act, be read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on April 13 last I had the honour of tabling the Government's Bill to enhance the service charge disclosure provisions of the Bank Act. Unlike the predecessor Bill, which applied only to personal accounts, Bill C–9 applies to both business and personal accounts on deposit at chartered banks. This policy was developed in co–operation with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Valcourt) and incorporates measures proposed in consultation with small business and bank representatives. It also responds to many of the recommendations put forth by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. The committee helped focus attention on changes in the banking industry that left many Canadians surprised by unexpected service charges.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the changes provided in Bill C–9 are based on four premises: first, individuals and companies must be able to make enlightened decisions and compare prices to choose the accounts and institutions that best meet their needs; second, Canadians are entitled to receive reasonable advance notice before new or additional charges are imposed on their deposit accounts; third, customers wishing to complain about service charges must know that a mechanism for this exists both within the bank and with the Government and that they can have access to it.

Competition, not regulation is the best way to guarantee a fair and reasonable approach to establishing prices.

By applying these principles to the Bill, we have made substantial progress towards increasing consumer protection. The provisions of Bill C–9 represent a considerable improvement in the standards to be observed by banks with respect to notice and disclosure of charges to their customers in Canada.

[English]

First, in deciding where to do their banking, consumers will be in the best position ever to shop around. Each bank will be required to make available brochures of service charges for their various accounts. A brochure will be available for personal accounts and for business accounts. With such information readily available, consumers will be in a position to choose accounts and institutions that best meet their needs. In addition, for all other kinds of charges, where standard ones exist, the public will have access to a list of all such charges. This requirement, which was one of the major objectives of small business groups, represents a substantial improvement over the previous Bill.

A second major area of enhanced disclosure takes place when a customer chooses his or her accounts.

New customers will first receive a copy of the agreement they have signed, a list of all service charges applicable to their type of account, information respecting the bank's procedures for notifying them of any increase in charges, and information on the bank's procedures relating to complaints.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the situation with respect to changes in related charges has also improved. The bank may not introduce any changes in the charges it applies to a customer's account without giving the customer 30 day's notice. Customers who have accounts with passbooks and, as a result, do not receive monthly statements in the mail, will be advised at least 60 days in advance of any changes in charges by means of signs posted in full view at their branches.

The provisions of this Bill also allow for the fact that in recent years, there has been a increasing tendency among Canadians to use automatic tellers. As a result, banks will have to notify their customers at these outlets of any changes in the charges applied to their accounts.

I would now like to discuss the second major objective of this Bill, which is to provide for complaint mechanisms.

For the first time, banks are obliged to establish a procedure for dealing with customer complaints and to have such procedures approved by the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions.

The banks will also have to designate an administrator or employee who will be responsible for implementing the general complaints procedure and to appoint at least one employee who will receive complaints from the public. Finally, banks will also have to post a notice to inform customers of their right to file complaints with the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, if the banks are unable to deal with the problem themselves. The name, address and telephone number of the resource person at the Office will also be posted.

[English]

This Government continues to monitor service charge practices and is ensuring that Canadians are able to resolve their account-related problems. As part of that process and to ensure that Parliament has the opportunity to assess on an ongoing basis the success of our efforts, the Superintendent will be preparing annual reports on complaints and a report which will be tabled in Parliament. Penalties for non-compliance have also been increased. At present, penalties for breach of the disclosure provisions are to a maximum of $1,000. This new legislation provides for a maximum penalty of $500,000 for a breach of any of the provisions without reasonable cause. There may be some who say we should have gone further in regulating charges. To this I respond first, that as a matter of principle this Government is not in favour of price regulation, particularly in markets where there is competition.

• (1540)

This Bill represents a reasonable and responsible approach to the major issues. Through this Bill, consumers and business will have assurances about the treatment they will receive from banks. Banks, too, will understand their role and responsibility in serving their customers.

Moreover, the Government will shortly be bringing forth its legislation on financial institutions reform which, by breaking down barriers, will foster an even more competitive environment.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to add the following clarification. Once implemented, the Bill and the measures taken last year by the banks with respect to basic charges and accounts will make it possible to deal with concerns expressed by many Canadians before the Finance Committee of the House of Commons.

From now on, as soon as they open an account, Canadians will be informed of the charges involved and of their rights. They will be advised of any changes in the charge schedule, in a manner that is far more acceptable than was the case before.

They will also have direct access to a complaint settlement mechanism, first at their bank, and if they do not obtain satisfaction, at the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions which will act as a mediator.

Mr. Speaker, we are convinced that these measures will help consumers and companies to get the most out of their financial institutions and that the industry will become more competitive.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Young), Mr. Speaker would like to take the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise Hon. Members that it is not the custom of the Speaker to interrupt debate to hear an application, but I have an application for a motion to adjourn for an emergency debate.

The Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett), very kindly agreed to postpone rising because the Speaker, for a few minutes, had to receive the Prime Minister of New Zealand. I hope Hon. Members will understand. I will hear the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

WEST COAST FISHERIES—PUBLIC RELEASE OF REGULATIONS

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 52. This morning there was a Government promulgation of release of regulations relative to West Coast fisheries.

The emergency forthcoming because of the promulgation of those regulations today make it imperative for me to stand up and ask for this debate. Without the debate, decisions will be made in the Province of British Columbia that affect not only investments both private and public, but the lives of thousands of British Columbians, their families and coastal communities.

It is with regret that I have been forced to quote the Secretary of State for External Affairs ((Mr. Clark) earlier today to show that this matter was an issue that was negotiated away under the Free Trade Agreement. We were not able to determine the impact until these regulations. Once we saw these regulations, we then knew the necessity of an emergency debate.

Mr. Speaker: I have had the advantage of not only reading the notice for an application for an emergency debate, which was very succinct, I have heard the Hon. Member and I have also had the advantage of having heard extensive comment on the matter in the House today.

I am sure there will be opportunity to comment on the matter further. It is a serious matter, of course, as all Hon. Members on both sides of the House are concerned about the West Coast fishery, but despite its seriousness and its importance, I do not feel it is appropriate to proceed to an emergency debate.

BANK ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Loiselle that Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Bank Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I would of course like to take this opportunity to speak to the Bill tabled by the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Loiselle) concerning bank service charges. Many Canadians, including our financial institutions, have been waiting to find out exactly what the Government's position would be on this matter which was examined last year by the committee responsible for considering financial and economic matters here in the House.

Mr. Speaker, there was something that struck me in the Minister's remarks here today, and it was the fact that, and I quote: "There had been exhaustive consultations with groups representing industry and small business".

When the Minister of State (Finance) tabled the Bill in the House on April 13, I believe, there was of course a reaction from the parties concerned, and I must admit that from the outset there was a positive reaction, because the Bill reflected a problem that had been brought to the attention of Canadians by many Members of this House during the past two years.

However, I think it is only fair to say there are still some questions about the proposed legislation, especially on disclosure, and I am thinking of consumers who may have very small accounts and for whom the bank is too big for them to be able to discuss any concerns they might have about service charges. Does the system established under the regulations that accompany the Bill truly respond to the need for disclosure of all the possibilities opened to consumers?

[English]

This legislation is a very limited approach to the extensive work done by the Standing Committee on Finance. The major question which must be addressed with respect to this legislation is based on the area of transparency of information made available to consumers.

Corporations are now brought under the legislation. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business has been a very vocal supporter of the Government on a number of issues in the recent past. It has made it clear that it believes there is a serious flaw in the proposal. I believe that was reflected in the testimony that was heard and in the recommendations that were made by the Finance Committee. It concerns the double charging on NSF cheques. We recognize that there has been an attempt to bring in regulations to deal with as many situations as possible. It seems to me and certainly to many small businesses in this country that requiring the issuer of an NSF cheque to pay a fee upon that cheque being returned is a totally legitimate and appropriate charge for the banks to make.

However, while I do not want to be difficult, there are great differences between rural and urban situations. For example, it is difficult for an urban dweller to cash a cheque in a bank branch where he or she is not known. It is not a simple task to go in off the street and attempt to cash a cheque, whether it is in a bank or in a retail store.

That is not always true in smaller communities and rural areas where the cashing of a cheque is seen very much as a reflection of trust between two parties, between people who are expected to be good for whatever they do, be it the issuing of a cheque or anything else. I wonder if it is not an unfair practice to have both the issuer of the cheque charged a fee when it is returned NSF as well as the party taking the cheque.

I know the argument is made that the receiver of the cheque should be more stringent, should ask more questions and should be sure that the issuer of the cheque has sufficient funds to cover it. However, that is not an easy thing to do. I hope that the position put forward by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and many others will be taken into consideration.

I wish to apologize, because at the outset of my remarks I should have thanked the Minister of State and his staff for the co-operation they have shown on this matter. As a new Member of Parliament, I do want to point out that it was very generous of the Minister's staff to provide us with information and keep us up to date on the process. I would like to recognize the Minister's co-operation on that basis. My remarks are not of a confrontational nature.

Although my friends to the left had reservations about the report made last year by the Finance Committee with respect to an ombudsman type of activity, generally speaking members of the Finance Committee realized that there had to be some improvements made and this Bill reflects some of those. However, I wish to underline my belief that the charging of the so-called innocent party in a transaction involving an NSF cheque is not a practice that should take place. There should be a way to avoid that practice.

From the bank's point of view, the point is made that it is easier to recover from the person who has taken the cheque. Usually that person has a business establishment and an account at the bank. There is no doubt that recovery is made much simpler because the party is at hand, while the party who has issued the cheque may be long gone. Oftentimes, that party has no intention of covering the cheque. If it were simply a mistake on the part of the issuer, undoubtedly he would return to the retailer and cover his charges as well. In most instances, the issuer of the cheque is no longer to be found or is insolvent, and it is a very difficult process to try to recover any loss to the bank.

In the meantime, I point out that the person, company or small business that takes an NSF cheque finds itself in an even more awkward position. Not only is it hit with a fee, but what can it do about the cheque? Again, it seems to me that this adversely affects the small business person who may not have a sophisticated method of verification of cheques. Cheques are taken on evenings and weekends. Sometimes people think they know other people well enough to be able to trust them, but for whatever reason, they come a cropper. I hope the Government will take a look at that situation.

I also suggest, and perhaps the Minister could enlighten us about this matter today, that the Bill go to the Finance Committee rather than to a legislative committee. I think that has been the practice and certainly the members of the Finance Committee will have a very specific interest in this Bill.

My next point deals with transparency of disclosure. We will have to look at the implications of this. We will want to hear from the banks, trust companies, and depositories. It is one thing to inform consumers but it is another thing to confuse them. I am wondering from a very practical point of view what we intend to propose for the disclosure of information.

Some have suggested that we will end up with financial institutions with nothing but posters and pamphlets everywhere. Ordinary consumers will be faced with a very complex decision when trying to determine what they want to do with their money, what type of account they want, how much it will cost them, how many cheques they can issue and how much they will have to pay to get their cheques back. I hope an attempt will be made to simplify that situation.

I recognize that the Minister believes that the marketplace will have a great role to play in making sure that there is competition and that the fees are maintained at reasonable levels. I think as well, though, that there has been a move on the part of financial institutions to become very complex. There are interest-bearing savings accounts, balance amounts, different types of accounts and different charges for cheques depending on how many cheques are written a month and the like.

The information we have received, and I am sure the Chairman of the Finance Committee has heard this as well in the last couple of years, is that most people are looking forward to a system that is simple. They want to know what banking will cost them but both individuals and small businesses want a system that is simple, a system they can understand, cope with and respond to with some flexibility. They want to see something that is not as complex as the plans, programs and approaches that have been put forward by some financial institutions in the past few years.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Minister of State's comments on the whole matter of decompartmentalizing financial institutions—the rules of the game—and again, I cannot let the opportunity go by without indicating to the Minister the importance of what is happening in the financial sector, be it stock-broking, insurance companies, trust companies or banks. Mr. Speaker, for all sorts of reasons, I believe it is true to say that the federal Government is lagging behind on this issue. We can start to make up for lost ground, but we must still consider what has happened, especially in Québec, which I am sure the Minister is well aware of, and what is beginning to happen in Ontario. But it is because of what is happening in the other provinces, which traditionally have followed what has happened, mainly in Ontario, that we now see how fast events are moving in Québec and we have not acted.

So I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister responsible will soon be able to advise us when we can expect a bill on what connections are permitted between financial institutions and what connections are not.

[English]

The uncertainty that exists with respect to financial institutions must be addressed. I recognize very well that we are dealing with a very limited Bill, but I do think it is imperative at the very outset of this Parliament that the Government and the House of Commons deal with the reality with which we are faced on a daily basis, with what will happen with commercial links, who will be able to do what with insurance or stock transactions, what role trust companies will play, how much commingling of services will be made possible. For example, within a very short time there will be the arrival of the American Express Bank. All the furore that surrounded that announcement has caused a degree of uncertainty.

In the last few days the Finance Committee has been able to speak with and listen to the Governor of the Bank of Canada. One point Mr. Crow kept going back to was the integrity and credibility of the monetary system. I believe it is equally imperative that Canadians feel confident about financial institutions. With the Minister of State having to take over a financial operation just recently, through the office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, and with the experience we have seen in Ontario and the West over the last couple of years, it seems to me that it is incumbent on all of us to show very quickly the direction in which the Government intends to move.

We have dealt with the proposals of the Minister's predecessor, and obviously many of those are still around and probably will be forthcoming. I do not think it is appropriate that the Government continue to follow the crowd as opposed to being equal partners in the development of the new reality that most people perceive to be coming into place with respect to how financial institutions function.

There are a number of problems that have to be addressed with respect to the report prepared by the Finance Committee. I do not believe that in his remarks the Minister intended in any way whatsoever to indicate that the Bill we are dealing with today reflects in totality the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Finance. There are still a number of issues raised in that document that need to be dealt with. Although we will be dealing with it in more dimensions this afternoon in the House, it is important that the Bill be referred to the Finance Committee where we can sit down and have discussions with people from industry, people representing consumers, as well as knowledgeable Members of the House who have a particular interest in matters of finance and economics.

In closing, I want to say to the Minister that we understand the effort that has been made to address some of the elements involved in the recommendations of the committee. We do believe there are some elements that need to be addressed, some of which I have outlined and others that I am sure will be brought to our attention while the Bill is considered by committee.

The position of our Party is that we believe it is absolutely essential that we move very rapidly to put before the House and the people of Canada the direction the Government intends to take with respect to the reform of our financial institutions.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying on September 29, 1988, before I called it one o'clock, I want to deal with the Bill. The Bill was first introduced in the House by the former Minister of State for Finance, "Baker" Tom Hockin. Before we started the debate on the Bill the Minister said to me in conversation that he knew the Bill was not exactly the type of Bill you wanted out of the Finance Committee. However, he said that half a loaf is better than no loaf at all. So I said to "Baker" Hockin, "There is no way we will accept this half-loaf", and the Bill died.

The Bill has now been resurrected under the name of Bill C-9 with boulangerie Loiselle in charge. He is now in charge of the bake shop, but it is the same stale half-loaf. It has not changed. This Party is not prepared to eat or break that stale half-loaf.

They are not minor concerns that the NDP Caucus has about the Bill. In his comments the Liberal critic has stated that perhaps we have concerns. We do not have "some" concerns. We have total concern with the Bill. This Bill breaks faith with the Canadian people.

One only needs to recall the episodes that led to the Finance Committee looking into bank service charges. In the words of the Chairman of the Finance Committee people were being "dinged and donged" on service charges. We are not talking about small money here. In 1987 the five major banks collected $1 billion in service charges from ordinary Canadians. We are not talking about penny-ante stuff. Lo and behold, the Standing Committee on Finance examined the whole issue of bank service charges. It made some tough recommendations.

Why do we oppose the Bill? First, the Bill has VC.

An Hon. Member: What is VC?

Mr. Rodriguez: VC is voluntary compliance. What we are saying in the Bill is "Trust the banks. Don't worry, be happy". The whole concept of actually walking into this marble-towered financial institution and expecting the widow to trust it when all she wanted was to change a $10 bill into quarters, she trusted them and the bank hit her with a $2 charge. We are being asked to trust the banks.

What do the banks have to say for themselves? The following is a speech made by Mr. Ritchie, the chief honcho of the Scotiabank. Regarding service charges, he stated: "One of the most significant trends in banking worldwide is the increasing relative importance of income other than interest.

For example, fee income is now almost one-quarter of our total revenue, up from a little over 18 per cent just three years ago." This is not small stuff, Mr. Speaker. It is 25 per cent of a bank's income and it is increasing. In three years it has gone from 18 per cent to 25 per cent. As time goes on, the service charges applied to customers of the bank will be an increasingly important source of the bank's revenue. This Minister and the Tory Government says, "Trust the banks. They will look after you. They have voluntarily complied". The Scotiabank is the same bank that charged Mrs. de Gruchy $2 to change a $10 bill into quarters to do her laundry.

To believe that the banks will look out for our interests is like asking Evil Knievel, Jr., to go park your car. The imagery is the same. Someone suggested that it was like asking the Ayatollah Khomeini to be the literary critic for the New York Book Review. One of the first criticisms that we have about the Bill is the fact that it contains voluntary compliance, which is something we cannot accept.

The second objection is what I call the "Snow White" clause in relation to monitoring. Not only does the Government accept voluntary compliance in the Bill, but it also accepts what I call this "Snow White" syndrome. In other words, as they go through this process of voluntary compliance the banks are going to look into the mirror and say: "Mirror, mirror on the wall, who's the fairest bank of all?" Of course, we know what the answer will be. We are asking them to police themselves.

The Government totally rejected the whole concept of an independent ombudsperson. We are asking the banks to police themselves and I am sure they are going to say that that service charge was bad. You bad boy! I am sure they are going to do that. Absolutely. Rather, I would suspect that it would be the same as what Snow White's stepmother got when she looked into the mirror and posed the question. This Government has accepted that especially since, as I pointed out earlier, service charges collected on customers' accounts account for 25 per cent of the bank's income, an amount that is rising.

What does the Bill do? Does it outlaw certain service charges, Mr. Speaker? No. I have the Bill here and I will tell you what it does. It is all just an inundation of paperwork. Actually, it is notification. You write the customer and you tell him that the service charge for an NSF charge-back is now $15 and not $10. But the notification has to be in writing "in the prescribed manner", information in writing "in the prescribed manner".

Every single clause and subclause of the Bill makes sure that the banks give notice in writing "in the prescribed manner" with appropriate copies in the appropriate colours. If this Bill is ever approved, God help the forests of this country because they will be gone. Isn't that great, Mr. Speaker? This Government gives the banks the keys to everybody's account. All the bank has to do to is inform customers. There is no process of disputing the charge. The Government will say to me, as the banks have said, "If you don't like the service at this branch, go to another bank". They have cut you off at the pass because to transfer your account from one bank to another you are now charged. As a matter of fact, I went out the other day and got the latest lists. Lo and behold, to transfer an account from CIBC to another bank costs $10. Is that fair?

All the bank has to do is send you the notice in writing "in the prescribed manner". That is what the banks have to do. This Minister says this Bill is different from the last one in that this Bill includes small business. Does it? It includes small business but only for core services. It does not include some of the more outrageous charges which the Finance Committee found the banks were imposing on small business and individuals. This Bill does not prevent banks from increasing charges for deposits or withdrawals. It does not specifically outlaw the NSF charge-back. It does not outlaw transferring from one bank to another if you are not satisfied. It does not outlaw that.

With regard to the NSF charge-back, and I want to pin this Minister down and wrestle him to the ground, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: —the banks have said "We have voluntarily complied". On September 29, 1988, the then Minister of State for Finance said "As a result of their consultations with the banks, six service charges which most Canadians found to be objectionable have been removed by various federal financial institutions. Specifically, recipients of NSF cheques are not charged for depositing such cheques in their personal accounts". The Minister said that. All of the banks have complied except for the Toronto-Dominion Bank. Toronto-Dominion is not part of the voluntary compliance, the VC. I went to the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce and found a list of over 100 services. I understand there are about 178 different service charges.

I picked up the one for the CIBC. It says for a charge-back on an NSF cheque the cost is $4. Is this a bank complying, Mr. Speaker? The NSF charge-back is there at $4. Where is the voluntary compliance on the part of one of the banks that said "We will comply"? This bank has not complied because these service charges are providing a handy opportunity to increase income. I know there are some of us in this House, and maybe out in the country, who will be so cynical and cruel as to suggest that what the Canadian banks were doing were covering their losses for what at that time were considered to be reputable borrowers, Venezuela, Argentina and Brazil. Now they are taking losses and the taxpayers of Canada are having to pick them up. If there were such cynical persons around, the suggestion would be that when banks started to be hit with those losses was the time when they unbundled the charges.

The Toronto-Dominion Bank told the Government, as it tried to get this voluntary compliance, to go take a hike. One bank has decided to go on its own. It has no voluntary compliance. That in itself should have been enough for the Government to recognize that it had a responsibility to the consumers of Canada to ensure that certain basic services were provided to bank customers.

The Minister asks me why. I will tell the Minister why. We are talking about banks that are really operating in an oligopoly position in this economy. They are chartered. You and I, Mr. Speaker, cannot just go out in the street and open up a bank. Banks receive a charter from the Government of Canada, from the Parliament of Canada. They have certain monopolies, certain things they can do that others cannot do. Having given them that responsibility, the Government cannot withdraw from their responsibility to rein-in this outrageous behaviour of banks with respect to bank service charges.

I am surprised that the Minister who is responsible for this Bill asked me why. I find this amazing. But I should not find it amazing. After all, he is a Tory. He knows where his friends are.

An Hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Rodriguez: He knows they are all up there in the ivory towers of the banks, in the golden towers. I think the Royal Bank has a golden tower in Toronto. That is where they are. They have chosen the correct colour. So I am surprised that he asked me that question: "Why?"

Banks can still do all the things that the Standing Committee on Finance said were despicable. They can still make a charge on a minimum balance. If your balance falls below a certain minimum they can still charge you. Nothing in this Bill prevents that. Nothing. Can you believe this? We found out that if the bank makes a mistake on your statement or your account, do you know that they charge you for that?

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right. They charge you for that. It is true, brother, believe you me. We heard the evidence. They charge you on the number of deposits, imagine that! You put money in their bank, they charge you. Can you believe that?

Some Hon. Members: No. No.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right. Someone walked in the bank the other day, just walked in to get out of the cold, they charged him. Believe this or not, a lady walked past the bank, she got a charge.

An Hon. Member: I think I believe it.

Mr. Rodriguez: Inactive accounts. If you are the kind of person who puts your money in and then goes home and forgets it and puts it under the mattress, they call that an inactive account and they charge you. But if you get active in your account, they charge you for that. They have got you going and coming. These guys are just out of control. Out of control.

An Hon. Member: What is the country coming to?

Mr. Rodriguez: I remember the Chairman of the Finance Committee. A very affable guy. He was supposed to be a powerhouse in the committees. He went over after the standing committee had drafted its tough, tough report. He phoned up the banks. He said, "Can we come over for tea and crumpets? We have to talk about this." He went over to the big tower here on Sparks Street, met all the big honchos in the bank. I guess he drank the tea and ate the crumpets but the bank said "We are not interested. We are not interested in what your proposals are."

We even had a Conservative Member of that committee who entered a Private Members' Bill to include all the tough recommendations of the committee. Along comes "Baker" Hockin with his Bill last year and suddenly he withdrew his Bill. He said, "Oh, this Bill satisfies me." It takes very little, I know, to satisfy a Conservative. It takes very little, especially when his bosses from the banks are pulling the chain. It takes very little. But surely, Mr. Speaker, this is breaking faith with all the hundreds and hundreds of people who wrote to us on the committee about what was happening with bank service charges. Surely it was a break in faith.

Does it stop the banks from applying any of these service charges? No, it does not, because all the Bill does is to say "We accept the bank's word that they have voluntarily complied. Secondly, all you banks have to do is to send out the appropriate document informing customers of the new charge or of the increasing charge 'in the prescribed manner'." It is a roaring rabbit.

Now we get interesting. Say you get the notice in the prescribed manner, you get your yellow copy in the prescribed manner. The bank tells you what the charge is for deposit boxes, or whatever the service is what the charge will be. If you do not like that, what do you do? The first thing the Bill says you do is to go to the bank and you see the staff in the branch. You see the outline. The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce went and picked it up today. They said, "Four easy steps for resolving a complaint". Notice they are very positive, "for resolving a complaint". They are already anticipating a resolution. So if you do not like it, what does the Bill say you do? You go down to the bank and complain. You go to the staff and say, "I do not like this charge". What does the staff person do? He or she might take out the compact mirror and say, "Mirror, mirror in my hand, is this charge a fair charge?" Then I ask you, what is the mirror going to say?

An Hon. Member: The bank owns the mirror.

Mr. Rodriguez: The bank says, "You have a very fair charge. It is the fairest in the land". They give this message to the consumer. The consumer says, "I do not like this". The consumer says, "I do not like the answer". So what does the Canadian Imperial Bank say in those four steps? The same thing as the Bill says, you go to the manager of the branch. So now you have an appointment with the manager. What does he do? You don't like the charge, so he takes out his hand mirror and he says, "Mirror, mirror in my hand, is this a fair charge? What does the mirror say? It says, "It is the fairest charge in the land." Of course.

An Hon. Member: It is a fairy tale.

Mr. Rodriguez: Here is the next step. You do not like that, so what do you think the third step is? The third step says, you now go to the regional office of the bank. It says here. You go to the regional office. When it gets down there, the regional manager or regional honcho goes into his bathroom and he looks into the—

An Hon. Member: Mirror.

Mr. Rodriguez: —bathroom mirror. Of course. What does he say to the mirror? "Mirror, mirror on the wall, is this a fair charge?" What does the mirror say?

Some Hon. Members: "It is the fairest charge in the land."

Mr. Rodriguez: "It is the fairest charge in the land." My colleagues are right. "It is the fairest charge in the land." You got it. But you are not happy with this?

Some Hon. Members: No. No.

Mr. Rodriguez: "No, MP, are you kidding?" They know how useful those Tory MPs are. What does it say? You go to the president of the bank, Mr. Ritchie. You go to the president. First you have to pay a charge. You say to the president, "I do not like this charge". What does he do? He goes into his full size mirror, sees his whole person, and he says, "Mirror, mirror on the wall, is this a fair charge?" What does the mirror say?

Some Hon. Members: "It is the fairest charge in the land."

Mr. Rodriguez: Of course. "It is the fairest charge in the land."

By this point you are really cheesed off. You do not really like the answers you got. What do you do now? The bank points you to this notice on their wall. It says if you do not like what is called "Four steps for resolving a complaint", you now can go to the Superintendent of Financial Institutions. He is over here in the bank tower. He is up here in this tower just like an eagle. That is so he can see far. He is up there. You get up to him and you say, "Look, Mr. Mackenzie, I do not like this charge." He says to you: "Look, I would like to help you, you see, but I do not handle consumer complaints because I am only here. I am only in the business to make sure banks do not go broke. I am here to regulate banks to make sure that they stay in business. I have a conflict because if I have a lot of new complaints, and I agree with you, then that means the banks do not get as much money as they should get. So I think you have to go back to the bank and see the bank". Thus, there is the full circle.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is this the way to greet anybody? I have made fun of this but it is the only way I know how to put across a point. I think I have made that point. I ask my brother opposite if I have made the point. In fact, there is no independent, impartial individual who assesses, first, if a service charge is justified and, second, if it is justified, is it a reasonable one? There is no provision for that.

There are examples concerning industries in the country which are regulated by Government. I refer specifically to Bell Canada. That company has to apply for rate increases. Not so long ago it was forced to provide relief on a rate charge that was too excessive. There are no provisions in this Bill concerning banks. The Bill is faulty in that regard.

What have we New Democrats said? We agree with the rest of the members of the Finance Committee. We agree with Paul McCrossan's Bill. I tried everything possible to get Paul McCrossan to keep his Bill on the Order Paper. When he withdrew it, I entered a Bill which included all of those things that Paul McCrossan had in his Bill. Mine went beyond that and added two other things.

What do we want? We want a basic no-frills account. We believe that by law banks should provide that type of basic no-frills account where certain transactions are part of that basic no-frills account. That would allow poor people who have very few transactions, or very basic transactions to do with the bank, to be able to carry them out without being dinged and donged.

Banks that have assets of $140 billion have made those assets off the deposits of ordinary Canadians. Those same banks turn around and ding and dong them for every single charge which allows them to continue to increase their wealth. Last year the Royal Bank had net income of $700 million while the Scotiabank had net income of $506 million. The CIBC had net income of $591 million. Despite these spectacular earnings, the Royal Bank raised 15 of its service fees an average of 4 per cent to 6 per cent. The other banks have followed suit. Even when they are enjoying spectacular earnings they continue the ever onward and upward rise in bank service charges.

We propose an immediate one-year freeze on bank service charges. This differs from McCrossan's Bill. I did not pull that figure out of a hat. The Royal Bank did it, but only for six months. After that there were even more astronomical rises. Thus we are suggesting a one-year freeze.

It seems to me that over the past five years, bank service charges have increased at an average annual rate of 19 per cent. I have a strong feeling and suspicion, although I cannot put my finger on it, that they have been overcharging Canadian consumers.

We have seen this situation before. I recall the experience we had with credit card interest rates. I saw the Tories, in particular the former Member from Scarborough West and others who sat opposite, screaming because the interest rates on credit cards skyrocketed. What happened? The Finance Committee decided to investigate the matter. Suddenly, the banks all agreed they would move voluntarily and overnight the rates came down to about 15 per cent. What has been happening lately? The rates are back up and climbing. Retail credit cards at places such as Sears and Canadian Tire are up at around 30 per cent.

I heard John Crow and the other birds from the Bank of Canada say the other day that they are allowing interest rates to rise because they want to dampen demand. I suggest that for a number of Canadians who do their retail purchasing on credit they have already been dampened with interest rates of 20 per cent and 30 per cent on their credit cards.

Look at the spread, Mr. Speaker. The cost of money is around 12.3 per cent or 12.4 per cent and these retail outlets are charging 20 per cent and 30 per cent. We recognize the need for a freeze. We believe there should be prohibition against unfair charges. We specifically point out the unfair minimum balance charge. We believe that should be outlawed.

I see the Minister for Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) is leaving the Chamber. She is blowing me a kiss. I do not know why she is leaving during my very clear and precise expurgation of this Bill. She could learn something about UI since I will be getting to that in a minute.

There are certain charges that we believe should be outlawed. We have specifically named them in my Private Member's Bill which will be brought out shortly in the House. One is this minimum balance charge and the other is the NSF charge-back. The NSF charge-back is not in force for small businesses. It has to be applied to small businesses.

Another proposal we are making to the Minister which seeks to amend the Bill is to provide a financial services ombudsperson. This is not the smoke and mirrors imagery that I created a little while ago but in fact a person who is impartial and outside the banks. There are no mirrors here, no Snow White's stepmother. This is a financial service ombudsperson to whom consumers can go, with whom they can negotiate. The ombudsperson will be a referee and report to Parliament on a regular basis. That is the prince that will come. It is the only way to save Snow White. To surrender Snow White into the hands of these 167 dwarfs across the way is to say that the whole question of regulating bank service charges is hopeless. We do not believe that.

The Government can move in this direction to assure Canadians that in fact when they deal with financial institutions they are being dealt with fairly.

I talked about the privileged position which banks had in this society. I want to refer to Mr. Ritchie's closing comments in his speech because I think we have to be concerned. The Minister should be concerned. Here is what he said:

> The truly fundamental question raised by the service charge issue—and here I return to my theme—concerns the proper role of government in regulating behaviour in the market-place. Provided there is adequate disclosure of service charges, there is more than sufficient competition in the financial industry to ensure that the consumer's interest is protected.

Can you believe that? Can you believe that in fact what this bank president is saying is that Governments should stay out of regulating the behaviour of banks. Governments regulate the behaviour of citizens every single day of the year. I cannot do certain things in this House. I cannot take it all off on the street. You cannot drive your car beyond certain speeds in certain areas.

Mr. MacKay: Oh, yes, you can.

Mr. Rodriguez: You cannot drive your car beyond certain speeds in certain areas. You can, but society regulates that. If you are caught you are charged.

In this particular instance he is saying that banks which hold this privileged position of oligopoly should be allowed to do whatever it is they want to do. Their behaviour should not be circumscribed by the same body that gave them their charter in the first place, that gave them this privileged position. That is what he is saying, and that is something that we cannot accept. To establish certain basic ground rules does not prevent Mr. Ritchie and his other compatriots in the banks from having what passes for competition.

I see you, Mr. Speaker, giving me the two fingers. Does it prevent them from doing that? It does not do that, but I think there is certain minimal behaviour which must be regulated, and I have described those.

We are not able to accept this Bill. We are opposed to it. We see no point in proceeding with it because we are not interested in playing powder puff games. It is smoke and mirrors. It really does not deal with the problem that Canadians are having with banks.

It was not just notification or the whole rigmarole of notifying them in the prescribed fashion. That was not the problem we heard about. That was not the problem at all. The problem was the variance of service charges and the amounts. That is what concerned them, the exotic nature of those service charges and the ever increasing amounts.

In light of that, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam (Mr. Waddell):

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:
> "Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Bank Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the terms of the amendment. Continuing debate with the Hon. Member for Markham.

An Hon. Member: Will there be comments and questions?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 74 the first three speakers had 40 minutes with no questions or comments.

We are now entering into the second phase where we will have 20-minute speeches plus 10 minutes of questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Markham has the floor.

Bank Act

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly proud today to speak to Bill C–9, an Act to amend the Bank Act, inasmuch as I think it is honest and fair to say that I was the first MP to raise this topic about two and a half years ago. It was not the NDP. It was not the Liberals. It was the Conservative Party.

In my current riding of Markham and in Whitchurch–Stouffville I have heard a number of complaints in the past on this subject. I would like to walk through a bit of history on this Bill. Sometimes when we arrive in this House we wonder if we can actually take an issue from the riding level where people are concerned, bring it to Parliament, and actually get changes in the Act. It is clear that the answer is a simple yes on that.

In the fall of 1986 three different constituents had separate appointments with me on this type of problem. I recall that one was a Mr. Malcolm Wilkinson from Citation Drive. His problem involved buying a bank draft. They used to cost $2.50. He used to buy a $10 draft to send to a relative in the U.K. He went in the next year and it cost $4.50. It was only a $2 increase, but it was an 80 per cent increase at that time.

Another gentleman, Mr. Burt Newman of Alimosa Drive, had a problem which rested with the safety deposit boxes. He used to own a business downtown around Spadina. He did not get to the bank very frequently, maybe only once or twice a year. He went down one day to pick up his statements and noticed a charge for safety deposit boxes. He checked his records to find that the increase was well over 20 per cent for that one year. He asked at the bank and, just to make a long story short, he got absolutely no satisfaction in terms of an answer on why the rate was so high, why he was not notified beforehand, and so on. Another gentleman with a long list of complaints had a real problem, the idea of being nickelled and dimed to death.

I directed a question to the then Minister of State for Finance in this House on January 21, 1987. I will just quote briefly from it:

> —we are moving toward re–regulated financial services market–place, and I support that initiative. However, I have received a number of complaints about the excessive increases in bank service charges and the lack of adequate notice. Will the Minister look into this particular problem? Can he assure us that through this re–regulation we will see more competition in the market–place to help combat these apparent excessive increases in service charges?

I had a parliamentary assistant at that time and after that statement we did our own financial analysis of the rates in 1986 verses 1985. We did a simple matrix on this, mostly on large banks and trust companies, and indeed we found that in our view the increases were excessive.

I guess it boiled down to a few problems that were consistent with people to whom we talked, that the increases year over year were too large. Second, there was inadequate notice of the changes that were going to take place. Third, there seemed to be no real route or process where someone could get a valid complaint dealt with.

I talked to the chairman of the Finance Committee and, with all–Party agreement, we got this issue on the formal agenda of the Finance Committee. We began hearings on March 24, 1988. We submitted to the House on June 6, 1988 a series of recommendations, which I would like to highlight.

The committee called upon the Government to strengthen the legal notification requirements of the Bank Act. Second, the committee recommended that a complaint resolution mechanism be required both within the institution and through the Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions.

Third, the committee proposed that banks be required to provide accounts offering basic banking services.

Fourth, the committee called for the removal of charges that are widely perceived as unfair to individual Canadians. The idea was that if one received an NSF cheque, even as the receiver, had to pay a fee at the time. That idea has since been dropped by everyone. Finally, the committee proposed stiffer penalties for contravention under the Act. The vast majority of the committee's recommendations were accepted. Regrettably, last year the draft legislation died on the Order Paper.

I am very pleased that our new Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Loiselle) acted with such haste and alacrity in developing Bill C–9 quickly and introducing it into the House on April 13. Here we are now discussing it. We want to move it along.

I want to share a few highlights of this latest piece of legislation. The Minister said: "The legislation will enable customers to shop around and make informed choices about banking services".

The new rules relating to personal deposit accounts will require enhanced disclosure in a number of ways. They include brochures that are available to bank customers and the general public, full disclosure of account related charges when an account is opened, at least 30 days advance notice of changes in charges or the introduction of new charges relating to customer accounts. Similar disclosure will be required for a core list of charges applicable to business deposit accounts. I particularly applaud the Minister for that step.

The legislation also requires that banks develop clear procedures for the filing of customer complaints. Quite markedly, the Act also proposes very stiff penalties for a contravention of this Act. It goes from $1,000 to $500,000, which I happen to believe is very significant.

I will highlight some of the Act itself. The trouble really rested in Section 201 (6) (b) of the previous Act which stated:

> —prescribing the manner in which any charges for the keeping of an account are to be disclosed to a customer, and when such disclosure is to be made; and—

One can see that it was too weak and open ended. That is certainly being tightened in what is proposed in Bill C–9.

In conclusion, it has taken two and a half years since the initial complaints in my riding came to my attention. I wish it could have moved faster, but I am pleased that it is at this stage now. I again commend the Minister for dealing with this so quickly.

There may be other ideas when the Finance Committee deals with this matter, as I hope we will, but all in all let me say that I think the proposals are generally fair and equal and go to the heart of the matter, which is to provide more protection to the consumer and small business person.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move a formal motion. I believe I have the agreement of all three Parties. I move:

> That the Standing Committee on Finance deal with Bill C–9, rather than a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member consulted with me prior to his putting that motion. Since there is an amendment to the main motion, I hope the Hon. Member would come back and reintroduce the same proposal after the amendment has been disposed of.

Therefore, I will proceed to questions and comments.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the my hon. friend. I recall that he was concerned about bank service charges. Indeed, he raised several questions in the House two years ago and possibly, with the questions he raised, it caused the Finance Committee to look into bank service charges finally.

However, I find his position today with respect to this Bill somewhat ambivalent. This Bill does not come to grips with the kind of concerns he was raising two years ago about varying service charges. How can he support this Bill when it does not come to grips with the problem of increasing bank service charges and the expansion of service charges? This Bill simply notifies clients and customers of increases. It does not deal with the basic question of whether that service charge is justified. How can he support a Bill that is virtually hollow? It is a shell.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) for his question.

I think the Bill comes to grips with what should happen in the market–place, in a balanced way. It is clear that the New Democratic Party would like to nationalize banks. We do not happen to think that would be a good step.

Personally, I can say that I think the system is working better than it did two years ago. In my personal experience, I had an account with one of the larger banks for over 30 years. I found that it was not competitive with some of the new accounts that were being introduced by trust companies, for example. Thanks to changes in the market–place and a better awareness by the institutions, I do not pay one cent a month for all my banking services. Previously there was a charge of some $12 or $14 a month, which would be fairly significant over a year.

There is no mistake that there is better competition in the market–place. We do not happen to believe that the market–place works well if it is shackled totally with regulations. I think the Bill goes to the heart of the matter, tackling the issues that should be tackled.

I hope this is not the last time we deal with this issue. I think it is fair to say that most of the senior executives of the banks would admit that perhaps the rate of increases were too harsh and got away from them, and that perhaps their reaction to customer complaints was too insensitive. I suggest a major change has taken place in the attitudes of the banking community and trust community. I think that is progress in itself.

I am basically in support of the Bill. I think changes have taken place. I do not think the Hon. Member is setting the record exactly straight when he suggests that nothing has changed.

• (1700)

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the gentleman from Markham is absolutely right. He was the person who first raised this issue. Indeed, a note that was passed to me a day or so ago said exactly that. We believe in giving credit where credit is due. There is a kick, of course. We like to attribute blame where it is due as well.

The Hon. Member should first take full credit for any small improvements this Bill represents since the time he first raised the issue. Equally, he will have to take the blame because the Government appears to have paid only lip service to the Hon. Member's well intended intervention and has in effect caved in to the banks.

Does the Hon. Member now intend, before his whole project is completely sabotaged and torpedoed, to undertake to knock some sense into the Minister and get the improvements he had in mind in the first place? He himself is a financial officer. He has experience and knows exactly what I am talking about. If he were completely candid right now, he would tell us that this is just a very small step in terms of what he intended when he first raised this issue. What does the Hon. Member have in mind now for committee stage in order to knock some sense into the Minister and get the improvements that would make this Bill worthy of its name?

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The process will work. The Bill will go to committee. Of the 14 members who were on the committee in the last Parliament, only three are now members of that committee. There are 11 new members on the committee, and I think the Hon. Member will find that my style and approach is to get to know the new members and hear their views on various Bills.

We do not pretend to have all the answers. I think the members who sat on the last committee will testify that there was a great degree of consensus reached on the committee. It was not as if only one side carried it. Indeed, the final recommendations we made were, by and large, supported by all Parties. I think it would be a bit unfair to prejudge before we actually hear from the other members of that brand new committee just what thoughts they have on this subject.

I will return to the comments I made in my summary. I believe that, by and large, this is a good step forward. It gives better protection to the consumers of Canada. The Hon. Member is correct in that I have a bit of experience in this area. I served for over 30 years in the finance and trust business so I bring a bit of perspective to the inner workings of these companies.

The Hon. Member may know that the whole approach to customer service has changed pretty markedly in the last 10 years or so. In the past the spread that the banks and trust companies had between deposits and loans literally looked after all these services. As pressure grew on that spread they, like many different industries, moved to a fee for service approach. I believe that in some cases they got a little too aggressive on the range of fees and the rates of increase. We have come down hard on those areas and they know that voluntarily those things will not be permitted.

The public is much more aware because of the effort made in this whole process over the last two years. Bank officers will tell us that many more people question items on their statements, whereas years ago they would not even attempt to do so. If they do not get answers, they tend to shout in the bank line-ups or pound the desks. I would submit that the public relations area has improved remarkably in the last little while.

When we get to committee, let us see what will happen. If there are other valid improvements that we as a committee should consider recommending, I would certainly want to be a part of that. However, I would not want to prejudge that process. I am basically in agreement with what the Minister of State for Finance has drafted. It is a real step forward.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, as my colleague from Nickel Belt so eloquently put it a few moments ago, the Bill that is before us today provides for virtually just another way of shuffling paper. The Hon. Member from Markham (Mr. Attewell), with all of his experience in the industry, should recognize that the provision for the bank to comply voluntarily is an atrocious way to deal with a very serious problem.

I wonder if the Hon. Member could explain to the House how it is that he could support a Bill that calls for the banks to engage in voluntary compliance. We know from past experience in farm matters and other matters affecting many Canadians that the banks look after their own interests. When we are talking about voluntary compliance, we are talking about the interests of the banks, not of the consumers. I wonder if the Hon. Member could explain his support for the Bill in this light.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I do not think that this should turn into a bank bashing exercise. There are six large banks in Canada. They are world-class banks and are well managed. There are many trust companies that are well managed as well. I do not think this should be a bank bashing exercise.

I would like to suggest that we start with a philosophy for how we want the market-place to work. Are we going to go to Steinbergs and ask them to submit a list of what price they will sell apples at before they start selling them? Are we going to go to retail gasoline companies and ask them, before they raise their prices, how they will do it? Should they come to the big Government to see what should happen?

The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt cited numbers from the banks. I forget whether he mentioned that they were profits or gross revenues. He knows that that by itself means nothing other than the fact that it is a large number. What really counts in measuring the profitability of a business, as the Hon. Member knows, is the return on equity. If the return on equity is 30 per cent I would say that it is far too high, but we will not find it at that level. Normally an adequate return for most industries would be in the 12 per cent or 13 per cent to 16 per cent range. This is return on the shareholders' equity, the equity of average Canadians who have invested in these companies.

The Hon. Member knows that, by and large, banks are owned by average Canadians. No one person can own more than 10 per cent of a Canadian bank, so they are very widely held by seniors and by average investors and companies. They want an adequate return on their investment as well. Does the Hon. Member want to weaken the banks?

Let us keep things in perspective when we are talking about this subject. There have been some mistakes made, there is no question. Some banks have become too aggressive. However, let us not take a knee-jerk reaction to this problem. Let us look at it in a rational way. Let us keep the consumer uppermost in our minds, but let us not go overboard in our reaction.

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the gentleman from Nickel Belt is in the House. I listened with great interest to what he had to say, especially the part about the mirrors. I had wondered for years why bankers had those large washrooms with those full length mirrors. Of course, if digruntled bank customers become mobilized, we will see a whole new growth industry in replacement mirrors.

I am delighted also that the gentleman whose initiative brought this Bill before the House is in the Chamber, the hon. gentleman from Markham. I thank him for his response to my question. In responding, he confirmed what I implied in my question when I said that we still have a long way to go in terms of what the Hon. Member set out to do. I am grateful to him for his undertaking that he is not giving up yet. Despite the different styles, I thought that the gentleman from Markham and the gentleman from Nickel Belt were not that far apart in terms of their concerns about this piece of legislation.

I am about to commit the unforgivable sin of crawling into bed politically with someone so far to the left as the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and so far to the right as the Hon. Member for Markham (Mr. Attewell) by saying that I too share their concerns. There is a real Liberal middle of the road. Any political bed will do as long as the principles are correct.

I am glad to see the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Loiselle) is present. I want to say something to him, and it is best to say those things directly to someone's face than behind someone's back. This Bill says an awful lot more about the Government's relationship with the banks than it does about the Government's concern for the consumer.

We are debating Bill C-9 in its present form, and I stress the fact that it is in its present form. Thank goodness we have a committee system that works, and on this Bill it has its work cut out for it. I am grateful to the Hon. Member for Markham who has proposed, and will do so formally later in the debate, that this Bill go to the Finance Committee. That is the place for it, and we will support that.

We believe that certain improvements can be made. We do not believe that we can support the Bill in its present form, but we believe that the Bill is on the right track. It requires major surgery, and we hope some of that surgery will take place at the committee stage before we are asked to give our final commitment in terms of where we stand on the Bill.

I now wish to talk about banks, but before I start talking about his friends in the banking business, perhaps the Minister may want conveniently to leave and get a cup of tea or something. Let me put the following question to the Minister first.

In closing the debate at this stage, perhaps the Minister could verbalize what he sees as the possibilities for federal trust companies and those under provincial jurisdiction in ensuring that they too are governed by the provisions that will be in the improved Bill when we are finished with it in committee.

Is there ever a subject that one would like to talk about at greater length and with more emotion than the banks, particularly if one lives in a small rural community in Newfoundland. I suppose the same could be said of people in many other parts of this great country. Perhaps it is my upbringing, but I get the distinct feeling from the banking business that it is doing you a favour every time you walk into a bank. You feel like you should genuflect or tip your hat. One sees cattle line-ups and ropes. There are not enough tellers. The banks take you for granted, and you stand in line. Have the banks not learned that payroll days come regularly two or three times a month, or every week? Have they not learned that some days they should actually have some staff who are not having coffee?

The banks should do as good a job posting charges as they do making up little "closed" tabs for the wickets. I have gone into a bank and Miss Smith is at that one station, Miss Brown is at another, Miss White is at that one, and Miss Closed is at the other nine. The banks have the facilities but they do not have the attitude. People whip out during their coffee breaks with only 15 minutes to deposit their cheques, because by the time they get off work the bank is closed. What do they do? They stand in a line-up 20-back and wait for one of the three open tellers because the other 9 or 10 are closed off.

It is that attitude, that callousness, that devil may care attitude that the banks exude to their customers which make customers like me suspect all the time. Is it any wonder when one receives that cavalier treatment? There is no other service oriented business, no other sector of the economy that is trying to please the customer, which would do that to a customer.

I get the feeling that there are two classes of customers, if one looks at it from the bank manager's eyes. I say to the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt that when they are not looking in the mirror they are categorizing customers. It is a very simple categorization, and even an assistant bank manager could understand this one. There is the fellow with the gold card and the fellow without the gold card.

For your information, Mr. Speaker, I borrowed this one from a Tory to make my speech. This Tory would like to be a Liberal, and we are working on him, but the gold card kind of stands in his way. There are two classes of customers. In the last few minutes this particular friend told me that he went into a branch where he had had an account for many years. They knew him extremely well, but they were putting him through the hurdles all the time. They were charging him every time he coughed or sneezed. While he was there waiting for the teller to do whatever it was she was doing for him on the other side of the glass, he reached into his pocket and hauled out his wallet—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister of State for Finance on a point of order.

Mr. Loiselle: I would like to inform the House that it is not my card the Hon. Member is holding. Second, I would like to inform the Hon. Member for Markham (Mr. Attewell) that I will have to leave shortly in order to meet the Minister of Finance from British Columbia.

Therefore, I will not be having tea and crumpet, maybe a glass of whiskey. I apologize for having to leave in a few minutes, but I will carefully read the Hon. Member's remarks as soon as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's is a long time Member. He knows that there should not be a display of cards or forms, or anything of that nature in the Chamber. We do not wish to have any advertising in this establishment. I was also going to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, who was also displaying a long sheet, to delete all those displays, if possible, please.

Mr. Simmons: The Minister of State for Finance is most gracious, and I understand he cannot stay. I wish to correct him on two points. The fellow who sits over there is the Hon. Member for Markham, and I don't drink whisky.

I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I did not mention the bank, but I do understand, Sir. The point I am making is that there are two classes of customers. As soon as my friend took the gold card, which I am not allowed to display at this time, out of his wallet, the one you don't see, it was spotted by the teller who was allowed to see it. She, bright girl that she was, said: "Oh, you have a gold card. We don't have to charge you if you have a gold card. Why didn't you tell us before that you were a holder of a gold card from this particular bank?"

There are two classes of customer. That is the type of thing the Hon. Member for Markham had in mind, and that is the type of thing we have in mind. Bank attitude cannot be legislated. However, there is an arrogance out there the banks ought to admit to and, more important, do something about.

I mentioned the long line-ups. When I mentioned to a friend that I was going to participate in this debate, he mentioned to me that a few days ago he was in one of those line-ups. He said that he could tell me in detail the business of the lady in front of him, because he had heard the whole thing. He heard the teller advise her that she was overdrawn. That is another issue regarding the configuration of the bank and its line-ups. There is no confidentiality in those banks. You cannot go in and discuss your personal financial business. You can get appointments, I suppose, and wait the required six weeks or so. I am talking about trying to do a spontaneous transaction, when you have to come in from the street and go into the bank to do something. You should not be told in the hearing of several other people that you are overdrawn, for example.

To move quickly to another point, the banks in this country, by and large, have abandoned the small outlying areas, the less populated parts of the country. If I had time I would love to take you all to God's country, to my riding of Burin—St. George's, and to the Isle aux Morts. The Francophones call it Isle de Morts. We know in Newfoundland it is the Isle aux Morts. Then there is Middletown, Terrenceville, and Rose Blanche, but you would not find a bank anywhere because there is not one. There are a couple of thousand people in each of those communities, but there is not a bank.

The attitude is that these people should go up the highway anywhere from 30 to 90 miles if they want to get to a bank. There is not even a bank there one or two days a week. These people, through no fault of their own, are still back in the days of the mattress and the sock. They do not have basic services that are available to many other parts of this country. Why? My friend from Nova Scotia knows exactly why. Greed, not service, is the overriding preoccupation of those banks, by and large.

The Government should be very comfortable with that concept. It is the same concept the Government is allowing to go forward in railway abandonments, postal closings and airline deregulation. The watchword out there is greed. It is a situation of grab all you can and forget service to outlying areas; forget the areas of less population. If people are not living in Québec, Toronto, Niagara or the satellites of Winnipeg and Vancouver, tough titty as we say.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: The same attitude is reflected here. That is why this Government is so comfortable with it. It is the very philosophy this Government practises on the people of Canada. Is it any wonder that the Government is standing idly by allowing the banks to practise the same philosophy on Canadians?

Let us talk about the loan policy of banks. If you wonder why I am off on these delightful tangents, Mr. Speaker, it is because I said this Bill requires major surgery in committee. The more I think about it, it may need a transplant or two in committee. The loan policy is a subject that can get me hot and heavy if it were not so late in the day. The only people who can get a loan in the bank these days, without being hassled, are the people who do not need one. Do you realize that, Mr. Speaker? The only people who can walk into a bank and get a loan are those who do not really need a loan. The security, the collateral the banks insist on, is usually several times the exposure involved in the loan.

The ceiling loan authority of that poor fellow behind the desk with the bank manager's sign on it is so low that he has to make a phone call almost every time a person walks in the bank to borrow for any amount. If these people are worthy of the title bank manager—and I am not suggesting they are not—it seems to me that in the interest of serving people and providing good service they ought to have more authority. To my earlier point, the loan policy ought to be one that protects the banks but not to the point of harassing the consumer, the would-be borrower.

You have been wondering, of course, while I have been speaking, Mr. Speaker, how I am going to look my bank manager straight in the eye when he reads my speech. The answer is right here in my notes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: The exception that proves the rule. The best bank manager in the world is located in Springdale, Newfoundland—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: —where I have not worked for 15 years, where there is not a vote for me. Springdale is on the other coast of Newfoundland, 400 miles from my riding, but he is the best bank manager in Newfoundland. That is why I still do not have to use my socks other than for the normal purpose.

An Hon. Member: Which is what?

Mr. Simmons: My barefooted friends in the NDP would not know what socks are for.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: I have two or three other points. I have some information on the gold card but I had better not get into that any more. However, I have some other things I want to say before I quit.

Mr. Tobin: The friends of the bankers are over there and they are very smug.

Mr. Simmons: In terms of this particular piece of legislation, the old cliché about too little too late comes to mind. There is still a built-in penalty here for those who accept cheques which turn out to be bouncers or rubbery. Their own business interests dictate and common sense dictates that they, the banks, will check the cheque and the person who proffers the cheque. Even with that check, it is possible for a rubber cheque to get through.

When it does and it is returned and marked NSF by the bank, that person who acted in good faith, and after a thorough check, should not be penalized. This legislation does not cover that, just to make one particular point.

My colleague, our spokesman, the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Young), indicated to the House that this Bill makes a little bit of progress, but we are going to play wait and see on this. I know for the Minister it is a laughing matter because he has gold cards and he is not one of those who gets harassed by the banks. I understand it is funny for him, very funny, but it is not funny for those people in the small communities. There he goes, out to see his banker no doubt.

Mr. Valcourt: You should watch what you say.

Mr. Simmons: It is too late in the day to be unkind to the Minister, but it is not funny at all for those people in small communities who do not have banking services nor for those people in large communities who are being treated with that cavalier, arrogant attitude I talked about earlier. If you want, Mr. Speaker, I say to the gentleman who is sponsoring this Bill, the Minister from Langelier on that side of the House that they will have to get their heads together with this Party and caucus in committee to make this Bill worthy of its name. Then we will give it full support.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to ask the Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's (Mr. Simmons) about whiskey. He suggested that he stopped drinking whiskey. I am tempted to ask him when he stopped drinking whiskey but I certainly could not tell by his speech.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: He suggests that he is using someone else's gold cards from his Tory friends. I sometimes think that the Tories and Liberals are kind of interchangeable like gold cards. I want his position on the Bill. He talked about everything.

• (1730)

The New Democratic critic, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), said that in this Bill there is no independent impartial individual who decides whether a service charge is proper in the first place. He used the mirror analogy. I think he made an overwhelming case to show that the banks were regulating themselves, that the foxes were in charge of the hen-house.

I ask the Hon. Member if he is he was really supporting this Bill. If he is, then I do not understand why he is supporting this Bill.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had made it clear but before I respond to the second question, let me respond to the first point. The answer to the whiskey question is that I have never quit because I never began. However, that is another issue altogether.

I thought I made it clear that at this stage we cannot support the Bill. I thought I had made it clear to him that we do not think there is enough transparency disclosure. We think there ought to be more signage in the banks. I believe I had implied that as I went through.

I certainly, in one of my last points, mentioned the other major reservation we had about the Bill, that is, that these people receiving those bad cheques in good faith ought not to be penalized. There are two or three points that he obviously missed on the way through, so I will talk more slowly the next time. I guess my short answer to him is: "Meet me in committee, Louie".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Cumberland—Colchester on a question or a comment.

Mr. Casey: I have just a few observations. The Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's (Mr. Simmons) referred to me in his speech so I thought I should respond a little.

First of all, it is not my gold card either, Mr. Speaker, that he has. I want him to make that clear. He suggested that the gold card makes two classes of people, and I think that that is not right. I should say that I do not want this to be construed that I am here to defend the banks, because I am not. A gold card does not make a second-class citizen or a first-class citizen. You buy the gold card and you use it for services, the same as you buy a card to get on the buses downtown. You can get on the bus with a card or you can get on the bus with money. It does not make any difference.

The other point he made was that he invited us all to go to Ilse aux Morts where there are no banks. Probably even more important, there are probably no car dealerships in Ilse aux Morts or bookstores either. I do not know. I have never been there, but I would be welcome to accept his invitation to go at any time.

I would just like to mention that recently the Lloyds Bank was going to close a branch in my constituency in Truro, Nova Scotia. We asked them to reconsider that and they did. We appreciated it in our constituency that they did reconsider their plan to close the bank. They left it open and they re-manned it and it is up and away again. My only question would be: When will I get my invitation to Ilse aux Morts?

Mr. Simmons: I thank my good friend for Cumberland—Colchester. He will be aware that Truro is a long way from Ilse aux Morts. Physically it is a long way but in other ways it is a long way as well. He is a car dealer. If you listen to him long enough you would think he is a used car dealer. He states that the card does not make the difference. He gave us the answer as to what does make the difference. Money makes the difference, money. He stated that there were no car dealerships in Ilse aux Morts. Come on down, come on down. I will tell him that until he gets there and sets up a dealership, I will tell him what is in Ilse aux Morts—people who work 12 months around in fishing boats and fish plants. What is in Ilse aux Morts is this: a very big payroll, a very big year-round payroll, and no place to put it except in socks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am going to recognize the Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte, and then I am going to recognize the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, and that will be it for the questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a comment and a question to my colleague who just gave a very powerful and compassionate speech, one that empathizes not with the car dealers of the planet and not with the woolly-eyed socialists who in their attempt to reach Utopia want to nationalize all the banks, but one that empathizes with ordinary Canadians. That is the difference between the Party that thinks that the bottom line is the car dealership and the Party that thinks the bottom line is theory. This Party is concerned with flesh and blood people.

Because there seems to be some confusion among those who occupy the extremities of the Canadian political thought, the doctrinaire people, those on the right and those on the left, I would like to give the Member a chance once again to make clear exactly what he said.

I would like to ask the Member if in fact what he is saying is that this Party believes in the free enterprise system, believes in the banking system, and believes we can make this Bill better in committee. I would ask him to be crystal clear for Canadians who are paying attention to this debate, whether or not what I heard him say is that no, unlike the Conservatives we do not believe the banks should regulate themselves, and unlike the NDP who are on record in their policy convention and their policy handbook and have passed it as party law, we do not believe in nationalizing the banks either. Can he make clear to us that the Liberal position is the pragmatic one.

Mr. Simmons: All of the above. Mr. Speaker, I could not have said it better myself. The fellow must be from Newfoundland. I would like to thank my friend and colleague from Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte. He hits the nail right on the head. This Bill and this debate is all about where we are really coming from philosophically. It is easy for the Hon. Member for Markham or the Minister from Langelier to get up and soft-pedal and try to tell us that this bit of puff we have here called Bill C-9 is going to change the banking world. It is equally easy for the gentleman from Nickel Belt, somewhere in the middle of his aerobics display, to tell us that all is wrong with the world. Somewhere in between lies the truth, and there are the Liberals too.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, as I implied, some of my best friends are bankers. God knows I need them.

An Hon. Member: I would not admit it in public.

Some Hon. Members: That is the difference, that is the difference.

Mr. Simmons: You come here often. If in committee we can have some good will in this regard, if we can get members of the Finance Committee, presuming the House so directs that it will go to the Finance Committee, to make some fairly major changes all within the spirit of the Bill. There is nothing wrong with the spirit of the Bill, but once it gets beyond spirit it is very short on substance. We want to give it a little more substance in committee. At this stage we cannot support it. Would somebody explain it to him, because I have said it two or three times, at this stage, second reading—are you with me—

Some Hon. Members: Yes, yes.

Mr. Simmons: —we cannot, do not, and will not support the Bill.

An Hon. Member: That is what your opening speaker said.

Mr. Simmons: He said nothing that was contradictory with that.

An Hon. Member: He did, he did.

Mr. Simmons: I am telling you, rest at ease, go back to sleep, do not worry about it. We are not going to support the Bill at this stage. But, Mr. Speaker, at another stage because the spirit of the Bill we need—

An Hon. Member: Maybe tomorrow you will have a different position.

Mr. Simmons: No. No. At this stage of the Bill.

An Hon. Member: Now you are talking Liberal.

Mr. Simmons: I think they got it, Mr. Speaker. At this stage of the Bill we will not support it. We want to get it in committee. Depending on what happens in committee we will let them know whether or not we are going to support it. That will depend on whether or not we are prepared, as a House, to put some substance in the Bill to protect the Canadian consumer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Mississauga South on a question or comment.

Mr. Blenkarn: It would seem that to get the Bill into committee we would have to get the Bill out of the House on second reading. The Hon. Member will know that the New Democratic Member from Nickel Belt has moved an amendment that the Bill be given a six-month hoist. Should that motion pass, the Bill would never go to committee and we would never have any Bill that we might get our teeth into to control bank service charges.

• (1740)

Is it the view of the Hon. Member and the view of members of his Party that we should support a delay of this matter and let the banks run their own show the way they have been doing it or would he really like to have the Bill sent to committee? Apparently the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) would not want the Bill even to go to committee.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, it is obviously late in the day. I want walk to the gentleman from Mississauga South through the process one more time.

It is implicit in my statement that we want to see the Bill in committee. It is implicit in that statement that we do not want to see it delayed for six months. That ought to be crystal clear to the illustrious chairman of the Finance Committee, a man who has been known even in the heat of an election to stand on his principles. Even when his Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was telling the country one thing about revenue neutral taxes, he was prepared to bare his soul. He told the whole world that by his guestimation the national sales tax would bring us at least an extra $1 billion.

Mr. Tobin: Fourteen billion!

Mr. Simmons: He was low even on the $14 billion. The estimate now is $22 billion.

The point I make is that that gentleman has long been on the side of truth even when it has hurt him in his career path. I say to him that we want to see the Bill in committee. We do not want to see it get a six-month hoist at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allotted for questions and comments has now terminated.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak to this Bill, after listening all afternoon to the comments of my colleague, the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Loiselle) and Opposition Members.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State (Finance) today proposed second reading of a bill that provides for major improvements in those provisions of the Bank Act that are mainly concerned with disclosure of service charges.

As you know and as the House knows, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-9 is based on the policy set forth in previous Bill C-140 which also concerned service charges.

However, unlike its predecessor, Bill C-9 also applies to business deposit accounts.

This afternoon, I heard Opposition Members talking about small businesses. As we know, however, this policy was formulated after exhaustive consultations with members of small business groups. Thanks to the very useful contribution made by these groups, the Government is now proposing to improve the standards for all deposit accounts.

I would like to give a summary of what the Bill will do for businesses.

First of all, the Bill responds to one of the main demands of small business groups, which is to ensure access to information on what a bank charges for its services.

The Government intends to oblige banks to make available to the public a list of all ordinary charges related to banking services, not just the charges that apply to personal deposit accounts.

Mr. Speaker, this provision is important, not just because it meets the demands of small businesses but also because it gives all Canadians the right to obtain information so they can shop around and make a considered decision with respect to their banking operations.

Under the new Bill, businesses will also have access to brochures that will indicate the service charges applying to the various deposit accounts offered by Canadian banking institutions.

Before it can modify the charges on business accounts, especially those of small businesses, a bank must give thirty days notice to the holders of such accounts. This requirement will apply to the services specified in the draft regulations, which represent the majority of service charges paid by small businesses.

The Bill acknowledges that like consumers, businesses may be faced with problems that require the bank's attention. Consequently, under this Bill businesses will have access to the same complaint settlement mechanisms as holders of personal accounts, and they will have that access both through the institutions and through the Government.

One may wonder, Mr. Speaker, why the Government did not act to eliminate the charges on business accounts when a customer pays with an NSF cheque. The decision to remove these charges for personal accounts was made voluntarily by some institutions last June. It was not a Government decision. However, I think that, unlike individuals who often have few convenient alternatives, companies can use other payment methods.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this Bill, although it does not completely satisfy the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), should be passed on second reading as soon as possible and referred, as the opposition parties and the Government wish, I think, to the Standing Committee on Finance for in-depth study, so that it can come back to us for final passage as quickly as possible.

You will understand, Mr. Speaker, that the sooner the Bill is passed, the sooner Canadian consumers will benefit.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary. He talked about consumers' freedom to choose among the banks. I think that it is often difficult to change from one bank to another if someone does not like the service charges.

Does the Hon. Member agree with what I said about it often being difficult, if a consumer does not like the service charges, to change banks? That is why I believe this Bill is inadequate.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, it makes no difference; I still disagree with the New Democratic Party.

From having worked in the field, Mr. Speaker, before entering this august Chamber, on the contrary, I think that there is competition in the area of bank services, as in any other sector. There is healthy competition.

The consumer, whether an individual, a company or a small business, who does business with a bank, or with a caisse populaire in Québec, and who is not satisfied with the treatment he is getting can easily do business with another financial institution and obtain the benefits he desires and the financing he needs, be it personal or for business.

Looking at the number of banking institutions in Canada—banks or any other institution providing financial services—I believe that there are many and competition is very strong. Strong competition means service must be good, at a reasonable cost, if the financial institution is to survive and prosper.

So I think it is easy to change banks at any time to get the services one wants.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question to the Parliamentary Secretary. For example, will someone who got a mortgage from a bank and who does not like service charges be able to transfer the mortgage to another bank? There will be charges to pay and I don't think he can avoid them.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, when a consumer signs a mortgage agreement with a financial institution, he is informed of the related charges. And if he is not happy with those charges, he can shop around and get a mortgage elsewhere under the terms he wants. And it can still be done, Mr. Speaker. We often see taxpayers and consumers who change financial institutions when their mortgage comes due. I don't think there is a problem in that respect.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Sudbury on a question or comment?

Mrs. Marleau: First of all to my hon. colleague from the West Coast, I am the Member for Sudbury. I think I look a little different from your colleague in front of you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Marleau: To the Hon. Member across the way, he tells this House that there is a great deal of competition out there with banks. I do not know exactly what area he comes from, but there are many areas in this fine country of ours that do not have a lot of banks and therefore there is very little competition.

[Translation]

You talked about credit unions. The question I am asking you is this: I have been told that credit unions are totally regulated by the provinces. Is that true? If it is, this Bill will not control credit unions or other financial agencies at all. It will only control the big banks, right? Can you explain that to me? That is why we do not support the Bill as it now stands.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to say that I agree on one point with my colleague from Sudbury (Mrs. Marleau): She looks much better than the Member from the New Democratic Party. On that, we are in complete agreement.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that credit unions come under provincial jurisdiction. I mentioned them a few moments ago because I was saying that consumers have the option to do business with several financial institutions. I took credit unions as an example, but I could have referred to certain trust companies who also offer financial services. I mentioned credit unions in that context.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate, the Hon. Minister, Government House Leader.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your recognizing me. I would move pursuant to Standing Order 26(1):

> That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of second reading of Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Bank Act.

Mr. Waddell: On a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I believe I was next on the list to speak. It seems to me that the Minister has been, with respect, kind of smuggled in here to get up and make the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have been very generous today with opposite sides taking turns. Once a Minister rises, I must respect the fact that the Minister is in the Chamber and wishes to speak. I was not aware that this motion was being put. I figured he wanted to speak on the Bill. Therefore I have recognized the Minister.

The House has heard the terms of the motion. Would those Members who object to the motion please rise in their places?

And more than 15 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 26(2), the motion is deemed to have been withdrawn.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Your Honour was kind enough, in your generosity, to say that you have been fair today and that you did recognize the Minister thinking that he was going to speak. Therefore I wish the Minister would speak now since he took the floor to speak. Instead he gave us a fast one as they say in baseball. We are here to listen to the Minister, since the Minister was recognized and given the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I might say that I am in agreement with the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis. He is absolutely right. When you play those kinds of games it comes back to haunt you in this House, and the Minister should know that.

Anyway I have got to wind up on the debate. I have one minute, I gather. Our position in the NDP is clear on this Bill. As the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt said, we do not want half a loaf, a quarter of a loaf, or a tenth of a loaf; we want the whole loaf.

Ordinary Canadians have to meet these bank charges, these growing service charges. The banks are pulling in the money on this to pay off, as the Hon. Member said, their external debts. We want some teeth in a Bill so that Canadians will not be gouged by service charges from banks which have a history of doing so. That is why we had the issue referred to a committee in the first place. I am disappointed that the Government did not come back with a Bill with some teeth in it to show Canadians that in fact it has responded to the needs out there.

I wonder if I might be able to speak on this Bill tomorrow. I am not sure, but I think the House will adjourn at six o'clock.

May I call it six o'clock and continue my speech tomorrow with respect to the banks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will have 19 minutes, plus 10 minutes for questions and comments.

[Translation]

It being six o'clock, the House stands adjourned until 11 a.m. tomorrow, pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

PRIVILEGE

LEAK OF BUDGET DOCUMENT

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Before hearing Hon. Members, I want to advise the House that I have a number of applications of privilege. As the House knows, they must be heard in a certain order. The order is as they were received.

They are in the following order and these are the Hon. Members who have put forward their questions of privilege. The first in order is the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: What time?

Mr. Speaker: Eight thirty p.m.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): My privilege!

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member has a point of order, I will hear her. If she has a question of privilege, then I will receive her notice. However, I have not received it.

As I say, the first was received at 8.30 p.m. from the Minister of Finance. The second was received from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) at 11.22 p.m.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The third was received from the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands (Mr. Milliken) at 11.25 p.m. The next was received from the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) at 11.40 p.m.. The next was from the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) at 11. 44 p.m. The next was from the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Flis) at 10.13 a.m. today.

I will hear the Hon. Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Riis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray):

> That the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition now be heard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has moved a traditional motion that another Hon. Member be now heard. That is properly a matter for a debate. In my view, having set out the fact that we have questions of privilege here which take precedence over other things, I think I am bound to proceed as I indicated I would. The Hon. Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is attempting to rise on a point of privilege presumably based on the leak that occurred yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Theft!

Mr. Riis: I believe that this is out of order. I believe that this is a diversionary tactic because if Your Honour will refer to Beauchesne's, Citation 82, Your Honour will see that it states:

> A question of privilege must be brought to the attention of the House at the first possible opportunity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that on a number of occasions you had to rule questions of privilege out of order because they were not raised at the earliest possible moment.

• (1110)

Last night at 5.30, Global Television informed the office of the Minister of Finance, his officials, that they had the contents of the Budget and read out the details of the Budget at 5.30. At 5.55 the House Leader for the Government and the Deputy Prime Minister came into the Chamber and asked that the sitting of the House of Commons be extended. I contend that the Government and the Minister of Finance knew at 5.30 that there had been a leak of his Budget. That was the time for the Minister of Finance to have been on the floor.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: We are seeing parliamentary practices breached, parliamentary traditions breached, 500 years of tradition breached. The honourable thing for the Minister of Finance to have done, at the first and earliest opportunity which was before six o'clock yesterday, was to come into the House of Commons and indicate at that point to the House that a breach of security had occurred, and that he was not going to present the Budget the next day as per the Standing Order. He would have done that as an honourable and respected member of the Crown. That is what ought to have happened. That is why I contend that this request by the Minister of Finance for a point of privilege is out of order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the Hon. Member. It is certainly true that a question of privilege should be raised as soon as it is reasonably possible. I point out that we have a number of questions of privilege raised, and I have them here, at different times. I do not feel under the circumstances that it would be appropriate to cut off the Minister of Finance, and I recognize him.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we are rewriting the rules of this House at this time. A motion that another Member be heard is always in order by all traditions at any time.

An Hon. Member: Challenging the Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: I am not talking to the Speaker. I am reminding this House that we are rewriting the book, and I disagree with that.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Challenging the Speaker. Shame.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege. I want to take the earliest opportunity to explain to this House the extraordinary events that occurred last night.

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Shortly before suppertime yesterday—

Ms. Copps: Resign.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —employees of Global Television informed officials of my Department that an anonymous telephone caller had read to one of their staff—

An Hon. Member: What time?

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise all Hon. Members that we may be in for quite a long debate today. Hon. Members will note that I said debate. I think that debate requires the right of all Hon. Members who wish to contribute to be heard by other Hon. Members. The Hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, shortly before suppertime yesterday employees of Global Television informed officials of my Department—

Some Hon. Members: What time?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —that an anonymous telephone caller had read to one of their staff members information that purported to be part of the Budget.

Some Hon. Members: What time?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Shortly thereafter in a news broadcast the network displayed that document and made public certain details indicating—

Mr. Speaker: The Speaker is fully aware that the issue that we are addressing at the moment is a very important one, both historically and in the conventions of Parliament. There is another convention of Parliament, that the Hon. Member who is an experienced Member of Parliament also understands, that there is free speech in this House. That means that a person should be listened to when they have the floor. The Hon. Minister of Finance.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Shortly thereafter in a news broadcast the network displayed the document and made public certain details indicating that it was in fact a printed document entitled The Budget in Brief which was part of the Budget package scheduled to be presented to this House today at five o'clock.

An Hon. Member: Where was it printed, Mike?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The premature release of details of the Budget appears to have resulted from a breach of trust, a wilful criminal act against which there can be no certain security.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have asked the RCMP to investigate to determine how this occurred and who was responsible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am advised by my officials that this violation did not result from negligence, carelessness or lack of proper security arrangements for the Budget documents. The Budget documents are produced under tight security in my Department.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): When ready for printing, they are conveyed to the Government printing plant and proofs returned to the Department under equally tight security. The printed documents themselves are stored in a secure area—

An Hon. Member: How secure?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —and when shipped, are accompanied by security personnel.

There are two essential considerations underlying budgetary secrecy: The need to ensure that a person does not profit or otherwise gain advantage from advance knowledge of the content of the Budget, and the principle that the Government's financial policy should be disclosed to the House of Commons before it is made known to others. In the present circumstances in which the Budget has been the subject of an unauthorized disclosure, the Government approached the opposition Parties in this House to ask for their co-operation in approaching the Chair to seek a special sitting of the House last evening in order that I might have presented my Budget before the House immediately. Unfortunately, the Opposition Parties did not see their way to co-operate in seeking a special sitting of the House of Commons.

• (1120)

Mr. Langdon: Point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mindful of the importance of not permitting any individual from profiting or gaining other advantage from advance knowledge of the content of the Budget—

Mr. Tobin: Why didn't you come at six o'clock when you knew?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —accordingly, the Government concluded that the prudent course of action was to make the Budget public immediately, and that was the course of action followed last evening.

Before doing so, I transmitted copies of the Budget documents to Your Honour through the Clerk of the House and to the Leaders of the Opposition Parties. I understand that the Clerk has received these documents and has caused them to be distributed in the normal way.

I regret that this course of action was necessary—

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Then resign.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —since it denied the right of Hon. Members to hear the Budget presented in the House before it was released elsewhere. Under the circumstances I believe it was the most appropriate course of action.

In reaching this decision the Government sought the advice of constitutional experts inside and outside of Government. There was a consensus that the course of action chosen was the only sensible one to take having regard for the principles underlying the tradition of Budget secrecy.

Ms. Copps: What about parliamentary experts? They will tell you to resign.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I view this matter with the utmost seriousness. That is why I have taken the earliest possible moment to make this explanation to the House. Thank you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak not only to the Minister's question of privilege but to my own, and I believe on behalf of all Canadians whose privileges have been breached by the negligence of the Minister.

I notice that the Minister was playing to the cameras, as he usually does on Budget afternoon. This is not a matter for the camera. This one is for the House of Commons. This is one of those important times in the history of Canada when no presidential style of Government can prevail. This is the House of Commons of Canada and we will have something to say about that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What we are talking about is absolutely unprecedented in the history of our country. It is unprecedented in the history of our Parliament. It is unprecedented in the history of parliamentary democracy as we know it.

We are dealing with the fundamental role of Parliament, Parliament having the right to approve taxation and approve expenditures as against the Crown, as against the Government of the day. That is why we are before Your Honour on the most serious matter that I can recall in my lifetime in Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The cause of his life.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Because of the importance of the matter, Mr. Speaker, I know you will allow me the indulgence to bring the full issue before Your Honour, Members of the House and thereby the country.

The role of Parliament is believed to have existed from the year 1265 A.D., when the Commons was first summoned by Simon de Montfort for the purpose of discussing and raising new taxes. This concept is fundamental and historic. We are dealing, therefore, with the principal issue of this country's form of democracy, an issue that stretches back 724 years, an issue with a history that exists from 602 years before the creation of our own Confederation. Since 1265 it has been a fundamental principle of parliamentary democracy that the House of Commons, the elected representatives of the people, have control over all new taxes, all alterations in taxes, and all new expenditures or cutting of expenditures. That is the issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Government may try to trivialize this as a minor theft. This is the issue for which, before the British House of Commons, the commoners put a King to death. This is an issue over which the United States went to revolution. This is the fundamental issue of taxation and representation. That is what it is.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) scoffs. Before this debate is over the Prime Minister will learn what parliamentary democracy is all about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Whether or not the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) recognize it, the principle about which we are talking is fundamental. It is the principle upon which our parliamentary democracy resides. It is a principle which has been asserted time and time again in the statutes of the western world. It is a principle which was assented to in the British North American Act, 1867 and reconfirmed in the Constitution Act, 1982. It is the principle which is asserted in the written procedures of every parliament throughout the world.

It is the principle which is asserted and reasserted in the unwritten practice of every parliament throughout the world. The primacy of the House of Commons in tax matters is to protect the public. It is not a constitutional myth. It is not a parliamentary fiction. The Minister of Finance comes before Parliament so that no one gets an advantage, a benefit, an insider advantage, and the people of Canada are treated fairly. That is the reason.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Why did you refuse to come to work last night?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The primacy of the House of Commons and budget secrecy have had as their fundamental raison d'être the protection of all our citizens from those who could accumulate private gain at the expense of the uninformed.

I say this is a privilege of the House, as a House of Commons, a privilege of every Member sitting in this place, but it is a privilege which we exercise in a custodial and fiduciary fashion on behalf of 11 million Canadian taxpayers and 26 million Canadians. Twenty-six million Canadians must not be prey to those who may have a hidden advantage, an advance over the rest of us, for their own benefit. The present unauthorized advanced release, not of an item in the Budget nor of an individual tax, but of the entire Budget is unprecedented in 724 years of parliamentary history. It is the largest and most serious violation of parliamentary budget secrecy in 724 years and in any parliamentary democracy in the world. I am therefore stunned that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance do not understand the primary responsibility of parliamentary tradition and history. The issue is whether the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance understand their overriding role as trustees and custodians of our parliamentary system.

The issue is not whether the Minister of Finance personally released information to the news media, the issue is one of trust placed by this Parliament in him because of his role, trust placed by Canadians in him because of his custody over the finances and accounting of the nation.

The issue is not why the Prime Minister and Minister of Finance did not choose the correct course of action immediately upon learning of the largest release of budgetary information in the history of democracy? That is what Canadians want to know. Why, when this was first discovered, did the Prime Minister not come immediately before the House?

Why did the Prime Minister not ask for his resignation? More importantly, why didn't the Minister, to preserve what remaining credibility he has, offer that resignation?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: Resign. Resign. You do not have the guts to do it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the main issue before the House is not whether the Minister himself is negligent, whether the Minister is personally responsible. In our system of government, he holds a position of trust. He must assume his responsibilities for Finance and for his officials and for everything that goes on under his authority.

So I am very surprised that this Minister has not had the courage, the honesty, in keeping with Parliamentary traditions, to offer the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) his resignation. Since he did not, why did the Prime Minister not ask for his resignation?

[English]

There is no alternative in our system of Government. That is why we need a new Minister of Finance, that is why we need a new Budget, and that is why this a non-event under your authorship.

There is no alternative, there is no substitute for meeting the people's representatives in the House of Commons to have a hastily-called budget presentation before the media and thereby to Canadians.

We have a democratic system. We have a parliamentary system. The people of Canada entrust us with the responsibility of reviewing their taxation and their expenses. The Minister of Finance has abused that trust and in doing so he has abused a fundamental principle of parliamentary democracy.

We are talking about ministerial responsibility. We are talking about the integrity of our system. We are talking about the integrity of our form of government. We are talking about the public's confidence in our system.

We are not talking about whether or not the Prime Minister can salvage the Minister of Finance. We are not talking about whether or not the Minister of Finance can survive.

The Prime Minister should already have demanded his resignation and this Minister should have already resigned.

Some Hon. Members: Resign. Resign.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In the circumstances before you this morning we consider this to be a non-Minister, a non-Budget, and a non-event.

Budget secrecy is not just some minor rule which the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance can throw away at whim.

Mr. Beatty: We heard that at the press conference last night.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is at the heart of how we function as a people. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance know that and they cannot avoid it. It is extraordinary, it is shocking, it is disgraceful that in their arguments so far to the public and this morning here in the House of Commons, the Minister has missed the point. He has perverted our system, attempted to blame the Opposition, and not accepted the responsibility for those for whom he is responsible.

I want to deal with the Minister's argument that it is all the Opposition's fault that we are here this morning.

Standing Order 28(3) gives the authority to the Speaker to call the House of Commons back from adjournment if the Speaker is satisfied after consultation with the Government, that this is in the public interest.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Blame the Speaker.

Mr. Crosbie (St. John's West): Blame the Speaker.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You are shameful.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If, Your Honour, you feel, after being petitioned by a Minister of the Crown, particularly the Government House Leader, that it is in the public interest that Parliament be recalled, you can recall it and you have recalled it on other occasions.

Had the Speaker called the House last night, the Opposition would not have been able to prevent the Minister of Finance from at least presenting the House with his taxation proposals.

Standing Order 83(1) explicitly gives any Minister of the Crown the right to table a notice of Ways and Means motion at any time during the sitting. The Minister could have come in here, Your Honour could have called the House back at the House Leader's urging, surely it was an emergency situation. Then the Minister of Finance could have stood up in this House and presented his Ways and Means motion and spoken to it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Blame the Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Having failed to resign, the Minister of Finance followed his own incorrect course of action. He followed that course of action and acted improperly.

The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are unwilling or unable to seize and to understand that this is a classic, indeed the classic failure, of ministerial responsibility in a parliamentary democracy.

Ministerial responsibility is not just another anachronism, left over from another time, that the Minister of Finance can discard.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Speaking of anachronisms.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is another fundamental facet, another fundamental principle of parliamentary democracy.

For the House of Commons to perform its functions, for our way of government to work in a fair manner, the Minister has no choice but to accept full responsibility for this, the largest violation of budgetary secrecy in the history of the Parliament of Canada.

I heard the Prime Minister on the radio saying: "Well, if a shop gets robbed you do not punish the shopkeeper, I mean it is the thief's fault". My reply was,"It depends on whether or not the door was locked", and in this case the door was not locked.

The Minister of Finance has been unable to control his Department.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What do you know that we don't, John?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He has been unable to meet his fiscal goals as a direct result of his own monetary policy.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Who sent the thief?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): You sent it. You said it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Who sent the thief?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He has been unfair with Canadians in his taxation policy, and now he is unable to deal fairly with the presentation of his policy.

We accuse this Minister of deception in the House of Commons because he did not tell the people the facts last autumn. We accuse this Minister of deception because they said there were spending commitments which have been violated in this document. We accuse the Minister of mismanagement for having doubled the public debt of this country in four short years. Now we accuse him of breach of trust for failing to resign.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Chrétien, Chrétien, Chrétien.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the unanswered questions are legion. When did the Minister of Finance personally find out about the unprecedented release, the budget leak? What did the Minister of Finance do when he did find out?

An Hon. Member: He did not come here.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why didn't he resign immediately? Why, at least, did he not come onto the floor of the House and urge you, as the Speaker, to reconvene the House through his Government House Leader?

When did the Prime Minister find out? Why didn't the Prime Minister immediately demand the resignation of the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Simmons: He knew it at 2:45 yesterday.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why did the Minister of Finance decide to try to proceed with a Budget when the principle of Budget secrecy had been violated? Why did the Prime Minister allow him to proceed in that fashion? Why didn't the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance realize that their trust responsibilities, dating back to the birth of our parliamentary system, forced him to resign to maintain that tradition, or did they not care?

How many other of these documents were floating around?

An Hon. Member: That is the question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Who else knew, and in the meantime what stocks have been traded, what real estate has moved, what other transactions have taken place because these documents were not held confidentially by the Department of Finance? How many millions of dollars, indeed hundreds of millions of dollars, could have been made by the release of these documents?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Why didn't you come to work last night, John?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): How many insiders benefited at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer? What privileged few could have made a killing at the expense of the rest of Canadians? Why didn't the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance realize that hundreds of millions of dollars could have been made at the expense of the ordinary taxpayer? Why didn't they realize that when an entire Budget falls into a few hands it is necessary that the Budget be cancelled, a new date set and a new Minister of Finance appointed?

• (1140)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Or did they care, or did they understand? Why does the Minister not recognize that ordinary Canadians who work hard for their money and pay taxes grudgingly but willingly will not and cannot tolerate a system that is abused, and cannot tolerate the release of an entire budgetary document which may have gone to the benefit and advantage of people we do not know about, but who will surely turn up.

Why don't the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) understand that the 724-year-old rule that lies at the heart of parliamentary democracy and at the heart of our democratic system is there not only because of constitutional proprieties, not only because of constitutional niceties, and not only because Members of Parliament feel they have a special privilege, but because here we have a fiduciary position to protect the ordinary Canadian, and that is why this practice is here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the privileges of all the representatives of the Canadian people have been breached and violated. Even more important, the rights of every single Canadian have been breached and violated. Every single Canadian has the right to feel confident in the understanding and with the assurance that the tax that they pay is revealed, supervised, challenged, controlled, and spent in a fair manner. If Budget secrecy does not apply to all Canadians then the system will not work.

If the Minister of Finance will not resign over the largest release of budgetary information in the history of parliamentary democracy, then there will be chaos in the system, lack of trust, lack of confidence, and lack of willingness of 11 million taxpayers to assess themselves voluntarily and to file that assessment with the Department of Finance.

If the Prime Minister cannot see his failure to compel and force the resignation of his Minister of Finance, or if the Minister of Finance does not understand his role as a custodian of the accounts of this country, and if the Prime Minister does not force the cancellation of the Budget, then he is saying that, fine, it's all right for some Canadians to have inside information while others do not. He is saying that it is all right any time in the future for some Canadians to reap untold millions of dollars of wrongful benefits while other Canadians pay the price.

Mr. McDermid: What nonsense.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): An Hon. Member says "What nonsense". He does not understand what this democracy is all about.

[Translation]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, during this debate, you will hear precedent after precedent, legal arguments, technical arguments, all sorts of things, but the basic argument involves the privileges of Canadians, whose trustees we are and for whom we are responsible. Now is the time for this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), for this Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), to recognize their responsibilities and to comply with the requirements of our Parliamentary system. Let the Minister of Finance resign, because through his Department, he was negligent by allowing a whole budget to be revealed before the date it was to be presented to the House. He violated the privileges of every Canadian by telling them to trust our system, to trust our Parliament, to trust their Government, and above all, their Minister of Finance, who holds the most sensitive and important position after the Prime Minister.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, if you grant me a prima facie case of privilege, not only for the Hon. Members on both sides of the House, not only for the House itself, but for all Canadians, I would be prepared, at your discretion, to present a motion whereby the House can make the final decision.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, this morning when he came into the House the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) raised the question of his alleged claim to an offence of his privileges as a Member. I say to the Minister of Finance that it is all other Members of the House of Commons who have a question of privilege against the incompetence and total irresponsibility of a Minister of Finance who should have resigned this morning.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We have had the clearest possible demonstration coming from the Minister himself, supported by a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who I hope will join in the debate, who is sitting there and giving support to a Minister who comes into the House and does not resign when he ought to, rises on a question of privilege and does not even have the—and I choose my words with care—responsibility to move a motion to have this subject referred to a committee that would examine what went on. That is what the Minister ought to have done, and he did not even move the motion.

The Government that we have seen for a number of years has had all its lines of communication and its standards set by the republic to the south of us. It is in the midst of discovering, and I say this to the Minister and to the Prime Minister, what the supremacy of Parliament and parliamentary democracy is all about in this debate.

The Minister in getting to his feet and in his all too brief statement said that there has been no negligence, there has been tight security and we wonder how it got out. Both of those statements we do not know and they ought to be examined, and then there is something we do know something about. The Minister of Finance said that he came to the House at the earliest possible moment. I say to the Minister that that is not true. The Government knew about this at 5.30 yesterday and it ought to have come to the House at that time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Instead of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) phoning the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and myself and getting us to collaborate in this totally inappropriate course of action, the correct course of action would have been for the Minister of Finance, when he discovered this important breach for which he is ultimately responsible, to have come into the House yesterday, said what happened, and submitted his resignation as an honourable man.

• (1150)

Mr. Broadbent: This tradition of parliamentary supremacy and accountability of Ministers is not a mere secondary aspect about our form of democracy. In the United States of America, Ministers—Secretaries in the Cabinet—do not have to come before Congress. For a President who has done some wrong, the only procedure left open to the American population is the very exceptional impeachment process.

We have in this system accountability of Ministers on a day-to-day basis, on the assumption that they understand they are accountable for what they do to the House of Commons, and if we have ever seen the clearest illustration that they do not understand parliamentary democracy, we have seen it this morning.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, there are many instances in Canada, the U.K., Australia, New Zealand and throughout parliamentary systems in the world where the question of the breach of confidentiality of Budget matters has been raised. Ministers of the Crown this morning know that all of us on this side could quote arguments of past instances from them when they were on this side of the House. And later in the day they may find that their words will be quoted back to them.

But I will say, on a very recent incident involving the then Minister of Finance, Marc Lalonde, in 1983 when the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) and his House Leader at the time were rightly critical of the Minister, that the then Minister at least acknowledged the supremacy of what was involved by having a change made when some information from an alleged document was made public.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Made public by him.

Mr. Broadbent: He had recognized the principle involved by making sure that that did not come back before Parliament as a Budget. This Government had the effrontery not only to claim it can go right ahead with everything it has produced, even though the whole country knows, but the Government used television instead of coming before the Parliament of Canada to present that Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It would be perfectly understandable if people witnessing this debate in Atlantic Canada—in the province of Québec, in the Prairies or in British Columbia, all Canadians want to know exactly what is going on, want to understand exactly the reason the Opposition Parties are completely against the Government on this point. I would like to explain.

[English]

It is not a question, Mr. Speaker, about the rules that are pertinent to the conduct of some kind of game or sport activity. What we are involved in now is the accountability of the Government for literally millions of dollars of public expenditure, taxpayers' money—indeed, billions of dollars. So the secrecy that we talk about as being essential in the parliamentary tradition has behind it an entirely appropriate concern about the public good.

I want to mention just a couple of items that have become public as being seen to be part of what the Government is describing as its Budget. One, the complete privatization of Air Canada. Two, a major change in defence expenditure. When I heard of this yesterday and heard there was no resignation, I asked myself, what time does the stock market close; what time did this information become available? We now know, Mr. Speaker, that that information was available perhaps as early as 2.45 p.m. yesterday. If there was one journalist who had that information and presented it on the public network at supper time, the relevant question that a Minister of Finance ought to be concerned about is who else had it and who may or may not have phoned his or her stockbroker to make a deal on the Toronto or the Montreal Stock Exchanges. If people did that, then I say that the Minister of Finance is responsible—if they did it, I say to him, and he has no way of knowing if they did or not—for privileged access by a small group of Canadians who might have made millions of dollars at the expense of the public, and for that and that alone, the Minister of Finance should be resigning.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I cannot understand why a Minister of Finance who claims to be concerned about his privileges would speak so briefly about such a fundamental matter without having a motion to refer this to a committee of the House to examine it. If he believes there was no breach of security, why is the Minister not prepared to do the traditional thing and have a committee examine the matter? If he says there was no negligence in any way on the part of his staff or his Department, why will the Minister not have a committee look at the matter? In particular, Mr. Speaker, I say that when the Minister came here and said to the House of Commons and to the people of Canada that he spoke and acted as soon as possible, we know that that is false. For those reasons, among others, there ought to be a committee examining this very serious breach of trust.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The privilege involved does not involve simply the Minister of Finance. I was informed that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had attempted to contact me after supper time yesterday. His office was calling, and no doubt this call was followed up by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) who contacted both the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and myself about this matter. Once I heard there was a Budget leak and had it confirmed that it was on television, I asked myself, did the Minister of Finance—he has not told us this yet—go to the Prime Minister and offer his resignation, which he ought to have done? Did he offer his resignation? If he did not, did the Prime Minister, who has responsibility for all the Ministers of the Crown, do the right thing and get the Minister of Finance on the phone and say, "Look, Michael, this may or may not have been your direct responsibility but you are accountable to Parliament, to the people of Canada, and I, as the Prime Minister, ask for your resignation"?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: What is at stake here is not simply the credibility of the Minister of Finance, which is now completely shot, but also the credibility of this Government and the Prime Minister who had presented before them a situation on which the Prime Minister ought to have acted and did not. The people of Canada will have noted that as well.

We say that instead of proceeding later today, as the Government would hope, with a Budget debate at five o'clock with this Minister of Finance, we say this Minister of Finance should no longer be Minister of Finance. We say that the Prime Minister should name forthwith a new Minister of Finance and he should withdraw this alleged Budget, set a new Budget date down the road and do the proper thing for the people of Canada.

In that connection, Mr. Speaker, if you judge in responding to these points of privilege raised by the Leader of the Opposition and myself in response to the Minister of Finance, I want to suggest the wording of a motion to which I would like to see the Government respond affirmatively before you make a ruling. I use the words used by the then Opposition House Leader in 1983 in a similar—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Not similar.

Mr. Broadbent: —circumstance involving a Minister of Finance, and I say to the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Beatty: It was dissimilar.

Mr. Broadbent: —who spoke at that time in defence of the motion moved by his Party then in opposition that if the logic and reason of these words made sense then, if they reflected honestly the correct parliamentary traditions, not only of Canada but around the world, then they make sense in 1989.

• (1200)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, if you rule that there is a prima facie case, I would be prepared at the right time to move the following:

> That a special committee be appointed to inquire into all the circumstances relating to or associated with the disclosure of Budget information on April 26, and that the committee consist of 11 Members of the House, and that the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records.

I hope that a Government that has demonstrated no commitment to integrity in the past 24 hours on this important issue will do the right thing, that this Government will rise and support this motion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate on the point made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). I appreciate the remarks that the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) just made vis–a–vis that tremendous speech that I made in 1983. I do not remember winning the argument. There are some very good reasons why I did not win the argument.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: I would like to point out if I may to our hon. friend that in 1983 there was no RCMP investigation, such as is under way at the present time. That is the difference.

It is important that we lay the facts on the record and we do it in a manner in which the House will understand and the Canadian public will understand because it is important that the people know how this Government acted and how responsibly we acted under the circumstances.

An Hon. Member: It was a cover–up.

Mr. Lewis: There is no question that there was a television program in which a reporter in the first instance referred to an uncorroborated suggestion that there had been a leak of Budget material. You will note that that particular reporter—I know that it is a little beyond your jurisdiction but let me say this, if the tapes were reviewed, I think you would find that that particular reporter, in a responsible manner, did not run the story until he had it corroborated. That is right. He did not run the story until he had it corroborated. We were aware of that story on the wire. We were aware of that story on the wire. But when that reporter held up a copy of the pamphlet entitled Budget in Brief, it became evident to the Government that—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —this was much more than informed speculation, that there was in fact a theft of Budget material. I think you would find the record would show that when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition spoke, and when the Leader of the New Democratic Party spoke, we asked our Members to give them the courtesy that they were owed in this House—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Lewis Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question becomes, and this is the question that the people are asking, what did the Government do?

An Hon. Member: When did the Government do it? When did the Government know it?

An Hon. Member: That is the question.

An Hon. Member: Shame on you.

Mr. Lewis: Immediately that seven o'clock program confirmed that there had been a theft of Budget material, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) convened a group of senior Ministers and officials to discuss what action we should take to properly correct a very serious situation. We met, we considered and we acted. Here is the important point: We have talked about traditions in this place and there are some traditions. If you want to bring one tradition into play, you bring them all into play.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: There are some traditions, and I will get to the proof a little later on, that prevail. We acted immediately. I did it myself. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will know this. At 8.05 p.m., I phoned the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and I advised him of the following. This is what I said because I read from notes.

An Hon. Member: Did you tape it?

Mr. Lewis: No, absolutely not. You know me better than that. You know me better than that. I do not for a minute suggest that you taped me, sir.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): No, sir, it was not worth it.

Mr. Lewis: I said this: "Somebody in a position of public trust has leaked Budget information to the public and we must act quickly and responsibly. I ask for your co-operation to call the House into session tonight in order that the public be informed as soon as possible and the Minister may deliver his Budget in the House of Commons."

An Hon. Member: Did you go to the Speaker?

Mr. Lewis: I will get to that in a minute. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said: "I understand this. I'll get back to you or call me back.", telephones being what they are these days. The same call was placed at 8.10 p.m. to the Leader of the New Democratic Party and the same message was given to him. He said: "I'll get back to you or you get back to me". We took these right hon. gentlemen at their word.

An Hon. Member: Why did you not speak to the Speaker?

Mr. Lewis There has been a suggestion, and let me deal with that now, that we should have used Standing Order 28(3). It is our position that we have every right to use the rules but we have no right to abuse the rules.

Some Hon. Members Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: At six o'clock last evening the Speaker rose and said, and I am paraphrasing, this House stands adjourned until 11 a.m. tomorrow morning. That is notice to every Member in this House, be that the Government side or Opposition or even my friend from the independent Party. That is the notice that she and every Member is entitled to, that there is no more Government business until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning. It is our position that had we tried to approach the Speaker under Standing Order 28(3), we would have found ourselves in the wrong court. That rule is for use by the Government as follows:

> 28. (3) Whenever the House stands adjourned, if the Speaker is satisfied, after consultation with the Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time, the Speaker may give notice—and thereupon the House shall meet to transact its business—

Et cetera. If one reads the annotated notes—

• (1210)

Mr. Boudria: That is out of order.

Mr. Lewis: It may be out of order to read the notes—

Mr. Lapierre: Don't abuse the rules.

Mr. Lewis: If one reads it one will see that it refers specifically to the House being recessed during the calendar, not overnight. I submit it would have been an abuse to go before—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) could indicate before he gets into argument what his point of order is.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): It is my understanding that when what is called the Annotated Standing Orders of the House of Commons were tabled in this House it was stated by you, Sir, that the annotations were not to be referred to in argument. If that is correct then I would like to draw that to the attention of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Speaker: I think the Minister of Justice had put aside the annotated notes and was arguing freely.

Mr. Lewis: Surely the point is that we sought the co-operation of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party—officers of this House. We sought that co-operation. It was not forthcoming because when we phoned back they said: "No, I am sorry, we cannot co-operate".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: "We cannot co-operate. We can go to a press conference but we cannot come back to this House of Commons. We can go to the other side of Wellington Street but we cannot come to the House of Commons".

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lewis: We sought that co-operation in the best traditions of this House—

Mr. Riis: That is a cover-up.

Mr. Lewis: —and it was denied to us. Under those circumstances the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) went before the media and disclosed all the contents of the Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: In keeping with the traditions of this House the full copies were tabled with the Clerk. We went public as soon as we could, in a responsible manner.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: That is the issue. There have been a great many comments about precedents .There have been references to them but nobody has cared to get much into the meat of the precedents.

In 1936 in the United Kingdom there was some unusual activity in the insurance market. There was a tribunal held. It was concluded that a Cabinet Minister, not the Chancellor of the Exchequer, had leaked budget information for personal gains of a private citizen. The Minister resigned.

Mr. Lapierre: Good precedent.

Mr. Lewis: In 1947 in the United Kingdom, and this is the famous Dalton case, on his way in to deliver a Budget the Chancellor of the Exchequer in an offhand remark said something to a reporter such as: "You'd better buy your cigarettes now because the price is going up tonight".

Ms. Copps: What happened?

Mr. Lewis: This is what happened. The Minister resigned.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): One hell of a precedent.

Mr. Lewis: The distinction of course is that there is no direct relation in this case between the Minister of Finance and the stolen Budget document—none whatsoever. There is no suggestion of that at all.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: In that case the Minister gave the information away. In this case our Minister has no connection with that document.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Now I would like to get to the Canadian precedents if I may, Mr. Speaker.

In March, 1982, details of the Saskatchewan Budget were aired on CBC television three days before the Budget. The Minister tabled his Budget as planned and although he was reported to have tendered his resignation, it was not accepted. He did not resign. That distinguishes that precedent.

In April, 1983—and here is one with a close connection—details of the Lalonde Budget were put forward in a photo-op by the Minister himself holding it up. What happened? He came to the Commons the next day with a changed Budget. The Minister did not resign.

Mr. Broadbent: It was changed!

Mr. Lewis: In May, 1983, a reporter found some Ontario Government Budget papers in a garbage can outside a printing company before Budget day. The information became public. The Provincial Treasurer, Frank Miller, did not resign.

Mr. Riis: Where is he now?

Mr. Lewis: In May, 1987, the Québec Finance Minister faced a similar situation in which some details of his impending Budget were leaked to the press. The Minister immediately tabled the Budget a week ahead of schedule. He did not resign.

Mr. Lapierre: He offered his resignation first.

Mr. Lewis: Here is the Abbot example for the Liberal Party side of things. Mr. Abbot said this: "I announced some two or three weeks in advance of Parliament being in session, although it had been announced that Parliament was called, that it was the Government's intention and my intention when Parliament was convened to ask Parliament to enact these particular taxes effective from November 17. The conclusion that I arrived at and the Government arrived at after a great deal of consideration was that the circumstances were so exceptional, the emergency was so great that action should be taken".

That is another case wherein a Minister announced details on the radio, came to the House and that was his defence. The Minister did not resign.

I wish to talk about co-operation for a minute. The Leader of the New Democratic Party talked about traditions. I would tell him that the respecting of traditions is perhaps a little more highly held by one Bob Rae who has broken ranks with the Leader of the New Democratic Party and said that it was not necessary for Mr. Wilson to resign.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: What does that prove?

Mr. Lewis: Last, I want to deal with the action of Mr. Stanfield in 1968. When the Government of the day, the Liberal Government, lost a vote at third reading on a finance Bill there was great confusion in the realm. What happened? Mr. Pearson went to Mr. Stanfield and said that he wanted an adjournment of the House in order to regroup and decide what action the Government should take.

Mr. Valcourt: In the best interests of Canada.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, in the best interests of Canada. In the best interests of Canada there was an adjournment. That would have been the parallel to saying: "Look, we come into the House of Commons and sit tonight. You can get your people here and we know that". That would have been a tradition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: The point is that Mr. Stanfield saw a greater sense of value in this place than pure political marks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: Then let us have an election on this Budget.

Mr. Lewis: I want to wind up in this manner if I may. I am not here defending the suggestion that the Minister of Finance resign because there is no reason that he should resign. There is no reason for that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I am defending the traditions of this place and what the responsibility of a Government is when it finds it has a problem on its hands. We could have sat it out. We could have brazened it out. We could have said, no, no, we don't believe what we see on television. We could have waited until five o'clock this afternoon. No, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) convened the meeting I spoke of.

• (1220)

Mr. Lapierre: To ask the Opposition to co-operate.

Mr. Lewis: Once it was proven at seven o'clock, it became no question. How did we go public as soon as possible—

Mr. Lapierre: What did you do before 5.30 and six o'clock?

Mr. Lewis: —in the interest of all the people of Canada? We tried, as we had to, to get the co-operation of the opposition Parties. I make no apology for that. I said to them: "Put partisanship aside. Come in to the House of Commons." It did not work. That is fine. We will be judged by how we conducted ourselves. They will be judged by how they conducted themselves.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: This Government is ready to be judged on how we acted.

Mr. Kaplan: Let's have an election.

Mr. Epp: You don't have a leader.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I submit there is no point of privilege. I thank you for the opportunity to make these remarks.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has the kind of look on his face which indicates to me he must be saying to himself after hearing the speech of the Minister of Justice that he thinks he should get himself another lawyer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): It has been a long time since this House and the Canadian people have heard such an inept and unconvincing attempt to defend the indefensible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) said we have every right to use the rules, but we have no right to abuse the rules. This point did not seem to concern the Minister of Justice when last June and last December he and the government Members butchered the rules in an attempt to get their way with this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The Minister of Justice obviously failed to carry out his first responsibility to his Government and to this House when he failed to even approach the Speaker and ask the Speaker if he would be willing to apply Standing Order 28(3).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The Minister of Justice confirmed that when the House adjourned yesterday, the Speaker said that the House stands adjourned, which clearly is the foundation for the application of Standing Order 28(3) which reads:

> Whenever the House stands adjourned, if the Speaker is satisfied after consultation with the Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time, the Speaker may give notice that being so satisfied the House shall meet, and thereupon the House shall meet to transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time.

The Hon. Minister of Justice speaks of parliamentary tradition. Surely the basis for that tradition is to at least approach the Speaker when the rules of this House give some reasonable basis to do so, to ask the Speaker to use the authority this House has given him in the Standing Orders. If the Minister of Justice did not do so, then he has no business trying to blame the opposition Parties for his incompetence and that of his colleagues.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the co-operation of the opposition Parties was not required to have the House sit last night if that is what the Government thought it was in the public interest to do. All that had to be done was to approach you, Sir, and ask that the Standing Order be applied. But, it is clear the Government was more interested in scrambling around trying to hide its own problems, trying to find some way out, than relying on the parliamentary tradition that the Minister of Justice is crying about right now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his own equally unconvincing statement earlier today, said that he was in the clear because, as far as he could determine, there was no negligence on the part of his officials, and that there was some type of deliberate effort to have the information in the Budget in the hands of the public before it was done properly pursuant to the rules and traditions of this House.

The Minister of Finance has given no facts, no evidence, no basis on which this House or the Canadian people can accept that this statement is correct, and that there has been a sufficient examination of what went on to reach that conclusion. In any event the Minister must take responsibility for the actions or inactions of his officials. This was clearly established in a recent court case in the Federal Court of Appeal where it was determined that the former Member for Kingston and the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) had to take responsibility for the actions of their officials even though they were not personally informed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): If the Minister of Finance was so concerned about doing things in the right way, then he should have come in to the House, accepted his responsibility, resigned and said that he was withdrawing this Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The Minister of Justice has not demonstrated to this House, nor to the Canadian people, that it was not possible for a limited number of individuals to benefit improperly through the early disclosure of the information in his Budget. We have been doing some checking, and it is certainly clear from the information that we have that people in various time zones around the country or around the world could well have learned of this information in the Budget when it was broadcast, and that orders for transactions could have been given in various Exchanges in a way that they could benefit from enormously, in ways that were quite absent from the opportunities of Canadians generally.

The Minister of Finance comes in here and sanctimoniously tries to wash his hands of the whole matter.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): But that is not enough in terms of his responsibility as Minister of Finance and in terms of his responsibility as a Minister of the Crown for those who answer to him.

The final point I want to make is with respect to precedent. It is interesting to hear the Minister of Justice trying to recant the words he used in this House in 1983 in connection with the Lalonde case, a very different case. It involved only one small element of a budget, and did not involve anything from which people could have benefited personally. The Minister of Justice, as I have said, is attempting to recant his words. I do not know if the Minister of Finance behind the curtains has wrestled him to the ground and made him cry uncle and go into the House to do this, but these words are still on the record of Hansard. These words are an endorsement of other words spoken by the present Minister of Industry, Science and Technology, the then Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). The Member for Calgary Centre said in Hansard at page 24635:

> It has been established very clearly that there has been important information leaked to the public, information that dramatically affects public financial markets from a document identified by the Minister of Finance as the Budget.

The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) went on to say:

> This House has the absolute right to establish procedures, rules and requirements. One of the absolute rights of the House, established over hundreds of years, is the right to hear the Government's budgetary proposal before anybody else, or simultaneously with anybody else.

The Member went on to say:

> Nothing could be more fundamental to the privileges of every Member elected by Canadian citizens than that we be told of the budget by the Minister of Finance in this House and not learn about it from television reports or speeches that he makes to the Chamber of Commerce or by some other method. Nothing is more fundamental than that, Madam Speaker. Any self-respecting Minister of Finance would resign.

Those are the words of the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre in 1983. I trust he will not get up and try to recant what he put on the record at that time, because he made a very valid and sound statement of principle that should be followed by the Government, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) today.

After the Member for Calgary Centre took his seat, the Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), now the Minister of Justice, was recognized and said, as reported at page 24636 of Hansard:

> Madam Speaker, I wish to address a few brief remarks to this question of privilege and perhaps to wrap up the argument for this side.

He went on to say:

> —I support the argument of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), that the privileges of all Members of the House have been breached in that we read about and saw on television matters which were obviously in the budget which will be presented tonight.
> It is a breach of our privileges as Members that this material was disseminated through the media before it was presented to the House. The effect on the market, the effect on what action private citizens will take, has yet to be seen. The question of whether or not the Prime Minister will stand on tradition has yet to be known.

Then the Minister of Justice went on to argue that one of the privileges of Members of this House was the right to confidentiality. Then he in effect concluded by saying:

> We would argue that in either case, whether you take the argument of the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre or my argument, the privileges of a Member or Members of the House have been breached.

The Member for Calgary Centre and the present Minister of Justice, as I understood their remarks, did not put qualifications on them to limit them only to the case of the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Lalonde. They were stating what they considered to be principles of general and permanent application. It is hardly credible for the Minister of Justice now to get on his feet and say: "I recant, I did not mean to say what I did, I wish I could expunge it from the record". It is there. It is on the record. It counts now no less than the Minister of Justice intended it to count at that time.

If these words are on the record and if the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) are serious about their responsibilities, and in particular if the Prime Minister is serious about his responsibilities, he will insist that the Minister of Finance resign and that there be a new Budget. The Canadian people, through their elected representatives in this House, deserve no less. They deserved far better from the Minister of Finance last night. They deserve far better from the Minister of Finance today, the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister, then the inept, unconvincing crocodile tears about how the Minister of Finance mismanaged his responsibiities.

I think it is clear that the Minister of Finance must resign. This Budget must be withdrawn. Otherwise there is no way that the democratic process and the role of this House can be taken seriously any longer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to rise to make a couple of points in response to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Opposition House Leader for whom I have a great deal of respect in a parliamentary sense. I want to say that in all sincerity, but I believe they are distorting the interpretation of Standing Order 28(3) and I think it has to be clarified once and for all.

They are suggesting in the House today, Mr. Speaker, that you could have called the House back sometime last night without the consent of the opposition Parties. I think that would have been physically impossible—

Mr. Tobin: What about last summer?

Mr. Mazankowski: Can you just wait a minute? I think it would have been physically impossible because, in order for the Speaker to do so after being satisfied that there was an emergency situation and indeed it was in the public interest to resume the sitting of the House, it would have then been necessary for the Speaker to give notice to every individual Member of Parliament.

An Hon. Member: So?

Mr. Mazankowski: The Speaker has to ensure that adequate notice has been served. What is adequate notice, Mr. Speaker? Perhaps in the course of rendering a decision you will be able to elaborate on that, but I think you will find that generally, when we talk about tradition, convention and precedents, it is at least 48 hours.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, come on!

Mr. Mazankowski: At least 48 hours. I know there have been cases when there has been a special Order Paper initiated in 24 hours.

Mr. Tobin: You can't have it both ways.

Mr. Mazankowski: If you had decided that indeed there was a case of an emergency, it would have been impossible to convene the House on that basis, under Standing Order 28(3), for at least 24 hours or possibly 48 hours.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Everyone should know that the only way that this House could have come back sometime last night, whether it be at ten o'clock, twelve o'clock, one o'clock or two o'clock in the morning, would have been with the unanimous consent of all the Members of the House.

Mr. Gauthier: Nonsense. That is nonsense. Once again you are distorting the rules.

Mr. Mazankowski: Second, after convening the House, what would have been the order of business? There was no order for that day. There would be no Order Paper. Again, for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to introduce, produce and present his Budget to the House would have required unanimous consent. On a double case, we would have needed unanimous consent on both counts.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): You know it, John.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is the point that the Hon. Members across are overlooking. You have two cases.

What the House Leader outlined are the steps that the Government took in the best traditions of parliamentary democracy to call the House back under consent—

Ms. Copps: Resign.

Mr. Peterson: You're desperate.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am not desperate. I am as good a parliamentarian as you are, and I have done as much as you have to preserve parliamentary tradition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I get a little annoyed when I hear people talking about the subversion of Parliament when they indeed subvert the rules—

Ms. Copps: Oh, come on!

Mr. Mazankowski: —and disallow Parliament to function in a normal fashion. That is the inconsistency of the Opposition.

I have never heard such doubletalk. On the one hand they charge the Government with subverting the rules, with contempt of Parliament—

Mr. Broadbent: What about the ringing of the bells?

Mr. Mazankowski: —with affronting the institution. What has really happened is that the Opposition has denied Parliament the opportunity to deal with this.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What a laugh.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has indeed blocked the parliamentary process by his actions last night—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You can't be serious.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and the NDP. Then he comes into the House and talks about the sanctity of Parliament. In the same breath he turns his back on Parliament.

• (1240)

What nonsense, Mr. Speaker. He denied Parliament the opportunity to function as it should. Though he takes us back to 1265 in history, he does not have to go that far back.

As the House Leader outlined, we have the rather interesting situation where a former Minister of Finance, the Hon. Douglas Abbott, brought forth a Budget in a radio broadcast on November 17, 1947 when the House was not in session. Then he came back into the House on March 9, 1948 when the House was convened, and adopted the Budget.

The Hon. Leader of the Opposition says that Parliament has the right to control expenditures, that Parliament has to approve the Budget.

An Hon. Member: Why have us here then?

Mr. Mazankowski: No one is denying Parliament that right under the situation that we have before us today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Just so it is abundantly clear to all Members of this House and all members of the Canadian public, we are not denying Parliament the opportunity to deal with this Budget.

Mr. Gauthier: You already did. You already have.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is absolutely wrong.

Mr. Gauthier: You did last night. You have failed. Listen to your mandate.

Mr. Tobin: You have failed. You should resign.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is nonsense and you know it. Parliament will still have the opportunity to pass judgement on this Budget, every line, every detail, every corresponding piece of legislation. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that, and so does the Leader of the NDP.

Ms. Copps: How many leakers do you have over there?

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Leader of the Opposition talks about the primacy of Parliament, and then he and his colleagues and friends in the NDP do everything in their power to hijack it.

Mr. Riis: You stormed the chair. What about you ringing the bells?

Mr. Mazankowski: What nonsense. Squeal a little more. Squeal a little more. That is all you have been able to do on this issue.

Mr. Riis: You do not know what you are talking about.

Ms. Copps: You are the hijacker.

Mr. Marchi: Selective memory.

Mr. Riis: Storm the chair.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Government has taken every available course of action.

Mr. Riis: Except the right one.

Mr. Broadbent: Try the right one now.

Mr. Kaplan: We need a new Budget. Back to the drawing board. That is what you should do.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Members want the resignation of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Riis: You will never do that.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, may I say to you and the Leaders of the two opposition Parties and the Members of the House, you are not going to get his resignation.

Mr. Nault: How much money did you make?

Mr. Mazankowski: I am deeply disappointed at the cheap political tactics of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition who should know better.

Ms. Copps: Out, out, out.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why don't you get the Prime Minister up on his feet?

Mr. Beatty: Back to the cameras, John.

Ms. Copps: If the heat gets too high he will cut him loose.

Mr. Speaker: I would remind the Hon. Members that despite the seriousness with which all Hon. Members view this matter, it is still a question of privilege, and I would ask the Hon. Members to assist the Chair in that regard.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He is provoking his own reaction.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Government took every step available to fulfil the parliamentary traditions in every respect.

An Hon. Member: Remember Stevens?

Ms. Copps: Stevens. He's coming back too.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is customary that Budgets be presented to the House, but there have been deviations, as I have outlined in the case of Mr. Douglas Abbott, and in the extraordinary circumstances that prevailed last evening it required co-operation and goodwill on the part of all Members of this House in order to deal with this issue—

Ms. Copps: If the heat gets too high he will cut him loose.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and that was not forthcoming.

We hear a lot about goodwill and we hear a lot about co-operation, and you and I know that this House cannot function without a certain amount of goodwill and co-operation, and I have heard it from you and I have heard it from Members across, and in cases where there are extraordinary circumstances, that is when this institution really lives to the fullest. I am sorry to say that it did not do that last night primarily because of the lack of co-operation of the two Leaders of the Opposition.

Ms. Copps: It was already on TV. It's a big leak.

Mr. Mazankowski: What we have here is a classical case of political opportunism.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Exactly.

Mr. Tobin: The last time you were this articulate was on behalf of Sinclair Stevens. We have heard it before.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am sure most Canadians will interpret it that way. It is a case of political chicanery, and I say to the Leader of the Opposition that he is not serving Canada and he is not serving the public interest of Canada by his actions. I doubt very much that he is even serving his own political interests, and I am not sure what his political interests are these days, but he is certainly not serving the interests of Canada.

Mr. Gauthier: Cheap shot.

Some Hon. Members: Cheap, cheap, cheap.

Mr. Gauthier: Look at the smile on his face.

Ms. Copps: Don't you have the guts to stand up, Brian? Why don't you stand up and defend your Minister?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Are you feeling all right, Sheila?

Ms. Copps: We know you will cut him loose.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Feeling all right, Sheila?

Mr. Gauthier: You can't.

Mr. Mazankowski: In extraordinary circumstances this institution comes together. We have talked about the case in 1968 when Mr. Stanfield rose above partisan interests and came to the call of the public interest of Canada, and I say to the Hon. Leader of the Opposition that that is what he should be doing now.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You were against him at that time. You thought it was the wrong move too. I remember what you thought.

Mr. Mulroney: He says it was the wrong move.

Mr. Mazankowski: I know that the Hon. Leader of the Opposition has had more parliamentary experience than I have, he was here when I came here in 1968, and I always respected his commitment to this institution.

An Hon. Member: But you stayed.

Mr. Mazankowski: He has always demonstrated his commitment to this institution and he was always an excellent parliamentarian, and I think he still is, but I ask him on this occasion to rise above political partisanship.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You get me right here.

Mr. Gauthier: You insult people and drag in the arguments.

Mr. Mazankowski: Put the public interest first, put Canada first.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The public interest is that that fellow resign. That is the public interest.

Mr. Mazankowski: The precedents are very clear.

Ms. Copps: Why doesn't the Prime Minister speak? He is going to cut him loose. Why doesn't he defend his Minister?

Mr. Mazankowski: If the Hon. Member is suggesting that his Party is going to fall down on the side of the criminal act and support the criminal act that occurred, if that is the choice that they are taking, then I am very, very much—

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Mazankowski: Because if he does that, what he is really saying is that, in the future, any act of sabotage such as we have witnessed yesterday is going to become commonplace, so that it will be impossible for any Finance Minister in the future to function, and he should consider that as well.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, come on. Come on.

Mr. Kristiansen: The negligence is over there.

Ms. Copps: Why doesn't the Prime Minister defend him? He is going to cut him loose.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am sure that over the course of lunch the Leader of the Opposition may have cause to reflect and think about this, because I think it is a very urgent matter.

Mr. Simmons: Get off it.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is a very urgent matter, and I would hope that he would again put the interests of the country first.

Mr. Crawford: Put Canadians first.

Mr. Gauthier: Never mind your rich friends. How about the rest of Canadians?

Mr. Mazankowski: You may regret that remark someday. You are making an underhanded accusation that is totally unfair.

• (1250)

Mr. Gauthier: You can't tell the truth, Maz, and you know it.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister has the floor.

Mr. Mazankowski: If the Hon. Member opposite is alleging that I had something to do with this budgetary theft that helps my rich friends, then I think that is a very serious charge. If the Hon. Member wants to make that charge, he knows what he can do.

Ms. Copps: Who else had the Budget?

Mr. Mazankowski: I conclude by saying to you, Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House, that Parliament is not being circumvented in this case. The Budget is before the House now and the honour is still there.

An Hon. Member: No, it's not.

Mr. Mazankowski: It will be at five o'clock. Just because the Leader of the Opposition does not want to co-operate, that does not mean to say that the will of the House will not prevail.

Ms. Copps: Another cheap shot.

Mr. Mazankowski: Parliament is not being circumvented, nor is the Government on a course which would disallow Parliament from dealing with all aspects of the Budget, so that is not the case at all.

I remind you again, Mr. Speaker, that it was the Opposition that prevented Parliament from working in this case. I make that point again, and again, and again.

Mr. Gauthier: Wrong, wrong, wrong.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): They wouldn't come to work.

Mr. Gauthier: You're desperate, Maz.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Minister of Finance acted responsibly under the circumstances and took every step available to ensure that the integrity of the Budget was upheld and that all Canadians were informed as quickly and as fairly as possible. He did it, and I stand 100 per cent behind him in that exercise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Finally, the Minister of Finance rose in his place this morning at eleven o'clock and explained to his colleagues, his peers in the House of Commons, in a chronological manner, outlining in full detail what occurred—

Ms. Copps: What time did he find out about it?

Mr. Mazankowski: —and what steps he took in order to preserve the integrity of the Budget and to preserve the economic welfare of the country. The Opposition is playing with fire in this particular case.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, Mr. Speaker, they are playing with fire.

Mr. Tobin: You wouldn't know the truth if it jumped up and bit you on the nose. You haven't spoken the truth today.

Mr. Mazankowski: You are playing with the lives of Canadians.

Ms. Copps: How come the Prime Minister hasn't said anything? He's going to cut him loose. He's not defending his Minister.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Members opposite are playing with the welfare of Canadians. They are playing with the integrity of the Canadian economy. They have a choice. They can go on with their political gamesmanship and their political chicanery, or they can choose Canada and stand up for Canada, and now is their opportunity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, today we are witnessing something that is unbelievable. Here is a Government that pulls the biggest parliamentary blunder in parliamentary history and then blames the Opposition for what it has done.

Mr. Riis: It is unbelievable. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) talks about the sabotage that occurred. What we have seen today is the sabotage of the parliamentary process and parliamentary traditions as the Government has turned this place into some combination of Sesame Street and Saturday Night Live.

It is unmitigated gall on the part of government Members to stand up and make suggestions in terms of serving Parliament and parliamentary traditions, and acting in a co-operative way. This was the Government that stormed the Chair of the Speaker. This was the Government that stopped the House of Commons from working for 16 days. This was the Party that not only muzzled Parliament but now has set aside 700 years of parliamentary tradition and has introduced a Budget at a press conference. That is the type of situation we are seeing, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Riis: Let me return to some of the comments made by the House Leader of the Government. He began his remarks by suggesting that he called the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party and explained to them that a leak had occurred.

An Hon. Member: A theft.

Mr. Riis: No, he said that a leak had occurred. He read from his notes and he communicated that a leak had occurred.

It is interesting that he had also stated that there was no way that we could refer this to a committee for investigation because the RCMP is already looking into it. I want to remind the Minister that he was one of the most articulate spokespersons when the RCMP was looking into the Mackasey and the Masse affair. He wanted to call for parliamentary investigation at the same time. He cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: We are well aware that the Government, some time during the day yesterday, at least by 2.30 yesterday afternoon, or perhaps a day earlier, or perhaps an hour earlier—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): False.

Mr. Lapierre: How do you know, Joe? Are you the new policeman on that side?

Mr. Riis: —but by 2.30 in the afternoon information of the Budget had leaked out and security had been broken.

At 5.30 p.m. when Parliament was sitting, Global television from Ottawa phoned the office of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and informed his officials of the details of the Budget. They were not some vague references to the Budget, but the details of the Budget. They articulated point after point what was in the Budget. That means that at that time the Minister of Finance knew precisely that the Budget had been leaked some time previously.

We know at least that one document went public. I recall that the Minister of Justice said that they only believed it when they saw the picture on television. However, by 5.30 at least they knew that the details had been leaked out to at least one journalist. How much more had been leaked out and to whom is unknown. However, at that time the Minister of Finance knew that there had been a leak. He did not know how extensive that leak was, but at that time he should have done the honourable thing and come into the Chamber of the House of Commons and offered his resignation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: That did not occur. The Deputy Prime Minister ran in, the Minister of Justice ran in. They huddled and decided that, perhaps to buy some time, the hours of the House should be extended. These discussions always take place with the House Leaders, and there were no discussions. Out of the blue, just before six o'clock, the Minister of Justice rose and asked to extend the hours. Again, this is a clear indication that they were well aware that a Budget leak had occurred at that time.

It would have been at that time that the Minister of Finance should have done the honourable thing, offered his resignation, and while the House was sitting, indicated that there would not be a Budget, that the Budget process would be put off for a number of weeks, and that a proper Budget would be brought in at a proper time by a proper Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: It is incomprehensible for the Deputy Prime Minister to suggest that sometime during the evening, after the information had been leaked, after the news media had presented the details of the Budget, members of the Opposition could be expected to co-operate in some kind of a rescue operation, or some kind of a cover-up operation, to give the illusion that this was an appropriate process, by agreeing to recall the House of Commons so that the Minister of Finance could stand up at that point, after it was public information, and indicate the details of the Budget. It was irresponsible of the Minister to even ask members of the Opposition to co-operate in that manner.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will know that it is one o'clock, and ordinarily we would adjourn until 2 p.m. The Chair is, of course, in the hands of the Members.

Some Hon. Members: Call it one o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

LEAK OF DOCUMENT—REPORTS IN NEWSPAPERS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I sat in my seat this morning and watched the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) smirk as points of order and questions of privilege were raised relating to the very serious matter of this major Budget leak. I look at The Ottawa Citizen of today which suggests that at least 20 people have known about the Budget contents for several days. I look at the Toronto Globe and Mail, in which the chairman of Air Canada, at a meeting that took place yesterday and finished at 12.30 is broadly hinting to shareholders that there will be a sell-out announced in the Budget today.

When the Government of Canada and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) do not have the integrity to resign on an issue of such fundamental importance, how many people sold off their shares, how many people made money? How many people speculated on submarines as a result of this major leak which was caused by the negligence of this Government and by a Prime Minister and a Minister who take Budget secrecy and treat it as a joke. Why did the Prime Minister not stand up in the House this morning and speak to the issue? He hung his Minister out to dry because he knows the Minister was negligent. He knows that the information was flying fast and furious around—

An Hon. Member: He should resign.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

CONSEQUENCES FOR THE FUTURE

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, the measures announced in the 1989 Budget are aimed at reinforcing the efforts made in our first term to control and substantially reduce the national debt.

S. O. 31

The Budget contains a comprehensive program for expenditure reduction, designed to deal directly with the debt problem and to make it possible to pursue major initiatives that will enable the Canadian economy to produce more jobs, offer more opportunities and raise the standard of living of Canadians.

Thanks to these budgetary measures, by 1993 the deficit will have declined to $15 billion, less than half its present level.

It was incumbent on the Canadian Government to take such measures so as not to leave a legacy of debt to future generations.

The solution is obvious: We must start paying today, to avoid suffering tomorrow, and that is what we are doing as responsible managers.

Canadians are responsible people, and I am convinced they will support the Government's decision and will congratulate the Government on having the courage and insight to ensure the future prosperity of this country for generations to come.

CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, during the past 24 hours we have witnessed an unprecedented failure on the part of a Minister of Finance in the exercise of his responsibilities to this Parliament and to the people of Canada. Never in the history of parliamentary democracy has such a complete disclosure of a Budget occurred. The issue here is at the heart of the parliamentary system. The issue here is the integrity of the parliamentary system itself. It is the duty of the Finance Minister to protect that integrity.

The Minister does not seem to understand that this leak may have led to an unfair advantage being gained by some investors at the expense of all Canadians.

There has been a breach of security at the Department of Finance. The Minister is responsible for that Department. In view of the fact that this Minister has demonstrated in the last few hours that he is not prepared to accept his responsibilities, it is therefore a must for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to ask for, receive and accept the resignation of the Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson).

SUPPORT FOR MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement that is being echoed throughout the nation today. That is that our present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is the best Minister of Finance this country has had—

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Thompson: —in the last 50 years.

He has made tough decisions, hard decisions, but decisions that had to be made for the good of all Canadians. The Opposition Parties, for purely partisan reasons, are now demanding the resignation of the Minister of Finance.

I would like to read a quotation from an article in this morning's newspaper, and I quote: "Should the Minister resign because others broke the law?" They answer that question by another quotation: "This is no time for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to resign". Canadians from coast to coast are saying the same thing. They have confidence in this Minister and confidence in this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ABSTRACTS OF BUDGET PRESENTED BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): It has been alleged that the privileges of this House have been breached. I do not doubt it.

The Fifth Edition of Beauchesne's notes, at Citation 79:

> The House maintains sole control over documents in its possession. The public may see papers which have been tabled in the House.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said this morning that he sent copies of his entire Budget package to the Clerk, for the Speaker, before his television show last night. The minute the Clerk received those papers, they became documents in the possession of the House, but had not yet been tabled. They still have not been tabled. Yet the Minister made them public.

The 19th Edition of Erskine May notes, at page 141, that:

> To abstract any record or other document from the custody of the Clerk—will constitute a contempt.

Last night, having delivered it to the custody of the Clerk, the Minister of Finance abstracted from his Budget speech in front of the nation's television.

As well, Erskine May notes at page 138:

> Disobedience to the orders of either House,—is a contempt of that House.

The House had ordered the Budget speech be presented in this House, not in a TV studio, at five o'clock this afternoon, not at 10.15 last night.

There has been a most serious breach of the privileges of this House by the Finance Minister.

This unprecedented bungling has undermined the integrity of the entire parliamentary system. Will this Government not now do the right thing: Admit its folly, fire its Minister, can this scandalous document and restore confidence to our parliamentary system.

THE LEAK—THE EXTENT OF THE MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, budget secrecy appears to be so sacred they are asking for the resignation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) because the theft, I repeat theft, of a public document, just led to parts of the 1989 Budget being revealed.

Last night, all Canadians received the same information almost simultaneously. What is the problem? Michael Wilson has not absconded with public funds. He has not committed a crime or sold State secrets. When someone steals something from a store, do we arrest the shopkeeper? No, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Speaker, how could anyone blame the Minister of Finance in this case?

LEAK OF DOCUMENT—SUGGESTED ACTIONS

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada stand shocked today by the unprecedented leak of an entire Budget document, more than 24 hours prior to its proper presentation before the House of Commons. Indeed, news reports indicate that individuals unknown were openly peddling purported Budget documents to local media outlets as early as yesterday afternoon.

SUPPORT FOR MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the process involving the presentation of the federal Budget. The Opposition have cried an irresponsible cry for the resignation of our Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson). This theatrical reaction is not what ordinary Canadians expect from the Opposition.

In order to provide the kind of measures required to guarantee total security for the Budget, a Gestapo-like environment would be necessary. The Government would be compelled to incarcerate all personnel involved in the process, from the printing to the final distribution. Is the Opposition suggesting a police state, an aura of Fascism?

This is not a matter of Government incompetence. This is a criminal act and, in my opinion, an act of treason. Our Finance Minister is and shall remain Canada's Finance Minister. He will be recognized historically by all Canadians as one of Canada's bravest, most dedicated and competent parliamentarians.

CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the credibility of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and his integrity have been seriously put in question by events related to this Budget. Canadians are asking: Where is the accountability of this Government?

Upon learning that his Budget had been leaked to the press, why did the Minister of Finance not come directly to this House and not give a press conference Budget? It is the people's representatives who should hear about the Budget and not the Press Club.

Canadians are asking: Where is the trust? This is not solely a case of breaking parliamentary tradition. It is far more serious than that. It is a breach of trust between the Canadian people and the Canadian Government. For weeks the Finance Minister has been preparing Canadians to bite the bullet with his new Budget. I call upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to bite the bullet. We need a new Finance Minister and a new Budget. The Finance Minister must resign.

DOCUMENT LEAK—ACTIONS OF OPPOSITION AND GLOBAL TV

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, as days pass and tempers cool, Canadians will judge the decisions and actions of the Government, the Opposition and the media. A Budget affects the economic well-being of Canada as a nation and also Canadians individually, whether as lenders, borrowers, importers, exporters or travellers.

When someone stole the Budget and Global TV took possession and published that stolen document, it caused harm to Canada and to Canadians individually. When the two Leaders of the Opposition Parties refused to permit Parliament to convene and deal with the grave situation, they put their own personal and Party interests ahead of the interest of Parliament and Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Shameful.

Mr. Thacker: I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, but that Canadians will harshly judge the Opposition and Global TV for acting in a selfish manner rather than in the best interest of Canada and Canadians.

CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Maurizio Bevilacqua (York North): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a very dark day for this Parliament. As the youngest Member of Parliament in the House, I am extremely disillusioned and disappointed by the actions of this Government. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should have demanded the Minister's resignation as required by the tradition of Parliament when Budget secrets are released. This so-called Budget is not a valid document. This event is one of the most extraordinary blunders in the history of parliamentary Government. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) should have resigned.

Disclosure for potential financial gains is a serious violation of the supreme authority of Parliament. Let us restore public trust in this Parliament and ask this Government and the Prime Minister for the Minister's resignation.

LEAK OF DOCUMENT—STATEMENT BY LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, last night in a hastily summoned news conference the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) declared that we had a non-Budget presented at a non-event by a non-Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Holtmann: We obviously did have a Budget. Anyone who bought a package of cigarettes this morning can tell you so. We obviously did have an event and we are having an after event right now, Mr. Speaker. The Ottawa Citizen today put it perfectly about our Finance Minister, as follows:

> Wilson acted swiftly, adroitly and with common sense. If anything, he looks like an even more solid Finance Minister. He proved again that leadership is not measured by a lack of problems but by the ability to deal decisively with problems.

To quote the late esteemed Member of this House, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker:

> When you are hunting big game you do not get diverted by rabbit tracks.

Canadians will not be fooled nor will our Finance Minister be diverted by rabbit tracks laid down by the Opposition. It is time for the Opposition bunnies to regroup in their burrow.

CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the question is not so much how this Chamber is affected, although that is a big issue. We have to remember that there are 26 million Canadians who are also shareholders and owners of this country. It is through their citizenship that they are repulsed by the activities of this Government. This is no joking matter. It is not a light matter. It is not a laughing matter that the previous speaker wishes to make it out to be.

We need a new Budget to restore new confidence. We need a new Minister who can restore integrity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchi: If the Government is not willing to give us a new Budget, if it does not wish to give us a new Minister, then let us have the integrity and let the people decide. Let us go to the people.

An Hon. Member: That happened last year.

Mr. Marchi: This Parliament is being hijacked by individuals who believe that the process, the means and the ends are secondary to the interests of Canadians and Canada. Public opinion will be on the side of those who have the strength and leadership to show moral fortitude.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, there is only one issue at stake in this fiasco of the press conference Budget. The privileged information, possibly worth millions to whoever had access to this information, found its way into the hands of a few. Canadians are asking themselves, who had this information and how many people could have profited from it? We have a story in the press today that a public servant said he had a copy of the Budget on Tuesday. He told some of his friends and those friends may have told others.

Canadians want fairness and expect the trust they bestowed on their Government to be respected. They do not want to be asked to pay an extra $1,700 a year in new taxes while a privileged few become wealthy from insider trading.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), Canada's Ivan Boesky, has a duty to his shareholders and the people of Canada, and that is to resign. For God's sake go, but go now.

[English]

LEAK OF DOCUMENT—FAILURE OF MINISTER OF FINANCE TO RESIGN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, by failing to resign, the Minister of Finance has brought dishonour on himself and discredit to our whole parliamentary system. By failing to demand that resignation of the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister has broken trust with Canadians.

My question is for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Did the Minister of Finance offer his resignation? If he did, why did the Prime Minister not accept it? If he did not, why did the Prime Minister not demand it? Why is that man still Minister of Finance of this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition's last question I believe is, and I use his words, why is this man still Minister of Finance? Because he is one of the most distinguished and honourable public servants ever in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Did I ask for his resignation, Mr. Speaker? No, I did not. Did he offer his resignation? No, he did not, and if he had offered it, I would have turned it down.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

INQUIRY RESPECTING WITHDRAWAL OF BUDGET

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that same Minister of Finance is responsible for the biggest parliamentary blunder in Canadian history.

In the circumstances, if the resignation was not offered and a resignation was not asked for nor demanded by the Prime Minister, why didn't the Prime Minister order the immediate withdrawal of the Budget? Did he ask the Minister of Finance, as I now ask the Minister of Finance, whether he can prove that no one profited as a result of those prematurely released Budget documents, however many there were? If not, how can the Minister of Finance credibly go forward with his Budget presentation in this House this afternoon?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend begins his question with some prefatory remarks about what he suggests is the only course of action that the Minister of Finance can follow given these circumstances. He is forgetting that very distinguished Canadians, such as Eugene Forsey and Bob Rae, Leader of the NDP in Ontario—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Are you sure it wasn't Shirley Carr?

Mr. Mulroney: —have concluded differently. For a very interesting reason, unlike the Leader of the Liberal Party and the opposition, Canadians are concerned with the criminal and not with the honourable Minister. Canadians are concerned with a person who stole the property. Hon. Members should be worried about the person who stole the property.

• (1420)

Mr. Mulroney: There is not a single question that has been asked today about what the RCMP was doing in terms of investigating this, how the Opposition could be helpful to the RCMP—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —in this important criminal investigation. All the attacks came against the Minister of Finance.

According to experts such as Mr. Forsey and many others, as well as many leading editorialists across the country, the Minister of Finance has fulfilled totally his responsibility as an honourable and respected Minister of Finance. Anybody who holds the Minister to a higher standard is himself doing a disservice to Canada. Canadians know what the Leader of the Opposition is up to.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, if there had been proper security for which the Minister is responsible, this would not have happened. That is why this issue is before the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXPLANATIONS REQUESTED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister quotes some authorities, but a budget fiasco of this magnitude is unprecedented in Canada. Can the Prime Minister explain to us why he did not dismiss his Finance Minister? Can he explain to us why he did not cancel or withdraw the Budget? Can the Prime Minister be sure that someone did not profit from the premature release of these documents?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I said and I repeat, the Minister of Finance conducted himself at all times and in all circumstances with integrity and as a responsible Minister of Finance. As for my hon. friend's comments—

—he began by saying that the issue now is proper security. I ask the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, if he wants to be fair, to consider the comments of a reporter by the name of Mr. French of Global Television who was the first person who received the call from the individual who took the documents. Here is the transcript.

Mr. Harvard: How do you know that?

Mr. Mulroney: Let me quote his transcript.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What does this prove?

Mr. Mulroney: The reporter says with regard to this individual who betrayed the trust: "I guess the criminal likes to return to the scene of the crime". The reporter who received the information qualifies the individual as a criminal who indeed returned to the scene of the crime. The Leader of the Opposition should not be basing his calls for a ministerial resignation on a gentleman who may indeed have been involved in criminal activity.

SECURITY MEASURES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, we are faced with a very serious situation involving the Minister of Finance, of course, and the security surrounding such important documents must be very tight. Could the Minister of Finance tell us in this House whether the security surrounding the printing of the Budget was as tight as it was for previous Budgets?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): The security measures taken on this Budget have been the same as with Budgets for many, many years.

WERE THE PRINTERS SWORN TO SECRECY

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask another question. I would like to ask the Finance Minister whether the employees who worked on printing the Budget took an oath before they did their job, as in past years?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I take the liberty to answer the question for a reason that will interest the House, because given the Hon. Member's interest, as far as I know, the Hon.

Member who just asked the question is the only one in the House who was a member of the Hon. Robert Bourassa's Cabinet in May 1987. And in May 1987, when the Hon. Member was a Minister, there was a breach of security. The Minister of Finance did not resign and the Hon. Member supported Mr. Gérard D. Lévesque.

LEAK OF DOCUMENT—INQUIRY WHETHER INFORMATION USED FOR PRIVATE GAIN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The whole country knows that at least two Canadians late yesterday afternoon had private knowledge of the details of the Budget that gave them the access to using that information, for example, on the Toronto Stock Exchange. Today in the late edition of The Ottawa Citizen there is a story which states that two days ago another public employee in this city had the same information. It is alleged that he told at least 20 of his friends and relatives.

Mr. McDermid: Name him!

Mr. Broadbent: He says that he did not use it for stock market purposes because he did not understand the stock market or how he could possibly benefit.

Can the Minister of Finance offer us guarantees that there are no Canadians who used this information in the past 48 hours for private gain?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has any information to the effect that someone has used any information for gain, let him inform the RCMP so that a proper investigation can be done. This is what this Government has done with regard to the breach of security, the criminal act that is alleged to have been undertaken with the result that the document was released to Mr. Small of Global Television. If the Hon. Member has any other information, let him convey that to the RCMP himself.

POSSIBLE INSIDE TRADER ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is the Minister of Finance who has the responsibility for Budget information, not Members on this side of the House. He ought to know that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: What responsibilities do you have?

Mr. Broadbent: I want to ask my question of the Minister again since he did not answer. The Minister of Finance knows that the reason for confidentiality and secrecy in Budget matters, among other things, is to avoid inside trader action on the stock market. Since he knows without question that at least two Canadians had that information before the Budget came down—and the story is that another Canadian who had it told 20 more—I want him to assure us that there is no Canadian who used this information for private gain. If he cannot give us that assurance, will he give us his resignation?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Canadians I think are getting sick and tired of—

Mr. Barrett: You!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —the political posturing of the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): So is Bob Rae, his colleague, who I think will be taking his place in a very short few months.

Mr. Lapierre: Who will take yours?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The point the Hon. Member has raised was the point of discussion for two hours before lunch. We indicated to the House at that time that when we found out the information, we acted as promptly as we could.

Mr. Riis: No, you did not. Not true!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We contacted the Leader of the New Democratic Party who is now saying: "Why did you not do something differently?" when he himself was obstructing the efforts that we were undertaking to get that Budget to the House in order to present it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, as a man who was once involved in dealing with stocks in the private sector and who heretofore has acted with responsibility and integrity, I say frankly to him that he knows it is the mere possibility of having access to information that could give private gain that goes to the core of ministerial responsibility as Minister of Finance. For that reason he should resign. He knows that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

WHY DID THE PRIME MINISTER NOT ASK FOR THE RESIGNATION OF HIS MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if we consider that many people had access to this information and that there is a possibility of private gain, my question is simply this: Why didn't the Prime Minister ask the Minister of Finance to resign?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party is making very serious charges against the Minister of Finance. The Minister did try, by entirely lawful means, to have the Budget tabled in the House of Commons last night instead of bringing the Budget directly before the public. However, when the request was made, the Leader of the New Democratic Party refused to give his consent. Now that is a case of total hypocrisy!

SECRECY OATHS SWORN BY PRINTERS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance just claimed that the security measures which were associated with the printing of this Budget were the same as in the past. I want to ask him to confirm that, unlike the past, during the printing of this Budget of his no secrecy oaths were sworn by those involved in the printing of the Budget. Can he confirm that?

Hon. Paul Dick (Minister of Supply and Services): I can assure the Hon.—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: I can assure the Hon. Member that every single individual who was in the printing area where the Budget and relative documents were being printed has been cleared to a level of secrecy, secret or top secret level.

An Hon. Member: That's not the question.

Mr. Dick: That is in the same tradition as all other security matters which were identical in all the previous years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRESENCE OF EXTRA SECURITY PERSONNEL DURING PRINTING

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): I think, Mr. Speaker, the House will have noted that the Minister did not answer the question that I asked.

I want him as well to confirm that, unlike the printing of past Budgets, on the occasion of this Budget there were no extra security personnel brought in to be certain that the printers, while they were printing, were not reading the documents that they were printing. Can he confirm that?

Hon. Paul Dick (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I have already explained to the Hon. Member that all the precautions that have been taken in previous years were applied again this year, and that the 200-odd printers that were involved have all been cleared to a level of secret or top secret.

MINISTERIAL ACCOUNTABILITY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Finance Minister. If in fact the Budget leak was the result of a criminal act, then that particular person or persons were aided and abetted by the circumstances which would have allowed the criminal act to take place. Ultimately it is the Minister of Finance who is responsible for the secrecy and confidentiality of his Budget. I would like to put the question to the Minister: Exactly what is his concept of ministerial accountability and responsibility?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me say to the Hon. Member that if there was anybody who was aiding and abetting a criminal act, it was the Leader of the Opposition by not allowing—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Withdraw from the House.

Some Hon. Members: Out, out!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Finance, I am sure, realizes that he has gone a little too far, and I would ask him to withdraw his remark.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the comment.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put my question again. The Prime Minister and others have referred to the Budget leak as a criminal act, and it may or may not have been a criminal act. But the fact remains that it was possible for someone to have had access to that particular Budget in Brief. We know that this may in fact not be a single source leak. So the point is, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister, as the Finance Minister, surely must be ultimately responsible for the secrecy of his Budget. So I put the question to the Finance Minister again. What exactly is his concept of ministerial responsibility and accountability? Does he assume any responsibility whatsoever for the fiasco in which he finds himself?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a very serious question. As Prime Minister responsible for the Ministry, I owe it to my hon. friend to respond. The question goes to the extent and nature of ministerial responsibility. I think I can say in fairness to my hon. friend who has been here for four or five years, that the conduct of the Minister of Finance himself over the four or five years is indeed, I believe, a model of ministerial responsibility. I think that has been the record.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I suppose that the question that Canadians and parliamentarians will have to ask is, does the concept of ministerial responsibility extend to the limits suggested by Senator Forsey, or does the elastic go all the way to the limits extended by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, where even an individual who perpetrates a criminal offence comes within the purview of the Minister? That is a legitimate question, I think, for consideration.

May I say to my hon. friend that although an RCMP inquiry is going on, I draw the information from the individual who was communicated with, Mr. French of Global who said, and I quote him: "I guess the criminal likes to return to the scene of the crime". It was the individual who received the information, who then made it public, who used the term "criminal".

The question to be answered is, did the Minister of Finance conduct himself in full keeping with the demanding traditions of British parliamentary democracy, and the answer is yes.

QUERY RESPECTING BENEFIT FROM INSIDE INFORMATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): My question is the Minister of Finance whom we in this House have known for a long time as a man who realizes his responsibilities and his obligations to the people of this country. I want to say with respect, Mr. Speaker, that he did not answer the question of my Leader as to whether or not anybody had benefited from inside information. I want to ask him very clearly and slowly, and for him to answer categorically, if he can assure the House that no one has used inside information from this Budget for personal gain?

• (1440)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have no evidence of that at all. If the Hon. Member has any evidence of the fact, then surely he owes it to the House and to the people of Canada to report that to the RCMP.

INVESTIGATION OF TRADING BY SECURITIES COMMISSIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said he has no evidence, and he cannot give us any assurance. Would the Minister respond positively to the following question that was put by Sinclair Stevens on April 19, 1983, during the Marc Lalonde affair, as reported at page 24628 of Hansard:

> Finally, has he—
> The Minister—
> —taken steps to ensure that securities commissions in every Province in Canada will be immediately asked to investigate what trading has taken place, particularly in the very volatile bond field, to determine if insider profits have indeed been made?
> Has the Minister done that?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, as was pointed out by the Prime Minister and the Hon. Member, as soon as the RCMP was informed of these events early yesterday evening, a thorough investigation of the allegations was underway, and the securities commissions in the provinces concerned were contacted. I believe an investigation is now underway at the securities commissions of four provinces, because we take this very seriously. When such allegations are made, I believe that either one should provide evidence, before the House or elsewhere, of the allegations, or else one goes to the securities commission or to the RCMP with the requisite proof. However, it would be irresponsible to speculate about facts that have not been corroborated. The investigation is underway, Mr. Speaker, and as soon as we have the facts, the findings, we will be able to disclose them.

ALLEGATIONS OF PRIVATE GAIN FROM BUDGET LEAK— REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the essential question of ministerial responsibility, particularly in this case, the responsibility of the Minister of Finance as trustee of the public purse. Yesterday afternoon the Minister and his colleagues knew that there had been a leak of vital information on the Budget, in fact the entire Budget. There is now evidence that that leakage was widespread and that there were a number of sources.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What evidence?

An Hon. Member: Where is the evidence of that?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): He also knew that the stock markets of this country were still open, particularly those on the West Coast where shares in companies affected by the Budget, like Air Canada, were already traded.

Under those circumstances it was clear that the opportunity for private advantage, for private gain existed, which fundamentally breaks the principle of budget secrecy and ministerial accountability. Therefore, why did the Minister not withdraw the Budget and do the honourable thing and resign?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker,I think the Minister explained this morning, in response to other questions, the reason for the actions that were taken. The initial intention, when the information became known, was to bring the Budget to the House of Commons. Unfortunately, because of the absence of consent, we were prevented from bringing it to the House.

I have explained to my hon. friend the manner in which the Minister has always discharged his responsibilities, in this case as well.

In fact, I bring to the attention of my hon. friend from Winnipeg a comment in this morning's Winnipeg Free Press, which states in regard to the Minister: "The Minister cannot, however, reasonably be held responsible for the illegal actions of functionaries far beyond his control".

The Winnipeg Free Press takes a reasonable and thoughtful position on this matter, and I urge it upon the Member for Winnipeg South Centre.

REQUEST THAT BUDGET BE WITHDRAWN

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, the Prime Minister has it wrong. The questions being raised are not about whether the Minister of Finance was responsible for illegal actions. But he is responsible for the Budget of Canada. He is responsible for whether that Budget gives private advantage to certain individuals. Therefore, he must take responsibility for proceeding with a Budget which has all the potential of giving private advantage, private gain, private profit to individuals as a result of this secrecy. Therefore, is it not true that both the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister had only one honourable option, which was to withdraw the Budget? No Budget or Minister stands above the rights of this Parliament or the rights of Canadians to be treated fairly and properly in the Budget process.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Minister has followed all of the appropriate procedures that have existed over the decades—

Some Hon. Members: If.

Mr. Mulroney: And the evidence is that he has.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: We'll see!

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) says: "We'll see!", the implication being that he has arguments to the contrary. If that is the case, say so. Stop being such an incredible hypocrite!

ALLEGED PRIVATE GAIN FROM BUDGET LEAK

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I suggest that the Prime Minister confuses his loyalty to his friend, the Finance Minister, with his responsibility to the people of Canada.

Budget information was available 24 hours in advance of the scheduled date, at least, perhaps as early as Tuesday. We know that the actual documents were printed on Sunday and Monday, so perhaps they were available as early as that date. Is the Prime Minister suggesting to the people of Canada that the potential millions of dollars in private benefit given to a privileged few can be legitimized in the interest of keeping his friend, the Minister of Finance, in the federal Cabinet? Is that what he is telling the people of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Minister of Finance has followed all the historic proceedings in regard to security—

Mr. Lapierre: If.

Mr. Mulroney: —and he has. There is no evidence at all that he has not. If has fulfilled all of the historic obligations pursuant to his office, and he has because there is no evidence to the contrary, is my hon. friend saying, as a new constitutional principle of ministerial responsibility by the Liberal Party, that henceforth Ministers of the Crown are not only responsible for all within their traditional purview, they are also responsible for criminal acts and misdemeanors performed by others with a view to subverting or sabotaging an honourable ministerial undertaking? If he is saying that, that is a dramatic departure from accepted British parliamentary traditions.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has just articulated a new principle, and it is very simple. It is that friends of the Prime Minister must be saved at any cost, including public trust and public integrity. That is the new principle put forward by the Prime Minister.

