SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when this House did attend Her Excellency the Governor General in the Senate Chamber, Her Excellency was pleased to make a speech to both Houses of Parliament. To prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy, which is as follows:

> Ladies and Gentlemen, Honourable Members of the Senate,
> Ladies and Gentlemen, Members of the House of Commons:
> It is indeed a pleasure to greet you as you resume your duties.
> Today, at the outset of this Second Session of Canada's Thirty-fourth Parliament, my government will put forward the objectives and purposes which it will pursue during its second mandate.

My government believes these objectives to be fundamental:

First, to build a strong economy, encouraged by incentive and opportunity, an economy fully competitive among the world's trading nations and one in which all Canadians may share its challenges, risks and rewards;

Second, to preserve Canada's environment, to actively encourage increased public interest and involvement, and to give firm leadership and support to international efforts to overcome the environmental threat to our planet;

Third, to maintain a caring, compassionate society which will be able, through continuing economic prosperity, to meet its obligations and responsibilities to those who are less fortunate and in greatest need; and

Fourth, to foster a confident sense of Canada's cultural and national uniqueness in which Canadians may have a greater sense of their common values and common citizenship.

Finally, as my government renews its commitment to national unity, it believes the ratification of the Meech Lake Accord is indispensable to the further evolution of the Canadian constitution.

With Quebec at the table as a willing participant, future constitutional development—including the important issues of Senate reform, of aboriginal and linguistic rights, of roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries, and of ways to strengthen the Charter of Rights and Freedoms—will become possible and will be a priority of the government.

A Strong Economy

Since 1984, federal spending on programs has grown less rapidly than inflation and at less than one-third the average rate of the previous four years. In the last four years, the annual government deficit has declined from over eight percent to less than five percent of gross domestic product. This represents a decline, in absolute terms, of close to ten billion dollars. Over the same period of time, Canadians have enjoyed extraordinarily strong income growth and job creation. Indeed, Canada's economic performance has outpaced virtually all of the world's major industrialized nations.

Today our challenge is to maintain that expansion in a world economic environment that is increasingly subject to inflationary pressures. To meet this challenge and to enjoy the benefits of continued growth and prosperity will require the utmost resolve of the government and the Canadian people.

My government will soon introduce a budget reflecting that resolve.

My ministers believe that continued progress in reducing the deficit is a vital necessity if Canada's economic well-being is to be secured. The legacy of past deficits is a massive debt. Annual interest payments on that debt now consume 31 cents of every dollar of government revenue. These payments are putting pressure on the Government's ability to meet other priorities. In fact, Canada is now borrowing money solely to pay the interest on previous borrowings. In order to reverse this trend, expenditures must be reduced and revenues must cover the cost of government programs.

My government's budget will have as its purpose the continuation of the nation's prosperity.

The strength of the Canadian economy can be ensured only if the government's means and its spending are in better balance. In turn, an expanding economy is the only way to maintain the social programs which Canadians cherish. Only by positive measures designed to reduce the burden of the debt can Canadians avoid a repetition of the excessive unemployment and inflation rates of the early 1980s.

My government is convinced that the Canadian people will endorse our efforts to control federal spending in order to maintain economic stability and continued growth.

Tax reform is also critical to sustain the prosperity that is so vitally necessary to ensure the high standards of services Canadians expect from their government. The current federal sales tax is inefficient and inequitable. It is costing Canadians jobs.

It will be replaced with a fairer sales tax that will ensure the Canadian economy is fully competitive and that will maintain a stable source of revenues to finance essential programs. Extensive consultations have been undertaken by my government both with the provinces and the private sector. These consultations will help ensure that sales tax reform is implemented in a fair and effective way.

Preparing Canada's Future

Canadians have made it evident that they are confident of their abilities to compete successfully in the international economy of a widening world.

As a mature and confident people, they know Canada's economy cannot prosper behind tariff walls and in restricted markets. They prefer to support the cause of liberalized trade throughout the world. My government is continuing the process of implementing the Free Trade Agreement with Canada's principal trading partner, the United States. Multilateral trade negotiations through the Uruguay round of GATT are also a high priority. As well, the federal government will continue to work with provincial governments in reducing interprovincial trade barriers which create distortions and inequities in Canada's economic development.

Outward-looking trade policies will be necessary for Canada if it is to be competitive in the world. Many industrialized countries—notably in Western Europe—are forming larger trading alliances so that their industries may benefit from access to larger markets. Business firms are creating world-scale plants as a means of realizing the opportunities which flow from liberalized trade.

With the development of cost-efficient manufacturing in the newly industrialized economies of Asia—and more competitive resource development in the Third World—major new factors are emerging in the international market place. No nation can remain indifferent to, or aloof from, these economic realities.

Canadians in every occupation want to ensure a secure future for themselves and their families in the face of these rapidly emerging economic forces. While they recognize the challenge which confronts them, Canadians also have a confident view of the opportunities which await them.

My government is providing programs to assist small and medium-sized business to develop export opportunities that are emerging as a result of the Free Trade Agreement. The federal government is also placing greater emphasis on the Asia/Pacific region as well as on Europe.

My government's purpose is to ensure that the benefits of liberalized trade and economic expansion are shared fairly by all Canadians.

The National Advisory Board on Science and Technology, composed of members from the scientific and technical communities from all parts of the country, has established a continuing dialogue between Canada's scientific leadership and the federal government. The Board has made a number of important policy recommendations. These include a network of centres of excellence and programs for the development of strategic technologies such as biotechnology, advanced industrial materials, and information technology. These recommendations are now being acted upon, and my government will provide direction and leadership in this vital area of Canada's national life.

The new federal approach to regional development is working. Decentralized decision making, through the regional agencies in Western Canada, Northern Ontario, and Atlantic Canada, has been instrumental in stimulating both entrepreneurial endeavor and business investment. Funding for regional development in Quebec and for these agencies will be continued, and government procurement policies will become increasingly responsive to regional considerations.

My government is concerned that our native peoples participate fully in Canada's economic development prospects and, to this end, will be extending its programs to assist native economic development.

The government will continue other economic initiatives of its first mandate, including:

- further privatization of those Crown corporations which no longer serve a public policy role; and

- passage of business framework legislation which will contribute to the smooth functioning of a modern economy, including the reform of laws dealing with bankruptcy and the regulation of financial institutions.

These initiatives will serve to build a modern, competitive, market-oriented economy.

Jobs for Canadians

Greater competition in our largest trading markets, a diminishing reliance on traditional industries, the rapid growth of the service sector and more sophisticated technology—all these indicate the need for a comprehensive human resource strategy for the 1990s.

If Canada is to meet these new standards and compete in this changing world situation, it must rely upon the skills and resourcefulness of the Canadian people. It must make full participants of disabled persons and visible minorities. It is imperative that literacy initiatives, education, training and retraining for Canada's work force, especially our youth, reflect the requirements of a modern economy.

Expanded labour-force programs to encourage continual upgrading of skills will be an important focus of my government's response to the report of the Advisory Council on Adjustment. Extensive discussions will be initiated with labour, industry, the provinces and other interested parties in order to encourage their participation in this vital process.

My government will propose amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Program in order to improve the Program's effectiveness and its fairness. These changes will direct more resources toward active training which, together with improved identification of marketable job skills, will promote greater opportunities and a more productive and rewarding experience in the work force.

At the same time, this program will continue to recognize the special circumstances in regions with historically high levels of unemployment.

It is also my government's intention to restructure unemployment insurance benefits in order to eliminate inconsistencies with Canada's Charter of Rights and Freedoms, to create greater incentives to employment, and to ensure that the resources available are used more effectively to generate greater labour market opportunities.

The increasing participation of women in the work force underlines the need for initiatives that promote equality of opportunity in Canada's economic life. The report of the Task Force on Barriers to the Employment and Promotion of Women in the Public Service will give my government—as the largest employer in the country—further opportunity to remove or reduce the difficulties that many women still find impede their working careers.

The Environmental Imperative

Canadians possess a unique sense of their relationship to the land, whose rich, vast diversity has shaped their values and experience.

Throughout the regions and across all linguistic and ethnic communities, there is a shared concern that we protect our environment for generations of future Canadians.

The world itself is facing an environmental challenge of unprecedented magnitude. Recognizing this, my government has strongly supported the Brundtland World Commission on Environment and Development and its call for "sustainable development"—which holds that the state of the world's environment, the strength of the global economy and the health of the earth's inhabitants are inextricably linked.

My government will participate in the establishment of a centre for the international promotion of sustainable development, to be located in Winnipeg.

As well, the National Round Table on the Environment and the Economy has been established to provide leadership and to form new partnerships of effort among Canadians, in order to deal more effectively with environmental concerns and their relationship to the challenges of economic growth. The government has also altered its operational practices and enlarged the responsibilities of the Minister of the Environment to ensure that environmental issues are fully considered in the course of its decision making.

These initiatives are part of a new environmental agenda which will also include the commitment to:

limit the environmental impact of toxic chemicals through the development of regulations for the Canadian Environmental Protection Act; improve the quality of our water, through new legislation; protect the environmental integrity of our arctic regions; and improve the quality of the atmosphere through the negotiation of an acid rain accord with the United States, the implementation of the Ozone Protocol signed in Montréal in 1987, and the pursuit of further international efforts to control toxic emissions and to stimulate the evolution of international institutions in environmental matters.

In order to promote the restoration and enhancement of the environment, my government will proceed with initiatives to clean up the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence River and, together with the provinces, to further the process of cleaning up dangerous land sites.

Furthermore, my government will continue to encourage the expansion of Canada's environmental industry and, through sound scientific research, will continue to encourage the development and adoption of clean and efficient production processes. Technology, services, and environmentally friendly products are the key components of this industry. And the opportunities for domestic application and international export of equipment, knowledge and goods are considerable.

Individual Canadians will be encouraged to become more aware of environmental matters with the establishment of the Environmental Partners Fund. This fund will assist them in actively enhancing their environment by initiatives promoting the production and consumption of environmentally sound products, and with programs to encourage recycling.

Legislation will also be introduced to ensure an appropriate environmental assessment review process.

A Caring Nation

Canada's social policies touch the lives of all Canadians. These programs and services give shape and substance to the special quality of Canadian life. And they reflect the distinctive values that give to the Canadian people their sense of uniqueness.

In responding to future challenges and needs, Canada's social goals and programs will continue to be determined in Canada and by Canadians, in conformity and harmony with values they have historically nurtured.

My government believes fundamentally in those social benefits which support the family and the elderly, while recognizing the need to direct more assistance toward those with low incomes.

The government remains committed to a national child care program.

My government will continue its initiatives to reduce violence in the family and the abuse of children. It will renew its fight against AIDS and drug abuse. It will encourage research into diseases associated with aging, so destructive of human dignity and family life.

My government will introduce further legislation to reform Canada's legal system and sentencing practices. This will require a review of the current Young Offenders Act in order to ensure that it better protects the rights of society, while advancing the rehabilitation of young offenders.

My government is considering the implications of the latest jurisprudence of the Supreme Court of Canada on the subject of abortion, so as to carefully weigh the appropriate course of action in relation to this sensitive matter.

Advances in medical and biological science have created in Canada, as in other countries, a variety of new reproductive technologies: artificial insemination, in vitro fertilization, embryo transfer and surrogate parenting. There is concern that these scientific advances will outpace our ability to deal with their moral, ethical, legal and social implications. My government will therefore mandate a royal commission to inquire into the implications of new reproductive technologies for Canadian society.

Canada's International Role

Canadians are, by vocation, world citizens. They helped form the United Nations, and are among its most creative and consistent supporters. Forty years ago this week, Canada played a pivotal role in the creation of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Canada retains that active commitment to freedom and to Europe. Canada is active in the Commonwealth, la Francophonie, the Economic Summit, GATT, and in other initiatives to improve the standards and security of the international community.

Canadians prize freedom and tolerance at home, and pursue those values in the world.

My government will continue to take a strong stand in defence of human rights. It will continue to be among the leaders in peacekeeping, in international development, in strengthening international organizations, and in relieving the devastation of famine or of natural disaster. It will apply firmly and fairly the new legislation on refugees, and will expand overall immigration levels.

We are a northern nation, proud of our arctic frontier, and determined to work with our northern allies and neighbours to develop a new co-operative ethic in the Arctic.

Canada is the immediate neighbour of both superpowers, and my government will apply Canada's influence to increase understanding and co-operation between East and West. The government will continue its support of progress toward the reduction and control of arms, and will continue to help resolve regional disputes.

Modern economic, social and environmental realities draw the world together dramatically. In these new circumstances, Canada has special contributions to make, and legitimate interests to advance and defend.

Canada's efficient agricultural producers cannot compete fairly in a world in which trade-distorting subsidies wreak havoc with market disciplines, while bringing undue pressure to bear on the nation's treasury.

Canadians who fish for a living find their catches reduced by predatory over-fishing outside the 200-mile limit, where Canadian regulations cannot be enforced. My government will intensify its international efforts to put an end to these practices.

Canada's National Identity

Canadians define who they are—as a people—by what they have done.

Today, Canada stands as one of the most dynamic, peaceful and promising nations in the world. This has been achieved by a people who have placed the highest priority on the need for tolerance, compassion and fairness. Canadian society cares about the quality of its national life, its health, education, human welfare and environment. Canadian values, formed and developed by Canadians, have produced a unique national identity of which Canadians are justifiably proud.

This has been the exceptional achievement of little more than a century of history. The people of Canada, therefore, have cause for celebration. My government has invited the participation of all the provinces and territories in planning Canada's 125th birthday in 1992.

The same year will mark the 350th anniversary of the founding of Montréal.

Canadians are justifiably proud of their cultural industries—distinctive, creative and increasingly recognized worldwide. My government will continue its commitment to the growth and development of Canada's cultural life, to this nation's linguistic duality, and to its rich and diverse multicultural heritage. It will improve the distribution of Canada's cultural products in broadcasting, film and video. It will propose legislation to further improve the laws on copyright.

My government will introduce a revitalized citizenship act. Legislation will be introduced to establish a Canadian race relations foundation. By this initiative, my government intends to emphasize the need for all Canadians to support and encourage racial harmony.

The state and condition of Canada's political institutions, which represent the bulwark of our democracy, require constant interest and concern. My government will build upon the recent achievements in the field of parliamentary reform. You will be asked to legislate new conflict-of-interest standards for parliamentarians.

My government will appoint a commission of inquiry to make recommendations for needed changes and reforms to the electoral laws.

Conclusion

During the remaining years leading to the 21st century, challenge and opportunity alike will become a familiar part of the daily life of the people of Canada. The challenge will be to the nation's strength of purpose, to its will to persist and to prosper, to its resolve to be worthy of its special heritage and history, and to its determination to promote economic development in a manner consistent with a safe and wholesome environment.

As a strong, skilled and confident people, Canadians will find a greater place in world commerce and trade, in technological innovation, and in scientific development and discovery. The first task for my ministers will be to help prepare the way for this viable and dynamic Canada.

My government's priorities are firm, and its determination to pursue the plan started four years ago is unflinching. My government's task is to be ready for the challenges ahead as Canadians move toward a new century.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the fortieth anniversary of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization which has been a cornerstone of Canadian foreign policy for successive Canadian governments. What we celebrate is not only 40 years of uninterrupted peace in Europe but also the values which brought us together then and which still unite us today.

When he signed the treaty on behalf of Canada, the Right Honourable Lester Pearson stated:

> This treaty, though born out of fear and frustration, must, however, lead to positive social, economic and political achievements which will extend beyond the time of emergency which gave it birth, or the geographic area which it now includes.

[Translation]

We must keep in mind the situation prevailing at that time: fully armed Soviet troops were still stationed in Europe; the West Berlin blockade was on; a Communist takeover had just crushed Czechoslovakia's nascent democracy; and the nations of Western Europe, barely through with the war, were openly threatened by a similar fate. There is a striking contrast with the prosperous times we are experiencing today and NATO has been and still is an essential instrument of such progress.

The unity and determination of the Alliance have often been put to the test: recurrent troubles in Eastern Europe, the uprising in Hungary, the Suez Canal crisis, the crushing of Prague's springtime demonstrations, detente in the Seventies, Afghanistan and the double decision. In every instance NATO came through stronger and more relevant.

[English]

Today NATO provides for the common security of over 600 million people in 16 nations on both sides of the Atlantic. The modern era is marked by conflict, yet Europe, the region with the highest concentration of sophisticated weaponry in the world, is enjoying the longest sustained period of peace and stability since the height of the Holy Roman Empire. That peace was made possible through NATO's persistent commitment to pursue complementary goals: first, to maintain adequate defences to deter aggression; second, to control and limit armaments through carefully negotiated and verifiable agreements; and third, to constantly promote dialogue with the countries of eastern Europe.

Has the Alliance met the test that Lester Person set for it 40 years ago? Has it led to positive social, economic and political achievements? Is it more than just a military alliance? Clearly the answer is yes to all questions.

It was through NATO in 1972 that we and our Allies set down our objectives for the conference on security and co-operation in Europe. Through that process, we have secured from the Soviet Union, and its East European Allies, real commitments in human rights, economic co-operation and military security. Today, in the East, there is greater respect for the rights of individuals, greater freedom to travel to visit friends or relatives and greater freedom to worship. That progress would not have been made without the tenacity with which the Allies pressed the East to extend to their publics the privileges and rights which we take for granted.

We are at an historic juncture now. The two superpowers have agreed to eliminate an entire class of nuclear weapons. Significant progress has been made on a treaty to reduce by approximately 50 per cent the size of their strategic nuclear arsenals. A new sense of purpose has been injected into their efforts to control and ultimately ban chemical weapons. And perhaps most important of all, new negotiations to reduce conventional forces in Europe are under way in Vienna. With imagination and good will on both sides we have every reason for optimism. President Gorbachev is claiming credit for much of this success and certainly he deserves a good deal of credit. After all, he is redefining the Soviet Union. However, it is important to remember that President Gorbachev has been responding to ideas and proposals originally made by the West. He has been responding to the unity and to the fidelity to western values which are at the heart of the success of the North Atlantic Alliance.

Every Canadian of good will celebrates the changes that are appearing in the Soviet Union and in parts of eastern Europe. They represent the kind of genuine progress toward the social, economic and political achievement that Mr. Pearson described. The challenge is for NATO to continue to bring down the tensions between East and West and to continue to build up confidence and co-operation. That will require the same unity and determination which have allowed the NATO alliance to contribute so strongly to the progress so far.

Some have suggested that Canada should step aside from the responsibilities of membership in this western alliance. Had we stepped aside before, NATO would not have been able to contribute as constructively to the progress the world sees now. Canada has many means to influence peace in the world. One of those, which has worked for 40 years, and is essential to continued progress in East-West relations, is the NATO alliance whose anniversary we mark today. NATO has been good for Europe, good for North America and good for Canada. This Government is committed to ensuring that Canada continues to play a full and leading role in NATO in helping to shape a new era in East-West relations.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I stand in this House this morning on this very special occasion, the fortieth anniversary of NATO, with a deep sense of humility and pride; humility in the wake of the great architects of NATO, the men who had the vision to put it all together, and Canada had a great part in that; and a sense of pride in the reflection that this forum of legislative debate can take the time out to mark an organization that represents human liberty in the purest form yet devised.

I do not stand here as an advocate for any partisan cause for the issues to which reference has just been made by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark). These issues, Mr. Speaker, are fundamental and reach quite beyond the realm of partisan considerations. I hear in this House this morning on the fortieth anniversary of NATO the hopes, the aspirations and the faiths of over 600 million people in 16 nations on both sides of the Atlantic Ocean.

Unhappily, Mr. Speaker, I possess neither the eloquence of diction nor the brilliance of the metaphor to suitably convey all that NATO stands for, what it means now and what it has meant over the last 40 years. In the past, military alliances, balances of power, leagues of nations all in turn failed, leaving the only path to be the crucible of war. The utter destruction of war now blocks out this alternative. To preserve the peace, we must now synchronize our matchless advances in science, technology and all the other material developments of our time and combine them with a firm resolve of our human character. It must be of the spirit if we are to save the flesh.

As a country, Canada is the second largest in the world, but we are not, Mr. Speaker, as we are all aware, second largest in resources, in particular military resources. Canada can neither independently guarantee our defence nor isolate itself from events key to our frontier. Our security requires a stable and peaceful international order.

Mr. Speaker and colleagues, our best defence in Canada continues to be collective defence.

As a recently uniformed member of the Canadian Armed Forces, I had the distinct privilege to serve NATO at work for over 30 years. I participated in major exercises involving over 1,600 ships and aircraft and hundreds and thousands of men and women from NATO nations, working proudly, diligently and effectively to preserve the integrity of the alliance and to preserve the peace. On this special occasion, Mr. Speaker, I beg the indulgence of the House to pay tribute to those men and women who have achieved this and in particular the men and women of Canada in uniform and civilians who make it work and who continue to "meet the test".

The preservation of peace over the last 30 years continues. Negotiations over arms control augur well for the future. We now have the opportunity to help put an end to the cold war and to continue to reduce that iron curtain which separates peoples and cultures. The time is now upon us. Let it now be said that the members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization did not step aside. Let it now be said that we in Canada seized the opportunity to the advantage at this hour, and let it be said that Canada did its part. I can put it in no better words than a man who stood in this House, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, who said: "Did its part to help lift the shadow of war."

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by joining with my colleague in the Liberal Party in paying tribute to the men and women who over the years have done their duty as they saw it and are doing their duty as they see it today in Canada's contribution to NATO. It is important that we recognize Canadians who have been involved in that way for the work they have done. However, I also think that the fortieth anniversary of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization is an opportunity for us here in the House of Commons and in the country to reflect on what the Minister has rightly described as a cornerstone of successive Canadian governments foreign policy, an opportunity for us to reflect on NATO's past, on its present and its future. I will try to do this in the brief time allotted me to respond to the Minister's statement.

The Minister began his statement with talk about shared values and ended his statement with a remark about those who have been critical of Canada's NATO role. I am sorry that he used the rhetoric of side-stepping responsibilities, because surely the debate within Canada has been about what is Canada's responsibility. It is not a question of someone wanting to sidestep responsibility and others wanting to live up to it, but of what indeed is the true responsibility of Canada in its foreign policy. Nevertheless, I ask the Minister to reflect on the extent to which the debate about NATO in this country, precipitated in large part by the NDP, has occurred precisely because some of the values that Alliance members have been asked to share over the years have been arguably ambiguous,in other cases hypocritical, and in some cases morally questionable.

In other cases they have been morally questionable.

The willingness of NATO, for instance, through its doctrine of flexible response, to be the first to use nuclear weapons, to be willing to destroy the world for the sake of democracy while tolerating at times military dictatorships within its own ranks, certainly does not and has not advanced its moral credibility with a great many Canadians. Its failure to live up to the so-called Canada clause which the Minister quoted and which he wrongly assesses NATO as having lived up to, that clause by which NATO was to be more than just a military alliance, has also bothered a great many Canadians.

For many more, the expectation on the part of our American partners in that alliance that to be allied in Europe was to be allied everywhere, wherever and however Americans chose to defend or advance their interests, regardless of the circumstances, was and continues to be a problem. In this respect, I find a strange omission in the Minister's statement. A more insightful rendering of the alliance's history and those things which have tested it would have included Viet Nam as well as Afghanistan. Indeed, it was in 1969, at the height of the Viet Nam war, that the NDP first passed the resolution about Canadian withdrawal from NATO that the Minister, in other more partisan contexts, loves to refer to.

I also find the Minister's use of the notion of common security to be disturbing because common security is a concept developed by the Palme Commission which is to be seen as different from and opposed to the notion of collective security which is what NATO is and what the Warsaw Pact is. The notion of common security is a notion which transcends this adversarial collective securities which we have had since the Second World War.

I ask the Minister to have the intellectual honesty not to co-opt language in the way he has done in this statement and not to use the notion of common security when what he really means is collective security. At least my Liberal friend was more honest in that respect. He spoke of collective securities.

The Minister refers to the INF agreement on intermediate nuclear forces and admits that this was done by the superpowers in the text of his own statement. That is precisely the point. What progress has been made in arms control has been made between the superpowers with NATO being a spectator, with NATO being simply a kind of a lobby for arms build-up rather than arms control and the superpowers from time to time coming to their senses, and we hope that they will come to their senses more often. To suggest that this has been the result of NATO, I think, is at least debatable.

The fact is that with respect to NATO, Canada has been and continues to be far too much a spectator to world events. I have gone to NATO parliamentary meetings. I do not know how many times I have heard NATO referred to as an alliance between Europe and the United States with hardly any recognition that Canada belongs to the alliance at all. It is no surprise because Canada chooses, as this Government does, to be a spectator to the debates that are going on in NATO.

One of those debates going on right now is the debate about modernization of nuclear weapons. Have we heard a peep out of this Government pro or con with respect to that debate that is very lively right now in Europe with people contending with each other about the pros and cons of modernization of nuclear weapons? Instead, we will wait until the decision is made somewhere else. Then Canada will blithely trail along.

That is part of the problem. The Minister says he wants Canada to play a leading role. Well, play a leading role. We are in NATO, do something about it, use it to advance the things that you say you want to advance and perhaps you would be better off in the eyes of many Canadians.

The notion of NATO and the Warsaw Pact, I think all of us hope, is a notion that belongs more to history than to the future. We hope that events in the Soviet Union and events in the West are leading to a time when the disengagement of NATO and the Warsaw Pact, when the elimination of this Manichaean world of two alliances contending with each other for the possible destruction of the world, will be a thing of the past.