REASON FOR REQUEST FOR EXTENDED SITTING

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): I have a question for the Minister of Justice, and it regards the conduct of the Minister of Finance.

It has been argued today by the Prime Minister and argued earlier by the Minister of Justice, that the Minister of Finance acted immediately when he knew there was a leak. Members of this House know that at 5.50 p.m. yesterday the Minister of Justice, and Government House Leader came into this House and asked for extended hours. He did not tell the Opposition why he wanted extended hours but he asked for them. When the request was refused, he left.

I want to ask the Minister of Justice, did he know yesterday at 5.50 of a Budget leak? Did the Minister of Finance know about a Budget leak? Did the Prime Minister know about a Budget leak? Why didn't they come clean with Parliament at 5.50 when they made a mysterious request for extended hours? Why the cover-up?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): I was in a committee meeting in Room 209, West Block, and I received a phone call at approximately 5.40 p.m. from the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance indicated to me that there was an indication of a possibility of a potential Budget leak.

Some Hon. Members: Cover-up, cover-up.

Mr. Lewis: I said, the potential of a Budget leak. We knew that we had to keep our options open.

Mr. Tobin: Damned right you knew, but you didn't tell us.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What reason did you give to the Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has advanced a very specific question, the Minister is trying to answer, and he deserves the courtesy of being allowed to finish.

An Hon. Member: You have just entered your plea of guilty.

Mr. Lewis: As a measure of prudence we made an effort to keep the House open so that in the event that the Budget leak was substantiated we could come to the House of Commons, which is exactly what we asked the Opposition to do last night, but they refused to co-operate.

Some Hon. Members: Guilty, guilty. Cover-up, cover-up.

Ms. Copps: The Minister participated in a cover-up.

CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): My question is for the Minister of Finance. Would the Minister of Finance explain to the House why, when he received the information from Global Television at 5.30 p.m. last night that detailed elements of the Budget sufficiently to indicate very clearly that someone had a leaked document, will the Minister of Finance explain why he did not come into the House at that time, when the House of Commons was still in session, to explain what had happened and to do the honourable thing and resign?

Mr. Andre: He would have required unanimous consent, which you wouldn't give.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I think the previous answer by my colleague, the Government House Leader, has indicated very clearly what we did.

When I found out the information, I first called the Prime Minister, I then called the Government House Leader and the Deputy Prime Minister, and advised them of this, and I said "I think it might be wise if we kept the House open pending"—

Mr. Gauthier: Why didn't you tell the House?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —until we could ascertain more precisely what we were expecting to hear on the Global Television program.

When that information did come, we then went to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Leader of the Official Opposition, and requested a special sitting of the House at which we could provide that information to the House. That request was denied.

MINISTER'S RESIGNATION REQUESTED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): The question for the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister is the following: What the Minister of Finance has just indicated is that at 5.30 p.m. there was sufficient evidence to believe there was a leak.

Mr. Andre: No there wasn't.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, yes there was. They had the figures.

Mr. Riis: They had the detailed information, however the House was misled. Rather than come to the House recognizing that the possibility existed, the House Leader came in and gave some spurious argument that he wanted to continue to debate the issue of the day. They knew it was before us, but they didn't have the courage to come in and explain what had happened.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is false.

Mr. Riis: I want to ask the Prime Minister a question. You asked for the resignation of a previous Minister who visited a nightclub in Germany. This Finance Minister has committed the largest political, parliamentary financial blunder in history. Why wouldn't you ask for his resignation?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We do take these matters extremely seriously.

Some Hon. Members: Cover-up, cover-up.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is why we did not jump to snap conclusions, as the Hon. Member is suggesting that we should have done. We felt that it was very important for us to substantiate what was being told us on the telephone before jumping to a quick conclusion that we had to, in his way, scrap a Budget or come immediately to the House.

Mr. Tobin: Meanwhile the stock market is trading away.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me just read what the reporter, Mr. Small said: "Many of these things have been predicted, but as I say this was incredibly well detailed, but on the basis of only one anonymous phone call we were not going to report the detail that we have got it". So that is the basis on which my colleague, the House Leader, felt we should try, as a precautionary measure, to keep the House open until we found out precisely what sort of information we were dealing with.

ASSURANCES SOUGHT RESPECTING REINFORCEMENT OF RESERVES UNIT

Mr. Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): I want to direct my question to the Minister of Defence.

In view of the fact that the Budget has announced that the proposed submarine program will be cut, along with closures of 14 military bases across Canada, one of which is in my constituency, I ask the Minister whether he can assure this House that other areas of the White Paper, in particular reinforcement of the reserves unit, will still be put into force? Further, I ask him to assure my constituents that he is prepared to work with all other federal Departments to help replace the economic loss of that area.

Mr. Gauthier: That is out of order.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): I can appreciate the interest of my hon. colleague in the Budget, the necessity of the Budget, and what has been brought about. The White Paper and the broad parameters of the White Paper will be maintained. Also reserves will continue to be increased. We will not be able to make the estimate of some 65,000, but the reserves will continue to be a total part and a very important part of the build-up of military strength.

Regarding the closures that have to take place—

Some Hon. Members: Out of order.

REASON FOR LACK OF NOTIFICATION OF HOUSE LEADERS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. When he got that report from the journalist, did he not recognize his own Budget, which he wrote himself? If that was the case, why didn't he and the Government House Leader come clean, at least with the House Leaders of the Liberal Party and the NDP right away? Why did he create that problem by his own negligence?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): The Hon. Member knows that in anticipation of a Budget there are all sorts of stories going around, all sorts of speculation by Members opposite as well as members of the media, so that it is important that before we jump to those conclusions, we find out just precisely what we were dealing with before making those decisions.

Mr. Gray: Canadians will find it hard to believe that the Minister did not recognize his own Budget when he was told about it.

I want to ask the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Justice a question, especially since I was in the House at the time the Minister of Justice moved his motion for extended hours, I was there and stood up to block the motion, along with at least 15 other people. I ask the Minister of Justice why he didn't come over to me and even ask me if I would help him deal with the matter on my oath as a Privy Councillor? Why did he let two hours or more go by so people could make use of the information? Why did he not once again, I ask him, release the whole problem?

Mr. Simmons: You blew it, Doug. You blew it.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Contrary to the suggestions made previously, I came into the House, was recognized, and immediately moved the motion under the rules with no debate whatsoever, so there was no misleading of the House.

Ms. Copps: Why didn't you tell the truth?

Mr. Lewis: I say to my hon. friend yes, my hon. friend was in the House and stood up to block the motion, but when I entered the House my hon. friend was not here.

• (1500)

We took the precaution of trying to keep the House open so that if it was substantiated that there had been a Budget leak we could have come into the House. However, once again the opposition blocked us.

Mr. Speaker: A single question from the Hon. Member for Burnaby.

INQUIRY ABOUT PERSONAL PROFIT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. We have heard from the Solicitor General that a full inquiry has been ordered into the possibility that individuals may have profited personally from the Budget leak, including an inquiry with securities commissions.

In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance's own colleague recognizes the possibility that there may have been personal profit as a result of this Budget leak, what else does it take for the Minister of Finance to do the honourable thing and resign? Does he not recognize his responsibility?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered that question, but I would be happy to try to respond again.

As I understand it, the nature of the RCMP inquiry was initiated given the fact that a journalist was on television saying that he had received what appeared to be, as qualified by himself, proceeds from a crime, from a criminal.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): A crime? How do you know?

Mr. Mulroney: This is the statement made by the journalist.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Is Small a criminal because he received it? I would like to know the answer to that.

Mr. Mulroney: The RCMP is conducting a full investigation. That investigation extends to the actions of presumably all of those involved in that part of it, and also extends to the stock exchanges to ascertain if anybody has profited in any way from any kind of information. Thus far there is no indication whatsoever of that. However, the Solicitor General has said if any information comes to him he will report to the House immediately, and I know if my friend has any accusations or any specific information he will make it known to the RCMP.

Mr. Speaker: Prior to the noon adjournment we were dealing with a number of questions of privilege and the Hon. Member for Kamloops had the floor. I will return to that Hon. Member in a few minutes.

However, I have received a question of privilege arising out of this Question Period and I will hear the Hon. Member for Port—Moody Coquitlam.

PRIVILEGE

MOTION UNDER S.O. 26(2)—EXTENSION OF SITTING

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I refer to yesterday's Hansard at page 1001.

During Question Period today the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) told the House that he rose in the House at 5.45 p.m. and tried to continue the sitting of the House because he thought that there was a Budget leak. He indicated that he had facts about the Budget leak, and in his answer to the question he indicated that he had a call from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Yesterday at 5.45 p.m. I was about to speak, and at page 1001 of Hansard I raised a point of order when I was interrupted by the Minister who stated:

> That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of second reading of Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Bank Act.

The Minister was not telling the truth to the House. He was seeking to adjourn—

Mr. Speaker: There are ways and places to make a charge, and I am sure the Hon. Member has an argument here. However, I have some difficulty understanding where the point of privilege is. When the Hon. Member completes his submission, I would like him to show where there is a point of privilege. I know the Hon. Member will want to put his remarks in such a manner that he is not transgressing the rules.

Mr. Waddell: Had the Minister indicated to the House at that point that there was a problem with the Budget, then it quite likely would have been possible to continue the sitting of the House. The Minister did not tell the House that. Indeed, in my submission now, he is telling us the opposite. He misled the House and misled me. I say that is a question of breach of privilege of the House.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, my friend is correct in his citation of Hansard vis-à-vis the page. However, I indicated earlier that when I rose yesterday there was no discussion. I made the only motion possible at that time, which was the continuation of consideration of second reading of Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Bank Act. We made that very clear.

I have made it clear outside the House and I have made it clear inside the House that we had an indication of a Budget leak. At that time that was all it was. However, we felt if we could keep the House open we would then have a forum which is open to all Canadians and televised instantaneously to make this matter public.

An Hon. Member: Why didn't you say that yesterday?

Mr. Lewis: There was no co-operation at a quarter to six, and there was no co-operation at 8.30 p.m. either.

Mr. Benjamin: If you wanted co-operation, why did'nt you tell us?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops is seeking the floor on the same point.

Mr. Riis: I just wish to correct the point made by the Government House Leader when he said that this was the only way to have extended the sitting. There are two other ways. He could have consulted with the opposition House Leaders, both of whom were in the building at the time. Also, had he come clean with the House of Commons and explained that there was a situation pending, with unanimous consent we could have agreed to not see the clock and the hours could have been extended beyond six o'clock. However, he did not come clean with the House of Commons; he tried to pull a fast one on us.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West is seeking the floor. I will hear him and the the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis.

I do wish to point out that this is becoming debate. It is the issue upon which the entire privilege debate is taking place and which is going to be resumed shortly. I will hear the Hon. Member for Windsor West, but I would ask him to keep that in mind, and then I will hear the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, shortly before the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) entered the House to move a motion under Standing Order 26 I went briefly to the Parliamentary Reading Room around the corner. When I returned to the lobby I was informed that the Minister had just put his motion, and seeing no reason that I could think of to justify a motion to extend hours on Bill C-9, a Bill to amend the Bank Act, I went into the House with my colleagues to stand up and oppose the motion.

It is a gross distortion, to say the least, for the Minister of Justice to accuse me or any Members of the House who opposed the motion at that time of not being willing to co-operate in dealing with the problem the Government created for itself in not maintaining the security of its Budget.

If the Minister of Justice had come clean with the House Leader for the New Democratic Party and myself, at the time he came into the House, things might very well have been different.

While I spend a lot of time trying to read the minds, if I may use that word loosely, of Government Members and discern what they are up to in their proceedings in the House, there is no way that I or anyone on this side of the House could have figured out the real reason for the Minister moving the motion.

It does raise a question regarding the privileges of the House when the Minister comes into the House and moves a motion for one purpose when he has another much more serious purpose in mind and fails to disclose that to people like myself who might well have something to do with the arrangements of the Business of the House.

It is also a breach of the privileges of all Members for the Minister of Justice, in effect, to project on Members such as myself any responsibility for the problem he got into because of his own negligence and incompetence.

• (1510)

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I was here last night at exactly 5.56 p.m. I was here for the hour before that but I was here when the Hon. Minister raised the question.

Mrs. McDougall: You are always here.

Mr. Prud'homme: Yes, I am always here. The reason I rise today is that my name is there and I participated as you can see it recorded in Hansard at page 1001. I do not want to complicate your task further today but I would like to say that if I had been given any indication why the Minister came here to interrupt and ask to proceed according to Standing Order 26(1) which states:

> That this House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of second reading of Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Bank Act.

That is what I objected to last night. If you read page 1001 of Hansard you will find it is that to which I was referring. I could not understand why so early in the session the Government wanted to poison the atmosphere by sitting later on the first day of debate on a Bill. One usually does that toward the end of a session when Members talk too long, when the Government has its own agenda and wants to have more legislation to show it has been doing something for the good of the country. But so early in the session, I could not understand why the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis), the House Leader, and a good friend—we can debate very passionately in this House without destroying the system, that is my style—would not have indicated the reason. I feel that I am a responsible and an orderly Member and I would have rushed to my leader—I do not like to have a boss but I know how to proceed—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: I would have immediately informed whoever is responsible for my Party about what was going on.

But what has happened today is the reason I want to be on record. I did not raise a question of privilege earlier because of what the Minister said during the Question Period.

Your Honour would rule me out of order eventually if I did not stand up today at the first opportunity, and that is why I am now taking the first opportunity to reserve my right to speak later after I have listened attentively to see if we cannot get out of this difficulty.

Your Honour will realize that last night it made no sense for the Minister to come here to participate, I thought in the debate—because that is what the rule is all about—but the Minister was recognized to participate in the debate. The rule is clear. It was during the last hour and, had the Minister taken the floor, he could have put the motion. But that is not what he chose to do. He just came in to put the motion. He lost the vote and he left. That is why I was running after him to tell him that I wanted to listen to the Minister participate in the debate.

This is the explanation I want to make at this time because my intervention would not make sense if I did not give that explanation.

Mr. Speaker: I think the proper thing to do would be for the Chair to consider the remarks of the Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam (Mr. Waddell) and others. I will consider them at the close of the entire debate on privilege.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) has the floor.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I want to continue my remarks by running through in logical sequence what happened last night. We believe that there has been a very serious breach of Parliamentary privilege. We are aware that sometime yesterday definitive evidence indicates that there was a Budget leak. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) described it in those words when he called the two opposition Party leaders late last night indicating that there had been a serious Budget leak and that the House of Commons ought then to resume to allow the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) an opportunity to present the Budget.

New evidence today in the press indicates that there was a possibility that some people even had the Budget a day or two in advance. They say in the press today that not only did they have a copy of the Budget but they presented the information to at least 20 other people. What has become clear is not only was there a Budget leak, but there was the possibility at least of a number of copies of the Budget circulating beyond Parliament Hill.

The Solictor General (Mr. Blais) indicated today that he believes there is a serious possibility of a comprehensive extensive leak so he has asked for the Securities Exchange Commissions to carry out investigations in terms of insider trading. The Minister of Finance knows all about insider trading because of his previous career as a stockbroker. I think he understands the value of this kind of information. We found out later that the Minister of Finance was informed precisely of the details of the Budget at 5.30 p.m. At that time, he informed the Minister of Justice, the Government House Leader, of this possibility.

Those Ministers had an opportunity at that time to share this information with the House of Commons, and certainly with the House Leaders of the opposition Parties, but they chose not to do that and attempted some spurious argument to enable the House to continue. I have to say that was almost misleading the House because they knew why they were asking for an extension of the hours but did not explain it. As a matter of fact, they gave the wrong explanation. We found later that the Budget had now gone public as a result of broadcasting. At that time the Government asked that the House of Commons resume sitting. We, of course, realized at that point it would be folly to do so because the Budget was public and the people across Canada, hundreds of thousands of Canadians, already knew the details of the Budget. It seemed to be after the fact and we were not interested in being part of a cover-up operation or a last minute rescue operation to try to save the faces of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

It becomes clear that a number of privileged individuals may have had privileged information in order to advance their own monetary standing. That is a possibility. There is no question of that. Yet the Minister of Finance refused to resign. In my estimation, this is a very clear indication of incompetence on behalf of the Minister and his House Leader. Rather than come clean with the House of Commons, they chose to, if you like, launch a cover-up operation, again misleading the House of Commons, again an act of incompetence in his role as Government House Leader. Yet the Prime Minister today said that all is well "Don't worry, be happy", in spite of the largest budgetary blunder in Parliamentary history, not only in Canada but in every Parliament of the world. This has never ever happened before.

Mr. Andre: Except in Quebec a few years ago.

Mr. Riis: Yet the fact that many, maybe hundreds or dozens—who knows—stand to gain privately because of this leaked information which is now confirmed, the Budget is presumably going to be introduced later today, after the fact. This is very, very serious.

A former Minister of Justice for the Conservative Party in 1983, in response to the then Minister of Finance's one item leak which was later changed and introduced in a new Budget, said as recorded in Hansard on page 24622 of April 19, 1983.

> If—we are to accept the proposition that the Minister either inadvertently or consciously is able outside the House of Commons to present the budget, that acknowledgement alone would render the House of Commons impotent. It would mean there would be no need for us to come here at all. If the Minister could make his budget presentation outside the House, there would be no need for him to present it to Members of the House of Commons.

That is exactly the point. Last night, when the request came for the Minister to present it, it had already been presented publicly outside the House. I suppose, in the usual tradition, what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) perhaps ought to do is to hold a vote in the National Press Gallery in terms of getting their support for this Budget because it makes no sense now to bring it to the House of Commons for presentation and processing.

There are other very serious issues here.

An Hon. Member: You had better believe it.

Mr. Riis: Earlier the point was made that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) saw fit to ask for a Minister's resignation because that Minister had visited a nightclub in Germany. At that time that was considered to be sufficient reason to ask for that Minister's resignation, and he did. Here we have a leak, a budget leak unprecedented in parliamentary history anywhere in the world. I use the term advisedly because I am quoting from the Minister of Justice and the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) whom I respect a great deal, who called it a leak when he called my Leader late last night.

I want to go on and make some points. The Minister claims that his privileges have been breached by a criminal act. Whether or not a criminal act has occurred will eventually be determined. The point that we are making today is that the Minister has essentially acted in contempt of Parliament, that the privileges of every single Member of this House have been breached. Every single Member of this House represents the people of Canada. They give us their trust, they provide us with the responsibility, if you like, of collecting and disbursing taxes and criticizing that process.

Our rights have been, if you like, eliminated. Our rights and privileges as Members of Parliament have obviously been breached because this Government decided that the appropriate place to introduce the Budget after the leak had occurred was in the National Press theatre.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We thought it appropriate here, you would not come to the House of Commons.

Mr. Riis: The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) indicates that he did not want this to happen as it did. I remember in 1983 the present Secretary of State for External Affairs standing up in this House and going on for almost an hour—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is when you tried to join my Party.

Mr. Riis: —about the importance of any type of leak whatsoever resulting in the automatic resignation of the Minister of Finance. He went on and on for page after page in Hansard. It is all here in Hansard. It did not matter how the leak occurred, where it occurred, who leaked the information, the fact was that it did occur and the present Secretary of State for External Affairs made the point that it was the Minister who was ultimately responsible. The buck has to stop some place, and with the Minister of Finance it has to stop with him.

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Riis: I would like to say that the most convincing, and I suppose extensive argument in terms of what the proper conduct for the Minister of Finance ought to be, was made by the then Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Erik Nielsen. Mr. Speaker, I think it is useful to quote it back to the Members.

> Budget secrecy is a basic principle of our traditions of parliamentary Government. It means that the Minister responsible for bringing down a budget is also held responsible to see to it that the provisions of that budget are not prematurely released. The reasons for this are many. Foreknowledge of budgetary measures has led to the acquisition of private gain and to sharp market fluctuations. My information is current that those fluctuations are taking place and that the Canadian dollar is indeed now falling on the markets.

We have received preliminary information to that effect ourselves. We know that this has had an impact in the international market-place, and the currency values of the Canadian dollar have obviously been seriously fluctuating.

Then he goes on to say:

> What we are talking about here is not in the book of rules. We are talking about the absolute necessity that the integrity and the probity of the Minister of Finance with regard to the Budget be maintained.
> The Minister of Finance in his heart of hearts knows this.

I believe that the Minister of Finance over the years has indicated time and time again that he understands the responsibilities given to him. He understands the obligation. He is responsible for maintaining the security of our financial system and for its stability. He accepted that responsibility. I would expect that the Minister of Finance, knowing the expectations that are with him and the obligations that he has accepted by accepting that ministry, would do the honourable thing, now that such a gross error, a gross blunder has occurred. He has to accept the responsibility that the security was breached in terms of budget secrecy. There is no question of that.

I think it is rather galling of the Minister to begin this discussion today by complaining that his rights as a Minister have been breached, and then for the Government to suggest that all of this was the opposition's fault. This is absolutely unbelievable that these kinds of comments are being made.

I would like to conclude by remarks by simply saying that there are a number of things that become extremely evident. One is that the Minister of Finance has to accept responsibility for Budget security. That Budget security was breached. There was an obvious leak of the Budget, an entire Budget, in terms of its content being made public prior to it being tabled in the House of Commons. There is no other alternative than for the Minister of Finance to resign. I must say that for the Prime Minister to not at least request that resignation, itself is a breach of the responsibilities and obligations that the Prime Minister assumes.

An Hon. Member: Shame, shame.

Mr. Riis: More importantly, the people of Canada have a right to have Budget secrecy exist. My hon. friend, the finance critic for the New Democratic Party, pointed out earlier that in his haste for propaganda in the country, the individuals and firms that happen to exist or have lobbyists in Ottawa, have also received privileged information. They received all of the budgetary details at 10 o'clock last night. All the details, the fine tuning of the Budget, they received here in Ottawa. In Vancouver, Regina, Halifax, a day later they received the information. Last night a privileged group of Canadians who happen to live or to be in Ottawa last night were receiving detailed budget information hours in advance of those living in other parts of Canada.

An Hon. Member: And Members of Parliament.

An Hon. Member: And local broadcast area.

Mr. Riis: Of course, as my hon. friend for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) indicates, those who received Global broadcasting had extra privileged information. It is a shemozzle. It is beyond imagination. For the Prime Minister to allow this Minister to continue, as far as we are concerned, is completely unacceptable.

I do hope that you find, when you review the arguments put forward by Hon. Members, that in terms of parliamentary privileges of Members of this House, every single Member's privileges have been breached. There is no question of that. As my Leader has indicated, the appropriate thing to do would be to send this entire matter to the appropriate standing committee for review. Following that, the Prime Minister should do the honourable thing and not only ask for the Minister of Finance's resignation but withdraw the Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Marc-Yvan Côté was talking about them when he—

Mr. Speaker, the question before the Chair today is very important, and even exceptional, considering the circumstances last night and what happened when we had an unauthorized disclosure of parts of the Budget.

• (1530)

This morning, the House heard an eloquent speech by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) on a question of privilege—to which I intend to speak today—an eloquent defence of the principles of parliamentary democracy. This is the same gentleman who a few months ago asked non-elected senators to obstruct the will of Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Valcourt: Therefore, Mr. Speaker, when you consider the question,—

An Hon. Member: The Senate—

Mr. Valcourt: —the Senate, who are not elected. Of course, the Liberal Party's concept of democracy does not go beyond the petty interests of the Liberal Party and ignores the interests of the people of this country! And there is a big difference, believe me, between the interests of Canadians and the interests of the Leader of the Liberal Party and his followers.

The issue before the Chair is whether the privilege of Members of this House has been breached. I believe that this morning, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis), clearly explained before the House what circumstances caused the Government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the best one we ever had in this country,—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Valcourt: —to reveal the contents of his Budget earlier than anticipated, and to do so before the Canadian public.

An Hon. Member: Participatory democracy!

Mr. Valcourt: The Liberal Members who spoke earlier and my hon. friends in the New Democratic Party are upset by what happened and about this terrible breach of British parliamentary tradition, namely that the Budget was not brought down before this House. I admit that to me it is also a matter of some concern because usually, according to parliamentary custom, the Budget is brought down within the precincts of this House before the elected representatives of all Canadians and, through television, before Canadians across this country.

Yesterday, however, the public interest was threatened by a person who may have committed a criminal offence. That person did not attack the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Justice. That person attacked our country by violating one of its fundamental laws. That person violated a section of the Criminal Code by stealing a document. It is all quite straightforward, Mr. Speaker. Did you hear the Leader of the Opposition this morning? And his new principles? It seems that since the election on November 21, the Liberal Party has acquired some new principles. They have a new principle of physics which says that everything that goes out can come in. This morning, we were given a new principle of criminal law, which says it is all right to steal if the door isn't locked. This, from the Leader of the Opposition. That is what he told us this morning.

However, Mr. Speaker, when you examine the question before the Chair, I think that in addition to protecting the interests of our Parliamentary system and our Parliamentary tradition, you must also consider the people of this country who witnessed the petty politicking of power-hungry Liberals and white-collar socialists, who are interested in only one thing and certainly not in the interests of Canadians. The socialists keep complaining that the rich are not taxed enough. Look at last night's Budget. Look at the minimum tax on corporations, the tax on the wealthy, on people earning over $50,000, all of which the socialists have been demanding for a long time. There is good news in the Budget for this country.

They do not want to talk about it. They would rather try to cloud the issue by calling for the resignation of the Minister of Finance who has the reputation for being the most credible and most honest in Canadian history. I speak of my colleague, the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance said so this morning, as did the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski): there are two basic principles, I believe, that underlie the issue of budget secrecy. Of course, people are not to profit while others cannot, and also the principle that the Government's financial, economic and fiscal policies should be laid out in the House of Commons. Now, what happened last night?

This morning, I heard Opposition Members accuse us of saying that what happened yesterday was the Opposition's fault. No one on this side of the House ever said that! The Minister of Finance never blamed the Opposition for this crime—neither the Liberal Opposition nor our friends the social democrats. No way! But what we are complaining about is that, you see, those people are talking out of both sides of their mouths. On one hand, they complain that Parliament did not receive the Budget, but on the other, when we wanted to call Parliament, with their consent, to present the Budget, they were opposed. Where I come from in Madawaska, we call that talking out of both sides of the mouth. There is a cruder expression for it in English, but that is what they are doing. Today, they think that they will impress Canadians. This morning, Mr. Speaker, our caucus got up early; we were earlier than usual, raring to go.

An Hon. Member: Is your conscience bothering you?

Mr. Valcourt: No, I have a clear conscience. I would like to be able to say as much for you!

Mr. Speaker, I listened to ordinary citizens on an open-line radio show, first in English. Seven people called: seven Canadians, ordinary people whom they love to claim to represent, who voted for us on November 21. These people were saying: "Michael Wilson, the Minister of Finance, resign? Not on your life! He should not resign!" Because Michael Wilson cannot be held responsible for a criminal act that someone else committed. Canadians understand that. They understand that in Madawaska, they understand that in New Brunswick, they understand that in Gaspé, they understand that in Bellechasse and they understand that in Kelowna too. They understand that everywhere. But when you have partisan interests that go beyond the famous principles of "Parliamentary traditions", those people don't give a damn about traditions.

The finest British Parliamentary traditions are not what concerns them. What they are asking you to do, Mr. Speaker, is to hold the Finance Minister guilty for something someone else did. You are being asked to push the principles of British Parliamentary traditions to a ridiculous extreme. You are being asked to forget the principles of fairness that underlie the British Parliamentary system. You are being asked, Mr. Speaker, to forget the principles of common sense and the "reasonable person" test that underlies the British Parliamentary system and in fact all common law. You are being asked to ignore that.

An Hon. Member: A prudent administrator.

Mr. Valcourt: You are being asked to ignore that. In Québec, it is called the bon père de famille—it is the criterion used. There, it is the "reasonable person". It made sense in Québec and everywhere else. What you are being asked to do is to say that although the Minister of Finance took all the normal security measures that a reasonable person—

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Valcourt: The clowns say no, but they have no evidence. All they know is that someone got hold of a document, and the Minister of Finance said it was not a member of his staff. Someone did it. The police is investigating, and we will have to wait and see. We are not going to speculate on the outcome of this investigation. We will leave that to our hon. friends opposite. What the Chair is being asked to do is to extend those principles well beyond our tradition. And when they talk about tradition, they talk about precedents.

• (1540)

Mr. Speaker, I am an Acadian from New Brunswick. I studied law at the University of New Brunswick, and I know about precedents. The precedents these people are talking about, and I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to consider them—First of all, according to my modest legal training, for a precedent to be applicable, it must apply to all the facts of the matter at issue. A precedent must deal with facts that are similar, and the principles of law must also apply. In this case, what they are asking the Chair to do is to ignore the difference between the precedents to which they refer and the situation before us today.

In 1936, in the United Kingdom, and the Leader of the Opposition, the Whip says: Oh, wow! When I heard his Leader last night, I also said: Wow! He hasn't improved. He was talking—

An Hon. Member: You weren't even born in 1936!

Mr. Valcourt: No, I wasn't, and maybe—

An Hon. Member: It shows!

Mr. Valcourt: I could say the same about you. The Hon. Member is one of the old timers. Maybe he has been around for too long—Sometimes they tend to forget.

In any case, when in 1936, it was found after an investigation that a minister had shared his knowledge of the Budget with someone else for that person's benefit, he had to resign. Has any Member opposite alleged that the Minister of Finance knew that he had revealed information on the Budget to a third party? If anyone wants to make that charge, let him put his seat on the line! But that is not what they are saying.

When we look at the precedents, Mr. Speaker, we see that at no time in British parliamentary history has there been a situation where we had a deliberate theft of a Budget document that was subsequently handed to a third party.

Mr. Speaker, today you are being asked to condemn the Minister of Finance for something over which he had absolutely no control. In Québec, and Manitoba, in Saint-Boniface and Caraquet and Bellechasse, Canadians are not about to accept the Opposition's proposal that the Minister of Finance be held responsible for a criminal offence committed by someone else. That is taking the principle of ministerial responsibility to unprecedented levels. If we want to show Canadians that one can serve the public honourably and if we want young Canadians to come and work here as Members in this House, we cannot burden reasonable people with absolutely unreasonable and unrealistic standards. That is what they are asking you to do, Mr. Speaker, and I know that, in your wisdom, you will want to consider this argument.

This morning when I heard—

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Valcourt: You really make me sick!

When we heard the Leader of the Opposition harshly criticize the Minister of Finance and ask for his resignation because the Budget was not tabled in the House—

Mr. Speaker, the Budget will be officially tabled in the House at five o'clock this afternoon, but Canadians have already seen it. Those who revel in being the people's representatives will have an opportunity to vote on this Budget because it will be debated in the House, and every one of us will be able to discuss it. I would encourage you, in the interest of Canada, to vote in favor, even the Hon. Member for LaSalle-Émard (Mr. Martin). The Hon. Member for LaSalle is dead—I mean even the Hon. Member for LaSalle-Émard can vote in favor of the Budget.

In fact, the rights of the Hon. Members are not affected at all and despite the vast experience of our colleagues opposite, they will realize in the days to come that they have an opportunity to discuss the Budget. There will be a debate on the Budget and its contents will be analyzed. Canadians will witness all this and, at the end of the budgetary process, you will vote on the Budget which I have read, Mr. Speaker, and which happens to be fair, equitable and responsible.

While in my constituency of Madawaska-Victoria last weekend, I talked with some citizens about the upcoming Budget and they were speculating on all kinds of measures that could be in it. But all of them agreed, as do all Canadians, that our financial and economic situation is such that the Government must take important and responsible measures to protect the pension plan for our senior citizens, the family allowances program for our needy children, as well as the health insurance system, and they do not want to lose the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

When we see in the Budget, for example, that Atlantic Canada will benefit from a 35 per cent increase in regional development funds in the next five years—Canadians will not want to criticize the Minister of Finance for that.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! The Hon. Member from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) on a point of order.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I think all Members as well as the Speaker have to be patient today when hearing the question of privilege to which all Members have to contribute. I think all Members want to hear everyone's contribution, even if it means granting a little more lecuracy than might normally be the case. That's one thing but to discuss the so-called strong points of the Budget that's going a bit too far.

We on this side of the House have not discussed its weak points. We have talked about the question of privilege, namely whether the budget should or should not be "heard", whether the Minister should or should not stay on as Minister and whether this Budget which the Minister intends to table should be called a Budget. But we have not discussed the substance of the document!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Minister to stick to the question of privilege.

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, how did they put it? To justify their position, they spoke about a non-Budget, a non-Minister, a non-leader, a non-event—

Mr. Speaker, if the Liberals think this is a non-Budget, let them go buy a pack of cigarettes this afternoon! They will find out there is one! And those who like scotch need only go for a drink or buy a bottle, they will see for themselves that there is a Budget.

Mr. Speaker, I would think that you will be taking the matter under very serious consideration before making a rulling in accordance with the principles of British parliamentary tradition. The question boils down to deciding whether or not the Members of this House will have to abide by standards which do not take into account the rules of natural justice.

Our friends on the other side simply ignore the rules of natural justice which have always been the hallmark of parliamentary tradition and their British peers. In the name of democracy, Mr. Speaker, they are asking for the resignation of the best Minister of Finance Canada has ever had. They keep repeating the great democratic principles but, like I said before, these are the same Liberals who do not hesitate to call upon non-elected people to thwart the will of Parliament.

The Liberals are advocating double standards for this House, but I am aware of the wisdom of the Chair and I am sure that you will not give currency to these ridiculous claims made by the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, Canada is facing a promising future. Canada should look to the future with confidence and I would urge you to ask my colleagues in this House to put an immediate end to this debate just so we may do what we were elected for and sent here to do, which is to govern and to make decisions in the best interests of the country.

• (1550)

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the issue before Parliament today is indeed very serious. I have given prior notification of my intention to rise today on this question of privilege. As a matter of fact, I drove from my residence last night to Parliament Hill in order personally to serve that notice on the Clerk of the House of Commons.

Some Members may not think that driving 50 miles at midnight is important, but I felt the issue was of such importance that it warranted that action. Perhaps Members opposite do not think that not only parliamentary privilege of the House but the more important privileges given to us by our constituents to serve them in Parliament are as important as some of us believe. However, I believe those issues are fundamental to this country being the great democracy it is. I hope that at least some Members opposite would share that view.

If you determine, Mr. Speaker, that I have a prima facie case of privilege, I am prepared to move the appropriate motion to refer this issue to the parliamentary committee. Of course, that statement is indeed necessary in order to proceed with this item further, if Your Honour finds there is a prima facie case of privilege.

There are three issues at stake. The first is that the privilege of this House has been abused and, more important, the privileges of all parliamentarians have been abused, and even more fundamental, the privileges of the constituents who send us here have been abused. The second is that secrecy has been breached. The third is that a commitment made to the House by the Government has been breached.

Perhaps I can start with the last item and describe that to Your Honour. You will know that it is recorded the Votes and Proceedings on Wednesday, April 19, 1989:

> By unanimous consent, it was ordered,—That notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, at 5.00 o'clock p.m. on Thursday, April 27, 1989, the Speaker shall interrupt any proceedings then before the House and proceed forthwith to the consideration of Ways and Means Proceedings No. 1, for the purpose of hearing the Budget statement of the Minister of Finance;

Of course, that was provided for by unanimous consent because the Speaker rose in his seat and asked for the unanimous consent of all Members for the Minister of Finance to proceed at the time indicated in the motion I just read to deal with the issue of the Ways and Means motion, namely, the reading of the Budget in the House.

We gave the Minister of Finance our consent for him to read the Budget in the House. Implicit in that consent is obviously the fact that the Budget would be read in the House and that Members of the House would learn of the existence of its contents before or at least the same time as anyone else in the country. That has been breached twice. First, it was breached by the neglect or whatever caused the leak in question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Theft.

Mr. Boudria: I notice the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs who is a lawyer—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): My wife is.

Mr. Boudria: I am tempted to say something to the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. Not being a lawyer, I will not do it.

However, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs will know that for him to state suddenly that this was a theft, and convict whoever it is leaked the document to the media, not knowing whether the individual had been sworn or the person who gave it to him or her, if there was such a person, had been sworn to secrecy, is just a little presumptuous on the part of the Minister. I am sure that upon reflection he will know that as well.

In any event, the first breach was the incident which resulted in the television broadcast and any other situation that caused individual Canadians or a number of Canadians to learn of some of the contents of the Budget. There is a breach of that order of the House which was agreed to by unanimous consent that is even more important, because it was deliberate on the part of the Minister of Finance.

The Minister of Finance stood at the press theatre across the street from Parliament Hill and chose to read excerpts from the document and publicly release the document at a time when Parliament was not sitting, and in contravention to what he himself had agreed to with all other Members of the House by virtue of special order in the Votes and Proceedings of April 19, 1989. I submit that those are at least two different occasions when our privileges as parliamentarians were breached. I have described how the commitment to the House was breached.

Second, there is the issue of the commitment to secrecy. You will undoubtedly know, Mr. Speaker, that the parliamentary constitutional conventions are not solely those we have established in our Canadian House of Commons. They are also those that we have inherited from the mother of Parliament, namely, from the United Kingdom.

• (1600)

Now that is not just something that is convenient to say.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, Section 18 of the Constitution Act dealing with legislative powers states, and I quote:

> The privileges, immunities, and powers to be held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Senate and by the House of Commons, and by the members thereof respectively, shall be such as are from time to time defined by Act of the Parliament of Canada, but so that any Act of the Parliament of Canada defining such privileges, immunities, and powers shall not confer any privileges, immunities, or powers exceeding those at the passing of such Act held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and by the members thereof.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the constitutional conventions established in the Parliament of the United Kingdom are part and parcel of our own constitutional conventions.

[English]

Now, I want to bring the following document to your attention. I have an excerpt here which I want to bring to your attention from a book entitled, Cabinet Government, Jennings, Third Edition, published in Cambridge. This, I am told, is one of the foremost books of Parliamentary Government or Cabinet Government which is often utilized in the Parliament of the United Kingdom. I read from page 110 of the book in part:

> The third principle is that inasmuch as the secrets of the Government are specially in charge of Cabinet ministers, no minister, and particularly, no Cabinet minister, must in any circumstances put himself in a position where he is not able to be the complete guardian of those secrets in that there is any possibility of any private interests being served through a knowledge of those secrets.

Obviously, that part of our Parliamentary constitutional convention was breached yesterday. The Minister may say it was a breach which was excusable, he may make that case, but I submit to you that I would contest that. His argument would not be valid.

More importantly there has been a breach, wilfully or otherwise. Even if he maintains that it has been otherwise, that particular convention has been breached by the two situations that occurred yesterday.

There have been a number of cases which have been raised as precedents in the Canadian Parliamentary system as well.

Members of this House will no doubt be aware of the 1963 Walter Gordon case where outside experts had been employed to work on the Budget. There was no evidence of a breach of secrecy, no evidence of wrongdoing, no evidence of a leak, but the mere fact that someone from outside saw the Budget was cause for the Minister to resign.

Who asked for that resignation? The Conservative Party. It was achieved. The Government made it such that the Minister of Finance had to resign at that time.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Valcourt) asked where were the precedents for what we were asking. This case, which was minute compared to the one we have now—every case is minute compared with the one we have now because there has never been a leak of this size—

Mr. Lewis: Your speech is minute compared with everybody else's.

Mr. Boudria: The Minister of Justice, who put a defence this morning such that he has actually almost convicted two of his colleagues, is talking about the contribution of other Members in this debate. I find it particularly ironic, of all Members across the way, given the testimony that was given by the Minister of Justice in the House today, that he would try to diminish the importance of anyone's contribution here.

The Minister of Justice this morning, and some of his colleagues, have spoken of what is known as the Abbott case where a Budget was presented outside the House of Commons. Two things are different.

First of all, it wasn't a Budget. It was a statement on tax reform and not a Budget per se, as I am told.

The second thing, even more importantly, is that there was not a leak in the sense that some Canadians were made aware or were given or had an opportunity to find out the contents of that document prior to others. It was broadcast simultaneously to everyone who cared to listen to it, obviously a tremendous difference. That is the second difference I have brought to your attention.

Thirdly, the Minister of Finance at that time had not made a commitment to the House that he would present that document in the House. That is in contravention of what we heard today again, so you can see that the defence that was put up this morning by the Minister of Justice was a little less than credible in terms of defending the situation that has occurred now.

A series of events have happened since this morning which I think merit being brought to your attention.

Firstly, this morning the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) said it was somehow the fault of the opposition that this Budget had not been presented in Parliament last night.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Boudria: In rationalizing this behaviour, which is hardly rational, the Minister said the following about what the Government had tried to do: That they had sought the unanimous consent of all Members of the House by asking the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). How can the Leader of the Opposition give unanimous consent for everyone in the House? That is a little hard to follow.

I would really like the Minister to explain how the Leader of the Opposition can give consent for me, how he can give consent for the Independent Member from Alberta who sits at the other end of the House, or anyone else.

An Hon. Member: Or Alex Kindy.

Mr. Boudria: Or even some of the Conservative back-benchers of this House who are less than enamoured with the Government across the way, particularly the whips and others in official capacities in the Conservative Party. Need I elaborate?

Obviously, no one can give that unanimous consent. Unanimous consent can only be sought one way. Mr. Speaker knows it well. Unanimous consent has to be sought inside the House by the Speaker.

In order for the Speaker to have asked for that unanimous consent inside the House, there was only one way to do it. The Conservative Government across the way would have had to ask Your Honour to recall the House pursuant to Standing Order 28. Once the House had been recalled, the Speaker could have asked the House, after being recalled, for its unanimous consent to deal with the Budget, or to deal with anything else for that matter.

You cannot ask Members for their unanimous consent unless they are already in the Chamber. That is why the argument of the Government lacks credibility totally.

I still do not know, and of course I cannot ask the question of the Chair, but I am wondering whether the Government ever did go to Mr. Speaker and ask Mr. Speaker to recall Parliament. We don't know that yet, but given that the Government has not volunteered that information, I can only assume one thing: that the answer is no, because if the Government had asked Mr. Speaker for that, they would have obviously indicated that in their statements raised last night.

The Deputy Prime Minister talked about the fact, in one of his speeches this morning, that the House had to be recalled in order for the Budget to be before the House. A little while later in his speech he talked about the Budget, which he described as already being before the House. Well, the order that was passed is such that we can only deal with the Budget at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

So which is it? Was the Budget before the House when the Deputy Prime Minister was making his statement this morning, or was it not before the House? He has, in fact, said both.

My submission is that the order that was passed calls for two things: one, for this Budget to be brought before the House at 5 o'clock today, and secondly, that it would be brought before this House on or before the time that it would be given to anyone else in the country. Given that the Government has breached that part of the agreement, I do not feel that the unanimous consent we gave for the Budget to be presented at five o'clock today still holds, because it was a conditional consent, an inherent one albeit but nevertheless one which I believe holds, that that Budget was to be presented to us before anyone else. That was breached twice. Once, by the leak caused by the negligence of some type or another, and secondly by the Minister's own speech and the Minister's deliberate handing out of those budgetary documents, which was done across the street last night shortly after 10 o'clock. I went to pick up one of those documents myself. Initially, the official refused to give me a copy of the Budget, saying that I was not a member of the Press Gallery.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Boudria: I stated to the official: "You are telling me, sir, that I cannot have a copy of the Budget? As a Member of Parliament, I cannot have a government document?" I also said: "That is going to make an interesting point of privilege tomorrow". Of course, I was given one immediately, as one might expect.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that across the street yesterday, initially even Members of Parliament were denied the privilege of getting a budgetary document. In other words, the press had access to the Budget not at the same time as MPs, but before, and deliberately by an action of the Government.

I believe that I have indicated to you, Mr. Speaker, a number of cases which should convince you that I have indeed a prima facie case of parliamentary privilege.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it has been some time since I have been involved in procedural questions, but there are a couple of matters I wish to raise. As the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) drew to the attention of the House, I am not a lawyer, but I have had the benefit of some instruction from my wife on some of the intricacies of the law.

Ms. Copps: You tried to be a lawyer.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I hope that my school friend, and his quiet seat-mate, will allow for that.

There are a couple of narrow questions that have to be judged by yourself, Mr. Speaker. They are narrow questions about the propriety of the conduct of the Government in quite extraordinary circumstances.

It is important to take a look at the precedents with regard to the activity of a Minister of Finance when information relating to a Budget comes into the public domain. Those precedents are very precise. Whenever there has been a suggestion that a Minister of Finance must resign, that has been because the information relating to the Budget was published by that Minister; it came from the Minister. That was the case. Some Members of the House are shaking their heads. If they have other information, they can bring it forward in this debate.

However, that was clearly the case in the situation of Hugh Dalton who made an incautious remark himself to a journalist on the way into the Mother of Parliaments in Westminster. That was clearly the case in the situation of the Hon. Marc Lalonde who was careless with a zoom lens at least once in his life and had to rewrite his Budget as a consequence. That was the case in all those circumstances in which a suggestion has seriously been made that a Minister of Finance must relinquish his position as Minister because information became available. That did not happen here. That is not the circumstance in this case.

Questions of where ministerial responsibility begins and ends are very serious questions. As the House Leader of the Official Opposition indicated today during his intervention in this point of privilege, there has been a decision by the Federal Court of Canada with respect to that question. It is a decision with which I am rather acutely acquainted, because it had to do with myself and the Hon. Flora MacDonald when she was the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I should say that is a decision under appeal and the Government of Canada has been granted leave to appeal that particular case. The finding in that case was that a Minister was responsible for certain of the actions or failures to act of an official.

However, the point here is that we are not talking about the action of an official. We are not talking about the failure to act of an official. We are talking about an action that occurred when someone took a document and deliberately conveyed it to a journalist, for reasons known at this stage only to that individual. We are not talking here of officials. We are not talking here of a Minister himself. We are talking here of a thief. That is how this document came into the public domain. Somebody stole it.

Mr. Gauthier: How do you know?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I ask Members of the House to consider whether they are really interested in anything other than simple partisan advantage and making a debate for a day. If they are interested in the principle that is at stake here with respect to ministerial responsibility, they should ask themselves whether it makes sense to suggest that a Minister of the Crown is responsible for actions that occur to that Minister's Department as a result of a thief. Is a Minister of the Crown responsible—

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier rises on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: The Minister has just contradicted himself. In 1983, on page 2462—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier cannot rise on a point of order. He will have later an opportunity to rise. Debate. The Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Marchi: What did the Federal Court say on your Department, Joe?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) has just asked about the court decision to which I referred. Perhaps he was absent from his seat, or perhaps he was absent in his seat when I mentioned that.

It would certainly be a perversion of ministerial responsibility to claim that a Minister is responsible for the actions of a thief.

Let me suggest a parallel. The other day, many Members of the House were concerned with allegations made by one of our colleagues, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), that there had been a break-in in the office of the Hon. Member for Skeena.

Ms. Copps: Is this a break-in?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is now under investigation by officials of the House as to whether or not there was that type of break-in. I ask the House, should the Member for Skeena be asked to resign because someone broke into his office? That is precisely the logic the opposition is proposing here. Members opposite are suggesting that because there has been a document stolen from—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Copps: The Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) talks about a break-in. Is he suggesting that the office of the Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson) was broken into? If that is the case, could he please clarify?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

On debate, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The point to be made is the principle that many of us have accepted through time and the unreality of the suggestion that the Member for Skeena should be held liable for a break-in into his office applies as strongly to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Ms. Copps: There was no break-in in your case.

Mr. Crosbie: Somebody broke into the Budget, girl!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Minister should not be held responsible for a theft.

I make the point, Mr. Speaker, that this doctrine is more than ludicrous. If Members of the House are seriously interested in looking at this problem, they would have to examine the consequences of having the Speaker find that a Minister of Finance, or indeed any other Minister, was responsible for acts of theft against the officials or the officers who were under the responsibility of that Minister. If such a finding were to be made, it would certainly invite anyone who was interested in setting off course any Budget at any time in the future by that type of frivolous action. That interpretation of that principle simply is not an interpretation that can apply.

The other point to which I want to turn some attention has to do with the question as to the response of the House, particularly of the Opposition Parties to the request that the House of Commons be allowed to meet once this extraordinary situation had arisen to allow the Budget to be introduced so we could avoid or limit any of the kinds of concerns that may have arisen as a result of the theft of the document.

There has been some concern expressed about when the Government knew the detail of information that was entering into the public domain. It is important we make that quite clear. The House rose yesterday at six o'clock. My colleague, the House Leader, sought to have an extension of hours for reasons that were explained—

Ms. Copps: On Bill C-9.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —during the Question Period this afternoon.

Ms. Copps: That is a lie. It is a cover-up.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What was known before the House rose was that a reporter for Global Television was alleging, without himself believing he had enough proof, that a leak had occurred. There were two broadcasts, Mr. Speaker, by Global. Those two broadcasts related to different levels of detail which were in the hands of Global TV and its reporters. There were also two attempts by this Government to have the House of Commons deal with that issue. Those two attempts were made at times when there were different levels of detail available to Members of the Government—

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe the subject was discussed in some great detail. The House of Commons was asked to continue sitting to discuss Bill C-9. I am sure the Member would not want inadvertently to mislead the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate. The right of Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark).

Ms. Copps: He is lying.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may have been busy talking at the time and was not listening to answers from this side of the House, but the House Leader in response to that very suggestion made the point that when he moved the motion yesterday at about 5.45 p.m. he used the only language that was open to him under the rules of the House of Commons.

Mr. Marchi: Nonsense.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): In any event, there were two broadcasts by Global reflecting two levels of detail available to Global. There were two attempts by the Government of Canada to provide the opportunity for Parliament to deal with the eventuality of Budget information.

Ms. Copps: Government by Global.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Those two attempts by the Government of Canada also reflected different levels of detail that were available at the time.

It is worth reading into the record of the House of Commons, because of the importance of this matter, the text of the news report that appeared on Global—

Mr. Lapierre: Which one?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The first news report when there was a relatively light level of detail available.

Ms. Copps: Why didn't you wait for Canada A.M.?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Let me quote:

> On the basis of only one anonymous phone call, though Richard, we're not going to report the detail that we've got in it. We, of course, immediately checked this with the Finance Minister's office. We were told of course that there's lots of speculation at this time of year, particularly the day before a budget. He repeated that, the Finance Minister's chief spokesman, said that he wasn't going to comment any further on that, and he hoped that we would proceed very cautiously on the basis of what we had.

That was the record of what was in the public domain prior to the rising of this House yesterday. There was a suggestion that Global should proceed cautiously. Global proceeded cautiously, as it would be appropriate for them to do.

Ms. Copps: The Minister didn't recognize his own Budget.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The first information available to the House Leader was the information referred to by Global Television in the excerpt that I have just read. It was not enough for us to suggest to the House of Commons that there had, in fact, been the kind of publication of details that later became clear. We did not know that. We knew that there was a possibility and that possibility meant that it was prudent for us to ask for the House of Commons to stay in a position where it would be possible for Parliament to receive a Budget early if that were necessary.

Ms. Copps: Come on.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That was the simple act of prudence taken at that time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Just as it would have been irresponsible for Global Television to have suggested more in their broadcast than they knew, so would it have been irresponsible for this Government to have suggested that there was a substantial publication of Budget information—

Mr. Marchi: What is wrong with honesty?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —before we knew that there had, in fact, been that kind of substantial publication of Government information.

It was prudence that led the House Leader to seek agreement to have the House continue in case there was something more serious. It is simply false to argue that the Government knew of the nature of this theft before the House rose yesterday.

In any event, Opposition Parties denied the House of Commons the opportunity to extend its hours. When the document was seen on television around 7 p.m., it became clear that we were dealing with something more than a reporter's speculation because the journalist in question, Mr. Small, held up for the first time a document—

Mr. Lapierre: Did Wilson need that to recognize his own Budget?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —which was clearly a document that bore the logo of the Budget and added the extreme likelihood that there had, in fact, been the entry into the public domain of a budgetary document.

A budget document had evidently been stolen. There it was.

Ms. Copps: How do you know it was stolen?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It had not been released by the Government. It had not become available through the work of a Minister or anyone else.

Ms. Copps: Do you know who stole it?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): But it was there in the public domain on television. It was quoted. That raised the possibility that somebody might take advantage of that information.

I think this is an important part of the debate, Mr. Speaker, because there has been some suggestion here in the House, I take it a serious suggestion, intently felt, that there was a possibility of abuse since this information was available in the public domain before it had been tabled in the normal way. We were concerned about that. It was precisely that concern that there may be some kind of abuse that caused us to act as quickly as we could to regularize the situation, and we did two things. First, we immediately launched an investigation so we would find out what it was that occurred. As my colleague the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) said earlier in question period today, not only was there an RCMP investigation but also precautions have been taken with various security commissions across the country, and that activity is proceeding.

In addition, we knew there was a danger that would grow if there was information available over Global Television that had not been formally presented to Parliament. What we wanted to do was close that gap. We wanted to recognize that a theft had occurred, that a document was in the public domain, that something had to be done to ensure that we limited the range of abuse. What did we do?

Mr. Kaplan: You should have scrapped the Budget.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The House was not sitting. We needed some way in which to put this document, this Budget, in the possession of the House of Commons. It was urgent to act quickly for two reasons. First, to prevent abuses. Second, to respect the rights of Parliament.

Mr. Lapierre: It was urgent at five o'clock.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The question was how could the House of Commons meet quickly?

Mr. Lapierre: You call the Speaker.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Opposition Parties in a quite extraordinary abandonment of their responsibility today has suggested that that question of referring the matter to the House of Commons was the sole responsibility of yourself, sir. It was the sole responsibility of the Speaker.

Mr. Lapierre: Of the Government.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Opposition has suggested that reference could be made to Rule 28. The Opposition knows that Rule 28 would not have applied in that circumstance because it applies to a recess and not to adjournment.

Mr. Marchi: Says who?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): They also knew that it would take fully 24 hours for the requisite notice to be given. What the Opposition Parties are arguing today when they try to blame their delay on Mr. Speaker is that we should have delayed for another 24 hours the process of making regular a Budget presentation that had been interrupted and set off course by an act of theft. That, Mr. Speaker, is simply unacceptable to us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We have had some most disingenuous suggestions from the Opposition that there would not be a need to consult with Opposition Parties in order to get agreement in this House. But, Sir, we have been here long enough to know how the House of Commons works.

• (1630)

We have been here long enough to know that if an Opposition wants to raise questions of principle, to raise points of order at 11 o'clock in the morning, it can keep the debate going until 4.30 in the afternoon. We know that can be done. We know that is possible. We also know that the way one gets agreement in this system is to speak to Party leaders. That is what the Government did last night when we were faced with a situation when we had to make regular the situation where part of the Budget had been published. It was in everybody's interest, including in Parliament's interest, that we make that regular by getting the whole document before the House of Commons. We had to find a way to do that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It was clear that we needed the co-operation of the opposition Parties. It is clear that that co-operation was necessary. My colleague, the Minister of Justice and Government House Leader, phoned the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the Hon. Member for Oshawa and asked for their co-operation. They quite properly asked for a little time to consider. Then they came back and said that they were not going to co-operate with the attempt of the Government to bring Parliament's Budget into Parliament. That was the position that was taken by the two opposition Parties.

We sought that agreement. The opposition Parties denied the co-operation that was the only basis upon which the House could have met last night to receive the Budget, the only practical basis on which this House could have met, but the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party denied Parliament the opportunity to receive the Budget. That was not the Speaker's fault. That was a deliberate decision of the two opposition Parties.

Denied the co-operation of the opposition Parties, the Government followed the only course that was open to have the Budget received by Parliament and to have the Budget published officially for Canadians. Copies were sent to officers of the House of Commons. That was the first thing we did.

My colleague for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell suggested that documents were made available to the press before they were made available to Parliament. That is dead wrong. We were careful to ensure that the Budget Papers had been delivered to the Clerk of the House of Commons for distribution by the Clerk in the normal way to Members of Parliament before the Minister of Finance went to a press conference to meet the press. Copies were sent to officers of Parliament and a press conference was held.

Results of that theft of the document were very harmful to Canada. They have been very harmful to the country. This is interesting, if Members are interested, because we looked at international markets and there was some concern. There was a drop in the value of the dollar when it appeared that there was political turmoil in the country. That trend reversed. I would like to know if my hon. colleagues will continue to laugh. That trend reversed when the process was made regular and when we were able to present, by the only way open to us, that Budget to the Parliament of Canada.

An Hon. Member: You do not know the difference between a leak and a theft.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Opposition spokesmen know, have claimed and made issue here today that there might have been abuse because of this lapse in time. It was precisely because we wanted to avoid that kind of abuse that we asked for the help of the Opposition. We asked not just in Parliament's interest, not just in the Government's interest, but in the interest of Canada, that the Parliament of Canada, that the opposition Parties in Canada would recognize that there had been an extraordinary situation developed and that there needed to be extraordinary action. We were prepared to go more than half way. The opposition Parties absolutely refused to co-operate. Instead of getting on with the business of the country, they now seek to detain the business of this House of Commons with spurious calls for the resignation of the Minister of Finance.

An Hon. Member: Who started it?

Mr. Beatty: The Liberals say that it is a cover-up.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): My colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare—

An Hon. Member: What a hypocrite.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The Hon. Member was making a rather voluble point about an event that occurred in the House some time ago.

An Hon. Member: Thirteen years ago.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Thirteen years ago. It was an event that was of great concern to many of us. It indicated in fact a time when there was the kind of disunion and tumult in this House that none of us wants to see again.

I did have a role to play in those events. The role that I had to play in those events was not to lead people in a charge upon the Chair. The role that I played in those events was to try to do everything I could to restrain Members who were outraged at the procedures at that time from storming the Chair. That is the record. Those are the facts.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): In any event we sought a means by which we could make regular a process—

An Hon. Member: You were not too successful.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Like the Hon. Member I share with the Hon. Member the distinction of not always having been successful. I share with the Hon. Member the desire to try to encourage some order in this House and some fidelity to the record of the House. His colleague, I am sure in an error of youth, misremembered events of several years ago and I took the opportunity to set the record straight.

There are two final points that I would like to make. One is that we sought the co-operation of the House of Commons once this problem had arisen, to ensure that we could act in a way that would respect the economic interests of Canada and that would respect the traditions and the rights of the House of Commons of Canada. That co-operation was denied, but, Sir, I think that was irresponsible on behalf of the opposition Parties.

However, that is not the issue here. The issue here is whether the Minister of Finance acted appropriately in these extraordinary circumstances. The record is clear, the record is clear. Whether it is judged against all of the precedents of all of the Parliaments of our tradition, or whether it is judged against other events that have occurred in this House, the record is clear that the Minister of Finance in these extraordinary circumstances acted openly, acted decisively, and acted with his customary honour.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It would be absurd for him to resign because some thief stole the document. That would be absurd. Every precedent of Parliament says he should continue. That is important, but in addition to every precedent of Parliament saying that the Minister of Finance should continue, his conduct in that office as an extraordinary and outstanding servant of this country and this Government and in this House indicate that it is in the interest of this nation that he be allowed to continue and that we get on with the business of Canada and stop this kind of partisan diversion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, this is the second occasion I have had to rise in this House on a question of privilege in the course of this session.

An Hon. Member: What happened to the first one?

Mr. Milliken: We will soon find out. The Speaker has not ruled on the present one, but frankly I am dismayed that both of the occasions have involved the principal business of the House of Commons, namely, financial matters.

The first question raised on April 6, as Your Honour will recall, dealt with the question of the Business of Supply. Today we are dealing with the second item of business under financial matters, Ways and Means. What the Government has done is effectively damage the rights of the Members of this House to deal with both these cardinal issues that under the Constitution are the most important single items with which this House is called upon to deal.

I will read again to a citation from Bourinot's Second Edition as I did on April 6, 1989, as reported at page 175 of Hansard. Obviously the impact of it did not sink into the hon. gentlemen who sit on the treasury benches opposite. It states:

> The principal purpose of the House of Commons, in fact, is the consideration and criticism of the Estimates and the taxes required to meet the public expenditures; and the committees in question are the parliamentary machinery by means of which the House chiefly exercises its political and constitutional functions.

We are here today because the Government ran into a problem yesterday. I suggest to the Government that it is of its own making. It is one that it had to deal with. By failing to deal with it, it has effectively limited the opportunity for Members in the House to receive the Budget in an orderly way and to deal with it in an orderly way.

• (1640)

Notwithstanding what we have just heard from the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), I say that the position the Government found itself in last night was clearly one of panic. I was here at 5.55 p.m. last evening when the Hon. Government House Leader, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis), came into the House. He was clearly exercised. He was ashen. He was running back and forth. He sat down on the other side of the House and he was clearly upset. I said: "What's the matter?" He did not hear me, or if he did he ignored it. He tried his motion and it failed.

We have had a version of events from the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs that needs to be corrected. I would like to set the record straight.

Mr. Friesen: And this guy knows.

Mr. Milliken: Last evening I was here and I observed these facts. Perhaps the Hon. Member was not.

At 5.55 p.m. the Minister of Justice came into this House and he asked that the sitting of the House be continued for the purpose of considering Bill C-9, which was then under discussion.

Why did he not come over to the Opposition House Leader and say: "We have a problem. There may be a problem"? He admitted in Question Period today that he thought that there might be a problem, that there was a possibility of a probability of a chance of a leak. It was a flood. The Minister might well have known that.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) phoned him because he was so concerned. He obviously thought that what he was hearing from the reporter was his own budget speech. He called the Government House Leader and said: "Do something, we are in trouble here. We are in a pickle". He came running into the House. He left his committee meeting and came over here to try to get us to sit late. He now blames us as members of the Opposition who are here doing our job.

There were more than 15 of us here. We stopped that motion last night. He now blames us for stopping consideration of Bill C-9 because, he says: "Really what I wanted to do was read the Budget. Consider Bill C-9 until I am ready to read the Budget and then I will come in to read the Budget". That is what he was really trying to do.

He was on Canada AM this morning. Some Hon. Members may have seen him. You may have seen him too, Mr. Speaker. There he was waxing eloquent, talking about British parliamentary tradition as though it were the most wonderful thing in this great spirit of co-operation he was talking about and how always under British parliamentary practice there was tremendous co-operation between government and opposition. Where was it last night? Why did he not come over here, come clean and say: "There may have been a leak. We may need your help"? He did not do that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Milliken: Then, having had the House adjourn at 6 p.m., he did not use Standing Order 28(3). I want to read it because obviously the Secretary of State for External Affairs has a strange comprehension of common English. He has failed to grasp the essentials of this rule. He said that it only applied during a recess. Nonsense. He said that it could only work if there were 24 hours' notice. Nonsense. Read the rule, I say to the right hon. gentleman. I will read it for him.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Read the whole rule.

Mr. Milliken: I will read it slowly. It states: "Whenever the House stands adjourned." It does not say recessed but adjourned. "If the Speaker is satisfied, after consultation with the Government", not with the Opposition but with the Government. We are not supposed to be involved in that consultation. The responsibility rests four-square on that side of the House. Their job is to go to the Speaker and ask. They did not even do it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Milliken: That is the rule. It states further: "after consultation with the Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time". It does not state on 24 hours' notice. It continues: "the Speaker may give notice", and it does not say notice of 24 hours". It continues: "that being so satisfied the House shall meet, and thereupon the House shall meet to transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time".

Those are the relevant parts of the rule. It is crystal clear.

Mr. McKnight: Read it all.

Mr. Milliken: I do not know what more we need to read, but I will read the rest of it. It states: "In the event of the Speaker being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker, the Deputy Chairman of Committees, or the Assistant Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in the Speaker's stead for the purposes of this section."

I hope I did not read that too fast. However, I do not think that is relevant to the issue that is here. There is no suggestion that Mr. Speaker was not available last night.

I suggest to Hon. Members opposite that they failed to take a look in the rule book. They phoned the Leader of the Opposition. They phoned the Leader of the New Democratic Party. When they found that they could not get their consent, they said: "Well, we will just go to the airwaves and make it public in Canada. So what if some Canadians have gone to bed expecting that they will be able to manage their affairs tomorrow morning on the basis of a Budget to be introduced the following evening at 5 p.m., so what about them". They really did not care. Everything went on last night at 10 p.m. The Minister of Finance came in and made a statement last night.

I suggest that the Government knew when it received the information about the leak that it had a problem. In spite of all the protests that we heard today, it knew that the responsibility of the Minister of Finance was to resign at once. The Government knew that its obligation was to withdraw that Budget, to appoint a new Minister of Finance and to set a new date to bring in a proper Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Milliken: That is what the precedents indicate. For the edification of Hon. Members opposite I would like to take a look at a few of those precedents. They have referred to a few of them from time to time here today. Hon. Members will recall in 1963 the outrage expressed by some Hon. Members opposite on the occasion of Mr. Gordon's Budget. As Hon. Members will recall he had hired some outside consultants to assist in the preparation of the Budget.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He had hired them. He, the Minister.

Mr. Milliken: There was never any suggestion of any leaks except from some members of the Opposition. The Hon. George Nowlan who was the chief opposition critic at the time gave a speech on June 19, 1963. I recall he waxed eloquent on the subject of the sins of the Minister of Finance, Mr. Gordon. He went on and on for pages and pages, saying how dreadful it was that these people had been brought in on the budget process. At the end of his speech he moved a motion of non-confidence in the Government. If we ever do get a Budget here, we will undoubtedly be doing the same thing.

The motion reads in part:

> This House regrets that the Minister of Finance by failing to maintain the constitutional practice of the essential secrecy of the budget has seriously weakened public confidence;

Those were the words that Mr. Nowlan intoned in his motion. It was supported and seconded by Mr. Diefenbaker. That concept of budget secrecy and its essential importance for our Constitution was unquestioned by Mr. Nowlan. He was a predecessor of my hon. friends opposite. Indeed, his son sits on the opposite side of the House to this day.

There are other quotations. I do not want to put the Minister of Justice in the embarrassing position of reading his earlier quotations.

Mr. Lewis: Go ahead.

Mr. Milliken: I noticed him this morning squirming and saying that he was making an argument that he did not deserve to win. I agree with him. He did not deserve to win it, but not for the same reasons he thinks. The difference was that the Hon. Marc Lalonde had not done anything like this Minister has done. When his Budget was introduced—

Mr. Crosbie: He leaked his own Budget.

Mr. Milliken: —it was not the same as the document that had been filmed. His document had been changed. As Mr. Trudeau said so carefully at the time: "It is not a Budget until it gets into the House". That is why we say we do not have a Budget today. There was not one then until Mr. Lalonde tabled it in this House. When he did, it was not the same document that had been filmed.

In spite of that distinction, which I submit is a very significant one, I would like to read a question that was asked on April 19, 1983 by the Hon. Sinclair Stevens, a gentleman well known for his knowledge of resignations and the requirement for resignations from Cabinets. He asked the following question:

> Madam Speaker, in view of the story with which we are well acquainted, for example, The Citizen indicating that a budget leak occurred yesterday evening, in which a deficit of $31.2 billion is anticipated for the forthcoming year, and in view of the fact that this is an example of gross negligence on the part of a Minister, a breach of a Minister's oath of secrecy, something totally unacceptable in our parliamentary system, would the Prime Minister indicate whether he has received the resignation of the Minister of Finance and, if so, whether he has accepted it?

That was the question that was posed. No one challenged the fact that if there had been a gross breach of budget secrecy the Minister should resign. Yet this Government denies that principle. It denies that principle in relation to the taxes that it seeks to impose upon the people. It denies the principle in relation to the expenses that it is trying to claim from this House by having them passed by Governor General's warrants.

• (1650)

I would like to read another quotation of the Acting Leader of the Opposition on the same day in 1983, the Hon. Erik Nielsen, a man of fond memory to Hon. Members opposite.

An Hon. Member: He is looking after VIA.

Mr. Milliken: He is looking after VIA now, the carving up operation. He said:

> No doubt they will try to brazen this out by bringing in changes, altering a decimal point or altering a few pertinent phrases in that Budget. Does the Prime Minister really believe that he can get away with that and that that will cure this gross breach of the normal secrecy that surrounds budgets?

Note the words: Normal secrecy.

An Hon. Member: Did he change it?

Mr. Milliken: Of course he did, and he was right, he could. Does he not agree that he should ask for the resignation of the Minister of Finance who, if he were self-respecting at all, would have submitted that resignation after he discovered his error yesterday? What would Mr. Nielsen say to the present Minister of Finance in these circumstances? Aye, there is a former Minister of Finance sitting across the way, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). He knows what it is like to be a Minister of Finance. He did not have leaks like this, and neither did the Leader of the Opposition when he was the Minister of Finance.

I want to turn to the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister. He gave us a lot of pious nonsense in the House this morning, suggesting that the House could only be called with unanimous consent. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has put paid to that argument in my submission. It is quite obvious that unanimous consent is not going to assist in the circumstances because as the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell indicated, it could only be obtained by having the House sitting and every Member here and agreeing.

Members of this House are elected to serve their constituents. They are elected to represent their constituents in Parliament. One of the ways they represent their constituents is by dealing with the financial plans of this Government, of any Government. Indeed, the House is charged with the responsibility for dealing with those financial plans in two aspects: on the expenditure side and on the revenue side as I have indicated.

What the Government is doing by its failure to deal with this Budget in a proper way, in having the Minister resign and setting a new date, in failing to bring its Estimates before the House in a timely way—they are still not here—and in producing its records for inspection by this House and allowing this House to deal with the questions of Supply and of Ways and Means in a proper and orderly way, is depriving us of our right to do our duty to represent our people, to represent our constituents in Parliament.

With great respect, we have heard today several members of the Opposition stand and seek to represent the rights of their constituents by asserting the ancient privileges of this House. It is fine to talk about parliamentary privilege. Maybe it means nothing to a lot of people in Canada who hear the expression and think that it is not important. It is important because those privileges are in fact the representation of the privileges of the people. It is those people that all 295 of us are here to represent.

I recognize, and I think all Hon. Members recognize it, that the persons who occupy positions in Cabinet have an additional or slightly different responsibility. I can understand. Members of Cabinet, when they are caught with their pants down as they were last night, lost the biggest thing they could have lost, namely, the Budget. It went out the window, disappeared on the streets and was published in the newspaper. I can understand their embarrassment, their unease and their desire to get that clammed up and to shore up their position. They ran to the media and got the thing public, even though it had been public for many hours already, in an effort to diffuse the criticism to which they knew they would be subjected.

I can understand that. What I cannot understand is why we have not heard from any of the Members who sit behind government Members on that side of the House. I would have thought the Hon. Member for Macleod (Mr. Hughes), who is a vociferous defender of the rights of the individual, or the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South (Mrs. Dobbie), or the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Reid), although he is not here at the moment, or even the Hon. Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy), might have been up on their feet defending the ancient rights of their constituents who are represented by them in this House. They are to deal with the financial affairs of this country in an orderly way, not on the airwaves, not in press releases, not by handing the stuff around at midnight.

Mr. McDermid: Why would you not agree to us sitting last night?

Mr. Milliken: Because I have been through that. If the Hon. Member had been here, he would know the answer to that question. I have just given the answer. I think those Members should get on their feet and stand up for the rights of their constituents. The rights of this Parliament are being steamrolled by the procedure being adopted by the Government opposite on this issue and on every other financial issue that it has had to deal with in this Parliament.

Considering your ruling on this point, Sir, I invite you—

Mr. McDermid: Nobody is listening to you.

Mr. Milliken: You obviously are.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, heard!

Mr. Milliken: I suggest the Hon. Minister keep doing so. It is doing some good.

As I was saying, in considering your ruling on this very important question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I invite you to have regard to the rights not just of us as Members, which is of course your principal duty, but to bear in mind the rights of the people whom we as Members of Parliament are charged with representing in this House and the rights of Canadians to avoid taxation without representation and to avoid being taxed without that tax having been approved in this House by their duly elected representatives.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, after listening to the Hon. Member,

An Hon. Member: That is two of you.

Mr. Andre: I can see that his potential clients should be grateful that he is back here.

I wonder about the question of duties and responsibilities and wonder if the Hon. Member and his colleagues ever considered what might be the national interest in all this.

There is no Standing Order to deal with the theft of a budget document. What is required when something like that happens is for there to be co-operation between members on both sides of the aisle, in recognition that hopefully we both have the national interest in mind.

What the Government House Leader attempted to do yesterday was to achieve the co-operation of the Opposition in presenting to the public the budget documents as quickly as possible, given the theft that occurred. The opposition Parties said "No, no". The national interest which might have been served in that way was not something that they were interested in pursuing but rather it is potential partisan advantage. I think the last laugh may in fact end up on our side. Quite frankly if Hon. Members opposite have been talking to their constituents today, they will see that Canadians in overwhelming majority are backing the Minister of Finance.

• (1700)

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise all Hon. Members that, as I am bound to do by the Special Order, I intend to read the beginning of the motion. However, I want to say that I am anticipating points of order. I ask the co-operation of the House to allow me to do what I am directed to do under the Special Order. I will stop short of recognizing the Minister and then I will hear points of order.

It being five o'clock p.m., pursuant to order made Wednesday, April 19, 1989, the House will proceed to Ways and Means Proceeding No. 1.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Michael Wilson (minister of Finance) moved:

That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speake, I rise on a point of order. The process has been soiled. The House has been betrayed.

The motion you just read received unanimous consent on April 19, 1989, and the Official Opposition would like at this time to make certain comments regarding that unanimous consent.

Our understanding was that we were to deal with a Budget speech prepared and presented in the traditional way, including all the traditional security measures that were taken for granted by all of us here for several years.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we had every confidence in the budgetary process. We had every confidence in the Minister of Finances' integrity. We had every confidence in the Government's honesty towards the House of Commons, in the Justice Minister's honesty. Our trust was betrayed.

[English]

We were deceived. Our trust was betrayed. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has been extremely negligent. He did not take appropriate measures to protect the integrity of the budgetary process.

Last night, the Government House Leader was not straight, honest and above board with this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: He made no attempt to talk to other Party Leaders in the House so as to share with them his concerns about the extremely important situation the Government was in. He did not preserve the integrity of the budgetary process. He did not uphold the integrity of his ministry. He was deceitful and less than honest when he attempted to tar the Opposition Parties—

Mr. Andre: Order!

Some Hon. Members: Come on!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member can express his concerns in more appropriate language and I would ask him to do so.

Mr. Gauthier: In consequence, the Official Opposition withdraws its unanimous support for this motion adopted April 19, 1989 and says so openly. We disagree with the Government.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Some days ago you asked if there would be unanimous consent for a Special Order that would permit the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to read his Budget for the first time so that all the people of Canada would have an opportunity to hear the Budget statement in the House of Commons. We gave our unanimous consent. We felt that was the time-honoured tradition of the House, and have always done it that way. We were quite prepased to give unanimous consent to have it $one in 1989.

However, some things have happened since that came before the House. I do not have to remind ur ce'essarily th!t at seven o'Clock ,ast night the Prime Minister (Gr. Mulroney) haD a0 decision to make. He had been informed that there was a leak. He was aware of the details that someone had possessed in terms of the Budget.

He could have made two decisions. He had a choice. One would have been to recognize that a massive blunder had occurred and that he ought to call for the resignation of the Minister of Finance and start the process over again properly and have a Budget later. However, he decided to push ahead. In spite of the fact that there were a number of people in the country who had leaked information, who had privileged information—

Mr. Dick: Do you know who?

Mr. Riis: We were aware at that time that at least one of the networks was going to go public with it and that there was at least two people in the country who had detailed information, perhaps many, many more. Knowing that, the Prime Minister decided to surge ahead and try to ram this Budget through.

We are at a difficult point. For the entire day we have been arguing the question before the House whether the budgetary process is consistent with the traditions and long-standing practices of the House. That is what we have been arguing all day. We have been hearing from Members on both sides whether this process is acceptable.

Mr. Speaker, you are asking us now, before that debate is concluded, before any decision of the House has been taken, to proceed to a special motion before us which anticipates a decision by this House that would say that what the Government is doing is acceptable. We have not come to that conclusion.

The arguments are being put forward, as of 10 minutes ago, yet you are asking us to make a decision now. I suspect you are in a position to have to make a decision whether or not this anticipation of a decision is appropriate.

New Democrats have held that the Minister of Finance ought to have resigned, that the Budget, as it was presented in the press conference last night, ought to have been cancelled and a proper one introduced at an appropriate time. For that reason, on behalf of my Party, I have no other choice but to withdraw our support for proceeding with this special motion at this time.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my friends opposite make the point that at the time unanimous consent was given they expected that the Budget events would unfold in the normal way. We all did. There is no question about that.

The motion states that for the purpose of the Budget statement of the Minister of Finance certain things shall take place. A Budget document was made public in another forum. National television, it is true.

I guess the question is whether Members of Parliament or the House of Commons are going to be held hostage to the actions of a thief.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, come on!

Mr. Lewis: That is the question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is not the question at all.

Mr. Lewis: The House came to a decision as to an appropriate order of events for today. The House took that decision. That is our position.

We feel that the decision of the House last Wednesday was a valid decision and should go forward and should stand.

I want to make reference to my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), who I have known for some time and respect. I think there are comments made from time to time in the heat of this place. I know I have made them myself. I regret those comments. I have had a lot of things said about me, but I do not think my honour has been questioned. I will say to you that I take them in the heat of battle and I will not remember them tomorrow because I know my friend to be an honourable person. I know he fights hard and well for his Party and I think they were made in the heat of the battle.

Last night at 5.45 my duty as the Government House Leader was to preserve our options if in fact there was an authenticated, substantiated, corroborated Budget leak. I say to you that the gentleman, Mr. Small, who brought this Budget leak to the attention of the Canadian public, did not authenticate it, did not substantiate it until he had it in his hand at seven o'clock. So at quarter to six I took the action I could. I suggest to you that the only option was to move under Standing Order 26(1) to preserve our options. Therefore I moved it. I say to you Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, that I believe the House Order duly voted upon, unanimous consent by the House, stands and is valid, and I suggest that after you have had an opportunity to consider the matter you might wish to reserve. We are in your hands.

• (1710)

The Hon. Minister of Finance should proceed in the event that your ruling is favourable.

Mr. Speaker: I do not need to remind Hon. Members that we are having an unusual day.

I have listened with considerable care to the Hon. Member from Ottawa—Vanier, the Hon. Member for Kamloops and the Minister.

The position that both the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party is taking in this argument is that because of changed circumstances the Order, despite the fact that it was obtained by consent, ought to no longer bind the House. I think that is the point.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: I am going to ask the co-operation of the House to stand down for a short while as I consider this unusual circumstance.

The sitting of the House was suspended at 5.11 p.m.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 5.34 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

LEAK OF BUDGET DOCUMENT—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: On April 19, 1989, an Order was made by this House. It was a unanimous order as a consequence of discussions as so often happens here between Leaders of all three Parties. That Order—I am citing this so that Hon. Members and the public will clearly understand what is taking place—related to the presentation of a Budget. The agreement entered into prior to the Order being presented to the House and the unanimous consent that was given to the Order when it was presented to the House were clearly based on the expectation that the Minister of Finance would rise today and present his Budget. I read the Order:

> That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of this House, at 5.00 o'clock p.m. on Thursday, April 27, 1989, the Speaker shall interrupt any proceedings then before the House and proceed forthwith to the consideration of Ways and Means Proceedings No. 1, for the purpose of hearing the Budget statement of the Minister of Finance;
> That, immediately following such budget statement, the House shall revert to the Routine Proceedings "Introduction of Government Bills" and, following introduction and first reading of a bill or bills, the Speaker shall recognize a member of the Official Opposition in debate on Ways and Means Proceedings No. 1; and

That would mean in the usual course a representative of the Official Opposition would speak and, if that took place, would have unlimited time. It continues:

> That the House shall not adjourn until the adjournment of the debate on Ways and Means Proceedings No. 1, following which the Speaker shall adjourn the House until the next sitting day.

And by unanimous consent it was ordered:

> That, on Friday, April 28, 1989, the House shall meet at 11 o'clock a.m. with Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 31 at that time, Oral Questions at 11.15 o'clock a.m., until 12 o'clock noon, followed by the Daily Routine of Business;
> That, immediately upon the completion of the Daily Routine of Business, the House shall proceed to Government Orders, Ways and Means Proceedings No. 1 (the Budget motion);
> That, during the debate on the Budget motion, on that day, there shall be one speaker for the Official Opposition followed by one speaker for the New Democratic Party and, that both speakers will be allowed whatever time is necessary to complete their speeches; and
> That, immediately upon completion of the speech by the New Democratic Party speaker, but in any event not later than 3.30 o'clock p.m., the Speaker shall adjourn the House until Monday, May 1, 1989, at 11 o'clock a.m.

That is the Order which was entered into by consent.

Several things have happened in the last 24 hours as Hon. Members and the public know and as a consequence the Government decided that the Minister of Finance had to proceed with the presentation of the Budget by way of a press conference yesterday evening rather than wait until today and present the Budget by way of the Special Order.

It is not for me to argue about these events except to record, as Hon. Members and the public are aware, that the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party have argued this afternoon that it is not appropriate to proceed under this Order even though consent was given before because circumstances have changed.

Both the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party have taken the unusual step of advising the House that under the circumstances they withdraw their consent. By that I take it to mean that they no longer feel that they ought to agree that the House should proceed under the provisions of the Special Order.

I am quick to point out that there are negotiations that take place here all the time and sometimes when agreement seems to have been reached, but prior to it having taken effect on the floor of the House, circumstances may change.

Sometimes what may have seemed to have been consent earlier is not followed through because of changed circumstances.

The difficulty the Speaker is in, in this present situation, is that while fully understanding the position of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party and fully understanding the reason for it, the fact of the matter is that we now have a House Order, which was passed by the House. I can see no way that I can unilaterally change that.

This House Order could be changed, of course, if the House wishes to direct me in that way, but I have not received such a direction. I am bound to follow it unless, of course, I am directed otherwise. As I say, the House has not done so.

There was another argument advanced, that is, that the Budget ought not to go ahead until the argument over privilege—because there are a number of privilege applications all being heard in one debate—is completed.

I am continuing to hear argument on what may or may not be a contempt of this House. I do not prejudge that. While the matter to be heard under this special House Order that I have described, and the questions of contempt and privilege are related questions, I have looked at them carefully and it is my view that they are not dependent one upon the other. Each stands alone as a unique proceeding.

The Speaker cannot foresee the future, that is, what the House may eventually do if there is a prima facie case of contempt or privilege. As I said, I intend to hear further argument on the privilege matter. It is not closed off this afternoon by any means.

However, while I do not know what may eventually happen on the privilege issue, I do know what the House has done with the special House Order. I must advise Hon. Members that I am bound by it. Therefore, it is my duty to recognize the Hon. Minister of Finance.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I expressed this morning my regret at not being able to deliver my Budget speech first to the House of Commons. Members on all sides have debated the circumstances surrounding this matter during the course of today.

Let me now make some summary comments about my Budget, a Budget which I view as most significant for Canadians.

It is important for Members of the House and all Canadians to understand the budgetary policy that has shaped the measures in the documents that I am tabling today.

[Translation]

It is also important to understand the major economic and social objectives which our policies will help achieve.

[English]

Our Budget is designed to deal with the over-arching national problem that stands between Canadians and a better future for ourselves and for our children: our large and growing public debt.

It is now more than $320 billion. The debt is more than 20 times larger than it was in the mid-1970s when it began to grow faster than the national economy. Interest payments on the debt will require more than one-third of all government revenues this year.

As a Government, we recognized the threat posed by the debt and its enormous momentum of growth when we came to office four and one-half years ago.

As part of a broad agenda of action to strengthen the foundations of Canada's economy, we acted to slow the growth of debt by reducing the annual deficit. We succeeded in reducing the growth of the debt from almost 24 per cent in 1984 to less than 10 per cent last year.

During the same period, the Canadian economy generated substantial growth. It created one and one-half million new jobs and expanded faster than most other industrial nations.

The paramount fiscal policy objective of this Government is to continue getting the public debt under control through deficit reduction, and to reinforce the policies that helped to achieve the record of fiscal and economic progress.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There is now a new urgency to the challenge. In response to rising inflationary pressures in Canada and abroad, short-term interest rates have risen. They will be much higher this year than was widely expected by most commentators even a few months ago.

If we do not act now, we will face a growing danger of higher inflation and even higher interest rates. This could lead to a severe recession. At the same time, the projected cost of paying the interest on the debt has risen by more than $6 billion this year. This interest cost alone will be $39 billion. That is more than we spend in total on health care, family allowances, old age security and social assistance.

What is at stake here is nothing less than our capacity as a Government and as a nation to maintain the high standard of living and quality of life that Canadians expect.

[Translation]

If we want to protect and improve our standard of living and quality of life, we must adopt firm, balanced and coherent financial and monetary policies which will help us continue the process aimed at lowering inflation and interest rates and prevent them from going up again; we must adopt realistic and balanced policies which carefully strike a proper balance between short term dangers and long term objectives.

[English]

The decisive debt control actions in this Budget are essential to the achievement of the right policy balance now and in the years to come.

The budget measures that I am proposing, and which are set out in detail in the documents that I will be tabling, include a wide range of reductions in government spending and measures to increase revenues. In addition, fundamental economic strength and revenue stability will be enhanced through reform of the federal sales tax.

Major reductions in program spending have been achieved. When fully implemented, these will total about $2.5 billion a year. These measures build on the expenditure restraint actions undertaken since 1984. As a result, program spending has declined from 19.5 per cent of our national income just five years ago to 16 per cent this year. In 1993–94, it will fall further to just over 15 per cent. Mr. Speaker, that is the lowest level it will have been in a quarter century.

Our debt control actions, both expenditure reductions and revenue increases, will total more than $5 billion this year and $9 billion next year. This will offset most of the increase in interest costs this year and reduce the annual deficit to $30.5 billion. Next year, it will be reduced to $28 billion.

The debt-to-GDP ratio will stabilize next year. This means that the public debt will stop growing faster than the economy for the first time since the mid 1970s.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): By 1993–94, the deficit will be cut in half to $15 billion.

• (1750)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The decisive actions announced in the budget are essential to the achievement of a necessary balance between our budgetary and monetary policies to ease inflationary pressures, create a margin for interest rate reductions and maintain economic growth.

[English]

As the deficit continues to go down, the debt will shrink as a proportion of our national income. Interest costs will take less of every revenue dollar. This will restore the flexibility that we need to continue to maintain the programs that Canadians value, and to build a better future for our children and for our grandchildren.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): More important than any numbers that we can cite, we will have a Canada that is continuing on course for a rising standard of living and better quality of life to pass on to the next generation, a Canada that is building for the future, not borrowing from it. That is our responsibility as a Government. That is surely our goal as Canadians.

Four years ago we brought forward a plan to build a better future for Canada. We knew that to stay on that course would require a sustained national effort. Together we have made great progress. Our future success will depend on the will of the Government to continue making tough choices and on the understanding and commitment of Canadians to join in building a stronger Canada. That is what the policies in this Budget are all about.

Today, I am tabling all the budgetary documents, including notices of Ways and Means motions covering changes to the Income Tax Act, the Excise Act, the Excise Tax Act, the Customs Tariff and the Old Age Security Act. Details of these measures are included in the material that I am tabling. I ask that an order of the day be designated for the consideration of each of these Ways and Means motions.

In addition, pursuant to a motion of this House I will introduce today a Bill seeking the borrowing authority for the 1989-90 fiscal year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the order adopted on Wednesday, April 19, 1989, the House will now revert to the item "Introduction of Government Bills".

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the Budget that was made public some 24 hours ago demonstrates what many Canadians have known for years. It is that the Government of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is at one and the same time unfair and indifferent to the real needs of Canadians, and incompetent in the management of the finances of our country.

That the Government hopes to deal with its deficit by slashing programs and raising taxes is now painfully clear. Much will be said in the next weeks about this Budget and its impact on the average Canadian family. We on this side of the House shall participate in that debate. We shall have a great deal to say about it.

In these next few minutes I want to say something about deficits, not the Government's deficit, not the many dollars that separate its spending from its income. I want to talk about the deficits that every Canadian understands, the deficits with which every Canadian can identify, the deficits that touch the lives of every Canadian in a very real way.

There are many deficits in this Budget, but they are very different from the deficit the Government talks about. There is a deficit of compassion, of assistance, of caring.

Ask a single mother in Brampton who relies on day care to enable her to work full time who believed the Prime Minister when he promised a comprehensive national day care plan. Where is that promise today? There is a deficit of caring.

Ask a woman in Vancouver whose husband was left for two nights in an emergency ward because no hospital bed was available. Ask the people who hoped that funding for our health care system would be increased, not mindlessly cut as it has been in this Budget.

There is in this Budget a deficit of assistance, assistance for Canadians in real need. Ask the young family in Bonavista who has to survive on unemployment assistance for seven months of the year, who now faces cuts not only in unemployment insurance but also in regional development grants which can offer them a way out of poverty. Now the Government is withdrawing from unemployment insurance.

Ask the teenager in Yorkton who hoped to receive financial assistance to attend university this autumn but who will now despair upon learning that this Budget reduces spending on post-secondary education.

There is also a deficit of fairness in this Budget. What is fair about expecting farmers to cope with high interest rates and at the same time to cope with the gutting of funding for vital agricultural programs?

For a middle-income Canadian family, this Budget will mean an additional $700 in taxes, for a total increase of almost $2,000 in taxes since the Government came to office. Every single community in Canada, every single family, will be hurt by the cuts in spending on medicare and education. Many will also be hurt by cuts in regional development. What is particularly deplorable is that the very communities least able to weather the Conservative reduction will suffer the greatest cuts.

Federal funding for our hospitals, for our colleges and universities is reduced by this Budget at a time when the need for more money is very obvious to all Canadians. Our health system, already under great strain, will suffer at a time when public confidence is already weakened. Colleges and universities, already plagued by years of declining funding, now face the almost impossible task of maintaining their standards of excellence. Their academic credibility, already under fire, is greatly undermined by this Budget. Worse, students and would-be students will find it increasingly difficult to obtain an education.

In every Budget in every year since this Government came to power in 1984, the Minister of Finance has denounced the deficit. We have heard him promise repeatedly to do something about it. In each of those years, the Government has failed utterly to do what it said it would do.

We learned from this Budget that the deficit is increasing for the second year in a row in spite of six consecutive years of high economic growth. Clearly, these people do not know what they are doing. This is a fudge-it Budget. The economic assumptions on which this Budget is based are simply not credible. Once again the Minister of Finance is fudging the books. There are no guarantees whatever that the deficit target of $31 billion will be reached. In fact, there is every reason to believe that the deficit will be higher than that.

The Minister of Finance's optimism is not widely shared. He forecasts that the economy will grow in the next year at a rate of 3 per cent, much higher than any other forecasts. Worse, he is predicting that the interest rates will average 12 per cent for the year, despite the fact that interest rates today are already more than 12.5 per cent.

Next year the Minister expects the economy to slow considerably, predicting growth to drop by almost one-half. No doubt this is to be expected as a result of this Government's prolonged mismanagement of the economy. The Government cannot at the same time reduce its spending, increase taxes, raise interest rates and hope that somehow the economy will continue to grow. Canadians are now to pay a heavy price for the Government's incompetence. Today's Budget—or should I say yesterday's Budget—makes it clear who will suffer. During the past four years taxes on individuals have grown faster than taxes on corporations. With today's Budget, Canadians will pay yet more taxes. During the past four years, taxes on low and middle-income Canadians were increased sharply while tax increases on the wealthy were far less.

Interest rates have risen to the point where small businesses have been put at risk, where many families fear that they will lose their homes or despair of ever owning one. Now we face cuts in spending and widespread change in our social programs that will leave many low-income Canadians worse off than ever.

The Minister of Finance is intoxicated with deficit reduction, but it is Canadians who will suffer the hangover. For four years this Government has continued to talk about its commitment to deficit reduction. Today Canadians have learned what they must pay for this commitment through higher taxes and cuts in government programs. But where is the deficit reduction? The deficit continues to grow even as Canadians pay for its reduction. Real deficit reduction, we are told, will come later, but the bill arrives today. Clearly, the Finance Minister has run out of time to get his act together.

Canada has been transformed, and now we must ask if we agree with the direction of this transformation. This Government is intentionally lessening the ties of Canadians to each other. What was once a compassionate and a confidently administered society is today run by a Government without a heart, without an understanding of what it is to be poor, and without the slightest understanding of how to manage our economy compassionately and competently. Canada, under the Conservative Government, as the figures released by the Minister of Finance himself show, has removed hope and optimism from Canadians and left them with the prospect of recession.

I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy):

That the House now be adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Lewis: I believe the normal motion is that the debate be now adjourned. That is if the motion is acceptable, in order to continue the debate tomorrow if my hon. friend wishes to continue.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Accepted.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Minister. Mr. MacLaren, seconded by Mr. Axworthy, moves that the debate be now adjourned. Do Hon. Members adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Order made Wednesday, April 19, 1989, this House now stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a.m.

MUNICIPALITIES

PUBLIC SERVICE—EXTENT OF RESPONSIBILITIES

Mr. Charles DeBlois (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, on April 20, the Supreme Court of Canada sentenced the City of Beauport, and more particularly the taxpayers of Vieux-Beauport, to pay $6.6 million to the owners of La Bastogne Restaurant and the Laurentides Motel, which burned in 1972.

This verdict from the highest court in the land affects nearly 10,000 taxpayers in my constituency, who will each have to pay from $400 to $1,200.

As Mayor Jacques Langlois said, this decision shows how urgent it is for the Government of Québec to determine more clearly and precisely what responsibilities municipalities have in performing the public services they owe the people.

In this regard, I call upon the Government of Québec, which is responsible for the municipalities, to get involved quickly, to cover part of the costs and, in the longer term, to legislate so that other municipalities will not have to go through such serious situations that weigh so heavily on their taxpayers.

EXTERNAL AID

REDUCTION IN FOREIGN ASSISTANCE

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, cuts to Canada's international development assistance is another broken promise to the Canadian people. These cuts tarnish our international reputation. This Budget represents the third time in five years that Canada has shirked its international commitment to have ODA reach 7 per cent of the GNP. Before this most recent slash, Canada was surpassed by all the Nordic countries in percentage of aid to the GNP. Former UN ambassador, Stephen Lewis, said last night:

> Canada has abandoned the Third World in its darkest hour.

Last year Canada achieved a seat on the UN Security Council largely as a result of support from the developing world. This Government has repaid the respect of less developed nations by drastically reducing Canada's foreign assistance, forcing debtor countries into the hands of the IMF with its Draconian economic programs. This is a withering away of a national characteristic of caring. Canada is not seen to be acting out of self-interest in the international community. Foreign aid is not a frill. It is Canada's contribution to the promotion of international stability in an interdependent world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PARLIAMENTARY TRADITION

Mr. Jean-Marc Robitaille (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, all day yesterday in the House, we saw the Opposition Parties defending tradition, thus leading people to believe that Parliamentary tradition comes before the interests of the Canadian people. What a farce, Mr. Speaker!

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, those people did not hesitate to want to take away their opportunity to speak yesterday. That is the Liberal tradition! That is the New Democratic tradition! But much more than that, Mr. Speaker, following the Chair's decision to maintain unanimous consent for the budget speech and tabling of the Budget by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), they left the House, not accepting the consequences of the Chair's decision.

They thus failed their first duty, to represent their constituents in this House. That is the Liberal tradition! That is the New Democratic tradition!

S. O. 31

Mr. Speaker, tradition is first of all the people. The Opposition Parties in acting as they did lost the sense of the most important of traditions, namely serving the welfare of the Canadian people.

But come to think of it, Mr. Speaker, can you lose what you do not already have?

TAX ON TOBACCO PRODUCTS

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, during the election the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the part-time Minister of Agriculture promised that they were going to do something to help the tobacco farmers in my region. In fact, the Minister of Agriculture said:

> Ottawa wants to send a strong signal to the industry that we're here to support the tobacco producers in their time of need and adjustment.

On at least three occasions I have stood in this House to remind this Government of its promises. I have asked for immediate implementation of the Redux Program and retroactive compensation for those who were forced out prior to the formulation of the present program. Not only has the Government delayed and ignored the problems of the tobacco industry, it is in this Budget trying to crucify them. It has proposed a tax increase of 52 per cent on cigarettes, the highest in history. In fact the $4 increase on a 200 gram tin of fine cut equals a 161 per cent increase, and the additional $1.30 in October equals a 212 per cent increase.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) has also given notice to Canadian farmers that all current agriculture programs will be reviewed. We on this side will not stand for that. We will stand up for the farmers of this country.

LEAK OF DOCUMENT—REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): Mr. Speaker, what the Government has tried to do in the last two days is not only offensive to the parliamentary traditions of this House, it is an offence to the personal privileges of every Canadian. Security has been breached and the public trust has been violated. What we have witnessed in the past two days is pure chicanery.

As the Government House Leader stated, this is not the time for political tactics or blatant displays of partisanship. The Government's handling of this issue undoubtedly will stand as one of the great travesties in parliamentary history.

Who knows the consequences of this leaked Budget? Who knows how many people had access to the information prior to its release, and for how long? The Government has set a very dangerous precedent for future Parliaments.

If the Government is to maintain and respect the integrity of this House, the Minister is at this time duty and honour bound to withdraw the Budget and set up a parliamentary inquiry to investigate. There is no other ethical alternative.

RELIGIOUS HOLIDAY

ORTHODOX EASTER

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of the House the fact that this is Easter Week for all Christian Orthodox churches. Today is Good Friday, which is being observed by millions of members of this religion world-wide.

I extend my best wishes, and I am sure those of other Hon. Members of the House, to all who are celebrating this occasion, which is one of the holiest days of the church calendar. Happy Easter to all!

SUPPORT FOR ANNOUNCED MEASURES

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, this year in Regina and other parts of Saskatchewan it is expected that because of another potential drought, a slow-down in our economy, and near record low housing starts, that things may not be all that rosy. A get-tough type Budget, therefore, would not appear to be publicly acceptable.

However, I want to read a fax that I received today from Ken Gamble of Olson Regal Commercial Real Estate in Regina: "I wish to advise that the general consensus regarding the Budget, in my opinion and those clients I am in touch with, is that the correct measures are being taken and that the Hon. Michael Wilson's leadership at the Finance Department is needed in this country at this time. Good luck and best wishes in the days ahead".

IMPACT OF BUDGET CUTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the Budget shows that Canadian agriculture is both locked into an agreement with the United States and burdened with a Conservative Government for another four years.

The Budget provides a dismal preview of the future: $100 million cut from the federal commitment to crop insurance; an end to branch line rehabilitation; an end to the interest-free component of cash advances; an end to commodity-based loans under the Farm Credit Corporation; elimination of the Dairy Special Export Program; termination of the At and East grain and flour rates; changes to the fuel tax rebate program.

In total there is more than $200 million in cuts to agriculture. Meanwhile, farm debt remains at $22 billion, farm asset values are falling, and borrowing money for seeding is very difficult with uncontrolled interest rates.

This Budget and the Government have been a disappointment to Canadian farmers.

ATTITUDE OF OPPOSITION

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, when the two Opposition Leaders refused to co-operate and allow the House to be recalled so that the Budget could be brought down because there had been a leak, they acted in a way that is entirely unacceptable to Canadians. Messrs. Turner and Broadbent preferred to let their own interests take precedence over those of the nation. If these two Leaders had hoped to form a government in the near future, they would never have acted so irresponsibly. They are both stepping down or about to step down as leaders of their political parties, but I maintain that they showed they were incapable of acting with the intellectual maturity Canadians had a right to expect.

S. O. 31

And yesterday, Mr. Speaker, they left the House during the Budget speech. How childish can you get! Are we supposed to take these two parties seriously?

CUTS IN FUNDING

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 31 to point out the massive Budget cuts in spending in agriculture, the most important sector of this nation. The Government has chosen to attack the most vulnerable people in our economy and is attempting to justify these cuts on the basis of lowering the deficit, a deficit that was not cut but increased. Many of these cuts are to conform to the Government's commitments to the Free Trade Agreement. A few years ago we heard about "Sinc the slasher". He has nothing on "Mike the miser".

The Speech from the Throne stated that agriculture was a drain on the nation's treasury and the Government has slashed agriculture spending by almost $400 million. It has slashed crop insurance by $200 million, grain and flour transportation expenditures by $60 million, rail branch line rehabilitation by $48 million, grain and crop advance payment programs by $54 million. The dairy farmers export program was slashed by $12 million, their Dairy Commission expenditure by $10 million and the much touted commodity based loan program of the Farm Credit Corporation was slashed by $10 million. This program was entirely wiped out.

As a result of ending the farm fuel rebate tax in December, the Government will be adding another $100 million to farm input costs in 1990, all of this at a time when farmers across Canada are already reeling from high interest costs.

This Budget has a very harsh impact on the agriculture industry in Canada.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

BUDGET CUT-BACKS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): In the Throne Speech, the Government said that it would not cut cultural spending. Today, we see substantial cutbacks in funding for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. This is totally unacceptable.

[English]

That is a $140 million cut over four years for the CBC. The result is the end of regional programming and the Canadian content goals in television becoming impossible. This is the Tory agenda, the de facto privatization and commercialization of the CBC. It is the Americanization of Canadian culture.

I call upon the Canadian cultural community and all friends of the CBC to open up their windows and yell to the Minister of Culture (Mr. Masse): "We are fed up and we will not take these cuts anymore".

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

IMPACT ON SOCIAL BENEFITS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I want to quote from an election speech the Prime Minister made on October 15 to senior citizens in Summerside, P.E.I. The Prime Minister will know where Summerside is. That is the community in P.E.I. that he is trying to destroy by shutting down the Canadian Forces Base.

This is what the Prime Minister told those senior citizens: "As long as I am Prime Minister of Canada, social benefits, especially those for the elderly, will be improved, not diminished by our Government".

As long as he is Prime Minister of Canada. How does the Prime Minister reconcile those words to the people of Summerside with the cut-backs in social benefits, including old age pensions, family allowances, health, education, unemployment insurance, regional development? All of these were announced in the Budget. Is this not election fraud by the Prime Minister? Is it not just another reason why the Minister of Finance and this Budget ought to be thrown out?

• (1120)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend will see, when he gets through reading the Budget that he declined to listen to yesterday, that social spending, including social spending for senior citizens, is increased in 1989 over 1988 and will be increased in 1990 over the previous years. All social spending in Canada will go up and that is consistent with what I have said.

Mr. Turner: There is no credibility to that statement any more than there is to what he said during the election campaign.

ELECTION PROMISES – GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Finance. During the television debate in French, during the last election campaign, the Prime Minister of Canada said there was absolutely nothing to prevent the Government of Canada from maintaining all its social and regional economic expansion programs. Nothing at all. The Government was going to maintain all its social programs without fail, and there was nothing in the Free Trade Agreement to prevent that.

When I queried the information, the facts provided by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance called me a liar. Today, as a result of the Free Trade Agreement, the Budget contains cutbacks in regional development and unemployment insurance. My question to the Minister of Finance is: Who lied to Canadians?

[English]

Ms. Copps: Where's your mother now?

Mr. Mulroney: My mother is at home saying that her son the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are doing an outstanding job for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: And she said, "When you see the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, give her my love".

Ms. Copps: As long as she trades in her old age pension cheque.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition mentioned two federal spending components: social programs and regional economic expansion. The Budget Papers show clearly that all social programs will be up by 5 per cent annually over the next five years, every single one, and that regional economic expansion programs will be up by 35 per cent over the next five years. Now that is a commitment to social programs and regional economic expansion!

IMPACT ON CHILD CARE PROGRAM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister talks about his mother, and I am sure she is a wonderful woman. I am also sure that he is a son that only a mother could love.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): During the election campaign, the Prime Minister said about the child care program, and these are the Prime Minister's words:

> We will be reintroducing that legislation and passing it as soon as Parliament comes back after the election.

How can the Minister of Finance reconcile that election commitment of the Prime Minister—not an election promise but an election commitment, to use the vocabulary of the Minister of Finance—with the Budget announcement that $4 billion for child care spaces has been wiped out? Is this election deception not yet another reason why the Minister and the Budget ought to be thrown out?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend mentions my mother. My mother will be embarrassed by this, but I feel I should say that she did say to me, "Brian, if I couldn't have a son like you, I'd like him to be just like Mr. Turner".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister has the floor.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, with regard to child care, we began to implement the child care strategy. It is in place in regard to—the Hon. Member for Hamilton East is chuckling, but the Government is now providing $2.3 billion over the next seven years to increase tax assistance for families with pre-school children and children with special needs. These tax measures, which are a very important component of a child care program, help 1.4 million families here in Canada, low-income families. A second component is a fund of $100 million to support special initiatives to improve child care services.

I will acknowledge with regret that a third measure that had been proposed to accelerate the creation of additional child care spaces across Canada, because of the fiscal situation, we are not in a position to proceed with those measures at this time. However, the Government will act during this mandate to meet its child care objectives, and I think all Hon. Members will regret the fact that at the end of the last session, the Liberal Senators killed the child care program.

CAMPAIGN PROMISES—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

During the election campaign, no Conservative Member of the House told seniors that some would have to return their old age security pension cheques. During the election campaign, neither did the Bouchard brothers tell families that they would have to give back their family allowance cheques.

My question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister, since his mother is with him today, is: Could he tell his mother how come he said in front of her and everyone during the election campaign, "Would I hurt my mother?" How come at the same time he lied again to seniors by not admitting that 368,000 elderly people in Canada would have to return their old age security pension cheques, which has never happened before in Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have heard some good ones, but that tops them all!

The Hon. Member for Sainte-Marie is defending people over 65 with an annual income between $50,000 and $75,000. I can tell you that my mother does not earn that. We are here to defend the least fortunate in our society, not the rich.

The Minister quite rightly points out that this measure affecting people whose net personal income is between $50,000 and $75,000 a year will be phased in over three years. It seems to me, as the Toronto Star said this morning, that universality is not at all affected. The Toronto Star said so in an editorial. So it is a progressive measure that will help this year: the less fortunate will get more, the rich will pay more, and it is quite normal to give more to the poor and less to the rich.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's statement is false, and this is one more instance in which Canadians have been deceived, because there is no transfer of wealth to poor families. And don't forget that senior citizens who earn $50,000 or $60,000 are the people who built this country and who made it possible for Brian Mulroney to be wealthy today. Those are the people you are going after.

Respect for the elderly doesn't mean—

Mr. Speaker: Your question, please.

IMPACT OF BUDGET ON THE SICK

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Finance. Why has the Minister decided to use his Budget to go after the sick across Canada by making cuts in the health insurance program? Why do the sick have to suffer?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the general programs to which the Hon. Member referred, not only will there be no cutbacks, there will be $25 billion more at the federal level that will be transferred to the provinces.

As for the question about pensions, that measure will affect about 4 per cent of 3 million senior citizens who are drawing old age security benefits; fewer than 2 per cent will be subject to full recovery; about 14 per cent of 3.8 million recipients of family allowance cheques will be affected by this measure; fewer than 10 per cent will have to pay back the full amount.

What we are doing constitutes a progressive initiative. We are taking more from the rich to give more to the poor. That is a social policy which the Hon. Member has always defended.

• (1130)

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

UNIVERSALITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The national associations representing the poor people of Canada attacked the Government's Budget yesterday.

A few years ago the Prime Minister said the following about the universality principle in social programs: "Our position is simple and straightforward. We are in favour of universality of social programs and it shall not be touched". That was said by the Prime Minister a few years ago.

The Government has now introduced a Budget that removes not simply a few thousand people but hundreds of thousands away from the universality principle affecting family allowances, affecting pensions, and destroying the social policies as a right of citizenship in this country. Why has the Prime Minister reneged on this fundamental commitment? Why is he taking what can only be described as a revolutionary approach to Canada's social policy tradition in this Budget?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I have heard it all. Here is a Government determined to have more resources to give to the poor and the disadvantaged and those who need it by taking it from those who can afford it most, and this is being opposed by the Leader of the socialist Party.

On this important issue this morning, The Toronto Star, no friend of the Government, stated, in regard to Mr. Wilson:

> While he maintains the all-important principle of universality, Wilson proposes to tax back these benefits from those most able to afford it. While that acceptable measure only affects 14 per cent of family allowance recipients——and so on. The Star says it is an "acceptable" measure.

We think it is a socially positive measure.

Because my friend raised the subject of agencies dealing with the poor, I refer him to a recent statement made by the National Council on Welfare: "The advantage of the claw-back is that it saves money not by tampering with the principle of universality, but rather by increasing the progressivity of social programs. Most defenders of universality believe that benefits should be distributed in a progressive fashion—. The claw-back does no damage to universality—old age pensions and family allowance cheques would still go out to all the pensioners and parents, regardless of their incomes—but it does reduce the net value of benefit to upper-income recipients". This allows more for the poor.

TAXATION

INCOME TAX INCREASES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it was not The Toronto Star, it was the Prime Minister of Canada who promised to maintain the principle of universality in social programs. The Prime Minister and ordinary Canadians will understand that if today teachers' pensions are attacked, tomorrow it will be steelworkers, after that it will be bank clerks, and the whole social policy program will be turned into a system of welfare and the people of Canada will reject a Government that does that.

My question to the Prime Minister, who so categorically abandoned another sacred trust on the floor of the House of Commons, is this: if he is so concerned about fairness—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Broadbent: If the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance is so concerned about fairness, why has the Government increased the taxes on the poor since 1984 by 60 per cent? Why is there a $1,700 increase in the taxes of an ordinary family? A man who makes a $100,000-gain in the stock market this afternoon in Toronto will not pay one cent of tax on that. Is that fair?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the country will take note of the fact that, while Canada is wrestling with a very serious fiscal problem, while everyone recognizes there is a very major debt problem and the Government is standing up for ordinary Canadians, the NDP is standing up for the rich.

I want to point out to my hon. friend that these measures, as the National Council on Welfare states, and as the The Toronto Star has pointed out, maintain the universal character of these transfer programs. Everyone eligible for these programs will continue to receive his or her benefits regardless of income. Those who need assistance most will continue to retain all of their benefits. Recipients with high incomes will retain less. This preserves the social safety net and helps provide a sound financial basis for social programs into the future. Surely this is what all parliamentarians want on behalf of Canadians.

• (1140)

Mr. Broadbent: Under different circumstances the Prime Minister knew what was at stake. When it comes to the universality of social programs, he defended that concept. Now that he is trying to justify a Budget that puts a $1,700 tax increase on the average family that still leaves over 6,000 upper-income Canadians with no tax obligation and 80,000 profitable companies not paying a tax, he comes in with this gobbledegook, but he will not fool the people of Canada, I tell him.

UNIVERSALITY PRINCIPLE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister made the same promises, probably even to his mother, about maintaining the universality of social programs, why did he deny today everything he said about this principle a few years ago?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are not denying anything. In fact, the principle of universality is maintained in today's budget proposals provisions. One authority, for instance, which is no friend of the Government's, the Toronto Star, one of our big papers, stated that the integrity of the universality principle had been maintained. This measure leaves intact the universal character of these transfer programs. Everyone who is eligible will continue to receive benefits, irrespective of income. Individuals who are most in need of assistance will continue to keep the full amount of their benefits, high-income recipients will keep less. We are maintaining the social security net while helping to put social programs on a sound financial basis for the future.

Mr. Speaker, we are giving more to the poor and less to the rich. Now that is a genuine social policy!

IMPACT OF CLOSURE OF CF BASE AT SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I.

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Last October 15 in Summerside, Prince Edward Island, the Prime Minister stated:

> In the future Canada will do more not less for all of you. Our Government is committed to social justice and fairness for Canadians.

How, Sir, can the Prime Minister reconcile that statement with the devastation he has just inflicted upon the Town of Summerside and the surrounding communities? How can he possibly justify the closure of the largest institution in western Prince Edward Island, the only military base in the province? This will have the effect of ruining the economy of western Prince Edward Island and will devastate its fragile economy.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the actions that were taken through the Budget show the concern of our Government for the ever-increasing debt this country faces.

Mr. McGuire: For Summerside?

Mr. McKnight: No Government has given more consideration to the defence of this country. But to have economic sovereignty, we must address the problem of the debt at this time.

The operations and closure of some seven bases and stations and the reduction in size in seven others are made so that with those savings we can provide the men and women who continue to serve Canada with the equipment they need, while addressing the ever increasing debt which the country and the Government inherited in 1984.

Mr. McGuire: Mr. Speaker, as you know, Prince Edward Islanders are celebrating the 125th anniversary of the first meeting which led to the Confederation of this country. But how, Mr. Speaker, can you celebrate the loss of 3,000 jobs? How do you celebrate the loss of $90 million leaving our economy? How do you celebrate the death of a small community?

I ask the Prime Minister to reconsider his decision. Am I expected to be the last Maritimer to stand up and tell my friends and neighbours, when the last person leaves Summerside will he or she please turn out the lights?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, I am sure, has a long memory. He will realize that Summerside was there before the base was created.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Wow!

Mr. McKnight: That being said, in order to address the needs of Canada in fighting the ever-increasing cost of interest on a debt and continuing to provide men and women who serve Canada with the equipment needed, this Government has to take very serious steps.

The closure of Summerside and the savings resulting amount to over a billion dollars in the planning year, and that Member is a member of a Party whose Leader asked for $15 billion to be taken out of the defence budget of this country.

An Hon. Member: In submarines not in Summerside.

REQUEST FOR BUDGET WITHDRAWAL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It is the position of the Opposition that a leaked Budget is a tainted Budget and must be withdrawn, whether the leak is through ministerial responsibility, irresponsibility or non-responsibility, and whether the acts are criminal, negligent or innocent.

If the RCMP investigation confirms that benefits were or might have been obtained through advanced knowledge whether or not anyone is prosecuted, will the Minister withdraw that Budget?

Mr. Speaker: I have to point out that the Members' question is very hypothetical. The Minister may want to answer but the Minister is not required to.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister prepared to recognize that the Budget should be withdrawn because of the leak, irrespective of the reasons for it or whether his theory of ministerial responsibility a theory we do not accept applies to it, and how can he bring to this House a leaked Budget knowing that there can or may have been benefits obtained from it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been dealt with extensively on the floor of this House in the debate that we had yesterday.

The Solicitor General has indicated that there is an investigation under way. That investigation is continuing.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, since yesterday information was given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources about the state of the investigation of the RCMP, will the Minister confirm, in fact, the state of sloppiness that existed around security in the preparation of his Budget? On the basis of that sloppy security will he tell us whether he will recognize his responsibility for it and resign?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I am advised by the Acting Commissioner of the RCMP that all resources necessary to follow all leads on this case have been deployed.

Investigations are being conducted, Mr. Speaker, and it is entirely inappropriate to comment on them in this House.

CHILD CARE

EFFECTS OF BUDGET ON CHILD CARE PROGRAMS

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In 1984 he promised child care, and he did not deliver. In the women's debate he promised child care, and he did not deliver. In 1988 he promised child care, and he did not deliver. In the Speech from the Throne he promised child care, and again he did not deliver.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Ms. Langan: Why has this Government broken its promise and abandoned its commitment to Canadian families and to the two million children in Canada who desperately need child care?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is no abandonment of the commitment of this Government to child care. We introduced a child care policy last year. Elements of that child care policy have been implemented, particularly the tax measures that are directed to low-income families. That is $2.3 billion. There is another element of that, which is a research fund to consider different ways of developing further child care policies.

The Hon. Member is also referring to the increase in the number of child care spaces that were part of the policy last year. We have indicated that because of the financial pressures that the Government is under, and particularly the need to control the financial debt, that must be deferred for the time being, but we are committed to introducing this legislation within this mandate.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Hon. Minister of Finance. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has had his precious submarines sunk, and I think now the Minister of Finance is torpedoing child care in this country. Is it not a fact that with the tax breaks in this Budget the only child care commitment is to those who can afford it in this country, and those children whose families cannot afford it are left on their own to fend for themselves?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I could not hear the whole of the question over the din coming from her colleagues, but I believe that she was talking about tax breaks in this Budget. There are no tax breaks in this Budget. I know the Hon. Member has not been in the House for a long period of time, but if she would look back over the past four and one-half years, we have acted to reduce a broad range of tax breaks and tax loopholes on many occasions, both within Budgets and outside of Budgets, that have benefited people in higher income brackets, corporations. In this Budget, in fact, we have introduced a large corporations tax. We have increased the surtax specifically for those people who are earning over $70,000.

There is a good balance in this Budget in trying to address a very serious problem which, if we do not address, will result in programs that we will not be able to maintain. That is the essence of what we are trying to do in this Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON NATIONAL CHILD CARE ACT

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. His Government has clawed Canadian families. A new word has entered the lexicon: claw-back. They are clawing back the family allowance, clawing back the old age pension, and now they have clawed Canadian children by cancelling the National Child Care Act. Why did the Prime Minister promise that social programs were sacrosanct during the election campaign and then claw 200,000 Canadian children by cancelling the National Child Care Act?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me quote again from the National Council on Welfare. The advantage of using her word, the claw-back, is that it saves money, not by tampering with the contentious principle of universality but rather by increasing the progressivity of social programs. Most defenders of universality believe that the benefits should be distributed in a progressive fashion.

Let me remind the Hon. Member that this measure is directed to senior citizens, those over 65. Four per cent of those who receive the old age security cheque will be affected and less than 2 per cent will have to pay it back. Of 14 per cent of those who receive the family allowance cheque, less than 10 per cent will see that the full amount is repaid.

IMPLICATIONS OF FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): My supplementary question is still for the Prime Minister, since the Minister of Finance did not understand the question. I am sure that the children of Canada will be reassured by the gobbledegook we heard. I ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister, is this obliteration of the National Child Care Act another attempt to give us the so-called level playing field with the United States, and make Canadian children the first victims of the Free Trade Agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the matter raised by the Hon. Member, I would remind her—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, we hear this sort of noise from the Opposition. It was the finance critic—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: There is a lot less noise now than there was. The Hon. Minister will answer the question.

Mr. Beatty: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it is the finance critic for the Official Opposition who said this: "Programs such as family allowances and old age security should be available to those in need". He said: "Perhaps the most effective way of ensuring that Canadians in need receive adequate amounts of support is for those who do not require such support, tax it back", said Roy MacLaren, as reported in The Ottawa Citizen of March 21, 1989.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: With regard to child care, let me inform the Hon. Member what is in place. First of all, the child tax credit for which the vast benefit goes to the people most in need is in place. The child care tax deduction, the $100 million child care initiatives fund is in place. The Canada Assistance Plan remains in place. We expect an increase of some 20 per cent this year, in terms of subsidies for child care under CAP, and yet we see that the Party that opposed our child care Bill suddenly says we should be scrapping that and bringing back the child care Bill. It is simply not credible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

THE BUDGET—CUT-BACKS IN FUNDING

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. How can we ever trust the word of this Government? During the election campaign, the Government said that unemployment insurance would not be touched, that it would not be cut. Last week we quoted the exact words of the Minister of International Trade on that subject, yet in the last two weeks the Government has slashed unemployment insurance twice.

On April 11, it took out $800 million. Yesterday, the Government abandoned $1.9 billion of its commitment to that fund. How can the Government justify this savage attack on the unemployed? How can it pass the buck on this to the workers of this country? Explain that to Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have had a number of questions on the changes brought in by my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is very clear that the unemployment insurance system has been improved by providing benefits for training to help people get better jobs and get those jobs on a more permanent basis. Surely this is the way that we should be improving the unemployment system. The Hon. Member now refers to the financing. The financing of the unemployment insurance system has been changed. It has been changed in a way that asks the employers and employees to carry the burden for the unemployment insurance system with the exception that if there is a time when the funds should go into deficit—which occurred from 1982 to 1987—the Government will stand behind that fund.

There are two key points. The first is that the rate will be at $2.25 for the next five years, which is below the rate of the last four or five years. Second, the maximum cost to the employee will be $1.40 per week.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS—CUT IN FUNDING

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, Canadian workers will not be fooled by that answer. Is this not just an attempt to create the level playing field to facilitate free trade with the United States which during the election the Government said was not necessary?

The Minister of Finance during the election campaign called the Leader of the Opposition a liar for suggesting that social programs would be cut to accommodate free trade—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member, given the time, to put his question, please.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister: Who is telling the lies?

Some Hon. Members: You!

Mr. Allmand: Did the Minister not have this Budget up his sleeve in November?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Oral Questions

ECONOMIC REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE

RENEWAL OF AGREEMENTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. During the free trade debate the Prime Minister said that regional development programs were safe. Now, in the first free trade Budget, the Government is slashing regional development spending by 29 per cent per year from $1.4 billion to $1 billion.

Will the Prime Minister assure the poor Atlantic and western provinces of the country that the 44 ERDAs that have run out will have their funding renewed at the present level? Will that funding be put back in place?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member did not stay in the House for the presentation of the Budget papers yesterday. It is possible that he missed the information that was in the Budget speech.

Ms. Copps: He caught in on Global.

Mr. Marchi: He read it the day before.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I refer the Hon. Member to page 8 of the Budget speech. The Government has had a tremendous commitment that has been clearly expressed in an increase in funding by 50 per cent in the previous mandate. Over the next five years that level of funding will increase by 35 per cent above what it was in the last five years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member understands, I think, the importance of the federal Government debt. We must get that debt under control. In facing that we have found the right balance to continue our commitment on regional development spending and at the same time get the debt under control.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCIAL SUPPORT BY THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Province of Québec now has twelve general agreements that will expire by the beginning of next year. Is the Government committed to providing financial support equivalent to the funding provided under these agreements? Is it a promise?

Estimates

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I answered this question in English but I think it is necessary to repeat our commitment to regional development. During the past four years, we have increased our commitment to regional development by 50 per cent, and during the next five years, regional development will be up by 35 per cent. This is very important for the provinces, and I think it is very important to understand that within the next few weeks, the ministers—

[English]

I will repeat it in English. In the next few weeks Ministers will be sitting down with their provincial counterparts to discuss the renegotiation of any regional development agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to address to the Government House Leader the usual question about the business the Government intends to call over the next seven days. For obvious reasons this question could not have been put yesterday. I am sure the Government House Leader would love to have the question put to him and give his answer.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate to the House that on Monday it is our intention to commence second reading of the borrowing Bill and to continue the same on Tuesday if in fact it is not finished on Monday.

On Wednesday it would be our intention to resume debate on the Budget as the second allotted day.

If I may I would like to point out a complication with the House order under which we are operating today. It states:

> That, immediately upon the completion of the speech by the New Democratic Party speaker, but in any event not later than 3.30 o'clock p.m., the Speaker shall adjourn the House until Monday, May 1, 1989, at 11 o'clock a.m.

I want to point out that the usual provisions which apply with respect to extending the day would be foreclosed by that 3.30 time. It was not the intention of the Government nor of the Opposition House Leaders when we drafted the order to in any way curtail the remarks of the lead speaker for the Liberal Party and the Member who is speaking on behalf of the New Democratic Party. I want to indicate at this time that we on the Government side would be prepared not to see the clock in the event that those remarks are not completed by 3.30 p.m. in order to allow for them to be completed.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition I am prepared to agree to that proposal provided it is understood that no one else will be given the floor after the conclusion of the remarks of the spokesperson for the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Government and the Official Opposition for their courtesy.

I also want to take this opportunity while I am on my feet to say this. We are assuming that since the comments in terms of the questions of privilege raised yesterday cannot proceed today because of the special order, we will be able to resume those comments on Monday, and that we will be following the points in that order for today's business.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the proposal. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt it?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MAIN ESTIMATES—1989-90

EXPLANATORY NOTES OF PRESIDENT OF THE TREASURY BOARD

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table today, on behalf of the government, the Main Estimates for the 1989-90 fiscal year. They reflect the government's continuing determination to better manage its resources. As well they recognize the important contribution that the public service has made to enable the government to deliver its programs and services to Canadians as effectively and efficiently as possible.

[English]

The Government's updated fiscal plan provides for total budgetary expenditures of $142.9 billion in fiscal year 1989-1990, a 7.4 per cent increase over the forecast for the past fiscal year. I want to underline to Hon. Members today that program expenditures as reflected in the Budget are increasing by only 3.5 per cent over last year, more than a full percentage point below inflation and in line with the average expenditure growth of the last five years, which was 3.6 per cent.

Today I am introducing Main Estimates totalling $131 billion. They reflect the Government's continued success in controlling program spending. They also reflect a commitment to the priorities set out in the Speech from the Throne and our ongoing efforts for a more productive Public Service. These Estimates represent an increase of 9.7 per cent over those tabled last year. This is higher than the rate of growth and total spending outlined in the Budget largely because the Government has been able to identify proportionately more of its requirement at this stage of the Budget cycle. The Main Estimates therefore include more of the Government's planned expenditures than has been possible in the past. This higher amount for Main Estimates is offset by a smaller increase in reserves to fund items to be included later this year in Supplementary Estimates.

I am pleased to inform Hon. Members that the Government is making provisions for reserves of $3.1 billion, approximately 40 per cent less than the amount provided last year.

Mr. Speaker, the increased spending in Main Estimates expenditures for this year is a direct consequence of the overhanging legacy of debt.

Since 1984, 50 per cent of the increase in budgetary expenditures is attributable to higher public debt charges. For this year, public debt charges account for 63 per cent—virtually two-thirds—of the increase in Main Estimates. Interest payments on the debt have now become the single largest component of expenditures. While debt charges have increased substantially, program spending has been brought under tight control. This control over program expenditures is not a new development. It is a reinforcement of five years of determined action by the government. The program component of Main Estimates is increasing by only 4.9 per cent. In the five years ending in 1989-90, this program component has advanced at an average annual rate of 4.3 per cent. This is in sharp contrast to the previous annual average increase of 11.8 per cent from 1980 to 1984, and from the 15.7 per cent average increase from 1971 to 1980.

Even more indicative of the government's program of improved expenditure management is what has happened to the program portion of Main Estimates as a share of Gross Domestic Product. Since 1984-85, that share has fallen continuously and significantly. From a high of 16.7 per cent in 1984-85, these expenditures have dropped to just over 14 per cent of Gross Domestic Product for this year.

[English]

My colleagues and I are determined to continue our policy of sound management as well as to seek ways to reduce the overhanging burden of the public debt. Bringing the Government spending into balance will require us to sustain the drive toward improved management of expenditures. The Main Estimates I am tabling today are a further step in this direction while maintaining our commitment to other priorities. Living more effectively within our means has required the Government to both realign and reduce its expenditures. The Government is introducing expenditure reductions for this year totalling $1.5 billion. When the reductions announced by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, are fully implemented, they will amount to $2.5 billion a year. We have ensured and will continue to ensure through regular and progressive adjustment that no sector of the economy nor region of the country bears a disproportionate burden of these changes.

I want to assure Hon. Members that we were careful to select reductions that will not impair the health, the safety or the security of Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: Expenditure reductions reflected in these Main Estimates were primarily made in five areas. First, growth in the defence programs is being reduced by $575 million. Second, savings of $360 million are being obtained this year by limiting the funding levels of ODA. Third, subsidies and transfers have been reduced, netting a saving of $141 million. Fourth, payments to certain Crown corporations have also been decreased, yielding $105 million. Finally, Government operations are being curtailed by $49 million.

These Estimates make no provision for expenditure reductions requiring legislative changes which will have to be approved by this House. These statutory items amount to some $140 million. Further, the Main Estimates do not reflect reductions of $175 million to items that have been carried in reserve in the Government's expenditure plan.

Reducing the deficit and overcoming the legacy of debt is a Government priority. We have approached this priority in a way that will allow the Government to maintain its commitments: Its commitments to a stronger, more competitive economy; commitments to preserve our environment; commitments to show that we are a caring and compassionate society; and the commitment to foster Canada's cultural and national identity. Spending to reinforce an already strong science and technology program, which is crucial to a competitive economy, will be increased by 12.8 per cent. Environmental protection and enhancement expenditures will grow by 9.4 per cent.

Social spending is not at risk. Funding for key social programs, including programs for elderly Canadians, will grow by 6.6 per cent. Included in this total are increases for elderly Canadians of $865 million.

Further, to foster Canada's cultural and national identity, cultural funding is being enhanced and a new Department of Multiculturalism is being established.

Assistance for native peoples is being increased by 11.6 per cent. Finally, the Government, as always, is delivering on its commitment to assist farmers hit by drought, and $387 million is being provided in the Estimates for this purpose.

[Translation]

In the May 1985 Budget, the government announced a program to downsize the public service aimed at lowering the cost of delivering programs while ensuring that essential services to the public and services related to health, safety and security were maintained.

Mr. Speaker, I am confirming today that the size of the Public Service is being reduced by a further 1,072, or one-half of one per cent in these Main Estimates. This brings total net reductions to date to 11,596.

Mr. Speaker, our public service employment level is now the same as it was in 1973.

These total reductions have been achieved while the workload associated with a number of existing programs, such as the issuance of income security cheques, continues to increase. In addition, the government provided the necessary resources to administer a number of new priorities, such as the new refugee determination system, by re-investing some of the savings from the downsizing program into these new requirements. The success of this effort is a testament to the competence and dedication of our managers and employees.

As Honourable Members are aware, over two weeks ago I presented to the House my report on the special warrants that the Governor General was asked to issue in the 1988-89 fiscal year when Parliament was not in session. I also tabled at the time a report on the special Governor-General's warrant for the 1989-90 fiscal year. The funds included in this warrant, as well as in the interim Supply Bill I will be tabling next week, are supported by the program information in the Main Estimates, which Members will have an opportunity to assess in detail.

[English]

The Government recognizes the need to use its resources to meet productively the needs of Canadians and to continue to develop ways of doing this more efficiently and more effectively. The track record of the last five years that I reviewed earlier clearly shows that we have made major inroads into controlling the growth of program spending and managing our resources judiciously. The Government is determined to sustain this progress.

The Main Estimates I am tabling today confirm our resolve to manage prudently while positioning us equally well to deliver on our priorities, which are a stronger, more competitive economy; preservation of the environment; a caring, compassionate society; and a stronger cultural and national identity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate the Minister for keeping the Estimates secret prior to the lock-up. I must say, however, that I suspect he was looking at different Estimates than those we are seeing. Certainly the numbers are different.

Yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) attempted to show, somewhat lamely, that he was the victim "of a breach of trust". Subsequently the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) demonstrated quite clearly that a breach of trust had been perpetrated on this House and on the Canadian people by the way in which the Government dealt with the Budget leak.

Today I would like to remind the House of a third breach of trust, one that occurred some six months ago when Members opposite in the Government said that the deficit was under control and the kind of harsh measures set out in these Estimates were not necessary. They promised child care. They promised regional development. They promised enhanced social programs. The cost would be zero, according to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). In retrospect, he was right. When one does not live up to one's promises, it does not cost a penny.

The Government has misled Canadians. These Estimates create two Canadas. It erodes the building blocks of fairness on which we have built this country. It does what no other Government would attempt. It tries to solve its financial problems on the backs of the disadvantaged while, in the process, concocting a recipe for recession hitherto unknown.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, these Estimates are much more than accounting exercise. It is also in a way a means of judging the gouvernment's priorities and even the quality of life in our democratic country.

[English]

These Estimates indicate the kind of Canada that the Tories would create. They have left the $100,000 capital gains tax exemption intact and at the same time have written off huge segments of society. They have given the lie to the priority on the environment and sustainable development. The Government is spending no more this year than was spent in 1984.

It has made massive cuts in a number of areas, including, for instance, $27 million in areas such as conservation and alternative energy initiatives.

What is the end result of all this chicanery? What are the values of the Government? It says that it will now close up to 14 military bases across the length and breadth of this country. However, it does not mention the human face of these cuts. It does not say that it will be taking the heart out of a number of communities and leaving them as empty shells.

This Government has cut spending on foreign aid by over 15 per cent. It has reneged on its commitment to the developing world. It has walked away from a phenomenal opportunity to be the bridge between the haves and have-nots.

The Government promised us a new child care program but now refuses to live up to its obligations to the Canadian family. It has cut those obligations by over $200 million a year, and the number is going up. Canadian children, one out of every five of whom lives in poverty, will suffer enormously because of the callousness of Members opposite. Prairie farmers are shocked to learn that the Government is backing away from its commitment to crop insurance, a program fundamental to their income maintenance. The Tories have cut over $225 million out of western grain transportation, and it is no coincidence that these programs for transportation, regional development and unemployment insurance are on the list of things the Americans seek to attack in the free trade negotiations under the definition of an unfair subsidy. Typical of this weak-kneed Government, it has already hoisted the flag before the battle has even begun.

They say that we cannot afford regional development in the short term and they promised that they will increase funding later on. Tell that to the people in the fishery and the forest industries who have already been specifically singled out for cuts. The Hon. Member talks of increases in industrial technological development. The Estimates demonstrate that the budget has been cut by over $200 million, over 25 per cent. In the meantime, while all this is going on, how many small businesses will go down the tubes? How many workers will end up on the welfare rolls? How many families in places like Summerside, Prince Edward Island, will have to abandon their homes and their communities?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I fully appreciate the anger felt by workers when they realized that the government is getting out of unemployment insurance. I fully appreciate the resentment of students and sick people at the government's intention to reduce by 270 million dollars its contribution to education and health care funding.

As for universality of social programs, the government tells us that the rich will pay. It might be so today, but tomorrow, the middle class will pay because this $50,000 threshold is not indexed. Consequently, under the Conservatives, once again the future of the average family is getting bleaker and bleaker.

[English]

The Government is cutting funding for native people and for multiculturalism. Language training for immigrants has been halved in the last two years. The women's program has been completely eliminated from the Department of the Secretary of State. These are things that define Canada. These are what give Canada its heart and its character. These have been raped and pillaged by the Government. These are not simply numbers on a page. We are talking about the soul of our country.

I have heard on numerous occasions Members opposite comparing the running of a government with the running of a family. Let us take them at their word. Families have debts. Does that mean that families stop sending their children to school? I do not know of any family that would, but this Government has cut post-secondary education. Does a family stop putting food on the table? I do not know of any family that would, but this Government has cut agricultural assistance. Does a family stop investing in its economic future? I do not know of any family that would, but this Government has cut regional development and is cutting research and development.

Mr. Hockin: That's not right.

Mr. Martin (LaSalle—Émard): That is not the document we have. The Hon. Member ought to start reading his own documents. Surely to God, the Estimates are not hidden from the Hon. Member. He should take a look at the Estimates of last year and of the year before. He should take a look at the record of this Government that does not give a damn about the Canadian people.

Mr. Hockin: Read this.

Mr. Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Don't lecture me. Tell the workers to read the want ads. Was that not the quote that was used?

No one has to tell the Members on this side of the House that the deficit is a problem, but it is clear from these Estimates that the major cause of the deficit has been the excessively high interest rates to the extent of $6 billion according to these documents. Has the Government attacked the problem? No, it wants but one thing: an excuse to take the Government out of the arduous responsibility of governing.

Last year, the Government exaggerated its revenue base by accelerating tax payments. This year, it is exaggerating its expenditure projections, the reduction, by reducing its reserves by over $2 billion. The Government is engaged in phoney accounting.

The Estimates are not simply a matter of adding up columns of long lists of numbers. It is a statement of the Government's sense of responsibility in the face of an evolving and changing society. The Government is saying to Canadians that it is washing its hands of the regions and of those who are in need. This is not the approach of a responsible government.

The battle lines have been drawn. We have only begun to study these Estimates and already one thing is very, very clear, that is that this Government has given new meaning to the definition of cynicism. It told us before the election that all was well, and then after the election that it cannot afford to face up to the challenges of governing a modern nation.

We on this side of the House understand this country and we know its people. We know their values and we share them. Our goal is to build a country, not to tear it down. I can tell Hon. Members that the clock has begun to tick. Pretty soon this Government will know that its time is over.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of talk about the Budget leak, but the biggest story is the deliberate attack on the weak. The Government claims to be aiding an economy that is more lean. To millions of average Canadians, the Government is characterized simply as being mean.

One of the interesting things about the Estimates revealed this morning was that while we were wondering about the breach of security which is being investigated by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Estimates revealed cut-backs in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The Government claims to be attacking the deficit. It has chosen to attack the deficit on the backs of ordinary Canadians. It has attacked the family, it has attacked education, it has exploited workers to pay for the deficit, it has attacked the regions.

There could not have been a more dramatic demonstration of the heartlessness of this Government than the statement made by the Hon. Member from Prince Edward Island this morning, a statement which I found dramatic, compelling and truthful. An economy is to be wrecked in the interests of paring the deficit. As I recall, this year there will be a $500,000 cut in defence at the expense of jobs in Canada. I do not know why the Government did not consider the very simple solution of bringing the troops back from Europe, thereby saving $1 billion a year and demonstrating at the same time a commitment to the new notion of international security.

We are not looking at ways to pare the deficit, we are looking at ways to make those who are strong stronger at the cost of the weak. That is the clear message of this Budget. Listen to what has happened. Universality has been attacked, there can be no question about that. The chink is in the armour of universality with this Budget. Regional equality has now been compromised. In the public service and elsewhere, the commitment of the Government to sexual equality, racial equality and equality for all people in Canada will be compromised in the interests of the penurious rich.

Family allowances and old age pensions are to be selective. The value that we placed on our health system and the post-secondary educational system has been compromised. The Government purports to be interested in economic growth based on new knowledge in science and technology, and it is hardly even mentioned in the Budget papers. What we find in the Estimates is that that commitment to $1.3 billion will be, as it has been in the past, substantially ignored. Where is the message of competitiveness that was supposed to be contained therein?

Agricultural supports are scheduled for termination. Passenger rail service is to be cut by virtue of a diminution in the subsidies provided to VIA Rail. This raises the issue of sustainable development, which is supposed to be the broad scope of focus in the Budget. What we hear is sustained economic growth, not sustainable development. The cut-backs at VIA Rail demonstrate the type of commitment to a transportation system which would be energy efficient, and which we ought to have, which the Government has abandoned.

With respect to sustainable development we find embedded in the Estimates another very interesting message, and that is a cut-back in the amount that was supposed to be committed to acid rain emission control. It is gone from the Budget.

What has also been ignored in the Budget is the very high proportion of increased deficit attributable to interest rates. The Government has stated that it is going to cut the Budget by about $7 billion. Almost all of that is attributable to interest. This is not to be put on the backs of the poor. This is not to be put on the backs of the provinces that are dependent upon regional development funds. This is not going to be put on the backs of those who have benefited from high interest rates and who are putting that money in their pockets, because it is the rich who have been benefiting from high interest rates. If interest rates were decreased by one percentage point the deficit could be decreased by an additional $1.5 billion, as we all know.

The Government has missed the point in all of this. We are going to be plunged into a recession. Unemployment will increase by 1 per cent, and inflation will rise again. On top of our Government's own contribution to a recessionary situation that will be seen in the next couple of years, the situation with respect to the United States, which will only make matters worse, has not been taken into consideration.

The Estimates give the message in detail of cut-backs that will hurt ordinary Canadians. Those cut-backs are a compromise of Canada's future. Those cut-backs reflect the commitments made under the Free Trade Agreement in areas such as unemployment insurance, which was seen as a subsidy by the Americans and to which the Canadian Government has responded in kind by agreeing that it is a subsidy and eliminating any indication of a subsidy by increasing the burden placed on workers.

Mr. Thacker: How many Canadians built your Mazda?

Mr. McCurdy: What Mazda? That shows you, Mr. Speaker, the compelling ignorance on that side of the House. They are worried about a single car, but they have produced a Budget that will mean that thousands of cars in my riding will not be built. The cars produced in Ontario are the cars which have been the engine of the country, and this Hon. Member is talking about a single car that does not exist in any other place but in his vacuous mind.

Mr. Thacker: It's the hypocrisy of you.

Mr. McCurdy: We hear the Hon. Member across the way talk of hypocrisy. Hypocrisy has been demonstrated in spades over the last couple of days. There has been hypocrisy with regard to the role of Parliament, hypocrisy with regard to commitments made to the Canadian people, and hypocrisy with regard to defence, most particularly. The Government is cutting Canadian jobs and preserving European jobs when $1 billion could be saved by keeping the jobs in Canada and bringing the troops back home.

This is the beginning of the end for the market philosophy represented by the Government. It disregards equality. It disregards fairness. It disregards the real basis for economic growth. This is a Government that would impose upon the weak in order to meet the needs of the greedy who back the Government. The Canadian people will condemn the Government for its Budget and for the specifics contained in the Estimates.

WORKPLACE ACCIDENTS

TRIBUTE TO VICTIMS

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on this day, April 28, Canadian workers are paying tribute to victims of work accidents and to those suffering from occupational injuries or diseases. As Minister of Labour and on my own behalf, I join them in expressing my deepest sympathy to affected people and their families and in denouncing the unacceptably high number of accidents in the workplace.

In 1987, last full year for which data is available, 894 Canadians died at work and 25 million person-days were lost due to work accidents and occupational injuries or diseases. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that nobody can remain indifferent to that data. We must all join forces to ensure a safe working environment for all Canadians.

Any loss of life is unacceptable not only to the victim's loved ones but also to society. Work accidents entail direct and indirect costs of about 17.5 billion dollars a year. It is a very heavy burden on this nation.

The figures, though eloquent, hide the tremendous suffering of workers who are victims of accidents. I have met a lot of them over the years. Their physical pain is compounded by their inability to go back to work or to earn a living in a dignified way. We must help them.

Mr. Speaker, we must show solidarity and express our common will to fight against the scourge of work accidents.

[English]

April 28 has been chosen as the labour movement's day of mourning to commemorate workers who were killed, injured or disabled on the job. Work conditions and occupational safety and health have evolved greatly since Confederation. At the federal level, there were various pieces of labour-related legislation over the years, but a major step forward was taken in 1968 when the Canada Labour (Safety) Code was adopted.

Occupational safety and health are now fundamental to managing the workplace. The rights and duties of employers and employees are now embedded in our laws and regulations. For the federal jurisdiction, the Canada Labour Code is the main vehicle that we use to further the cause of occupational safety and health.

The Code requires that employers make employees aware of all known or foreseeable hazards in the workplace. Workers have the right to refuse dangerous work. Workers also have the right and responsibility to participate in identifying and solving job-related safety and health problems as members of safety and health committees, or as safety and health representatives. Needless to say, they play a key role in furthering safety and health issues. We should not become safety conscious only after accidents occur. Prevention has to be foremost in our minds. While laws, regulations and Governments play an important role in accident prevention, in the final analysis, it is the employers and workers who are responsible for preventing, eliminating or controlling hazards in the workplace.

This is a responsibility which no one can shun. Only through awareness can Canadian workers significantly improve occupational safety and health in the workplace.

[Translation]

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Government encourages cooperation and seeks consensus; we constantly try to find new ways to give workers and employers the tools they need to prevent accidents in the workplace, as well as occupational injuries and illnesses.

Last October, the Workplace Hazardous Materials Information System came into effect. This system was created as a result of a joint effort by the federal Government, provincial and territorial governments, unions and employers.

WHMIS is a very important information system, one of the most advanced of its kind in the world. Its purpose is to identify hazardous substances used on the job and to standardize their labeling. Since it took effect, this system requires suppliers to specify the dangers involved with substances produced or imported in Canada that are used in Canadian workplaces. Furthermore, the system requires suppliers to transmit data sheets to employers who in turn must inform employees.

Today as a society we are greatly concerned with our environment and its impact on public health. In the same way, we must be aware of our working environment. We must ensure that our economic progress and growth are not at the expense of our workers' lives and health.

The federal Government is always looking out for new regulatory approaches that would enable it, in cooperation with its partners, to make the workplace safer for workers.

Much remains to be done, but there is a glimmer of hope on the horizon. In the last ten years, the work accident rate has gone from one worker in eight to one in ten, an average reduction of 17 per cent. This improvement is modest but encouraging.

[English]

As we have witnessed in the past, having all interested parties involved in occupational safety and health, is the only real way to ensure progress and change in the workplace. In the years to come we must all be part of the continuing effort to make needed changes happen. Each and every one of us in our respective roles must contribute to reducing the suffering caused by work related accidents and illnesses.

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to those people who have been killed or injured in the workplace. As we know, many, many accidents have taken place over the years. Accidents that, by today's standards, show were great acts of carelessness.

As has been stated, April 28 has been designated as the labour movement's national day of mourning. The day is set aside to commemorate Canadian workers who have been killed or injured in the workplace. This date was chosen because it coincides with the passing of the first compensation law in Canada. It is important to note that,with the adoption of the Canada Labour Code in 1968, occupational health and safety concerns are now more protected than they ever were before. The objective of this was to reduce and ultimately eliminate job-related accidents. Since the adoption of this legislation the safety of the workplace has greatly improved. But I can say, and everyone knows, that much more is to be done. We now see occupational health and safety acts in place through the country. We still see great discrepancies. Many accidents and much illness still abound in the workplace. Provincial Governments along with the federal Government, the labour movement and the employees themselves have to be more aware and continue to be on top of these things as time goes on. Many people have been hurt in ways that are not at first evident. It may be nine, ten or fifteen years down the road before something shows up.

We still have a long way to go and we must continue to work hard until we reach the ultimate goal of a hazard-free workplace.

The labour movement will today be laying a wreath at 1.30 p.m. at the Vincent Massey Park in Ottawa. This ceremony will take place at the monument erected for the workers killed, injured or disabled in the workplace. Many of us have lost loved ones through accidents that could have been prevented. Today we mourn these losses.

I say to you, Sir, and I say to this House that over the years, through hard work on behalf of all workers, labour unions and Governments across this country, the accident rates have been reduced.

I join today with all the others in this House by saying, let us continue to work harder to see if accidents can be reduced further and perhaps eliminated from our society.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, today I rise on behalf of the New Democratic Party in observance of this special day in memory of workers who have been hurt or killed on the job.

Last year Members will recall that I had the honour to introduce a Private Member's Bill to designate every April 28 as a national day of mourning for persons killed or injured in the workplace. It was the New Democratic Party's hope that this Bill would have become an instrument by which today would have been set aside by all Canadians as a day of remembrance for our nation's workers. However, the Bill was not passed by the House of Commons.

On April 11 of this year, I reintroduced that legislation. I call upon all Members of Parliament, especially government Members and the Minister here, to support this Bill again when it comes to the floor of the House. If this Bill passes then year after year, April 28 will serve as a day on which we can all recognize the staggering number of people injured or killed while at work. It will also recognize the great need for a new emphasis on health and safety in the workplace.

As the Minister has just said and as the statistics note, deaths from workplace injuries averaged nearly 1,000 persons per year. Approximately one million Canadians are injured annually in the workplace and over 600,000 of those injuries every year are disabling.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, deaths occur because of exposure to unhealthy working environments, causing approximately 1,000 deaths each year. However, we do not have the statistics because such deaths go largely unreported and uncompensated, but it is likely that deaths from unhealthy working environments exceed those from physical injuries. But despite the statistics, many Governments in Canada are actually weakening health and safety rules. Many Governments in Canada are relaxing these rules and deliberately eroding the enforcement of safe working conditions for Canadians.

The increase of part-time workers, people who are not properly trained and who have only a minor attachment to the workplace, is also creating more injuries at the work site. For these reasons, I believe that we need to have national legislation in this area, that we need to have a focus on workplace safety, and that we need to have a greater emphasis within the Department of Labour to ensure that we save lives and prevent injuries for our nation's workers.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATIONS

PRESENTATION OF TENTH REPORT OF DELEGATION TO BUDAPEST CONFERENCE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 34(1), I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the tenth report of the official parliamentary delegation which represented Canada at the Interparliamentary Conference in Budapest, Hungary, from March 13 to March 18.

I take pleasure in advising this House that under the capable chairmanship of Senator Nathan Nurgitz all our Canadian delegates made significant contributions to the proceedings, at all levels of activity, in debate, as presenters, as intervenors and as chairpersons of various committees.

I commend for reading this report to all Hon. Members. It attests to their colleagues' diligent and thoughtful input. Our Canadian Ambassador, Derek Fraser, his wife Christine, as well as our foreign service officers, were gracious and extremely helpful. The delegation was supported by competent parliamentary staff in the persons of Committee Branch Clerk Stephen Knowles, and researcher Barbara Reynolds.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, in this the Centennial Year of the Union, I would like to draw the attention of Members to your contribution to this important event by authorizing an official of this House, Mr. Philip Landy, Clerk Assistant, to prepare a book on "Parliaments in the Modern World", which will be released at the Centenary Conference in London and will be a landmark study. For this we thank you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS

VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions all duly certified, signed by some 2,000 constituents from Windsor and area.

These petitioners call upon the Government to provide the resources that they have failed to provide with respect to VIA Rail, take cognizance of the increased inefficiency, inconvenience, and indeed danger entailed as a result of deregulation of air transportation. They call attention to the promises of the Conservatives now in government to improve VIA Rail transportation.

It takes notice of the environmental implications of failure to encourage rapid rail transport. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain improved, modernized VIA Rail service in those areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economical, safe, convenient, environmentally sound and energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation.

DRINKING WATER PIPELINE

Mr. Rex Crawford (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by almost 3,000 residents of Wallaceburg who need a pipeline to get clean drinking water.

Communities downstream from the chemical valley along the St. Clair River have had to cope with over 300 chemical spills in the last three years.

Those communities should not have to pay for this pipeline. They are not responsible for the spills, and all we ask is that the Government contributes 25 per cent of the pipeline's total cost. The provincial Government has already guaranteed 75 per cent of the cost. This pipeline is not an infrastructure. This is an emergency.

REDUCTION OF POVERTY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition to the House, pursuant to Standing Order 36.

It is from a number of western Canadians who point out that nearly four million Canadians are presently living in poverty as defined by Statistics Canada. In regions of Canada such as Newfoundland poverty strikes one in two unattached individuals. Forty per cent of Canadian families headed by women live in poverty, as again defined by the Government of Canada.

The petitioners are calling upon Parliament to encourage Canada's First Ministers to establish on an urgent basis a plan of action in order to reduce poverty in Canada. After seeing the Budget of yesterday, I guess they should be doing this with considerable expedition.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Thursday, April 27, 1989, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the tabling of a Budget is an occasion when a Government assesses where it has come from and proclaims where it intends to go. In this sense a Budget is a blueprint, a plan for the coming year. Companies prepare budgets to assist them in meeting their goals. Countries prepare budgets so that they can finance the programs they consider essential.

From the Budget tabled yesterday, we know how little importance this Conservative Government attaches to issues of major importance to Canadians—to promote full employment, to protect the environment, to develop our regions, to make our industries more productive, and to be internationally competitive.

We know how little importance this Government now assigns to ensuring that the recipients of social assistance have the means to raise themselves from poverty, to improve our education system and to assist the Third World with its debt and its development.

A Budget is even more than a basic plan of a Government. It is the occasion when a Government offers the people its thoughts, its vision if you wish, of where it hopes to lead the country. Judged by these standards also this Budget fails. It fails to offer Canadian people a concept of Canada beyond that of a reduced deficit.

In attempting to reduce its deficit, the Government has constantly spoken of fairness. But what is fair in imposing more taxes on those Canadians who can least afford to pay them? What is fair in cutting unemployment benefits while increasing employee and employer contributions? What is fair in asking the unemployed to pay for their own training, as well as the retraining of those who are employed?

What is fair in transferring to the provinces more of the cost of our social programs, of medicare or of higher education? Those costs will still need to be met. Now the provincial Governments will either have to reduce their own spending in those vital areas, or increase their own taxes to compensate for these federal cuts.

What is fair about raising interest rates for the past two years, and in so doing, fuelling inflation? Today, after two years of higher and higher interest rates, the threat of inflation is no more or less evident today than it was two years ago. What is fair in that?

Canadians today, as a result of both higher taxes and of higher interest rates, must pay more for their houses and their automobiles. The combination of higher taxes and higher interest rates put the successful operation of a small business or a farm at even greater risk. Is this what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) means when he says that his Government will be equitable to all Canadians? This negative Budget which has no purpose, other than to reduce federal Government spending and to raise taxes, is a direct result of this Government's own failure during the past four years to manage properly the Canadian economy and to put its own fiscal house in order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, a rudimentary principle of economic management is that the Government must pursue at all times a prudent and responsible fiscal policy. When times are good, the Government should reduce its deficit and prepare its fiscal house for the inevitable time when the economy becomes less buoyant. When a downturn is expected, as is now the case, the Government must put in place measures to stimulate the economy and to reduce unemployment. This is the traditional stabilization role of the Government in the economic cycle. In light of that simple and widely accepted economic principle, it is clear that the Government has failed in its management of our economy.

• (1310)

Over the last four years, in spite of strong economic growth, the public debt has nearly doubled, having reached more than $320 billion. The Government has piled up more debt in four years than any other Government since Confederation. Despite all the Government's rhetoric about deficit reduction, the deficit today remains at $30 billion, almost the same amount as when the Conservative Government took office four years ago. Yet, even with this poor financial record, the Government committed itself to $17 billion of pre-election and election promises. When times were good, instead of preparing the finances of the nation for less affluent times, the Government continued to spend, adding program on program and promise upon promise.

Now that an economic slowdown is in progress, the Government has no money either to honour its election promises or to help reinvigorate a weakening economy. By spending more when it should have shown restraint and by leaving corrective action so late in the economic cycle, the Government has put itself in an unsustainable position. Now all Canadians are being made to pay for this mismanagement.

Upon its election four years ago, the Government stated that it had three major objectives in deficit reduction. It has failed to reach any of them.

The first objective was "to achieve continuing sizeable year-over-year reductions in the budgetary deficit". Yet the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has now stated that the deficit will be at or near $30 billion this year, more than $2 billion over that of two years ago. There is no certainty that even the Minister's target of $30.5 billion for next year will be met.

The Minister's projected growth rate for the economy is 3 per cent, an optimistic figure viewed with widespread skepticism. The deficit is higher today than it was two years ago. This is not a continuing sizeable reduction. It is in fact no reduction at all. In the prime objective which it set itself, the Government has failed.

The Government's second stated objective was "to reduce the growth of the public debt to no more than the growth of the economy". The debt in 1984 was $170 billion when the Government took office. Today it is $320 billion, an increase of almost 90 per cent. That debt continues to grow faster than the economy. The Government's debt now accounts for more than 56 per cent of our Gross Domestic Product. It was only 45 per cent when the Government assumed office. The second objective of the Government: its second failure.

The Government's third objective was "to make expenditure control and good management the primary focus of fiscal restraint". In other words, to reduce the deficit by cutting expenditures and not by increasing taxes. Yet over the past four years tax increases have almost matched expenditure cuts. The Conservative Government has imposed on Canadians the highest tax increases in Canadian history. Canadians have had imposed on them a partial de-indexing of income tax; a 3 per cent income surtax, which has now become 5 per cent; an increase in the sales tax from 9 per cent to 12 per cent, which has now become 13.5 per cent; a 10 per cent tax on long distance telephone calls, which has now become 11 per cent; a five cent increase per litre on gasoline, which will now become 7 cents; and an increase on air transport taxes without additional safety in the air. This list is but a sampling of the Conservative tax increases.

Have these tax increases been spread equitably among all taxpayers? No. The National Council on Welfare recently released a study showing that during the four years of Conservative Government, the personal income tax of a working poor family went up by 60 per cent; those of a middle-income family went up by 17 per cent; while those of an upper income family went down by 6 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. MacLaren: During the past four years there have been major increases in taxes. As a result of this Budget, an average income earner will pay $700 more in taxes annually. This means that the same family is now paying $2,000 more in taxes since the Conservative Government was elected.

With this kind of record, with this piling of tax upon tax, I can well understand why the Minister of Finance did not repeat in this Budget his 1984 election pledge that he would not raise taxes. The third objective of the Government: its third failure.

The Minister has cut government spending and has increased taxes. The Minister is predicting a slowdown in the economy and a rise in both the inflation rate and the level of unemployment. That is a recipe for recession. The Government cannot at the same time reduce its spending, increase taxes, and raise interest rates and hope that somehow the economy will continue to grow this year by 3 per cent.

Real interest rates are too high. They are now at a level where they themselves contribute to inflationary pressures. Interest rates are now so high that they are a major reason why the deficit is a problem. The problem of the deficit, however, does not arise from the fact that the Government has spent too much on social programs, regional development, education, housing and training. It arises from the fact that through government inaction interest rates today are too high.

The Bank of Canada, sensitive to any portents of inflation, has steadily raised interest rates for the past two years in an effort to lessen inflationary pressures which, as the provincial Premiers have repeatedly pointed out, were and still are mainly generated in central Canada. In the absence of any fiscal leadership from the Government, monetary policy has been left as the single crude tool to counter possible inflation in an economy already characterized by widespread differences in levels of unemployment.

Real interest rates are now higher than they have been in five years. There is little evidence, after two years, that higher and higher rates are in fact countering inflationary pressures. On the contrary, higher interest rates can actually increase inflation in high growth areas such as Toronto and Vancouver.

The Government acts as if somehow it had nothing to do with high interest rates, that they are the fault of undefined international pressures or possibly of the Governor of the Bank of Canada. Who is ultimately responsible for high interest rates in Canada? It is not foreign countries. It is not the Governor of the Bank of Canada. Ultimately, it is the Government itself. The people of Canada know that. They are not fooled by the Government's portrayal of itself as an innocent bystander who has been run over by a bus.

The Government has so driven up interest rates that they now stand two percentage points above those of the United States. A recent report of the Canadian Labour Market and Productivity Centre urged rightly that "the spread between Canadian and U.S. interest rates has been excessive, reducing our competitiveness. The result has been slower employment growth and more difficult adjustment to change. Part of the solution is an interest rate policy appropriate for full employment. This requires a recognition—that control of inflation cannot be the sole objective guiding interest rate policies".

Another result of the Government's tight money policy is that the United States and other foreign countries and other foreign funds, have come to Canada seeking higher returns than they would earn at home. In doing so the foreign lenders have bought Canadian dollars. This means that the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar has become less stable, more vulnerable to decisions made outside Canada.

Canada's trade performance has been adversely affected by the appreciation of the Canadian dollar as confirmed by recent merchandise trade figures which show that our monthly trade surplus tumbled in February to its lowest level in nearly a year.

With a high accumulated debt, the Government's financial planning and its Budget has become too sensitive to interest rates. A straight-jacket has been put on programs that should be available to assist Canadians. The Government itself recognized this in 1984 when it announced that the high level of interest payments "limits a Government's ability to meet priority needs".

Four years later, having made no real progress in reducing its deficit, all the Government can find to say now is that these same high interest payments: "put pressure on the Government's ability to meet other priorities".

This is something that they said four years ago and they are saying the same thing today. That is exactly what the Government said four years ago. In short, the Government admits that it recognized a problem then, but it did nothing about it. It now declares in its Budget that the Canadian people must pay for its ineptitude and its profligacy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLaren: The high interest rate policy the Government is pursuing has had additional unfortunate social results. Higher income Canadians have been the beneficiaries of higher interest rates. The affluent, the rentiers, are the inevitable and invisible winners in the high interest rate stakes. There is, in fact, a regressive redistribution of income when high interest rates are imposed by the Government. Net savers, that is high income people, receive the earnings of net borrowers, generally lower income people. Is it fair to transfer money from the poor to the rich? Is that what the Government means when it says that it will be fair to all Canadians?

Instead of these and other contradictions in yesterday's Budget, what Canada needs today is a new mix, a new balance between taxation and fiscal policy. This balance cannot be reached overnight. It takes time. The process should have begun four years ago. It did not. Now it has become imperative. It must begin by a reduction in interest rates.

The Governor of the Bank of Canada hinted in his recent annual report that should the Government decide to control its spending, he would consider reducing interest rates. To avoid a recession, the Government should now deliver and reduce interest rates. The sooner the better.

The provincial Premiers are not the only ones to call for a new mix between fiscal and monetary policy. In its annual review, the Economic Council concluded "the current mix of monetary and fiscal policy, because of its undue reliance on monetary restraint, that is to say on interest rates, has adverse implication for the economy and especially for unemployment, regional disparities, the amount of the public debt investment levels and hence productivity". We fully agree with the council's statement. That is not the only way available to the Government to carry out its oft repeated promise to put its own fiscal house in order.

When we speak of putting the fiscal house in order, why does not the Government, for example, redirect to people some of the billions of dollars that businesses now receive through grants, subsidies and tax expenditures? Corporations receive more today through subsidies and tax expenditures than they pay in income tax. In 1987 alone businesses received almost $9 billion in subsidies and several more billions of dollars in tax expenditures. On the other hand, businesses pay some $11 to $12 billion in income tax. Surely this problem could have been addressed.

Why does the Government not respect its own earlier commitment and increase the share of taxes paid by corporations, including those profitable corporations which today pay no taxes at all? The share of taxes paid by corporations has declined since the Conservative Government came to office in 1984. Some 25 years ago, corporate income taxes accounted for 20 per cent of all government revenue. This year, in spite of record profits, corporate taxes account for only 12 per cent.

As part of phase one of its so-called tax reform, the Government indicated its intention to emulate the United States and to shift more of the tax burden to corporations. However there is still no evidence that this has been the case. The Government itself forecasted that its tax measures of 1987 would add a half billion dollars in corporate tax revenue. In fact, despite strong growth in corporate profits, corporate tax revenues have on the contrary declined. Corporate tax revenues are running about 8 per cent below last year's levels.

The share of corporations has been reduced over the last few years partly through the use of losses, credits, deductions accumulated during the last recession. Account must be taken of the tax systems of other countries against which our corporations must compete. The integrity of a self-compliance tax system is undermined when Canadians see profits of corporations going up and corporate taxes going down. The Government failed during the past four years, and again in this Budget, to address a basic fiscal problem.

Why does the Government not follow the advice of the Auditor General and improve the collection of taxes owed to the Government? The Auditor General has reported that efficiency in tax collection has so decreased over the last five years that the revenue shortfall now amounts to about one-half billion dollars. The Government has increased taxes yet again, but it cannot even collect what it is already owed. How can the Government explain that the volume of write-offs at Revenue Canada has jumped from some $100 million in 1984-85 to more than $600 million in 1986-87?

There are many, many other examples of government mismanagement large and small. Why, for instance, did the Government spend $90 million of taxpayers' money on advertising in 1988 to promote its own programs, 38 per cent more than one year ago? Was the Minister of Finance not preaching restraint? Restraint, yes, but not during an election year.

Canadians did not elect a Government supposedly pledged to fiscal restraint only to find it building a new prison in the Prime Minister's constituency or, as the Auditor General reported, building roads to nowhere or paying for an extravagant energy book complete with pictures of the former Minister of Energy. Is that what the Minister of Finance means by putting the fiscal house in order? Are those the priorities of a Government that now says it cannot find the money to help finance the education of our native people?

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. MacLaren: There are many ways large and small to improve government management to consolidate the revenue base of the Government which do not require the Government to cut basic programs to Canadians. If the Government had chosen some or all of these measures, we would have had a better balance today between monetary and fiscal policy. The Minister of Finance himself has estimated that an interest rate reduction of one percentage point reduces the debt charges by $1.6 billion in the first year, rising to more than $3 billion after four years. Yet as I have noted, his mix of spending and interest rates continues to be wrong.

• (1330)

All Canadians will remember the Conservative Government's $17 billion of pre-election and election promises. Amongst that deluge of election promises, Canadians will also recall the Minister of Finance stating: "Everything we have announced is within the spending budget that I set out in February of 1988. The costs would be zero".

Now, five months later, the Minister has suddenly discovered that what he called "spending commitments" would not in fact be zero. Now he says that they need to be reviewed or, better still, forgotten altogether.

His explanation is that the Government's promises need to be re-examined because interest rates have unexpectedly risen. But who sets interest rates in Canada? It is ultimately the Government itself. That being so, it is quite remarkable that somehow the Minister did not know that interest rates had been going up for two years. He apparently did not know that the Government's election promises would cost ever more money, or would have to be withdrawn altogether once the election campaign was over.

The House may recall that the Minister of Finance based his former fiscal plan on an interest rate of 7.8 per cent in 1989. But even as he did so the Bank of Canada, with his full agreement, was increasing interest rates. When the Minister tabled his last Budget they were already 8.5 per cent. They reached 10.5 per cent when the election was called and now they are nearing 13 per cent. Either the Minister of Finance was dissembling when he joined in making all those promises, or he simply cannot count.

It is preposterous for the Minister of Finance to leave the impression that the Budget problem only appeared after the election. Even if he himself did not know of it, his officials warned him so during the campaign, but the Minister subsequently denied the report of his own Department.

The Minister of Finance knew when these election promises were made that they would never be honoured. He knew, but nevertheless let them be made. The Minister misled Canadians during the campaign, the same Minister who during the campaign repeatedly called the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) a liar.

During the campaign, and over the last year, why did we not hear the Minister of Finance admitting to Canadians that there was a debt problem? Why during the past year did the Minister consistently present a rosy picture of the fiscal situation? Why was he saying that he had, "achieved this record of deficit reduction with a new disciplined approach to the management of Government and its expenditures", when quite clearly he had not? Why did he deliver one message prior to the election and a very different one immediately afterward?

The fiscal strait-jacket in which the Government has now placed all Canadians seems to have come as a surprise to the Minister. He suddenly finds that the cupboard is bare and the Government's promises are worth no more than most Canadians suspected they were when they first heard them.

During the recent election campaign The Globe and Mail was at least right when it said:

> Failure to be frank will store up nasty political surprises when the public discovers the dirty secret about our finances. But that will be after the election.

The Government has decided to go it alone with its changes to the federal sales tax, having failed completely to reach any consensus with the provinces. Most of Canada will now face a second sales tax. The result will almost certainly be a significant increase in inflation, coupled with a reduction in disposable income for those Canadians whose income is already under attack by this Budget.

The Government has said that Canadians in greatest need will not suffer as a result of this Budget, yet a consumption tax is the most regressive of all taxes. Even worse, the Government has now changed the meaning of "revenue neutral", a phrase of which it is much enamoured, by greatly increasing the sales tax revenue before introducing the new goods and services sales tax.

We have been told repeatedly that interest rates are high in order to save us from inflation. Now the Government plans to introduce a tax on virtually every dollar spent in this country. The Minister himself has acknowledged that the introduction of the goods and services sales tax will increase the inflation rate by 3 per cent. Unless the Government does the obviously sensible thing and abandons its present monetary policy, interest rates are going to climb further still.

Small business owners have good reason to be worried. Already burdened with increased costs as a result of high interest rates, they now face the nightmare of more paper work. The resulting increase in work for accountants will be offset by an increase in small business failures.

The unanswered questions about the proposed goods and services tax are almost endless. What will the tax credit be, and to whom will it be paid? What assistance will be provided small business and the self-employed in administering this new tax? How will the new tax affect the different regions of Canada?

We on this side of the House do not support hidden tax increases to generate new dollars to finance deficit reduction. An opportunity for real reform has been missed, and Canadians who can least afford to pay will suffer.

Regional development has always been fundamental to the Liberal view of the Canadian federation. Following the 1981-82 recession, one would have hoped that the regions would have benefited from the economic recovery as much as central Canada. But under the Conservative Government this has not been the case. While Ontario's unemployment rate is lower today than it was before the recession, the unemployment rate in the rest of the country is, on average, higher than it was.

Why is unemployment so high in many regions of Canada? Structural factors are involved, but the wide gap in unemployment levels can better be explained by some of the Government's policies.

First among them is the high interest rate policy. With unemployment figures at 15 per cent in Newfoundland, 13 per cent in Prince Edward Island, 12 per cent in New Brunswick, it is readily understandable why provincial Premiers consider unemployment a greater problem than the 3 per cent inflation rate in St. John's or Charlottetown or the 4 per cent rate in Halifax.

The Government has accepted the advice of the Governor of the Bank of Canada that a single national interest rate is the only valid monetary policy. But it has ignored completely his advice that fiscal policy can offset some of the adverse effects of a national monetary policy. The Bank of Canada will not act. The Government also will not act. So the less affluent regions will now be hit twice. They must pay interest rates which bear little relationship to local circumstances and at the same time see the Government cutting drastically regional development program.

If the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance both take a hands-off approach to regional development, who will help our regions? Whose job is it? Does the Minister think that further privatization, deregulation, and cuts to VIA Rail will help those regions, will help unify our country?

Are we not to express some caring for each other amongst the regions of Canada? Or are we seeing a Government, preoccupied with its free trade deal with the United States, preparing itself, consciously or subconsciously, for the day when the United States condemns Canada's regional development programs as "trade distorting subsidies"? Does the Government believe that it is sidestepping that problem by reducing or eliminating the regional development programs now, before the negotiations with the United States begin?

• (1340)

At the time of the last election, there were warnings that the Free Trade Agreement with the United States posed a serious threat to Canada's regional development. Despite repeated government denials, economic development assistance for those regions with the greatest need is indeed now being drastically reduced.

Who will be the most seriously hurt by those cuts? It will be those regions which are already suffering economic distress—Cape Breton, the Gaspé Peninsula, towns in the interior of British Columbia. The severity of the impact of those cuts will of course vary, but the fact remains that the local impact of some cuts, even minor cuts, will be out of all proportion to their budgetary magnitude.

For example, reductions in funding for economic regional development in the fisheries and forestry sectors have the potential to send tremors through the entire economies of several resource based provinces. Is this what the Government meant when it said that it would be fair to all Canadians? Is this what the Government meant when it spoke of sharing?

The Minister of Finance is dancing the deficit shuffle. Determined to create the appearance of having finally made some real reductions in the Government's deficit, the Minister has moved to reduce his own deficit by sending the bill to the provinces for payment.

In the important domain of higher education, what else other than once more cutting the transfer payments to the provinces has the Government done? By its earlier partial deindexation of transfer payments to the provinces, the Government has already chopped its support for higher education. Now more cuts are to be added to the $8 billion in reductions that will have been made by the Government by 1992.

Has the Government, in cutting funding for education, concluded that our colleges and universities are overfunded? It is a widely recognized fact that our higher education system is underfunded. A recent series of articles in a Canadian newspaper about our universities used the words "a disheartening look at the erosion of the system". The problem here is the erosion in the Established Programs Financing formula that dictates how post-secondary education is funded. It has proven to be inadequate. It is a block funding formula that does not provide incentives for the provinces to increase their grants to colleges and universities. Instead of trying to solve that problem with the provinces, to negotiate with the provinces a better financing formula, the Government takes the easy route and simply cuts it support.

Our national health care system is one of the things of which we Canadians are most proud. However, the system has been under a great deal of strain. Underfunding of health care has led to crowded emergency wards, shortages of hospital beds and long waits for non-emergency surgery. As our population ages, the demands on our health care system increase. Concern for the future is growing as it becomes evident that the system is having difficulty meeting even today's medical needs.

In the face of this reality, it is irresponsible for the Minister of Finance to cut payments for health care. The provinces, as a result of his Budget, will be forced either to find more money through increased taxes or to reduce their health services to offset the federal cuts.

Is the Minister unaware of the pressures on our health care system? Does the Minister believe that the pressures are not real, that they are only imagined? Has the Minister of National Health and Welfare not had anything to say in defence of the health care system in Canada? Has the Government in fact decided to shift responsibility for the problems in the system to the provinces while at the same time making those same problems worse?

In its last annual review, the Economic Council proposed new targets for the Canadian economy for the next five years. The council pointed out the need to achieve a strong performance in productivity as a fundamental condition to Canada's success in global trade. The objective should be to increase productivity at an annual rate of 1.5 per cent to 2 per cent. Current indications, however, suggest that as a result of the Government's neglect productivity growth will be less than 1 per cent, .7 per cent, over the next four years. If Canadians want to compete successfully in international markets, such a sluggish rate of productivity growth is clearly not enough.

Once again, the Government has been pursuing contradictory objectives. On the one hand, it champions free trade with the United States in the name of greater competitiveness, yet on the other hand, it pursues policies that diminish our international competitiveness.

How can productivity be increased? Although it is true that the role of government in the economy is on a short-term basis to ensure stable growth without inflation, its longer term obligation is to invest in the human resources and the physical infrastructure of our country. Training, retraining and education must be improved. Adequate research and development incentives must be introduced. Infrastructures must be kept in good working order. By all these tests, this Budget is once again a failure.

Small and medium sized companies in Canada, typically Canadian owned companies, have had difficulty in obtaining venture capital. This has become more of a problem following the stock market crash of 1987. Figures now indicate that equity financing dropped dramatically in 1988. Small and medium sized firms are the prime victims and now, as a result of this Budget, small business will find financing even more difficult.

The lack of venture capital is all the more disturbing because our economy is in a period of transformation. Canada is moving away from its traditional economic base, natural resources and megaprojects, toward a much more complex structure based on the development of systems and software, the applications of technology and human resources. Not only does this new stage of economic development absorb more money, but it also requires the use of intangible resources such as intellectual property, production techniques and management skills that are more difficult to translate into simple numbers. As a result, financial institutions and investors are more hesitant to invest in new enterprises.

Why did the Government fail to take the opportunity of this Budget to counter this problem? Why has it not promoted the establishment of employee profit sharing and stock ownership plans? Such measures would not only help firms gain access to equity financing but would also encourage closer co-operation between employees and employers, thereby contributing to increased productivity and employment opportunities within firms.

The principle of gain sharing is in harmony with the Liberal Party's economic philosophy which believes that concertation between employers and employees is preferable to confrontation. Gain sharing is also in accord with Liberal tradition. In 1984, the then Liberal Minister of Finance proposed measures to promote the establishment of what was then called a registered employee profit participation plan. Following the election of the Conservative Government in 1984, the proposal was not implemented. Governments need to be visionary and to have a long-term plan to implement such productive measures. This Government clearly has none.

In research and development, in 1984, the Prime Minister promised to double Canadian spending on research and development by the end of his first mandate. No progress has been made. In fact, Canada's spending on research and development has gone down. As the C. D. Howe Institute has pointed out, Canada's industrial research and development is concentrated in a small number of companies. The Economic Council notes that the problem goes even deeper. "Canada is well down the list of industrial nations in terms of patent activity".

What do we find in the Budget to improve Canada's lagging performance in research and development in the face of the challenge of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement and global markets? Again, nothing.

The Government promised to help Canadians train and retrain for a global economy. It now proposes to do so within the Unemployment Insurance Program. The cost of such training and retraining will now be paid from the insurance premiums of employers and employees. The Government has taken $1.9 billion from general revenue and added it to the premium costs that employers and employees will now have to pay.

I have difficulty in understanding the rationale of the Government for these changes. Contrary to its previous commitments, these changes will move the unemployment insurance system further away from the concept of insurance. Previous Governments recognized that the extended regional benefits were in fact a form of social program that was delivered as an addition to the basic unemployment insurance system. Because of that, its primary financing came from taxes levied in a progressive manner on all Canadians. Workers were to pay for the basic insurance system, but all Canadians were to share in the cost of the social contract that that program provided.

Yesterday's decision and yesterday's Budget to reduce the Government's contribution to unemployment insurance departs from that concept. It departs from it without offering any reason other than raising taxes in a hidden way. That decision will not make our tax system any fairer.

The Minister knows that employee premiums, when used to finance social programs, are a regressive form of taxation. Lower and middle-income workers pay proportionately more than higher-income workers for the unemployment insurance account. People earning under $30,000 annually now pay almost 60 per cent of the employee contributions to the unemployment insurance account. All those Canadians who have insurable incomes, most of whom are high-income earners, do not pay for it at all. Is that fair? Is that what the Government means when it speaks of being fair to all Canadians? This hidden and unfair tax increase is to be added to the regressive sales tax that the Government intends to introduce, as well as to the unfair tax rates and the tax brackets of the personal income tax system.

In 1969, the Pearson Commission recommended that our official development assistance, the aid provided to the poorest countries, should be no less than .7 per cent of our Gross Domestic Product. This target was to be reached by 1990. Most industrial countries regard it as a benchmark.

However, upon assuming office in 1984 the Conservative Government decided to review official development assistance and reconsider the pace at which it would proceed toward the goal. The Government has announced that the target will now not be reached before the year 2000, ten years later than originally planned, calling the goal itself into question.

In yesterday's Budget we learned that this objective will be further delayed. Canada will now spend only .4 per cent of its Gross Domestic Product on official development assistance. Canada will now reduce its deficit at the expense of the poorest countries, whatever the negative impact these delays and cuts will have on both developing countries and the international status of Canada.

In an interdependent world economy, poverty anywhere robs Canadians of export markets and jobs. The delays and cuts are short-sighted. If one of the richest countries of the world cannot find money during a period of prosperity to help the poorest ones, what kind of moral authority do we have, as the privileged few, to ask Brazil, Mexico, Argentina or any other country to implement social and economic reforms to help solve their problems? Democracies are fragile in those countries. The bitter pill that we are forcing upon them has already caused social disruption. Nothing good can come out of these short-sighted delays and cuts in our official development assistance.

Cuts do not only affect the developing countries. They also hurt Canada's international reputation. Official development assistance enhances Canada's bilateral and multilateral relations, while providing an effective vehicle for further expression of the humanitarian beliefs shared by all Canadians. Furthermore, the reductions announced by the Government will undermine Canada's traditional role as a middle power in multilateral forums such as the United Nations, the Commonwealth, and la Francophonie, a position already weakened by the Government's poor record in external relations and its obsession with the Free Trade Agreement with the United States.

At the beginning of this brief review of the Budget and some of its implications, I asked the Government whether it was fair to all Canadians. In an even more fundamental way, it is an unfair Budget. This Government, through its inaction over the last four prosperous years, has placed itself in a fiscal trap. It has now had to choose. It has had to show its true colours.

We can now see that the values behind this Budget are not the values of most Canadians. They express the values of a Government bent on emphasizing market forces over all other Canadian values. They help to clear the way toward implementation of the Government's goal of economic integration with the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, in Canada the pursuit of private wealth is balanced by a widespread recognition of the public good. Canadians define themselves to a notable degree by their collective programs which they themselves have created and financed to help each other, whether individually or regionally.

During the recent election campaign, Canadians showed every sign that they do not want that sense of caring for each other to be cut in the name of harmonization with the United States. Yet here we have a Government that in its deficit-reduction measures is moving Canada further along a path paralleling that of the United States.

That is what we Liberals meant when we spoke of erosion of sovereignty. Such harmonization with the United States is not the goal of most Canadians. They want their Government's priorities to be on the environment, on the value of a compassionate society, on safe and well run towns and cities, on the promotion of Canadian culture, on a well educated citizenry, and on equal justice for all.

• (1400)

Canadians will look in vain for such priorities in this negative Budget. This Budget fails the test of fairness affirming Canadian values and traditions. That is the basic reason that I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray):

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and by substituting the following therefor:
> "this House regrets that the Government has imposed unfair taxes and has cut vital programs, including child care, regional development and agriculture, in an effort to reduce its annual deficit, despite the fact that this effort has been rendered futile by the Government's ill-conceived high interest rate policy; and
> That this House condemns the Government for pursuing these policies that fall most heavily upon lower and middle income Canadians and that are certain to hinder the further development of the Canadian economy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has heard the terms of the amendment and finds it to be in order.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I shall break a bit of precedent and move our subamendment to the Liberal amendment and then you can take a look at it.

I move, seconded by the Hon. Member from Prince Albert—Churchill River (Mr. Funk):

> That the amendment be amended by adding the following words:
>
> "and that this House further condemns the Government
> (1) for imposing the greatest new tax burden on Canadian families in recent times;
> (2) for reneging on its commitments to develop regional equality;
> (3) for continuing and increasing the unfairness of the tax system;
> (4) for eroding the universality of vital social programs".

An Hon. Member: He is not in his right seat.

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member from Prince Albert—Churchill River will be in his seat long before I finish my speech and then he will officially second my amendment.

We have before us today a very interesting Budget, a Budget that was brought in by the media in the greatest tax leak that we have ever seen in the history of this country. I suggest that this Budget will be known historically for its substantive parts or details rather than for the way it was released.

I suggest it will be known for two things. First, it will be known for what I call the big tax attack of the Conservative Party, the Tory tax attack. I have never in my life seen as big a tax grab by any Government on the ordinary people of Canada. Perhaps it is no wonder when we look across the way at these empty benches. It is millionaire's row. Millionaire after millionaire sit in the front benches of the Conservative Government, and that is why we have the biggest tax attack in the history of this country on ordinary Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: There will be $8 billion in personal taxes by 1990. It is tax, tax, tax. The old saying that my grandfather told me many years ago is that Tory times were tough times.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: Those were the days when the Member from Assiniboia, the great red Tory, was a sympathizer of the CCF and Tommy Douglas. He knows of what I speak. This is a major attack on ordinary people. It is a pick-pocket type of Budget in attacking ordinary people.

Second, this Budget will go down as stage two of the real Conservative agenda, the Conservative Party and big business alliance in this country. Stage one is the Free Trade Agreement and stage two is to change this country fundamentally into one where corporations and the market dominates, where the rich get richer and the poor get poorer. The word deficit is nothing more than a code word to cut back on social programs, to end universality. It is nothing more than a code word to reduce the role of government on our society. It is nothing more than a code word to reduce the taxes on corporations and nothing more than a code word to increase taxes on ordinary Canadians.

What we are seeing now is a real Conservative agenda of privatization and deregulation to harmonize our programs with those in the United States. This Budget marks a move away from a unique Canadian life where we have unique social programs, a mixed economy, to a vision where social programs will become welfare programs and a mixed economy will eventually become the corporate economy.

What is the result of this Budget? I suggest the result will in all likelihood be to induce a recession. The Conservatives are predicting in the Budget documents an unemployment rate in 1990 of 8.5 per cent. The Minister across the way knows that. What we have here are cut-backs and tax increases. We will have stagflation. In fact, we will have a repeat of 1981-82. What we have is a clone of Allan MacEachen once again. In 1981 we had a tremendous increase in interest rates. In 1982 we had a very restrictive Budget and a great recession from which many parts of this country have still not recovered.

Finally, we cannot trust the Prime Minister any more. Do you remember, Mr. Speaker, that in the campaign he went around saying that social programs were a sacred trust? We cannot trust the Prime Minister.

Mr. Nunziata: You never could.

Mr. Nystrom: Do you remember, Mr. Speaker, that in the campaign he talked about the deficit not really being a serious problem and suddenly the deficit is the only problem. We cannot trust the Prime Minister of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we now have two major themes in the country's Budget. First, it's a big Tory tax grab. It is the biggest tax grab in the history of our country. This is a real pickpocket Budget for the average citizen. I am not kidding! And second, and I know the Hon. Member for Montreal will agree—

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis), on a point of order.

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, who may not be very familiar with the French language, just used the terms: un budget de pickpockets. Everybody knows that what a person really means when he says that is: a budget of thieves. So I would ask the Hon. Member to apologize and to withdraw what he said.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member not to use the word "pickpocket", although I do not rule the word unparliamentary.

An Hon. Member: Say Robin Hood and his merry gang, then.

[Translation]

Mr. Nystrom: Perhaps I should say a Robin Hood Budget, Mr. Speaker, because Robin Hood stole from the rich and gave to the poor. In this federal Budget, a lot of money is being taken out of the pockets of Canada's poor and going into the pockets of big corporations and wealthy Canadians. I will now give the Hon. Member from Québec an example of what I mean when I say this is a real pickpocket Budget for the average Canadian citizen.

• (1410)

Mr. Speaker, some $8 billion is going to come out of the pockets of ordinary Canadians in the next year—

Some Hon. Members: Shame. Shame.

Mr. Nystrom: —in excise taxes, sales taxes, unemployment insurance—

An Hon. Member: Shame on you.

Mr. Nystrom: —income tax. I would like to have the Member from Quebec listen to what I say here. I know the Member from Montreal is getting very excited. I can hear her head rattling all the way from here.

I will give you the example of an ordinary family. Under this Conservative Budget, an ordinary family of four with two children, where both the mother and father work, having an hypothetical salary of $44,000 a year, would see an increase in the surtax of 2 per cent. That is an increase from 3 per cent to 5 per cent. That is an increase in a year of $85. Some 13.5 million Canadians will have an increase in their surtax next year.

Secondly, there will be an increase in the cigarette and alcohol tax of $100 for that ordinary family. There will be an increase in unemployment insurance premiums of $132 for that ordinary family. There will be an increase in the gas tax of $120 for the ordinary family. There will be an increase in the sales tax of $273. So the ordinary family with two children, making $44,000 a year, if they are the ordinary, average Canadian family that consumes an average amount of cigarettes and alcohol, or drives a car and buys the ordinary amount of food, clothing and things like that for the kids, and goes to the odd movie, the increase in tax will be some $710 a year.

Some Hon. Members: Shame. Shame.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, $710 a year. That is one of the biggest tax hikes we have ever seen in the history of this country for ordinary people.

An Hon. Member: What next!

Mr. Nystrom: As if that was not enough—

An Hon. Member: Is there more?

Mr. Nystrom: All of a sudden they come along with a hammer, don't they? They announce in this Budget there is going to be a national sales tax of some 9 per cent. That sales tax of 9 per cent will cost about $1,000 for that same family earning $44,000 a year. That is a tax increase of $1700 a year. If that is not the biggest tax hike in the history of this country, then we have never seen anything like it before.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: Members across the way get a little sensitive because I am going to tell their constituents right now that in January of 1991, if they want to take a taxi they are going to be taxed on it. If they want to have a haircut, they are going to be taxed on it by the Conservative Party at 9 per cent. If they want to stop and buy a Lotto ticket, they are going to be taxed on it by 9 per cent. If they want to take their kids to a movie, they are going to be taxed on it. If they want to take their kids and enrol them in dancing lessons, they are going to be taxed on it. If they want to take their kids and put them in music lessons, they are going to be taxed on it.

Some Hon. Members: Shame. Shame.

Mr. Nystrom: If they want to buy a house, they are going to be taxed on it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have here a copy of a brief from the Canadian Real Estate Association, March, 1989. They are great friends of millionaire's row across the way. They say at page 42 that in 1988 they expect the price of a house to go up by $7,800, and in Toronto the price of a house to go up by some $13,000.

Mr. Speaker, no matter what you do with the Conservative Party, you are going to be taxed. In fact, if you vote Conservative you are going to be taxed. About the only thing that is not taxed in this House is the hot air that comes from across the way.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear! It should be.

[Translation]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the federal sales tax will cost the average family $1,000 annually. This is a 9 per cent tax and it will be an inflationary, a very inflationary tax. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that the tax would raise the inflation rate by 3 per cent. We now have an inflation rate of 4.6 per cent, and with the federal sales tax, Mr. Speaker, we will have an inflation rate of between 7.6 and 8 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, this will add another $10 billion to the federal Government's Budget. I know that if the rate of inflation goes up in this country, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Crow, will decide to raise the bank rate again. That will make things even harder for the average family.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I said that this federal Budget will put a heavy tax burden on the average family.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, when you look at the Budget, you find out that the friends of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the friends of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) across the way, do not get hit very hard in extra taxes. I speak here of the big companies and the huge corporations in Canada.

[Translation]

There was an increase of only $1 billion for big Canadian corporations. With this federal Budget, more than 80,000 profitable companies still won't pay taxes. Explain that to a poor person in Chicoutimi, living on an income of $15,000, or to a family in Saskatchewan with an income of $18,000. Where does the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance leave us? It leave us with more than 80,000 profitable companies that do not pay tax at all.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I say this is the biggest tax grab in the history of this country on the ordinary people of Canada. That is Conservative justice, that has always been Conservative justice. In fact, if you go back to 1984 and look at handouts to big companies in this country, we find out that one per cent of our Gross National Product went out to large companies in Canada. We find in 1989 it has gone up to 1.6 per cent of the Gross National Product. That is an increase of 60 per cent of the Gross National Product that goes out in grants, write-offs, hand-outs and welfare to the huge corporations in Canada. I say the time has come for the ordinary Canadian people to realize that and to realize when they are being ripped off by the Party across the way.

In addition, we still have rich people that are not paying taxes. In 1986, 6,250 Canadians with an income of over $50,000 paid no tax at all.

An Hon. Member: Shame. Shame.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as somebody in Montreal told me a few days ago, there is a Santa Claus. As far as the Tories are concerned, there is a Santa Claus for the rich and for big Canadian corporations, but not for the rest of the country.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, that is why I said earlier that this Budget gives us the big tax grab, the Tory tax grab, the biggest tax heist in the history of this country. But I am not surprised. When I go back over the record of the Conservative Party from 1984, I find that for the average family, that is, a poor family in this country earning $24,000 a year, the tax increase went up. They have already had tax increases of 44 per cent. For a middle income family earning $49,000 a year, the tax increase was some 10.2 per cent. For an upper income family earning $122,000 a year, guess what happened? There was a tax reduction of some 6.4 per cent. Do they call this tax justice, do they call this tax fairness? They say they represent ordinary Canadians. That is why I am saying it is the big tax attack of the Conservative Party of Canada.

On the other hand, where are the major increases in corporate taxes? On the other hand, we now have deferred taxes by corporations of $36 billion in this country. Why is there not interest on the deferred tax when with interest on the deferred tax of $36 billion at 10 per cent, we would have an extra $3.6 billion to help pay down the national debt—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: —put moneys into day care, to cut taxes for ordinary Canadians. I ask you, where is the tax justice, where is the tax fairness?

Why is there not a merger tax, a special merger tax, when you have two big companies that merge in this country for no known purpose except to make a profit? Why is there not a merger tax that says that if the companies are going to merge they can only merge if there is significant benefit for Canadians and, if not, there is a serious merger tax? Why is there not a special tax on companies to help clean up the environment in Canada? Canadian people want that kind of a tax and there was not one in the Budget.

An Hon. Member: Tax, tax, tax.

Mr. Nystrom: This Budget is nothing but tax, tax, tax, as one of the Ministers himself has said. It is the biggest tax hike there is in the country for ordinary Canadians.

[Translation]

It was always like that with the Conservative Party. I still remember my grandparents and my father saying that Western Canada had been through a severe depression in the 1930s. At the time they had a Conservative Government led by Prime Minister Bennett here in Ottawa, and as it happened the country experienced the greatest depression in Canadian history. Lots of people out of work, lots of taxes, lots of problems, and the men used to take the train from one city to the next in search of employment. I know that the Hon. Member for Edmonton wrote a book in which he refers to the great depression, but that was due in part to the Conservative Party of Prime Minister Bennett, and now we find ourselves in the very same situation. Again we have a Conservative Government. Again we have a Budget where priority No. 1 is spelt taxes, taxes, nothing but taxes. Just more of the same!

Mr. Speaker, time has come to change Government, time has come to take action in this country, time has come to elect a Social Democrat Government for ordinary people.

I turn now to social programs. The second thing that really strikes me in the Budget after taxation is the attack on social programs by the Prime Minister and his colleagues. In terms of universality it is the beginning of the end. They brought in what is called a claw-back procedure in the tax system, a special tax on family allowance.

Mr. Kilgour: Against the rich!

Mr. Nystrom: It is a special tax on old age pensions. Thousands of people will now lose their family allowances and their old age pensions.

Mr. McDermid: It is 4 per cent of senior citizens all earning over $75,000.

Mr. Riis: That is this year. Wait for next year when it will be 10 per cent.

Mr. Nystrom: In fact, 132,000 senior citizens will be affected. Some 535,000 people receiving family allowance will be affected. That will affect women because women receive the family allowance cheques, not the men. I see three or four problems with that.

I ask the Conservative Party why people with children who earn the same revenue as those who do not will be taxed at a higher rate. It is exactly what happens when family allowance is taxed in a different way.

Why is there a special tax on social income? What is the difference between income that comes from dividends, capital gains or executive salaries? Is there something second-class about social incomes?

I turn now to the means test. Is a means test not degrading? The cut-off today for family allowance and old age pensions is $50,000. If it is $50,000 today, how many days will it be before it is a $40,000 cut-off, a $35,000 cut-off, or a $30,000 cut-off? How long will it be before a social program becomes a welfare program and we see the end of all social programs in Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: That is the Conservative way. That is the real Conservative agenda. It is the agenda of Thomas d'Aquino and of the BCNI.

The Government is sitting where it does because big business bought the election. Big business spent millions of dollars buying the election on free trade. Now big business is calling the shots. Now the Government is implementing its agenda on social programs and cut-backs for ordinary people. It is collecting the money from the ordinary citizens of the country and not the corporations. That is the real truth about the Party across the way.

I do not expect millionaire's row out here to understand. I do not expect these wealthy Conservatives who make these policies to understand. The Minister of Finance, the Minister for International Trade and the Prime Minister do not understand the ordinary folks. I am sure that the Minister of Finance would not know a poor family if he ran into one.

I am very proud of the history of the CCF and the NDP when it comes to social programs. It was Tommy Douglas back in the 1940s who brought in a hospitalization plan. It was Tommy Douglas who brought in medicare in Canada. It was Stanley Knowles who sits at the Table and J. S. Woodsworth who are responsible for bringing in unemployment insurance and family allowances into Canada. It was our Party with David Lewis in 1972-74 that assisted on the indexation of social programs. The guiding principle for the social programs throughout history is universality. We now have a Conservative Party which is trying to end universality and destroy the social programs. I say that enough is enough.

The only time you will notice, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberals are progressive is when they are in a minority situation controlled by the CCF or controlled by the NDP. I was told this by an old friend of mine, the Hon. Member from Assiniboia.

What is the Conservative Party doing with unemployment insurance? It wants to privatize it. It wants to give the public a chance. In Saskatchewan it is called public participation. It wants the employees to pay. It wants the employers to pay. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, the Unemployment Insurance Commission being run by the corporations of the country? Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, Thomas d'Aquino running the Unemployment Insurance Commission?

An Hon. Member: Scary, very scary.

Mr. McDermid: No!

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member will see this happening. The real agenda is to harmonize our program with the United States. It is really the Free Trade Agreement that is calling the shots. It is really an attack on the underprivileged, the dispossessed, the unemployed and the poor. Their premiums will go up under the Conservative Party.

Mr. McDermid: What a crock!

Mr. Nystrom: It is also an attack on small business. It is also an attack on the poorer regions of the country such as Newfoundland where the people of Newfoundland and the small business of Newfoundland cannot afford to pay higher premiums under unemployment insurance. It is no wonder that a Newfoundland election was called before the Budget. If it was after the Budget there would not be a single Conservative elected in the Province of Newfoundland.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: There are some very excited and wealthy Torontonians across the way. They do not like to hear about ordinary people being taxed. They do not like to hear about the big tax attack of the Conservative Party. Members of the Conservative Party know that they will be socking it to ordinary Canadians, to the ordinary farmers, and to the small businesses of the country. They know that because of the reduction of transfer payments to the provinces there will be cut-backs in medical care for sick people.

Mr. McDermid: There is no reduction.

Mr. Nystrom: It is a reduction of 1 per cent.

Mr. McDermid: There is no reduction. They will be getting more money this year.

Mr. Nystrom: There is a reduction of 1 per cent in Established Programs Financing in this Budget. It is a reduction from the formula that was in place which will amount to close to $300 million this year. Next year there will be another cut in what should have been there.

I tell the Hon. Member to talk to the provinces. He should talk to his ideological soul mate, Bill Vander Zalm of British Columbia. He will tell him exactly the same thing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: I noticed on the news this morning that there is only one lonely Premier who is voicing any support whatsoever for this Budget. That is dear old Grant Devine in the Province of Saskatchewan. Even Grant Devine is suffering from a great deal of lack of enthusiasm. He has about a year and a half to go before he becomes leader of the Opposition in Saskatchewan.

The unemployment insurance program is an attack on the poor. It is a tax on the poor. It is a tax on the workers.

[Translation]

It is the same thing with the other social programs. Mr. Speaker, I am wondering why there was not enough money in Mr. Wilson's Budget to set up a child care system. It is not there. There is no increase in the number of spaces for Canadian children. That is a serious matter, Mr. Speaker, there is no increase in that sector. There is nothing at all in terms of employment equity for women, nothing for minorities, nothing for the handicapped, nothing for all those people in the Minister of Finance's Budget.

And there are other things, Mr. Speaker. Instead of higher taxes and budget cuts for social programs.

[English]

I think, for example, of important areas like VIA Rail. I come from the riding of Yorkton—Melville. The CNR mainline comes through the City of Melville, and I remember Jean-Luc Pépin, who was the Liberal Minister of Transport back in the early 1980s—

An Hon. Member: A great Minister.

Mr. Nystrom: A great Minister, the Liberals say.

Mr. Kaplan: You didn't know when you were lucky.

Mr. Nystrom: It is time for a history lesson. When the Liberals were elected in 1980, they appointed a great friend of mine, Jean-Luc Pépin, as Minister of Transport. He would have made a great Minister of State for Cultural Affairs, Minister of Communications, Minister of Trade and things of that sort, but he knew nothing about Transport. He would not know a boxcar from a barnyard most likely. He decided to disband the transcontinental train that runs across western Canada. There was a great campaign. There were people in the New Democratic Party and the Conservative Party who, unbelievably, united in the great fight against the Liberals and Mr. Pépin to bring back the trains and to bring back VIA. Finally, because of public pressure from people like the Mayor of the City of Melville and many other local people signing petitions, Pépin was replaced as Minister of Transport and the VIA service was brought back once again.

That was right before the election of 1984. At that time the current Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) said we will keep VIA Rail, we will expand VIA Rail. He said that people need the trains and will use those trains. The people believed him. The people elected him. They have re-elected him and now what do we get? In the Budget we get a cut-back of $100 million in fiscal 1989-90 for VIA Rail.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nystrom: We get another cut-back of $100 million next year in VIA Rail, and the third year in VIA Rail and the fourth year and the fifth year in VIA Rail, half a billion dollars.

I ask my wealthy friends in the front bench of the Conservative Party, millionaires' row, who is going to suffer? The poor people of Atlantic Canada? Will their passenger train service be saved? You tell me whether it will or not. Will the people of Melville keep the train service that goes through Melville and Watrous, Saskatoon and Biggar and on to Edmonton? Will they keep that train? Our wealthy Toronto Minister across the way, from Brampton I believe, says well, we subsidize those people out there. Mr. Speaker, his friends on Bay Street are the most subsidized Canadians that live here today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: The subsidies and handouts and welfare that go to big corporations in this country are a lot more than what goes to subsidize VIA Rail in a place like Melville or New Brunswick or Nova Scotia or British Columbia. The train is an important part of this country, in many ways the heart and soul of this country. Our Toronto Minister says it is nonsense. Well, I want to have that Toronto Minister come and talk to people on the Prairies and in Atlantic Canada. He will find that they want to keep their train and are going to fight to keep it. It is no wonder that the Conservative Party in the by-election in Alberta was rejected massively in March by the Reform Party because of insensitive policies of this sort. They do not understand western Canada.

[Translation]

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another attack in the Budget of the Minister of Finance, a budget reduction for Radio-Canada, the CBC.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nystrom: He says hear, hear.

Mr. Della Noce: Yes, hear, hear.

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) says hear, hear. He is against Radio-Canada, he is against the CBC. Mr. Speaker, Radio-Canada and the CBC are a great Canadian institution which was established by the Conservative Party—his Party—a long time ago.

Mr. Speaker, next year, the budget will be cut by some 20 million dollars. Another 10 million will be cut the following year and yet another 10 million the year after. And in four years, there will be budget cuts of some 50 million dollars.

Radio-Canada and CBC are of tremendous importance for our culture and identity and for our national unity, in spit of what the Hon. Member from Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) had to say . . .

Then, there is regional development. In Mr. Wilson's budget, regional development is cut by 400 million dollars. That is a 29 percent reduction, Mr. Speaker!

For Newfoundland, certainly not a rich province, for New-Brunswick . . .There used to be some rich people in New-Brunswick: Mr. McCain is rich. There were some, but not many, Mr. Speaker: for Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, regional development is of great importance to Québec. If you compare this year's budget to last year's, you will find that regional development is cut by 29 percent. That is a lot, Mr. Speaker, in a country where unemployment is too high. In Newfoundland, the unemployment rate is 15 or 16 percent, which is too right. In Saskatchewan, where I come from, it is too high, at 8 and 9 percent. It is also too high in northern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, what we have in fact is two Canadas: Metro Toronto where the unemployment rate is 3% and the rest of the country.

Despite all that, Mr. Speaker, regional development funding will be reduced. I know for a fact that the Liberal Members from Toronto agree that such a decision from the federal government is really not fair.

Mr. Speaker, we have to think about regional development. Can you find anything about research and development in this Budget, or in the Estimates tabled earlier today, can you find any additional estimates for regional development here, in Canada, can you? Research and development are very important for Canada, and for the future of our children. But our country spends less on this than most developed countries do.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat, it is not fair!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! The Hon. Member for Rosemont (M. B. Tremblay) on a point of order.

M. Tremblay (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, may I ask my honourable colleague to read the information about regional development in the Budget Papers, on page 71.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I don't think that is a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Riis: I have a point of order. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my hon. friend's interjection. However, he is not accurate. If he would turn to the page in front of that, he would find in fact that there is a significant decrease—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not a point of order for him. It is not a point of order there neither. The Member for Yorkton—Melville. I think the Member for Rosemont and the Member for Kamloops are having a debate which I am sure they will have the time to do next week. However, today the Member for Yorkton—Melville has the floor.

Mr. Nystrom: I will refer the Member across the way to the Budget papers. The Budget itself is just a summary of what happens. If he looks in the Budget papers, he will find that the rate of increase for regional development is this country is not going up. The rate of increase is going down. That was not denied today in Question Period when the question was put by the Member from Essex.

I turn now to agriculture where there are cut-backs for Canadian farmers. There are cut-backs in the dairy sector as well as in the crop insurance area. There are cut-backs in rail line rehabilitation.

When we look at the Estimates that were tabled today, we see that there is a mystery in terms of the Drought Assistance Program. I know the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board is here. Perhaps he can explain to us why in today's Estimates we find an estimate for $375 million for drought assistance.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member asks me if I would be prepared to explain. If the House would like, I would be more than happy to explain why that number is in the Estimates.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Minister a short explanation?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member asked.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to misrepresent what was just done. The Minister asked for an opportunity to explain some program. He knows that each day there is an appropriate—

Mr. Mayer: He just asked.

Mr. Riis: —time to make a speech. Right now we are listening to the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, in all sincerity, all I need is about a minute or a minute and a half to explain why. It is in response to the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville that as Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board I would be prepared to explain. I would be more than happy to do that if the Hon. Member would let me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no unanimous consent. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville has the floor.

Mr. Nystrom: Let us deal with privatization. The Government is privatizing more Crown corporations—

Mr. Gustafson: Public participation is the word.

Mr. Nystrom: Not public participation, privatization. Again, it is part of the Conservative ideological crusade to turn more over to the private sector. This time, the major company involved will be Air Canada. It wants to privatize all the shares of this great Canadian institution so that the wealthier people in this country will buy a majority of the shares and make the money.

This is our national airline. It should remain publicly owned by all the people of Canada. That used to be the policy of the Conservative Party when John Diefenbaker and Robert Stanfield were its leaders, but with this new Republican-style Conservative Party, there has been a sharp change in its ideological direction.

The Government's action with respect to the environment includes cut-backs in terms of renewable energy. Why is there not more money being spent in the environmental area? I suggest the Government should spend 1 per cent of its budget in fighting for a cleaner environment by attacking air pollution and water and soil pollution. The Budget should provide more in terms of sustainable development, along the lines of the Brundtland Commission. These are important issues but the Government is taking very little action.

If the Conservatives want a compliment, I will compliment them on their decision to cancel nuclear-powered submarines. All Canadians would applaud that decision. I know there are some Conservatives who do not like that. The Minister of National Health and Welfare left that portfolio because he lost his battle to have the Government proceed with nuclear-powered submarines. My hon. friend from Saskatchewan is now the Minister of National Defence. He went to that portfolio because of a new policy. The Conservatives did the right thing by cancelling nuclear-powered submarines.

I wish it had done the right thing with respect to foreign aid. Why has the Government cut back funding for foreign aid? Perhaps that back-bencher can explain in the budget books why there has been a cut in foreign aid in fiscal year 1988-89 from $2.8 billion to $2.4 billion? Over five years there will be a cut-back in foreign aid of $1.8 billion.

It is wrong for a wealthy country like Canada to cut back in foreign aid, at a time when this is becoming more of a world community. If we are our brother's keeper, we should be doing what we can to help people in the poor parts of the world. With our technology and finances we should be doing what we can to make sure they do not go to bed hungry. We should be doing what we can to develop their economies and make sure they know how to produce food for their people and be able to live in peace.

It is very regrettable that the Conservative Party would pick on foreign aid as an area to cut back in order to save a few dollars when it could have obtained the money from its millionaire friends and big companies who it governs for in this country.

Let me deal with the deficit. Much of what is happening today is a result of the deficit. Of course, the deficit is a concern, but only one of many concerns. However, after the election the deficit became the number one priority for the Party opposite. Consequently we see a cut back in services and an increase in taxes. Because of the way the deficit is attacked we will probably see a recession in Canada.

In fact, the Government itself is predicting an unemployment rate of 8.5 per cent in 1990. No one wants a deficit of $40 billion to $60 billion, but the Conservative Government is the one that has accumulated more debt in four and a half years than any Government before it in the history of this country. It is the expert at accumulating debt.

If the Government wants to bring down the deficit and create a strong economy to support day care centres, small business, farmers and poor people, it could take a number of steps.

First, let us bring down interest rates. A drop of 1 per cent in interest rates will save $1.5 billion over a year on the interest payment on the national debt. A drop of 2 per cent in the bank rate will save $3 billion in the course of a year. Our bank rate is about 3.5 per cent higher than that in the United States. There is no reason why we cannot have a bank rate that is at least 2 per cent lower than it is today.

There is also no reason Canada cannot show some leadership at the G-7 in terms of encouraging lower interest rates around the world.

I do not know how many Canadians are aware that the real interest rate in Canada now is higher than it has been at any time. In August 1981, the year of the high interest rate policy of the MacEachen-Trudeau Government, the real interest rate was 8.33 per cent. The real interest rate now is 8 per cent. The high interest policy is making small business poor and making farmers poor. It is making it more difficult to buy homes, and it is making ordinary working people in this country a lot poorer.

The bank rate today is 12.6 per cent. The inflation rate is 4.6 per cent and the real interest rate is 8 per cent. In 1981 the bank rate was 21 per cent and inflation was 12.7 per cent. The real interest rate was only 8.3 per cent.

As a result of the high interest rate policy in 1981 there was a recession in 1982. I believe we will see a repetition of history. The same thing is likely to happen next year as happened to Mr. MacEachen in 1982.

Second, if we want to bring down the deficit and create more money for day care and other social programs, the Government should be spending money on the creation of jobs rather than cutting back regional development programs. It should be investing in agriculture, in small business, investing in the regions and in local development. There should be a more decentralized vision of economic development in Canada.

The Government should be investing in the co-operative movement and in research and development. It should be investing in those things that will pay great dividends for Canadians in the years ahead.

According to Judith Maxwell of the Economic Council of Canada, for every point that the unemployment rate drops in Canada, the federal Government will get an extra $2 billion of revenue. It is extra revenue because there is a cut-back in unemployment insurance pay-outs. Of course, that will be gone because the Government is privatizing it. There is a reduction in welfare pay-outs under the Canada Assistance Plan and there are extra taxes paid by people who obtain the jobs. Let us lower the interest rates. Let us create jobs in this country. Then let us have serious tax reform so that the rich will pay their fair share, loopholes are closed, the over 6,000 people who pay no taxes but have incomes of over $50,000 per year will pay taxes and the over 80,000 corporations that pay no taxes while making profits will pay taxes. Let us have a serious minimum corporate tax. If we would do those things, we would have extra money to bring down the deficit and we would have money left over for social programs.

• (1450)

Finally, let us have a special parliamentary inquiry to inquire into all the tax expenditures that are made to big corporations. The amount of money that has gone to the big business sector has increased in the last five or six years. We could save money through cut-backs in subsidies and tax write-offs to big business.

In conclusion, this Conservative Budget does two things. For ordinary Canadians, it brings on the big Tory tax attack. Those ordinary Canadians, when the national sales tax comes into effect next year, will pay an extra $1,700 per year in taxes.

The second thing the Budget does is implement a big business Conservative agenda that will scale down social programs, cut back expenditures on equalization and transfers to the provinces and regional development and cut back on money for farmers, small businesses, workers and the unemployed. In the end it will make Canada more like the United States and more like Margaret Thatcher's Britain.

We have a choice. There are two competing visions. We have our traditional Canadian vision. The country was built by pioneers who came from all parts of the world. They had a vision of working together, co-operating and sharing the great wealth of Canada. We built a unique system here in North America with our medical care, the CBC, the Canadian Wheat Board and equalization payments that helped the poor provinces while the richer provinces paid their fair share. We built a unique country, a Canadian way of many cultures and two great languages. It was built not just by CCF pioneers, but by Liberals, by red Tories and by progressive Tories. Many national institutions, including the CBC, the Canadian Wheat Board and the CNR were brought in by the Conservative Party. That is the Canadian way. That is what our Party wants to see continue.

Our Party sees a country in which we share, co-operate and build on our resources. We want to create more wealth and distribute it more equally among everyone, regardless of where one lives or where one comes from, ensuring that there is equality of condition for each and every Canadian, regardless of sex, religion, race or colour. That is our vision, but the Conservative Party across the way has another vision. Conservative Members want to privatize and deregulate and have free trade with the United States so that we can become more and more like the Americans. Their vision is an old vision. Their vision is a throw-back to the past. In that vision, the rich get richer and the poor get poorer. We follow the law of the jungle.

The time has now come for Canadians who believe in Canada to mobilize and to fight this Budget like we have never fought a Budget before. The next three or four years between now and the next election campaign will decide what direction Canada will go in. We are at a crossroads. We can go the Conservative way, the way of the past, with the almighty dollar calling the shots, or we can decide to continue to expand our social programs and help ordinary people build the great country of Canada. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis):

> That the amendment be amended by adding the following words:
> and this House further condemns the Government
> (1) for imposing the greatest new tax burden on Canadian families in recent times;
> (2) for reneging on its commitment to develop regional equality;
> (3) for continuing and increasing the unfairness of the tax system;
> (4) for eroding the universality of vital social programs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair finds the subamendment to be in order.

It being three minutes to three o'clock, pursuant to order made Wednesday, April 19, 1989, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at eleven o'clock pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 2.57 p.m.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table in both official languages the Government's response to four petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

REGULATORY CONTROLS FOR OIL TANKERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition on behalf of a number of British Columbians who draw to the attention of Parliament the unavoidable risks associated with offshore oil drilling, as well as tanker traffic up and down the West Coast.

It is a long petition, but the petitioners are fundamentally concerned that since oil spills are inevitable and the outcome of oil spills is recognized, they call upon Parliament to reconsider the position to allow tanker traffic along our West Coast.

OPPOSITION TO SUPERMAILBOXES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have here a petition signed by several residents of a new residential area in my riding. It is stated by the undersigned that the policy of the Canada Post Corporation with respect to "super boxes" discriminates against thousands of Canadian men and women; that super boxes are very inconvenient for the disabled, the elderly and the sick; and that homeowners in new housing projects are subject to the same tax rates as their neighbours who have home delivery.

Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to urge the Conservative Government to provide residents in the new residential area located at Paul, Place Ida-Rocheleau and Place Pauline-Charron, with the same type and quality of service as that received by their neighbours.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) has a point of order before Government Orders are called.

POINT OF ORDER

THE BUDGET—PROCEDURE RESPECTING QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, considering the discussions we had last Thursday, I wish to make a few short remarks and perhaps suggest a way to deal with the issue of privilege that all three Parties have raised in one form or another.

I do not know if this is the time to make those comments. I will seek some guidance from the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: I think I should make it clear to the House again. I will call Government Orders, but before proceeding with whatever is the Government Order, I have been anticipating that we will proceed today toward the completion of the arguments on the privilege issue. That is a commitment to the House, so that is what we will be doing, unless the Hon. Member for Kamloops has something to suggest which may change that.

In any event, the Hon. Member for Kamloops has something to suggest with respect to this debate. It might be of assistance to the Speaker if the Hon. Member did proceed with his suggestion at this time. There may be a response from others.

Point of Order--Mr. Riis

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to mention this to the House Leader of the Government nor the Official Opposition. I would like to have had more time, but basically the point I wish to make is that on Thursday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) rose in his place on a question of privilege. Presumably, if you were to find a prima facie case of privilege, it would be referred to the appropriate committee.

He made his comments in a very thorough and articulate way. While some of us do not necessarily support them, he had the right to make those comments and in many respects he could argue that his privileges had been breached as a Minister.

The representatives from the Official Opposition made their points and suggested that if a case was in fact identified by you, Mr. Speaker, it would be referred to the appropriate committee. We in the New Democratic Party made similar arguments. There were a number of points of privilege, depending on one's perception of the events of last week. We were arguing for some aspect of points of privilege relating to the leaking of information from the Budget. The Minister was concerned We were concerned. We suggested there was a list of items to consider. I have a list of items that I identified over the weekend which should be raised at the committee if you find a prima facie case of privilege.

We have been arguing that a point of privilege occurred for individual Members and have asked that it be referred to an appropriate standing committee. Perhaps, since we unanimously agree, that is what should take place. That would enable us to continue with the business of the House, knowing full well that all aspects of the points of privilege raised would be done in the appropriate standing committee.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, when it comes to matters of privilege, there is technically no such thing as a point of personal privilege. When a Member raises something that pertains to himself or herself, he or she is actually dealing with the privileges of the House. Therefore, even though there are a number of notices with respect to points of privilege before you, and technically you may have only called one for discussion to enable you to make the ruling on it, there has been put before you already a wide range of arguments as to why there has been a prima facie case of breach of privilege.

Certainly the speech given by the Leader of the Liberal Party is one he would have given if his notice had been recognized first. I do not want to hold anybody back from making arguments they want to make before you, but as far as the Liberals are concerned, we would like you to take into account the arguments that have been made irrespective as to which point of privilege has been raised first or is technically before you. We ask you to consider whether there has been a prima facie case of breach of privilege, whether we are looking at the point of privilege raised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the one that would have been raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) or by other Members. Should you find a prime facie case of breach of privilege, the Liberals are prepared to move an appropriate motion.

However, one should not assume that our motion would simply be to send the matter to a parliamentary committee. It is open for a motion based on a prima facie case of breach of privilege to ask the House to take certain action. We reserve the right to move such a motion in addition to or as an alternative to having this matter looked at by a committee.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion of the House Leader of the New Democratic Party is a helpful one. I also hear the comments of the House Leader for the Official Opposition. Let me make a couple of points if I may.

The Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) rose at the first opportunity and indicated to the House that his privileges had been breached. He made a point of privilege. While I have been a Member of this House, there have been instances where a Member came to the House on a point of privilege rather than a question of privilege. We should preserve that ability for Members to stand in their place and make comment. I had to do it on one occasion. We should keep that option open. The Finance Minister did not at the time suggest a motion. It would be helpful to have this matter studied properly by a committee, one might very well suggest that the appropriate committee would be the Elections and Procedures Committee. We may find that a more appropriate committee would be the Finance Committee. I raise that as a possibility.

I suggest if you were to stand the matter down to give me an opportunity to discuss this matter with the House Leaders of the two opposition Parties, we may come to a motion or an agreement which suits the purposes of the House and enables this matter to be dealt with properly.

Mr. Riis: The suggestion the House Leader for the Government has made is a good one. The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader for the New Democratic Party suggested we follow the same course that was proposed when there was a leak by the previous Minister of Finance, the Hon. Marc Lalonde. At that time there was a suggestion by the Official Opposition that a special committee be struck of 11 Members to examine all aspects of Budget security and secrecy. I suggest that be one of the alternatives we consider.

Mr. Speaker: Just so that everyone understands what is happening, the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) filed with me on Wednesday night the first of a series of applications on privilege. The Hon. Minister of Finance, because his privilege was first in point of time, was the first heard. The Hon. Minister of Finance did not move the usual motion. Comment was made about that, but that is completely the Minister's prerogative.

The second question of privilege filed in point of time was that of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). I want to make it clear that that motion is very much before me. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition did make the proper submission that, if I found there was a prima facie case of privilege, he would move the motion. Therefore, that is very much in front of us.

I indicated that there were other applications on privilege. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) is quite right and has helpfully remarked that privilege is a matter for the entire House. I have taken in all those applications collectively in the debate that proceeded for many hours. As I said, that debate will continue now, because privilege does take precedence over Government Orders.

We have a suggestion that this matter be referred to the appropriate committee. If, after examining carefully all of the argument, the Chair decides that there has been a prima facie breach of privilege with respect to one or more applications in front of the Chair, then, and under those circumstances, the matter is moved to the entire House. At that time, if the House wishes, the whole matter can be debated by all of the Members in the House. They can decide, if they wish, to then send the matter to the committee. The Chair rules only on whether or not there has been a prima facie breach of privilege. The ultimate decision as to whether it goes to committee lies with the House. If it goes to the committee, the committee deals with the substantive issue of whether there was a breach of privilege. I want Members and the public to understand I am only dealing with privilege at the prima facie level.

It has been suggested that the House Leaders consider the matter, that we stand down debate on the question of privilege at least for a while, and we will see what flows from that discussion. If that discussion decides to move the matter directly to a committee, that will be the course of events provided that all Hon. Members are prepared to accept that procedure.

I take it that it is the wish of the House to stand down the debate on privilege for the moment. If I do that, we will proceed with the Government Order. I am under the impression that at some time later today the House Leaders will come to the Chair and give me some indication of where we are as a consequence of their discussions. I gather that is the understanding.

• (1120)

Mr. Riis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is the understanding. I would like to submit that there is an alternative. After you consider all the evidence presented to date, there might not be a prima facie case of breach of privilege. Since Members of the House from both sides are arguing concerns about the process, the other alternative would be to seek unanimous consent to have the matter referred to the appropriate committee. Most Members would wish to have this process examined, not explicitly for this case, but to include the whole process of how Budgets are handled in the future.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I did not make myself clear. From what the Hon. Member has stated, and especially with respect to the reply of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis), I was under the impression that it may well be that the House Leaders today will make some arrangement which will make it completely unnecessary for me to decide whether or not there is a prima facie case of privilege, or more than one prima facie case of privilege.

I am taking it that the House Leaders will have a discussion as to how they wish to proceed. In the meantime, the questions of privilege are before the House. Debate will continue at some future point if some arrangement is not worked out by the House Leaders.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. GAUTHIER—S. O. 62—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I would like to speak to another point of order but on a different matter, if you are finished, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, in the heat of the debate, some comments were made about parliamentary procedure. At one point I even proposed using Standing Order 62, and I will read it so that Hon. Members will understand what I was doing at the time.

[English]

Section 62 of the Standing Orders states:

> When two or more Members rise to speak, the Speaker calls upon the Member who first rose in his or her place; but a motion may be made that any Member who has risen "be now heard", or "do now speak", which motion shall be forthwith put without debate.

I understand the situation on Thursday. When I rose you ruled at that time that the question of privilege superseded—

Perhaps I may refer to Hansard of April 27, at page 1003, immediately after the motion that was moved by me, and I quote:

> The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has moved a traditional motion that another Hon. Member be now heard. That is properly a matter for a debate. In my view having set out the fact that we have questions of privilege here—

And you continued your comments, Mr. Speaker. Subsequently, as we shall see a little further in Hansard, the Minister of External Affairs accused me of challenging the Speaker's decision. He said, at page 1004, and I quote:

> Challenging the Speaker. Shame.

Following that decision, there was a certain amount of disorder.

I simply wanted to remind Hon. Members and this House that when I said that we were rewriting the rules, what I meant was that to me, this kind of motion was always in order, not debatable, and should be put to a vote immediately. I was not challenging the Speaker's decision at that point, which was that the main question was the question of privilege, but I would like to make it clear that no precedent has been established here, that the Chair did not decide that in future, a motion that another Member be now heard would be debatable or could, for instance, be rejected by the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Member for his comments. I understand his position very well. I think this may be the result of conversations between the Hon. Member and the Chair, and that the Chair's decision is clear, at least with respect to what happened on April 27. I can assure the Hon. Member that I understand his position and that in the circumstances, it might be useful for the Chair and the Hon. Member to have a private discussion about the procedures.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1989-90

Hon. John McDermid (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members are aware, the Financial Administration Act requires that statutory borrowing authority be obtained from Parliament in order for the Government to increase its outstanding debt.

Specifically, Part IV, Section 43 of that Act requires that "no money shall be borrowed or security issued by or on behalf of Her Majesty without the authority of Parliament". This refers to new money only rather than the refinancing of existing debt since Section 46 of the Act provides continuing authority to borrow funds to repay maturing debt.

While Section 47 provides for temporary short-term borrowings, statutory borrowing authority must be obtained from Parliament to permit the Government to implement a regular debt program to meet its financial requirements.

This Bill should be viewed in the context of the Government's continuing efforts to deal with the problem of Canada's huge public debt. First, let us look at the problem.

The grim truth is that the interest on the public debt is far greater than the entire projected annual deficit this year. The interest on the debt is estimated at more than $39 billion. The deficit will be $30.5 billion.

Except for the interest that we pay each year on the public debt, Canada would have a substantial surplus this year instead of a deficit. We have a serious problem because year after year, Government after Government, annual deficits have been piled on top of each other to create this mountain of debt.

Four years ago when the Government first took office, the debt had already reached $200 billion and was rising at an alarming rate of almost 24 per cent a year.

During the past four years, under the guidance of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Government faced up to the debt challenge. We took action to cut the growth in program expenditures and also introduced measures to raise the revenue yield. We put forward economic policies to revitalize the private sector and encourage economic growth.

As a result of these actions, the annual deficit was reduced from more than $38 billion in 1984–85 to less than $29 billion in 1988–89. Our financial requirements were down from $30 billion to $22 billion in the same period. We reduced the growth of the debt to 9.9 per cent. That was the first time in 15 years that the debt growth was less than 10 per cent.

Mr. Milliken: That's ridiculous, and you know it.

Mr. McDermid: That is not ridiculous at all. The Hon. Member is a little testy for a Monday morning. The Hon. Member from Kingston must still be feeling the effects of the press gallery dinner from Friday night.

• (1130)

An Hon. Member: Saturday.

Mr. McDermid: Or Saturday night. You can see I am really feeling the effects.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Have you got a sunburn?

Mr. McDermid: Yes, sunburn and it is hurting like the dickens if you want to know the truth.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Despite our progress, Madam Speaker, the sheer momentum of the debt means that it continues to grow. The debt is now more than $320 billion. That is more than 20 times greater than it was in the mid–70s when it began to grow faster than our national income.

Interest payments increased by almost 50 per cent from $22 billion in 1984–85 to $39 billion this year. We have a chicken and egg challenge here. On the one hand, the only way to control the debt is to reduce deficits, but the continuous increase in the stock of debt and higher public debt charges limit the amount of deficit reduction that can be achieved. High and rising levels of debt make the Government's financial situation vulnerable to interest rates which have been driven up in the past year as a result of inflationary pressures. The rise in interest rates has substantially increased interest payments on the public debt, this year by an expected $6.4 billion above the estimate made in February, 1988.

The Budget faces this challenge firmly with actions to reduce program expenditures further and to strengthen revenues. Through the Budget the Government is building for the future instead of borrowing from it.

Debt control reduces the burden of debt imposed on future generations. It provides Government with increased fiscal flexibility to respond to priority needs. It enables a better balance of fiscal and monetary policy, setting the stage for sustained economic growth, reduced inflationary pressures, lower interest rates, lower debt servicing costs and even lower deficits. It helps ensure a better future and higher living standards for all Canadians.

As a result of the measures of this Budget, the public debt as a percentage of our national income will stabilize next year and decline over the immediate term, the first such decline since 1974–75. By 1993–94, our financial requirements are projected to be only $3 billion.

The Government has demonstrated its commitment, Madam Speaker, to bringing the debt under control. It is a major long–term challenge that will require the efforts of all Canadians for many years to come.

After talking about the debt, I have to turn now to outline for the House the terms of the Borrowing Authority Bill for 1988–89. In looking at the Bill, subclause 2(1) requests borrowing authority in the amount of $24.8 billion for fiscal 1989–90. This amount is equal to $21.8 billion of borrowing requirements, $20.5 billion of which are the Government's estimated net financial requirements from the Budget and $1.3 billion of which relate to the forecast exchange fund account earnings. The exchange fund earnings have grown very rapidly in recent years as a result in the increase in Canada's official reserves reflecting the strength of the Canadian dollar. Even though the exchange fund earnings are reported in the public accounts as budgetary revenues, they give rise to additional Canadian dollar borrowing requirements because they are retained in the exchange fund account and are not available for general expenditures.

As in recent years, the borrowing authority requested in the Bill includes a $3 billion reserve to cover contingencies such as a further build-up in official international reserves in 1989–90.

In previous years, exchange fund earnings were not large enough to warrant being explicitly included in requests for borrowing authority. For example, five years ago these earnings amounted to about $300 million. By contrast, in 1988–89 exchange fund account earnings grew to $1.7 billion. At this level of earnings, it becomes necessary to explicitly recognize these additional borrowing requirements in its request for borrowing authority.

The $3 billion reserve requested in the borrowing Bill is the same as was granted in the previous two years. However, this reserve was not large enough in 1988–89, forcing the Government to use Section 47 of the Financial Administration Act in late March when statutory borrowing authority ran out.

The reason the Government ran out of borrowing authority in 1988–89 was because of the strengthening of the Canadian dollar and the consequent build-up in Canada's international reserve assets. This amounted to the Canadian dollar equivalent of about $4.8 billion, adding substantially to the Government's Canadian dollar financial requirements. Canadian dollars used in purchasing these assets were borrowed in the domestic market. Thus, while we are seeking only $3 billion as a reserve, we hope this amount will be sufficient in 1989–90.

In subclause 2(2), the Government is asking for $750 million of statutory borrowing authority in order to refinance borrowings pursuant to Section 47 of the Financial Administration Act undertaken in fiscal 1988–89, actually on March 31, the last day of the fiscal year. Funds borrowed under this section cannot be rolled over in the regular way under authority provided by Section 46 but require new statutory authority. In effect, this request for $750 million of statutory borrowing authority covers the short-fall in statutory borrowing authority in the last fiscal year.

Clause 3 of the Bill states that all unused borrowing authority granted by the Borrowing Authority Act, 1989–90 to the extent that the unused authority exceeds $3 billion will be cancelled on March 31, 1990. Thus, this clause preserves the Government's non-lapsing reserve into the next year to accommodate the possibility that new statutory borrowing authority is not provided before the 1990–91 fiscal year begins.

For the information of Hon. Members, I would like to briefly review for you the Government's debt operations in 1988–89. The domestic debt program increased the unmatured domestic debt outstanding by approximately $27.7 billion to $264.7 billion. The domestic debt program financed approximately $23.7 billion of borrowing requirements, including the exchange fund profits referred to earlier, other foreign exchange transactions, and a small build-up in cash balances.

I should point out that the domestic financial requirements for 1988–89, excluding Exchange Fund profits, are now estimated in the fiscal plan at $22 billion, about $300 million lower than forecast in the February, 1988 Budget.

Of the total net new debt issued in 1988–89, $11.8 billion was in the form of marketable bonds. As well, the Government increased the emphasis on selling bonds by auction, which was found to be a cost effective form of issuing debt. Auctions now account for 60 per cent of all marketable bonds issued, up from about 50 per cent in the previous fiscal year.

Treasury Bills were used to raise $21.6 billion of new funds in 1988–89, up sharply from the amount issued in the previous fiscal year. However, approximately $5.7 billion of the amount issued was to replace the decline in the stock of Canada Savings Bonds.

The fall 1988 Canada Savings Bonds campaign, with a coupon of 9.5 per cent, generated total sales of $15 billion. The net amount raised in the campaign, after taking account of Canada Savings Bonds which matured in 1988, and other maturities which were redeemed during the campaign, was $6.5 billion. However, rising interest rates in late 1988 and early 1989 led some investors to redeem their Canada Savings Bonds. As a consequence, the Canada Savings Bond rate was increased to 10.5 per cent for four months effective March 1, 1989. Nevertheless, with the redemptions, the stock of Canada Savings Bonds outstanding is estimated to have declined by $5.7 billion to under $47 billion.

In closing, I would like to remind Hon. Members that they have all the necessary information before them to deal with this Bill expeditiously. The Bill is related to the borrowing requirements set out in the Budget and the estimates have been tabled.

The fiscal plan and other documents provide background information on the fiscal stance of the Government. Also, Annex 7 of the fiscal plan provides background information on the debt operations of the Government.

Finally, Part III of the estimates which deals with debt charges has been amplified this year to provide additional information on the debt program. With all this information readily available to Hon. Members, I trust that the second reading of Bill C-11 will proceed most expeditiously, and I look forward to discussing the borrowing Bill in more detail at the appropriate committee.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew): Madam Speaker, when we had the Throne Speech in the first week of April, the Government ended its Throne Speech by saying, "May divine providence guide your deliberations." I think as we hear the financial statements of the Government today we will indeed be using that divine guidance for our deliberations.

The Government is today taking yet another step to officially borrow more money. We had a Throne Speech in April, as I mentioned, and we have had a Budget in April. Now on May 1, after all the talk we have heard about deficits and the national debt, we are starting off the month with a borrowing Bill.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) with the approval of the Government is allowed to raise money under the Financial Administration Act. Under this Act the Minister of Finance has the right to raise money either by way of a loan or by sale of securities in Canada, and we have just heard the Minister go into that.

The reason for this Bill this morning was that in March, 1989, the Government borrowed $750 million pursuant to Section 47 of the Financial Administration Act, and these borrowings must be refinanced in 1989-90. Thus, additional statutory borrowing authority to refinance these borrowings must be included, bringing the total authority requested from Parliament to $25.6 billion.

When talking about borrowing $750 million in Bill C-11 and also talking about the billions of dollars of our national debt and the fact that the Government is borrowing $25.6 billion in total, one is reminded that just 32 short years ago the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker fought and won an election campaign on the Right Hon. C.D. Howe's question in this House of Commons: "What's a million?" I am sure that Mr. Howe must be looking down on this Government today and shaking his head.

We also know that at the time the Government used that $1 million slogan to dupe the people of Canada once again, $1 million in those days did not go very far either, it worked for tactical purposes in the election campaign. We saw the money campaign, too, in the last election as well.

We know that the Government of Canada has a deficit this year of $30.5 billion. We know that when this Conservative Government took office in 1984 the national debt of Canada—and this is important because the message must be made very clear as to where all this debt came from—was $170 billion when this Government took over. Today, just four and one-half years later, the national debt has skyrocketed to $320 billion, an increase of almost 90 per cent. That is what the Government calls great and wondrous financial management.

Before this year is over, the national debt will have more than doubled in five years. This is the financial management of a government that travels around this country, stands up in the House of Commons and says, "What a great job we are doing in the financial administration of this country" while they have succeeded in doubling the debt in five years. This is what the Government calls sound fiscal planning.

The Government's objectives, "to make expenditure control and good management the primary focus of fiscal restraint" has failed dismally to materialize, let us face it. That is why they are so desperate today to get down and do something about it and hit everyone with a sledge hammer. There is, therefore, great reason on the part of all Canadians to be concerned about the financial management of our country. The situation does not seem to be improving even though the Conservative Government has imposed on Canadians the highest tax increases we have seen in Canadian history.

Let me lay this out before the House and the people of Canada in simple but accurate terms. It took Canadian governments from Confederation, from 1867 to 1984, 117 years, to build the national debt up to $170 billion. But it will take this Government only five years to add another $170 billion from 1984 to 1989.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: That is the message that we want to get out to Canadians, because this Government is still dumping on the previous government, still blaming the previous government for this, but it is their administration that at some point in 1989 will have succeeded in doubling the national debt of this country in five years or less. It is clear that the high interest rate policy of this Government is one of the problems. Indeed, the Minister mentioned it this morning. He listed it as the problem the Government has.

The deficit does not increase drastically because the Government has spent too much on post-secondary education. That is not the cause. The cause is not retraining. The cause is not social programs and the cause is not regional development. But these are the items that paid the price because the Government wants high interest rates.

It is clear from the Government's own estimates that were tabled in this House last Friday that one of the major causes of the deficit has been the excessively high interest rates, to the extent of $6.4 billion. Imagine, $6.4 billion in interest rates because of the high interest rate policy of this Government, and then it is blaming everyone else for its problems. Imagine, because of the Government's high interest rate policy it is costing $6.4 billion more to service the national debt.

The Government seems to be fuelling its own inflation but it is blaming post-secondary education, Medicare, unemployment insurance and other social programs. It is also blaming regional development—

An Hon. Member: International money markets.

Mr. Hopkins: An Hon. Member mentions the international money markets. Certainly, the International Monetary Fund which is located with its headquarters in Washington, did send a message to the Government during the winter and told it that it was time it got the financial management of the Government of Canada in place because they were getting concerned about the Canadian debt. That came from the IMF, the International Monetary Fund. It gets pretty serious when the IMF must send a message to a national government. It sent the message to the Government because it realized it would be doubling the national debt in less than five years.

• (1150)

Higher taxes on the people of Canada is also a form of inflation. This type of inflation can be had even when the economy is weak. Higher taxes can still be imposed. Therefore if there is a downturn in the economy down the road, people will still be saddled with high taxation.

As a result of the Budget an average income family will pay $700 more in taxes annually. The over-all truth of the matter is that the same family is now paying $2,000 more in taxes than when the Conservative Government was elected.

This morning we are talking about a borrowing Bill and the financial management of the Government. The real financial managers will have to be the people of Canada, those who are being taxed. After the Government is through with them they will have to manage their affairs very carefully. They will have to manage their incomes in such a way as to keep their heads above water. They will have to manage their affairs carefully in order to stay above the outgoing financial tide that is flowing into the Government of Canada as a result of high taxes.

In order to even touch the surface of the financial management of the Government there are many other items about which we must talk. Let us take a look at the agricultural industry which has been having a very tough time for some time now. The Government has cut $399 million out of agricultural services and subsidies. One of these is crop insurance. The federal Government is trying to change the sharing of the cost of crop insurance between the federal and provincial Governments. In Quebec and Newfoundland the fund is split 25 per cent federal, 25 per cent provincial and 50 per cent producer. In other provinces the split is 50 per cent federal, zero per cent provincial and 50 per cent producer with the provinces paying the administrative costs. The federal Government expects to shift $90 million this year and $110 million in 1990–91 on to the provinces. What is new? Nothing is new. The Government is trying to cut down its deficit by passing the expenditures on to the provincial Governments in a whole range of areas. I mentioned in this regard post-secondary education and the transfer payments, including Medicare transfer payments.

Where does this place the provinces? They have to go to the municipalities and cut funds from them. The municipalities will then have to decide what they will do to cut back on their people. They will have to do the dirty work right on their own doorsteps.

The dairy export subsidy program was created in 1979. It provided a direct subsidy for milk exports. The federal Government reduced the amount of milk eligible for this subsidy by one-half in 1984. The elimination of the other one-half of the subsidy is proposed in the Budget. The savings are expected to be $7 million annually. That is another $7 million taken from the farmers of Canada. There will also be changes to the Canadian Dairy Commission, as well as to other organizations.

I would now like to move on to the long-time tradition of rural Canada. I like raising rural issues in the House because everyone is used to looking at the bottom line today and talking about big things. They often forget that there is another world out there. The Budget states that Canada Post will be required to pay some $300 million in dividends to the Government of Canada over the next five years. To allow the payment of dividends the Government is transferring the Canada Post Corporation from one schedule to another schedule in the Financial Administration Act. It is doing this to make everything nice and legal.

As a result of Canada Post recording a profit in 1988–89 for the first time in 30 years, and anticipates further profit years, the Government has decided that some of these profits will be paid to the Treasury in the form of dividends, a kind of reverse subsidy. Where is the incentive for any organization, such as Canada Post, to produce a profit? Every Government wants to see its agencies producing a profit and doing good work. However, as soon as they do make a profit the Government takes it away. At the same time, the Government may be attempting to improve the financial image of Canada Post Corporation to render it more attractive for privatization. In addition, the $300 million being paid back to the Government in the form of dividends will not be used to improve the service of Canada Post, equipment and machinery. Nor will the money go toward speeding up the mails or restoring rural post offices. The Government will use the money wherever it sees fit to the best political advantage.

This will be done at what price to rural Canada? We would like to see those profits remain with Canada Post in order to improve and speed up its service. We do not think it should be done so the Government can come along and say: "Now you guys are making the profit, we want the dough". That is wrong.

Other Crown corporations are being sliced and cut. VIA Rail is one. Even if it were making a profit, it would probably have to pay it back to the Government as well.

Unemployment insurance came into being in 1940 as a statute of Westminster, an amendment to the British North America Act. Because the provinces could not afford to pay UIC, the responsibility was transferred to the federal Government. It was felt that it was the one Government in Canada which could tax anything it wants to tax, something which this Government is doing. The provinces are limited in their areas of taxation. Thus it was agreed, as a result of the Rowell-Sirois Commission report that started off in 1937, that the unemployment insurance program should be passed on to the federal Government. The appropriate statute was passed at Westminster in 1940.

What is happening today in 1989? Some 49 years later the Government is getting out of the unemployment insurance business absolutely. It will not pay one cent toward it. That responsibility was imposed upon Governments of Canada by a statute of Westminster, an amendment to our very Constitution. By getting out of the unemployment insurance business, by making small businesses and employees make bigger contributions to it, the Government is reneging on the Constitution of Canada. Undoubtedly, we will see more of that.

Another area in which the Government is reneging is in terms of industry. I refer to a long-time traditional industry of Canada, the softwood lumber industry. We have been telling the Government for the last couple of years that this has to change. As a result of the Memorandum of Understanding that the now retired Minister for International Trade signed in great glee and glory just prior to signing the so-called free trade deal with the United States in late December, 1986, she agreed with the American producers who said that Canadians were being subsidized. The Minister did not even let the matter go to the courts for a decision but said: "Yes, we agree. We will sign. We want to get the Free Trade Agreement tonight. We don't mind making the softwood lumber people of Canada a sacrificial lamb in order to get this Free Trade Agreement".

As a result, on that dark night in late December of 1986 the Memorandum of Understanding was signed. It was decided the Canadian industry would be taxed 15 per cent, all because the Americans wanted that before they would sign another deal. However, the Minister for International Trade at that time said: "Don't worry, you guys will not have to collect it. We will penalize our own industry. We will put the 15 per cent export tax on ourselves. Don't worry about it, we will look after it". A number of members from northern Ontario and myself travelled this province throughout the east and the north having hearings on the softwood lumber issues with the people in the field. We went into the sawmills, into their offices and into their communities for discussions. We had discussions in municipalities where a sawmill is the only industry to support the whole village or town. Their message was the same no matter where we went: The Government has made us the sacrificial lamb in order to get a free trade agreement with the United States. That is a fact of life.

There are mills in Ontario that sold softwood lumber as far south as Tennessee, lots of it, and they could compete favourably. The construction industry in the United States likes our softwood lumber because it does not warp all out of style like some southern softwood lumber does. The construction industry in the United States would love to be getting our lumber again, but this Government has put the softwood lumber people of this country in a position where they cannot compete.

We all remember the Minister of State for Privatization (Mr. McDermid), who led off this debate this morning, standing up in this House time and time again on the free trade debate and saying: "Canada can compete. We are not worried about that. Canada can compete in any industry in the United States. We have faith in our Canadian people." Then the Government turned around and put a 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber. It brought in a policy of high interest rates which upped the costs still more for our producers. Then the exchange rate on the Canadian dollar improved and threw the whole thing out of whack.

Today the softwood lumber producers in this country cannot compete with those in the United States. When the United States saw this market going their way, they went out with glee and upgraded their mills, something they had not done for years. They improved their operations. As a result, today they are serving the eastern markets in the United States that our Canadian mills have served for many, many years, and made a good profit on them as well. That is a sad story coming out of the operations of this Government. If you want to talk about financial management, there certainly is not any financial management in that agreement. It is absolute mismanagement right through, as the Hon. Member says.

The softwood lumber producers are in a state where they cannot compete and are now laying off workers all over northern and eastern Ontario and in other areas of Canada. I want to say to the Minister for International Trade that when I spoke in the trade debate in this House in December, he told me that he was going to meet with the producers on the softwood lumber issue. I don't know whether he has met with the actual softwood lumber producers or not, but I know that the softwood lumber producers have been in to see the Minister of Forestry. The Minister State for Forestry (Mr. Oberle), as far as I am concerned, is simply a buffer zone between the softwood lumber industry and the Minister of Finance and the Minister for International Trade. When delegations come to Ottawa on this very touchy issue they are shifted off to the Minister of Forestry. They have met a Cabinet Minister, and are expected to go back home happy. But the Minister of Forestry is going to have a tough time persuading the Minister for International Trade and this Government to back off on this Memorandum of Understanding on softwood lumber.

There is a clause in there which says that one party or the other can give thirty days notice to cancel the agreement. But the Government is not doing that. It knows that we are in the right on the softwood lumber issue, but it does not want to back off on it because it is going to annoy the United States. As far as the softwood lumber people are concerned, they are saying: "Look, go ahead, cancel the Memorandum of Understanding. We will take our chances in the courts. We would rather take our chances in the courts than take our chances with this Government." That is what they are saying.

The softwood lumber issue is growing day by day. This Government is going to have to make a decision on it. It is saying to us: "Why don't the provinces do something about it? Why don't the provinces raise their stumpage fees? Let them do it." I have a message for the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) who is the expert in finance and the expert on who is going to get what in eastern Ontario. Last fall after the election he described eastern Ontario as an area that should be penalized. I don't think he has much hope of being heard in this House this morning, although he does sound much better from the seat of his pants than he does in front of a microphone.

The export charge on softwood lumber is so poorly designed to be almost unworkable. This is the answer that I want to give to the Hon. Member for Mississauga, that the original 1986 Memorandum of Understanding indicates the Government's intention to ultimately replace the export charge with higher provincial stumpage rates.

The Province of Ontario is getting about $25 or $30 million a year in earnings from stumpage fees across Ontario for softwood lumber. In order to get it to the stage that the United States wants to see those stumpage rates at under the Free Trade Agreement, the Province of Ontario would have to increase stumpage fees by three times. It would have to triple those stumpage fees in order to satisfy the United States. So what is the sense of tripling the stumpage fees and then removing the 15 per cent export tax? The industry will still be loaded down for years to come with those higher stumpage fees because you cannot change them. If you do, you are going to be in trouble with the United States.

So, don't tell us to go off to the provinces. Don't blame the provinces. This Government signed the Memorandum of Understanding. Only it can remove it. It should do it in order to save the industry, an industry that has been the heart and soul of this country in many ways since before Confederation days.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: I want to talk about another industry, the Crown corporation that the Government has taken sums of money out of because it was able to have some in the bank. Let me say a word about Atomic Energy of Canada Limited which again is under attack today. If anything happens to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, and we get out of the nuclear energy business or impair it in any way, then what is really going to happen is that this country is definitely going to have a shortage of power in years to come. This year AECL research and development has taken another reduction from $130 million down to $112 million, a reduction of $18 million. It is told at the same time by the Minister of Energy that it can maintain last year's spending levels, but it is missing $18 million. The Minister says to them, well, take it out of your reserves. In 1985, when this Government cut ACL by $100 million in research and development, it also took $70 million out of its reserve fund. Since then this Crown corporation has put $30 or $40 million back into the reserve fund.

But now the Government is saying, use your reserve fund to keep your expenditures up to that level. We are not going to give you any money to do it. We have a fantastic science community. I ask the Government today to consider its actions very carefully, and to get on with the job of research and development. Research and development is the driving force of our industry and, without it, there is no capacity to compete internationally.

Today in the Province of Ontario 50 per cent of the hydroelectric power and the jobs related to that industry are dependent on CANDU reactors which have proven to be the safest in the world. This technology is established in industrialized Canada.

Without those CANDU reactors in industrialized Canada, in order to generate the same amount of electricity as they have produced over the years, it would have been necessary to buy more than $7.5 billion of coal from Pennsylvania for coal-fired furnaces. Of course, today everyone screams about pollution. There would have been $7.5 billion more in coal-produced acid rain floating around Ontario. Imagine what the Parliament Buildings would look like under those conditions.

The Government has given an ultimatum to Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. It must either pay its way or it will get no money in the interim. The Government has already implemented cut-backs, has taken money out of the reserve fund of AECL and states that AECL must pay the Government back for the money it loaned.

More than energy is involved in this matter. There are two subsidiaries of Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. One is Nordion International Incorporated. It is a radio chemical isotope plant. Canada produces 60 per cent of the world's supply of radio medical isotopes, and this is a very profitable organization.

Let me tell the Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs (Mr. McDermid) that I wrote a letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp) some time ago, suggesting that the Government should retain these two subsidiaries which are making money and put the profits into the parent company for research and development. In that way the whole organization will be regenerating its research funds.

Instead, the Government has already taken steps to sell Nordion International Incorporated. The other company, Theratronics International Ltd., has not been as successful as the other Crown corporation but produces a tremendous product which can be very successful. For example, it manufactures the cobalt therapy units for the treatment of cancer. The units built as a result of this high-class medical discovery are produced by Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd.

There are many wonderful things that AECL does in the medical world but which are unknown to the average individual because of the difficulty in giving that message out. As soon as one mentions atomic energy or nuclear power, many people hide because they are afraid of those terms. We have a serious educational problem in this respect.

Let me quote from the Congressional record in the United States, when a member of the U.S. Congress said: "—a new source of power, beginning a new era in the history of civilization. Never in history has a society been confronted with a power so full of potential danger and at the same time so full of promise for the future of man and for the peace of the world". That person was talking about the invention of gasoline. That speech was delivered in the Congress of the United States in 1875.

More than 100 years later we have a facility that produces CANDU reactors and medical radio isotopes, and produces the cobalt therapy unit for the treatment of cancer. Yet people only consider the horrendous possibilities. There is an anti-nuclear community which gets much coverage in the media. I ask the media to give some balance to this question.

Even when Christopher Columbus left to find the New World, people were worried that he might fall off the end of the earth. We must open our minds and have some vision for the future of this country. The only way to have vision for the future is to open up the minds of those sitting opposite so they may proceed with research and development and assist our scientists and leading organizations in this country. We have world-class laboratories and world-class facilities. There should be encouragement to find new ways of manufacturing new products and to work for industry. That can be done by a Crown corporation that is owned by a Government. If it is privatized it will only work for private industry, keeping secrets to itself.

Organizations like Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. and the National Research Council should be open to everyone so that the results of their good work can be spread to industry and the public, like the medical world. That is the way to build Canada. We should not hide that information from anyone.

I implore the Government to reconsider what it is doing. Making the nuclear option available to all Canadians requires continuing federal leadership in nuclear technology. I ask the Government to provide that leadership. Everything costs money at one stage or another, but the returns will come in and the Government will be glad it had invested. It will be able to say it did something useful.

An Hon. Member: Borrow more.

Mr. Hopkins: I gave the option of putting research and development funds back in from the subsidiary corporations and to use the reserve funds for themselves rather than for Government purposes. If the Government followed that course, there would be less investment necessary.

Canada is the world supplier of radio isotopes for use in nuclear medicine. Quebec Members should note that CANDU reactors in Quebec and Ontario produce 85 per cent of the world's supply of Cobalt-60 used in cancer treatment. Surely no one is against programs like that.

Research and development in Canada produces spin-off technologies and businesses, including Aerospace, CAE, Spar, small sized robotics, medical operations and others. All of these have developed over the years because people had faith in what was being done. No other country has such a complete world-class package of peaceful nuclear assets and capabilities as Canada.

• (1220)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: The Candu reactors continue to out-perform the competition, consistently placing in the top ten. There are research reactors in Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and in universities across the country.

The slowpoke reactor is an item that will open Canada up to modern conveniences for many people. It produces both heat and energy. It can be used to produce hydroelectric power and heat for an entire community. It is an ideal way to go for communities in the North. It is an ideal way to go for new discoveries of mines and service communities. Here is your product. It has almost been perfected. Much of the work is being done at White Shell, Manitoba.

I implore the Government: do not cut off the tap when we are moving on to success. The bottom line will always be there, but if the Government destroys its basis for research and development in the energy sector in this country, it will destroy its future. This makes things difficult for competition in industry. We cannot afford to do that. We talk about vision of the North and Canada as a whole, but we must also have vision in innovation. No highly organized or advanced country in the world cuts off its public commitment to research and development. Every advanced country in the world has a strong public commitment to research and development. Canada's record in this regard is going in the other direction. We have A government saying: "Pay your own way". "The bottom line is important". "Boy, we are going to balance the Budget". Balancing the deficit and the national debt is important.

An Hon. Member: How important?

Mr. Hopkins: All right, just listen to this. If you go with your research and development, new ideas and facilities, better products, and market those aggressively in the world, you will have a new source of taxation. You will have a product that nobody else has and everyone will want. Hospitals around the world want the cobalt cancer therapy unit. Countries around the world want radio medical isotopes. Open up your minds. If we are innovative we can compete with the world.

We will do so, however, only if we support our research and development in this country. If we tell our researchers we have a problem in a particular area let them solve it. Don't cut them off and say: "Look, we are worried about not getting an immediate return. The public will get worried if they do not see another dollar coming in tomorrow morning". You cannot operate that way. You must look at the longer term. That is where you will get your tax base. You will produce efficient industries in this country. You will produce new products in this country that will be in demand world-wide. You will get your tax dollars on those. The more you hold your country back, the less you have faith in your science community to bring in research and development and new ideas. If you have no faith in them, you will have a brain drain from this country. Researchers will go south of the border. They will go to Britain. They will go anywhere in the world because they have an international product to sell; their skills and knowledge. They will be producing things there and competing against Canadians. The entire issue boils down to faith in ourselves. We must have faith in ourselves and in our science community.

Let us talk about commitment. We can only have commitment if we know what is going on around us and what these things mean. You could give the softwood lumber people a break today if there was a will and a commitment to do it, but there doesn't seem to be any will on the part of this Government to do it. There does not seem to be any will on the part of this Government to push for new research facilities in this country, to barge ahead and produce electrical power.

Let us take a look at another facet of this issue.

An Hon. Member: Do we really have to?

Mr. Hopkins: I know you do not like hearing this because it is too positive. We in the Liberal Party want to put forth positive ideas for you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: If the Government did not have all the energy that is out there in Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick, it would not have the tax base it has today because energy would not be there for industry to use. Central Canada has expanded rapidly because of the basic source of energy that was present.

What has the off-shoot of that been? The off-shoot of this solid base of industry has been a great source of taxation to the Government of Canada, the provinces and the municipal Governments. As a result, we will be able to put into place—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is with deep regret that I must interrupt the Hon. Member who has gone quite a few minutes over the allotted time.

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Hopkins: Just one sentence that I wish to add.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member may complete his comments. There is unanimous consent.

Mr. Hopkins: I will make my final comment a very pleasant one. With the tax money that will be generated by the good base of industry across this country and our capacity to sell new products around the world, we receive the tax dollars to finance the social programs of this country with respect to medicare, old age pensions and unemployment insurance. That is the route we must take. If we have the faith, the will and the commitment, we can do it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Madam Speaker, what we have before us today is a Bill to borrow billions of dollars. The Canadian people may be interested to know that we have been asked to borrow an amount not exceeding $24.8 billion by way of loan and sale of securities in Canada. In addition the Government is saying that this year we must borrow an additional $750 million. The grand total is $25.55 billion. That is what the Government of Canada is asking us to borrow. I suggest that is an awful lot of money. At what interest rate will this money be borrowed? What will be the cost in the future? This is a serious debate.

Every year borrowing Bills come before Parliament. Every year they seem to go up and up. It is sad that the Government is usually way off in its forecast about where the economy will go. If you look at Mr. Wilson's Budget of a year ago, he said interest rates this year would be 7.8 per cent. The average annual interest rate is much higher than 7.8 per cent. The bank rate today in this country sits at over 12.5 per cent.

It is interesting to note in the Budget speech delivered last week the Minister said that Budget measures would cut the annual deficit in half to $15 billion by 1993–1994. We cannot even predict what will happen to the bank rate on Thursday. How do we know that in five years the deficit will be $15 billion? I say that we should stop misleading the Canadian people by making those types of projections in the Budget of Canada.

If one looks at one of the Budget papers entitled Canada's Economic Prospects in the 1990s, it is very clear that the Government knows that we are going into a recession very shortly. What we have before us is a borrowing Bill for more than $25 billion at one of the highest real interest rates since the Great Depression of the 1930s. This Budget will not only increase interest rates, but it will increase the national debt, unemployment, and the welfare rolls of the country. In many ways, this Budget will mandate a recession.

Members of the House should look at the budget papers tabled last Thursday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). In Table 2 on the Canadian economic outlook it states that expenditures of Gross Domestic Product in 1988 grew at 4.5 per cent. By 1990 it will be down to 1.7 per cent. In 1988, consumption was 4.3 per cent. By 1990 it will be down to 0.9 per cent. In 1988 residential investment was 4.8 per cent. By 1990 it will be minus 8.6 per cent. In 1988, business non-residential investment was 17.8 per cent. By 1990 it will be down to 3.8 per cent. In 1988, machinery and equipment was 21.6 per cent. By 1990 it will be down to 5.6 per cent.

If all those are added together, final domestic demand in 1988 was 5.9 per cent and in 1990 it will be 0.7 per cent. In 1980, housing starts were 223,000. By 1990, despite the expanded population, it will be down to 170,000 housing starts in Canada. In 1988 the Canadian Price Index was 4.1 per cent. In 1990 it will be down to 4.4 per cent.

One of the most important indicators of all, the unemployment rate, was 7.7 per cent in 1980. In 1989 it was 8.2 per cent. In 1990 it will be 8.5 per cent.

According to all the forecasts we are seeing, there is going to be a recession that will start later in 1989. In part, that recession is the responsibility of the Government of Canada because of high interest rate policies and tight money policies. In part, that recession is because the Government did not have the foresight over the last number of years to build a strong economy, come up with new ideas to create wealth and to create additional jobs, to create wealth in Newfoundland or in the outlying reaches of the country in order that people can get off the welfare rolls and the dole and start adding to the productivity of the country. We are borrowing more and more money because the country is less and less productive.

Mr. McDermid: Borrowing less and less money.

Mr. Nystrom: The Bill before us today is borrowing more than $25 billion. The Minister himself stated that the payments on the debt this year will be $39 billion. One of the big culprits and the reason the debt is so high, or the deficit is so high, is the Government's policy of high interest rates.

Every time the interest is increased on the bank rate by 1 per cent, and sustained over a period of one year, $1.5 billion is added to the deficit; 1 per cent interest in the bank rate, $1.5 billion to the national deficit. If that interest rate of 1 per cent is sustained for one year, it is $1.5 billion. If it is sustained over two, three, or four years it is compounded each and every single year.

In the last two years bank rates have skyrocketed. In March, 1987 the bank rate was 7.14 per cent. On May 1, 1989 it was 12.62 per cent. That is an increase of approximately 5.5 per cent. Over two years the bank rate has gone up by some 5.5 per cent. If a 5 per cent increase in the bank rate is sustained over one year it adds an extra $7.5 billion to the national debt.

Mr. McDermid: Six point four billion dollars.

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister states the precise figure is $6.4 billion. The high interest rate policy continued over two or three years is a large part of the problem that we are facing today.

The number one challenge of the Government is to find a way to lower interest rates. The Government must realize that a tight-money policy and a high interest rate policy hurts the farmer of Saskatchewan, the worker of Newfoundland, the person trying to build a house in Toronto or British Columbia, and in particular it hurts small business.

The real interest rates are among the highest they have been since the 1930s. During the Great Depression, and I do not have the figures with me, it was very seldom that real interest rates went above the 8 per cent mark. In 1981 and 1982 there was a recession. Today, the real interest rate is higher than it was every single week in 1981, except for one week in August, 1981. Today, the real interest rate is 8 per cent. By "real interest rate" I mean the difference between the bank rate and the cost of living. Today, the bank rate is 12.6 per cent. The cost of living is 4.6 per cent. The real interest rate is 8 per cent. That is the highest real interest rate except for one month in 1981 when the bank rate was 21 per cent, the cost of living was 12.7 per cent, and the real interest rate was 8.3 per cent.

We are in serious trouble in this country when real interest rates are at that level. The Government has been timid in terms of instructing the Bank of Canada and the Governor, Mr. Crow, to roll back interest rates. I believe there is some flexibility. The interest rate in Canada is approximately 3.5 per cent higher than that in the United States, comparing our bank rate with their bank rate. The Bush administration does not seem to fear talking to Mr. Greenspan at the Federal Reserve and ordering him to hold down the interest rates. If that can be done in the United States, why can we not do it in Canada? We could roll back interest rates by a couple of points without hurting the economy in terms of the outflow of Canadian dollars. If the dollar is lowered by two or three cents it would be a stimulus to our exports.

Every single provincial premier has called upon the federal Government to talk to Mr. Crow to attempt to lower bank rates in the country. My friend, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) knows that. Mr. Getty has said that, as has Mr. Vander Zalm. The great supporter of the Conservative Party Robert Bourassa has also stated the same thing.

[Translation]

And on the weekend I saw Mr. Bourassa, who likes the Prime Minister of Canada very much. He was very negative towards the Budget of Canada and I know that my friends, the Hon. Members from Quebec here, agree with Mr. Bourassa that the Budget will be hard on Quebeckers. I think that Mr. Bourassa is right: interest rates are too high in Canada and it will be a problem for the Canadian economy for a long time.

[English]

The only way we are going to bring down the deficit in the long run is by building a strong economy, strengthening the Canadian economy, creating jobs, bringing down the interest rate, and by putting people back to work. That is not being done in this Budget before the House today. The borrowing Bill is really part of the Budget, just like the Estimates are a part of the Budget. Instead, what we have seen is a high interest rate policy and the biggest tax attack in the history of this country on ordinary Canadians by the Conservative Party across the way. This big tax attack, which takes over $700 out of the pockets of ordinary Canadians, is put on top of the huge tax increases from 1984–88 which cost the average family $1,000. On top of that, we will soon have a national sales tax which will add another $1,000 to the taxes of ordinary Canadians.

• (1240)

Never in the history of this country have we seen a political Party that has taxed, taxed and taxed the ordinary Canadian people as much as the Conservative Party across the way. This big tax attack will hit ordinary Canadians. It will not hit the friends of the Government, the rich, the millionaires or the corporations.

[Translation]

And my friend the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) agrees with me that his Party is a Party for the rich and big corporations. That is why his friend Mr. Bourassa has now criticized Mr. Mulroney's Conservative Government. It is the biggest tax impact in Canadian history!

[English]

I say to you, Madam Speaker, it will not be long before Canadians will say, "We are not going to take this any longer", and we will see the beginnings of a tax revolt in this country. How long can you have ordinary people just paying, paying and paying because the Conservative Party across the way has no imagination in respect to creating jobs and generating wealth in this country, a Party that is afraid to take on the whole question of interest rates and bringing down the bank rate because they are trying to let their friends, the corporations, get off scot-free?

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I saw many Hon. Members from Quebec on the other side of the House and my friends from Quebec are aware of the regional development situation. The Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is another reason we are now prepared to discuss a bill for $25-billion borrowing authority. But the Finance Minister's Budget we have here reduces regional development expenditures for the Atlantic provinces in 1988–89. We spent $461 million. But in two years, only $410 million will be spent on the Atlantic provinces, the poorest in Canada, a reduction of $41 million for Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

Madam Speaker, these are the poorest provinces with an unemployment rate that is too high, but regional development expenditures are reduced. Even in Quebec, where the most recent unemployment figures are still much too high, federal expenditures are cut. In 1988–89, the Government spent $352 million, but in two years, Madam Speaker, your Government will spend $260 million. This is a drop of almost $100 million for the Province of Quebec. Many regions of Quebec have an unemployment rate above 12 or 13 per cent.

Where I come from, western Canada, there is also a reduction of $12 million. This year, the Government will spend $362 million, but in two years, it will be $350 million, Madam Speaker.

And the same goes for Ontario. Ontario is often considered a very rich province, with a lot of money, but I know very well that my friend from Timmins—Chapleau (Mr. Samson), in northern Ontario— It is not a rich region. There is a lot of poverty and unemployment. That region is quite poor. Our country needed programs for northern Ontario and some regions in eastern Ontario. But look at the figures! Even here in Ontario, there is a reduction of nearly $50 million for regional development.

In two years, Ontario will get $59 million, but this year, it was $107 million, Madam Speaker.

And I think of Sudbury and Timmins in northern Ontario and places like Hawkesbury in eastern Ontario. There will be a negative reaction against the federal Government for regional development budget cuts.

Despite this, we have many millionaires here in the Conservative Party who agree with a Budget that increases taxes for corporations by only $1 billion but by $8 billion for individuals.

Madam Speaker, it is time to have a government for ordinary Canadians.

[English]

It is the same thing with social programs. They are under attack. We have the beginning of the end of universality in social programs in this country. It is the old Chinese proverb: A journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step. What we see now is the beginning of the end of universality in social programs. In fact, with family allowances, some 535,000 Canadians will see either part or all of their family allowances taxed back by the federal Government. Some 132,000 old-age pensioners will see either part or all of their pension taxed back.

Mr. Blenkarn: Those earning over $50,000.

Mr. Nystrom: The Chairman of the Finance Committee is always accurate. He is a very honest and open guy. He is very frank. He said Canadians would pay an extra $10 billion in taxes if the Government was elected, through the national sales tax. He says the cut-backs—they call it a claw-back in the Conservative Party by the big Conservative tiger across the way—will apply to people that make over $50,000 a year. And he is right.

Mr. Blenkarn: This is taxable income.

Mr. Nystrom: Suppose we take a family with a couple of kids with one person working making $51,000 or $52,000 a year.

Mr. Blenkarn: He won't get clawed back.

Mr. Nystrom: You are going to have some of that money clawed back if you are making over $50,000.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is taxable income.

Mr. Nystrom: Okay. If you have taxable income of $51,000 a year where one person is working, some of that money will be clawed back.

Mr. McDermid: That means he is making about $85,000.

Mr. Nystrom: That person might be making a fair amount of money. But what about another family with two wage earners, both making about $48,000 in taxable income. They are making about twice as much money as the first family, yet none of their money will be clawed back. That is not fair. The Chairman of the Finance Committee knows that is true. Where is the fairness, Madam Speaker, when you compare those two families? Do you think it is fair that one family making almost twice as much money would not have any of its income clawed back? If the determination is $50,000 today, how long will it be before that amount is $40,000, or $30,000, or $25,000? How long will it be before the social policy in this country becomes the welfare policy and we will have a means test that will hurt ordinary Canadians?

[Translation]

But Madam Speaker, it is not only family allowances, not only old age pensions, not only that, it is unemployment insurance.

The federal Government is now privatizing unemployment insurance by withdrawing from it. Imagine, Madam Speaker, the Unemployment Insurance Commission—

[English]

Imagine, the Unemployment Insurance Commission run by Canada's big companies. The Government wants to save hundreds of millions of dollars by withdrawing from unemployment insurance. It will save money by withdrawing from promises made for child care.

• (1250)

You will notice the chairman of the Finance Committee did not talk about child care in the campaign because he knew that once elected the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would not keep his word and would cut back on promises and commitments he made to the women and mothers and fathers of this country to spend more money on child care.

The Government is cutting back but it is cutting back on social programs. The Government is cutting back but it is cutting back on universality. The Government is cutting back but it is cutting back on unemployment insurance. The Government is cutting back but it is cutting back on regional development. It is cutting back on programs for ordinary people. What it is taxing under this borrowing Bill are ordinary Canadian people right across the country.

I also say to you that what we are seeing now for probably the first time in terms of a budgetary measure is the real Conservative agenda, which is to harmonize our policies and our programs more and more with the programs of the United States. Step one was the free trade deal—

An Hon. Member: I prefer Argentina.

Mr. Nystrom: —and they got the free trade deal. A Member across the way said he prefers Argentina. Step one was the free trade deal, free trade with the United States of America where we lose a lot of Canadian sovereignty. Despite the fact that the overwhelming majority of Canadian people vote against that idea, vote against the Conservative Party, because of the quirks in our electoral system we now have free trade.

We are now seeing stage 2, that is to harmonize our programs with the Americans, because over the next five to seven years there will be negotiations going on about subsidies and what a subsidy means. What about unemployment insurance? Is that a subsidy? Are our social programs unique subsidies in this country? What about the family allowance, unemployment insurance and workers' compensation, are these unique subsidies in Canada? What we are seeing is the harmonizing of our programs, like unemployment insurance, our social policy and our regional development policy with programs in the United States. What you are seeing is more and more privatization and deregulation in this country because once again that harmonizes our economy with that of the United States of America.

In terms of this borrowing Bill, we cannot support a Bill to borrow money with this kind of economic vision. What the Conservative Party wants to do is to load more and more of the tax load on the ordinary Canadian, and less and less on the rich and wealthy. It is making forecasts and predictions about the future that are probably going to be totally off-base.

We cannot support this borrowing Bill. I do not think the House should support this borrowing Bill. I think the House should vote no to the borrowing Bill. What we have here is a Government with a fiscal vision that gives Canadian people higher and higher borrowing, higher and higher interest rates, higher and higher unemployment, with more and more people living in poverty.

What we should be doing instead is coming up with ideas to create more wealth and more jobs for ordinary Canadians. What we should be doing is lowering the interest rates in this country. We have that flexibility with the United States to lower our interest rates. We could also take more leadership in the G-7 in terms of the international problem of high interest rates. These are the kinds of things we should be doing. We should be helping the farmers and small business more. We should be making sure that the regions of this country that suffer the most in a recession are the regions that are helped.

Instead, what we are seeing is a repetition of 1981-82. In 1981, with high interest rates, the Liberal Government of the day with Mr. MacEachen brought in a recessionary budget. They kept interest rates high. They taxed ordinary Canadians. They cut back on services and expenditures by the federal Government. Those measures by the Minister of Finance speeded up the recession and made the recession deeper for most Canadians.

I come from a region of Canada that has not yet fully recovered from the recession of 1982. Many Members of this House come from a part of Canada that has not recovered from 1981-82. Yet we have a Government that is intent on making the same mistake as 1981-82, some seven or eight years later. What we have in the Minister of Finance is the clone of Allan MacEachen.

An Hon. Member: What an insult.

Mr. Blenkarn: Not really.

Mr. Nystrom: The chairman of the Finance Committee is not sure. He says not really but there is a certain amount of uncertainty right there.

What people should do, if they want to take the time, is look up the quotes in the House that were made back in 1981-82 by the chairman of the Finance Committee, the present Minister of Finance, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and by several other Cabinet Ministers and long-time Conservative Members of Parliament. What they were saying to Mr. MacEachen back in 1981-82 was: "Bring down interest rates in this country. They are too high. You can intervene with the Bank of Canada. You can talk to Mr. Bouey. You can bring down interest rates. They are hurting ordinary Canadians." What they were saying at that time was that the national debt was too high. Now the debt in this country has pretty well doubled from what it was four years ago.

What they were saying at that time was to cut back on social programs and cut back government expenditures that would hurt the poor ordinary Canadian. What they were saying at that time was that the regions that would be hurt the most would be the Atlantic Provinces and parts of Quebec and parts of western Canada and northern Ontario. They were right. Yet seven years later the same Party is now on the Government side of the House and they are doing exactly what they said they would not do in 1981-82.

It is no wonder that more and more Canadians are treating politicians and politics with cynicism. It is more and more believable that Canadians out there think this is probably the only institution in the world that is run by its own inmates, because we seem to be at times so insane in terms of what we do and what we say.

I remind Members on the opposite side to go back to 1981–82 and take a look at the speeches they made, and take a look at the advice they were giving to Mr. Trudeau and Mr. MacEachen. We were saying similar things back in 1981 that we are saying now. We were saying that Budget would provoke a recession, that Budget would deepen the recession, that Budget would make the recession last longer. We were right. The Conservative Party was saying the same thing.

I see my friend from Halifax is now getting up and leaving his seat with big crocodile tears rolling down his cheeks. He was saying the same thing in those days. He in his heart of hearts knows that his Prime Minister is doing the wrong thing. But he is out there lobbying for a Cabinet post. He does not want to alienate the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister. He does not have the courage, as has the Member for Portage—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) who said last night about the closure of the base at Portage la Prairie that if there is any evidence that it is a case of east against west, I will stand up and I will vote against Mulroney in the House of Commons.

An Hon. Member: Where is he?

Mr. Nystrom: He does not have the same courage as that lonely soul on the Prairies from Portage la Prairie, that intellectual heavyweight of the Conservative Party who is going to take on the Prime Minister.

I say to my friends across the way, why do they not start the tax revolt in this country? Why do they not start the revolt that says, "This Budget will induce a recession in Canada"? Why do they not become the heroes of this Parliament by standing up and saying, "Look, what we said in 1981–82 was right, and we are going to say the same thing today". The Prime Minister has them on a short leash. They are all afraid of him. There is a good guy sitting across the way, the Member for Cambridge (Mr. Sobeski). I know he is ambitious. I know he wants to be a Cabinet Minister. He knows what I am saying is right. He knows that Joe Clark was right in 1981–82. He knows Michael Wilson was right in 1981–82, but he does not say a word today. He does not dare say a word today because the Prime Minister has him on a short leash. All these politicians, if they do not make the Cabinet, they can still get some patronage. I notice that Mr. Hamelin, the former Member, has stepped aside for the Prime Minister in Charlevoix so he could represent Baie Comeau. He got another patronage appointment.

These people across the way are afraid to bite the hand that feeds them. That is why two or three years down the road the Canadian people are going to say no, and say no decisively, and throw out this gang across the way and elect a Government that cares for the ordinary people of Canada.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

SHORT RANGE NUCLEAR WEAPONS IN EUROPE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, Canada must support West Germany in its attempt to reduce short-range nuclear weapons in Europe. In this respect Canada must join with other NATO allies to convince the United States and Britain that this is the best option for peace and stability. To pursue the modernization of these weapons, which was targeted for the mid-1990s, will jeopardize seriously the prospect for successful arms reductions in Europe, and undermine the possibilities for phasing out the cold war. The call by the West Germans for the reduction of these weapons would bring us at least one step closer to this goal.

I urge our Government to join with those allies in NATO who seek to curtail these weapons and put an end to the arms race. Canada should take a strong stand right now.

CHERNOBYL ACCIDENT—RADIATION FALL-OUT

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Mr. Speaker, three years ago in April of 1986 a major nuclear disaster occurred in Ukraine. The first hint of a nuclear nightmare reached Scandinavia on a southeast wind. Swedish monitoring devices began to detect abnormally high levels of radiation. Only two days later the Soviet Government admitted that a nuclear accident had occurred in Chernobyl in Ukraine some 100 kilometres north of Kiev.

The fall-out of this accident reminds us of the atomic explosion in Hiroshima. Recent reports indicate that 25 villages around Chernobyl have had to be evacuated because of the nuclear fall-out. There has been significant increase in illnesses, including anemia and breakdown of the immune system, since that accident.

Some 200,000 babies were born in the vicinity of Chernobyl. We should urge the Soviet Government to be open about the medical follow-up of those children so that we know really what effect this explosion has had on their development.

This nuclear disaster should remind the world that we need international co-operation and controls on the proliferation of nuclear devices.

BEATIFICATION OF MARIE-CATHERINE-DE-SAINT-AUGUSTIN

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, last Sunday on April 23, I had the pleasure of attending the beatification of Sister Marie-Catherine-de-Saint-Augustin in Rome, where I represented the Canadian Government at the ceremony led by His Holiness Pope John Paul II.

In 1648, Sister Marie-Catherine-de-Saint-Augustin arrived by ship in Quebec City. An exceptional woman, she directed the construction of the first hospital in Quebec City. She also founded a congregation and devoted her entire life to the destitute.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Canadian Government, I wish to congratulate the communauté des Hospitalières de Saint-Augustin on receiving this great honour which is also an honour for all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I also had the pleasure of meeting His Holiness the Pope, and I must say it was a truly unforgettable and extremely moving moment, and I hope that all Canadian Catholics will some day have a chance to meet His Holiness.

COST OF ADVERTIZING

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Government's campaign to sell its Budget is entitled "Of consuming interest". What is really of consuming interest to Canadians is the cost to us of the current multi-media blitz the Government has launched to sell its tax grab Budget.

Canadians are interested in knowing that the creative and media buy agencies, the radio ads, the TV ads, the print ads and assorted brochures and bumf will cost Canadian families a grand total of about $2.7 million. There can be little doubt that Canadian families would be much happier to see 2,600 new child care spaces created for the children of working families who so desperately need child care. That $2.7 million would have paid for close to 3,000 child care spaces.

Glossy ads are a poor substitute for action by the Government. It has once again demonstrated it is more concerned with image than with the very real problems facing Canadian children.

REDUCTION OF THE DEFICIT

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise before you today to give my support to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). He showed courage and far-sightedness in addressing our deficit. It was not an easy decision, I am sure, but one that had to be made for the good of our future generations.

The responsibility for the present state of our finances cannot be passed on to successive generations with impunity. We must act now to ensure our children are not burdened with the debts of their forefathers. It is in our interest and their interest to start now rather than later.

The Minister has shown the kind of leadership that has earned him the respect of not only his colleagues and fellow citizens but also of people around the world.

TRANSPORT CANADA

IMPACT OF CANCELLATION OF LEASE ON OUTAOUAIS

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, the facts must be known. Does the Minister of Public Works realize that the Government's reversal of its decision to transfer Transport Canada to the Outaouais region is a flagrant injustice?

This was an opportunity for the Outaouais to demonstrate its competence and its determination to pursue its economie development.

Representatives from the Quebec side of the National Capital Region have taken a professional and calm stance, without making inflammatory or exaggerated statements. They stick to the facts, and they believed that the Government would stand by its decision.

Why was Transport Canada's lease cancelled? It was certainly not because capital expenditures would be necessary, although the Budget says otherwise.

What is the cost of renting from Campeau Corporation, with repairs? Won't this involve capital spending right away for the Government, expenditures that will require immediate payment?

Finally, and most importantly, when and by whom were senior officials at Public Works ordered to negotiate with the Campeau Corporation?

TRIBUTE TO ALMA WALKER

CELEBRATION OF SEVENTY-FIFTH BIRTHDAY

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, Alma Walker, the great lady of Markham, celebrated her seventy-fifth birthday on April 28.

S. O. 31

Last Saturday I attended a reception, along with Alma's relatives and friends, to pay tribute to her. Born in East York, her parents George and Irene Maynard had 13 children, seven girls and six boys. Alma has a daughter Judith, a son Jerry and 11 grandchildren.

In paying tribute to Alma, I want to focus on her over 45 years of public service in elected office in Markham. Alma has achieved many firsts. She was the first woman councillor for the Village of Markham in 1952. She was the first woman mayor of the Town of Markham in 1969. She was the first woman president of the Markham Fair. Alma has also served as a commissioner for Markham Hydro for 33 consecutive years.

Alma, thank you, from the residents of Markham who wish you many more years of health and happiness. God bless.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

CLOSURE OF BASES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, last week the Government made it clear that it is not willing to act in the best interests of Canada. Nowhere is this more clear than in its wrong-minded plans for the Department of National Defence.

I never thought I would see the day when Canadian troops would be asked by their Government to retreat from Canada. That is what is happening. Seven bases are being closed and seven more are being gutted while we are asked to spend $1.2 billion per year to maintain Canadian Forces in Europe.

Fourteen Canadian communities are under attack from their own Government. This comes at the same time as the Government has laid waste to the very regional development and retraining programs that these communities now need more than ever before. There is concern, confusion and even fear among those who serve in our Armed Forces.

The defence White Paper is in disgrace. The Defence Department is without direction. It is time to reassess all our priorities and ensure that our Armed Forces have the opportunity they need to properly serve the country and to protect its sovereignty. We owe it to those in our Armed Forces to produce a new White Paper.

NATIONAL MENTAL HEALTH WEEK

REQUEST FOR SUPPORT OF ALL CANADIANS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the House and the public that this week, May 1 to 7, is Mental Health Week.

For 30 years, the Canadian Mental Health Association has been coordinating activities intended to make Canadians more aware of this field in order to reduce the stigma associated with mental illnesses and to encourage the community to accept those among it who need mental health services.

The Department of National Health and Welfare is glad to take part with the CMHA in this worthwhile effort to draw attention to the importance of all these issues. This year's slogan for Mental Health Week is: Mental health—keep it in mind. We have to find a balance.

Mr. Speaker, all Canadians are invited this week to give their full support to the activities planned by CMHA local offices in their own communities.

CLOSURE OF BASES—LONDON, ONTARIO

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, from first to last Michael Wilson's leaked Budget is a national disaster. It is Hurricane Wilson and London has been devastated by it. Each and every person will be hurt by it. CFB London has been slated for closure beginning 1990. The Wolesley Barracks is the home of the 1st battalion of The Royal Canadian Regiment and they have been part of the history and soul of London for more than a century. The killing of CFB London is surely one of the least understandable measures in the Budget. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) claims that this measure has been taken for the good of the economy, but the loss of the Armed Forces base represents a loss of about $50 million a year to the London economy and hundreds of Londoners are going to be thrown out of work. Yet the Minister's own Budget admits that the annual savings to the Canadian Government in wages, operations and maintenance will be small because the regiment will incur the same operating costs at Petawawa where the regiment is slated to move.

I am calling on this Government to rescind this economic blow to the City of London. All that London asks is to be treated fairly. For the next several days I will be asking all Londoners to sign petitions to keep the base open. I implore the Minister to keep all lines of communication open to us to make our case as to why CFB London should remain open.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CLOSURE OF BASES—NORTH BAY, ONTARIO

Mr. Bob Wood (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced major cuts to the Canadian Forces base in North Bay. If flying activities cease at CFB North Bay, this will mean the movement of at least 400 jobs from my riding to Ottawa. This is totally unacceptable. Why is this Government centralizing at a time when our provincial Ontario Government has demonstrated the sound basis and cost effectiveness of decentralization? This move will cost $20 million to build new hangars in Ottawa. These hangars have already been built in North Bay, and are being used right now. It will also cost approximately $5 million to move the families. We are now up to $25 million, and have not even moved the office equipment and machinery. This $25 million would have to be paid right now.

The Government's rationalization for this is to save $35 million 15 years from now. At the rate this Government is going, it will not save one cent. But this move will have a devastating effect on the economy of North Bay, not to mention the impact on the 400 families. North Bay needs the jobs. This move is just another example of this Government's gross insensitivity to the families and smaller communities of this nation. There is no commitment to the north except to close it down, or maybe there is a hidden agenda. If so, we would like to know about it.

FAMILY ALLOWANCE TAX-BACK

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, the latest Budget makes any person with children and with an income in excess of $50,000 ineligible for family allowance. Does this Minister realize how unfair and discriminatory this provision really is? If you happen to be a single parent or the sole wage earner in a family and receive more than $50,000 a year, you will not be able to collect family allowance. However, if a working yuppie couple both make $49,500 a year, they can collect family allowance. With a combined yuppie income of $99,000 a year, they will be able to keep their family allowance cheque, but the family with only one wage-earner with an income of $50,000 will lose its family allowance cheque. This Budget provision clearly discriminates against single parents and those families where a spouse stays at home to care for the children. This exemplifies the discrimination and unfairness inherent, not only in this Budget but in too many programs and policies of this Government, and it must not be tolerated.

IMMIGRATION

Mr. Al Johnson (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on a matter of grave concern to my constituents in Calgary North. They and I are very disturbed that those who have claimed refugee status in Canada, have been afforded due process under our very generous immigration system and have been rejected and deported, are then permitted to immediately return to Canada and begin due process all over again. This manipulation and harassment of our immigration system has put into question its credibility. This abuse is also a great expense to the Canadian taxpayers.

I support an immigration system that takes the time to assess the legitimacy of refugee claims and which demonstrates compassion toward real refugees. However, I believe that once a person has gone through due process, has been found not to qualify and is returned to the country of origin, that the same due process should not be afforded him again. I recommend legislation that is consistent with the need to protect people's rights and at the same time allows Canada to prevent illegal re-entry and immediate removal by the authorities of those who do so.

VIA RAIL CUT-BACK TO PASSENGER SERVICE

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, this Government's plan to further erode passenger rail service in this country is a threat again to Canada's unity. The railway industry built this nation from coast to coast. Further cut-backs to VIA Rail will severely affect the future of passenger rail service especially in the more disadvantaged regions of Canada, and more particularly in northwestern Ontario. Many small communities in my riding depend solely on the railway industry for transportation between communities. Areas such as Sioux Lookout, Minaki and Redditt will feel the effects of these cut-backs. A further reduction in the quality of service provided by VIA Rail will lead to the demise of this vital method of transportation in this country. Increased fares will lead to decreased ridership and remove the competitive edge. Lower and middle-income Canadians who rely on passenger rail service will once again carry the burden.

VIA Rail cannot survive in the transportation business under these circumstances. I urge this Government to reconsider its decision on the cut-backs to VIA Rail and provide the necessary funds to allow VIA Rail to modernize and enhance its existing equipment.

CLAW BACK OF PENSIONS AND FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the Prime Minister, in answering questions about his disastrous Budget, quoted from the pre-Budget submission of the National Council of Welfare in a way that created the impression that the Council supported the Budget's intention to claw back from some Canadians 100 per cent of the old age pension and the family allowance. I went to take a look at that report and here is what it said, prior to the portion the Prime Minister quoted:

> Here are some of the options the government could consider to pare more social spending and raise more taxes. The reader should keep in mind that these are not recommendations of the National Council of Welfare, but rather our guess as to some of the changes the Minister of Finance may be contemplating.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The Council did go ahead and make a specific proposal, and here it is:

> There is a fairer alternative, a fairer tax system that protects the poor and collects more tax from the well-off.

So I want to ask the Prime Minister, will he apologize to the National Council of Welfare and all Canadians for his deceptive use of the Council's pre-Budget submission? Will he explain to Canadians, if he was interested in the Council, why he did not adopt the recommendation of the Council and create a fairer tax system with more taxes being paid by better-off Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition House Leader indeed misleads and distorts today in referring to a response that I gave on Friday. I will ask the Deputy Prime Minister to review Hansard quickly, but I think what he will find is that I referred to this document, Social Spending and the Next Budget, presented by the National Council of Welfare in which they make a statement. I never said it was a recommendation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The statement is:

> The advantage of the clawback is that it saves money not by tampering with the contentious principle of universality, but rather by increasing the progressivity of social programs. Most defenders of universality believe that benefits should be distributed in a progressive fashion—i.e., the higher your income, the less you should receive, and vice-versa. The clawback does no damage to universality—old age pension and family allowance cheques still would go out to all pensioners and parents, regardless of their income—but it does reduce the net value of benefits to upper-income recipients.

The object of the exercise, as I understood it, was to try to do more for the poor and less well off in Canada. That is exactly what we will do.

• (1420)

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has not explained why he did not draw to the attention of the House the words that preceded the quote he read, that the quote he read was specifically stated not to be a recommendation to the Government but rather a guess as to what the Government might do.

[Translation]

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, why La Presse in its April 28 editorial said, "A bad budget, a bad Minister" because we do not have a budget that treats all Canadians the same.

[English]

TAX INCREASES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, tax increases on individuals through this Budget in the form of personal income taxes, sales taxes and excise taxes have been increased by $2.6 billion in 1990, and in contrast, corporations face only $410 million in increased taxes.

How can the Prime Minister, his Minister of Finance and this Government try to say to Canadians that this is a fair Budget for all Canadians when there is such an unequal distribution of the tax burden created by his Budget when it comes to corporations and middle and lower-income Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I refer my hon. friend to page 1070 of Hansard on Friday, April 28, 1989, where I am quoted as saying:

> Because my friend raised the subject of agencies dealing with the poor, I refer him to a recent statement made by the National Council on Welfare—

I quoted that statement from this particular report.

I did not say that it was the only statement in a complete report, I said it was a statement from the report. What I have said and what I have quoted is completely on all fours with the statement there.

I specifically said that I refer him to recent statements, not a recommendation, not a suggestion that we should follow, but a statement made by them. That is a complete and absolutely fair quotation.

If my friend is dealing with quotes, perhaps he should refer to a statement made by a guest speaker at the Liberal convention on the weekend, where Adam Zimmerman is quoted as saying the Liberals should stop blindly criticizing and carping about the Government, which he said in some cases is still cleaning up the Liberal legacy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENT BY SENIORS NETWORK OF CANADA

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Budget that was announced last week creates a total increase in taxes since 1984, including the increases through this Budget, of 108.3 per cent for a family with one income earner and two children at the poverty line income level of only $23,639. This is not a Liberal legacy, it is a crime committed by the Conservative Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): If the Prime Minister wants to know that our comments and criticisms are not blindly carping, let me ask him if he is aware of the official statement of One Voice, The Senior's Network of Canada, the major group of seniors in this country, which said in a statement on April 28:

> If we want to maintain true universality, we shouldn't tax benefits through the back door.

It goes on to say:

> One Voice would prefer the Government to increase the top income tax rate rather than taking away benefits.

Does the Prime Minister not realize that we are not blindly carping, we are speaking on behalf of Canadians generally, including seniors. Does he not realize that?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member has been saying that he is looking for a fairer tax system. I want to draw to his attention what we have done over the course of these past four and a half years.

He referred to the increase in personal income tax revenues. I remind him that 80 per cent of that increase is because we have had a healthier economy, only 20 per cent because we had an increase in tax rates.

Let me also remind him that measures such as the elimination of the scientific research tax credit, the minimum tax, the elimination of a number of tax shelters, including yachts, houseboats and hotels, the carve-out provisions for the oil and gas industry, are all steps designed to provide a fairer tax system in addition to the large corporation tax and the high income surtax in this budget.

Let me expand on what Adam Zimmerman said: "Rather than wasting your time hurling insults in Parliament and elsewhere, why not study and really learn about the issues".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CUT IN SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. We have heard versions of what was said at the Liberal convention on the weekend with respect to cleaning up the mess. However, I suspect that many of us have heard a lot of things over the weekend about trust and the Budget.

We have seen the day care program dumped, unemployment insurance slashed, medicare benefits cut back, family allowances and old age pensions taxed. I ask on behalf of many Canadians who have heard much about this whether social programs and universality in Canada are still sacred trusts.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, in posing that question, is ignoring the essential motive behind the Budget. The essential motive behind the Budget is to get the debt under control, to pay particular attention to the fact that since 1969 our interest costs on that debt have grown from 12 cents of every tax dollar to the current level of 35 cents for every tax dollar. If we do not get this under control, that 35 cents will go higher, and those social programs that the Hon. Member talks about will be squeezed out.

Our commitment on this side of the House is to maintain those social programs and take the actions now that will maintain those social programs.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I guess trusts are not as sacred as they used to be.

CUT IN ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS FINANCING

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, last fall during the election campaign we heard a lot of talk about good management and good managers.

My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that there has been a $2.9 billion cut in EPF funding and medicare and post-secondary education will fall increasingly under the responsibility of provincial Governments, is the policy of the Government with respect to management to switch the responsibility for maintaining essential programs to provincial Governments across the country because the federal Government cannot fulfil its responsibility?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member neglects to say that there will be a substantial increase in Established Programs Financing, in the order of $25 billion for the next five years, relative to the last five years. We are maintaining our commitment to these important programs.

The Hon. Member has to realize that if we do not get this debt problem under control, because our interest costs as a percentage of our revenues are far higher than the provinces and the impact they have on interest rates is so much higher, we will leave a mess to our children, which we believe is not the right thing to do. We must get this problem under control and we are committed to doing that.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL REVENUE

INCOME TAX DEDUCTIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He knows that today is the last day for Canadians to send in their income tax return. He also knows that probably the most offensive aspect of his Budget is the hypocritical claim that Canadians are being asked to pay fairly, that the burden is being distributed fairly.

Will the Minister admit that since the Conservatives were elected in 1984, the richest 1 per cent of Canadians, those who drive around in their BMWs, will have an income tax reduction of $905, including this Budget? That is a $905 tax cut while the average family has had an increase of over $500 in income tax since the Conservatives were elected.

My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Is it fair that with this Budget the rich will pay much less and the average family pays much more once again?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is using very selective information. If he looks at this Budget, he will see that a single person under 65 will pay $2,175 as a result of personal income tax changes. That applies to an individual earning $200,000. If that person is earning $30,000, the increase is $80. That is a significant difference. To put it in terms of percentage of income, it is .3 per cent for the lower income levels and 1.1 per cent for the upper income levels.

I ask the Hon. Member to remember what we have done in removing a number of tax loopholes, some of which I referred to in my previous answer. We have taken many measures, and I have yet to hear any acknowledgement from the NDP that we have done these things. I have also yet to hear any suggestion from them for new measures.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The Minister of Finance's nose should grow a foot in length after that statement. He has received all kinds of suggestions from this side of the House. He did not admit that the richest 1 per cent of Canadians are paying over $900 less tax since this Government was elected in 1984. I say to the Minister of Finance, that is a disgrace.

My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He was meeting his constituents on the weekend. I see in a newspaper report that one of them had the audacity to ask him why the Government was continuing with a complete exemption of capital gains tax up to $100,000. In the United States, Americans pay taxes on capital gains. In the Minister's riding, as elsewhere, if you make $100,000 in capital gains, you do not have to pay one cent. The Minister said: "We don't think it is appropriate to close that gap. It is a principle we want to establish into the future". Is the principle that the rich will continue to get a free ride?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I want to tell the Hon. Member what the principle is. The principle is that we want to encourage growth and investment in this country. We have narrowed the gap significantly between normal income tax rates and investment tax rates designed to encourage investment and job creation.

I ask the Leader of the New Democratic Party, is he against that particular provision going to farmers and small business people? It is directed to those people. That is how jobs are created in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the Minister, don't give us that stuff. The rich are paying less than when you were elected in 1984.

[Translation]

But the Minister mentioned taxes on small businesses. The Minister knows very well that in the United States, there is a minimum tax on profitable corporations. Instead of imposing a minimum tax on profitable corporations here, the Minister of Finance increased taxes on small businesses.

Why this unfairness? Small businesses will pay more with this Budget, but many profitable corporations will not have to pay a cent. Is that the Conservative justice?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me summarize some tax changes in this Budget. There is a new tax for high corporations that will increase the total amount of corporate tax revenues by over 7 per cent. We have increased the personal income tax surtax, including a high income surtax. Those taxes have been increased by 2.3 per cent, a good deal lower than the increase on corporations. We have also increased substantially, in fact doubled the refundable sales tax credit to help those people in lower income brackets.

We have increased the tax rate on small businesses from 12.4 per cent to 12.8 per cent. It is not a large increase, but one that asks small businessmen to share in the burden of fighting the problem of our national debt. That is the direction in which we are headed. We must share and spread the burden so that people who are capable of paying more will pay more.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CLOSURE OF MILITARY BASE AT PORTAGE LA PRAIRIE

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. We saw on television over the weekend the shock, disappointment and even disbelief of hundreds of military and civilian people in Portage La Prairie over the abruptness and suddenness of the announcement to close their Armed Forces Base. As we have heard here today, many others share the same boat. Can the Minister give this House the military and economic rationale behind the plans to close the base in Portage La Prairie?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there are three ways of reducing expenditures and putting dollars forward to acquire the necessary equipment. The socialists on my right are suggesting we should cut the bases in Europe. I want to say that will not happen. Our continued commitment to NATO and the people there at this time and the numbers in Europe will be maintained.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKnight: In reducing operation and maintenance costs and in reducing capital and bringing into balance expenditures in the Department of National Defence, to personnel and capital, we can then provide the equipment that is necessary for the men and women who serve Canada.

CALL FOR ALTERNATIVE ECONOMIC MEASURES

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): I want to zero in on the original question. I want to ask the Minister, in view of studies that have been carried out, what alternative economic measures are being considered by the Government to compensate the 13,000 people of Portage La Prairie for the devastating effect this loss of $120 million will have?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, no one takes pleasure in closing military bases. The necessity of those actions are when $2.74 billion are reduced from a Department. We must look at operation and maintenance, capital, and personnel.

The Portage La Prairie Base is used for preliminary training. That base will maintain itself until we have an opportunity to explore the options of contracting that training to commercial enterprise. They may very well choose Portage La Prairie for an operations base if that is the direction the Department takes.

CUTS IN REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT SPENDING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. "We are in the process of building two Canadas, one which is rich and promising, and another which is underdeveloped and underemployed". Those were the words of the Prime Minister on March 17, 1987. In light of the Prime Minister's words two years ago, I wonder how the Minister of Finance can justify a cut-back of 21 per cent in spending on regional development from this fiscal year to next fiscal year? How does he justify the slashing and cutting of 21 per cent in the poorest parts of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the facts state that over the last four years regional spending has increased by 50 per cent. The facts also state that as a result of this Budget there will be an increase of a further 35 per cent on top of the amount of spending that we have had over the last five years.

In terms of improving a better balance of economic activity across the country, surely the Hon. Member will agree, because he has stated it on a number of occasions, that we must get interest rates down. The only way that we can get interest rates down is to get the annual deficit down and get control of the national debt.

The Member has to stop speaking out of both sides of his mouth. If he wants to get interest rates down, he has to get the annual deficit down as well.

JUSTIFICATION FOR CUTS IN SPENDING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the facts also state in his own Budget papers on page 68 that there will be a 21 per cent cut between fiscal year 1989–90 and fiscal year 1990–91.

Will the Minister explain to the people of Canada how he can justify a cut in the next fiscal year of $90 million in regional development funding for Atlantic Canada? How can he explain a cut of $109 million in Quebec? How can he explain a cut of $28 million in Ontario? How can he explain a cut of $66 million in western Canada?

How can the Minister justify those cuts to the poorest and most disadvantaged parts of Canada in light of the fact that the Prime Minister recognized it as a problem two years ago?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance pointed out and is clearly evident in the documents, regional spending will continue to go up as it has.

I find it passing strange that members of the New Democratic Party state that we should cut support for business, and then state that we should spend even more than we are spending in terms of contributions to business through our regional development programs.

Are members of the NDP in favour of more support to business regionally? If so, that will be factored in in terms of the next Budget. If Members opposite are opposed, why are they complaining?

In any event, if Members opposite look at the numbers objectively, and not from the perspective of class warfare which the NDP seems to be locked into, they will see that there was an increase.

TRADE

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—DISMANTLING OF PROGRAMS

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign the Prime Minister stated that the Free Trade Agreement would have no effect on regional development programs, would have no effect on agricultural subsidies, and would have no effect on the supply managed sectors.

My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Will he now stand in the House and say that the Prime Minister and his Government have once again deceived the Canadian public? This Budget is only the beginning of dismantling all the unique programs that we have in Canada, the programs that make agriculture and our farmers so great.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no connection, no association whatsoever between the measures that we have taken in the Budget and the Free Trade Agreement itself.

Many times during the election campaign I pointed out that, if we do not get our deficit and our debt problems under control, that will totally undermine any benefits that will come from the Free Trade Agreement. The debt and the deficit problems are there standing very large and must be dealt with, with or without a Free Trade Agreement.

AGRICULTURE SUBSIDY PROGRAMS

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, Canadian farmers are good people and they do not deserve an answer like that.

On Friday we found out that the United States Government has accused Canada of restrictive trade practices. One of the areas the Americans mentioned in their hit list is that of freight rate subsidies.

Surprise, surprise, Mr. Speaker. What do we find in the Budget? We see that the At and East grain and flour subsidy program is being cut. There are also other agricultural cuts that the Americans demanded. There are cuts in crop insurance, cuts in the Canadian dairy export subsidy program, cuts in the Prairie Grain Advance Payments, and a partial termination of fuel tax rebate programs.

Why does the Minister of Finance not admit that his office did not make up the Budget, but in fact the office of the Minister for International Trade made up the Budget, and that he had already given up negotiations on agricultural subsidies before they even began.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the Hon. Member's question is absolutely false.

We are now seeing a bit of what the Liberal finance critic talked about when he said that every sparrow that falls is going to be blamed on the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. Here is a good example.

CRIMINAL CODE

PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. When the election was called last fall, one of the important Bills that died was C-54, an Act to amend the Criminal Code regarding pornography. The Government has talked repeatedly about the vital role of family life in our nation, and the need to bring in tough legislation to at least deal with the publication of certain despicable types of pornography. I refer to the sexual exploitation of young children.

Is the Minister really sensitive to the concerns of thousands of Canadians on this issue? If he is, how soon will he bring in legislation?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, my colleague is correct. Bill C-54 died on the Order Paper. Before it did, it provoked a great deal of public discussion. Two of the areas in which there was a general consensus were child pornography and pornography depicting violence. Those two areas are being actively studied by the Ministry at the present time.

LEAK OF DOCUMENT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and it concerns the cause of the Budget leak.

Last week the Prime Minister referred to the leak as "a crime". The Finance Minister referred to it as "a wilful criminal act". The Solicitor General referred to it as "a very serious theft". The Justice Minister himself referred to it as "a theft".

My question to the Minister of Justice is the following. Is it still the position of the Government of Canada that the Budget leak was caused by a criminal act?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the House will know that this matter is presently being investigated by the RCMP. The charges, if any, which are laid, will obviously have to await the outcome of that investigation.

POSSIBLE CRIMINAL ACTION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday and Friday Canadians were led to believe, in fact they were told by Ministers of the Crown, that the Budget leak was caused by a criminal act. Today the Government is not so sure.

Can the Minister of Justice indicate to the House and to Canadians what has changed? What has caused him and his Government to change their minds?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in all discussions surrounding this event one has to be very careful as to who said what.

Mr. Broadbent: You said one thing and the Prime Minister said another.

Mr. Lewis: That is absolutely false. During the telecasting of the evening the comment was made by someone on one of the telecasts that it was a crime. That has been taken up in the vernacular. There will be no discussion on this event until the criminal investigation is finished.

SECURITY AT PRINTING BUREAU

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. It also concerns the leak of the Budget, in particular the security at the main printing plant in Hull.

Last Thursday, the Minister of Supply and Services in response to being asked why extra security personnel at the main plant had not been hired this year, as was the case for previous Budgets, said to the House "all precautions that have been taken in previous years were applied again this year".

Can the Minister of Supply and Services tell this House why he made that statement when, in fact, no extra security had been hired this year contrary to what was done in previous years? In addition, why was this less than accurate information provided to the House?

Hon. Paul Dick (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member does not know what he is talking about. The facts are that five years ago the Budget level of security then in place was applied on a 365 days a year basis. It has been fully in place for the last five years up to the exact period of two and a half weeks ago. When we published this year, there were ten extra security personnel.

SAFETY NET–GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Supply and Services. Last week, he said categorically that the same amount of security was provided for the Budget this year as in other years. Today again, he gave us an answer. He still has not told us whether it was the same amount. Is he ready to admit that the extra security provided in other years was not provided this year? Yes or no? Can he tell us once and for all instead of skirting around the issue?

[English]

Hon. Paul Dick (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is talking about the number of people, I said there were ten more this year than there were last year. That is an increase. That is an improvement.

I would also like the Hon. Member to know that over a period of time, five years, three years, different techniques are used. Two years ago we had security specialists in. We have adopted some new methods. But we have had the same overall strategy and method used in the last three and four years. This year we had even more people.

NATIONAL DROUGHT PROGRAM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, last November 10 during the election the Minister for Grains and Oilseeds announced a $850 million National Drought Program and wheat producers were told to expect between $40 and $45 per acre in aid. Four days later the Minister said that there was no cap on the money, that if the $850 million was not enough there could be more.

Since then we found out that the provinces were never consulted and were not to be part of the funding. Yet we see in the Estimates $425 million or half of the amount. What happened to the program? Where is the money? Will farmers still get $40 or $50 an acre?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, what is happening? The program is well under way. As of the beginning of this week we have over 50,000 cheques in the mail which amount to approximately $200 million to farmers.

If the Member is wondering about what is going on as far as the Estimates are concerned, he should know that some of the money went out in the previous fiscal year. The Hon. Member shakes his head. Perhaps it would be better if he shook his hand because it wouldn't rattle quite as much as when he shakes his head.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member should know that part of the money went out in the previous fiscal year. Some of it is going out now. If supplementary estimates are required, that will happen. But essentially nothing has changed from the time that we announced the program last November 10 and nothing at all has changed since the Estimates last Friday.

TIMING OF PAYMENTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): We have checked with officials, Mr. Speaker. The $425 million takes into account all of the moneys from the previous Budget and the previous allocations. There will only be $425 million allocated for this program. The next set of supplementaries never come until September or October. The Minister has assured us time and time again that this payment would be out before the end of June. Where will the money come from?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, there were consultations with the provinces, contrary to what the Hon. Member says. There are still ongoing consultations and the program is one on which we are still working with the provinces. The money will come and when farmers get it they will be very grateful for receiving it. It is something that they need and they are going to find useful in June and July. The Hon. Member is a farmer. He is one of the only farmers on the other side of the House. He will know that in June and July farmers need money to pay fertilizer bills and that money will be there. As I said, nothing has changed from last November when we announced the program and nothing at all has changed since the Estimates were announced on Friday.

SPACE AGENCY

LOCATION OF AGENCY—ELECTION PROMISE—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I don't have to remind the Prime Minister that the decision to locate the Space Agency in Montreal came as a result of broad consultation, after seeking a consensus throughout the province of Quebec.

Could the Prime Minister give the House the assurance today that the Space Agency will be built in Montreal? Otherwise, how does he intend to explain to contractors, unions, academics and the media that once again, the Tories failed to keep their promises?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I made an announcement in Montreal, on March 1. I quote from the announcement of that day:

[Translation]

Canada's Space Agency will be located in the metropolitan area of Montreal, a centre famous for its excellence in the aerospace industry.

[English]

That was a decision I announced, and that decision remains.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's reply is a clear indication there was a fight about this in Cabinet. It seems that the Minister for the South Shore won and the Minister responsible for Montreal's economic recovery and development lost. I would like to put the following question to the Prime Minister. Since his Minister who was formerly responsible for Montreal was labelled as insignificant by Laurent Picard, what is the Prime Minister going to do to ensure that the Minister of Labour, who is now responsible for Montreal, is not labelled as a weakling?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first of all I think these comments are rather unusual, coming from a gentleman like the Hon. Member. As far as I know, Laurent Picard never made that kind of remark about anyone.

Second, the Minister went to Montreal. He held a press conference, and he indicated the Government's intention to locate the Space Agency in the metropolitan area of Montreal. That was exactly what he said at the press conference. To us, Montreal is Greater Montreal, the metropolitan area. Is the Hon. Member trying to say that the people on the South Shore or the North Shore or west of Montreal are not allowed any hope of prosperity? To us, Montrealers and Quebeckers are first-class citizens. All of them.

Mr. Speaker: A single question for the Hon. Member for Lambton—Middlesex, please.

AGRICULTURE

CROP INSURANCE—AMOUNT OF FINAL PAYMENT

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds. I want to remind him that he was the one that made the announcement on November 10 of $850 million in drought and crop assistance for Canadian farmers.

An Hon. Member: Do you have a speech, Ferguson?

Mr. Ferguson: The Minister included $30 million in Governor General warrants. There is only three hundred and some million dollars in the Estimates for 1989–90. Can the Minister come clean and tell Canadian farmers when they will be getting their final payments and how much they will amount to?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, let me say again that the program was announced on November 10 and nothing has changed. The program is well under way. Some of the Member's neighbours are getting cheques. I think when he goes home and talks to them he will find that out. Nothing has changed as far as the Estimates are concerned, tabled last Friday by the President of the Treasury Board.

Let me also remind the Hon. Member that this is the Government that provided $1.1 billion worth of assistance a year ago because of low prices and this is the Government that provided $1 billion two years ago to assist farmers.

Again, if the Member wants to go home and talk to some of his neighbours who participated he will learn that they very much needed the assistance, and we were happy to be able to provide it for them.

We are on record as being able to provide assistance for farmers when they need it and the same applies concerning this program, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East, a single question please.

THE BUDGET

IMPACT ON SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who promised to protect those in greatest need.

Why has the Government cut $16 million from Secretary of State programs for new Canadians, women, native Canadians, and minorities, when their advocacy groups have no other source of funding and they are absolutely essential to work for equality?

In particular, why has there been a punitive 50 per cent cut over three years for the National Action Committee on the Status of Women? Is this fair?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, as everybody else in this Government has been saying, and I concur entirely, the debt had to be controlled.

There has been some restraint. We have seen our program funding curtailed by some $10 million over the next program year, but indeed we will still have $450 million to assist groups working toward equality and social justice in the areas of multiculturalism, citizenship and official language programs. That is an increase of over 23 per cent over the last year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CRIMINAL CODE

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, my question is about the value of life. I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice.