Canada does have a role to play. It is a role this Government is not playing. If it should choose to live up to that role, it would receive much better comment from this corner of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the parties and I think you would find that there would be unanimous consent to the putting of the motion I am about to read and voting immediately. Mr. Speaker, I would move:

That supply proceedings for the 1989 calendar year be subject to the following provisions:

That, when the House reaches Orders of the Day on Thursday, May 4, the House shall debate an Opposition motion, notice of which shall have been given the previous day, and no later than 5:45 o'clock p.m. on May 4, the Speaker shall interrupt debate and put, forthwith and successively, without amendment or debate, every question necessary to dispose of the said motion; and then the Speaker shall put forthwith, and successively, without amendment or debate, every question that may be necessary to dispose of any motion relating to interim supply and for the passing at all stages of the bill based thereon, following which the Speaker shall adjourn the House; and

That notwithstanding the relevant provision of Standing Order 81,

A) There be 12 days allotted to the Opposition before Friday, June 16, for debate on Opposition motions, 6 of such motions to be votable, and a further 13 allotted days in the period following Labour Day and ending on December 10, 1989 (4 in September, 4 in October, 3 in November and 2 in December) with 6 of these allotted days for debate of votable Opposition motions;

B) Main Estimates for 1989-90 may be tabled and referred to the appropriate committees on any day but no later than Monday, May 1;

C) Each committee to which such Main Estimates have been referred shall report them, or shall be deemed to have reported them, no later than Wednesday, September 27;

D) (a) Not later than the third sitting day prior to September 27, the Leader of the Opposition may give notice during the time specified in Standing Order 54 of a motion to extend consideration of the Main Estimates of a named department or agency and the said motion shall be deemed adopted when called on "Motions" on September 26;

(b) During the sitting of October 4, not later than six o'clock p.m., the said committee shall report or shall deemed to have reported the Main Estimates for the said department or agency; and

(c) if the committee shall make a report, the chairman or a member of the committee acting for the chairman may so indicate, on a point of order, prior to the hour indicated in paragraph (b), and the House shall immediately revert to "Presenting Reports to Committees" for the purpose of receiving the said report;

(E) On Thursday, October 5, 1989, the House shall consider any opposition motion and any motion or motions to concur in the Main Estimates, notice of which shall have been given provided that, unless previously disposed, of at no later than 5.45 o'clock p.m., the Speaker shall interrupt any proceedings then before the House and shall first put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment every question necessary to dispose of any business relating to the Main Estimates for the current fiscal year or for any supplementary Estimates, the restorational reinstatement of any item in the Main or Supplementary Estimates or any opposed item in the Main or Supplementary Estimates and, notwithstanding Standing Order 71, for the passage at all stages of any Bill or Bills based on the Main or Supplementary Estimates, following which the Speaker shall adjourn the House. brev

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, this motion reflects the result of extensive discussions among the House Leaders. The purpose of it is to give to the Members of the House the time to which they would ordinarily be entitled to consider the Main Estimates and of which they would be deprived because of the date on which the House has been called back. It also restores to Members the full number of opposition days and gets us back in the customary cycle of consideration of Supply and Estimates that would otherwise have been pushed aside because of the recall of the House at this point in time. Because of the purposes of this motion we of the Official Opposition are ready to give our agreement to it.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Windsor West.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I want to concur with what the House Leader for the Official Opposition has said. We have had extensive negotiations.

I want to say that these discussions were necessary because of a number of legitimate timetabling problems which the Government was facing. There was a sense of negotiation where the Government said that if we would agree to some changes, the Government would be prepared to provide some opportunities that may not have existed for both opposition parties in providing us with a number of opposition days.

In the spirit of co-operation I hope this is an indication of things to come, quite different from the last time we were all together.

We also concur with the special order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister have the consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO TAXATION OF MUSIC LESSONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present four petitions from residents in my riding and the National Capital Region.

[English]

It deals with the proposed sales tax. The petitioners would like to ask the House to humbly consider their point of view that a sales tax on music lessons will hurt the average family for whom music education will become too costly. With sales tax on music lessons, Canadian children will suffer, talent will go undeveloped and the future of Canadian music both nationally and internationally will be jeopardized. Music educators are active participants in education in every province in Canada. Their knowledge and expertise provide students with the qualifications enabling them to enter our universities in faculties of music.

Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to consider music studies as an educational process and therefore exempt from the proposed sales tax.

REQUEST FOR PAYMENT OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AT BEGINNING OF SEPTEMBER

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to table in this House a petition signed by residents of Canada and Abitibi who ask the federal Government to pay family allowances at the beginning of September every year in time for the reopening of schools in Canada. This is to help families that have one or more children in school.

S. O. 52

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that I have received several applications for emergency debates. I will hear first the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

AVIATION SAFETY IN CANADA

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, on March 17 I wrote to you requesting two things. The first was an immediate recall of Parliament which you declined, according to the rules within which you had to work. Second, I indicated that at the first opportunity I would be rising under the provisions of Standing Order 52 to seek leave to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing aviation safety in Canada.

I think it was clear at that time, and since March 17 as well, that there is great concern over aviation safety in this country. A number of circumstances, including the very unfortunate crash at Dryden, Ontario, have left the public of Canada uncertain about safety in the air.

I urge you, Sir, to set aside an appropriate time so that we can have a full and helpful debate in this House.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, perhaps you could take my comments into consideration as well for the application that I have made for an emergency debate in an effort to save the time of the House.

I believe there is a crisis in the area of air safety at the present time in our country. There was a most tragic air crash in Canada on December 12, 1985, in Gander, Newfoundland. Since then the Canadian Aviation Safety Board has conducted an investigation into this, the worst air disaster in the history of our country. This particular inquiry has been divisive, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of questioning the competence of the Aviation Safety Board investigators, but I must still point out that there was a great deal of controversy. . .

[English]

Over recent months the congestion at airports, the shortage of air traffic controllers, the judicial inquiry into the Gander air crash, and the judge acting as a consultant to review the Gander air crash, warrant two things I respectively submit. First, that you consider granting us an emergency debate. Second, I believe we should be hearing as well the resignation of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard).

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Members have brought a matter to the attention of the Chair which is, of course, an important one. I know that they would both understand that I would want to reserve, at least for a little while, and consider the applications that have been made.

I have also an application from the Hon. Member for Lambton—Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson).

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—JURISDICTION RESPECTING OATS

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 52, I ask leave to propose a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of a debate on a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration.

In view of the fact that the Minister for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) has deprived Parliament of our traditional right to debate and has not consulted with Canadian farmers before removing oats from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, we respectfully request that you allow an emergency debate in the House of Commons on this issue.

It is of the utmost importance that the Government of Canada stand by and support our Canadian producers and their marketing systems during this prolonged period of economic instability, and particularly at a time when oats have gained recognition as a human health food. To have removed this product from the jurisdiction of the most sophisticated marketing system in the world without consultation—

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member will understand that the custom is to make the point to the Speaker but not enter into a debate. There is fairness in this. Obviously those on the other side of the particular argument will then feel that they have not had a chance to put their argument to the Speaker. These applications for emergency debates are not treated that way. The Chair hears one side and one side only. It is in the form and legal terms of an ex parte application. I know the Hon. Member will understand that. I have the Hon. Member's point and I will again reserve and consider it.

The Hon. Member for Skeena on a similar application, but not on the same subject.

VALDEZ OIL SPILL

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I also rise pursuant to Standing Order 52 in relation to the Alaskan oil spill.

Two weeks ago the Exxon Valdez spilled 270,000 barrels of oil into Prince William Sound and no efforts were made to seriously contain the spill by Exxon or by the U.S. Government. It now covers some 2,700 hundred square kilometres and 1,200 kilometres of coastline. It is the largest spill in North American history and the twelfth largest in world history. It is a highly persistent and toxic oil, four times as hard to disperse as Alberta crude. Canadian officials have erroneously continued to state that the spill is 1,000 kilometres from Canadian territory. The oil is in fact now within striking distance of the Canadian transboundary rivers the Stikine, the Taku, and the Alsek Tatsenshini.

Dr. Stephen Pond, an oceanographer at UBC has confirmed that the spill could enter Canadian waters.

The emergency debate is required for the following reasons.

First, Canadian resources are now being impacted: herring, salmon of Canadian origin, and halibut.

Second, Canada's state of preparedness is dismal, as was proven with the chaotic response to the Vancouver Island spill.

Third, we have no scientific team on site evaluating the present impact on Canadian resources, and particularly on transboundary salmon stocks.

Fourth, we have had no movement of spill containment or clean-up equipment to the Dixon Entrance area. Fifth, the water column and biology of Dixon Entrance must be monitored now before the spill gets into there.

Sixth, as was proven by the Grace Harbour spill on December 22, the "Don't worry, be happy" speculation of the Coast Guard, both Canadian and U.S., has proven to be defective; 870 thousands litres ended up on our shores as a result of the December spill—

Mr. Speaker: Again I take the comments of the Hon. for Skeena very seriously indeed. I do not think there is any necessity to get into argument. The facts speak for themselves. I will again give this very careful consideration and report back to the House as soon as I can.

I should advise the House, and the public who are watching that, probably as a consequence of the long adjournment, there are a number of applications today that are taking up the time of the House, but they are all important ones.

I now want to advise Hon. Members that I have an application on a question of privilege from The Hon. Member for Prince Albert—Churchill River and I will hear him now.

PRIVILEGE

CANADIAN CROP DROUGHT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Having sent you notice of my intention to raise this question, I would like to place before you my argument as to why I believe that my privileges as a Member have been breached. I am raising this matter at the earliest possible opportunity since I did not become fully aware of this breach until I received my personal Canadian Crop Drought Assistance form, which application form I received on March 3. That was 71 days after the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) told me personally in this House, and I quote from Hansard of December 22, 1988 at page 622:

> The forms are close to being ready for being sent out to the producers. We hope that they will be out in the next week or 10 days. Everything is proceeding as it should, consistent with the program that was announced.

Seventy-one days later I received my form. My intention though is not to draw from this evidence the conclusion that the Minister deliberately misled me, but rather to suggest that his remarks impeded my abilities as a Member of this Parliament to properly serve my constituents.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate very much to interrupt the Hon. Member because the matter he raises is, certainly in the mind of the Hon. Member and probably in the minds of some of his constituents and others, a grievance.

I am having some difficulty being satisfied that this is even getting anywhere close to a question of privilege, and I think that perhaps the sense of the Speaker is also reflected among other members in the Chamber. However, I will consider the points made by the Hon. Member and I will report back to him shortly. The Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam.

NON-SMOKER'S HEALTH ACT

Mr. Ian Waddell(Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I know you have some difficulty with the name, it being a new riding.

Mr. Speaker: I want to assure the Hon. Member that I have no difficulty with his name, and I have no difficulty with the name of his former riding, which was adjacent to my own, and I will have no further difficulty with his new riding.

Mr. Waddell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I too rise on a point of privilege. On May 31, 1988 this House passed Bill C-204, the Non-Smokers' Health Act. It is now Chapter 21 of the Revised Statutes of Canada 1988. It was a Private Members' Bill, initiative and Herculean task undertaken by the former Member for Broadview—Greenwood, Miss Lynn McDonald. The Bill passed on a free vote in this House. It was the first time, in my experience, where the Cabinet voted one way and we voted the other way and we won. It was unique. Royal Assent was given to the Bill on June 28.

The Governor in Council has failed to proclaim that Bill, although other Bills have been proclaimed. I have received letters from my constituents, including medical officers of health, asking why the Government has not proclaimed a Bill that has been passed by the House of Commons—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member very properly brings to the attention of the House certain complaints that he has with respect to this particular Bill and perhaps complaints that members of the public have. However, there is another and more appropriate occasion for the Hon. Member to raise this matter, and I am sure, given the great skill for which he is known in this place, he will find ample opportunity to do so. I must say at the moment it is not in the view of the Chair a question of privilege, although it is of course a question of debate and and important question.

POINTS OF ORDER

ORDER IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I rise a point of order. It is a brief point of order. I was intending to rise on a point of privilege, but I think more appropriately it is a point of order. I am referring to the Government's requirement to table with the House certified copies of Order in Council appointments within five sitting days of their publication in the Canada Gazette.

I am referring to the last session of this Parliament, and I realize it is doubtful whether it is in fact a point of order. However, I am primarily using it to flag the issue. The Government failed to live up to what is required of it in terms of tabling these Orders in Council appointments so that they can be referred to the appropriate Standing Committee in order that Members of Parliament can have a look at these and decide if they are appropriate. We were prohibited from doing that, Mr. Speaker. All Members present during the last session of this Parliament simply wish to call this error to the attention of the Government to ensure that it does not happen in this session.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): I am pleased to reply to this particular point of order. In doing so I would point out to my hon. friend that had those Orders in Council been tabled in the last session they would, under the Standing Order, have had to have been considered within a period of 30 days. Since committees were not struck, and there was the Christmas recess, there would have been no possibility of those Orders in Council being reviewed by the appropriate Standing Committees. What my hon. friend suggests we should have done would have been a subversion of the intent of the Standing Order which was to give the committees the opportunity to review the appointments. Therefore we will be tabling tomorrow the 1988 Order in Council appointments. I believe that they are already with the Table and that they just require the formal letter. The day after we will table the 1989 Orders in Council that we have ready in order to give the Standing Committees an opportunity to review those appointments.

In other words, Sir, had we followed my friends's suggestion, there would have been no opportunity to review the appointments. We felt we were honour bound to stand by the intent of the Standing Order. That is why we did it this way.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is the Government's right to pre-judge in advance when Parliament will be sitting. The Standing Orders make it clear that the Order in Council appointments, once they appear in the Canada Gazette, must be tabled—not could be, may be, but must be tabled—within five days. All I am saying is that that was not done. The Standing Orders require that to be done. I am pleased that the Minister said that they are following the appropriate course of action now.

While I have the floor, I might simply add as well that one of the problems we face is that the Orders in Council appear in the Gazette often months after the appointments have already been made and that the people are involved in their duties. That makes the evaluation of the Order in Council appointment a little after the fact.

I simply encourage the Government to have these Order in Council appointments appear in the Canada Gazette as early as possible.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) and the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) for the exchange. I am sure that Members on the government side will have taken into account the representations of the Hon. Member for Kamloops. I appreciate both interventions.

The Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam has a point of order. I will hear him.

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA APPOINTMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): This week the Government appointed the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, the Hon. Beverly McLachlan, to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: We now have three women on the Supreme Court of Canada, including this outstanding woman jurist from British Columbia. I think all the Members of the House will join with me in applauding this appointment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I have to make it clear to the Hon. Member that I do not think that that was a point of order. The comment has been made. I think there is probably a general feeling in the Chamber that the appointment does credit to the court and to the country. However, I would remind Hon. Members that there is another place, that is, Statements by Members, which is later on in the day and which is perhaps a more appropriate place to make such comments.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ADDRESS IN REPLY, MOVED BY MR. LEE RICHARDSON AND SECONDED BY MRS. MARIE GIBEAU

Mr. Lee Richardson (Calgary Southeast): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay my respects to the Governor General and to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your re-election.

As one who has long been a student of this House and of our parliamentary traditions, it is with great humility, pride and respect that I rise to move the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. It is a great honour and privilege for me and for the people of Calgary Southeast. I would like to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Cabinet for recognizing a western Member in this way and for the efforts of this Government in the past four and one-half years to address the aspirations and expectations of western Canadians.

I was introduced into this House what seems like a long time ago when I first came from Calgary to serve as executive assistant to former Prime Minister John Diefenbaker. My admiration for this institution grew under his tutelage. Although I had read much of this place I had seen little, except in photographs and on television. Other Members may have shared that sense of awe in arriving here for the first time. I remember once rushing out of my office to meet Mr. Diefenbaker and running smack into Otto Lang, Jean Marchand and Mitchell Sharp. I had seen them on TV and I was shocked. Excusing myself I continued down the hallway and thought: "Gosh, they're short". I had from afar an image of this place as being larger than life, and it is really not. It is a place where ordinary people try to represent their constituency, their region.

I return to Ottawa almost 20 years later as a Member of Parliament to represent my constituency, my region, my country. I am a westerner.

I do not want to be seen today as simply speaking for the West. I believe that in moving this address I am not only speaking on behalf of this House but I am speaking as much for one Canadian as another. I want to think that all Members without exception see themselves as standing for one Canada and speaking for every Canadian in every riding of this nation.

It is quite wonderful to be a new Member. I have no callous cynicisms and fondly hope that they may never develop. I listened yesterday to the Speech from the Throne with growing excitement. The people of Calgary Southeast did not send me here for a visit. They sent me down here to listen for them, to hear for them, to report to them and, premised in large measure on what I hear, to speak for them.

I am well aware that Edmond Burke insisted that Parliament is not a Congress of ambassadors from different and hostile regions, which interests each must maintain. It is early in the day for me to challenge that great man. But there is a world of difference between our giant federation with its widely ranging interests and viewpoints and the unitary Britain of Burke's day. We are not, I hope, hostile regions. However, we are sufficiently different in our aspirations, opportunities, geography and environment that it is a constant and demanding task to educate our fellow Canadians in the valid expectations of our own region or province and of others.

As historian David Bercuson explains:

> Western Canada was not settled through the steady movement of eastern Canadians pushing westward against an expanding frontier of settlement. It was peopled instead mostly by immigrants who had no knowledge of or connection with central or Atlantic Canada. It was natural therefore that the development of ideas, values and traditions in western Canada would not strictly follow the ideas, values and traditions that had already developed in central and Atlantic Canada. The West was to be different because its people were different.

The western Canadian character was moulded by experience acting on tradition. Immigrants brought the culture, values, language and religion of their native lands with them in their confrontation with western Canada's society and environment. Some were eager to embrace the ways of their adopted countries. Others clung tenaciously to their old traditions. All faced the hardships and trials of settlement in a new and harsh land far from home. The experience of settlement and expansion, of putting down roots and building farms and ranches, cities and towns, stores and factories, created a blend of individualism and co-operation among westerners. Theirs was a Canadianism with a truly western flavour. Homesteaders did not just believe in rugged individualism, they lived it.

In this way westerners developed a sense of community. They were separated from central and eastern Canada by distance and attitude. Their economy was based on the extraction of raw, unfinished products that were shipped elsewhere for processing. Policies which affected the daily lives of westerners were often made by a distant Government, controlled by those with little knowledge of or interest in the special problems and circumstances of westerners. Westerners, therefore, developed an identity based on individualism and a need for co-operation, on the very experience of living on prairie farms or in British Columbia mining towns. They were different because they felt themselves to be different.

This kind of attitude has resulted in our people having a very strong desire to influence their own destiny. We westerners have made decisions since we first came into this country. Westerners, to a considerable extent, have had an independent sense and a strong feeling that we do not want to be told to participate. We have been part of the process, we are part of the process and we have every desire to remain a part of the process.

You will never really understand the West unless you understand the populism, the very real and existing populism of the western Canadians. This populism roots very deeply in the early farmers organizations and the co-operative activities that were the source of joint effort, the source of development and the source of growth in the undeveloped communities of the early settlement years.

The drive for a reformed Senate emanating from the West can be understood in the context of western populism. A reformed Senate, an elected Senate, would address serious regional grievances in all parts of this country, but to westerners it is particularly appealing as another vehicle in which our voices can be heard. It is a great credit that this Government is the first federal Government to put Senate reform at the top of constitutional discussions. It is yet another example of the Prime Minister's responsiveness to the unique needs and desires of our region.

We in this House are on the cutting edge of political decisions, but that is all. Each of us, in every corner of this House, and those of us from the West, have behind us the firm strong record of a decisive people who are ready to sit with us and discuss one on one the manner in which this nation should be run.

It is not my aspiration to spend my time in public life as a message carrier for Ottawa. I could not have endured the role of a Liberal or NDP Member who had to carry the message during the bitter years when our western oil and gas resources were being arbitrarily expropriated, that it was "in the interests of the whole".

Our Party did not believe it was in the interests of the whole. We believe that we should listen to the local Government, the local people and hear their case. We did not believe the power of the majority should be used to override the strongly-held views of a minority region.

I hope it will never be said of me that I do not listen to the people of Calgary Southeast, just as I dare hope other Members listen to those who sent them. Listening gets a lot of lip service, but you cannot listen if you are not within hailing distance. The place to listen is standing on a constituent's doorstep, sitting down at the constituent's kitchen table or attending town hall meetings or community hall meetings.

The past mistakes of previous Governments are behind us, but when I listen, what I hear is a residue of western uncertainty and anger.

The most important step that this Government has taken to end western alienation has been the conclusion of the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement. For most of the last century western Canadians have demanded release from the shackles of central Canadian tariff policies. More than 100 years ago farmers in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories demanded free trade. They were self-reliant. They believed in the market economy. They wanted unfettered access to United States markets for their goods, and they resented paying high prices for goods manufactured in central Canada. Who could blame them? They had faith in their ability to thrive under free trade conditions. They were the true forebearers of today's westerners who are confident of their ability to compete in global and continental markets, confident of their entrepreneurial talents, confident that they can improve their prosperity and build a better society without government interference and regulation.

We westerners are a self-reliant people. We have been nurtured in the hardships of the pioneer immigrant experience. We have traditionally sought nothing more than equality of opportunity and equality of treatment with other Canadians. In giving us that, this Government has begun to address a century of grievance. The Free Trade Agreement has gone far toward that end.

The Government must continue to reassure westerners that opportunities for new development will be equal across Canada. The Throne Speech holds out that promise with its commitment to "ensure that the benefits of liberalized trade and economic expansion are shared fairly by all Canadians". The message to westerners is clear. Only by an active and vigorous involvement in the political process can we protect our regional interests while at the same time contribute to the advancement of the nation as a whole.

We westerners have come far since 1984. The total isolation that was our lot under the Liberals has been dramatically reversed, but there is farther yet to go. It will take even more time and even more positive action on the part of this Government to reverse the damage that was done in 16 years of Liberal rule.

More so than any Government in recent memory, it is clear that this Government is genuinely interested in dispelling regional differences. No Conservative Prime Minister will ever ask westerners:"Why should I sell your wheat, your oil, your potash?". This Government, by its actions, has started to bring westerners, Québecers and Atlantic Canadians into the fold to share the bounty of Confederation.

I welcome the Government's continuing commitment to the social programs that have a long time ago made Canada a "kinder, gentler nation."

That spirit of caring is deeply rooted in the western Canadian psyche. Westerners banded together in the face of hardship and for more than 100 years we have led the nation in innovative social and education programs. We believe in social justice, and we practice it. We are also a multicultural society, and have been since waves of immigrants settled the West, most from Europe and the United States, 90 years ago. The more recent arrival of peoples from Asia, the Caribbean and other parts of the world are a continuation of that process, a process that has built and strengthened the West and added to our pool of talent. Westerners are the sons and daughters of immigrants. We believe in multiculturalism, and we practice it.

Westerners applaud the actions that this Government has taken during the last four and one-half years to protect our environment. It is a remarkable record. Canada is a world leader in this area. Next month, the Geneva-based International Environment Bureau will present the Prime Minister, representing all Canadians, with its 1989 Environmental Achievement Award, a most prestigous honour and one in which we can take a great deal of pride.

We in the West know our environment well. It has moulded our character. The self-reliance of our pioneers and homesteaders was borne of the physical separation of their settements, the long prairie winters and the unremitting toil of breaking prairie sod and forcing it to produce in abundance.

With the advances that modern technology has brought, we now live, work and play in that environment. We know that the destruction of the environment would ultimately be the destruction of ourselves.

In environmental protection this Throne Speech holds great promise for the immediate future, but despite this I say this Government should be on guard. We westerners will continue to demand action to protect the environment, but we will also continue to resent "experts" from elsewhere who would come to our beautiful parks and forests and tell us what we must do to protect them without regard to our needs, to our feelings or to the facts. Environmental protection is absolutely vital, but it must always be carried out with a view to utility. Westerners do not need lessons on the preservation and protection of our environmental heritage. What we do need is a fair chance to make our own case to other Canadians about how best to protect and enjoy the environment in which we live.

In 1984, there was one federal Cabinet Minister from western Canada. Today, there are ten.

In 1984, unfair freight rates remained one of the major grievances of western Canada about Confederation. Today those unfair rates are gone as a result of the National Transportation Act which came into effect into January of this year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richardson: In 1984, inflexible regional development programs meant that Alberta sometimes received no money from these federal Government programs. Now we have a new Department of Western Economic Diversification with its headquarters in Edmonton. Decisions for the West are being made in the West.

From 1980 to 1984, Alberta received one per cent of total federal job-creation funds. Alberta now receives 10 per cent of job-creation funds, which exceeds the per capita national average.

In early 1984, in rural Alberta, in what has come to be known as the "red barn speech", the Prime Minister, then Opposition Leader, made a personal commitment to get rid of the National Energy Program. Today the National Energy Program, the PGRT, and FIRA are dead and gone.

When the oil industry in the West was on its knees the Government responded with CEDIP and flow-through shares. When our agriculture industry was on its knees this Government responded with the Special Canadian Grains Program and drought assistance. Today this Government's energy Minister is a westerner. This Government's agriculture Minister is a westerner.

There is still more to be done. The Government must ensure equality of treatment of all regions of Canada. The Government must ensure that important federal agencies and contracts are assigned to those regions where they are best suited. As westerners we want to be full and equal partners in Confederation. Regional discontent will remain until we are.

We have made a great start. I am proud of the record of the Government. The Speech from the Throne raises the expectation of an even greater future.

Therefore, I have the honour to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mrs. Gibeau), that the following address be presented to Her Excellency, the Governor General of Canada:

> To Her Excellency the Right Honourable Jeanne Sauvé, a Member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, Chancellor and Principal Companion of the Order of Canada, Chancellor and Commander of the Order of Military Merit, upon whom has been conferred the Canadian Forces Decoration, Governor General and Commander in Chief of Canada:
> May it please Your Excellency, we, Her Majesty's loyal and dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

Ms. Marie Gibeau (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of great pleasure and pride that I second the address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

The clear and courageous vision expressed in the Speech from the Throne is an eloquent response to the expectations of Canadians.

On the eve of a new decade and, soon of a new century, Canadians look to the future with confidence.

When it came to power in 1984, our Government made those many years that were clouded by the mistrust and lack of understanding that poisoned federal-provincial relations and even threatened the unity of our country a thing of the past. It also made the important decisions and took the decisive action necessary to launch economic recovery and create the jobs that form the foundation of our prosperity. It has increased Canada's influence on the international scene and developed in our own country the kind of programs that guarantee genuine social justice.