When will he introduce legislation to protect the lives of the unborn?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Borowski decision by the Supreme Court cleared the way for active consideration of this matter.

I can tell the House that that consideration is taking place and that we are working toward cabinet and caucus decisions in the near future in order that this matter may come to a decision and be brought to the House.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1989–90

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C–11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville had the floor.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I only have about two minutes to go. I want to reiterate to Members of the House that we have a chance here to stop this borrowing Bill. This borrowing Bill is part of the Budget of Canada, which we all know as that big tax attack on the ordinary Canadian people. An increase of $700 for every average Canadian family is being imposed by this Government across the way.

We have a chance to say no in terms of the Budget, and a chance to say no in terms of the borrowing Bill. It has been the most massive tax attack, the most massive tax grab in the history of this country, imposed by the Conservatives on ordinary people.

Second, the Government does not have the courage to bring down interest rates. We are now at the highest real interest rate in this country since the 1930s, and the Conservative Party with its high interest rate policy is hurting ordinary Canadians, driving up the national debt, and throwing more people onto the unemployment rolls. It is about time that we know.

There has been one Conservative Member for Portage—Interlake who has had the courage to get up and say that he may lead a revolt of back-benchers. I hope more Conservative Members of Parliament will join him and lead a revolt against this Party across the way that is raising taxes, raising interest rates and throwing people out of work.

As I mentioned in Question Period, in regional development spending alone, for the net fiscal year the cut-back will be 21 per cent, or $293 million. This is a penalty on the poorest and the most disadvantaged people of this country. It is a penalty imposed on northern Ontario, the Gaspé, Newfoundland, and western Canada. The time has come to say no, and to say no massively to the Conservative Party across the way.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I do not know how many times I have risen in this House and spoken on a borrowing authority Bill. It is before us again in this Parliament with roughly the same kinds of moneys that we have been faced with far too many times.

It would be good if we could get some common sense from the Opposition. It would be good if we had some suggestions on what to do. My friends on the other side speaking on this Bill say that you cannot have the money and that you have to spend more money. Presumably they do not understand the facts of life. The fact is that despite many, many cut-backs in this Budget, the amount that we are going to wind up short on a budgetary basis is $30.5 billion.

We have done some work on the national accounts, and of course that determines the amount of money we really must borrow. Because of money coming into the Government through pension deductions and other funds that the Government has, the Government will really only have to have a total of $20.5 billion as a borrowing requirement for further borrowing for this year.

On top of that we need a contingency allowance. We need some money to replace the money that will be coming in as revenue in the balance of things in the exchange account. We need some money to pay for the money that has already been borrowed this year on Governor General warrants. The effect of this Bill is a requirement to authorize the borrowing of up to $25.55 billion.

Let us say some things about the financing of any country. When we have a Budget we have to determine from where we are going to get the money. We can do that by taxing more, but we have been told that the people of the country are to have a tax revolt and that historically we are the Government that has taxed the most. We have been told that we cannot tax any more. Perhaps we are being told that we cannot even tax what we have taxed.

We have also been told that the other way of handling it is to spend less. However, every single bit of spending program where there has been an iota of cut in this Budget has been attacked by the opposition Members. Every single bit of spending, where there is an iota of cut, has been attacked. They do not have the common sense to say: "You did not cut enough". They do not say that we should cut more. They say that somehow, somewhere, a little bird will come down and give us the money.

I suppose there is another way. We could print it. That is really the suggestion that comes from the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). He stated that we have to cut interest rates. He states that how we do that is as the Governor of the Bank suggested. We print the money, we have the problem solved, we pay our bills and the growth of the economy will cure the debit. To cure the debit, we just go ahead and print it. He says that we will cut interest rates that way.

Has he ever look at the interest rates of countries where they in fact handle their debt that way? Has he looked at the interest rates in Argentina, Brazil, Israel or Yugoslavia. That is how they did it there. That is the mess they are in. He would have us pay our bills with the printing press because that is the only other way. We either tax it or we spend less or we print it unless we borrow it. I do not like borrowing any more than he does. I wish we were not borrowing any money. We are borrowing far too much money. I do not think that there is a Member in this House who can proudly stand up before his or her family and say: "I have been part of a House of Commons that has put the country in the hole by $321 billion, and I am going to put you in the hole by another $25 billion by the time I am finished this year". Are Hon. Members opposite really happy about that?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Blenkarn: None of us are happy about that. We have an obligation as Members of Parliament to do something about it. We do not do something about it by saying: "Oh, I am not going to bother worrying about mathematics. I am not going to bother worrying about the facts of life". Something can be done about it by cutting the appetite we have for government programs. We can do that.

We have a series of committees in this House, some 21 of them, that have Estimates referred to them. Those committees could sit down with the bureaucrats and the Ministers involved and go over those budgetary costs line by line. They could say: "You can get rid of this, or you can get rid of that. Cut it down". Where are the resolutions of members of the Opposition that can be placed right now on the Order Paper to cut down government expense? We do not have to vote the Estimates the way they are presented. They could be cut back. If some good reason could be shown as to why they ought to be cut back I am sure there are all sorts of people on this side of the House who would say: "Aye, aye. Let us do that". Do Members opposite say that? No, no, no. Listen to them, Madam Speaker.

The Member from Pembroke, who is a member of the Liberal Party, talked about the Post Office this morning. He said: "You should not take any money out of the Post Office. Let it keep its $300 million. Cut postal rates or something like that but spend more". With respect to UI he said: "It is terrible, you are being unconstitutional. Spend more". With respect to VIA Rail he said: "The heart of the nation is at stake here. Spend more". Concerning Atomic Energy of Canada he said: "Keep your corporations. Do not privatize them. By golly, do not sell good assets to the private sector where they really will make money. Spend more and keep them in the control of the Crown".

Let us turn to what the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) said. He said: "My goodness, it is an attack on social programs. We are going to tax back, claw back, money paid to pensioners who have over $50,000 of taxable income. My goodness, we can't do that. By George, we have to protect the rich no matter what in terms of universality. We are going to borrow the money to pay it to them. We are going to print the money to pay it to them. But they will be universal". Members of the New Democratic Party believe in social justice for the rich. The other day the Leader of the New Democratic Party stood up and asked a question of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). He asked about teachers on pension. Presumably, there are teachers who receive pensions in excess of $60,000. Some of them are going to lose some of their old age pension. Is that not sad? Is it not sad that we have to say that we cannot afford all the things we would like to give and all the things we would like to take?

When will members of the Opposition come back to us to say: "It is about time we gave for Canada. It is about time we did something for Canada. It is about time we did not grab everything we could". The job of a Member of Parliament is not to take, take, take and to pretend to one's constituents that somewhere behind Parliament Hill there is an orchard where money can be picked off the trees. It is time we had an honest Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: It is time we had the view of members of the Opposition with respect to what is fair to make the country grow.

We have a problem with our debt, but it is not as bad as it was when we took office in 1984. The amount of our borrowing requirement was 6.7 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product. In other words, we had to go out in the marketplace to borrow 6.7 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product just to break even. This year we will have to borrow 3.2 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product. That is less than one-half of the borrowing we had in 1984 in terms of the burden on the economy. The dollar amounts are not that far different. However, they are not what is concerning us.

Mr. Milliken: It should be.

Mr. Blenkarn: The dollar amount borrowed in 1983–84 was $24,700,000,000. In 1984–85 it was $31,850,000,000. In 1985–86 it was $30,200,000,000.

The fact is that we have reduced the requirement in absolute dollar terms. We have reduced the requirement as a percentage of Gross Domestic Product to less than half of what it was. However, that is no answer. The debt gets bigger and the amount of money required to carry it gets bigger. If we add $25 billion to the gross this year at 10 per cent interest it will amount to $2.5 billion. At 12 per cent interest it comes out to $3 billion in additional interest. This means that right now our debt is reaching what amounts to a critical mass. The country has to grow and taxes have to grow by just $3 billion more in order to cover the additional interest on the additional debt. That is a real problem for any government.

We are in the position of having to come to grips with that problem. In the Budget we hope to be able to reduce the demand to 0.3 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product in the 1993 borrowing authority Bill. We hope in 1994 not to have a borrowing authority Bill. We hope then to pay back some of what we have borrowed.

Mr. Riis: Hope, hope, hope!

Mr. Blenkarn: My friend says that if one hopes enough it will go away.

Mr. Riis: Do something.

Mr. Blenkarn: We have been doing something. However, we have not had the co-operation that we should have had, particularly from a Party that claims that it is trying to build a country. It is not easy to solve the various problems and demands in this widespread country.

I have a colleague who is really upset by the fact that military cut-backs may wind up closing his base in Portage. I have colleagues who are upset because perhaps the train will not go through their constituencies any longer and that perhaps VIA Rail will have to close. I have colleagues who are concerned that perhaps we have to sell more corporations. I hope we do. What we have to do is get rid of the debt. We have to get the country to the point at which we pay our bills as they come due with the taxes we take in. We cannot go any longer and forever and ever extend the obligation on to our kids, our grandchildren and our great grandchildren. That seems to be the attitude of my friends opposite. Every time we try to cut back an expense or do something to conserve, they complain. Every time we increase taxes, they howl. When we present a borrowing authority Bill, which I think is a terrible Bill, they say they do not like it either. Somewhere along the line we have to take our medicine. We can either print more money, tax more money, spend less, or borrow. They do not want us to tax more, and they do not want us to cut our spending even to the extent that we have.

Perhaps we should go and print it. I do not know. If we print it, we will wind up without an economy at all and all our savings and our futures will be gone. Or, we can borrow it, gradually reduce our borrowing needs and bit by bit get our country back in shape. There is no easy answer to it.

We could follow the example of New Zealand. It had the same problem in 1983 when its Labour Government took over. It had a deficit of 8 per cent of its Gross Domestic Product.

In four years New Zealand pushed its Government into surplus. It had unemployment of 1 per cent when it took over. Now it has unemployment rates of 12 per cent and 13 per cent.

When David Lange, the Prime Minister of New Zealand, was here last week and was questioned about it, he said: "We decided that we would pay our bills and that our population would have to pay the penalty. We knew when we did what we did with our cut-backs and our hard action that they would. We are not at all surprised about the level of unemployment. Frankly it will be there for some short period of time".

I do not know what is his idea of short, but the fact is that that is another answer. We have decided not to take that route. We have decided to continue on with a whole host of programs to assist agriculture, to assist regional development, to assist the creation of new industries and businesses in remote parts of the country.

If we take a look at the Estimates, we will find that in almost every case the amount of dollars spent next year is more than the dollars spent last year. The fact is we are spending that money. Perhaps we should not be spending it, but we are spending that money because we do not want to create the kind of situation that Mr. Lange created knowingly, with malice aforethought, the way the Labour Party operated in New Zealand.

My friend says that the Labour Party did that deliberately, with malice aforethought. Perhaps that is what we ought to do, or perhaps this Labour Party would have us do what the Labour Party has done in Israel. That Labour Party turned on the printing press. It made it so that its currency is not worth anything. In Mexico—there is another Labour Party—you do not quote the price of a house in pesos; you quote it in American dollars. Nobody will take their money.

An Hon. Member: A Labour Party in Mexico?

Mr. Blenkarn: I believe it has socialist in its name. I am sure my friend does not like it, but the fact of the matter is that we are trying to build a solid economy. We do not like borrowing. We wish we did not have this Bill. We think we must unfortunately present this Bill. We want to say that this Bill is a solid, fair answer to the problems that the country faces.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, in Bill C-11 before the House today, the Government is asking for the authority to borrow $24.8 billion, as may be required for public works and general purposes.

Madam Speaker, we know that a substantial part of the $321 billion debt which Tory Members like to blame on a previous Government— We know that this debt has doubled in the past two years. We know there is a lot of rhetoric about this debt. I want to ask the Hon. Member who is, after all, a man to be taken seriously, a Member who is known in this House for his understanding of economics— There is a substantial part of this so-called debt which is caused by the Government's borrowing of public monies. I am referring more specifically to the Canada Pension Plan which represents about $49 billion of this debt. I am also referring to public service pension plans, including the RCMP and the Armed Forces. This is another borrowing authority regularly used by the Government, and one that it must record in its accounts.

There are aspects of this so-called accounting that need explaining, and I would take the Hon. Member at his word and ask him quite simply, in public, to explain to the House which part of this public debt he so deplores. So many of us do, but I want to know which part he deplores more specifically as chairman of the Finance Committee? What part of this public debt is really money received by the Government in the form of contributions from so many Canadians who work for the Government, including the Armed Forces and the RCMP, and the contributions we all have to make to the pension plan? What proportion of the debt is the result of accumulating these debts over the years, money that is owed to Canadians?

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: The $320 million is the amount of money owing by the Government of Canada to bring into good standing the pension advances made. One of the reasons this borrowing authority Bill is not for the deficit of $30.5 billion and only for $20.5 billion is those particular situations the Hon. Member speaks of.

Those are obligations of Canada and are included in the $320 billion. They represent something in the order of $80 billion of the outstanding amount. About $50 million, unfortunately, is owed either to foreigners, the balance to Canadian pension funds, life insurance, Canadian individuals and savers. That is a very great sum. The whole amount is owing. The whole amount eventually must be available. What we are talking about in this Bill is money borrowing from the street, not from ourselves so to speak.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, Bill C-11 is a Bill to borrow $24,800 million. If we listen to the exciting speech of the Chairman of the Finance Committee, he talks about the need to reduce the debt and the deficit. Everyone agrees.

I have two specific questions to put to the Member. First, there are not many things that we look to the United States and say: "Listen, that is not a bad idea; maybe we should adopt that in Canada". I know the Government thinks that we should adopt almost anything American, but there are some good items.

Mr. McDermid: Your Leader keeps suggesting that.

Mr. Riis: Yes, the Leader of the New Democratic Party today said that maybe there was a lesson we should take.

I want to ask a question of the Member. Down in the United States when one makes income from capital gains by speculating on the stock market or in land or whatever, one pays tax on it. As a matter of fact, almost every country in the world taxes capital gains as income, but not this Government. Oh, no. As a matter of fact it says that if one speculates on the stock market or on anything and make $100,000, one does not have to pay a single penny in income tax.

An Hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Riis: Let us just say that one has a $100,000 capital gains tax-free, whether or not one likes it. We are one of the few countries in the world that does not consider capital gains as regular income but privileged income. Of course, that is to be expected from that Government.

• (1530)

Second, why is there a provision in this country whereby 89,000 large profitable corporations do not pay a single penny in income tax? Will the Hon. Member identify one other country that would allow this for tens of thousands of large profitable corporations, including for example the Bank of Montreal for some years, the Royal Bank for some years, General Motors for some years, and Mobile Oil? Why would we not tax these companies when they make hundreds of millions of dollars in profits but do not pay one cent in income tax? Can he identify another country that would allow this to take place?

If he wants to reduce the deficit in a fair and just way, perhaps it is about time we started asking the large corporate sector to pay their fair share. Right now they pay nothing, in many years. As well, the Government should start taxing capital gains as regular imcome.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I will answer the second question first and the first question last. He will be pleased with the Budget. Large corporations with over $10 million in assets will now pay a minimum corporate tax.

Mr. Riis: What rate?

Mr. Blenkarn: The rate is not as large as it might be, and maybe the tax has to be altered. We will be dealing with that matter in the Finance Committee.

I want to point out to the Hon. Member that we are now in a situation where every corporation with over $10 million in assets, whether it makes money or loses money, will be paying some form of corporate tax. That is even if it is losing money.

Most people normally say one should not pay tax if one does not make any money. But even if the company loses money it will be paying this minimum corporate tax. For that reason, I am surprised that the New Democratic Party has not stood on their chairs and cheered, instead of walking out.

Let us deal with the capital gains. The Member will know that the United States is the only industrial country in the world that taxes capital gains at the full rate. He will also know that the United States will probably alter its rate almost immediately to reduce substantially the capital gains taxation it has.

In Germany, if the gain is over 10 years it does not tax it. The United Kingdon indexes capital gains at the rate of inflation. A year ago the Finance Committee suggested that capital gains tax be indexed to the rate of inflation. The Hon. Member will know that advisers to the NDP agreed to that. He will know that this position has been put forward to the Government. There may well be some changes in our system.

In any event, what we do right now is tax all gains this year at 66 per cent of the gain as taxable income. Next year it will be 75 per cent of the gain as taxable income.

Mr. Riis: There is $100,000 tax-exempt.

Mr. Blenkarn: There is an exemption over the entire lifetime of a person of $100,000, which makes it possible for the ordinary sensible young Canadian to buy a cottage or something of that nature and not have to worry about paying tax on it. It makes it possible for that ordinary Canadian to buy a share in a small business and if it goes up he can get away without paying tax on it. The ordinary person can be exempt from some minor amount of taxable income in his lifetime.

I do not know what ordinary people are, but it seems to me that is ordinary help for ordinary people.

[Translation]

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate today on a bill to provide borrowing authority, a very important piece of legislation.

[English]

I think there is a great deal of justice in the House that perhaps happens accidently. I was interested in listening to the hon. chairman of the Finance Committee. I am not surprised why he sits so far to the right.

The chairman of the Finance Committee said that we should make suggestions, that the Opposition was very negative, that we opposed everything in the Budget and could not find anything that was appropriate. One of the advantages to that is that it puts us in with a majority in this country.

As the Budget unfolds, whether in the House or outside the House, we recognize more and more that big business, small business, labour, people on low income, people in middle income brackets all seem to be unhappy with the steps the Government took.

The suggestion I would venture to make to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Government with respect to their spending and revenue plans is that they respect the people of Canada enough now that the election is over to tell it like it is. I find it extremely difficult to listen to people suggest that the Opposition should explain to Canadians how to play the fiscal and monetary game. Government Members tell Canadians through their elected representatives that we should be explaining how we would tax, what we would tax, what we would not tax, what programs we would cut and what programs we would expand.

The problem with this spending request by the Government and its Budget is not just the leak and the fact that we are dealing with a lot money, it is that Canadians pay billions of dollars into the coffers of this country on the basis of trust and credibility. Every year around this time people are much lighter in their wallets and bank accounts. Many people fill out their income tax returns on their own, and voluntarily send money to the Government. The problem is that those people who are expected to be honest in dealing with their revenue and expense matters are not at all convinced that the Government is dealing with its finances in the same way.

The reason I have great difficulty listening to some Members opposite when we get into these discussions is that it is very difficult to tell what their position was last fall. For them to ask people on this side to explain how we would go about it is a real conundrum. Last fall members of the Government had access to the books and knew the situation. The Minister of Finance told us last fall that everything was rosy and well managed. We were told that they were the people who could really take care of the finances of this country, that the Government had a proven track record.

What has become of that rosy forecast? How dare those Members suggest to us that we are being irresponsible when in the space of five or six months we have gone from a Government that says it can spend $15 billion or $20 billion on election promises—

Mrs. Sparrow: That is better than the $26 billion you were talking about.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): What was that?

Mrs. Sparrow: $26 billion.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): The fact of the matter is that what we said last fall did not wash. That is why we are sitting over here.

Mrs. Sparrow: That is right.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): You should be forthright enough, courteous enough to excuse yourself to the people of Canada for having misled them last fall. That is what you should do.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member will speak through the Chair. It would be appreciated.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Certainly, Madam Speaker. I hope anyone intervening would do likewise.

The situation we are faced with not only concerns borrowing money or spending money, but misrepresentation. Some want us to believe and want Canadians to believe that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) last fall did not know how bad things were. Otherwise, they misled us.

The chairman of the Finance Committee said earlier that we cannot have it both ways. Our problem in dealing with Canadians and making sure that we can maintain some trust and integrity in the system is that the Government must be far more forthright than it has been. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have often talked about the question of fairness when answering questions about the Budget. People in this country are prepared to face the reality of what the deficit and the debt are doing to Canadians. They have great difficulty, however, in believing people who try to misrepresent that some time this year, in 1989, our total debt will have doubled in the period of time, Madam Speaker, Members to your right have sat in government.

Within five years, the total debt will have doubled from $170 billion, yet over and over Members ask Canadians to trust them. The Minister for International Trade two weeks ago in the House said that last fall in Newfoundland—and he was absolutely correct—there would be no changes to the UIC legislation that would be detrimental to workers in this country.

In effect we are asking Canadians today to write a cheque. That is what it comes down to. Senior citizens and people at home, people who have to manage nickels and dimes and dollars, tens of dollars and hundreds of dollars, have great difficulty grasping the idea of $28 billion. It is unfortunate that people administering those funds are not as careful as our senior citizens and single-parent families in managing their funds. They are not as careful as students at university who are hardly able to get through because of cut-backs in post-secondary education.

To continue to ask Canadians to share this burden, they must believe that the burden is being shared equally and fairly. They also must believe that the money they are paying into the Government or the money the Government is borrowing is being well spent. I think that is where we are falling down on the job.

It was interesting to hear people speak of universality being preserved in this Budget. Sneaking in the back door and attacking anyone who raises the question of the threat to universality on the basis that we are defending people who make between $50,000 and $70,000 a year is a neat trick. The fact is that once the threshold is set in, it can be and will be changed just as a result of inflation. Those programs are threatened. It is not fair to say that people making between $50,000 and $70,000 a year are being protected. The question is: When will the Government change it?

What will we do with the national sales tax? When the sales tax was introduced, accompanying it was the term "revenue neutral". The Government will implement this new national sales tax on January 1, 1991. The Government undertakes that the tax will be revenue neutral. In the meantime, put the taxes on Canadians: excise; gas; cigarettes; alcohol. Better than that, institute an increase in the manufacturers' sales tax. Billions of dollars are being added in 1989 and 1990 to make sure that when we get into revenue neutral, we have squeezed the well so dry there will be nothing more to take no matter what type of tax is brought in. That is what happens to trust and credibility when people begin to fathom and look through all the rhetoric, thick books, the Estimates and the rest of it. That is what people are beginning to grasp. It is not a question of whether one program should be cut or expanded, whether this tax should be raised of that one reduced, or whether low-income families are being hit harder than middle-income families, or whether high-income families are getting away unscathed. There is a fundamental breach of trust here.

We have heard much talk about Ministers of Finance who should resign or who should not resign or who did resign or who did not resign, depending on the circumstances. In this particular situation, I believe the exercise in terms of the budget leak is one that may be of some interest. It shows up a problem of abuse if insiders were able to take advantage of the leak because they were able to get to their brokers or able to get involved in transactions that helped them out and put them in a position to profit by the leak.

I must give the Minister of Finance the benefit of the doubt. He must have believed what he said last fall about how good things were in Canada. If, after four years of holding the portfolio, he did not know any better last fall than what he was saying, compared to what he is doing to us this spring, that is why he should resign, not because somebody walked out with a Budget or left one somewhere or somebody found one. The problem for the average Canadian is what to do with a leaked Budget that will be passed by this Government? That is the problem for Canadians, not how it happened, who did it or why they did it. It is the attack on the universality of programs. It is the attack on regions of the country.

I was sorry to see the Chairman of the Finance Committee leave. At the very outset, he exhibited an attitude that some people in government have, that we punish people who did not do the right thing on November 21. People in Chatham, New Brunswick, believe that today. People in Summerside, Prince Edward Island, believe that today, that they are being punished. People in Atlantic Canada believe they are being punished because we did return more Members to the left than to the right, more Liberals than Conservatives. We will pay a price because of the attitude of some people who feel that Government and its largess should be directed to those who have supported them.

All of us collectively should find a way to have Canadians believe that there is a commitment to telling them the truth, to telling them what is really happening. Why is it that Canada cannot balance its Budget? Why is it that a tax system appears to be unfair? Why is it that politicians say one thing in September, October and November and then do something else four or five months later? Individuals that I spoke with last weekend were not worried about why the Budget was leaked but, rather, why Parliament did not sit in January, February and March. They wondered if it was specifically arranged to leave as big a gap as possible between the big lie and the harsh reality. That is what it comes down to. Canadians are getting wise. It is not to our advantage to have them become any more cynical than they already are.

When we deal with the Budget and this particular Bill, we must recognize that it is not just an exercise to discuss our own petty grievances. We are in a position to discuss matters that Canadians are talking about more and more. Every Canadian has had to deal with what the Finance Minister has brought before us. We are dealing with a Bill that will provide borrowing authority for the Government to pick up some $24.8 billion. I am sure it is just coincidental but that is roughly the amount the Finance Minister hopes will be the deficit next year. It is beyond the wildest imagination of every Canadian to deal in real terms with this figure of $28 billion. They deal with hundreds of dollars and thousands of dollars. They deal with buying groceries. They deal with the uncertainty of those people who cannot buy a home. What will the sales tax do to them? What is the impact of this Budget on their daughters and sons? What will the impact be in regions of the country where any type of reduction or slowdown in the economy will be disastrous?

• (1550)

I do not believe for a moment that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) or the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had any intention of telling us that they were wrong last fall in the promises that were made, for example, to elect the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard). It is amazing that hundreds of millions of dollars could be committed and in part spent last summer as though the bank vaults were open and there was no problem at all, because we have to get my friend into the House of Commons and into the Cabinet.

However, when we are talking about UIC benefits and the privatization of the Unemployment Insurance Program then there is no money from the Government at all. There is not a reduction, there is no money at all—unless, to be fair, there is a major catastrophe or a tremendous sense of urgency. If we continue with high interest rates, with deficit financing, and this type of borrowing, and the slowdown that many people are predicting in the economy, that urgent and emergency situation will undoubtedly come about. It is not something that anyone looks forward to.

In closing, I hope the Government will recognize, as we all do, that there is not much choice in the matter. Canadians have not become totally acquiescent. They understand that it has gone a long way. The chairman of the Finance Committee suggested that someone might start a tax revolt. Politicians do not start tax revolts. They cause them.

Mr. Nunziata: I wish to congratulate my colleague on an excellent speech. I would like to indicate to him and to the House my serious concerns with respect to the Budget and the money the Government wants to borrow in order to meet its commitments. I am also concerned with what the Budget will do and what it has done to the social safety net that has taken years and years to develop. That social safety net makes Canada unique. For example, I am speaking of the Old Age Security Program, the Unemployment Insurance Program, the Family Allowance Program, the day care system, and the transfer payments that go from the federal government to the provincial governments. I am shocked that the Government should break its solemn commitment to the people of Canada with respect to the social safety net. I am also very concerned in terms of the impact it will have on Canadians and Canada generally in the years to come.

If we could turn the clock ahead a few years, perhaps to the years 2000, I shudder to think what the country will be like in the year 2000 and the years beyond with respect to those least able to help themselves. For example, what will happen when there is no longer an effective Old Age Security Program, or an effective Family Allowance Program, both of which are no longer universal? What will happen when the Government pulls out its funding with respect to day care, education, and health care? Those programs make Canada unique and make it the envy of the world.

I would like to ask my colleague about his concerns and his predictions in terms of that social safety net, and what may or may not be left of that safety net in the years to come, and the impact that it will have on future senior citizens, future single-parent families, and on future unemployed in Canada.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): The point I am trying to make, which many of us will have to look at seriously, is the whole notion of trust and credibility. Canadians are prepared to share the burden, if they think it is being done fairly. Unemployment insurance, family allowance, and old age pensions are a sacred trust. We must not allow the trust of Canadians to deteriorate to a point where they become cynical. I have listened to people talk about New Zealand, the United States, and about other countries and how they do it. This country is very special in how it deals across the board with men and women in every part of the country. There are basic standards, basic programs, universal programs, and programs that allow people to deal with their future with some degree of security.

In answer to my friend's question, I would say that the biggest danger we face is that Canadians may lose confidence in the country and its ability to provide programs for the young, the elderly, and people with less opportunity. That is the beginning of what we are seeing now. There are thresholds of $50,000 to $70,000. The manner in which universality is being attacked is disguised. UIC is privatized. Regional development programs are cut back, which makes it tougher for regions in some parts of the country.

With the experience of deindexation of family allowance, selling off Crown corporations, and the types of things we see in the Budget, all Canadians will become more concerned about that net of support that has been out there for so long.

Mr. Karygiannis: I want to congratulate my colleague for bringing up some important points to the House. I am sure he will recall that back in 1984 the debt was $170 billion, and now it has almost doubled. The Government is asking us to pay for it.

The Hon. Member across the aisle is laughing. This is not a laughing matter, Sir.

Mr. McDermid: Who else is going to pay for it? Don't be so silly.

Mr. Karygiannis: You are going to turn around and tax us at 9 per cent. Your mismanagement, Sir—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member should go through the Chair in his comments, please.

Mr. Tobin: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I support what you are saying. The Member is a new Member, but he is a very wise and intelligent one. I am sure you would want to make clear that all Hon. Members, including Ministers on that side of the House, ought to go through the Chair with their comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member has understood what the procedure is, and I am sure he will be careful.

Mr. Karygiannis: The Government's mismanagement, and my hon. colleague across the aisle happens to be part of the Government—

Mr. McDermid: And proud of it.

Mr. Karygiannis: The Government is proposing a 9 per cent tax on small business. Would my hon. colleague advise the House how this will affect the small business community in his riding? How will they be able to bear this 9 per cent, and how will they be able to manage it?

Mr. Young (Gloucester): The proposed federal sales tax will be a boondoggle for small business. We understand the unsuccessful efforts by the Government to try to arrange a program with the provinces where the points of collection and the bureaucracy involved would be far simpler. The fact that the federal Government has decided to move unilaterally will make a morass of the whole collection system. It is to be put in on top of the provincial programs, with the exception of Alberta, where there is no provincial sales tax. How is the Government going to collect it? How much red tape will there be? How much more time will be spent by small, medium, and big business is something no one looks forward to.

I am sure there will be a great outcry from the private sector to make sure that in whichever manner the Government proceeds it does it a little more efficiently than some of the other things it has been doing in the last few weeks.

Mr. McDermid: I have a couple of questions for my hon. friend. First, he made a comment on the 9 per cent sales tax. It is the intention of the Government to introduce draft legislation early this summer in order that those businesses and those individual Canadians will have an opportunity to comment before legislation is brought into the House. There will then be a period of one year to adjust before the tax is put in place. He says that businesses will object to it. It is just the opposite. I did one-third of the pre-budget meetings. Businesses, without exception, encouraged us to change the 12 per cent, now 13 per cent, federal sales tax and to get into a broader based sales tax.

• (1600)

Mr. Manley: Did they encourage you to raise it?

Mr. McDermid: I would just leave that comment with the Hon. Member. He will have plenty of opportunity as will the public to participate in that program as he has had over the last two years in discussing tax reform which his Party supported.

Mr. Nault: I thought you were going to ask a question.

Mr. McDermid: Yes, I did, but this is comments and questions so the new Member can understand how it works.

The Hon. Member was talking about the safety nets and the programs that we have and we want to protect. Yet, at the same time, he is saying that everything should remain as the status quo, that we should not tackle this deficit problem. I understand he has a great deal of experience in the provincial Government and as he is now elected to the federal House perhaps he could give us the position of the Liberals on how they would, in fact, tackle the deficit problem?

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): We are not the Government. You are the Government.

Mr. McDermid: Here is a former Minister saying "We are not the Government. It is not our problem". What I am saying is that it is everybody's problem, every Canadian should be concerned about the debt. She sits there and says, "We are not the Government. We are not going to tell you how to do it." What an irresponsible statement from a Privy Councillor. I cannot believe it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Gloucester.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to get an opportunity to respond.

The one thing I would say to you and to my hon. friend through the Chair—

An Hon. Member: Honourable friend?

Mr. Young (Gloucester): I think all Members go through enough in here that they deserve to be called honourable no matter how they behave.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Young (Gloucester): The thing that I want to make clear to my friend is that the tackling of the deficit and the huge debt in Canada is serious.

The Minister of Finance did not recognize the problem last fall in October and November because he did not say much about it and was still planning on spending a lot of money. However, the one thing the Liberal Party will never do is eliminate the debt on the backs of the elderly, the kids in universities, and the UIC recipients. Nor will we cut back on medicare and EPF funds to the provinces. That is one thing we will never do.

Some Hon. Members: Never!

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1989–90

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Murray W. Dorin (Edmonton Northwest): Madam Speaker, I appreciate having the opportunity to speak on this important Bill today.

Bill C-11, as has been noted by other Hon. Members, provides the Government with the authority to borrow $25.5 billion to meet its requirements for the next fiscal year. That is an absolutely frightening number. Most Canadians and probably people in the Chamber can hardly comprehend that in any significant way because it is a number which is beyond anything that most of us would deal with on a day to day basis.

However, we have to consider when we are looking at the borrowing requirements of the Government in what kind of situation the finances of the country are and the budget squeeze that has brought this requirement about, to realize just why we require these funds.

What are the alternatives? Very few or none have been provided by the opposition Parties, even though they have criticized this measure. People must understand what we are doing to work ourselves out of this problem, so that within the next three to four years we can come here following a federal Budget and not be required to present a Bill like this one and continue borrowing.

On this side of the House we are not prepared to dismiss the fiscal position of the Government and to ignore the problem as if it did not exist. If we take a look at government expenditures, and I would like to consider two or three of the larger expenditure areas of government, we can clearly see why it is that we are driven to this additional borrowing as well as putting in place the tax measures that we have.

Senior citizens' pensions represent the largest single expenditure of the Government, in the neighbourhood of $15 billion a year.

Those pensions are indexed so that every year the amount we spend on them will increase by the amount of inflation, running currently at about 4 per cent, so we have an approximate 4 per cent increase simply as a result of that.

Second, the population is growing older. There are more and more people turning 65 and entitled to those pensions.

The result of inflation and people turning 65 will require the Government to find an additional $1.5 billion this year, just to maintain the existing program, not to improve it, enhance it or increase it.

Let us take a look at a similar situation, the transfer payments to provincial Governments. This is money the provinces use for such things as health care and education. Those amounts are indexed or driven by a formula that provides the provincial Governments an amount each year increased by more than the rate of inflation.

A third element is the interest that the federal Government will pay on the debt. I will speak more on this later. That interest will increase this year by an estimated $6.5 billion. Just to stay where we are and maintain the fiscal position of Government, we need to find an additional $9 billion because of the changes to those items. This means no change in government policy, no growth, nor any increases. This is just to stay where we are to continue with seniors pensions, support for health care and education that most Canadians believe are fundamental requirements of any Government.

Where do we find that $9 billion and any additional amounts that might be required for any other demands placed upon the Government? We have three alternatives. We can cut or reduce other programs, we can increase taxes, and we can borrow additional money to finance the expenditures of government.

The current Budget has all three. I am not going to stand here and pretend to suggest that these are popular measures. I am not even going to suggest that I am particularly happy about any of them. I am somewhat embarrassed to say that we will borrow $25 billion to continue the operation of government. I find it incredible that the opposition Parties would not recognize this situation and offer anything more constructive than we have heard from them today.

We on the government side are prepared to take the necessary steps, even though some may be unpopular. I heave heard there is a sign over the door in the Department of Finance. On the way in it says "Watch Your Step". On the way out it says, "Watch Your Language". Some of us may need to put a similar sign above our doors, because I expect that we are going to face a fair degree of criticism over the next few months as we explain to Canadians why these measures are necessary.

Some people say that we should put more emphasis on expenditure reduction. I have just mentioned three areas of government expenditure that represent over three-quarters of the Government's spending. Only 16 per cent of government spending is directed toward the operation of government salaries for civil servants and paper for them to shuffle. When most people talk about cutting back on expenditures, they are not talking about pensions nor transfers to provinces. What they are generally talking about is that area of operations of government where they believe there are large sums of government waste.

While I do not believe for one moment that we should discontinue our vigilance, which has been duly noted by the Auditor General in his reports in the previous years whereby he has suggested that the Government recently has made a lot of progress in this area, I think we have to realize that when 16 per cent of government spending represents all of those operations, we are not going to be able to find the kinds of sums we need just by reducing expenditures.

There is also a criticism that has been made that taxes represent too large a share of the requirements we have found, and expenditure reduction is not enough. I would like to say two things in that regard. First of all, taxes show up immediately in the government's finances. Taxes show up immediately the day they are implemented, such as the gasoline tax, which can begin to be collected right away. Spending reductions take longer. Even though we may make certain adjustments with regard to military expenditures, Crown corporations and other operations of government, the fact of the matter is that the announcement today does not translate into the reduction tomorrow. As all Members understand, it takes a considerable period of time to wind down these various operations before any cost savings are achieved. So these measures we have taken on the expenditure side do not have their immediate impact tomorrow, but we will see them over the months and years ahead.

I would also like to make mention of one other area, and that is the question of some of the claw-backs in government expenditures. Again, these measures do not show up directly as a reduction to government expenditures, even though the net effect is the same. The reason for that is that when we use this claw-back procedure, what essentially happens is that the people receive the payment, whether it is the family allowance payment or the pension cheque from the Government, on one side, and then we turn around and tax back some of those benefits for people with incomes of over $50,000 a year. What that results in is an increase in both numbers. We show up an expenditure on one side and a reduction on the other, whereas if we were to take the net difference only and report that on the expenditure side, the picture would look somewhat different. I think Members should be aware of that when hearing suggestions that perhaps we have not done enough on the expenditure side. In reality, there have been a lot of expenditure reductions that will only come into fruition over the next months and years. As well, some of these measures will show up on the tax side rather than on the expenditure side.

I would like to make mention of one of the comments made earlier by the opposition Parties. They have suggested that we should be doing more in terms of taxing large corporations. We have increased taxes for large corporations in this Budget to the degree that I have not heard any of them suggesting that they think they are particularly happy about this Budget. I would like to deal with one particular number that we keep hearing in this Chamber—we heard it this afternoon, and that is the suggestion that there are 89,000 large corporations in Canada that pay no income tax. That is absolutely false. First of all, there are not 89,000 large corporations in Canada to begin with. There are, in fact, 2,208 large corporations in Canada if we use the definition set out in the Corporation and Labour Union Returns Act.

An Hon. Member: An exaggeration.

Mr. Dorin: We have an example of an exaggeration once again from the socialist Party, where rather than recognizing that there are 2200 large corporations in Canada, they suggest there are 89,000. This serves to assist them in perpetuating the myth that somehow there are vast numbers of people with great amounts of money that we could find, and somehow ignore the fact that all Canadians really must share in what we are trying to do.

I would like to address another matter briefly. The reason I would like to do that is that I see the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Cowichan (Mr. Stupich) is in this Chamber. He and I, I must say, have something that we share in common, although it was amazing to me last week to discover this, and that is that we are both chartered accountants. I did not believe there were any chartered accountants in that party.

An Hon. Member: What a shock.

Mr. Dorin: I was shocked, I must admit.

One of the other myths that we often hear propagated by the socialist Party, the NDP, is the suggestion that somehow there are deferred taxes around that corporations have not paid and that we should collect those, and if we did we would have no deficit. The fact of the matter is that unfortunately my profession is responsible for using some language in the preparation of financial statements and financial accounts that is not entirely correct, in my view. I have protested this and made that suggestion, because in fact what are commonly called deferred taxes have absolutely nothing to do with taxes payable to the Government. They have nothing to do with current taxes owing on that corporation's financial statement that they should be paying. What they are is a suggestion or a provision by companies that somehow there may be some tax payable in the future. Therefore they feel that they should record something just in case that time might come, whereas in reality there is no actual tax liability outstanding.

I know that the Member from Nanaimo—Cowichan understands that, and I am hopeful that he will correct those other Members in his Party who continue to put forward this suggestion that there is someone out there who owes this amount to the Government. In fact it is not true. Even if we were to take that as true and snap all that revenue immediately from those corporations, it is still an amount that is less than $30 billion, which would not eliminate the deficit and certainly would not have anything to do with the debt in this country, which is over $320 billion. Even if we accepted what is totally incorrect and is untrue but is a myth that is being suggested by that party, there would in reality be very little impact on the situation we find ourselves in today.

I would like to make a couple of comments with regard to the progress we have made so far and what we can hope to see over the next two to three years. The fact of the matter, as was pointed out earlier by the chairman of the Finance Committee, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), is the borrowing requirements for this year have been reduced down to approximately $20 billion per year this year. That is considerably less than the deficit, and there are reasons for that.

By 1990–91, by two years from now, following along with the various measures that have been provided in the Budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last week, we will have managed to contain the growth of the national debt to less than the growth in the Gross National Product. That is a very important step and a very important point to reach. If a Canadian has a debt of $10,000 and a salary of $20,000 on which to service and pay that debt, he will find himself in a very difficult situation. That is the situation of the Government of Canada today. But if they are able to get to a position whereby their income is increasing at a more rapid rate than the debt they owe, they will find themselves with room to pay the debt, to reduce it, and eventually work themselves out of the situation. Within two years under the measures that have been provided by the Minister of Finance in this Budget, we will be in that position.

By 1993–94 we will be in the position, all other things being equal, that the Government of Canada will no longer have to borrow money to finance its expenditures. On the basis of accounting similar to the United Kingdom and the United States, if we measured it the same as they do, we would have no deficit at that point in time.

I think I can say that while I am unhappy that we have to do this today, that we have to present this Bill and ask again for the Government to be provided with an additional $25.5 billion, this will hopefully be one of the last three or four times we will have to do this before we can come back and report that in fact the Government will be receiving more money than it is bringing in and we are reducing the national debt.

There is one final point that is worth making. It is that the Government is now receiving more in revenue than it is spending on programs. If we did not have the legacy left to us by the former Government, a situation which has forced us over the last three to four years to borrow these large amounts of money, then we would no longer have to present the kind of Bill that we have here before us.

We are paying our own way as a Government now. We are addressing the question of the debt that was accumulated over the last 20 years, most of those years being the responsibility of another political Party. What I recommend to the Members of this House is that, reluctantly, we should support this Bill. We should support the request of the Minister of Finance. If we stick with him, in three or four years we should no longer need to borrow these large sums of money. That will be a day which we will all welcome. I certainly look forward to it.

Mr. Keyes: Madam Speaker, I have some difficulty with a problem that has arisen not only with a constituent in the great riding of Hamilton West but one which has probably been raised in other ridings. A constituent of mine came to me and said: "Why is it that I have spent many, many years paying my taxes and contributing to UI and, when I find myself unemployed suddenly and want to collect UI, something I have paid into for so many years, the Government's view is that I will have to be taxed back. However, I make $51,000 per year. I have paid my taxes in the beginning and now I will be taxed back on the UI benefits I wish to receive". Quite simply put the constituent wonders why he is being penalized for being a good financial manager, something which this Government is obviously not.

Mr. Dorin: Madam Speaker, first, the constituent in question is not being penalized at all. If I understand the Hon. Member's question correctly, he is suggesting that someone who earns $51,000 per year is not eligible for unemployment insurance benefits, or that they would have them taxed back. That is simply not the case. There is nothing in the Budget that I am aware of that provides for anything like that. There is no taxing back of unemployment insurance benefits. However, I might have an opinion as to whether or not there should be. I might suggest that it should be looked at but the Budget does not do that.

I say to the Hon. Member that unemployment insurance is meant to be exactly that. Therefore what we have done is we have said that the premiums will be paid by employees and employers. The employees will receive the benefits should they become unemployed. Insurance is insurance. When one buys auto insurance or fire insurance for one's house a premium is paid. If one has an accident or one's house burns down then one collects the benefit. That is exactly the case with unemployment insurance. There is no taxing back provided for in the Budget.

Mr. Barrett: Madam Speaker, I was interested in the comments made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton Northeast—

Mr. Dorin: Northwest.

Mr. Barrett: The Hon. Member's directions are about as confused as his economics.

Mr. McDermid: You are the one who is confused.

Mr. Barrett: Is the Hon. Member aware that the Government does not charge any interest on deferred corporate income tax? I would like to know where one can borrow $30 billion and not be charged one penny of interest because one calls it a liability. Is the individual taxpayer allowed to do that? To assist the Hon. Member, the answer is: "No". If we are to take his figure of $30 billion owed by corporations in deferred corporate income tax and apply a simple 10 per cent interest charge—and money cannot be gotten for that amount today—there is $3 billion short just on interest payments alone. Canadian taxpayers are subsidizing those corporations for that amount.

If the Government wants to save money and if it is concerned about the welfare of the taxpayer, why is it giving welfare of $3 billion on $30 billion worth of deferred taxes to these corporations? Is that socialism? It certainly is. It is a perverse form of socialism for the rich and to heck with the poor. Just stand up in this Chamber and suggest—

Mr. McDermid: Let him answer.

Mr. Barrett: I have a couple of other questions.

To try to lead the House to believe that the corporate sector of Canada deserves not only deferred taxes but a $3 billion hand-out because it does not pay a penny of interest is to suggest that the Canadian Government should label its whole debt as a liability and not pay any interest on it either. Is that not the system being used for the corporations? If it is good enough for the corporations, it should be good enough for those financial geniuses who almost doubled the debt in the four years they have been in power.

My next question for the financial geniuses over there who hand out money to the corporations is this. What is the Hon. Member's position on the Western Diversification Fund? I am from the West. The West has been shafted again. Yet there has not been a word uttered by that Member about the Western Diversification Fund. As long as it does not hurt big business then it is okay. However, the Western Diversification Fund is absolutely essential for people of the West to have at least a sense of fair play. What is his position on the Western Diversification Fund? Did he advocate that it be chopped? Let us hear him now. He can do it in front of the cameras. Then I can go into Edmonton Northwest or Edmonton Southwest and tell the people there how the Tories are fighting for the corporations here.

During the debate on cut-backs to unemployment insurance the Leader of the New Democratic Party and the Leader of the Official Opposition made the charge that this was the first move to harmonization to accommodate free trade. That was denied by the Government and by the Minister. The Minister said: "Oh, no, it is not the same. In the United States the federal Government does not participate". She defined the distinction and after her definition we learned that our federal Government was pulling out of the scheme. I have a question to ask the Hon. Member on this pull-out. Is this not harmonization, something that the Leader of the Liberal Party said was happening? Is this not the harmonization that the Leader of the New Democratic Party said was happening?

My questions are simple. I ask them so that I can explain to my constituents why welfare is being given to corporations without any interest being charged. I ask about the Western Diversification Fund. I ask him to tell us when the U.S. flag will be put up on UIC offices so that we will know harmonization is finally complete.

Mr. Dorin: Madam Speaker, it is not particularly difficult to understand why the current Member from Esquimalt—Saanich—

Mr. Barrett: Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca. Read the map.

Mr. McDermid: You got lost, too.

Mr. Dorin: He was the former Premier of the Province of British Columbia. He left that province in the mess it is today. In four years he destroyed the province's economy.

I wish first to deal with the question that he raises on deferred taxes. He asks why there is no interest on deferred taxes. It is because there is no money owing to anyone. He asks about individuals. Let me tell him that any individual has the right to do the same thing if they would like to.

Mr. Barrett: They have to pay interest.

Mr. Dorin: Any individual has the right to do the same thing if they would like to.

Mr. Barrett: If they pay interest.

Mr. Dorin: There is no question of interest because there is no tax owing. I would like to have a chance to answer.

Mr. de Jong: You cannot depreciate your car and your house. Individual taxpayers cannot depreciate. That is why they do not have deferred taxes.

Mr. McDermid: That is because there is no capital gains on houses. If you want to put capital gains on houses then stand up to say so.

Mr. Dorin: Madam Speaker, I would appreciate if Hon. Members opposite could sit quiet and allow me to answer the questions. I do not really want to engage in a battle of wits with unarmed opponents.

The Hon. Member asks why cannot individuals do the same thing. The answer is that they cannot. If one owns a Canada Savings Bond, or any bond, then one is required to pay tax, not necessarily every year but, for example, every third year. If one wishes, there is nothing preventing one from making a note for this year's income tax, even though one does not pay it or owe it because it does not have to be paid for three more years. One can make a note that one owes that tax out of this year's income and therefore be prepared and ready for it after the three years go by. There is no law saying that you have to pay it in advance or pay it now, but you know that three years from now there will be an amount owing. If you want to record that in your books at home, in your family accounts, in your cheque book, on the back of an envelope, however you record such things, you are perfectly free to do that. The fact of the matter is that you have free right to do that if you would like to make those provisions. However, nobody normally scrutinizes an individual's personal bookeeping. It is not normally a matter of public record.

• (1630)

The western diversification program will continue. In fact, it is continuing with increased funding. It is one of the programs that provide payments to businesses to allow them to expand, grow, and diversify the economy. I am not sure why the Hon. Member would suggest that on the one hand we are not supporting the corporate sector and on the other hand we are supporting it too much. I find it a very incongruous position.

Now the third question—I have to be very brief because I know my time is over—is with regard to UIC. The fact of the matter is there are only eight states that have unemployment insurance programs. They are all different. It would be foolish to suggest that somehow ours would harmonize with any one of them.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments is now terminated. Debate?

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Madam Speaker, I am speaking today on Bill C-11, which is a Bill to authorize this Government to increase our line of credit. This is the third part of our 1989-1990 fiscal trilogy. One should say tragedy. It started with the tabling of the Budget before the media—government by television at its worst—followed by the tabling of the Estimates, and now this third part. This is a very tragic time for Canada. This trilogy is being brought to us by the need to battle the deficit. The Conservative Government says it is battling the deficit. They certainly have not been too effective in that regard in the last four years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Marleau: Now the deficit—we are not talking about the national debt here; we are talking about the actual amount the Government overspends every year. It would be nice if some day we could tackle the debt, get rid of the deficit. I will read to you an excerpt of an editorial from our local newspaper in Sudbury on Saturday: "The Finance Minister has some explaining to do to Canadians on the Government's economic policies. He might well start with the discussion of the rise of the public debt under the Tory regime, years during which he has occupied his present office. When the present Government took over from the Liberals in 1984, this debt stood at $170 billion. It is now at over $320 billion, and after this year's exercise it will be well over $350 billion".

Mr. McDermid: Does it say what the deficit was when you took over?

Mrs. Marleau: They have doubled the debt, Sir, and that is very serious. It is not a joking matter. Before and during the past election campaign, the Conservatives did not talk about the debt or the deficit. No. They went around and they spread money everywhere, all across the country. They made all kinds of great promises and got re-elected. But now they are breaking most of their promises. You know what they are saying? Economics dictate that you can break promises. Where was this big deficit and this big debt? It is like a newfound religion. It was there then. Why did you not come clean and tell the Canadian people what you were going to do?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Marleau: Now the Government has brought in measures to increase revenues. Doesn't that sound nice. What they have done is put forward a Budget that will create the biggest tax grab in Canadian history. They say they have brought in a wide range of spending cuts, but where? At the heart of our social programs. Despite that, we will still have a deficit of $30.5 billion at the end of this year.

I guess the biggest complaint I have is with the method they are using. They have not cut off the trough of pork-barreling funds. They are attacking the essential programs that are of benefit to the average Canadian. These cuts will hurt the average Canadian; they will hurt the average taxpayer far more than the corporate friends of the Conservatives. On the one hand the Government has reduced its cost by getting out of unemployment insurance. It is claiming a saving of $2.5 billion, which is at the expense of the people, I might say. Well, this does hurt. Not only are they cutting funding, but it is also harder to collect unemployment insurance now. They have made it harder for the average person to claim those UIC benefits. But what happens when the average person cannot collect UIC benefits? You know what happens? They end up on welfare. Who pays the bill for welfare?

The municipalities and the provincial governments. Who pays the bill for the provinces and the municipalities? The average taxpayer, the guy who saved all his life to buy that house, to clean it up and to make it look good. Maybe he does not have a whole lot of money in the bank because he spent that money on his home. He is the fellow who is footing the bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: It is the same guy who was footing the bill up here, too.

[Translation]

The week after the election, Madam Speaker, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said: "It is now my duty to realize the aspirations of those who said yes. No Canadian anywhere in Canada will be left behind."

That is what our Right Hon. Prime Minister said right after the election. It seems that they had not yet quite discovered the debt and the deficit problem. I must tell you that children are left behind. The Government has decided not to keep its promise to increase the number of day care spaces.

An Hon. Member: Where would we get the money?

Mrs. Marleau: Employees and employers are left behind. Ottawa is withdrawing from the unemployment insurance program and employers and employees will have to pay an additional $2.9 billion a year.

The provinces and those who live there are left behind. Transfers to the provinces are cut and the taxpayers will have to pay. What is even more serious is that Canadian families are left behind. They will have to pay higher taxes. They will have to pay more for gasoline and the new sales tax will add a huge burden, especially the additional costs families will have to pay to buy a house or for rent.

[English]

The changes in the UIC system are going to hurt the small businessman, the small entrepreneur, the average Canadian. It hurts everyone. But remember this: the Conservative Government is prepared to spend $1 billion, which they committed to the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean's riding to guarantee his seat, or should I say buy his seat in Parliament. That commitment is still going forward. They did not call that a promise because they had the money for it. On the other hand, they did say they would not touch unemployment insurance, but they certainly touched it. They leave in a commitment to benefit a few, and they cut out the ones that hurt every worker and every employer in this country. They said all along that the money is there. They said it during the campaign: this is not going to cost a penny. The money is only there when they want it to be.

• (1640)

I remind Hon. Members opposite that the Prime Minister made these promises personally. When Canadians had some difficulty believing him, he brought in the Hon. Minister of Finance who assured Canadians that the moneys were already set aside for these commitments. I guess this was a case of "don't worry, be happy". It turned out to be a case of vote now and pay later. They have insulted the intelligence of the Canadian electorate. The Canadian electorate will not forget it.

One of the Government's commitments prior to the election campaign was the funding of the Lloydminster heavy oil upgrader and the Oslo tar sands plant in Alberta. When these announcements were made it was the general feeling in the business and energy sector that these projects were not viable at the current world price. Yet the Conservatives are going to honour this commitment and pump $1 billion into these projects. We do not see any mention of cutting back on these projects in order to reduce the deficit. It is hard to understand how the Government can cut back on essential social programs, which hurt the average person but will help its rich corporate friends.

I remind the House of some of the clauses in the Free Trade Agreement that the Government pushed forward. We are committed to selling our gas and oil to the United States at the same price as we sell it to ourselves.

Mrs. Sparrow: That is right.

Mrs. Marleau: We will pour a billion dollars into subsidizing the development of oil projects for the benefit of our American friends. Personally, I think it is carrying friendship too far, especially when we cannot look after our own. Charity begins at home.

The Conservatives take away our child care and stop funding our unemployment insurance but guarantee better oil supplies for which our U.S. friends have a guaranteed push. That is ridiculous. I do not know where the Government sets its priorities, but it certainly is not with the interests of average Canadians.

[Translation]

We must say that the disadvantaged regions are even more disadvantaged. This Budget will have serious consequences for all provincial and municipal governments, disadvantaged regions and individuals. Cutting VIA Rail cuts services to those who need them most. And I can tell you that there are communities in our region that have no road, no air service, and depend only on rail transport. What will happen to these small communities?

Closing a military base like Summerside in Prince Edward Island kills a town, a region. That is serious! Cutting the budget for regional development condemns these regions to poverty. What do we want here in Canada? A country where only the rich in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver have a chance for a decent standard of living?

An Hon. Member: You have the Schefferville syndrome.

Mrs. Marleau: Canadians have the right to live in all regions of Canada and enjoy a decent standard of living. With this Budget, the Conservative Government takes this right away from them.

[English]

We are being moulded by the Government to fit the demands of the Free Trade Agreement. We know that the only subsidy that has been defined in the Free Trade Agreement is the one dealing with energy. We know that for the remaining definition of subsidies the Government will not have to worry about unemployment insurance being included in that definition because it is out.

Regional development is crucial for my region. Again, funding is being tailored to fit the Free Trade Agreement. Right now, most of the projects that are being funded in my region deal with tourism projects. While I am happy that some of these programs are being funded, we need more than tourism. The forest industry is a good example of an industry that is in dire need of more help to survive. Will it get any help? No.

The Conservatives are giving up our subsidies even before we reach the negotiating table. They have also attacked the average Canadian by increasing the federal sales tax. It has increased the excise taxes on alcohol, tobacco, and especially on gasoline.

Let me explain what happens to those who live in the more remote areas of this country, and not just northern Ontario. For every penny a litre rise in the price of gasoline, it costs people that much more for every service and good that is purchased in northern Ontario. The cost is higher because it must be transported.

There is a double whammy. The sales tax is brought down and the tax is added to higher costs so that the poor must pay more. Is that fair?

It is no wonder the Minister of Finance lost control of his Budget. He must have been so confused about who he was helping and who he was hurting in this whole process that he forgot to watch out for the leaks. While the leak of the document is a serious problem, it is not as serious as the production of such a document. He should consider resigning over such a Budget. He is attacking and hurting all Canadians.

It is unconscionable to try to pass laws that hurt all Canadians while maintaining major subsidies for big business and indirectly for the American consumption of our natural resources. The Minister of Finance would have better served Canadians if the whole Budget had been lost and scrapped, and a new Budget struck, perhaps after listening to some of the feedback he will get. He may still want to get that feedback because I think there is still time.

Obviously he has not been in touch with the people but has been talking to his friends on Bay Street. If he knew what the people needed we would not have this kind of Budget.

Another indirect way the Government is taxing Canadians is by this so-called dividend it will get from Canada Post. While the idea that Canada Post will pay the Government a dividend sounds lofty, it only means that it will increase the price of stamps to pay the Government another tax. It is another form of taxation. Again, the average Canadian will pay for it.

We have dealt somewhat with the transfer of payments to the provinces. The people of my area will remember that last year there were cut-backs in the transfer payment. The province had to hold back on some of its payments to the municipalities. It is very difficult for the municipalities to derive these funds, as the people in northern Ontario know.

We also know that the province does not have a lot of choice. It either cuts back on medicare or cuts back on funds to the municipalities. Again, the average person foots the bill. It is another tax.

Is the Government really tackling the debt, or is it just harmonizing our economy to fit into the trade deal? When one considers our deficit and how it continues to increase, I suggest the Government is not going to deal with the deficit in this year. They are certainly not cutting their own expenditures. There is still plenty of money to fund some of the Prime Minister's pet projects. There is still money available to advertise how great the Government is and what a great job it is doing. I will give you one example of its skills. On tax reform, taxation was to be simplified. This was to be a new era in taxation. When you look at the Estimates and read down to taxation, the Government has increased person-years by 226. This is due to our new simplified tax. What a joke.

[Translation]

We must say that this is a bad Budget. Canadians are being asked to tighten their belts to reduce the deficit, but it is still going up to $30.5 billion this year.

[English]

The end does not justify the means. The end is not happening. We are not reducing the deficit; we are increasing it. The means are aimed at the wrong people.

Mr. McDermid: There were a number of issues raised in the Hon. Member's speech that I could debate at great length, but I will just mention a few of them. Let us start with the Post Office.

The Post Office this year will show a very slight profit. Four years ago the taxpayers of this country were paying a $400 million grant to the Post Office. Eighty per cent of their business comes from business, so it was an indirect grant to business. Now the Post Office is at a break–even position. That is saving the taxpayers' money.

The Hon. Member opposite makes it sound like the little guy pays the taxes at the municipal and provincial levels and somewhere in Canada there is a great big money tree where all this money comes from. The Hon. Member talked about energy and megaprojects and says that at today's current prices these are not economical. In the same breath, her energy critic is saying that we are not planning for energy self–sufficiency down the road. These megaprojects do not come on at the turn of a switch. They take years to bring onstream. The Hon. Member for Newfoundland knows that full well. I want him to stand up today and tell us that we should stop, cut off, and forget about the oil development fields, Hibernia and Newfoundland. No! He knows that we must go through this process so that down the road, when energy sources are running out, we have a plan. Is the Hon. Member opposed to that? I want to ask her that.

My next question would be on the lumber agreement. The Ontario Government had a windfall of some $50 million off the 15 per cent lumber tax in the last year and a half. Has the Hon. Member opposite made representation to Premier Peterson to take that windfall money and reinvest it in the lumber industry in northern Ontario?

Mrs. Marleau: Do you know what I am for? I am for telling the truth. Where was the Hon. Minister during the campaign? He did not tell the people of Canada what would happen. When we were debating the free trade bill, where was the Minister? Was he telling the people of Canada that we were selling out our energy supplies in the long run to the Americans?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Marleau: He did not.

Mr. Tobin: I know all Members of the House, regardless of their political stripe, would join me in congratulating the Member for Sudbury (Mrs. Marleau) for an excellent presentation to the House today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: The great passion that was evident in her remarks, the great skill with which she made her points, the way in which she stood up not for the vested interests of the corporate towers of Canada but for the interests of ordinary Canadians is to be commended. We do not see enough of it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: I want to say in posing my question to my colleague from Sudbury that I thought she went directly into the heart of the matter when she pointed out to our friend, the chartered accountant across the way, who said: "I have examined the deficit and the debt and these brutal measures that go beyond cutting into the skin, through the meat, down into the bone, and sucking the marrow out of the collective life of Canada. I have examined this Budget, and I want to tell you that these cuts are in order because the debt is indeed severe". The Member from Sudbury got to the heart of the matter when the Member opposite said the issue is not what the size of the debt is. We know the Tories have doubled the debt. The issue is why did you not tell the truth during the election campaign?

The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) is like some new creature that crawled out of the primordial ooze and discovered something called the "deficit". For the first time during the election we had a Minister of Finance, a Prime Minister, and a Minister for International Trade who said: "Every nickel has been accounted for. The deficit is under control. These $17 billion in promises are not a problem at all".

Last November the Conservative Party said: "If you vote for us, we will give you $4 billion for day care. If you vote for us, we won't cut unemployment insurance. If you vote for us, social programs will be sacrosanct and protected. If you vote for us, we will not cut regional development". And when they get elected, they cut every damned one of them. I ask my colleague from Sudbury, is that violation of the public trust not far worse than a violation of Budget secrecy? Should this crowd not resign?

Mr. McDermid: What have you been eating, Sprung cucumbers?

Mr. Tobin: No, only Tories eat those, and they now look like they were weaned on a pickle.

Mrs. Marleau: I couldn't have said it any better than my hon. colleague.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Marleau: To be honest, this is not a laughing matter. I do not want to hear any joking about this. I do not know how many of you would have been touched by these cuts, but I can tell you that all of the working women, single mothers, working families who have problems with day care and money, the Government has done nothing for them. The Government has not guaranteed their future, because it has not cut the deficit. It has not even started tackling the debt. Some day the Government must consider the fact that it has to be more responsible in what it says to Canadians. Canadians do not believe what the Government is saying. They have said they would not mind so much the cut-backs if the deficit were being cut.

Mrs. Sparrow: Madam Speaker, I wish to remind the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mrs. Marleau) that this deficit did not just occur overnight; it has been growing for over 20 years. People that live in glass houses should not throw stones.

Let us go back to October 1968, when Edgar Benson was the Minister of Finance. The deficit was $400 million. The deficit jumped and jumped and jumped. When this Government took over in 1984, the deficit was $38.3 billion. We have brought that deficit down every year. We have cut our expenses every year. This is the first time since 1946 that any Party has ever done this.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Sparrow: The Liberal Government had the opportunity from 1968 through to 1984 to reduce the deficit and the debt. That Government did not. Its spending grew in the last few years by 24 per cent. No wonder Canadian people have mortgaged their lives away. There is no way Canadians can continue this way. The Budget brought down last Thursday morning by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is the best one going. Canadians stand behind him, and we will not leave this on the backs of our children.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being five p.m., the House will proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on the Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST FOR INCREASED SPENDING

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of increasing spending for regional development, focusing this spending on regions with a demonstrated need for assistance and ensuring that such spending is dependent on investment planning and job creation that may not otherwise take place.

He said: Madam Speaker, it is unfortunate to have to move a motion of this type at a time like this, but it is also very appropriate that a motion such as this should be in front of the House of Commons in the course of the same week as the debate on the Budget. This Budget takes a meat-axe to regional development programs across the country. It backs away from commitments which were clearly put before the Canadian people during the free trade debate. It presents an approach to what should be the most important part of economic development priorities which, instead of being generous, balanced, and fair, is very mean-spirited and cruel to the people of many parts of the country, and which, most important of all, is completely negative so far as the future economic development of our country is concerned.

I wish to commence by talking very briefly about some of the things that have struck me as a Member of Parliament who has been fortunate enough to have had the chance in the last House of Commons to see a great many parts of Canada, in the course of a variety of the special committees that looked at the trade issue, but also in the context of the jobs action group which the New Democratic Party took across the country to try to see to it that regional development patterns and inequalities were given the type of consideration that they deserved.

One of the things that stands out most in my mind is meeting families in Cape Breton Island where the children of pensioners could not rely on themselves and the work that they could get for their economic livelihood, but had to rely on the pensions received by their parents who were over 65 in order to be able to survive. One found household after household in which there were three generations living under one roof and were not relying on what could be earned through employment because the jobs just were not there or were being cut or eliminated, but instead were relying on pensions given to their parents and their grandparents in order to survive economically.

I can remember having the opportunity to visit the interior of British Columbia, part of the country in which people had put tremendous work into building up a future for themselves based around the production of grapes and the production of wine. In the course of the trade deal negotiated by the Government they had simply been wiped out. Nothing was put in the place of this activity to give people a chance to survive and to thrive.

I can also remember parts of northern Ontario which were hit very hard by the ineptitude of the Government in trying to negotiate some settlement with respect to the softwood lumber attacks from the United States, which ultimately led to a 15 per cent export tax that made it impossible for many towns and communities in northern Ontario to be able to survive.

These are the parts of the country that we in the House must consider when we think about regional development. These are the parts of our country that the Government has not looked at with humanity, seriousness, and concern for an economic future that should exist in a country as well endowed with resources and with human skills. Yet these parts of our country exist. The regional underdevelopment of many parts of Canada continues. The inequalities persist. Those inequalities create official unemployment rates—unofficial unemployment rates are much higher—of more than 16 per cent. For instance, I was told by people in Newfoundland that unofficial unemployment rates were upwards of 40 per cent to 50 per cent of the population unemployed.

What has happened in the face of this? In the last House of Commons, a House of Commons committee of which I was a part brought forward quite a good report on regional industrial expansion. It was a report which specifically looked at the industrial and regional development program of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. It concluded with a number of important recommendations. One recommendation which was completely unanimous among all members of that committee was that the federal Government should continue to maintain a strong role in Canada's regional development efforts, while recognizing the contributions that provincial and municipal Governments can and should make in this effort.

[Translation]

Another recommendation, Mr. Speaker, is that economically disadvantaged regions should receive assistance to diversify and strengthen their local economy. This economic development assistance should be given to them according to local economic needs.

[English]

Another recommendation was that communities and local development groups should be encouraged by the Government of Canada to accept greater responsibility in the planning and implementation of measures designed to promote the development of their local economy.

• (1710)

Finally, the regional development elegibility criteria for prospective business investments should be broadened to include all forms of business activities in all sectors of the Canadian economy.

What happened, Mr. Speaker, when this Government was re-elected, despite the strong set of recommendations that had come forward from a committee very much dominated by Conservative Members in the past House of Commons? What happened was a Budget which came into this House of Commons and which despite the efforts of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to suggest otherwise has in practice decimated regional development programs in Canada.

If we take, for instance, the regional development funding from 1988–89 through to the perioid 1993–94 it is clear first that the peak of that development spending will in fact come this year, and it will come because there have been earlier Economic and Regional Development

Agreements that have been signed with the various provinces across this country. The peak, and I quote here from page 68 of the Budget papers—it says it was tabled in the House of Commons on April 27, and we all know that is not quite true—indicates:

> On a year-to-year basis, following a projected peaking of expenditures at close to $1.4 billion in 1989-90, annual funding provisions will be stabilized—

Stabilized is a nice word, is it not, Mr. Speaker? Unfortunately it is an inaccurate word in this case, because we read:

> —annual funding provisions will be stabilized at somewhat over $1 billion a year.

In fact, in any kind of real language, as opposed to the newspeak that this Government puts into place in its attempts to sell the Budget, that is a reduction. That is a major reduction, a reduction of close to 30 per cent from 1989-90 to the following year and the years that will follow from that at which the expenditure pattern will be a billion dollars.

The Minister has come back and suggested to us that in fact if you compare the five years previous with the five years in the future there is a great increase. But if you look at the comparison and the sections of the Budget provisions which the Minister is using for purposes of his comparisons, he has taken out of the calculation the major program, the Industrial and Regional Development Program, IRDP, which this committee talked about in the past and which has represented the major mechanism by which funds for regional development purposes went to the provinces in the past. If you take that out and not even consider it you are going to look good over the next five years compared to the past five years. But the program itself is dead. The Government permitted it to die despite the tremendous benefits IRDP gave to communities across this country and despite the tremendous work this Conservative-dominated committee went through to try to improve IRDP for the future. Despite all of that, the Government let this important regional development program die.

The consequence, if you start to look at the Estimates for this coming year, is that contributions under IRDP, which will continue because some of the policies of the actual agreements made were multi-year agreements, will decline from $106 million in 1988-89 to just $68 million in 1989-90. At the same time, contributions made by the Regional Industrial Expansion Ministry to the various subagreements that are part of the economic and regional development agreements with the provinces will also decline by $10 million between last year and this year.

That is why a motion such as the one I moved is so absolutely crucial. It has to be put to this Government that all of us who come from the non-metropolitan parts of this country, from parts that are far away from the Torontos, the Montreals, the Vancouvers, the Winnipegs—

Mr. Halliday: From Windsor.

Mr. Langdon: Windsor is not a metropolitan part any more than Stratford is, as the Hon. Member knows. These parts of Canada demand a fair deal from this Government. They do not demand a special deal or special privileges. They quite rightly demand that they get fairness, equity, and a chance for their children and their communities to be able to have economic opportunities just as people do in downtown Toronto, those in the richer parts of Montreal, and in the more affluent parts of Vancouver.

We have to make a commitment. We have to get a message across to the Government through a motion such as this one, which says that the Government should consider the advisability of increasing spending for regional development. It should see to it that this increased spending is focused where it is needed, that it is planned so that what takes place is done in the most efficient, effective way possible, which does not waste money, which helps people and is done in a way that builds for the future.

We will not then be looking for simple, short term make-work kinds of band-aid solutions which have characterized our regional development efforts put in place both by Liberals and Conservatives in the past.

What must be put in place are serious regional development efforts, a commitment to regional development efforts. I hope that everybody who comes from parts of Canada that experience this inequality or unfairness which now exists will rise and participate in this debate to see to it that fairness is established as a principle for the future of our country.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the House about the federal Government's innovative approach to regional development in Quebec.

The Throne Speech made in the fall of 1986 was quoted earlier in this debate, so I will not repeat what was said. However, I would like to stress that the present Government is determined to increase the effectiveness of regional development programs by directing the majority of its scarce resources to those regions that need them most, by adjusting its programs to local needs and circumstances and by increasing participation of the regions concerned in the decision-making process.

To that end, we are establishing, within Industry, Science and Technology Canada, a new organization that will be specifically concerned with Quebec's regional development needs.

If new federal programs are to be effective and fair, they must allow for the duality in Quebec's economy. The province, seen as a component of Canada's economy, has two distinct economic regions with two very different levels of development. First, we have industrial Quebec, centred in the Greater Montreal area and covering the entire southwestern part of the province. This economic region is satisfactorily integrated in the economy of North America, but its industrial productivity tends to lag behind that of southwestern Ontario and the northeastern United States, while a high proportion of jobs are in traditional industries.

Then there are Quebec's peripheral regions that depend on natural resources. These regions range from the east to the northwest, and the economic situation is similar to that in the Atlantic Provinces. The economy of these regions, with the exception of eastern Quebec, has received no special assistance under previous regional programs. I would like to add that in these peripheral regions, there are five major resource areas: Eastern Quebec, the North Shore, the Centre-North, Western Quebec and Northern Quebec.

Madam Speaker, comparisons with other regions in Canada make a clear case for the need for special regional development measures, both in the resource regions and the central regions.

A five-year economic development agreement for Quebec's regions was signed on June 9, 1988. It provides for funding worth $820 million, of which $440 million is to be provided by the federal authorities and $380 million by the province, money to be spent on the development of resource regions and the province's central regions. Furthermore, $40 million has been earmarked for a private sector program in the forestry industry in Eastern Quebec, and $75 million has been allocated by both levels of government to refinance current ERDA subsidiary agreements.

The new development agreement for Quebec's regions has six objectives: to involve local entrepreneurs; to promote the exploration and processing of natural resources; to promote technological development; to strengthen the competitive position of local businesses; and to encourage economic diversification.

And finally, to promote integration with the Canadian and North American markets so that the regions can fully benefit from the Canada—U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

Regional consultations have made it possible to consider the local point of view in planning, so that the final version of the Agreement reflects the needs and priorities expressed by business people throughout the province. A consultation committee in each resource region, made up of the best-known business and community representatives, will ensure continuing local participation in decision-making.

The principles stated above, namely decentralization, consultation and emphasis on the most disadvantaged regions, are at the heart of the Agreement. The specific needs of each region will be defined, as well as the programs required to complement the national programs.

Furthermore, Madam Speaker, the special needs of the central regions of Quebec have been considered. A federal program to improve manufacturing productivity has been implemented. A joint innovation program is now being discussed with the province and the new agreement provides for an industrial adjustment program.

Also, a special program for Montreal and the disadvantaged areas of the central regions of Quebec is planned, in addition to the federal program to support restructuring in east-end Montreal, which is already established.

Madam Speaker, with these programs, Quebec can finally benefit from the type of regional development assistance that only an effective federal approach can provide.

I wish to restate that the present federal Government is determined to promote regional development in Quebec. They proved it by spending a lot of money to that end. From 1979–80 to 1983–84, federal expenditures on regional development in Québec averaged $189 million a year. From 1984–85, when a new Conservative Government took power, to 1988–89, those expenditures increased to an average of $246 million a year. For the five-year period ending this year, they came to $1,231 billion, compared to only $944 million over the previous five years.

Those figures speak for themselves and, with the new approach I mentioned, Quebeckers will benefit from the measures taken by this Government for generations to come.

[English]

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Madam Speaker, I would like to speak in support of the motion by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). However, considering the Member's well-known and well articulated views on economic matters, I find the wording of the Member's motion rather limp.

I would like to requote from the motion where he states in particular:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of increasing spending for regional development—

I would suggest that the House would be prepared to consider a much stronger motion than this one, particularly in light of the views which all Members of this House constantly express on the advisability of regional development and enhanced continuation of our commitment for regional development which goes back throughout our history.

I would like to suggest to the Hon. Member that perhaps his motion might be better expressed as follows: Not only should the Government consider the advisability of increasing spending for regional development, but it should make a firm commitment to regional development, and that increased funding for regional development should be the expression of that increased commitment.

I would just like to say that the Government's recent activity gives lie to the rhetoric we constantly hear from that side of the House about how important it considers regional development and how to could be trusted to maintain the expenditures on regional development that we have experienced in the past. We have seen in the last Budget and we have seen again in statements how false that commitment is.

I would like to highlight a few instances of this, particularly as they occur in Atlantic Canada and Nova Scotia. We have heard a great deal about the fact that the Economic Regional Development Agreements have not been renewed and have been allowed to lapse. However, it is worse than that. In some cases, and I speak in particular of one in my riding involving the Strait of Canso Development Agreement, not only have they not been renewed, but the federal spending does not even come close to what has been projected. I have read in the Estimates that the cumulative expenditure to March 31, 1988, which was to have been the expiry date of the agreement, was $7,511,000 when in fact the maximum federal share under the agreement was $19,600,000. Why has that money not been spent? I can think of all types of projects in my constituency that would have benefited from such an increase in federal spending, projects in infrastructure and in industrial development, projects in an area where unemployment is much higher than the national average.

Not only must the Government renew its commitment to regional development, it must re-establish its commitment to it. It must demonstrate to the House through tangible means, through some expression that we can see in terms of a commitment of funds to regional development, particularly in Atlantic Canada, that it is serious about this. What we have seen in the Budget, in the Estimates, and what we continue to see is that the Government preaches regional development and expresses the advisability of increasing spending on it and then does the reverse. I expect a motion with more teeth in it from a Member of the Hon. Member's calibre. I do not know if it is appropriate to amend the motion at this time. However, I would like to recognize that the motion should not only stress the advisability of increased spending for regional development but it should request on behalf of the House a tangible commitment to regional development in terms of increased funding earmarked for that purpose.

I would like to mention another area, which is not an ERDA but which has a different acronym. It is FRDA. FRDA is not a new kind of Canadian tree but an acronym for Forestry Development Renewal Agreement. I would like to direct the attention of the House to the fact that in the Estimates the FRDA in Nova Scotia has been allowed to collapse, as far as I can tell. There does not seem to be any commitment toward this agreement in the future in terms of spending. The forecast expenditure to March 31, 1989 for the Canada-Nova Scotia Forestry Renewal Agreement is $49,569,000. Yet the Estimates project only $794,000 for the agreement in the future. This is appalling in view of the fact that our forestry resource is so vital to the future of Canada. It is a part of the resource base that we have in Canada, particularly in my riding of Cape Breton Highlands—Canso.

I wish to stress the importance of the debate and to encourage our Members who will participate in it to stress that we should not simply be considering the advisability of increasing regional development, we should be demonstrating our commitment to it through higher funding levels earmarked for that purpose.

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (St. Albert): Madam Speaker, the study of the political history of regional development in Canada will reveal that successive federal Governments have for the most part failed miserably in their attempts to equalize economic opportunity and development across Canada. Such a study would show that since Confederation Canadians representing various and diverse regions of the country have regularly come to Ottawa to present their specific problems and to enlist Ottawa's assistance to resolve them.

Ottawa's response, while usually sympathetic, was never adequate, and the resultant regional disparity among Canadians has been perpetuated and in most cases aggravated. This is because Ottawa was never able to develop a comprehensive regional development philosophy. The result was a scattered shotgun approach to helping regional problems. There was also a tendency in Ottawa to believe that all policies should be implemented nationally. That is to say, what is good for one region of the country must be good for the other part of the country. That approach ignored regional needs because a deaf ear was turned to regional input. Economic sensitivity on Ottawa's part was virtually non-existent. While successive federal governments received the regions and heard their problems, these same federal governments would not really listen.

I am proud to say that I belong to a federal government that has changed this outdated Ottawa approach. Five years ago, in Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made 52 specific commitments to western Canadians. All of these commitments, plus many more, have been fulfilled. These promises recognized the unique problems and needs of western Canadians.

The western diversification initiative is an integral part of these commitments to western Canada. It is structured to provide westerners with direct access to and participation in those federal decisions and the decision-making process that impact directly on their economy and social well-being.

The Prime Minister has said that from now on decisions affecting western Canada will be made not thousands of miles away but down the street, where they should be made. This is the heart of the Government's approach to regional economic development. It has three essential ingredients. They are policy influenced by regions, programs designed by region, and program delivery by region.

The regional realities of Canada have demanded that the Government create specialized institutions designed to fit specialized regional needs. This means that these institutions must be driven by the region rather than by Ottawa. In order to effect that purpose they need the resources to match.

In keeping with that philosophy the Government has established a special Northern Ontario Development Fund. It has established the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, which delivers federal assistance to Atlantic Canada. On August 4, 1987 the Prime Minister announced the creation of the western diversification initiative and the establishment of the Department of Western Economic Diversification to be headquartered in Edmonton with regional offices in Vancouver, Saskatoon, Winnipeg, and a liaison office in Ottawa. The volume of requests for information and the number of submissions made to the various diversification offices far exceed any expectations the Government had for a program of this nature.

My colleague, the Hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight) did a remarkable job in launching the Western Diversification Program. He has said that decision making about the West is decision making by the West. That philosophy was in effect reflected in the legislation brought down. The Bill itself reflects this Government's innovative approach to regional development.

It states that the Minister is to lead and co-ordinate the efforts of the Government of Canada, to establish co-operative relationships with the provinces, with business, with labour and with private and public organizations for the development and diversification of the economy of western Canada.

The legislation also talks about regional input into policy formation, tapping the views, experience and wisdom of western Canadians and calling upon westerners at every level to come forth with new ideas to help develop a policy.

The Minister is responsible for ensuring that the most significant contribution of the Western Diversification Program on the western economy will come from westerners themselves participating in the formation of federal economic development policies. That section of the Act ensures western Canadians have input and that westerners get to the cabinet table. The climate also eliminates antagonism and fosters co-operation that has to take place between the various provinces and interested parties.

We are creating a country where equality of economic opportunity exists for all regions of the land, and the Western Diversification Program is a reflection of this. Decentralization of decision making and knowing that the decision makers are in the West is key to the success of this initiative. Consultation with provincial Ministers and other westerners from all walks of life, who each contributed so much to the program in the first place, will continue to be ongoing on a sustained basis.

One of the difficulties with Regional Development Programs in the past has been what I call bureaucratic overload. The flow of paper has caused the plugging up of various programs. It was difficult for those Canadians affected by various programs to access these programs. Western diversification has built into its structure a policy of cutting through the red tape rather than creating it.

For example, in order to become involved in a western diversification project, one does not have to complete an elaborate application form; simply write a letter with a basic idea and one is automatically plugged into the system. If the project involves a new product, a new technology, new markets, productivity improvements or import replacements for western Canada, it has a good chance of being funded.

These five areas feed on one another. For example, a new product for the West often means new technology, new markets. It is about giving that extra push to new ideas which are in abundance in the West and which will reduce the West's dependence on the traditional sector.

As a westerner, I know the possibilities of the economic enhancement of western Canada. They are actually endless. There are tremendous opportunities there for business people if they are given the chance and the opportunity to develop their products.

As a truly national Government with strong representation from the West, we have changed the traditional approach to Regional Development Programs. The Western Diversification Program is administered in the West, with the best interests of western Canadians always being the priority.

This new approach of regional development has been undertaken by a Government that understands the West and is committed to addressing western concerns. In Alberta, across western Canada and throughout this nation, western diversification is working. The Atlantic regional agency is working in the Atlantic provinces. We have throughout Canada an opportunity to develop our potential.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Madam Speaker, I rise today in debate to speak on this very important and thoughtful motion put by the Hon. Member from Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). It is indeed timely that this motion comes up today, just a few days after the most disastrous Budget Atlantic Canada has ever had inflicted upon it.

Over the past four years, but more particularly over the past five months, we have seen the Tory Party and this Government set about to unravel the unique fabric built on trust, caring and compassion of Canada and respective Canadian Governments; a vision of a nation rich in resources that used its great wealth in a thoughtful and prudent manner to try to overcome the obstacles of geography; a nation where we believed that it was important to use these resources to equalize opportunity for those that live great distances from the centre of this country in Atlantic Canada, northern Ontario, eastern Ontario and western Canada; a nation that believed that one had the right to expect to be able to earn a living in the region of one's choice, not simply raise one's family to have them go down the road to Toronto.

Successive Canadian Governments have realized the important roles of economic transfers to ensure a vibrant national unity in this country. That is why wise Governments of the past introduced universal programs in health, education, and old age security. That is why past Governments of this country have introduced equalization programs, to take from those that have just a little so that those that have not have a better chance to realize their full potential in this nation. We have used the vehicles of established programs funding to help provinces like Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and New Brunswick to be able to deliver better educational programs at a high national standard.

In the 1970s, it was a Liberal Government that introduced a new program called the General Development Agreements whereby the federal Government, in co-operation with the provincial Governments, embarked on essential programs to make our industry sectors in Atlantic Canada and other regions of this country more competitive on the national and international market. Literally billions of dollars were earmarked for these "have not" areas to try to raise them from their perpetual economic slump, to give the people who live there a chance to participate fully economically in our nation.

In 1984, the Liberal Government again fine tuned its program and came in with Economic Regional Development Agreements which built on the foundation laid by the GDAs. The future held great promise in those days for Atlantic Canadians. However, from 1984 until today we have seen a dark cloud of despair gather over Atlantic Canada. We have seen this Government, by its lack of a vision of this country and its determination to serve its masters on Bay Street and more recently on Wall Street, dash the hopes of Atlantic Canadians.

During the election campaign successive federal Ministers came to Atlantic Canada to talk about the Government's commitments to Atlantic Canadians. We saw the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) stand up in Atlantic Canada and say unemployment insurance programs would not be changed, that regional development programs would remain intact and that social programs in this country were not at risk with the election of another Tory Government.

What a difference a few months make. Last week we witnessed the abandonment of regional development as an essential tool in the Government's economic policy. We saw the Government come in and cut established programs funding to Atlantic Canada, cuts that will result in more hospital beds closing down and heightened crisis for our post-secondary educational institutions in Canada. We saw a Government that misled the people of Atlantic Canada with its so-called commitment to Regional Development Programs.

In Nova Scotia alone there are six agreements that have expired, worth millions of dollars and thousands of jobs in Atlantic Canada. We have seen the Minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency play smoke and mirrors with his Atlantic counterparts in the lead-up to the Budget. Just on Friday, the day after that disastrous Budget, he came out and said that the very future of these agreements are still up in the air, that if and when they are signed the matter of how much is paid by the provincial Governments and how much is paid by the federal Government is still up for negotiation.

On the one hand, the Government has cut badly into provincial revenues by the reductions in the EPF. On the other hand, it has cut regional development funding through the ERDA process. It tells those same provinces that they may have to come up with a bigger share if these agreements are indeed renegotiated.

What the Government has done is act like the bully on the block. To show how tough it is, it knocks them down. It picks the weakest one on the block and knocks him down. Once you knock him down, you put the boots to him.

It is interesting that at the same time the Government cuts development funding it is perpetually patting itself on the back for being around during the post recession recovery. It ignores the real disparity that its own policies have caused in the last four years.

It is interesting to note that if one looks at the unemployment rate as a measure of regional disparity, in Newfoundland, in 1983, the average unemployment rate was 55 per cent above the national average. That was shameful. In 1988 that same rate is 110 per cent higher than the national average. In Prince Edward Island, in 1983, the unemployment rate was 3 per cent higher than the national average. In 1988, after four years of Tory Government policies, that rate stands at 37 per cent above the national average unemployment rate. This, before the Government put the boots to Summerside in closing down its base and throwing thousands out of work in that part of Prince Edward Island.

In effect, the Government's true agenda is to change the way Canadians think about themselves. It is turning its back on those people it has been elected to represent, the people in the regions of this country, the people in northern Ontario, eastern Ontario, the people in Atlantic Canada. They are the people who want to become full economic partners in this great country.

In closing, I support my hon. colleague's motion to increase funding in Atlantic Canada, but before funding is increased we must recover what the Government has already taken. We must stop the erosion of caring and compassion that the Government has exhibited over the past four years. We in Atlantic Canada have a right to be allowed the opportunity to become full partners in this great nation. Regional development funding, continued at historic levels, is the only vehicle for us to retain that equity.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, in the few minutes remaining tonight I want to make some general comments on the very important motion we are dealing with tonight.

The House will also know that we are debating another important piece of legislation before the House in terms of its impact on regional development. It is Bill C-3, the legislation to create the Ministry of Industry, Science and Technology. At that time I said that it would have been nice to be debating legislation to create the forestry Department, which we have not yet seen from the Government despite its many pledges.

The motion today, moved by the Member from our Party, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of increasing spending for regional development, focusing this spending on regions with a demonstrated need for assistance and ensuring that such spending is dependent on investment planning and job creation that may not otherwise take place.

That is an important motion today, in light of the chaotic and ridiculous performance we saw by the Government last week in the presentation of its Budget and the implications in that Budget and the Estimates.

The Estimates that were tabled on Friday gave us an idea of some of the Government's specific spending plans. Some of the concerns that we have raised about what will happen with our regional development plans and some of the specific Departments within Government, such as forestry, are coming true with the tabling of the Estimates and the Budget.

The concerns that I have raised in the House are that what will be created are two different kinds of Ministers. There is a perfect example of that now in western Canada. We have been calling for the renewal of the forestry agreements. Some six FERDAs in other provinces across the country have expired. No official negotiation had taken place and we wondered why. The information we received from the Minister of State for Forests (Mr. Oberle) was that a new economic policy framework was being designed.

What is that new economic policy framework? I believe it will be a reference of all federal agencies in western Canada and Atlantic Canada, through those agencies, to the point where there will be two different kinds of Ministers. In western Canada there is the Minister responsible for western diversification. In the case of my critic responsibility there is the Minister of State for Forests. He is still a junior Minister because we know, in light of the Budget and the spending Estimates, that the Minister of Forests must go to the Minister responsible for western diversification to get funds for those forestry agreements.

The perfect evidence is contained in news releases, which all Members receive. In my Province of British Columbia, in the forest industry in any case, we will all get to know the Minister of Western Economic Diversification because he will basically become the Minister of Forests. I know that our sector of the industry is not desirable of that.

Those are some of the concerns that have been raised on this side of the House. I believe the motion of the Member for Essex—Windsor points that out clearly. Certainly there will be more debate as consideration of both Bill C-3 and the Budget continues.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time provided for consideration of Private Member's Business is now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 96(1) the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT—CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER'S REPORT—COMPOSITION OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate I would remind Hon. Members that the question under consideration tonight was raised by me in the House of Commons on April 18, when I asked the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) a question concerning the report of the Chief Electoral Officer which had been tabled the previous day. In my question, I asked when the Government would act to implement the recommendations made by the Chief Electoral Officer. The answer that the Deputy Prime Minister gave in part was:

> The opposition Parties failed to concur with the Government on that particular issue and they bear the responsibility.

I was speaking about the Government's failure to deal with Bill C-79 which had been introduced during the course of the last Parliament and was not dealt with.

• (1800)

The Government's failure to deal with this Bill is entirely the fault of the Government. The Government controls the order of business in this House. It is the Government that dominates the proceedings, aside from the Private Members' Hour we have just completed. The Government has the right to call its business as it sees fit. I want to recall the proceedings that took place in respect of Bill C-79. That Bill was introduced in June 1987. It sat on the Order Paper and absolutely nothing happened until March 16, 1988 when it was called for second reading. During the second reading debate, Bill C-79 was debated for a total of two hours and 17 minutes and was not passed. Nothing further was done with that Bill throughout that session.

Last summer the Government, having done almost nothing during its previous three years in office, decided to pass some legislation so that it had some sort of record to present to the people of Canada in anticipation of the election later in that year. For that reason, Parliament sat through most of the summer and well into the fall, in fact until the election was called in late September in order to permit the Government to do something so that it could say to the people that some legislation had been passed. One of the items it did not deal with at that time was Bill C-79.

I was not a Member of the House then, so I am speaking in part with the benefit of information provided by my colleagues who were in the House and were privy to discussions that proceeded between all Parties in relation to the passing of this Bill C-79. I acknowledge and respect the fact, and I think it is important that this continue, that amendments to the Elections Act are normally dealt with by all-Party agreement. That is an important principle. It is one I respect and the Government ought to continue to respect it.

The Government was able to arrange agreement on many points of that Bill. On others, it could not arrange agreement. Any sensible approach to this problem would require that once you reach agreement on certain points, you proceed with those and pass them into law. Items not agreed to are left out, particularly with respect to election reform when the question of passing the amendments enfranchised Canadians who had not previously been enfranchised or had no right to vote.

There was an editorial in Le Soleil on April 19. I want to quote a brief paragraph from it.

[Translation]

> Under the Elections Act, 50,000 mentally handicapped people, 25,000 prisoners, 500 judges appointed by Ottawa, 295 returning officers and 2 million Canadians living abroad are denied the right to vote. They could and did contest the 1977 legislation before the courts.

[English]

That was the issue that the Chief Electoral Officer purported to deal with in his report. Many of the items that would have permitted these persons to vote had been agreed between the Parties during the course of the session. They were ignored by the Deputy Prime Minister. Instead of making this Bill a priority, he set it aside and said it could be dealt with at another time. It was constantly shoved aside by other matters that the Government considered more urgent.

Let us look at some of the matters the Government considered so urgent. One of them was child care legislation. I recall that the House spent some time considering the child care Bill introduced during the last Parliament. I observed it in the reports of the proceedings of this House. The other day the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) shed crocodile tears, saying that the reason that Bill was not passed was because the Senate obstructed it. The Senate had the Bill before it for less than a week before Parliament was dissolved, and yet we were told this was Senate obstruction. Now we are told that, instead of introducing the Bill again and dealing with the issue, we will have to wait for several years because the Government says we cannot afford it. If we cannot afford it now, how could we afford it then? What was going on? Why spend all the time on child care instead of dealing with electoral reform when an election was in the wind and it was something that was crucial and important to deal with, and which could have been passed in a short time, at least in part, with the agreement of all Parties.

• (1805)

The other Bill that was discussed at the time was free trade. The Government made a great show of spending considerable time discussing that Bill in the House. As I recall, it took some rather drastic measures to ensure its passage, knowing from July on that the Bill was going to face a problem in the Senate. Well, it did not get into the Senate long enough to face much of a problem, but it was there for a short time before Parliament was dissolved. The Government knew that that difficulty was going to be faced. It was not as if the Senate had not said in advance that it was going to delay the Bill until an election had been held. In spite of that, the Government insisted on spending weeks of debating time in the Chamber, going through that Bill, knowing what was going to happen to it later instead of dealing with electoral law when an election was coming on.

Four years had elapsed when the Government could have dealt with this Bill, and nothing was done. It sat on the Order Paper for more than a year with nothing happening. I submit that it is clearly the responsibility of the Government to move legislation forward, and it should have done so in this case.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised a number of issues. He talked about many subjects, however, I am going to keep my comments to the reform of Canada's election laws, because I understood that was the subject to be raised tonight, not all the other issues that the Hon. Member mentioned.

The Government has long recognized the need for reform of Canada's election laws. In fact, one of the most comprehensive packages of reform ever proposed was contained in the White Paper on election law which was tabled by the Government on June 26, 1986.

Over the course of 15 years prior to the tabling of the White Paper, a number of problems had been identified by all participants in the election process, and had formed the subject of several reports of the Chief Electoral Officer.

The great majority of these problems were addressed first in the White Paper and subsequently in Bill C–79 which was introduced by the Government in June, 1987.

As the Chief Electoral Officer indicated in his 1989 report, the amendments contained in Bill C–79 would, in large measure, have brought the Canada Elections Act in line with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In addition, those amendments would have introduced more flexibility into procedures to revise the preliminary lists of electors and would have expanded the rules for proxy voting. If those provisions had been adopted, a substantial number of otherwise disenfranchised electors would have been allowed to vote in the last election.

Unfortunately, these and other important amendments contained in Bill C–79 were not adopted prior to the last election. On many occasions the Government attempted to reach agreement with the Liberal and New Democratic Parties to allow those amendments to proceed. Despite repeated attempts, no such agreement was reached, and Bill C–79 died on the Order Paper.

In order to facilitate the process of developing amendments which can be supported by Members on both sides of the House, including amendments on the important question of election expenses, the Government announced, in the Speech from the Throne, that a commission of inquiry would be established to make recommendations on changes to the electoral laws. The establishment of such a commission was recommended by the Chief Electoral Officer in his 1989 report.

The Government remains committed to reforming our electoral laws and to making voting easier and more accessible to Canadians consistent with the provisions of the Charter.

AIR SAFETY—PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—EFFECT OF RECENT GOVERNMENT MEASURES/TESTING OF MEASURES PRIOR TO IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, on December 20, 1988, a Boeing 737 and a Boeing 727 were reported at Pearson International Airport to have almost come into collision with each other. On January 10 there were two other incidents of near mid-air collisions happening within three hours of each other. In response to this occurrence, Madam Speaker, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board made two interim recommendations to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) on April 5 which we can refer to as urgent recommendations. In essence, the Board recommended that the northeast arrival and descent area around Pearson Airport be cleaned up and that the vertical spacing between aircraft coming into Pearson be given at least 1,000 feet of clearance from each other.

• (1810)

On April 7, the Minister responded by implementing these two measures at Pearson. At page 571 of Hansard, on April 17 I asked the Minister of Transport if he was aware that the provisions implemented on April 7 had created further safety problems at Pearson.

Based on the best information I have and monitored by the effectiveness of these changes, I informed the House and the Minister on that date that these measures have saturated air space east of Pearson and forced en route controllers to stack airplanes as far back as Coe Hill, Ontario, which is 95 miles from Pearson. This has created further havoc for controllers due to the reduction of landing flights from 42 to 32 an hour.

I further informed the Minister that en route controllers had not received any sort of briefing on these measures. In my supplementary question, I further informed the Minister that the rigidity of these measures almost caused another mid-air collision.

Flights into Pearson on Sundays are now being instructed to circle from Ottawa or corkscrew over Coe Hill. What is happening is a flight takes off from Ottawa and corkscrews before it is allowed to land in Toronto.

This takes peak hour congestion away from Pearson but transfers the problem to the air space between Ottawa and Toronto. With a current shortage of 74 air traffic controllers at Pearson, it is not difficult to see that logically this involves a safety problem.

In light of this information, I asked the Minister to take appropriate action to ensure the safety of Canadians, yet the Minister failed to address this urgent matter. No action has been taken to date and that is why I am here before you, Mr. Speaker, to address this issue once again.

In his response, the Minister suggested that the measures implemented were proposed by the Canadian Aviation Safety Board after the near miss in Toronto in November. This makes me question whether the Minister read the Canadian Aviation Safety Board Report. It clearly states that there was a near miss in December 1988 and two near misses in January, not in November.

In further response to my question, the Minister stated: "We have talked about safety in the Canadian skies for the last two or three weeks, perhaps longer. I hope he is not now telling me today"—referring to me—"that because there are more delays in Toronto, we should decrease safety in Canadian skies."

My question clearly did not ask the Minister to respond to the increase in delays. I specifically asked the Minister to address the air safety problems being created by the measures he introduced. If the measures did nothing more than create further delays, I would not have asked the question that day.

To my supplementary question, the Minister responded that it is absolutely normal that at the beginning it could create some problems for the controllers. What we did was necessary for Canadian air safety.

I found it interesting that the Minister would admit that there may be some problems for the air traffic controllers. For how long, if at all, can we tolerate such problems before they pose and create a safety risk?

My question to the Minister was asked ten days after the measures had been introduced, and it is now May 1. How many more days must pass before this question will be dealt with as I proposed on an urgent basis? If the air traffic controllers are having problems with these measures, they should send a clear signal to the Minister and the Government that safety problems are being created. My question was an attempt to get the Minister to respond immediately to these safety problems and not to delay problems.

I urge the Parliamentary Secretary not to answer my question by telling me that two justices, Justice Estey and Justice Moshansky will be dealing with the Dryden and Gander problem because those problems do not reflect what is happening at Pearson. The Parliamentary Secretary should not respond to my question by saying that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board will be replaced with new legislation under Bill C-2. Nor should he respond what he responded last time I asked this question by saying that the Minister has conducted an in-depth review and there will be something coming before the House in the very near future.

• (1815)

Those are not answers to the very critical question that concerns safety from Ottawa to Toronto and at Pearson International Airport. I therefore ask my question once more: What are the Minister and this Government going to do with respect to the safety in our airways between Ottawa and Toronto as it definitely affects the air space around Pearson International Airport?

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite should make up his mind. Prior to the implementation of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board recommendations in question, he rose in this House to ask the Minister when they were going to be addressed. Now, two weeks later, he rises again to state that the safety measures in question are now safety hazards. There appears to be some inconsistency or confusion on the Member's part.

I would like to provide some clarification for my friend across the way. The procedures to which he refers have always been the practice at Pearson. That is to say, arriving aircraft executing simultaneous approaches on parallel runways have always been designated either "high-side" or "low-side" in order to maintain a vertical separation of 1,000 feet. Which aircraft was high and which one was low was, in the past, left to the discretion of the air traffic controller. All we have done is remove the discretion. One runway has been designated for the "high-side" and the other for the "low side".

Therefore, there is no need to run these procedures through a simulator. They are not new procedures. Controllers are simply being asked to do what they have always done in a different way, in a standard format if you will. As with all changes, large or small, a period of adaptation is required. This means that some delays may occur, not decreased safety. I repeat, not decreased safety.

As the Minister has repeatedly stated in this House and elsewhere, controllers will never be asked to handle more traffic than can be dealt with safely. I fully realize that the explanation I have just provided is not complete. It would be very difficult to get into the technical aspects of these procedures in the short time available to me today. I would be very pleased to arrange a detailed briefing for the Hon. Member at his convenience so that he may fully understand this matter.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—UNEMPLOYMENT IN BLACK COMMUNITY—EFFECT OF CHANGES TO SYSTEM/EXPENDITURE OF FUNDS—REQUEST FOR AFFIRMATIVE ACTION STIPULATION

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Madam Speaker, on April 14, some two weeks ago, I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) several questions concerning the changes that she had recently announced to the unemployment insurance system. I specifically asked the Minister about the negative effect that these changes would have on some of the minority communities in Canada, specifically, the native and the black communities.

The Minister's response that day was very telling. She went on at some length about the training programs and other initiatives that her Department and her Government has undertaken to try to combat the problem of high unemployment among the black and native communities as well as other minority communities. Her answer showed her complete lack of understanding of the unfair economic burden faced by these minority groups.

I know this problem firsthand because I am fortunate, and I will underline fortunate, to represent the largest native, black community in Canada in my constituency of Dartmouth. The fact is that although my riding has an unemployment rate of only 8 per cent, the unemployment rate in the black community in my riding can go as high as 80 per cent in the winter and at the best of times is usually between 30 per cent and 50 per cent. That is completely unacceptable. It is unacceptable in Dartmouth, it is unacceptable in Nova Scotia and it should be unacceptable in Canada. It should be unacceptable to the Minister as well.

A large percentage of individuals in that community who draw unemployment insurance benefits do so after qualifying with the minimum number of weeks. Prior to these changes, that minimum qualification was 12 weeks. That qualification has now gone up to 18 weeks.

If the Minister thinks for a minute that the results of her changes do not triply disadvantage members of minority communities, she should visit one or two or three of those minority communities and ask the people who have been affected by those changes. Because of these changes, the Government may save some money.

However, for the real people who are affected by these cuts the results are more economic hardship and increased reliance on welfare with a subsequent loss of self-worth and dignity which is especially crippling in our minority communities.

The employment programs to which the Minister referred on April 14 are very well-intentioned. However, in the case of the Preston area many times they have overshot their mark. For instance, Community Futures is a very good program to help communities in some economic difficulty to put together an economic plan to take themselves out of that cast of welfare, low wages and low self-esteem. However, for many reasons, most of them bureaucratic, the community of Preston, North Preston, Cherrybrook is not eligible for Community Futures, at least not at this point in time. I have mentioned that the reasons are mostly bureaucratic. However, I also think it signals that the Government does not have the will to ensure that the programs that are currently in force are targeted to those individuals who need them the most. Indeed, the Department of Employment and Immigration does not even have current statistics on the rate of unemployment in the black community in Nova Scotia, let alone the black community in my riding in Nova Scotia.

I checked the records of Canada Employment and Immigration. The most recent statistic that it has, and it is a slanted statistic, is from 1986. For goodness sakes, if the Government has not been able to pull a statistic from its own Department from 1986 to 1989, I suggest to the Minister that somebody in the Department has fallen asleep at the wheel.

The questions I asked were real. I was not trying to gain any partisan political points. I was trying to represent my constituents. I was also trying to represent many minority groups which increasingly feel disenfranchised from the political process and from Parliament. In response to my question about whether or not she agreed that those changes would unfairly hit people in minority communities, the black and native communities across Canada, the Minister said:

> —our job training planning since 1985 has been directed specifically at doubly disadvantaged groups, groups like visible minorities, the disabled and others who have particular needs. We will continue to do that under the new scheme.

I would think that the Minister, after the information I gave her in the House that day, would understand that she is not trying to improve the problem of the doubly disadvantaged, what she was doing with these changes is turning the doubly disadvantaged into the triply disadvantaged, especially the black community in Nova Scotia.

In response to my second question which asked for an assurance that she would attach an affirmative action provision to the spending of any new funds aimed at training for these doubly disadvantaged groups, the Minister said:

> The Canadian Jobs Strategy provides exactly what the Member is asking for.

The response she gave to my questions shows the callousness of the Government's approach in dealing with the real hardships faced by those people who have to go on unemployment insurance. After she told me that, she stated that the Government was also looking at concluding an agreement with the provinces to put $200 million into new programs for welfare. That is exactly where those individuals will end up—on welfare. That is what breaks the backs of the minority communities in the country. It is unacceptable in this day and age. It should be unacceptable to the Minister.

Since the Minister is not available right now, I would like to ask her Parliamentary Secretary to answer these real concerns, these real questions, these non-partisan questions. I asked the Minister if she was prepared to give a commitment that she would review her Department's programs and include an affirmative action provision to ensure that those minority groups which would be devastated by these unfair changes would be given priority consideration in future programs. I put the question forward again. She has not answered to my satisfaction. She has not answered to the satisfaction of Canadians. She is allowing the minority communities in Canada to face a very bleak future, a bleak summer and a very bad winter. I hope that in response to my question the Minister will offer some help to those affected the most.

• (1825)

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member wanted an assurance that visible minorities would not be adversely affected by the proposals contained in the policy paper tabled by the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) on April 11. The amendments to the unemployment insurance program are not targeted toward any special group. Rather, they are designed to raise the efficiency of the labour market. A key aspect of the labour force development strategy, however, is a reallocation of expenditures to more "active" training and re-employment measures for the unemployed. "Active" spending helps the disadvantaged most by giving them the skills necessary to get good jobs. The unemployed people that I have talked to want jobs. They do not want hand-outs. I can assure the Hon. Member that under this Government, disadvantaged Canadians will not be overlooked.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy already has target levels for visible minorities. These target levels will be maintained, providing more money for training and will guarantee more funds going to visible minorities. This Government introduced the Employment Equity Program and the Federal Contractor's Program which provide opportunities for increased labour force participation of women, aboriginal people, visible minorities and persons with disabilities. I can assure the Hon. Member that the Labour Force Development Strategy is intended to speed up the integration of visible minorities in the labour market. Measures throughout the strategy will accelerate the integration of employment equity goals and action plans in private sector policies and programs.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, today we are celebrating the 50th anniversary of a prestigious organization, the National Film Board of Canada. The NFB has been honoured throughout the world, particularly at the film festivals in Los Angeles, San Francisco, New York, Nyon, Créteil, Annecy, Cannes, Berlin, Melbourne and London, to name only these.

On Friday, April 28, a resounding tribute was paid to a real genius who has spent his film career with the Board, Norman McLaren. The NFB main building on Côte-de-Liesse in Montreal will bear his name from now on.

NFB artists and craftspeople have been remarkably productive for 50 years: no less than 6,500 films in French and English for which the NFB has won over 3,000 prizes.

Over all these years, the National Film Board has been to a great extent directly responsible for the excellent reputation our country has acquired. Hundreds of millions of people first got to know Canada from NFB films distributed throughout the world. The NFB through its films is an excellent ambassador for our aspirations and our values. It has also greatly contributed to helping Canadians get to know Canada.

On behalf of all Members of this House, I extend our gratitude and most sincere congratulations to the official representatives of the NFB here present: Joan Pennefather, Anne-Claire Poirier, Colin Low and Jacques Godbout.

[English]

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with the Minister this morning in paying tribute to the National Film Board, one of Canada's great cultural institutions. As the Minister has already noted, the NFB has won international acclaim for the quality of its productions. This has brought great honour to our nation. I am certain that the Minister would agree, however, that the National Film Board's greatest achievement is the contribution it has made to Canadian culture.

On the occasion of the National Film Board's fiftieth anniversary, it is fitting to reflect on the important role the NFB has played in the development of our unique national identity and our collective consciousness. For many, our earliest memories of the National Film Board are the educational productions that we saw in our classrooms. They brought history alive for us.

While it is best known for its educational productions, the NFB is also a leader in its presentation of contemporary issues that reflect social and cultural concerns of Canadian men and women. Animation, docudrama and feature films in both official languages capture the regional and multicultural flavour of Canada.

In the time the NFB has been with us, it has created 17,000 films, it has won eight Oscars and it is known as one of the best producers of animation in the world. Often, Canadians do not realize that NFB films have been and continue to be an ambassador for Canada all around the world. Thanks to the creativity of the National Film Board, more Canadians are now able to see more and more of its productions through enhanced distribution on video cassettes at libraries and Thursday evenings on the CBC. With these efforts, just think how many more Canadians will have an opportunity to treasure the NFB's work. I would recommend to all Canadians the NFB's fiftieth anniversary production, a great demonstration of creativity. It provides us with a panoramic view of the NFB's lifetime of work.

• (1110)

In these days of Government restraint, Canadians must be vigilant in defending their cultural institutions. Liberals established the NFB to reflect Canada to Canadians. We hope that over the next 50 years, it will realize an even more dynamic communication with the Canadian people.

[Translation]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the Minister said that the National Film Board had won over 3,000 prizes including Oscars.

[English]

I might tell the Minister that we have a nickname for him over here. We call him "Oscar Masse". We have nominated him "Best Minister In Search Of A Supporting Role". It is too bad that he will not accept a supporting role.

It is with great pride that I join the Minister and the Liberal critic in congratulating the National Film Board on its fiftieth anniversary.

The creation of the Film Board, was largely the work of a documentary film maker, John Grierson. He was a Scot who came to Canada in 1938 to study and co-ordinate a film policy for the Government. The National Film Board was created a year later by an Act of Parliament. Grierson became its first commissioner. The Board's mandate was to interpret Canada to Canadians and to the world.

On both scores, it has succeeded beyond anyone's expectations in 1939. In its 50 year history, the Board has completed 17,000 productions, 6,500 of which have been original films.

I guess we could spend all day talking about the reputation of the NFB and its film makers. It has indeed produced probably the finest documentaries in the world.

[Translation]

The work of National Film Board film-makers in the field of documentaries has had a great influence in showing Canadians how diverse our country is. Pierre Perrault's La bête lumineuse and Pour la suite du monde, Anne-Claire Poirier's La Quarantaine and Mourir à tue-tête and Donald Britten's The Champions and Volcano can be mentioned as examples of this tremendous contribution.

[English]

While the NFB is perhaps best known for its documentaries, the work of its acclaimed animation department founded in 1941 by Norman McLaren has received both national and international acclaim.

I would like to underline for the House the work of Studio D of the National Film Board, which I visited recently, which produced through its short history such films as Not A Love Story, To A Safer Place, and If You Love This Planet.

Anniversaries are excellent times to reflect on the past. They are also times to consider the future. I would like to say to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) that it is not enough for the Government or for Canadians merely to bask in the glow of the NFB's successes, although they have been great. We have seen major cut-backs in support given to the NFB in the past four years. That is 10 per cent in real terms. As a result, we have seen projects delayed or cancelled, film makers and technicians laid off, user fees imposed, and 18 regional distribution centres closed. I think it is an enormous tribute to the talents of their film makers, technicians and free lancers that their standards have been maintained in spite of these cut-backs.

I urge the Minister and Canadians to take advantage of the fiftieth anniversary to press the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Cabinet to increase significantly the financial contributions to the NFB.

I will conclude by saying that in an age in which rampant economic individualism is so assiduously promoted, I believe that the arts and cultural industries remain one of the most powerful, if fragile, means of celebrating a sense of shared experience and common humanity. The National Film Board has made an enormous contribution in bringing all Canadians together. I congratulate the NFB on its fiftieth anniversary. I encourage Canadians to take part in as many of the events marking this important occasion as they can.

BILL C-9

CHANGE OF REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. I believe you would find that there would be unanimous consent to put the following motion to the House immediately for approval without debate.

I move:

That the Order for second reading and reference to a Legislative Committee of Bill C-9, An Act to amend the Bank Act, standing on the Order Paper, be changed to read "second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance".

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

UNEMPLOYED YOUTH—ADDITIONAL JOB CREATION FUNDS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 on behalf of Canadians who point out the number of young people in our country who are officially unemployed. They suggest that the unemployment rate for young people of Canada is actually twice the rate that is normally stated and certainly much larger than on average. I point out that unemployment among young people is a source of many social problems including alcoholism, drug abuse, prostitution, crime, and so on.

They are calling on Parliament to consider the advisability of providing additional job-creation funds directed specifically to young people to ensure that federal job creation strategy emphasizes job opportunities that extend beyond the industrial and commercial sectors.

INCOME TAX—FEMALE LOW WAGE EARNERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition. The petitioners indicate that 50 per cent of Canadian women who file tax returns have incomes of $10,000 or less. They indicate that thousands of Canadian women living in poverty still have to pay income tax. They suggest that the tax system has an adverse effect on women as a result of the deductibility of alimony, maintenance payments, spousal tax transfers, deindexation of tax credits and social transfers. They are calling on Parliament to introduce a tax system that is simpler and fairer to the average Canadian woman and to consider the advisability of restoring indexation to the child tax credit.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVILEGE

GRANTING OF SUPPLY—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I am now ready to rule on the arguments presented several days ago with respect to the Question of Privilege relating to the supply process. On April 6, after giving the Chair the required written notice, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) and the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), rose in the House to argue a case of privilege.

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands claimed that the ancient rights of Members of Parliament have been denied in so far as the granting or withholding of Supply. I quote from page 177 of Hansard:

Why did we move to consider the Business of Supply when no supply had been requested from Her Excellency, the Governor General, at the opening of the Session?

[Translation]

Both he and the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) also expressed serious reservations as to the use of Governor General's warrants by the Government as it is their view that such use of warrants has superseded the usual Supply process.

[English]

During the discussion on this question of privilege, the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) also rose in support of the contention that the rights of the House had been breached. In reply, the Hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General (Mr. Lewis) argued that the question of privilege had not been raised at the first opportunity available. He indicated that all of the requirements of the Financial Administration Act had been met by the Government.

• (1120)

Before I get into the substantive issues on Supply, I would briefly like to address the matter of whether this question was brought forward within a reasonable period of time as required by our practices. The Hon. Members for Kingston and the Islands and for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell gave the Chair written notice on April 5 that they would be raising a question of privilege. Since one of their complaints arose as a result of apparent omissions in the Speech from the Throne which was read on April 3, the very earliest occasion that they could have raised the matter was on April 4. On that day, by agreement, the House only heard two short speeches before adjourning. In fairness to all Hon. Members, I have to conclude that notice was given at a reasonably early opportunity.

[Translation]

I wish to remind Hon. Members that questions of privilege must be raised in a timely fashion. If a matter is so serious that the privileges of this House must be invoked, then it stands to reason that the practice of bringing these matters to the attention of the House at an early opportunity must be respected. In the present submission, I feel that the practice has been respected.

[English]

Since the business of Supply is a complex procedure and since many of the new Members have not yet had an opportunity to examine its components, I feel that this would be an appropriate time to briefly review certain aspects of the Supply process.

The business of approving the spending plans of the Government is one of the major responsibilities of Parliament. The process by which the Government submits its projected annual expenditures for parliamentary approval is known as the Supply process. Once Supply is granted, the Government can draw on the Consolidated Revenue Fund to meet its financial obligations.

The basic principle supporting the Supply process is that the Sovereign, or the Crown, is charged with the management of all payments for Public Service. The Crown acting on the advice of its responsible ministers makes known to the Commons the pecuniary needs of the Government; the Commons, in return, grants such supplies as are needed to satisfy these demands.

The House of Commons has an important role to play in this complicated process. It is in the Commons where the Government's projected expenditures—known as the "Estimates"—are first tabled and the legislation to implement the estimates—known as the "Appropriation" Bill—is introduced. Section 53 of the Constitution Act, 1867 stipulates that all financial legislation, and this includes Government expenditures, must originate in the House of Commons. This requirement is reaffirmed in the Commons' own rules of procedure, more specifically Standing Order 80(1), a point which was clearly referred to by Hon. Members the other day.

[Translation]

As a result of the fact that Main Estimates for the upcoming fiscal year are usually adopted at the end of June, the Government could be without funds from the beginning of the fiscal year in April to the end of June. The rules accordingly provide for the Government to request an advance against the Main Estimates which is known as Interim Supply. From time to time during a session, the Government may also require additional funds which are introduced by way of Supplementary Estimates.

[English]

During lengthy periods when Parliament is dissolved or prorogued, an urgent need for funds may occur. Under special conditions, provided for in the Financial Administration Act, the Government may draw on the Consolidated Revenue Fund after a Special Warrant has been signed by the Governor General. Unlike interim supply and supplementary estimates, the use of Special Warrants is not a routine matter and the Government is required to inform the House, after the fact, when the warrants are tabled. Subsequently the supply granted by the Governor General will be included in the first supply Bill for scrutiny and approval by the House.

Now to address the specific points raised by Hon. Members in their question of privilege of April 6.

The first point refers to the fact that in the Speech from the Throne, the Governor General neglected to request the House to appropriate the funds required to carry on the services and expenditures of her Government. Because of this omission, it was argued that the Government could not and should not have asked the House to designate a continuing Order for Supply.

If I may refer Hon. Members to the operative Standing Order. Standing Order 81(1) states:

> At the commencement of each session, the House shall designate by motion, a continuing Order of the Day for the consideration of the business of supply.

Hon. Members will note that the Standing Orders use the word "shall" and no specific mention is made in this Standing Order about the necessity of having a request in the Speech from the Throne to appropriate funds. If I may draw your attention to the commentary found in the Annotated Standing Orders relating to Standing Order 81(1), page 250, it reads as follows:

> During the Speech from the Throne at the start of each session, the Governor General traditionally addresses the House and says, "You will be asked to appropriate the funds required to carry on the services and expenditures authorized by Parliament".

I would like to stress the use of the word "traditionally". As the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands himself pointed out, there have been occasions when the Governor General has neglected to read this traditional phrase in the Speech from the Throne. He specifically referred to two previous cases: September 8, 1930 and December 12, 1988. A careful review of all Speeches from the Throne since 1867 has revealed that there were two other such cases, namely: January 25, 1940 and October 9, 1951. The case of 1951 is of particular interest to the Chair because while no reference was made to Supply in the Speech from the Throne, the House did appoint a Committee of Supply.

[Translation]

The Chair appreciates the comments made by the Hon. Member but wishes to point out to the House that the Standing Orders do not specify that a request for funds appear in the Speech from the Throne prior to designating a continuing Order of the Day for Supply. As the Annotated Standing Orders explains, this phrase is a tradition but not a requirement of the Standing Orders.

[English]

Procedurally speaking, the Government is obligated to act in accordance with the terms of Standing Order 81(1) and I must therefore conclude that the Government has respected the rules of the House in designating a continuing Order of the Day for the consideration of supply.

The Chair would now like to turn its attention to the next issue raised by the Hon. Members relating to the use of Governor General Warrants.

Many people are puzzled as to the nature of these Warrants. To begin with, I would like to point out a difficulty we are encountering in the use of terms; there are Governor General Warrants and Governor General Special Warrants. Governor General Warrants as described in Section 28 of the Financial Administration Act are used frequently. Every time that Parliament adopts an appropriation Bill and Royal Assent is given, the Governor General must then sign a Warrant before the Government can draw on the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Governor General Special Warrants are different. When Parliament is not in session and a payment is urgently required for the public good, the Governor in Council may, by order, direct the preparation of a special warrant to be signed by the Governor General authorizing a payment to be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund if there is no other appropriation pursuant to which the payment may be made. This is in accordance with Section 30 of the Financial Administration Act. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) when participating in the debate on the question of privilege, was quick to point out that the Government, in issuing the present Special Warrants, did so precisely because of the three conditions just mentioned.

[Translation]

Special warrants make it possible for the work of Government to continue even though Parliament is not sitting and the Supply process has not been completed, or begun anew. Special warrants may be used to pay the Crown's bills from the time of dissolution until the new Parliament has met or during prorogation and adjournment periods, so long as the terms and conditions of the Financial Administration Act are met and respected by the Government.

[English]

According to the Financial Administration Act, every Special Warrant is to be published in the Canada Gazette within 30 days after it is issued. Within 15 days after the commencement of the next session of Parliament, the Government must also table in the House of Commons a statement showing what Special Warrants were issued.

• (1130)

Moreover, the amounts appropriated by special warrants are to be included in the next Supply Bill so that the payments made by Special Warrant will come before the House for review and decision.

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) suggested that Special Warrants can only be used during the dissolution of Parliament. His colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), made reference to 10 occasions when special warrants were used during this period. According to John Stewart's 1977 book, The Canadian House of Commons: Procedure and Reform, there are 12 instances where special warrants were used. Since 1977, we have found three other such occasions, for a total of 15.

The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell referred to the fact that the only time that a Special Warrant was used outside of an electoral period was to repair the roof of the first Parliament Building in the 1890s. This Act was first adopted in 1878 under the title "An Act to Provide for the Better Auditing of the Public Accounts". In Section 2 of that Act we read:

> If, when Parliament is not in session, any accident happens to any public work or building which requires an immediate outlay for the repair thereof—the Governor in Council may order a special warrant to be prepared—

It is important to note the phrase, "when Parliament is not in session". During the early years following Confederation, Parliament only sat for a few months of each year. As time went on, the business of Government became more involved and Parliament met more frequently. In 1951, an amendment to the Financial Administration Act actually defined what was meant by the phrase, "when Parliament is not in session". Further amendments were made to that definition in 1958 and this resulted in the version we have today, namely: "Parliament shall be deemed to be not in session when it is under adjournment sine die or to a day more than two weeks after the day the Governor in Council made the order directing the preparation of the special warrant".

[Translation]

This part of the Act clearly states that a special warrant may be issued during periods when Parliament has been dissolved for an election, prorogued or during periods when Parliament is adjourned for a lengthy period. Hon. Members may be quite correct in stating that all previous special warrants (except for one) were issued after Parliament was dissolved for an election, but if one reads the Act itself, there is no inference that the words "not in session" were to be restricted to dissolution periods. It is an indisputable fact that when both Houses are in a state of prorogation, Parliament is "not in session".

[English]

All this being said, the Chair must now decide whether or not the matters raised by the Hon. Members constitute a prima facie question of privilege. The Opposition contends that the Government has been using the Financial Administration Act to circumvent the traditions and conventions of the supply process. The Government argues that the provisions of the Act have been followed, an Act validly passed by Parliament.

Having just explained the provisions of the Financial Administration Act in the matter of Special Warrants, the Chair finds itself in an awkward position for I do not want the House to misconstrue these comments as anything other than background for the information of all Hon. Members. The question of whether or not the terms of the Financial Administration Act have been respected in this instance is not a matter that was raised in the arguments put forward on April 6, nor indeed is it a matter upon which the Chair would be in a position to rule.

The Chair has no authority to venture beyond the realm of parliamentary practice and procedure into questions of law.

The Hon. Members for Kingston and the Islands and for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell argue that conventions in our Constitution have been breached in this instance. The Chair wishes to restate what my predecessors have so often reminded the House, that the Speaker has no role in interpreting matters of either a constitutional or legal nature. Let me quote Citations 117(6) and 240 from Beauchesne's Fifth Edition:

> The Speaker will not give a decision upon a constitutional question nor decide a question of law though the same may be raised on a point of order or privilege.

In addition, let me refer to a decision of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux of July 8, 1969, on page 1319 of The Journals where he says:

> I have had occasion in the past to indicate that it is not the responsibility of the Chair to rule on questions of law or on constitutional questions. This ruling has been made in many instances by previous Speakers. I should like, if Hon. Members would allow me to do so, to quote at this time a ruling made by the Deputy Speaker on Friday, October 25, 1963. It reviews some of the authorities on this point: "I have listened with much interest to the argument made by the Hon. and learned Member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald). I gather the essence of the argument he submits now is that the Bill should not be considered, that it is out of order because it is ultra vires the Parliament of Canada.
> My submissions at this time is that it should not be the responsibility of the Chair to rule whether a particular Bill or particular piece of legislation submitted to Parliament is or is not within the competence of this House.

The reason for these citations are straightforward. The Speaker should not sit in judgment on constitutional or legal matters. That role belongs more properly to the courts and the administration of justice. Previous Speakers have been very careful in strictly addressing themselves to matters of a parliamentary or procedural nature while avoiding dealing with constitutional or legal matters. Similarly, in this instance, the Chair must restrict its examination to the question of a possible infraction of the Standing Orders.

After studying the circumstances of this case to determine whether the ancient rights of Members of Parliament have been denied in relation to the granting or withholding of supplies, the Chair concludes that the Government has respected all of the procedures required by the House. As the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands has himself said, the House will have an opportunity to pronounce itself on the moneys found in the Special Warrants when the House votes on the next appropriation Bill.

[Translation]

While Members may complain that they do not have an opportunity to examine these expenditures before they have been allotted, the very nature of special warrants calls for the approval of the House after the fact. The cure for that complaint lies more properly within the legislative process by amending the Financial Administration Act to the greater satisfaction of the majority of Members in the House. As to the argument that the law has been breached, Hon. Members have other avenues available to them to demonstrate and establish those facts.

[English]

After considerable reflection, the Chair finds that no Standing Orders have been contravened, and it has not been demonstrated that a prima facie breach of a Member's privilege has occurred.

I want to thank Hon. Members for raising the matter which is of course fascinating to all of us in this House and to all of us who follow parliamentary traditions and conventions.

I must point out that the response of the Chair has been lengthy but in my view the arguments presented to the Chair were worthy of very serious and lengthy consideration. I thank Hon. Members.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to inform the House that as a result of the Minister's statement, Government Orders will be extended by eight minutes, starting at one o'clock today.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1989–90

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration from Monday, May 1, of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that C–11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak in the House today to Bill C–11, a very important piece of legislation that deals with borrowing authority, with the federal Government's borrowing requirements for 1989–90.

Perhaps I may give the House a summary of the country's financial situation in 1984, when we began, and the situation as it is now, in 1989.

Madam Speaker, you will recall that in 1984, when the Conservative Government was elected, this country's annual deficit was $38.5 billion, while the national debt had risen to about $200 billion. Since 1984 we have managed to reduce the Government's deficit year after year, bringing it down to $28.5 billion by 1988–89. We did so despite the Opposition's insistence that what we did would bring about a recession, cause unemployment and make the Canadian economy go into a nosedive. However, during the past four years, job creation has been ten times what it was between 1980–84, under the previous government.

All this, Madam Speaker, is part of our economic and fiscal plan to put Canada back where it ought to be internationally, as a country with a normal debt burden, not the debt-laden country the Liberal Party left us in 1984.

During the past six months, rising interest rates have hurt a number of Canadians, but they have also hurt the federal Government. As a result of rising rates, the debt charge has risen above $6 billion for this year, partly because of the debt we were left by our predecessors. These $6 billion, added to the annual deficit I mentioned earlier, would have raised this year's deficit to about $34 billion.

In the Budget we had to take stringent measures, both to reduce spending and to increase the revenues the Government needs to control the annual deficit and the national debt.

The announced spending cuts may not be welcomed by everyone, and I realize that. What surprises me, Madam Speaker, is that the Opposition criticizes the spending cuts in the Budget but complains that the deficit is still too high, and then turns around and wants us to spend more money. How can they expect us to reduce the deficit when they want this Government to increase its spending?

Madam Speaker, I think we are lucky to have a Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who is truly exceptional and who in his last five Budgets has done a tremendous job of putting the finances of this country in order.

The increase in revenues announced by the Government in the Budget has been achieved without penalizing low-income Canadians, by putting this burden on those who are able to carry it. Furthermore, the Budget provides for a judicious mix of revenue sources: increase in sales tax, increase in personal income tax, a tax on large corporations, and also a change in the level of unemployment insurance and a radical change in the federal sales tax. And you know as I do that the federal sales tax we have in this country is 65 years old this year, since it started in 1924. So we think that after 65 years, the present system should retire and we will bring in a new system for the Canadian economy of the 1990s, one that Canadians want; that is, they will see the taxes they pay, which is not the case with the present federal sales tax. It will also correspond to the world situation. Do not forget that the proposed new federal sales tax system is already in place in 48 countries in the world and works well.

So, Madam Speaker, all this means that we have essential measures to bring our deficit back down to a proper level in the coming years, that is, around $15 billion in 1993–94, and to control inflation which threatens every household in the country. If it is not controlled by some rise in interest rates—we know what happened in 1980 and 1981, when the party in power let inflation rise to 12 or 13 per cent. At some point, it realized that things were not working and that inflation was too high. So it said that the only way to reduce inflation was to raise interest rates, which it did. We had interest rates of 22 and 23 per cent.

An Hon. Member: We remember!

Mr. Vincent: We remember very well and I began my law practice then—I remember it very well.

And what we are saying today, and especially what we have done, is the opposite! We have to let interest rates rise somewhat to keep inflation at what is considered a reasonable rate accepted by and acceptable to all Canadians, around 4 per cent. And we knew that in so doing, we would have some problems with the Budget.

I think, Madam Speaker, it is as important, if not more important, to have a slightly higher deficit this year, but a reasonable rate of inflation and economic growth for the country, than to have a situation similar to what we had in 1980, 1981 and 1982, when households, contractors, everyone suffered from the policies, or rather lack of policies, of the government then in power.

So, Madam Speaker, Bill C-11 asks this House for authority to borrow $25.5 billion to make up for the shortfall we will have next year. I think it is important and imperative that this House pass Bill C-11 as soon as possible.

When you talk about financial requirements and you follow a country's finances closely, you know how important the gross domestic product is. This Government's financial requirements for this year will be 3.2 per cent of the gross domestic product, which is much better than what we had in previous years, when it was 6 or 7 per cent.

What is even more encouraging, Madam Speaker, is that in 1993–94, it is expected to be 0.3 per cent of the gross domestic product. That is all the Government's financial requirements will be.

So I think that this Government and all Canadians have to pitch in so that in future years, we can achieve what we want for this country: economic growth, job creation and a better quality of life for all citizens in the land. For that, we must act immediately and that is what the Government has done. That is what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has done. And that is how we see the future. Again, we should pass Bill C–11 as soon as possible.

Mrs. Marleau: The Hon. Member first said that our debt amounted to $200 billion in 1984. I wish to correct him, Madam Speaker, because, in 1984, our debt added up to $170 billion. Then can you tell me why, if you have made cuts in all the programs as you said, our deficit is still $30.5 billion? That is what we do not understand. Individuals and families alike will all be affected by the cuts you made in the name of the deficit, which is even bigger this year than last year.

Mr. Vincent: Madam Speaker, I thank my colleague for her question. I said it in my speech, but it bears repeating because, as she said, many people find it difficult to understand.

In 1988–1989, the deficit amounted to $28.5 billion. As all Canadians know, interest rates rose throughout the country. When interest rates increase for individuals, they also add to the Government's debt. Since our debt was $320 billion, the increase in interest rates cost us an additional $6 billion for that year. That is $6 billion more than planned to service the debt and it is higher than the amount mentioned in the Budget because the interest cost has risen. Therefore, 28 plus 6 equals 34 and, if I subtract the cut–backs, I get 30. It is that simple! There is nothing mysterious about it and every Canadian family affected by the rise in interest rates can understand it. I am confident that my hon. colleague opposite understands it now too.

[English]

Mr. Duhamel: Madam Speaker, the Government often talks about its job figures. In doing so I suspect it is not willing to acknowledge that there has been as much job creation under previous Governments as under this one. I refer the Hon. Member to at least a decade ago when we created as many jobs.

While the Government quotes an impressive number of jobs, I would like to know whether or not that takes into consideration the jobs that were lost along the way. I suspect not. However, I am willing to be corrected. Do those figures take into consideration the types of jobs that were lost along the way, as well as the quality of jobs? How many jobs created were in fact part–time jobs? How many of those jobs created paid minimum wage? How many of those jobs were dead–end jobs? Finally, to what part of Canada did those jobs go? I would like to have answers to those questions.

Mr. Vincent: Madam Speaker, I think my colleague has just opened a can of worms. From 1980 to 1984, 80 percent of the jobs created by his party and his government under programs such as Canada Works, were part–time or temporary jobs lasting anywhere from three to five months. On the other hand, from 1984 to 1988, statistics show that 80 percent of the jobs created were full–time, permanent jobs, I repeat, 80 percent! Add 80 to 80, Madam Speaker, and you get a difference of 160 percent between 1980–1984 and 1984–1988. Where were these jobs created? From one end of the country to the other. In all regions of the country, there has been an increase in the number of jobs created and these, I repeat, are permanent jobs.

Madam Speaker, when I was elected in 1984, the unemployment rate among young people was almost 18 percent. It is much less today. In my riding of Trois–Rivières, the unemployment rate was 3 percent higher than it is today. And job creation has occurred in almost all ridings. In closing, Madam Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that when we say that the government has created one million and a half jobs, it is a way of putting it because these jobs in fact were created by investors and business people who had confidence in the policies of the Conservative governement. And these jobs, I repeat, are permanent jobs, not part-time jobs created under phoney programs which were common in past years. There is no comparison whatsoever between the jobs created between 1980 and 1984 and the jobs created between 1984 and 1988. No comparison whatsoever!

[English]

Mr. Karygiannis: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member must be either in a dream state or not in this world. He stood in his place and quoted to us the number of jobs that were created from 1984 to 1988. My question to the Hon. Member is this: Is he aware that the 9 per cent sales tax that the Government proposes will have an effect on jobs? Is he aware as to where high interest rates are taking us? They will cost us jobs. Is he also aware that these factors combined will cause inflation to skyrocket? We will be back into the levels of inflation that the Government accuses this Party of fostering some years ago. It was not our fault at that time. They were caused by a global economic recession.

Is the Hon. Member aware that what his Government is doing will cost jobs? If he is aware of that, how many jobs will it cost? I do not want to hear him rambling on giving us the figures for the period 1984 to 1988. We have heard them before. We know those figures.

As my hon. colleague on this side of the House has said, these are dead-end jobs and jobs paying $4.50 an hour at McDonald's. Canadians are sick and tired of hearing that. Can the Hon. Member come clean today in the House and say to the people of Canada how many jobs this 9 per cent sales tax will actually cost? Will he do that for me? I do not want to hear him rambling on with the figures for 1984 to 1988. I want to hear what will happen tomorrow. That is what I would like to know.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: This morning, interestingly enough, our remarks seem to cut the new Members of this House to the quick, Madam Speaker. I am surprised that my Hon. friend should ask me this question. Unfortunately, he was not sitting in this House a year or two ago when his party's official finance critic repeatedly insisted on the need to amend the federal sales tax, claiming together with the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou that the Government should change the sales tax system immediately because it was responsible for Canadians losing their jobs. I believe the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou was then as he is now his party's official National Revenue critic. Madam Speaker, he is the one who repeatedly insisted that the Government should amend the sales tax system because it was responsible for Canadians losing their jobs. We are acting on the 1990 economy. We are removing the 12 per cent manufacturers sales tax which is indeed causing Canadians to lose their jobs by favouring importers at the expense of Canadian producers. We are going to implement openly a 9 per cent federal sales tax which will encourage exports—

Mr. Gauthier: A regressive sales tax!

Mr. Vincent: —which will not apply to exporters, and which already exist in 48 countries, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: It is not true!

Mr. Vincent: Madam Speaker, please advise the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) to keep quiet, that he will have an opportunity to rise later on.

Madam Speaker, it is a tax which already exists in 48 countries and which is quite successful.

Finally, I should like to reply to the other question of my hon. friend who unfortunately was not listening when I said that interest rates are indeed rising. They are rising on purpose to fight against inflation and prevent the recurrence of a situation such as that in which his Government placed us in 1981-82. That is the reason they are rising, Madam Speaker, and not to cause Canadians to lose their jobs. Quite the contrary! Thanks to this Budget and this Government, Canadians can look forward to the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Regina Qu'Appelle.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): Madam Speaker, I am glad to join in the debate this morning on the Government's request for some $25 billion. We heard the Budget first delivered in the Press Gallery then sort of delivered in the House when, in fact, all of the Opposition Members except for one were absent. This Budget was the fifth one introduced as a short-term pain for long-term gain type of Budget. This Budget asked Canadians to tighten their belts once more, to have services and expectations cut so that the Government can begin to control the country's finances. It is obvious the four previous Budgets of this Government have failed to control our finances. We have seen our debt increase. We have seen taxes increase. We have seen services increase. When a president of a private company or business has such a dismal record, he or she will resign. In my opinion the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) should resign because he has had four years of failure, failing to manage the public interest and the public purse.

In this Budget we have cut-backs in transfer payments, resulting in cut-backs to education, cut-backs to important services provided by the provinces; cut-backs in university education, health programs and welfare programs. All of these will be cut back. There will be cut-backs in agricultural programs affecting farmers in my constituency and cut-backs to VIA Rail. Canada will no longer be able to take pride in a passenger service system from coast to coast. There will be cut-backs for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that will undermine one of the important institutions that has kept this country together. Then there are to be cut-backs in regional development right across the board, and in services that are important to Canadians and which keep this country together. These are the very things that the Government is attacking.

We see an increase in taxes. When all the increases are fully into effect, by next year, Canadians will be paying some extra $700 in taxes for an average family of four. Once the regressive sales tax is fully implemented, another $1,000 will be taken out of the pockets of the average Canadian family. I suggest that this is the ineptness of the Minister of Finance in managing our economy.

The Minister justifies everything by claiming that we must bring the deficit under control. In that I have no disagreement. Indeed, we should control our deficit. There is nothing socialistic about taking out approximately 2.5 per cent to 3 per cent of our Gross National Product and putting it into the pockets of upper income Canadians. That is what happens when we pay $30-some-billion a year on interest. The interest payment is around 6 per cent of our Gross National Product. Around 37 per cent to 40 per cent of that goes to banks and to the insurance companies that control most of the debt. Around 2.5 per cent to 3 per cent of our Gross National Product goes into the pockets of the banks and the large insurance companies. These are the upper income Canadians.

There is a shift of wealth into the pockets of upper Canadian income earners through our debt. There is nothing socialistic about that. I am certainly not prepared to support that. In analysing the debt and the deficit, let us first look and determine how this debt occurred in the first place. When I hear the Liberals talking about the deficit, there are crocodile tears. Surely they must take responsibility. It was during the Trudeau years in the 1970s when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was Minister of Finance that the seeds were sown resulting in the deficits we see today. Much of that did not come about necessarily through direct expenditures but what the Auditor General has termed indirect expenditures. Those tax cuts, tax loopholes, that never got on the books could never be seen as expenditures, but they were real expenditures creating a loss of revenue. This loss of revenue caused the type of deficits that we have.

The Tories have been telling us we are living beyond our means, that is why we have the deficit and we have got to cut back. By living beyond our means, what they really mean is that our social programs are just a little too rich. That is in essence what the Tories have been saying is the cause of our deficit. If we look at the other OECD countries, the other western industrialized countries, in terms of what they spend on social programs as a percentage of their gross domestic product as compared to what we in Canada spend on our gross domestic product, Canadians are not living beyond their means.

When we look at the figures of what gets spent on housing, unemployment insurance, health care, pensions, on these important social programs, what do we find? In 1983 France spent 26 per cent of its gross domestic product on social programs. Italy spent 19.4 per cent. West Germany spent 17.1 per cent, Britain, 13.7 per cent, Canada 12.5 per cent and the United States, 12.1 per cent.

Of the western industrialized countries, we were the second lowest in terms of what we spent on social programs. We are not living beyond our means. In fact, we have not been collecting taxes or collecting revenues. That is why we have the deficit we have today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: To prove this fact, in 1983 a woman who was a teller with the Royal Bank of Canada actually paid more dollars and cents in taxes than the Royal Bank of Canada did. The Royal Bank of Canada in 1983 had well over $360 million in profit and did not pay one cent of tax.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. de Jong: It is no wonder that we have the current deficit. It is not because we are spending too much on unemployment insurance, education, child care or medicare. It is because of those who have not been paying their fair share. What has been the Tory record? While we certainly have to lay much of the blame on the Liberals because they created the tax loopholes and tax laws that allowed the Royal Bank of Canada, for example, not to pay a cent of tax on income over $360 million, the Tories made a bad situation even worse. They followed Reagan economics and Thatcher economics. They gave further tax breaks to corporations and to the rich. They have been socking it to middle and lower-income Canadians since they came to power in 1984.

• (1210)

Of course, it is a record of failure. The Budget forecasts show that as a result of Tory economic policies, unemployment is expected to rise to 8.2 per cent by year end and to some 8.5 per cent next year. Economic growth will slow from 4.5 per cent in 1988 to 3 per cent in 1989, and 1.7 per cent in 1990. Yet interest rates will remain high and there will be an increase in inflation. Under Tory economic management there will be increased unemployment, less economic activity, higher inflation and higher interest rates.

Mr. Riis: Some package!

Mr. de Jong: As my hon. colleague says, some package. It is a recipe for inflation. There will be no economic expansion while inflation will continue to increase resulting in a massive shift of wealth from the lower and middle-income groups to the higher and upper-income groups.

The Conservative prescription for curing our economic ills will be the continued concentration of economic power and wealth in our Canadian society. It will only exacerbate our economic ills.

The Budget projections just do not make sense. There will be increased unemployment, a downturn in our production and ongoing high interest rates, which means the deficit figures will continue to rise. Future Conservative budgets will expect us to make more sacrifices, to have more cut-backs, and to pay higher taxes. Of course, the Minister of Finance will never attack capital gains. He will never attack lower tax rates on investment because that is supposed to be the inducement to investment and the creation of wealth.

That brings me to the second part of my speech. It concerns the Tory notion of how wealth is created. We have seen paper wealth being created in Margaret Thatcher's England and Ronald Reagan's United States. Tremendous debts have been rung up by the private sector, thereby increasing the cost of production in our western economies at the same time, often resulting in lay-offs, further unemployment and other forms of inflation.

There is no doubt that the current high interest rates are keeping our deficit high as well as inflicting a lot of suffering and pain on average Canadians. Historically, the relationship between interest rates and inflation is that the interest rates are normally some two points higher than inflation.

An inflation rate of approximately 4.5 per cent means that our interest rate should be about 6 per cent to 7 per cent. At 7 per cent, our deficit becomes manageable. In fact our deficit does not quite compare to the deficit at the end of the Second World War, but that deficit was manageable because there was a lower interest rate. The present deficit would become manageable with an interest rate of 7 per cent.

The farm debt that plagued so many of the farmers in my constituency would become manageable at a 7 per cent interest rate. The young family who is trying to pay a mortgage needs two incomes to barely be able to make those payments. But at 7 per cent, life becomes a little easier for those young families who are trying to put a roof over their heads.

The Government says that it needs the high interest rate in order to keep inflation down. We have had high interest rates and inflation continues to rise. The Government says we need to cap inflation. Why must we continue pressing the interest rates so high? Of course, Canadians to whom I have talked see the folly of it all. They are telling me that increased interest rates induce inflation. It increases the deficit and the cost of production. Indeed it does.

Those average Canadians see through this folly even though the Minister of Finance might not. I suspect the Minister of Finance knows better. I suspect the reason why we have higher interest rates is because we must keep the Canadian dollar high. I suspect the reason why we have to keep the Canadian dollar high is because of the understanding with the United States concerning the Free Trade Agreement. I suspect we have to keep the Canadian dollar high because the Americans will not play ball with us and the Free Trade Agreement unless the Canadian dollar is high.

The increase in the value of the Canadian dollar over the last year has essentially had the effect of a tariff on Canadian goods at about 10 per cent to 15 per cent.

Farmers in my constituency know this because they are exporters. They export their hogs, their beef and their grain and know that every time the Government increases the interest rate and the dollar goes up, the value of their exports decrease and their ability to export decreases. Yet the Government says it needs to keep the Canadian dollar up, otherwise imports will cost more. It is saying that our exports will increase and we do not have the plant capacity to produce more. We really see what the Government is all about. It is attempting to keep the Canadian dollar up so that it will fulfil its promises to the Americans in terms of the Free Trade Agreement.

The Government does not have the vision or the imagination to begin developing an economic policy and strategy that works from coast to coast rather than just in southern Ontario. Surely these higher interest rate policies affect the Maritimes, northern Ontario, Québec, the Prairies and British Columbia. If there is concern about too much plant capacity in the Golden Triangle, surely there could be an economic policy and strategy that would induce manufacturing outside the Golden Triangle and into the Maritimes, the Prairies, northern Ontario and the West Coast. That would be the strategy if we had a Government that believed it had a role to play as an active participant in the economic life of this country, a Government that believed in working together not just with the private sector but with the workers and farmers to create an economic strategy that is good for all Canadians.

However, it is a Government that does not believe that government can and should be playing a role as an active participant in the economic life of this country so that wealth can be produced and more fairly distributed.

We live in an age of abundance. The newer technologies allow us to produce at a fraction of the previous cost. There is great material wealth. Yet in this age of abundance, there are the homeless, there are food banks and operations are being postponed because there are not enough hospital beds. We do not have enough money to allow native children to get a university education. The one clear way out of the cycle of poverty for Indian people is higher education but there are limits and restrictions on that. We do not have enough.

• (1220)

We are living in an age of provincial, municipal and federal cut-backs, slashes and downgrades because we do not have enough to provide the basic necessities for human life. All this is in an age of abundance, all this is in an age in which there is so much material wealth and the capacity to produce beyond our imagination. Yet we live in this age of scarcity. I find that to be obscene. That is an indictment against the Government's bad management. We are living in an age of plenty, in a country so endowed and blessed, but we do not have enough for basic necessities. That surely is an indictment of the Government, the Minister of Finance and their mismanagement.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make some comments and to ask a question of my colleague from Regina—Qu'Appelle. We have heard the same old speech from the Hon. Member many, many times, the frothing and foaming, the ranting and raving about all of the problems in the economy, about how terrible it is that programs unfortunately have to be reduced and that taxes have to be increased in order to meet a debt problem which has built up over the past 20 years.

There is no use going back over old ground. That has been talked about here before. The fact is that there is an enormous national debt and it has to be serviced. The tragedy is that the interest on that debt is taking up more and more of government revenue, thereby leaving less and less for other things, the kinds of programs that all of us here would like to see improved, enhanced and continued.

What is the answer in the face of that debt and that debt servicing problem? It seems that the choice is either to reduce Government expenditures, to increase Government revenues or, another alternative which is resorted to by other countries, to print money and debase the value of currency. The fact is that in a country such as Canada which has credibility in the world and is part of the G–7, we have to act responsibly. Clearly we have to address the debt problem, and the way to do it is the manner in which the Minister of Finance has proceeded in this Budget. That is to reduce expenditures fairly and evenly across the economy and to increase taxes.

I listened to my hon. friend with whom I served on the Finance Committee for several years for the entire 20 minutes, but I did not hear any kind of useful, practical suggestion from him. I heard the usual complaining about those mythical corporations which are profitable but, because they carry forward perfectly legitimate losses or because they have perfectly legitimate investment tax credits, pay no taxes. We all know about that silly song. We are looking for a practical solution, a practical suggestion, from Members of the New Democratic Party. Surely it is not enough to continue to whine, complain, argue against reductions and argue against tax increases. I would like to hear a positive suggestion from Members of the New Democratic Party. If they are talking about taxing these mythical corporations, let us hear some concrete suggestions about how we could do it and at what percentage. Will it be a capital tax on large corporations? That is good but do they want it increased over what it was in the Budget? If so, they should say so.

I heard the Hon. Member complaining about the value of the Canadian dollar. Somehow we are to force down the value of the Canadian dollar as evidence that we are a vibrant country. Surely if reducing the value of a country's currency is to be something that is valued, then Bangladesh would be a world power. Clearly, the value of our currency vis–a–vis other currencies is simply a reflection of the esteem in which our country is held, and I am proud that the value of the Canadian dollar has enhanced over the past couple of years. I think it is simply a measure of the esteem in which this Government and the Minister of Finance are held around the world.

I would like to close by asking the Hon. Member, who can hardly restrain himself, for a concrete suggestion, just one, for dealing with the debt problem. How would Members of his Party reduce the deficit? We do not want to hear the same old garbage about these mythical profitable corporations. Let us hear it from the Hon. Member.

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, indeed it is a delight to answer a question from my friend and former colleague on the Finance Committee. First, had my friend stayed on the Finance Committee long enough, he would have heard some suggestions to which everyone on the Finance Committee agreed, but unfortunately, at the time, the Minister of Finance did not accept them. Had some of the recommendations we made regarding taxing financial intermediaries like the banks been accepted by the Government, there would have been more revenues from financial intermediaries. Had the Government accepted the notion of an advance corporate tax which is not quite as good as the minimum tax on corporations Members of the New Democratic Party have been proposing, more revenues would have been collected and we would have had a fairer tax system.

My friend rises in the House today and welcomes the higher Canadian dollar. I suspect he does not say that too often in his home constituency. I am sure the ranchers there are not all that pleased with a higher Canadian dollar. In fact, my friend believes in the free market. If he really believes in the free market, why does he not allow the dollar to simply float in the free market? Why does he not allow interest rates to float in the free market? If interest rates and the dollar were allowed to float in the free market, I would suggest that they both would be down quite substantially.

Mr. Stupich: And the deficit.

Mr. de Jong: Indeed, and the deficit, because interest rates would be lower.

Canadians are still saving. The bloom has gone off the southern Ontario boom. The demand for excess capital is not all that great. Interest rates could very well begin to go down. It is the activist intervention of the Bank of Canada and the Government that is keeping the interest rate up. The interest rate is being kept up, I suspect and I submit, because of the Free Trade Agreement.

We have made suggestions for dealing with the revenue side. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that we all agree that the deficit is a problem. How are we to tackle it? First and foremost, Members of the New Democratic Party insist that it has to be done fairly. The record of this Government is that it has not been done fairly. It has been done on the backs of the poor and middle–income earners. Every social study has proven that fact. Surely the Government cannot deny that.

If we are to tackle the deficit, first let us do it fairly. Let us also call upon industry as well as working people, fishermen and farmers to shoulder the burden of the debt. That means responsible behaviour on their part as well.

We have talked about Government debt. We should also talk about corporate debt. Right now, large corporations will acquire $100 million or $1 billion in extra debt as a poison pill in order to prevent corporate take-overs. Other large corporations are borrowing billions of dollars to take over corporations .They do it at government expense because it is tax deductible. They make capital scarce. They do not add to production. In fact, they decrease the ability and strength of our corporations.

We now find that the financiers are now the chief executive officers, not the engineers, because our corporations are not concerned with production any longer. We are losing the economic war to the Japanese and Europeans. We are losing jobs.

There is mass irresponsibility on the corporate side and yet they stand here and tell our Government they need more tax breaks, more inducements in order to invest, and special rates. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) suggested to his friends in his constituency, we need lower tax rates in order to induce investment. Yet much of that investment is going for corporate take-overs, money that further drains our treasury and further weakens our corporate sector. It leads to the loss of jobs and wealth.

In response to my friend, if we are to seriously go about the business of putting our economic house in order, we need the full co-operation of the business sector as well as labour, farmers, fishermen, all those men and women involved in activities that make our economy function. It has to be a collective responsibility. We need a Government that can show leadership in bringing that about. So far, we have seen a Government that lacks the imagination, the foresight and the leadership. That is why I again propose that the Minister of Finance should resign.

Mr. Pat Sobeski (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, Bill C-11, the Borrowing Authority Act, 1989-90, permits the Government to borrow $25.55 billion. This will permit the Government to meet its financial requirements and conduct foreign exchange operations.

The projected deficit is $30.5 billion in the 1989-90 fiscal year compared with $38.3 billion in the 1984-85 fiscal year. However, this is not equal to the borrowing requirements of the Government.

The Government's financial requirements are a comprehensive measure of its demands on credit markets. These requirements have fallen sharply from the $29.8 billion in 1984-85 to the projected $20.5 billion in 1989-90. Relative to the size of the economy, financial requirements have fallen from 6.7 per cent of Gross Domestic Product to a projected 3.2 per cent this year. By 1993-94, the Government's financial requirements will have fallen to $3 billion or 0.3 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product.

I am a new Member in the House, but I heard references yesterday going back to comments made by C. D. Howe. We have heard Finance Ministers stand up in this House and say it before. One Finance Minister stood up and said: "We intend to continue severe restraint. Our experience this past year and the prospects next year force us all to recognize the central problem of the control of public expenditures in Canada today". Many may think that sounds like the current Finance Minister, but that was Edgar Benson in his Budget Speech of October, 1968, 20 years ago. The Finance Minister at that time said a tight rein was needed because expenditures had surged to $12.3 billion.

In June of 1969, which was the Budget of the last fiscal year that Ottawa showed a surplus of some $332 million, the Finance Minister at that time said: "A fiscal policy of restraint, combined with restrictive monetary policy, would be an effective combination to overcome persistent inflationary pressures." That was 1969. We are hearing the same comments today.

On March 12, 1970, when spending climbed by 12 per cent, the Finance Minister told Members of this House: "Members are aware of our sustained effort to restrain the growth of expenditures". In the June 18, 1971 Budget, spending jumped 15 per cent in fiscal year 1971-72. Transfers to the provinces rose 40 per cent and federal funds for education climbed 41 per cent.