In the last election Canadians again gave us their massive support and shortly afterwards, during the first session of this thirty-fourth Parliament, the Government asked this House to adopt the Free Trade Agreement with the United States which, while protecting two million Canadian jobs that depend on our exports to the United States, will open new horizons for Canadian business and industry.

Yesterday, the Speech from the Throne outlined the policies the Government intends to pursue during its mandate. Its priorities draw their inspiration from the new maturity and confidence that Canadians have developed during the past four years.

Canadians today are clearly aware they will have to put their shoulders to the wheel to support and develop our prosperity and to meet the challenges the future will bring.

Economic expansion is the only way to maintain the social programs we all want in this country, while achieving a better balance between expenditures and revenues is essential to economic stability and sustained growth.

Our country, which is still young, was built by men and women of various origins, united by the common goals of prosperity, peace and unity. We are all the grateful heirs of those pioneers who left us this magnificent heritage, this country which is Canada. Pioneer blood still flows through our veins. We too want to leave our children and our grandchildren a country that is even more prosperous, more open, more tolerant and more united.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I am proud today to have the privilege of seconding the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. In doing so, I support with enthusiasm the inspiring mission—on which this Government has embarked, which is to further develop Canada's prosperity and unity and prepare today for an even more impressive future.

I am particularly proud to take part in this endeavour as a Member for Montreal and a citizen of Quebec.

At the beginning of the 80s, Mr. Speaker, Quebec's outlook seemed very bleak indeed. The economy was at its worst, and we also suffered the supreme humiliation of being denied our place in the Canadian constitutional family.

Mr. Speaker, Québec had been wounded in its honour and in its dignity and all its people deeply felt that hurt. Montréal, our largest city, the heart of Québec, was badly affected by those years of economic stagnation and political uncertainty. Everywhere the outlook seemed dark. Unemployment was rampant in almost every sector of the economy. Crushing interest rates were a source of anxiety for families and our young people worried about their future. Something drastic had to be done. What was needed was a new team of men and women determined to take their future in their own hands and to give back to the people of Québec their hope and their pride.

This team gathered around a man who is proud of his native province, Québec, and full of ambition for his country, Canada. Today, he is Canada's Prime Minister. After restoring harmony and prosperity to this country, he is now asking us to show, more than ever before, our dedication to our country and to the well-being of its citizens.

If we want to prevent the spiralling interest rates and high levels of unemployment we experienced at the beginning of the 80s, we must reduce the national debt burden. This debt, which previous governments allowed to reach dangerous proportions, is today a millstone around the necks of all Canadians.

In my own city of Montreal, the indications are obvious that the economy has recovered and that the men and women of Montreal can once again put their energies and creativity to good use.

I was delighted to hear the 350th anniversary of the founding of Montreal mentioned in the Speech from the Throne.

All Canadians who visit us in 1992 will share our pride in this event and see that Montreal has again become the vibrant and dynamic international city it is.

Recently, the Government announced it was establishing the Space Agency in Montreal, in recognition of that city's focus on aeronautics and aerospace.

The agency will be responsible for the civilian space program, whose budget for the next ten years will be nearly $3 billion.

It will also head the main international programs including Canada's contribution to the Radarsat space station, astronaut training and various programs of the European space agency.

In research and development, another major sector that is so vital to our future, the new legislation on drug patents has already led to substantial investments that will total hundreds of millions of dollars and create thousands of new useful, well-paying jobs.

Since September 1984, 125,000 new jobs were created in Montreal alone, and unemployment in that city went from 11.3 per cent in September 1984 down to 9.3 per cent today.

In Quebec, the unemployment rate which was 13 per cent in September 1984 has fallen to 9.1 per cent, and since that period, 344,000 new jobs were created in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, behind all these figures are families that have a chance to grow and develop. There are men and women who now have a chance to show their potential and make their dreams come true.

Mr. Speaker, Quebecers now have the means to build their future.

The Free Trade Agreement, so important to a Quebec that exports 78 per cent of its production to the United States, is our passport to prosperity.

The Government will help small and medium-sized business take advantage of new export opportunities that are emerging as a result of the Free Trade Agreement.

As for the Meech Lake Accord, it is our passport to unity.

Mr. Speaker, I referred earlier to that bleak period in our history when Quebec was excluded from this country's Constitution. That must not happen again. As a Quebecer, I know only too well how dangerous this could be for Canada's unity.

I earnestly hope that the two provincial governments that have not yet had the Accord ratified by their legislatures will do so as soon as possible.

Canada's unity is absolutely essential to this country's social and economic development.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are aware of what we have done to promote unity and prosperity.

They took a careful look at our record in November 1988 and decided they would let the Government continue its task.

The Speech from the Throne is a clear indication that we intend to do so with diligence and determination.

However, much remains to be done.

We have begun to free ourselves from the crushing burden of the deficits accumulated in the past. In four years, we have reduced the deficit by nearly $10 billion.

We absolutely must continue and speed up this rehabilitation of our public finances. The next Budget will show our determination to do what must be done in this regard.

We have also resolutely begun the urgent task of cleaning up and protecting our environment. This too will require energetic new measures and an overall approach. In particular, we have started a large-scale plan to clean up the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River, as well as hazardous sites.

As was announced in the Speech from the Throne, the Government will present a new environmental protection plan to limit the environmental impact of toxic chemicals through the developement of regulations for the Canadian Environmental Protection Act; to improve the quality of our water, through new legislation; to preserve the environmental integrity of our Arctic regions; to improve the quality of the atmosphere by negotiating an acid rain agreement with the United States, by implementing the Ozone protocol signed in Montreal in 1987 and by puirsuing international efforts to control toxic emissions and to stimulate the evolution of international institutions in environmental matters.

To support its efforts for environmental protection, the Government has altered its operational practices and enlarged the responsibilities of the Minister of the Environment.

The Speech from the Throne also pointed out the importance we give to social programs, especially those meant for the family, seniors and low-income people.

The Government has also restated its commitment to establish a national child care program. It will continue to fight family violence and child abuse.

We will also improve the Young Offenders Act so as to better protect the rights of society, while advancing the rehabilitation of young offenders.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians have shown that they want to get on with the job ahead. They know that we still face formidable challenges as a society and as a country. Canadians also know that they can count on this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Gibeau: They know they can count on this Government to set the right course and to stick to it. The Speech from the Throne is a clear indication of our resolve.

Mr. Speaker, Canada has a rendez-vous with the future. The Speech from the Throne shows us the way to go. I therefore enthusiastically support the motion by the Hon. Member for Calgary Southeast (Mr. Richardson) on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe there is agreement to call it one o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, today marks the fortieth anniversary of the birth of NATO.

For 40 years the North Atlantic Treaty Organization has provided a forum for political and military consultation for 60 membership nations.

Today the 16 membership nations, of which we are one, are able to present a united front in the aim to defuse tensions and bring about lasting world peace. This is a far cry from the road we were on 40 years ago.

For the first time, last year France attended a NATO summit meeting. Spain is playing a bigger part in NATO activities. Greek and Turkish relations are moving in a positive direction.

Canada's role in NATO is not only military in nature, but it is symbolic of our close relationship with our European allies.

Our continued membership in NATO is therefore paramount to the success and survival of an organization that has played a crucial part in achieving political stability, global peace and security.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

OSCAR TROPHY AWARD

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on March 29, 1989, on the occasion of the National Film Board's 50th Anniversary, Mr. Marcel Masse, Canada's Minister of Communications, accepted an honorary Oscar granted by the Hollywood Academy of Arts and Sciences to the NFB's filmmakers for the excellence of their productions.

The Minister was accompanied by Quebec producer Anne-Claire Poirier and Alberta filmmaker Colin Low, from the NFB. On that occasion, the Minister thanked the Academy both in French and in English on behalf of the NFB's 26 million Canadian owners.

Mr Speaker, let me congratulate all our Canadian producers whose talents have made the NFB one of the world's most respected and honoured institutions.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION ASSISTANCE

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, eight native students on the thirteenth day of a hunger strike are in Ottawa to protest the Government's short-sighted approach to post-secondary education assistance for aboriginal students.

These are just a small number of nearly 15,000 aboriginal students now enrolled in colleges and universities across Canada. They fear that the recent cuts to student assistance will deprive them and potential students of the right to an education.

Over the past 30 years we have seen a tremendous increase in the number of native students entering the post-secondary level. Travelling from isolated communities where unemployment still soars over 70 per cent, these students depend on financial aid for their education.

After listening to yesterday's Throne Speech promising action on aboriginal rights, languages, and economic development, many Canadians find it a sad irony that the Government is actively discouraging this valuable tool of education for a new generation of aboriginal youth.

I call upon the Minister to meet with the students, listen to their concerns, and remove the economic barriers to higher education.

FISHERIES

ATLANTIC CANADA GROUNDFISH INDUSTRY

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of the House the crisis in the groundfish industry in Atlantic Canada.

During the last month three fish plant closings were announced in my South Shore constituency. We, of course, realize that the Government cannot create fish. Furthermore, I wish to commend and thank the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) for his active interest in this grave situation and for working co-operatively with both the Government of Nova Scotia and industry representatives in seeking solutions to this problem.

My major concern at this time arises from the fact that the fishing industry operates on credit. With our 300-plus fish plants in Nova Scotia operating at one-quarter of their capacity, survival is tenuous to say the least. Further increases in interest rates will be devastating.

Accordingly, I would urge the Government in establishing its budget and interest policy to keep in mind the potential impact of any further increases in interest rates on Atlantic communities dependent on the troubled groundfish industry.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

EFFECT OF STRIKE

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are all too aware of the strike that is going on at the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation involving members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees. It has robbed Canadians of some of the best radio and television programming in the world. It has removed some of the most famous faces and voices from our midst, and it has delayed production of full programming at the CBC thereby depriving and jeopardizing the CBC's ability to provide quality Canadian programming.

Because of cut-backs at the CBC, morale there has never been lower because of no clear commitment from the Government to the CBC. Employees at the CBC are concerned about their future. They fear that perhaps the next round of cuts means an end to their jobs.

Employees at the CBC deserve better. They deserve better than this perpetual uncertainty that goes on. What they deserve is a clear commitment from the Government of support of the Canadian broadcasting system, not support just to pick up awards.

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, four and one-half years ago our Government came to power with a commitment to improve the quality of passenger rail service after it had been slashed under the previous Liberal Government. We honoured that commitment.

Many people in Atlantic Canada who live in small rural communities far from airports consequently have come to rely on VIA Rail as their major source of transportation to the rest of the nation.

In addition, the closing of VIA Rail in New Brunswick would place increased pressure on our already over-burdened Trans-Canada Highway system. Economically the bottom line in Atlantic Canada is that over 500 jobs will be lost if VIA Rail is dismantled.

I therefore urge the Government to continue its strong support for VIA Rail and give the company the autonomy it needs to become cost efficient and competitive.

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND—FRENCH QUOTA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, we now know that the Government has agreed to allow French fishermen to overfish in Canadian waters for a three year period in return for an agreement to settle the Canada-France dispute over the south coast of Newfoundland.

Newfoundlanders and Labradorians have also been told that their former Fisheries Minister and newly anointed Premier is outraged at this action. The Premier wants to make it seem that he was not kept fully advised by the federal Government, that he was not on top of this issue. Perhaps this is yet again an example of the Government not keeping concerned provinces informed about issues affecting them.

Yesterday's Throne Speech waxed on about Canadians who fish for a living and are finding their catches reduced by predatory overfishing. How can the Government allow French overfishing in our waters while saying the opposite in the Throne Speech?

Newfoundlanders and Labradorians should be wondering why their Government has allowed French overfishing while seeing their total allowable catch reduced.

EFFECT OF NATIONAL DEBT INTEREST CHARGES

Mr. Ken G. Hughes (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, a full 31 per cent of federal government revenue now goes to pay interest on our national debt. Even if we were to keep our annual deficit at current levels, the total debt would continue to grow.

Where would we stop? Should we wait until we are paying more than 50 per cent of our revenues for interest costs as Members opposite might suggest?

No, Mr. Speaker. Now is the time to face the music.

In my riding of Macleod, consumers, homeowners, farmers, ranchers and others all pay higher interest rates in part because of the huge national debt. Since 1984 our Government has started to turn things around.

No family can live beyond its means, nor can any Government.

Canadians from all walks of life must work together to face this challenge.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GREECE—INDEPENDENCE DAY

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker I would like to take this opportunity to recognize formally the Independence Day of the country of Greece which is observed throughout the world by people of Helenic origin and ancestry. On March 25 of this year, Greece celebrated its 168 years of independence from 400 years of oppression by the Ottoman Empire.

While the number of years that Greece has claimed independence is short, the legacy which its rich history imparts to the world is very long indeed. If we are gathered here today in this Parliament which forms the core of the democratic principles which we hold so dear, it is because the scholars and ordinary citizens of ancient Greece struggled so passionately to give birth to a system which we can now accept as our supreme right as citizens of Canada.

Lest we lose sight of the fact that the state of Greece is the cradle of western civilization, it is only fitting that we take this moment to acknowledge the anniversary of Greek independence.

IMPORTANCE TO ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, VIA Rail is important to the maritime provinces. The Atlantic Limited is the flagship of their operations there. Besides providing a means of affordable transportation and serving as a crucial link in Atlantic Canada's identification with the rest of the nation, it is a major employer with growing revenues and significant ridership.

Maritimers have well supported it. The Government should well encourage that support.

THE LATE FATHER SEAN O'SULLIVAN

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay belated tribute to a friend, classmate, parliamentarian, and priest, Father Sean O'Sullivan, whose untimely passing last month left a nation in sorrow.

Father Sean's name was synonymous with courage. In his last fight with leukemia he certainly showed that courage, and in his political career he never hesitated to march to the tune of his own drummer.

Driven by idealism, Father Sean gave up the trappings and the so-called lure of politics to devote his final short years to God's work.

Sean's life was a life of vision and courage. As his friend the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said, it was a life of triumph.

I knew Sean not as a political opponent but as a classmate and friend. In my first political battle I ran against Sean as President of the Bishop Ryan Social Action Club. I must say that he beat me, trounced me soundly, and taught me a few lessons about politics.

Sean was always devoted to social change, to the betterment of the common person, and to a driving commitment to make his country, his party, and ultimately his church a more responsive and reflective agent of social change.

To his family, his parents Paul and Helen, his brothers, sister, and to his aunt Sister Joan, our heartfelt condolences; and to Father Sean, Godspeed.

INTEREST RATES—CALL FOR REDUCTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are aware that this country is now in the midst of an interest rate crisis, a crisis that will affect not only the farmers, workers, and small business community, but also people who want to buy homes.

You might recall, Mr. Speaker, that back in 1981 the Conservative Party was howling and complaining in the House about interest rates being much too high. At that time, the real interest rate in Canada was around 6 per cent. Now the real interest rate—the difference between the bank rate and the cost of living—is around 8 per cent, not 6 per cent. It is some 2 per cent higher.

In 1981 the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) were saying that interest rates were too high, they ought to be brought down, and that there ought to be a new Government to bring them down.

I now call upon the Government across the way to stop hiding behind John Crow and the Bank of Canada,and to bring down interest rates in order that the ordinary people in this country have a fair deal.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION STRIKE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the federally owned and operated Cape Breton Development Corporation and the International Association of Machinists have been involved in a long and bitter labour dispute. This dispute has gone on for eight weeks. As a result, 3,200 employees of that Crown Corporation are without employment, affecting communities across all of Cape Breton. It is causing havoc and disorder within those communities.

I believe very strongly in the collective bargaining process. However, I would like to ask that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Corbeil) and the Minister responsible for this Crown Corporation consult with senior members of management in order to order them back to the bargaining table so that they can begin the process of resolving this long and bitter dispute which is not only affecting the lives of families and children but indeed of a community at large. I urge the Minister to take that action immediately.

LEADER OF THE NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

TRIBUTE TO HON. EDWARD BROADBENT

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like very briefly to pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). He recently announced his intention of relinquishing the leadership of the New Democratic Party. I will do so with some moderation for the moment, Mr. Speaker, bearing in mind the fact that the Member remains at his post until next winter which will give us both ample time and opportunity to pursue the ongoing assessment of our respective merits.

I have learned it is also advisable to exercise prudence in commenting on a retirement from the leadership of a rival Party. Recent history has shown that an announced retirement is different from a real retirement.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, as I watched the Hon. Member for Oshawa tango at the Governor General's last night I can tell that you he didn't look like anybody announcing his retirement at all.

In fact it is much too early to imagine the Member, the very distinguished Member, in one of his radical chic leisure suits, puttering around in his Sandy Hill mansion, or blowing smoke from his famous Monte Cristo cigars while lounging on the beach in Rio after another exhausting meeting of the Socialist International.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I point out at the same time the Progessive Conservatives were meeting in Jonquière.

However, I know that whatever the disagreements we may have in this place, and we have had a few, and I suppose we will again, the Leader of the NDP will always remain faithful to the principles that his whole political career has in fact exemplified. For that, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Oshawa has earned the unanimous admiration and respect of all members of the House of Commons.

Tribute to Hon. Edward Broadbent

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!.

[Whereupon the House stood in tribute].

Mr. Mulroney: Because the Member never wavered in his support for those fundamental principles of equality and justice on which this country was built, and because he defended them with passion and intelligence within his Party and throughout the country, he has made a singular contribution to our national life.

I daresay, Mr. Speaker, that the New Democratic Leader already enjoys a special place in this history of his party, and that he greatly contributed to the development of our collective conscience.

It would be an insult to the New Democratic Leader's intelligence if I stated that I share all the positions taken by his Party, not to mention the fact that some Members of his caucus become quite susceptible when confronted with support from moderate quarters!

But when it came to major stakes involving our future, especially the absolute need for genuine national reconciliation in this country, the Leader of the New Democratic Party always put the nation's higher interests above every partisan or political consideration.

This, Mr. Speaker, has earned him I believe, the respect and affection of many Quebec men and women who, fortunately for me, were not concentrated in the same constituency.

• (1420)

I think there exists in Canada today a profound desire to get on with the job of preparing a better future for our children and their children. Canadians are no longer interested in fighting again the sterile battles of the past when the 21st century beckons.

This new spirit which we feel throughout this land, and throughout all political Parties in this Chamber, did not come about spontaneously. Nor is it the product of one man or woman or one political Party's action. It comes above all from a shared conviction that unity and harmony are the foundations on which we must build our future prosperity and strength.

Few people in this Chamber or elsewhere have contributed more to this new spirit, so beneficial for Canada, than the Hon. Member for Oshawa, the Leader of the New Democratic Party. To you, Ed, and to Lucille, whom we all enjoy and admire, I convey the genuine congratulations of the Government of Canada and the warm good wishes of all Canadians from coast to coast.

Tribute to Hon. Edward Broadbent

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I can break the rules at the outset, if I were you, Ed, I would take that as a prelude to an appointment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You and I know, Mr. Speaker, that politics is a rough profession; it is a tough game. The Leader of the New Democratic Party knows that. Politics is also an honourable calling. The House of Commons is an honourable place. The Leader of the New Democratic Party knows that as well.

I have always respected from the outset the Hon. Member's skill as a parliamentarian and his respect for this place. He is "a House of Commons man", if I can use that memorable phrase of John Diefenbaker, the ultimate compliment paid to anybody in this place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) stands in the great tradition, the line of Woodsworth, Coldwell, Douglas, Knowles, and Lewis. He stands by his beliefs. He fights for his principles, whether they be popular or unpopular. He understands the modern techniques of politics and uses them well, sometimes too well for our liking. He understands as well that values, principles, and judgment are just as important in public life and leadership as those modern techniques.

Obviously I do not agree with the Leader of the NDP about a lot of things. For example, I am not about to take his retirement announcement as any precedent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am listening, Ed, but I am not quite paying attention. I worry, too, as did the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), about praising my hon. friend too highly today, because even he has been known to change his mind.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the honourable Member never forgot the people in Oshawa elected him, and those constituents remained very faithful to him over a twenty–year period. And the Honorable Member for Oshawa fully realized that Canadian political parties must be national in scope. For the first time in the history of that party, he bound ties with Quebec. But in spite of everything, he kept his sense of humour. He always studied the problems carefully. He also realized that his political opponents also may have deep convictions.

[English]

I had better be careful here, Mr. Speaker. Looking to my left again and to the Hon. Member, in a direction that makes a lot of my Members nervous, I see that a good number of the NDP Members are fidgety. They suspect that I may in fact be launching a "Draft Ed" movement here.

In any event, we are paying tribute today to a fine gentleman, to an outstanding Canadian. He has been and will continue to be, as long as he chooses to stay, an ornament to this House. I say to him and to Lucille that he carries the full weight of our Party behind him. To both of them together, I wish them continued success, continued happiness, and thank them for their contribution to this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I guess it is safe for me to say a few words on behalf of our caucus about the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), since I am not going to be one of those who will be running to replace him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: I just want to make that clear. If I did not make that clear there would be a number of people behind me who would be poking me in the back. I can actually feel it now. I do not think they quite believe me.

The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) made some funny comments, attempts to embarrass to a certain extent our Leader. It is easy for them because they do not have to sit beside him for the next eight months.

I think it is fair to say that all Canadians see Ed Broadbent as a familiar face in their communities across the country, as a welcome face in their living rooms. I know we in the New Democratic Party see him not only as a great political Leader in the tradition of those who have gone before him but also as a great parliamentarian and as a great friend, because with Ed Broadbent, the Hon. Member for Oshawa, what you see is what you get. He says what he means and he means what he says. He believes that politics not only is a calling, and a very, very important calling in terms of it being a way to serve one's country, but should also be fun. Perhaps at a more appropriate time we will relate a number of occasions when Ed Broadbent had fun. Perhaps today should not be one of those days.

I want to say that the fact we are having a leadership race but do not have any runners indicates that we feel it is going to be impossible for anyone to replace Ed Broadbent and the kind of Leader he is. Today, Ed, we are paying tribute to you as a parliamentarian, as a friend of all of us here and a friend to all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that there is no Social Democrat like a dead Social Democrat.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to the words that have been spoken today. I want the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) in particular to know I have considered very carefully what they had to say just a few minutes ago about the role I played in this country, and the importance of expanding our Party in the Province of Quebec as well as elsewhere, and I want them to know I have changed my mind.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: No, I would not do that. I did doubt what the Prime Minister had to say about my propensity from time to time to enjoy the odd good cigar. I think he mentioned something about my having a nice suit, smoking a cigar on a beach in Rio, and my house in Sandy Hill. I just want to say to the Prime Minister that the people of Canada did not pay for my house or for my cigar, or for the trip to Rio.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: I did also notice those members of the Cabinet who were a little more reluctant than others to get to their feet, and I will keep that in mind in subsequent Question Periods between now and December. I carefully made note of that. It is on the visual record anyway. We can check those tapes.

As for the Leader of the Opposition, I noticed with a great deal of interest what he had to say about my decision. He said that he did not want it to be seen as a precedent. I noticed the reactions on the face of half his caucus members, and I would be happy to give him that list afterwards.

To be serious for at least a few minutes, on my part I do indeed appreciate the comments made by the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition, and of course my House Leader on behalf of my colleagues here in the House of Commons.

It has been an immense pleasure for me as Leader of the New Democratic Party of Canada to fight strongly and to the best of my abilities for the principles of social democracy.

[Translation]

. . .especially to make a special effort to establish a party able to deal effectively with the Province of Quebec and Eastern Canada. I find it very important, in that context, to listen to leaders and also the opinions of others who recently wrote letters, such as members of this historic House. It is one thing to work very hard, but it is something quite different to obtain the respect of one's opponents. May I express my very sincere thanks for these moments!

[English]

In the days ahead, in fact starting probably in about three minutes, all the opinions I have had in the past 14 years as Leader will be brought to bear in the Question Period. I say to my fellow Members of the House of Commons who happen to be members of Cabinet, Ministers of the Crown, that my vigorous debate, my points of order, and my questions of privilege have absolutely nothing personal in them, but look out.

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FISHERIES

CANADA–FRANCE AGREEMENT–EFFECT ON NEWFOUNDLAND

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister ended the last session of this Parliament by selling out Canada to the United States. The Prime Minister began this session of Parliament by selling out the fishermen of Newfoundland to France. Mr. Speaker, how does the Prime Minister really have the nerve to produce a Throne Speech which says that his Government will reduce "predatory overfishing" when his Government at the same time is giving France carte blanche to destroy our Atlantic fisheries by sanctioning overfishing by the French? Why this hypocrisy in the Throne Speech at the expense of the people of Newfoundland?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, presumably the Hon. Leader of the Opposition is referring to the agreement just reached between Canada and France which after 12 years results in the question of the territorial boundaries of Canada and France and St. Pierre and Miquelon being sent for final adjudication to an international court, a great achievement which has taken 12 years, Mr. Speaker, to accomplish.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there has been no sanctioning of overfishing in this Canada–France agreement. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the result on the south coast of Newfoundland in the disputed area of the 3PS results in France agreeing to take 10,000 less pounds of fish each year over the next three years than they had before announced they were going to take. These are disputed waters, not Canadian waters, Mr. Speaker. We have no authority over these waters until an international tribunal deals with the issue, and I am glad to say, Mr. Speaker, that we achieved an agreement that results in us having to agree to less quotas of fish for France in Canadian waters under the 1972 treaty of the hon. gentleman's Government; this the Leader of the Opposition in Newfoundland had suggested we do when he said that we were offering unreasonably small amounts to the French, which of course is a comment that the Hon. Leader of the Opposition might check upon with the Leader of the Liberal Party of Newfoundland.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would have thought that the hon. gentleman would have been defending the fisheries of Newfoundland instead of trying to justify the diplomatic note sent to France which justifies and sanctions that overfishing in favour of the French.

ENERGY

HIBERNIA OIL FIELD DEVELOPMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we all read the Throne Speech carefully. I wasn't able to find many of those "spending commitments", to use the term of the Minister of Finance, during May, during the campaign and endorsed by the Prime Minister during the campaign. I would like to ask the Prime Minister what happened to all those megaprojects which were announced that were supposed to help the various regions of our country, and specifically what happened to Hibernia which was supposed to bring untold wealth to Atlantic Canada?

Where is the deal that was supposed to be signed, sealed and delivered by March 31, and why is Hibernia not mentioned in the Throne Speech? Why is the budget of the Minister of Finance not being allowed to precede, or rather is being delayed until after the Newfoundland election? I will ask this of the Minister of Trade if he wants to answer on behalf of the people of Canada and the people of Newfoundland.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the right hon. gentleman in respect of Hibernia, keeping in mind his earlier statement when he was opposed to the megaproject, and I take it that he was also therefore opposed to Hibernia. That being the case, I want to inform the right hon. gentlemen that—

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: —that on Hibernia I met with the sponsors of Hibernia shortly after I was appointed to this Ministry. We went through the various aspects of Hibernia. I pointed out the federal Government's ongoing commitment to the Hibernia project and the statement of principles. We examined the statement of principles whether we could sign them on or before March 31, 1989. It was agreed that the legal documentation as well as the testing of the equity market would take more time.

We did put forward a statement that the federal Government, the provincial Governments and the sponsors are committed to the Hibernia project and that the date of 1995 remains operative and the statement of principles, and that is the position of the federal Government today.

In fact, I should tell the Right Hon. Prime Minister—the Leader—

An Hon. Member: You were right the first time.

Mr. Epp: I was right once but I was not right at the present time. There is a Prime Minister and he is not your Leader, and so what I say is this. There were certain numbers given to the Hibernia project.

• (1440)

Obviously as people have been looking at that project with new technology, that is, primarily the sponsors, there is a new examination of some of those numbers. However, the commitment on the project remains as it was before.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That answer is a far cry from the declaration of the Prime Minister in Newfoundland on July 19, when he said: "Today the dream has been realized". Where is that dream? There is no legally binding document. It has been postponed sine die.

Let me say to the hon. gentleman that I have always favoured the Hibernia project subject to a better return on royalties to the people of Newfoundland and Labrador.

SITUATION OF THE DISADVANTAGED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the essence of this Throne Speech is that the Government wants to cut back on assistance to the most disadvantaged regions and the neediest Canadians. Why does the Throne Speech say that the unemployed, whose unemployment insurance benefits will be cut, will have to pay for training programs? Why should ordinary Canadians, need their incomes to support their families, clothe their children and pay the rent, have to pay for four and a half years of Conservative incompetence? Why didn't the Government make helping the most disadvantaged and neediest Canadians its priority instead of giving that priority to nuclear subs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition wonders why the Throne Speech says that the unemployed and ordinary families and the needy have to pay the bill. The Throne Speech says nothing of the kind. It is a fabrication used by the Leader of the Opposition during the election campaign, and I assume that is one of the main reasons why the Liberals are in the opposition and will probably remain there for quite some time.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

UNIVERSALITY OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I may have lost some of my hair but I am still as strong as ever.

My question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Throne Speech had a lot to say about social programs but unfortunately, there is no assurance that the universality of social programs will be maintained. Is the Prime Minister prepared to give the House the assurance today, here and now, that the universality of social programs will be guaranteed during the next four years?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first let me say to the Hon. Member that we on this side of the House are delighted to see him back. It is the first opportunity I have had to congratulate him on his new responsibilities and also to say that it is obvious from that question that he has lost none of his old vigour.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the universality of social programs is a principle that is well accepted by the Government and by the people of Canada.

HEALTH INSURANCE PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Today, unfortunately, the Minister of Transport said on one of the radio stations that his Government would have to reduce the deficit by five billion and that this would be at the expense of established programs financing. Could the Prime Minister give the House the assurance that the health insurance, the hospital insurance program will not be cut in any way and that he will not make the provincial governments do the dirty work?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Government is committed to ensuring that Canada's health care system remains the best in the world. In terms of what steps will be taken in the future, the Hon. Member will want to wait until announcements are made by the Government, if any are to come.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Following the signing of the trade deal, the Prime Minister said on behalf of his Government in terms of the Government's attitude toward workers who would be negatively affected by the trade deal that the Government would produce a massive adjustment program. In December, this past year, the Prime Minister said that the Government of Canada would ensure there would be in place, "the finest programs that exist anywhere", to protect workers and communities affected negatively by this trade deal.

There have been two significant developments since then, the de Grandpré Report which produced no massive new adjustment program of the kind described by the Prime Minister, and yesterday's Throne Speech which targeted, of all things, the Unemployment Insurance Program in Canada, thus negatively affecting the one program that might have been helpful to workers who could be negatively affected in the future.

Why this complete contradiction between what the Prime Minister promised would be put in place for workers negatively affected and what the Government is actually doing?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first I think it is important that the Hon. Member read what is in the Throne Speech in reference to unemployment insurance. I want to assure him that there is no indication in the Throne Speech that people on unemployment insurance will be negatively affected. People who need unemployment insurance will continue to get unemployment insurance.

The speech says that my Government will propose amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Program in order to improve the program's effectiveness and its fairness.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister confirmed the point. We in the NDP believe that all those eligible for unemployment insurance are the people who need it now and in the future. That is what we are saying.

REQUEST THAT BENEFITS NOT BE REDUCED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister.

Will she guarantee there will be no reduction in unemployment insurance benefits in the future?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, let me assure the Hon. Member that there are three objectives in what we are planning. First, Canadians who suffer job loss will continue to receive the financial support they need, whatever the reason for that job loss, as they have in the past. Second, people who are unemployed want to work. We want to better match their skills with the jobs that are available to them and ensure that they can take advantage of those opportunities. Third, as the Hon. Member has said himself, training is the key to bringing those two things together. Those are the three objectives as stated in the Speech and what our policy will be.

Mr. Broadbent: Once again, Members of the House, and especially Canadians outside the House who can be affected in the future, will notice that the Minister did not give a guarantee that there would be no reductions in the future unemployment insurance pay-outs to groups of Canadians who are now getting them. We know the agenda. It is up to the Government to come clean and tell the people of Canada what it really plans to do.

CANADA–FRANCE AGREEMENT–EFFECT ON NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my final supplementary question to the Prime Minister, but since he is not answering I presume the Minister responsible for Newfoundland will answer.

The Government has given away to the French the right to fish excessively off the southern coast of Newfoundland. The deal the Government has entered into has been estimated to cost some 800 Newfoundland jobs. What plans does the Government have in place to compensate these 800 Newfoundlanders who will be negatively affected by this incredible deal.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the only thing incredible is the hon. gentleman's allegations in his question. There is no sanctioning of overfishing by the French in Canadian waters or in disputed waters. The French are agreeing to reduce their catch in disputed waters by 10,000 tonnes a year, which is a considerable accomplishment, and to allow inspection by Canadian inspectors, 12 inspections a year, and for the first time to give accurate data on catches.

I want to refer the hon. gentleman to what was said by Richard Cashin, head of the fishermen's union.

> We now have a settlement. It is probably the best that we could have done. We have, I suppose, the frame work before us now to ultimately resolve the very serious problem that affected fishermen primarily in the south coast of Newfoundland. . .nobody likes all the parts of it but I accept what Mr. Crosbie has said.

If it is good enough for Cashin, then it should be good enough for the Leader of the NDP.

FRENCH OVERFISHING

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister for International Trade, my distinguished fellow countryman from St. John's West. As he is now painfully aware, the Government's knuckling under to a foreign country reached a new low last week with the fish agreement with France.

I ask the Minister, given that the French have flagrantly overfished in 3PS for the last four years ever since this Government took office and that the fishery on the South coast of Newfoundland is a wipe-out this year because of French overfishing, why did he agree to the cave-in to the French?

How can he say with a straight face that this deal is in the best interests of Newfoundland and Newfoundland fishermen? In short, why did he, the Minister from St. John's West, pawn his birthright over this issue and why did he put the shaft to 15,000 fishermen and plant workers on the south coast of Newfoundland?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this Government has acted to protect and save the fishermen of the south coast of Newfoundland. Once this matter is settled by an international tribunal, the boundaries will be set on the south coast of Newfoundland. The disputed zone will exist no longer. Canadian fishing laws and regulations will be in effect and their long term future will be secured because we have taken a long-term approach.

I would like to point out to the hon. gentleman that in 1982 the then Liberal Government entered into an agreement with the EEC giving them 9,500 tonnes of northern cod for six years, 57,000 tonnes of northern cod they handed over to the European Community and 9,270 thousand tonnes of that went to the French. Where was the hon. gentleman then?

Mr. Clyde Wells said this on October 28, 1987:

> The EEC is giving up their share, some 9,500 tonnes. That quantity can be used to bargain reasonably with France and give France a significant portion of that 9,500 tonnes and try and bargain reasonably without in any way impacting on the inshore fisheries or Canadian fisheries in the area.

When he said that, the Hon. Member was a member of his caucus and we never heard one peep out of him when he said that.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, the Minister can quote Comrade Cashin all he wants.

Mr. Crosbie: What about Comrade Wells?

Mr. Simmons: Why does he not quote Buchanan who says it is a give-away, or temporary Premier Rideout who says it is a betrayal? Even his bosom pals in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia are disowning this cowardly deal.

I ask the Minister from St. John's West how he can stomach the situation that his political masters have put him in. What—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister, why does he continue to hang out with this bunch of weak-kneed amateurs who could not negotiate their way out of a wet paper bag? Why won't he consider washing his hands—

Mr. Speaker: I suppose there is a question there.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think I can discern at least an answer. Would the hon. gentleman explain to the Members of the House why in 1980 the previous Liberal Government entered into an agreement—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —to give 20,500 tonnes of cod a year—

Mr. Speaker: I think we will move on. The Hon. Member for Labrador.

MINISTER QUERIED

Mr. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the silent Minister of Fisheries. I want to ask him, as a willing saboteur to this dirty deal done between Canada and France, and a willing saboteur—

Mr. Speaker: I would say to the Hon. Member for Labrador that, although no immediate complaint has been raised, the Hon. Member is getting awfully close to using unparliamentary language. I would ask him to put his question using perhaps a more favourable word.

Mr. Rompkey: I want to explain to you and the House, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Fisheries is an accomplice in the sell-out of the northern cod on the 40th anniversary of the entry of Newfoundland into Confederation. We brought that stock into Confederation and the Minister was an accomplice in selling it out. I want to ask him, as a Minister of Fisheries who has now told Labrador fishermen that they do not count, that their future is immaterial to him, how can he stay on? How can he be the Minister of Oceans and sell out the Labrador fishermen, sell them down the river?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Labrador was seeking the floor on a point of order, and Hon. Members will realize, of course, that that is not done during Question Period. I will certainly hear him afterwards. The Hon. Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Which one?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentlemen are trying to fight the Newfoundland provincial election on the floor of the House, and I have been delegated to answer this kind of snide and ridiculous question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member.

Mr. Crosbie: I have not finished my answer.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF FISHERIES

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): My supplementary question is for the Minister of Fisheries who declined to answer my first question, who refused to answer my first question, is this. He has turned down two fishermen's co-ops on the coast of Labrador, the most disadvantaged fishermen anywhere in Canada. He has said, "No, you cannot fish northern cod". How can he do that and agree to give that very resource away to the French? How can he do that?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for directing the question more specifically. If Hon. Members choose to listen, the Hon. Member knows that we have quotas of northern cod allocated to Canadian fishermen under our enterprise allocation scheme which his Government set up several years ago under which we do not allow new entrants piecemeal because that encroaches upon the quotas available to other Canadian fishermen.

As the Hon. Member for St. John's West has pointed out, the Government of which the Hon. Member for Labrador was a part allocated to France a significant portion of 9,500 tonnes of northern cod. We have reduced that amount substantially to secure a lasting and historic settlement of a festering boundary dispute with France.

VALDEZ OIL SPILL

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who is responsible for the Coast Guard which is the lead agency for dealing with marine oil spills. Since the Valdez spill is now half the size of Nova Scotia, has spread over 750 miles of coastline and is now approximately 200 miles from hitting the most northerly part of the B.C. coast, would the Minister explain to the House why he has been unable to travel to view this largest spill in the history of North America?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would say to my hon. friend that, as of this morning, the reports we had from the U.S. Coast Guard are to the effect that the oil is still in Prince William Sound. It is just at the opening of the sound, at Cape Clear, 1,000 kilometres from the nearest Canadian border. The oil is moving away from the western part of Alaska toward the ocean and is not moving in the direction of Canada.

We must be very vigilant. The disaster is a terrible one and we are deeply concerned with it. We are exercising the utmost vigilance to make sure that the oil will not reach our coast.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the response we just heard was pathetic.

THREAT TO BRITISH COLUMBIA COAST

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I address my supplementary to the Minister of Transport. I confirmed with the Minister of Transport's own Coast Guard emergency officials an hour prior to Question Period that this spill is 50 miles south of Cordova, and for anyone who wants to look at a map it is 200 miles from the B.C. coast.

What is the Minister going to do? Is he going to move containment and spill clean-up technology to the north coast of British Columbia now while there is time to prepare, or will he wait until the oil hits our coast?

Mr. Benoit Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Member is wrong. I prefer to use figures given by my colleague which come directly from the Canadian Coast Guard. It is not the time to play politics with those.

TRANSPORT

ATLANTIC FREIGHT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, the threat of hard times ahead for Atlantic Canada implicit in yesterday's Throne Speech has unfortunately already borne fruit.

I have in my hand a copy of a letter dated yesterday to the Prime Minister from the Premier of Nova Scotia, John Buchanan, written on behalf of the Council of Maritime Premiers in which is raised the serious concern that the Atlantic Freight Assistance Program worth $90 million a year is about to be eliminated or reduced.

I quote Premier Buchanan in yesterday's letter: "According to a 1983 study in a worst case scenario, removal of the Freight Rate Assistance Program will result in job losses in the region totalling 12,100 and annual income losses to the region of $330 million".

The Prime Minister has that letter in his hands today. Is he prepared to assure this House, and through this House, Atlantic Canadians, that the the Atlantic Freight Assistance Program will neither be reduced nor eliminated as a consequence of the budget measures expected shortly?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the concerns which the Hon. Member has read out as expressed by the Atlantic Premiers. The Hon. Member is raising a speculative matter. He can understand that it is not possible for me to comment on speculative matters. The question is directed at what or what might not be in the Budget, and the Hon. Member will have to wait until budget time before he can get an answer to that.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I am sending a copy of the letter to the Prime Minister from Premier Buchanan to the Prime Minister.

PROVISIONS OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The matter is not speculation. Brian Wentzell, Chairman of the Atlantic Provinces Transportation Commission, informed me an hour ago by telephone that he has met with the senior staff of the four Atlantic Ministers and the senior staff of the Minister of Transport and has discussed this matter. He informs me as well that he has been told that one of the reasons for the eliminationn of this $90 million subsidy is the Free Trade Agreement.

My question to the Prime Minister is the following. Given the Prime Minister's assurances during last November's election that subsidies to the regions would not be affected by the Free Trade Agreement, why is Premier Buchanan writing this letter? Why are senior staff of the four Atlantic Ministers and the Minister of Transport telling the Chairman of our transportation commission that the program is about to be eliminated because of pressure resultant from the Free Trade Agreement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly what the hon. gentleman is talking about. He refers to some private conversations apparently he had about an hour ago. I am not privy to those conversations. I will be happy to review that conversation with him.

Apparently his respondent indicated that it was because of the Free Trade Agreement, in which case I presume that he was consulting with the Liberals and the financial critic of the Liberals who said that should the Conservatives touch any programs the move will be blamed by the Liberals on Free Trade even if the trade deal is not to blame. "Every sparrow that falls is going to be blamed on the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement", he said.

CHILD CARE

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare on the crisis in child care in Canada.

Six months have passed since the election was called and the matter is urgent. Why is there no legislative commitment in the Speech from the Throne to child care, and will the Minister table a new Child Care Act tomorrow?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne the Government made it clear that it had a commitment to the principle of child care. I suppose the Hon. Member can be excused because she wasn't here and that is why she doesn't recognize that it was the Liberal Senate which was responsible for not having child care legislation today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: We would have had this legislation today if it were not for a Senate which my colleague refers to as a Triple L Senate: "Liberal, lazy, and light".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: You can't say that. Withdraw!

REQUEST FOR ACTION

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, there is a child care crisis in this country and the Minister is trying to blame it on on somebody else. The Government's previous child care strategy failed in most respects to address the reality.

Will the Minister assure us that he will introduce a Bill that is responsive to the very real legitimate concerns of Canadian parents and the needs of Canadian children? Will he do it immediately?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member should know, elements of the child care strategy are already in place and are already working to aid Canadians.

Second, the Hon. Member should know that it was her colleagues in the House of Commons and in the Senate who are responsible for the fact that there is not legislation in place today.

AIR SAFETY

REQUEST FOR REPLACEMENT OF MINISTER

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Canadians, particularly those in my community of Thunder Bay and Dryden, Ontario, know there is a big difference between theoretical concerns over air safety and the shocking realities of an air plane crash.

So far this Government has taken no steps whatever to deal with the crisis in air safety other than having those who pick up the pieces change the reporting structure.

Will the Prime Minister accept his responsibilty for over–all government policy, start the process of rebuilding public confidence in air safety by replacing the Minister of Transport with an individual who is prepared to take charge of his Department and this matter, and restore public confidence?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it will save a lot of time if I say it in both official languages: I have absolutely no intention of resigning.

[English]

Mr. Benoît Bouchard (Roberval): I don't have any intention of resigning.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I think we are here in the House to deal with questions in a substantive matter. If the Hon. Member has any questions about air safety, I would be glad to answer them. And especially since Canada is known the world over as having one of the best air safety systems in the world.

Last year, we had over 5,600,000 activities with a minimum of accidents. Mr. Speaker, I believe that Canada's air traffic system works well and that the level of cooperation is excellent.

I may add that since the Hon. Member was referring to the terrible crash at Dryden, I hope he will not try to play politics with air safety.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. We were raising the concerns about air safety long before the Dryden crash. Any suggestion that we are making politics out of peoples' deaths is shocking.

Last week the Minister announced changes to the Aviation Safety Board investigation pattern. He made no announcement whatever about changes to prevent air crashes or air incidences in this country.

• (1510)

Since he seems to be prepared to stay on in the job and the Prime Minister is not prepared to get rid of him, I wish to ask the Minister when is he going to take action to deal with the preventive measures, and when is he going to bring forward a public inquiry into aviation safety in order that once and for all we can get at the root of the problem?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Last week, Mr. Speaker, we gave specific answers to specific problems concerning the question of Gander and the question of Dryden. We also announced a new bill on the control of air accidents, which I hope to introduce this week. I would suggest that is one part of the answer. Whenever an independent government agency will be in a position to guarantee normal operations. . . we do have a prevention mechanism. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I have at my disposal the resources I think are necessary. However, I made an announcement last week and on Thursday this week I will meet with spokesmen for the pilots, air carriers, controllers, and eventually inspectors, to decide if more can be done with the resources on hand, again with a view to avoiding such accidents as we had to cope with in recent days.

Mr. Speaker, I think we have what we need to proceed. There was a misunderstanding in an agency which does not come under the Government. This House set up the Aviation Safety Board and this House will replace it. As I said, all mechanisms, standards and regulations are available and we will continue to use them as we have done in the past.

MULTICULTURALISM

ALLIANCE QUEBEC OFFICE FIRE

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine—Lac-Saint-Louis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. The predecessor of the Secretary of State indicated that his Department would consider the special and unique needs of Alliance Quebec following the fire at its offices in Montreal on December 31, 1988.

Will the Minister be providing additional funding to Alliance Quebec to ensure that its operations can be restored?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship): Mr. Speaker, as Secretary of State, I am fully committed to promoting Canada's linguistic duality and supporting our official minority linguistic communities. This is a personal commitment.

Organizations such as Alliance Quebec and the Federation des francophones hors Quebec have made a significant contribution to these goals and their communities.

I am therefore very pleased to be able to award a grant of $120,000 to Alliance Quebec.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Weiner: This will help with some of the expenses incurred during the fire. I do want to thank the Hon. Member for his vision and leadership—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Haldimand—Norfolk).

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

EFFECT ON AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and part-time Minister of Agriculture.

On November 25, the Prime Minister stated, and I quote: "I want to tell Canadians we shall ensure innovative and generous adjustment and retraining programs will be introduced whenever and wherever required."

In light of this commitment and the fact that the recent de Grandpré Report proposes no special free trade assistance, would the Minister assure the Canadian public that he will reject de Grandpré's "trust don't adjust" philosophy and set up the programs the Prime Minister promised?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will answer the Hon. Member in the following manner.

The de Grandpré Report has allocated a couple of chapters to the agricultural industry and of course the recommendations are being considered.

It is important for any adjustments that may be necessary to be made in full co-operation with the industry. We have had ongoing discussions with the various marketing agencies, Agriculture Canada, and indeed with the provinces.

I welcome the Hon. Member's interest. I am sure that we will be pleased to invite his participation in this process as well.

SUPPLY MANAGEMENT SYSTEMS

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, we believe that the de Grandpré recommendations respecting agriculture are the greatest betrayal to our farming communities since Confederation.

Will the Minister not agree that the supply managed industries have been organized and comply well with GATT rules? Will he not today stand in his place and completely reject the recommendations as they relate to supply managed commodities in Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): I not sure what part of the report the Hon. Member read, or whether he understood the report. As I read it, the de Grandpré commission fully endorsed the concept of supply management, as we do on this side of the House and as we do as a Government. We have never deviated from that.

Mr. Gauthier: You haven't read it.

Mr. Mazankowski: I have read it. I have the two chapters right here in my hand.

The fact of the matter is that the supply management system is in place. What we have to do as a Government and as an industry is to ensure that the systems are preserved and enhanced to take into consideration the realities of the international market-place.

SOVIET UNION—PLIGHT OF REFUSNIK

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last week I met with refusenik, Mrs. Samoilovich, in Moscow. Her husband George, who is 66 years of age, is dying of cancer. The British Embassy in Moscow extended an invitation for him to be treated at the Royal Marsden Hospital in London, but he still has not received his visa.

I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he would intervene in this particular case with the Soviet authorities?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I shall.

VIA RAIL

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I would like to ask him why he made such a fallacious statement about the ridership on VIA Rail, and why did he want to mislead the Canadian public?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoit Bouchard (Minister of Transport): All I have to say about VIA Rail and what I have to say concerning the various Crown corporations and the decisions to be made is that they will come at the appropriate time.

FUTURE OF PASSENGER SERVICE

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I can understand why the Prime Minister would not want to answer, so I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Transport.

Will the Minister now lift the veil of uncertainty from VIA which was created by the Prime Minister, and reassure the Canadian public that there will continue to be good, comfortable, and efficient rail service in this country?

Hon. Benoit Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I just told my friend that the decision will be made in due course, and that is still the same answer.

PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION FOR DROUGHT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and it concerns the drought payment. The four provinces that are due to get the drought payment have been given very limited information. A drought map was produced which went out a couple of weeks ago, but there is no data going with drought maps to indicate what was the basis of the consideration, what was the average production considered for each township, and how the decision was made. This information is important not only for the Auditor General to monitor the program, but for the farmers to decide whether to appeal the situation that they have been put in with that map.

Can the Minister tell us whether the specific data will be made available, and when?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, to correct the Hon. Member, there are not four provinces eligible. There are five provinces eligible; the three prairie provinces, Ontario and Québec.

Second, all the information that was put out in the form of the maps is preliminary. The basic information was all obtained from the provinces, so the provinces supplied the federal Government through their crop insurance agencies with the information on which those maps were based.

The information was based on a loss to coverage ratio through crop insurance records, which was exactly the procedure that we used in 1985 that people did not like.

The maps are preliminary. Once we have final data from the crop insurance corporations we will be in a position to issue final areas that will define how the full payment will be arrived at.

RELEASE OF DATA

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister tell us how soon the information will be available? There are over 100,000 farm families trying to decide whether to appeal or not. The appeal boards will have to know where that data sits so that they can deal with the appeals. The bureaucrats will have to know what the numbers are precisely so that they can figure out what the payments are.

When will that data be available to the farmers, the appeal boards and the bureaucrats themselves, so that we will know how much farmers can depend on for this coming crop year?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks a good question. Let me try to provide him with some good information so in fact he can provide some good information to his own producers.

First, we will not have the information from the crop insurance agency until about the first of May. As soon as we have it it will then be made available through maps. There is no sense in applying for an appeal presently because everybody should know that the data on which the preliminary payments are made is just exactly that, preliminary data.

So, for crying in the bucket, tell your farmers, your neighbors, to wait until we get the final data because the program was designed by farmers. They wanted us to target it. They wanted us to be crop specific. They wanted to get down to the smallest possible area. That is exactly what in fact we are doing. It is a farmers' program, designed by farmers. It is going to be a good program once the Hon. Member sees the full details of it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that I understand that there has been an agreement between the Parties to pay certain tributes. I would ask the Hon. Minister of Energy to commence.

AIR ONTARIO CRASH

EXPRESSION OF CONDOLENCES

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government of Canada I would like to express my heartfelt condolences and sympathy to the families and friends of those who died in the Air Ontario crash in Dryden, Ontario.

The crash showed to us as Canadians that ordinary Canadians are capable and willing to perform heroic acts. This was done by air flight personnel, as well as by those who attended the crash site. But air accidents also impact on families, communities and our country. It snuffs out the lives of those who were filled with hope and with anticipation. It affects communities and the leadership these individuals have given. It affects people at a personal level. It affects people whose only response can be the question as to why.

One of those families was laid to rest in my home community of Steinbach, a friend, a colleague, someone I grew up with. So I say to them and to all of those affected by the air disaster that our prayers are with them and with their families and that the Government intends to find out and answer the reason as to why.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Like my colleague, it is with sadness that I rise today.