Then we come to the Budget of May 8, 1972, the then Finance Minister Turner's first Budget. It was full of goodies for the election expected that fall. One was inflation indexing, which was to contribute in large measure to future deficits. The Finance Minister at that time said: "The bare fact of the matter is that we cannot do everything at once. We simply do not have the resources". In that Budget, spending went up 15 per cent and the deficit rose to $1.8 billion.

We now come to February, 1973. The Liberals had been returned as part of a minority Government and needed the parliamentary support of the New Democratic Party. The Finance Minister said: "Cutting taxes, instead of increasing spending, reflects the government's determination to impose restraints upon its own spending." It did cut personal taxes. They fell by some $1.3 billion. What about reducing spending restraints? In the fiscal year of 1973–74, spending jumped 17 per cent.

May 6, 1974 was another pre-election Budget. For the fiscal year 1974–75, spending went up 28 per cent. There were further cuts in revenue, too. The sales tax on building materials was cancelled. Personal income tax credits were increased. The $1,000 exemption for interest income was introduced. Finance Minister Turner said he would hold the deficit to much the same effective level as the previous year to help counter inflation. The deficit was over $2 billion.

We now go to June of 1975, one year later. The Finance Minister said: "The Government proposes to set an example of restraint in this regard by imposing strict control over its activities and programs". Inflation was running at 10 per cent. With indexing, government revenues climbed only 8 per cent while spending had soared 20 per cent. The deficit had gone from $2 billion to $5.7 billion in just one year. It almost tripled.

In May of 1976, after the introduction of wage and price controls, Finance Minister Macdonald said: "In recognition of the widespread feeling among Canadians that present circumstances demand restraint in government spending, the Government has stated that the trend in total spending by all Governments in Canada should not rise more quickly than the trend in Gross National Product". In the March, 1977 Budget, interest payments came to $5.5 billion which was about half of the $10.4 billion deficit.

In his last Budget, the Finance Minister told Parliament, "For some time, our policy has entailed a sizeable deficit. As the slack in the economy is taken up, the deficit will be reduced". That comment was made in 1977, some 12 years ago.

We move to April of 1978. This was Jean Chrétien's first Budget. As spending rose 10 per cent, the Finance Minister said: "We have all come to expect too much of the economy. Governments increased their spending too quickly. The expenditures of all levels of Government in Canada have since been brought under control". Then we come to a Budget in December, 1979. Spending growth was pared down to 8 per cent. Why the reduction? Because this was the Budget introduced by Finance Minister Crosbie. Short-term pain for long-term gain. At that time the Conservative Finance Minister said: "The most fundamental element in our plan to lower the deficit is severe restraint over government expenditures." That was the Budget that included the 19-cent a gallon increase. After that election we saw the introduction of the litre and within a year we saw the price of gasoline increase some 60 to 70 cents a gallon.

• (1240)

On October 28, 1980, Allan MacEachen's first Budget included the dramatic National Energy Program. Interest payments were $10.7 billion which accounted for three-quarters of the annual deficit of $13.5 billion. The Finance Minister said: "A major item in the Budget is the interest we have to pay on the public debt. We must slow down the growth of the public debt charges. This is one of the reasons I am determined to reduce the deficit". Here, one year after the Conservatives had introduced spending of some 8 per cent, and Finance Minister MacEachen saying that he would reduce the deficit, he put forward increases of some 17 per cent in spending for the fiscal year 1980–81. That was especially ironic, because he said he would have strict control over the rate of government spending.

We now move to November, 1981. Again the Finance Minister predicted that the deficit that year would be much lower, $10 billion compared to $11 billion the previous year. By the end of that fiscal year, the deficit had increased to almost $15 billion.

In June of 1982, the Government said: "The Government cannot responsibly add to the deficit. It has to reallocate resources. The last Budget put in place a structure of revenues and expenditures that should, when recovery gets fully under way, gradually lower the deficit." During that fiscal year, the deficit nearly doubled to $27.8 billion.

Then on November 8, 1984, the Tories were elected. In September we had inherited a $38.3 billion deficit, a national debt of $199 billion requiring interest payments of $22 billion annually.

An Hon. Member: What is it today? Double!

Mr. Sobeski: The Members behind indicate the total debt may have doubled. We inherited a debt of $199 billion. We are hearing numbers of $320 billion. That is not quite doubling.

An Hon. Member: One hundred and ninety-nine billion dollars is not quite the figure either. One hundred seventy billion dollars would be correct.

Mr. Sobeski: Just listen to this. In 1975-76 the deficit was $31 billion. In three years the deficit had gone to $60 billion. The Government of the day had managed to double the deficit in that period. If that was not enough, that Government took the national debt from $60 billion to $199 billion. It managed to triple the debt in that six-year period. It is not a record that the Liberal Government at that time should be proud of.

Fiscal responsibility has been a top priority since this Government took office four and a half years ago. In 1984, the fiscal situation presented the Government with a difficult challenge. Expenditures were growing much faster than the economy while revenue growth was falling far behind. In the four years ending 1984-85, the budgetary deficit had more than doubled relative to the size of the economy. The growth in the public debt had reached alarming proportions. Public debt was rising well in excess of 20 per cent a year. The rapidly deteriorating fiscal situation has become an impediment to sustained non-inflationary growth, the creation of jobs and ultimately the future well-being of Canadians.

During the past four years, this Government has faced up to the challenge of the debt with a series of tough measures to restrain government spending. We are now spending less on programs than we receive in revenues. The irony is that so long as we let government debt continue to grow, we reduce our ability to fund education, assist the jobless and assist the very needy in our society. The real opponents of social programs are those who refuse realistic discussion of deficit reduction. The current surge in interest rates shows how vulnerable Canadians are to debt costs. In just one year, the projected cost of paying interest on debt has risen by more than $6 billion.

Let us not kid ourselves. The measures in the Budget are tough because they match the challenge the nation faces. Deficit spending is deferred taxation, and that deferral cannot go on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Milliken: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member who has just addressed the House has talked about the Government's management of the economy in the last few years in laudatory terms when many economists, businessmen, and Members of the Opposition indicate the opposite is true. One of the difficulties we face is the mounting size of the deficit. I want to quote two statements to the Hon. Member and ask if he agrees with my comments on them. The first is contained in the leaked Budget speech. Although we did not hear this read in the House, it has now been tabled. The document that I presume the Minister was supposed to read before the Budget sprouted the leak states:

> We recognized the seriousness of the debt problem when we came to office.

I could add they appear to have done very little about it.

> We have been acting to get it under control.

Four years of inaction.

> We have succeeded in reducing the growth of the debt from almost 24 per cent in 1984 to less than 10 per cent last year.

That is one statement made by the Minister of Finance in the leaked document. The other statement was made in the House yesterday morning by the Minister of State for Privatization (Mr. McDermid). I told him his statement was ridiculous and he disagreed with me. I want to read his statement. I quote from page 1111 of Hansard of yesterday.

> Our financial requirements were down from $30 billion to $22 billion in the same period. We reduced the growth of the debt to 9.9 per cent. That was the first time in 15 years that the debt growth was less than 10 per cent.

Anybody with an elementary knowledge of arithmetic can figure out that if the debt gets bigger, the growth will be a smaller percentage of the total. We can expect, therefore, that with the growth of the debt predicted in the Budget this year by another $30 billion and next year by another $28 billion, which will undoubtedly grow to $30 billion by the time the Government gets around to managing it, the growth in the debt will be down to about 5 per cent in no time.

To make these statements is to deceive the Canadian people, because they are not portraying an accurate picture of what is happening. We say the percentage increase of the national debt is going down. Yes, that is true; but the amount of the increase is just as big every year. It is ridiculous to suggest otherwise. Yet that is what is perpetrated in the leaked budget document on the second page. It was further compounded yesterday by the Minister of State for Privatization when he spoke in this House. I stated then and repeat today, it is ridiculous to cite that figure. I ask the Hon. Member who has just spoken if he does not agree with me.

Mr. Sobeski: The Hon. Members are playing games with numbers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sobeski: I was quoting Budgets from 1968–70. The bottom line is that 9.9 per cent growth is the first time in 15 years the debt has been below that percentage. The citizens and taxpayers of Canada understand that currently 31 cents of every tax dollar is used to pay interest on the debt. If the Government does not turn the annual interest problems around, that number will increase from 31 cents to 40 cents to 50 cents. This will result in the Government continuing to raise taxes. We will not be in a position to offer new programs. We will be taxing the taxpayers to pay interest.

• (1250)

It was quite clear that is what happened in this last Budget. Suddenly we are very vulnerable to the amount of the debt. The Budget that has been presented to the House indicates that in two years we will have turned the corner. In four years the annual deficit will be down to $15 billion, and then if we raise taxes we will be in a better position as a country to use those taxes for the programs that all Canadians want.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Member for Cambridge (Mr. Sobeski) on a very useful and instructive contribution to the debate this morning. I think it is important to point out in passing that during the past four years figures indicate that in fact there are 1,500,000 more Canadians working today than was the case back in 1984.

I think it is instructive also to note the composition of the national debt and what has happened in regard to the deficit over the past four or five years. 1984–85 was the last budget year of the previous Liberal government. The deficit was $38 billion. Over half of that deficit figure was government program over expenditures.

The fact is that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the present Government has over the past four years worked that deficit into a position where the Government's expenditures today are in a balanced position, in the sense that current programs are financed out of tax revenue. The entire deficit for the past year relates to interest that was built up under those Liberal years.

I think it is important to point out that what we are spending money on today through the deficit is interest on that past Liberal debt entirely, not a bunch of nonsense like scientific research tax credits, Katimaviks, Canadairs and de Havillands and all of that kind of waste that went on during the past.

I would ask the Hon. Member, are these Members opposite not being a little bit hypocritical in suggesting that there have been massive increases in Government expenditures which are the root of this deficit? Is it not a fact that the root of the deficit today is entirely the mis-government and overspending of the previous Liberal Government?

Mr. Sobeski: I would like to thank the Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia (Mr. Wilson). I would like to say that as a new Member sitting on the Finance Committee it is indeed a pleasure to be part of that committee, inheriting the fine legacy of this gentleman and other people who have made the Finance Committee such a good committee in the past.

I think what the Member is referring to is that in my previous comments we talked about Government saying in 1968, 1970, 1974 and 1978 that we all recognized the problems that would be created unless the debt was brought under control. I know the difference is that this Government not only recognized it in 1984 but rather than just engaging in rhetoric and forgetting about an increase in spending, we are doing something about it. That is the difference between what we have heard over the past 20 years and what this Government is doing today.

Mr. Pickard: Madam Speaker, I would like to just bring forward the question of responsibility in financial spending. I notice, as my hon. friend has pointed out, that he considers all the woes that our present Budget has as Liberal legacy.

I find it very difficult, in looking at a time line of four and a half or five years, that somebody who was there before can still be blamed. I also find it a little difficult to swallow that if the deficit was $168 billion five years ago, and it is $330 billion today, that this Government has worked very hard to reduce that national debt. The deficit has remained quite strong and we are going $30 billion per year further and further into debt. The suggestion has been made that this Budget is going to reduce our national debt or hold our national debt, or be a responsible Budget. Yet we are talking about $30 billion in that case as well. That is the projected debt next year.

It seems to me that I would like to hear the Member's comments with regard to the last four years, not the past 20 years. I would like to hear him comment on how responsible it is to double the debt in four years, going from $168 billion to $330 billion, and where we are heading now.

An Hon. Member: Right downhill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): A short answer from the Hon. Member for Cambridge.

Mr. Sobeski: I guess it is where we draw the time line and I will start drawing the time line. In 1984 the annual deficit went from $38 billion, down to $34 billion, down to $30 billion, and down to $29 billion. It has been going down and down in that direction. From 1970–71, where we could perhaps start the time line, the deficit went up one year, went up the next year, went up the next year, and went up the next year. That has been the difference. With the time line going back to 1970, the deficit has gone up, and since 1984 to 1988 the deficit has been going down.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period of questions and comments has now expired. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) on a point of order.

Mr. Milliken: Madam Speaker, there have been discussions between the Parties and I believe there might be a disposition to call it one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent?

THE ECONOMY

IMPORTANCE OF REDUCING BUDGETARY DEFICIT

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Brome—Missisquoi): Last weekend, Mr. Speaker, I met with about one hundred electors, as most Members do in their own riding. They all agree that Canada's budget deficit has to come down, so today I should like to tell the House about the message I conveyed to them. I told them that, human nature being what it is, we would all be inclined to let someone else shoulder the heaviest part of the burden. The Government's role is to ensure that as many people as possible are prepared to tighten their belt so as to restore the balance in the public accounts.

Regardless of the means used in the quest for that goal, the Opposition Parties are bound to disagree—for partisan motives, probably—as do certain pressure groups who feel they have been cheated out of something. The Government must entertain and respond to objections, listen to representations and consider their legitimacy, but first and foremost it has to govern, and that means discharging the responsibilities mandated by the people. The situation is too serious and our leaders simply cannot jeopardize Canada's economic future for the sake of political gain.

Canadians will come to appreciate that in the interest of our children and grandchildren we must follow the straight and narrow path for a while.

ADJUDICATION OF CONTRACTS

RESPECT OF STANDARD

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, my comments concern the call for the tenders for the relocation of Transport Canada.

By announcing that the call for tenders in connection with the relocation of Transport Canada was cancelled, the Mulroney Government has violated the fundamental principle of the contract process, thereby jeopardizing its ethics and integrity.

The Mulroney Government has tried to sink a major project that had no financial impact on the current Budget, while failing to consider the full implications of that decision.

That is why today, I want to ask this Government to reverse its decision to cancel the call for tenders by going back to the study process as soon as possible.

GREAT LAKES FISHERY

CONTROL OF LAMPREY

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, despite the efforts of the Great Lakes Fishery Commission which was established in 1955 to restore the Great Lakes fishery, it appears that the sea lamprey will continue to devastate our commercial and sporting fishing industry. By the year 2000 the sea lamprey population is expected to double. Without the funding to control this intruder, trout and salmon numbers will be cut in half. Sport fishing expenditures will decline by $552 million a year, commercial fishing revenues will decline by $135 million a year and regionally there will be losses of $1.4 billion.

It is essential that there be adequate assistance to control this menace now before the grim scenario described becomes a reality.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TROOP REDUCTIONS—BASE CLOSURES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, Canada spends $1 billion a year on our troops in Europe. That is $1 billion that could be spent more effectively in the judgment of the NDP and, indeed, at one time in the judgment of former Defence Minister Erik Nielsen who unsuccessfully tried to bring the troops home in 1985.

Instead of working toward saving money by making Canadian troop reductions in Europe in the near future, preferably as part of a negotiated reduction in conventional forces by NATO and the Warsaw Pact, the Government has chosen to sabotage the economies of many Canadian communities like Portage la Prairie, Manitoba, which stands to be devastated by the elimination of its base.

The Government had an opportunity to save money, promote peace and disarmament in Europe and strengthen our forces at home. Instead, it chose to wreck Canadian communities, weaken our forces at home and ignore the possibilities for creative and cost-saving changes in Europe.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the PPCLI belongs in Winnipeg at Kapyong Barracks and should not be transferred to Edmonton.

THE BUDGET

CBC CUT-BACK

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, it is more Tory double talk. Otherwise, how do you explain the strange twist of logic of the Tory Throne Speech that talks to the fostering of Canada's cultural and national uniqueness while the Budget savages its main vehicle, the CBC, with a massive incremental of $140 million cut.

The Tories are set on brick by brick dismantling of the CBC. Their commitment began to crumble under the former Minister of Communications' $85 million cut in 1984, followed in 1986 by another $10 million loss. As well, from 1984 to 1989, Conservatives denied enough funds to keep pace with inflation, causing another 15 per cent revenue loss; another $140 million. In one decade this Government will have stripped our Canadian public radio and television of $280 million. This is an outrage.

At the critical juncture in the political evolution of Canada, we need strengthened French, English, northern and international Canadian services providing an independent Canadian perspective. These Draconian cuts are a disservice to all Canadians. It is time for the CBC's board of directors to stand up and call this Government to account, for it is obvious they cannot count on this Minister. I suggest that the arts community does the same thing.

SPACE AGENCY

LOCATION OF AGENCY

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, following today's announcement by the Minister of Transport (Mr. G. Bouchard) and Mr. Larkin Kerwin, president of the Canadian Space Agency, the new Canadian Space Agency will be located in Québec, in the greater metropolitan area of Montreal, near the Saint-Hubert airport.

The Minister of Transport told the media yesterday: "We should stop fighting about aspects that are totally removed from the fundamentals of the problem and concentrate on getting as much as we can for Québec—This is a useless debate that diminishes the impact of our comments as Québecers because it makes us look very parochial, at a time when we should be concentrating on what is good for the entire province".

Mr. Speaker, whether they live in Longueuil, Laval, Saint-Hubert or Saint-Laurent, Québecers have enough common sense to realize that they are still in the metropolitan area of Montreal.

ESTONIA

CANADIAN SUPPORT FOR POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC REFORM

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on March 26 of this year, the people of Estonia enjoyed their first free elections in over 50 years of Soviet rule.

These free elections are at the very heart of a long struggle toward political and economic autonomy leading eventually to the possible restoration of full independence and sovereignty.

We are pleased to have with us today members of the Popular Front, a movement that has recently been acknowledged by the Kremlin, and which has been at the forefront of the radical reforms taking place in Estonia.

The time has come for Canada to promote trade and economic ties with Central and Eastern Europe. As these countries move closer to freedom and independence, they will need our support and commitment to achieve political and economic success.

Canada should adopt a resolution similar to that passed in the United States Congress in February of this year that called on the countries involved to revoke the seizure and occupation of the Baltic States by the Soviet Union as a result of the Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REQUEST TO INVESTIGATE UNITED PARCEL SERVICE

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, United Parcel Service, the largest parcel delivery service in North America, has been licensed in British Columbia to act as a customs broker.

On or about April 7, acting on reliable information regarding questionable conduct of this company, a regional collector for Revenue Canada refused to allow its licence to be renewed and asked UPS to show cause as to why it should not be revoked.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, acting on concerns identified by businesses in my constituency, my office documented considerable evidence of this company's pattern of diverting goods from interior customs entry points to Vancouver where its own customs brokerage is located.

Not only does this practice contravene explicit instructions of the receiver, but it also reduces the volume of goods required to achieve economy of scale necessary for commercial operators to service interior routes and denies customs brokers in Osoyoos business which is rightfully theirs.

The behaviour of UPS in British Columbia has been disruptive to the normal flow of goods across the border and has without justification caused interminable delays to B.C. customers awaiting delivery of goods.

I call upon the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Jelinek) to hold a full investigation into the activities of this U.S.-based company before any renewal of licence is granted.

TELEPHONE CHARGES

N.B.TEL FEE CANCELLATION

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I recently brought to the attention of N.B. Tel a fee charged for the listing of 1-800 numbers in my province. This is a nuisance fee that hurts all businesses, particularly small businesses.

Yesterday I received a reply from the president of N.B. Tel on this matter agreeing with me that it is a nuisance fee and should be removed. N.B.Tel will be taking this matter before the New Brunswick Public Utilities Commission in the hopes that the fee will be dropped.

I commend N.B. Tel for this very progressive move and I also request that the Public Utilities Commission accept this proposal put forward by N.B.Tel and urge that all public utilities across the nation follow N.B.Tel's lead in this regard.

INTERNATIONAL AWARD—PRIME MINISTER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, for the second time in as many months we have seen the embarrassing spectacle of a Canadian politician going to the United States to pick up an award which is neither deserved nor should be accepted.

First, we saw the former Minister of Communications pick up an Oscar. Now we have the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) accepting an environmental award from a group that does not even believe that acid rain is a problem which needs cleaning up.

To give the Prime Minister the environmental award is a little bit like giving the Captain of the Exxon Valdez a safe-driving award. It has about as much impact, and it is just about as relevant.

Let us look at the facts. I would like to call this to the attention of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard). During the life of this Government a half a billion dollars in actual spending has been cut from environmental programs.

[Translation]

If the Minister of the Environment (Mr. L. Bouchard) really has the ear of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), why was his budget cut by half a billion dollars? If the environment is really this Government's priority, why did the Prime Minister cut the Minister's budget by half a billion dollars? Is that fair?

[English]

He should be ashamed to accept the award.

THE ENVIRONMENT

INTERNATIONAL AWARD—PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is fleeing the fall-out of his Budget, a Budget that is a complete reversal of Conservative campaign promises.

Where is he off to? He is off to accept an American award in Boston for his contribution to international understanding. Perhaps we should offer such an award to attract the PM to western Canada, to look into matters such as forestry, oil spills, and alienation.

Where next goes the master of double-talk but to Washington to receive a European award for his dedication to environmental management everywhere outside Canada? Perhaps we should offer one here in Canada in the hope that he will realize that Canada has only 1.3 per cent of our lands protected in national parks.

The award-giver, Prime Minister Brundtland, recommended that at least 12 per cent of lands in every nation and region be protected in conservation zones. Perhaps the PM will return home to announce the doubling of national parks and conservation areas. After all, only one-half of our national bioregions have any protection at all.

Perhaps the PM will find enough courage to tell President Bush to keep the oil rigs and oil spills out of the Arctic Wildlife Refuge, home to our 180,000 caribou.

If he does not do these things for Canadians while accepting awards abroad, then he is revealed as a fraud.

NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT

Mr. Ross Stevenson (Durham): Mr. Speaker, the whole world is watching with utmost hope as the two superpowers and other countries with nuclear weapons attempt to move from a balance of power based on deterrence to a new global stability based on trust and other confidence-building measures.

The Government and the people of Canada support nuclear disarmament. Now Canada is playing a leading role in the study of seismic detection of underground tests of nuclear weapons. Dr. Peter Basham, an Energy, Mines and Resources seismology expert, is chairing a group of international scientists from 25 different nations around the world working on seismic verification and developing a world-wide system of rapid data exchange to support a test ban.

This is just one of the significant contributions that Canada is making in increasing the hope and confidence of achieving a workable test ban and nuclear disarmament.

ROUGE RIVER VALLEY – HERITAGE PARK

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, the House has heard a number of exhortations from Hon. Members from the great City of Scarborough in support of the creation of an environmental heritage park in the Rouge River Valley and table lands.

The proposed parklands comprise about 5,000 acres inside Scarborough of which 80 per cent are government-owned, and an additional 4,000 of protectable land surrounding the river's headwaters to the north in York region. Through fate or miracle, these lands still contain much of their original endowment of vegetation, wildlife, clean water and fish.

The Rouge lands are not just a piece of real estate. They are still an ecosystem recognized as a critical and unprotected natural area by the World Wildlife Federation, the Nature Conservancy of Canada, and the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources.

The present and past Ministers of the Environment have committed themselves publicly to the initiative to develop these proposed parklands. I want to record my impression of our pitiable record as a society of coexisting within the context of our current environment. What will it take to wrestle the ethics of industrial development and growth to the ground in favour of environmentally sustainable development?

If we cannot save this precious ecosystem from the bulldozer when it is so obviously saveable, just maybe we will show ourselves incapable of saving any ecosystem, including that of all mankind.

NATIONAL REVENUE

ZERO TOLERANCE DRUG POLICY

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, it has been reported recently that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Jelinek) is considering the adoption of a zero tolerance drug policy as part of the Government's war on drugs. Such a policy would enable Canada Customs to seize cars, planes and boats in which illegal drugs are transported.

I would like to take this opportunity to express my support for the adoption of this policy. Yes, it is a strong measure. But strong measures are necessary when we are dealing with a serious problem.

The fact is that drug use in Canada has reached epidemic stages which require the adoption of stricter and more diligent drug enforcement policies. It is imperative that we take steps now which will force smugglers to think twice about bringing drugs into our country.

This is why I now implore all Members of the House, regardless of Party affiliation, to support the Minister in the adoption of the zero tolerance policy. Such a policy will make Canada's future drug-free.

THE BUDGET

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, since the Budget was dropped on us, people from all across the country in all walks of life are asking a question. That question is this. What happened between November, 1988 and May, 1989?

The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister are no longer singing the same tune that they sang last fall. Thus—

Mr. Charest: The time for statements is over.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): —my question for Captain Steroid is this, although it is addressed to the Minister of Finance.

Yesterday, in reply to a question I asked the Minister, if he implied that the provinces should take up the slack in providing help to the unemployed, the poor, senior citizens and the sick because the provinces had managed their affairs better than the federal Government had managed its own affairs.

Based on the Minister's experience in the last four years, what does he believe the provinces should do, raise their taxes, their deficits, or cut programs?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member does not watch what he calls me, I may go into a telephone booth and take off my shirt.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peterson: Michael, you have stripped every other Canadian, you should do it to yourself.

Ms. Clancy: Anything but that!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question I point out to the Hon. Member that total transfers to the provinces are some $34 billion. Cash transfers represent 23 per cent of our spending.

It is very important when we look at the over-all problem of the government debt—and I am sure the Hon. Member agrees that we do have a problem with the Government debt—that we look at this as an element of the measures that we take in addressing that problem. That is why we have included some elements of those government transfers.

He also understands that we have not changed equalization. The equalization program is exactly the same as it was before. That is important, particularly to provinces like his own.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I certainly would not want to leave the impression that I addressed the Minister of Finance as Captain Steroid. I reserve that for the Minister of Youth who is very familiar with the subject.

Mr. Charest: And he is the MP for haemorrhoids.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): I want to tell the Minister he should start to wonder about putting Preparation H right around his lips.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PROGRAM FINANCING—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, before the Budget was tabled in this House, Canadian workers and the unemployed were advised that they had to shoulder the burden of training and retraining. We are talking here about the most disadvantaged segment of our society. My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is the following: Now that the Canadian Government has completely withdrawn from the unemployment insurance program, will it continue to manage it only until it is privatized or until the provinces, as Québec indicated yesterday for example, take up the slack? Is it the strategy of the Canadian Government to withdraw entirely from everything that has to do with the unemployment insurance program throughout the country?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, the unemployment insurance reform announced two weeks ago prepares us for the challenge of the labour market in the year 2000. Having said that, I can assure you that this Government will continue to manage the unemployment insurance fund and to help out should financial difficulties arise. That is what we have done since 1980 and our Government knows how to take its responsibilities.

REDUCTION OF SERVICES

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, the Budget has indicated to Canadians that we are reducing the commitment of the national Government to eliminating regional disparity. No matter how it is sliced, the people who have analysed the Budget have discovered that we are going to have to consider cutting hospital beds and reducing services. The provinces are going to be asked to become more and more the players. They have managed their affairs so well, according to the Minister of Finance, that now they have to pick up the slack.

My question, Mr. Speaker, is this: Is the only role of the national Government, as a result of its Conservative agenda, to make sure that there are two kinds of Canadians, those who live in the areas that have low unemployment and very, very strong provincial Governments, and that other areas of the province that have high unemployment and are faced with high interest rates going to have to scramble and survive on their own? In other words, is the agenda of this Government to continue to exacerbate regional disparity while at the same time the only concrete result of their agenda is to have continuing high interest rates in this country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the comments of the Hon. Member, and I want to point out to him that we took very seriously the need to try to find an appropriate regional balance. Let me quote from the Cape Breton Post of last Saturday wherein it said:

> Wilson might have chosen many other combinations of taxes and cuts—. Most of the alternative mixtures would likely have turned out worse for the region.

That is not Mike Wilson. That is the Cape Breton Post. That is what we have tried to achieve and I think that comment shows we are pretty close to achieving that. But the Hon. Member has criticized four or five different ways that we have taken to address this debt. Does he not agree that we have a debt problem? Does he have any alternatives to addressing that debt problem, or is he going to simply criticize without coming up with any positive alternatives?

THE BUDGET

REDUCTIONS IN SOCIAL SERVICES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. Medicare is Canada's most important social program. Hospitals and the care given to our sick by our health professionals is fundamentally important to all Canadians. The Minister's recent Budget, coupled with the unilateral cut-backs in 1986 in EPF, has resulted in Prince Edward Island receiving $7 million less, Newfoundland $34 million less, New Brunswick $43 million less, and Nova Scotia $53 million less in the fiscal year 1989-1990.

Will the Minister of Finance explain the fairness of choosing the sick, the elderly, the children and, yes, the poorer provinces of this country to shoulder the burden of his deficit reduction plan?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me state very clearly and categorically that there will be a substantial increase in the transfers from the federal Government on these programs. It will amount to some $25 billion over the next five years relative to the amounts over the last five years.

The Hon. Member understands, I am sure, that 20 years ago 12 cents of every tax dollar was spent on interest costs. That increased to 25 cents for every tax dollar four or five years ago. It has now jumped to 35 cents. The whole purpose of this Budget is to reverse that trend so that we will be able to afford these programs which we understand and agree are very important to Canadians.

REDUCTIONS IN EQUALIZATION PAYMENTS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister of Finance quoted from the Cape Breton Post. He should have gone two or three pages further where it said, "The worst Minister of Finance this country has ever had is Michael Wilson".

This Minister talks about increases in EPF while his Budget papers say the exact opposite. Provincial Ministers of Finance say that they are going to get substantial reductions in EPF. Will the Minister give an undertaking today to those provincial Governments that I have mentioned that there will be no closing of hospital beds, no reduction of staff, no reduction of nurses who care for the sick, or the orderlies who care for the infirm, no reductions whatsoever as a result of this Budget as it affects EPF? Or will the Minister do as he did with the Budget leak: Accept no responsibility, show no leadership and when in heat delegate to the poorer provinces?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I challenge the Hon. Member to show me where in those Budget papers there is a cut, where in those Budget papers, to use his words, "that what I just said is the exact opposite". He knows he is wrong on that. The rate of growth in these programs is slowing, but $25 billion over the next five years—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Members are laughing at $25 billion. That is a significant amount of new funding for the provinces—

Mr. Dingwall: That is duplicity from the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): He tells me that I am talking from both sides of my mouth. The Hon. Members on the other side say control the debt. Under your Government, the debt went up.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): They know the only way you can control the debt is to get the annual deficit down, and yet we have every Member on the other side fighting me every time we try to get the annual deficit down. He is talking out of both sides of his mouth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE BUDGET

SOCIAL POLICY CHANGES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My question is to the Minister of Finance. All Canadians will have noted by now that this Government has begun to completely undermine Canada's social policy tradition. They will not put up with it, I say to the Minister of Finance right now.

Will the Minister confirm in the House that the head of a family today at age 45 with an income of only $40,000 after 20 years, by the time he or she begins to collect the pension, will have this Government's claw-back provision applied to that pension, will have it hacked away by this Government? If the Minister will admit that this is going to happen to an average head of family today, will he try to justify it to the people of Canada?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well the objective of this program, and if I can point out to him—

Mr. Broadbent: We do. That is what is wrong with it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I point out to him that the universal character of these programs is absolutely maintained. We are leaving in place the safety net that has been established with these programs. But in order to achieve the over-all objective of this Budget, which is to maintain social programs, we must get a hold on this debt and get it under control. The Hon. Member has said he agrees the deficit is too high, he agrees that we have to get the debt under control. What are his ways of getting the deficit under control?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to table some day in the House a five-page letter that we sent to the Minister showing him where to get money without taking it from the poor.

• (1430)

TAXATION OF SOCIAL BENEFITS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister just said that the universality principle has been maintained. Only a Conservative would claim that when you give a dollar away with one hand and take it back with the other, you are maintaining the universality principle.

Since the justification for hacking away at pensioners above the $50,000 level is that these pensioners do not need Government pensions, will the Minister answer seriously, if that applies toward taxing back pension benefits today, according to Conservative philosophy, why will it not apply to taxing back medicare benefits tomorrow?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me read from the Budget itself because I do not think the Hon. Member has:

> The essential purpose of the social safety net is to assist those most in need, not to subsidize those with high incomes.

As I said earlier, we have left in place the universal character of these payments and, to repeat myself, we are doing this so that we can get the size of the interest payments down—

Mr. Broadbent: Swallow your propaganda.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —so that we can maintain the social programs, programs that both he and we are committed to, like medicare to which he just referred. That is the objective of this. If the Hon. Member does not understand—

Mr. Broadbent: I understand what you are up to. I understand very well.

Mr. Wilson Etobicoke Centre): —the impact of debt and the impact of interest costs, probably it is a good time for him to leave the House of Commons so that he can go back to school and learn more about it.

UNIVERSALITY OF MEDICARE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister feels more comfortable attacking pensioners than medicare, for some strange reason. I would like him to deal with the question. The Prime Minister, in the House yesterday and again on Friday, and the Minister himself in different circumstances justified whittling away at pensions because, he said, upper-income Canadians do not need them. If that reasoning holds today for those Conservatives, it does not hold for us, how are Canadians protected from the same Conservatives applying that principle to medicare tomorrow? I want to hear the answer to that.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the principle does not apply to medicare. We never said it does apply to medicare. It is only that Member who is saying that it does.

Mr. Broadbent: Pensions were sacrosanct once too.

An Hon. Member: Here today, gone tomorrow.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me give a couple of figures. This year we are spending as a Government $2.2 billion more on social programs, $865 million more on Old Age Security.

Let me point out to the Hon. Member that it is 4.3 per cent of recipients of Old Age Security who are affected by this—

Mr. Riis: One hundred thirty thousand in other words.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —and less than 2 per cent have the whole amount recovered. We are maintaining the universal character of the program but we are also doing it in a sensible way, so that we can maintain these programs on an ongoing basis.

HEALTH

LACK OF FUNDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, this is a very bad Budget. But the most shameful aspect of the Budget has to do with health care, and I quote from page 13 of the Budget Papers:

> The change in the growth of Established Programs Financing transfers will result in federal expenditure reduction of $200 million in 1990-91 with increasing savings in future years.

—on the back of sick Canadians. It's revolting!

Last February 7 all the Health Ministers got together and stated it was urgent to restore adequate funding under this program because our health care system was falling apart. How can the Minister of National Health and Welfare explain to the Canadian people that in order to reduce his deficit he must tax the sick and provide fewer health services than are now available because he has no money left?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member has said is wrong. It is quite wrong. We are increasing the amount of payments to the provinces under the Established Programs Financing by $25 billion. It is very clear, right there in the documents, and he knows that it is there in the documents. It is a $25 billion increase. That is a very substantial amount. We are providing this to allow the provinces to continue to provide the medicare services which they have been providing.

Mr. Tobin: Same level of service?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): This is the same services that the provinces are requiring and have been providing for many years now. I draw his attention again to the fact that there is an increase in debt service costs this year of $6 billion. Surely the Hon. Member can see that if we do not get this under control this will be dangerous to the whole nature of government in this country. What we are trying to do with this Budget is reverse that process, get that amount of money down so that we can continue to provide the services and programs that Canadians value.

INQUIRY AS TO WHY CERTAIN TAXES NOT INCREASED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance should stop hanging around Bay Street and go see what's happening in hospital corridors, where patients have to wait in line for care.

Go to Québec where patients have to wait a whole year before having a heart operation. Personally I had to fight to get the cancer treatment without which I would not have survived.

The Minister of Finance should leave Bay Street and go—

Can the Minister explain why he chose not to impose heavier taxes on individuals—on corporations and banks instead of finding $200 million to provide health care for sick Canadians?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me refer the Hon. Member to a comment that his Leader has made:

> "The mounting federal debt is obviously a burden that this Government and Parliament will have to deal with", John Turner said yesterday.

That is February 23, 1984.

If Hon. Members opposite agree with their Leader, and I know sometimes they do not, and they also acknowledge the fact that in the election last year they had $7 billion on an annual basis of new spending promises—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It was $7 billion a year. If Hon. Members opposite understand the significance of that, they would come to the floor of the House of Commons and offer to talk about alternatives, about different ways of doing this, and have a debate on how we can get control of this government debt, rather than just playing the opposition Party and criticize, criticize, criticize. Let us hear the alternatives.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

FARM MARKETING BOARDS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. During the election the Government promised to keep farm marketing boards. Two weeks ago, on April 14, the Minister announced that he was destroying the power of the Canadian Dairy Commission to raise the market price of milk regardless of how the input costs were affected during the next 20 months. Is he aware that his announcement on April 14 resulted in the chartered banks announcing, only three days later, that they were cutting the value of farm market quotas by 50 per cent for lending purposes? Why is the Minister and the Government destroying farm marketing quotas for Canadian farmers?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is misleading the House, not deliberately but I think inadvertently, when he makes that statement because marketing boards are secure as they have been.

I might remind the Hon. Member that in August, 1988, there was to have been a roll back as a result of the production formula. The price that was paid to the producers was to have been reduced by $1.89. In light of the fact that feed grain prices were rising at that particular time, this Government took cognizance of that fact and allowed the prices to remain the same.

As a matter of fact, as well, in February there was to have been a further cut-back and this Government stood by the dairy farmers on that occasion. It is standing by the dairy farmers today and will continue to do so in the future.

DISCOUNT OF FARM MARKET QUOTAS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister of Agriculture say that he is standing by farmers and not destroying farm marketing boards? I have an internal document by the Royal Bank in which they state their belief that farm marketing quotas will be destroyed at the GATT by the Government and that they will be sacrificial lambs.

This is dated April 17. They state they will be moving immediately to discount the value of farm marketing quotas for loan purposes. That is a 50 per cent reduction. Loans will not be given over a five year period. Interest rates to farmers will have to be raised because of this decision. Why is the Minister allowing this to happen? Why is he destroying farmers' quotas? In many cases, this will take away 25 per cent of a farmers' asset value. Why is the Minister doing this in light of the promise made during the election campaign?

• (1440)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, Members of the Opposition continue to use the same old fear tactics. During the election campaign and prior to the election campaign, they said the Free Trade Agreement would destroy supply management. They said that free trade would destroy import quotas. They said we should stick to the GATT, stick to the GATT. Now they are suggesting that the GATT will destroy supply-managed systems. Why do they not get their act together? Perhaps they should have a meeting with the Royal Bank of Canada and set the facts out straight.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MEMBERS OF POPULAR FRONT OF ESTONIA AND CONGRESS OF THE PEOPLES' DEPUTIES OF THE UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to Hon. Members' attention the presence in the gallery of Mr. Edgar Savisaar and Mr. Hardo Aasmae, both of whom are members of the Popular Front of Estonia and members of the Congress of the Peoples' Deputies of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

THE BUDGET

EXCESS PROFIT TAX

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. After last Wednesday's Budget leak, on Thursday the banking index at the Toronto Stock Exchange jumped by some 2.8 per cent, and as of one o'clock today, the stocks of the chartered banks were still climbing. One reason for this is that the banks had anticipated and avoided two major new tax hikes in the Budget of last week.

Can the Minister give us one single reason why he did not bring about an anticipated excess profit tax on the banks whose 1988 after-tax profits were $3.3 billion?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first let me say that the effects of tax reform last year will have quite a profound impact on the taxes paid by the chartered banks. Second, the large corporations tax applies to the chartered banks as it does to any other large corporation.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the excess profits tax would have brought in a quarter of a billion dollars this year alone. No wonder those Gucci shoes were clicking on Bay Street last Thursday.

NATIONAL SALES TAX—EXEMPTION OF BANKS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the day after the Budget leak, the shares of the Royal Bank went up by $1.37 and the shares of the Toronto Dominion Bank by $1.35. In addition to not having an excess profits tax, the Minister decided to exempt the banks from paying a national sales tax on their margins. In light of the fact that their after-tax profits last year were $3.3 billion, why did the Minister exempt the banks' profit margins from the national sales tax when he put that same national sales tax on music lessons for kids? why exempt the banks but not the kids?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first, the banks' purchases are fully taxable. They will be charging tax on sales of services but we are not applying the tax on their margins. It seems to me that about two weeks ago, Members of the New Democratic Party were up on their hind legs screaming away, saying that we would put a tax on mortgage interest. That is exactly what the Hon. Member is now saying we should do. He is flip-flopping and sucking and blowing. He cannot have it both ways.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY BRANCH LINE REHABILITATION

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The recent budget proposes to terminate the grain dependent rail branch line rehabilitation program one year early. In view of this, I would ask the Minister what is the future of the branch line between Weyburn and Willow Bunch, the Bengough subdivision in southern Saskatchewan.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the lines to which my Hon. colleague referred have been considered within the deficit reduction operation. The branch line rehabilitation program has been considered by the Senior Grain Transportation Committee as being the least effective way of helping transportation of grain in Western Canada. Because we had to consider cuts in our program, we have considered this one. We must ensure, however, that the branch lines will not be abandoned before the year 2000.

COMMITMENT OF MINISTER

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, how can the Minister reconcile the statement he just made to the House with his commitment in writing to the people of Southern Saskatchewan that the Bengough subdivision would be rehabilitated this year?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said before. That program has been considered within the deficit reduction operation, and the Senior Grain Committee said that it is the least efficient way to help transportation. That is why it has been cancelled. I cannot say any more than the program has been cancelled but the branch line will remain until the year 2000.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MANITOBA AEROSPACE INDUSTRY – GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Two years ago, Manitoba lost the CF-18 contract and we will never forget it. As a consolation prize, Bristol Aerospace received the much smaller CF-5 contract. The senior Minister for Manitoba said at the time that the Government has confirmed its responsibility to sustain the aerospace industry in Winnipeg. Now, as a result of last week's Budget, we have lost the CF-5 contract as well. What has happened to the Government's commitment to the aerospace industry in Manitoba? What has happened to its commitment to the people of Manitoba?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it seems strange that the Hon. Member would state that Manitoba or Bristol Aerospace has lost the CF-5 contracts. He would also put forward something regarding the CF-18 contracts. I can inform the Hon. Member that in the heads-up program of the CF-5, there will be a slight reduction. I can also inform the Hon. Member that there has been a reduction in the CF-18 program.

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Speaker, the Minister can try to fool his Tory friends but he will not fool the people of Manitoba.

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON MANITOBA

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Deputy Prime Minister. On the awarding of the CF-5 contract, the Minister of Energy said, "We felt a need to reaffirm our commitment to Western Canada to let you know that we have been and are listening to you and that we do not take you for granted". Was the Minister listening when 1,500 jobs were wiped out of Manitoba as a result of last week's Budget? Was he listening when the Budget revealed a string of broken promises? Is that the kind of commitment to Western Canada the Minister was talking about?

• (1450)

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the point of the Hon. Member's questions. I am sure the Hon. Member recognizes the need, as his leader has recognized, for all Canadians to be responsible in bringing the debt under control.

I say to the Hon. Member, there has been a reduction in expenditures in the Department of National Defence. There have been reductions in expenditures across Canada. The Hon. Member is condemning every reduction put forward. I ask the Liberal Party: What is your alternative to the debt that is taking away the future of your children?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

AID TO ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns another broken promise by this Government. On Friday morning past the Prime Minister said, and I quote from Hansard at page 1069:

> – that regional economic expansion programs will be up by 35 per cent over the next five years.

However, when the estimates for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency were tabled in this House less than one hour later, the document stated, and I quote from page 7 of those estimates: "In the short term, 1989 to 1992, there will be significantly less funds for Atlantic regional development than had been planned."

Why didn't the Prime Minister come clean in this House on Friday past and admit that Atlantic Canada would be savaged by his Government and that for the next three years this Government intends to pull the rug out from under Atlantic Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member must surely know, being an Atlantic Canadian, that this is a record year for regional development assistance. Almost half a billion dollars is flowing into Atlantic Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: The Hon. Member will also know, if he reads the press—

Mr. Nault: Didn't we just have an election?

Mr. MacKay: I guess they do not want to listen.

I want to say to my colleague that for the next five years, regional development aid through the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will be at a considerably higher level than any other period in history.

RENEWAL OF ERDA AGREEMENTS

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): My supplementary question is for the Minister of Public Works. Last year was an election year and one that the Minister should take note of because 20 out of 32 seats in Atlantic Canada could not be bought by ACOA.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): ACOA was allocated $83.8 million for co-operation agreements with the Atlantic provinces. This year that figure has been slashed to $39.6 million, a cut-back of over 50 per cent.

Can the Minister tell the House, in a year when $400 million in ERDA agreements have been allowed to expire, how many agreements he really intends to renew with those provinces, at what cost-sharing formula and could he also indicate what moneys have been allocated in future years for these agreements? Or will Atlantic Canada continue to be punished for exercising its democratic right on November 21?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it was never the intention of ACOA or this Government to buy any seats in Atlantic Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: A lot of seats in Atlantic Canada were helped by ACOA, regardless of political affiliations. There will be over $425 million profiled each year on average to help Atlantic Canada through Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and ERDAs. As for renewing ERDAs, it will be a matter for the provinces and for line Ministers to decide what their priorities are.

NATO

MDERNIZATION OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. It has to do with the debate going on within NATO about the modernization of nuclear weapons. I have asked the Minister about this before.

The Minister will know that there is growing support for the German position that there should be negotiations about battlefield tactical nuclear weapons instead of the modernization supported by the United States and the United Kingdom. The debate to date has been characterized as one between the Germans, the U.K. and the U.S.A. without there being a clear implication that Canada is even actively involved in the debate.

I want to ask the Minister of External Affairs whether he will now consider supporting the German position that there should be negotiations with respect to this important decision? Surely it is the will of the Canadian people that any opportunity to negotiate the elimination of nuclear weapons or the down-sizing of nuclear weapons should be taken. Why won't the Canadian Government support that view?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member suggested that the question of negotiation would proceed instead of modernization. I think the Hon. Member understands that that misstates the position of the German Government and indeed of most of the members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. There is an agreement supported by Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany and all the government heads of NATO that we should proceed with modernization. The question before NATO now is one as to the timing and balance between modernization and negotiation.

The Government has been involved in discussions and correspondence with other of our allies to work out a way that will allow the alliance to find an agreement enabling us to proceed with modernization and negotiations.

MINISTER'S POSITION RESPECTING NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, my worst suspicions are confirmed. You would think from listening to the Minister that he does not know there is the debate raging in NATO about the issue. The issue is the timing. The issue is whether or not NATO should now modernize or enter into negotiations at this time. That is the position we are asking the Canadian Government to support. Perhaps the Minister might do some creative thinking and ask himself how the question of modernization of tactical nuclear weapons could be linked to conventional force reductions, where the alleged superiority of the Soviet Union exists and which is one of the reasons for having the flexible response doctrine.

When will we have a statement from the Minister that outlines the Canadian position? When will we have active Canadian engagement in this debate and support for negotiation on this matter?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to believe that active involvement by Canada in these international questions involves making unilateral statements here in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What is involved and required is for Canada to continue to play an active role in the leadership of NATO. This will allow NATO, particularly in the context of the fortieth anniversary celebrations and Summit later this month, to proceed along a path that will lead it toward negotiation, and also when the time comes to move forward on modernization, will give effect to the agreement by all the heads of the NATO countries a year ago to proceed with modernization. That is the position of Canada. The role of Canada is to ensure we will make a constructive contribution to international discussions that will lead to greater stability and security.

THE BUDGET

CUTS IN ODA FINANCING

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for External Relations. This Government consistently presents itself as a defender of our global commitment to the poorest, a country with great concern and commitment to the world's hungry and the dispossessed including millions of Third World children. Canada's commitment to official development assistance traditionally accounts for about 3 per cent of total Canadian Government expenditure, but the Budget slashes to ODA account for 29 per cent of all Budget expenditure cuts. What credibility does Canada possess in the light of such doubletalk about our caring concern?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that if the Hon. Member wants to be fair, or should I say responsible, she must recognize that at this point the Government of Canada cannot go on with a kind of debt load that would preclude future aid programs or other commitments to Canadians.

This Government's actions are now predicated upon the ability to increase eventually all services, both national and international.

Now I would like to tell the Hon. Member that over these last four years we have increased aid funding by $800 million and even after this year's 5,6 per cent reduction, we will go on over the coming years, over the next four years increasing aid funding by $800 million.

This is a commitment to aiding developing nations this Government has always honoured.

[English]

COMMITMENTS TO THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same Minister. Under this Government, Canada has consistently reneged on its Third World assistance commitments.

• (1500)

Last Friday I received a letter from the Minister for External Relations with an enclosed overview of CIDA which reiterated the Government's previous commitments. The Budget denies this.

How does the Minister account for this absurdity of contradiction? Will the Minister agree that she failed to defend ODA–GNP ratios as committed by her and that she has badly let down Canada and Third World countries?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat to the Hon. Member what I said this morning in committee which is that this Government has been adhering to the gross national product share formula. As soon as next year we will increase aid funding, which will grow by $800 million over the coming years. And this, Mr. Speaker, is a firm commitment. Also, we are maintaining our commitment to our major priorities under the strategy put forward by the Canadian Government last year.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1989-90

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise to exercise the right of every Member of Parliament when a borrowing Bill is before the House, to deal with matters of his choice relating to the financial situation of the country. Of course, nothing relates more closely to the necessity of this Government to borrow than the Budget improperly before the House.

This is a Budget of broken promises, a Budget of deceit, and a Budget of economic mismanagement. It is a document which should not now be before this House of Commons.

Canadians have every right to be outraged. Canadians have every right to demand that this Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) resign. Look at how this Budget was presented: a day early at a hastily called press conference due to a leak. This was not a leak. This was a flood. The entire Budget was revealed prematurely at the expense of the Canadian people and against the privileges of this House.

Did the Minister of Finance resign? Did he offer to resign? No. Did the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) demand his resignation? No. Instead, in true presidential style, they ignored the responsibility to this House of Commons to uphold and defend the principle of budget secrecy.

What happened was absolutely unprecedented, not only in the history of the country but in the history of parliamentary democracy. The fundamental principle of parliamentary democracy is that the House of Commons, the elected representatives of the people, exercise primacy over all taxation and over all spending. Members of the House of Commons, therefore, must hear the Budget first. Secrecy must be maintained, not only to allow the Members of the House on behalf of the Canadian people to pass judgment on the Budget but to prevent anybody in this country, any Canadian, from obtaining an inside advantage. That principle serves to protect the public from those with advance information who could accumulate private gain at the expense of the rest of us.

When he defended his actions in the House of Commons last week, the Minister of Finance acknowledged that principle. This is what he had to say, as reported at page 1005 of Hansard:

> There are two essential considerations underlying budget secrecy: The need to ensure that a person does not profit or otherwise gain advantage from advance knowledge of the content of the Budget, and the principle that the Government's financial policy should be disclosed to the House of Commons before it is made known to others—

Those were the words of the Minister of Finance. I could not have put it more clearly, nor I doubt could you, Your Honour. Having stated the principle, he then completely absolved himself from all responsibility for adhering to it. He simply said that it was not his fault, nor was it the fault of his Department. Then whose fault was it?

The Prime Minister said that the Minister of Finance was the victim of a crime. There has been no proof of that. We will wait and see, but nobody in this House has been given any evidence of that. I doubt whether it was a crime. Somebody goofed and the Minister is responsible.

When it comes to the Budget, he is the captain of the ship. If there is a leak for whatever reason, he is responsible. If he goes aground for whatever reason, he is responsible. Just like the captain of the Exxon Valdez, he has to answer for it whether or not he is on the bridge.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Listen to the vocabulary used by the Prime Minister and his senior Ministers last week. The Prime Minister spoke of "the criminal—who stole the property." The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) referred to an "act of sabotage". He referred to the criminal act that occurred. All these citations are from Hansard. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) said, as reported at page 1013 of Hansard:

> —it became evident to the Government that this was much more than informed speculation. There was in fact a theft of budget material—

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) referred to the actions of a thief. The senior Ministers of the Government, led by the Prime Minister, said that it was a fact that the Budget was stolen, but RCMP spokesperson Pierre Belanger said right off the bat: "We are not assuming it is only theft."

My argument or my submission to Your Honour is that whether or not there was a criminal action, the senior Ministers had absolutely no proof for their words last week. Of course, they are now backing out. Yesterday, the Minister of Justice said that the Prime Minister was talking—and I am using the Minister's words—about "a crime in the vernacular". Now that is something new. This was not a statutory crime. This was not a common law crime. This was not a crime of the mind or of conscience. This was a crime in the vernacular. I know the Minister is a chartered accountant and a lawyer but I tell you that he ought to go back to law school and, if he does, tell us what a vernacular crime is really about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Now of course self-righteously he went on to say "there will be no discussion on this event until the investigation is finished". There is no discussion anymore; they are going back into their foxholes.

What they really meant was that they would not comment once they got caught faking it as they clearly were faking it last week. The Prime Minister and the Government are now trying to get off the hook by suggesting that they did not call it a crime, that it was the reporter, Doug Small, who called it a crime. I have mentioned to Mr. Small personally that I would be delighted to take his case any time because there is absolutely no proof of criminal intent and no proof of a crime.

We will wait to see what comes out of this investigation. We will want to see what the RCMP report says about the incident. We will want to see what precautions were taken to protect the secrecy. We will want to see how the printing bureau was surveyed and how extensive were those precautions, because what the Minister of Finance fails to grasp is: crime or no crime it would not have happened if there had not have been negligence, negligence for which the Minister is responsible under parliamentary and constitutional traditions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) Mr. Speaker, I repeat, the issue is not whether or not the Minister of Finance personally released information to the news media. Nobody accuses him of that. The issue is one of trust, placed in him as the custodian of the nation's finances, placed in him by this Parliament, placed in him by Canadians because of his responsibility for the finances and accounting of our nation.

• (1510)

The Minister has missed the point. He has undermined our system, attempted to blame the Opposition and not accepted the responsibility for those for whom he is constitutionally responsible. It is for that reason we are currently talking and negotiating before your Honour about the breach of privileges of the representatives of the Canadian people. These privileges, in our submission to you, have been breached and violated. That case of privilege is not yet over. We intend to pursue it through you, Mr. Speaker, and we intend to get answers from this Government. Even more important, it is not just our privileges that have been breached and violated, but our fiduciary free privileges as representatives of the Canadian people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Every single Canadian has the right to feel confident and be understood. Every Canadian has the right to feel confident with the assurance that the tax he or she pays is revealed, supervised, challenged, controlled and spent in a fair manner by the Minister subject to the overall control of the House of Commons. If Budget secrecy does not apply to all Canadians then the system will not work.

I have read editorial comments. Some editorials argue, as did The Financial Post yesterday: "Budget secrecy is a tradition that has outlived its usefulness". What that paper and what other newspapers editorially have failed to appreciate is that even though the general directions of some of the changes announced in the Budget may be known beforehand—even though I would encourage the Minister to consult widely, as I did when I held that office with the various sectors of the Canadian economy—the specific changes, the tax changes, the spending cuts, the amount of the deficit still have an impact on markets when they are announced. Prior knowledge of those specific changes can be used for personal profit, and so could the amount of the deficit in terms of movement on the world exchanges. We all know today, with the computer and instantaneous transmission of information, how quickly that information circulates not only across our own stock exchanges and money markets but instantaneously around the world.

If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will not resign over the largest release of budgetary information in the history of this country—indeed, as I attempted to submit to your Honour last Thursday, in the history of parliamentary democracy—then there will be chaos in the system, lack of trust, lack of confidence and lack of willingness of 11 million Canadian taxpayers to assess themselves voluntarily and to file that assessment with the Department of Finance.

By not resigning the Minister of Finance is setting precedent in which a Minister of Finance will be held accountable for budget leaks only if he personally leaked the information. That is not good enough for this House. That is not good enough for the country and that is a very misleading interpretation of his responsibility.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister claims he was the victim of a criminal act. The real crime is his Budget. The real crime is that this Tory Government did not tell Canadians the truth about what it intended to do. This is therefore a Budget of broken promises.

Before and during the election the Conservative Government made $17 billion worth of promises, megaproject after megaproject across the country. We had a battle of vocabulary with the Minister. He said: "Those are not promises. Those are election commitments." The Minister of Finance said to Canadians that they were spending commitments and the cost was supposed to be zero. Eleven days before the election the Minister of Finance said: "Conservatives have made spending commitments. In those reserves we have sufficient money to handle the announcements." During the campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said: "We have dealt with the deficit. You have got promises. All are within Michael Wilson's fiscal framework. Every nickel has been accounted for." As I have said already in this House of Commons, the Prime Minister's word is not worth a nickel.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious from reading this Budget that Tories never had the slightest intention of keeping their word. They never had the slightest intention, beginning with the Minister, of keeping and meeting those commitments. They were only interested in buying Canadian voters and buying the election so that they could sell this country at a discount to the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Last Wednesday evening, in a matter of minutes, the average Canadian family was saddled with $7 billion in new taxes and $2 billion in program cutbacks. To us this was not really a surprise, however. Throughout the election campaign last fall, we clearly explained to Canadians what Conservatives had in store for them. Across the country, in Caraquet, Saint-Jean, Thunder Bay, Saint-Jérôme and Saint-Boniface, I said that if he was re-elected, the Prime Minister would introduce a catastrophic new tax on consumer goods, abolish the universality of our social programs and destroy our social safety net. Everywhere I went, I was called a liar by his Ministers, by almost all the Ministers opposite. And now it has all come true. Who is lying now? Where are the real liars? This Budget is a list of broken promise.

During the TV debate in French, the Prime Minister said in full view of all Canadians, and I quote: "We shall maintain all our social programs, without fail. There is nothing in the Free Trade Agreement that will prevent us from fulfilling these obligations, now or in the future, and we intend to spend more on these programs.

In Sydney, Nova Scotia, the Prime Minister said, and I quote him once again: "As long as I am Prime Minister, social programs, especially those for the elderly, will be improved, not diminished".

In Québec City, the old capital, appearing before another group of senior citizens and this time taking his mother as his witness, the Prime Minister again made a solemn oath that he would not only maintain but increase social benefits for the elderly.

From one election to the next, the Prime Minister's style has remained the same. In 1984, he promised with his hand on his heart. In 1988, he swore a solemn on the taking his mother as his witness. However, only a few months later, he cut the old age security benefits of thousands of Canadians. But, says the Government, this cutback will only affect people with an annual income of $50,000 or more. We know the $50,000 cut off point won't last very long. This Government has no consideration for the elderly who built this country. Today, it may be $50,000; tomorrow, it will be $40,000 and then $30,000. Finally, no Canadian will have any assurance of having a decent old age. In any case, the purchasing power of $50,000 will decrease every year as a result of inflation. They did not tell Canadians the truth!

[English]

In the Budget last week the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance put an end to the universality of the old age pension and the family allowance. So much for the sacred trust. The principle of universality meant that every Canadian was treated equally. That principle lent credibility to our social programs. We were not dividing the country into those who deserve and those who had to be treated with charity. It was not charity. It was a right of citizenship. It was a right that every Canadian believed inherent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Once the principle of universality is abandoned then it is at a government's discretion who is going to be treated on the dole with the charitable largesse that a government decides to distribute from time to time. Using that principle of universality, this country built up one of the most advanced pension systems in the world. We built up one of the most advanced systems of family care, one of the best medicare systems on the globe. Universality means there is no difference in treatment according to your income; you get the same doctors, nurses, hospitals and care. But that principle is not compatible with the Tory right wing agenda.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Neither is federal funding for unemployment insurance. What did the Government say about unemployment insurance during the campaign? We have already taken this up before Your Honour in Question Period. On October 13, before a large assembly of Conservatives at the Hotel Newfoundland in St. John's, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) said this: "The federal Government has no plans to make changes to the Unemployment Insurance Program. It is complete nonsense to suggest otherwise". That was on October 13.

• (1520)

When asked by reporters if he had checked this with the Prime Minister—they know him well in St. John's—this is what the Minister said: "You're damn right I asked him about it and he said no, no one is planning any changes in the Unemployment Insurance Program".

To put it bluntly, either the Prime Minister did not tell the truth to the Minister for International Trade or the Minister for International Trade did not tell the truth to Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): With this Budget there will be no more money for unemployment insurance. The Prime Minister and his Government are taking nearly two billion more dollars away from unemployed Canadians—all this on top of what the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) did a week or so before. Worse, they are privatizing a public system that has been protecting Canadians for 40 years as a result of a constitutional amendment—the best system in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I shuddered when they started to privatize the infrastructure that holds the country together. I refer to Air Canada, the abandonment of VIA Rail and the Post Office. However, I never thought any Canadian Government would privatize one of the most fundamental features of social insurance and the social security net of the country, never—and this Government has done it.

What the Government is doing is shifting people off unemployment insurance and on to welfare. It is taking money away from the unemployed to put into training programs. We in this Party have been advocating more training and retraining programs for years. We need more of them. However, we always assumed in our arguments that the money would be forthcoming from the general revenues of the country, or from the business community with governmental assistance, but after four and a half years of slashing training and retraining programs the Government now claims to have discovered that training is not more important and has placed it on the backs of the unemployed. The money should have come from general revenues. It is an astonishing betrayal of public trust. Once again, as we build up this indictment in the House of Commons where it should be built up, it did not tell Canadians the truth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, look at what they said about a child care program. The Prime Minister and his House Leader brought the program into the House of Commons in mid-summer, July 14 or July 16 as I recall. It was not dealt with here in the House of Commons until the end of August. It was then sent over to the Senate. Through Senator MacEachen the Senate gave an undertaking to the Prime Minister that if he would wait three more hours—and the Senate had only spent a day or two on it—the Senators would pass it. The Prime Minister did not wait. He went to the country. Frankly, as I said during the election, he had to go to a wedding in Montreal and he called the election so he would not miss the date.

However, he went across the country saying this: "That was a tragedy for working women. It was an offence to Canadian families and we will be reintroducing that legislation and passing it as soon as Parliament comes back after the election".

Mr. Peterson: The big lie.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He told the Women's Health Research Foundation of Canada in Winnipeg on October 7, 1988, that he was very proud of the Government's $6.4 billion package on child care. This is what he said: "We will reintroduce child care early in the next Parliament and see it through to Royal Assent in the first session. Our program will add at least 200,000 new subsidized spaces to our existing child care facilities, doubling the present number".

The child care program promised by the Government is being eliminated before it is even put in place—a $4 billion cut over the next seven years. The Government and the Prime Minister said that there would be more spaces. Instead, there will be fewer spaces. Canadian parents, Canadian women—in particular 200,000 Canadian children—have been double-crossed, victims of a Tory right wing attack.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister and his Government did not tell Canadians the truth. Look at what the Prime Minister said during the campaign about government spending on regional development. He said before the Saint John Board of Trade in New Brunswick on October 13, 1988 that under a Tory Government "we will not have one Canada that is prospering at the centre while other regions do not receive a fair share of economic opportunity". However, they are slashing now even more money out of regional development. The campaign promise that regional development would be protected is a sham. We predicted that under the trade deal's provisions for the negotiation of subsidies the Americans would use its provisions for equal treatment and a level playing field to attack our regional development programs. What has happened is that, once again, the Government has not waited for the negotiations; it has already caved in to the United States. The hidden agenda of the trade deal is that the Tory Government is accepting the U.S. definition of subsidies. It has caved in before the negotiations have even begun.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): During the televised debate the Prime Minister said that education was one of his priorities—a priority was the way he put it. He talked about, and I use his words in the debate, "our renewed commitment to education". During the campaign he said that our health care system would not be weakened under the trade deal. Yet transfers to the provinces for health care and education have been brutally slashed—$4 billion over the next six years.

Is it any wonder that there is not a Premier who dares to stand up to support this Budget? Is it any wonder that they have attacked the Prime Minister for simply transferring problems to the provinces?

During the campaign the Tories said in their election manifesto concerning their agricultural program: "Farmers can count on a PC Government that has placed agriculture at the top of its agenda".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Agricultural programs have been slashed in the Budget, everything from crop insurance to retail branch line rehabilitation to Farm Credit Corporation loans. The family farm continues to be destroyed by a Government which said that it would defend the family farm.

For years the Tories talked about how committed they were, led by the Deputy Prime Minister when he was the Tory critic for transportation, to improving railways and our passenger train service. Only a few weeks ago the Prime Minister told Canadians that if they want to keep VIA Rail they would have to use it or lose it. Those were his words. Now Canadians will not even have that chance. The cuts in the Budget to VIA Rail mean the beginning of the end for rail passenger service in Canada. VIA Rail is being destroyed. The rest of Air Canada is being sold off. It is to be completely privatized.

I want to reiterate a question put by the Hon. Member for Northumberland (Mrs. Stewart). The Prime Minister used to say that he was in favour of increasing foreign aid. I want to quote what he said to the United Nations General Assembly. He went there on September 29, two days before he went to the Governor General asking for the writ of election. This is what the Prime Minister told the world in his speech: "Increased development assistance, especially to the poorest countries, is another imperative. Canada has just completed a review of its official development assistance policy. We have reset our bearings to improve the quality and increase the quantity of the help we give to recognize the special role of women in development and to concentrate on the poorest people in the poorest countries".

Ms. Copps: Another lie.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Canadians used to be proud of our contributions around the globe. We used to pride ourselves in being citizens of the world. We used to pride ourselves in being open to those members of the human condition who are not as fortunate as we are. In the best traditions of Mr. Pearson, Liberal philosophy has encouraged us to reach out to those in other countries who are less fortunate. Now in this Budget they are slashing foreign aid. They are leading our country and our citizens to turn our backs on the global human condition. We are turning our back on world poverty and hunger. As a Canadian, I want to say frankly to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the country that I am totally ashamed. Our Prime Minister has lied to the world.

• (1530)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This is a Budget of deception. The greatest hypocrisy, the greatest deception of all is what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) now says about the deficit and the public debt. It is a completely different story from what he said before. Before and during the election the Tories said there was no problem with the deficit or with the debt. Now the Minister wants Canadians to believe that the fiscal problems suddenly appeared after the election. That is absolute nonsense. Interest rates did not begin to rise only last week or a month or two ago. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance knew the debt picture during the campaign. They knew the deficit picture during the campaign. They knew that interest rates were running at 11 per cent or 12 per cent during the campaign. They deliberately misled Canadians. They did not tell the truth to the people of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Tories played at the politics of deceit. This is a Budget of broken promises, a Budget of deception. It is also a Budget of fiscal mismanagement.

[Translation]

On November 22, the very next day following the election, the Government suddenly realized that he was faced with a deficit, a huge deficit of its own making. The Government had created it during its first term. In just four years, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance had doubled the debt which Canada had accumulated since the beginning of Confederation. In less than five years, they had doubled the debt accumulated for over 120 years. The national debt increased from $170 billion in 1984 to $330 billion today. It will reach at least $440 billion by 1993–94. I say "at least", because on the basis of the Finance Minister is past forecast which have always been so far off target, we just could not rely too much on his forecasts for the forthcoming years. In 1994, therefore, on the basis of the Finance Minister's own figures, our national debt will have increased to $440 billion in ten years. In only ten years, this Tory Government will have tripled the national debt.

Even if the Minister of Finance claims that he has tamed the deficit, the other Members of this House and I understand what figures mean when we see them. We understand from the Budget papers that the deficit amounted to $28 billion in 1987, $29 billion in 1988, and that it will amount to $30.5 billion in 1989. Mr. Speaker, it is clear that when an amount goes from $28 billion to $30.5 billion, this represents an increase. I have never seen an amount decrease from 28 to 30. The Minister increased the deficit by $2.5 billion compared with two years ago. He did not reduce the deficit by $5 billion as he claims he did. Some day this Government will have to come clean and tell things as they are and not as it imagines them to be.

Business people and financiers everywhere in the world realize that the Canadian deficit and debt are totally out of control with this Minister. In this respect, except for Italy, Canada is the worst off of all the industrialized nations, for our situation is worse than that of Germany, France, Japan, the United States and the United Kingdom. Business people fully realize that this Government, beside juggling with words and figures, just cannot deal with the deficit problem which increases from year to year.

Once the investors are invaded by doubt, they will go elsewhere to invest in other currencies. Hence, the Canadian dollar will drop, and to maintain it at its current value we will have to increase the interest rates which are already too high. And then consumer purchasing power will decrease and we will wind up right in the middle of a recession.

The Conservative government has created a monster of a deficit which it is now trying to kill, destroying in the process the economic and social structure Canada has been building for a hundred years.

[English]

The Minister said repeatedly in this House and across the country during the last five years that he would reduce the deficit in sizeable amounts year after year. He did not do so. The deficit is up, not down. He said he would reduce the rate of growth of the public debt to better the economy. He did not do that either. The debt now accounts for 55 per cent of the gross domestic product, up from 45 per cent four years ago. The Minister also said he would reduce the deficit through expenditure reductions and not through major tax increases. He did not do that either. In this Budget, three-quarters of the increases in the Budget are tax increases and one-quarter are expenditure accounts—three-quarters on the taxpayer and only a quarter taken by the Government.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In four and a half years we have had nothing but tax—tax after tax after tax from this Government—regressive, hitting the low and middle-income people the hardest. We have had deindexation of the tax system, the most hidden and sneaky tax of all. We have had four increases in the federal sales tax, from 9 per cent to 10 per cent to 11 per cent and now 13.5 per cent. Yet this Minister said it was a silent killer of jobs. We have new taxes on construction materials, telephone calls, cablevision, gasoline, cigarettes, alcohol, air transport taxes. Surtaxes on income are now up to 5 per cent for those under $70,000 a year. When you add up all these tax increases imposed by this Government, you get the largest increases since Confederation, including those increases during two world wars. You get a clear picture of the Tory right wing agenda at work.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, using the Minister's figures from five successive Budgets, taking the total increase in taxes for individuals from all sources, income, excise, sales, deindexation of the system, surtax and so on, cumulative from 1984 during the life of this Government, a couple with two children and one earner, the income being $23,600 a year—which is the poverty line, and I have chosen it deliberately—that family since 1984 has had taxes increased by 60 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is the poverty line. The average income in this country, according to the Department of Finance and National Revenue, is $45,000 a year. The cumulative tax increase from all sources since 1984 is 30 per cent. If a Canadian earns $100,000 a year, the tax increase has only been eight per cent. I will say to the Minister, Canadians do not mind sharing a burden, but they want to share it fairly, and this Government has not been fair.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That does not include, Mr. Speaker, the new 9 per cent goods and services tax the Minister intends to impose in 1991. It will be the biggest and the most regressive tax grab in history. It will be a tax on almost everything, on virtually every commercial transaction: books, shoes, auto insurance, child care services, train trips, bus fares, electrical repairs, plumbing bills, fire insurance, life insurance, haircuts, bookkeeping, legal fees, new homes, renting an apartment, bank charges on everything.

Mr. Peterson: Music lessons.

• (1540)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There will be a tax on funerals. Not only will there be a tax on funerals, there will be a tax on reading the will. That is where the Government has taken us.

It is regressive, it is unfair, and the poor in this country will pay much more. The Minister of Finance promises that it will be "revenue neutral". The Minister says that he will not collect any more money than he has already collected. Nobody in the House believes that. Nobody anywhere believes that, and the Minister does not believe it. Once again he is not coming clean with the Canadian people.

The Minister's own Budget documents state that this new tax will provoke an increase in inflation from 2.5 per cent to 3 per cent. Every time the Governor of the Bank of Canada feels that old inflationary pressure he will raise interest rates, rates which are already too high. The Minister knows that. He knows that the real interest rate, that is to say the difference between the nominal rate and the rate of inflation, is its highest in 30 years. It is between 8 per cent and 9 per cent in real terms. He knows that the spread between Canadian and U.S. interest rates at 2 per cent to 3 per cent is double its historic level.

He should know that this Budget, combined with high interest rates which this Budget provokes, is a recipe for recession. By waiting so late in the business cycle to put its fiscal house in order, the Government has left itself no room to manoeuvre in the event of an economic slowdown.

[Translation]

During their first mandate, the Conservatives have tried to put their own philosophy into practice. They have juggled with the universality aspect of our programs. They have tried to de-index pensions, to restore capital punishment, to limit bilingualism. But, fortunately for all Canadians, the government was weakened by all the scandals it its midst and by its own incompetence.

Through the work of our Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) and other Members in this House who were also actively involved, we were able to avert disaster.

But this time, the situation is much worse. This time, we are faced with a fierce and all-out attack, if not a raid. The Conservative action plan just got underway and is already bulldozing its way through the country, with no hesitation, no qualms about it. Their philosophy reflected is a cynical and callous political agenda aimed at cutting everything that can help the average Canadians, in order to make room for the market forces which will benefit the rich and powerful among us. This laissez faire policy will help large companies to take control of the country. Just too bad for the small people, the weaker and more vulnerable citizens of our country! The Conservative agenda is the law of the jungle. The strongest, the richest and the better-informed people are on top, because all the others are left unprotected.

This is not the country, or the type of freedom that we want, but that is what the Conservatives have in store for us.

[English]

The Tory right wing agenda has now been completely unmasked by this Budget. It is laissez-faire, let market forces run the country. That laissez-faire agenda was reflected in the trade deal, in the Throne Speech, the unemployment insurance cuts and last week's Budget.

There is nothing wrong with business, but the business of business is money. The business of business is profits and that is fine, but the business of politics, the business of public life is people, and the Tories do not distinguish between the two.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I believe in market forces and I believe in competition and enterprise and rewarding success. I have said in the House before and said across the country that Canada would not have been built solely on market forces. We built this country, east and west and north, in order to resist the overwhelming continental market forces dominated by the United States. That is why we built a railway and a pipeline. That is why we built a national airline, national broadcasting system, and a national highway. That is why we built a national system of public and social security.

Pure market forces would not have given us public housing or public transportation or the best health care system in the world. We in this Party have supported all of that and we believe, thereby, in a mixed economy. We believe in private enterprise, but we also believe that the federal Government has a role to play where private enterprise cannot or will not do the job.

Canada is not the domain of the rich and powerful. Canada belongs to every Canadian. It belongs to all of us. We are not here for self-glorification. We are here because we feel we have a legitimate role to play, that the role of this Parliament and the role of government is to defend those who cannot defend themselves.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We do not accept the Tory agenda of laissez-faire as expressed in this Budget, in the Throne Speech and in the trade deal. It is adding fuel to the growing concentration of economic power in this country. It is adding fuel to "mergermania", throwing open our businesses to American takeover.

No sooner was the election done with than there were plant closings, mergers and takeovers. Gillette, British Footwear, Northern Telecom, Texaco, Wardair, Consolidated Bathhurst, the list goes on and on.

What is the economic rationale? Where are the new jobs as a result? Where is the new technology? Where are the new ideas? Where is the new efficiencies or so-called synergism? I have not seen any, and it has not been proven as far as I am concerned.

The economists have a delightful word for it. They call it rationalization. It is the rationalization of North American business, the rationalization in favour of American business at the expense of Canadian workers. That is what it is.

Combine that concentration of power in Toronto, in Montreal, especially across the border, with deregulation and privatization of our transport infrastructure, with the privatization of the Post Office and now unemployment insurance, and we have the beginnings of the shutting down of rural and small town Canada.

Those who live outside Vancouver, Toronto or Montreal will be out of luck because the Tories have abandoned 120 years of nation building. They have abandoned 120 years of the principle that living in this country is equality, no matter where one lives the services have to be equal.

Again, the Tory agenda is to remove the Government from a position of controlling national economic policy. We saw yet another example in the way the Minister of Finance so readily agreed to allow American Express to open a bank in Canada. The Order in Council was signed the very day of the election. American Express comes to Canada, and they are not going to leave home without it.

The Government is obviously eager to repay the head of that American company for his support on the trade deal. However, this issue has raised another one which is germane to this Budget. It is the whole question of the ownership of financial institutions and the problem of those institutions having commercial links.

I believe there is a very real risk in allowing such links, first because it will put existing Canadian control of the major part of our financial industry in jeopardy. Existing rules prevent more than 10 per cent of our largest banks being owned by any one entity. However, other parts of the financial industry have become effectively controlled by individuals or groups of individuals, in some cases with as little as 30 per cent or 35 per cent of the shares.

According to the trade deal, American corporations and citizens are to receive national treatment. That is to say, they will receive the same treatment as Canadians, so that any policy that increases the ability of individuals or corporations to secure substantial holdings of Canadian financial institutions will inevitably lead to the erosion of Canadian control.

Second, I believe that allowing commercial links will increase the risk of failure of these institutions because of the increased possibility of self-dealing. The Canadian experience shows that self-dealing cannot be regulated effectively. That is the same experience the Congress of the United States is now facing south of the border.

Financial institutions have a unique role to play in our economy. They are not an industry like any other. They cannot be left solely to the pursuit of private interests because their success or failure could have a profound effect and impact on our economy. For example, the failure of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northlands Bank in Edmonton cost the Canadian taxpayer billions of dollars. The combination of deposit insurance and the now accepted belief that such institutions cannot be allowed to fail by the Bank of Canada increases the risk. The Government, in effect, through the Bank of Canada, through the Ministry of Finance, has become the partner of private financial institutions and the guarantor of last resort for the liabilities of such institutions. As such, the Government has a role and a responsibility to ensure that those institutions are operated in the public interest.

Of course, some risks will exist whether the shares of financial institutions are closely or widely held. The fact is that the temptation to run exclusive risks is greatly increased when an institution is controlled by a small group of people, and even more so, in my opinion, when that small group may reside in another country. Insider abuse and regulatory failure have been the prime reasons for the disasters that have occurred in the U.S. financial system. Currently—and this is the first action that had to be taken by the new President, George Bush—they are attempting to bail out the savings and loans industry to the tune of what the federal administration in Washington calls $100 billion. Commentators in Washington, New York, Los Angeles and Chicago feel that amount may well exceed $200 billion. We should learn from their mistakes and not allow those same practices to be repeated in this country.

I would have more confidence that those practices would not be imported into Canada if the Tory Government were not so dedicated to renouncing traditional Canadian values and traditional Canadian practices and unquestionably accepting the U.S. free trade market model. We see inroads of presidential politics, of American financial ease. We see that this is not a Government that upholds Canadian sovereignty or Canadian practice and independence. This is not a Government that has demonstrated any desire to uphold the Canadian traditions of fairness and compassion. This is a Government that has demonstrated in five successive budgets that it really does not care about the average Canadian. This is a Government that through its tax policy has widened immeasurably the gap between rich and poor instead of trying to narrow it.

More than three million Canadians now live below the poverty line. One third of those, one million, are children who are living below the poverty line. That is simply not acceptable to me, to my party, or to this country. All of these people, the dispossessed, the poor, the disadvantaged, the handicapped, the unemployed, all are the victims of a Government that has pitted region against region, favouring the wealthy and large corporate interests, leaving lower and middle income groups to fend for themselves.

The Tory Government again symbolized by this Budget has shown a callous disregard for so many Canadians. It has shown a meanness of spirit. The sole value the Tories have promoted since 1984 has been money, profits and the glory of the free market system. What they have rejected is the Canadian sense of fairness, a sense of fairness that this party has attempted to portray and to implement ever since it was founded.

It is the philosophy of the right wing Tory agenda now unmasked in this fifth Budget to pick on the unemployed, to pick on the poor, to pick on native students, to pick on the poor provinces, to pick on the homeless. That is not now and never will be the agenda on this side of the House or the agenda of the Liberal Party.

Canadians are willing to make sacrifices. We are willing to give up certain comforts, certain advantages, if it helps someone less fortunate and if it is fair. It not only has to be fair in our eyes, but it has to be seen to be fair. If it is fair, we will make those sacrifices. If it is fair, we will go the extra mile.

We Liberals do not regard Canadians as so many widgets in a national economy. We Liberals believe that good social policy is also good economic policy. It makes economic sense that the more skilled our people are, the more educated they are, the healthier our population is, the better our economy will perform.

We are not a party that marches to the drum of any special interest. We do not march to the drum of big business or big labour. We have always believed in the supremacy of the individual, that the only purpose of a political economy is to create and encourage an equal climate in which men and women, no matter where they live, where they grow up, where they work or where they retire, will be able to fulfil themselves to the limit of their individual potential.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are a party in which every Canadian is welcome, in which every voice can be heard. We are a party that speaks to the conscience of Canada, a party that will not abandon the values on which this country was built. I am confident that these values can endure. I am confident that Canadians want these values to endure. That is why we must continue to give a voice to those values, to help the Canadian people to understand what is really behind this Tory Budget, what is really behind the Budget and what the Tory Government is doing under the guise of this Budget to make this country a different place from the one we have known.

We will do everything we can during this debate and throughout the coming mandate of this Parliament to make our alternative Liberal vision come alive for Canadians. We believe in the great dream of Canada, a Canada rich in the accomplishments of the past and the promises of the future, a prosperous Canada, a fair Canada, and above all a sovereign Canada, an example to the world, an example to the world in fairness, in generosity and in concern. For all our people and for the citizens of the world, we will keep that faith and we will keep that dream alive.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Frankly, Madam Speaker, this is quite a change. Only a few days ago, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) told Canadians: There is no Budget. From what I have heard during the last few minutes, his attitude has changed. He now admits there is a Budget.

Madam Speaker, Bill C-11, which may be cited as "Borrowing Authority Act, 1989-90", is intended to provide the Government with a borrowing authority of $25.55 billion, so that the Government can meet its financial requirements and carry out foreign exchange transactions. As Canadians, Madam Speaker, we cannot deny that the national debt, which is rising constantly, has become a major problem. The cost of financing the debt is also increasing, at a steady pace.

Only 20 years ago, the interest on the debt was 12 cents out of every dollar paid by taxpayers to Ottawa. However, when our Progressive Conservative Government came to power in September 1984, that figure had already risen to 32 cents. This year it will be 35 cents. So it is clear that as a result of the recent increase in interest rates, this enormous debt has put us in a very vulnerable position.

In just one year, the projected cost of paying the interest on the debt has increased by more than $6 billion. This year alone, interest will cost us $39 billion. We must realize, Madam Speaker, that Canada has been living beyond its means. It is easy to find a scapegoat, depending on which side one happens to be in this House. However, we cannot blame my hon. colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), for this debt.

I would like to remind Hon. Members opposite that when we came to power in 1984-85, the annual deficit was about $38 billion, and it was our Government that brought it down to $28.9 billion in four years time.

Remember that when Mr. Turner was Minister of Finance from 1972 to 1975, his Government's record was: a rising deficit, rising inflation, rising interest rates and rising unemployment.

To remedy the situation, Madam Speaker, it was necessary to act, and that is exactly what we did. We know that if we want to maintain the social programs and high standard of living that Canadians want for themselves and for their children, we will have to implement a tough debt reduction program.

Madam Speaker, our Government has already made considerable progress in this respect. We have succeeded in reducing the growth of the debt from 24 per cent in 1984 to less than 10 per cent last year. Despite that progress, the debt is continuing to grow more rapidly that our national income.

The Minister of Finance has proposed a series of budgetary cutbacks in order to deal with this urgent problem. Madam Speaker, few Canadians like tax increases, but our debt is a major problem that will not disappear by magic.

The reality is that we did not fully pay the cost of public programs over the years and that we lived beyond our means. The measures taken by successive governments before 1984 shrank the tax base. This resulted in unfairness and lower federal revenues. Our Government has since acted to restore integrity to the tax system. This has involved some specific measures over the past four years. We abolished specific tax breaks. We eliminated some loopholes. We limited the ability to avoid tax for corporations and high-income individuals. We also reduced the incentive for tax avoidance with a comprehensive tax reform which broadened the tax base and lowered tax rates. But we must still go farther. A healthy economy is necessary to accomplish our objectives for the coming years. It will provide us more and better jobs, as well as the ability to satisfy Canadians' social and cultural priorities.

It is surely no secret, Madam Speaker, that our Budget is tough. It is tough, yes, but it is also fair! Remember that the debt costs us $1 billion in interest alone every 15 days. That is huge! We do not have the choice of turning off the tap and raising taxes. There are major budgetary restrictions. The large increase in debt service prevents the Government from reducing the deficit this year. These expenses—public debt charges and government operations, which in a way are paralyzing our country's finances—cannot be reduced, Madam Speaker. So the priority is to curb the deficit and then lower it to a more acceptable level. This is the goal set by our Finance Minister and he has given himself the tools he needs by reducing expenditures and increasing revenues.

Limiting the debt will enable us to pass on to our children and grandchildren something other than a huge debt that may be out of control. This budgetary policy, Madam Speaker, guarantees all Canadians a better future. Allow me to draw to your attention, Madam Speaker, the comments of a distinguished citizen from my region who said the following at a meeting of business people a few days ago, as reported by Bertrand Tremblay in Le Quotidien: "If he wants to do an effective job courageously, any Finance Minister must sacrifice his popularity, philosophized director Eddy Lalancette at a meeting called by the accounting firm of Charette, Fortier, Hawey, Touche and Ross."

The one who said that, Madam Speaker, is a former municipal councillor who was once a financial officer himself. Mr. Lalancette indeed knows that applying such measures may not be popular—that is just what our Minister has done. I believe that he has put his finger on the situation facing us. We must take unpopular action, yes, but in the interest of Canadians!

Also, Madam Speaker, I would like to present to you other comments that say the exact oppositie, to show that every Canadian can have a different point of view. This time, it is one of my colleagues in the Québec National Assembly, Francis Dufour, and here is how he saw our Budget. In one of our newspapers, Le Réveil local, he said that the federal Finance Minister's latest budget in no way shows that the Mulroney Government is able to control its expenditures seriously. But, Madam Speaker, I think that my colleague is surely not familiar with the Finance Minister's Budget and this document on the Budget Speech. I will give it to him here and I think it is important for Canadians to see what is happening. In 1984–85, government program expenditures were $86.8 billion.

When we took power, the Government revenues amounted to $70.9 billion. It means that, in 1984–85, our expenditures exceeded our revenues by about $16 billion. In 1988–89, the Government spent $100 billion on programs and its revenues were $104 billion. In the coming year, expenditures will be around $103 billion and Government revenues will amount to $112 billion.

As we can see, Madam Speaker, Government revenues are gradually getting higher than its expenditures. However, our Government has to deal with the problem of the growing debt. The debt has now reached $320 billion and it costs a lot of money. I will now quote some figures which should make the situation clearer. In 1984, the deficit amounted to $38 billion; in 1988–89, it is $28 billion and next year it will reach $30.5 billlion. As for expenditures, they accounted for 19.5 per cent in 1984, 16 per cent in 1988–89 and 16.1 per cent in 1989–90. Those figures show that our expenditures are decreasing in proportion with the gross domestic product.

Madam Speaker, we have a date here which cannot be ignored and which show that the Government has brought its debt under control and taken the appropriate action to ensure that the debt will soon grow more slowly that the Canadian economy.

That being said, Madam Speaker, I think that with all due respect for my colleague, the Québec MNA should consider these elements for he would realize that on the contrary the Government is headed in the right direction. Perhaps he would do well to heed the advice of Mr. Lalancette who said that a Minister of Finance cannot expect to win a popularity contest when he delivers a Budget speech.

Yes, Madam Speaker, ours is a tough Budget, but I think it is fair. Why fair? Because it expects more from those who can afford to pay, those who can make that extra effort in the national interest just so we can indeed reduce that famous debt.

For starters, major companies will contribute more, and I would like at this point to convey certain considerations. We found out that a number of major companies seemed to be able to find loopholes enabling them to contribute little if anything to the public treasury. In some cases we wanted to make sure that these corporate giants would pay at least a minimum income tax every year and thus be party to the debt reducing effort. So what we did was to ask these companies to pay a new levy on capital in excess of $10 million. This new tax will be in force as of July 1 this year, an additional source of tax revenue for the Government. This year the surtax on corporate income is expected to bring $485 million in the public coffers, and next year the revenue should amount to $965 million—which is close to $1 billion. I would suggest this is proof positive that our Government wants the corporate sector and high income earners to contribute more to reduce the deficit and to replenish the public coffers.

And our Budget is fair as well because we have preserved the principle of universality. Of course our colleagues would again prefer that we let the debt grow bigger still and refrain from taking appropriate measures to gain control. We will maintain the principle of universality in that all Canadians who meet the set criteria will continue to get the old age security pension. However, we will achieve that through a tax measure. We will recover from upper income levels money which we will distribute to those who need it most. By upper income levels, we mean people who earn more than $50,000 net. If they are 65 years of age or older or have young children, we will recover a percentage of their old age pension or their family allowances so that the money thus saved can be distributed to those who need it most.

Madam Speaker, our Budget is also fair with regard to regional development. Over five years, the government will increase by 35 percent its contribution to regional development. This shows, on its part, a will to help the regions who need it most.

Madam Speaker, our Budget is fair but harsh in a way since Crown corporations are requirest to do their share. For instance, the CBC will sustain budget cuts of some 50 million dollars over the next four years, 20 million this year and 10 million a year each year thereafter.

We will also ask VIA Rail to make an effort by reducing its expenditures by some 500 million dollars over five years, starting this year with 100 million.

Since everyone who takes the train benefits from a $100 dollar subsidy paid by Canadian taxpayers, obviously something must change if VIA Rail is to attain some degree of profitability, something which the Canada Post Corporation has been able to achieve under our leadership.

Madam Speaker, I remember all the comments we heard about this. In 1981–82, if I am not mistaken, the annual deficit of Canada Post was $600 million a year. And it was up to the Canadian taxpayers to pay for it out of their taxes. This year, Canada Post has become a viable entity, earning something like $40 million to $60 million.

Those are some examples of measures the federal government is taking to ensure that our Crown corporations will become profit-making enterprises.

We will also expect some effort on the part of the Federal Business Development Bank, which will be asked to make a $65 million contribution to the coffers of the state through budget cuts.

Madam Speaker, some of the measures to be implemented are somewhat harsher, namely the federal sales tax. I think that our government is already taking the necessary steps to ensure that low-income Canadians are in a better position to carry the burden of the federal sales tax soon to be applied.

Madam Speaker, the reason for this federal sales tax is to make sure Canadian products are more competitive on international markets. This tax will be applied in such a way as not to penalize Canadian products compared to goods produced outside this country.

I want to come back to the issue of the refundable federal sales tax credit. Madam Speaker, this credit will increase from $70 to $100 per adult this year, that is in 1989, and will reach $140 in 1990. That will be done in the context of changes in the federal sales tax.

Those increases will more than compensate for the effect of higher federal sales tax on individuals and families whose income does not exceed a certain level. They represent a first stage towards the new federal sales tax refundable credit, which should accompany the new reform.

So that is another measure the Government is taking to make sure low-income Canadians will be able to manage when that sales tax is introduced.

Madam Speaker, I have heard people say our Government did no go far enough. It is surprising to hear about a budget like the one we brought forward that we should make or should have made deeper cuts.

I understand the arguments of those people who probably would have liked the Government to reduce the deficit to $28.9 billion this year and to $27 billion next year.

To do so, Madam Speaker, would have meant cutting $3 billion more than we are cutting now. Those are huge reductions. To avoid sending Canada into a recession, we could not risk go that far. And why, Madam Speaker, will the deficit amount to $30.5 in 1989–90? Simply because of the rising interest rates and the $39 billion interest we must pay on the debt this year.

As interest rates get lower and as the economy grows, the reduction of the deficit will be more significant. Moreover, Madam Speaker, our objective is to bring the deficit down by 1993, from $30.5 billion to $15 billion.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I want to point out that our revenues are now greater than our expenditures and that the economic signals we are sending are very important. Our message at the international level is that Canada is taking appropriate action to control its debt.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duhamel).

Mr. Duhamel: Madam Speaker, I have a few questions for the Hon. Member. The first one, because I want to be sure I understood what he said, is this: Does he think that massive increases in sales tax, income tax and excise tax are fair to those Canadians who are poor or who belong to the middle class?

My second question, which I think is just as important, is: Would he agree that the federal Government's decision to cut certain transfers to the poorer provinces will increase the burden on those provincial governments and the people of those provinces, thus creating an additional demand for tax revenues? Would the Hon. Member care to comment on those two points?

Mr. Blackburn: Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member did not quite understand what I said about the sales tax credit.

When the Government introduces a new sales tax in 1990–91, the tax will be imposed on a range of goods. Some goods will not be taxed, but to help people on lower incomes cope with this sales tax, we will give them a so-called tax credit, a sales tax credit that will be refundable. As I said before, this tax credit will be increased from $70 to $100 per adult in 1989, and to $140 in 1990. We intend to start paying the credit before the sales tax is introduced, to be quite sure that Canadians on low incomes will be able to cope when the sales tax becomes effective.

Madam Speaker, if I may comment on the transfer question, there again, our Government, as part of its national policy to reduce the deficit, is asking the provinces to share part of the burden. That is why these transfers will be reduced by 1 per cent.

I think we want to make Canadians realize that this Government really wants to control the debt. We cannot afford to go on with a debt that is now $320 billion and will cost us $39 billion in interest payments this year or $600 million every week. Can you imagine how many payroll deductions it takes to pay $600 million in interest every week? That is a lot of money, Madam Speaker!

In my riding, $600 million would build two highways from the Saguenay to Québec City. Canada must control this debt, and that is what we are doing. When this Government came to power in 1984, expenditures exceeded revenues. Today, our revenues outweigh our expenditures, and three or four years from now, when Canada's economic growth is greater than the growth of our debt, the amount of money and the interest we have to pay on the debt will go down gradually, and we will be able to afford a more prosperous economy.

Mr. Duhamel: Madam Speaker, I thought that I had asked different questions; I apologize if I misunderstood the answer.

The second question that I was going to ask is: Does my colleague agree that when a fiscal transfer is less than the previous year, the provincial governments require additional revenues? Does this put a heavier burden on each citizen, especially in poorer regions and provinces? That was the second question.

The first was: Does he agree that this massive tax increase will hit the poor and middle class much harder, proportionally? I did not hear the answers to these two questions.

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): Madam Speaker, first I would like to remind my colleague that the provinces will continue to get more in dollar terms than before. However, the rate of growth will decline. The provinces will continue to receive more money, but the rate of increase will go down.

[English]

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Madam Speaker, in the few years I have had the privilege of serving as a Member of Parliament in this Chamber there have been debates of great importance. One of those debates I recall so vividly was on the future of Canada itself and the question of the referendum in Québec and whether Québec would separate from Canada.

Another was one in which we talked about patriation of the Constitution and the implementation of a Charter of Rights that would put the rights of Canadians above those of any legislator, including those of us here in this Chamber.

Today, I believe we are in a debate that has very important, if not equally important, consequences for the future of our country and for the future of Canadians.

We are debating spending. We are debating a Budget. However, what makes this debate unique is the direction that this Budget has taken and the direction of this debate. We are seeing across from us a Government which has made the deficit its priority. We on this side of the House do not disagree that Canada's national deficit is of grave concern to all Canadians. The question, however, is: How does one decide to go about dealing with this particular problem?

We have two alternatives before us which I suggest to all Members of this House will determine the economic future of this country for years to come. We have before us a Budget which talks of the powers of the marketplace, the laissez-faire concept that corporations should be able to do as they wish. This is the concept of foreign takeovers, where Canadian firms are up for sale, even those companies we have nurtured through public money. I am referring to such companies such as Connaught, Lumonics, companies at the leading edge of technology. Yet we have said that they can be taken over by foreigners with the possibility that what we have built up here in Canada might forever be lost to us as Canadians.

We have a Budget which says that the future of Canada does not really lie in our hands. We can turn control of Canadian companies over to foreign corporations. As one Minister said, "let it happen, it is good for us".

These are some of the prospects we are dealing with, Madam Speaker, from the other side of the House. What have they done in terms of attempting to cope with the deficit? This again is a way we can determine the economic future of this country, for a Budget is not only a means of raising revenue, it is a way of declaring where a Government is actually putting its priorities. It is a way of determining not what the rhetoric says, but where they are prepared to spend their money. Where have they put their money?

It is pretty obvious to us, Madam Speaker, that the rhetoric is not matched by their actions. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the House of Commons just three days ago on April 28 said: "While Canada is wrestling with a very serious fiscal problem the Government is standing up for Canadians." These are the Canadians he has stood up for: seniors, who are losing part of their old age security; parents, whose family allowances are being cut; and our children who want to go to universities or community colleges. Transfer payments to the provinces are being cut. What about our younger children? The Government has reneged on its promise to create 200,000 new child care spaces. What about the homeless? CMHC has had $49 million cut from its budget. What about the sick? Transfer payments for health care to the provinces have been cut and as for the unemployed, payments to the unemployed in this country have been cut.

Nothing has been done to help the one million Canadian children who live below the poverty level. The three million Canadians now living below the poverty level can find no succour in this Budget, not one new program to help them. What has been done to help the five million Canadians who are functionally illiterate and will not be able to have full opportunities in the job market in the future? Nothing.

Look at Canada's disadvantaged regions. Regional development funding has been cut by $240 million for next year and by $400 million for the years thereafter. The Regional Economic Development Agreements have expired; they expired on March 31 to the tune of $1.6 billion and have not been renewed.

This Government is allowing the cut-back of key transportation facilities to the more distant regions of Canada: VIA Rail, Air Canada. How can these regions be strong if the communications with the rest of Canada are not built upon? We are penalizing those who have to go the farthest in this country with the gas tax. Again, that does not hit those people in the big urban regions who have public transportation as hard. It hits the people who have to drive long distances to their jobs and to market their goods. These are the people of Canada's regions.

In cutting back on military bases, again in the regions of Canada, we are insensitive to the needs of those particular communities. We are prepared to decimate them. The Minister yesterday in this House said, Madam Speaker, that as far as Grand Prairie is concerned, they are going to look at new ways to train our military forces. They are going to contract these services out. This is the absurd level to which this Government is prepared to take its right wing Tory policies. They are going to privatize the Canadian Armed Forces.

What is going to happen to the regions of Canada that are so dependent on tourism and on the service sector as opposed to the manufacturing sector? Who will this new goods and services tax prejudice the most? It will be those regions that are dependent on these sectors I have just spoken of where the new taxes are going to apply in a way they do not now that will hit every aspect of those economies without any thought for the fact that these regions of Canada deserve a break. Canada's regions are critical to the economic future of all of us. We as Canadians cannot be strong if our regions are not strong and if Canadians from all regions do not have economic opportunities.

Who else have they hit? Our homeowners. Tax on construction materials has gone from eight per cent to nine per cent. It will increase the average cost of a house in Canada by about $500. Add to that the new UI benefits that will have to be assumed by employers and workers. So you can add on another couple of hundred dollars to the cost of a house.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) I know must feel chagrined. There was a cut from his budget for overseas development. It was one of the biggest whacks taken out of our possibility for spending to create the type of world we want, a world that is humane, where neighbours look after neighbours. Until we realize that unless we can bring the rest of the world to higher standards of living, to higher standards of health care, to literacy, to education, to shelter, we Canadians will not fulfil our role as humanitarians and world leaders. We even jeopardize our long-term economic future.

Nothing in this Budget helps our cultural industries, the industries that help us to define ourselves as Canadians.

In terms of going about the task, Madam Speaker, of building a type of industrial infrastructure we want here in Canada, what has happened in terms of the education and training to which this Government has paid lip service, to which the Government's own commissioner, de Grandpré, said we need much more spending and readjustment on training to cope with the new economic realities and to protect us from the ravages of the free trade agreement with the United States. On this the Budget is silent.

In terms of research and development, to which this Government has committed itself time after time, there are no incentives. Incentives that have previously been in the Income Tax Act to encourage innovation in Canada and to encourage incorporation of the new technologies into Canadian goods have been removed. There is no new tax on corporations, as de Grandpré suggested, to deal with the training requirements, to deal with the investment in our human capital, which is so critical to our economic future and so critical to fairness here in Canada.

We should look at our small businesses, which are the lifeblood of Canadian job creation, and the training of entrepreneurs, which is the heart of many communities. What has happened? John Bulloch, friend of the Conservative Government, said: "I call this Budget a tax tidal wave that is going to wash out consumer spending and business activity." The Government has increased the small business tax. The burden of unemployment insurance, which has now been privatized, will be about $2.9 billion falling on the private sector. The goods and services tax will add another nine per cent. The federal sales tax, the most regressive you can imagine and one that is harmful to manufacturing everywhere in Canada, has been increased from 12 per cent to 13.5 per cent.

Then the construction tax I mentioned, which impinges on small business. Even if our businesses want to diversify into the regions, the first thing they are going to hit, apart from decreased transportation facilities, is the additional tax on telecommunications. If they need help to get established, do they go any more to the FBDB whose funding has been cut by $13 million? If one is looking to aerospace, which is a leader among Canadian industries on the world scene, one would see a cut of $25 million.

Yes, one can say that we have a deficit. That is what the Government has been saying through every one of its Members. They are saying that every cut is justified because we have a deficit. They do not tell us that the deficit has doubled in the four years that they have been in office controlling the economy. There are alternatives that they could have undertaken in dealing with the deficit, if they had not been such terrible financial managers. They have justified the Budget to us on the basis that it reduces the deficit. Last year the deficit was $28.9 billion. This year it is $30.5 billion. They have not decreased it, it has gone up.

How have they gone about coping with the deficit problem? They have done it in a right wing, machiavellian fashion on the backs of the disadvantaged. They have done it by cutting programs directed at the homeless, the poor, the sick, the weak, children, the illiterate and the regions. They have also done it on the backs of the average and the poor taxpayer. Since the Government has come into office it has increased the taxes of a family living at the poverty line by a full 60 per cent. They have taken the middle income family with income in the neighbourhood of $40,000 to $50,000 and over their tenure have increased the taxes paid by that family by 30 per cent. Taxes on the families in the $100,000 income range have gone up only 8 per cent. The share of income taxes paid in Canada by corporations has declined steadily under the Government.

What we have seen is an attempt to deal with the deficit, but it is being done on the backs of the poor and middle income Canadians. They are doing it by taking further from the programs that create social and economic justice for those least able and equipped to deal with it. They are doing it with all the advantages, all the breaks directed at the highest paid people in our society, high income Canadians and our major corporations.

I said when I started my remarks that this is an historic debate. It is a watershed in terms of Canadian political history as to where we are going. Unfortunately, the Government has another four years before it has to put its case to the people again. However, I suspect that many of its Members over the next couple of years will want to cross the floor to join us. They will want to do that because their constituents know that the way they are tackling the problem of the deficit is not only ill-managed but ill-conceived in terms of fairness.

Members opposite have a mandate. If they carry it out the way they have set it out in the Budget we will see Thatcherism run amok. The rich will benefit at the expense of the poor. We will see a two-class Canada. We will see rich individuals and poor individuals, rich regions and poor regions. We will see the disadvantaged remain disadvantaged, those who with a bit of help and understanding from the federal Government could become productive players on the Canadian economic scene. We can see these people being put down further by the Government when in fact it had the option to invest in them and make them full-class Canadians, full-class players in our economy.

We are seeing a meanness and a pettiness which accompany the total incompetence the Government has demonstrated in dealing with our national economic problems. This is a watershed in our economic history. It will be a watershed in our social history as well. The Government is taking it out on the backs of the poor. I want people to think about this. Is this truly the direction we wish to go in?

I believe that Canadians are fair. As my Leader said just a few minutes ago in what I believe was an historic speech, Canadians are prepared to sacrifice, providing that they perceive that sacrifice to be fair and providing that they see it as giving benefit to those who most need it. The Budget meets none of those criteria. It meets none of the criteria for helping to build a strong economy for Canada's benefit. It is a Budget which turns us more and more over to the foreign elements that are taking control of Canada to an even greater extent.

In conclusion, we Liberals on this side of the House ask Canadians to ask themselves these questions: When will the Government stand up for Canada? When will it stand up for them? When will it be fair?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand)—Unemployment Insurance—The Budget—Cut-backs in funding/Social Programs—Cut in funding; the Hon. BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1989-90

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, by way of commentary I would like to advise my hon. friend from Metropolitan Toronto that the community in Manitoba to which he meant to refer is Portage la Prairie, not Grand Prairie. I know that from the perspective of Toronto it is rather difficult sometimes to have a precise understanding of the whole of the country.

Mr. Duhamel: It was the emotion.

Mr. Epp: The Member from St. Boniface did not know the difference either.

Mr. Duhamel: I was there Sunday at the meeting. Where were you?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I thought that since his colleague from St. Boniface did not correct him on the geography of Manitoba that perhaps I should.

More seriously, I listened with great interest as I normally do to the Hon. Member. He acknowledged the importance of the debt. He criticized the measures that the Government has taken to reduce the debt of Canada. I wonder if he would tell us in precise terms what his Party proposes to do to get Canada's debt down.

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, I would be delighted if I were in government to set forth a completely alternative agenda in terms of what could be done. The first thing we would not do is what the Tories have done.

Let us consider the concept of wealth creation in Canada. Madam Speaker, do you think we can produce a strong economy for Canadians in the future if our key Canadian industries are going to be turned over lock, stock and barrel to any foreign corporation that wants to buy them out? Since Investment Canada was reconstituted by the Tory Government, it has received 606 applications for takeovers of Canadian enterprises by foreign firms. Every one has been approved. It is nothing but a rubber stamp operation.

Why do foreign companies want to take over Canadian companies? It is because they can get at our research and development. They can get at our technologies. They can take the profits out of Canada for reinvestment in their home countries.

In terms of creating additional wealth in Canada we would emphasize our human resources. Japan, for example, as I am sure the Secretary of State well knows, spends twice as much per capita in educating its human resources as does Canada. If we do not have an intelligent, informed, 21st century knowledge level of human resources in Canada, how can we compete on the world markets? This is the difference between the Tories and the Liberals. We look on education. We look on bolstering the handicapped and training them. We look on curing the sick not as a privilege that should be the subject of deficit cuts. These are investments in human resources. So there is a fundamental difference of philosophy between us.

• (1650)

In terms of raising taxes, we would not have, as the Tories have done over the last five years of their fiscal management of Canada, increased by 60 per cent the taxes payable by a Canadian couple with two children whose total poverty level income is $23,500. We would not have increased the taxes borne by middle-income Canadians over that same period, with the same type of family but with an income of about $45,000, by 30 per cent. We would not have done it in a regressive way—through sales taxes, which hit the poorest in the most excessive manner.

The sales tax applies to everything a person consumes. If you are spending all of your money simply to live, you are paying a far greater percentage of your income in sales taxes than if you are a rich person who has the discretion as to whether to invest or to spend.

The top level of income taxes have gone consistently down. We have a Government that has granted a $100,000 capital gains exemption to the rich. We have a Government that says if you buy a condominium in Florida and put your money there, you do not have to pay gains on the taxes here in Canada. That condominium in Florida is not creating jobs for Canadians. We have a Government that is not prepared to invest in the industries of the future. They look on tax incentives for research and development for new technologies as an expenditure. We know that we cannot compete in the world marketplace unless we are going to spend money as other governments do, as other nations do to create the highest level of technological development, the highest level of research here in Canada.

What they have done, in a nutshell, is they have given up our possibilities of being competitive in a more fiercely competitive world. They have denied us this right with this Budget. Secondly, they have taken the money from the weakest people in Canada. They have left the richest groups, the most privileged groups, with the lowest tax burdens. They have used the most regressive form of taxation on the backs of the poor in order to deal with this deficit, a deficit I cannot for the life of me understand. This right wing Government is so pre-occupied with cutting government spending, yet it has increased Government spending over its five years to inordinate levels. It is a Government that has totally mismanaged the economy. In spite of the fact that its revenues have gone up 60 per cent during its term of office, it has not been able to reduce that deficit.

The deficit today is $1.6 billion higher than it was last year. This is as a result of incompetence and bungling. It demonstrates a lack of priorities and a lack of investment in our future. And in every one of these Budget cuts to Canada's disadvantaged groups the Government has lied to us. They said they would not cut in any of these areas, but they have cut them to the bone.

Canadians have been misled. When Canadians start to realize where their true economic future lies, where fairness and justice lie, they are going to revolt, and we will never have seen one of a greater magnitude in this country.

I suspect the Secretary of State for External Affairs feels chagrined when he attends international councils representing Canada and he has to admit that we have sacrificed our commitment to the poorest people, to the poorest regions in the world. I have great sympathy for you, sir; those of us on this side of the House do. We know you fought to keep those programs, because you are a decent man.

Mr. Allmand: That is right.

Mr. Peterson: We sympathize with you, and there will always be a home for you when you want to come to this side of the House.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, my chagrin is that my question might not have been sufficiently precise. I ask the Hon. Member to detail those areas in which the Liberal Party would reduce Canada's debt. He spoke about things he would not do. I have heard a lot of that. I would be interested in knowing what precisely the Liberal Party would do to reduce spending or to increase revenues.

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, the blueprint for how we would have proceeded would be in terms of increasing Canada's economic growth, increasing the productivity of every Canadian individual, from the young in the educational system, to the handicapped, to the ill, to the people in the regions. We would have gone about creating a new role for government working hand in hand with industry here in Canada, to have Canadian-controlled industry to take us into the 21st century to have new technologies, to increase our investment in Canadians and in Canada's future. That is the way we would have gone, and it is the way the Tories never would.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill S-2, an Act to implement conventions between Canada and the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg and Canada and the Polish People's Republic and an agreement between Canada and Papua New Guinea for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

[English]

Would the House agree that we would call it 5 o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

PRPOSED AMENDMENT—DELETION OF ARTICLE 59

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce) moved:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should initiate an amendment to the Constitution Act, 1982 to delete article 59, which restricts the rights of Anglo-Québecers to education in their own language.

He said: Madam Speaker, the purpose of this motion is to assure that English-speaking Québecers have the same constitutional rights to education in their language as francophone Canadians outside Québec have in their language. In other words, the purpose of the motion is to ensure that there is equality with respect to language rights for English-speaking Québecers and French-speaking Canadians outside Québec. That is the purpose of the motion.

• (1700)

That equality does not exist at the present time. It does not exist because of Article 59 of the Constitution Act, 1982. Let me explain.

When the Constitution Act, 1982 was tabled in the House in 1981, Article 59 was not part of it. It did not exist. At that time, minority language rights with respect to education were governed entirely by Article 23 of the Constitution Act, 1982.

Let me read that Article. It states:

> 23(1) Citizens of Canada
> (a) whose first language learned and still understood is that of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province in which they reside,. . .
> They have the right "to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province." In addition those citizens.
> (b) who have received their primary school instruction in Canada in English or French and reside in a province where the language in which they received that instruction is the language of the English or French linguistic minority population of the province—have the right to have their children receive primary and secondary school instruction in that language in that province will also have that right.

Article 23(1)(a) says that an anglophone in the Province of Québec whose language first learned and still understood was English, has the right to send his children to English schools if and when he has children. It said the same thing for Francophones outside Québec. If their mother tongue was French and they still understood French they had the right to send their children to French schools in any province in Canada, if that was the situation.

The article also says that even though a person's mother tongue was not French or English but that person had received his primary education in French or English, he also had the right to send his children to those French or English schools. That was the situation when the Constitution Act, 1982 was tabled in the House in 1981. While that Article had some imperfections, which I will discuss later, it was a good article. I supported it, as I supported the entire Constitution with great enthusiasm. I supported the Charter of Rights and the repatriation of the Constitution. I supported the amending clause.

However, in the later months of 1981, following a decision of the Supreme Court, there was a hastily called federal-provincial conference to deal with the decision of that court. Several changes were made to the Constitution Act as presented to the House of Commons. One of those changes was the famous notwithstanding clause. It was added. However, also added at that time was Article 59. It suspended to paragraph 23(1)(a). That is the paragraph I just read that states that if the first language learned and still understood is French or English, one has the right to have one's children educated in the minority language. Article 59 states that paragraph 21(1)(a):

—shall come into force in respect of Québec on a day to be fixed by proclamation issued by the Queen or the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada.

It went on to say that a proclamation under that subsection could only be issued where authorized by the Legislative Assembly or Government of Québec.

While I voted against it, what the Parliament did was suspend the right of English-speaking Québecers to have education in their own language if their mother tongue was English. It left with them the right to have their children educated in English if they had attended primary education in English, but it took away the first basis for access to minority language education. We ended up with a situation where Articles 23(a) and (b) apply to Francophones outside Québec but only Article 23(b) applied to Anglophones inside Québec. I spoke against this provision at the time. I felt that I could never accept the entrenchment in the Constitution of such an inequity, an inequity where Anglophones of Québec in a constitutional sense would be treated different from Francophones outside of Québec.

What are the consequences of that? I will refer to my own children, as I have done so before on the record. I had my children educated in the French language in Québec because I wanted them to be totally bilingual. My son had all his primary education in French. When the day comes for him to have children and send them to school, he will have no constitutional right, despite the fact that his mother tongue is English, to send his children to an English school. He may want to send them to a French school, but he loses the right to send his children to an English school because he did not do his primary education in English. He was an Anglophone but did his primary education in French, as many Anglophones do these days in Québec.

What is the other significance to this particular clause? I know of a case where a man from a foreign country came to Canada when he was in Grade 2. He entered the Anglophone system of education in Québec in Grade 2 and went through to Grade 7. When he had children he tried to take advantage of that Section of the Constitution to send his children to an English school. The ruling in Québec was that one must do all of one's primary education in English, and six out of seven years was not good enough.

Article 59 was inserted into the Constitution at the last minute, along with several other changes that are better known than Article 59. At that time I objected and asked for reasons why this was being done, especially since all political Parties in the House had stood for equality of treatment with respect to Anglophones and Francophones. That was the basis of the report of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism submitted to Mr. Pearson.

I asked for a reason. No sound reason has ever been given to me. No one has ever stood up to justify that article. It was inferred that that change was necessary in order to have the Constitution Act, 1982 accepted by the provinces and the federal Parliament. It was insinuated or inferred that if we did not make these changes the whole package would be defeated.

I could never accept that. As a matter of fact, I have not found out to this day who really asked for that change. We know that certain provinces asked for the notwithstanding clause, but I could never find out who asked for that particular change. It was certainly not the Parti Québecois Government in Québec because it was not interested in the issue at all. It was opposed to the whole initiative.

Some have said to me in later years, following 1982, that that clause was necessary in order to protect the French language. I was told that we must protect the French language in Québec.

I have been in Parliament for 23 years. I have always been strongly in favour of measures to protect and promote the French language. Whenever there has been a violation of Francophone rights, whether in Saskatchewan, Alberta or Ontario, I have taken the side of those Francophones and fought for their rights. In the early days when I first came here, most of the infractions were on that side.

• (1710)

I am in favour of protecting and promoting the French language in Quebec and throughout Canada. However, it is not protected and promoted with this kind of measure. I see absolutely no relationship between a clause that disallows anglophones from seeking education in their own language and the protection of the French language and culture. It has never been demonstrated that this provision will in fact have that effect.

I also submit very strongly that one does not protect one set of rights by suppressing other rights. Racial rights, language rights, or sexual equality rights are not protected by suppressing the rights of others. Again, this provision seems to be attempting to do that. It is not well thought out. The underlying thought behind it is that if the rights of anglophones are restricted, perhaps something will be done to strengthen the rights of francophones in Quebec.

Despite this restriction on anglophone rights to education in their own language, a great percentage of anglophones in the province of Quebec are seeking education in French for their children. The immersion courses in Montreal are packed to the limit. At the schools in my area, parents have to line up days in advance to get their children into the immersion programs. Of course, immersion programs are programs in English schools in which nearly everything is taught in French. As I said, there is a great demand for those courses. In addition to that, the program for teaching French in non-immersion English schools has been greatly improved since the days when I went to school in the province, with the result that young Anglo-Quebecers are very bilingual today. As a matter of fact, recent reports published by the Province of Quebec have shown that young anglophones in Quebec are now more bilingual than young francophones. This is surprising, because it was always the reverse in the past.

The provision in Article 59 is the result of misguided logic. As I said before, one language is not protected, enhanced, or promoted by suppressing another. We hear other arguments from time to time that attempt to justify this kind of provision. We hear that it is necessary to protect the French language in Quebec, something I have always admitted, and that in any case, English is not threatened in Canada. One hears that argument quite often.

First, I admit that the French language and culture is under threat in Quebec and in Canada, because francophones are a population of about six million to eight million people, though I forget the exact figures, surrounded by a sea of anglophones in North America. While the English language is of course not threatened in North America outside Quebec, it is threatened and has been threatened for several years now in Quebec.

The English-speaking community in Québec is a dwindling community. Many measures such as Article 59 have discouraged young Quebecers, even though they are bilingual, and members of the community have been leaving in great numbers. Great numbers of graduating students from McGill University, Concordia University, and Bishop's University are leaving the province because they feel they are being harassed with measure after measure that restricts or suppresses their language rights. While the English language community is not threatened in Canada, it feels threatened in the province of Quebec, and this has been documented in the reports of the Official Languages Commissioner.

When people use that argument, they should be clear about it. Let us not confuse what is happening in Quebec with what is happening in all of Canada. Let us not have the suggestion that those who want to speak English can go to Ontario or Alberta. My family is fifth generation Anglo-Quebecer; my home is Quebec, and I have no intention of leaving Quebec. I want my full rights in that province, as I stand for the full rights of francophones outside Quebec.

Another argument we hear is that despite Article 59, certain sections of Bill 101 and Bill 178, the English-speaking community in Quebec is still the best treated minority in Canada. That was true for many, many years, but it is no longer true. It is true that there is a series of anglophone institutions in the province of Quebec, including universities and schools, but over the years the English-speaking community built those institutions itself. It was a very large community in the province.

The fact is that the threat against anglophones now is in the form of restrictive laws. There has been attempt after attempt, both provincially and federally, including Article 59, which went in the direction of restricting their rights. That cannot be accepted.

On the other hand, there has been a slow improvement in francophone rights outside Quebec. The constitutional entrenchment of certain rights has improved the situation. While we have seen an improvement in francophone rights outside Quebec, we have seen a cutting away of the rights of anglophones in the province of Quebec.

I think my time is coming to an end. I simply want to remind Hon. Members that this motion provides that the Government initiate an amendment to the Constitution Act of 1982 to delete Article 59, which restricts the rights of Anglo-Quebeckers to education in their own language. I know that other Hon. Members will say that francophones outside Quebec have the full constitutional rights of Article 23, but their implementation is very slow and difficult. I support them in that plea and agree with them. I have seen what has happened in certain towns and cities in Canada in which there has been reluctance on the part of certain communities to carry out the rights mentioned in Article 23. However, I want their support in this motion.

I will be listening very closely in this debate to hear what Hon. Members will say, and I will be listening very closely to hear how they justify a provision like Article 59, which clearly provides that one group, the anglophones in Quebec, should not have certain rights while those rights are available to another group in all other provinces of Canada. I urge the House to take this motion seriously.

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Madam Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) for his interest in this matter and for the research he has done. It is a matter that really is a challenge to all of us to resolve.

The Hon. Member has proposed that Parliament should initiate an amendment to delete Article 59 of the Charter. Article 59 provides an exemption for Quebec from one of the bases for demanding minority language education rights in that province. Article 59 also provides a special unilateral executive amending procedure that allows the repeal of Article 59 but only at the time of the coming into force of the "first language learned and still understood" clause in respect of Quebec. That coming into force can only occur when authorized by the Legislative Assembly or the Government of Quebec.

I should point out that since Article 59 provides a special procedure for its own repeal, a procedure that is dependent upon a prior initiative by the Legislative Assembly or Government of Quebec, it would be inappropriate to initiate an amendment in this House. However, I should like to take this opportunity to explain why two bases for demanding minority language education rights were included in the Constitution and why only one applies in the case of Quebec.

Quebec's Bill 101 sought to grandfather everyone in the Quebec English-speaking school system at the time of its adoption in 1977, but to restrict access to English schools in the future. This was because the rapidly declining birth rate among francophone Quebeckers would make it neessary to integrate immigrants into the French-speaking community if it were to maintain its relative demographic strength. Therefore, Bill 101 only provided the right to English language education to the children of Canadian citizens who had received their primary education in Quebec in English, a clause known as the Quebec clause.

In the interests of the mobility of Canadian citizens, the Québec Government said that it would be willing to extend this Québec clause to a Canada clause, that is, the right would apply to the children of Canadian citizens who had received their primary education in Canada rather than only in Québec.

However, because the other provinces had been far less expansive, historically, than Québec in the treatment of linguistic minorities, and because in a number of provinces the right to education in the minority language was eliminated or sharply curtailed at one point or another, a considerable proportion of Canadian Francophone parents living outside Québec could not receive their primary instruction in French. Thus, the Canada clause would create rights for almost all Anglophones living in Québec while a high number of Francophones outside Québec would have no right whatsoever.

In these circumstances, the federal Government devised the "first language learned and still understood" clause to provide the right for the children of Canadian Francophones who were not allowed to be educated in primary schools in their own tongue.

When it was decided by Prime Minister Trudeau to impose Section 23, the minority language education rights, on the National Assembly without its consent in 1981, he determined that the Canada clause, which Québec had offered on the basis of reciprocity to the other provinces, should apply to Québec because all other provinces accepted it.

However, the other provinces, recognizing that historical policies would effectively limit the application of the Canada clause to their own Francophones, agreed to be bound by the alternate right based on the "first language learned and still understood" clause.

The same historical problems did not arise in Québec and did not require the corrective of this alternative right. Furthermore, this alternative right could undermine Québec immigration policy. It was for this reason that the Government, of which the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce was a member, did not impose the "first language learned and still understood" clause in Québec. That is why it would be extremely inappropriate for us to ratify this amendment.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise this afternoon as a Member of this House who had the honour of participating in the debates on the constitutional amendments in 1981 and of sitting on the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada. I want to emphasize that in private Members' hour my remarks are personal and that I am not speaking on behalf of my caucus colleagues. I speak on my own behalf on this very important question.

I remember well the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) who spoke with strength and conviction at the time the Section 59 provision was before the House. He did not propose an amendment to Section 59 respecting the constitutional resolution which was before the House in November of 1981. I do not know why he did not propose that amendment at the time his Government was in power. Certainly one could say that it is never too late.

There is a logical inconsistency in what is suggested here. Under Section 59 of the Constitution Act there is a special provision with respect to Québec. The Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce is proposing an amendment under Section 43 of the Constitution Act, 1982. That amendment would only apply to Québec and could only take effect if the National Assembly in the Province of Québec agreed to the change.

If the National Assembly of the Province of Québec were prepared to agree to the change proposed by my hon. friend from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, it could move forward under Section 59 of the Constitution Act because under that section a proclamation can be issued where it is agreed upon by the National Assembly of the Province of Québec. Obviously, if the National Assembly of the Province of Québec wanted to proceed in that manner, it could do so.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, if we, in the Parliament of Canada, in this House, are prepared to accept Quebec's distinct society, we must ask ourselves how is Quebec distinct? If it is not its linguistic and cultural characteristics that make it distinct, I do not know what does. Personally, I believe that, ultimately, Quebec's National Assembly must decide what measures are necessary to protect that specificity, Quebec's distinct society.

That is why, Madam Speaker, I support the principles of Quebec's Bill 101. That is why I oppose and speak against the proposal of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand). He suggests the English language, the Anglophone minority in Quebec, is at risk. But it is not so, Madam Speaker.

Even the Official Languages Commissioner, in his annual report that was tabled a few weeks ago, says no for the first time. The English language, the English-speaking minority in Quebec are not threatened.

My colleague recognizes that the French language is threatened in Canada and, as a Member for British Columbia, I assure you that if Francophone parents had the same rights as Anglophone parents in Quebec, they would be very happy. That is to say, Madam Speaker, that our priority should be to make section 23 a reality everywhere in Canada to protect the rights of Francophone minorities outside Quebec, rights that still do not exist in the other provinces of Canada.

Madam Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon), has described very well in a letter to the Prime Minister the reality of the French-speaking minority in Canada. He also described the reality of the English-speaking minority. Let me quote from his letter:

> Anglo-Québecers get more services than all Canadian minorities combined. In Montreal, for example, English is king in several respects. There are more stores, restaurants and bars where they first address you in English, more magazines published in English, more movie theaters that show films in English, as well as more television and radio stations that broadcast in English. Proportionally, there are more schools and hospitals serving the English community than the Francophone majority itself! And while over 50 per cent of Francophones outside Québec do not have access to French schools, there is not a single Anglo-Québecer who cannot be educated in his own language if he so desires!

Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Richelieu talks about collective rights that must prevail over individual rights as far as language is concerned. As I said before, it is for that very reason, Madam Speaker, that it is up to the National Assembly to decide on the appropriate measures to protect that Francophone minority which represents only 3 per cent of French speakers in North America.

If the Québec National Assembly decided to implement the measures provided for in article 59(1), I would accept their decision without reservation. But, Madam Speaker, the motion of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce would force Québecers to accept that principle.

• (1730)

Madam Speaker, I think the linguistic priority in Canada today should be to enforce the right of Francophones outside Québec, for example in British Columbia or in other provinces, to be educated in their own language. That right is guaranteed by article 23 in the Constitution but, for many Francophones outside Québec, it is only a dream.

In closing, Madam Speaker, I want to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, on his tenacity and for giving us another opportunity to discuss that important question. But, Madam Speaker, speaking for myself, I would insist on the preservation not of a minority which is already the most privileged in Canada but of the French fact throughout the country.

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Madam Speaker, the motion under consideration urges this House to ask the Government to initiate an amendment to the Constitution so that Québec might agree to delete article 59 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which deals with the application of some minority language education guarantees in Québec.

I will not raise the issue here of whether the anglophone minority in Québec is well or poorly served as far as English language education is concerned or whether its rights guaranteed by article 23 of the Charter are properly recognized or not. I will also resist the temptation to compare the situation in Québec with that in the other Canadian provinces.

Neither will I get into a technical debate on the way to amend article 59 of the Charter nor whether Parliament should take the initiative of such an amendment. Nevertheless, I will say this: however one interprets Parliament's role in deleting article 59, one fact remains—Québec will have to take a stand.

Now the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce knows very well that successive governments in the National Assembly since the Constitution was repatriated have come out against any participation in constitutional discussions with the rest of the country until an agreement is reached to rectify Québec's isolation as a result of the 1981 constitutional agreement.

This position of Québec is why the constitutional reform process in Canada has been blocked since 1982. The failure of negotiations on constitutional matters affecting native people is an example of this.

Aware that Québec must be heard and the wounds of 1982 healed, the ten provincial premiers agreed in August 1986 to make repatriating Québec their constitutional priority. This commitment was repeated by all, including the federal Government, at the annual First Ministers' Conference held in Vancouver in November 1986. All agreed to deal first with Québec's concerns and to postpone all other constitutional issues to a second round of negotiations. This commitment of all governments led to the Meech Lake Accord in June 1987.

To try to open new constitutional negotiations, as the Hon. Member suggests—and with Québec, to boot—would amount to asking the federal Government to betray its commitment to deal with Québec's demands first and to postpone other matters until later. Moreover, such an action by the House could be perceived as outright provocation, because it is more than likely that Québec will refuse to deal with constitutional issues until the Meech Lake Accord is ratified.

Finally, if the Hon. Member is really serious about strengthening minority language education rights he will agree there is a better way to do it. Ratifying the Meech Lake Accord, which acknowledges the linguistic duality as a basic characteristic of the federation, will make it possible to proceed with the constitutional reform, and Canadians will then be in a position to concentrate their efforts on other changes during the annual gatherings of First Ministers which are already provided for under Meech Lake.

It so happens that the federal Government is firmly committed to putting the issue of stronger minority language education rights on the agenda of the first conference after ratification of the Accord.

Here is the Prime Minister's message conveyed last March to linguistic minorities and made public in Québec by the Association of Québec Regional English Media:

[English]

> By allowing Québec to return to the constitutional table, the Accord will enable us to continue our efforts to improve further the situation of our linguistic minorities. The Government of Canada is committed to address, among other things, the strenghtening of constitutional language rights in their broadest context at the first annual conference following proclamation of the Accord.

[Translation]

On the same occasion Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations Senator Lowell Murray went even further and stated:

[English]

> These discussions could help clarify, among other matters, Section 23 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms on minority language education rights.

[Translation]

This commitment was repeated on a number of occasions and was given even more solemn currency in the Speech from the Throne. I quote the relevant words:

> With Québec at the table as a willing participant, future constitutional development—including the important issues of Senate reform, of aboriginal and linguistic rights, of roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries, and of ways to strengthen the Charter of Rights and Freedoms—will become possible and will be a priority of the Government.

That, Madam Speaker, is the gist of my message. Strengthening the right of official language minorities is already slated for the constitutional discussions which will come on the heels of the Meech Lake Accord ratification. Both Québec's Anglophone minority and Francophone minorities elsewhere in Canada stand to benefit from these discussions.

In any event, adopting the motion now before the House might be construed as a denial of our promise to respond first to Québec's constitutional requests, prove to be detrimental to the Meech Lake Accord, and seriously undermine the gains the minorities would certainly achieve under the agreement.

Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) will understand my position. In the interest both of Francophones outside Québec and of Anglophones in Québec, I urge the House to keep my remarks in mind during the consideration of the motion now under study.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I would like to take part in the debate on motion 422, moved by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, that the Government should initiate or introduce an amendment to the Constitution Act, 1982 to delete Section 59 which restricts, as we already heard, the rights of Anglo-Québecers to education in their own language.

Madam Speaker, the debate on the treatment of minorities in this country is not over, and I think it is high time that this Government and the leaders of provincial governments act responsibly and take the advice they have been offered by the Commissioner of Official Languages and your humble servant, which is that we urgently need a federal-provincial conference on the future of linguistic minorities in this country.

Madam Speaker, it is a fact that there is injustice in this country, in certain provinces, and I could name a few.

Mr. Prud'homme: Name them, by all means!

Mr. Gauthier: In 1982, I was one of those who voted against this Constitution because I felt that quantifying the rights of Canadians, wherever they happen to live in this country, was not the way to deal with the issue. I thought that at the time, there would be a decision by the majority that minorities should be treated fairly and equitably, wherever they happen to live in this country.

• (1740)

I felt that Section 23, which some groups and some individuals would like to change, contained elements that do not belong in the Constitution. In Article 23, we read that where numbers warrant, parents will have the right to have their children educated in the language of their choice, in the family's mother tongue. In this country, in five provinces, and I could name them for you—

Mr. Prud'homme: Please do!

Mr. Gauthier: I think I will, at the request of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). Some groups, especially Francophone parents—and there are also Anglophones in Québec who did the same, and more power to them,—are before the courts today, in May 1989, to defend their rights. Why? To try and get a generous interpretation of Section 23 from the courts. There are cases here in Ontario, my own province; there are cases in British Columbia; there are some in Saskatchewan, Alberta, Manitoba, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. In each of these provinces, Mr. Speaker, people are before the courts—

An Hon. Member: None in Québec?

Mr. Gauthier: No, not right now. They are before the courts to defend a constitutional right that is not being respected by these provinces. I speak from a thorough knowledge of the subject, since I have participated in several of these court challenges.

We know the federal Government sometimes does all it can to suggest it would like to see equal access throughout the land, in every province. And moneys are paid for minority education without expecting too much accountability for those expenditures and without too much concern for the fact that the Canadian Government's true role or obligation to protect and enhance the existence of those minorities should be really and seriously carried out. I can tell you that when we are being challenged in seven provinces where to this date it is impossible to obtain fairness and justice, it is difficult to ignore that, turn a blind eye, let the courts decide. Speaking of the courts, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind you of a decision rendered by Mr. Justice Hunter of the Supreme Court who referred to the legislators responsibility with regards to basic rights, and I quote Mr. Justice Hunter:

> Although the courts are the guardians of the Constitution and the rights granted by it to individuals, it is incumbent upon legislators to enact laws that provide the proper safeguards to meet the Constitution's requirements. It is not for the courts to add details to legislative loopholes entrench in the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) is right. We can't have a Constitution where opting in and opting out is allowed, where there are all kinds of provisos and rights in one province that do not exist in an other. There is one Canadian Constitution, enacted in 1982. It should in my view be the subject of a national consensus and apply to all Canadians.

I know it is difficult to understand how a French-speaking Canadian in Ontario for instance or Saskatchewan, or Alberta, or wherever in Canada, can suggest: my wholehearted support to a Constitution? Yes, but a Constitution that is fair, that applies equally to all. I recognize regional considerations, I recognize that in some provinces the number sometimes may be minimal, because of the assimilation we have been subject to for 100 years.

I simply suggest this to Hon. Members: When you are asked to ensure there is a first ministers' conference, this might open the door to a consensus, a resolution of certain problems. I appreciate that the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce has been one of those Members in this House who always supported language minority goals in this country. This is a fact. I recognize this. He always supported us, even though we at times went through difficult periods, in Ontario for instance, but he never faltered. He told Ontario: Having signed the Constitution, why are you imposing education requirements to Québec when you refuse to recognize in Ontario the constitutional requirements that Québec must meet, and I am thinking of Section 133, in particular.

I know Section 133 recognizes the right to access the courts and provincial legislatures in either official language. The two provinces, Québec and Manitoba, are subject to that section. New Brunswick of course has its own Charter, its own Constitution, and it also accepted the spirit of that section. However, it is difficult in this country to hear the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce mention, as he stated himself today, that he had his children educated in French in Québec. And because he had his children educated in French in Québec, he lost forever his ancestral rights to have his grand-children educated in his mother tongue, English. This is a problem that will have to be solved. This is what he is raising today, and I support him. I say there is a problem there indeed. However, Madam Speaker, I for my part have a problem that is just as serious, and that is to have my children educated in my own language.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Madam Speaker, the proposed resolution leads us to examine the constitutionnal guarantees concerning minority language educational rights. As we know, these guarantees are defined in section 23 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms enacted in 1982. The Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) calls upon the Government to amend the Charter and calls upon Quebec to do the same.

I will not discuss the possible response Québec may give to such a request. However, I would remind you of the will of that Province to deal first and foremost with the question of Meech Lake, and of the Federal Government's commitment and that of all other Governments to wait for a second round of constitutionnal negotiations before passing to other questions. Besides, I doubt the Hon. Member's motion distinguishes between the first and second rounds of discussions.

In substance, I would say that section 59 is only one aspect of the problem concerning the right to education in the language of the minority. Most Canadians would say that the real problem lies in the difficulty French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec encounter when trying to have their Provincial Government respect the rights guaranteed them by the Charter in that matter.

Quoting a study made for the Commissioner of Official Languages, the newspaper La Presse of March 6 stated that in English-speaking provinces, only 56 per cent of children aged 6 to 17 who have a right to schooling in French under section 23 of the Charter actually do receive that education. On the other hand, in Québec, all young people from 6 to 17 entitled to education in English get it, that is 121,513 students.

Among mainly English-speaking provinces, only in New-Brunswick and Ontario do we see more than half the children entitled to instruction in French under section 23 attend French schools. The proportion is 78.4 per cent in New Brunswick. In Ontario, 68.4 per cent of the children with a constitutional right to French schooling attend French schools. Just the same, these figures reflect a major effort on the part of these provinces' Governments over the past fifteen years in the area of minority schooling.

• (1750)

In the other Canadian provinces, the proportion of children with a right to French schooling who attend French schools does not exceed 12.2 per cent. For that matter, it is 7.3 per cent in Alberta and 5.3 per cent in the Northwest Territories.

These figures clearly illustrate one of the major flaws of our Charter in the area of educational rights. It is found in Section 23(3)(a) which expressly provides that the right of Canadian citizens to have their children receive instruction in the language of the minority.

> applies wherever in the provinces the number of children of citizens who have such a right is sufficient to warrant the provision of them out of public funds of minority language instruction.

That is the infamous "wherever the number warrants" clause which has been so much discredited by all Francophones outside Quebec since 1982.

Under this clause, several provinces with English speaking majorities have been able to limit and continue to limit the instruction services provided to their minorities. In several cases, their French speaking minorities have had to spend a lot of money and wait quite a long time to appeal to the courts to have their needs for French teaching institutions recognized on a case per case basis. As a matter of fact, there were appeal procedures instituted in British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

The situation in Québec is altogether different. That province has never tried to benefit from this law in Section 23 to deny its English speaking minority its right to receive instruction in its own language, no matter the number of pupils or their distribution over the territory.

This situation caused newspaperman Don MacPherson to write in an article published on March 1st in the Montreal Gazette the following statement, and I quote:

[English]

> Quebec respects the spirit as well as the letter of the Charter on minority education—In Quebec, the number that warrants a minority language education is one.

[Translation]

To make his point, Mr. MacPherson indicated that the School Board of the Lower North Shore operates an English school with two teachers for a total enrolment of fourteen pupils. He indicated also that half of the $40 million which the Quebec Government allocates to support small schools goes to the English sector.

And Mr. McPherson to conclude, and I quote:

[English]

> Wouldn't it be a neat trick if, in the next round of constitutional negotiations, Quebec challenged the other provinces to follow its example—and proposed the abolition of the 'where numbers warrant' clause?

[Translation]

If the House is to deal with minority language educational rights, should it not address this side of Section 23? The elimination of the "where numbers warrant" clause is one of the resolutions which the Liberal Party of Canada adopted during its 1986 Convention. Yet, I do not believe that matter of the Section 59 was mentioned there.

The Hon. Member's Party voted also in favour of the minority language educational right being defined to include the right to administer these institutions.

The current situation has again compelled minority groups to appeal to the courts to have this right recognized, especially in Ontario. And this other amendment to Section 23 would have the support of the Quebec Government, of Francophones outside Quebec and even Alliance Quebec. Other such reforms might be looked into.

Things may not be easy for the Québec English speaking minority. According to the last report tabled by the Official Languages Commissioner, small English speaking communities outside Montreal are having difficulties getting provincial services in their own language, while the English speaking community is suffering from under-representation in the Québec public service. But we can see progress has been made.

With Bill 142, Quebec is trying to make social and health services in English more readily in most of its regions.

Following the new Official Languages Act, the federal government is discussing with Quebec the possibility of increasing federal funding in that area.

With regard to education, Quebec's seventh English CEGEP opened in Hull in October.

Quebec has also tried once more to change its education system in order to create school boards based on language instead of denomination.

As seen in the report of the Commissioner of Official Languages, several opinion leaders, both French and English-speaking, acknowledged that a system based on language criteria would be more suited to the needs of a declining minority group scattered throughout the province, by bringing together the resources of both Catholic and Protestant English schools.

Such a system would also encourage parents to take part in the management of their children schools.

This reform however will not be possible before the courts rule on its constitutionality. Under section 93 of the Constitution Act of 1867, the Quebec school system must respect the rights of individuals to denominational schools. So, we might not be able to bring English-Catholic and English-Protestant students in the same schools even if everyone agrees that would be beneficial to minorities.

So here is another constitutional reform that the Hon. Member and this House could tackle if we had to deal with minority language educational rights. I would go as far as to say that it could be very difficult to support such a partial and isolated reform as proposed by the Hon. Member without considering also the application of the legislation where numbers warrant, the rights of institutions to manage their own affairs as will as Section 93, specially in view of the relative viability of the educational situation of the minority in Quebec compared to the situation in other provinces. The francophone minorities outside Québec could find it insulting if the House gave in to the Hon. Member's request without any concern about the more urgent problems facing thousands of children and parents.

Madam Speaker, I hope the House will give proper consideration to my remarks.

[English]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, in the short time that is left I would like to support the motion put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand). The purpose of his motion is to give support to the principle of attempting to right an historic wrong. I believe it is a noble privilege and duty to be able to fight for the right to correct that wrong.

Rights are rights, when one is English-speaking or French-speaking anywhere across this land. I want my grandchildren educated in French here in Ontario. If they choose to return to Quebec, which I hope they do, and if they choose to have their children educated in English, which I hope they will not, they should still have that right to choice. The whole point is the right to choice—not whether one is English-speaking or French-speaking in Quebec, but the right to make an enlightened choice.

If I were today making an enlightened choice I would choose to go to school in French in Quebec. But do not impose it on me, Madam Speaker. That is the point behind the motion to abrogate Section 59 of the Constitution Act. No Constitution should have an exclusion based on one's language of birth or one's language of choice. It should be an option that everyone should be allowed to take.

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—THE BUDGET—CUT-BACKS IN FUNDING—SOCIAL PROGRAM—CUT IN FUNDING

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Madam Speaker, last November, in the middle of the election campaign, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) speaking in St. John's, Newfoundland said the following, and I am quoting from the St. John's Evening Telegram: "The federal Government has no plans to make changes to the Unemployment Insurance Program, Trade Minister John Crosbie said Thursday. It is complete nonsense, he replied to questioning by reporters at the Hotel Newfoundland following a Progressive Conservative rally for Prime Minister Brian Mulroney".

It went on to state the following: "Mr. Crosbie said he asked the Prime Minister about the report, and he said, no, the Government has no plan to make changes to the program. You're damn right I asked him", that is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) "about it, and he said, no. No one is planning any changes in the Unemployment Insurance Program, said the Minister for International Trade".

That was last November when the Minister for International Trade, a senior Minister in this Government, said that under no circumstances would there be changes or cuts in the Unemployment Insurance Program. Well here we are in the month of April with two serious cuts and changes to the program.

On April 11, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) announced the redirection of $1.3 billion in the Unemployment Insurance Program to other programs. While $500 million was redirected to improvements in the Unemployment Insurance Program, $800 million was taken away from benefits altogether and redirected to training, to consultation and to labour market planning, things which had always been paid for out of general tax revenue and never paid for with the contributions made by workers and employers to cover themselves during periods of unemployment.

We condemned those changes announced by the Minister because, first of all, they left the unemployed with less coverage during his or her period of unemployment. Second, because they shifted the burden of the unemployed to the provinces, it would be the provinces that would have to help pay for the rent and groceries of those workers during the period of unemployment when they were not covered by unemployment insurance.

Third, we condemned the program because the Government proposed using unemployment insurance money to finance training which is a regressive and inequitable method of financing training. We are all in favour of training, but that is not the way to pay for it.

Finally, we criticized the program because there was no assurance that once trained or retrained that there would be jobs for these workers whether they lived in Summerside, Prince Edward Island or Portage la Prairie. What is the use of training if you do not associate it with an effective program for regional development and for full employment?

We criticize the program for all those things. That was on April 11, when very serious changes were made. Then again last week on April 27 in the Budget, we have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announcing that the Government of Canada will withdraw all its financing of the Unemployment Insurance Program. They are going to take out the $1.9 billion that they "paid in" last year. They are going to leave the financing of the program entirely to workers and to employers. In the past, this has been a three-way financing program. Now the Government of Canada is getting out and leaving the financing entirely to workers and to their employers.

What are we to conclude from all this? We conclude that first of all government Members are attacking the deficit that they have referred to time after time. They are attacking it on the backs of the unemployed. Second, they are attempting to build a level playing field to facilitate free trade with the United States which they said during the election campaign would not be necessary.

I have asked for answers. I have asked for the Government to justify these cuts in unemployment insurance. I have asked how many workers will lose unemployment insurance and to what extent. I have asked the Government to tell us in what region are these workers who would have their unemployment insurance cut. I received no answers.

I asked how these workers who would have their unemployment insurance cut would pay for their rent and groceries. Will the Government let the provinces carry the burden, or will it give them additional money?

Finally, I asked the Minister to justify pulling out the government financing of this program. How does the Government justify pulling out from the financing of this program when the Government of Canada has been helping with the financing since 1941, when it started? We will now have a system that is set adrift and left to the workers and their employers to pay for.

I hope we get some answers to these questions, not for myself and the Liberal Party, but for the people of Canada, who are very concerned about this.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the Progressive Conservative government has kept its promise not to reduce its assistance to the unemployed in view of the fact that the purpose of the measures announced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is to assist people who lose their jobs. Ten percent of unemployment insurance funds will be applied to the training and retraining of these people. This goes to show that this government keeps its promises.

It is true that, on January 1 1990, employers and employees alone will contribute to unemployment insurance and that the premium will increase by 30 cents for employees and by 42 cents for employers. But it is also true that these will be the lowest premiums paid over the past six years. The Progressive Conservative government has kept its promise.

We must also keep in mind, in relation to unemployment insurance and to all other programs, the enormous deficit created by the former Liberal government. As we have repeatedly mentioned both in the Budget's speech and elsewhere, Madam Speaker, the Government has agreed, should Canadians be faced again with difficult years such as those they experienced in 1980, 1981 and 1982, to contribute to the fund if it should deem it inapropriate to increase the premiums and preferable to allow the unemployment insurance fund deficit to grow, to meet the needs and expectations of both employers and employees.

Finally, Madam Speaker, I should like to emphasize, for the information of the Hon. Member who made these comments, that the Unemployment Insurance Program has been amended for the purpose of improving the economic welfare of Canada, its employees and employers. These amendments have nothing whatever to do with the free trade issue.

You will remember that during the last election campaign, the opposition tried in vain to scare people both in Quebec and the rest of Canada. We are standing behind the statements we made then: There are programs in Canada. There are social programs in Canada which are and will remain different from those in the United States. We have our own programs and we are determined, as a Progressive Conservatine Government, to continue these programs for the well being of and a better quality of life for all Canadian men and woman. Such is the purpose of the amendements to the Unemployment Insurance Program. To conclude, Madam Speaker, I hope that my hon. friend has finally come to realize that we must work for the future of Canada and not try to jeopardize it all the time.

PUBLIC WORKS—DEVELOPMENT OF WELLAND CANAL LANDS—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC MEETINGS

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold): Madam Speaker, Public Works Canada and the Welland Canal Development Board presented its final report, entitled "The Old Welland Canal—A Land Use/Marketing Review", at a press conference on April 18, 1989. On April 21 I asked the Minister if he had read the report. I have read the report and have come to certain conclusions. I will also quote rather extensively from a very talented and far-sighted Welland city planner by the name of Stan Neathery.

My position on this document, indeed on what to do with the Welland Canals themselves, is unequivocal. I believe that these lands should be in the hands of the people of Canada and that not one square inch should ever be sold. Perhaps there could be long-term leases, but not one square inch should be sold. In my opinion, the members of the present board are in the majority pro-development and pro-privatization. I believe that for the majority of the men and women on this board the almighty dollar is more important than the needs and desires of the people of my riding.

With regard to the recommendations the report recommends developing 175 acres of Crown lands, and these are divided into 13 "opportunity areas" along both sides of the central and northern sections of the old canal. These lands are now an open space and some of them are already developed as park land.

Some of the recommendations I agree with. The opportunities presented include a camp ground, a golf course and an old building being changed into a restaurant. I agree with these. However, I want all Hon. Members to know that I am unalterably opposed to the building of a hotel, 135 prestige single, detached housing lots and 40 condominium townhouse lots. Some of these are extending from the service road to the top of the canal bank. Others extend from the service road down to the embankment in order to provide required minimum lot depths in compliance with city zoning by-laws.

Some 63,500 square feet of retail commercial space for small shops alongside the old canal are proposed in the downtown area immediately north of the Main Street bridge. I disagree with this. I believe we could use the shops that are already there, update them and let the present merchants benefit from any development.

The land area proposed for sale for development represents a substantial amount of the total Crown land holdings alongside the old canal north of Broadway Avenue. It is suggested that the Crown retain the remaining smaller land areas along the canal and Merritt Island.

An emphasis in the report is that public access, including the current system of walkways and bikeways, will be maintained along the entire length of the canal "to the extent that already exists" and that "maintaining public access has been established to be of primary importance in meeting this objective". However, specific opportunity area plans presented in other sections of the report show development to the top of the canal bank. In these instances it is difficult to understand how this objective is to be achieved.

To elaborate, opportunity area E-3, lands between Chippawa Street and the canal water south of Thorold Road and across from Notre Dame Secondary School is shown to be developed either as 25 single or 40 townhouse residential building lots. The accompanying map which I have studied quite carefully shows the boundary of the area slated for sale and development approximating 13 feet from the water's edge. However, the average horizontal distance from the top of the bank to the canal water's edge is 30 feet on a steep slope. Accordingly, it is difficult to understand just how "public access has been maintained throughout to a minimum depth of 33 feet".

Further, to maintain a public access area of 33 feet wide in opportunity area E-3 would take up half the land area to be sold and developed. The report estimates total development costs for all the opportunity areas to approximate $36.2 million—$35.2 million in construction and $1 million in servicing. In addition, one section of the report estimates that the development of the canal lands would generate $115.9 million in direct and indirect expenditures. It estimates that 2,680 new jobs would result from the development of the canal lands: 1,456 direct and the remainder indirect. However, a later section of the report states that total direct and indirect expenditures would equal $81.6 million, and only 1,882 direct and indirect new jobs would result. These are significant discrepancies, which should be explained.

Although the report did not specify the types of jobs generated by the canal lands development of the various opportunity areas, it is believed that a major portion of these jobs would be construction related. I believe many of these jobs would be seasonal.

The estimated taxation impact of the development of the canal lands is estimated in one area at $491,625 per year; but in a later area it is $381,375, a discrepancy of 22 per cent.

To summarize, it seems to me: (1) that sufficient public access alongside the old canal is not guaranteed; (2) that a significant amount of existing Crown parklands alongside the old canal would be sold to private developers; (3) that there appear to be discrepancies in the amount of dollars that would be generated in the local economy as a result of the proposed sale and development of the canal lands.

I denounce this report as being unacceptable to the majority of the people in the Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold riding. Surely it is not worth anywhere near the $30,000 it cost to produce it.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, in 1973 the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority completed the construction of a bypass canal around the city of Welland. Subsequently, in 1974 the Seaway Authority transferred to Public Works Canada the ownership and management of 317 hectares of residual canal and adjacent federal lands that bisect the city center. The property consisted of 45 hectares of water, 150 hectares of spoil piles, and a 45-hectare island between the canal and the river, known as Merritt Island, with the canal banks varying in width from 20 metres to 200 metres.

In the fall of 1979 the Minister of Public Works visited Welland and later appointed a local citizens advisory committee, the Welland Canal Advisory Group, to advise on the development and long-term management of the lands.

In 1984 the advisory group was replaced by the Welland Canal Parkway Development Board, with a revised mandate. The board was charged with advising the Minister on matters pertaining to the redevelopment of the lands using alternative sources of funding, including private-sector financing and entrepreneurship, and developing a long-term management and operating plan for the canal lands that would best represent the interests of the Crown and the municipality.

Since 1976 the department has spent over $20 million in capital, operation, and maintenance grants in lieu of taxes. Much of the area is fully landscaped and actively maintained, consistent with the standards practised by the National Capital Commission and the Niagara Parks Commission. In 1988 the department spent approximately $350,000 on operation and maintenance and $465,000 on grants in lieu of taxes.

In a news conference on April 15, 1988, the Chairman of the Welland Canal Parkway Development Board, the Mayor of Welland, and the local Members of Parliament announced the approval of the Minister of Public Works to commission a consultant to undertake an independent land use study. Specifically, the study was to identify potential recreation and residential and commerical land development opportunities supported by economic viability. The final report was submitted to the department on April 14, 1989. A news conference was held on April 18 at which the Member of Parliament for Erie (Mr. Fretz) announced the completion of the study.

The study has identified a number of potential recreational, residential, and commercial opportunities along the waterway that could complement adjacent land uses.

• (1820)

Preliminary economic analysis reveals that some of these are viable as short-term options, that is for three to five years, while others would be safer ventures in the medium and long term, that is from five to ten years respectively. In addition, new employment, additional tax revenue and development money could be generated for the City of Welland.

In the upcoming weeks, Public Works Canada will be soliciting comments from the citizens of Welland through information booths and special briefings to various local interest groups.

The Department has also extended an invitation to the City of Welland to establish a working group between the city and Public Works Canada. The purpose of the group will be to address each of the opportunities identified in the consultant's report and develop a specific action plan which will benefit the City and the federal Government. May I say again that the disposition of these lands will be made in full consultation with the people of Welland.

The Regional Municipality of Niagara, with the assistance of the Canada-Ontario Tourism Subsidiary Agreement, has also just completed a study of the whole Welland corridor of which the Public Works lands is a part. The object of their study was to look at the tourism potential and the opportunities of the area.

The Minister gave an assurance in this House on April 21 that the consultants engaged by Public Works Canada were hired only to identify potential development opportunities. The Minister emphasized the word "potential" and gave the Hon. Member for Welland—St. Catharines (Mr. Parent) the assurance that there will be full consultation with the City.

Mr. Parent: And me.

Mr. Kempling: And you.

IMMIGRATION—LEBANON—PLIGHT OF REFUGEES—CONSULAR SERVICES IN CYPRUS—UNITED NATIONS HIGH COMMISSION ON REFUGEES—REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY MEETING

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to address this full House this evening on a question that I had an opportunity of asking the Minister and the Government back on April 20.

The question pertained to the issue of Lebanon, which for the last 15 years has never seen as fierce fighting and as fierce an escalation in the war torn zone, producing very horrible results and producing refugees and homeless people in a number that is indeed very worrisome.

We in the Liberal Party had asked repeatedly in the House both the Minister responsible for immigration and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to establish, at the very earliest, a full consular immigration operation in Cyprus, because the very large and proud Lebanese Canadian community in this country wanted to extend an invitation or a sponsorship to families and friends back in Lebanon who wish to escape the very horrific scenes we see on our television sets day in and day out.

The problem was the inability and the inaccessibility of people in Lebanon to get to a Canadian office in order to complete the necessary applications and forms.

We have a full operation in Damascus, Syria, but because Syria is one of the antagonists in the war we could hardly imagine whether people, particularly of the Christian faith, would venture into Damascus, Syria. Therefore, we had asked for a full consular operation in Cyprus.

The Government finally responded to those calls by saying that it was going to send one official to Cyprus in order to process those applications.

It is our contention that one official is not only unfair but indeed misleading if we are to look at the long-term solution. At the very least, we are in need of a temporary full operation so that those who wish to come to Canada and elsewhere may have a hope and a chance of doing so. It is our contention that sending one official is clearly not addressing the magnitude of the problem.

On a secondary aspect we asked this Government to initiate an emergency meeting through the offices of the United Nations High Commission on Refugees which informed me that it only had a skeleton staff of three people in Lebanon to try to deal with the magnitude of the problem.

We suggested in Question Period, because we are members of the UNHCR, that clearly Canada can exercise some leadership and ask the UNHCR to beef up its representation in Lebanon so that not only Canada will try to help those who wish to flee and to reunite families in this country, but that other countries across the globe through the efforts of the UNHCR can share and participate in removing people from a place in the world that is completely tortured and, as I said at the outset, has seen fighting not previously seen for the last 15 years.

[Translation]

Therefore, Madam Speaker, I hope the Government will offer a real solution to Lebanese-Canadians because a single immigration officer in Lebanon is neither a true nor a fair solution. Our party thinks that we need a full-time immigration consular operation staffed with six or seven employees who could answer inquiries from parents, relatives and people in Canada who are willing to work but who want to leave Lebanon because of the terrible situation experienced by everybody in that country today. I think that the Canadian Government could continue to play a very significant role by setting an example for other countries to follow. But I think having a single immigration official, in Cyprus for example, to process applications is simply not a real solution.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will propose a fairer and more efficient solution and I hope to get that answer today.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I know Lebanon quite well. When I first went to Lebanon it was the jewel of the Mediterranean. It was a great place for a vacation. It was a banking centre. After visiting other countries it was great to get to Lebanon. The last time I was there I think our aircraft was allowed to land and refuel and we had to take off immediately. We could not even go into the city.

I welcome the opportunity to expand upon the reply given by the Hon. Minister of State for Employment and Immigration (Mrs. Vézina) to the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) on April 20.

Canada has had special measures in effect for victims of unrest in Lebanon for some time. This special program for Lebanese, which remains in effect, allows relatives in the assisted relative category to be sponsored for immigration to Canada under a relaxed criteria. In 1988 over 800 Lebanese were admitted to Canada under this program. Since 1973 we have admitted over 15,000. As the situation in Lebanon remains unpredictable, it will be monitored by officials of the Department of External Affairs and adjustments to immigration services will be made accordingly. In other words, if we find it is getting more difficult and there are more applications we will adjust our people there accordingly.

The U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees has not considered this issue a refugee movement at this stage. We are in contact with his representatives in the area, and this could change. The main immigration office for the area is in Damascus, and continues to provide service to the people from Lebanon who are able to get through. But I can see that is a very difficult thing to get through, particularly if you are a Christian going through the Bekaa Valley to try to get to Damascus.

Similarly, the Canadian visa office in Cyprus has been able to meet the demand for immigration services there. For those already outside Lebanon, Canada has an honorary consul in Cyprus and there is presently an immigration officer in Nicosia who is providing immigration services and he has several civilian assistants to help him.

A special courier service has been established between Damascus and Nicosia. Lebanese who have completed visa formalities may collect their immigration visa in either city. A Lebanese may also approach any other Canadian mission in order to apply for immigration under the special Lebanese program.

For the moment, therefore, we believe Canada is providing good service to those who can leave Lebanon and qualify under the terms of the special measures. We shall continue to assess the developments in the event that additional issues emerge and a greater level of service is required.

We thank the Hon. Member for his continued interest in this matter.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

JOB LAY-OFFS AT DE HAVILLAND—BOEING LAWSUIT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, it has just been announced that 700 jobs are being cut from the workforce of the de Havilland STOL aircraft plant in my riding at Downsview, Ontario. This is our major employer and a big part of Canada's aerospace industry.

Although the company claims that attrition can cover these jobs, the local union, Local 112 of the Canadian Auto Workers, tells me that this is impossible.

Since the Government sold the company to Boeing of Seattle there is less that it can do on behalf of Canadian workers. I call on the Government to review the lay-off decisions, no doubt made south of the border in Seattle, to defend these jobs and to assist employees who are affected.

We also have news of Boeing's $110 million lawsuit to cover false representations by the Government of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on the sale involving safety and health conditions. If Boeing is successful, since the company was sold for $90 million, the result will be that Boeing gets the company from the Canadian taxpayers free.

I submit that the Government should have known of the safety and health conditions since every worker in the plant knew of them. The Government is responsible for this give-away.

THE BUDGET

TAX AND CHILD CARE PROVISIONS

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and this House the blatant unfairness of the income tax provisions and lack of child care provisions in this Budget for a single working mother in my riding of Mission—Coquitlam.

This woman who earns $1,400 per month has expenses in excess of $2,100 per month. She currently receives the family allowance of $65 a month and child support of $400 a month, yet she is $200 short at the end of the month. Her largest single expenditure is $850 per month for the care of her children while she is at work.

How is it that the Government claims that its tax and child care provisions are fair, yet this woman and thousands like her are being penalized by the unfairness of the Income Tax Act and by child care being put on hold? She is not looking for charity. She is demanding fairness.

I call upon the Government to act immediately to redress this unfairness. I also call upon the Government to put real fairness in the tax system and acknowledge that working people of the country are being driven into debt by its taxation and child care policies.

SOCIALISM

PRIVATIZATION

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, while the provincial and federal governments are selling their companies to private enterprise, to the socialists' great despair, communist countries are doing the same thing. But there, Mr. Speaker, it is even worse. They want to sell to foreigners. The Hungarians have just offered the Germans 53 companies, including large steel mills. The Germans are demanding guarantees, because to make these money losers pay, massive lay-offs will be necessary. Mr. Speaker, the Canadian NDP should give us such news from time to time.

HUMAN RIGHTS

VISIT TO OTTAWA OF YULI KOSHAROVSKY

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, Yuli Kosharovsky first submitted his emigration application to leave the Soviet Union in 1971. A radio engineer, Kosharovsky was not allowed to work in his profession after he applied. He held a number of jobs, including those of night watchman and manual labourer.

Yuli's wife Inna is a mathematician with a degree from Moscow State University. She too was prevented from working in her field.

Because of his active involvement to spread Jewish culture and to teach Hebrew, Yuli was branded a traitor. As recently as 1987 when I met Yuli in Moscow, it was stated in a leading Moscow paper that he would never be allowed to leave, for reasons of state secrecy.

However, late last year, Yuli's prayers were answered. He and his family were granted exit visas and they arrived in Israel on March 12, 1989. Their 18-year struggle is over.

Mr. Kosharovsky is in Ottawa today to share his experiences and to urge the Canadian Government to continue to pressure the Soviet Union to live up to its human rights obligations.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTE TO RIGHT HON. JOHN TURNER

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to speak about the way in which the Budget has had a devastating effect upon my own riding and upon western Canada. However, with the announcement today of our Leader's resignation, I want to take this opportunity to say something in a personal way about the man I have known for over 25 years in public life.

Over that time he has been for me a great teacher and mentor, especially about this House of Commons and about the meaning of Parliament in Canada. As a Member of Parliament from western Canada he has spoken well and effectively about the interests of our region. Particularly as Leader of our Party he has fought to preserve the independence of the country, and in the last election it was with great pride that we served with him.

As a friend and associate he will be missed. As a person who can give us the real sense of the House of Commons he will be missed. As a Member from western Canada he will be missed. As a national Leader he will be long remembered for the fight and choice he gave Canadians back in November 1988.

TRIBUTE TO MEMBERS OF POWER

Mr. Garth Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a group of citizens who have been working tirelessly in the name of a supreme issue, that is, the environment.

These volunteers who have come together under the banner of POWER which stands for Protect Our Water and Environmental Resources, have recently been named citizen of the year by the Acton Chamber of Commerce.

Members of POWER, which include Ruth French, Ken McGregor and hundreds of others, have succeeded in raising public awareness of key environmental issues.

These citizens know the future lies in recycling, recovering, reusing and rethinking the way we treat our environment.

They oppose further landfill sites, particularly the establishment of one in a dangerous quarry location with the potential to pollute the groundwater for thousands of people in my riding. I stand behind the citizens and these environmentalists.

FISHERIES

B.C. INDUSTRY

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, today in Vancouver there is a gathering of people whose livelihoods depend on the B.C. fishing industry. This rally is to protest the new Conservative regulations which will gut the Canadian industry of its fish and its jobs. New Democrats support those workers.

Our fishing industry has never been threatened like it is today. American interests want our herring, want our salmon and want our jobs.

Over the last three years, the current Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and the former Minister for International Trade made repeated promises to this House that Canada would fight the U.S. complaint to GATT, that B.C. fish would be landed, inspected and gutted in Canada, and that Canadian natural resources and Canadian jobs would be protected.

None of those promises were kept. Those Ministers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have sold out the B.C. fishing industry to the Americans. The Americans are still not satisfied. They feel that the landing requirements would bruise their fish. The Americans already believe they own our fish.

Where are our rights to grade our fish and to gut our fish, our rights to Canadian resources, and our rights to our jobs? Americans must not be allowed to steal our natural resources with or without the connivance of the Prime Minister.

THE CONSTITUTION

LIBERAL POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Harb) applauded a decision to reduce Department of Transport expenditures by some $200 million, thereby contradicting his caucus.

Certainly, the Liberals have never understood Canada and never will. That explains their increasingly negative position on the Meech Lake Agreement.

In their caucus, the Liberals do not even agree on the National Capital Commission, the Ottawa-Hull region, which is only a part of Canada. How will they be able to agree on a national consensus on the Meech Lake Agreement?

TRIBUTE TO JOHN N. TURNER

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am proud to have represented the new riding of Carleton—Gloucester since last November. It is also an honour for me to represent part of the riding formerly represented by the Right Hon. John Turner.

A man of courage and integrity, he devoted his energies to his country's business.

[English]

As a Member of Parliament representing ridings in Québec, Ontario and British Columbia the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) served his electors and all Canadians with great enthusiasm and determination.

As defender of the unity of Canada, he was a courageous, decent person and a true Canadian. The future will prove that the Right Hon. Member should have been our present Prime Minister.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

IMPROVEMENT OF SYSTEM

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I want to give the people in my riding who are now receiving unemployment insurance benefits or who may do so in the future that the Government will continue to help those who lose their jobs.

The improved system will take into account the dynamic nature of our regional economy. The Unemployment Insurance Program has simply been adjusted to the vitality of our regions. The old system was obsolete, Mr. Speaker. We are now adjusting to the economic situation as it is today.

The entrepreneurial spirit of the people of Beauce has already created many jobs, and the Department of Employment and Immigration will provide retraining and skills upgrading for those who need it. An additional $800 million has been earmarked for retraining. The new formula is still just as generous for benefit recipients. Benefit amounts have been maintained. It makes good sense to adjust the Unemployment Insurance Program to the economic circumstances in Beauce and elsewhere. Contributors to the Unemployment Insurance Fund will realize that the new system will be fairer, more equitable and more effective.

Furthermore, as the Member for Beauce, I intend to defend the interests of all those constituents who are receiving or who will receive unemployment insurance benefits.

LEADER OF THE LIBERAL PARTY

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Government of Canada, colleagues here in the House, and all members of the Progressive Conservative Party to pay tribute to my friend, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) who just this morning has announced his intention to resign as Leader of the Liberal Party.

As we watched the right hon. gentleman over the past week, and despite Ottawa being awash with rumours of an impending resignation, many of us on this side of the House had come to the conclusion that maybe he was going to put it off until the next time February 29 rolled around. I guess, as usual, his good sense and good judgment prevailed, and he did what he considered to be the right thing this morning.

It is at times like this when this institution, the House of Commons, demonstrates that it is a very special place, a very unique place. As a gentleman whom the right hon. gentleman admired so much, the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker, used to say on various occasions like this one, "Parliament lives".

Today we recognize that it is truly a living institution and that it always rises to the occasion, for it was just yesterday that the right hon. gentleman engaged in a very vigorous debate as is his responsibility as Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and today we are here in this House to set aside our differences and pay tribute to him as a distinguished parliamentarian and as an outstanding Canadian.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: As a parliamentarian he has indeed had a long and remarkable career. He was first elected to the House of Commons in 1962 and re-elected on seven different occasions. It was during this time that he served ridings in three different provinces, the provinces of Québec, Ontario and British Columbia. As one who has known the right hon. gentleman for over 20 years, I have always admired his respect for this institution, his desire to preserve its integrity to ensure that the uniqueness and integrity of this institution be preserved as the basic pillar of freedom and democracy in this Canada of ours.

He did so frequently, he did so eloquently, and he did it with vigour, while at the same time he used those parliamentary instruments to his advantage and to his Party's advantage in the best parliamentary tradition.

I think it is fair to say that the right hon. gentleman had an intense respect for all Members of the House of Commons. I remember that when I came here as a back-bencher he was the Minister of Justice. He always tried to respond to the questions that were asked and he always considered the requests of MPs as a priority.

In government he held many portfolios which reflected his broad interests and his abilities—Registrar General, Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Solicitor General, Minister of Justice, Minister of Finance, and Prime Minister. That is a record that all Hon. Members I am sure would agree has been matched by few.

• (1420)

Above all, I am sure that it is fair to say that all Canadians admired his tenacity and strength of character as he fought in difficult and trying circumstances for what he felt was the interests of his Party and for his vision of Canada. His life outside this theatre and outside politics was equally distinguished. As a Rhodes Scholar, a prominent and successful lawyer and as a businessman, he brought the same characteristics he displayed in the House of Commons to the other facets of his life.

We note with some satisfaction as well that he was a noted author. He wrote a book called The Politics of Purpose wherein he talked about the exports of water, something which came in quite useful during the free trade debate from time to time. John Diefenbaker said: "Never write a book until you are almost through. It will come back to haunt you".

In the best spirit and in keeping with the best parliamentary tradition, on behalf of the Prime Minister, the Government, my colleagues and our Party, we extend to the right hon. gentleman, his wife Geills and his family enjoy what will obviously be a less hectic and more relaxing pace. We wish you well, Sir.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, when I held a rather innocent press conference a few weeks ago, I had no idea I would be setting a veritable trend, and I do not know where the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is but I am sure we will learn about that later today.

More seriously, I am absolutely delighted to join with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) on behalf of my colleagues to pay tribute to a very distinguished parliamentarian and a very exceptional Canadian.

[Translation]

The Right Hon. Member has served as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Minister of Finance and Minister of Justice. He has been Solicitor General, Leader of the Opposition and Prime Minister of Canada.

As Minister of Justice, he sponsored the reform of the Criminal Code.

As a New Democrat, I cannot truthfully say that I always agreed with him when he was Minister of Finance. In fact, those instances were few and far between. However, even during that period he made a number of good suggestions and on one occasion increased pension benefits.

[English]

Among the many attributes of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra, for Hon. Members who have known him as have the Deputy Prime Minister and others, myself included, going back 20 years, a very special attribute, to use a phrase that he has used himself about others, is that the Hon. Member is very much a House of Commons man.

For me, there are two special connotations to that phrase. One is a person who has recognized the importance of the traditions of parliamentary democracy and, more relevant, has understood those traditions and has understood that they have not been perpetuated over time as mere ornaments but because they have given substance to our Parliament in terms of their application to real life democracy in this country of ours. He has well understood that, and I want to pay particular tribute to him as a Minister when he understood that in replying to questions from this side of the House, as Prime Minister, and as Leader of the Opposition. He was an exceptional Member of Parliament who, perhaps more than any other Member during my time, has both understood and respected those parliamentary traditions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The second aspect is that it is a very human attribute. The man we are honouring today has not only been vigorous in debate, has not only well understood parliamentary traditions, but has well understood something that some of us tend to forget from time to time, that debate is important, that the expression of ideological and philosophical differences is very important and that is why we are here, but at the same time, he has had a great capacity for recognizing the independent dignity and worth of each Member of the House of Commons, regardless of his of her Party affiliation. It is important, he has expressed without necessarily saying it, to have vigorous partisan debate, but it is equally important to recognize the human dignity of each Member of this House beyond those partisan considerations.

[Translation]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the first time the Right Hon. Member ran for the leadership of the Liberal Party, he cut a dashing figure as the anti-establishment candidate. This augured well for his future in his Party and his country. As the Leader of his Party, he has demonstrated what he so aptly said a few weeks ago after my own announcement, that politics is a tough game but an honourable calling.

[English]

His special qualities were evident for all to see in the House and outside the House when in spite of intense back pain he waged an exceptionally vigorous campaign during the recent election for the kind of independent Canada he so evidently believes in. Instead of adversity weakening him, it simply deepened his resolve.

On behalf of my colleagues, I salute a decent man, a serious politician. We wish him, Geills and the family well. Good luck in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Tribute to Right Hon. John Turner

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of my colleagues in the Liberal caucus, and I think on behalf of Liberals all across this country, to pay tribute to a great Canadian and a great parliamentarian, our Leader, the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner). Today, Mr. Speaker, we thank him for his courage, his integrity, his ability and for his deep feelings for Canada. All of these have enabled him to give leadership, not just here in the House but across the country, in the fight for the kind of Canada he and we believe in, a sovereign, independent Canada, able to define and apply its own values of caring and concern for all of its people.

• (1430)

This battle did not end with a full victory for us under his leadership. But we believe it is not yet over. His commitment and his courage will inspire us to continue that battle until it is won.

On a more personal note, all of us, especially myself, appreciate his friendship and his encouragement. We also recognize his very distinguished parliamentary career which saw him, as Minister of Justice, take important steps in law reform, which saw him as Canada's first Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, which saw him as the Minister of Finance who began the concept of indexing of pensions and personal income tax, so important to Canadians today.

We pay tribute to the Leader of the Opposition today. We thank him for all he has done, and we wish him and his family happiness, health and contentment in the future. But we recognize with satisfaction that he will continue to lead us here in the House and across the country for some time yet with vigour and enthusiasm. We say to the Leader of the Opposition, we, your colleagues and friends, thank you for how far we have travelled together on the road to a better Canada. We say to him, thank you for the example of courage and commitment which will help us to continue to move forward.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we say thank you for the encouragement, dedication and above all the courage of the Leader of the Opposition. And we can assure him that the battle will continue.

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, there is not perhaps very much one can add to the words of tribute that have been accorded to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) here today, but I think it would be fitting that one of his colleagues from British Columbia says a word of appreciation for the friendship that we have enjoyed together over many years.

I got to know the right hon. gentleman quite early. When I came here in 1972 he was the Minister of Finance and I recall my first question being directed to the right hon. gentleman. All of us who have gone through this experience know the nervousness and excitement that is associated with such a debut. Of course, my question was overly long and was perhaps a little too smart, and the Speaker cut me off. I was terribly embarrassed. I noticed that the right hon. gentleman sort of had a deep feeling for me, and he was kind enough—I never told him this because I never wanted him to feel that I was obligated to him—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Oberle: —to take the time, Mr. Speaker, to wait until I left the House to move outside and meet me there. He congratulated me on my first question and wished me well. I have never forgotten that.

I got to know him better a few years later when, as fate sometimes plays tricks on us, we found ourselves in Labrador on a fishing trip next to a stream. The aircraft that brought us there and was to bring us back got into difficulty, and the right hon. gentleman fell in the river. We one had one fish, and his boots were full of cold water. The night was wearing on and we were in desperate straits. He has been telling the story around the country that he saved my life because fortunately he did have the matches that helped us light a fire, and he did catch the fish and had the libation that carried us through half the night.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oberle: Of course, I never told anyone that I saved his life because of the reaction I would have gotten from some of my friends on this side of the House, and even some on the other side.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

Mr. Oberle: The longer one serves in this institution, the more one discovers that it is just as difficult to leave politics as it is to get into it. It requires just as much courage to make the decision that the right hon. gentleman has made today, as to decide to get into politics and make the sacrifices that are associated with it.

I assume of course that the right hon. gentleman will move home to British Columbia and that he will contribute to the life and the progress of our province in his later years.

I want to say to him on behalf of all his friends and colleagues here in the House from British Columbia, and in fact on behalf of all British Columbians, thank you for the contribution you have made to Quadra, to our province, to the country; and to your family, all the very best in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, I had to give some serious consideration as to measuring my words about retiring politicians considering my own circumstance. One could say, upon listening to the words said to a retiring politician, that they are blandishments to return. If indeed this is the case with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), I would second the motion. The Leader of the Opposition has been a servant of Canada and a servant of British Columbia in a number of particular ways that touch not only me personally, but the people of British Columbia. I want to publicly acknowledge the role that the Leader of the Opposition played in a major controversy at the time between British Columbia and Canada. I will not go into the details, but a decision was made in my office and, on the basis of a handshake, a policy was formulated. Within 18 months of that policy being formulated, it would have been to the advantage of the Government of the day and the Minister, now the present Leader of the Opposition, to go back on that handshake. It would have been understood if he did, but to this day that Member never once has gone back on a deal that he made as representative of the Crown.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is a Member of the House of Commons from the old school. He has a sense of tradition, a sense of proportion and a sense of history. He got it from his mother, who was a great British Columbian, and as the Chancellor of the University of British Columbia was a champion for our province and the people of that province.

Tribute to Right Hon. John Turner

• (1440)

The Leader of the Opposition has served very well in representing his constituency in British Columbia, from a political point of view, only too well. But beyond that, Mr. Speaker, I value his personal friendship, I value his historic and sincere commitment to the Province of British Columbia, but more important, as a Canadian he saw British Columbia as part of Canada. He will be a great loss not only to British Columbia but to this Chamber.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the Liberal Caucus and through Caucus, on behalf of Liberals everywhere in Canada.

Today has been an emotional day for all of us. Indeed it has been a day of reflection as we pay tribute to a leader who took on his role in the history of the Liberal Party of Canada with great courage and integrity, a Party that has been among the most successful of political organizations in the free world. However, continued success demands renewal and we began that renewal in 1984. In 1984 some said that, after decades of political success, our Party was destined for oblivion. The last chapter of the Liberal Party of Canada had been written. With all due respect to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), as recently as last fall a similar prediction was made.

Mr. Speaker, John Turner, by the force of his will, by the depth of his commitment and by the power of his passion turned back those predictions and leaves this Party today a dynamic and renewed organization all across Canada, and for that we thank him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: We have a saying in Newfoundland that the measure of a captain is not how well he sails his ship in calm waters, but rather how well he sails his ship through the storm. Martin Luther King, Jr., put it another way. He said: "The ultimate measure of a man is not where he stands in moments of comfort and convenience, but where he stands at times of challenge and controversy."

Leader, on behalf of Liberals everywhere, I am proud to say that notwithstanding the moments of challenge and controversy, and Lord knows there have been a few of them, we were proud to stand with you, Sir, and we thank you for your contribution to Parliament, to our Party, and to the country.

On March 16, 1984, upon his return to public life, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) stated: "I have always believed that every Canadian has a duty to serve our country. Public service is a high calling. It is a way I can give back to my country a small measure of what it has given me—I have no magic wand. I have no instant solutions. But I do make a pledge. I will make whatever sacrifices are necessary. I will devote myself to my country. I will not flinch from the tough decisions. You will know where I stand".

Those are not partisan words. They are the words of a proud son of Canada, and they are a challenge to every single one of us in this place. John Turner has lived up to the standard he set for himself. As Parliamentarians, we would all do well to seek to follow his example. We give our best to his wife, Geills, his family and, of course, to you, Leader.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, I had the opportunity to introduce the Right Hon. John Turner in Montreal. I would like to repeat today some of what I said: a man of courage, a man with presence, a great Parliamentarian, as the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker often said—and you know, John Diefenbaker was occasionally right—a man of principles, a man who through all sorts of challenges maintained his commitment to serving Canada, the ideal of Canada, what it represents for all of us, a different country, more free, more egalitarian and more humane.

Mr. Turner, you are deeply attached to Québec, not only because some members of your family still have roots there, your sister Brenda has always lived in Montreal for—dare I say—more than 30 years, but also because you know that Québec's place in Canada is unique and for all these years, you have always acted to guarantee this special position.

A man's strength of character is judged in adversity. I have been a living witness to it. Indeed, your patience, your composure during the difficult storms of these years, 1984 to 1989, and also the courage with which you bore and accepted a difficult physical condition during the last election campaign have earned you the respect and sympathy of all Canadians.

You gave your support to the Meech Lake Agreement and you never wavered in your decision, despite the unfavourable reaction this brought you from many quarters, and for this we thank you. You understood—I repeat—you understood that the Canadian federation is always in the making. For this, we thank you and I thank you.

You began your political career in Montreal in 1962, as Member for Parliament for St. Lawrence—St. George, which helped you to become quite familiar with the distinct character of Montrealers and Québecers.

Mr. Speaker, a politican is never alone in life, and on behalf of all Canadians, I wish to thank his wife Geills, as well as his children Elizabeth, Michael, David and Andrew for sharing him with us. Thanks!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, you will understand fully when I say that over the years I have found that the goodbyes in this place are far more generous and spontaneous than the hellos.

Notwithstanding, I am very touched by the words of three old friends of mine: the Deputy Prime Minister and Member of Parliament for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), the Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), and my colleague and friend of 30 years, the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), and particularly the reference to our shared mission in the House of Commons to which I will refer in a moment.

[Translation]

I must also thank my colleagues, the members of the caucus, the Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte (Mr. Tobin) as well as the longest serving Member of the House, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), for their most generous words.

[English]

I was particularly touched by what the Minister of Forestry and the Member of Parliament for Prince George—Peace River (Mr. Oberle) had to say, and the Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett). I consider it a privilege to represent our province and I am particularly sensitive to the way they address this House before your Honour.

• (1450)

I am not going to allow the record to stand unchallenged, however. I leave it to you, Mr. Speaker. You understand what it is to seek salmon on both coasts, and I want to tell the Member for Prince George—Peace River (Mr. Oberle) the question before the House will always be: Who had the matches, who killed the salmon, who had the bottle?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Who saved whom? Let it be a warning to any Member who ventures into the outdoors to go properly equipped.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that you are allowing me the indulgence of the House. We are interrupting the public time of the country, but before I address a few short matters I want to thank Geills and the family for all the support they have given me.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I was extremely touched by what all Hon. Members said about the House of Commons, because for me as well as for everyone here, the greatest privilege for a Canadian is to be elected by his or her fellow citizens to the House of Commons. I always told my colleagues, especially the youngest ones: "Be careful, respect others." We must respect the other Members of whatever party because everyone here, each and every one of us, represents Canadians as a result of an election in a highly free country.

[English]

This is and remains the forum of the nation. This is the highest court in the land. This is the place where finally issues must be decided.

I know, from time to time, critics and members of the media and those who watch Question Period wonder what we are doing here. Yes, it should be a legislative workshop, as there is business to be accomplished on behalf of the people of Canada. But the word Parliament, taken from the Norman, was well chosen. This is theatre, this is debate. It is the freest Chamber in the free world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is unruly at times, but it is untrammelled and uncensored, and unpredictable.

I had a very good question from Gail Morris in the press conference today. She asked me my impressions of what had changed during my years here. I think the most fundamental influence, of course, is television as it reflects on the proceedings of the House. I welcome that change. I think we all do. It converts the House of Commons again into a town hall, a forum for the people.

But it has changed the elements of the House. You and I were talking about it, Mr. Speaker. Question Period has become the dominant issue and period of focus of the people as it relates to the House of Commons. I think we should recognize that. Perhaps it should be extended so that all Members of the House, particularly members on the Government side, can participate more fully in it. I think we ought to extend statements pursuant to Standing Order 31 to allow individual Members of Parliament to make their points of view.

I have always felt, to continue the excellent work of Jim McGrath, now the Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland and Labrador, that we ought to examine whether fewer issues remain issues of confidence so that there is more liberty of expression and freedom of registering our votes in this Chamber.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think there are ways of maintaining the relevance of this place, and increasing it, because it disturbs me that while the House is full during Question Period, as it properly should be, with Members from all sides of the House, the House is not as full as it might be during principal debates, the Throne Speech, the Budget and debate on second reading of principal pieces of legislation, reflecting the importance of issue we are debating here. There must be ways, under your guidance, that we can re-enhance the relevance of this place. I know how strongly you and I feel about it, Mr. Speaker.

In any event, the Member for Vegreville, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), mentioned the late John George Diefenbaker. I say this not in any pompous way, I hope, but I remind particularly our young Members of Parliament from all sides of the House that Mr. Diefenbaker used to say: "Don't neglect this place, spend your time here. It may take many years to build up a reputation in the House of Commons but you can lose it in one day". That is the importance of this place, and it is one place I am really going to miss.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Before we commence Question Period, I should point out that it will continue in just a moment for the usual 45 minutes.

I want to say something to a number of Members on both sides of the House who came to me and would have wanted very much to make an intervention on this occasion in which we have all joined together. It was my decision, of course, to finally say that perhaps, at least for now, we have heard all that is appropriate under the circumstances. As the right hon. gentleman we praised today pointed out, we have the business of the country to proceed with.

I would not remark on this very often, but I want to say to Hon. Members that given the hour there will have to be the absence of some members of the Cabinet because of prior obligations. I hope that under all the circumstances Hon. Members will exercise care and courtesy in not making a point of that.

However, we are running 45 minutes late now. Oral Questions.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

INCREASED TAXATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as you have urged, we will get back to the public business of the country. My question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Even in this Canada of ours, more than three million people live in poverty. Over one million children live in poverty, 40 per cent of single or widowed women live under the poverty line. When we should be helping to lift our fellow Canadians beyond the poverty line and out of poverty, how can the Minister justify the fact that since he has been Minister of Finance he has raised the taxes of people living at the poverty line by 60 per cent? Meanwhile, those with incomes of $100,000 have had an increase of only eight per cent. What kind of fairness does he think this represents and what kind of vision of Canada does he think it represents?

• (1500)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will recall that—I do not have the figures right off the top of my head—some 250,000 or 300,000 fewer people are living under the poverty line since we came to office in 1984. We have also introduced a number of changes that respond to the needs of these people. The refundable sales tax credit was something that was introduced by this Government and has been increased in two consecutive Budgets. We have also increased the value of the child tax credit. In a number of ways, we have responded to the needs of these people.

Finally, let me say that through tax reform we have taken 850,000 people who are at the lower end of the income scale off the tax rolls. Again, I think that demonstrates our concerns to which the Hon. Member refers.

* * *

THE BUDGET

CUTS IN HEALTH CARE AND POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, referring to the Minister's own figures as contained in five successive Budgets, the cumulative tax increase for a couple with one earner, two children, earning $23,600—which is the poverty line—over five years of his custody of the finances of this country has been 60 per cent.

As a result of this Budget, the federal Government will contribute $4 billion less through the provinces for health care and post-secondary education. How can the Minister justify fewer spaces and higher tuition fees for our colleges and universities? How can he justify longer lists of people waiting to get into our hospitals? How can he justify inevitably lower quality health care for Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have responded to questions along those lines in previous meetings of the House of Commons. I say to the Hon. Member, he has chastised me roundly for the increase in the debt of this country in recent years. He knows full well that the only way that you can stop the debt from growing is to get the annual deficit down to zero. I have yet to hear any alternatives from the Hon. Member as to how we will get that debt down to zero.

We have had criticism time and time again of the measures that we have taken, measures that are regarded by many commentators across this country as evenly spread, as balanced in their impact, and what we are trying to do is solve this debt problem so that we can maintain the very programs that the hon. gentleman himself is saying we should maintain.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we recognize, as does the Minister, the problem of the public debt and the annual deficit and what he has contributed to it. We say to him that when he cuts both, "Don't do it on the backs of the weak, the unemployed or the weaker regions of the country or the handicapped." Don't do it that way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

JUSTIFICATION OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, more than half of Canada's single mothers raise their children on incomes that are below the poverty line.

How can the Minister of Finance justicy cutbacks that are adding to the burden of families and children, and especially to that of our poorest provinces?

Why didn't he keep his promises to the neediest in this country.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is saying that we are hurting the provinces which are the poorest. We have kept in place the equalization program which goes specifically to the poorer provinces in the country.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There is a statute there you can't touch.

Mr. Wilson: The Hon. Member says there is a statute there, we can't touch it. This House, and as the Hon. Member, a fine Parliamentarian, knows, laws can be changed, but we are respecting the needs of the provinces. We are respecting the needs of the provinces which are in the lower income areas of the country because of the very concerns that the Hon. Member has expressed. In this Budget we are bringing in a large corporations tax which will raise $1 billion, to be paid by large corporations. We brought in a high-income surtax, specifically to put a heavier burden on those parts of the country, those people, those companies that are best able to bear the burden.

Let me repeat, Mr. Speaker, the primary objective of this Budget is to ensure that we can retain the services important to people with lower incomes and who are in the less well off regions of the country.

REDUCTION OF SPENDING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Yesterday, Thérèse Lavoie-Roux, the Québec Liberal Government's Minister responsible for family policy, attacked the Budget of the Minister of Finance, saying it was anti-family. She quoted items that make it an anti-family budget: recovery of family allowance; deindexation of family allowance; cutbacks in spending on health and education; and the new sales tax on new homes that will affect young couples.

Could the Minister inform the House why he brought down an anti-family Budget?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I reject that commentary on the Budget. Family allowance cheques will be received by 100 per cent of the people who are eligible to receive them. That continues. The universal character is maintained. The Hon. Member refers to Established Programs Financing. That, as I said yesterday, will increase by $25 billion over the course of the next five years relative to the last five years.

Finally, his comments are quite wrong as they relate to the cost of housing. We have made a commitment which is repeated in the Budget papers which states that if there is an affordability problem, we will take action to offset that affordability problem. The details will be made known in the next few months.

[Translation]

ALLEGED REGRESSIVE FAMILY POLICY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister refuses to understand, refuses to admit that one of the major problems in Canada is our declining birthrate.

The Minister ought to realize, considering what it costs today to raise children, that we need a generous family policy, not a regressive one.

The Minister deindexed family allowance payments, and now he has started to recover those payments, starting at a certain income level. Today, he is going after people with high incomes. Next year, when he needs extra money, he will go down to $20,000 or $25,000.

Could the Minister explain why he did not look at other ways of reducing his deficit instead of going after Canadian families?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, one of the best encouragements for people to start a family and raise children is to have a job and the assurance that that job will be there and will pay more. If people have jobs and are trained as a result of the substantial increase in the moneys that we have made available, these are what are important to families. This will give people the confidence that there is a strong future for them.

Let me remind the Hon. Member—he is shaking his head. I do not think there are many people in the country shaking their heads, having seen a million and a half more people with jobs. I see the Hon. Member nodding. He agrees with me.

Mr. Malépart: No.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There are a million and a half more people who have jobs today. That situation is giving people the confidence to build and grow and leave a better country for their children.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

SUBSIDIES TO VIA RAIL

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. One hundred and four years ago, under a Conservative Government, the last spike was driven to connect one end of this country to the other by rail. This morning the Minister of Transport delivered the last spike to the heart of VIA Rail by announcing the subsidy restrictions for the next number of years. Will the Minister confirm that the result of the subsidy level for 1993–94 is that VIA will only have sufficient funds to provide for those nine protected services, and therefore will not have the money to operate the Transcontinental, the Atlantic, the Windsor–Québec City corridor and a number of other routes in this country? Will he confirm that that is the result of his decision?

• (1510)

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will not confirm anything which has been said. This morning, I gave some reference levels to the Board of Directors of VIA Rail which correspond to the reality of the finances of this country, something we always have to keep in mind. I totally share the concern of the Minister of Finance. Transport Canada has to consider that also. We have set the new reference levels that the Government of Canada can provide to VIA Rail. Within those reference levels we would like to have proposals or options which will permit not only what the Board of Directors of VIA Rail want, but can afford. I believe that not only this Government but also the Member will have to consider the affordability of what we do in Canada with regard to transportation.

CUTS TO VIA RAIL

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since 1986 this Government has systematically undermined VIA Rail's ability to improve its service and to reduce the cost to taxpayers. It refused to give VIA the equipment it needed in order to turn it into a modern passenger rail system. It did not give it legislation. It has now fired the President of VIA Rail, who had the guts to oppose this Conservative Government's policy.

Will the Minister go back to Cabinet and say: "This does not make sense. I do not want to be the Minister who goes down in history as having destroyed passenger rail in this country".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if my friend wants me to talk about history, I will. It is true that 122 years ago this country was built by transportation—

An Hon. Member: Still is.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): Can you listen, please, it is important. The decisions of today will be the past tomorrow. I do not want to give your children and my children a past made up of debts, deficit and inflation. I would not be proud of that kind of heritage for my children.

ENVIRONMENTAL BENEFITS OF RAIL TRANSIT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): When one looks at transportation in this country, one recognizes that from an environmental point of view rail passenger transportation is the most environmentally sound opportunity we have.

Is the Minister suggesting that he is more willing to conserve the dollars and cents of the Minister of Finance than the environmental health of this country by forcing people to drive on highways instead of riding the rails? Is that what he is suggesting to the people of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoit Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the point raised by the Hon. Member with respect to the environment deserves futher comment. What we are saying, what we said and what we intend to repeat to the corporation's board of directors, first of all, and to Canadians in general, is that we can no longer afford to invest $650 million annualy in a mode of transportation that is used by 3 to 5 per cent of the population. We must ensure that the modes of transportation used by Canadians have a financial structure that the Government can afford to support. We must not be unrealistic, Mr. Speaker. We can no longer afford what we have been paying during the past ten years in terms of subsidies to VIA Rail.

[English]

VIA RAIL—POSSIBLE CLOSURE OF OPERATIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. We noted last week some $500 million in cuts in VIA subsidies over the next five years. This morning the Minister of Transport fired the chief executive officer of VIA Rail because the chief executive officer believes that those cuts are inconsistent with the notion of maintaining a VIA Rail passenger service in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Tobin: My question to the Minister of Transport is a straightforward one. Is the Minister of Transport prepared to come clean with the people of Canada today and admit that the reason he fired the chief executive officer is that the Government of Canada has decided to close down VIA Rail's operations entirely in this country?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: The Government of Canada does not have the courage to make a clean statement. The president left because the cuts are inconsistent with maintaining a rail passenger service in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will not pound the desk. It is not the way to convince Canadians who do not believe.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): I would like to say that there was an agreement with Mr. de Belleval that his departure would be appropriate in light of the fact that we had a new mandate with VIA Rail and it was not what he had exposed to Canadians in the last three months.

I met Mr. de Belleval this morning and I believe that he understands our position. You can yell and scream and say what you want, you will not change the reality of the finances of this country that you are responsible for.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: The Minister can twist and turn all he wants and he will not hide the hypocrisy of his answer today in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: There is no courage in scurrying away like an anxious crab from the truth.

PASSENGER RAIL SERVICE—TAKEOVER BY PROVINCES AND MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): I would like to ask the Minister of Transport, what other conclusion can Canadians come to other than this Government, despite all its promises both during the election and over the last dozen years, is abandoning VIA Rail, when we see the Minister of Transport of Canada promoting the notion in Canada's newspapers that the provinces and municipalities ought to take over the rail passenger service in Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Tobin: I ask the Minister again, why does he not come clean? Why is it Mr. de Belleval is fired but Mr. Hanigan, a former Tory candidate is kept on as chairman of the board of VIA Rail?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat what I already said in English. Mr. de Belleval and I agreed that considering the positions he had taken, it was preferable for him to resign, and that is what he did. The Hon. Member has already made up his mind about the options that VIA Rail will propose to the Government. I have not. This morning I told the board of directors: Submit proposals that you feel are appropriate, considering the financial reference level we are giving you, we will listen. That is what I said, and that is what I can do, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

THE BUDGET

GROWTH OF ECONOMY

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Minister has stated that as a result of his Budget, growth in Canada's economy will slow and unemployment will increase next year. Analysts are now forecasting a drop in our economic growth of at least one full percentage point from over what it would have been without this Budget.

How can the Minister cut expenditures, raise taxes, keep interest rates high, and hope that the economy will somehow continue to grow at a healthy rate?

Will the Minister admit that his Budget is deliberately slowing growth in our economy, causing more inflation and causing yet more unemployment?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me quote a very learned observer who said:

> The solution is quite simply for the Government to demonstrate a real ability to cut spending and to increase taxes—not very palatable ideas but necessary nevertheless—there are no magic solutions, MacLaren said.

That is a quote from the Hon. Member who has just asked the question. It is all very well to stand up on his hind legs and criticize, criticize, criticize, but Canadians are not going to be fooled. They can read what the Hon. Member said just three weeks ago and they know that the criticism is going to get nowhere.

What we are looking for in Canada today is an honest debate on the issues so we can understand where we are going as a country, where we are going as a people. I will answer the question if you will give me a little more time.

An Hon. Member: Where were you during the campaign?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Hon. Members opposite have been critical of the high interest rates in this country. They are saying we should get interest rates down. This is a Budget designed to get interest rates down.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Now the Hon. Members say that that will not happen. This is designed to get interest rates down. I listen carefully to what Hon. Members say, and they say you cannot have it both ways. If we want to get interest rates down, we have to attack the fundamental causes of why interest rates are high. That is what this Budget does.

• (1520)

INTEREST RATES—INFLATIONARY EFFECTS

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says that we must get interest rates down. I agree with him, but he himself in his Budget is forecasting that interest rates will average 12 per cent this year. We are already into the fifth month of the year. Interest rates remain in excess of 12 per cent.

Given that the Minister predicts higher inflation while at the same time the Governor of the Bank of Canada has stated that inflation requires the imposition of yet higher interest rates, can the Minister explain somehow how anyone can believe that interest rates will drop before the end of this year?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member well knows, because I have another quote from him here, saying that lower inflation is essential to getting better productivity and lower interest rates. He is asking why we have not got interest rates down. The Budget was only presented last week. We cannot expect that just overnight, bang, things will happen, but the Hon. Member knows that the essential components of this Budget are designed to get interest rates down. We know the importance of getting interest rates down as demonstrated by the tremendous record of success we had in the last four years in which a million and a half jobs were created. This is our objective and this Budget is designed to repeat that great record.

HOUSING

RENTAL RESIDENTIAL REHABILITATION—CUTS IN SPENDING

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Housing. The Canadian Housing Renewal Association has said that the killing of the rental residential rehabilitation program will result in the decline of the living conditions of many low and moderate-income Canadians. This is the only major program that allows municipal and local Governments to upgrade substandard housing, to prevent conversions to high rise and high expense condominiums or to prevent demolition. What action will the Minister now take to help those thousands of Canadians, including children, who are caught in the housing crisis and who are being made homeless? Why not just keep this program?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that I am as unhappy as he is, and in fact, the Government is as unhappy as he is with having to reduce spending on this particular social housing program. At the same time, the Hon. Member is aware and all Canadians are aware that a few years ago, 18 cents out of every dollar the Government took in went to pay for interest on the national debt. Last year, it was 31 cents out of every dollar. This year it will be 35 cents. Before very long, there will not be any social housing programs if that keeps up. In order to make sure that we are going to preserve social housing programs in Canada, we have to take action on that deficit.

Mr. Karpoff: Mr. Speaker, at the rate this Government is going, there sure will not be any social programs left in this country.

SOCIAL HOUSING—IMPACT OF BUDGET

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister. This Budget has cut needed social housing programs, has increased taxes on homes and has done everything to drive up interest rates rather than bring them down to make housing affordable. Can the Minister point to one single thing in this Budget that will actually provide Canadians with affordable housing?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would examine the Estimates and the Budget very carefully, he would find that in fact, the Budget for social housing last year was $1.6 billion. This year it is $1.7 billion. There has actually been a $100 million increase in the social housing budget.

FORESTRY

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Guy H. Arsenault (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On a number of occasions in the past, the Prime Minister promised people in the forestry sector that he would give the industry the attention it deserved, considering its importance to Canada's economy. The Prime Minister also promised to establish a department that would be responsible for forestry. The Budget tells another story. It shows cutbacks of $28 million and 44 person years.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House whether the Prime Minister's commitments to the forestry sector were only empty promises? And how can he explain the cutbacks, in view of those commitments?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it would be helpful to put the matter in the proper context. The Hon. Member is comparing what he has read in the Estimates with standards that were established by this Government and by this Prime Minister. There has been the restoration of the Canadian forest service to its rightful place as a full Department and accomplishments have been made in developing a forest sector strategy. There is a committee of Ministers that meets on a regular basis to plan future long-term integrated forest management policies that will not only preserve the commercial values of our forests but also the non-timber assets and will manage them properly. If the Hon. Member would read the information that I have sent him, he would know that there will not be a cut in the forestry budget but a significant increase once the establishment of the new Ministry and the separation from its previous Department is complete.

FOREST RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENTS

Mr. Guy H. Arsenault (Restigouche): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Forestry. In the past, the Minister has stated how successfully the forest resource development agreements have functioned. Last year's Estimates for the agreements were $139 million. This year's Estimates reduce that amount by 25 per cent and next year's projections reduce that figure by 66 per cent. Can the Minister explain to the 5,000 people in New Brunswick who stand to lose their jobs if the agreements are not renegotiated why the agreements have been so severely cut? Moreover, does the Government have the intention of eliminating these agreements all together, and can he justify the loss of tens of thousands of jobs across Canada?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member has recognized the important achievements that have been made over the last four years. Hundreds of millions of seedlings have been planted, literally thousands of jobs have been created in silviculture and in forest farming. Hundreds of millions of hectares of land have been restocked and are treated effectively now, and of course, six of the agreements that have expired are presently being renegotiated with the provinces, and hopefully quite soon we will be in a position to enter into a new generation of those kinds of co-operative agreements that have proven so successful in the past.

TRANSPORT CANADA

CANCELLATION OF RELOCATION PROJECT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works and concerns the Conservative Government's decision to cancel its plan to relocate Transport Canada to new accommodation. Could the Minister inform the House why the Government provoked this whole controversy by cancelling the bidding process? And above all, could he explain why the Government has decided to negotiate with only one party, Mr. Robert Campeau, who supports the Prime Minister's free trade policy, instead of using a more democratic and more open system, which is the bidding process?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I agree that this is a very important decision and it falls into the general constraints that this Budget has placed on my Department along with other Departments. This decision was not one that was easily taken, but it was part of the budgetary process and reflects the general constraints that were placed on public works.

• (1530)

Mr. Boudria: I guess this is what the Prime Minister used to call "you dance with the one that brung you".

RENEWAL OF LEASE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance.

The Minister says in his Budget Papers that the cancellation of this particular item will result in a saving of $2 million. Given that the renewal of the existing lease will not result in any saving and as a matter of fact will be more expensive than getting a different lease according to the bids already known, why did the Minister of Finance pretend in his Budget to save money when he is spending more money?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, would that this question were as simplistic to answer as the Hon. Member thinks it is, this particular Public Works project along with others have been curtailed.

There have been projects curtailed in Vancouver and in other parts of the country. It is by no means certain, depending on what statistics you use, that the savings the Hon. Member attributes to continuing the project would be any more than cancelling the project. It depends on whose statistics you believe and whose arguments you accept. He is having the same problem in his own Party, as he knows.

NATIONAL REVENUE

NATIONAL DRUG STRATEGY—ZERO TOLERANCE

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question today is directed to the Minister of National Revenue.

I am sure that all Members of this House applaud the Minister's fight against the drug problem. However, the Minister was quoted in a number of articles last week as saying that the Government is seriously considering pursuing the policy of zero tolerance as a method of combating the drug problem in Canada.

Considering the less than successful record of this extremely controversial program in the United States, is the Minister so naive as to believe that zero tolerance alone will resolve the drug problem in Canada?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Government is committed to the most comprehensive and broad program dealing with the serious drug problem, by virtue of the fact of the establishment of the national drug strategy.

To set the record straight, I will quote very briefly from what I said last week: "We will be looking at all options available to us including the pros and cons of zero tolerance". I will not be dissuaded by anybody anywhere in looking at every possibility to reduce the use of illegal drugs in Canada.

AIR CANADA

GOVERNMENT SHARES IN AIRLINE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In privatizing Air Canada, the first annual meeting of Air Canada shareholders was told last week that the chairman and president of the airline were receiving interest-free loans to buy 275,000 shares at the original price of $8 per share. With these shares worth $11.50 today, the profits for these two people will be over $970,000, all based on interest-free loans.

I want to ask the Minister of Finance who votes the shares which the Government controls in Air Canada: Why was it that the Government did not vote its 55 per cent present share in Air Canada against these grossly generous benefits to two wealthy Canadians?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, the answer is very simple. In the prospectus that was presented to the Canadian people back some six and a half months ago, it was made very clear at that time to all the security commissions across this country that the Government of Canada, in its 55 per cent share of Air Canada, would not vote those shares. We have kept our commitment.

EFFECTS OF PRIVATIZATION OF AIRLINE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister if he and the Government consider it fair and just that $975,000 should be made in profit by two individuals at the top, while ordinary Canadians receive no interest-free loans and face in fact cuts in the service to their communities because of Air Canada's change to private ownership?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member asked that question because it gives me the opportunity to tell Canadians that the initial issue of Air Canada went to 130,000 ordinary Canadians from coast to coast.

All provinces and all territories were represented as shareholders, over 130,000 of them. They are very happy with that opportunity. There will be an opportunity some time in the future for all Canadians to participate in more share issues in Air Canada.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PORT EXPORTS

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

During the last two and a half years, we have heard a great deal of bombast about securing our markets in the United States through the flawed one-sided trade deal. Could the Minister tell us what went wrong with secured access to the markets when the United States is allowed under its laws to slap Canadian pork producers with a penalty of 7.7 cents per kilogram on pork from Canada exported to the United States?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows that this issue was occurring before the Free Trade Agreement came into place. The countervail action was in fact being examined then. The preliminary determination of 3.5 cents per pound has been levied. It does not have to be paid, however, and the Government of Canada and the Minister for International Trade are fighting this issue. We believe that we are on solid ground.

ACCESS TO UNITED STATES MARKETS

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the United States trade remedy laws are still intact, that the omnibus trade bill was passed by the United States Congress in December, and that our access to the United States markets is no more secured now than it was five years ago, will the Minister admit that he misled the pork producers of Canada and that instead of negotiating a free trade deal he bought a pig in a poke?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, when it comes to misleading, we can take lessons from the Hon. gentleman himself because we heard a lot of that during the last election campaign.

I might remind the Hon. Member that our trade laws are in place as are the U.S. trade laws. At the present time we have a countervail against U.S. corn, so we are applying our law in a similar manner. If we think there are unfair trading practices, we have the laws in place and the mechanisms in place to protect our producers. We are going to fight this issue because we believe that on the point of law at issue here we are on solid ground.

LOSSES SUFFERED BY PORK PRODUCERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

I wish the Minister would explain why this action was taken on January 5, five days after the Free Trade Agreement was ratified, and I would like to ask the Minister what he has to say to hog producers who are already losing money when they sell at 53 cents or 54 cents a pound. How can he explain those additional three and a half cents? And how are producers going to react to this loss? What can they do to make up for it?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member better get his facts together because there is not a 3.5 cent per pound countervail duty being assessed right now. That is a preliminary determination. We are fighting it, and it is not being paid at the present time.

[Translation]

AID TO PORK PRODUCERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Sheford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

The threat of a three and a half cent levy hangs over the heads of all Québec hog producers. The Minister of State spent all last year promising Quebec producers free access to the U.S. market, when he told hog producers: There is no problem; you can sell on the U.S. market without any surtax. But what about today? How can they still tell producers there is no problem? There is a problem. Forty-five days from now, they will have to save enough money to pay that surtax.

So there is a real loss of three and a half cents. What will the Government offer producers to make up for that?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will talk about secure access. We are the largest exporter of pork into the United States market. We enjoy that market, and we are going to continue to have it.

There will be trade disputes that arise from time to time, but under the Free Trade Agreement we have another opportunity under the dispute resolving mechanism to deal with this issue in a fair and equitable way. That is something we did not have before.

SOIL CONSERVATION PROGRAM

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister knows that there is a tremendous need, particularly in southern Saskatchewan, right across the Prairies for assistance in the soil conservation program.

The Minister also knows that an agreement has been sitting on his desk, an agreement between the Province of Saskatchewan and the federal Government. Is the Minister prepared to tell the House and the farmers of Saskatchewan whether that agreement is to be signed and when he will make that announcement?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the farmers of Saskatchewan will be glad to note that the Hon. Member is concerned about soil and water conservation and the adequate provision of water in the Province of Saskatchewan. I am sure the farmers out there will be very happy about that.

It is true that we do have a soil and water conservation program which was announced in December 1987. We have been working with the provinces in a joint arrangement to put together projects that would be suitable under the provisions of that policy. Yes, there have been ongoing discussions with the Province of Saskatchewan, and there is a proposal before us now that we are examining very closely. As soon as we can get through the process of examining it to ensure that it complies with all the criteria, we will take the necessary action.

Mr. de Jong: I am afraid that that answer is not good enough for the farmers of Saskatchewan.

RENEWAL OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the past agreement has expired. The Minister also knows that every day which passes without the announcement of that program means there will be no soil conservation projects in Saskatchewan this year. It is getting too late. In fact for most farmers it is already too late. There have been dust storms in Saskatchewan; last week in my constituency there were dust storms. We need this program.

Could the Minister explain what earthly reason there is that that program has not been announced in order that there can be soil conservation programs this year?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the program was announced in 1987. It is now 1989. We have the proposal on our desks right now and we are examining it.

I will simply tell the Hon. Member that we are going to do this right to ensure that it complies with the criteria. As soon as that examination is complete, we will take the necessary action.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

REQUEST FOR STUDY

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. During the last federal election many constituents in my riding, and indeed across the country, complained of not being enumerated.

When will the Deputy Prime Minister appoint a commission to study reform of the Elections Act?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the Hon. Member's question, the Chief Electoral Officer made the point very clearly that had the provisions of the Bill tabled before the House in the last Parliament been approved, 85 per cent or 95 per cent of the problems would have been cured.

The Opposition wanted to inject other items into that particular piece of legislation upon which there could be no agreement. As a result many Canadians were denied the opportunity to vote.

We are examining that issue very closely to see whether in fact we can bring in emergency legislation to deal with that particular issue. Today we are also looking very closely at the terms of reference for the commission, as well as names of people who could conduct it.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Ms. Greene: Mr. Speaker, the current justice system unfairly treats victims of sexual offences in particular. The two measures outlined in this Bill will address that inequity, to a degree.

The first measure will assure victims that their right to privacy is given consideration. The second will require that defence attorneys must prove to a justice that their clients are not a hazard to their victims or other members of the public.

PETITIONS

CANADIAN FILM DISTRIBUTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36.

The petitioners are concerned that Canadian films represent only 3 per cent of total screen time in Canadian theatres, that 95 per cent of all film profits go to the United States, and that only 3 per cent of video cassette sales in Canada are of Canadian produced videos.

They are asking Parliament to enact film distribution legislation which would give Canadians control over film distribution in Canada and would give Canadian film makers a genuine opportunity to have their work seen in their own country.

PROTECTION AGAINST ABUSE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, these petitioners point out that one out of every ten Canadian women is beaten by the man she lives with, that one woman in four is sexually assaulted or abused, and that every 17 minutes a Canadian woman receives some sort of sexual assault.

The petitioners are calling upon Parliament to ensure that women have alternatives to protect themselves and their children from violence, to consider the advisability of increasing funding for transition homes and advocacy centres, and to ensure that women receive greater protection under the new laws.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Friday, April 28, 1989, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government and of the amendment of Mr. MacLaren: That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

> "this House regrets that the Government has imposed unfair taxes and has cut vital programs, including child care, regional development and agriculture, in an effort to reduce its annual deficit, despite the fact that this effort has been rendered futile by the Government's ill-conceived high interest rate policy; and
> That this House condemns the Government for pursuing these policies that fall most onerously upon lower and middle-income Canadians and that are certain to hinder the further development of the Canadian economy."

And on the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Nystrom, seconded by Mr. Riis,—That the amendment be amended by adding the following words:

> "and this House further condemns the government
> 1) for imposing the greatest new tax burden on Canadian families in recent times;
> 2) for reneging on its commitment to develop regional equality;
> 3) for continuing and increasing the unfairness of the tax system; and
> 4) for eroding the universality of vital social programs."

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to rise today in support of the Budget my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled last week. This is an important budget for the future of Canada. It deals with what we must do as a government and as a country to maintain social programs and the high standard of living Canadians wish for themselves and for their children.

This Budget, Mr. Speaker, deals with what we must do to face challenges and make the most of the opportunities offered by a changing world, what we must do to affirm our sovereignty, that of a mature and confident nation, and, finally, to meet the new and ongoing priorities of our country.

What kind of Canada will we leave our children? A Canada with social programs to which we are attached. We must leave them a high standard of living and we must leave them economic freedom, sovereignty at home and respect abroad, as well as a sensitive, reasonable and responsible government. That is the Canada we must leave our children. And the Budget, Mr. Speaker, is designed to attack a major national problem that prevents Canadians from having a better future for themselves and their children. This problem is our large and growing national debt.

Only 20 years ago, Canada had no deficit and our total national debt after a century of Confederation was just $18 billion. The service charges on our debt were well within our means. The problem began shortly after, about twenty years ago, the problem of annual deficits. They were relatively small at first, but year by year they increased and started to be a burden. By 1984, the debt had grown from $18 billion to nearly $200 billion. The annual deficit exceeded $38 billion.

At the present time, the $320-billion debt puts great pressure on the economy and on our ability to provide Canadians with the social programs that set us apart. The sad reality of the debt is that it traps the country in a vicious circle. Every year, a greater effort is required of Canadians to produce additional revenue just to pay the interest on a growing debt.

The question all Hon. Members must ask themselves is whether we have the right to leave this huge debt as a heritage for future generations. It is easy to borrow from future generations, Mr. Speaker, because they have no say in the matter. They do not have a vote. However, they will have to suffer the consequences if we do not act.

Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Government was aware of the seriousness of the debt problem when it took office four and a half years ago. We took measures to control this problem. We eliminated programs that were no longer useful. We reduced waste and made government more efficient. Total program expenditures declined as a proportion of national revenue.

We also put an end to tax loopholes for businesses and high-income individuals. We reduced the annual deficit and it has declined sharply in relation to national income. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1989, the deficit was $28.9 billion, nearly $9.5 billion less than it was in 1984-85.

Our budget program was implemented as part of a comprehensive long-term plan to give the economy the dynamism it needs in a rapidly changing world that is increasingly competitive. Since 1984, we have been laying solid foundations for Canadians' economic potential.

We have modernized the regulatory framework for business. We have reformed the federal tax system and negotiated the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States. We have encouraged research and development and improved occupational training programs. Thanks to our action on the economy, Mr. Speaker, we have been able to create a climate where Canadians can face the economic challenges of a world of merciless competition.

[English]

The record shows just how well Canadians responded. Since 1984, Canadians have created 1.5 million new jobs and our economy has expanded faster than most other industrial nations. We made this progress together as a Government and as a nation because we made tough choices and we took strong actions to deal with our fiscal and economic problems.

The overriding fiscal policy objective of this Government is to continue getting the public debt under control through deficit reduction and to reinforce the policies that have helped to achieve our record of fiscal progress.

However, that progress is at risk because of rising inflationary pressures here and in other countries. In response to these pressures short-term interest rates have risen. They will be much higher this year than was widely expected even a few months ago. In early 1988, most economic forecasters expected that the world stock market plunge of October 1987 would slow the growth of industrial economies to more sustainable levels. Nowhere, not in Canada or any of the major industrialized countries, did forecasters project the rapid growth and inflationary pressures that emerged. Growth has been very strong and monetary policy has tightened in Canada and abroad to contain inflation. We must not forget the explosion of inflation and interest rates in the early 1980s, the shattering of economic confidence, the collapse of economic growth and employment in every region of Canada and, above all, the enormous damage inflicted on the lives of millions of Canadians.

• (1600)

[Translation]

The then Government may well have taken the inflation threat with a grain of salt, but we do not intend to make the same mistake. At stake is nothing less than our capacity as a Government and as a country to maintain the high standard of living and the quality of life which Canadians rightfully expect.

To protect and strengthen that capacity we must implement firm, moderate and cohesive fiscal and monetary measures which will keep us on a right course towards lower inflation and interest rate reductions. Our policy has to be realistic and responsible, where short-term risks and mid-term objectives strike a proper balance.

In the long term we will continue to lay the foundations of economic progress by following a well-balanced program of financial and economic measures. We will be taking major economic initiatives such as implementing our strategy, making better use of our labour force, revamping the federal sales tax system, and launching the last stage of the financial institution regulation reform which I will be proud to introduce in the House.

We will embark upon a reform of the tax system concerning retirement savings. We will advocate greater liberalization of international trade in our multilateral trade negotiations. We will seek to develop our country by promoting a productive and economically sound agricultural sector. And we intend to privatize more Crown corporations and take steps to ensure that our environment does not fall victim to economic growth.

A sound economy is needed if we are to achieve our goals over the coming years. It will provide more and better jobs, making it possible to respond to the social and cultural priorities of Canadians. However we will fall far short of our objective if we do not come to grips with the threat of our ever growing public debt. We cannot possibly gain control over the debt if our economy falters, but that alone is not enough. Other measures must be taken to reach our economic and financial objectives.

We have made difficult choices in this Budget. We did our best to ensure that the measures as a whole are balanced, that they take regional conditions into consideration, and that they shift some of the burden onto the shoulders of those who are in a better position to carry the extra weight. We will not reduce the debt on the backs of less fortunate Canadians.

The Budget contains a wide array of cut-backs in public outlays and measures designed to boost revenues. After implementation, expenditures will be down by roughly $2.5 billion a year.

Mr. Speaker, let me give a few examples. First there will be reduced expenditures with regards to government operations, business subsidies and other transfers, and payments to Crown corporations. We will not go ahead with the purchase of nuclear powered submarines. Individuals whose net income exceeds $50,000 will refund trough the tax system their old age security benefits and family allowances payments.

This however maintains the universality of those transfer programs. Every eligible person will continue to receive his or her benefits. Those moves go one step further in the cost control initiatives taken since 1984.

Through those and previous moves, program expenditures have gone down from 19.5 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product five years ago to 16 per cent this year. They continue on going down till 1993-94 to reach a level slightly higher than 15 per cent, the lowest in 25 years.

Mr. Speaker, on the revenue side Budget initiatives are placing a heavier burden on taxpayers who can afford it. And these moves are distributed over a number of sources.

In the corporate sector, a new tax levied on large corporations will apply to capital over $10 million used in Canada. This new tax ensures that all large corporations pay taxes and help control the national debt.

A new surtax will apply to individuals whose income tops $70,000. Excise taxes are increased and so is the federal sales tax pending the sales tax reform.

Finally, new changes will ensure that funding for the Unemployment Insurance Program is in line with our effort to control the debt.

Starting in 1990, unemployment insurance benefits will be funded entirely by employer and employee contributions. The Government will continue to cover any deficit in the unemployment insurance account during difficult periods.

Taken together, these moves will save more than $5 billion this year and $9 billion next year.

This year, they will almost cover the increase in interest charges and leave the deficit at $30,5 billion. Next year, the deficit will come down to $28 billion. The debt to gross Domestic Product ratio will stabilize next year. The debt will stop growing faster than the economy, an important result. In five years the deficit will be reduced by 50 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, the replacement of the existing federal sales tax is a key component of this Government's strategy to maintain essential programs and strengthen the Canadian economy.

The existing tax is notorious for its basic weaknesses. The Budget once more stresses our determination to eliminate it and establish a new system.

The sales tax reform will lay a more stable foundation for the Government to maintain important public services and better tackle the Canadian debt problem. It will contribute to a more equitable tax system and will make the national sales tax more visible to consumers.

Finally, it will bring in as much as $9 billion per year in revenues which will benefit all industries in every part of Canada.

With this new sales tax scheme, the Government wants to make sure that Canadian families earning less than $30,000 a year will be better off after the sales tax reform than before. This new 9 per cent sales tax will bring in enough revenues to fund a new goods and services tax credit which will represent a major increase over the current sales tax credit. This credit will be refundable and paid quarterly, the first payment being made before the coming into force of the new tax.

Moreover, basic groceries, prescription drugs and medical devices will be exempted from this tax. Residential rents, day care services, legal aid services and most health and dental services and educational services will be also exempted.

Early this Summer, in a back ground paper the Government will provide technical details on the sales tax reform, and it will introduce the relevant legislation for study next Fall.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, may I say that Canadians want a to be a nation which can protect and enhance the basic values which define our national identity.

They want and we want a compassionate Canada which is able to maintain the cultural and social programs as well as provide for the other major public services Canadians need. Moreover, we want a Canada which is economically strong and totally competitive with other trading nations which continue to create rewarding jobs and open new opportunities for Canadians in the 1990's and beyond.

• (1610)

Mr. Speaker, we want a developing Canada which can meet such priorities as professional training and environmental protection. In short, a Canada which can guarantee a higher standard of living and a better quality of life for future generations.

Such is our responsibility as a Government. This should be our objectives, certainly as Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the measures contemplated in the Budget will help us maintain the type of Canada we want to leave as a legacy to our children.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the Minister's speech with interest. He made several interesting points. One of them is that the debt now amounts to some $320 billion. It is huge. We need about a third of our revenues just to pay the interest on it.

I must add that, in 1984, the debt was $180 billion. Only 20 per cent of our revenues was needed to service it. It means that the interest on the debt has grown from one fifth to one third of Government revenues.

Our Budget tries to reduce the debt but the deficit projected for next year will still amount to $30.5 billion. It will add to the existing debt of $320 billion for a total of $350 million and, the following year, it will be $380 billion, then $400 billion the year after that.

The debt will be extremely hard to reduce. Does the Minister think that our cuts, which are quite modest in proportion to the total Budget, are a step in the right direction? We made cut-backs, for example, in projects that had not yet come into existence like the acquisition of submarines. Those were not really cuts in expenditures since the projects had not started yet. That is one of my questions. Does the Minister think enough cuts have been made in the Budget?

I have another question with the regard to the sales tax. Will the administration of the sales tax require the hiring of additional employees? Studies done in the United States, which could apply to Canada, show that the implementation of the sales tax would require about 4,000 employees and $200 million a year in administration costs alone. At the same time——the compliance cost of a sales tax would exceed $4 billion in Canada. Thus it would be extremely expensive for the small businessman and for the farmer. Would the Minister care to address those two questions?

[English]

[Translation]

Mr. Loiselle: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his interesting comments. The debt in general is, of course, the result of accumulated deficits and while we had forecast last year a lower deficit, something occured this year that none of the analysts had seen coming. At the end of last year, already, with interest rates reaching 10 per cent, after the 1987 crash, after a four-month employment slowdown that had levelled, that had peaked, everybody expected us to go through, if not a recession, at any rate a much calmer period when inflationary pressures would ease off. Unfortunately, those pressures did not lessen and exerted on our economy such forces that, in view of what was happening elsewhere, interest rates had to go up, and we were left with unexpected, extremely heavy and burdensome costs, that we strived to offset as best we could during the expenditure review exercise.

You talked about a $31.5 billion deficit. A deficit of $30.5 billion is forecast for next year if interest rates take long to fall down. And today, in this House, we heard my colleague the Minister of Finance explain that we should first give the Budget time to produce results, and be confident we will witness a move in the right direction in the months to come.

Deficits are adding up. As you say, the deficit will be $28 billion next year. That's right, but the economy is growing too. And the important thing is that we succeed in balancing anew our debt, our deficit and the economic growth so that those threatening and paralyzing cuts in our spending gradually diminish. We hope so and we have made projections accordingly.

Now, you say that the cuts are minimal. When we cut $1.5 billion, to mention only that aspect, it is more than a little. Moreover, you have to hear our friends over there. To listen to them you would think that we must cut somewhere else without touching our spending. It's a rather difficult thing to do.

So we made what we think is a good trade-off, a trade-off which protects regional distribution and especially the most disadvantaged, and I think this trade-off is just and puts us on the road to recovery.

Concerning the goods and services tax, you spoke about the problems related to its administration. A considerable reduction in administration costs was certainly one of the advantages we saw in a national tax in which the provinces would have joined. Concerning compliance costs for small and medium-sized businesses, as you will see in the material which will be distributed early next summer, specific meaures will be taken to help businesses in the management of this tax.

I cannot go into any detail now, but we will surely do what is necessary so that businesses can manage this tax without difficulty.

[English]

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, I have three very brief questions, having listened to the Minister. He stated that it is easy to borrow from future generations because they have no vote. My question is this: would he not agree that it is also easy to steal from today's children because they have no vote?

In the Minister's speech there was no direct reference relating to the banks of Canada. How are Canada's banks paying down their proportionate share of the deficit? Is it through appropriate and fair taxation?

Finally, will the Minister please assure Canadian children and Canadian families that there will be no sales tax on family counselling for troubled families?

• (1620)

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for her questions. I expect that all Members would agree that this country is faced with a problem. It is not a question of having the choice of doing everything we would like to do. We are faced with a problem which is growing at a very dangerous pace.

One thing is obvious, when you receive at the end of the budget year a bill of $6 billion that is expended in interest rates, you have to get it somewhere, either through taxes or through your programs. If you want to make sure that it does not decrease again next year and gradually pushes you out of the capacity to make decisions about programs, you have to make certain decisions. I believe that when you look very closely at the measures which have been taken, some of them have been postponed in response to the question: Should we go out and borrow $3 billion again?

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the Hon. Minister's time has expired. Debate. The Hon. Member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I ask your indulgence and that of the House to stray off topic for just a moment. I would like to state for the record that when my Leader announced his decision today, I found myself on a bit of an emotional roller coaster. I felt sad, then I felt a sudden void, and then a feeling of loneliness. Then I was overwhelmed with a sense of pride, pride in the fact that I had the privilege to be a candidate, and then an elected Member of Parliament due in large part to a great Canadian committed to a caring and sharing nation.

I owe the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) a great deal of thanks and wish him and his beautiful family good health, prosperity and only the best for the future.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before I focus specifically on this appalling affront to the Canadian people which the Government refers to as its Budget, I would like to refer to the clear and knowledgeable words of sheer wisdom offered in 1983 by Conservative parliamentarians. They must be asleep. They did not even react to that.

For example, former Deputy Prime Minister Erik Nielsen, speaking on April 19, 1983 stated, "Budget secrecy is a basic principle of our traditions of parliamentary government—it is not a principle that is necessary to defend:—for information about the detailed plans contained in the Budget—to be released prior to the delivery of the Budget in Parliament is, in essence, a contempt of Parliament itself".

Lest you feel that this was just a personal passing whim of one Conservative MP, let me refer to the words of the now Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis), a man whose wisdom in parliamentary matters I respect. On April 19, 1983, he noted: "It is a breach of Members' privilege that this material, the Budget, was disseminated through the media before it was presented to the House".

He noted further that if the leak was accidental: "The disclosure—in the media is a breach of the Minister's confidentiality—his very privilege".

Mr. Nielsen noted that: "This leaves the Minister the only option of resignation and the production and presentation of a new Budget by a new Minister to be appointed to replace him—"

An Hon. Member: What did he do?

Mr. Keyes: Yes, what did he do? It should not surprise any of us, however, that the current Government chooses to ignore the parliamentary wisdom of its own Members. Clearly, none of its public statements has a life expectancy of more than three months, let alone three years. It willingly disowns its promises, directions and policy statements in the interests of political pragmatism. Therefore, this dubious "Budget-by-press-release" is in contempt of the Canadian public and a breach of democratic ethics in its attack on the most vulnerable citizens of our country and in its complete denial of promises made to obtain a mandate to govern.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Keyes: A recent Globe and Mail editorial boldly claims that the Minister of Finance has become: "the symbol of all the fiscal resolve this Government has been able to muster". I say Amen to that. There is little doubt that the Minister symbolizes the financial fiasco perpetrated upon a distinct Canadian way of life during the past four years and reaching new depths of horror in this Budget. The Hon. Member's budgets do indeed speak to the most abysmal record and appalling failure in fiscal resolve of any government in two decades.

Had the Hon. Member's Budget in 1985 been at all accurate, we would be looking at a deficit of $24 billion instead of $31 billion. Had he been at all astute in 1986, we would be paying $42.5 billion in personal income taxes, not $50.5 billion. If his claims in 1987 "Plans for Reform" had been fiscally sound, government spending cuts would account for 75 per cent of the reductions in the deficit, instead of the mere 29 per cent now in place. If he had been even close to capable in 1988, the Bank of Canada's lending rate would be 7.8 per cent not 12.6 per cent.

Now the same Minister predicts that this Budget will create further wondrous things, reducing the Bank of Canada rate by 1994 to 7.5 per cent. How are we to believe him now? This huge gap between government projections and promises and the actual public performance and delivery is not surprising to any of us.

Recently, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) had the gall to accuse the opposition of playing with the integrity of the Canadian economy. I would suggest to him that Government Members, since November, have been playing with the integrity of the Canadian way of life, using political gamesmanship and chicanery upon the Canadian public. This Budget in its sheer disregard for numerous promises made to the Canadian people demonstrates to Canadians this Government's overriding commitment to harmonizing with American economic practice rather than to enabling Canadian initiative and self respect.

Most of us are aware that a Budget is more than a fiscal plan, more than a simple guideline for spending. It defines the actual outline of social possibilities for change. It plays a key role in what individuals and families will be encouraged to try for themselves in the immediate future. At all times it should enable not constrain individual, family and community growth.

In other words, the Budget provides the framework for weaving the fabric of our society. I state today that this Budget, rather than enabling a strong social fabric, is unravelling our sense of community. With its attack on the CBC, on unemployment insurance, on child care, on co-op housing and numerous other unique Canadian support systems, this Budget attacks the most vulnerable members and institutions of our culture.

An Hon. Member: Despicable.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Keyes: As I examine this Budget, I am reminded of a famous story by the great Canadian humourist and world renowned economist, Stephen Leacock. It is called "The Sinking of the Mariposa Belle". Many of us may well remember the tale about a marine excursion in which most of the community of Mariposa sets out in an old paddle boat for its annual picnic. Suddenly the old boat springs a leak and the leaders of the town go into a frenzy. Realizing that they are sinking, the cry goes out: "Women and children first, women and children first". The women and children are tossed into leaky lifeboats which sink quickly into what turns out to be thankfully only two feet of water.

The Conservative Government, in a state of panic over the way their ship of state has sprung leaks, and with great cries that we are being engulfed in the deep waters of the deficit, have sent out the cry: "Women and children first".

This is not a laughing matter. This is a despicable tale in which the Government rescues itself at the expense of women, children, and the Third World.

So, to all the single parents in Canada, to all the wage earners who are struggling constantly between seasonal jobs, to all those children whose parents or parent had to work to pay for housing and food and who cannot stay home with them each day, to all the young people or unemployed adults who are trying to upgrade at post-secondary institutions, to a large number of women with children who live below the poverty line, to all grandparents and elderly who find their income earned over a lifetime of service to our community now being eaten away by inflation and this Government, to all these people of Canada, the Government assures you that there is $1 billion available for roads and things in Lac-Saint-Jean. You will be pleased to know that there is $1 billion available for the Hibernia oil field. Oh, yes, there is the $650 million for tarsands, $325 million for heavy oil upgraders, $288 million for improvements in the Prime Minister's riding, half a million dollars for renovations to offices of government Ministers and over $191,000 for a beautiful book on energy starring the current Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse).

But wait, four months pass by and the cry goes out, women and children first, women and children first. Alas, there just is not enough for day care at this time. We understand you voted for us on that basis, but sorry, that was a lie. There just is not enough for transfer payments to welfare, unemployment insurance, post-secondary education, medical health care. You remember that promise, that commitment about conserving social programs and universality? That was a lie too.

Time wounds all heels. Oh, by the way, there is not enough for co-op housing or any other solutions for the homeless in Canada or even those suffering elsewhere in the world. Sorry about that, just a few more promises or rather commitments necessary during the heat of an election campaign. We are sure you will understand, short term pain for long term gain and all of that. Just tough it out and sometime, somewhere over the rainbow, things will get better.

This is the Government's message. However, a leading Toronto psychiatrist spoke recently of this Budget in the long term. She spoke of the thousands and thousands of angry and bewildered young people 15 years from now whose beleaguered single parents will be unable to provide an environment and care even close to what an intelligent, caring culture knows is essential to a healthy early childhood.

Once again, this Government is focusing on those most vulnerable to solve its overspending problems, totally oblivious to the long-term social responsibility for society. I say to the Deputy Prime Minister that whenever a single sparrow has fallen, this Government has clipped its wings and it must be held accountable.

The Government might say to this that there are millions of other Canadians with solid jobs and salaries who will not suffer, whose lives will be enriched by this Budget. I say to them that this Budget has its arsenals pointed right at personal initiative for middle-income families and small businessmen.

In 1988, personal taxes represented 47 per cent of government expenditures, corporate taxes only 9 per cent. In 1988 terms, had corporate sector contributions matched, kept pace with those of personal taxpayers, the Canadian Government would have a surplus of $18.5 billion.

What is particularly intolerable to Canadians is that this Government has browbeaten its citizens by encouraging a policy of high interest rates. Yet it has abandoned any effort to get back any of the resulting high banking profits to the benefit of our citizens, citizens who fed that profit. What happened to the Government's 1987 plan to impose a fiscal margin tax on financial institutions?

This feeling that each of us is looking down the barrel of a fiscal cannon is shared by small business across Canada. Mr. Bullock, president of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, claims that small business people are being bombarded today because of a spending spree the Government has been on for two years now. Small business will not only be buried in taxes, it will be mired in red tape. Jeff Ruben, senior economist at Wood Gundy Limited, predicts a policy-mandated recession.

At McMaster University in my riding of Hamilton West, the Government has decided not to fund the upgrading of the McMaster nuclear reactor which, in the opinion of international scientists, would make the reactor fifth in the world in productivity and research. This update would have cost $18 million, coincidentally exactly the same amount that the Government has cut from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. In essence, this Budget does not enable initiative, it cripples it.

The Government continues to see the average Canadian's car as a luxury comparable to the sins of liquor or cigarettes. Since 1984, its tax on gasoline has gone from 1.5 cents a litre to 7.5 cents a litre. Apparently, the Government has forgotten that this is a vast and often isolated country in which our capacity to bridge distances is essential to holding jobs or seeking new initiatives for taking charge of our lives. Canadians in rural areas often drive long distances to work and they have little public transportation. On average, motorists can expect to pay close to $600 annually in gasoline taxes, but those, of course, in rural areas who require vehicles for the normal conduct of their lives will pay double that, double $600 a year. However, this too does not surprise us for there are other aspects of the Budget which tear at the fabric of Canadian life.

It is enough of a struggle in this vast land to maintain a powerful sense of community and to hold on to roots set down over a lifetime. Yet this Government plans to cripple VIA Rail by forcing it to cut back on the very communities in which the need is the greatest. It will further tax long distance phone calls in a country in which distance makes calls essential, not frivolous.

We also understand the role of amateur sport in the family life of Canadian communities. We know its essential role in the healthy development of our children, the good, solid values for our young people and its significance in maintaining fitness among an aging adult population. Amateur groups have been more than meeting their their objective of becoming largely self-funding over the past four years. For instance, in the Canadian Soccer Association, local affiliations have managed to go well beyond that fifty-fifty split with the Government to raise 70 per cent from private sources. What is the reward of these groups for such fiscal accountability? Once again the Government has broken faith with these people and has cut back its smaller share of the responsibility. Could this Government not even guarantee its meagre contributions?

Such a breach of trust is just as evident in the communications industry. A year ago, the Government's Minister of Communications came to an agreement with the magazine publishing industry. The Government would maintain a mail subsidy steady if the publishers would agree to a 12 per cent increase in magazine postal rates annually for five years. This Government's word is not worth a wooden nickel. One year later, this Budget proposes a series of cuts that will eliminate in just the first year $10 million rather than maintain this subsidy. Of course, it will not simultaneously rule out the steady increase in postal rates. The goal again is not to enable but to cripple small businesses.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this Government has made a wholesale assault on the CBC. Clearly the Government cannot be committed to the way CBC links a vast pattern of communities from coast to coast and into the far north in a network of communication and cultural support. The CBC, faced with drastic reductions in 1984, has been a highly responsible fiscal partner in the Canadian cultural enterprise. It deserves better than this cut of $140 million over the next five years. This is another commitment broken.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, the term clawback refers to the Government's attack on the universality of our distinctly Canadian social programs. It is also an appropriate symbol for this Budget as a whole. Clawback conjures up the image of some kind of berserk punishing grizzly bear slapping his paw and dismembering personal lives uncaringly, slicing bloody gashes in the social fabric of our Canadian way of life. This clawback of public commitments erodes good faith, which is the basis of any democratic vote. This Budget totally abandons the premises, promises and practices upon which this Government's mandate was granted. We demand that the Minister of Finance clawback this Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Keyes) for a fine performance. That is exactly what it was, a performance. I am amazed that he does not spend his summers in Stratford because there would be a position for him there. He is a fine actor.

I want to thank you as well, Mr. Speaker, for allowing the Member to pay tribute to his Leader today who announced his resignation. I think it was appropriate that you allowed that. It was very appropriate that he should mention his Leader. But it is also appropriate that we mention that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is the modern day father of the deficit which we inherited. The deficit can be traced back to the days when the Finance Minister, who is now the Leader of the Opposition, was the individual who carried the scenario forward. When we came to power in 1984, his party had overspent to the tune of $42 billion.

An Hon. Member: No, you are wrong.

Mr. Thompson: Well, check the record. Mr. Speaker, they like to talk. They like to complain about the deficit. But it is like the old axiom: Everyone wants to complain about the weather, but nobody wants to do anything about it. What would the Member for Hamilton West do about it? He likes to complain, scream, holler and wave his hands and arms, but does he have a solution? My question is, Mr. Speaker, what would they do about it? What sort of plan would they bring forward that could be enacted to deal with the deficit?

Mr. Keyes: I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question, and preface my remarks by responding to what he said about the way I spoke. I cannot apologize for the way I speak, how tall I am, and what my beliefs are.

Mr. Thompson: It was a figure of speech.

Mr. Keyes: I will not apologize for speaking the way I do. What I believe in comes from the heart. When I speak here, I believe in what I say. My riding said, you will represent us in the House of Commons. I would respect the Hon. Member if he stood here passionately delivering what he believed in. So I cannot apologize for the way I make a delivery.

Beyond that, he speaks of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. The Leader of the Opposition should be the last person that the Hon. Member should accuse of mishandling public finances. If the Hon. Member checked his facts, he would see that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was the last Finance Minister to show a surplus in the Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keyes: I do not know what he is talking about. Now I will answer the question to which he made all the preamble. Certainly we recognize that there is a problem with the amount of money that is crushing Canada as far as the national debt is concerned. Of course we recognize that. I would be the last person to stand up in this House of Commons, as they should not do, and put that kind of responsibility on the backs of the unemployed, the elderly, on those less fortunate and those who live in the outreaches of this great country. I would be the last to do that kind of thing.

Mr. Comuzzi: Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Keyes) for making such a succinct and comprehensive statement on the Budget as presented by the Conservative Government, our friends across. The portrayal of what he stated is very, very accurate. I would like my friend to comment on what was said prior to his getting up in this House.

For the first time, Mr. Speaker, we are starting to get close to the numbers that we believe are the accurate numbers with respect to the deficit and to the debt of this country. The Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy), who has just entered, stated in a question to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Loiselle) that the deficit—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would just like the Hon. Member to comment on the Hon. Member's speech and direct the question to him.

Mr. Comuzzi: I am asking him to comment on the numbers that he heard in this House, that the deficit in 1974 was $170 billion, and by 1990 the deficit will be $380 billion, and that the present Government took over in 1970 and increased that deficit in their four years in office. Would the Member for Hamilton West please comment on those numbers?

Mr. Keyes: I thank my Hon. colleague for the question, and if I can succinctly address the situation, the lines we were delivered were that the economy will blossom, reaping the gains of the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement, inflation will taper off, the job market will grow and interest rates will drop. Well, don't count on it. If they had been right last year, the Bank of Canada's trend-setting lending rate would now be 7.8 per cent, not 12.6 per cent. In fact, the Finance Minister has disappointed all Canadians by setting a deficit target of $30.5 billion, a full $1.6 billion higher than last year's figure.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for York South—Weston and then the Hon. Member for York West.

Mr. Marchi: We are so close that we can do it at the same time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): You can both ask the same questions together if you wish.

Mr. Nunziata: It is called the Mutt and Jeff routine, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I to congratulate the Hon. Member from Hamilton. He is fast becoming the pride of Hamilton.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: I am only kidding, Sheila. But it was an excellent speech. No doubt he does his constituents proud when he stands up in the House and tells it the way it is. I would like the Hon. Member, my friend and colleague, to put this particular Budget into perspective. If one examines the policies of the Conservative Government over the last five years, one can quickly see what the Conservative agenda was from day one; that is, the dismantling of Canada as we know it and Canada as we cherish it. Four years ago the Conservatives came to power and they started to dismantle the country. They did away with the Foreign Investment Review Agency. In the last Parliament, they privatized our national airline, Air Canada.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Nunziata: They gave us free trade. We have made all the arguments with respect to the negatives associated with free trade. Now we find that they intend to dismantle passenger rail service in Canada, VIA Rail. We know from this Budget that they intend to chip away at the social safety net that we have: old age security, family allowance, unemployment insurance, transfers to the provinces with respect to medicare and post-secondary education.

• (1650)

My question to my friend and colleague is the following. Is it not obvious that the exact nature of the Conservative agenda is to totally destroy what has taken a hundred or more years to develop, and that is a country that cares about the disadvantaged, a country that has compassion and feeling for its citizens, and a country that has rendered itself the pride of the world? I ask my friend to comment on the over-all picture in terms of the nasty Tory agenda for Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time has expired, so I would ask the Hon. Member to respond briefly.

Mr. Keyes: Out of respect, Mr. Speaker, I will answer the Hon. Member's question. Women and children first, Mr. Speaker. We had a Government that set its mandate, not only within the last five years, as my colleague has indicated, but within the last two years, within the last six months. During that election campaign all the promises came forward. All the money was there. Every nickel was accounted for. It was all within the fiscal framework of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). It was all there. Canadians stood up and said: "Boy, they must know what they are talking about. They have all the money in the bank. The Finance Minister has it all lined up and accounted for, every nickel. Look at all the great stuff we are getting, yet they are still going to reduce that deficit. How are they going to do that? Well, it does not matter. If they said they can do it, then we will give them the confidence to do that."

What happens? Four months later, a scant four months later, and all the lines start pouring out from Members on the Government side.

To directly answer the question, what is happening is that the Government, through these policies, through the harmonizing policies that it is now looking at between Canada and the United States, is now in the process of subsidy negotiations with the United States before the United States has even begun to sit down at the table.

Mr. Nunziata: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. Questions and comments are now terminated. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South is the next speaker, and the Hon. Member will have many opportunities to ask him a question.

Mr. Nunziata: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. With the greatest of respect, I am sure if you review the record it will show a promise made by you to recognize my friend and colleague.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, I did, if there was time. However, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston took an extra three or four minutes. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South has the floor.

Mr. Marchi: Typical Tory. Break another promise.

Mr. Nunziata: I'm not going to vote for you the next time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the Hon. Member like to withdraw that statement?

Mr. Nunziata: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Thank you. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, in November, 1984 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) set forth to the House of Commons a course of action that he initiated to try to solve the problems that he said were with us at that time. He set forth a course that would reduce the amount of the deficit, bit by bit chip away at it, and eventually get the country to a point where it could start paying back a horrendous legacy of debt.

Over that period of time the Minister of Finance proved exceptionally competent. In 1986 his deficit projections made the year prior were exactly as he said, and he did what he promised. In 1987 his projections were right on, except that he found an extra $1 billion and reduced the deficit even more than he thought he could do.

In the year just finished, 1988, by cutting back on expenditures, by controlling things very carefully, despite interest increases, the Minister of Finance brought in a deficit bang-on to what he forecast back in February for the 1988 year.

Up until now the Minister of Finance has been doing a superb job. Unfortunately, he has been faced with a problem that has particularly developed since last November. Last November the Minister of Finance was quite easily able to place a successful Canada Savings Bond issue at 9.5 per cent. Unfortunately, last week interest rates had risen to 12.5 per cent and people were redeeming Canada Savings Bonds in great fashion, and the cost of carrying the overwhelming debt of the country was rising at an unbelievable rate. It is estimated that the cost of carrying that debt in this fiscal year will be $39 billion.

That is an enormous amount of money. It has thrown out of whack the projections originally made in 1984 and repeated year after year as we chiselled away at the problem. This year, and possibly next year, we have to do some things to get back on track. That is the reason for the Budget.

When we took over, the total amount of deficit in relation to Gross Domestic Product was 8.5 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product. Last year it was down to 4.6 per cent. As a percentage of the production of the country we had reduced the deficit to very nearly half. The borrowing requirements of the country were 6.7 per cent of Gross Domestic Product when we took over, and now they are 3.2 per cent of Gross Domestic Product. The money that has to be raised is less than half of what it was when the Minister of Finance took over. Therefore, he has done a remarkable job in handling the problem. The fact that he has done a remarkable job in handling the problem means that we have to do a remarkable job too. We have to take a look at that problem and do what we can to assist in handling it.

We have to bear in mind that the interest that we pay on the debt is more money than we raise in sales taxes, customs duties, excise taxes, and corporate taxes all rolled into one, and then some. In interest alone it amounts to $39 billion. It would not be all that bad if we did not have to look at the problem of interest straight at it the way it comes at us. The Minister of Finance has forecast that perhaps interest rates will go down a little, and perhaps he will be able to carry the deficit next year with interest expense at $39.4 billion. The Minister of Finance has a problem that requires not only that there be some good luck in the economy, but that there be a further reduction in interest rates.

If interest rates do not go down, then we have real serious problems. Those problems may well mean that we will have to take more drastic action. Let us look at the actions taken. There are cuts in programs of about $1.5 billion. There are tax increases of about $3.5 billion in the Budget for this year. The Budget cuts for next year come to approximately $2 billion, and the tax increases to approximately $7 billion to increase the revenue or the amount toward the problem by $9 billion in the second year.

That is exactly what the IMF suggested that we do. In order to balance our problem it stated that we have to substantially change our Budget practices, and we have done that. We would have thought that the other side would have had some understanding of the arithmetic, because we are talking about arithmetic when we have a Budget. It is simple, ordinary, straightforward arithmetic.

• (1700)

However, what we hear from the Opposition is whining of the worst fashion. We hear Members opposite claim that we will damage a number of segments of our society.

Let us look at the resolution that we will be voting on later today. It says: "for eroding the universality of vital social programs". Let us talk about that. If someone is wealthy enough to have $50,000 or better of taxable income, should that person continue to receive a social hand-out from the state, or should that social hand-out from the state be reduced?

Mr. Marchi: It is not a hand-out.

Mr. Blenkarn: Should they not be able to stand on their own? My mother-in-law says that you should and she does not have that much money. She says that it is about time we did, and my parents say that it is about time they did. Many people say that it is about time, and let us realize that it is about time we did.

Mr. McKnight: What would $50,000 taxable income be? It must be an income of about $75,000 a year.

Mr. Blenkarn: It has to be a little over $60,000 anyway. Of course, it is only eroded at the rate of $150 per thousand of income. You are up to $85,000 or $90,000 before you are wiped out on the old age pension, and about $70,000 before the family allowance is taken away, per child.

It would seem that this is a terrible thing to happen. Universality is really damaged and that is a real serious matter and no contribution should happen there because, after all, we are hurting the old, the sick, the lame, the blind and the hard done by, the people who do not have a lot of money. That is what we hear from the other side.

Let us consider the next part of the resolution which states: "for continuing and increasing the unfairness of the tax system". That is a real winner. When a special surtax is placed on people earning over $70,000 a year, that is unfair according to the Liberals and New Democrats. When a special surtax is put on corporations that have not been paying any tax, that is unfair according to the New Democrats and Liberals. Where is the unfairness in the tax system in this Budget?

Next, the amendment states: "for reneging on its commitment to develop regional equality". All one has to do is look at the Blue Book. You will find there is more money for regional development this year than last year, and more money last year than the year before. That assertion in the amendment is wrong. Are Members opposite saying we should vote in favour of falsehood?

The Member from Hamilton who just spoke was crying about things like the CBC. He said we will hurt the CBC.

I looked in the Blue Book. I am really worried about the CBC. It will only get $58 million more this year. There will be a cut-back of $20 million, but is it $20 million from $58 million or $20 million less than it would like to have.

If we go through one budget item after another in the Blue Book we will see that department after department has more money this year than last year. The reason is that in building this budget the Minister of Finance had to tread a very quiet and careful line.

He could have done the hard-nosed thing and ripped through those expenditures, to cut them down in a vicious fashion. However, he did not do that. He carefully cut things that could be cut without causing too much damage to the economy. He carefully increased taxes where he could increase taxes without causing too much dislocation and damage. He was worried, like we all are, about setting off a recession or doing something that will unbalance the fragile economy we have.

The problem is that this country presently has some $320 billion worth of debt. It is growing very rapidly, and by this time next year it will be over $350 billion. It is an enormous problem. It will not be solved by us wishing it could be solved, or by picking the trees behind this building that are covered with money.

There is only one way to solve the problem when there is a shortfall of money. It is to take more money in, which means taxing more, or to spend less. In both cases, we are taxing more and spending less. We are trying to reach a responsible balance. That responsible balance is shown in this Budget, and it ought to be supported.

Earlier today in Question Period there was a question concerning VIA Rail trains, on the basis that this was the day the last spike was placed on the CPR. I thought about that and the fact that perhaps passenger trains as we once knew them would soon no longer be running the way we knew them.

I wondered what would have happened if someone had stood up in the House of Commons on the day the last spike was driven, to say that we should have a new agency called "VIA canoe" because we put the canoe route out of business, or "VIA stagecoach" because we put the stagecoach out of business. Would we have continued to sponsor and subsidize those forms of transportation because new technology had taken place, because the automobile, the bus and the airplane have taken passengers who once went by train and trains today are no longer economic, or are we to keep everything that we have had in this country and not cut anything?

In closing, I want to read from an article in Maclean's this week. It is an article by Peter Newman, who quoted Mickey Cohen:

> "We won't solve our fiscal problem until Canadians perceive that we are in a real crisis", he says, "and that won't happen as long as the deficit issue remains a debate among the elite. Some political leader is going to have to stand up and say, 'Look, the cupboard is bare, there is no more money for welfare payments, no more funds for most of the things governments do'". Then Cohen turned seriously pessimistic: "This issue isn't going to be resolved merely by cutting out universality. That is only the beginning; that is only the painless stuff. It simply won't be enough to take money away from the people who don't need it.
> You are going to have to get at the people who really need it as well. That is not so much a question of political courage as having the stomach to do it, because it is going to be very, very painful".

I say to Members of the House that unless this Budget is successful, and we better hope it is, it will be very painful.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, talking about pain, let me assure the Member, the chairman of the Finance Committee, that Members on this side have been in pain for the last 20 minutes. The Member has the audacity to ask what is so unfair about the current tax system and the tax measures that have been imposed by the Conservative Government for the last five years.

• (1710)

If the Chairman of the Finance Committee and an individual from the government side does not know why it is unfair then I worry about the direction, not only of that committee but indeed of that Government. When we have in this country, after five years of Tory rule, a Canadian who earns over $100,000 in income paying 8 per cent in increased taxes versus an individual on the poverty line, which is estimated at approximately $26,300, paying 60 per cent more in increased taxes since 1984, we suggest that we do not have to ask what is so unfair about that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchi: I believe that all Canadians would put their noses to the grindstone because they do not mind paying their way for the betterment of this country. However, where Canadians and where we in the Liberal Party object to the way this Government is moving is that the burden is not shared equally. That is when you have tax revolt and that is when you have stratification of classes. For the first time in public polling they are beginning to find after five years of Tory rule that Canadians are beginning to look at class stratification.

We know that we have had our differences East and West. We have had them between French and English. We have had them between federal and provincial Governments. However, we have never had, until now, Canadians beginning to look at themselves as people in Great Britain do; that is to say, in terms of class structure, in terms of those who have and those who have not. This Budget does not enhance that problem; this Budget aggravates that problem.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), the Chairman of our Standing Committee on Finance, why would he almost bring embarrassment upon himself to ask what is so unfair about that tax regime? I suggest that the Government go back to the boardrooms, use the blackboards and inject some fairness, some equity and some dignity for all Canadians, not just offer it to some of their Tory friends who happen to represent a very small stratum of Canadian society.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) has not looked at the Budget and the tax system. It really is unfortunate that he does not understand percentages. I can tell him that at a certain level a person might pay 100 per cent more taxes one year than the next because that individual might move from paying zero tax to paying $1. I can tell him that the effect of this Budget is to make sure that the rich and the well-off pay a great deal more. That means people who are well off, receiving money from government, and people who are well off earning their money, pay a very substantially enhanced surtax. These problems of enhanced tax are there and they are going forward.

We had a fairly lengthy study, as the Member will know, last year resulting in a White Paper which had certain tax recommendations. This Budget carries on with those tax recommendations. It carries on with a form of minimum tax against corporations that up until now have not paid tax, so that means any corporation having more than $10 million in assets. That is not a very big corporation but the Budget states big corporations and they will pay a minimum tax.

When the Member talks about tax fairness he ought to understand what really has happened. We are going after those who have the money. We are getting as much as we can from them. We will have to continue to do what we can to get this country on the road and out of its problems.

What we need as Members of Parliament on standing committees and in this House is the willingness to spot items of expense and to spot situations where either taxes ought to be increased specifically or where expenses ought to be cut specifically and make those statements. That is the kind of assistance and leadership we all owe, not only to this House, but to our families.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James and the Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair on the list. Members can govern themselves accordingly; we have six minutes.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question about regional development. He has spoken of that and has stated in his remarks that in his view regional development programs were not only retained—I think he alluded to that fact and I am paraphrasing here—but were enhanced or improved. Is he familiar with the part of the country that I represent, that of Eastern Ontario? Is he familiar with the fact that previous Governments, even the same Government in the past, recognized that there were two sections of Ontario which were doing not nearly as well as the rest of the province, namely, Northern Ontario and Eastern Ontario.

In abolishing the Industrial Regional Development Programs and converting the programs into the various agencies across Canada, what the Government has done is established the Atlantic Accord, the Western Canada Diversification Program and FEDNOR. In that process Eastern Ontario has been completely left out.

Given certain statements that the Member is quoted as having made in the past, does he feel that that is all right? We have places like Hawkesbury in my riding with 13 per cent unemployment, Pembroke with unemployment rates again in the teens, Cornwall and other communities in Eastern Ontario outside of the City of Ottawa also with high unemployment rates. They have no regional development programs and are not in a position to attract industries as other areas can which receive development programs.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I do not know the detail of the programs in Eastern Ontario, but I do know what the Blue Book says. It gives more money for that type of program this year than last year. I say to the Member that he should read the Blue Book. It is a great bible and a marvellous thing. It sets everything out. There are even baby blues that set things out in even more detail. Whether there should be a separate program for Eastern Ontario, that is the first time I have ever heard of that.

Mr. McCurdy: It was not in the Blue Book.

Mr. Blenkarn: I did have a good look at the other programs and I find they are enhanced.

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Speaker, I will try to be as brief as possible. We said, during the election campaign, that if this Government were to be re-elected and given its commitment to the Free Trade Agreement, it would not be long until the Government started breaking down the social fabric of this country by going after social programs.

We have seen that in the Budget. The one thing that I want to point out is the so-called claw-back as it applies to family allowance and old age pensions. I think it sets a terribly dangerous precedent because if this Government can get away with clawing back family allowances, if this Government can be successful in clawing back old age pensions, where does it stop? Where does this stop?

Does the Member not realize that if the claw back begins at $70,000 today, it can be $60,000 tomorrow and $50,000 after that. Not only that, the Government can then strike medicare. It is an unbelievable precedent that the Tories have started. It is the end of social programs, the end of a solid Canadian tradition.

• (1720)

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the breaking point is. However, if the Hon. Member will take a look at his income tax form he will see that if he received too much income in a year and received unemployment insurance, he will have to start paying back some of that unemployment insurance. This is not a new program. There has been such a provision in the Income Tax Act for some considerable period of time. The Hon. Member may want to take a look at that.

He asks where does it stop. I will tell him where it stops. It stops when people will no longer lend money at an affordable rate. It stops when we cannot collect enough in taxes to pay our bills as they come due. It stops when there is not a sound economy and we are forced to the printing press. It stops when the country becomes financially bankrupt. Unless we are very careful, unless we pay attention to what we have here, and unless we support the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), that will be the future. That is where it stops.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, we have had raised a cloud of gobbledygook which is supposed to be substantiated by references to the Blue Book. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I do not have time to deal with all the purported arguments of the hon. gentleman.

Surely you must have been tremendously impressed, Mr. Speaker, with his metaphor about VIA canoes and the demands of those on this side, had we lived then, for their subsidization. The fact is that the Hon. Member completely failed to understand that what the Government has been doing is indeed to subsidize VIA canoes instead of to build the steamship. Perhaps it was a mistake, a beclouding of the Hon. Member's mind with his own gobbledygook, that he would argue that air transportation in Canada is more efficient, more convenient, indeed safer, and that we should not look to Europe or Japan and build a new kind of railway that would keep people on the ground and get them from point A to point B quickly and environmentally more safely, more efficiently and perhaps more economically.

Does the Hon. Member understand what has happened? Does he understand that the Government has destroyed the chance of having ground transportation which is rapid and efficient as well as economically and environmentally sound? Or could he not find it in the Blue Book?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member comes from Windsor. When he signed up for this term in Parliament he received a pass on the railway. I wonder how many times he has used it and saved us the cost of air transportation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allotted for questions and comments has now terminated. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Beaver River (Miss Grey).

Miss Deborah Grey (Beaver River): Mr. Speaker, in my other life I was a drama teacher for about 10 years. I noticed from the other side a comment about the dramatic performance and theatrics of the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Keyes). I would give the Hon. Member for Hamilton West a good, clear 9 out of 10. He was only surpassed by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I would give him a clear 10 out of 10 for theatrics.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Grey: I would also like to give my best wishes to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). He is one who has gained my respect during the short time I have been here in the House. I will always remember the fact that he returned to the Chamber to listen to my maiden speech on April 12. He owed me nothing. He had no reason or responsibility to come to listen to me. He listened because he wanted to. I certainly admire him for that.

He also mentioned this afternoon that it is important for a Member to be around in the House. I think that illustrates that he has certainly practised what he has preached. I would like to thank him on behalf of the Reform Party, whom I represent, for being a hard worker and an ambassador for western interests. I certainly wish him every success in his future endeavours.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Grey (Beaver River): Now, to the Budget debate. Of course, I feel quite qualified to speak on the Budget as I was the only Opposition Member in the House to hear the Budget—the second Budget if you will, Mr. Speaker—on April 27. I was told when I won the by-election that I may be lonely down here in Ottawa. I had no idea it would be that lonely, that I would be sitting alone on this side of the House listening. I certainly understand the other two Parties and their upset at the events which have taken place. Truly, it was an extraordinary situation. Nonetheless, I felt the responsible thing for me to do was to listen to the Budget. That is what I think Canadians wanted us to do. For me, the responsible thing was to listen to the Budget. Now, however, I must tell the House that the responsible thing to do is to oppose the Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Grey (Beaver River): I have planned extensive consultations with my constituents which will take place next week. However, I know my riding well enough to know that this Budget cannot be sold to the people.

In my maiden speech I talked about the importance of reducing the deficit and controlling the financial mess which we are in. I indicated certain things would have to be done if belt-tightening measures were to be made credible. I said there would have to be cuts at the top, even if they were largely symbolic. I said there would have to be evidence of sacrifice here. There is none. Spending on all major parliamentary institutions is well above average rates of increase. For instance, spending on the Senate is up by 10 per cent. Spending on the Library of Parliament is up by 9 per cent. Spending on the Governor General's Office is up by 20 per cent. Spending on the Ministry through the Privy Council Office is up by 16 per cent. Spending on the House of Commons is up by 9 per cent.

As my right hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, points out, we have one of the most over-bloated Cabinets in history. Spending is up on their limousines, if you please.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Miss Grey (Beaver River): There is a tax-back of the old age pension. There is no-tax back of MP's pensions. So much for leadership from the top.

I said there would have to be cuts in the bureaucratic middle. There is no clear evidence of this in the Budget or the Main Estimates. There are not even measures that would allow an analysis of bureaucratic efficiency to be made. There are supposedly cuts in man-years but no analysis of the job levels at which such cuts will occur. In fact, a recent article in The Ottawa Citizen told us that there has been a 19 per cent rise in executive level positions under the Tory Government. That is a rise in positions which pay salaries between $63,100 and $111,700 annually. In any case, there is no way of knowing whether these reductions in man-years will simply be offset by contracting out.

In some cases evidence of new inefficiency emerges. The Western Diversification Office will see its budget fall by $24.8 million, but its staffing will rise by 120 person-years.

We see 226 new people for Revenue Canada to administer what was supposed to be a simpler tax system. I heard on the radio the other day that there is a sentence in the new tax form that is 62 words long. I am also an English teacher by trade. That is what we in my profession call a run-on sentence.

What is clear is that the taxpayers of Canada are again being asked to diet so that the public sector can have dessert. There will be new taxes of all kinds. There will be more taxes on consumption, on capital, on income, on sales, on the poor and on the not so poor.

For instance, the general federal sales tax is up $1,140 million. I could go on and on about personal income tax and large corporations tax. However, the one that I think is very significant concerns the financing of the unemployment insurance program. For this year the figure is $425 million. It will go up next year, when it is in the private sector, to $1,900 million.

In the first year there will be $3.5 billion in new taxes. For every one dollar in cuts there will be more than two dollars in new taxes. In the following year there will be $7 billion in new taxes. That is $3.50 for every one dollar in cuts. Only the rate of increase in spending is down. Spending in absolute dollars will rise by nearly $10 billion this year. Let us ignore even interest charges for a moment. Program expenditures outside of defence will more than outpace inflation. Total government spending will be $142.9 billion. It is $1 million, for anybody who is interested in winning the lottery, times 142,000 nine hundred times over. That is how much money this Government spends. Is that this Government's idea of austerity? I hardly think so.

Until the Canadian public can be shown that money can be wisely spent, the tax grabs in this Budget simply cannot be supported.

The question for me is whether I will be able to support those expenditure reductions that are proposed. I will try. The Reform Party is not like the other opposition Parties. All I have heard them saying in this Budget debate unfortunately is: "Why are we cutting so much?" Our Party states quite unequivocally: "Why are we spending so much?" We have not even tapped into the resource. We are just talking about the extra projection of growth.

However, asking my constituents to support the cuts is not going to be easy, because there are no cuts at the top. There are no cuts in the middle. There is no consistency in the cuts. There is no evidence even of a philosophy or rationale in the cuts that are proposed.

There is not even honesty in what has been done. For example, take the old age pension and family allowance. Universality has been removed but the Government tries to pretend it has not.

Then there is the bottom line. This Budget sees the deficit going up, not going down. They should not brag of a deficit of $30.5 billion. All that says to Canadians is that we are going broke slower. That is not good enough for Canadian citizens. It is up $1 billion this past year and $1.5 billion this coming year. Borrowing is up over $4 billion.

I may be a political novice but I am not politically stupid. There is no political constituency for this Budget. We cannot ask people to support a deficit reduction program that does not reduce the deficit. Now we see the price behind this Government's pre-election tax cuts, pre-election spending and pre-election promises.

I do not say these things glibly, Mr. Speaker. I believe that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is an honourable man. Most Canadians believe him when he says he wants deficit reduction, but they do not believe his Leader or his Party and they cannot believe this Budget.

Last Thursday, I listened to the Minister because I believed he was the victim of an event beyond his control. But it is now clear that he is the victim of a fiscal situation beyond his control. He is unfortunately the victim of his own government, a government that claims to face the music on the debt but whose words for the past five years have not played that tune.

Since 1984, this Government has talked about reducing the deficit next year. Nobody is fooled anymore by projections of drastically dropping deficits four or five years hence. Debts are welling up like water behind a dike. We are supposed to believe that when the national debt hits 56 per cent of GNP it is going to somehow level off. It is at 53 per cent now. I doubt it. It is only a matter of time before the dike bursts and this Government, this Minister, this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), all their sacred trusts and all their credibility will be washed away.

The time has come for real fiscal responsibility from this Government. There is discontent in the Tory ranks. The Hon. Member or Portage—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) said he will stake his career on stopping base closures. The Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia (Mr. Wilson) is unhappy about transportation provisions. The Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Thorkelson) said he will not support cuts to VIA Rail. The Hon. Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy) has the audacity to suggest that his voice as an elected representative should matter. So it should. It seems even Alberta Tories will find it next to impossible to defend this Budget to their constituents.

Canadians are increasingly nervous about the short-term, near-sighted policies of this Government. During the election the deficit, they claimed, was under control. I went to many forums. I ran, of course, in the election. I went to nine all-candidates forums. I turned around and did four more in the by-election. In the general election, in the nine forums that I attended, I wanted to talk about the deficit because I felt it was important and Canadians felt it was important.

The Free Trade Agreement absolutely, overwhelmingly took precedence. That is all we heard, unfortunately. We heard nothing about the deficit. Now I wonder, was it under control? We know it is not under control and it was not then.

Now they talk of urgent crisis but show little urgent action. The longer we wait, the deeper the cuts will have to be. The public is tired of the crisis management approach. For example, why is the Government building $1 billion CBC building in the overheated economy of downtown Toronto, while cutting the budget for CBC's programming? Does this sound like reasonable planning?

An Hon. Member: Not at all.

Miss Grey (Beaver River): Canadians, I believe, are ready to bite the bullet. Constituents expected cuts and they can live with them. But it is only fair that every sector should be affected. As leaders of this country, we should be serving as role models. Think of the message it would send to Canadians if we were willing to take cuts in expenditures. If cuts were absolutely consistent, then no Canadian could point a finger at anyone else and cry "unfair". That would speak louder than anything else.

I have watched in frustration, and indeed just watched it a few moments ago, the Government and the Opposition blaming each other over and over again for who is to blame about this. Canadians are concerned about answers to the crisis, not merely attaching blame. As far as they are concerned, it does not matter who is to blame. They want us to get out of this situation. Let us get on with the salvaging operation. Time is running out. Taxes are up. Spending is up. Interest rates are up. The deficit is up. Mr. Speaker, the gig is up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to give the NDP the last six or seven minutes here before we call in the Members. I would like to forego the questions and comments on this particular speaker.

Mr. Volpe: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. Volpe) can have his question and comment. I will allow him a short question and comment, and Winnipeg—North Centre (Mr. Walker) also. The Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence.

Mr. Volpe: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am very pleased to have listened to the Hon. Member give her address but I want to clarify the record. In fact, while she may not have seen as many members of the Opposition here to listen to the second presentation of a budget which was flawed, both in content and in process, and while she indicated that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is a victim of circumstances, we would have argued that he would have been a victim of his own ineptitude and that his credibility did not merit the attention that he wanted for a budget that was rehashed.

But there was somebody present here for the opposition Parties. Both opposition Parties were represented ably by my colleague to my left from Winnipeg North Centre, who saw very, very clearly that our views would be there, that he would listen on our behalf to reinforce what we had already known and what we were already convinced of. I dare say to the Hon. Member that we have seen nothing to the contrary so far. In fact, all of our suspicions regarding the Budget, its content and its perpetration of inequity were justified and it justified our actions on that evening.

Miss Grey (Beaver River): I appreciate that. I am sorry, I did see the Hon. Member here. I was under the impression that he had left shortly thereafter. I guess the press did not pick that up, perhaps.

Nonetheless, the leak is not the crisis. The financial situation in this country is what is the crisis. That is what we need to deal with.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank our hon. colleague from Beaver River for her comments. I notice the change in strategy. There are several westerners in the House right now, everywhere from the Lakehead west, listening to the comments and our curiosity about the Party and the stance of the Party. I notice that she is very critical of the Government and for its Budget. I would like to also point out for the record that she did support the Speech from the Throne. I take it that this is a change in strategy which I would like her to clarify for us, that her critical comments means that she is opposing the Government's Budget strategy. In particular, I would like to have some comments from her as to how she thinks the Government's high interest rate strategies affect the West.

• (1740)

Miss Grey Let me also point out that I am here representing the Reform Party, not the Liberal Party or the NDP. The fact that I may support a Liberal in Alberta would certainly be a far stranger aberration than an NDP or a Reform Party member.

Nonetheless, I would like to say in answer to that that my position as an elected Member of the House of Commons is to represent my constituents. My constituents, and indeed I believe western Canadians, are in favour of free trade, so if I am hurting any of the opposition Members' feelings on that, I am sorry. All I can do is speak on behalf of my constituents.

I campaigned from Thanksgiving straight through until March 13. I have been around Beaver River, let me tell you. The people there were very strongly in favour of free trade, and if that offends any of the opposition Parties, then I have to beg forgiveness from them. But my job in terms of representing my constituents was to be pro-free trade.

I have made it fairly clear what I feel about the Budget, and that is the issue at hand right now. I will certainly be voting with the Government sometimes and with the Opposition sometimes, according to the wishes of my constituents.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I noticed that you indicated previously that you wanted to recognize another Hon. Member later, but I do not believe that the unanimous consent of the House was sought in order to change the rules and perhaps you would like to make that request.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member from the NDP to have the last three minutes for his speech?

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think there is ten minutes of questions and comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy) has a question or comment? Please put it.

Mr. Kindy: I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Beaver River (Miss Grey) for her excellent speech. Perhaps she could make a short comment on her feelings about the value-added tax or the goods and services tax and how that will affect the consumers of her riding.

Miss Grey: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that question. Again, I think I can speak quite comfortably on behalf of the people of Beaver River. They are very upset about the goods and services tax which will come in mainly because of the points I have talked about already. If it will be consistent, if everyone will pay and if the Government is looking after the money that it already has, if we were to see the Government spending money wisely, then the people of my riding would be quite comfortable chipping in their fair share. Unfortunately, they have not seen that yet and so they are quite upset about this goods and services tax.

Small business is upset. I was at a meeting on Saturday night with the Chamber of Commerce in my riding and they are almost devastated by this Budget and the impending goods and services tax.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I too commend not all the arguments the Hon. Member has made but certainly the force and the compelling commitment that she attaches to her words and thoughts. I would be curious to find out what the position of the Reform Party would be on the question of the universality of some of the programs that are being chipped away and second, whether there is a fear among the Reform Party that those thresholds will be lowered and that will be administered to different programs such as medicare. She may wish to comment on the over-all picture of universality in social programs.

Miss Grey: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the people of my riding, supported by the Reform Party and its platforms and policies, feel that universality, if I could speak specifically about child care, is probably a waste of money and that these programs should be targeted to people who need them. In other words, we may be discriminating against parents who choose to raise their children at home. We believe firmly that these programs should be targeted to those who need them in terms of universality.

Regarding medicare, we feel that medicare is for the sick and not for the poor. We also feel very strongly that that should not be eroded and that that is a service that people pay for. The public would be very upset to see that eroded.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5.45 o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 84(4), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the amendment to the amendment now before the House. Accordingly, the question is on the amendment to the amendment standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment, which was negatived on the following division:

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties, and I would like to take this opportunity to thank opposition Parties for their co-operation. There is unanimous agreement to call report stage and third reading of Bill C-7, pari-mutuel betting. The Government has one speaker who will make very brief comments. The opposition Parties may wish to respond, and it would then be intended that the vote take place immediately.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-7, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (pari-mutuel betting), be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Huron—Bruce): Mr. Speaker, before I speak to Bill C-7, I would like to acknowledge the co-operation of opposition Parties in allowing speedy passage of this legislation at second reading stage and in committee.

This initiative will benefit the industry without drawing on the public purse while still leaving the provinces an independent choice on the implementation of theatre locations and operations. The Bill will allow the federal Minister of Agriculture to set out the conditions which must be met before a permit will be granted for this form of pari-mutuel wagering.

The primary condition is contained within the legislation. Provinces must agree independently to license any teletheatre. Further conditions will be set out by the Minister in regulations. The regulations would be consistent with current provisions governing other types of pari-mutuel wagering.

Through the regulations, federal controls can be sensitive to different circumstances across the country. They will also permit flexibility in the requirements for teletheatres if regional circumstances alter.

The horse racing industry provides thousands of jobs in the rural areas of Canada. Because it does so, it is worth while for this House to remove any unnecessary obstacles to its continuing health. That is the intent of this Bill. Therefore, I request favourable consideration for the small modification in current rules proposed in this legislation.

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise this morning to give our consent to the passing of Bill C-7, a Bill that will legalize theatre-style wagering in horse races off the grounds of race courses. I would like to indicate to Hon. Members opposite that we are giving support to this Bill but we also wish to indicate that we are not setting a precedent and that as long as there are suggestions and Bills that come before the House that are reasonable and acceptable, we will support them. However, this is not a precedent and certainly may not always be the case, but we do give our support to the Bill.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to thank my colleagues in the New Democratic Party caucus for allowing us on our Opposition day to spend a short period of time getting this Bill to the starting line. I also want to say that this is probably the first and last time I will expedite anything the Government brings forward in such a manner.

This is my cease-fire. On behalf of the 300 horsemen and women in the Sudbury Basin who are depending on this Bill, I would like to thank the Government and all Hon. Members of the House very much for expediting this Bill. Now the cease-fire is over.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before putting the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), since today is an allotted day, pursuant to special order, the House will go through the usual procedures to consider disposing of the Supply Bill in view of recent practices. Do Hon. Members agree that the Bill be distributed now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The question I would like to put in connection with the Bill arises out of the interim supply notice that appears in the Order Paper. It appears that today the Government is asking that nine-twelfths of the funds required for the financial year ended March 31, 1990, be granted, and that is what will be in the Bill that is about to be distributed.

My question is for the Government House Leader as I presume he will answer it. Are the funds that were taken by the Government by special warrant of the Governor General contained in the reports that have been tabled in the House included in this Bill or are they in addition to it? In other words, does the Government consider that it already has one and a half months of supply based on the special warrants and is asking for an additional nine months of supply or are the funds that have already been taken included in the nine months that are being requested in the Bill that I believe we are about to see?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am reading from the notes that will be provided to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotrét). The question that is usually asked is whether or not the Bill is in substantially the same form as that passed in previous years. This time there is a change. It is the same except that it includes provisions associated with special Governor General warrants. The notation is also made that the proportions requested in the Bill are intended to provide for all necessary requirements for the Government of Canada up to October 31, 1989.

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—THE ENVIRONMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa), moved:

That this House condemn the Government for failing to ensure fairness and equality to all Canadians, and for failing to make protection of the environment a priority.

He said: Mr. Speaker, nothing better illustrates the true nature of the Conservative Party of Canada than the Budget we have been debating in this House for the past week or 10 days. The Conservative Party, to put it bluntly, is completely two-faced. Conservative Members have one face for the people of Canada during an election campaign and another face for the people of Canada after they form a Government.

During the election campaign, not only the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and leading members of his Cabinet but Members of Parliament on the Government side then seeking re-election or election for the first time went around Canada talking about the importance of child care, the necessity of regional development programs, the fundamental importance of tax fairness, the preservation of the unemployment insurance scheme and the fact that social programs in Canada constituted a sacred trust.

After the election, after they get their majority, we discover that Dr. Jekyll is replaced by Mr. Hyde, and the true nature of the Conservative Party is revealed. The hypocrisy could not be more blatant. In fact when it comes to the duplicitous use of the language, George Orwell's 1984 could be retitled 1989 and set in Canada as a contemporary illustration of doublespeak. These guys, to put it bluntly, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance(Mr. Wilson), have the nerve to call their Budget fair. They have the effrontery to say that the greatest set of tax increases they want to impose on the people of Canada since the Second World War is equitable.

Is it fair to put a means test on pensions while more than 80,000 profitable corporations are left untaxed? Is it fair, with unemployment over 10 per cent in the regions, to cut regional development programs right across the country? Is it fair, with close to 1.5 million kids being denied access to child care programs, to have the party in power, that promised to move expeditiously on child care at the first chance with its Budget, to cut out all its commitment to expanding the number of child care spaces? Is it fair, with literally millions starving in the Third World, and we living in a prosperous part of this planet, part of a small minority, for the Government to take such a disproportionate cut out of programs designed to aid the poor and the wretched of this planet?

An Hon. Member: No way!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, is it fair to talk about fairness itself in taxation when the record shows that, after this Governments' Budget goes into effect, the richest 1 per cent of Canadians compared to when the Tories were out of office and when they came back in 1984 will have their income tax cut by some $900 while the average income tax increase—income taxes alone, not other taxes—for the average family will go up by some $500? Is it fair to redistribute income upward from the average to the rich? It may be fair for the Conservatives, but it is not fair for us and it is not fair for the average Canadian.

Is it fair to see the aboriginal people of Canada, the real founding people of this part of the planet, living in the most deplorable circumstances of all Canadians, for the Government at this particular time to reduce their access to post-secondary education?

In this context, is it fair to be singling out, as the economic and social problem to be faced by Canada in the next couple of years, the deficit when more than $34 billion of deferred taxes owed by the corporate sector in Canada is left untouched? It may be fair for the Conservatives to talk that way, but it sure would not be a concept of fairness held by people in the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Whatever the Minister of Finance may say in this House, whatever the Prime Minister may say outside and whatever the back-benchers of the Conservative Party may be saying all across Canada in the next few weeks trying to defend the indefensible, I note with interest and pleasure that a large majority of Canadians from Newfoundland to British Columbia in response to a question in the last three days about the fairness of this Budget and the fairness of this Government, have said overwhelmingly that this Budget is unfair. The people of Canada understand what is going on.

This kind of politics does not represent fairness for the Canadian family. It is dishonest class politics of the worst kind. The kind of politics revealed in this Budget takes from ordinary Canadians and gives to the rich. Then the Government has the nerve to tell ordinary Canadians that what is being done is fair; not only fair, but that it is necessary. We in the New Democratic Party believe that this approach is neither necessary nor fair. Canadians did not vote for this, and we say that Canadians will not put up with this.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We believe that a democracy must serve the interests of all the people, not just the privileged and the powerful. In stating this belief, I know I am not speaking simply for the New Democratic Party of Canada, but for all of the people of this country. I say today what I have said before in a different context. It may well be the case that the business community has never before in Canadian history put all its financial and organizational resources behind a Conservative Party as they did in the last election. It may be the case that the business community, through the spokespersons of organized groups that have come to speak to the cabinet Members, and specifically the Minister of Finance before he prepared his Budget, spoke from their points of view and their points of interest. I want to say to the Conservative Government, it was not just the business community that voted the Conservative Party. It was ordinary people all across this land who voted and elected a minority on the opposition side, but the majority of Conservative voters were ordinary people. It is time this Conservative Government listened to the ordinary people who voted for them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: Let us now consider our tax system, Mr. Speaker. I already mentioned that after this Budget, an average family will pay $500 more than in 1984, while the wealthier will pay $900 less. In 1961, corporations in Canada bore 20 per cent of the tax burden here in our country, but it is now only 11 per cent. I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) this: Why increase the tax burden for the poor in Canada, why such an increase for average families but none at all for large corporations? The simple truth is that the Conservative Government, like the Liberal Government before it, is not prepared to tax those who hold power and wealth. Big business benefits from a whole range of government programs and services: financing, research and development, personnel training allowances, rescue plans, interest-free loans, even infrastructure like roads, railways and airports. Average families pay the large corporations' share, although taxes for these families will go up $700 this year and a further $1,000 by 1991 with the new regressive sales tax.

The business community has made reducing the deficit this Government's number one priority and it is this same business community which is largely responsible for the deficit. Big business is not calling for an end to their preferential treatment which has enabled them to defer $34 billion in taxes, an amount equivalent to the federal deficit that concerns them so much. If the Government shares their concern, why did it not at least introduce a minimum income tax on profitable large corporations such as the United States now has? What is needed is a thorough analysis of all tax expenditures, in order to eliminate loopholes that put an additional burden on Canadian taxpayers without being of any benefit to the Canadian public.

Some financial incentives to business are justified, such as measures to assist regional development and R and D.

But if the Government wants to increase its revenues, the Income Tax Act is a real gold mine, or it would be, if the Government had the guts to make its business pals pay their fair share of the tax burden. Let's look at unemployment insurance.

• (1130)

[English]

I heard real concern from my colleague, the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). He was at committee with the head of the Economic Council of Canada. Yesterday, the head of the Economic Council of Canada came before that committee and my colleague asked about the current level of unemployment being at 7.5 per cent. If I remember correctly, the original mandate of the Economic Council of Canada was set up in 1963. Its obligation was to set out a target and make proposals to the Government of Canada for achieving full employment. Originally, the raison d'être of this organization was to propose means of moving us toward full employment.

When asked about the current level of 7.5 per cent, the head of the Economic Council of Canada stated that 7.5 per cent is full employment. I remind that person now, and I remind the Government that, in 1963 when that Council was set up, 3 per cent was said to be full employment. In my early years here in the early 1970s that was changed to 4 per cent by the then Liberal Government. Therefore, we have to redefine constantly the new level of acceptability which went up to 4 per cent, and now, as the head of the Economic Council of Canada states, 7.5 per cent. That may be good enough for the Conservatives, but it is not good enough for a kid in Kamloops who has no job and has to move to Oshawa, or someone in the northern part of Québec who would like a sensible regional development policy in order that a young boy or girl can stay there and not have to move to some other part of the country. We do not accept 7.5 per cent. We believe that 3 per cent or 4 per cent is the absolute maximum when talking of unemployment levels in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: If we consider the unemployment insurance scheme, the changes the Government wishes to make in the regulations are totally unjustified. It wants to make the unemployed pay for their own retraining and skills upgrading. It wants to make workers finance most of the Unemployment Insurance Fund. Instead of going after unemployment, the Conservative Government is going after the unemployed. It cuts financing for regional development programs, at a time when, as far as unemployment is concerned, most of the regions have yet to recover from the last recession.

This is a time to be imaginative and innovative in finding ways to help our poorest regions. It is not a time to take the kind of laissez-faire attitude this reactionary Government has shown.

[English]

If the Government wanted to move simultaneously on the unemployment problem and the debt problem, one of the most effective ways of dealing with that would be to bring down the rate of interest. What the Government has done in the past year with interest rates, and deliberately permitting the Governor of the Bank of Canada to increase interest rates year over year, has added some $5 billion to the debt load that Canadians have to bear and which the Government keeps reminding Canadians to be concerned about. Of course we have to be concerned about the deficit, as we are concerned about other economic and social problems. However, it is the government action itself in terms of the interest rate policy that has exacerbated this problem.

Today interest rates are at record levels in terms of the real interest rate. They are 3 percentage points above the United States and among the highest in the western world. If the Government wishes to take a concrete policy decision that would have a major positive effect, both in bringing down the deficit or our debt charges and in aiding small business across the country, then now is the time to have a direct word with the Governor of the Bank of Canada and to tell him that there are sensible economists in the country who state that the interest rates should be brought down, and brought down now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: If Mr. Crow will not do it, then the Government should say: "Mr. Crow, it's time to go", and put it to him as directly as that.

Tax unfairness between ordinary families on the one hand, and the rich and corporations on the other, is the most unacceptable short-run aspect of the Budget. The attack on universality of social policy is unquestionably the most serious long-run betrayal of the Canadian tradition.

I wish to digress for a moment before I address that issue. As a Member of Parliament and a Party Leader who has been here for some years, I have been more than a little interested in what the Liberals have had to say on the Budget, especially when it comes to social policy. Frankly, the creative years of innovative policy in Canada came in the 1960s when the Liberals and Conservatives were both in power at the national level, and I will not go into all the causes for that, but high among them was the creative role played by the CCF and the Government of Saskatchewan in setting the agenda. However, at the national level of politics in the 1960s we did have innovation. We did have decisively important changes in hospitalization, in the pension domain, and in medicare. It has been remarkably interesting for me to hear the Liberals, particularly in this context, defending social policy tradition.

I have been here since 1968 and during that period of time there has not been a single new comprehensive social policy introduced by the Liberal Party of Canada while it was in power. In fact, now that these modern day defenders of social policy are in the Opposition, I wish to point out something about their record in social policy and health care. In 1982 it was the Liberals who introduced a $4 billion cut in transfer payments to the provinces in terms of financing health care.

When it came to pensions it was the same Liberals in power who put a cap on indexation for pensions with a six and five program. I remind the same Liberals who now talk so vigorously about the need for a child care program that I was here in 1970 when we had a royal commission make a report on child care for federal action. Year after year when we asked the Liberals in power to do something about it, we were told: "No, no, it couldn't be done". In 1984 there was a new Leader of the Liberal Party, a man to whom we paid tribute in the House yesterday. I remember well that, in the 1984 election campaign, when he had to choose between child care and the deficit, he explicitly stated that child care could not be proceeded with in 1984 because the Liberals had to deal with the problem of the deficit.

The modern Liberal Party, and the same finance critic talked about taxing back social benefits a few weeks ago. It is the modern Liberal Party that took action against health care and pensioners, and did nothing about child care. When we hear members of that Party crying, we see crocodile tears.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I wish to say something about the importance of the universality principle in social programming. For me this goes to the root of the problems with the Government. I say with care and I think with precision that the Conservative Government now in power wants to turn the clock backward. It wants to move us away from the type of society that we have been developing, particularly since the Second World War. Since the Second World War there has been a growing consensus in Canada among men and women outside political Parties toward the establishment of a new part of the Canadian tradition. It is one that acknowledges that the market economy is immensely important and desirable, but also acknowledges that government leadership and the active participation of government in the organization of our lives in society as a whole is absolutely necessary if we are to achieve a sense of equality and community.

• (1140)

As we can see clearly in Margaret Thatcher's Great Britain at the close of the 20th century, and in Ronald Reagan's America, if the market economy is left to its own devices, for all its productivity, and is not met by an equivalent power provided by government in this society, the market economy will pull people apart rather than bring them together. It will produce less of a sense of community rather than more of a sense of community. Rather then creating more equality, it will diminish equality. It will exacerbate the problems of community rather than reducing them.

The Government is clearly moving us back to an earlier model of a society which is completely dominated by the market-place. I have spoken in general terms because it is important in political life from time to time for all politicians from all Parties to describe in terms of broad values what kind of society we are talking about. I want to bring it now to the concrete description and say why I, as Leader of the New Democratic Party, am concerned about what is being done in terms of social policy in this Budget.

I am deeply disturbed about what is happening as a result of our turning our pension plan into a means-test program. That is what is being done.

Our social policy is one in which we have evolved toward the principle that a citizen has certain rights as a citizen which include social rights and not simply individual rights.

In other words, most of the rights we guaranteed in the Charter of Rights in the early part of this decade and those rights that have been established in democratic societies throughout the world, are essentially negative, with positive implications. That is to say, they restrict people from interfering with each other, and restrict states from interfering with individuals so they may act freely as individuals in exercising their choice in a democratic society.

However, social democratic societies in western Europe and many parts of Canada have quite consciously evolved the notion that a citizen is entitled to certain social rights in addition to individual rights, and these positive rights which the people of Canada have bestowed upon themselves through the democratic system include things like pensions and medicare, which we have taken out of the market-place. Unlike the United States, we have said that a Canadian citizen is not only entitled to freedom of expression, to the appropriate processes in our courts, and free elections, we are also saying that whether or not he or she makes enough money in a market economy, when it comes to illness a rich man and a poor woman, when it comes to education a rich child and a poor child, when it comes to pensions, the rich and poor are all entitled as citizens of Canada to the same right to a certain social policy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am the last one to want to disturb the Hon. Member during his speech, but the provisions of Standing Order 81(20) state that during opposition days the speeches are 20 minutes long plus questions and comments. I would hope the Hon. Member would conclude, and then we could have questions and comments.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate just a few minutes to conclude. I see government Members and members of the Opposition agree with that, and I appreciate it.

As I said, this is a matter of great importance to my Party and to the people of Canada. What the Government is doing with pensions is to suggest that no longer will these be regarded as a universal right. It is applying a means test. If the Government says it will start applying a tax-back principle at $50,000 on pensions this year, next year it could be $40,000 and then $30,000. This year it may be the bank president, but next year it could be the school teacher and after that the bank clerk.

Our Party does not believe that this is the right approach. Not only is it bad for pensions to start putting a means test on them, but if the Government moves on pensions today, the same principle could apply to medicare tomorrow. If the Government gets away with means testing on pensions today it will attempt to means test medicare tomorrow, and we in this Party will not tolerate that approach.

I do not want to abuse the generosity of the House which just permitted me some extra time already, therefore I will leave untouched certain other matters.

I will simply conclude by saying there should be no illusion about what is involved in this historic Budget debate. We are dealing with two quite different visions of Canada. One vision is that of the Conservatives who want to take us literally backward while they talk about the future. It is the reduction of a view of life to what could be seen as a sort of great cash register in the sky. I reject that view of society, as I am convinced most Canadians reject that view. The only difference I see between Margaret Thatcher in this regard and the present Government is that at least Margaret Thatcher is honest about what she is trying to do.

The other vision is that of a social democratic movement that says yes to economic efficiency and market principles in the economic domain but also says that life and society can never be reduced to a set of economic relations, that life has other crucial elements of joy and creativity, and that people must use their democratic government to make sure that equality, liberty and community do not only survive but that they thrive in this Canada of ours.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the speech made by my hon. colleague, the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). I want him to know that I do not dispute in any way his genuine concern for fairness and equality among Canadians. I am sure he will accord myself and all other Members of the House the same in terms of their genuine concern for social justice in Canada.

I will not quarrel with his remarks about taxing the rich. I realize that he puts it as a matter of principle. However, I think there is great support in this country for the concept that we must temper these rules with common sense. If people who do not require financial support from government are receiving it, we cannot simply regard that as a matter of principle and not attack the reality of the situation. Again, I think he will realize that there are legitimate concerns on both sides.

I want to pick up on a remark that the Member from Oshawa made on interest rates in this country because that is a genuine concern to all Canadians, particularly to Members of this House of Commons. I want to remind him, as I am sure he is well aware, that in the early 1980s when interest rates soar%d to 19 per cent and 20 per cent more on á!residential mortgage,that wreaked havoc across the country and it literally destroye families in their search for a better future. I am sure none of us want that to happen again. The problem is though, how do we prevent that, from occurring again?

What the Progressive Conservative Party belietes, through this Budget, through the Hon. Minister of Finance's (Mr. Wilson) initiatives, is that we will in time ensure reasonable interest rates in this country based on a strong national economy, based on a strong national Treasury and based, most importantly, on reduction of debt and deficit so we will not cause interest rates to rise. I think that is the thrust of the Budget and I am sure Canadians understand that.

I have a question that I want to put to the Hon. Member. He suggested that the solution to interest rates at the present time in Canada is not the Budget and the budgetary measures, but that instead the Minister of Finance should sit down with the Governor of the Bank of Canada and tell him to lower interest rates.

The Member has a long history in this House and we appreciate the contribution he has made to it and to Canada, but I am sure he remembers the dispute between another Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and another Governor of the Bank of Canada and what havoc that created when the Government told the Governor of the Bank what to do. This led to his resignation, to economic havoc in the country, to actions in this House of Commons and to all kinds of related problems.

I cannot believe in 1989, with the credibility the Bank of Canada has developed over the years, with the faith and confidence Canadians have in the governance of the Bank of Canada, that the Member is now suggesting that the Minister of Finance trot across the street and tell the Governor of the Bank of Canada what to do. What does he think would happen if that occurred? What does he think would happen internationally to the view held of Canada around the world? He knows we are dependent in monetary matters to what goes on in other places. Surely he does not want to erect a wall around Canada and cut us off from the rest of the world and make us another banana republic.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, that question was almost as straightforward as the ones we ask in Question Period.

Do I want to create a banana republic in Canada? The answer is, probably no.

Some Hon Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: It is definitely no. The serious matter that the Member asks about is whether we believe that the Minister of Finance should have ultimate responsibility for interest rates. The answer to that is an unequivocal yes. As to whether the Finance Minister should trot down to the bank, knock on the door and say to the Governor of the Bank of Canada, "Do this forthwith", that is not what I meant.

I have said, in a different context, that whether one is talking about Canada or if you look at the way the Government functions in Japan, France or West Germany now, I do not believe for a minute—and I would not think that the Hon. Member does—that people in those countries in their financial institutions having the position equivalent to the Governor of the Bank of Canada, if he or she—and they are all men right now—were not pursuing the policy of the Government of the day they would not have the job. That is what I am talking about. You do not give it necessarily a 24-hour notice but, as the Member knows, the Minister of Finance meets regularly with the Governor of the Bank of Canada, and what he ought to do in those meetings is to indicate that the direction of the policy has to change. That is the way it would be done. It would be talked about in very serious, direct terms in a meeting, and then the Minister of Finance would sit back and watch and see if the policy began to change. If the policy did not change there is not doubt in my mind or in my Party's mind where we stand. If that policy does not begin to change and change soon then the Governor should be replaced. That is how you do it.

Mr. Rodriguez: Just like the president of VIA.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. Could the Leader of the New Democratic Party comment on a statistic that I will mention? It concerns the personal income tax that Canadians have to pay. In 1977 it was 40 per cent of government revenue. In 1987 that had increased to 45 per cent. On the other hand, the corporations in 1977 were paying 17 per cent of government revenue and in 1987 that amount had dropped to 11 per cent. Does he think that corporations pay their fair share of government revenues?

Does the Hon. Member think that the projected value-added tax or the goods and services tax has an inflationary component? Is it regressive in the sense that it punishes low-income earners, and is it fair?

Mr. Cooper: Are you guys paying his salary?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You are on the road to Damascus.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it has been very rare since I have heard such an intelligent, imaginative and thoughtful question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I would simply say that I accept the implicit conclusions from the questions, as the Member did, I think, listening to my speech, and express my hope that at two o'clock when Question Period begins in the House he will raise those questions for the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by thanking the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) for her courtesy in making it possible for me to rise in the House at this time, especially since this will give me a chance to leave on departmental business right away.

I will not be as complimentary about the substance of the speech by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa(Mr. Broadbent). I must say I am astonished by both aspects of the motion before the House today, a motion that complains about a lack of fairness in the Budget and, secondly, condemns the Government's commitment to the environment.

I would like to comment very briefly on the first aspect, which will be dealt with at length by my fellow Members. I was very surprised, when listening to his criticism of the Budget, that the Hon. Member for Oshawa failed to consider the fundamental issue of governmental responsibility for taxation and for sound government finance.

We are all sympathetic, and we all agree, that a government's first commitment must be to the social aspects of its mandate and that the social programs of a country like Canada form the basis of our Government's mandate.

That being said, the best way to guarantee that social programs will be preserved is to maintain a strong government that is able to intervene and to stand by its commitments to our neediest fellow Canadians.

However, there is no indication in the comments and criticisms of the Opposition—an Opposition that criticizes because that is its duty, its role, and that is perfectly legitimate—we never see any recognition of the fact that we have, throughout the country, a responsibility for public finances, and that those finances must absolutely be sound if we are to maintain social programs. In other words, our responsibility is not just to Canadians living today who are having trouble surviving, we also have a responsibility to future generations. We all inherited a country led by a government that had no debts. When we were born, when we started to work, when we got our firt jobs, we were living in a country that was built on a very sound financial foundation.

Mr. Speaker, I hope, we hope, and I am sure the Opposition Parties do as well, for reasons that are laid down in their respective programs, to be able to leave our children the same country we inherited.

As far as the environment is concerned, and that is the question that interests me more directly, I am truly astonished. First of all, I deplore the psychological inability of Opposition Members to show any recognition for what the Government has accomplished in this field.

• (1200)

I will not dwell upon the issue because we have already done so. Still it might be appropriate to recall that ours is the first Government which passed comprehensive legislation touching on all environmental aspects and establishing the framework and course of an environment program for all future administrations in Canada—including provincial governments.

This legislation defines corporate and individual responsibilities, giving the Government additional and extremely extensive authority to protect the environment. And, of course, it was our Government which was the driving force behind the signatories to the 1987 Montreal agreement, the first major such international achievement with respect to atmosphere and ozone protection. Thanks to the effort of this Government, Canada now stands among leaders in the fight to protect the environment.

However I can see that Canada's outstanding reputation abroad has never been something that would make Hon. Members opposite stand proud. Yet it seems to me there are times when all Canadians ought to rejoice over the fact that this country is known the world over for spearheading the advance in environmental matters.

For example, I heard Opposition critics bemoan the fact that, later this evening in Washington, international environment champion Mrs. Brundtland will present an award to the head of the Government of Canada and our country's Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as recognition for his and his Government's efforts, but particularly for the achievements of all Canadians in the environmental sector.

Indeed this is the time when political biases should be set aside just so all Canadians can rally and be proud about the award to be given to the head of our Government.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to remind the House that, on the acid rain problem, this Government has taken the most radical measures ever contemplated and that, two years ago, it signed with seven Canadian provinces agreements which will reduce Canadian acid rain emissions by 50 per cent by 1994.

We have good reason to complain about our American friends. But we must recognize that we have also been at fault and that we are still at fault. We also produce acid rain emissions in Canada, but this Government has taken action and reached agreements with the provinces that will result in a 50 per cent reduction in acid rain emissions in five years.

We are now in a position to tell our American friends it is their turn to act! That is what we hope to gain in the negotiations which should start in the coming months.

Mr. Speaker, I will rapidly go over what we have done for the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence, the commitments that have been made, the programs that have been voted, as well as what we have done on the international scene.

[English]

—because Canada has a very prestigious record on the international scene. Canada has hosted a series of international meetings to address global atmospheric problems and has participated in numerous others.

At the 1987 meeting in Montreal the protocol to reduce ozone-depleting CFCs was developed. Next came the landmark Toronto conference on the changing atmosphere which resulted in the loudest call to date for international action.

A meeting of international legal and policy experts, hosted by the Government of Canada, was convened here in Ottawa last February. The experts drafted international legal principles for use in the development of a framework convention for protection of the atmosphere and a convention on climate change.

Although Canada only contributes 2 per cent of the chemical blamed for depleting the ozone layer, I announced on February 20 an immediate reduction of 85 per cent in CFC use and a commitment to the complete elimination of controlled CFCs within the next 10 years. This announcement was followed in subsequent weeks by a similar announcement and commitment on the part of the United States and European countries.

Incidentally, it was Canada that took the lead in 1987 in developing and adopting the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer. The momentum we established has galvanized the world into action.

We have committed ourselves to the principle of environmentally sustainable economic development. This concept has become a clarion call for all nations which are serious about their environmental priority. Thus the concept of sustainable development became a cornerstone of the April 3 Speech from the Throne.

Domestically, we have maintained the pace which was set during our first mandate. Most recently, my colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard), and I announced jointly an accelerated attack on air pollution in Canada. We are putting in place the most stringent regulations that technology will allow to control emissions from internal combustion engines that burn fossil fuels.

[Translation]

But the most important decision in this field, Mr. Speaker, to implement the concept of sustainable development is the one taken by the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) when he decided to set up a new Cabinet Committee chaired by the Environment Minister, the purpose of which is to put environmental concerns at the heart of government activity and all government decisions.

From now on, Mr. Speaker, the major decisions on the economy, energy, agriculture, fisheries and oceans will first be referred at some step in the process to the Environment Committee, which will suggest to the Government a way to harmonize all aspects of the environment, the economy, energy and Canadians' needs.

Mr. Speaker, it must be said, we talk a great deal now about the financial deficit in Canada, the budgetary deficit. It is a tragedy, as we all know, and that is why this Government is proposing the measures you know to Canadians and adopting them. But there is another deficit, the environmental deficit. And both deficits feed on each other and make the other worse.

What is an environmental deficit? It is nothing but the planet's decreased ability to support life and economic activity, in two ways. The first is the release of artificial and natural substances in the environment, this pollution that overloads the planet's ability to clean and regenerate its environment and which is a serious danger to health.

The second way is the direct decrease in the planet's productive ability: for example, overfishing, poor forestry and farming techniques. Eight per cent of our gross national product, Mr. Speaker, or $32 billion, comes from forestry, tourism, maple syrup production and related industries. All these fields of activity suffer from acid rain. The regions whose economies are most affected are Québec and the Atlantic provinces.

The Science Council of Canada has estimated that our national economy loses $1.3 billion annually because of the declining agricultural productivity due to soil deterioration. In Ontario, the corn crop has decreased 30 to 40 per cent and agricultural yields are down 10 to 75 per cent on the Prairies.

The resource sector provides gainful employment for one out of three Canadians and accounts for roughly 50 per cent of all our country's sales abroad. Regional economies rest squarely on most of these industries, but because the sector has been losing some of its productive capacity we can see that regional disparities are growing ever wider and we have to give large subsidies to individuals and companies alike. This has a very negative impact on the Budget deficit.

Repairing damages to the environment does call for new measures, better use of existing mechanisms, and an improved decision-making process. Far from being satisfied with picking up the broken pieces left by past mistakes and shoddy environmental management, we must gain full control over current activities, in total respect for our natural habitat, and adopt the kind of approach, method and technique which will prevent us from making the same mistakes ever again. That is the goal we have set for ourselves. That is our commitment to our fellow Canadians, and we are honour-bound to strive for the successful completion of all endeavours dictated by this commitment.

So this is why—despite the austerity program it must implement—the Government chose to boost the environment budget by something like $75 million while increasing the number of employees and cancelled this year's cut-backs which were planned a year ago.

Mr. Speaker, that works out to a 9.4 per cent increase over last year's estimates and gives the department the biggest budget ever since it was established 17 years ago. So much for financial straits! Mr. Speaker, it reflects the reassuring approach taken by the Mulroney Government with respect to the quality of life in this country!

And now, when we are discussing the Budget, one of the Opposition Parties moves a motion condemning this Government for failing to make the environment a priority. No government ever did as much for the environment as we did in the past few years or made such substantial commitments in a Budget tabled in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): This budgetary increase, will enable us to proceed with a host of worthwhile projects. A centre for the international promotion of sustainable development will be established in Winnipeg. The National Round Table on the Environment and the Economy will provide leadership and form new partnerships of effort among Canadians in order to deal more effectively with environmental concerns and their relationship to the challenges of economic growth. None of the initiatives that are part of the new environmental agenda has been dropped. We intend to do what is necessary to limit the environmental impact of toxic chemicals through the development of regulations under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act.

We will also adopt new legislation to improve the quality of our water, and we will protect the environmental integrity of our arctic regions. We will work on improving the quality of the atmosphere through the negotiation of an acid rain accord with the United States and the implementation of the Ozone Protocol. We will pursue our international efforts to control toxic emissions and to stimulate the evolution of international institutions with a genuine responsibility for the economy and the environment.

Our initiatives to clean up the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River and, together with the provinces, to further the process of cleaning up dangerous landsites, will proceed. Next June, my provincial counterparts and I will receive the federal–provincial report on policy recommendations. We will also continue to encourage the expansion of Canada's environmental industry. That is a very important point. Many people believe that the environment insolves only negative measures. In fact, this is an area where because of the resources that have already been deployed, the initiatives that have been launched and the experience we have already gained, we as Canadians have a chance to open up vast foreign markets for our exports of environmental equipment.

Mr. Speaker, the Environmental Partners Fund will also go ahead. This fund will encourage individual Canadians to take part in community projects designed to find solutions to environmental problems.

In the agricultural sector, the Budget reiterates the Government's commitment to making environmentally sustainable development the focus of its policies. We must achieve a better integration of the concept of sustainable development in federal agricultural programs, and we intend to do so. We will start with a major review of our pesticides registration system. We have also ensured that toxic waste treatment plants are exempted from sales tax and commodity tax.

[English]

I have just described some of the activities which will be initiated by the Government in this Parliament. It will be a "green" Parliament, I can assure you of that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac–Saint–Jean): You will judge the results.

In closing, controlling the debt requires a concerted effort on the part of everyone, an effort now and for several years to come. The measures in the recent Budget attest to the seriousness of the situation. We had tough decisions to make and we made them.

Government program spending will be reduced significantly. Some plans will be put on the back burner. Others have been trimmed. We have done our best to ensure maximum return on the taxpayers' dollar. We have acted as reliable administrators.

We know that we must do more, but we must do it together. I invite you all to work within your cities, your communities, your workplaces and your families, to join in the implementation of fundamental changes which are not only our history but our instinct for survival, not only the collective morality, but our respect for life. Let us ensure that we will look back one day at this point in time as one in which we contributed substantially to setting the world on a new path, a path of respect for the values which impart supreme dignity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments.

Mr. MacWilliam: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister for the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) has made some rather enlightening statements about the promises the Government has made with respect to environmental issues. I fully intend at a later time to demonstrate very clearly in this House just how shallow those promises are.

Many of the promises that have been made in respect to environmental initiatives have not been carried out by the Government. I intend to show very clearly that it demonstrates the kind of doublespeak that we have had from Members on the opposite side of the House on a number of issues.

At this point I would like to make comments and ask the Minister some very specific questions in terms of my own constituency which is located in the southern interior of British Columbia, the constituency of Okanagan—Shuswap. I would like to say that the concern for the environment is the primary issue, bar none. People throughout the Okanagan value the lifestyle of their communities and the quality of life in their communities. They are very, very concerned about what they consider as environmental problems.

I would like to ask the Minister very specifically what plans he has for protecting the watersheds of the Okanagan and Shuswap lakes with respect to encroaching Eurasian milfoil weed problems. Both regional governments and provincial governments have found it impossible to keep up with the spending necessary to fight this nuisance weed that is growing throughout the lakes. It is really affecting the tourism industry.

With regard to commercial houseboat activity on the Okanagan and Shuswap Lakes, and the problems of pollution with gray water and disposal of sewage waste, does he have any specific recommendation that he is going to be bringing forward to this House with regard to commercial activity on inland waters?

With respect to recommendations made to the Government by the National Science Council, is this Minister prepared to carry forward with the recommendations for the development of water research institutes and water research and development programs throughout this country.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I am always surprised to hear all the emotional attacks on what the Opposition calls double-talk of the Government. I know that it is a game in politics to say that, but sometimes in politics we should be allowed to say the truth.

I am very surprised to see that all this supposed strong commitment never compelled the Opposition to raise environmental issues during the electoral campaign.

An Hon. Member: Absolutely wrong.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): We were ready to hear those questions. We were ready to deal with them during the campaign but the Opposition parties decided to wage large scale tactics and war during the campaign period. They tried to convince Canadians that the social programs would be destroyed, that we would become Americans. They forgot that the main concern of Canadians now is the environment. This should have been the main issue of the campaign. We were ready to deal with it but it was impossible because we had to reassure Canadians. We succeeded in the end but we lost precious time. The election campaign would have been an appropriate occasion to deal with those questions.

An Hon. Member: Answer his question.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): As far as specific questions are concerned, we intend to introduce in this House a Bill on safe drinking water. Water quality is a great issue and a great concern of the Government. We will protect the water everywhere in Canada. I assure the Hon. Member that we will deal with his specific questions. We are waiting for reports on most of them. The Government is committed to the preservation of the park. This will be one of the cornerstones of our policy.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a couple of extremely specific questions. The Minister has talked about the great contribution of his Government. Can he explain why in the course of his Government's mandates since 1984, if you factor in inflation and amounts that had already been budgeted in previous Liberal estimates, why his Government has cut $491 million from environmental spending? Second, over that period of the time, almost half a billion dollars has been cut. Why is this? The Minister claims that the money is still there for all these environmental projects. I would ask him to show me in the Estimates where the money is for the centre for sustainable development that was announced with such force by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at the United Nations during the election campaign.

• (1220)

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) always going back to those 1984 Budget cuts. I wonder what the Hon. Member could say if the Government had not taken this wrong decision. We know it was a wrong decision. We know that the Government does not make only right decisions. We must have the frankness to admit that in 1984, a bad decision was taken. However, since then, the Government has done more than any previous Government including Liberal Governments, which did nothing about the environment. I was astonished to see that the former Prime Minister, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, was in Montreal last week with environmentalists speaking about the environment. He was Prime Minister of Canada for many years, but he never did anything about the environment.