On March 10, 1989, at approximately 12.10 p.m. twelve residents from the City of Thunder Bay, four residents from the district of Thunder Bay, two residents from other parts of Ontario, two residents from Alberta, one resident each from Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, and one resident from the United States came to their tragic death as a result of the air crash one kilometre from the Dryden airport.

I refrain, Mr. Speaker, from mentioning their names in respect to the surviving relatives. I am certain that all Members of the House express their profound sympathy to the relatives and close friends of the victims and our hopes and prayers for a full and complete recovery of the survivors.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I too want to join with the Minister of Energy (Mr. Epp) and the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Comuzzi) in offering my condolences and those of my Party to the families, friends and neighbors of the victims of Air Ontario flight 1363.

Too often we think that events such as an air crash are something that happen in another country to somebody we do not know. As the word started to trickle through Thunder Bay on the Saturday morning, as the word got out as to who some of the people were on the plane who perished, who survived, one could feel the shock going through Thunder Bay. I know that the Minister of Energy spoke of a friend of his. Well, that friend and his family lived on my street. We were all affected by it.

Even those people who did not know anybody, and in a community of 120,000 people its possible that everybody knew somebody on the plane, came to the memorial services and felt the grief and wondered why. I think that as we all reflect on what has happened, our hearts go out to the victims' families, our heart goes out for the trauma that people have gone through in terms of the survivors.

Our thanks also go out to that wonderful little community up in the bush, Dryden, Ontario, whose people reacted so fantastically. To those who opened their stores to provide food and clothing, to those who looked after the people, to the fire crash rescue people who were on the spot in literally minutes, we say thanks for how you responded and how you opened your arms to your neighbors and friends.

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to relate to you my feelings as the Member for Kenora—Rainy River. On that day, March 10, I was sitting in my office. I heard that this accident had taken place. I was a little numb as to what to do. As a Member of Parliament, one gets a lot of requests and a lot of areas of concern brought forward, but never something of this nature. So I did what I normally do and went by my gut reaction. I flew to Dryden. On March 11 I went to the site.

I would like to tell you, Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House that there are no words to explain how miraculous it really is for those individuals who survived the crash. To those people who did not survive the crash and to their families, I offer my personal condolences and the condolences of the Members of Parliament here.

I would also like to take this moment to ask everyone here to give thanks to those individuals who used their swift action and cool heads to save more lives. Those are the individuals who had the ability to keep a cool head, to get out of that plane to help other people who were trapped and to get into the bush before the plane caught fire. I would like to thank those people who reacted so swiftly in that situation.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all those volunteers who moved so quickly to try to save lives. It is something that I as a Member of Parliament will never forget. It is not something that I want to forget because as I do my job here for the people of Kenora—Rainy River, I will always remember that accident because I was there. When we talk about safety I think it will be something that I can easily visualize. I will have a better feeling for what it really means. I think we as parliamentarians should always remember what we are really doing here, that is, trying to protect the people we represent. We cannot do that if we lose site of what that really is.

Mr. Speaker: I think that it is probably appropriate if Members would stand for a moment's silence.

[Editors Note: Whereupon the House stood in silence.]

Mr. Speaker: I should advise Hon. Members that I have several matters of privilege to hear. Then I will be answering to the House with respect to questions of privilege this morning and to two applications for emergency debate.

I will hear first from the Hon. Member for Edmonton Southeast.

PRIVILEGE

IMMUNITY OF MEMBERS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I rise on what I believe is an important point of privilege, one potentially affecting all Members of this House. The issue is the immunity, if any, of Members of Parliament from giving evidence in civil trials against their will.

Your office, Sir, was provided with a letter and copies of relevant documents relating to a defamation action still under way, I believe, in the B.C. Supreme Court in Kelowna. That was at approximately 1 p.m. today.

May I immediately stress, Sir, that I am not raising this point because of any false notion that MPs are or should be above the law, in this case a subpoena, but because I believe strongly that what men and women tell us in confidence in our constituency offices, they do not believe that we are later going to divulge it in a court of law in a civil action. Our justice system affords privilege to most solicitor/client communication. Should we not afford as much to MPs meeting with Canadians?

As to the matter at hand, about two weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, an out-of-province subpoena was authorized by B.C. Supreme Court Justice Patricia Proudfoot. A good deal of correspondence by fax followed which included a legal opinion from our parliamentary counsel, Mr. Marcel Pelletier, asserting my right to be exempt from attending as a witness in a court of law. On March 29, a letter faxed from one counsel to the action indicated that I was ordered by her Lordship to appear in person the next day in Kelowna.

Appearing in court as ordered, I attempted to convince Her Lordship that an irresistible force was colliding with an immovable object. The court eventually ordered me to be sworn, and thereafter in effect directed me to reply to a question to identify a number of individuals who had come to my constituency office in April of 1986.

The court adjourned for lunch when I declined to identify those persons. On reconvening, Her Lordship again indicated I should identify my visitors, but counsel for the plaintiff withdrew the subpoena, for which I am obviously grateful, just before the court ruled on the contempt citation. Her Lordship later said that she had intended to cite me for contempt.

The question in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, is obviously unresolved at least in the Province of British Columbia and probably well beyond. It is important, I believe, for all Members of this House to know what the law is in this matter for all of the provinces of Canada. It is important that Canadians know that they can come to us in our offices and speak to us in confidence and not later have that matter in effect forced out of us in a court of law. I speak only of course of the civil actions. If you find, Sir, that there is a point of privilege, I ask that you would make the appropriate motion.

Mr. Speaker: I first of all want to advise the Member for Edmonton Southeast (Mr. Kilgour) that I have looked very carefully at the material which he filed with the Chair and I will consider the matter with considerable care and return to the House at the appropriate time.

Mr. Gauthier: If the Chair could make copies available to us on this side of the House, we would appreciate having copies so we are aware of what is going on; indeed we are upset by this whole question.

Mr. Speaker: I will arrange to comply with the request.

VALDEZ OIL SPILL

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since Question Period, I have had the opportunity to speak with the Minister regarding motions, and there is an important matter of fact that I wish to address in terms of privilege. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard (Roberval)) referred to the figure provided, I take it, by the U.S. Coast Guard of the slick known as the Valdez slick as being 1,000 kilometres from the nearest point of British Columbia. I have here with me—it is not the easiest thing to use in the House, Mr. Speaker, but it is a Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, Surveys and Mapping Branch which includes all of Canada, but in particular—

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member would allow the Chair to interrupt him, not because this is not a very serious matter, and I might suggest to the Hon. Member it can be discussed perhaps later, but I have to say to the Hon. Member that it is not a question of privilege, and I think that it would not be appropriate to continue at this time, and depending on what happens later today, I may hear the Hon. Member further.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, but keeping in mind what you said, Mr. Speaker, I just want to make one point clear because I think the Ministers may well want to respond to it because there are trans-boundary rivers—the Alsek, Tatsenshini, the Stikine which are in fact parts of—

Mr. Speaker: Well, the Hon. Member's geography is exact and I can assure that those rivers are just where they are and I know exactly what the Hon. Member is worried about, but as I say, it is not properly a question of privilege. Perhaps the Hon. Member will have a chance later for further discussion.

Mr. Boudria: But it is a good point.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Milliken: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. During Question Period today, the Minister of National Health and Welfare in one of his answers, and I am sorry he has left the House, this is one of the problems of this rule, but the point of order must be raised after the Question Period—

Mr. Epp: Give notice, it works.

Mr. Milliken: I did give notice. He left for a meeting, but I will raise the point and he can reply to it another day. He gave an answer to a question, Mr. Speaker, which in my submission violated Rule 18 of the Standing Orders which states that no Member shall speak disrespectfully of a sovereign nor of any member of the Royal Family or so on, nor use offensive words against either House or any member thereof. Mr. Speaker, in my submission the answer given by the Minister contained references to the other place which in my submission were contrary to the words and the spirit of Standing Order 18, and I would respectfully request that the Minister take the appropriate steps when he returns to the Chamber.

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the Hon. Member and I am very familiar with the rule. Perhaps now that the Hon. Member has raised the matter, we will adjourn until we have a chance to hear what response there may be from the Minister. I thank the Hon. Member.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I advised the House that I will return with respect to the matters raised this morning which received very careful attention indeed. This morning I received applications for emergency debate under Standing Order 52 relating to three separate items. I ask the indulgence of the House and I want to refer to the privilege motions first.

I have now had the opportunity to review the alleged question of privilege raised earlier this day with the Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam (Mr. Waddell) relating to the fact that Bill C-204 has yet to be proclaimed. I am unable to find that the Member's privileges have been infringed by this circumstance. The Hon. Member may remember that I did indicate that at the time of his argument.

In relation to the alleged question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert—Churchill River (Mr. Funk) regarding the timing of drought payments, I will again reiterate the point I made earlier this day that while the Member may feel that he has indeed a grievance in relation to this matter, and I think at the time so may his constituents and others, I cannot find that his privileges as a Member have been breached. I therefore cannot find a prima facie question of privilege.

I point out to the Hon. Members, and to the public who is listening, that there is of course a difference between a grievance and a question of privilege. Privilege can only be sought and claimed when indeed something has been done which actually does impair the capacity of the Hon. Member to carry on their duties, and I find that in these cases that is not the situation.

As I started to say, this morning I received applications for emergency debates under Standing Order 52 relating to three separate items: The matter of aviation safety, the removal of oats from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, the oil spill outside the Port of Valdez.

Let us deal first with the question raised by the Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) and the Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) on air safety.

• (1540)

First I should like to quote from page 18 of Hansard for February 18, 1972 when Mr. Speaker Lamoureux stated:

> I believe Hon. Members will recognize that it would not be easy to justify adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 at the very moment when we have before us the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. . .

[English]

The reason for this caution on the part of Speaker Lamoureux, and indeed other Speakers in the past, is that during the Throne Speech debate it is an easy matter for Members to debate subjects over a wide area and it is difficult, therefore, to meet the criteria required for an emergency debate under Standing Order 52(5) which states:

> In determining whether a matter should have urgent consideration,. . .the Speaker shall have regard to the probability of the matter being brought before the House within reasonable time, by other means.

[Translation]

If I may repeat the last sentence, I must have regard, and I quote:

> to the probability of the matter being brought before the House within reasonable time, by other means.

[English]

In the case of air safety, and also the case of removal of oats from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, where the matter may be brought before the House by other means, I do not find that the criteria of Standing Order 52 have been met, and I will not therefore allow an emergency debate at least at this time.

However, in relation to the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), I do find the criteria of Standing Order 52 have been met. The matter proposed for discussion does relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration.

I therefore set the matter of the oil spill outside the Port of Valdez down for debate at 8 p.m. this evening.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her speech at the opening of the session.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I move that the debate be now adjourned.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The debate is therefore adjourned.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: An emergency debate will commence at eight o'clock this evening. The House will open tomorrow at two o'clock. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The sitting of the House was suspended at 3.45 p.m.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 52

[English]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

VALDEZ OIL SPILL

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has granted leave to the Hon. Member for Skeena to move the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 52 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the oil spill which occurred outside the Port of Valdez. Accordingly the motion is as follows: Mr. Fulton, seconded by Mr. Riis, moves "That this House do now adjourn".

I should say to Hon. Members and the public that in effect this is an emergency debate which has been applied for and has been granted by the Chair with respect to the oil spill in Alaska and its consequences, possible or otherwise. Accordingly that is why we are debating tonight when ordinarily we do not sit in the evenings. I recognize the Hon. Member for Skeena.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved:

That this House do now adjourn.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very important and timely emergency debate not only because of the pending problems that coastal life is having right now as a result of the Alaska spill, but in relation to a number of other spills that have occurred recently on the west coast of North America affecting British Columbia.

It is important to have an historical understanding of how the Port of Valdez came to be where it is and why the north slope crude is coming from there and on down the west coast of North America. It was in 1972 that this debate was really in full flight in British Columbia. Of course the consensus among British Columbians at that time, including that of the then Premier of British Columbia, the present Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett), was that there should not be tanker traffic down the west coast of North America carrying that crude. There were other suggested means of moving that oil, rail being one example.

We know that at that time it was reported quite widely in Canada that the U.S. Coast Guard predicted that there would be two million litres of spills annually on the west coast of North America as a result of this route having been chosen from Valdez out of Prince William Sound, down the coast of British Columbia to the ports in the northern United States, in California, and some down through Panama. However, a decision was made to go ahead and construct the port and to start moving U.S. flag tankers. They move only under the Jones Act. These are American flag and crude vessels.

We have seen a series of catastrophes in the last 18 months. I think it is important that we have that in chronological context before dealing specifically with the Valdez spill.

The most recent and the worst is the Exxon Valdez spill. Prior to that there was a 186-tonne spill from the barge that was going into Grays Harbour on December 22, 1988, which ended up on the west coast of Vancouver Island.

Prior to that, on October 4, 1987, a vessel known as the Stuyvesant spilled 600,000 gallons into the water off the Queen Charlotte Islands, but it drifted westward and did not come on to the shores of the Queen Charlotte Islands. However, it is interesting that this this same vessel, the Stuyvesant, continued to ply those waters, and I quote from the material provided to me by the Library of Parliament:

> For the second time during 1987, the U.S. tanker Stuyvesant sustained structural damage in heavy weather while departing Valdez, Alaska, en route to Puerto Amuerelles, Panama, and spilled more than 600,000 gallons of Alaskan crude oil into the Gulf of Alaska. This is the first time that a single ship has been responsible for the two largest oil spills off the U.S. coast in a single calendar year. It is also the first time that a single ship has caused two major spills in the same geographical region for the same general reason within a relatively short period of time–less than ten months.

The Government of Canada did nothing to respond to the crisis that clearly existed in terms of tanker technology. It is becoming increasingly clear, as I think Hon. Members will realize if they listen to me this evening, that some of the corporations which are involved such as Exxon, Sohio, Standard, and others, are doing little other than acting as corporate goons when it comes to their real concern about the environment.

Briefly on the Grays Harbour spill, the barge that was being pulled by a tug on December 22 hit a sand bar as it attempted to go into Grays Harbour, and the environmental protection people from the State of Washington ordered the tug and barge offshore. Rather than having it come in where it could be safely contained, brought on shore and pumped out, it was sent offshore. Rather than even taking the normal precautions that one would expect the U.S. Coast Guard to advise them of, which is to try to curl the slick into a containable area, they went in a straight line and almost the entire slick ended up on the west coast of Vancouver Island. This is where we started to find most clearly what I describe as the "Don't worry, be happy" attitude of the Government of Canada.

The Canadian Coast Guard and the Minister said: "Don't worry, be happy, the slick is going to go offshore," even while it was continuing to be monitored as moving toward one of our national parks, Pacific Rim National Park and Long Beach, where a very large chunk of it ended up. That slick is continuing to come ashore, as we stand here this evening, up as far as Nootka Sound.

That spill happened to be Bunker C which is not as toxic, bad and persistent as the oil spilled by the Exxon Valdez, but it has done considerable damage. It has killed thousands of birds and seals. It has damaged inter-tidal life such as clams and near-shore animals such as crabs. Eagles have died as a result of eating polluted and contaminated materials on the beaches.

As we found in that case, it was volunteers from British Columbia who did the majority of the work. Hundreds of them turned up, and I think the House of Commons owes them a debt of gratitude for having turned up in the numbers that they did.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: We have to keep in mind that it is the federal Ministry of Transport which is the lead Ministry. It is the Coast Guard which is under the administration of the Ministry of Transport that is the lead agency in Canada for marine oil spills.

Of course, interestingly enough, just today, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) released the Maritime Pollution Compensation Fund report to which I will refer a little later this evening as soon as my friend digs it out of my material here.

The Coast Guard never actually co-ordinated anything, in my view. The Provincial Emergency Program, PEP, never co-ordinated anything. In the State of Washington, the U.S. Coast Guard got involved in what I describe as horizontal administration of the spill. It arranged for taxis, for dry cleaning, for hot food, and for training. It had plastic bags and all kinds of mobile equipment and so on. It had several thousand volunteers cleaning up the smallest part of the Grays Harbour spill that ended up on Washington soil. In British Columbia, there are still tonnes and tonnes and tonnes of it.

I held a task force in Vancouver just a few weeks ago and people came all the way down from northern Vancouver Island. They had taken days off of work. They had rented their own vehicles and bought their own equipment. In just one day they gathered 6,000 pounds of Bunker C off one little beach, and there were eagles flopping around in the bush covered with oil from eating contaminated foods. They could not fly. They were there to starve to death. That is the legacy of the Souse Brothers and the Coast Guard response and everyone saying "It's not really our jurisdiction; we can't really do anything".

I was appalled and continue to be appalled at how the Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia responded to the real need to co-ordinate volunteers. Why were the 75 professionally trained Department of National Defence personnel from Esquimalt not out there? Why did the Government never send them out?

Cleaning up oil spills is a tough, dirty job once it gets on the beach, and that brings me to the real reason for this evening's debate, which is what happened with the Exxon Valdez. It is something we have to look at very carefully. If we track the Stuyvesant we find inadequate, dangerous tankers going up and down our coast. The U.S. Coast Guard predicted an average of two million litres a year in spills during the lifetime of the Valdez traffic up and down our coast. We have to look carefully at that.

On March 24, the Exxon Valdez pulled loose. Apparently the captain was intoxicated. At least that is what has been reported. The man deserves a trial, and I assume he is going to get it fairly soon, as soon as the warrant is served and he is arrested. The third mate should not have been at the wheel.

The real environmental criminals in this issue are the ones who are at the top, Frank Iarossi for one. There need to be laws in this country, laws in the United States, and international laws around the world to deal with the Iarossi of this world.

For three days after the Exxon Valdez ran on to Bligh Reef nothing was done. I have spoken to oil spill experts. Frank Iarossi never picked up the phone and asked for containment booms from Canada, from Alaska, from Washington, from California, or from Hawaii where Exxon had another spill of 125,000 litres. There was another massive spill in Antarctica. Of course it is the B.C. coast that has been getting the most recent spills.

However, what did Exxon do? For three days there was no wind, no problem. The oil was still in Prince William Sound. That vessel should have had at least three containment booms around it and the slick lickers should have been operating around the clock cleaning up the oil. That spill is now 2,700 square kilometres, which is half the size of the Province of Nova Scotia. It is a monster and it is starting to come out of Prince William Sound. Prince William Sound is basically contained by islands, but the oil is now pushing its way out through Montague Strait passed the Bligh Reef. As it moves out, pieces of the spill are peeling off and are moving south westerly, according to Exxon this evening.

A northerly wind is blowing over the height of land from Cook Inlet down toward Prince William Sound, keeping the oil from going on to the coast. We now have 750 miles of coastline either dead or dying. The seal otters are dying. The seals are dying. The whale pods are moving through and the blow holes are polluted. The herring are contaminated. The crabs are contaminated, and then there is our halibut, the eggs of the halibut. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the eggs are laid on the ocean floor of the Queen Charlotte Islands. They hatch and go up and live as worms near the surface of the ocean. They drift up into the Panhandle of the Gulf of Alaska. They live near the surface.

An oil slick that size is killing hundreds of millions of juvenile halibut. Our dungeonness crabs, which everyone from the State of Alaska to British Columbia loves to eat, live as juveniles in the surface waters and float along on those currents that move up along the Aleutians and with the Kiero Shield current down of the Queen Charlotte Islands. Death and destruction is massive.

I am serious when I say people like Frank Iarossi are environmental criminals. They are the ones who should be before the courts, not Mr. Hazlewood. Exxon knew he had a drinking problem. Why did Exxon have someone with a serious drinking problem at the head of VLCC carrying that kind of uncontainable damage and destruction if it ever got into the west coast and its environment?

My friend reminds me of something. Why wasn't there a pilot vessel guiding the tanker out of Prince William Sound? Why? It is always the bottom line for the big tanker companies and big oil companies. Why wasn't the Valdez guided out to clear water? Why was the third mate there? The captain was below deck, possibly intoxicated, because Exxon management did not have the kinds of enforcement mechanisms in place to make sure something like this did not happen.

I come now to one of the discouraging parts: how our own Coast Guard and our own Ministry of Transport, the lead agencies, have handled the situation today. We have now heard, almost on a daily if not an hourly basis since March 24, "Don't worry, be happy. The spill is 1,000 kilometres from Canadian territory". As I pointed out today, every Member of Parliament gets an atlas sent to his or her office. There is a map in it from Energy, Mines and Resources. As I pointed out, the mouth of the Alsek River is 200 miles from where the slick is as it comes out of Montague Sound. One would have to be a highly suspicious person— and, Mr. Speaker, you know I am not—but some gerbil somewhere decided "Well, let's keep the public calm. Tell them it is so far away it is out of mind. Nobody needs to worry about it". That is amazing. I know that British Columbia exists at about the latitude 54. If I had been alive in 1903, the Panhandle would have been part of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: I do not know why the 1,000 kilometre figure continues to be used. It was used right until today. We know that it is not even 100 kilometres from Montague Sound to the Queen Charlotte Islands. I do not know where this mysterious 1,000 measure comes from. I do know that 750 miles of coastline is now covered. The distance to British Columbia from the slick, where it is starting now to purge itself out of Prince William Sound and out of Montague Sound, is 200 miles to the Alsek River. We can do something to protect the Alsek River. This should be done now, not when the slick hits the mouth of the Alsek. You have containment technology now in case there is a glitch, a hitch, a windy day, or somebody gets sick. We have to plan so that we can deal with containing these kinds of things. The Alsek should be protected. The Tatsenshini should be protected. The Taku should be protected. The Stikine should be protected.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: We also have a military base at Massit, a Department of National Defence listening device. We should be stockpiling some equipment there. We should be stockpiling it at Prince Rupert where there is a Coast Guard base. We should be ready because the vital, determining factor as to whether or not the largest spill in North American history ends up on our coastline in British Columbia is wind, w–i–n–d. The current off the mouth of Montague Sound and Prince William Sound moves upward and along the Aleutians. The Kuro Shio current below that comes across from Japan and brings debris like glass and garbage to the coast of the Queen Charlotte Islands.

Wind is the important factor. Exxon, the Coast Guard and everybody else want to say that wind is not the factor, but what happened on the fourth day after the spill, March 28? The wind was blowing at 100 knots, 100 kilometres an hour, at the site of the spill. If a northwesterly or a northerly wind picks up, which is very frequent at this time of year, and sustains itself not for weeks but for a matter of days, parts of that oil slick can and will reach parts of British Columbia. There is no use in then having the Minister of Transport phoning Vancouver saying: "Send a ship". It is 500 miles to get to the Queen Charlottes, and it is another 400 miles to get up to the Alsek. We are talking about considerable distances, and planning is required. We can hope the wind does not start blowing that material up on to our shores.

Many things need to be done. Some are very serious and some involve technical planning. It is reasonably clear with the amount of tanker traffic—Valdez tanker traffic, traffic in the Strait of Juan de Fuca, traffic into the Vancouver and Victoria harbours, traffic into Prince Rupert, traffic on the east coast where there is far more tanker traffic, hundreds and thousands of large freighters and tankers, transit off Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Québec every year. We need a royal commission to look into the safety of tanker traffic and to find out whether or not our regulations are the best they can be and whether or not the proper enforcements are there. We know they are not there right now. We need to have that done. We need to evaluate the present impact on Canadian resources.

As I said, Canadian resources are being affected now, today. Canadian salmon from our transboundary rivers are being affected now. Herring stocks upon which they feed are being affected. That situation needs to be evaluated. We need a scientific team. We need to evaluate potential areas in the track of the spill. This means the rivers I have enumerated, plus the Queen Charlotte Islands and the coast to the South. We need to prepare and move the clean–up and containment equipment about which I have spoken in the transboundary rivers to the Queen Charlotte Islands and Prince Rupert.

We must take steps now that we began in 1972 to stop Valdez tanker traffic. What was said in 1972 is true today. There will continue to be spills of this size according to the trajectories projected by the U.S. Coast Guard 17 years ago.

How do we go about that? It is going to mean some difficult and costly decisions, but intelligent people and intelligent legislators take those types of steps. Tightening of regulations and enforcement for a system that is clearly out of control are obviously on the list.

I hope later this evening to speak about an even broader issue, the whole issue of the use of fossil fuels in North America. The whole of North America has 5 per cent of the global population. We consume 25 per cent of the fossil fuels consumed on the planet. The U.S. and Soviet Union together produce 50 per cent of the greenhouse gasses on this planet.

If we are to maintain the atmosphere and the environment that we have and have had for geological time, we have to reduce greenhouse gas by 50 per cent. Perhaps the Valdez spill is a signal to us to shut down these types of developments and get on with energy efficiency and conservation programs in order that we have a habitable an liveable planet.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is timely and appropriate that the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) has urged upon you a special debate regarding this very serious tragedy which occurred in Prince William Sound as a result of an oil shipment from Prince William Sound to the southern states of the U.S. It reminds Canadians, Americans, and British Columbians particularly of the tremendous responsible that we all have to ensure that in a society where we all depend on oil and energy in one form or another there are great risks associated with the transport of this energy. We must have confidence in the systems in place and assurance that the precious natural habitat and amenities of nature are not threatened by a tragic disaster of this magnitude.

To put this spill in context with another recent spill, the Grays Harbour spill as the Hon. Member for Skeena referred to it, this spill is some 50 times larger in magnitude, and it amounted to only about a fifth of the total capacity of this vessel being spilled in the early morning hours of Good Friday about ten days ago.

As a British Columbian, and as the Minister responsible for Fisheries and Oceans for Canada, Mr. Speaker, I can only tell you that we are not merely standing passively by and watching. We are certainly concerned. I would like to think Hon. Members opposite are as concerned as their spokesman was in his lead speech a moment ago. There is no monopoly in this House on concern for our precious habitat and for the necessity to ensure that this type of accident shall never occur in British Columbia coastal waters.

We have to be precise when we are discussing this very serious issue. I know there is room for a lot of emotion. In particular, I am concerned about the possible threat to our own British Columbia fisheries and marine mammal stocks, if this spill were to move in a direction where it might endanger the biological species and the precious values that we cherish so highly in British Columbia.