The Hon. Member complains that the budget has been cut. In absolute figures, this environment budget is the most considerable budget ever voted by a government. The Hon. member asks specifically where is the money in the Estimates for the funding of the Winnipeg international centre. We all know that the commitment has been made by the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) that $5 million from CIDA funding will be used for that. If the Hon. Member does not find funding for all commitments made by the Government in the present Estimates, there will be Supplementary Estimates. There is a reserve and all of our commitments will be funded. I make the commitment that by the end of the year, this Government will have spent much more on environment than any previous Government.

Mr. Wappel: Mr. Speaker, I have been listening very carefully to the Hon. Minister's comments and I would like to begin my short comments by saying that it is obvious that all of us breathe the same air, we live in the same country and we use the same lakes. We all have concerns about the environment. It is a little depressing to constantly hear the Hon. Minister tell us what previous Governments did not do. We are interested in the environment of the future. We are interested in having our children able to breathe clean air. We do not need a history lesson.

The Hon. Minister asked why Members of the Opposition do not understand what the Government is doing to protect the environment and then he proceeded to give us a number of examples of what the Government was doing. I found it interesting to note that the first thing he cited as an example of what the Government has been doing for the environment was that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) received an award. An award does not do anything for the environment. I do not quite follow the logic of how the Prime Minister happening to get an award for whatever reason, political or otherwise, is an example of good environmental policy.

The Minister did set out a number of specifics which were of some interest. However, the Government has been around for five years and these things are only coming now. The Minister mentioned environmentally sustainable development and what I will call a "super ministry". I remind him that the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has been calling for a super ministry, for sustainable development and for a Minister who has over-all power over the environment for many years. The Minister should not pretend that this is a sudden Conservative brainstorm from the Cabinet.

My question to the Minister is very specific. He said that he had agreements with seven provinces. Does he have any agreements on acid rain with any states or with the U.S. Government? If he does, what are they? If he does not, what is going on with respect to negotiations with the United States on acid rain?

[Translation]

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I am greatful to the Hon. Member for asking a precise question on the acid rain phenomenon which represents a national disaster for Canada. This acid rain phenomenon was identified a great many years ago. As Canadians, we never paid much attention to it, but we have come to realize over the past few years that it is indeed quite dramatic.

I should like to remind the House that this Government was the first to raise this issue with the Americans and to open negotiations with them and to demonstrate to them that we were determined to put an end to this situation. We have gone half way. I mentioned that before. The Hon. Member has been kind and honest enough to recognize that we have signed agreements with seven Provincial Governments.

As far as the United States are concerned, however, let us not kid ourselves. Let us not count our chickens before they are hatched. Yet, the circumstances are such now that we may entertain a legitimate hope. The new Administration in that country has appointed people who have the trust and credibility of environmental organizations. The President of the United States has made very clear commitments. There is already a Bill before the American Congress. The Administration is supposed to introduce another one before the end of this month; after that, we will be able to open with them negotiations which, I hope in the interest of Canada as a whole, will help solve part of the acid rain problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allocated for questions and comments has ended. Debate. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Mrs. Copps) has the floor.

[English]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that I will have a chance to raise a few points before the Minister leaves. I understand that he has to rush off to Washington, presumably to be a part of the ceremony that will be held for the award that is to be received by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) tonight. I would like to launch a challenge. I think the Minister would do far more for his credibility as a Minister if he encouraged the Prime Minister to refuse the award, an award given by a group that has an international record of ignoring the problems of acid rain.

The Minister has just called the problem of acid rain a national tragedy. If he really believes that it is a national tragedy, how could he in good conscience participate in an awards ceremony held by an organization that does not see acid rain as being a problem that should be combated in an international arena?

I would like to read some of the comments made by the head of the group that is honouring our Prime Minister: "Despite the odd cry of an acid rain crisis, acid rain is generally considered to be a long-term phenomenon .There is no current basis to support the contention that acid rain is a problem out of control, that acid rain is a widespread national problem or that acid rain is a recent problem".

The Minister has just called acid rain a national tragedy. Yet he and the Prime Minister are trotting off to Washington to get an award from a so-called environmental group whose primary function over the last number of years has been to lobby Governments to prohibit legislation governing the control of pollution. Is there not a bit of hypocrisy in the Government's decision to accept this award? Would it not restore the credibility of the Minister if he told his good friend the Prime Minister that this is one award that he should pass up?

I realize that the Government has a penchant for taking awards, some of which are undeserved, as we saw with the Oscar. This is one case in which the Minister could actually get public credibility by refusing an award. I am not surprised, however, that the Minister says one thing here and will probably say something completely different in Washington when he meets with this international business lobby today. He made a lot of strong comments in the House regarding the Rafferty-Alameda dam. I think it is a darn shame that the Minister of the Environment is unwilling and unable, to respect his own laws, that he has to be forced into the position of respecting his own laws by a Federal Court judgment. We all know the history of the Rafferty-Alameda dam, the history of subterfuge, of the federal Government refusing to acknowledge the fact that 13 per cent of the lands that were involved in the flooding of the Alameda project were under federal jurisdiction. The federal guidelines should have applied. When the Minister came into office, he was given the opportunity to reverse the negative decision of his predecessor and demand a full federal environmental assessment. Instead he refused. It was up to the courts to actually order him to carry out an environmental assessment which was supposed to have been done by his own Department.

Following that judgment, the Minister wisely stood in the House in support of the decision of the Federal Court and said that there was going to be full environmental assessment. Let us hear what he said a few days later when he was being interviewed on CBC's Saturday morning program. The CBC is asking:

> You use the words environmentally practical. In terms of the principle, the environment is not going to be protected were it practically and economically insupportable. Is that what you are saying?
> BOUCHARD: No, no, that is not what I am saying. I am saying that we must comply fully with environmental purposes with this case as with any other one. And furthermore, there is a practical aspect to it. If we are conducting the studies, this means we will be closer to be able to resume the work.

If the Minister of the Environment is truly serious about an independent environmental assessment as was ordered by the Federal Court, why would he be prejudging the results of such an independent assessment by suggesting that the sooner we get on with the study, the sooner we can resume the work? Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, in an independent process, the environmental review would show that it is not sustainable to construct the project, and the project would be quashed. But obviously by this signal sent out by the Minister very directly to his bureaucrats, to people in his own Department who will be carrying out this assessment, he is telling them directly and indirectly, let us get the studies over with so we can get on with the project. I thought it was the job of the Minister of the Environment to come in tabula rasa, to come in with an open mind as to whether or not the project should continue.

As far as I am concerned, the statement that the Minister made on the CBC—and it is a direct transcript from Saturday, April 15—is an absolute anathema to the independent environmental process. Indeed it makes a mockery of his very strong statements made earlier the House of Commons. Either the Minister is there to protect the environment and to provide independent review, or he is there simply to promote construction if and when we have got these little trivialities of environmental assessment behind us.

It is the same kind of doubletalk that we have heard with respect to the issue of water pollution and air pollution. We have heard the Minister say in response to the Member from the Okanagan that in fact he is going to be bringing in new legislation to clean up water. As the result of this Government's inability or unwillingness to lay charges on regulations that already exist with respect to pulp and paper mills in this country, we are in a ridiculous situation where, for example, there is a town in New Brunswick where they cannot even drink their water at the moment. They must use bottled water because their water has been totally polluted by the discharge from a pulp and paper company.

The Minister currently has the authority to go in and lay charges and make sure that his own regulations are being applied with respect to pulp and paper discharge. Yet he seems unwilling and unable to even apply his own laws. I wrote a letter a few days ago to the Prime Minister stating that the Minister promised to meet with the Mirimachi Environment Society specifically on the issue of the water which is currently undrinkable. The people in that community are actually drinking bottled water. The Minister said he would be willing to meet with them, and yet for some reason has been unwilling and unable to do so.

If you do not want to believe the statements of the Liberal Party, look at the Friends of the Earth. Look at the assessment that was done by Greenpeace in the spring of 1989 in which they examined the discharge record of the major pulp and paper discharge mills across Canada. The mills with the highest discharge in Canada in terms of passing and failing on discharge were: Crown Forest Products, fail, B.C. Forest Products, fail, CIP Forest Products, fail, Consolidated Bathurst Forest Products, fail, Corner Brook Pulp and Paper Company, fail. The record of the pulp and paper industry in cleaning up their own discharge is abysmal. The Minister has the tools in hand already. He has the tools available to lay charges. He does not need a new law. He does not need to reinvent the wheel. He has regulations at his disposal already which are not being applied.

The Minister himself has indicated that he is willing to move in and charge Consolidated Bathurst specifically with relation to a PCB spill. The people of Canada are counting on him for more than that. They are counting on him to lay charges.

When a community such as this community in New Brunswick is placed in a situation where they cannot even drink their own water, then we have a Minister of the Environment who is not doing his job. The Minister says he is going to clean up the water. If that is the case, why does the Budget include not increases, but cuts in the infrastructure for treating raw sewage?

Just a week ago, I was in Halifax. I had the displeasure of going on what is called the sewer tour. The discharge that comes out of every toilet in the Cities of Halifax and Dartmouth is currently going straight into the Atlantic Ocean. Instead of the federal Government following on a Liberal commitment to have a municipal infrastructure program that permits communities across this country to deal with their own waste, the Minister's own Budget shows cuts.

I refer specifically to the cuts that I have identified over the last five years. The Minister blames it on some past administration back in 1984. I would like to set the record straight because I think this nonsense about an increase in the environmental Budget absolutely presupposes that the Canadian people are either stupid or myopic. In looking at the Budget, you have to look at what would have been spent under estimates and what has been cut cumulatively over the last five-year period.

I would like to put some figures on the record. The Minister talks about his commitment in global terms. I have not heard the specifics. In 1984–85 and 1985–86, the cumulative cuts, including inflation as well as specific cuts, amounted to a loss of $82,147,000 in the environmental budget. In 1986–87, the cumulative cuts, if you take into consideration the purchasing power of inflation as well as the specific Budget cuts, amounted to a total cut of $178 million. In 1987–88, the situation was compounded. The over-all cut from what had been proposed and what would have been spent under a Liberal administration to what was spent under this Government was a $286 million cut. In 1988–89, a cumulative loss in the spending power of the Department and the Ministry of Environment in so far as research and all areas are concerned was $404 million. Admittedly the Minister has said that this particular budget represents a 9 per cent increase over last year.

Merely to go back to the real dollar terms of 1984, there would have had to have been at least a 20 per cent increase. That would have only brought it up to the level of spending of 1984, at a time when, according to the Prime Minister's own statement, the environment is supposed to be the number one priority. If it is the number one priority, can the Minister explain why the cuts, purchasing power as well as absolute cuts, have resulted in an over-all budget cut between 1984 and 1990 of almost half a billion dollars? To be specific, $491 million have been lost to the environment budget over the life of this Government. I find it incredibly hypocritical that the Government would continue to insist that the environment is a priority when the facts speak otherwise.

I asked a question in the House a few weeks ago. That was dealing only with the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard), but let us talk about the Ministry of Energy. For all the talk about what Liberals never did, when the last Liberal administration was in power this country had developed a reputation in the area of research and development into the use of alternative forms of energy. Back in 1984 the first thing that the Government did was to eliminate the solar program of the National Research Council. The Government does not believe in alternative energy because the first thing that the Government did was to cut the solar program, and the Minister has stated that that was back in 1984.

Why then in 1988, presumably a period during which the Minister had some influence, were there further cut-backs to renewable resource development in the area of energy? Why does the Budget announce the closing of approximately one dozen regional conservation and renewable energy offices in 1990-91?

When I asked this question in the House, the Minister of Energy (Mr. Epp) laughed. He stated that the reason the Government was no longer funding renewable energy under the Department of Energy was that people were working on making solar panels for their swimming pools. He thought it was a joke that it represented such a small portion, one which, according to the Friends of the Earth, represented $1 for every $19 spent on fossil fuel development. Why would the Minister of Energy laugh about the cut-back in the one area of energy development that leaves us some hope for the future?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the same Prime Minister in his Throne Speech referred to air pollution problems, global environmental problems. It is quite easy to refer to the global level, but let us look at what is going on in his own Government, the half billion dollar cuts when inflation is taken into account in the environment area! To what purpose? When we know that $1 only is spent on renewable energy for every $19 spent on non-renewable sources, especially fossil fuels which as we know contribute to air pollution!

We know the Montreal agreement aimed at creating a system where renewable energy sources could supply power in order to protect the environment.

How come the Minister of Environment and the Minister of Energy are cutting down in 1988 on research and also on regional offices dealing with renewable energy?

When we see that our future as a country will be based on renewable energy, which at least will clean up the air we breathe and the water we drink! Unless they do not believe in that, but they cannot speak from both sides of their mouthes.

When I see the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) travel to Washington, and no doubt tonight he will be referring to the great environment strides that have been made here in Canada—does he feel no embarrassment when receiving that award from a club whose first goal is to prevent governments from going ahead with legislation pertaining to the environment, especially in the area of acid rain? Would it not be better if the Minister asked his friend the Prime Minister to turn down that award, because by accepting it you are extending credibility to an agency aimed at preventing special legislation on acid rain and other international issues.

[English]

There are so many other areas that should be addressed in this particular motion. There are so many areas where we should not have confidence in the Government because we have to look at the record of what it has done over the last number of years. However, let us specifically refer to the possibilities that were open to the Minister over the last number of months.

For example, we know that tomorrow—not during the last Liberal mandate, not during the previous Minister's tenure—in the Province of British Columbia the Americans will be moving a barge which is full of spent radioactive waste. It will be moved through the border of Canadian waters down to Washington. We also know that at the moment the federal Government cannot have very much pride in the way that we have handled collisions and spills over the last number of months. We only need to look at the Vancouver Island situation, or the fact that while the oil spill from the Exxon Valdez did not come into Canadian waters, we were certainly not prepared for it if it did.

That being the case, can the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) guarantee to the House and to Canadians that the barge that is currently moving along the coast of British Columbia will not be involved in an accident? Can he guarantee Canadians that any accident involving spent radioactive waste would not forever finish off the potential for tourist development off the West Coast of British Columbia, as well as the potential for fishery development? I do not think that he can. That is why I hope that, as well as going down to give the Prime Minister some moral support when he accepts an award from a group that has no business calling itself an environmental group, he demands of the Government of the United States that the barge not be moved, and that a cease and desist order be put on the moving of that barge unless and until we can get absolute assurances that the spent fuel will be removed or until we have a chance to study the situation further.

The Minister will know that the first of 12 barges carrying nuclear reactors began moving along the Pacific Coast on Monday of this week. The second barge begins moving on Friday. Given that I contacted the Prime Minister myself on this issue yesterday by way of hand-delivered letter as well as fax, although his embassy seemed to close rather early, is the Minister prepared to demand of the American Government that no barge carrying radioactive waste be moved along the coast of British Columbia? These barges will be travelling within 55 kilometres of Victoria. Given the level of traffic along the British Columbia coast, I do not think it is safe to suggest that there will not be a mishap. A plan should be in place, and the barge should be accompanied by Canadian vessels. The whole operation should be put on hold until Canadians have had a chance to examine the movement of a barge that has the potential for wreaking radioactive disaster on the west coast of British Columbia.

I know that my colleague is heading off to Washington today. I am sure that he has already received a copy of my letter that I sent yesterday to the Prime Minister at the Canadian Embassy in Washington. If he is serious about his work, he will be raising this with the President of the United States today and putting a halt on the shipment of the second barge along the coast of British Columbia.

I believe, and Canadians believe, that he environment should be the number one priority of the Government. The record of the Government has been characterized by cut-backs and by lack of force even to implement its own regulations. The pulp and paper situation is an absolute disgrace. The law is there. A new law is not needed. Let us use the law already at our disposal. If we continue to see a Minister who seems happier about accepting awards from international polluters, and a Minister who is more interested in getting on with the Rafferty-Alameda project than he is about putting together an independent environmental assessment, then he is fast going to lose credibility within the environmental community, but more important within the community at large.

[Translation]

I believe Canadians are ready to make sacrifices for the environment, just as they are ready to make fiscal sacrifices. But all we ask is that the sacrifices be fair and give results.

Even if Canadians are to make sacrifices!

[English]

The Minister has stated that Canadians should be contributing. We should be, and we will. If that is the case, I would also like the Minister to take up the challenge to change the tax laws of the Government in order that more environmental groups will have access to non-partisan funding by way of charitable donations. That would be a step in the right direction, and something that the Government has categorically refused to accord to a number of environmental organizations because it considers them to be closet politicians. That is an area of action in which the Minister should be involved. That is an area in which the Minister should be involved. I encourage him to go to Washington to get the ear of the Prime Minister and the President of the United States to, among other things, stop the shipment of this nuclear reactor across the Juan de Fuca Strait and make sure he puts his money where his mouth is.

• (1250)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Minister, then I will recognize the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Pagtakhan).

[Translation]

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Of course Mr. Speaker I share many of the concerns of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). I admit indeed that some of her comments include interesting suggestions that I will examine and certainly consider. It is always a pleasure to discuss those matters with her, as the opportunity arose the other day at a departmental briefing. The doors of the Department are wide open to her, since I believe co-operation between the various Parties in this House is vital on such an important matter as the environment.

I would like to mention two specific concerns—I cannot deal with all of them, but I will deal with two particular concerns—first shipping along Canada's West Coast, and second paper mill pollution!

With regards to shipping of the West Coast, not only of nuclear waste but most certainly of oil products, much more important volume-wise, I believe indeed we must, be concerned about the future as Canadians, as Members of Parliament and as a Government. Of course we know the rules implemented some ten years ago are extremely stringent, extremely severe; they involve a lot of technology, a lot of control, and up till now, no one can suggest there have been that many accidents off our coast, in view of the volume of traffic, because as we know, two tankers a day ply off our coast on their way to Alaska from the American mainland.

On that, I would like if at all possible to reassure the Hon. Member and all Members in this House that the Government moved internally and we are in the process of rapidly reviewing all the rules, all the checks in order to prevent accidents and also improve our response were one to happen. But we believe there should also be public input into that general review of the regulations in that regard and we will have another opportunity to look at that later on. A ministerial committee is working on the matter, including ministers from the West Coast, and we believe public input should be introduced in order to foster credibility and widen the scope of the review underway.

I believe that this review, were it to lead to increased controls, should easily convince the Government to re-open existing agreements with the United States.

Second!

[English]

As far as pulp and paper mill pollution is concerned, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is substantially correct. The pollution created by pulp and paper mills throughout Canada is absolutely unacceptable. However, there is a problem. She says that we do not have to adopt a new law. It may not be a new law, but certainly new regulations are required because the regulations governing pollution by those plants were enacted in 1971.

I do not blame the Liberal Government of the day for having adopted those regulations because it may have felt them to be sufficient at the time. However, for many years now we have known that they are totally insufficient. Most of the paper mills are exempt from the application of those regulations. All mills built prior to 1971 are not regulated under those exemptions and those mills pollute the most because they use old processes. Furthermore, they form the majority. We can do nothing now.

What we can do is to substitute a new set of rules under the Fisheries Act and issue new regulations under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act to control furans and dioxins.

I can assure the House and the Hon. Member that we will act swiftly and strongly on those subjects.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I notice the Minister did not respond to my analysis of the half billion dollars that have been cut. I will provide him with that information. Those figures are drawn from his own Estimates.

I am sure he has a copy of the report by Greenpeace on the discharge reputation and record of the mills that are already covered under his legislation. He will be aware that in most areas the mills failed even current regulations. I am not suggesting that he cannot improve the regulations to cover more mills, but the regulations already in place are not being applied.

I want to reiterate my position that it is not necessary to reinvent the wheel, he must start applying the law that already exists and coming down hard on companies that are flaunting the present law. It is not enough to say there will be new laws, we have to apply the current law or the Government will become a laughing stock and the companies will continue to discharge effluent, which is potentially cancer-causing and which creates a situation where some communities in Canada can no longer drink their water.

It is not enough for the Government to say that it will make new regulations for the future. It has to apply the current laws. I encourage the Minister to look at his internal report which was released by Greenpeace, and which was kept secret by his Department for a couple of years, to see if he could not follow the recommendations in his own report.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I have a specific question for the Hon. Member. All Parties in the House have endorsed in one way or another the Brundtland report, the World Commission Report on the Environment, released two years ago. It deals on the one side with pollution and environmental destruction, but on the other, there is a very fundamental recommendation that applies to Canada. It is that we increase the amount of lands and conservation areas from its present level of about 5 per cent to 12 per cent.

We know, even in the area of national parks, that there are 39 bio-regions in Canada and only 20 per cent of those regions even have a small national park presence.

Would the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) support that basic recommendation, that 12 per cent of the lands in Canada be set aside in various conservation zones, keeping in mind that only 1.3 per cent of the lands in Canada right now are in national parks? I think the issue of conservation requires all-Party solidarity to move toward that 12 per cent minimum target.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I know it is not the custom of the House to thank anyone, but I would like to thank the Speaker for having put together a presentation a couple of weeks ago, which originally arose from the question of the Brazilian rain forest. While I have experience with environmental questions in relation to my own community, it was extremely effective in bringing home to me as the environment critic how quickly we are losing our own indigenous forests in Canada, which, in some cases, date back 2,000 years.

We must ensure that we do not fall into the trap of demanding action in Brazil or the Third World when, in our own areas in Canada—the most beautiful forest-laden country in the world—we are fast killing off our own forests.

I certainly agree that the Brundtland recommendation of 12 per cent should be our objective. Whether that can be achieved in this Parliament or the near future is something the Environment Committee will look at in the next couple of weeks.

Mr. Pagtakhan: Mr. Speaker, the people of Manitoba greeted with joy the announcement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) before the election that the International Centre for Sustainable Development would be established in Winnipeg. Of course, they were disappointed when they heard in the Throne Speech that the Government would only participate.

Earlier, in response to a question by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), I thought I heard from the Minister of the Environment that money is available in the present Estimates, although we do not see it very clearly.

• (1300)

I have a question for the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). Does she think it is a must, that it is fair and ethical that establishment of this Centre for Sustainable Development should start this year if it is truly within this year's budget?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, if you have been following the debate you would know that when I asked that specific question of the Minister from where the funds were coming in this year's Estimates he was unable to tell us. Basically he—

[Translation]

Essentially he appealed for supplementary Estimates.

[English]

He made an appeal, saying that maybe that matter will come up in the Supplementary Estimates.

I am disturbed and appalled that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would use an international forum like the United Nations, which is the forum that he used, in a rather convenient way, to launch this pre-electoral promise if he did not intend to follow through on it. If he gave a partisan political speech in Hamilton, people might expect him to make promises that he has no intention of delivering, and from this Prime Minister that would not be a surprise. But it was a surprise that he abused the United Nations in this way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

HEALTH SERVICES

REQUEST FOR CREATION OF SENATE COMMITTEE

Mr. Guy St–Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on May 2, Senator Paul David made a speech in the Canadian Senate in which he roundly criticized this country's health care system and even suggested a substantial increase in salaries and better working conditions for hospital nursing staff.

Dr. David stated that major capital investment was critical to meeting the needs of patients.

Canada's health care system is called the best in the world.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with Dr. David that a committee of the Senate should be appointed to review the advantages and the shortcomings of the system with the provinces, the agencies concerned and the public and propose solutions.

THE ENVIRONMENT

NORTHERN OIL AND GAS DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, today the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) meets with President Bush. Northerners and concerned Canadians hope that on his agenda for discussion with the President is the issue of proposed oil and gas development in Alaska's Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

This development is opposed by the Canadian Government, the Governments of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, and the aboriginal people in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. The environmental consequences of development in the refuge could be devastating to northern aboriginal peoples.

The Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society has written several letters to the Prime Minister urging him to raise directly with the President Canada's opposition to this proposed development.

The refuge provides important habitat for musk–oxen, grizzly and polar bears, wolves and migrating snow geese. It is also the principal calving grounds for the porcupine caribou herd, which is the main food source for about 7,000 aboriginal people in Alaska, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

President Bush has said he supports development. The U.S. Congress has yet to make a decision on this issue.

The Prime Minister should remind the President that a 1987 agreement signed by the U.S. Secretary of the Interior and the Canadian Minister of the Environment requires both countries to conserve the herd and its habitat and to avoid or minimize activities that would disrupt the herd.

The Prime Minister must tell the President directly that Canadians and northerners will not tolerate a violation of this agreement, and that they do not want oil and gas development in this refuge.

SPACE AGENCY

LOCATION OF MONTREAL SOUTH SHORE

Mrs. Pierette Venne (Saint–Hubert): Mr. Speaker, the people of the riding of Saint–Hubert proudly welcome the Canadian Space Agency. The entire South Shore of Montreal took part in the event last Tuesday.

We are convinced that Space Agency staff will appreciate the quality of life in the riding of Saint–Hubert and the entire Monteregian area, as well as the warmth of its people.

We were successful in our endeavour, thanks to an unprecedented consensus among all federal, provincial and municipal elected representatives on the South Shore.

The Space Agency is certainly a plus for the region. We worked hard to get it, and we are very proud of the result.

THE BUDGET

LEAK OF DOCUMENTS—POSSIBLE CRIMINAL ACTION

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, after the Budget leak on April 26, time and time again a number of Government Ministers referred to it as a criminal act perpetrated by a criminal or criminals. Yet they have not provided any evidence on which to base these accusations.

All of a sudden the Government is playing all of that down. Why? I have in my hand an article which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on November 27, 1984. It is entitled: "Wilson's notes admit Manitoba hardest hit". Interestingly enough, the subtitle reads: "Secret memo left in lobby".

The article goes on to state:

> The notes, together with other confidential memoranda and papers, were contained in file folders which Wilson left on a table in a downtown hotel lobby during his visit to Winnipeg yesterday.

These confidential documents were found by a reporter who later advised Wilson's aide.

I am not suggesting that this is a habit of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). However it might be wise for the Minister to check to ensure that last week's Budget leak is not linked to a similar incident.

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, a few months ago our Government announced that it would locate the space agency in the Montreal area.

All organizations on the South Shore immediately started working to get the space agency on Montreal's South Shore.

Today, I want to thank the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, the Société du Progrès de la Montérégie, the Société Montérégienne de développement, the mayors and provincial MLAs who were working together with us, the federal Members, in this major endeavour for our region.

Our thanks to the people of Montreal's South Shore!

NUCLEAR WEAPONS

LOCATION OF MISSILES

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the U.S. administration has decided to go ahead with the rail-basing of 50 MX missiles, each containing 10 nuclear warheads. Each one of these warheads is 20 times more powerful than the atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima.

One half of this system will be based near the western Canada-U.S. border. During a crisis the U.S. could utilize its proximity with Canada to avoid nuclear attack by moving the missiles closer to the Canadian border, or even across the border. Canada would be targeted in the event of a nuclear conflict.

Prior to this decision I brought the issue to the attention of this House. Then, as now, there was no Government response.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should, during the course of their meetings with American officials concerning the current NATO dispute, seek public assurances from the United States that Canadian territory will not be used for the deployment of this mobile nuclear weapons system. The Canadian Government must not allow the security and sovereignty of its people to be compromised.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PROPOSED CHANGES—CALL FOR PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, along with my colleagues the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) and Mission—Coquitlam (Ms. Langan) I met with representatives of 22 organizations whose focus is the condition in which average Canadians will find themselves and their families if the proposed changes to the unemployment insurance system are implemented.

These organizations expressed grave concerns about the Minister's proposals on working people in the country. They made it crystal clear that cross-country hearings should be held immediately so as to provide Canadians with the opportunity to educate the Government on life in the real world.

I want to assure the House and Canadians from coast to coast that the fight against the Government's theft of the benefits of unemployed Canadians and their families has just begun. After listening to the many groups represented today I know that, as with the battle over the deindexing of seniors' pensions, the determination of ordinary Canadians to defeat these changes is limitless.

TRIBUTE TO JOHN N. TURNER

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. John Turner who represents the Vancouver-Quadra riding announced his intention to resign as Leader of the Liberal Party.

Forsaking all petty partisan considerations, Mr. Speaker, I should like to pay tribute to him and emphasize that this man can serve as a model of dedication, tenacity and courage for all Canadians.

Very few people would dare face as many storms as he has. His deportment under extremely adverse circumstances has impressed a great many in the House and in the Canadian public. His admirable behaviour certainly deserves our respect, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

CUT IN VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, when the great train robbery was committed, gold was stolen from the train's cargo car. Now, the Conservative Government is going to commit an even greater train robbery of its own—it is going to steal the train itself.

The theft will not go unnoticed. It will set off alarms across this land. Alarms will ring in Atlantic Canada when The Atlantic is stolen away. Alarms will ring across the country when the Transcontinental and the Canadian are stolen away.

Alarms will ring when the environment is damaged through the use of more cars and buses, and more planes. Alarms will ring when more money is needed for the roads for those cars and buses, and when more money is needed for the airports for those planes.

Alarms will ring when a profitable tourist trade is stolen away.

It will set off a great many alarms in the provinces which will have to pick up the tab.

All of these alarms are going to be set off because Canada is a big country and Canadians still want to travel. There are people watching this theft who are going to blow the whistle on this crime. They are the Canadians who use the train, work the train, and love the train.

Alarms are going off and the Government has a responsibility to listen.

PRIME MINISTER MARGARET THATCHER

TENTH ANNIVERSARY IN OFFICE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, 10 years ago today, Margaret Thatcher moved into 10 Downing Street. It is worthy to note that the era of Thatcherism represents a fundamental transformation in British society. She has reversed the labour and socialistic policies which dominated British politics for several decades.

The Conservative Thatcher Government created the conditions and the climate which allow free enterprise to flourish. The vast majority of Britons are significantly better off today than they were 10 years ago.

Mrs. Thatcher made Britain a nation of home-owners by selling publicly owned residences to tenants. She made it a nation of shareholders by privatizing enterprises and selling shares to millions of citizens.

Bravo Maggie! You achieved an economic miracle.

LEADER OF THE LIBERAL PARTY

TRIBUTE TO RIGHT HON. JOHN TURNER

Mr. Maurizio Bevilacqua (York North): Mr. Speaker, compassionate, caring, understanding, courageous, devoted and deeply committed to the principles and philosophy of Liberalism.

I did not meet him at a cocktail reception or an extravagant dinner, but I met him while he was visiting a local food bank in Toronto. In his eyes I saw sincerity. In his words I heard honesty. On his face I saw integrity.

When he became our Leader he promised us an open and accessible Party. He chose inclusion over exclusion. I rise in this House to pay tribute and to thank the man who introduced me to the Parliament of Canada.

Today the Liberal Party meets at a crossroads, not a point of arrival but a point of departure. As we prepare to pave the way for the future of our Party and our nation, Mr. Turner, we will continue to carry the torch and to fight with the same intensity, tenacity, vigour and perseverance that you as our Leader fought for our beliefs for a just and progressive Canada.

I thank you, Sir, for all your advice and I thank you for being my Leader.

UNEMPLOYMENT

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA – ADVICE TO GOVERNMENT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, we have entered a new age in how we deal with unemployment in this country. In 1963, the Economic Council of Canada was created to help promote policies that led to full employment. We now have the Economic Council advising the Government on policies that are producing unemployment rates of 7.5 per cent nationally, and reaching 15 per cent in some parts of the country.

How does the head of the Economic Council reconcile the fact that the objective of full employment of 3 or 4 per cent is just a dream for this Government? That is simple. All she does is redefine full employment to 7.5 per cent. When unemployment rises, "Don't worry, be happy. We will just raise what we consider as the level of full employment." Full employment is now 7.5 per cent. When it reaches past 8 per cent, as projected in the Budget, then the level of full employment will be bumped up to 8 per cent. Meanwhile, with the proposed changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act, workers will be trampolined from one part of the country to another.

We have many parts of the country that are still trying to recover from the last recession. Now we have interest rates approaching the teens and the Government is proposing to slash the unemployment insurance program. We have a Government that has abdicated its responsibilities and commitments to working people.

An Hon. Member: Time.

Mr. Rodriguez: It tells them that inequality is fairness, that inaction is leadership and that unemployment is full—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, the Hon. Member's time has expired.

HEALTH

BLOOD TRANSFUSIONS TO HAEMOPHILIAC VICTIMS – HI INFECTION

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, there are 2,300 haemophiliac victims in Canada. Of these, 950 are now testing HIV positive for AIDS due to contaminated blood supplies used prior to November of 1985. As a result, these people are now innocent victims of two dreadful conditions.

Of the 950 HIV positive persons, 84 per cent are under the age of 40, 50 have died, and 50 will develop AIDS each year. We are asking the Government to not group them with the thalidomide and measles victims, but to consider them a separate group because of the lethal nature of their disease and move quickly on their requests for: Reimbursement for loss of earnings and costs of medical care; providing families with financial security upon the death of an infected person; and providing cash payment for relief of pain and suffering.

THE CONSTITUTION

STATEMENT BY FORMER LIBERAL MINISTER

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Brome—Missiquoi): In Montreal a few days ago, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Marc Lalonde, a member of the old guard of the Liberal Party, stated and I quote: "Those who suppport the Meech Lake Accord should stop moaning and repeating that the failure of this agreement would not be a disaster for this country."

Morever, with reference to the citizens of Hong Kong who are leaving to settle in Canada, he remarked to a Montreal Gazette reporter that they are not going to leave a city facing great political unrest to settle in another city facing even greater political unrest.

That a former Trudeau Minister should attack the Meech Lake Accord is not at all surprising, but I cannot help protesting with indignation when this man, a Montrealer at that, dares to declare that his city is faced with unrest.

What meaness will not commit those who want to break up Canada to return to the bad old days? What outrageous remarks are they not prepared to profer to return to an era they look upon with nostalgia?

Mr. Speaker, I say that the Hon. Members who represent the Liberal Party in this House, but especially the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) and the Hon. Member for LaSalle-Émard (Mr. Martin), an aspiring leadership candidate, should rise and denounce such statements from one of theirs.

THE ENVIRONMENT

CUT-BACKS IN PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister certainly shows lack of judgment by agreeing to be honoured for his environmental work by people who are against acid rain controls, the very day when and in the same city where he is supposed to convince the Americans of the need to reduce acid rain.

Still my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who, like the Prime Minister, makes lofty pronouncements on environmental issues and then axes programs of vital importance for the environment.

How can the Minister of Finance justify the cancellation of the national energy saving and alternate energy program? How can he justify the closing of the federal Government's twelve renewable energy offices? How can he justify the decision not to renew the reforestation agreements in this country?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the right hon. gentleman. I did not catch the entire question. If it is in relation to CREOs, yes, the Government took an examination on reduction in EMR and the research and development can go forward. That was being done in respect to alternate energy. There were a number of programs within the CREOs which we felt, now that they were transferred to Industry, was sufficient. It was for that reason, along with deficit reduction, that they were reduced or cut.

ELIMINATION OF RENEWABLE ENERGY PROGRAM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interrupt the briefing between the Minister and the Minister of Finance, but I can understand the Minister limply getting to his feet to reply to a question that the Minister of Finance should have taken responsibility for, but I admire his frankness.

What has happened here is that we have had four and a half years of cuts in the Department of the Environment, and now a partial restoration, but other Departments such as his own, Energy, Mines and Resources, have been brutally cut.

We have heard this all before. Since he has been the Minister of Finance—and I would again like to address the question to him—he has eliminated the program to help remote communities develop environmentally safe sources of energy. He has eliminated a program to help Canadians insulate their homes. He has eliminated the Atlantic Energy Conservation Program among others. Now the Minister is shutting down the alternative energy program and the renewable energy offices altogether. How can anyone take the Prime Minister down to accept that environmental award in the United States? How can we take the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister seriously when, after four and a half years, they have eliminated every program for renewable energy in Canada, programs that are essential if we are to clean up our environment and preserve our resources?

• (1420)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, what the right hon. gentleman has said is not accurate. I think he should applaud the recognition the Prime Minister is getting for the leadership he has been giving with respect to the environment. He has been receiving recognition, as did the former Minister of the Environment, from various international organizations. About the only place he is not getting that recognition is from the opposition benches.

If the hon. gentleman were to look at the Estimates for the environment, he would find that there has been a substantial increase year over year. I believe the increase is about 9.4 per cent. It is an increase rather than a reduction. I want to make the former Finance Minister understand that very clearly. As well, research in alternate energy is going forward. The right hon. member should look at previous programs such as the CHIP program and what a disaster the former Government inflicted upon many householders. Much money had to be spent to get out of some of those insulation programs. If the whole UFFI story is the way the Liberals do conservation, it does not work. It is much better to do research and development and have it transferred directly to industry as we have done.

IMPACT OF ELIMINATION OF PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I put these questions to the Minister of Finance who is crippling environmental protection with his Budget cuts. Since the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources wishes to engage me this afternoon, I will tell him that much as I have tried, I fail to be impressed with an award given to the Prime Minister in Washington by the President of U.S. Steel who is against a reduction in acid rain. That may impress the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but somehow, his attitude is not contagious on this side of the House.

I am interrupting the coaching of the Minister of Finance here. If the rhetoric of the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and now the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources could clean up the environment, we would live in a very pure and clean world, but that is not what is happening. The Government's promises on the environment stretch from here in the House of Commons up to the ozone layer and back, but they do not mean a thing to the people of Canada.

Since the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources wishes to reply, I would ask him how the elimination of renewable energy programs will help our environment. We would be very interested in that. While I am at it, since he is responding for the Minister of the Environment, will he explain to us how the redecoration of the office of his colleague, the Minister of the Environment, will help produce energy efficient offices in Canada?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the right. hon. gentleman should take a look at what the Government has done. There have been acid rain agreements. Today the Prime Minister is having discussions with President Bush. That agenda has been moved forward.

About the only thing I saw from the former Government on acid rain was that the former Minister of the Environment who was removed from his post by the right hon. gentleman has faithfully worn a "stop acid rain" lapel button. That has been the extent of their acid rain program, lapel buttons. There is a—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: I am glad I finally got their attention. There is the acid rain agreement. There were five new national parks created by the Government in its first mandate. This has been endorsed very strongly by Canadians. There was the international agreement on the ozone layer. Yes, the Government's policy has gone all the way to the ozone layer. Too bad the right hon. gentleman's policy is still in the flat earth society. The right hon. gentleman can say what he wants, but there has been—

NUCLEAR WEAPONS

TRANSPORT OF NUCLEAR REACTOR THROUGH STRAIT OF JUAN DE FUCA

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of the Environment. We know that the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Environment have hastened to Washington to accept a phoney award from a phoney group.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: I would ask the Acting Minister if, while they are in Washington, they could do something specific to help the Canadian environment. I am referring to a letter I sent to the Prime Minister yesterday about the fact that next Monday, the American Navy will begin moving a nuclear submarine reactor through the Strait of Juan de Fuca, a very turbulent strait, only 55 kilometres from Victoria. The Minister should know that the U.S. Navy's own environmental impact study admits that there is a slight possibility of an accident which would be devastating to the West Coast of Canada. Will the Prime Minister demand that the President of the United States cancel Monday's barge shipment?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have been advised that the U.S. Coast Guard has indeed confirmed that a defueled reactor from a submarine was shipped via the Strait of Juan de Fuca to the Columbia River which was entirely within U.S. waters together with a U.S. naval escort and a U.S. Coast Guard safety officer on board the towing vessel. I repeat that this was entirely within U.S. waters and it was a defueled reactor.

CALL FOR CANCELLATION OF REACTOR SHIPMENTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in fact, those were the same kinds of assurances we got during the shipment of the Exxon Valdez. We are well aware of the fact that it is within U.S. waters, but nuclear reactor accidents know no boundaries. It is the responsibility of this Government to protect the fishing industry off the West Coast and to protect the people of Victoria who have the right to feel safe.

Once again, given the close relationship between this administration and that of Washington, and given that the Prime Minister himself is in Washington today presumably to do something about the environment, will he ask the President of the United States to cancel the barge shipment which will occur on Monday and which is the first of up to 100 barges that the U.S. Navy potentially plans to ship over the next 25 years?

Ms. Copps: I'm more knowledgeable about it than you are.

Mr. Mazankowski: If you're more knowledgeable than I am, then you don't need an answer.

THE BUDGET

CLAW-BACK PENSION PROVISIONS

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): The Minister of Finance must acknowledge that he has not fully indexed the claw-back provisions in his Budget for old age pensions. That means that every year, because of inflation, more and more people will be caught. Will the Minister admit that while only 4 per cent of pension recipients will be caught today, in 20 years the figure will be 25 per cent, one in four older Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the Budget papers themselves, we say that this matter will be reviewed on an ongoing basis. In 1985, we introduced a modified indexation into the tax system. This is consistent with that indexation process. We said at that time that we would review the impact of the deindexation on an ongoing basis. In tax reform which was implemented last year, we adjusted the low income threshold so that it was raised quite significantly as a result of tax reform three years after the measure was brought in. So we are reviewing these, and we are acting when it is appropriate.

EFFECT ON INCREASING NUMBER OF CANADIANS

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): If we are talking about a vague review, how do we as Canadians know which way you are going to review it? The claw-back that is being proposed is like quicksand which more and more elderly Canadians are about to sink into. My question is: is it acceptable to the Minister that in 20 years, one in four Canadians will be caught in that quicksand?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the simple answer to that is no, it is not acceptable.

QUERY RESPECTING TAXATION OF MEDICARE

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): The Government is attempting to tax back 100 per cent of pension benefit for some Canadians today. Why should not Canadians be afraid that you will not apply the same principles to medicare in your next Budget, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and her Leader keep trying to apply this principle to medicare. I do not know what they have in mind, or what sort of fear tactics they are trying to apply. If this is part of NDP policy, let them come out with it. But it certainly is not part of Progressive Conservative government policy.

TRANSPORT

VIA RAIL SUBSIDY CUTS

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, cutbacks in subsidy support spell the end for VIA. The appointment of Ron Lawless as the president of VIA is a clear signal that VIA services will be drastically cut.

What Ron Lawless has already done to Moncton by putting 1200 CNR shop workers out of work is that today VIA Rail employees should get ready for their pink slips. Would the Minister confirm that the Government's hidden, or not so hidden agenda, is to remove or privatize passenger rail transportation?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I said yesterday. Yesterday morning we gave VIA Rail the new reference levels pertaining to Government assistance to this Crown corporation. They are geared to the Canadian taxpayer's ability to pay, which is another way of saying that we can no longer afford to spend $600 million, $700 million or $800 million a year on a passenger service of which Canadians themselves make very little use. So we have asked VIA Rail to make recommendations and come up with a work plan consistent with these reference levels, and on that basis the Government will decide what to do. Again I repeat that there is no hidden agenda behind the propositions I made to VIA Rail yesterday.

[English]

RAIL LINES IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, the former VIA president had a national dream and a national vision for VIA. This Government's only vision is to destroy our national rail service.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rideout: The Minister of Transport has stated that nine rail lines in remote areas of Canada must be maintained within the VIA financial plan. My question to the Minister of Transport is, why is there no mention of any rail line in Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the remote lines which were described yesterday are exactly the same which were supported by VIA Rail as remote lines. They have not changed. The nine lines which are there right now are the lines which were there yesterday, exactly the same.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

FISHERIES ERDA AGREEMENT IN P.E.I.

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Budget that was tabled on Thursday will shut down the town of Summerside in western Prince Edward Island. Furthermore, we cannot find in the Estimates any moneys for fisheries sub-agreements for Prince Edward Island, nor any other Maritime province. Would the Minister now stand in his place and indicate that he will sign an ERDA for fisheries with Prince Edward Island, or is it this Government's intention to close down the fisheries on the Island?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I can tell my hon. colleague that in the near future I will be very pleased to discuss fisheries or other prospective economic co-operation agreements with the Government of Prince Edward Island.

FUNDING OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the same Minister. Will the Minister give us a clear answer? Will a new agreement for fisheries be signed with Prince Edward Island immediately? If so, what level of funding will be committed to such an agreement, and what cost-sharing formula will such an agreement have? I have to say to the Minister, do not leave the P.E.I. fishermen out in the wind.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will take that as a representation and assure my hon. colleague that I will be pleased, as I said before, to enter into discussions with the Government of Prince Edward Island, the Premier and the Minister, at a time when that seems to be suitable to them, to myself and to other Ministers.

TAXATION

DEFERRED TAXES—CORPORATIONS' SHARE

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Senior citizens who are now losing some of their pension, and those families who have been hit by an additional $700 tax hike in this Budget, might be interested in the recent Statistics Canada report that last year deferred taxes of corporations reached a level of $36.1 billion. That is $6 billion more than the federal deficit. Those tax breaks when accumulated are more than the Government spends on health care, family allowance, old age security and social assistance.

I would like to ask the Minister if he projects the annual growth in deferred tax to decline, and what he is going to do to make sure these corporations pay their fair share of the tax burden?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member I think does know that over the course of the last four years we have shut down a number the tax preferences that corporations could take advantage of which allowed them to reduce their tax liability. Those changes have been made. They are starting to have their impact. The corporations which have not been paying taxes are paying significant amounts of tax right now. In addition to that, we have introduced a large corporation tax which will generate a billion dollars more revenue for the Government of Canada. So we are acting on the very things that the Hon. Member is talking about right now.

REQUEST THAT INTEREST BE CHARGED ON DEFERRED TAXES

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that in the second year after the so-called tax reform, the deferral accumulation went up by $4 billion. Now in the time it has taken him to answer my question, corporate deferred taxes will have increased by $70,000. By this time tomorrow, the deferred taxes will have grown by an additional $10 million. Why does the Minister not do the right thing and charge interest on these deferred taxes?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me say to the Hon. Member that she is misusing this term completely. It is not moneys that are owed by the corporations to the Government. The Hon. Member from Regina says, no. It is an accounting term. It does not represent moneys owed to the Government of Canada. Under the provisions of the Income Tax Act, corporations are allowed to pay less tax than their book amount will show. But we have reduced the number of ways that corporations are able to do this so that there will be less of this going on in future than would be the case had we not made the changes. So the Hon. Member is saying exactly the same things that we are. We are committed to getting corporations to pay more tax, and more than that, we are acting on that commitment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDUSTRY

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—LOSS OF CONTRACT FOR WINNIPEG COMPANY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. The Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement has claimed yet another Canadian victim.

LGM Graphics, a long-established Winnipeg firm, has announced that it has lost a major contract for the telephone directory in the City of Winnipeg to R. R. Donnelly, a multi-giant printing company in Chicago, as a direct consequence of changes under the FTA. This will cause a loss of jobs and a loss of millions of dollars to the Manitoba economy, and will threaten the potential loss of movement of that company to North Dakota.

Considering that the FTA is directly responsible for this economic blow, I ask the Government to take responsibility for those lost jobs. In addition to offering assistance, I ask the Minister if he will make direct representation to the Tory provincial Minister in Manitoba who is responsible for telephones and ask him to cancel the contract and save the jobs for Canadians?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, under the Free Trade Agreement the yellow page directories had a base rate of 24.3 per cent protection which will be eliminated over a five-year period. However, there is no tariff at all that prevents Canadian firms from seeking the business and competing for the business from the United States.

If the hon. gentleman will listen to my answer, he will learn as he usually does from my answers. The Manitoba telephone system is a provincial Crown corporation. As a provincial Crown corporation it is not required by the Free Trade Agreement to open any contract to American bidders. Obviously it must have felt that a saving of $2 million was very significant for its customers. It is responsible to boards of public utilities and the like. It must have felt that it owed it to its customers to accept a lower bid, but it did not have to. It is not bound by the Free Trade Agreement.

IMPACT ON PRINTING INDUSTRY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): If the Minister knew anything at all about the Free Trade Agreement, he would know that this is just the tip of the iceberg and what we will be facing is a loss of printing jobs across Canada, whether they are public or private companies, because of the ability of the giant printing industry in the United States to take those jobs away.

Why is it that the Department of Industry and Technology stated in its industry profile that the Free Trade Agreement will bring about a major negative impact on the printing industry with the loss of thousands of jobs? Why has the Government neglected to take any action at all to help that industry?

Is it because the Minister and the Government are simply afraid of offending the Americans because of the Free Trade Agreement by offering direct assistance to Canadian industry?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that such an experienced Member of Parliament would not be able to pick up on my original answer and realize the serious error and not even ask a supplementary question.

The point is that provincial Crown corporations are not bound by the Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): They have to meet a tariff, John. The tariff goes down.

Mr. Crosbie: They can either accept the lower bid from the United States bidders, or not accept it at all. It gives our printers and Canadians a great opportunity to secure business in the United States of America.

Don't be small-minded protectionists. Think big. Don't be afraid of competition. It gives us a great opportunity to get into the huge American market. It is 10 times the size of our own market.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

WORKFORCE REDUCTION AT DE HAVILLAND

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Science and Technology.

In light of the decision this week by Boeing of Seattle to reduce its workforce at the de Havilland plant in my riding by 700 jobs, and the news that de Havilland will not be allowed by Boeing to proceed with its newly designed 400 series of Dash-8s, which is a stretched version of the Dash-8 on the cutting edge of world aerospace technology—

Mr. Valcourt: Why not?

Mr. Kaplan: Well, this is what I want to ask.

Will the Government recognize the mistake it has made in the loose contract with Boeing, and call on the company to attempt to save the 400 version and the 700 jobs?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, when Boeing bought de Havilland from the Government, the Hon. Member predicted that this was going to end up in loss of jobs, and so on.

Mr. Lapierre: That's what is happening.

Mr. Allmand: It's starting.

Mr. Andre: As a matter of fact, even after the 700-staff reduction takes place, there will still be 1,500 more employees working there than when the company was sold.

I would think that the Hon. Member would rise and apologize for the inaccurate predictions that he made in the first instance and congratulate the Government for the wise decision it took.

CONTRACT WITH BOEING—REPORTED CANCELLATION OF 400 SERIES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Government's sympathy will be great news for the 700 people who are losing their jobs.

Will the President of the Treasury Board tell us what clause of the contract, that he was so proud to negotiate to sell de Havilland to Boeing, is available to protect the 400 series of Dash-8?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in reacting to the preamble of the Hon. Member I may say that the 1,500 people who are working today as a result of Boeing buying this company are indeed grateful for the decisions taken by the Government. The Hon. Member should appreciate that. There is no connection. If the 400 series makes sense, Boeing will be eligible for the assistance programs the Government has under the Defence Industry Productivity Program.

Mr. Kaplan: Why aren't they doing it?

Mr. Andre: Well, that is a decision for Boeing to make. The Hon. Member is reaching a judgment that there is some connection between this lay-off and the future plans that the company has not made and of which I am not aware. The Hon. Member is looking around for some bogyman or the sky falling in. The sky is not falling in.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He's looking for an answer, Harvie.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL—REPORTED EXPANSION

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Transport.

Recent media reports have stated that a decision to build a fourth and fifth runway at Lester B. Pearson Airport has already been made by the Department of Transport. I am sure all Members of the House realize the implications of such a decision on the people of Mississauga where the airport is located.

Can the Minister either confirm or deny this report? If the answer is in the negative, could the Minister give us some indication as to when such a decision will be made?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the Hon. Member that the press reports are premature, as far as the decisions are concerned on the runways at Pearson Airport.

I am very grateful to the approximately 200 people I met with in southwestern Ontario and the Toronto area for their advice on what should be done at Pearson. Their comments, and the Department's investigation, are well under way. We will have an answer to that and other questions on Pearson in the early summer.

FISHERIES

NATIONAL SEA PRODUCTS LTD.—CLOSURE OF PLANTS IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question about National Sea Products Limited to my good friend, the Minister for International Trade.

I would like to ask the Minister a question about the action taken by Mr. Gordon Cummings, the head of the National Sea Products firm. During the Free Trade debate, Mr. Cummings was a strong supporter of the free trade issue. He was later appointed by the Government to the de Grandpré Commission. He stated: "When the free trade deal goes through, in the case of Nova Scotia operations alone, I am confident we would be adding 400 people to our workforce as the tariffs come off".

Today the President of National Sea Products, the same person who predicted the 400 jobs, is announcing the closure of three more plants in Atlantic Canada with the loss of hundreds more jobs. I want to know what the Minister is going to do about it, considering the role he asked Mr. Cummings to play in this debate?

• (1450)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think this is the first question I have had the pleasure of answering from my hon. buddy from British Columbia. The situation with respect to National Sea Products is this: It has no connection whatsoever with the Free Trade Agreement—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Believe me, Mr Speaker, the Free Trade Agreement cannot put fish into the water. That is beyond the Free Trade Agreement.

I think Hon. Members may as well realize that there were serious problems in the fishery in the East Coast of Canada due to a combination of excess plant capacity and poor markets. For example, the number of fish plants in Nova Scotia increased from just over 200 in the early 1980s to almost 400 last year. The cod stocks off the province have fallen by 20 per cent in the last three years. That has left a lot of idle capacity. That is the problem that National Sea is dealing with. If it were not for the Free Trade Agreement, National Sea would be in a far worse position today than it is.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answer is stretching our relationship in buddyhood.

LOSS OF JOBS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): It is true that we cannot put fish in the water but the owners of the plants decide where they put the fish in the cans. Since the Free Trade Agreement, the fish go in the cans in American plants while Canadian plants close down. That is what is happening. This is the same sell-out of British Columbia where the Minister said we would not lose a single job.

Is the Minister prepared to stand by his word and fight for the rights of those working people in Atlantic Canada, or has he given up to dedicate his career entirely to be a comic?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman certainly does not know much about the fishery in the East Coast of Canada because we are not putting the fish in the can on the East Coast of Canada. National Sea is preparing fresh fish fillets, frozen fish fillets, fillets of every type. They are not putting fish in the can. Their problem is that it is not possible to put anything in a package or can unless it is caught first. There is a serious diminution in the fish available to be caught, a vast increase in the number of fish plants and a serious problem in eastern Canada which we will have to help resolve. I am dedicated to helping resolve the East Coast fishery position.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton West, on a single supplementary question.

AIRPORTS

FUTURE OF HAMILTON AIRPORT

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the question regarding Pearson International Airport. Given the circumstances at Pearson International Airport, and that the Minister of Transport has stated that Hamilton Airport is being seriously considered in the over-all plans for southwestern Ontario, will the Minister of State for Transport describe to us the current negotiations being held about that viable alternative called Hamilton Airport?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, let me quote the regional chairman of the Hamilton Wentworth area who said: "Everything is coming together very nicely and all the work of the last three months by the airport committee and the regional council is starting to pay off". It is paying off in Hamilton. We now have United Parcel Service that has offered a service out of Hamilton. We are now flying to Minaki Lodge in Northern Ontario, for those who want to hunt and fish. More will be happening at Hamilton Airport.

THE BUDGET

HEALTH SERVICES—REASONS FOR BUDGET CUTS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Tory—I repeat: Tory—Senator, Dr. Paul David, the eminent heart surgeon and founder of the Montreal Institute of Cardiology, stated in a speech in the Senate that our health care system was in very serious trouble because of a lack of funding, and that overcrowding in emergency wards, long waiting lists, the closing of hospital beds and deteriorating equipment were all due to a lack of money. He also said because of our ageing population and increasingly sophisticated medical procedures, the health care system will become increasingly visible and unbearable to the ill.

Does the Minister have an answer to the words spoken by an eminent physician and can he explain to the House why he opted for a second 1 per cent deindexation of the federal Government's transfer payments for health care, instead of taxing the banking system?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are taxing the bank system. We have applied a new tax to the bank system in this Budget.

Contrary to what some people are saying on the new goods and services tax, that will also apply to the banking system. We are dealing with the banks in the reforms of taxation.

The Hon. Member asked a question about Established Programs Financing. I said to the Hon. Member in the House yesterday, and I think I have said it to a number of other Members, that we are not decreasing funding for the Established Programs Financing. Funding is increasing by $25 billion over the course of the next five years, compared to the last five years. There will not be less money available, there will be more money available.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER JUSTIFY BUDGET CUTS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer the question. He is acting like a Minister without a heart, without any compassion for the ill. Dr. David is a physician, not a Bay Street broker, and he spoke like a physician. Even before you brought down your Budget, there wasn't enough money in the health care system. Why did you reduce the rate by which these moneys are increased? Why didn't you give more money to the sick, to save human lives across Canada? Why destroy the health care system?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will get nowhere with his cheap personal shots. Let's stick to the issue.

Let me stick clearly to the issue here and be quite up-front. The measures in this Budget are designed to help us maintain good social programs, programs that we, on all sides of the House, are very much committed to. The increase of our interest costs and funded debt has gone from 12 cents of every tax dollar to 25 cents, to 31 cents last year, and now has jumped to 35 cents this year. If we are going to ignore this debt problem then we are in a lot of trouble. That is why we are doing everything we can to avoid that problem. We are doing everything we can to maintain these social programs that are important to Canadians across the country.

LEAK OF DOCUMENT—ALLEGED CRIMINAL ACTION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last Thursday, the Minister stood in the House and characterized the Budget leak, as reported at page 1005 of Hansard, as, "a wilful criminal act" in order to justify his actions of the night before. He called it a wilful criminal act. In view of the position of the Minister of Justice, is the Minister of Finance now prepared to withdraw that assertion?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House once again that there is an ongoing criminal investigation by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and any discussion either in the House or outside the House while that investigation is going on would be inappropriate.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER WITHDRAW WORDS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Finance and I hope to get an answer from the Minister.

Last week, the Minister of Finance said in the House that the Budget leak was caused by a criminal act. I would like to know whether the Minister of Finance is now prepared to rise in the House to withdraw what he said.

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, it is the same question, in French. As my colleague said, the RCMP is investigating all the circumstances around this matter, and I do not think it would be appropriate to comment, either in the House or outside, Mr. Speaker.

REMOVAL OF OATS FROM CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds but since he is not in the House I will direct it to the Minister of Agriculture. Earlier this year the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds announced that oats would be removed from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. He indicated then and again on later occasions that he had consulted with producers and was simply acting on their wishes.

If it can be demonstrated that a large majority of producers do not in fact want oats removed from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, will the Minister then heed those wishes and retain oats under the Canadian Wheat Board?

Points of Order

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. colleague has informed this House and others throughout the country, there were ongoing consultations and discussions about this matter for a period of two years. He has responded in an appropriate fashion and the policy will remain as announced.

RESULTS OF DECIMA POLL

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the same Minister. I am not sure with whom the Minister has been consulting, but according to a Decima poll scheduled to be released on Monday—a poll of which I am sure the Minister is aware—two-thirds of producers in Western Canada do not want oats removed from the Wheat Board's jurisdiction.

Why does the Minister not face the facts? Why does he not let producers decide whether or not oats should be removed from the Canadian Wheat Board? Let the producers decide.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, I am sure, is familiar with a number of farm organizations that exist in Western Canada. For example, the United Grain Growers, the Canadian Wheat Growers' Association, the Western Barley Growers' Association, the Prairie Canola Growers' Association, the Alberta Pork Producers Development, the Alberta Sheep and Wool Commission, the Cattlemen's Association, the Manitoba Farm Business Association, the Manitoba Hog Producers Marketing Board, the Saskatchewan Marketing Board, the Government of Manitoba, the Government of Alberta and the Government of Saskatchewan. They all approve of this policy. Why does the Hon. Member not approve of it as well?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, will the Government House Leader give a statement of business that he intends to call for the coming week?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise that tomorrow, May 5, will be an allotted day. Monday, May 8 through to Thursday, May 11 we will deal with days three, four, five and six of the Budget debate.

POINTS OF ORDER

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As you are no doubt aware, I raised a question of privilege dealing with Estimates in this House on April 6 and your Honour handed down a learned ruling on Monday. I am in no way, of course, commenting on that ruling, but I have an additional point of order with respect to the Bill that is to be introduced this evening at the conclusion of the sitting at 5.45 p.m. I wanted to raise the point now to avoid a misunderstanding at that time.

What is happening tonight, from my review of the draft bill, is that we are being asked to approve the use of the Governor General's warrants during the period from January of this year until April 1. I had my concerns about the April 1 warrant and it will be dealt with later, but the three warrants issued on January 19, February 16 and March 23 purported to grant to the Government the right to spend over $1.5 billion dollars. All of the items are contained, sir, in a statement on Governor General's warrants that was tabled in this House earlier in the session in conformity with the Financial Administration Act.

The difficulty is that the Supplementary Estimates, which form the basis for many of the votes contained in the statement on special Governor General's warrants that was tabled, of course have never been tabled in this House because the House has not been sitting since December of last year. The Government saw fit not to table any Supplementary Estimates during our short session in December for reasons best known to itself.

The problem that I feel we have to deal with here is that the Supplementary Estimates have never been detailed for us. We have never been advised as to what additional funds will be granted by these special Governor General's warrants out of what were Supplementary Estimates. It seems to me that a report ought to have been forthcoming to this House to detail that. In addition, the House will really never get an opportunity through the usual committee structure to study these Estimates.

In your ruling on Monday or Tuesday—I am sorry, I have forgotten—Your Honour detailed explicitly how under the new House procedures Estimates are normally referred to a committee. But the Supplementary Estimates, which form the basis for these Governor General's warrants and which we are approving today in the Bill that is to be introduced at 5.45 p.m., will preclude this House from then considering those Supplementary Estimates. In other words, they will have had in theory and in fact three days of debate in this House on Opposition days and that is it. We will never get to review those Supplementary Estimates again. I protest this outrage.

In order to demonstrate that I think it is an unfair procedure, I looked at what happened in 1980—not that 1980 is any precedent because, as I maintained before, the actions of the Government in this connection are totally unprecedented. These warrants have never been used before between sessions of Parliament as has been done in this case.

Without going into that issue again—although I stress that that outrage remains—in 1980 the Governor General issued certain warrants before Parliament was recalled following the election and after the defeat of the Government of the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). The President of the Treasury Board at that time, Mr. Donald Johnston, prepared a little booklet explaining what had happened with all the Supplementary Estimates, the additional Supplementary Estimates and the Main Estimates and he tabled this booklet in the House of Commons. I have obtained a copy from the library. It is here. The Government of that day was forthcoming. It explained everything it had done and produced all the evidence to the House. In this case, sir, I submit the Government has not produced all this material and yet we are being asked today to rush through this Bill, in effect approving all these Supplementary Estimates.

Through you, Mr. Speaker, my request is that, first, if this is in order, and I question whether the whole procedure is, I would ask the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) to agree today, before we come to this Bill, to undertake to introduce a motion to refer the statement on special Governor General's warrants to the appropriate committees of this House so that the committees can review what should have been Supplementary Estimates for the last financial year. We will then be able to see where the Government has transferred money from one vote to another, where it obtained additional approval by Governor General's warrant instead of presenting Estimates to this House in the usual way. We can then review all of this material because really we are not getting an opportunity to do so in light of the fact that this Bill has to be passed tonight under the Special Order that has been approved by the House.

Points of Order

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few brief comments and perhaps ask the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) to respond. I rise in support of what my colleague from Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) has raised. As you will know, your Honour, both my colleague from Kingston and the Islands and myself have questioned before the procedure used by the Government to obtain these Governor General's warrants in the past.

Your Honour has decided that this was not a case of privilege. Of course, the Government should not interpret that to say that its use of these warrants was appropriate. We still maintain that they were not. However, my colleague has brought to the attention of the House the fact that there is at least a precedent which relates remotely to this case. The case prior was obviously not as severe as the one that is before us now. I choose the word "remotely" advisedly for that reason.

I submit that at the very least the Government should commit itself today to referring this particular item to the Government Operations Committee of the House of Commons. By reason of the fact that the issue belongs to Treasury Board, it is automatically one that can be raised by the Government Operations Committee. That committee, like other committees, can order its own business.

More specifically, if the Government House Leader were willing to indicate to the House that he is prepared to have this issue discussed fully by the Government Operations Committee, then perhaps we could have a compromise acceptable to all sides of the House. If this were done, then the committee could look at what was done in the previous case and make specific recommendations regarding the use and/or misuse of Governor General's warrants in the future.

I hope the Government House Leader feels that this is appropriate. I remind him that at one time in the past when his Party was in opposition this was an issue that was raised then, since it was felt to be important. I remind the Chair as well that we are indeed the only nation in the British Commonwealth of Nations that still has such an instrument as Governor General's warrants. Even in the Mother of Parliaments in Great Britain such an instrument does not exist. Even in cases in which the House is defeated by lack of confidence, Parliament resumes sitting briefly in order to grant supply to the Government for a reasonable period of time until such time as the House can be recalled after an election.

For those reasons we are looking for the co-operation of the Government. We are looking for the assistance of the Chair in the matter that has been brought to Your Honour's attention by my colleague from Kingston and the Islands.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to my colleague's attention two facts. I am sure that the record is clear.

In terms of the warrants, as was stated, there were warrants issued on January 19, 1989; February 16, 1989; and March 23, 1989. At those times we met the criteria set out under the Financial Administration Act to require that these warrants be issued. The criteria we were following were the following. The first was that Parliament was not in session. Parliament was not in session.

The second was that there was an urgent requirement. As President of the Treasury Board I assured myself that there was an urgent requirement. The third was that no appropriations were available. We verified that no appropriations were available.

Mr. Boudria: Of course they were available.

Mr. de Cotret: Given the fact that Parliament was not in session, when Parliament came back we had a very extensive—

Mr. Boudria: You only prorogued it at the beginning of March.

Mr. de Cotret: Could I finish, Mr. Speaker?

When Parliament came back we had extensive disclosure. For the first time in the use of Governor General's warrants we gave as much information as we would usually do for Supplementary Estimates.

The next point I want to make is that on April 1 we asked for a warrant to the amount of $6.175 million for 45 days.

Mr. Boudria: We are not talking about that one.

Mr. de Cotret: I would like to tell my colleague opposite that that is included in the Estimates. It is included in the Bill that will be debated today. That Bill and all items contained in it will be referred to committee and subject to Parliament's final approval. The procedure has been forthright and up front. I do not see that there is any difficulty. In terms of the interim supply Bill, the warrant is fully included in the totals within that Bill.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, with respect, the Minister has missed my point. I am not arguing about the April 1 warrant. I agree that we will have ample time to consider that as supply days go on and the Estimates have been referred to the committees. I am referring to the warrants for the financial year ending March 31, 1989. Those warrants are being approved in this interim supply Bill. Clause 3 of the Bill confirms those warrants. They will be gone. All the material contained in the book that the Minister tabled in the House, that is, the statement on special Governor General's warrants, will now be passed and approved by the House as a result of the passage of this Bill which will go through this afternoon according to the order made April 4.

Thus we will not have an opportunity to review what would have been Supplementary Estimates. Had this unusual and highly irregular procedure not taken place, we would have seen them referred to the standing committees of the House where they would be reviewed. That is my point. I am asking the Minister to deal with it and allow those matters to be referred to the committee notwithstanding the passage of this Bill.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I appreciate that this is an opposition day. We want to be debating the motion which the New Democratic Party has put forward. I do not want to infringe upon that courtesy at all.

My hon. friend referred to what a previous President of the Treasury Board did. I do not believe he specifically referred to Supplementary Estimates flowing from those warrants. The question is, and this question was argued previously, whether or not there was a breach of privilege in the use of the special warrants. I believe that in the ruling Your Honour made you were quite clear that there was no question of privilege. If my hon. friends opposite want to challenge that ruling, then they should do it in another forum.

Mr. Boudria: We are not challenging the Speaker, come on. You know better than that.

Mr. Lewis: The question is: Will the Opposition have an opportunity to review the Supplementary Estimates? Obviously, there will be an opportunity within the review of the Estimates. I have never yet seen a narrow treatment of Estimates in committee. I am sure that the Ministers who go before the committees on the various Estimates for 1989–90 will be fully prepared to deal with any Estimates that are contained within the special warrants.

I would suggest that if this had been brought up in the House Leaders' meeting we would have had an opportunity to discuss it rather than to discuss it here on the floor of the House. I do not believe that there is any point of order. I think we should proceed with the New Democratic Party's opposition day motion and get on with debate.

Mr. Speaker: I will reserve for at least a few minutes on this matter.

I would like to draw to the attention of Hon. Members comments that I made several days ago. Hon. Members might want to consider them. I quote from them as they were reported at page 1179 of Hansard:

> While Members may complain that they do not have an opportunity to examine these expenditures before they have been allotted, the very nature of special warrants calls for the approval of the House after the fact. The cure for that complaint lies more properly within the legislative process by amending the Financial Administration Act to the greater satisfaction of the majority of Hon. Members in the House.

Hon. Members might want to look at that citation.

The second point is that I have no authority to refer this matter to the committee.

The third point is that it may well be that both sides would want to have a discussion as to the subject of the matter. It may be the wish of Members to come back to advise the Chair that what seems to be the essential request of the Opposition might have met with favour by the Government. However, that is something I cannot foretell at the moment.

In any event, I will consider the matter. I know that it is a matter of concern to both the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands and the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

At this point we should proceed with the debate.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise very briefly on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I would remind Hon. Members that on this point of order they are taking the time of the debate.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I only want to indicate on behalf of my colleague that in no way are we attempting to challenge the previous ruling of the Speaker made earlier this week on the question of privilege. I want to clarify that.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. I understand that. I understand the argument, too. I think it might be helpful if Hon. Members read the ruling of several days ago.

In any event, I will consider the matter. However, now, I think in fairness to the New Democratic Party we should proceed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 81—THE ENVIRONMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent that this House condemn the Government for failing to ensure fairness and equality to all Canadians, and for failing to make protection of the environment a priority.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to speak to an Opposition motion that, I believe, mentions the environment. Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, read the Opposition motion for today's debate.

> That this House condemn the Government for failing to ensure fairness and equality to all Canadians, and for failing to make protection of the environment a priority.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is unfortunate that a leader of the Opposition, though not the Official Opposition, should move a motion in the House on an opposition day, a motion so vague, so unspecific and so lacking in substance, and that the House should take a whole day to talk about a motion that means absolutely nothing. As I said, it is about fairness and equality and about failing to make protection of the environment a priority.

Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the NDP had been specific about the Government's failings with respect to fairness and equality and the environment, I think we would have been able to provide a serious and sensible response to the points raised in such a motion. Especially, Mr. Speaker, when we are talking about the environment. In fact, I don't think the environment should be treated as a partisan issue in this House. I think the environment is something Canadians want to hear more about and they also want some action, whether we are talking about, the atmosphere, our water, our soil, our personal well-being and our quality of life. It should not be a partisan issue in this House, since all three, in fact all four parties represent a population that is concerned about the environment. Unfortunately, we see once again that the Opposition Parties are making this a partisan issue.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard), the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean, made a speech this morning which I think—

Mrs. Duplessis: An excellent speech!

Mr. Vincent: An excellent speech, said the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis). He made a speech which, I think, touched on most of the points that should have been raised by the Leader of the NDP on Opposition day in a logical and normal motion.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to give a short rundown of what this Government has done for the environment during the past four years. We had the Canadian Environmental Protection Act—a first—which is straight to the point about the environment in this country. Last year, we had the Ozone Protocol. We said that as of December 1, 1990, there would be no more leaded gas in Canada. We had legislation to protect wild life, another first. We are working on a document in connection with the International Convention on the Atmosphere.

There was the Canada Water Preservation Act. As you know, the Prime Minister of Canada is working very hard on the acid rain issue, and is putting pressure on the United States to have this settled within a reasonable timeframe.

Going back in time to 1984, Mr. Speaker, you may recall that the former Liberal Government's file on acid rain was not much thicker than the two covers put together. But since 1984 the Prime Minister of Canada and the various Environment Ministers—including incumbent Minister Lucien Bouchard—have worked on this issue with the United States.

We also know that so far seven of the ten provinces have signed an acid rain agreement with this Progressive Conservative Government, a monetary agreement and an agreement concerning the environment.

In June 1988, less than a year ago, it was announced that $110 million would be earmarked for cleaning up the St. Laurence River. Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that I was in my riding office in Trois-Rivières on that day, and I can still remember getting phone calls from constituents who congratulated the Government and the Prime Minister of Canada for doing something to clean up the St. Lawrence, not only in words but by providing the funds needed to restore the river to the condition it was in years and years ago.

In 1989, Mr. Speaker, $90 million will be spent to promote local cleaning-up operations.

Ninety million is a lot of money, Mr. Speaker, and again we owe this to the Minister and his department.

In the House this morning Opposition Members complained about the lack of funds in the Department of the Environment. Unfortunately—because the environment should not be a partisan issue—Members on the other side of the House chose not to mention the fact that the budget of Environment Canada has been increased by 9.4 per cent this year. That, Mr. Speaker, is the biggest departmental increase in 17 years, not one, two or three years, but 17 years, the biggest increase, 9.4 per cent, but they forgot to mention that.

Both Opposition parties also neglected to point out, where they would take the extra money they want to spend on the Department of Environment and all other departments.

Mr. Speaker, all we hear from the Opposition is we should put more money into the environment, child care, this and that, and I could go on and on.

This is too easy, Mr. Speaker! We all know that as Members it is much more rewarding and gratifying to give than to cut funding. But the major question in 1989 is this: Where is the money going to come from, the millions and billions of dollars the Opposition is calling for in every area, when we have a $320 billion national debt that is increasing by $3 million an hour, some $80 million a day?

Mr. Speaker, where did that debt originate? It originated in spending, not in the Department of Environment but everywhere! The previous Government had been throwing money around for 20 years and that spending did not necessarily benefit the country. But it is responsible for this country today being overburdened with debt, so specific measures must be taken to eventually, in the near future bring the national debt, the annual deficit under control, as well as the debt service charges.

Mr. Speaker, when you have to spend 35 cents out of every dollar earned on interest payments on your debt, without repaying that debt itself, certainly you are in big trouble. But this is the situation this Government and this country find themselves in, because of the debt situation we inherited. Like it or not, this is the inheritance we were elected to manage, and this is what we are doing, Mr. Speaker!

• (1530)

Let me review rapidly the election promises made by the NDP on environment matters. I will not go into all their promises, Mr. Speaker, because I would still be here tomorrow morning.

They referred to a Water Act. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Environment Minister (Mr. L. Bouchard) and his Department are presently working on that. They promised they would ban water exports. Mr. Speaker, in 1987, that is a year and a half ago, we stated we would not export water!

They said they would give money to help build water treatment plants. In November 1987, Mr. Speaker, we did that.

They promised $120 million more per year for the Department of Environment. Mr. Speaker, I mentioned the 9.4 per cent increase, but I did not mention an increase of some $800 million per year earmarked by other departments for environment purposes, including the Department of Research and Development and the Department of Science and Technology. So, a number of other departments also spend money for the environment, a total of about $800 million. I think we can forget about this NDP promise.

Finally, they proposed to amend the Criminal Code so that polluters would be prosecuted. Mr. Speaker, this provision exists already. There is a provision in the Criminal Code to the effect that all those who break a law, whether in the area of environment or elsewhere, can be prosecuted.

As you can see, we have already fulfilled in part or are in the process of fulfilling the promises which the NDP made during the election campaign. For us, these promises are facts and realities.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I feel I must suggest to the NDP Leader that the next time there is an Opposition Day on which the House will have to deal for a whole day with a similar motion, he should move a motion which would emphasize facts and raise definite issues, Mr. Speaker, nothing similar to this motion which states:

> That this House condemns the Government for failing to ensure fairness and equality to all Canadians, and for failing to make protection of the environment a priority.

With a motion such as this, Mr. Speaker, what can the Members of this House do? How could this Government reply objectively and try to help the Opposition understand, because sometimes they have a hard time understanding? How can we deal with such a motion—not even four lines, Mr. Speaker, only three lines and a half—which says nothing?

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the NDP Leader should do some soul- searching and make sure that the next time we have an Opposition Day, we will have a more interesting issue to address.

[English]

Mr. Funk: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his speech and congratulate him on his interest in the environment. As the Minister mentioned this morning, I wish him luck in turning this Commons green. That caucus is so blue that I would be surprised if they got to turquoise in their efforts.

I wish to speak on the environment from a Saskatchewan perspective. It took a court decision to order the Government of Canada to do an environmental impact assessment on the Rafferty—Alameda dam. The court essentially told the Government to protect the environment, not the PC Party. We heard yesterday in the House that soil conservation agreements which are badly needed because the dust is blowing again in Saskatchewan have been held up for several years. In my own constituency of Prince Albert—Churchill River, friends of the Conservative Party are promoting a free enterprise nuclear reactor. They are going around to the Indian bands saying that there is limitless federal money available for them to invest in this free enterprise reactor.

In light of those developments in my own province, does the Hon. Member blame the people of Saskatchewan for being a little bit cynical about some of the talk they are hearing about the environment from this Government?

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to my colleague that over $10 million has been spent on agriculture alone. Since he mentioned the speech made by the Minister this morning, I would also like to remind him of the continued commitment of the Minister of the Environment, the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Bouchard), to the cause of the environment. I had the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to welcome Minister Bouchard to my constituency less than two weeks ago when he spoke at a fund-raising dinner which, by the way, was a big success.

In his speech at the dinner, Minister Bouchard talked about his involvement, his work and his determination since being appointed to that position. He is especially determined to amend the 1971 legislation which, as you know, only affects paper mills built after 1971 and to introduce a new law ensuring that paper mills, an important industry in my region, stop polluting and become responsible corporate citizens who obey the law and can make economic progress while respecting the environment and the citizens of my region.

Since you are indicating, Mr. Speaker, that my time is up, I will stop here.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. I recognize the Hon. Member for Mission—Coquitlam on debate.

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, there is an old Chinese proverb that says that a journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step. Thursday, the Government took the first giant step toward turning social policy in Canada into welfare policy.

The first words in the Budget speech were: "This Budget is about the future of Canada". I suggest that the first words should have been: "This Budget is about the survival of Canadians".

The budget speech goes on to say that it is about what we must do to respond to the challenges and opportunities of a changing world, to assert our sovereignty as a confident and mature nation, to meet our new and continuing priorities as a people. What are those priorities?

Have they changed so drastically that the Government can be allowed to meet its deficit responsibility with further attacks on the family, with further attacks on our children, with further attacks on the elderly, with attacks on women, with attacks on the unemployed, with attacks on ethnic groups, with attacks on the working poor?

The budget speech refers to valued social programs, high standards of living, economic opportunities, sovereignty at home and respect abroad, and responsible government, that this is the Canada we must leave to our children. I submit that we are in fact maintaining a high standard of living for those Canadians who already enjoy a high standard of living and are condemning those Canadians who are struggling to survive.

We are planning deficit reduction at the wrong end of the scale and trying to sell it as a program to save the futures of our children. It is telling Canadian children "do not worry that you have no shoes, do not worry that you are hungry, do not worry that there is no one to look after you while your folks work and, for goodness sake, do not worry that you have no roofs over your heads". Do without these things now, and the Minister of Finance guarantees that when you grow up you will inherit a fully paid for Rolls Royce.

I say, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Finance and his colleagues, were they in the House, that no one is fooled by this. No one is going to buy the argument except those who will profit by it, and those surely are not the children of Canada or their families. The Government would have us believe that it is spending more than ever on the things that are important to Canadian families. Is it indeed? I submit that the smoke and mirrors of numbers is wearing mighty thin. This Government can move numbers around and tell Canadians it is not going to hurt them, but they are not going to buy it.

Hon. Members on the Government side of the House may ask: What is the Member from Mission—Coquitlam saying? We are spending $2.7 million of Canadians' money to prove to them that what we are telling them is the truth, using very high priced wordsmiths to put forward our argument. What this Hon. Member from Mission—Coquitlam is saying is that Canadians are not fooled. The retired millworker in Mission—Coquitlam is not fooled. He knows that today it is the retired magnate who still has a taxable income of $50,000, but tomorrow it will be the retired secretary whose income, because of inflation, will be $30,000. If he lives long enough, he just might see his children, no matter what their occupations, retired to the same kind of tax grab as announced on pensions last week.

The single mother in Mission—Coquitlam, indeed in any riding in Canada, is not fooled. She knows that today it is the parent whose net earnings are $50,000 who is having her family allowance grabbed back. But in 20 years, it will be her, whose annual income is $21,000 today, who will lose.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, do the Hon. Members on the Government side of the House honestly believe that Canadians are fooled when they are told that the new sales tax that is coming down the pipe is going to be good for them because it is good for big business and because it is good for the Government? Do mothers really believe that paying service taxes on music lessons, haircuts and food is good for them and good for their children? I think not, Mr. Speaker.

I first got involved in politics in my union, the typographical union, and in my community in British Columbia over the issue of child care. It was 1970 and I was a single mother working shift work. The only licensed child care, if you could get it, was from 9 to 5 Monday to Friday. That was 19 years ago. That child is now 23 years old, and still there is a shortage of over a million child care spaces in this country. The Government, in its last term, introduced a child care Bill that was universally rejected as totally inadequate. The Government received input from all across the country. There was some hope that a new Minister would take the counsel of all those Canadians who deliver child care and who need child care to introduce a Bill to this House that would fill the need of Canadian families. What did that Minister do, Mr. Speaker? Did he bring in a new Bill? Did he even announce a second look? No, he chickened out.

He caved in to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). So what are Canadian children getting? Child care on hold. The Right Hon. Prime Minister's mother might think he is doing a good job, but I can tell you there are hundreds and thousands of mothers in this country who think that he and his Cabinet colleagues are letting them and their children down. Universal, accessible, affordable child care is an investment in Canadian children's future and in Canada's future. It is not a paid up Rolls Royce.

On the subject of disability pensions, increasingly in my riding and other ridings complaints have been received that applications for disability pensions are being routinely turned down, that the only way to get a disability pension is to have the determination and the knowledge to appeal. Then an applicant might have a chance. When the Estimates were tabled, I anxiously looked for an explanation. On page 6–15 of the program overview of the Health and Welfare Estimates I read:

> The overall situation improved with the increase of the CPP disability benefits in January, 1987, although the increase in some cases was partly offset by the private insurance sector or by the provincial or municipal social assistance programs.

I will say they were offset. When the majority of applicants are turned down out of hand, some other government program in the provinces or at the municipal level is going to have to pick up the slack. But still believing, in my naiveté, that the people who were telling me this were mistaken, I instructed my constituency representatives to continue to assist people. I was sure that cases were being adjudicated with care and sensitivity. I was so wrong.

I had to reassess my position when my office received a complaint from a woman who had applied for a disability pension for her husband. It was denied because the man might reasonably be expected in the foreseeable future to earn a normal income. Mr. Speaker, that man was in a coma. But he might be reasonably expected in the foreseeable future to earn a normal income. Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, I have had to reassess my thinking about the sensitivity of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

I asked for statistics about how many Canadians have applied for disability pensions, how many are turned down, how many have appealed and how many have won those appeals in the last fiscal year. One would think that is a relatively simple request in this age of technology and with the kinds of research that are available to Members of Parliament. But it was not a simple request. It seems the Department is having difficulty getting that information out of the computer. These were simple straightforward questions: how many applied, how many were turned down, how many appealed, how many won their appeals? Mr. Speaker, I suggest through you that if the Department of Health and Welfare is routinely turning down first-time applicants for disability pensions because they are so overloaded, the Government can quit patting itself on the back about how it is meeting the needs of those Canadians who are most in need, and get serious.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Langan: We have heard a great deal about the terrible housing crisis in Canada. In this House and in the media we have heard a lot about it since the 34th Parliament has been convened. Some of the problems are because of land speculation, especially in the larger urban centres. Some of the problems are because of high interest rates, and some of the problems are because of zero occupancy rates. This is a phenomenon that does not just happen in large cities, but it is happening in suburban and rural Canada as well.

The national sales tax that has been introduced is a problem as well. The point that I want to make about housing in Canada is that increasingly the face of the homeless in this country are the faces of Canadian children. That is not acceptable. But that does not cut any ice with the grinch who stole the balanced Budget from our children's future. No, the Government has reverted to 1986 levels of funding for an already inadequate co-op housing program with adjustments for inflation. If that is not bad enough, they will save $55 million by discontinuing the rehabilitation assistance program which provides financing assistance to landlords to upgrade their properties, a program which has been used across this country by municipalities to provide adequate and affordable housing. This is another $55 million toward the paid-up Rolls Royce.

The biggest shock to all Canadian families has got to be the impact of the proposed unemployment insurance cuts. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) put them in before the Budget was introduced to take a little of the heat off. The pot was sweetened a little bit by changing the paternity leave benefits, and allowing those workers over 65 to participate in the program. But no one was fooled. Everyone understood that the Government had to respond to a Supreme Court decision.

What of those Canadians who, in addition to now being forced to foot the entire bill for unemployment insurance along with their employers, at the same time have their eligibility cut? Does the Government think that they are fooled by this program of privatization of the unemployment insurance program? Small business is not fooled. The workers are not fooled. They will be joining the workers while they fund this private program.

Does the Government really believe it is helping those most in need when it ensures that this new unemployment insurance program will exclude seasonal workers, mostly women, farm workers, mostly women, fish processors, mostly women, building trades workers with increasing numbers of women? Who may still have the privilege of paying for the insurance program? Those same workers who may indeed never again be eligible to claim. Those workers are not fooled.

• (1550)

In all the areas I have discussed, women are the hardest hit by the cut-backs of the Government. Women, especially working moms, are the most in need of safe, accessible and affordable child care. Women who are unemployed are most often in jobs that are short term or part time and are less likely to qualify for UI benefits. In addition, the increased premium would hurt them more because they have proportionately less disposable income.

Women will be the hardest hit by the proposed federal sales tax. On average, women only earn 66 per cent of what men earn, and generally women spend a greater proportion of their disposable income on goods and services, especially if they have children.

Women first faced deindexing of family allowance, I might add one of the only benefits that goes directly to women for their children. Now universality is under fire, and the Government plans to grab it back.

There are more women than men over the age of 65 who are receiving Old Age Security pensions. Four years ago the Government attempted to deindex those women's pensions, and again the Government has begun the erosion of pensions.

Women will feel the effect of cut-backs in transfer payments to the provinces. A 1 per cent cut-back represents $200 million per year. Primarily in the areas of health and education our women in Canada will feel the effect because they are more likely to be poor and in need of services. Women are more likely to be poor and in need of affordable access to education.

The biggest insult of all to Canadian women is the axing of $2 million from the Secretary of State's women's program. This translates into a 15 per cent cut in funding for many groups that for the first time have given women a voice in this country, especially immigrant women.

There is also a whopping 50 per cent cut to the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. This organization has represented almost 600 women's groups. What have we done? One cannot help but wonder at a Government that espouses its commitment to including women's voices in the national consensus, but the minute it hears something it does not like, it silences those voices.

In conclusion, I would like to reiterate to government Members that Canadian families are not fooled by the Budget. Canadian workers are not fooled. Canadian seniors are not fooled. Canadian women are not fooled. Most of all, Canadian children will hold the Government accountable for lack of shoes, food, and shelter in the name of a paid up Rolls Royce.

On April 28 Canadians mourned those workers who died building this country. The day the Budget passes will also be a day of mourning for the Canada that will be forever lost at the expense of those most in need.

Hon. Steven Paproski (Edmonton North): Before I entertain questions or comments, the Speaker would like to make a ruling.

POINTS OF ORDER

INTERIM SUPPLY—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I said a few minutes ago, in response to points of order raised by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands and the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, that I would consider the points. It is important to understand the point that both Hon. Members are making. Put as simply as I can put it, it comes down to the following.

While the House was adjourned there were certain special warrants issued because the Government needed money. Those special warrants were issued under the provisions of the Financial Administration Act. There is a Bill which will be voted on tonight at 5.45 p.m. which, among other things, in Clause 3, and I am reading from the note in the margin, refers to the confirmation of payment under special warrants for the fiscal year 1988–89. Those are the special warrants complained of by the Hon. Members.

In order that everyone does understand, ordinarily a Bill comes in, there is first reading, second reading, second reading debate, and if that passes it goes to committee, comes back again in report stage, and then there is third reading.

This Bill which confirms those warrants will not proceed in that manner, because there is a special order which states:

> That, when the House reaches Orders of the Day on Thursday, May 4, the House shall debate an opposition motion, notice of which shall have been given the previous day, and no later than 5:45 o'clock p.m. on May 4, the Speaker shall interrupt debate and put, forthwith and successively, without amendment or debate, every question necessary to dispose of the said motion; and then the Speaker shall put forthwith, and successively, without amendment or debate, every question that may be necessary to dispose of any motion relating to interim supply and for the passing at all stages of the Bill based thereon, following which the Speaker shall adjourn the House;—

That is the special order, and I know that Hon. Members know that I am bound by that special order. I cannot interrupt it or interfere with it. It is an order of the House. I point out that it is also an order that applies today by consent, but that is not a matter which changes the substance of the issue.

The effect of this special order is that provided the opposition motion is debated throughout the rest of the afternoon, there will be no time under this special order to debate the content of this Bill. In other words, Hon. Members have put the point that there is no opportunity to debate the contents, the whys and the wherefores of the moneys asked for and spent under the special warrants. I think I have the Hon. Members' point.

I suppose it could also be said that if the opposition motion ended early today, technically there might be some time for debate, but one cannot foretell that. There is a very real possibility that there would not be any time for debate.

The Hon. Members also referred to a special report which was filed with the House by the then President of the Treasury Board in 1980. I have been informed that that particular report was filed for information purposes only and it does not form part of the supply process. While it might very well be a good thing that such reports are given to the House under those circumstances, it is not required and I cannot insist upon it.

In my view Hon. Members have clearly expressed what to them is a grievance. As I stated at the beginning, that grievance is that the House will pass tonight in all stages a Bill confirming the special warrants, and they have not been debated nor has there been an opportunity for the House to examine and debate them and go through the usual procedure.

The point Hon. Members are making is that this would seem, on the face of it at least, to be a breach of parliamentary tradition. We heard some very incisive arguments put a few days ago on the necessity for Parliament to be in command of the spending and that Hon. Members have the obligation, which is part of the ancient history of this place, to examine the spending requirements of a Government and either to reject them or pass them.

• (1600)

Having said that, the probability is, as Hon. Members have pointed out, that there will not be any examination or debate on these particular warrants. The House, of course, that is, all the Members of this place, at least in theory could defeat the Bill tonight. I say nothing further.

In any event, the position comes down to this: nothing has been done which breaches the rules of this place. That does not mean that the grievance the Hon. Members have may not breach some tradition or some convention of this place. But upon that I am helpless to react or to change.

It seems to me the solution is to either amend the Financial Administration Act or to amend the Standing Orders. The Hon. Members have raised the point in the Chamber a few minutes ago, suggesting that perhaps the Government would refer the whole matter to the appropriate standing committee. Again, as I indicated, I am powerless to order that. That is a matter for consultation between both sides of the House.

In any event, I come back to the point raised by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) and the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). The point they make is clear. The probability is there will be no chance to examine and debate the warrants. Unfortunately, for those Members who are complaining about this, the Speaker is not in a position where the matter can be remedied. But the point the Hon. Members have made is there for all to see.

I thank Hon. Members for their interventions.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—THE ENVIRONMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent:

> That this House condemn the government for failing to ensure fairness and equality to all Canadians, and for failing to make protection of the environment a priority.

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the speech by the New Democratic social affairs critic and I see once again that what distinguishes the New Democrats is that they never had to administer a budget, Mr. Speaker. I think that is why they have no credibility, because we hear them promoting programs that are indeed necessary, but which cannot be financed.

I would also say, Mr. Speaker, that they are inconsistent because before, they advocated taxing the rich to ease the burden of the poor. That is what we did with the latest Budget, but they continue to pretend the opposite. I would have two questions for the Hon. Member.

The first is that the New Democrat was against the national child care strategy when it was presented to Parliament. Her colleague, the former critic, said, for example, Mr. Speaker, that the Canada Assistance Plan was more generous. She claimed that it was. She therefore said that the national child care strategy should be rejected and the status quo maintained. Today, if I go by what I just heard the New Democratic critic say, they would now agree with the national child care strategy brought in by the Conservative Government. I would like her to explain to me why the New Democrats have changed their mind.

Secondly, I would like the Hon. Member to tell us why her party and she claims that transfers to the provinces for health and education will be reduced when in fact, Mr. Speaker, the truth is that $25 million more will be transferred to the provinces over the next five years. So I would like her to explain to me why she claims there are cuts when $25 million more will be given over the next five years?

[English]

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member that the New Democratic Party has indeed run budgets in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and the Yukon. In return, I would ask the Hon. Member how many budgets she has administered?

Mrs. Bourgault: At least five.

Ms. Langan: First, let me respond to her comments regarding child care. She suggested that we were against the Tory child care Bill in the former Parliament. She is indeed correct. We were against the child care Bill of the former Government. We were and we are against that child care Bill.

During my speech, I stated that as a result of having input from people across the country who deliver and who require child care to explain to the Government why the Tory child care Bill was totally inadequate, we hoped the new Minister would, as a result of that input, bring forward an adequate child care Bill that would cover adequacy, affordability and universality.

The fact is that the Minister not only did not bring back the old Bill, he did not bring in a new Bill. He has totally chickened out on the Bill.

Mrs. Dobbie: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member two brief questions. What would the Hon. Member do about the national debt? Second, I would like to ask the Hon. Member if she would like to pay more taxes.

[Translation]

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say that the transfer is not $25 million but $25 billion. I would like this to be recorded in Hansard.

[English]

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked two questions: One on the national debt and one on whether I am willing to pay more taxes.

With regard to the national debt, I would begin by making sure that taxation was fair, that corporations that are making profits pay their fair share of taxes, and banks pay their fair share. Canadians are willing to pay taxes if it is fair, if everybody is paying a fair share.

The answer to the second question is yes, I am indeed willing to pay more taxes as long as the Royal Bank is not paying less than the clerk or Cominco is not paying less tax than my father, who was a steel worker for 40 years.

Mrs. Dobbie: I am glad to know that the Hon. Member would like to make her contribution to the tax rolls of this country.

I want to refer to a comment earlier in her speech about child care. She thought there should be a fairer system and lots more child care available. I just wonder if the Hon. Member has a problem with the concept of parents looking after children. Does she believe that children should be cared for in institutions? Is that the future her Party sees for the children of this country?

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, I really must thank the Hon. Member for her question because it displays the total lack of understanding on the other side of the House for the needs of women and children in this country regarding child care. Indeed, it would be preferable that all children in Canada could stay home with their mothers, but the reality of life in this country is that most women must work, and the reality is that there should be choices in child care. There should be child care centres, there should be family day care centres that are licensed, and there should be the opportunity for someone to come into the home to deliver child care, depending on the needs of the family, the means of the family and the schedule of the family. I think it is very sad that the Hon. Member does not seem to understand the needs of Canadian women and children. I am so sorry about that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. MacDonald).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I move:

That the Member for Kent (Mr. Crawford) be now heard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

• (1610)

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Rex Crawford (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take this opportunity today to speak about an issue of major and grave importance to my riding and to Canada. It is the environment.

This Government's lack of concern in funding of the environment hits very close to home. The northern parts of my riding receive their water from one of Canada's pollution hot spots, the St. Clair River. Communities downstream from Chemical Valley were looking to complete a pipeline from Lake Huron. It would ensure a clean source of drinking water. It would ensure that residents were not drinking water filled with spilled chemicals, filled with toxic material, filled with blobs of unknown origin. It would ensure that residents in Wallaceburg, Dresden, Walpole Island Indian Reserve and the surrounding townships were not held hostage to the constant threat of spills and the worry about the quality of their drinking water.

The Lake Huron pipeline project was announced in 1986 with 79 per cent funding from the Ontario Government. The federal Government had a role to play in this project. The St. Clair River is an international waterway, and the Conservatives have said that environment is their priority, that it is at the top of their agenda. The new Minister has made many statements about keeping the environment safe for our children and grandchildren.

The Lake Huron pipeline project is a symbol of this Government's inaction and incompetence in terms of the environment. Last week the Minister stated that his Government would have no involvement whatever in the project. It was a shameful and careless response. In our time of need, this Government has abandoned its responsibilities and has rejected a leading role on this issue of environment. The Tories have said to communities downstream from Chemical Valley: "It's not our problem". To those communities which have coped with over 300 chemical spills in the last three years into an international waterway, this Government says: "It's not our problem".

For a Government which spent a lot of political capital during the last election on trumpeting its revival on the environment, on saying in speech after speech that this was a Government that would not only say it was concerned about the environment but would actually do something about it, we were led down the garden path. Talk is cheap but whisky costs money. This Government and the new Environment Minister could have shown leadership by contributing to the Lake Huron pipeline but no, they said: "It's not our problem".

This Government said no to funding because it called it municipal infrastructure. That was a cop–out. We know that the Government does not have the resolve to help our municipalities with their roads, bridges and sewers. It is a bad policy that should be changed.

Both the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party have recognized that Canada in a few short years could start crumbling beneath our feet without federal involvement for infrastructure. The Conservatives have a bad policy and we disagree with it, but the issue in Kent County is not municipal infrastructure; it is the environment. The towns of Wallaceburg, Dresden and Walpole Island First Nation have no problem with their bridges. Their roads are fine. Their sewers are working well.

However what is not fine and what is not working well is the constant worry of residents that it would take just one major spill to shut them down. Their water intake plants have been shut down several times just in 1989 alone. The worst occurred on March 22 when a spill of 13 tonnes of polyethylene glycol poured into the St. Clair River. Officials downstream were not informed until 10 hours later. The chemical had already got into the towns' infrastructure. For the first time in history, residents were told not to drink their water. No coffee in the morning, no water for the children and no water for cooling in the factories.

Residents in Wallaceburg were shocked and humiliated when they had to line up like refugees to get water. They had to line up at a shopping mall with jugs, jars and bottles just to get enough water for one day. Factories told their workers to go home. Wallaceburg is an industrial town with many tool and dye shops and auto parts makers who need water for cooling. Seniors and shut–ins had water trucked into their homes. School children drank bottled water. Sydenham District Hospital had water trucked in so as to treat the ill and the dying.

I brought all of this directly to the Minister's attention. He showed concern. He said that he was sincere about the environment. We set up a meeting with a local delegation to discuss the matter. The Minister met with me, the Mayor of Wallaceburg, the Mayor of Dresden and the Chief of Walpole Island. We tried to show him that this was a unique problem. It was a problem with the environment, not municipal infrastructure, but the Government said last week: "It's not our problem".

The former Minister of the Environment said, in 1985, that the pollution situation in the St. Clair River was awesome. That is what he said, "awesome",but actions speak louder than words. Commitment means more than public relations.

In the example of the Lake Huron pipeline project, the Government showed to everyone that it was not committed and would not act to ensure a cleaner source of drinking water for communities. I mentioned that a decision was made last week. It was a decision that took over a year for this Government to make. All along it expressed its commitment and concern for residents downstream from Chemical Valley. ERDA was mentioned as a door to be opened but last week, the Minister of the Environment slammed that door shut.

Economic Regional Development Agreements across Canada were being sized down. Some were not being renewed. Yet, in September 1987, the former Minister said in a letter that he "would be prepared to support an ERDA proposal if it reached the federal level." A base document was prepared for a subagreement. The Province of Ontario outlined in graphic detail how the economy of the region would be affected by a prolonged shutdown of the water intake plants. The federal Government received it in April 1988 and left the residents of my riding hanging for an answer until last week. That does not show commitment. There are ERDAs in other provinces, for example, water supply projects in Saskatchewan and in British Columbia. Even the Minister of the Environment himself is getting a road built in his own riding. I guess that is not municipal infrastructure.

As I said before, the Lake Huron pipeline project is a symbol of the Government's unfairness. It is a symbol of the Government's inaction on environmental issues. It led local residents down the garden path with the hope that there was more money available. However, the Tories said: "It's not our problem". The Town of Dresden is facing serious problems with the quality of drinking water. This Government has done nothing to help solve the crisis by helping to build a pipeline.

• (1620)

The nitrate levels in Dresden's water source were beyond acceptable levels. This was as of March 30, 1989. A drinking water alert was issued on April 6. Yet the Government still refuses to admit that there is a problem and refuses to help us.

As well, I have another example of the Government's words not matching a funding commitment. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) visited my riding himself during the last election with $3 million for what he called "the Sydenham River pollution solution". It was announced with great fanfare. The feds would spend $3 million if the province did, too.

I quote from the news release of October 20, 1988:

> The federal Government is taking action to remedy pollution from agricultural pesticides that are showing up in the water supply of residents in southern Ontario's Sydenham River Basin—in particular, Dresden.

In announcing the five-year, $6 million program, the Minister of Agriculture said it would improve cropping and land-use practices to help correct the water pollution problem.

The news release continues:

> The Sydenham River project will involve field studies to identify the sources of agricultural pesticides found in the water supply. Soil studies will determine chemical movement. The program will also monitor chemical movement through drainage systems, streams and waterways, and study rainfall patterns and intensity.

I said during the election campaign locally that this was an excellent program, and one well worth the money. It showed that the Conservatives were indeed concerned about the environment and had some money to prove it. However, I have looked into the matter a little more closely. I called bureaucrats and other officials. At that time I was chairman of the Water Board for the St. Clair Region Conservation Authority. I have more than a passing interest in this project.

It was only an election promise. There was no money. The federal Government is blaming the province for holding it up because it wants new, matching funds, in addition to the great sums of money the Government of Ontario is already spending there.

Since the Sydenham project will not go ahead without Ontario's money up front, there is no project. It is a shame. The federal Government will not spend its $3 million and go it alone so the project is dead.

This is further proof that the Government's actions do not match its words.

There is another issue. I have just learned recently that an air monitoring project on St. Anne's Island near the Walpole Island Indian Reserve is being terminated by Environment Canada. As of May 15 the project will be shut down.

In light of our close proximity to the United States, and just a couple of jet streams away from the Detroit incinerator, I cannot understand why Environment Canada would not continue to assist Walpole Island fund its air monitoring project. If the Government is so fired up about the environment, if it is so committed, why would it drop this program that is so essential to the monitoring of air quality near the U.S.?

On top of that, the Government hasn't even lifted a finger to stop or delay the building of the massive Detroit incinerator. It is the largest incinerator in North America. American officials reject using the best available technology because it is too expensive. I say it is much more expensive to affect the health of Canadians who are living downwind from this garbage-burning monster.

The Conservatives should follow the lead of the Ontario Government. Its Minister of the Environment is showing guts, fortitude and real commitment to this issue. The provincial Minister of the Environment is taking the Yankees to court. He is defending our interests. Where is our Government on this important matter? Picking up bogus awards in the U.S. It seems that when there is an award to be had the Government is ready to show up to accept it. However, when it comes to action the Government has gone missing and will not even attend the show.

In conclusion, I have cited many examples of the Government's lack of real action and commitment to the environment—and this is just in my riding of Kent alone. The Minister has used selective logic on the Lake Huron pipeline project. He said: "It's not our problem". He ignores a number of water supply projects elsewhere in Canada. He ignores the fact that the St. Clair River is an international waterway. He ignores the fact that communities downstream have coped with over 300 spills.

The environmental mess has not been made by the citizens of North Kent. It is a direct result of industrial spills and Governments unable to correct the problem. If the federal Tories continue their head-in-the-sand approach then more problems across Canada will result.

This issue will not go away. The issue of municipal infrastructure will not go away. For the Conservatives to say: "It's not our problem" scares me.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) has stated quite categorically that "Canadians aren't interested in battles over provincial or federal jurisdiction; they're looking for action on environment". The Minister said that recently on Insight with Doug Fisher.

This morning I received letters from a school teacher in the City of Chatham. She teaches at St. Agnes School where her students in grades four and five are interested in our environment. They are worried about our environment. In the last line of her letter she states: "We would really appreciate any time you can take to view these letters". There are approximately 50 letters. Not only will I view them, I will reply to each and every one of them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crawford: These are the children we have to look out for. They will be the leaders of tomorrow. We have to set the examples. Unfortunately, the Government across the way is not setting an example for these students.

With the Lake Huron pipeline project there was no action, no commitment. Environmental issues are number one in Canada. It is simply unacceptable for the Government to say: "It's not our problem" to communities downstream from chemical valley. It is the problem of us all. It is a national problem. It needs a national response. So far the Government has been abdicating its responsibility.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. Before I ask it I would like to say that I come from the City of Windsor. I must say that while I have heard discussions concerning the environmental problems of my home town in the counties of Essex and Kent, I have rarely heard such an outline so well put with such perception. I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Martin (LaSalle—Émard): I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he could explain to us how it is that the federal Government has not chosen to fight the Detroit incinerator further. Its construction is virtually an act of war against a friendly country. It certainly is against the friendly City of Windsor. I must say that it is the first time in this House that a Member has stood up and with such eloquence raised the issue. In light of that it is a disgrace when I look at Members opposite.

Mr. Crawford: Mr. Speaker, I would certainly like to reply to the question. When the incinerator was discussed it was at the planning stages. My municipality was the first to send a resolution to the Government asking it to intervene and to put a stop to this incinerator.

• (1630)

We did not receive a reply to the resolution we had sent to the Government asking them to put a stop to this incinerator. As I stated earlier, it is the largest incinerator in North America. The wind currents are across my municipality, across my friend's municipality of Windsor, and across Essex. All the toxins from that incinerator are coming across our part of Canada. Yet the Government that sits in this House today did not have the courtesy to reply to a resolution from a municipality that was interested and knew that problems were going to happen.

The next year, as warden of the county, I still had not received a letter from the Government to the County of Kent.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. McCurdy: Having heard the comments from those of dubious residency in my riding, the Member for Kent claiming priority with respect to a virtual flood of correspondence from the County of Essex, I have to agree that the Government's total disregard of all correspondence with respect to environmental problems in the Essex-Kent area can certainly be substantiated by this Member. I do not know, I arrived late, but it is not only with respect to the incinerator, it is with respect lake levels, with respect to the Fermi II incinerator and to any number of environmental issues that plague our area.

I would just like to add one more on which I hope Kent county will follow Essex county, as it usually does, and that is with respect to the imminent cancellation of VIA Rail. This, I suppose, is a part of the Government's policy with respect to sustainable development and to ensure that our highways will be filled with more cars, buses, smoke, and more nitrates, sulphides and mercury to contribute to acid rain.

I hope that Kent county, and the Hon. Member across the way who was accused of being eloquent, would also add to the battle to ensure that there is a balanced transportation policy in this country which will at least pay some modicum of attention to sustainable development.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Kent if he would like to reply.

Mr. Crawford: Mr. Speaker, I did not know whether that was a statement or a question. The only thing I can answer is that we certainly recognize the great County of Essex and Windsor. We always have. On your position, Sir, it has always been number two to Kent. We are certainly fighting for VIA Rail.

I thought this was on the environment and that is why I am speaking on the environment. However, I certainly agree with my hon. friend.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Rosedale.

Hon. David MacDonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, in my nine year absence from this House, and more recently in the last election, I always knew it was difficult to get into this place but I never realized how difficult it might be to get on my feet to be able to make a speech in. I am grateful for the opportunity to participate in this debate this afternoon.

If, in the final comments of the Hon. Member for Kent (Mr. Crawford), there is some confusion in his mind in wondering whether it is a debate on the environment, transport, or on the Budget, he is in good company. Anyone who has even looked briefly at the motion that has been presented to us by the Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) would immediately understand that this is not one of his better efforts.

In fact, I knew the Member for Oshawa, even before he became a Member of Parliament in 1968. My recollection is that he was a university professor. In my now far-off university days, when university professors assigned you a topic to write on, you had really two options. One was to put down as much as you possibly could in the hope that you would pass the exam with flying colours, or if you knew very little on the subject, quickly go off in the opposite direction and say as much as you could in the hope the professor would not look at it too carefully.

I have the feeling that that is what has happened here today. The motion presented to us by the Hon. Member for Oshawa states:

> That this House condemns the Government for failing to ensure fairness and equality to all Canadians, and for failing to make protection of the environment a priority.

One must wonder, having listened to the last three or four hours of debate, what the Member for Oshawa had in mind.

As I sat here this morning listening to his remarks, I was more than a little surprised that from start to finish, and even in overtime which the Hon. Member for Oshawa was permitted, there was absolutely no mention of anything with respect to the environment, in spite of the fact that that was the one specific item in this brief motion. Rather, as the Hon. Member himself said, he was participating in this "historic budget debate".

We on the Government side have tried to respond as best we can to the dilemma placed before us by the Hon. Member for Oshawa. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) did what I think was the responsible thing and responded on behalf of the Government with respect to the Government's priorities on environmental issues. Then the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) and others, tried to deal with the matters raised by the Member for Oshawa.

I am not going to spend very long on the Hon. Member for Oshawa's remarks except to say that I am more than a little troubled by the thrust of his remarks. Apart from the fact that he did not speak to his own motion, and the public will have to decide about that, his discussions about turning back the clock reflect more a state of mind, I feel, within the New Democratic Party than any particular criticism he might have directed our way.

We have heard once again from the Member for Oshawa some prescriptions from the dead hand of yesterday's socialism. If this is his best response to a new Parliament, and the deepening crisis of the deficit and the public debt, this does not bode well for the future.

The Member for Oshawa went on at some length lamenting the impact that changes in the nature of taxation would have on the implications for Medicare, pensions, or promised day care programs. There seemed to be no acknowledgement whatsoever on the ultimate impact a loss of economic responsibility would have on our capacity and ability to fund any of these programs.

I cannot for the life of me understand why he would make the speech that he did without some responsible recognition of the fundamental importance of a sound economy and a sound economic management in order to meet all these social objectives so strongly registered by the Hon. Member for Oshawa.

There was a kind of a philosophy, if I may dare to say so, of: "Eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow we die". Or pay, pay, pay, spend, spend, spend and some day, somewhere, someone will find the resources necessary to cover all of this, even though our ability to do so will become increasingly limited as the debt grows faster than any other aspect of federal expenditures.

There is some slight hope, because the Member for Oshawa talked about creativity and community. In returning to academia, maybe he is going to give some thought as to how we can begin to look at the new problems that we are faced with, one of which he mentioned in his motion with respect to the threat of environmental destruction, but unfortunately did not refer to it in his remarks.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) made a much more direct speech. I am sorry that she is not here at the moment but I would like to say that I am grateful she has registered some of the issues that she sees as being important with respect environmental questions. But I am very much troubled that she made a considerable point which was followed up in Question Period this afternoon by an attack on the award that is to be given to our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) today in Washington. I wonder what the message is in all this. This award, which is being given only for the second time by an agency that is part of the International Chamber of Commerce, is meant to acknowledge the kind of public and international leadership which in the first instance last year was shown by Prime Minister Brundtland of Norway, in her pioneering efforts with the World Commission on Development, and for the second time in international history by our Prime Minister.

Surely, even Members of the Opposition might want to bask a bit in the reflected recognition and the international importance of what the Prime Minister, on behalf of Canada, is attempting to do with respect to environmental issues. Surely it is not simply a matter of turning this into something that is bogus or phoney, as we have heard from the other side. This does no service either to Members of the Opposition or to the attempts of an international organization of business interests to take seriously issues of sustainable development, issues which I believe Members on all sides of this House see as critical.

I will return to that in a moment because I think it is central to what I hope would be the main purpose of today's debate. There is no doubt that the cumulative effect of climatic change, the destruction of the ozone layer and of forests, farmlands and waters and the spread of toxic chemicals is being recognized as one of the greatest challenges we face. In its 1987 report entitled Our Common Future, the World Commission on Environment and Development said that the threat of environmental destruction is second only to that of nuclear war. That commission, headed by the Norwegian Prime Minister, said that the damage in parts of the earth is already worse than scorched-earth policies of armies. From my own first-hand experience over the last four years, I have seen that kind of destruction. In parts of Ethiopia and Sudan and in parts of West Africa, I have seen what can happen when an environment is so ravaged and loses so much of its capacity for growth that it can turn on its remaining inhabitants and create a situation only akin to a world after a nuclear holocaust.

The commission said:

> Nature is bountiful but it is also fragile and finely balanced. There are thresholds that cannot be crossed without endangering the basic integrity of the system. Today we are close to many of those thresholds.

The United Nations-sponsored Brundtland Commission did not call for an economic shut-down to protect the environment. That would be impossible in the industrialized world and simply unfair and unacceptable in the developing world where there are many just beginning to take full advantage of the developments of modern technology. Instead, this global commission issued a new agenda saying that the planet needs a new era of environmentally sound economic development. From now on, the report said, economic decisions must be based upon environmental realities. I am not sure whether it invented this term, but it certainly put front and centre the term "sustainable development" to make the link between environment and economy.

Indeed, I was struck when I heard the Liberal critic on environmental matters, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), who said at one point in her speech, and I hope I am quoting her accurately, that she felt that Canadians are in fact willing to make the same kind of sacrifices with respect to environmental issues as will be required for the economy. I listened very carefully in the same context to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) who said that in the present situation we have in fact two deficit situations to deal with, a deficit with respect to the present federal debt and the ongoing problems of the cost of the deficit and a deficit in terms of the impact of the increasing degradation and pollution of our environment. That is why I think it is critically important that we understand that we cannot really address one satisfactorily unless we address the other.

Hon. Members will recall that when the Minister of Finance was presenting his Budget, he used some language which I felt was quite eloquent, and I want to repeat it because I believe it has strong application to the issue of environmental protection and sustainable development that we are discussing here today. In addressing the debt issue, he said that we must ask ourselves, should this enormous debt be our legacy to future generations? Let us be clear about what it means. If we continue year after year, Government after Government, to borrow and borrow just to pay the interest on that debt, we would be borrowing from our children, not paying our own bills. It is easy to borrow from future generations because they have no voice in this debate. They have no vote. Yet it is they who must live with the consequences if we do not act. Then he said words which I think have equal applicability to environmental issues and economic issues. He said that this Budget must build for the future, not borrow from it. That is the challenge we are faced with today.

This past summer, I was asked to participate in a conference that took place at Trent University by the Harmony Foundation as a follow-up to the Brundtland Commission. Its report was recently published and I recommend it to all Hon. Members. The remarks that I made fell under a title that I hope I can continue to use on this and other occasions. The title is this: "Good economics and good ecology make good sense". In the speech, if I may be so bold as to quote myself, I said that we are very good at responding to crises and emergencies. However, we do not know a great deal. We are not sure how to work with people at getting at the underlying causes that create these crises in the first place. That is the challenge. That is what we are faced with today. How can we combine a positive sense of economic management and a proactive approach with respect to sustained environmental development?

Clearly, one of the things that I believe is critical is that we have to end what has increasingly become the artificial confrontation between economic activity on one side and environmental protection on the other. What troubled me particularly about the questions raised surrounding the award given to the Prime Minister, both to him personally and I assume also to Canada and Canadians for the particular concern we have about the environment, is that to make the false and continuing dichotomy between economic interests, business interests, industrial interests and those who are concerned with the environment does none of us good service.

I would like to quote one individual who has dedicated his adult life to fighting pollution and dealing with environmental issues. Colin Isaacs, the executive director of Pollution Probe, has recently recognized that there are in fact companies which previously were regarded as being primary offenders in the pollution problem but are now becoming part of the solution. He mentions specifically Loblaws, Alcan and Dow Chemical. Hon. Members will know that Loblaws has recently adopted an entire program of environmentally friendly products supported by Pollution Probe. It is interesting that Alcan, mentioned specifically by Isaacs, is the one Canadian company that is included in the international group that made the award to the Prime Minister.

We have to change how we get at these problems if we are ever to get beyond the kind of reactive, crisis-oriented approach which has for so long prevented us from becoming environmentally responsible. When one reads the Speech from the Throne and looks at the environmental imperative which is in fact a major priority for the Government and Parliament, there can be no doubt that there is a seriousness here that is without historic precedent. The formation of the round table is in itself significant in that it tries to bring together in a creative fashion those who have both economic and environmental responsibility.

• (1650)

The Member from Oshawa has done a good service in allowing us to start this debate. I only wish he himself had engaged in it. We need to find practical, workable approaches both to economic and social advancement as well as to environmental enhancement. I trust that when we return, as we will increasingly to these matters, both the Member for Oshawa and other Members will provide more of a positive note. For the moment, I would have to say to the Member from Oshawa that I would only give him a C or C– for the way in which this critically important motion has been addressed by him, and for this particular opposition debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Scarborough West, and then the Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member's speech, and particularly the title of his address which, I think, was Good Economics and Good Ecology Make Good Sense. I would suggest that it be subtitled, What Price Environmental Protection? I have grave difficulty in tying in a Budget and a deficit to the protection of the environment. Without being unduly dramatic, it really does not matter if the deficit is $5 billion or $500 billion if the air we breathe is filthy, if the lakes we swim in cannot be used. You cannot link the deficit to the protection of the environment. You cannot scrimp on the cleaning up of a country by trying to save dollars and cents, because there is no correlation between the environment, our health and that of future generations and saving money by reducing environmental protection policies.

We heard from the Member from Kent (Mr. Crawford). I would be very interested in the Hon. Member's comments as to why Members opposite have not done something with respect to the problems that he pointed out in his speech. Is it a matter of money? Is it because that Government considers it more important to save dollars than to save the environment?

Mr. MacDonald (Rosedale): This is an interesting question. I suppose it is one of those situations where we need to get together and agree upon what the facts are. I am sure the Hon. Member is in agreement that, based on the experience of the last two decades, more and more of our tax dollars have gone unproductively to service a growing debt. Our capacity to deal with the problems that have been created—and we have heard a number of them; he has referred to one of them from his colleague, the Member from Kent—or any other problems will be increasingly restricted. Surely there is a direct interconnection between an economy that gets out of control and an economic system in which there is less and less ability to make important decisions, either to protect the social or environmental aspects of our society, and it is profoundly unhealthy. I find it difficult to believe the Member would argue that we can more readily deal with matters affecting the environment if we have less and less economic capacity to do so. That is not a convincing argument, but perhaps if he has a further opportunity, he could persuade me to his point of view.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say how pleased we are to see the Member back in this House. We would certainly agree that he is a Canadian that has much to contribute, particularly in his field of knowledge, conditions in the Third World and particularly in Africa.

Therefore I would like to ask him what are his views on what I would consider the very serious cuts to official development assistance. As I understand it, about $720 million would be cut from aid over the next two years. Does he not agree that cuts to programs, such as those that come under UNICEF, which help children in Africa and other parts of the world, would mean that children will die for lack of needed immunizations and food supplements? Does it not also mean that Canada's commitment made at the Decade of Women Conference in Nairobi of increasing our support for women in development, which means strengthening families and children in the next generation, will also be cut back?

What does this do to our international reputation, which we have been proud of as Canadians? The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has made strong commitments that we would not decrease, but would increase support. When does he think, with this kind of regressive action, that Canada will ever achieve our promised goal of .7 per cent for development aid which, as a rich country, we can well afford in a world where so many are starving?

Mr. MacDonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Member for her kind words of welcome. She is quite right. The significance of the cuts that have been made to the Official Development Assistance Program are important. Naturally I, as well as many other Members, am not pleased that we have had to make this kind of reduction. But I also recognize the fact, because I had the occasion some years ago to sit around a cabinet table trying to make the same kinds of decisions, that when it comes to trying to get your household in order, there is not a great deal of flexibility. I do not know whether the Hon. Member has ever looked at the amount of available opportunities a Government has to reduce its expenditures, particularly in the first year.

Ms. Mitchell: Deferred taxation.

Mr. MacDonald (Rosedale): I am glad to hear the Member say she would prefer that there would be more taxation, but—

Ms Mitchell: Deferred taxes could be collected, millions of dollars.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not sure which one she is referring to, but I do know that it is not an easy exercise. It is my belief that in this exercise great sensitivity has been taken with respect to the programs for people, which is what the Member has referred to. I am always concerned when there are reductions in global expenditures in budgets that it is not taken on the backs of those who are individually involved at the field level. I believe there is the opportunity, because within the over-all official development assistance, there are large budget items which can be rescheduled which are more in the nature of infrastructure than programs for people. These are the kinds of sensitive decisions that the people in CIDA, who have a good view of development responsibility, will take into account.

In response to the other question the Member raised, the sooner we meet the original target of .6 the better, but even with these reductions, Canada continues to be a major leader in international development assistance, particularly on the continent of Africa. I believe that is a position that we will continue without abatement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member from Renfrew and then the Hon. Member for Egmont.

Mr. Hopkins: I would like to say to the Hon. Member who has just spoken that I, too, would like to welcome him back into the House because we were first elected to this place on the same day, and the casualty rate for the class of '65 has been rather severe over the years.

I was quite moved when I heard the Hon. Member say that we cannot borrow for the future, that we have to get the debt under control and so on. I do not think there is a Member in the House who does not feel that the debt has to be brought under control. But let us not make any mistake about it. When the Government that he is supporting at the present time came to power, the national debt of this country was $170 billion. At some point between now and this fall it will pass the $340 billion mark, which is exactly double in five years. Does he not think it would have been better if his Government had taken their own rhetoric seriously? They are always talking about how they are good financial managers and what a tremendous job they have done managing the finances of Canada over the years. This is at a time when they have doubled the national debt in five years, equal to the amount of the first 117 years since Confederation.

Does the Hon. Member not think it would have been better if the Government had put some of its own rhetoric into play four and a half years ago when they came into power, and really meant what they said instead of coming down like a sledge hammer on everybody because the Government suddenly realizes they are in serious trouble? The Government is in serious trouble because it has had no planning in the interim since it came to power.

• (1700)

Mr. MacDonald (Rosedale): Again, I greet a member of the Class of '65 on my return. I have to say to the Hon. Member for Renfrew (Mr. Hopkins) that he is on very shaky ground if he is trying to make a case that we have not changed the direction of a Government that he supported for more than 15 years, and in this instance attempting to further those objectives in this first Budget in the new Parliament. If I hear the Hon. Member correctly, I hear him saying that perhaps we should have been even stronger. I hope when we get to vote again on the Budget that the Member will join us in voting for this Budget, as I hear him sotto voce expressing. I welcome that support. I come from a profession which always welcomes those who come with penitence, and if that is what this is about, I have no problems with that.

Mr. McGuire: I now represent the riding that the Hon. Member represented for 15 years, and I would like to ask the Hon. Member why he has so much sympathy for the environment, and assisting those peoples in the Third World, and then callously demonstrated on a television interview last week in Summerside that he has no sympathy for the people he used to represent.

Mr. MacDonald (Rosedale): First, I would like to congratulate the new Member for Egmont (Mr. McGuire). It is a great constituency to represent, and I am sure the Hon. Member will enjoy representing it. I am troubled that he would significantly misrepresent what I said. I would be happy to sit down with the Hon. Member and look at the transcript of that television program, and also several other interviews I did while I was in Prince Edward Island.

I did not go there for the express purpose of discussing that matter, as the Hon. Member knows. I thought that I owed it to the people of that part of Prince Edward Island, and indeed all Islanders, to advise them of the basis on which the decision was taken, and also give what I thought was some helpful advice. In case the Member missed the advice, I will briefly repeat it.

From the time I was first elected in 1965 I have stated that the base at Summerside has been a bit of a time bomb. If the Hon. Member has not already heard, he will find out that National Defence has tried to close that base for years. Many efforts have been made to maintain it, by both provincial and federal Governments. I can tell the Member that it will be very important in this critical period not to play politics with a matter that has consistently received the support of all people in the province, and always to look at the alternatives that might support the base not in a partisan manner. If the Member is, may I dare say, irresponsible enough to turn it into a partisan situation, he will do his constituency and the people of Prince Edward Island no good service.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Shuswap.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have this opportunity, on behalf of my constituents in the riding of Okanagan—Shuswap, to respond to the motion before the House.

The new constituency of Okanagan—Shuswap is located at the north end of the Okanagan Valley, in the southern interior of British Columbia. The riding includes the Shuswap and Okanagan Lakes water basins. It enjoys a thriving tourism industry which complements both the forestry and agricultural industries.

Without a doubt it is probably one of the finest pieces of real estate on the globe. It has a quality of life that is virtually unsurpassed. The people of the riding of Okanagan—Shuswap are very proud of that environmental heritage. They are becoming increasingly concerned with what they see at a local, provincial, national, and global level as a threat to their quality of life and the quality of life of all Canadians: the accelerating loss of our forests, the strangling of our agricultural industry, and threats to our limited supply of fresh, clean water.

Although my constituents in general applaud the Government's new-found commitment to environmental issues, they are also as suspicious as I am that those promises on the environmental initiatives will evaporate as quickly as have hundreds of other promises.

It is true that the Government is preparing to spend more money on the Ministry of the Environment. The Government is also spending hundreds of millions of dollars more on energy megaprojects that will harm our environment. While it has increased spending in the ministry, it has cancelled what amounts to approximately $1.6 billion worth of election promises on environmental issues. I wish to list a few of them. Energy conservation, research and development, $600 million; measures against acid rain, $300 million; the Halifax Harbour clean-up; the Great Lakes clean-up, and the list goes on.

While more is being spent in the ministry, a recent article in one of the local papers indicates that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) is spending more than $40,000 alone on his own environment on improvements to his office at the same time that billions of dollars worth of environmental commitments made by the Government during the election are being cancelled.

One of the most disturbing memories that I can recall as a child is the recurring question of just where did all the steel, rubber, and other materials come from to build our way of life and our nation? What about all the energy to supply and heat our homes, and the gasoline to run our automobiles? I always used to question where it all came from, and what will happen when we finally run out. In more modern terms, it could be phrased as just what are our limits to growth?

In the early 1950s the term "pollution" was not widely recognized or understood. The concept of resource depletion was virtually unheard of. Our approach to nature was to beat it into submission. Mother Nature was to be conquered by man's technological superiority.

Industrialized nations with booming post-war economies were caught in an economic frenzy, building a better life for their citizens and consuming more and more of our non-renewable resources.

The 1950s were the golden years of the industrialized world. There was a standard of living that was unmatched in all of previous human history. The "good life" at last was within our reach. Big cars, big egos, fast times. The measure of success was a '57 Chevy and a full tank of gas.

Then things began to change. We were now beginning to bump up against some very harsh realities. It was during the 1960s that the first faint cries of environmental concerns were heard. Rachel Carson's book entitled Silent Spring outlined the consequences of our environmental neglect. It provided the focus needed for the environmental movement. At that time, that movement was considered a collection of academic eccentrics and back-to-nature freaks that no one paid a lot of attention to. We are now beginning to take them very seriously.

Later works such as Limits to Growth, published by the Club of Rome in the early 1970s, raised legitimate concerns that the world we lived in was heading straight toward a catastrophic collapse both economically and environmentally, which at that time they considered may have already been too late to avoid. Today, almost a quarter century after these first alarms were sounded, the industrialized world continues to lurch from crisis to crisis, not understanding that as a delicately balanced system, our environment is in fact getting more and more out of whack.

Governments, like this Government, are notoriously slow at recognizing and adapting to that kind of change. We continue to trade off our environmental quality, our quality of life, for political expediency, managing under the myopic viewpoint of a four-year mandate rather than considering the longer-range implications of our actions and our stubborn refusal to recognize and attempt to resolve environmental concerns.

The Chernobyl nuclear holocaust, the Bhopal disaster, trans-mountain boundary disputes on acid rain, increasing levels of carbon dioxide in our atmosphere, the greenhouse effect, the escalating destruction of our rain forests, accelerating elimination of entire species from our biosphere, dangerous toxic spills, like the Valdez disaster, all of these events point to man's inability to come to terms with the immutable laws of nature. I want to add that mother nature is now telling us loud and clear that she has limited patience and it is rapidly wearing thin.

To date, our response has been to view each environmental crisis we have come up against as a single issue. We continue to treat it as a symptom rather than recognizing the underlying cause. As long as environmental crises continue to be viewed as these isolated issues which can be managed by reactive bureaucratic measures, then this global trend toward environmental degradation and ultimately environmental catastrophe will persist.

As long as governments continue to view the solutions to environmental problems as a means of restoring confidence in the status quo, rather than as a means of learning from our past mistakes and adapting to future problems, then we will continue to walk straight toward the precipice of environmental catastrophe.

As long as our economic systems continue to embrace this mistaken necessity for continued economic expansion and the consumption of a limited resource base, then we are going to continue to flirt with self-annihilation. There is simply no way around it.

In light of the Brundtland Commission which has been discussed continually in the House, it is now time to take decisive action and to commit ourselves to a policy of sustainable development, where economic growth is inextricably linked to the ability of our environment to support it. This is, without a doubt, the most critical challenge that we face as a country.

In the middle of the 20th century we saw our planet from space for the first time. That vision of a fragile globe alone in the vast infinite void of space may in fact have had a greater influence on human thought than did the Copernican revolution of the 16th century.

Recently a Saudi astronaut, who flew three years ago on a NASA shuttle mission, related his experience of seeing for the first time from space his mother earth. He said:

> The first day or so we all pointed to our countries; the third or fourth day we were pointing to our continents; by the fifth day we were aware of only one earth.

As a NASA payload specialist explained:

> Once you have seen planet Earth as a huge community, it is hard ever again to relate to the walls we routinely build to keep each other out.

This is a paradigm shift of perception that has been experienced by our astronauts and may indeed be critically important in ensuring our very survival as a species. We have come to view this earth not as an endless warehouse of resources that we can continue to exploit, but rather as a fragile and delicately balanced biophysical system that is both finite and exhaustible.

When this century began, neither human numbers nor technology had the power to radically alter our planetary systems. But as this century closes, we find that the impact of our human and our technological growth has produced major and unintended changes in our atmosphere, in our soils, in our water, in fact in the entire complex web of life that makes up our physical world.

Mankind's inability to fit things into the pattern of nature is in fact initiating widespread changes to our world. Many of these changes are accompanied by life-threatening hazards and propelling us as a nation and as a planet toward a new reality from which there is no escape.

This new reality has to be recognized and it has to be managed. We have the ability to reconcile our relations with the natural laws and in fact to thrive in the process. There does exist the possibility of a new era of economic growth but it must be based on policies that sustain and policies that expand our environmental resource base.

To do so, we as decision-makers must also experience this paradigm shift in thinking that our astronauts first experienced from outer space.

Our hope for the future is conditional on decisive action now, in fact yesterday, to begin managing our environmental resources, to ensure sustainable economic growth and human survival.

Our commitment must be defined in a new conceptual framework of a world that is rapidly approaching its limits to growth. Our policies must reflect the economic and environmental limitations which human society must learn to live with if it ever hopes to see the 22nd century.

To tackle this new reality we cannot afford to embrace any outmoded ideology, nor can we afford to pasture any sacred cows. We have to throw out old ideas and biases and look for solutions that work.

The necessity for open-mindedness and political flexibility has never been greater; the problems never more daunting, and the consequence of failure never more severe.

The challenge is before the House today. Do we have the courage to accept it?

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to take part in today's debate on the motion put forward by the New Democratic Party of Canada.

I especially welcome the opportunity to discuss before the House the environmental commitments made by the Government and to which the Speech from the Throne gives an importance never seen under any previous government.

[English]

Hon. Members will know that the environment is one of the five areas of priority for this session of Parliament, as stated in the Speech from the Throne. The commitment of the Government as laid out in the Throne Speech will be honoured.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we are entering a new era. Basic changes are needed in the way we treat our precious environmental heritage. Canadians have a special responsibility to their environment. Our country, as vast as a continent, is the second largest in the world. That shows the magnitude of our responsibility as trustees and keepers of one of the world's natural jewels.

Canadians deserve the respect of the international community for having made the environment a national priority.

It is not by chance that leaders of other countries have praised our Prime Minister for his commitment to ensure the viability of the environment. It is not by chance, Mr. Speaker, that our Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney, will receive this week from Mrs. Gro Brundtland, Prime Minister of Norway and world champion of the environment cause, a special prize in recognition of what he has done for the environment.

These tributes and such prizes are rightly for the Canadian people and their Prime Minister in recognition of the special attention and care they have given to seeking and implementing environmental solutions. As a Government, we want to realize the environmental aspirations of the men and women whom we have the honour to represent.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention here a particular initiative of the voters in Argenteuil—Papineau, whom I have the honour to represent. Next Monday, I will have the pleasure to inaugurate the environmental training centre located, Mr. Speaker, in a magnificent heritage house formerly owned by the federal Government on expropriated land in Sainte-Scholastique-de-Mirabel. This centre has been renovated according to the Québec Department of Cultural Affairs, in a truly magnificent setting, Mr. Speaker. I invite you to come and have a look around.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the Government of Québec, through the Department of Education— Also, I would like to congratulate my provincial counterpart, Mr. Ryan, for financial assistance, because he is Minister of Education in Québec. The federal Government, of course, invested a lot of money and it is the first environmental training centre, Mr. Speaker, sponsored by the very dynamic St. Jerome CEGEP. Thanks to our Government's support, they were able to set up this training centre that is unique in Québec.

So, Mr. Speaker, you will understand that I take no little pride in representing them because they are leaders in this field.

Members of this House therefore understand, Mr. Speaker, how much is asked of us as a society. We must correct past mistakes and put our country on a new path, one of imagination and concern for harmony with our natural environment.

In the past, we approached our environment in two ways. First, we sought to restore it in regions where massive industrialization threatened the ecosystem. At the same time, we tried to protect areas, like parks, which are essential elements of our natural heritage.

All levels of government have dedicated themselves to this kind of action, which the Government of Canada considers just as important.

Nevertheless, we must now turn our efforts to something else, which affects the economy, the environment and behaviour. In a word, we must take a new approach, sustainable development.

When economic progress threatens our environment, Mr. Speaker, it not only lacks vision but it also exposes us to grave dangers. Indeed, it is no longer progress but a senseless race to ruin and collective destruction. The triumph of human creativity provides the ultimate irony. What has made our species great and given it amazing domination over its habitat now threatens to lead it to ruin.

• (1720)

[English]

The knowledge and progress of centuries of human endeavour have been translated into practices which threaten to destroy us. The alternative, our only alternative, to apply this same energy, knowledge and creativity to sustaining our economies in a manner completely harmonious with our environment.

We know that climate change caused by greenhouse gases has the potential to unleash radical and devastating impacts on our planet.

We know that the stratospheric ozone layer is being depleted and that each 1 per cent decline in that layer is likely to produce a 4 to 6 per cent increase in skin cancers.

We know that every day an entire genetic species is disappearing from our planet, an organic creation which will never, ever repeat itself.

We know that acid rain from sulphur and nitrogen oxide emissions is killing lakes and forests around the globe and that here at home some 14,000 lakes are now considered dead.

Isn't it amazing, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Yes, those myriad lakes that we are counting now, since so many have started to die. Mr. Speaker, the riding of Argenteuil—Papineau is unique in terms of its beauty and its many lakes that provide a magnificent environment for people in Montreal who want to live in the country but not too far from the city.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) talked about an agenda for society, and he referred to the changes in values that were necessary. Canadians must all do their share to bring about these changes, both individually and collectively. Environmental partnership should be seen as a new social contract, one more link between ourselves and our country, and the entire planet as well.

Mr. Speaker, I realize my time has almost expired, but I know you will let me know when it has, so I will continue, because I have some important things to say in my notes.

Mr. Speaker, there is no simple way to make such sweeping changes, and Hon. Members understand that, but we are faced with a vital necessity. We cannot expect the Government to solve our environmental problems with a few waves of its magic wand.

Mr. Speaker, I imagine you know what it is like when you are driving your car and all of a sudden the driver in the car in front decides to empty his ashtray out the window. It happened to me. Of course, I immediately called the police, and this person was fortunately arrested and he paid the requisite fine. It is incredible that in 1989, somebody would empty his ashtray just like that when we know, Mr. Speaker, that cigarette stubs, as somebody told me, take 10 or 20 years to decompose. So I was quite shocked, but I am glad I acted the way I did, because it must have cost him a few bucks.

Again, Mr. Speaker, in the Throne Speech, the Government mentioned it would establish an Environmental Partners Fund. I can inform the House that my constituents are eagerly awaiting the details of this program. Mr. Speaker, my riding borders on the Ottawa River, and it is really interesting to see how many constituents go fishing in the Ottawa River. There is also a certain amount of boating activity that is really unique, and I have it will be allowed to continue, always of course in compliance with environmental criteria.

I also think that young people in our ridings are becoming increasingly critical when judging the position we take on the environment, and I am proud to represent a Government that has decided not just to talk but to act. Whatever our opposition friends may say, the environment should not be politicized. The environment should concern every single one of us, and we should make a concerted effort to work together on all sides of the House, with all concerned Canadians. I have, and I imagine all my colleagues have people in their ridings who are environmentalists.

Recently, Mr. Speaker, we had the Festival des outardes in Plaisance which is right at the beginning of my riding. Last year, the festival attracted 5,000 visitors, and this year more than 10,000 people came to admire the Canada geese that happened to stop over and add to the beauty of this area.

Mr. Speaker, we are indeed fortunate that we are not near the coast of Alaska. When we saw the birds dying after the Exxon Valdez spill, we felt that we were lucky we had these marvelous birds coming as a sign of spring.

Mr. Speaker, you are signalling that my time has expired. Once again, I would like to urge Hon. Members on all sides of the House to consider environmental issues as part of a common problem and to avoid using them for political ends.

[English]

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak in the debate today. I would like to take this opportunity to speak on some environmental issues that are of concern to northerners all across the circumpolar north.

In recent months much attention has been focused on toxic chemicals in the Canadian Arctic. Many Canadians were shocked to learn that an area of the country they think of as unspoiled is subject to toxic contamination. Northern aboriginal people were alarmed by the headlines in the southern city newspapers predicting the demise of the polar bear and an end to their traditional consumption of wild meat.

For a number of years individual scientists have been working on several studies of contaminants in the Arctic. Prior to 1985 these scientists were largely working on their own, but as it became evident there was an emerging problem in the North a more co-ordinated approach was developed.

Concern about the possibility of contamination of food species from PCBs left at abandoned DEW Line sites led to visits to northern communities and pilot studies. The people of Broughton Island in my constituency were the subject of scientific studies in 1987 and 1988. Those studies found PCBs in the people and in the wild food that they consume.

This past February a team of scientists met in Ottawa to discuss these and other findings of Arctic contaminant research. Although these studies concern Inuit directly, a request by Inuit organizations to send an Inuit representative to this meeting was turned down by the Government.

Shortly after that meeting some scientific researchers flew to Broughton Island to brief the community on their findings. They told the residents that there was no immediate danger to their health and that they could continue to eat the wild food as they have always done. The community, however, still has many concerns. They want more information than they have received to date.

Following their trip to Broughton Island, the scientists travelled to Yellowknife where they made a presentation to the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories. They brought the message that although chemicals have been found in the wildlife the food is safe to eat. They took great pains to stress that the nutritional benefits of the wild food outweigh any risks associated with chemical contamination. They said that substitution of Inuit foods with marketed foods would result in a poorer diet with a real risk of damage to health. It would also be detrimental to Inuit culture.

This affirmation of the continued cultural importance and nutritional value of wild food, which we call country food, was most reassuring. However, it is not sufficient to allay all the concerns that have arisen on this issue.

In addition to PCBs, DDT, chlordane and toxaphene have been found in northern wildlife, in foods which are part of the average daily food intake of northern aboriginal people—in seal, whale and in polar bear. Cadmium, mercury, lead and dioxin have been found.

The PCBs left in the equipment at the DEW Line sites are a continuing issue. Apparently, in 1985, there was a clean-up of the 21 DEW Line sites across the Canadian Arctic. We are told that subsequent testing after the clean-up in 1987 at those sites showed that residual contamination only remained at one site, Sarcpa Lake. We are told that this coming summer action will be taken to have a further clean-up of Sarcpa Lake.

The scientists say that the PCB-containing material at the DEW Line sites did not contribute to the PCB issue they are dealing with now. They say the quantities of PCBs at a number of sites across the North were isolated and small. They say that they have removed the material that was left at those sites and do not anticipate any further problems. They say also that there are no "hot spots", that the level of PCBs and pesticides across the North are relatively evenly distributed. Thus they believe that the contaminants being found are coming from sources distant from the North.

I am not convinced that these sites have all been properly cleaned up. In the Speech from the Throne the Government stated that it would further the process of cleaning up dangerous land sites. I urge the Government to pay urgent attention to the DEW Line and other waste-containing sites in the North.

The Inuit Circumpolar Conference, an international organization that represents Inuit in Alaska, Greenland, Canada and, hopefully soon, the U.S.S.R., has been working for several years toward a comprehensive Arctic policy on a wide range of issues, including the environment and transboundary pollution. It has called for a comprehensive strategy which would include the following elements. The first is that serious efforts must be made to determine the sources of the transboundary pollution, and then to prevent their entry into the global environment.

Second, there must be more in-depth scientific research into all areas of the Arctic to determine the levels of existing pollutants and to monitor them in the future.

Third, we must actively encourage Arctic and other Governments to answer co-operatively to an international convention that will deal effectively with all major aspects of the transboundary pollution.

Fourth, there must be an effective communication strategy especially to inform people at the local and regional levels on an ongoing basis. Such a strategy should be carried out sensitively so as to keep the northern peoples fully aware of the potential risks and issues related to the problem without creating an atmosphere of panic or fear.

Fifth, in carrying out any comprehensive strategy it is essential that northern people's organizations have an opportunity to participate fully on a continuing basis.

I cannot stress enough the necessity and importance of Inuit participation and involvement in ongoing research and in the development of all appropriate strategies and remedies to deal with this problem. I urge the Government not to exclude the Inuit from this problem. It is affecting us and causing extreme anxiety, particularly among young mothers and mothers-to-be who worry about their children and their children's children. We are not responsible for this problem, but we want to be part of the solution.

I would now like to touch briefly on some of the comments I made earlier today in regard to the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in the northern Yukon and Alaska. The report entitled: "Our Common Future", the landmark report of the United Nations World Commission on Environment and Development, reaffirmed the value of aboriginal life-styles and warned of the dangers facing aboriginal cultures. The report stated:

> Tribal and indigenous cultures will need special attention as the forces of economic development disrupt their traditional lifestyles—lifestyles that can offer modern societies many lessons in the management of—resources.
> Some are threatened with virtual extinction by insensitive development over which they have no control. Their traditional rights should be recognized, and they should be given a decisive voice in formulating policies about resource development in their areas.

The Commission's report recognizes the need for greater local public participation and control over resources. Protection of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge must be a priority of the Government. These lands, on Alaska's north coast, must continue to be designated as wilderness. U.S. legislators are considering proposals to open up the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil and gas exploration and development.

The Governments of Canada, Yukon and the Northwest Territories are attempting to influence the decision of the U.S. Congress on the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge issue. The Governments are concerned that current proposals for oil exploration and development in the area do not adequately safeguard the calving grounds of the Porcupine caribou herd and other wildlife resources shared by Canada and the U.S. along the Canada-Alaska border. The potential harm to these resources could have lasting detrimental effects on aboriginal peoples in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. The area within the refuge proposed for development called the 1002 Lands contains up to 80 per cent of the calving grounds of the Porcupine caribou herd. It also includes critical habitat for the snow geese and polar bears which migrate across the Yukon–Alaska border.

• (1740)

The Northwest Territories, Yukon and Canadian Governments have co–operated in efforts to conserve and manage this herd and its calving grounds in Canada, and strongly support efforts to safeguard the herd's critical habitat in Alaska. The best way to accomplish this goal would be to designate the area as wilderness and to twin it with the protected area in northern Yukon known as the Northern Yukon National Park.

Conservation of the herd is required under the terms of an international treaty signed in July 1987 by the then U.S. Secretary of State, Donald Hodel, and Canada's then Environment Minister, Tom McMillan.

The Porcupine caribou herd is a resource shared by the people of Alaska, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. It is one of the last great animal herds to roam North America. Its health is vital to northern aboriginal people. Access to the herd helps to sustain the self–sufficient life–style of about 7,000 aboriginal people in northern Canada and Alaska.

In Yukon, the Indian people of Old Crow are the most consistent users of the herd because of their proximity to the herd's traditional migration route. Indian people in Dawson and Mayo also harvest the herd.

In the Northwest Territories, the communities of Fort McPherson, Aklavik, Tuktoyaktuk, Arctic Red River and Inuvik use the herd. The impact of full or partial leasing of the 1002 area for development could reduce the subsistence harvest of these animals by the aboriginal people.

A U.S. Department of the Interior report expects the proposed development would bring, and I quote, "an accelerated rate of change in traditional native culture and probably some cultural disorientation." That is an understatement of the effects on aboriginal people.

Opening up the coastal plain to development would be devastating to caribou and other wildlife that share these lands and to the people who depend on this wildlife.

What would happen to the aboriginal people if the herd declined? I would like Hon. Members to hear the words of aboriginal people from the North.

Norma Kassi, member of the Yukon Legislative Assembly from Old Crow, has worked tirelessly to protect the herd and her people from the proposed development. She has stated:

> We do not need oil and gas development in the 1002 lands. We want wilderness designation for the area. We have lived here for thousands of years and we know what we need to sustain us. The caribou are our life. We must safeguard the herd forever.

A councillor from Old Crow put it this way:

> Those caribou need that country to survive. When you take away their nursery it is going to hurt them. It is like taking a troop of soldiers into a maternity ward.

When the question of what would happen to the aboriginal people if the herd declined was put to the Chairman of the Porcupine Caribou Management Board, who is also a Yukon Indian, he responded this way:

> It would ruin them. Every aspect of their lives depends on the caribou. Their economy, their life–style, even their health. If they lose the caribou, they lose everything. The caribou are the heart of their communities. People hunt caribou, eat caribou and talk caribou. Without the caribou they would be an empty people in a dead land.

The recent economic downturn in the delta has reinforced the economic and cultural importance of the herd. The peoples ties to the land are an essential part of their life–style and culture. As much as we can discuss all this, I am afraid my time has come an end. I thank you very much for having had this opportunity to speak, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5.45 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to order made Tuesday, April 4, 1989, to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of Interim Supply and for the passage of all stages of the Bill based thereon.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. de Cotret thereupon moved that Bill C-14, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1990, be read the first time.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

Mr. de Cotret moved that the Bill be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Lest Members opposite think I am being persistent in my attacks on this legislation, I want to make it clear that I am.

In my submission, the procedure that has been adopted in this case is wrong, and I refer Your Honour to Section 54 of the Constitution Act, 1867 which states:

> It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any Vote, Resolution, Address, or Bill for the Appropriation of any Part of the Public Revenue, or of any Tax or Impost, to any Purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by Message of the Governor General in the Session in which such Vote, Resolution, Address, or Bill is proposed.

You have made it clear, Mr. Speaker, that you are not called upon to make rulings on the law. Standing Order 79 of the rules of the House state:

> This House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to the House by a message from the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address, or bill is proposed.

The words of the Act are repeated in the Standing Orders.

Standing Order 79(2) requires that the recommendation be printed in the Bill and in the notice of the resolution. I note that the resolution that we have been given notice of today and is in the Order Paper has no recommendation attached to it. I have inquired at the Table whether there is a recommendation coming in respect of this Bill, and I am advised that there is no special recommendation attached.

The Bill has in it a recital after the words "Most Gracious Sovereign". It appears that a message has been sent to the House and that accompanying the message were certain Estimates. The Bill deals in part with those Estimates and that message, and that message recommended those Estimates to the House. In so far as the Interim Supply portion of this Bill is concerned, I have no objection. There has been a message received during this Session from Her Excellency the Governor General.

However, in respect of Clause 3 of the Bill there is a request that the House confirm the payment of certain moneys out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund that were taken by the Government, by Governor General's warrants, when Parliament had been called into session and then was adjourned. We are asked today to confirm those, and there is no recommendation from Her Excellency the Governor General in respect of any of the appropriations necessitated by the Bill.

It is improper for the House to proceed with the Bill in this form. Either Clause 3 must come out, or the Bill is not in accordance with Section 54 of the Constitution Act or in accordance with Standing Order 79(1).

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, this is the third run that my hon. friend has had at this particular matter. He raised a question of privilege earlier in the month, on which Your Honour ruled and he raised a point of order earlier this morning.

The Bill was provided to my hon. friend this morning in accordance with the normal customs in order that the House would have an opportunity to review it. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that you have ruled. If my hon. friend wishes to challenge the constitutionality and the law in terms of what we are doing, this should take place in another place.

Mr. Nunziata: Nonsense. You are required to obey the law. Have you no respect for the rule of law?

Mr. Lewis: I submit that the practices we have followed are in keeping with the conventions, traditions, and the laws of this place. Had my hon. friend wished to engage in a protracted point of order, we would have done that earlier in the day.

However, my hon. friend chose this moment when, with all due respect, Mr. Speaker—and I know we have to keep the traditions—there are many people who want to make travel plans, including members of his own Party. There are times and places to do this. If we want to deal with all those niceties, we should deal with them early in the morning.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands has been pursuing this general matter, I might say, with tenacity and with diligence.

However, in giving credit to good counsel where credit is due, each of the applications has perhaps been on the same issue, but there have been variations thereof.

I appreciate the fact that the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands gave some indication of what his point might be and enabled me to do some prior thinking on it. I have listened carefully to what the Hon. Member has said. The Hon. Member knows what I ruled a few days ago, and he further knows what I had to rule this afternoon.

The essential issue that he puts forward raises the question: Does a supply Bill, because it contains the warrants issued in the previous session, require a royal recommendation? That is in effect the issue. The Hon. Member has cited Section 54 of the Constitution Act, 1867 and Standing Order 79. The Chair concedes that Standing Order 79 requires that a royal recommendation be attached to any Bill or appropriation of any part of the public revenue.

On the present case in the present Bill, Clause 3 contains the amounts that were appropriated by warrants prior to April 1. They are included in the Bill by virtue of Section 30(4) of the Financial Administration Act.

• (1820)

I want to quote that Act because it is important. Subsection 4 reads, in English:

> Where a special warrant has been issued pursuant to this Section, the amounts appropriated thereby shall be deemed to be included in and not to be in addition to the amounts appropriated by the Act of Parliament enacted next thereafter for granting to Her Majesty sums of money to defray expenses of the Public Service of Canada for a fiscal year.

If there is any doubt as to what that means, it reads, in French:

[Translation]

> Les montants affectés par mandat spécial sont réputés être des avances. Ils font partie des montants affectés par la première loi de crédits votée par le Parlement par la suite et ne s'y ajoutent pas.

[English]

We are bound by the plain wording of the Financial Administration Act. I have to conclude that the warrants have already received Her Excellency's approval and they were tabled in the House. They are now before the House because they are required to be so by the statute to which I have just referred and not as a requirement of the Standing Orders.

I repeat to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands that the point he is pursuing, as I said with tenacity and diligence, is in itself an important point. However, as I said earlier this afternoon, it is not within the prerogative of the Chair to resolve what may clearly be a legitimate grievance. It will have to be settled in some other place and in some other way.

I regret to have to inform the Hon. Member that his point of order cannot be sustained. As I said earlier today, he may have a grievance and that is a matter for the whole House to deal with.

However, I want to say to the Hon. Member that I appreciate his points. I have also appreciated his succinct and capable arguments.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have what I think is a good practice of applying the results of previous votes. If you were to seek unanimous consent, we would accept the application of the previous recorded division to this motion.

Mr Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 8L—SOCIAL PROGRAMS—CLAW-BACK PROVISION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the claw-back proposed by the Minister of Finance with regard to the Old Age Security pensions and Family Allowances (1) undermine all Canadian social programs; (2) make easier future incursions against Old Age Security pensions and Family Allowances as well as other social programs, including medicare; (3) will fall most severely on Canadians of moderate means while costing the wealthy little; and

That this House, therefore, condemn the Government for this attempt to violate this sacred trust.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to the items contained in the recent Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) as it affects some of the most important social programs in Canada. There has been a long and indeed important history associated with the social programs which have developed over the years in this great country. Successive Governments have tried to deal with those particular programs and where they could, they embellished upon them, and in doing so, they have brought many benefits to Canadians, Canadians in every region, Canadians in every community, rich and poor, young and old alike.

The social programs of the Old Age Security and family allowance are an integral part of Canadian life. To suggest that they are merely social programs providing a benefit to a select few is really missing the point in its entirety. A policy of good social programs such as I have referred to is also good economic policy. There are countless Canadians who have young families and there are countless senior citizens who look forward on a regular basis to receiving the generosity of the Government of Canada.

I have said in many quarters, and indeed, during the most recent federal election campaign, that for many senior citizens, their Old Age Security cheques provide the only sense of dignity they have. There are women, men and couples who have relatively limited income, but the Old Age Security in itself allows them to exercise their wishes and to live in dignity.

What is dignity? Dignity to a woman of 67 years of age may in point of fact mean receiving her Old Age Security cheque and thereafter purchasing items for family members. It may mean a trip to another part of the country to see a loved one. It may also mean paying for a telephone call to someone somewhere else in Canada.