The Hon. Member for Skeena does the House a disservice when he makes statements, as he did in his letter to you this morning, Mr. Speaker, which are not true. It is important to recognize that at the present time, based upon the advice of our best scientists, oceanographers, and meteorologists, the oil spill is not moving toward Canadian coastal waters or the Canadian mainland. In fact, at the present time, the oil spill is moving to the southwest out along the Aleutian Peninsula and into the high north Pacific. I know that it is a great concern. We are all concerned that the 750 miles of shoreline within Prince William Sound has been hit with this disaster. We do not like to see the pictures of sea otters, marine mammals, and birds coated with oil and dying.

If we are going to assess this tragedy and learn from it, it is important that we tell the facts as they are. The Hon. Member for Skeena in his letter to Your Honour this morning stated: "the oil spill is clearly moving toward Canadian waters and the Canadian shoreline". It is important in the House that we give the facts accurately, and in fact that is not true. He further asserted in his letter to you that we must "mobilize the Canadian response to this spill as it damages our resource and moves toward Dixon Entrance." These statements are not true.

I can assure Canadians, as the Minister responsible for the Canadian Hydrographic Service and our Ocean Sciences Divisions that based on their direct observation and aerial surveillance—and I have full confidence in the accuracy of these facts when they were relayed to me—the oil from this tragic spill is not moving toward Canadian waters or toward our shoreline. I repeat, the oil from the tragic Valdez disaster is not moving toward the Canadian shoreline.

The oil spill from the Exxon Valdez has spread very predictably following the known current patterns, and as it has emerged from Prince William Sound and the Gulf of Alaska it is moving westward. I am sure the Hon. Member for Skeena and all Members opposite are familiar with the shape of the movement of the oil as of yesterday to the West.

Initially the spill spread generally southwest with the outflow within the Sound. Once it escaped from the Sound it was caught up in the large circulation which is characteristic of the northeast Pacific at this time of year. It is counter-clockwise, moving from east to west along the northern edge of the gulf.

I am not trying to diminish the problem. I am just trying to underscore the facts. It is imperative that Canadians be assured at this time that on the basis of all our best scientific evidence the spill is not moving toward the Canadian shoreline. Indeed, the predictions that have been made are holding true. The oil is presently due south of the west edge of Resurrection Bay. There are no signs of any oil west of that point. In consequence, I can say with full confidence that the oil is moving to the west and not toward Canadian waters, nor toward Dixon Entrance which is in fact more than 1,000 kilometres away.

I also want to make an observation on the intervention of the Hon. Member for Skeena. It was a legitimate and appropriate observation to make in the House this afternoon when he suggested that the spill might be a cause for concern with respect to the Alsek River. I am not sure if the Hon. Member for Skeena knew where the Alsek River was before. It is in the extreme northwest corner of the constituency of the Hon. Member. It is a short river with a bay called Dry Bay within the Alaskan Panhandle on the northeast Pacific. This river extends across the narrow section of the Alaskan Panhandle into Yukon and into northwestern British Columbia, and it splits into two rivers.

There is no evidence that the spill is moving in the direction of that river. The Member says that it might, and I grant that there is always a minimum probability of anything. The officials, the scientists, the officials of the Coast Guard, and the Department of the Environment who have advised Ministers are quite convinced that it is highly improbable that this oil spill will move in that direction toward the Alsek River.

It is important to understand that transboundary rivers such as the Nass, Taku, and Stikine, contain migrating stocks of salmon. In the mid-summer to the late autumn, adult salmon return to those rivers. Should there be an accumulation of oil in the mouths of those rivers, which are in American territorial waters, there would be a possible damage to such salmon stocks, some of which return to Canadian headwaters and spawning grounds. They are the property of Canada. This is not August, September, or October. That does not give me any more comfort in respect to the spill, but there is no immediate danger to returning Canadian salmon stocks, nor is there a danger to the young fry that have been hatched in the upper waters of those rivers. I am told by our best fishery biologists that the young fry will not migrate down toward the lower reaches of the river and the salt water until at least July.

I am not diminishing the significance of the issue the Hon. Member has raised. I am suggesting that to focus this matter as a crisis because there is an assumption the oil is moving in the opposite direction to which it is moving is irresponsible.

As to the response of the Government of Canada to this environmental tragedy, I can assure Canadians that our response to this date is exactly what they would expect from a Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: Members opposite are accustomed to taking half sentences and interpreting them out of context.

Canadians would expect a Government to place the highest priority on protecting our natural resources and environment. That was the message of the Throne Speech yesterday, and it is a strong commitment of this Government.

An Hon. Member: All words, no action.

Mr. Siddon: The action is ongoing and has been since the early morning of Good Friday, ten days ago. We are extremely concerned about the spill which has occurred in Alaska and the environmental consequences on the people of Alaska, on the marine life they enjoy and depend on, and on the wildlife of the area. We British Columbians share with our Alaskan neighbours a very real sense of loss and of alarm. We certainly would not want to allow a situation where such a spill could occur within our own coastal waters.

Second, I can assure Canadians that their Government is now and has been, since the disaster was first reported, vigilant in monitoring the efforts of U.S. authorities who are responsible for controlling the spill; vigilant in monitoring the oceanic and climatic factors which can affect efforts to control the spill; and vigilant in tracking the movement of the oil. I can assure Canadians that we are in a state of readiness to respond.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: Hon. Members opposite laugh, but I can assure them, and the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) will add further evidence of this—

An Hon. Member: He is in pretty good shape.

Mr. Siddon: They choose to be sceptical. The facts are that we are equipped to respond and, if need be, we shall respond to any necessary measures. I should point out that we have offered and given assistance to the Americans in the clean-up of Prince William Sound. We have offered and delivered assistance toward that end.

An Hon. Member: You haven't invoked the treaty.

Mr. Siddon: The Hon. Member will take his opportunity—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I do want to restate that the reason we are having this emergency debate is that there is a matter of great urgency. I know that all Hon. Members would want to hear from all those who wish to contribute to this debate. I am sure the Hon. Members would want to extend the appropriate courtesy to the Minister who is responding to the Hon. Member for Skeena who led off the debate.

Mr. Siddon: I think all Members will want to be attentive through the entire evening, and I appreciate the co-operation of the members of the Opposition.

We are prepared to take whatever steps may be needed to protect Canadian waters and shorelines if this oil should move toward us, which it has not.

We have provided the services of our respected herring biologists to assist the United States in planning measures to protect the herring which spawn in Prince William Sound. We have provided technical devices to help the United States track the presence of oil in the waters throughout the threatened area. We have provided the authority needed to bring oil-soaked otters from Alaska. I personally signed the authorization last Friday to bring oil-soaked otters to the Vancouver Aquarium to be treated and rehabilitated. This was a request received from wildlife officials in the State of Alaska. We are sending our specialists in this very sensitive discipline to Alaska to assist in saving as many marine mammals and species as possible.

We have taken these actions—

An Hon. Member: Did you give them an air ticket?

Mr. Siddon: Obviously opposition members do not want to hear what the Government is doing. They are just trying to exploit a situation for cheap political reasons that we all very much regret.

I can assure the House that this Government stands ready to deliver additional assistance as is required and to ensure the protection of our own coastal habitat.

In response to some points the Hon. Member for Skeena has raised, our scientists advise us that our herring stocks live very close to shore and do not migrate north into U.S. waters. Our scientists advise us that the salmon fry in Canadian waters are not at this time endangered in any way. They acknowledge that halibut spawn and that similar groundfish species and pollock which reside along what is called the margin of the Gulf of Alaska Continental Shelf may, as they mature, swim into Canadian waters. If the oil spill were to remain in the Gulf of Alaska for an extended period of time, there might well be some damage to the halibut stocks which eventually will become part of the Canadian fishery.

We were assured by our scientists that our marine mammals, our seals and sea otters and sea lions from further south that live in Canadian coastal waters, would not be affected by this spill. We are certainly concerned about the whale populations which do not respect international boundaries. They are so precious to the people of British Columbia, in particular our orcas and grey whales. There is an absence of scientific knowledge on how these species travel and how they would be affected by surface oil slicks. We are certainly vigilant. This is an unprecedented situation, never before encountered in this magnitude. We have a great deal to learn. I acknowledge that to the House.

If the oil which is not now moving in our direction were to change course and to threaten our shores, I can assure the House, and Canadians that we would act efficiently and quickly in accordance with a well thought out response plan, which the Government has developed and which other Ministers will describe later this evening, to respond to this kind of emergency.

Oil spills occur from time to time in Canadian marine waters, to our great sadness, but we are a nation which depends on oil. I do not imagine there is a Member opposite who will not return to his home tonight without using a little bit of hydrocarbon to get there. My Department's roles during these kinds of emergencies emanate from my responsibilities; first, to protect fish, marine mammals, shellfish and marine plants, and their habitat. Second, they are to ensure the wholesomeness of the fish products. Third, they are to provide scientific information and advice relating to the marine environment. Key actions taken by Fisheries and Oceans at the time of any spill are numerous and varied, but we are always on the scene as quickly as we know that there is a need to be there.

Under the National Marine Emergency Plan, co-ordinated by Transport Canada, we provide the on-scene commander appointed by Coast Guard, forecasts and climactic information on the physical state of the ocean, advice on oil spill movement, and on trajectory and revisions to trajectories based on currents, tides, waves and winds. We also provide the location immediately of critical fisheries resources and the timing and location of fishing activities that have to be taken into consideration.

My Department also can conduct emergency resource surveys and analytical measurements of oil, as well as the measurement on site of tides, currents, waves and temperature. We ensure that adequate ship facilities are provided to all agencies involved in the emergency operations which require it. We always have a Fisheries and Oceans vessel on site wherever there is any cause or need for them to be present.

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Minister who is first to respond to the Hon. Member for Skeena. We are bound, of course, in this place by rules, and there is a time limit. However, if it is the wish of the House to allow the Minister to finish, of course we can do so.

I think the Minister can continue.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I will leave it to the Hon. Minister of Transport to describe the form of action planned with respect to containing and ensuring vessel traffic management to protect Canadian shores from a spill of this sort. I want to assure all Canadians who are watching this debate that they can have full confidence in their Government, that the Government is prepared to respond appropriately, and that in my area of responsibility we provide the scientific and resource assessment services that are required immediately.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, and the Canadian people once again, that there is no evidence that this spill is moving toward Canadian coastal waters. There is no evidence at this time of any significant impact of this horrendous event on our own coastal species of fish, of marine mammals, and of other living things. I trust, as the days go by and as we watch these events unfold, that we will continue to have the confidence that Canadians should have in the ability of the Canadian Government to lead and to respond to protect the interests of all Canadians in such circumstances.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is a timely motion. I welcome, as do we all in our quarter of the House, the relevancy and the urgency of this debate. In particular it is an urgent question on the west coast of Canada, particularly in those waters on the west coast of northern British Columbia bordering on the Alaska Panhandle and on the sovereign State of Alaska.

I must say that we expected at the outset to hear from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard). He was not here. The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon) got up, but after listening to the Throne Speech yesterday wherein one and a half to two pages was dedicated to environmental matters, the new environmental priority, the new environmental preparedness, I think the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) should be here to respond to this issue tonight.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What we have is an environmental disaster of monumental proportions on a world scale, something we have never seen not only off the west coast of North America, the west coast of British Columbia, but something we have not seen since oil has been transported by sea. Because of the so–called environmental concerns of this Government, the Minister should have been here in the House of Commons. He was here this afternoon. He should have replied.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Charest: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Believe me, it is with great regret that I rise on a point of order, especially considering the fact that it is the Right Hon. the Leader of the Opposition who (Mr. Turner) is speaking at this point in time. However, I cannot honestly let go the comment that he has made on the absence of the Minister in the House when in fact the Minister will be here to speak on this very important issue and when in fact the Member, and all Members, know very well that such a remark is against the rules. I want to point out clearly and unequivocally that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) will speak on this issue tonight in this debate.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I could respond to the intervention of the Hon. Minister. I know that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will not take it amiss if I suggest to Hon. Members that the Hon. Minister has stated the rule. Whatever doubt anyone may have had about the concern of the Hon. Minister, it has certainly been replied to by the Minister who said that the Hon. Minister of the Environment will be in the Chamber to speak this evening. I would ask Hon. Members to remember that all of us sometimes have to be elsewhere than in the Chamber.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we are living here, and I will say this to the Hon. Minister who could better spend his time at the Dubin inquiry—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am going to say to the Hon. Minister that this is not a presidential style of government when Ministers come in at their own pleasure in their own time. This is a parliamentary Government in which the Minister should be listening.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If he had any other engagements this evening he should have set them aside. This is an environmental tragedy and this Minister should be here to listen to the Members of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I do not usually draw attention to the absence of Ministers, or even the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), when he has important issues of state—

Mr. Charest: Or your own absence at one time.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): When I have to be here I am here, and on an environmental occasion this Minister ought to be here.

It is quite clear that this is not the first time that this has happened. On December 22, we had an oil spill off the State of Washington. There was damage then to birds and to sea life and the coastline of Vancouver Island. At that time, despite the meagre entreaties of the Minister of Fisheries—and we will wait to see what the Minister of Transport has to say, and if the Minister of the Environment shows up, fine—there was no action by the Government of Canada at all. It was not prepared. If it had not been for the residents of the area that would also have been a disaster, and they know it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries made a very complacent speech. He said that on the basis of the current winds and the current tides we have nothing to worry about. I would far rather rely in this instance on the first-hand knowledge of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) who is there, who knows the geography and who is relying on the maps.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I happen to believe that if there is a change of wind and if the tide were to compound with that wind that spill could seep across the Panhandle on to the west coast of British Columbia, down through the Prince of Wales Islands off the Alaska coast and into the Queen Charlottes. That is not beyond the realm of possibility, dealing with the amount of oil that we are dealing with in this current spill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will rely on the fact that this is a threat. Anyone who has had the opportunity, as my wife Geills and I have had, as have many British Columbians including yourself, Mr. Speaker, to visit the Prince of Wales Islands and the Queen Charlotte Islands, to see what a priceless asset we have in this country, knows that this is where some of the greatest aquaculture of the world is found.

I have been fortunate in my life to have visited up and down the west coast of British Columbia and Alaska to veiw that spectacular coastline. It is one of the world's environmental treasures. There are limitless nesting grounds for hundreds of varieties of birds. There is a spectacular diversity of marine life. It is home to a dozen species of whale, as well as to the Stellar sea-lion. The fisheries are unbounded. It has been the home for 6,000 years of the Haida nation, the Haida people, decimated as they were in the mid-19th century by smallpox out of a voyage out of San Francisco on the way to the Alaska Panhandle. In any event, this is something that is worth protecting. This is something that Canadians consider important. This is something that is apt and just to be debated on the floor of the House of Commons this evening, and I congratulate the Hon. Member for Skeena.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we all seek economic benefits. We all seek good jobs. We all want to develop the resources of this country as best we can. I think the lesson of this debate is that we are not going to have economic growth if we poison our fish, destroy our salmon, and contaminate our herring. We are not going to have tourism if our waters and our beaches turn to sludge and scum. The environmental imperative, the idea of sustainable development, is one that despite the rhetoric of the Throne Speech I believe all of us in the House of Commons accept.

Any Member of this House knows the terms of environmental imperative which I quoted on several occasions. I had an opportunity three or four years ago with Geills at a potlatch, illegal under the Indian Act, of meeting with the four chiefs of the Haida nation.

An Hon. Member: You were there?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I was there. We spoke. An expression the Haida people have said for 6,000 years stayed with me and I put on my Christmas card: "We do not inherit this land from our ancestors; we borrow it from our children." That is the whole purpose of this debate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I do not hold the Government responsible for every environmental disaster every place in the world, but I do hold the Government responsible for failure to act on the problems upon which Canadians must have a say. I think that we cannot judge what is going to happen as to the negligence aboard that ship. It is not for me to make a final judgment of where he was. He certainly was not on the bridge, and there was an unqualified person in charge of that ship at the time of the accident. I am not going to cast any judgment there.

I followed the reports in the The New York Times of the response of the State of Alaska. The State of Alaska has enjoyed in recent years a boom in terms of the oil that it has shipped southward to the lower 50, so that almost 75 per cent of the governmental revenues of the State of Alaska now depend on oil. However, in the review conducted by The New York Times, inquiries of the Governor's office, and the inquiries of the environmental protection office of the State of Alaska, it appears that over the last few years all the emergency equipment, all the emergency teams, all the emergency procedures have been allowed to lapse and in some events disbanded.

That is the situation we face in dealing with our American neighbours, and we are not going to make any judgments at this stage. I will have a few suggestions to make at the end of what I have to say.

Yesterday's Throne Speech was laden with fancy phrases about the Government's commitment to environmental protection. I have heard it all before from this Government. It is not good enough to say you care. Everybody cares, but not every Canadian has the opportunity to do something about it. The Bouchard twins have the opportunity to do something about it, and I have not seen any concrete action on their part.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Nearly five years ago the Conservatives promised the following in their election manifesto, and I want to read from it: "A Progressive Conservative Government will make transboundary pollution problems the Government's top environmental priority. Instead of relying exclusively on diplomatic initiatives by the Minister of the Environment, a PC Government will also engage the Prime Minister and the Minister of External Affairs on top level efforts."

What happened in this particular instance? I suspect precious nothing. I have heard that President Bush sent a couple of members of his Cabinet and a couple of secretaries at the secretarial level to the scene of the accident. I want to ask the Government: Has the Prime Minister called the President of the United States about this issue?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Have they discussed it? Have they brought it to the level that the election manifesto of the Conservative Party five years ago said they would elevate this issue to? Now we see the Minister of the Environment here. I will give him credit. He is looking intense. Somebody must have tipped him off to come back into the House—

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would stay low because we are going to get at you in due course.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Charest: I can't wait, John.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We will reserve an opportunity for the Minister so that he can star and shine in his own orbital light. All we have seen for four and a half years since this Government took office is cuts to the environmental budget.

[Translation]

And now that both Ministers are here, now both Ministers claim that environmental protection is a priority. They did not say in the Speech from the Throne that they wasted four or four and a half years, that they cut Environment Canada's budget and that they massacred the national parks, that they eliminated scientific personnel who did tremendous research that was to Canada's intellectual credit. No, no, there was no mention of that in the Speech from the Throne.

[English]

As long as environmental issues are trendy, the Prime Minister is all for it. As long as a la mode, the Minister will be for it. As long as experimental issues might win a few votes and provide good photo opportunities, the Conservative Cabinet is all for them.

But we cannot protect our environment only when it is fashionable. We cannot support sustainable development only until the newest trend emerges. We cannot be concerned about oil spills only when they are on the national news. We cannot only be for environmental issues until they conflict with multinational interests.

Canadians have a reason to be concerned. If it can happen there, it can happen here. We want to know how well the Government is prepared. The Government has a lousy record on the environment. We have no faith whatsoever that it has studied the issue. We have no faith whatsoever that it is prepared for the impact that this catastrophe will have and could have on our west coast.

There are about 50 supertankers a day plying those waters, Alaska to the U.S. mainland, hundreds of smaller tankers in the Strait of Juan de Fuca and Georgia Strait.

The Minister of Fisheries said: "it is unpredictable, we never know it could happen". Experts have always told us it was just a matter of time before something like this would happen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): When we had the responsibility of office we were always cautious of the potential danger of oil spills on the west coast. In 1972 we imposed the moratorium on exploration and development off the west coast. In 1977 we signed an agreement with the United States to keep tanker traffic well offshore. In 1984 this Government, lobbied by the industry, recommended that we allow exploration. Since the accident, of course, the British Columbia Government has extended that moratorium another five years.

Contingency plans always look good on paper. Exxon told the residents of Valdez and Cordova that it had such plans in the event of an emergency. Those residents of Alaska are now asking what happened, why didn't those plans materialize, why wasn't the State of Alaska ready, why wasn't the Coast Guard ready, what had happened to the oil consortium mobilizing that pipeline and moving those millions of barrels of oil down the West Coast, where was the strategy? We are asking our Government the same questions. What are the contingency plans if it happens at or near our coastlines, east, west, or north?

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has said once again that it is unprecedented. In 1972 the U.S. Coast Guard report, five years before the Alaska pipeline was completed, predicted that there would likely be an accident once a year in Prince William Sound. That was the view of the Coast Guard of the United States years before this movement of oil started.

The Canadian Government is not even sure how far away the oil slick is from Canadian waters. I ask the Ministers concerned what evidence they have that our coastlines are protected. I believe we can learn not only from the current disaster. We may have some lead time to prepare ourselves for the impact on the Canadian coastline.

We have committed ourselves to the concept of sustainable development. It is in the Throne Speech. The Minister of the Environment has a very important charge in his hands now. That commitment is being tested. I say to him that there are great dangers for us. We need now high level negotiations with the United States on how we will transport oil out of the northern slope.

It is not just a question of alliances, it is not a question for the head of state. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is not the head of state, but he thinks that he is. In any event, he is the head of government.

Now is not the time for general conversations and for paying each other compliments. It is time to ask the President of the United States how he can mobilize the U.S. Government and the Government of Alaska, as well as the federal forces on the West Coast of the United States, to coordinate their efforts. All the reports in the New York Times, the Washington Post and the Los Angeles Times—and I have read them all—agree that the U.S. Federal Government efforts were not sufficient, that the State of Alaska was not prepared, that Exxon was not prepared either to contain the effects of the tragedy.

Now, we are neighbours, we are good neighbours. We share their coasts, their waters. Now is the time for the Prime Minister to telephone his friend, Mr. Bush, and say, "Mr. President, the consequences for both of us are quite serious and worrisome. We must now coordinate our efforts."

That is why I respectfully make some suggestions, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

We will have to look at a number of things. First, we should consider the possibility of reducing the traffic. Is the volume too high? Some 25 per cent of all American domestic oil now comes from Alaska, so much so that the price of world oil was affected immediately by this oil spill. We have a very vulnerable situation.

Second, should we reduce the size of the tankers to limit the damage potential? Third, should we ensure that the shipping channels are as far away as possible? The 1972 agreement with the United States put that limit at 125 miles. Is that sufficient?

Fourth, should we allow winter traffic with all the risks as outlined by the Hon. Member for Skeena of tide, wind, storm, and unpredictability?

Fifth, is there a possibility that we should extend the moratorium on exploration and development off the west coast? These are issues that the Minister of the Environment should treat seriously. This is the first test of his ministerial responsibility. It is not something that he can duck.

This is an issue about which all Canadians are concerned. He knows as the rest of us do, even though we do not take polls at government and taxpayers' expense, how important the environment is to the ordinary Canadian who is worried about his children and family. We are the most fortunate nation on the face of the earth.

We are a nation dictated by geography. We are a nation governed by our environment. We are a nation that still has an open frontier. If the Minister and the Government do not understand that they do not understand the force of this debate. I am asking the Minister to act now, before it is too late.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by discussing the measures taken by the federal Government following the Alaska oil spill. I will not try to use the tactics of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) because I believe the matter is too important to try to play politics with. It is something about which I believe every Canadian is very sensitive tonight.

I agree with the points raised by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). I believe that, once again, from St. John's, Newfoundland to Vancouver, British Columbia every Canadian is worried about the environment.

Personally, as the Minister of Transport, I am very proud to be responsible for the Canadian Coast Guard which I believe has done a wonderful job in the circumstances. My remarks tonight are more to give Canadians information about what can be done and what we have done in the circumstances. The federal Government has reacted immediately.

My colleague, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard), the other twin, and myself announced that the federal representatives would monitor the situation closely in order to ensure that appropriate measures would be taken in those circumstances.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to state again, for the information of Canadians, that Valdez is 1,000 kilometres from the nearest point on the Canadian border north of British Columbia.

[English]

This means that the oil slick would have to travel 1,000 kilometres to reach Canadian waters. Initial assessments indicate that oil will not reach our shores. Nevertheless, the Coast Guard has requested that both Environment Canada and Fisheries and Oceans keep it appraised of the trajectory of the spill. In addition, we have a Coast Guard observer permanently on the scene.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Coast Guard also has an information office on the spill in Vancouver where information can be obtained at all times.

Since then, ongoing evaluation has indicated that it is and remains very unlikely that the spill will have an impact on Canadian waters. Based on ocean currents and seasonal climatic models, the Canadian Hydrographic Service predicts that the spill will continue to move west and southwest towards the Aleutian Islands. The spill could reach Canadian waters only in the event of 20 days of steady northwest winds.

Mr. Speaker, we have also taken the following action.

At the request of Exxon, the Canadian Coast Guard has made available a number of special systems for the recovery of hydrocarbons, with their operators. Equipment from the depot in Tuktoyaktuk includes 1 skimmer, 1 Framo ACW 400, 2 oil slick removers with spare parts, and from St. John's, Newfoundland, 1 skimmmer, 1 Framo ACW skimmer, 1 oil slick remover, 1 GT 185 Destroil skimmer, 1 Mark V slick-licker and 1 Swedtrawl.

Mr. Speaker, other measures have been taken as well. For instance, External Affairs Canada has asked the U.S. Department of State to keep it fully informed of further developments and of any possible impact on Canadian waters and resources.

The Department of National Defense will provide additional flights for pollution surveillance, if necessary.

Canadian industry, with the approval of the Canada Oil and Gas Lands Administration, has made arrangements to have the Beaufort Sea equipment operated by the Sea Oil Spill Cooperative shipped by air to Valdez, Alaska.

The Canada–U.S. emergency plan for water pollution is now in effect in order to facilitate transborder shipment of clean–up equipment.

Mr. Speaker, on site in Alaska, Exxon is now transferring the remaining cargo to three ships that will carry it to U.S. ports. The Exxon Baton Rouge has taken on 463,000 barrels, Exxon San Francisco 400,000 and Exxon Baytown will take the rest. It is expected that operations will finish today.

Undersea tests suggest the ship can be salvaged. The intention is to refloat the Exxon Valdez.

Mr. Speaker, the ship's side is intact, but there are still concerns as to the impact of unburdening on her overall stability. Other undersea tests are underway to determine the hull's integrity and the ship's stability. A restricted traffic zone and a control zone have been established in the area. Exxon is now concentrating their efforts on the protection of fish spawning areas.

Mr. Speaker, resources now in place in Alaska include 884 personnel, 100 ships, 49 helicopters, 2 airplanes, and anti–pollution equipment totalling 1 223 tons.

I would now like, Mr. Speaker, to deal with a number of systems that have been developed and located on the West coast to ensure the safety of bulk oil transport. These are:

a) Sophisticated maritime traffic management systems using radar and radio communication systems to monitor and guide the movements of ships in heavy traffic ports and areas of high tanker traffic density.

b) On the West coast, Mr. Speaker, it is excessively important that Canadians be aware of the following rules—on the West coast of Vancouver Island, a special zone has been set up from which tankers are excluded, in consultation with the industry, to ensure that tankers ply well off the coast. Those arrangements provide that tankers keep 125 miles off the Canadian coast at the Northern tip of the Queen Charlotte Islands, some 60 miles off the North coast of Vancouver Island and some 25 miles off the coast for those entering the Juan de Fuca Strait.

c) A system of navigation lanes in the Juan de Fuca Strait, jointly controlled by the American and Canadian Coast Guards, ensures the spacing of in– and outgoing ships, which also are monitored by radar.

d) Mr. Speaker, long–range navigation aids are jointly offered by Canada and the United States to ensure that ships off the coasts can pinpoint their position at sea, and the Coast Guard radio station network broadcasts weather forecasts and nautical safety bulletins to all ships.

e) Upon entering Canadian territorial waters, these ships use the impressive system of short range navigational aids and a compulsory pilotage system which provides local navigational data.

The Pacific Pilotage Authority, Mr. Speaker, is responsible for pilotage in all Canadian waters in and around the province of British Columbia.

The Authority's Regulations establish five compulsory pilotage areas, namely:

1) The Fraser River;

2) The East coast of Vancouver Island and the West coast of the continent between Pine Island and Race Rocks;

3) The West coast of Vancouver Island, from Race Rocks to Pine Island;

4) The West coast of the continent, from Pine Island to Stewart;

5) The waters around the Queen Charlotte Islands.

All ships that are over 350 gross tons are subject to compulsory pilotage except Canadian or American ships which are employed in the coastal trade between British Columbia, the State of Washington and Alaska.

Pilotage missions are carried out by pilots employed by or under contract with the Authority. The pilots board the ships by launch or helicopter when they arrive off the coast of British Columbia and leave them in the same way. The launches and the helicopters are under the control of the central pilotage services in Vancouver or of its regional offices in Victoria and Prince Rupert. The pilots are sent on their missions by dispatching units which work around the clock in Vancouver, Victoria and Prince Rupert. The whole operation is run from the head office in Vancouver.

When there is a major spill from a sea-going vessel, its essentially up to the Canadian Coast Guard to tell the polluter that he has to clean up the polluting agent and control the operation. Should the polluter fail to take appropriate action, Coast Guard officials step in with pollution-fighting equipment and direct cleaning-up operations with the assistance of such support agencies and organizations as the Department of the Environment and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

In addition, the Canadian Coast Guard keeps stand-by pollution-fighting equipment in 50 warehouses throughout Canada, including on the West Coast at Vancouver, Victoria and Prince Rupert.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with previous speakers that the Government acknowledges that we must not spare any effort to be in a position to intervene in cases of oil spills in Canadian waters, particularly when oil tankers are involved. All told the Canadian Coast Guard has 16,000 feet of ocean booms and 150,000 feet of retaining booms in various warehouses, including the 1,400 feet of ocean booms and 52,000 feet of retaining booms already on the spot in British Columbia.

We also maintain in Victoria the complete equipment required for emergency unloading of oil tankers, and ten other pumping systems are kept in Coast Guard warehouses in British Columbia. And perhaps still more significant, Mr. Speaker, 24-odd units for recuperating floating oil are available. Besides that we have 17 boats, barges and special vessels for emergency maritime operations, and such varied support equipment as generators, compressors, radio equipment and flat-bed trucks already in Coast Guard warehouses along the Pacific coast, and we can have. . . Earlier my colleague from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans said it is important that people be aware of the equipment we have. This gives an idea of the size of the systems and equipment available.

Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of all Canadians I hasten to point out that this list refers only to the West Coast. In its 50 storage facilities throughout the country the Canadian Coast Guard maintains something like $35 million worth of pollution-fighting equipment, including 166,000 feet of oil recuperation booms, six units of special equipment for emergency unloading of oil tankers, 156 systems to recover floating oil, 150 small craft and other essential tools such as tar shovels and forks.

Mr. Speaker, the entire Coast Guard—boats, helicopters and staff—is ready to provide assistance in case of a major spill in Canadian waters, and a good many Coast Guard officers have the necessary training to direct the operations.

Mr. Speaker, we always need more equipment and we must continue our work to improve our systems and facilities. First and foremost—and here I agree with the Leader of the Opposition—we have to prevent accidents. Canada's reputation in these fields is second to none, but we must remain vigilant.

I would like to conclude by stating that I believe we have clearly demonstrated the Government's response to this tragic occurrence, as well as our readiness with respect to oil pollution incidents in Canada.

In my comments I have emphasized the following. The actions initiated by this Government on the Alaska spill, our safety prevention systems, are in place. Our pollution countermeasures and equipment resources are ready and available to be used in the very unlikely event that they are required.

I conclude by stating that an extensive Canadian response to the Valdez spill has been mounted.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the length of the applause on the government side of the House will do nothing to substitute for the lack of content in the so-called responses we have heard from the two Ministers involved in this issue.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) in his most recent rantings on the issue sounds more like an apologist for Exxon than a Minister of a Canadian Government which is supposed to be protecting the interests of the Canadian people. I would suggest to him that if a similar spill had occurred in the St. Lawrence River outside the City of Montreal or in Lake Ontario outside of the City of Toronto, this Government would have declared a national emergency instead of simply ignoring the issue as it has because the spill occurred off the west coast of Canada.

I am still waiting for the answer from the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard, (Lac Saint-Jean)). We have heard from the mini-Bouchard, the mini-mouth, and we are now waiting to hear from the big-mouth. As a novice perhaps is he afraid to speak. But then I too am a novice in environmental matters, and yet I am not afraid of saying that, if the same environmental problem happened in Montreal, in the Saint Lawrence River, or in Toronto, in Lake Ontario, a national crisis would have long been declared. But in this case, we cannot even find the Minister of the Environnment to have him come in this House to speak precisely about the environment.

We have heard from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) who is directly concerned by this matter. We have heard from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard, (Roberval)) who is also concerned as the spokesman for the Exxon corporation which he mentioned several times. But we have not heard a single word from the Minister of the Environment.

Mr. Speaker, we have just listened to the Minister of Transport telling us what is available in Canada to clean up this kind of mess.

[English]

Let us look at the Canadian record. The Minister of Transport has just spent several months extolling the equipment the Canadian Government has made available by way of the Coast Guard to assist in the Exxon clean-up. We have not heard a thing about the kind of international discussions or compensation that should be taking place. We have not heard a thing about a moratorium or about winter shipping that should have been discussed when the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States met very recently and environment was supposed to be the number one issue on the agenda.

In the Liberal Party we suggested that the Prime Minister might take some lessons from the example of the Vancouver Island oil spill. He might start to undertake some international negotiations to set limits on the kind of activity that takes place not only off the west coast but off our other coast. He might put specific provisions in place to compensate those individual fishermen and other individuals who derive their livelihood from the fishing industry and whose livelihood is now being destroyed by the incompetence, negligence and criminal activity that we have seen take place regarding this particular spill.

Let us look back at the Canadian Government's record in the spill that occurred recently on Vancouver Island. We spoke just today with Maureen Fraser, no relation I presume to be the Hon. Speaker, is she?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I feel compelled to indicate to the Hon. Member that she may not be an immediate relation, but she is most definitely from the same clan of which we are very proud.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: I do not want to put the Chair in the awkward position of having to declare a conflict of interest, so I shall just say a spokesman for The Friends of Clayoquot Sound which was very directly affected in the recent oil spill off Vancouver Island. We saw the great network of environmental concern as expressed by the Canadian Government in that particular spill. That left the effort to volunteers to clean up the beaches. What is the situation months after the situation that occurred off Vancouver Island which has a very direct threat to the residents of British Columbia? Most areas within reach of volunteers have been cleaned.

We will not find signs of oil in the areas that have been touched by volunteers, but there is still oil lying under the surface which is coming up in small globs. The volunteers are cleaning that up now. There five-foot coves along the rugged coast which have not been looked at or cleaned up. Scientists cannot predict how long oil will continue to wash up. Scientists cannot predict the extent of damage to birds or to sea life. The grey whales have been moving up the coast to Alaska, and now we know what the grey whales will be facing in Alaska. The research into the affects of the Vancouver Island spill will be compounded by the oil spill off Alaska and its affect on the whale population.

But what do we hear from the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard)? He is continuing to study the affects of the spill.

Let us talk about the actual equipment which the federal Government has available at its disposition. According to the Deputy Commissioner of the Canadian Coast Guard, there is no ability by the Canadian Coast Guard to recover oil in heavy seas or strong currents such as those that already exist in the Juan de Fuca Strait which is already being used as a traverse area for the tankers coming through from Alaska because we do not have sophisticated equipment like airborne, multispectoral equipment which can track slicks from the sky.

The last time we needed that kind of equipment we had to borrow it from the Americans. None of our equipment nor the depots that are currently available to handle a spill could ever handle a spill the size of the Exxon spill of 240,000 barrels. Furthermore, the Minister of the Environment and the Government do not have an active procurement policy to make sure that the newest, the latest and the best of technology for the cleaning of oil spills is available.

Instead they wait until equipment becomes antiquated or irreparable before purchasing new technology. We are left with the situation where, even though environmentalists have for two decades as we now know predicted a disaster similar to the one we have now seen taking place in Alaska, to date the federal Government has refused to commit itself financially to upgrading the kind of cleaning equipment and new technology that must be available if we are to continue in the development of fossil fuel as a fuel energy source, which is obviously been the path of the Government.

Not only has the Government completely abrogated and neglected its responsibility in developing the technology to clean up in that area, but at the same time it has drastically slashed, devastated, annihilated, massacred and completely abolished the funds that had been available under past Liberal Governments for the development of alternative fuel energies.

Fossil fuel is not the only answer to the energy problems facing Canadians. As long as the Government refuses to examine in an intelligent way the alternatives available to fossil fuel, we will continue to see ourselves at risk by the kinds of human error, criminal negligence and the oil spills we saw most recently in Alaska and prior to that on other occasions off Vancouver Island.

Instead of developing an intelligent policy for the development of alternative energies, what we have seen is a Government that has cut and slashed in every area of alternative energy sources, and instead has literally put all its eggs in the fossil fuel basket.

The Prime Minister is prone to hyperbole, and we heard some of that hyperbole only one short day ago in the House of Commons regarding the environmental imperative. I am sure when the Minister speaks that we will hear he is very concerned. He has been very concerned about every environmental issue that has crossed his plate since he became a Minister. I remind the Minister that three months is long enough for the Canadian people to wait for some answers, and concern is not enough.

The Prime Minister has stated the world itself is facing an environmental challenge of unprecedented magnitude. "Recognizing this my Government. . ." and on and on goes the verbiage. At the same time the same Government slashed the budget that was available under previous Liberal Governments.

In 1984 spending on intelligent alternative forms of energy, including renewable and energy conservation programs, stood at $405 million. It was not enough, but it was a start.

What is the current spending level five years after 1984, five years after the Government has doubled the national debt? The current spending level for renewable and energy conservation programs is $76 million, and it is due to be cut back to $39 million by 1993.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Ms. Copps: The Friends of the Earth found it passing strange that the International Chamber of Commerce, that well-known friend of the environment, joined hands with other converts to the environmental issue in awarding the Prime Minister some kind of award on the issue of environment. I cannot go into it much beyond that because frankly I was appalled. Environmental groups were certainly appalled. When one looks at the Prime Minister's record on the environment, it does not hold water. It does not stand up to public scrutiny. In these areas it does not hold water, it does not hold oil; it is a political slick that the Prime Minister has been prone to use merely for re-election purposes.

It made me a little ill too when the Prime Minister came to the Canada Centre for Inland Waters in my own community during the election where he made a great announcement: $125 million to clean up the hot spots in the Great Lakes, and also from most recent studies this week, the St. Clair River, the Niagara River, and Lake Ontario. They go on and on. He announced a $125 million package. The price tag for cleaning up the Hamilton Harbour alone is $120 million. Who is he trying to kid? He talks about the environment, but he is not prepared to put his money where his mouth is.

Mr. Friesen: We don't have any.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member states that we do not have any money. In the time that it took for this Government to slash the budget by about 66 per cent for renewable energy, for alternative energy sources, for solar energy, and for other types of energy sources that are not subject to the vagaries of oil spills and to the dangers of the seas, it was in the process of doubling the national debt. In the last four years the national debt in the country has doubled. When the time was there, when the economy was ripe, when the Government could have moved in and done some things for renewable energy, instead it frittered it away on millions of dollars in by-election buy-outs and all manner of other things. I know the that Minister will not want to comment on by-election buy-outs because he comes with a fairly heavy price tag.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Charest: Cheap, cheap!

Ms. Copps: The Member states that I am cheap. I would like to say to the Member that the people off the British Columbia coast would like to know from the Government, in a little more detail, the specifics of just what kind of contingency plan we have in place to protect the aquaculture, to protect the beautiful park land, to protect the beautiful oceans, and to protect the Queen Charlotte Islands, about which my leader spoke so eloquently, from the potential devastation that is about to be wrought by the movement of this slick away from Alaska toward British Columbia.

During Question Period I heard the Minister say that allegedly, according to his figures, the spill was supposed to have been 1,000 kilometres away from Canada. I also heard the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), who has some passing knowledge in this area, state to the House of Commons that his information from the Canadian Coast Guard suggests that in fact that particular spill is 200 kilometres from the Canadian coastline.

Mr. Angus: Miles.

Ms. Copps: Miles. You have not yet converted in British Columbia!

The Hon. Members states 200 miles; the Minister says 1,000 kilometres. I would like to know what contingency plan the Minister of the Environment has in place to protect not only the economy of British Columbia but that precious potential for future generations that is embodied in the kind of beauty that we have seen in the Queen Charlotte Islands.

I have not heard anything from the Minister. I do not know if he is afraid to speak. I do not know if he wants to be able to hear all the critics and all the criticism before he stands in his place. I do not understand why he sends in a pinch-hitter who is an insult to the people of British Columbia, by way of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) who was not able to give a single substantive contingency plan to at least assuage the legitimate fears and concerns of the people in British Columbia. All we heard was the Minister of Transport claiming that the Opposition is trying to make cheap political points.

In February, before this latest devastating oil spill occurred, we in the Liberal Party wrote to the Prime Minister, who sold away the country by way of the trade deal. It was about time he should cash in his chips. He must have got at least a couple of chips from that sell-out: friends in American Express, friends across the border, hands across the border. The time has come to cash in those chips. We have asked the Prime Minister, and that was again articulated tonight by the Leader and the very able Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner).

What we have asked of the Prime Minister is that we get an international agreement to lay down the law on the specifics of the transportation of this dangerous and potentially lethal oil from Alaska to the United States, and specifically that there are some regulations about when the oil can be transported, under what conditions it can be transported, and under whose captainship it can be transported. We have not received sufficient answers.

Another very direct concern of the fishermen who have already lost millions of dollars as a result of lost catch, and who are facing the potential of losing further millions of dollars, is the question of compensation. If the Canadian fishing industry is going to be hurt equally as bad as the fishing industry in Alaska, or if there is an ancillary devastating effect on spawning of new stock that will be the life-blood of future fishing generations, who is going to foot the bill?

What I heard tonight was the Minister of Transport stating that the Canadian Government is offering Exxon a couple of ships and a few dinghies to get out there and fight this massive oil spill. Only 5 per cent of that oil has already been collected. Some 95 per cent is floating out in the high seas and eventually will find its way either into the sea bed, into the Canadian aqua system, or definitely it will be felt through the food system.

We have seen in the case of caribou the effects of the oil making its way through the food chain. Who is going to foot the bill? What kind of criminal charges in the United States courts and in the international courts will be faced by the company? It is not enough to say that an individual who was off the ship or on the ship, who is turning himself in as responsible, was employed by a company. That company also was working with another company which had a legal, moral and ethical responsibility to ensure (a) there was a system in place to prevent the kinds of spills we have seen and (b) if a spill should occur that there should be an immediate system in place to try and clean it up. Five hours later they didn't even have a boat on site. That simply is not good enough.

What we have seen from the Canadian Government tonight, from the absence of the Prime Minister, from the Minister of the Environment who still has not spoken, is excuses, back-pedalling, and basically singing the company line. The Minister of Transport sounded like an apologist for Exxon. It is about time we got back to the central issue of the last election campaign.

Who is going to speak for Canada? Who is going to speak for British Columbia? Who is going to speak for the fishermen? Who is going to speak for all those residents who see their life-blood and their children's future threatened as a result of absolutely no systems in place by the Canadian Government?

I am sorry if the Members from British Columbia do not appreciate the assistance of critics from other Parties on an issue that is of national importance. If you see this simply as a British Columbia issue, maybe you are a B.C. rump.

I believe this is an issue of national importance. I do not think it should simply be a British Columbia issue. That is why I was most happy to rise and stand in my place and ask the Government and the Minister of the Environment to stand up and speak for Canada, to start bringing in some specific legislation. Get the Prime Minister to pick up the phone and talk to the President of the United States and agree on a bilateral treaty that will deal with these very crucial issues. Extend the moratorium off the coast of British Columbia and start dealing with facts and actions.

It is not enough to say: "I am concerned". I have had enough of expressions of concern. What I want now is action. We expect action from the Minister and we of the Liberal Party are ready to support the government if ever it decides to react.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I believe we have a point of order. The Hon. Member from Kamloops (Mr. Riis).

[English]

Mr. Riis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This unquestionably is one of the most important debates of this session of Parliament.

It is common knowledge that we regularly change our regulations and Standing Orders to facilitate the business being done in the House at that moment. The Standing Orders will sever this debate at twelve o'clock. There are 32 Members of Parliament from British Columbia and many others who will want to participate in this debate. Under the existing rules fewer than 12 will participate.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if you would not seek the unanimous consent of the House to allow Members to speak on this very critical issue and important debate and not see the clock hit twelve o'clock so that each Member be allowed to express their views on this issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Just so that Hon. Members and the public watching will understand, the Hon. Member for Kamloops has asked for unanimous consent to extend the hours of this debate beyond twelve midnight.

Under the rules, we are bound to close the debate at twelve midnight unless another motion is put between eleven and twelve o'clock for an extension of the debate. If it is opposed, it must be opposed by 15 Members rising. However, the Hon. Member for Kamloops has risen and asked the House for unanimous consent to agree to extend debate beyond the twelve midnight deadline. That is the issue before the House.

The Hon. Minister was seeking the floor.

Mr. Charest: Might I suggest that the proposition put by the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) is a bit premature. He refers to the fact that we have until midnight to debate this issue and that there are Members in the House who do want to speak. We are more than two hours away from midnight. I am not saying that we will exclude it. We may want to entertain some accommodations.

I would suggest that the Hon. Member present his proposition or motion again around midnight, and we can at that time better appreciate whether it is pertinent for us to pursue it.

Mr. Gauthier: I would like to participate in this exchange. I gave you a list of Liberal Members of Parliament who would like to speak in this debate. I know and everybody in the House knows that we are getting about an average of three Members to speak per hour. It is impossible for the 12 Liberal Members that I have on the list to be able to speak if we do not shorten our speeches. It is just physically impossible. I would suggest to the Government that they be open and receptive to the recommendation made by the NDP. For the mover and his Party only to get three speakers in a four-hour period seems to me unreasonable. I hope that some compromise could be reached and that we can agree to shorten the speeches to ten minutes. It would allow Members on this side and on the government side to express themselves freely and democratically.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for his comments. I see that the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) also wants to make some remarks and perhaps this is a situation where Hon. Members should probably consider having among themselves, and then afterwards. . .

[English]

It would be appropriate for Hon. Members to address the Chair if some agreement can be made. I put that forward as a suggestion. I know that while we are negotiating across the floor, which is something we probably should not do too often, it is also taking up time. However, if the Hon. Member for Kamloops wishes to assist the Chair, I certainly recognize him.

Mr. Riis: I appreciate the point. We have heard from the Liberal Party, and its Members are anxious to continue the debate. We have heard the words of the Deputy House Leader that he would like to give it some more thought and consider whether or not we should have an opportunity for all Members to participate. I am prepared to hold back and move this initiative at the appropriate time in the hopes that we will have co-operation from all sides of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I reiterate to Hon. Members and to the public watching this debate that the House can do almost anything if it is unanimous.

On the other hand, it is often helpful if Members from all Parties have some discussion among themselves and then bring back the consequences of that discussion to the Speaker. In that regard, I am more than prepared to co-operate.

However, I think that keeping an eye on the time, unless some arrangement is made among Members or unless the order is followed and not objected to, the debate will end at midnight. I think we should proceed. I now have the duty to recognize the Hon. Minister of the Environment.

• (2050)

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of Environment): Mr. Speaker, we must undoubtedly recognize that the situation which exists now in Alaska is extremely serious. There is no reason for any of us as leaders to shirk our duties in any way, and one of these duties, I respectfully submit to you, Sir, is to view the situation we are faced with in a responsible and sober fashion. To view it in a responsible fashion is to avoid falling in the trap of petty politics. Mr. Speaker, what the Canadian public is expecting from us tonight is to describe the situation as it really is and demonstrate that we are going to fully assume our responsibility with determination no matter the cost.

[English]

We all know that Parliament is sometimes a forum given to exaggerated rhetoric and intemperate partisanship. However, the environment is an area of public policy in which neither is appropriate. The stakes are simply too high given the extent to which humanity is undermining the health of our planet. We owe the people of Canada and future generations not rhetoric nor partisanship but a healthy environment in which to live.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have heard the usual unfounded complaints and attacks against the Government. It is not possible for anything to occur in environmental matters without the opposition trying to suggest that the Government does not care for the environment. Yet, it has failed to demonstrate. . . Let us review the facts, Mr. Speaker. We have before us quite a number of people who, while sitting as front benchers in previous Governments, failed for years to recognize the importance of the environment and to act as their inflammatory rhetoric of tonight would suggest, Mr. Speaker. I think they are being unfair to this Government by ignoring what has been done over the passed four years.

Mr. Speaker, whatever they may say, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will have had the privilege of heading a government that during the past four years has done more for the environment than all previous governments put together. As you know, Mr. Speaker, it was this Government that passed our new legislation on the environment, one of the strictest in the world. It was this Government that initiated a program to prevent acid rain in Canada, a program that by 1994 will have reduced Canadian acid rain by 50 per cent. It is this Government that will get an agreement with the United States on acid rain. It was this Government that intensified efforts to clean up the Great Lakes and that set up a fund of $110 million to clean up the St. Lawrence. On the international scene, it was this Government that initiated the signing of the first world protocol to protect the atmosphere: the Montreal Protocol. Understandably, Mr. Speaker, the Opposition would rather not be reminded of these facts.

The Opposition prefers to say that the Government does not care about the health of Canadians or about what will happen to future generations. However, it overlooks the fact that this is the Government that will abolish lead in motor vehicle emissions within the next few years.

Mr. Speaker, what we are hearing is incredible, and I think we should get back to the subject at hand. In the past few days, Canadians have witnessed a terrible accident, an accident that, we might as well admit, could have happened here in Canada, in the waters off Toronto or Montreal or 10 kilometres off the coast of British Columbia. We know that, Mr. Speaker, and Canadians are worried and rightly so, but that is no reason to put the blame on the Government. What do we do in this type of situation? What can we do?

Most of the Members opposite have been on the Government side before. They know that in a situation like this, the first thing to do is to keep a clear head and make sure everything has been done that is humanly possible to prevent this from occurring here in Canada. It also means making sure that if it does, we are able to take action quickly, effectively, and without flagging. That is exactly what we are doing, Mr. Speaker. In the past weeks, we in Canada have been confronted with two incidents that will be a valuable lesson to us. We did not cause them nor are we in any way at fault. Both the accident that occurred in the State of Washington a few months ago at the end of December and the recent accident in Alaska took place outside Canadian territory. No Canadian is involved in it. But that does not mean that because we are not involved, because it happened elsewhere, we do not have to be concerned. On the contrary! Because we know that we too are vulnerable to that sort of thing. No country in the world is exempt from that kind of disaster. So it is no use shouting and throwing stones. Canadians do not want to hear such things. They have enough of that kind of politics. What Canadians want to know is what can be done in the future and what action can be taken.

What we did in the Vancouver spill, for example, from the first days, Mr. Speaker, from January 3, the day the first oil slicks hit the beaches of a national park, we had Parks Canada people there with volunteers to begin operations. We mobilized considerable resources. We are asked what we would do if there were such an oil spill. Of course, the one that just happened in Alaska is some 50 times bigger than the one that affected us in early January. But still, the one in early January was considerable. In a single day, we were able to mobilize up to 350 people to work on cleaning up the beach, up to ten vessels patrolling the waters near the beach, a dozen helicopters and so far, 370 tonnes of oil and debris have been removed from the water.

I just heard rumours that there was still oil washing up on the beaches. According to the reports we have received the cleaning operation of the Vancouver beaches was completed a few days ago and we have now entered a supervising phase to make sure that no new spill is occurring, which will eventually lead up to an assessment phase of the operations we have already carried out. Therefore, the process which was implemented over there has now been completed successfully. Unfortunately, the fact remains that we were the victims of a terrible accident which will leave indelible marks. It is clear that we just cannot assess for the time being the impact it will have on the various forms of marine life. Nobody knows for sure what happens when oil deposits fall to the bottom of the sea. We know that problems will rise, but a compensation scheme has already been implemented. We have set up an organization to help Canadians seeking damages and we have already registered 29 claims from people who are suing the carrier. And we are making every effort to help them in this endeavour.