That is the significance of that program which touches many Canadians, but this particular Budget proposes that high income taxpayers repay Old Age Security pensions and family allowance benefits through the tax system at a rate of 15 per cent of individual net income exceeding $50,000. The universal nature of these programs with respect to access has therefore been maintained as high income earners will continue to receive old age security and family allowance cheques. However, universality of these benefits with respect to quality of benefit has been altered. The level of benefit received by families and individuals will no longer be equal, but will be dependent upon the level of income above an established threshold.

These measures in the Budget violate a long held principle in tax policy known as horizontal equity. This principle dictates that individuals are treated equally by the tax system. Individuals at the same level of income should pay the same amount of tax provided all other circumstances are equal.

This Budget will treat old age security pension income differently than other forms of income, and tax it back from high income tax payers at a higher marginal rate than applies to other forms of income. For example, a senior citizen earning $75,000 a year will pay more taxes than an individual at 64 at the same income level because the former old age security benefits will be subject to a higher tax rate. At this level of income that portion of the senior citizen's income comprised of old age security will be subject to a marginal tax of about 100 per cent, while the income of a non senior will be taxed at the top rate of 29 per cent.

Where is the fairness? Where is the equity? My view of universality has traditionally supported the concept of equal access to equal benefits across income levels. This concept of universality was integrated with that of a progressive tax system. Successive Liberal Governments strove to increase the level of progressivity in the tax system. The tax system was a corrective, progressive mechanism to assist in a fair distribution of benefits. Every individual within a defined client group received the same benefit regardless of income. At the same time, the tax system introduced the element of fairness by ensuring that high income Canadians pay higher marginal tax rates. Granted, a perfect degree of progressivity was not attained. Yet the tax system under Liberal Governments provided, in my view, a more equitable and fair range of marginal tax rates. Prior to tax reform, the upper marginal tax rate was 34 per cent, exclusive of surtaxes. The Conservatives have now reduced this rate to 29 per cent, exclusive of surtaxes. This move has resulted in lower overall tax rates for upper income Canadians.

Figures from the National Council of Welfare showing the percentage of changes between 1984 and 1991 in total federal and provincial income taxes paid by a dual-income family of four at three different levels of income illustrates this fact very clearly. Income taxes for the working poor in middle income families will increase in this country by 60.2 per cent and 17.4 per cent respectfully between 1984 and 1991. However, families in the upper income range will pay 6.4 per cent less in income taxes over the same period.

The Conservative assault on the old age security and family allowance programs has three distinct components, all of which represent regressive departures from traditional equitable policies. For the first time, the tax back rate of universal programs is linked directly to the benefit received. The tax back rate was previously determined by utilizing progressive marginal tax rates which are impartial as to the sources of income. On its own this linkage between benefit and tax back rate renders universality a sham. The measure is doubly insidious coupled with the regressive tax measures instituted by this Government. As noted above, tax reform has benefited the rich, and further changes to the child benefits package has significantly eroded the principle of horizontal tax equity. The poor and the middle class are paying a substantially higher rate of tax today than they were in 1984.

A one income family with two children in this country earning a poverty line income of $23,639 will have to pay an increase as a result of this Budget of $324. That is a cumulative effect since 1984 of 60.2 per cent. For a one income family with two children earning $45,422, the percentage increase since 1984 has been 29.3 per cent, whereas for upper income Canadians earning $100,000 with one income and two children, the increase will be roughly between 6 and 7.7 per cent. That is a shame. There is no fairness in this. It is just a further enhancement of the Tory ideology which is to help their rich friends and corporate friends at the expense of poor and middle income Canadians.

What about two income families with two children, where both the husband and wife are working? For those who are at the poverty level, which is roughly around $23,639, and I have quite a few of them in my constituency, as I am sure other Members do as well, this Budget will provide an increase in taxes of roughly $341. What does it mean in terms of the cumulative effect since 1984 on these individuals? It means a tax increase of 176 per cent, whereas for an upper income Canadian earning 100,000, the increase this year will be $1,429. Since 1984, the increase in percentage, as related to the poverty situation that I have just mentioned, is a mere increase of 10.9 per cent. In that there is not very much equity, not very much fairness.

Mr. Wappel: That is Tory equity.

Mr. Dingwall: That is right, it is Tory equity.

Finally, the Government has embarked on a slippery slope. By varying the level of benefit from universal programs relative to income, the thresholds for the reduction of benefits under both the old age security and family allowance is to be $50,000 of net individual income. However, this threshold is only partially indexed. The Government has indicated that the threshold will be reviewed—and this is key—periodically and adjusted as appropriate. This is a signal they are sending to Canadians that next year, six months from now or 18 months from now that that threshold could very well be reduced if they wished to take additional forms of income from poor and middle income Canadians. We know the track record. It is evident there for all to see. This means that as the Government looks for additional income or additional savings next year, the threshold could be dropped to $40,000 of net individual income, thereby capturing the family allowance benefits of an additional 530,000 families. Once the precedent is set, I suggest that the desire to achieve greater savings may prove irresistible to a hungry Government looking for new cash.

In any event, the lack of full indexing of this threshold will ensure that those earning $40,000 net individual income today will begin losing their family allowance benefits in eight years' time.

The assault also goes on to other programs other than old age security and family allowance. On December 9, 1983 in the House the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated:

> Genuine co-operative federalism requires a spirit of generosity. There must be certain things that are above politics—there are certain things in Canada which must be safeguarded against any partisan attack—Medicare has to be one of them at all times.

Let us look at the record. From 1984 to 1989 we know what has happened. Unilaterally the Minister of Finance reduced expenditures and income transfers to the provinces substantially so that smaller provinces are feeling the heat and have stated so publicly. In his Budget papers he is going to give a further reduction of 1 per cent. As a result of the 1986 unilateral cut-backs and the Budget measures of 1989, the cumulative effect of those reductions will mean that Prince Edward Island will receive $7 million less, Newfoundland will receive $34 million less, New Brunswick will receive $43 million and $53 million less. That is for 1989-90 fiscal year.

The Minister of Finance would attempt to have us believe that with that reduction of 1 per cent we are still giving additional income to the provinces. Has the Minister of Finance from Nova Scotia said anything about these cut-backs and how it will affect his province? Has the Premier of Nova Scotia? Have other provincial Ministers said what these cut-backs will mean? These provinces will lose this cash in fiscal year 1989-90.

The Minister states that we have just reduced a little bit of the growth, by 1 percentage point. One percentage point to the people of Nova Scotia or Newfoundland, or poorer provinces such as that, is an astronomical amount. It is no joking matter. It is not a game of theoretical arithmetic for Ministers of Finance to engage in. Those provinces were planning to have this money in 1989-90 in order to meet their economic commitments. By reducing that amount of money to the provinces, it will mean difficult decisions for provincial Governments to make. For example, it will mean such things as reductions in the number of people who work in our hospitals, whether it be nurses who care for the sick, orderlies who look after the infirm, or whether it be maintenance personnel. Their budget is shrinking, and the provinces will have to shoulder that burden.

Mr. Crosbie: That's totally wrong.

Mr. Dingwall: Members opposite do not wish to hear the facts, but those are the facts. So much for the generosity of the Prime Minister when it comes to co-operative federalism. He talks about $25 billion over "x" number of years. However, he does not talk about the reductions and how that will affect the lives of Canadians in different regions and communities. Somehow we are supposed to accept holus-bolus that things are okay, people will proceed, and life will go on as normal. However, when provinces that administer many of these programs are going to be short with regard to that financial assistance, I suggest very carefully and very sincerely that that will mean grave and serious consequences for them.

As the former Prime Minister, the former Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau said on that occasion:

> It is a matter of Tory mentality, not a matter of dollars and cents. Let me tell all those Canadians out there who think it is time for a change that if they elect a Tory Party they better not be sick.

How true he was.

As a Government we protected those social programs. Successive Liberal Governments have protected those programs. That crowd over there, Mr. Speaker, wish to be tough in economic matters, but the Minister of Finance is really tough. He is such a tough guy that he taxes children. He is even tougher than most Canadians. He has terminated the child care program in terms of additional income for child care spaces. He is the guy who has increased taxes since 1984, which has had a devastating effect on the poor and middle-income Canadians in this country, as I alluded to earlier.

I suggest that with the combination of these tax measures and cuts, and the obvious attempt to erode the principal of universality with regard to old age security and family allowance, the shortfall with regard to EPF funding and what it will mean for our provinces, it is a bad sign and a bad signal for Canadians coast-to-coast. Whether one lives in Nova Scotia, Manitoba, the North, Québec, or Ontario, from previous Governments we have come to expect a sense of equality, a sense of fairness. However, since 1984 coupled with Budget measures repeatedly, and now the most recent Budget of 1989, Canadians have come to learn to expect that there is no friendly hand with the Government of Brian Mulroney.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg St. James.

Mr. Harvard: I want to thank my hon. friend for presenting to us some very thoughtful remarks. It would be my hope that every Canadian could read his remarks because he has made some very salient points. The claw-back by the Conservative Government is an effort to make an end run around universality. We all know if this claw-back provision in the Budget goes through, it will be the end of universality as we know it in this country. It will be the resumption of the ugly means test, only being done in a different manner.

Under this provision if old age pension can be taken away at an income level of $70,000 today, it can be taken away at $60,000 tomorrow, and $50,000 the week after. The Government will not stop at family allowances or old age pensions, it will get into medicare, and into every single social program in this country.

Let me remind Members opposite how ugly the means test can be. I recall when I was young my mother telling me about what went on during the Dirty Thirties on the prairies. I recall it very well. Farmers would go to the municipal office only after they had reached the absolute bottom of despair and they would ask for perhaps a bag of flour. An ugly part of the means test is that they would perhaps get a bag of flour, but their names would be put on a list in the front window of the municipal office. That is what is ugly about the means test. I am getting to the question—

• (1030)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Member to do it now.

Mr. Harvard: I believe that the claw-back provision will prompt Canadians who do not share in a program like this to resent a social benefit of this kind. They will come to resent it. Does the Member not believe that programs like family allowance and old age pension would come to be resented as a result of the claw-back provision?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, my colleague's comment is very astute. He clearly spells out a concern that many Canadians have about the direction in which the country is going with regard to social programs. We have seen a number of government programs and its attempt to deindex, a subject which my colleague will address later in his remarks.

There is a great deal of concern, not only by provincial Governments but by individual Canadians and organizations, about the erosion of universality which began as recently as 1984 and has been coupled with successive tax measures brought in by the Government and the most recent Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). When you take the cumulative effect, in essence one must conclude that there has been a major assault against the principle of universality which will cause havoc, concern and a great deal of anguish by many Canadians who are presently receiving benefits and hope to receive benefits in the years to come.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member whether he is familiar with the views of his Party's finance critic who suggested, as a matter of fact on March 21, that the federal deficit be reduced by taxing back all of the family allowance and old age security payments from those who do not need them. This is the Party's official spokesman on matters of finance, speaking for the Party, speaking for the Leader presumably, and speaking for the caucus. I quote from the Ottawa Citizen on March 21. He said:

> But MacLaren said drastic action is needed to cut the federal deficit, possibly both tax increases and spending cuts. And the money saved by taxing back social program payments from those that don't need them could be used to reduce the deficit and help those in need, he said.
> MacLaren said he also supports the need for a new broadly based national sales tax on goods and services to replace the current narrowly based federal sales tax on manufacturers which he agreed is badly flawed.

This is all Liberal policy. It has been pronounced by the Liberal finance critic, the Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren). The article goes on to say:

> On the $29-billion-a-year deficit, MacLaren said that unless the government takes "severe remedial action in this coming budget", the deficit will rise.
> "It seems to me vitally important that we ensure that under any cost-cutting program that those who are really needy—not only receive what they are receiving now but receive more because there are pockets of real need in this country".
> Programs such as family allowances and old age security should be available to those in need, he said.
> "Perhaps the most effective way of ensuring that Canadians in need receive adequate amounts of support is—for those who don't require such support—tax it back", he said.

Who speaks for the Liberal Party, the finance critic or some other person who gets up and spiels off a lot of specious nonsense as the hon. gentleman did today? Who speaks for the Liberal Party? Does anyone speak for it, do 100 people speak for it? Will 100 flowers flourish? When will you get your act together? How can Canadians trust you for one second when they do not know from one minute to the next who is going to say what or who speaks for the Party? Was your finance critic right when he said that every sparrow that falls is going to be blamed on the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement? Who speaks for the Party?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, it is always entertaining to hear from the Hon. Member from Newfoundland. He has adopted the old trick in this House that government Members have used since 1984. When they fall into difficulty with their budgetary measures, as the Minister did in 1979 with a very regressive tax—the 18 cent man—what do they do? The Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr Crosbie) gets up and hollers, screeches and makes no sense whatsoever.

The Hon. Member refers to an article. He knows that my colleague was being asked about a number of possibilities which the Government might implement. He explained those possibilities. It is the Government which must bear responsibility and must shoulder the burden of singling out the poor and middle-income Canadians for its assault in order to improve its treasury bonds. It is members of the Government who must shoulder that burden, not those of us in the Opposition. They have a mandate and they should respond to the Canadian people with fairness and with dignity.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I think we all agree to a great extent with the comments of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). However, will he explain the difference between the freeze imposed by the Liberal Government in the early 1980s with its six and five program, and the deindexing that is being done by the Government at this time?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I thought the Hon. Member was here when those particular measures were introduced and debated very forcefully and enthusiastically at the time. He certainly knew that as a result of world-wide recession, which had great impact on the Canadian economy, different measures had to be taken.

I suggest to the Hon. Member that the six and five program to which he refers was one of limited duration, and not a program that would go on forever as a result of the particular tax measures the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has introduced, not only in this Budget but indeed in previous Budgets. That is the distinction the Hon. Member ought to be cognizant of.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, two days ago the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) spoke in moving terms about what the House of Commons could be at its best. He said:

> This is and remains the forum of the nation. This is the highest court in the land. This is the place where finally issues must be decided.

He continued by expressing his concern that we must act to make Parliament relevant as a place where the vital issues facing Canada can be decided. All of us who love this institution share his belief of what the House of Commons can be and his sense of what it all too frequently has become.

My fear is that growing numbers of Canadians find not only Parliament but political debate itself hollow and irrelevant. Our political Parties should be offering our citizens competing visions of Canada. Instead, sadly, partisanship too frequently displaces policy, and posturing substitutes for principle.

The motion proposed by the Liberal Party today does not advance the quality of our political debate. Instead, it debases our discussions by misrepresenting the Government's policies without offering Canadians an alternative economic course to follow.

Over the past few weeks we have heard Member after Member on the opposition side condemn the Government for its alleged failure to control the national debt. The Liberal Party finance critic stated:

> In every Budget in every year since this Government came to power in 1984, the Minister of Finance has denounced the deficit. We have heard him promise repeatedly to do something about it. In each of those years the Government has failed utterly to do what it said it would do.

The Leader of the Opposition said:

> Business people and financiers everywhere in the world realize that the Canadian deficit and debt are totally out of control.

It is gratifying that at least on one point the Opposition agrees with us, but the issue is not whether Members are willing to admit that the national debt is too large. The real issue is whether they have the desire and the courage to deal with it.

If Canadians had listened closely to what has been said on the opposition side of the House over the course of the past eight days, they could have been forgiven for concluding that Members opposite believe either that the debt burden is not a grave issue or can be solved without sacrifice. The day has passed when we can simply pile deficit upon deficit without worrying about the future. Canadians know that fact, even if sometimes the politicians refuse to acknowledge it. Every home-maker, every small businessman, every farmer recognizes that one cannot go on spending more money than one is bringing in without very serious consequences.

• (1040)

The exact same principles apply to Government as apply to our homes, to our businesses and to our farms. Governments can no more repeal the laws of economics than they can repeal the law of gravity. The simple fact is that each and every Canadian has a debt in Ottawa of more than $12,300. The debt for each person in Canada is $3 larger today than it was at this time yesterday. It will be at least $3 more tomorrow. Our national debt is increasing by $80 million a day.

[Translation]

The result is that this year, we will be spending more on interest payments than on the aggregate of what we spend on health care, family allowance payments, old age security and welfare. Last year, our interest payments represented 31 cents of every dollar obtained from Canadian taxpayers. This year, it will be 35 cents. Unless we do what has to be done immediately, it will be worse next year and the year after, and so forth.

[English]

We are not talking about an abstract concept. The debt is a very real issue and it affects each and every Canadian. How we deal with it not just as a Government but as a society will determine the quality of Canadian life in the years to come. Unless we are prepared to act today the very survival of the programs which the Opposition professs to defend is in danger.

This Budget represents the recognition by the Minister of Finance that the time for simply talking about the debt is passed. In finally coming to terms with the legacy of past irresponsibility there are three key principles by which we should test all of our proposals for action.

First, our most important goal must be to ensure the survival of those social programs which help to define ourselves as Canadians. We cannot do the job alone. Our rising debt is a shared problem, a national problem. Only through a common national effort can we deal with it successfully.

Second, in waging our battle we must ensure that those of us who can afford to carry the heavier burden are the ones who are asked to do so.

Third, we must ensure that the poorest and the weakest remain fully protected.

How do these principles apply in the current Budget? Let us look at two examples. The first is the implementation of changes to family allowances and old age security. The Opposition has claimed falsely that increasing the taxes on high-income recipients of family allowance and old age security is raising money on the backs of the needy. How can this be when only the wealthiest recipients are affected? Some 96 per cent of seniors will not be touched by new taxes on old age security. Only the two per cent of seniors who receive more than $76,000 a year will be asked to repay all of the old age security payments. Similarly, the facts show that 86 per cent of Canadian families will remain completely unaffected by the change in family allowances. Those who need the assistance will continue to get it. Those who do not need it will be asked to contribute more to help to restore our economic health.

My second example is child care which was referred to buy the spokesman for the Liberal Party. I have heard allegations that it is the children who will pay for this Budget. In fact, it is the children who will pay if we do not support this Budget, if we allow the debt to grow. Every dollar that is added to our national debt is a dollar that is stolen from our children. We believe that our children are our most important resource. This Government remains committed to child care.

We are also acutely conscious of the needs of lower income families. For this reason we are proceeding with the tax measures affecting children which amount to $2.3 billion, 90 per cent of which is aimed at low and modest income Canadians. Nearly one and a half million families will be helped with the cost of caring for their children.

We are also maintaining the $100 million child care initiatives fund which provides assistance to innovative programs for child care.

Again, the $200 million which we spent last year under CAP, Canada Assistance Plan, and the increase of a further 20 per cent in funding this year, are directed to Canadians in need, once again demonstrating our commitment both to child care and to ensuring that those least able to pay receive the most assistance from the Government.

[Translation]

The debt level is so high that we had to make a difficult decision, namely to proceed more slowly with implementation of a third measure that had been approved, which was to increase without delay the number of spaces in this country's daycare centres.

We have not reneged on our commitment to daycare, certainly not. By the end of our mandate, we will have done what is necessary to attain all our objectives in this area.

[English]

That was a commitment that was repeated today by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on nation-wide TV.

Let me take a moment to comment specifically on today's motion by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). The motion states that this Budget undermines all Canadian social programs. It is difficult to understand precisely what is meant by the statement. In the time allotted for questions and comments, if the Hon. Member has the opportunity, he will clarify these claims for the House.

It would appear that the Opposition believes that targeting social programs to provide the most support to those who need the most will undermine both the concept of the program and public approval. Indeed, that was exactly the claim that was made by the Hon. Member from Winnipeg when he spoke earlier. Such an assertion is absurd. It implies that if we focus social programs on those who need them, Canadians who do not receive them will withdraw their approval.

There are at least two examples which Canadians support right now which dispute this theory. The Guaranteed Income Supplement and the child tax credit are both programs designed to help lower income Canadians. Both are supported strongly by all Canadians, not just by those who receive the cheques, and Members opposite suggest that these programs be changed to deliver equal benefits to wealthy Canadians.

I invite Members of the House, and I invite Canadians, to review the comments that were made by the Hon. Member from Winnipeg who said that if we focus benefits it is inherently unfair. What would he do with the Guaranteed Income Supplement? What would he do with the child tax credit? What is the position of the New Democratic Party when it comes to providing assistance most to those people who are most in need? That is the position, Mr. Speaker, of the Members opposite when it comes to asking those who can afford to pay to carry the higher share of the burden.

What we have is two Parties locked in the past incapable of recognizing the new realities of 1989, unwilling to be candid with Canadians about their proposals to deal with this national debt burden, prepared to continue to run up deficit after deficit, to pile the burden of debt upon young Canadians which will make it impossible for them in the future to get ahead.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: We have heard, Mr. Speaker, in Question Period and in debate in the House of Commons in the past week a great deal about compassion. We have heard about fairness. We have heard about concern. Where is the compassion opposite for young Canadians who are being asked to shoulder the debt burden which is being run up by irresponsible Governments and by politicians who refuse to accept that benefits paid must be covered in taxes?

Where is the concern for Canada's future when they propose that we simply continue on the same ruinous course year after year without ever reviewing what consequences that will have for Canada? Where is the fairness when they say, go ahead, continue to spend, allow that debt burden to grow, allow an ever-increasing share of the national Budget to be going just for the interest charges on the national debt, to the point where it threatens the very existence of the social programs which they claim to support?

• (1050)

Where is the compassion, the fairness and the concern for Canada when that is the policy that it follows? Where is the honesty that Canadians have a right to expect from Members on all sides of the House?

Mr. Wappel: How many deceits did you carry out on Canadians?

Mr. Beatty: It is not enough to talk about the national debt. It is time for Canadians in this House of Commons, on both sides, to be honest about what, if anything, they would do about it. Canadians are more sophisticated than Members opposite give them credit for. Canadians understand that you cannot simply attack every measure to reduce that debt burden, and at the same time get up, as all of them have done, to say day after day in the House of Commons that the debt be increased, and also at the same time get up, as all of them have done, to say that not enough is being done about the national debt.

Canadians are simply smarter than that. They will not be conned.

When the Opposition suggests that targeting programs to those people who need them the most will cause Canadians to withdraw their support from social programs, they put forward a view of Canadians as mean-spirited and unconcerned about the people who are most in need. It is a view that is both false and unfair to ordinary Canadians. Anyone who knows the history of this country, any of us who represent Canadians in this House of Commons, must surely by now recognize the fact that if there is one characteristic that runs throughout Canadian history it is that of generosity on the part of Canadians and a concern for people who are most in need. A suggestion by Members opposite who claim to be concerned about the poor or claim to be concerned about the elderly, that giving most assistance to those people most in need will somehow cause Canadians to be mean-spirited, is a distortion of the facts and it is unfair to every Canadian.

I invite Canadians who are watching this debate on television or watching from the galleries as well as members of the press to watch what is done by Members opposite over the course of today. What is the position being taken by members of the Opposition? Their position is that we should be paying equal benefits and that equal benefits should be obtained by those people who are wealthiest in our society. The Party that once spoke for ordinary Canadians, that once professed to be concerned about the people most in need, the New Democratic Party, now speaks for the wealthy. New Democrats are saying their concern is that benefits will be taxed back from those who can most afford to pay.

In a recent poll, which I have in my hand here, some 63 per cent of respondents supported the Government's move to tax back family allowances and old age security at a higher rate from the income of high income recipients. That is a margin of two to one in support of the Government's proposals.

Ms. Hunter: How much did the poll cost?

Mr. Beatty: Are these people mean-spirited? Is there something they don't know that members of the Opposition do know? Is there something that is represented in this view that is cruel or unconcerned for the poor wealthy people who will have their benefits taxed back?

The second part of the motion we are debating here today says that the Budget will make easier further incursions against old age security pensions and family allowances, as well as other social programs, including medicare. I hear in this motion disturbing echoes of last year's campaign to frighten the elderly, the sick and the poor by false claims that their well-being would be affected if the Free Trade Agreement were implemented.

Today the argument is different, but the goal of the Opposition is the same, to create fear among the people least able to defend themselves. Any claim that asking wealthier Canadians to carry a larger share of the tax burden paves the way for an attack on medicare is both false and deeply unfair to the sick and to the elderly. It is an invention by the Opposition. It is a claim that was specifically repudiated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) as recently as yesterday, and it is a tactic which debases the quality of our public debate.

Far from seeking to undermine the social safety net, we are trying to make sure that our programs for seniors and families and our other policies to meet social needs, including health care, continue to exist, not just today but for the future.

The third point in today's motion states that the effect of the Budget:

> —will fall most severely on Canadians of moderate means while costing the wealthy little.

Quite frankly, I do not understand the point the Opposition is trying to make. It is beyond me how the Opposition can argue that a recovery payment that affects only 4 per cent of seniors with incomes over $50,000 or 14 per cent of higher income families is coming at the expense of Canadians of moderate means while costing the wealthy little. If the opposition Members had read the details of the Budget they would know that this statement is groundless.

There has been a great deal of comment from the Opposition that the Government is abandoning the concept of universality. I find the horror that this raises in the hearts of the Liberal Opposition intriguing given the comments of their finance critic and of their Party president.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, not I, nor the Minister of Finance nor the Prime Minister but the President of the Liberal Party of Canada, Michel Robert, said that universality was obsolete, according to the newspaper La Presse of April 16, 1989, and I quote:

> We had a debate on universality, he added, but we did not ask ourselves whether the debate itself was still timely. As I see it, there is no longer a case for universality. We do not have enough resources. Since the need has become far greater among the poorest in Canada, we must consider reallocating our resources to be able to offer genuine assistance to those who need it most.

[English]

It was the Liberal finance critic, not the Minister of Finance on this side, who said:

> For my part, I continue to wonder whether family allowances and possibly old age pensions need be universal, especially now that our federal deficits have mounted so markedly—

As the Minister of Finance says, "It's in his book." He is right. I am one of the few Canadians who has actually bought the book. I would advise Canadians, particularly Members opposite as they participate in this debate, to take a look at what the official spokesperson for the official Opposition has said.

This is a uniquely Liberal point of view and it is not reflected in the action taken by the Government in the Budget proposal. The Macdonald Royal Commission defined universal programs as:

> —those which distribute the same level of gross benefits to all persons with specified traits, irrespective of their incomes. In Canada, all such 'universal' programs define their benefits as taxable income.

By that definition, and all others who have cared to examine the matter closely, universality has not disappeared from Canada. Seniors and families will still receive their monthly cheques, but they will do so without the imposition of a degrading means test. Cashing their cheques will have no stigma attached. Our intention is to make sure that every Canadian has these benefits delivered to him or to her without obstacle and without limitation.

When the Member for Winnipeg gets up and says there is a means test if Canadians are asked to fill out their income tax returns each year, he shows an appalling ignorance of what a means test is. What would he propose when we are filling out our income tax returns? That we do not disclose our income? Since when has the income tax become a means test? It is like Alice in Wonderland, with words now being given meanings which they never had before.

Let me conclude in this way. I spoke earlier about the speech made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) the day before yesterday in which he described this House as the place where issues finally must be decided. I agree that that is what Parliament should be and what it is at its best. When the great issues of the day are debated no one should be surprised that there are disagreements and often heated debate.

No individual and no one Party has a monopoly on truth. Debate about the direction in which we should be going is healthy and necessary, but not the sort of debate which we have been seeing over he past week. Canadians who have watched the House of Commons over the past seven days know that something must be done to bring the national debt under control and they know precisely how this Government proposes to do it. They have also heard the Opposition reject every measure which we have put forward to deal with the problem. They have heard Members opposite universally condemn the Government for not doing enough about the national debt, while at the very same time attacking every cut in spending and every new tax measure which we have proposed.

This is a time for candour and honesty. As we proceed with debate on the Budget, each speech should be judged by whether it offers only hollow, partisan criticism or realistic and honest alternatives on how best to deal with these very real problems.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 11 o'clock, the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 31.

EAST–WEST RELATIONS

DISMANTLING OF PORTION OF IRON CURTAIN

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday May 2, the world was pleased to see a small part of the Iron Curtain being dismantled. For decades, 240 kilometres of barbed wire fence has stood on the Hungarian–Austrian border but, by order of the Government of Hungary, it is now being removed.

This is a clear indication that East–West relationships are improving and that cold war ideologies are no longer the doctrine of the day. In the past year we have seen glasnost perestroika, the INF treaty and conventional arms reductions in Europe, all symbols of hope and peace.

Although 240 kilometres is but a small portion of the Iron Curtain, it is, hopefully, just the first step toward open and unguarded geopolitical boarders between citizens of the globe.

THE ENVIRONMENT

ACID RAIN CONTROL

Mr. Ross Stevenson (Durham): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) continues to emphasize to President Bush the critical importance of the Canada–U.S. agreement to control acid rain.

From his first visit to Washington, the Prime Minister has taken bold initiatives toward a mutual agreement for the reduction of acid gas emissions.

As a former university professor who has been involved in environmental issues and research for more than 20 years, I have witnessed the tremendous scientific progress here in Canada. I join with other Canadians in applauding the continuing efforts of the Prime Minister and other Canadian representatives in Washington.

I know they will continue to take every opportunity to advance Canada's position on acid rain. This is an issue on which our desires must and will prevail.

TRADE

FUR INDUSTRY,—REPLACEMENT OF LEG–HOLD TRAPS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in a recent development, the European Commission of the European Economic Parliament has proposed a ban to import fur and fur products from countries which are using the leg–hold trap. They propose this ban by 1996. This is a move which must be taken very seriously.

The $600 million a year fur industry employs 105,000 Canadians. There are 1,000 trappers in my riding of the Yukon. In fact, over 70 per cent of our furs are exported to the European community. What is necessary now is an immediate commitment on the part of the Government to assist in increased trap research, trapper training and public education, and a shared federal–provincial territorial trap replacement program.

The fur industry is a vital part of our economy and one which, I might add, depends upon the preservation of the environment rather than its destruction.

I call on the Government to make a strong commitment to help this industry.

SPORTS GREATS

HOMAGE TO LÉANDRE COUTURE

Mr. Jean–Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, last Saturday evening in Drummondville, Mr. Léandre Couture was honoured as the sports celebrity of 1989, an award he shares with Rosaire Smith, Harry Howorth, Olivier Carignan, Laurent Sawyer, Guy Bissonnette, Robert (Bob) Pépin, Marcel Larocque, Félicien (Fred) Bourbeau, Yves Tessier and Claude Béland.

He was raised in a family that was involved in sports, and his achievements in baseball, la crosse and hockey during the years 1935–55, were known, both locally and throughout the province.

He always had time for others. His dedication to sports and his community involvement were legendary. He later became a referee, president of the OTJ, coach, co–founder of the Hériot Golf Club, director, manager, advertising manager and finally governor of the Junior Drummondville Rangers, and players like Marcel Dionne, Yvon Lambert and many others have him to thank for their careers.

Maurice Fillion, who worked for him, starting as an instructor, was there to pay tribute to Mr. Couture.

Married to Marcelle Mercure, he was an officer in the Canadian Army and served his country as so many thousands did in 1941. Subsequently, he became officer in command of the Military College and was a member of the Canadian Legion.

Mr. and Mrs. Couture certainly deserve all the congratulations they are receiving, and we want to take this opportunity to thank them for everything they have done.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CLOSURE OF MILITARY BASES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Mulroney Government's crushing decision to close or cut back 14 military bases across Canada to save $585 million has caused enormous distress in Canada's regional economies, some of which are dependent on the activities which will now be transferred to other bases. In my Toronto riding, Canada's largest military base may well increase as a result.

It seems that no thought was given by the Government to alternatives which would have spared the regions this devastating cut. I propose to the Government that instead of its present plan, it close the base at Downsview. Essential strategic operations could be continued on less than 5 per cent of the land presently used, and other activities could easily be moved to Camp Borden, 45 miles away.

The Government could earn as much as $750 million from the sale of the over 650 acres of land which are badly needed for residential development. Under the Province of Ontario guidelines there would be 25 per cent affordable housing. The urbanization of the base would create thousands of homes, parks and amenities and an economic boom for Toronto, rather than the disaster the Government's present plan delivers to places like Summerside.

To take that example, the closure of CFB Summerside represents a 4.5 per cent total job loss for the Province of Prince Edward Island and the devastation of the economy of that part of the Island.

HEALTH

MENTAL HEALTH WEEK

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, May 1 to May 7 is Mental Health Week in Canada and I would like to take this opportunity to commend the men and women of the Canadian Mental Health Association for their efforts to increase public awareness on the issues of mental illness and mental health.

Established in 1918, this association is one of the oldest voluntary organizations in the country. Today the Canadian Mental Health Association has grown to include over 30,000 volunteers with 250 permanent staff in its 190 local branches, 12 provincial and territorial divisions and the national office.

Most recently, the CMHA has been collaborating with the federal Department of Health and Welfare to develop and promote a strategy to bring a message on mental health to the Canadian people.

I know all Members of this House will join me in congratulating both the Canadian Mental Health Association and the Minister of Health and Welfare for their continuing commitment to the betterment of all Canadians.

HOUSING

CUTS IN SOCIAL HOUSING

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, Members of the House of Commons should be made aware of the crisis that now surrounds affordable social housing in Canada as the result of the federal Budget.

Last week saw the outright termination of the rental RRAP program for upgrading housing for low–income

Canadians. Today we have the devastating cut in co-operative housing units.

Last year only 60 per cent of the promised 5,000 units were reached. This year it will be just 1,708 units or 34 per cent of the promise. This cut also means that the co-operative housing and rental RRAP organizations which provide valuable resources to individual co-ops and rental organizations will be permanently crippled.

I know the Minister is now having emergency meetings with groups such as the Co-operative Housing Foundation and the Canadian Housing Renewal Association to try and salvage some crumbs from the once promising social housing program in Canada.

I call upon the Minister of Housing who continuously championed the cause of affordable housing while a back-bencher to restore these programs and not become the Minister who opted out of the provision of social housing in Canada.

ENERGY

GAS PRICE INCREASES IN QUEBEC

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, for some weeks, many Québecers have told me they are unhappy with the successive gasoline price increases in Québec. Prices at the pump have gone up by more than 3 cents a litre.

I have consulted with retailers and wholesalers in Québec and the complaints seem to be serious. Our inquiries show that the oil companies, which had behaved so well over the last four years, are once again recalcitrant.

A few days ago, the Québec gasoline price inspection and information office (BIPE), at the request of my colleague, (Québec) Energy Minister Ciaccia, published a special bulletin showing conclusively that Québec drivers have been hit with three successive gasoline price increases. I would like to point out to Québecers that the increases ordered by Shell in March and by Ultramar in April seem once again to prove that these companies have raised prices without waiting the required 60 to 90 days.

So as a result, in a seven-week period, over $14 million has gone to boost oil company profits, to the detriment of consumers, retailers and independent wholesalers.

THE ECONOMY

TELEVISION COMMERCIALS RESPECTING THE DEFICIT

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, while this Government slashes spending on unemployment insurance, cuts funding for VIA Rail, closes military bases and reduces regional development programs, it continues to waste millions of dollars on television commercials promoting its cuts on the backs of those who can least afford the burden.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), on his current visit to the U.S., has taken along an entourage of no fewer than 120 persons while many line up at food banks. Recently the Government has spent $35,000 in renovations to the offices of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) at a time when many Canadians have difficulty providing basic shelter for their families. Yet this same Government has spent $2.7 million to, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) puts it, educate Canadians on the need to cut the deficit. Each time the commercial runs, thousands of dollars are taken away from those in need.

These are only a few examples of the hypocrisy of this Government which on one hand expects ordinary Canadians to shoulder the burden of deficit reduction while it continues to spend millions of dollars unnecessarily. Members opposite ought to be ashamed of themselves.

ACID RAIN

AWARENESS OF AMERICAN POPULATION

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, Prime Minister Mulroney recognizes that the acid rain which is spoiling our forests and our lakes is an extremely important concern for the future of Canada. Our Prime Minister is now a world leader with the protocol signed in Montreal to protect the ozone layer and all the efforts he has made in various countries.

Although the newspaper headlines this morning say that the Prime Minister is coming back empty-handed because he has not concluded an acid rain agreement with President Bush, his visit to Boston, where he received a very important prize, made Americans aware and they are surely the ones who will put pressure on the U.S. Congress so that one day we will be able to have an acid rain agreement.

PRIVATIZATION OF SASKATCHEWAN POWER CORPORATION

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in this House to pay tribute to the historic battle which the people of Saskatchewan are putting up to save a cherished part of their heritage, the Saskatchewan Power Corporation. I predict that in the same way that the medicare battle of 1962 marked a turning point in the evolution of social policy in Canada, so to the fight to save Sask Power will be a turning point in bringing an end to right-wing economics in this country.

By a margin of 58 per cent to 27 per cent, the people of Saskatchewan are saying no to the pillage of public assets by the Tories and big business. By a margin of 67 per cent to 22 per cent, they are saying no to the privatization of Sask Power.

The ordinary people of this country have had enough, and once again, the people of Saskatchewan are showing the way for a brighter future for everybody, not just the rich and powerful. I am sure I speak for a vast majority of Canadians when I say to the folks back home, congratulations, thank you and good luck.

NATIONAL REVENUE

COLLECTIVE AGREEMENT RESPECTING MILEAGE FOR CUSTOMS OFFICIALS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Jelinek) that part of the collective agreement which pays mileage to customs officials who work in Coutts, Alberta, but choose to live anywhere beyond 16 kilometres up to a hundred kilometres away. This adversely affects the fine town of Coutts which is the fourth-busiest port of entry into Canada. The elected council and the vast majority of my constituents feel that this is unfair to Coutts and in general is a waste of taxpayers' money. I ask the Minister to negotiate an end to this part of the collective agreement.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

SITUATION IN CITY OF MONTREAL

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, first, the Conservative Government's decision on Monday not to locate the Space Agency in Montreal proves beyond any doubt that the Mayor of Montreal, Jean Doré, was had by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and he was not the first one.

Second, this decision proves beyond any doubt that our two Ministers responsible for the Montreal area, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Corbeil) and the Secretary of State of Canada (Mr. Weiner), have no clout in the Conservative Cabinet when it comes to defending Montreal's interests.

In addition, the three new Conservative superstars, the Hon. Members for Rosemont, Outremont and Bourassa (Mr. Tremblay, Mr. Hogue and Mrs. Gibeau), are no better than the Desrosiers and Gravels when it comes to delivering the goods.

Mr. Speaker, there is another issue where Montreal is being had, and that is rail transport—VIA Rail. In conclusion, we can say that under Tory rule, not only has Montreal lost the title of Canada's metropolis, but it has now become a suburb of Longueuil!

THE ECONOMY

DEFICIT REDUCTION

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary Southwest): Mr. Speaker, no one likes high interest rates, especially the people of Alberta, and I am here to fight for them. High interest rates are hurting all of western Canada.

Some people have called for different rates for different regions. That would cause absolute chaos in Canada. Money would flow from the low to the high rate areas and totally distort the market-place.

Deficit debt reduction is a must and that is what this Government is doing. Without the cuts and tax increases contained in the Budget, Canada's opportunities to reduce high interest rates would have been curtailed. The Bank of Canada rate has dropped slightly. Long-term mortgage rates have dropped a little. Central Canada's economy is cooling. Working together today to reduce the deficit debt will benefit everyone in the years ahead.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

EFFECT ON RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre–Dame–de–Grace): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The April unemployment figures released this morning indicate that since March, the unemployment rate has increased by three points to 7.8 per cent with more than one million Canadians unemployed and increases in unemployment in eight out of ten provinces, increases for women and increases for youth. In these circumstances, how can the Minister justify his deflationary Budget with higher taxes, high interest rates, cuts in unemployment insurance and cuts in regional development? For the last week, we have said that this is the wrong Budget and this morning's statistics confirm that. Why is the Minister adding to this misfortune? Is he trying to drive the country into a recession?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have said on many occasions that this Budget is to do exactly the opposite. If we had not taken these actions, we would be moving much closer to a recession because of the impact of the high debt on the economy. Surely the Hon. Member should understand this.

I have listened to the Hon. Member very carefully. I think this is the first time in four years that he has been on his feet asking questions about the unemployment rate because every other time, it has been coming down. A million and a half jobs have been created during the course of the past four and a half years, and the record that we have achieved as a country during that period of time we believe will be reinforced by the Budget that was brought out last week.

UNEMPLOYMENT RATE FORECASTS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre–Dame–de–Grace—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the statistics released this morning confirm the forecast that the Minister tabled with his Budget last week. In his document entitled Canada's Economic Prospects in the 1990s, he said that unemployment would increase in 1989 to 8.2 per cent and in 1990 to 8.5 per cent.

A report published this morning by Wood Gundy, a well known Canadian investment house, said that the Budget has caused it to revise its economic forecast for next year, and under its new forecast, unemployment would rise to 9.2 per cent in 1990 and we would be pushed into a shallow recession.

With that kind of forecast, and I am referring to the Minister's own forecast, why did he bring in such a recessionary Budget? Can he not understand that the best way to deal with the deficit is to stimulate economic growth and not to strangle investors, consumers and Canadian workers?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can very well understand the desire on the part of all Hon. Members of the House to get lower interest rates. This Budget, by putting a better balance between budgetary policy and interest rate policy, is designed to get interest rates down so that we can ensure that we continue the tremendous record of growth that we have exhibited as a country over the last number of years.

The Hon. Member refers to the fact that we are projecting a small increase in the unemployment rate. He neglects to say that we are also projecting an increase in the number of jobs that will be created, as has been the case over the past year. There has been close to 200,000 jobs created and that surely is a positive sign that this economy is a healthy one.

• (1120)

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, not everyone is wrong except the Minister. He is driving the country into a recession.

INTEREST RATES – NEGATIVE EFFECTS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre–Dame–de–Grâce): Mr. Speaker, for months now, the provincial governments have been saying that interest rates are too high and have a very negative impact on the economy, on investments and on jobs. When will the Minister start listening to the provinces and other Canadian institutions to change these misguided policies? When?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member wrote down that question before he heard my answer to his second question.

Mr. Allmand: I know what the provinces have said.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I just told the Hon. Member what the provinces have said. I don't think he was listening very carefully. Let us get to the point. The point is that the Hon. Member wants to get interest rates down. We also want to get interest rates down.

Mr. Allmand: And jobs.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member wants to have jobs. We are creating jobs in this country at a very satisfactory rate. I want to say to the Hon. Member that you cannot just snap your fingers and say, interest rates go down. They go down through the operations of the market-place. The Hon. Member is suggesting that we ignore the market-place, get interest rates down in an unnatural way. He knows full well that that will lead us right back to the policies of the Government that he was a part of in the 1970s and the early 1980s that led to the high inflation, high interest rates of 25 per cent back in 1981-82, and the huge unemployment disaster which we had at that time. This Government is going to avoid that.

Mr. Allmand: Wrong Budget, Mike.

ACID RAIN EMISSION CONTROLS

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Canadians are concerned that the Prime Minister was unable to secure from President Bush a solid commitment to negotiate an acid rain accord. Although the President confirmed his administration would introduce domestic legislation to cut sulphur dioxide emissions, Canadians did not get any specific details on the nature of the legislation. Why is the Prime Minister once again coming back empty handed? Why has he not been able to secure a firm commitment from the President on acid rain control?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's genuine interest in arriving finally at an accord which will bring some control to acid rain emissions on both sides of the 49th parallel. In fact, we have made some very considerable progress, as the Hon. Member will know. There is a proposal coming before the United States Congress by late May or early June that will provide the U.S. legislators with authority in their own jurisdiction to proceed with actions similar to those already taken in Canada. That will provide the basis for an accord between the two countries. The necessity of that accord is agreed to by the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada. The negotiations on that accord will begin shortly after the matter is through the U.S. Congress.

This is very substantial progress, and brings an end to a period when Canadians have been seeking, without much response from the United States, some common action against acid rain. We are making significant progress. I know the Hon. Member will join me and other members in the House in celebrating that.

AWARD PRESENTED TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is again for the Acting Prime Minister. The Prime Minister while in Washington accepted an award from a group whose chairman is the head of the USX Corporation, a company which does not believe acid rain is a problem that needs further controls. A position paper of the company says, and I quote:

> The case for acid rain control remains unproved.

Does the Acting Prime Minister agree that in accepting this award the Prime Minister has damaged Canadian credibility on the need for a Canada-U.S. acid rain accord? Has the Prime Minister not implicitly accepted the views of the U.S. company which has been described as one of the country's worst polluters?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Of course not, Mr. Speaker. I think it is a rather lamentable practice for the House for Members on the opposite side, for simply partisan reasons, to attack an honour that comes not only to the Prime Minister of Canada, but to the whole of Canada—

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): From that company? Come on.

Mr. Clark: —for leadership that we have shown on environmental matters.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I think in these circumstances it is worth making the point that this is only the second time this award has been presented. It was presented last year to the Prime Minister of Norway, the Hon. Gro Brundtland, whose credentials as an environmentalist are very well known. I am sure the Hon. Member would not want to cast a negative reflection upon the credentials of Prime Minister Brundtland, or indeed upon the credentials of Canada by making that kind of implication.

NATIONAL REVENUE

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX—INCREASED REVENUES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. During the election campaign, the chairman of the House finance committee pointed out that the Government's proposed new sales tax would increase revenue by some $10 billion. At the time the Prime Minister said, way out of line. The Minister of Finance said, wrong. I want to ask the Minister of Finance, since he was in the committee yesterday, and finally admitted the truth, about what the chairman of the finance committee had to say, namely, that there was a $10 billion additional tax grab coming as a result of this new tax. Why did the Minister say one thing during the election and tell the truth after the election?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is distorting the facts. I have always said that the new sales tax would replace the existing sales tax, plus fund a new refundable sales tax credit, plus lower the income tax rate for middle-income earners, plus I said quite recently that we would remove the surtaxes. The misinterpretation that the Hon. Member tried to apply at the time of the election, and again, is that there would be another $10 billion on top of that. That is simply not true. The amount of money that will be raised by the new sales tax, the goods and services tax, will be used to replace the existing tax, bring in a generous refundable sales tax, which I would expect the Hon. Member would be congratulating us for, plus we will reduce middle income tax rates.

COMMITMENT DURING ELECTION CAMPAIGN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister of Canada was on Canada AM this morning. He said in response to a question that the people of Canada were not listening to him during the election. He was wrong. The people of Canada were listening to the Prime Minister. The problem is that the Prime Minister was not telling the truth, nor was the Minister of Finance. I would like to pick up on what he just said. He is quoted from the Toronto Star during the election campaign criticizing the chairman of the finance committee, the man who was telling the truth. The Minister of Finance said this:

> The bottom line is that (the sales tax) will not be used to raise the revenues of the Government of Canada.

Was the Minister of Finance then saying that it was going to be revenue- neutral, that any new sales tax was going to be totally offset in its impact by other tax reductions?

Will the Minister of Finance now admit that he misled the people of Canada, that the new sales tax is not going to be totally offset, and that finally the net effect of this is a thousand dollar per family additional tax grab?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again I reject what the Hon. Member has just said. I said very clearly in the election campaign—I will repeat what I said in the first answer—that the new sales tax would replace the existing sales tax. It would allow us to reduce middle income tax rates. It would also allow us to remove the surtaxes. I am saying now that because of the seriousness of our financial position, it does not appear that we will be able to eliminate those surtaxes. We have a serious deficit problem.

Well, the Hon. Member is shaking his head, Mr. Speaker. He disagrees that we have a serious deficit problem. He disagrees that we have a debt problem. He does not understand the fact that 12 cents of every tax dollar was going to pay interest about 20 years ago. That has now increased to 35 cents of every tax dollar. If this Hon. Member does not understand the implications of that, and says that we still do not have a serious debt problem, he is in Alice In Wonderland.

• (1130)

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister of Finance used to have credibility. According to the Minister, we had a deficit problem last fall. It did not only appear in the last couple of months. It was last fall that the Minister of Finance was saying these things, and the Chairman of the Finance Committee was telling the truth. I say to the Minister of Finance that we know who was telling the truth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMPACT OF SALES TAX ON MIDDLE-INCOME FAMILY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister admit to Canadians today that with his new sales tax, the average family will pay $1,000 more?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me just read from the Budget here. The Government's goal is to ensure that families earning less than $30,000 per year—that's the average income in the country today—will be better off— b-e-t-t-e-r off as a result of the implementation of sales tax reform.

Mr. Broadbent: Tell the truth.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am prepared to read it more slowly if the Hon. Member missed it, but there it is in black and white.

THE BUDGET

NATIONAL SALES TAX

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Finance and it relates to the sales tax scam that has been unearthed in recent days.

We went through an election campaign when it was clearly stated that the purpose of this sales tax was to replace the manufacturers' sales tax. We are now hearing that it is intended to replace a whole series of other sales taxes and other problems that the Minister himself has created.

We now hear that the surtaxes will not be replaced by the sales tax. We heard during the election campaign that the sales tax was only to replace the manufacturers' sales tax. When can we start to believe the Minister? When is the Minister finally going to tell us what this sales tax is intended to do?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member might have a little better response to his questions if he would state the facts accurately. He has stated that during the election campaign and prior to it I stated that the new sales tax would only replace the existing sales tax. That is totally wrong. I have said time and time again, and the people in the Press Gallery are getting tired of listening to me say it, that it would replace the existing sales tax, plus fund a new generous refundable sales tax credit, plus it would allow us to reduce the levels of taxation for middle-income earners.

Those two additional amounts would be funded by the new sales tax system. I have said that time and time again.

INCREASE IN TAX

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, revenue- neutral takes on a new meaning every time the Minister speaks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Manley: Reform for the manufacturers' sales tax was justified on the basis that this heinous tax was a silent killer of jobs. If that is the case, how can the Minister justify raising it from 9 per cent in 1984 to 13.5 per cent in this Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have made no bones about the fact that we have to raise this tax because we have a serious debt problem. That is the purpose that was set out in this Budget last week.

The Hon. Member says that it is a silent killer of jobs. That is correct. Now I would hope that the Hon. Member would be supporting us with the introduction of the new goods and services tax, as the Members of the Finance Committee did on a unanimous basis in the last Parliament, signed by the two finance critics of the Liberal Party, stating that we must change the old sales tax, we must get rid of the manufacturers' sales tax, and we must bring in a new sales tax.

I have yet to hear what new sales tax the Liberal Party would bring in, because it would be exactly the same sales tax that is proposed in this Budget.

THE BUDGET

CLOSING OF CF BASE SUMMERSIDE,

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In the recent Budget the people of Prince Edward Island have seen their funding for hospitals and education cut back, the regional development funding cut back, their taxes go up, and then the final blow, the closing of the Canadian Forces Base in Summerside.

I want to ask the Minister does he realize that 1,300 jobs will be cut out of Prince Edward Island with the closure of this base? Does he realize that $50 million annually will be taken from the economy of the province?

If he does realize these things, why did the Government decide to close the Canadian Forces Base at Summerside?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, would like to address part of the question, but let me be quite clear: The Hon. Member has just said we are going to cut the established programs financing for Prince Edward Island. It is going to go up by $5 million in 1989–90, and another $5 million in 1990–91. That is a five per cent increase. The equalization program that we have not changed will go up $12 million in this current year and another $10 million next year. Surely the Hon. Member should not be distorting the facts by saying that we are going to cut this funding. The funding is going to continue.

The Hon. Member refers to a range of issues that relate to Prince Edward Island. She could make those same comments about a range of issues that affect a number of provinces, all the provinces. We know that the Budget itself is going to have an impact on all parts of the country, but that is the nature of the debt problem that we have and the fact that 35 cents of every tax dollar is now going to pay the interest. That is more money than we spend on old age security, family allowance, medicare, and social assistance.

Surely we have to get that amount under control so that we can maintain these programs which are so important to people right across the country.

IMPACT ON PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's own papers show that the province of Prince Edward Island is going to receive less money than promised. My question to the Minister is the following.

The Minister stated that we have to reduce the deficit. We all have to take part in shouldering this burden. Why does he expect the province of Prince Edward Island to shoulder such a large and unreasonable part of this burden?

Will the Minister stand in the House today and admit that the closure the CFB base at Summerside is unfair to the people of Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, my colleague has addressed some of the concerns expressed by the Hon. Member from Prince Edward Island. I would not like to leave people with the understanding that this new found interest by her and her Party in national defence is for any other reason than a provincial election being held inPrince Edward Island.

The people who have the ability and the requirement of the service and a commitment to this country, the men and women who serve inthe military today—I see Members in the Liberal Party smiling—the men and women who serve in the military today deserve more from the people of Canada than to be located in regions for economic development. What they deserve is the ability as Canadians to share the load in getting the debt down.

By restructuring the military, we hope to be able to bring into proportion the Operations and Maintenance and the personnel in order that we can provide the equipment necessary for the men and women who serve all Canadians.

PERSONAL INCOME SURTAX

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Once again, Canadians are seeing another broken promise by the Government. During the election the Minister said that the surtax on personal income tax would come off when the sales tax was imposed. How are Canadians supposed to believe the Government when temporary is now permanent, $10 billion is not $10 billion, revenue-neutral is not revenue-neutral?

Yesterday the Minister indicated that the temporary surtax on personal income would not necessarily be removed with the imposition of the sales tax. Will he confirm that he does not intend to keep his promise and the personal income surtax is now a permanent feature of the tax system?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will tell the Hon. Member that the promise that I definitely will keep is that we will continue to provide good financial economic management for this country so that we can continue to see the growth in this economy and the jobs that come with it.

The Hon. Member knows full well that we have had a completely different set of circumstances—

Mr. de Jong: Six months ago.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —with the high interest rates we have seen over the course of the past few months. That has knocked us off stride in our objective of getting the deficit down and getting the debt under control. Measures must be taken now to deal with that.

The Hon. Member's Party has been continually calling for lower interest rates, which we would like to get as well, but one cannot just dream down a road and say: "Let's have lower interest rates". We must bring in policies that will generate those lower interest rates. That is exactly what we are trying to do as a result of the Budget that was tabled last week.

TAX EQUITY

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, in 1986, over 6,000 wealthy Canadians did not pay any tax. The Minister, in his Budget, has increased the surtax, but I remind him that 8 per cent of zero is zero.

I remind him that Canadians are listening. Is this the Minister's version of tax fairness? When will he ensure that the wealthy pay their fair share?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me point out to the Hon. Member what is in the Budget.

Mr. Broadbent: We know.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have brought in a high income surtax so that someone earning about $30,000 or $40,000 will pay $75, $85, $90 more in tax, but someone earning $100,000 will pay more than $1,000 more in tax, and someone earning $200,000 will pay more than $2,000 more in tax. Surely that indicates to the Hon. Member that we are asking those who can afford to shoulder a heavier burden in meeting this debt problem to do so.

What we have done in previous Budgets, beginning in October, 1984, is to continually weed out, identify and eliminate a number of tax breaks, tax preferences, tax loopholes that upper-income Canadians have been taking advantage of—

Mr. de Jong: Then you upped the rates. How can you stand there and give us that? How dare you stand up—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member who wants to be Leader of his Party—I can't think of a more frustrating position to be in—would listen to the answer, he has been on the Finance Committee and he knows the number of these tax preferences we have removed and identified. The Hon. Member should know that we have been taking action and will continue to take action.

Mr. de Jong: What a bunch of bunk.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Will he explain to the House the Government's rationale for involving family allowance and old age pensions for incomes over $50,000 as a measure of decreasing our national debt?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me refer the Hon. Member to the statement in the Budget speech:

> The central purpose of the social safety net is to assist those most in need, not to subsidize those with high incomes.

We have stated on many occasions in the House that the cost of servicing the government debt has gone up significantly as a percent of our tax dollars. For every tax dollar that we pay now, 35 cents goes to servicing the government debt. If we can control that amount, and this is one of those measures that will help us control the funded debt, we will be able to do more to maintain and enhance the social programs for those who are most in need, those who need the help the most.

THE ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Many communities in Atlantic Canada face economic disaster because of quota reductions and a shortage of fish stocks in Atlantic waters.

Already we have witnessed the disruption to the community of Port Mouton as a result of the closure by Clearwater of its fish processing plant there. Now the president of National Sea Products is warning of further lay-offs and plant closings.

Does the Government have a comprehensive plan to assist the unemployed in these communities? If so, will he tell the House what measures his Government will put in place to ensure that these communities do not follow the fate of Summerside?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the only information we have to date is what I suppose one could call a warning by the president of National Sea Products Limited that they have excess plant capacity, that markets have not been the best, the number of fish plants has increased in Nova Scotia and the cod stocks have gone down. He has not yet made any announcement of closures of any fish plants. However, if he does, then all the normal government programs will go into effect. The National Employment Service, the unemployment insurance programs, other adjustment programs will go into effect as they have in the past and as they will in the future.

FISH PLANT WORKERS—EFFECT OF NEW UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE REGULATIONS

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, the proposed changes to the unemployment insurance program that were recently announced will mean that the unemployed fish plant workers throughout Atlantic Canada will need significantly more weeks to qualify for fewer weeks of benefits after having paid more in unemployment insurance premiums so that the Government can get out of contributing anything to the unemployment insurance program at all. This is at precisely the same time as unemployment rates are rising and major quota reductions are pointing to less work for these workers.

Will the Minister explain the fairness in that? Where is the justice in this so-called labour force development strategy?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the vastly improved employment record of the last three or four years, the Government's contribution to the unemployment insurance fund has been less and less necessary because the deficit no longer existed. The forecast for unemployment in the area shows a slight increase over last year, but still a great improvement over the record of the Government that came before us. I do not believe that the dire forecast of the hon. gentleman will prove to be accurate.

EFFECT OF CUT-BACKS

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, we have been witnessing today, as we have over the course of the last month, a Government telling us one thing and proceeding to do something else.

In the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As an example of saying one thing and doing another, I draw the attention of the Minister to the fact that the Government has removed $800 million from the unemployment insurance fund to supplement the Government's past cuts in training programs. It has restricted eligibility for benefits—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Volpe: It has reduced the benefit period. In the interim this Budget proposes an additional cut of $2.9 billion in regional extended benefits. With the unemployment rate in the upswing—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member please put his question.

• (1150)

Mr. Volpe: Mr. Speaker, with the unemployment rate on the upswing in eight of ten provinces, will the Government tell Canadians that the Government does not intend to abandon its responsibilities in employment programs?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member has been since the House was reopened.

It seems to me that the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced a revamping of the Unemployment Insurance Act so that we could invest more money—much needed money—into training and retraining, while maintaining at the same time the level of commitment that we have had for the Canadian Jobs Strategy that now stands at approximately over $1.7 billion.

The change in the UI Act and the new reform in human resource strategy will enable the Government to bring forward over $800 million of new money so that we can help people move from unemployment into the new job opportunities that will be present in Canada because of the great Budget of the Minister of Finance and everything that the Government has been doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT RATE—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglington—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question was about his funding sources. Obviously, the Minister did not understand the question.

In fact, his indignation proves that his policy and this Government's policy are going to create poverty. The Minister chooses to ignore the dismal reality, just as he chooses to ignore his responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether the Minister thinks it is fair, considering rising unemployment, that women, young people and the disadvantaged should be made to suffer for this Government's incompetence.

Hon. Jean Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons)): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the Hon. Member for Eglington—Lawrence has the excuse of not having been in the House when, in the past, his own Party made predictions on the impact of the Budgets of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker, I was here, and I can give you the benefit of my experience. In 1985, when the Minister of Finance brought down his Budget, the Liberal Party's finance critic predicted that 100,000 jobs would be lost. On every Budget night, the New Democrats said that hundreds of thousands of jobs would be lost.

Mr. Speaker, since then 1,300,000 jobs have been created in Canada, and that is since this Government came to power.

THE BUDGET

NATIONAL SALES TAX

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Bay Street boy, the Minister of Finance.

I want him to answer a specific question in the House today, if that is at all possible. Back in October of 1988 in the election campaign the Minister said and I quote: "The bottom line is that the sales tax will not be used to raise the revenues of the Government of Canada. Mr. Blenkarn is not speaking for the Government of Canada, I am speaking for the Government of Canada".

What I want to know now is whether or not the Minister will admit in the House today that the national sales tax, the goods and service tax, will not be revenue-neutral, that the Chairman of the Finance Committee spoke the truth, and that the Minister is now in the process of breaking a commitment to the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is the third member of the New Democratic Party who has distorted what I said during the election campaign.

Mr. Broadbent: They are your words.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Leader of the New Democratic Party says that they are my words. If he would read my words in total then I would accept it, but he has not. He is selectively reading them so that it distorts what I said.

I will repeat what I said. We are going to bring in a new sales tax which will replace the old sales tax, which will allow us to reduce middle-income taxes, and which will allow us to eliminate the surtaxes.

I have said recently that because of the debt problem we are not going to be able to eliminate the surtaxes as quickly as we would like. The number of $10 billion is taken totally out of context. The Leader of the New Democratic Party is saying, as is his finance critic, that that was $10 billion in additional revenues—

Mr. Broadbent: No, we are not.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —over and above what we intended to raise. That is totally wrong.

Mr. Broadbent: We did not say that.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member says he did not say it. He is distorting totally then what he just said when he asked me the question five minutes ago.

EFFECT ON INFLATION RATE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the whole country remembers that he did say that it would be revenue-neutral. He has now admitted that he is breaking that commitment to the people of Canada.

What I also want to know is this. In the Finance Committee yesterday morning the Minister said that this new sales tax would add 2.5 per cent to 3 per cent to the inflation rate. We all know that Mr. Crow puts up interest rates when the inflation rate goes up. Can the Minister now tell the people of Canada what impact this increase in the national sales tax will have on interest rates in Canada? Because inflation is now a problem in the Minister's mind will he at least delay the national sales tax until the inflationary pressures ease up?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again, the Hon. Member is quoting selectively what I said in the committee yesterday.

Mr. Nystrom: Exactly what you said.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): What I said, and I repeat, yes, the inflation impact—one shot over a very short period of time—is in the order of 2.5 per cent to 3 per cent.

What I went on to say is that the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Bank of Canada, will be looking at the underlying impact of a variety of things on the performance of the economy, the underlying demand growth in the economy,before deciding what the levels of interest rates should be, what the conduct of monetary policy should be. The Governor of the Bank of Canada understands that that is a one-shot increase in prices.

There is an ongoing set of circumstances in the economy that are far more important to the decisions that are related to the conduct of monetary policy. That is what he will be following.

CANADA POST

ALLEGED HARASSMENT OF EMPLOYEES

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post.

Workers at the Canada Post Gateway plant have reported systematic harassment by management in a clear effort to break the morale of both employees and the postal union. Today's The Toronto Star reports that there is currently an investigation under way to substantiate allegations that supervisors are accepting bribes to facilitate employee hiring. Will the Minister now confirm that an investigation is under way?

Given that my constituents have been coming to my office complaining that they have lost their jobs at Gateway because they have supposedly failed aptitude tests, can the Minister assure us now that employees of Canada Post who have lost their jobs as a result of these less than credible aptitude tests will have their dismissal reviewed by an independent arbitrator to ensure that these individuals were not victimized? Would the Minister agree that stamps are not the only things that have to be licked in order to keep the mail going?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, some days ago a member of my Party reported to my office that in fact there were suggestions of job buying or job selling. The Post Office undertook an investigation. This morning, charges were laid against a Post Office employee.

I do not think it would be appropriate for me to provide any more detail than that at this point in time.

[Translation]

SCOPE OF INVESTIGATION—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation, on the same case.

Could the Minister inform the House whether the investigation deals only with the Gateway Post Office or whether other post offices in Canada are included? If so, could he tell the House whether he has the impression that this problem exists beyond the confines of the Canada Post Corporation?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is aware of illegal activities in other postal operations—

Mr. Boudria: I am asking you.

Mr. Andre: —if he will bring them to my attention or or that of the Post Office, an investigation will be undertaken.

Mr. Boudria: I should have asked the question slower.

Mr. Andre: In response to information provided, an investigation was undertaken and charges laid.

The Hon. Member has asked whether the Post Office is engaged in a witch-hunt across the country. I am not aware of that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the House agrees we will have one question from the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor and one question from the Hon. Member for Oxford.

EMPLOYMENT

DECREASE IN JOB CREATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The unemployment figures released today show a major increase from March of this year, plus a major increase from April of last year.

The Government said that jobs would increase under the Free Trade Deal and now, for the first time in three years, jobs have decreased by 54,000.

I ask the Government and the Minister: Do they not recognize that high taxes and high interest rates are pushing this country into a major recession which will hurt thousands of people?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, maybe the Hon. Member could let me know from where he is getting these figures. In April, 1988, the level of employment was 12,188,000.

Mr. Allmand: What was the rate?

Mr. Wilson: It was about the same as it is today.

In April, 1989, the level of employment was 12,384,000. That adds up to, I believe, 196,000 more people working today than was the case 12 months ago. Surely the Hon. Member can understand that tremendous progress.

TRADE

BROILER HATCHING EGGS AND CHICKS

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. For some months now farmers in my riding and across the country who raise broiler hatching eggs and chicks have been asking to have their product placed on the import control list. Can the Minister tell us if and when he may be able to recognize their request?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have received the only reasonable question this morning.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The situation is that broiler hatching eggs and chicks will be placed on the import control list effective May 8, next Monday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: There are already import controls existing on chicken, turkey, eggs and related products to support marketing plans established under the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. We believe the measure to be consistent with our rights and obligations under the GATT. We are operating under Article XI of the GATT.

We have taken steps to inform our trading partners of the changes to the import control list. We will give the domestic industry administrative details of the new controls, including the level of import quotas within the next few days.

I thank the hon. gentleman for his question which shows his interest in this subject.

POINTS OF ORDER

CHANGE IN FIGURE QUOTED DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I would like to make a revision to a figure I used in remarks I made earlier today. A figure of 120 was used. The figure ought to have read 20.

COMMENTS MADE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, during the Question Period certain statistics were thrown out by myself and the Minister of Finance. I simply want to make the point—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order!

Mr. Langdon: —that the change from March of this year to April of this year was a decrease of 54,000 jobs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair finds that this is a matter of debate.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Jean Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to two petitions.

(Editor's Note: See Today's Votes and Proceedings.)

[English]

SOUTH MORESBY PARK—HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table several dozen petitions. The petitioners state that when the South Moresby Park Agreement was signed the federal Government committed itself to spending $20 million or more to explore for minerals and hydrocarbons in this first national marine park. Allowing for mining or drilling in parklands sets a completely unacceptable precedent and renders the whole concept of park creation meaningless. Moreover, exploring for hydrocarbons in these waters is too dangerous. The West Coast of British Columbia is Canada's most earthquake prone region, the Queen Charlotte Island Basin has an even higher earthquake activity than the San Andreas fault. Hecate Strait has one of the roughest and most unpredictable seas in the world.

Therefore, the undersigned do not want anymore hydrocarbon exploration activities to take place in the coastal waters, be they at the initiative of the public or the private sector, nor do they want a Government to pay for any such activities from this day on, August 12, 1988.

These petitions are signed by several hundred people residing in British Columbia. I am pleased to table their petition in the House.

INCOME TAX EXEMPTION—TOOLS REQUIRED BY MECHANICS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to table a petition signed by some 1,800 mechanics from the Province of Alberta. They come from our cities and from our small towns such as Hussar, Bassano, Brooks, Vulcan and many other smaller communities.

The mechanics of Alberta would like the Government to pay attention to their request for relief under the Income Tax Act for the cost of their tools. It is a cost of gaining employment which is unique to the mechanics' profession. I hope the Government will give it every consideration.

I might point out that this is the second petition of this kind. Mr. Chris Grieve, a mechanic in the Province of Alberta, deserves a lot of credit for getting over 3,000 signatures from mechanics in our province to sign this petition.

VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have the honour and duty to table two sets of petitions, both having been certified correct as to form and content by the Clerk of Petitions. The first is signed by residents of Thunder Bay, Ontario, Kakabeka Falls, Kaministiqua, Gilles, Murillo and rural areas around Thunder Bay. The petitioners point out that an effective and efficient national passenger rail system in Canada is a desirable form of transportation for many Canadians. They go on to note that this Government has refused to provide VIA the necessary support to fully realize its potential to develop the kind of national passenger network that Canadians want and deserve. They conclude by calling upon Parliament to live up to its original pledge to support VIA Rail, to abandon plans for further cuts to VIA's budget and provide the necessary resources to allow VIA to operate as a modern effective transportation company rather than a museum.

The second petition is signed by residents of Trail and Revelstoke, B.C. as well as other parts of British Columbia. The petitioners point out that the Conservative Party of Canada said in its report on passenger rail services that the federal Government has the responsibility to ensure that rail passenger services in Canada be retained, modernized and expanded as an important part of our national transportation system. They call upon the Government to live up to its original pledge and support VIA Rail, and to abandon plans for further cuts to VIA's budget.

STARRED QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Hon. Jean Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, there is a question that I would ask you kindly to call—starred question No. 42. And if you allow me, Mr. Speaker, I have a written answer here that I could table to show it has been read right here in the House.

TOURISM—AN ADVANTAGE FOR CANADA

Question No.42—Mr. Wappel:

On March 14, 1989, did the Minister of State for Small Business and Tourism release an information package entitled Canada Grows With Tourism and, if so, what was the (a) per-unit (b) total-production cost (c) total number of units produced?

Hon. Jean Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): The information package entitled Canada Grows With Tourism was prepared by the Tourism Industry Association of Canada (OTIA) for National Tourism Week (NTW), which will take place from May 15 to 21, 1989. The aim of NTW is to make the importance of tourism for Canada better known. The information package was distributed throughout Canada to help reach this objective.

As part of its involvement with NTW, Tourism Canada financed the production of some items in the information package, in particular:

- the folders
-the summary of last year's activities
-model speeches
-the guide of suggested activities
-the brochure on tourism

The cost of Tourism Canada's participation is as follows:

(a) unit cost (per package)—$10.92
(b) total production cost—$65,540
(c) number of units produced—6,000

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 81—SOCIAL PROGRAMS—CLAW-BACK PROVISION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Dingwall:

That, in the opinion of this House, the claw-backs proposed by the Minister of Finance with regard to the Old Age Security pensions and Family Allowances (1) undermine all Canadian social programs; (2) make easier future incursions against Old Age Security pensions and Family Allowances as well as other social programs, including medicare; (3) will fall most severely on Canadians of moderate means while costing the wealthy little; and

That this House, therefore, condemn the Government for this attempt to violate this sacred trust.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before we started Question Period there were 10 minutes left in the question and comment period of the speech from the Hon. the Minister of National Health and Welfare. On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have listened carefully to the Hon. Minister's presentation, and regardless of the points he was making, the truth of the matter would be that a number of senior citizens will not be retaining their OAS cheques as a result of this Budget measure, in terms of what they call a claw-back provision for pensioners.

I would like to ask the Minister the following question, based on a little historic precedent. Back in 1925 when this began during a Liberal minority Government, a rather visionary labour Member of Parliament who with his partner, held the balance of power, introduced an Old Age Pension Bill. It passed the House in 1926 with a Liberal minority Government. At that time it was opposed by the Conservatives in the House. It was then blocked in the Senate by the Conservative majority of the day, much the same as the Liberal majority blocked the free trade deal.

An election was called and the arguments made at the time by Conservative Senators primarily were that any idea of a pension would hurt families because it would remove the obligation of children to care for their elderly parents. They also said that if we gave a pension to everyone, some criminals would get the pension and that would not be right. It would encourage people not to save to prepare for their retirement years.

An election was called and not suprisingly, the Conservatives were absolutely trounced and Mackenzie King reintroduced the Old Age Pension Bill. Even then it was opposed unanimously by the Tories in the House. It was even opposed again by the Conservatives in the Senate but they reluctantly let it pass because the people had spoken in the general election.

I remember reading my history, although I was not around in those days, that the Conservatives opposed the principle of giving a pension to anybody. Well, a lot has happened since then.

I would like to ask the Minister, is this not a reflection of that old Conservative view that charity has a place but any idea that everyone would actually collect a pension cheque based on their rights as Canadian citizens is something that the Conservative party simply cannot accept?

An Hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Beatty: No, Mr. Speaker, it is not. I was in intrigued that the hon. gentleman should reach back to I believe 19—

Mr. Riis: 1925.

An Hon. Member: That is before you were born.

Mr. Beatty: Yes, it was some 24 years before I was born and the hon. gentleman is still living in the past. He does not recognize the realities of 1989 are markedly different from the realities of 1924. For example, the hon. gentleman does not seem to be aware of the fact that in this Budget the Government sets aside a further $865 million in payments to seniors because we believe that this generation has an obligation to seniors who saw us through the Depression and who helped to build for us the sort of society that my generation is privileged to have today.

There is a fundamental question here and that is whether or not we believe as Members of Parliament and as Canadians that in the attack that we make on this mountain of federal debt those of us who are better off should be asked to carry more of the burden. The historic position of the New Democratic Party had been that wealthier Canadians should be asked to pay more. Indeed, the Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin), today was up on her feet demanding—

An Hon. Member: Income tax.

Mr. Beatty: Exactly. Demanding that taxes should be increased upon wealthy Canadians.

They talk out of both sides of their mouths. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) does precisely that and says that the top 4 per cent of pensioners will be asked to contribute some of that pension back, they cry foul and they say that we are oppressing the rich by doing this and that it is unacceptable to them.

The 96 per cent of Canadians who are not touched by this, the lower 96 per cent, recognize that it is fair that those of us who are wealthier should be asked to carry our fair share of the burden. Our policy in a society which continues to age and age gracefully is to protect pensions for the future by ensuring that we can get a handle on that mountain of federal debt.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Scarborough West on a question or comment.

Mr. Wappel: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to make comments but I am going to ask two very specific questions of the Hon. Minister.

Mr. Beatty: Thank you.

Mr. Wappel: My colleague from Cape Breton—East Richmond in his speech earlier in the day used certain figures. I would like to know if the Hon. Member agrees with the figures that he used, which I will cite in a moment. If he does, can he provide an explanation. Namely, is it a fact that Canadians earning $23,000, around the poverty line, have since 1984 had their taxes increased by over 60 per cent, while those earning $100,000 or more have had their taxes increased by only 8 per cent, plus or minus a percentage? Is that true, and if it is what does the Hon. Minister have to say about it?

The second question is in connection with his remarks in his speech where he pointed to the Members on this side of the House and accused us of being blind, partisan and indicating that we were opposed to the Government's Budget for partisan reasons. I would like to ask him if he is aware of the comments of the Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy), who is a member of his own Party, who is quoted in The Calgary Herald of April 30 as having said that he was opposed to the new sales tax which the Government was proposing because he feels that it is "regressive because it's on the backs of consumers".

I again quote:

> Calling the tax unfair and the wrong way to reduce the federal deficit, Kindy said it will involve hiring another 4,000 civil servants and cost $200 million to administer.

I do not consider that partisan since he sits on that side just a few rows behind the Hon. Minister. I would like the Hon. Minister's comments on his own Member's statements.

Mr. Beatty: I would be delighted to respond to these two questions. I will leave to the Parliamentary Secretary the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent) comments with regard to the taxation system in general. I will stick, perhaps, to my particular area which is the area of social programs and ensuring equity for people who are most in need.

The hon. gentleman professes a concern for Canadians who are most in need, particularly low-income Canadians. Yet his Party opposes a measure in this Budget, and indeed that is the whole point of the debate today, their opposition to a measure which will try to protect the pensions, the family allowances and the medicare of lower-income Canadians by asking higher-income Canadians to pay higher taxes on their old age pensions and on their family allowances.

You cannot have it both ways. Either you believe that lower-income Canadians should be protected and those of us who can afford to pay should be asked to pay more, or you do not. You cannot talk out of both sides of your mouth. What I proposed earlier in the day was that we apply one simple test to everyone who speaks today. Do they candidly and honestly state what they would do to deal with this mountain of federal debt? Do they propose that it can be dealt with simply by patent remedies, patent medicine or do they recognize that it is a serious problem and serious solutions have to be followed?

There is room on all sides of the House for debate and for disagreement as to how best deal with this issue. I made that point in my remarks earlier. But where there is not room is for us to simply substitute partisan posturing for policy.

Hon. Members: Hear. Hear!

Mr. Beatty: Canadians have a right to much more than that.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member for Vancouver East on a question or comment.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister, unless I missed it, why he did not comment or explain at all to parents in Canada, particularly to many women who are in the work-force or would like to get into the work-force, about this Government's promises for five or six years that child care would be a top priority, that it was essential to equality in this country, and furthermore as the special Committee on Child-care documented, it is very damaging to this generation of children not to have good quality care that is affordable. I do not know about the Minister's experience. I hope he is talking to people who need child care, but every week in my riding, I hear from women on welfare and indeed even professional women who simply cannot find any space for their children. These children are literally at risk as a result.

• (1220)

First, I would like to ask the Minister why the Government cut this program out, especially since he is talking about equity for those in greatest need. He is talking about the children of the future, but the Government surely cannot ignore the million and a half children at present who need child care desperately. Many of them, one in six, are poor and their mothers are locked in the welfare system, which is also the Minister's responsibility. They have no opportunity to get into training or to get out of the welfare system and into work if they do not have good child care.

Why did the Minister not at least use the $2.4 billion which is going to regressive child care tax breaks to those wealthier Canadians, not necessarily rich, breaks which ignore the ones with the greatest need? That measure, of course, creates no new spaces for child care.

The Minister was good at fighting for nuclear subs. Why did he not fight hard for children and to protect that money which was for child care spaces? I say that even though I did not agree with the way the Bill was being implemented? However, the money should be there and we should work out a sensible plan and build for the future. By not doing that, he is indeed putting those in greatest need at great risk.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite correct in saying that she simply missed what I said in my speech with regard to child care, because I did indeed answer that question in the context of my remarks. Let me review first for the Hon. Member what is being done. She criticizes the child tax credit. Some 90 per cent of the assistance delivered—

Ms. Mitchell: No, child care expenses.

Mr. Beatty: Yes, that is exactly what she was saying. She referred to a figure of $2.4 billion—

Ms. Mitchell: I am talking about child care expenses.

Mr. Beatty: The Hon. Member may deny it now, but she referred, and she can check the "blues", to a figure of $2.4 billion for tax assistance. This goes through in two ways. The first is through the child care tax deduction, but the other 90 per cent is delivered through the child tax credit. If the Hon. Member proposes that we cut that $2.4 billion worth of assistance, she would be taking it away from the child tax credit which provides the majority of assistance to people on the low end of the income scale. I hope she will reconsider that.

Second, the $100 million child care initiatives fund remains in place. Third, the Canada Assistance Plan, which is aimed to provide assistance for child care to those people most in need, remains in place. We have paid in the past year some $200 million under CAP and we expect a 20 per cent increase this coming year.

Finally the Hon. Member asked about the children of the present. Indeed, every child in Canada today has a debt in his or her name in Ottawa of $12,300, a debt that increased $3 in the last 24 hours and will increase by $3 in the next 24 hours and in each subsequent 24 hours. That is precisely the issue.

If Hon. Members opposite claim to be concerned about young Canadians and about the future, then they have an obligation to stop stealing from those children, to stop running up a mountain of debt which cripples their ability in the future to build something for themselves. It is the height of irresponsibility for those of us who serve in Parliament to steal from the children by refusing to accept our responsibility to manage the affairs of Canada responsibly.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is not a pleasure to rise today to speak on what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has termed the clawing back of old age pensions and the clawing back of family allowance payments. I want to begin my remarks today by saying that being a Canadian means something to Canadian citizens. The fact that a person is a Canadian citizen means some very important things.

We are recognizing not only that people who live in Canada are proud to be Canadian but that there are thousands and tens of thousands and, I suspect, millions of people in the world who would love to be Canadian citizens. The reason for that is that being a Canadian citizen means certain things. It means we have a set of responsibilities as Canadian citizens, but it also means that we receive certain rights and certain benefits. There are certain aspects of being a Canadian citizen that we perceive as being good.

Being Canadian citizens means that our children will have access to elementary and high school education. It does not matter if we are rich or poor, if we live in eastern or western Canada. It does not matter about our ethnic or religious backgrounds. Our children will be able to go to school, and the cost of that school will come out of general revenue.

There are other very important rights. There is the right of families with children to receive family allowance support. The Government of Canada wants to invest in this most important resource and is prepared to pay a certain amount to the family during the important formative years of children to offset some of the costs that a mother or father or both will have raising children. That is a right that Canadian citizens have. We are proud of that right.

We also have access to police protection and to other forms of security in our communities including community services and a variety of social services. Again it does not matter whether we are rich or poor, where we live or what our backgrounds are, we have equal access to those services and that protection. The police never ask, whether you have paid your taxes. They never ask, what your religious affiliation is. That is a service Canadian citizens get automatically.

The same is true of medical care and hospital care. Canadian citizens are able to walk into hospitals if in need and be cared for, regardless of who they are and their level of income.

Fundamental to our rights is the right to obtain an old age pension cheque. A citizen who is 65 years of age and has worked to build what we are proud of in Canada is entitled to an old age security cheque. We have had that right for decades, and we had to struggle originally to get that concept introduced. People across Canada said that this ought to be a fundamental right that goes with citizenship in Canada. It is. That is why Canadians are proud of our achievements and proud of what it means to be a Canadian. It is an important symbol.

Regardless of who one is, whether one is from a rich class, from a disadvantaged group, or from a certain community, just being a Canadian citizen makes one eligible for these basic fundamental rights. It is a real framework of security and protection, and this framework creates a decent standard of living for all Canadians. It gives Canadians peace of mind to know, for example, that if they work in their country, help build our country of Canada, when they reach age 65, they will receive pension cheques from the people of Canada, not from the Government but from the country they helped build. That gives older people real peace of mind, a real sense of security. It gives them real hope for the future. That is what it means to be a Canadian today.

All other countries do not have these rights. As a matter of fact, in most other countries in the world, those rights of citizenship are not in existence. Those rights are not found in the United States. Yes, Americans share some of our rights like freedom of speech, freedom of movement, and political and religious freedom. Those are other fundamental rights that we have in our country and we share them with the United States.

• (1230)

Do they have universal hospital care in the United States? There are many cases where people are rushed to hospital and the doctor meets them at the door and asks for their credit card and, it they do not have a credit card, they will not get medical care. We fought against that mindset. We avoided that market–place health care model.

We know people who have become sick in the United States and have literally bankrupted their families by paying for the required health care because they did not have universal medical insurance in that country.

What about old age pensions? Do people in the United States have an old age pension system like the one we have in Canada? The answer is no. They have a contributory pension plan to which they contribute as they work, a pension like the Canada Pension Plan. They will receive pensions, or they will have a means test such as our means test for the Guaranteed Income Supplement. However, when they reach age 65 they do not automatically get an old age pension cheque in the United States.

This is what it meant to be a Canadian—it was one of the few countries in the world where the pension comes with citizenship, but no more. The Conservative Government of the day has broken that right of citizenship.

My dad is 85 years old. He has told me about the old days when the elderly had to take a means test. They had to prove that they were poor enough to qualify for a cheque. He said that we do not want to see that kind of day return to Canada.

My dad is not happy these days because that is exactly what this Government has introduced—a type of means test which says that certain senior citizens will not get their old age pension cheques in the future. That is what it means; that is what they have done. The people of Canada have been misled.

On March 7, 1984, the Prime Minister said: "Our position is simple and straightforward. We are in favour of universality in social programs, and it shall not be touched". Then, not long ago, on October 15, 1988, in Summerside, P.E.I., the Prime Minister told a group of seniors: "Let me say a special word to the senior citizens. In the future Canada will be doing more, not less, for all of you. As long as I am Prime Minister of Canada social benefits, and especially those for the elderly, will be improved, not diminished by our Government which is committed to social justice and fairness for Canadians".

The Prime Minister was not telling the truth. There is no other way to say it. I hate to use that term to describe the Prime Minister of our country. However, he told senior citizens that he would never introduce a program where they would not get their old age security cheques, and he has done just that. Some 128,000 pensioners in Canada will lose part or all of their old age security cheques as a result of this Budget, what they call the claw-back provision. They will have their pensions or part of their pensions clawed back, as the Minister of Finance has described it. As far as family allowances are concerned, 575,000 families will have all or part of their family allowances clawed back. That is the reality.

For the moment that is what this Budget does, but we know that there will be another Budget next year and the following year; there will be a Budget every year into the future. While 128,000 pensioners will be hit as a result of the 1989 Budget, ten years from now, if nothing else changes, the number will increase to 300,000 and in twenty years over a million pensioners will have all or part of their pension cheques clawed back by the federal Government. Those are the figures of Statistics Canada.

There is another sinister element. Today the Government has said that if they make in excess of $50,000 it is clawing back their old age security cheques. What will be in next year's Budget? Will it lower that amount to $40,000, to $30,000 and then to $25,000? Why not? Why should we trust this Government to do anything but that? It promised our seniors that it would never do what it has just done.

We do not have enough paper in this place to list all the broken promises we have seen from this Government in the last four years. Why would any pensioner find any comfort in a Government saying that it is $50,000 now and that is it? It has not said that, by the way; it has given no assurance that that is to be the cut-off. Today it is $50,000. Next year it could be $40,000 and $25,000 just as easily. Once this idea of universality is broken it is easy to erode it further. I am sure that $50,000 sounds like a lot of money to people today, but with the inflation rate going up every year teachers who are not making $50,000 today will be making more than that with cost of living increases and they will not get their Old Age Security cheques. Nurses will not get Old Age Security cheques. Tradesmen will not get Old Age Security cheques. People working on trains, planes and ships will not get Old Age Security cheques. That is precisely what this Government is saying today.

The Government wants to shatter the whole concept of universality where everyone is treated fairly, equitably and justly. Now there will be a means test. If a person makes a certain income he or she will not get what other Canadian citizens will receive.

This is called harmonizing with the United States. It is that part of the Free Trade Agreement aimed at harmonizing the social programs of Canada, not with a progressive country in western Europe but with the United States of America. The U.S. does not have universality in its pension system, nor universality in terms of its health care or hospital care. Yet, the Government has begun the process of making programs like those in Alabama, Tennessee and Florida. Once Canadians realize what is happening to them, I do not think they will accept it for one minute.

There is something extremely cruel going on here, extremely underhanded and extremely sinister. Once the Government says that it is to abandon the universality attached to pensions—and that has been done—and that it is to abandon the policy of universality attached to family allowances, what is next? We can only speculate what is coming next.

Will medicare be next? Will the Government say to you, Mr. Speaker, "you make $50,000 a year; when you go to the hospital or to a clinic you had better take your credit card or cash because unless you are prepared to pay for your health care, you are not going to get any". That is what is next; the writing is on the wall.

What about education, Mr. Speaker? When you send your children to Grade 5 and you are making $50,000 a year, why don't you pay extra for their education? You can afford that. What about police protection? What about ambulance service? You can pay for that. Where does it end, Mr. Speaker? Once you break this sacred trust, once you break this commitment to universality, anything is up for grabs. Does it end with hospital care? Does it end with education?

What this Government has decided to do is move our country toward social services based on charity, that those most in need must make their case and prove to the Government of Canada that they are in need. This is language it uses as a result of advice from its corporate friends.

Its corporate friends have said that we cannot afford these social programs and that we should target them programs to those in need. If you can prove, Mr. Speaker, that you are needy, if you can prove that you are poor enough to need an Old Age Security cheque, then you will get it. That is where we are going; that is the end result of the process we have just begun with this particular Budget.

My dad is angry. He fought with others to ensure that a universal Old Age Security system was introduced in our country. He just filled out his income tax return; he is 85 years old, he has a modest saving, and he had to pay taxes this year. He asked: "Son, does Alcan Aluminium have to pay taxes with $320 million in profits?" I said: "Dad, I don't think they pay taxes. I don't have the exact figures because they are very hard to get. You must really dig to find out what companies pay any taxes".

However, here are some who do not pay any taxes at all. Alcan Aluminium is at the top of the heap. Then of course there is Royal Trust Co., Brascan, Trilon Financial, Power Financial, Hees International, Xerox Canada, Cadillac Fairview, Placer Development, Gulf Canada Resources, Confederation Life Insurance, Saskatchewan Mining Development, Total Petroleum, Bramalea, and Hudson's Bay. I could read a list of 89,000 profitable corporations that do not pay a single penny.

• (1240)

What kind of cruel Government would say to Alcan Aluminum that it can make $300 million in profits and not have to pay a single penny in tax? However, presumably my dad is going to have to pay taxes and now he is going to find that his old age pension checks will be clawed back by the Government. That is the type of country that the Conservative Government has created. It is wrong, but why would we be surprised?

Those of us who are interested in history have read what has gone on in the past. Today the Conservatives are only doing what they have always done. Back in 1984, the very first thing the Government did was to try to reduce pensions. For some reason, the Government does not like pensions. It tried to deindex pensions so that senior citizens would receive less than they deserved.

I would like to share the following story with you, Mr. Speaker, because it tells us why the Conservative Government is doing this dastardly deed against senior citizens today. In 1925 we had a Liberal minority Government. The forerunners of the New Democrats at the time stood up and said that we need to have a pension in this country; if a person struggles, works, and contributes their whole life and retires at age 65, on behalf of the people of Canada they should receive a pension to ensure that their later lives are continued in dignity. The Conservatives in the House of Commons thought that this was terrible. They said that they could never consider an idea of a pension to a senior citizen. The Liberals were not sure what to do, but they introduced the Bill.

It was a minority Government in 1926 and the Liberals introduced the Bill and supported it, as did the forerunners of the New Democrats. But it was opposed to the last Conservative in the House. Every single Conservative stated they were against pensions. They were asked why they were against pensions. They stated that if we give pensioners any money, their children will escape their obligation to care for their people. They also stated that there are older criminals out there and if a general pension cheque is sent out it would mean that some criminals would actually get a pension cheque. They also stated it would encourage senior citizens not to save for their retirement years. Every single Conservative was against the concept of a pension.

Interestingly enough, it went to the Senate. It passed through the House of Commons because of the New Democrats of the day and the Liberal Government of the day. Then it went to the Senate where the Conservatives had the majority and it was stopped dead in its tracks. They stated that they would not pass the legislation.

An election was called and the Tories were trounced completely, and an old age pension Bill was introduced. The Tory Senators still opposed the idea but they felt they had an obligation to let it through.

From the very beginning, Conservative Members of Parliament and Conservative Senators opposed the idea of a pension on principle. We ought not to be surprised today when we hear the Government stating that it is going to begin clawing back pensions. This year it is going to claw back 128,000, and more and more as the years go on.

Canadians will not forget this long list of problems. Underlying the principle of universality is the explicit social contract that public programs and public services will be available to all and that each of us will pay according to our ability to pay. Everyone will receive an old age security cheque, and those who are wealthy will pay more tax; those who are poor will pay no tax. That is not what we have in this country. We have a very goofy system. In our country, not everyone pays tax. Many millionaires do not pay tax at all. It is interesting to look at what upper income people have experienced over the last years of Tory Government.

In 1980, under a liberal Government, the tax rate for the highest income earners was 43 per cent. In other words, a wealthy person would pay 43 per cent income tax. The Liberals dropped that down to 34 per cent. They said the rich were paying too much. In 1987, the Conservatives dropped it to a 29 per cent tax rate. It does not matter whether a person makes $200,000 or $200 million, he or she pays 29 per cent. It is absolutely fascinating that under the Conservative Government the top 1 per cent of wage earners, the very rich, have seen their taxes go down during the Tory Government administration, and the very poor and average Canadians have seen their taxes increase by hundreds of dollars.

In closing, with this Government we have had a long history of lies, broken promises, an extended pattern of half-truths. The pensioners of Canada will not forget what the Government has done to them. The families of Canada will not forget what the Government has done to them. One of Canada's most positive aspects of citizenship has now been abandoned, and that is the principle that regardless of who you are and what income you have, you are entitled to an old age security cheque.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions or comments, the Hon Member for York South—Weston.

Mr. Nunziata: I would like to ask the Hon. Member who has just spoken to give me his thoughts with respect to the over-all picture, if we put this particular Budget into perspective, given the actions of the Conservative Government since 1984. I wish to ask the Hon. Member to speculate on what Canada might be like in 20 or 30 years time when he and I will be senior citizens and have children and grandchildren.

For example, can the Hon. Member comment on the fact that a few years ago the Government did away with the Foreign Investment Review Agency? In the last Parliament we entered into a Free Trade Agreement with the United States that would literally tear down all economic barriers between Canada and the United States.

As the Hon. Member has put it, with this particular Budget the Government has started to claw back pensions and family allowances so that they are no longer sacred trusts. The Unemployment Insurance Program in Canada has been privatized. Part of Air Canada was privatized in the last Parliament, and we understand the Government intends to fully privatize it. Passenger rail service in Canada may very well become a thing of past.

I ask the Hon. Member to put all these decisions into perspective. Canada is the pride of the world because of these very things. We have a health-care system that is second to none in the world, and an education system that is second to none. What impact will Government policies have on this Canada that is loved throughout the world in terms of our quality of life and in terms of the collective compassion of all Canadians?

It seems to me that given the actions and the agenda of this particular Government, that agenda being one of dismantling Canada as we know it piece by piece, can he speculate on what Canada may be like in 20 or 30 years time?

Mr. Riis:: I appreciate the question of my hon. friend. I must say when one projects into the future, particularly the next four years, one becomes very concerned indeed. We do not know what we can trust with the Government.

I respect the Minister who is in his place at the moment and who spoke earlier. He might say today that the Government does not plan to reduce the ceiling on pension clawbacks below $50,000, or he might say that they do not plan to continue dismantling all the social programs, and he may be correct. However, we have heard so many lies. We have had promises broken so many times that it does not matter what the Prime Minister says any more. The people of Canada cannot believe him.

During the election campaign, many of us said our concern about the free trade deal with the United States was that there would be a dismantling of programs and that there would be a downward pressure on the high standards that we have accomplished in this country to approximate those found in Tennessee, Texas, or South Carolina. The Prime Minister stated that regional development programs, pensions, or family allowance would not be touched. He went on to talk about all the things he would not do. However, when we look at the Budget we see that he has done them all. The Prime Minister has done everything he said he would not do. He has broken promise after promise. We will take no comfort from anything the Prime Minister says. Obviously he does not mean what he says or does not know or understand what he is saying.

• (1250)

My hon. friend asks what the future will be like. We have struggled for decades to build a rather unique home for Canadians. We have had a very high standard of living. We have had peace of mind because of some very well developed, thoughtful and sophisticated social programs. For instance, someone retiring at age 65 would get a pension. A person raising a family would get a family allowance cheque. A person who is sick or injured would go to the hospital and be cared for.

As a result of the present Government, we are seeing that elements of those systems are no longer in place. Some 128,000 senior citizens will have to give back their Old Age Security cheques. Over half a million families raising children will have their family allowance cheques clawed back by the Conservative Government. Where will it end?

Actually in the good old days we used to make decisions about the future of our country. In cities like Vancouver, Kamloops, Toronto, Montreal and Regina, we actually made decisions about our country because we had some control over the companies in our economy. As a result of the sell-out in the Free Trade Agreement decisions about our children's future will not be made here in Canada but in Omaha, Los Angles, New York, Dallas and Houston.

I doubt if the Texans in Houston have our children's concerns at heart when they make investment decisions about whether to close a plant, start a new marketing line, or do research and development.

We have built and developed a system through decades of hard struggle to make this a country one of which we are proud to be citizens. We are seeing it being dismantled by the Conservative Government. These programs are being eroded and dismantled day after day so that the Prime Minister can fulfil his dream that one day we will be part of the United States and our programs will be like those in the United States where they do not have universal health care or a universal pension system. This is what the Prime Minister must want, because that is what he is trying to accomplish.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, with every crime there has to be a motive. There has to be a mens rea, as they say in criminal law. There must be a reason why one wants to commit a particular crime.

I suggest to the Hon. Member that what the Government is doing with respect to the future of Canada is a crime, given what has taken many years to develop. Could the Hon. Member explain what the Government is doing? I cannot for the life of me understand what that motive may be.

The Government talks about the deficit. Deficit financing has been with us for some time. We also know for a fact that when the Government came to power the debt was approximately $170 billion. In five short years that debt has almost doubled. We have a situation where the Conservative Government, led by the Prime Minister, is the author of half the national debt.

Given that the annual deficit is its major preoccupation, will he comment on the fairness of what the Government has done in terms of asking Canadians to shoulder the burden while certain Canadians have been forced to shoulder more?

With the size of any federal constituency in Prince Edward Island, for example, the impact is absolutely devastating. Will he comment on the fairness, equity and economic justice, given the motive of the Government?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my hon. friend's question. In my mind the motive is clear. The Government committed itself to President Reagan to dismantle the country.

The Conservative Party introduced CBC and now it is trying to get rid of CBC. It introduced Air Canada and now it wants to get rid of Air Canada. It introduced VIA and now it wants to get rid of VIA Rail.

There is a long list of what it means to be Canadian. Slowly but surely the Government is ridding us of all the vestiges of what being Canadian is all about.

As my hon. friend says, the Conservatives have virtually doubled the debt of the country in five short years. The Minister of Finance says that the reason for all these cruel, heavy-handed, unjust provisions in the Budget is to reduce the deficit. He tells us in the next breath that the deficit will actually go up this year and next year. One must ask what is the motive. Why is the Government causing such far-reaching devastation to the country?

It is simple. This is stage two of the free trade deal with the United States. Our Prime Minister promised President Reagan that he would try to make Canada like the United States. He promised that he would try to drive down and depress our quality of life to approximate that quality of life in the southern states. That is what he promised. Unfortunately for Canadians who were misled, that is what he is doing.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the motion moved today by the Liberal Party condemns the Conservative Government for doing a hatchet job on social programs and for attacking and in fact putting an end to the universality of these programs. We must remember that we have three major social programs in this country that are cherished by all Canadians and are universal: old age security pensions, family allowances and medicare, which is universal and free.

Mr. Speaker, we must recall that these programs are not welfare. They were not given to us as a kind of charity. There was no means test to be eligible for old age security, family allowances or health care across this country.

Canada's seniors are right when they say that universality is on the way out as result of the surtax on old age security and family allowances. An editorial in Le Devoir said that this spelled the end of universal social programs. Some people will say that the Government's hypocritical approach does not deprive social programs, old age security or family allowances of their universality. I believe this is the beginning of the end of universality, because before these proposals were made, all Canadians aged 65 and over would receive their old age security pension cheques, and at the end of the fiscal year, when they did their tax returns, they would add up their old age security cheques, their RRSP income, their investment income and rental income. There is no justification for a surtax on old age security, because these benefits are already more highly taxed than income from an RRSP which itself is tax free.

What the Tories are proposing this year is an all out attack on old age security cheques, and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Corbeil) says: those earning $50,000 or more. I am defending people with that kind of income, because tomorrow, they will go after the $10,000 group.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, who are these people with an income of $50,000 or more? They are the fathers and mothers of most of the Members in this House. They are Canadians who are now 65 and who raised their children in some very difficult circumstances. These are the families, the elderly, who had to pay at the time because there was no medicare hospital insurance. What the Minister of Labour does not know is that from 1952 to 1972, these senior citizens paid a special tax to be eligible for universal social programs.

I know the Minister of Labour is not aware of that—he does'nt know.

• (1300)

As we saw today, those people accepted to pay a special tax in order to qualify for a program that is now taken away from them. How can people trust this Government after such actions?

Mr. Speaker, senior citizens today—but this is the second time this Tory Government is attacking Old Age Security Pensions. They started with deindexation, but thank God and the Liberal Party and senior citizens, after seven weeks of fighting during which all Conservative Members expressed their support for deindexation after what Mrs. Denis told the Prime Minister on Parliament Hill—Charlie Brown!—he had to apologize on TV and his Minister of Finance had to make amends and say it was all a mistake.

Well, once more you're making a mistake, you Tories, and once more you misled the people. The 65-year olds. Universality was established because every person who worked all his or her life and paid taxes, who painstakingly put money aside, who even paid a special tax during 20 years to be entitled to universality, those people should not be deprived of it.

Moreover, this Tory Government starts at the level of $50,000 a year or more, even though this does not even reduce its deficit. Next year, it will lower that to the $30,000 income level, and the year after that to $20,000. And it makes no difference which Government is in power. Just as income tax was meant to be a temporary measure but has become a permanent fixture, the Minister's surtax was temporary. It is now permanent and has been increased, Mr. Speaker.

And now they attack people with $50,000 yearly income—and I am not speaking of my constituents. If today's poor families, today's poor senior citizens do not join forces with everyone else to make the Government relent on its attack against social program universality, the next victims will be those with a $30,000 yearly income, and after that those with $20,000.

We have seen that before with respect to other programs, Mr. Speaker. When the universal Old Age Security program was implemented it was only fair to the men and women who had worked for hours on end during their active lifetime, they had paid their taxes and they rightfully expected to be entitled to OAS benefits at the end of their career. The guaranteed income supplement was just another way to make life easier for less fortunate elderly Canadians. The whole program was designed to help as many people as possible.

But again the Government is misleading senior citizens. Not only the Prime Minister, him and his mother. No a single Conservative Member here would dare stand up and say he or she did warn older people that some of them would have to pay back their OAS benefits. Not one of them told the people.

Here they are again telling us they take from the rich to give to the poor, but that is not true, Mr. Speaker. Had the Government said it would raise the guaranteed income supplement paid to people living under the poverty line by taking back $300 million from others earning more than $50,000 a year, I would have said that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was not pulling the wool over the eyes of Canadians.

But it just is not so. The Government grabs that money so the banks will not have to pay their fair share to reduce the debt and lower the deficit.

Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of approach and policy which make people lose confidence in their Government and their politicians regardless of their political persuasion.

Let us consider family allowances and family policies. One of the problems facing Canada and Québec is the declining birth rate. We all know how much it costs to raise a family these days.

When the family allowances program was launched it was designed to help families with children, as opposed to childless couples. Now it seems the Conservatives want children to come only from poor families, they do not seek to help middle-income families.

I would suggest this is why Québec Liberal Government Family Minister Thérèse Lavoie-Roux said that the Budget of the Minister of Finance is an anti-family Budget. We remember that it maintained de-indexation of family allowances and lowered the child tax credit eligibility threshold. It has also recently imposed a special tax on family allowances and cancelled plans to increase child care spaces, which was the most important thing in that area.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with Mrs. Thérèse Lavoie-Roux that it is an anti-family Budget. And now that the declining birthrate is a problem it is not a good time to take money away from families with children. It should be the opposite: we should encourage young couples to have children by helping them with the extra costs involved.

Mr. Speaker, health and hospitalization insurance is another program that is free and universal. Health Ministers throughout the country, be they Liberals or Conservatives, are not fools. Before the Budget was tabled, they all sent the Minister of Finance an SOS saying that his 1986 Bill C-96 resulted in a $5.776 billion cut in the health and hospitalization insurance funding program. Hospitals have had to close beds and deny treatment to patients in order to make ends meet. You have people suffering, people who need a heart bypass operation but who must wait a year; some even die before being admitted to hospital because there's not enough money.

In its Bill C-96, the Government cut $133 million in Newfoundland, $29 million in Prince Edward Island, $201 in Nova Scotia, $162 million in New Brunswick, $1,479 million in Québec, $2,081 million in Ontario, $242 million in Manitoba, $236 million in Saskatchewan, $549 million in Alberta and $663 million in British Columbia. Not only did that heartless Minister of Finance—we will never be able to find him a heart for a bypass operation—not only did that inhumane Minister ignore the problems in the health and hospitalization sector, but he also tried in his Budget to reduce by one per cent the federal contribution to the health system.

The 1989-90 Estimates of the President of the Treasury Board call for a $160 million cut in funding for hospitals and health services in comparison with 1988-89.

Provincial Health and Finance Ministers, be they Conservative or Liberal, as well as Senator Paul David, a Conservative Senator who is also an eminent heart surgeon and the founder of the Montreal Institute of Cardiology and who knows what he is talking about since he is no Bay Street broker, said, after an investigation into the matter, that if emergency rooms are overcrowded, if there are long waiting lists throughout the country, if people must wait for treatment due to a lack of space, if hospital equipment is obsolete, if people in some parts of the country are at a disadvantage because local hospitals do not have the equipement required to save lives or to treat people and alleviate their suffering as much as possible, it is because there is not enough money.

Senator David is not a political schemer. He is a recognized specialist in his field.

• (1310)

And here again, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) are insensitive to all these aspects. It is the same as in 1985 when this Government decided to tax all drugs, even those used by diabetics who have to give themselves an injection with a syringe every day to survive. For the Conservative Government, for the same Finance Minister, it was no big deal taxing them. Taxing drugs that cardiac patients and people with respiratory disorders need to survive was not serious. For the Conservative Members, that was not an issue. After three weeks of struggle with my colleague from Hamilton, the Finance Minister had to admit that he was wrong. What he had done was inhuman. He had to go back, withdraw his tax on all drugs for people with diabetes, cardio-vascular diseases and respiratory disorders.

Mr. Speaker, it is still time. The Minister of Finance will have to admit that the most shocking thing in his Budget is the attack on the sick. And today, I am in a position to speak about it, because before, I had not known sickness. I know what it means to go to a hospital and see people in the corridor. I know what it means to need treatment to survive, to have one foot in the grave, and to have the hospital tell you that they cannot admit you this week. You will have to wait till next week. They had to close 88 beds.

I do not know how that affects you, but the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) had the same experience I did. He too knows what it is about. There are people who could be cured without the slightest suffering because of new discoveries, but for lack of money, because the Conservative Government prefers to spare our banking system, would rather not tax the banks, would rather not raise the share of tax that business has to pay—it prefers to sacrifice people's health.

And when I see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) tell us that the people will continue to defend social programs if they do not get them— I can tell the Minister of National Health and Welfare that he is not often out in the field, he does not go to disadvantaged communities. You just have to look at Québec, at the cuts the Government made to welfare payments.

You did not hear the former mayor of Anjou come to the defence of people on social welfare. Of course not, they do not worry because they have no such people, they live in a small world of their own. As a result of bad prejudices concerning these people, the unemployed people on welfare, it is true that in our system there are bad citizens like the rich who cheat on their taxes, but they are no worse than the others.

The minute people realize they will be working all their lives and paying taxes, yet not be entitled to OAS benefits, it stands to reason they will not defend the system because they will feel they have been treated unfairly.

We had more of the same when the present Minister of Transport held the Employment and Immigration portfolio. He decided that people who lost their jobs no longer qualified for unemployment insurance benefits, yet these people were getting what was coming to them, as employees they had paid their share of pension contributions as had their employer, but again the Conservative Members kept saying not to worry. After arguing with them for 17 months the Government finally admitted they were right and had to pay unemployment benefits back to 47,000 claimants who were entitled to that money.

Today still the Government practices discrimination. People are told: If you pay your premiums then lose your job and seek other employment you are entitled to unemployment insurance regardless of your income.

Right now a rich man who gets $350 from his RRSP or from a tenant is entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits, but not so the ordinary worker who withdraws $200 from the pension plan to which both he and his employer contribute. Who would have thought a Government would come into office and do something like that! At one time or another some people may have said it was nothing to worry about. We see the same thing coming today. They begin at the $50,000 bracket, nothing to be concerned about, they are going after people earning in excess of $50,000, Mr. Speaker, but it is just a question of time before the ceiling drops down to $40,000.

Already the table is not indexed. Automatically, by income levels, this will come down, and the next target will be $30 000. And then, quite simply, the kind of Minister of Finance we have today will say: Look now, we already established the means test for the guaranteed income supplement or the child tax credit. So we might just as well extend that means test to everything else and so eliminate those whose income tops $15 000 or $20 000. Certainly someone will say: You mail a cheque, and the money spent on mailing old pension cheques we might as well save that rather than claiming it back at the end of the year!

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge some Conservative Members to do as they did on other struggles I led. The Hon. Member for Abitibi was not afraid to rise in support of senior citizens and face his Government. I hope that some will rise, speak to the Minister of Finance and tell him not to touch the health care system. Everyone here has constituents who suffer, who are ill or who will be. We must defend those people who cannot come here on Parliament Hill to speak for themselves. This is what we are elected for.

Mr. Speaker, rather than have this charade of social program dismantling, the Government should have said: "We honestly want to improve social programs" and look after to the people who are most in need, and established a guaranteed yearly income program. But not this charade of attacking and destroying piece by piece the vital universal social programs. The people paid for them, not the Prime Minister.

Mr. Della Noce: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) on a point of order.

Mr. Della Noce: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was anxious to hear the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) whom I respect greatly conclude his remarks since I did not want to interrupt him on a point of order. But I was a little surprised to hear him try and defend people with $50,000 plus income—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is not a point of order. Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay).

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must admit that the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) speaks with more authority about senior citizens than about the Space Agency. And of course there is the emotional side with his references to the sick and to his own health, and we are of course aware of that situation. My comment was, and I made it when the microphone was still closed, that at last he was waking up. And in fact, Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear his comments because he was himself a Government Member from 1975 to 1984.

Does he realize what kind of legacy his Party left us in 1984? Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may give a short summary. During the previous 110 years, in other words, since Confederation, successive Governments had accumulated a total debt that was less than $20 billion by 1967, when we celebrated our centennial. About 3 cents of every dollar paid in taxes went to service the debt. In 10 years, Mr. Speaker, from 1975 to 1984, when the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie sat in this House, the debt soared to about $200 billion. Did the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie rise in the House at that time, Mr. Speaker? Did he rise in the House when the Energy Ministers of the time closed as many as three plants in East Montreal, three refineries? We didn't hear him then.

Mr. Della Noce: Ten in Canada.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Ten in Canada. Did he rise then, Mr. Speaker? Does he remember the kind of legacy they left us in 1984? About $200 billion. They left us a legacy to manage the deficit, to manage negative growth. That is what we were left by the Liberal Government. Did the Hon. Member rise then? When we introduced Bill C-26 in 1986, which provided benefits for widows and widowers, did he rise in the House to ask the Conservative Government why we didn't extend those benefits to everyone? I think he should remember that during the last 21 years his Government was in power, they never passed this kind of legislation for anyone. Did the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie rise then? Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear what the Hon. Member has to say and I had to wait until today, when the Hon. Member decided to wake up. However, there was a time when he should have spoken, and he did not.

• (1320)

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member doesn't seem to have learned a thing, although this is his second term. I didn't ask him to rise in the House, I asked him to rise in caucus. I can inform the Hon. Member that in caucus, my Party proposed cuts in family allowances. However, we won in caucus. They were not cut. My Party's legacy was universal health insurance for everyone and universal pensions for everyone. The social programs we have today were introduced by the Liberal Party, not by the Tories.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Malépart: It was Trudeau and Pearson. Members did not have to fight their causes here, they did so in Caucus where we were able to win our battles. We didn't need the Opposition to fight our battles. It is pretty obvious the Hon. Member has learned nothing in his second term. He was lucky to be elected on the basis of a pack of lies, like all the others.

He referred just now to Bill C-26 which continues to discriminate against all elderly Canadians between the ages of 60 and 64 who are single or separated and who live in his riding. He did not defend them. And he could at least have asked his Minister to give to the poor the money he is taking away from the rich. These people are poor, and he could not defend them!

M. DeBlois: Mr. Speaker, I always listen with interest to the Hon. Member form Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) because he is a good speaker and sometimes even eloquent. But I would like to remind him of the very interesting opinion expressed by the National Council on Welfare in its comments on the Budget. The problem is that we are saddled with a huge debt which must be spread as equitably as possible by any responsible government. In the Budget, the Government is asking people who can afford it most to make an effort. And I must admit that I am surprised and a bit disappointed to hear the Hon. Member from Laurier—Sainte-Marie, for whom I have a lot of respect, stand up for the rich.

We are trying to make a transfer, and here is what the National Council on Welfare had to say: "The advantage of the claw-back is that it saves money not by tampering with the principle of universality, but rather by increasing the progressivity of social programs. Most defenders of universality believe that benefits should be distributed in a progressive fashion: as the income rises, the benefits diminish, and vice versa. The claw-back does no damage to universality. Old age pension and family allowance cheques would still go out to all the pensioners and parents, regardless of their incomes, but it does reduce the net value of benefit to upper-income recipients". That is what we have done. We are merely asking people whose net income—we are talking about net income not gross income—is over $50,000 a year to make a little extra effort to reduce the debt which, if nothing is done now, will reach in a few years such proportions that the social programs we enjoy now will have to be discontinued. I wonder what he Hon. Member from Laurier—Sainte-Marie has to say about that.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. I have never denied the existence of a debt or deficit problem. Yet, I suggest this Tory Government is wrong to ask sick people to share this burden. When a man gets sick, he has no time to ponder whether he can afford to be sick. He urgently seeks treatment. The Goverment should never use sick people as hostages.

Concerning the affluent people earning $50,000 and more, it is true that they do not need me to defend them, but having dealt for 25 years with social issues, I know that governments always start with the rich and finish with the poor. Remember the time when the PQ Government decided to reduce to $130 the social assistance paid to young Quebecers because it felt that these people were lazy and that eventually they would get a job. What happened? These young people began shooting drugs and got involved in prostitution to survive. That is only the start! If you told me that there are no other areas where the Government could get money, that all affluent people pay their fair share of income tax, that all corporations pay their dues, I would reply: We must change the social programs. If we want to save on social programs, let us establish a guaranteed annual income.

We have twelve social programs, especially the way you operate, to provide assistance to people. Which means that if we were to put together in the same group the mothers with children, the aged and the unemployed, we could considerably reduce the overhead and give more to the really poor people. But what you are proposing is not a solution to improve our social programs but strictly a means to reduce your deficit by taking away money from those people you should leave alone. Senior Canadians are not responsible for creating this deficit! You would like to go to these people who are 65 years of age and who have lived sparingly all their lives to be able to save a little money and today— Our generation seems to be saying: Our parents are used to paying through the nose. Let them continue to pay, because we are not going to. Personally, I object. My parents have made enough sacrifices. Its our turn to make sacrifices and to attack the affluent, the banks, the really rich, in order to get rid of this debt forever.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! There are only two minutes left. The Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) may use up one, than the other Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) the other.

M. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I definitaly want the record to show, what the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) said earlier. He claimed to be standing up for the people earning over $50,000 because he is afraid of what will happen some day to those who earn $10,000. I do hope his predictions are incorrect and that time will prove him wrong.

But I was most stunned by what he said after that. He maintained that only the fathers and mothers of Hon. Members of this House earn $50,000. Now I want to tell my colleague what my mother was left with after working her whole life. She is now in a hospital, in a home where she has to pay $860 per month even though she only gets $545 per month in guaranteed income supplement. With the provincial supplement, that amounts to $8,000 a year. So, you see, my mother does not belong to the group the Hon. Member of Laurier—Sainte-Marie was referring to. Let us talk about what she got from the social services your party gave us— It is too bad that you did not see things that way before, that the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie did not feel that way before, because what you left us is not much to live on, my mother only gets $8,160 a year. It's a good thing she has a son to pay the difference since it costs $860 per month! There might be others in a similar situation, I don't know.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Muffler here may not know that the Conservatives were against all the measures we proposed in order for his mother to get $8,000. But already, the Hon. Member thinks the benefits are not high enough and he is ready, probably because the rent at his mother's home is going up— The reason being that your government has cut health care services by another $200 million. If your mother is getting poorer, you only have yourself to blame for it!

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): I listened with interest to the speech of the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), as I did to questions and his answers.

What surprised me most in the thirty minutes he spoke were the words: Your deficit! That is what he said, as we will read in Hansard on Monday: Your deficit! While we know very well, Mr. Speaker, that it is not our deficit, that it is the country's deficit that started with his Liberal Government which was in office for twenty years!

Mr. Speaker, let me answer the various points he raised. For one thing, Mr. Speaker, regarding medicare, we know the federal Government transfers money to the provinces mainly in two ways. First through what we call the established programs financing and second through equalization payments to some provinces.

Mr. Speaker, it has been pointed out that the Budget we introduced is cutting by 1 per cent the increase in established programs financing to the provinces. That means the federal Government will make bigger payments to the provinces over the next five years, regardless of that $25 million reduction over that period. And the Budget does not change anything to the equalization payments that are made to some provinces, including Québec.

• (1330)

More important still, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government is transfering money to provinces but has absolutely no say in the way it is spent. Provinces can say and do whatever they want with the money we give them to build roads, schools, hospitals or whatever. We have no control whatsoever.

This is why the attack by the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie is absolutely ludicrous in that respect.

He referred to family allowance, old age security pensions, he said we set this at $50,000 this year but we would reduce it in the future down to $10,000. I suggest that before criticizing the Budget, a review of the comments it raised is in order. The first interesting comment came from the Finance critic of the Liberal Party of Canada, who said on March 21, 1989 that we should tax family allowance and old age security pensions, and they should be taxed back from the people with a certain income level. Yes, you heard correctly, this came from the Finance critic of the Liberal Party of Canada. He said so before the Budget: Tax old age security pensions and family allowance back from those who do not need them!

He also suggested, and we are in total agreement with him, the annual deficit had to be tackled. The annual deficit is a rather vague concept. What does that mean, an annual deficit, Mr. Speaker? The Canadian Government's annual deficit, is the amount it spends over and above the revenue. This means that for 25 years, every year, the Canadian Government has been spending, and I repeat every year, year after year, the Canadian Government has been spending more money than it took in. Over four years, we succeeded in reducing our deficit because when we came to power in 1984, we were left with a $39 billion deficit. This means that in 1984, under a Liberal Government, we as a nation spent $39 billion more than Government revenues. Over four years we reduced that to $28 billion. The accumulation of yearly overspending is responsible for our having today a national debt in the order of $320 billion.

Mr. Speaker, $320 billion is something much too large for many people to comprehend. Those $320 billion mean $3 million an hour. The national debt is growing at the rate of $3 million an hour, or $80 million a day. This is the problem we have in this country. And this is the legacy left us by that Party, the Liberal Party of Canada. This is what we inherited from them, Mr. Speaker, and we must deal with it.

Listening to the comments coming from the Opposition, all they say on any matter is: money, money, money, give more money away, spend more! What do we spend on in this Government, how is this Government being managed since 1984?

Of each dollar that came into our coffers here in Ottawa, 16 cents only are used for managing the country, paying for public service salaries, federal buildings, etc. Only 16 cents. On the other hand, 35 cents go to interest payments. Not to the debt, but to the interests on the debt.

[English]

Mr. Wappel: That is now, that was not in 1984. It has gone up. Paint a correct picture.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: The members opposite say it was 32 cents in 1984. There's nothing to boast about that. It's horrible. At 32 cents, I would be ashamed. I can understand why you went into hiding. There's nothing to boast about that.

Mr. Speaker, a lot of money, about 25 cents of each dollar, goes to the provinces. A lot of money is allotted to old age pensions, to family allowances, to unemployment insurance.

Members opposite are saying there should be cuts. We spend 16 cents out of every dollar on administering the country, and the reason there are no additional funds is that we use 35 cents out of every dollar go towards paying the interest on the monstrous debt which the party opposite started to accumulate. The opposition doesn't understand that, but Canadians listening to us do. They understand that if you earn $20,000 a year and spend $25,000, after twenty years, you will be $100,000 in the red. Canadian families have no trouble understanding that. They also understand that if you have a net income of $50,000 a year, you will still be well off even if you don't get the full amount of your old age pension or your family allowances. The claw-back will affect 4 percent of the 3,000,000 Canadians who receive an old age pension benefits. And only 2 percent will get nothing or will have to forfeit the full amount of their pension. What income level are we talking about? To get nothing or to have to forfeit the full amount of your annual old age pension, you must make $77,000 net from other sources, $77,000 net, Mr. Speaker. The opposition says that people will lose their cheques. That is simply not true.

Citizens entitled to old age security pensions did receive their cheques last month, and will get them again this month, and next month, and even next year, but if their net income is over $77,000, they will have to pay back the amount of benefits they received when paying their taxes. But that only applies to 2 per cent of seniors in Canada.

You know, Mr. Speaker, for the last four years, every time a new budget was tabled, I have had the opportunity, as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, to visit each and every region in Quebec to explain the budget to the people. Everywhere I went, wether I met with the Richelieu club, the Rotary club, the Chamber of Commerce, the AFEAS, or seniors, I have always been asked the same question: Do you think it is right that Canada's former Prime Minister, who receives something like $100,000 in pension because he was Prime Minister, and I respect that, it's none of my business, but who earns enough—

An Hon. Member: He's entitled to it!

M. Vincent: —to live, do you think it is right that he should also receive old age security and family allowances benefits— He gets both of them. He is over 65 years of age, and has children under 18. Do you know what most people answered? No, it is not right! No, a person who is well-off, who earns over $77,000 a year in net income, should not be entitled to old age security and family allowances benefits.

Mr. Speaker, we should realize that the expressions "Old Age Security Pensions" and "Family Allowances" really mean that they are for the needy. I suggest that if I get a net income of $77,000 a year, I can do without an additional payment of $500 or $600 a month. This is something Canadian men and women understand. This is something Quebec men and women understand. Yet, the Opposition just cannot understand it, which is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker. It is unfortunate because a while ago, they tried to frighten people— The Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) was scaring everybody by saying: That is only a start he said, and it will get even worse in the future! Quite the contrary, Mr. Speaker!

I mentioned before that the Canadian Government will have to come up with $39 billion just in interests. We must find a way to stop this drain.

• (1340)

As the Liberal Party of Canada financial critic was saying, we must cut the deficit to prevent the national debt from increasing further; this way, we would have the necessary resources to set up new programs for Canadians. But if we fail to seize the bull by the horns this year and the years after, if we do not take major steps to reduce the annual deficit—the plan is to reduce it to $15 billion by 1993-1994—to reduce our debt, what the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) was saying is likely to happen. It is true that the Government would have no money for anybody or anything. There would be no more social programs. The Government would be satisfied with collecting the Canadian taxpayers' money and issuing cheques to pay the interests on the debts incurred by this Government. That's what would happen, Mr. Speaker. With 35 cents out of every dollar to pay interests, there is not a single family or corporation which could survive such a system.

Hence the importance of this Budget and at every level. Mr. Speaker, you must have noted in the Budget I am sure that there is a special tax on corporations. We are going to collect from major corporations a minimum of $1 billion in revenues every year. So, they should stop telling me that the Government is not asking everybody to do their share. The larger corporations are taxed. Banking institutions and financial services are taxed too, so that everybody is doing its share. The provinces will have to face a slower increase in their payments from the Federal Government; individuals will have an additional tax to pay. Corporations have one too. Everybody has to do his share, because this is the major problem of our country. When the situation is such that the International Monetary Fund tells us our debt and our deficit could lead to major trouble, I think, Mr. Speaker, we have hit the red light. Way back when we got the green light, sometime later it turned yellow but now we are looking at the red light.

True, once again, because of this Budget and those measures, a senior 65 and older whose net income is over $70,000, I repeat over $70,000, will have to give back the excess old age pension he received. But suppose that, for some reason, the income of that same person is down to $15,000 the following year. He will have received cheques the whole time and at the end of the second year he will keep the full amount of the old age pension because his income will be under $50,000.

The Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie said also that it was not indexed. Mr. Speaker, since 1984, there have been three or four increases in the federal sales tax credit and the child tax credit, and the old age pensions are upped every three months. You can see therefore there is no risk whatsoever that the income seniors are entitled to will be cancelled, lowered, whatever expression you prefer. There is absolutely no danger of that.

I think that for once—I have never seen it in four years—the Opposition should leave all partisanship aside and join forces against a problem that is not that of the riding of Trois-Rivières or Duvernay, but a national problem they created. They should work in co-operation with the Progressive Conservative Government to have this Budget adopted as soon as possible so that in the future we will be able to offer Canadian men and women the social programs they want and others they also long for.

Other programs could be implemented if we did not have to spend 35 cents of every dollar in 1989-90 to pay the interest. And we have not even begun to pay back the debt! The debt now amounts to $320 billion and increases by $3 million an hour. We have not even started thinking about reimbursing that debt.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the Opposition should make an effort. Let's put partisanship aside and take stock of the situation. The Opposition should support our efforts. There is nothing wrong with an opposition party admitting that the Government has come up with a good policy. They won't die if they concede that a policy is good. In four years, I have never heard a member of the Opposition admit that we had done something right. Not once in four years! In 1988, the Canadian people recognized that we had done something right. And I think that it should teach the Opposition a positive lesson. When bills are valid and important to the country, they should admit that the Progressive Conservative Party is right in this case. Their credibility would automatically be reinforced. However, as things now stand, they always say no to everything. It is impossible to always say no. Say what you want, it's impossible!

Mr. Speaker, I realize that my time is almost up and I would like to conclude by pointing out that the family allowance eligibility threshold of $50,000 continues to apply and that the level at which one ceases to be eligible for family allowances varies according to the number of incomes and children. I hope these explanations will give some good ideas to members of the Opposition.

Mr. Bellemare: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to part of the presentation by the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent). I also heard him denigrate my colleague from Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), this good man who protects people in difficulty, who protects the poor, who protects the sick, who protects those in need! The Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie wants to protect people who need to go to hospital, elderly people who need to be able to have a pleasant and decent life. I heard the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières talk about the debt and suggest to the Opposition that we should not take sides, that we should support them and applaud them for what they have done over four years—

Mr. Speaker, I have only been here since last November 21, and today you must say, as in a boxing match, you do not talk about previous fights; the one that counts is now. We are talking about the next four years, the next four years of the Conservative Party, not about past years. Because I will remind the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières, if he wants to talk about the last four years, that the debt in 1984 was perhaps around $120 billion. What was the debt in 1988, Hon. Member? And from whom did you inherit it?

There was a debt in 1984, but in 1988, what was it and where did you get the debt incurred between 1984 and 1988?

• (1350)

Now, the issue, Mr. Speaker, is that they want to pay off the debt on the backs of those who receive benefits or payments, senior citizens. The money you will save by taxing those who allegedly earn over $50,000 a year, instead of taxing those who make a lot of money, the rich—in short, why do you, the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières, attack one of the social programs? And your target in attacking a social program is those people who earn more than a certain amount, but you know that over the years, the cost of living rises and some day, those who are considered poor today with an income of $20,000 or $23,000 will in a few years be making $50,000.

They may be the new poor then, when people will perhaps be earning $200,000 or $300,000 a year.

So I say to the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières: What will you do with the money you save on social benefits that you tax back and with the money that you take from the provinces?

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that I did not denigrate my colleague from Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). I only said I did not agree with him, and I still do not agree with him. As to saying he is a saint man, we can argue about that some other time!

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite said we should look at today's problems, not yesterday's.

How pleased I am to hear that, Mr. Speaker, that is what I said for twenty minutes. Our problem right now is the $320 billion national debt. I have been saying that for twenty minutes.

My colleague opposite just caught on. Am I ever glad! That is the problem right now, the problem we describe as a $320 billion national debt, 35 cents of every dollar to be paid in interests.

Mr. Speaker, that is the problem. That much he understands, but the rest of it is still a mystery to him, so I will go over it again.

I earn an income other than the OAS pension, I am 66 years old, my net annual income amounts to $55,000. So I say, and the people of Québec whom I met and Canadians generally say: Sure enough, we can tax back some of his OAS benefits and he will still be doing all right.

Mr. Speaker, I did say some of his pension benefits, because between $55,000 and $77,000 the amount I get will gradually decrease.

What happens when my net annual income exceeds $77,000 is that I get my pension cheque every month, but at the end of the year I simply pay back to the federal Government an amount equivalent to the value of those twelve cheques. A net income of more than $77,000 a year! I have always said and I repeat that we are speaking of "net income", Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: We need that money.

Mr. Vincent: We need it because if we go on as the Opposition proposes, we soon will not even have enough money to help those who make only $5,000 a year. That is the thrust of the system. We have to take the money where it is and—

An Hon. Member: From the rich.

Mr. Vincent: —from the rich, I hope, and not from the poor! To take the money and give it to those 65 years old who do not have an income of $50,000!

That is the purpose of the Budget and that is what has to be done today, as my Opposition friend said, because of the debt they left us, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has made a number of passionate statements which suggest that the whole direction of the Budget has been to reduce the deficit and the debt. We all know that this particular Budget increased the deficit a little from what it was last year. It increases the national debt by $30 billion.

We have been been told by Statistics Canada that a 1 per cent reduction in the interest rate would reduce the deficit by $1.5 billion. A 1 per cent reduction in unemployment, that is, a 1 per cent increase in the number of people who work, would bring $2.2 billion into the coffers. Yet the Budget and the policy of the Government on interest rates and on cut-backs will increase interest rates and unemployment. The Government admits that the Budget will increase the unemployment rate.

Why has the Government not taken advantage of those natural ways of reducing the deficit, and consequently the national debt, rather than leaving interest rates high and increasing the unemployment rate? In that manner, there could be more dollars paid toward the deficit and the national debt.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, let me thank my colleague for his question, since we have in fact dealt with thas aspect today. That is a very important point. The Canadian people wants to know.

We have to look at what happened in 1981-82 when there was a recession. The Liberal Government of the day said: Let inflation go up and let's not touch to the interest rates for inflation will inevitably go down again.

Mr. Speaker, we know what happened. Inflation reached 12 and 13 per cent and since it was too high they had no other choice than to raise interest rates to 22 and 23 per cent in an attempt to control it.

Our government accepted that responsibility. We told ourselves it was time to control inflation, and that increasing the interest rate was the way to do it. We knew that by doing so we would be hurting Canadians, but also the federal government! That goes without saying. But we acted in the best interests of our nation. It was the best solution: I think all Canadians would rather see the interest rate at 14 per cent instead of 22 per cent, as we have seen it before. When the interest rate reached 22 per cent, I was in business, Mr. Speaker, and I can tell you I worked very long days!

So, you have here the position of the government, the economic course of action we want to follow.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the deficit will grow again this year, that's right. It will grow because the debt service costs, that is the amount of interests we have to pay, has increased by $6 billion, due to the fact that we have decided to control inflation by increasing interest rates.

[English]

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): Mr. Speaker, it is with great sorrow that I must rise today to defend the principle of universality, a principle that requires no defence to those in pursuit of a just society. It is a principle which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself has so often referred to as a sacred trust. I say with sorrow because the Government, in order to fulfil its obligations under the Free Trade Agreement, is creating Canadian social policy in the American image. The Government is clearly attempting to graft the American version of social Darwinism on Canadian social policy.

• (1400)

The Liberal Party touched a nerve in the last election when it warned Canadians that the Tory free trade agenda was more than just a economic contract. It involved the destruction of the cherished social service safety net. At that time the Prime Minister assured Canadians that universality was not on the trade agenda and that no Canadian leader in his right mind would consider touching the sacred trust.

Well, the Prime Minister misled the Canadian people. The principle of universality has been gutted. The Government has undermined the very backbone of Canadian social policy.

The principle of universality lies at the heart of a compassionate state. It is the birthright of every Canadian to be provided with not just the basic needs of survival but with the foundation of a meaningful and dignified life. This is why Canada offers more than the catch as catch can programs of the United States, and this is why we fought so hard against the Government's plan to integrate the social programs of Canada with the United States.

But this is precisely what the Government has initiated. It has tried to make the job of the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) that much easier on the eve of the subsidy negotiations with the United States. Universality in Canada is not as the Government seems to feel, an income supplement to the rich. It is a sacred contract between the legislators in this House and all the Canadian people. We have adopted universality as a national philosophy to ensure that all Canadians have equal access to a high standard of education and health care. It guarantees that provincial Governments, through federal transfer payments, undertake to provide a basic standard of living that encompasses a decent standard of food and shelter to those who are unable to provide adequately for themselves.

It is, in essence, a guarantee of equality of opportunity. It ensures all Canadians an equal playing field.

Let me quote from a speech that the Prime Minister himself made last October 15. At that time he said a special word should be said to senior citizens:

> In the future Canada will be doing more not less for all of you. As long as I am Prime Minister of Canada, social benefits, especially those for the elderly, will be improved not diminished by our Government, which is committed to social justice and fairness to Canadians.

I should point out that this speech was made in Summerside, Prince Edward Island. Perhaps we should ask the senior citizens of Summerside what they now think of their Prime Minister.

That this Government has seized this moment to end the principle of universality when we are clearly on the cusp of an economic downturn indicates just how hollow the Government's promises really are.

The Government's action also raises a larger issue. If universality is no longer considered a sacred trust by the Government, what is next on the Tory agenda? Is it health care?

Policies can be set and replaced, but once traditional values and principles are abandoned they are very difficult to reclaim. This Budget proposes that Canadians repay old age security and family allowances at a rate of 15 per cent of the individual net income exceeding $50,000. The level of benefit received by families and individuals will no longer be equal but will be dependent upon the established threshold. These measures clearly violate the long-standing tax policy known as horizontal equity. This concept proclaims that individuals are treated equally under the tax system and that individuals at the same level of income should be taxed at the same rate. However, this Budget treats old age security income as extraordinary income. It is treated differently from other forms of income.

To take an extreme example, a senior citizen who earns $75,000 will pay more in taxes than a 64-year old who earns the same income. This is because under the proposed system, old age security income is subject to a higher tax rate. The senior will have part of his income taxed back at 100 per cent while the 64-year old will still only be subject to the top rate of 29 per cent before surtaxes. How is that for fairness?

I would like to read a brief passage from an article by Marjorie Nichols in the Ottawa Citizen dated April 29, entitled "Wilson's fiscal axe cuts heart of social programs". She writes:

> It is sophistry to argue that programs that eliminate all benefits to some are still universal. It is as silly as the Prime Minister's foolish attempt Friday morning to argue that ending universality will help the poor. It won't. The poor don't get any more. The Government just pays less, that's all.

She concluded with the statement:

> Don't trust a Tory to tell the truth about a social program.

Well, bravo Marjorie. That is precisely what Canadians are thinking and saying.

Family allowances are not a gift. They are needed to cover the extra cost of living in raising children. With the Minister of Finance's new regressive sales tax, this benefit will be needed more than ever.

The family allowance cheque is of particular significance to women. Because of the changing social structure in Canada today, full-time homemakers and mothers receive no recognition. They are often treated as non-productive, second-class citizens. Probably the only real source of recognition they get for the work they do is their family allowance cheque. It is probably the only cheque they will receive in their own name. I repeat, this universal right is not a gift, it is an integral part of the Canadian social identity.

Even in strict financial terms, it is difficult to rationalize the Tories' attack on the family allowance system. The family allowance program is one of Canada's cheapest in terms of over-all expenditures. In fact, expenditures have decreased in the past few years due to changing demographics and due to the previous tax measures. The cost of this program will be $2.6 billion this year as opposed to $2.9 billion in 1984-85.

Family allowances are already considered taxable benefits. Already approximately 30 per cent of family allowance benefits are returned in taxation revenues, so this additional shot at middle-class families is clearly outrageous. Canadians have always accepted the concept of equal access to equal benefits at all income levels as part of the Canadian social ideal.

• (1410)

Successive Liberal Governments have tied this fundamental principle of universality to a progressive tax system. It was this system which ensured a fair distribution of social benefits. The Tory view of equitable distribution is clearly quite different. The Government has launched an all-out assault on the family allowance and Old Age Security.

For the first time, the Government has directly linked a tax back rate of a social program to the benefit received. This linkage alone is enough to expose this Government's notion of universality as a sham. However, when coupled with other regressive tax measures put in place by the Government, it is a disgrace. This is an extremely dangerous precedent. Canadians are concerned about where these measures will take us.

Today, the Tories have set the claw-back threshold at $50,000. However, this Budget has not pleased the Government's corporate backers. They are disappointed that the Government has failed to reduce the deficit. They cry for more. Perhaps the Tories will feel next year that once the principle of universality has been tapped there will still be water in the well and they will set the threshold at $40,000.

Where does it stop? The urge to cut back even further will become irresistible. Where will it end? This Government has totally lost its credibility.

I would like to conclude by quoting from a speech made by the Tory Whip, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), who said while debating a similar related issue in this House in 1983: "This particular piece of legislation is an attack on the principle of universality and we are voting against it. Every speech we have made is in accordance with that principle".

This is a time for mourning, because we have not heard from one Tory in this past week who has had the courage to speak out on the principle which obviously appears to have once been one of the mainstays of Tory philosophy.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, since World War II, Canadians have given themselves a universal system of social programs such as family allowances, old age security pensions and medicare. Universality means that all Canadians have access to the same quality of services, regardless of their income.

However, universality is attacked for the first time in the last Budget presented by Mr. Wilson. When the principle of universality is no longer respected, the government has the discretionary power to decide who is going to have access to social services and who is not. This is a very dangerous precedent. The government will decide who is going to receive the money that is paid by Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, this strange and injustifiable notion of social justice that the Conservatives have is not consistent with that of most Canadians.

[English]

When this Government tried to deindex seniors' pensions, thousands of seniors rose up in protest. Now, with the introduction of the new agenda all Canadians will rise up in anger. We will not be betrayed again. The true Canadian social vision will prevail.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I listened with care to the Hon. Member's comments. I listened with mounting concern and mounting disturbance over the impression which she has been trying to convey to Canadians. I speak as one who some four and one-half years ago stood up in the House to question the Government with respect to its stand on the principle of universality. I speak as one who spoke out publicly to question the Government on its move to partially deindex old age pensions. I speak as one who felt the concerns of the Whip of my own Party, and the concerns of others in my own Party, when I spoke out on those issues.

However, I spoke out on those issues because I have been firmly committed to the principle of universality. I have made that statement quite clearly and quite strongly with my constituents and with the Canadian people.

This particular proposal that is before the House clearly observes the principles of universality. There is no question about that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Redway: The Hon. Members on the other side can hiss, boo and shout and try to obscure the facts. However, they cannot obscure the real facts. Every person 65 years of age or over who applies for the old age pension has in the past received an old age pension cheque and will continue to receive an old age pension cheque.

As the Hon. Member indicated, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that old age pension benefits will continue to increase. In fact, those old age pensions continue to be fully indexed and continue to increase each year with the cost of living according to full indexation. What has happened is that as part of a progressive tax system there is now being applied a tax to people with higher incomes rather than lower incomes. That is part of a progressive tax system. That is a system which I would assume the Hon. Member and the members of the Liberal Party should be in favour of. I have heard them in the past speak out many times on the question of the unfairness of the tax system and the fact that the rich should be taxed and the poor should be taxed at lower levels. That is exactly what this proposal is doing. The tax is at a higher level for people with higher incomes than it is for those with lower incomes.

I would ask the Hon. Member this: Is she and is her Party in favour of a progressive tax system which taxes people with higher incomes more than those with lower incomes?

Ms. Guarnieri: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his commentary. I appreciate his commitment to the principle of universality. You will forgive my scepticism, Mr. Speaker, since we have heard it before from our colleagues from the other side of the House.

If you will recall, Mr. Speaker, I asked a question on universality to which the Minister of National Health and Welfare replied. I distinctly remember his answer. It was quite concise. He did say he was committed to the principle of universality. As I pointed out subsequently, there is a difference between principle and application.

In answer to the Hon. Member's question, I think it is quite obvious that the Tories cannot be trusted to pursue deficit reduction in a manner that is fair and equitable to all Canadians. The Budget discriminates against many sectors of Canadian society. Families with children are penalized in this Budget. One-parent families are penalized. Seniors are penalized. Women are most definitely penalized.

I trust that Hon. Members from the other side of this House will search their souls and rectify the inequities that currently exist in the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I guess I am provoked by this latest exchange to make a comment. The comment is this: I have heard a lot of nonsense from the Conservative Party over the years, and not only from the Minister of Housing (Mr. Redway). He has usually been able to put points of view across that have reflected some understanding of reality and some sense of fairness. But he would have us believe that it is fair for a person who is aged 35 and making $100,000 a year should be paying a lower tax rate—

• (1420)

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I would love to have the opportunity to debate the Hon. Member. He appears to want to debate me now, but this is an opportunity for questions and comments. If you will allow me equal time to respond to the Hon. Member after his comment directed at me rather than the Speaker, I would be pleased to do so, sir.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments, of course, as the Member knows, is reserved for comments on the speech made by the Hon. Member for Mississauga East (Ms. Guarnieri).

Mr. Langdon: In that case, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it quite clear that I thought the Member was absolutely correct, contrary to some of the silly suggestions from across the way, in pointing out that when you have a system of universality, what you succeed in doing is creating a system that in tax terms is fair. At the present stage, of course, pensions are taxable and they are taxable at the rate at which any other piece of income is taxable. As the Member suggested, what this will do is create a situation where we take this special little piece of income, which is the return to senior citizens for the years of work they have put into this country, and we will tax it at a higher rate; in fact, ultimately at a confiscatory rate.

Mr. Kilgour: Very interesting.

Mr. Langdon: We are going to take everything away from these senior citizens. Why is it that those people should be chosen? That is the question I guess I would ask the Member who has spoken. It seems to me that this reflects the clear commitment against pensions right from the beginning of the Conservative Party and I would ask the Member if she would see things in those terms, too.

Ms. Guarnieri: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his insightful comments.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Guarnieri: I spoke from the heart. I never studied to be a court jester, so you will have to forgive me if I am not as entertaining as the Hon. Member across from me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Guarnieri: I think that is a very insightful question that the Hon. Member put to me. In return I would like to put it to the individuals where I think the question belongs, that is, to the Members opposite us.

Why have they penalized the weak, the vulnerable elements of our society?

Mr. Beatty: The weak rich. The upper income weak.

Ms. Guarnieri: We have heard from the Tories this theory of Robin Hood. Well, I maintain that they are the Sheriffs of Nottingham, not the Robin Hoods of this world.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it is nice to know that a new Member of the Chamber has taken the trouble to read a speech of mine from 1983.

I had the honour as a new Member in this House in 1979 to speak second on the Budget. I took great pride in rising in this House to inform the Members that in my view the 1979 Crosbie Budget—and I had the honour to speak after the then Hon. Minister of Finance—was the fairest Budget to poor people that had been presented to this House in the 1970s, and I watched the Members of the New Democratic Party and the Members of the Liberal Party in the House at that time stand up, vote against the Budget, defeat the Government and cause an election to take place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: One year later the organization that looks after the interests of those in poverty in Canada put out a public document that said the Crosbie Budget was the fairest budget to poor people that had been presented to this Parliament in the decade of the 1970s. Yet the Liberals and NDP voted against it and took it away from the poor people of this nation. Now I stand in this House and I say the millionaires of this country do not need the family allowance, they do not need the OAS, which is non-contributory pension, they will be glad to donate those back to the public treasury so the poor people of this nation can benefit from that money. I am proud to stand here and vote for it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Guarnieri: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Member turned a deaf ear to my pleas of fairness. But I notice that the Member did use the term fairness quite liberally.

I would like to ask the Member a question, if I may beg the indulgence of this House, as to where the fairness is for a family with two children in which both parents work and both earn $40,000 in income. They will not be forced to repay any of the family allowance payments which they receive since neither parent has a net income of $50,000. In contrast, a family that earns $60,000 net income will be forced to repay part or all of the family allowance it receives. I would love to hear the answer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) a short time to answer?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Thank you Mr. Speaker for the opportunity to speak today about a subject that is fundamental to defining who we are as Canadians and how we are different from other countries—the social security system in Canada. Canadians can rightly be proud of the network of social programs in this country. They justifiably point to the impressive safety net that protects the weakest in our society. Yet the diverse system of programs is still flexible enough to meet the needs of all Canadians.

We place great emphasis on our health and social services and have done so for many years. Many Canadians are too young to remember the days when Canada did not have a universal medicare program. We are proud of the fact that each and every Canadian has the right to medical service.

We also have an extensive network of income security programs. We provide Old Age Security, Guaranteed Income Supplements and Canada Pension Plan benefits to the elderly. We support families with children through Family Allowances and income tax provisions for Child Care. The unemployed benefit from a generous Unemployment Insurance program.

This Government continues to be fully committed to securing this network of social programs now and in the future. We have the courage to take the steps necessary to ensure that future generations of Canadians can also benefit from an extensive system of social support as we benefit from it today.

What treatens this system of social support is our enormous national debt estimated to be over $320 billion in 1988-89. As a result of this debt, over 35 cents on every dollar of revenue collected by the federal government will go to paying interest on that debt in 1989-90.

We will spend $39 billion on interest payments. That is the single largest component of federal Government expenditures, larger than expenditures on all social programs.

It is imperative that we face the challenge of the debt problem today in order to preserve the basis for our system of social programs in the future.

• (1430)

To turn away from this problem is to continue to borrow from the future and to seriously endanger the economic and social future of our children.

Only 20 years ago, Canada had no deficit. Our entire national debt, accumulated over the first century of Confederation, was only $18 billion. How then did Canada manage to acquire this enormous debt? Like any family or individual, it happened when Canada started living beyond its means.

At first it started small. Early government deficits were not seen by some as much of a problem. But the deficits began to grow each year. By the early 1980's the deficit soared out of control so that by the time this government had come into office, the $18 billion debt accumulated over the first century of Confederation had balloned to nearly $200 billion. At the same time the annual deficit was $38 billion.

The country had been placed on a treadmill. The enormous national debt began feeding on itself because of the sheer size of the interest that had to be paid every year.

This government did not stand idly by in the face of this enormous fiscal problem. From 1984 to 1989 this government introduced several important measures to bring government expenditures under control and to increase the yield from federal revenues.

The spending record of the last years demonstrates conclusively the success of our expenditure management strategy. From 1984–85 to 1988–89, total budgetary expenditures increased at an annual average rate of 5 per cent. In contrast, in the previous four years, expenditures rose an average of 15 per cent.

Nearly 45 per cent of the increased expenditure was due to higher public debt charges. The treadmill of debt we inherited is illustrated by the fact that by 1988–89, public debt charges were the single largest component of government expenditure.

This government has faced up to the debt problem over the last four years. To improve costs and improve government efficiency, we introduced measures to reduce operating costs. To remove inefficiencies, payments to Crown corporations and various subsidies were reduced. At the same time however, measures were taken to help those most in need and to help individuals adapt to changing economic and social circumstances.

Even so, the combination of expenditure management and continued economic growth were not sufficient to assure continual reductions in the annual deficit. Revenue–increasing actions were also required.

The yield from the tax system has been declining since the late 1970's and has contributed to the increases in the deficit experienced to 1984–85, this was due to actions instituted in the mid 1970's as well as the effect of the recession of 1981–82.

However, since 1984, even before the 1989 budget, this government has introduced tax measures that have resulted in budgetary revenues increasing from 15.9 per cent to 17.4 per cent of GDP from 1984–85 to 1988–89.

The 1989 budget takes this effort further, necessarily. It is impotant to understand all the benefits that come from debt control.

First, debt control reduces the burden imposed on the future of our children. From 1981–82 to the time this government took office, the public debt per household rose from $12,300 to $23,100, an increase of almost 90 per cent. Since that time the growth of public debt per household has slowed despite the treadmill of high interest payments. Nonetheless public debt per houshold still stands at $34,200.

Second, debt control provides fiscal flexibility. The high cost of servicing the debt, projected to reach over $39 billion in 1989–90 or 35 per cent of all budgetary revenues, reduces the government's ability to respond to changes in the economy and to provide public programs. Furthermore, in order to achieve ongoing reductions in the deficit, combinations of program expenditure reductions and revenue increases are required just to offset increases in interest payments on the debt.

Third, debt control contributes to a healthy and prosperous economy which is the foundation for the maintenance of our system of social programs. Sustained economic growth requires low and stable interest rates, low inflation rates and a high degree of investor confidence. Debt control reduces demand and increases savings. Along with changes in the structure and functioning of the Canadian economy in areas such as trade with the U.S., deregulation of energy and transportation, privatization of Crown corporations, the replacement of the Foreign Investment Review Agency with Investment Canada, and personal and corporate tax reform, debt control has been a significant factor in the strong economic record of achievement since 1984.

Fourth, debt control will raise the living standards for our children. It promotes high rates of investment by providing an economic environment conducive to growth and by reducing the shares of national savings absorbed by government to finance consumption. Ultimately this leads to higher productivity, more and better jobs, higher incomes and results in an enhanced ability to finance needed social programs.

Therefore this government has taken action in this budget to meet the threat posed by the growing public debt. We have had difficult choices to make but we have proposed a package of measures that reduce spending and increase taxes while protecting those Canadians most in need.

Furthermore, this government remains committed to a caring and compassionate society.

Our policies have helped the needy and the disadvantaged—and will continue to help these people in the coming years, regardless of what the oppositon has being alleging. And this Budget does not jeopardize the social safety net—in fact, the Budget measures preserve the social safety net by establishing the path for a sound financial basis for social programs in the future.

Our commitment is reflected in our success in reducing the incidence of poverty and hardship among Canadians. Since this government has come into power in 1984, well over 600,000 fewer people are living under the poverty line and the incidence of poverty has fallen from 17.3 per cent to 14.1 per cent.

These advancements are in large part a direct response to the Government's performance on both the economic and social fronts.

In this regard, our economic policies have improved income security by creating more jobs across Canada—in fact, over 1.3 million jobs were created—and "the best social policy is a job". They have also held inflation in check.

We have already brought the Canadian economy back to a solid footing after the recession of the early 1980's. We are now consolidating that economic base in order to do even better.

Through tax reform, we improved the simplicity, fairness and equity of the income tax system by converting personal exemptions to credits and by lowering and reducing the number of income tax rates. 850,000 low-income Canadians were taken off the tax rolls as the result of this policy change.

The Government remains firmly committed to maintaining social programs while recognizing the need to direct benefits to those most in need. One only has to look at the important improvements made in recent years in respect of benefits available to families to see that this Government strongly believes in assisting families in need.

Family allowances are currently received by over three and one-half million families on behalf of six and one-half million children. Gross federal payments in 1988-89 for this benefit totalled $2.6 billion.

The Child Tax Credit program directs funds to lower-income parents.

• (1440)

Since 1984, the maximum value of the basic credit has increased by more than 50 per cent; that is, it has increased from $367 to $559 per child. In addition, to ensure that benefits are received by parents on a timely basis, the credit is now prepaid in November of each year. Approximately 800,000 Canadians received the prepayment last November.

For families with preschool-aged children, effective for the 1988 tax year, a supplement has been introduced to the basic child tax credit equal to $100 per child. The supplement was also prepaid along with the basic credit in November. For the 1989 and subsequent tax years, the value of the supplement will increase to $200.

The issue of family violence is also a concern for this government—because it has long-lasting effects not only on individuals and families, but on society as a whole. Clearly, we all have an interest in resolving this problem. In 1988, the Federal Government announced a $40 million commitment to help address the problem of family violence. The cornerstone of this initiative is the establishment of 500 new short-term shelter units through CMHC for crisis assistance. The first emergency shelter funded through this initiative was opened in Swift Current, Saskatchewan.

Given the increasing Labour force participation rates of women and the changing structure of families, there is no doubt that child care is an important matter which the government must actively support, and we do provide substantial support—in the order of over $600 million per annum.

Included in this, of course, is the $200 million federal contribution to provincial/territorial governments in respect of their expenditures for child care services, under the Canada Assistance Plan.

Also included are the tax revenues foregone in respect of the Child Care Expense Deduction. Effective for the 1988 tax year, this deduction was increased in order to better reflect the actual costs of care faced by parents using receipted child care. For parents with preschool-aged children, the maximum deduction is now $4,000 per child, up from $2,000.

There is a $100 million child care initiatives fund which is intended to support innovative approaches to child care. To date, the fund has supported a wide range of projects including a national child care survey by the National Day Care Research Network, a national conference sponsored by the Canadian Child Day Care Federation (which was held in early April in Winnipeg), and an evaluation of family day home care in Ontario.

The Government is committed to a comprehensive strategy for responding to the Labour Force Challenges of the 1990's. To ensure that the Canadian Labour Force of the 1990's will be highly skilled and capable of adapting to an evolving work environment, a new Labour Force Development Strategy was developed and announced in April.

Included in the strategy is the introduction of a multi-tiered system of maternity, parental and sickness benefits. The new regime will allow claimants to receive each type of benefit up to its maximum, as long as the cumulative duration of special benefits does not exceed 30 weeks.

Canadians can take considerable comfort and pride in the health and social security system that has been developed and fostered in this country. The most important thing that can be done to maintain and enhance this system is ensure a healthy and prosperous economy. The Government must act in a fiscally responsible manner now, in order to ensure a generous future for the generations to come.

To sum up Mr. Speaker, everyone in this House has a responsibility to pass on to Canadian children a system of health and social programs that will meet their needs and provide the kind of protection Canadians expect and demand.

Unless it is recognized that such a system cannot happen without a commitment to fiscal responsibility, then future generations will be faced with a legacy weaker than the one we inherited.