Also, there will be eventually an economic damage assessment and we will follow through with the proceedings we have already started with the U.S. State Department in this respect. We are going to learn a lesson from this mishap. We are well aware that what we did in Vancouver was not perfect. We know we can do better. It is very important to recognize this, Mr. Speaker. The Government has no intention of playing this old political game by claiming it has done everything right while the opposition maintains it has done everything wrong. It is necessary to recognize that it is always possible to do better. Human behaviour can always be improved. We are going to learn a lesson from what happened in January as well as from the unfortunate and painful experience our American neighbours are making in Alaska. It would be awful if we could not learn anything from such tragic events. Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Canadian people that we are going to assess what happened both on Vancouver Island and in Alaska and that we will draw some important conclusions. What will we do with them? We devised some ten years ago a series of rules which govern shipping on our Canadian coasts as well as in the major international waterways.

[English]

Those rules have been set for the St. Lawrence Seaway as well as for the oil traffic offshore B.C. from Alaska to Cherry Point at the beginning of the American territory. Those rules are very rigorous. They have been made, as far as the West is concerned, through an exchange of diplomatic notes in 1979. They are very comprehensive and very tough.

We must admit that up until now they have been efficient. It is a very complex network of bilateral communications, checkpoints and rail use facilities. Nevertheless, we know that this is an occasion for us to assess those rules, to examine them and to see if it would not be possible to improve them and strengthen them. This will be done. It has begun in our different Departments.

If we find out that we can improve them, of course we will improve them. Of course we will say to the Americans that we need to improve those rules. We will come back to the table. We will look at them and we will tighten them because that is in the interests of Americans and Canadians—of people all over the world. Of course this will be done, Mr. Speaker, if it needs to be done. It is the same thing for the response. There is prevention, which is the best thing to do, and there is response. We know that the response must be swift. It must be tough, diligent and rigorous. If we do not act immediately we can lose control of the spill, and then it will be very difficult.

It is the case in Alaska. We know, all of us, that within five hours of the accident, it has not been possible, because of the magnitude of the spill, to control and to contain the spill, and now the spill is going away in the western direction in the ocean. Eventually we might think—well, this is the opinion of our scientists—that it will break down and dissolve in the water, in the ocean, and we do not know with what bad consequences, but it is easy to imagine that there will be consequences, but we know that the first thing to do if there is an accident is to react swiftly within the first hours.

So we will examine the plans which have already been set up for such circumstances, and if we find out that we must upgrade the equipment, that we must improve the swiftness of the reaction, we will do it and we will report to the public. We have nothing to hide, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): The environment is a priority. While our friends are always contending that we do not treat the environment as a true priority, I challenge everybody to read the past Speeches from the Throne of this country and to see, in any Speech from the Throne delivered before yesterday in the history of Canada, if one Government has put such an emphasis, such a pre-eminence on environment. It is the first time that such emphasis has been placed on environment, and if you look at what is there, it is a plan of action.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, it is not a miracle. It is not a piece of cake. It is a document which honestly tried to frame what should be done during the next four years by this Government to cope with environmental problems and environmental concerns of Canadians, and I can tell the Speaker and Canadians that this plan will be realized.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: What plan?

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): It is a very well balanced plan, a very well balanced set of measures, legislative, clean-up operations, new policies which will allow Canada to stay in the forefront of pollution combat in the world.

I am always pained, Mr. Speaker, sincerely pained, to hear speeches like the one which has been delivered just now ridiculing the Prime Minister of Canada for having been honoured in the world for his record in environment. This is so mean, Mr. Speaker. It is so mean because if you travel all over the world—I just came back from The Hague, and there were 24 countries all over the world meeting in The Hague, and I could see that all those people consider Canada, our country, as one of the leaders of the world as far as environment is concerned, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): And I am sure that our Canadians are proud, too, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure that all Liberals, all NDP Members are proud, too. It remains for the leaders of those Parties to be proud equally.

There are some prestigious leaders of the world like Mrs. Brundtland, Prime Minister of Norway. She has signed the famous report on sustainable development. She developed the concept with a team of people, and among them a Canadian who more or less wrote the report himself, with Mrs. Brundtland chairing the commission. It was in The Hague with all those people from Europe and Australia, Japan and New Zealand, Francophones and Anglophones all of whom paid tribute to Mr. Mulroney, and then when you come back to Canada, you hear strange things.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, we will go through the Alaska crisis. We have offered our help to our American friends. We are ready to help them to step in as much as they want. We have already provided them with a lot of equipment, people, surveillance, expertise. We are ready to do more. We are very proud to do it. I feel no humiliation in helping the Americans to fight this pollution problem. It is a duty for us because it is a problem for Canadians.

Ms. Copps: Who is going to pay?

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): I would like to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that I am sure that Canadians reject partisanship in environment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): I would like to live to see a joint effort from all Canadians, Liberal Members, NDP Members, Conservative Members to fight the good cause, the cause of environment for Canada and for its future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I won't keep the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett), who got up simultaneously with me, from speaking for very long. I just wanted to report to you and to the House that after some brief discussions with representatives, the House Leader of the New Democratic Party and the Member for Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), we can agree immediately. I am happy to report that we could agree immediately after the speech from the Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca that the Members should start making speeches of 10 minute duration. That way we can get as many speeches in as possible. We have not yet dealt with the issue of going past midnight, but, Mr. Speaker, we will pursue our discussions. Thank you.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I understand that an agreement has been reached among Members concerning the continuation of the debate.

[English]

Is there agreement to the proposition put forward by the Hon. Minister?

Mr. Gauthier: If I understood the Minister correctly, the offer is that we reduce the speaking time to 10 minutes, and that is it. We would be agreeable to extending that agreement past midnight, particularly if the Minister would be so nice tonight and agreeable that he would agree to go past midnight. That way we could plan.

Mr. Charest: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to start negotiating on the floor of the House but I would just—

Mr. Gauthier: I made a proposal to you.

Mr. Charest: Yes, to be of service to the Hon. Members from both Parties what I am able to say now, without excluding the possibility of going beyond midnight, is that we can start, right after the speech from the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca, having 10 minute speeches from Members, and I think that is some progress,with a view to getting in as many Members as possible, and that as soon as we have had other discussions, we will be able to determine whether it is possible to go beyond midnight.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Minister for his proposal. I think we still have a problem. Maybe. . .

• (2210)

Perhaps during the speech of the very distinguished Member, a former Premier of my province, the Province of British Columbia, representatives of all Parties could again consult and come back to the Speaker with a proposition which includes all of the considerations that seem to be bothering some Members. I now wish to move on with the debate. The Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett).

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured and pleased to take my place in this debate. Quite frankly, however, I would have preferred this debate never to have occurred in the House. All of us would have wanted to avoid the consequences of an oil spill, and certainly we want Government action and response to it.

Tonight, three Government spokespersons have attempted to patronize, not only the Opposition but Canadians, with sophomoric speeches, without any mention of the real problems that exist with this crisis on the waters bordering Canada and British Columbia.

When a Member stands for the House of Commons and hopes that his or her Party will form a majority government and he or she may be asked to be a Minister of the Crown, they assume a responsibility with that ministerial position. Tonight we are debating an emergency motion moved by my colleague from Skeena (Mr. Fulton). We are debating the issue of an oil spill. I am not questioning the Minister's sincerity, but others might. Had he been aware and sincere about this, and had he been alert, he would have been in the House yesterday to make a ministerial statement about that oil spill. No one would have turned that down. If we are to believe that the Government is truly concerned, the Minister could have come to the House today and asked leave of the House to make a ministerial statement. He did not do that. He had the nerve to come here and plead for understanding from the House and Canadians, after he was forced to make a statement as a result of a motion by my colleague. It begs the question: What have you been doing? Do you not understand this problem? Why have you not come to the House? Why have you not dealt with this issue?

This is not a new issue. It is not fortuitous that this is an accident that has repeated itself in 90 days. It is tragic. We, along with a government Member, went up to the coastal waters of offshore British Columbia. We saw the damage. We held a press conference.

All six New Democratic Members from Vancouver Island held a press conference on January 25. It was a very modest press statement in which we did not blame the Government. We stated that in order to learn from this experience there should be a public inquiry so that we could follow, step by step, what action was taken by the Government, the Coast Guard and volunteers, and determine what went right and what went wrong. Such a report could be tabled before us so that we could learn from this tragedy.

The Minister responsible pleads for understanding in this House. Just so that we understand exactly where this Minister stands when he makes the amateur appeal that it is not the Government's fault and we should keep a cool head and learn from these things, let me point out that on January 31 this year, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands (Ms. Hunter) wrote a letter to the Minister.

I must say it is a modest letter because she is a new Member. I would have been far more strong in my words. However, she was polite, modest, thoughtful and caring in an attempt to get some action. I would have simply kicked the slats out of you. I will do it tonight because you deserve it. More than anyone else in the Government you deserve it. You deserve the slats kicked out from you.

Mr. Speaker: Whether the Hon. Minister deserves that or not, the Hon. Member will have to address his remarks to the Minister through the Chair.

Mr. Barrett: I would never remove the slats from the Speaker's chair. I want to make that clear, Mr. Speaker.

I want to quote from the body of this letter addresssed to the Minister on January 31: It reads:"I along with other Members of Parliament from Vancouver Island call for an immediate public inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the oil spill and the resultant response. Clearly there must be a comprehensive examination of the facts to determine how and why this happened, how and why the federal Government took so long to respond and how we can ensure a quicker and more efficient response in the event of another oil spill in the future".

The Minister talks about the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) being recognized around the world as an expert on preventing pollution. We heard a technical response tonight concerning the number of boats we have that do not have holes and are available to do the job. We are told about equipment in various warehouses. This letter was not even acknowledged by the Minister.

For the Minister to get up in the House and give that pious, sanctimonious camp in front of all Canadians and expect us to believe that he understands what this is about is nothing more than straight hogwash. I wish I knew how to say that in French, but it is hogwash. You are a failure, Mr. Minister. I say that through the Chair, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister should resign or be fired immediately. If there is to be any confidence left in the Canadian people that the Government is serious about dealing with oil spills, let us get a Minister who understands something more about an oil spill. The only slick he knows is on his pillow when he gets up in the morning.

The Minister stood here tonight and gave us a catalogue of actions that should be taken. He said there was an immediate response to the little spill on Vancouver Island to which he referred. The troops at Esquimalt Base were ready to go up there on the coast. They were waiting for the call from the Minister and the Government, but no call came. Seventy-five troops could have been on the ground within 48 hours, but no call came. Tell us why. We had to rely on volunteers, and they were treated very badly.

Let the Minister tell us about his trip there. Tell us how you spent time walking on the beach as the Minister symbolically representing the Government, showing yourself and letting people know you were concerned about that oil spill. Tell us how it struck you deep in the heart and how it concerned you so much that you asked for an inquiry. The Minister has not done a thing about it.

Furthermore, there is a joint contingency plan with the United States. There is already in place an international agreement. The United States Coast Guard was ready, on call, and willing to help with all its mobilized equipment, talent and skill. It never received a call from the Government or the Minister for the help it was ready to give.

The case against the Minister is concluded, in my view. If Canadians had a vote about it, the Minister would be guilty as a failure. There is not much point talking to him about this, even through you, Mr. Speaker.

Let us go back into some history. There are some Members in the House tonight who were here in the late 1960s. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was one of those Members. The Alyeska-Alaska pipeline was the subject of a major debate in those days. One of the few Members in this Chamber, along with other Members of the New Democratic Party and a certain Member from Vancouver South who cannot be named, understood the dangers of moving that oil down the coast. One of those Members was the former Minister of Finance in the Liberal administration. He acknowledged publicly that there was serious concern about shipping oil off that coast. The Member for Vancouver South acknowledged that. However, they were not persuasive enough to stop the Government of the day from agreeing to that coastal shipment of tankers. However, both those Members had foresight. They expressed and put on record their concern, and I double-checked that.

When there was the expectation of a spill, most people said that it was just scare-mongerers who were suggesting that. A few Members including the two I have mentioned said that it is more than a scare. This is the one time I am sorry history has proved that those two Members were right, along with NDP Members.

At the same time there was a debate happening in the British Columbia legislature. We begged, we literally begged the federal Government to oppose the oil tankers travelling off our coast. We were challenged as a Government to come up with an alternative in response. We did. We suggested that the oil be moved by rail. We called in Cecil Law of Queen's University, an expert on ground-guided transportation, and we developed and proposed a plan and I went to Washington, D.C., to sell it. It was laughed at by all except for a few Members here. It is gone, it is over. It is one of those situations in which I can honestly say, I told you so.

But that is history. We must understand that history to know that there were voices in this Chamber who warned some 22 years ago that this exact thing would happen. Now we are struck by the fact that we are having an emergency debate on the very accident some said could not happen.

For all this pious claptrap from the Ministers who say, "Our experts tell us this and our experts tell us that," the Exxon experts told us this could not happen. I saw the first interview of the Exxon president on United States public television. He was saying that this did not happen, he does not believe it, it could not happen. It did happen and it will happen again.

With all this pious nonsense about greater technology, greater ability, greater surveillance, the fact is that I spoke to Mr. Smiley in Washington, D.C., the Exxon spokesperson on this particular spill, and I asked him what can be done. He said it is too late to burn it, it is too late for chemicals, it is out of control and we cannot do anything more than we are doing now. So what is this stuff from the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) saying we have 24 depots with generators sitting there and we have straw and we have these winches and we have all this stuff ready to go? It is pious nonsense.

It would have been better for the Canadian people to hear the Minister and a government spokesman say, "Look, it is a disaster, we are incapable of dealing with it and we are committed openly to having a public inquiry, not just on the West coast spill, an opportunity we have lost, but a public, open inquiry right now in front of all Canadians so that step by step we can find out what went wrong and do everything humanly possible to see that it does not happen again."

I would expect to see this Government immediately launch criminal proceedings in the United States against the perpretrators of the spill in Washington State that damaged the West coast of British Columbia, immediate legal proceedings. I would expect that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis), who is concerned with protecting the Canadian people, will announce that if one square inch of Canadian territory is affected by one oil blob, there will be legal suit against Exxon and those perpretrators of this oil spill.

It is not enough to talk about sending 15 otters down to the aquarium in Vancouver as some kind of humanitarian gesture. I can see all the Ministers going out to Vancouver now for photo opportunities, rolling up their sleeves and scrubbing a little otter, saying, "This is my share of cleaning up this mess." I do not want to make light of the damage to the otters, but that is hardly worthy of a Government whom we expect to protect the environment.

Mr. Smiley, the Exxon co-ordinator of spill management, also acknowledged that, to his knowledge, at no time has the Canadian Government invoked its part of the joint treaty on this current spill and asked that it be not only just an observer there but that every piece of equipment that it claims it has be on site and helping. They have never even asked for that and yet it is part of the agreement.

This emergency debate is important, not only because of the oil spill. It is important for the Canadian people to understand that the same falsehoods told to the Canadian people during the election campaign only to be ignored after the Government's re-election show the same pattern of behaviour on the part of this Government when it comes to the pronouncements it has made on the environment.

Was it four months ago or six months ago that we heard those pious statements, "Vote for me and I will be angelic. Vote for me and I will do all of these wonderful things"? The newspapers coming out lately are saying, "Oh, well, we have to scrub all that stuff we promised. We did not tell you the truth then, there will be tough times now." I approve of tough times. Let us get tough with the oil companies, not with the people of British Columbia.

No one has a monopoly on what is good or what is decent. No one expects the Government to be responsible for everything. The Opposition's responsibility is, of course, to attack the Government. We are not blaming the Government for the oil spill, but we have every right to condemn the Minister for the inaction after the oil spill took place.

What is the alternative plan of the Government to appeal to the Americans to avoid these spills? Will it demand that the International Court at The Hague provide that no tanker leaving any port anywhere in the world will ever leave again without a certified pilot at the wheel and that it would be criminally responsible of the owner of the tanker if one did? Would they be prepared to go to the court at The Hague and assure us that when every tanker comes back into Canadian waters, there is a pilot on board?

Many Hon. Members here do not know beautiful British Columbia. They think it is some distance away and that it is such a vast coast that nothing could hurt the area. My good friend, the Hon. Member from Hamilton, talked about this happening in Toronto or in the Seaway. Let me ask this rhetorical question, Mr. Speaker. What if it happens at Cherry Point 30 miles south of Vancouver in the Strait of Georgia out of the Strait of Juan de Fuca, a contained oil spill that would destroy fisheries, feed stock, herring and the fry coming down from major river estuaries to feed our commercial salmon industry? I do not have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, what a disaster that would be, but that is where the next spill will happen, and it has already happened there once. We had high school youngsters on the American side of the border cleaning up that spill a few years ago.

This is a very serious matter. It is not the Government's fault, but the Canadian people expect action, not nonsense and pious statements. The first and best action would be to fire the Minister of the Environment who has completely failed up to this point. As for the Minister of Transport, let him explain how he has cut back in his Department. He says, "Our ships are ready to go," but how many ships does he have?

The last great amount of shipbuilding in this country has been on the East coast and it has been for Canadian frigates. It was promised four years ago that a Canadian Coast Guard vessel, the Polar 8, would be built off the British Columbia coast. They have not even laid the keel yet. Is there a suggestion that perhaps Quebec will get that contract? I do not want to believe that, but if they are building frigates on the Quebec coast, they can at least complete that extra Coast Guard ship that has been killed month after month by this Government. If the Minister truly believes that he is committed to developing a Coast Guard, why have not we had that Polar 8 contract granted to the Province of British Columbia?

Do you not know where we are, Mr. Speaker? We are part of Canada too. We belong to the family of Canadians. We do not make any special appeal. We do not demand something just because we are where we are. But when something happens to us, we expect fairness, decency, responsibility and understanding, and we sure as heck have not seen that from this Government when it comes to the oil spills off the West coast.

I want to conclude by just making a few remarks about the results of the election in western Canada and the election of a Reform Party candidate who is sitting over there. Yes, there is just one Member. Yes, it is just a little rump group. It is the voice of the West, along with other election results, saying that this federal Government is a failure. Right wingers voted for reform candidates. They ignored the Liberals. The centre and the left voted for New Democrats. There are 19 New Democrats here from British Columbia, Mr. Speaker. Do not think it is an isolated provincial Party after the next federal election. Unless this Government moves there will be dozens more NDPers right across this country, including the Province of Quebec, where you have been a failure, Mr. Speaker.

The politics of pollution know no provincial boundaries. I warn you, Mr. Speaker, that the people of British Columbia and the people of western Canada expect more from a government, more than what this Minister has shown. I am proud of the Hon. Member for Skeena forcing this debate. I am ashamed that the Minister had to respond in this debate instead of leading it with a statement long before today.

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I found it very interesting listening to the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett). I am very pleased he was not blaming the Government for the oil spill because having listened to some of the debate earlier this evening I think those Canadians who were listening to it might have had the impression the opposition Parties were somehow blaming us for a very tragic event that took place near Valdez, Alaska. Certainly it is not the Government's fault that it happened. That is not, of course, to underestimate the great concern we have as Canadians and as a Government about this very tragic incident. What is particularly of concern in my mind is that obviously it appears as though it were the result of human error. It was not an act of God. It was not necessarily weather conditions, it was what appears to be the possibility of untrained or improperly trained personnel taking the ship into an area where it should not have gone.

I guess as a Member from British Columbia and having represented Capilano—Howe Sound for the last five years I can assure my colleagues of the great concern that I and my colleagues from British Columbia have about environmental issues in our province and particularly the oil spill in Alaska and the earlier oil spill that took place off the West Coast in January. I think that tonight during this debate we want to let Canadians know what happened, what actions are being taken, and also to discuss what might possibly be done in the future to prevent these kinds of tragedies taking place. As my colleagues, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) and the Minister for the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) have said, first we have to recognize that it is extremely unlikely—although nothing is impossible from all of the evidence we have at this point—that any of the oil from this recent oil spill will actually hit the coastal waters of British Columbia and have a direct impact there.

Again, that is not to lessen the impact the spill will have in the Alaskan area and on some of the fish and the wildlife of that region. But there is work going on now by the Coast Guard and the Fisheries Department. They are tracking the oil and maintaining constant vigilance on what is occurring to weather, wind and wave conditions and the direction in which the oil is going. If, for example, either at this time or in the future there is an oil spill or if oil should come into Canadian waters I think Canadians want to know whether we are prepared. The Ministers of Transport and Environment have talked tonight about plans in place. They are not perfect. Nothing is perfect. I worked for a number of years in the Beaufort Sea and worked on oil spill plans and environmental issues.

I know that all of the efforts that the best brains you can find can put together do not necessarily work under all conditions. That is one of the reasons you spend a lot of time on research and you go through exercises to work out different kinds of situations and simulate those kinds of exercises. I want to say as well, as the Associate Minister of National Defence, that if an incident such as this were to occur, the resources of my Department are on alert and would be made available. We have provided offers of helicopter and surveillance assistance in Alaska as we did on the West Coast, and additional resources can be made available if they are requested.

What potentially is the impact of this oil spill on Canadian wildlife or fisheries resources? The Minister of Fisheries has referred to this. We do not know the total answer to that yet. We know that in Alaska volunteers are working with the help of Environment Canada on many of the birds which have been oil soaked. That is a very tragic circumstance but in terms of our own fisheries resources, the information that we have at this time is that for the salmon, the salmonid and the herring, Canadian resources will not be affected, partly because of the time of the oil spill and the timing of the salmon runs. Nevertheless, we will be monitoring those kinds of situations very carefully.

I would like to assure Canadians at this point that with the information we have now and the continuous monitoring that is under way it does not appear as though there will be any adverse impact on our own fisheries and wildlife resources. Can these incidents be prevented in the future? I was heartened by the Minister of the Environment and would take issue with my colleague across the floor, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca, because I do not think he listened to the Minister of the Environment. Perhaps he has not been listening and reading what has been emanating from the Environment Department and the kinds of commitments this Government has to the environment. As the Minister has said, we have to review, as is done on a continuous basis, response plans. One of the lessons learned from this particular incident is that you have to respond quickly in the first 24 hours. That means resources have to be available. The human planning, something with which we in the military are very familiar, has to be in place so that there is an automatic response. You have systems set up. You do not have to wait for telephone calls or for people in authority. This has to be worked on.

I know that in the Beaufort Sea, as the Minister indicated, the resources that we have could be made available. This kind of exercise and simulation has been under way for years. We hope we never have to use it but you need to have that kind of plan and exercise going on in order to be prepared.

The development of technology is another point. Some people I have heard tonight have said that technology cannot assist. I disagree with that. There is oil spill containment technology on the market which is being developed. Again, depending on the particular weather and wave conditions this can be very effective. Skimmers and booms obviously have to be used in the right kind of conditions. But in many oil spills we have had in the past those things have been used. The development of those kinds of technologies has to take into account the scale of the incident. In this coming year B.C. will be hosting a major show on environment and technology which will provide the opportunity for a showcase of the kinds of technologies and the kinds of expertise available. This show is coming up in Vancouver. We need to do more work with the private sector in this area.

The Minister has indicated a review of the tanker traffic should take place. I know when I worked in the North there was talk about the possible development of an oil pipeline, but there was much opposition to that idea. In retrospect perhaps it is too late now because the resources in Alaska may not last long enough to make economic sense, but perhaps in other situations we should be looking at the alternatives to tanker traffic, and that pipelines can be a more appropriate response.

For example, I look at the proposed Vancouver Island natural gas pipeline. When it is constructed, that will provide an alternative to bringing in the bunker fuel tankers to Vancouver Island, traffic that in itself has potential for hazards. Training of personnel is something that came to light in the American jurisdiction, and we obviously always need to be looking at having properly trained people in charge of our ships, and rules and regulations which would ensure that the types of incidents, the use of alcohol, which should be totally prohibited in those situations, would not occur in British Columbia, or in our Canadian waters.

It has been mentioned several times by other Members that perhaps we should be looking again at the offshore drilling off the coast of British Columbia, and the maintenance of the moratorium. It is my understanding that the Province of British Columbia and Premier Vander Zalm have indicate that they wish to retain that moratorium. In light of some of the recent incidents, that may make very good sense.

Canada's continued opposition to the Arctic natural wildlife refuge, and the proposed drilling in Alaska is something that both our External Affairs Department and Environment Department have been vigorously opposed to because of the concerns, the fragility of the environment in that region, and again the potential for environmental disasters is also something that needs to be looked at.

Finally, the Minister of the Environment briefly talked about the Speech from the Throne yesterday, and the type of commitments to the environment contained in that Speech from the Throne, a commitment that was not new to the Government, a commitment to sustainable development. If we look at the root causes of some of those reasons, it relates to our heavy dependence on fossil fuels, the types of lifestyles that we live, and the fact that in the past we have not looked seriously enough at the alternatives. Some of those alternatives are now coming within the possible horizon of realities, whether it is fusion or fuel cell technology, which perhaps in another generation can be a reality and provide substitutes for fossil fuels so that we will not be as reliant on them, or not be as much at risk from the types of accidents that have occurred most recently.

That is the commitment that this Government has made. It has established a centre in Winnipeg, the ongoing programs of our Minister of Environment to encourage Canadians to use environmentally safe products, and a whole variety of measures that we will be undertaking in the future. The Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett), rather than criticising the efforts of the Government, should be applauding our Minister of Environment, a Minister who has stood up for the environment both here in Canada and internationally.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: The Hon. Member should also applaud the record of the Prime Minister who received an award recently in The Hague, and I know that he will soon be receiving international awards for the commitment to the environment and the leadership role that this country has taken.

That is the type of leadership and commitment which I can assure the members of the House and Canadians who are sharing this evening with us will be continued, a commitment not only from the Minister of the Environment, but from all Departments, a greater sensitivity to environmental impacts of all decisions of government, whether it is in my own Department of National Defence, or in my colleague's Department of Transport. Throughout the Government every effort will be made to prevent the types of incidents which have occurred in the last few months, for example, the Valdez oil crisis, and build up and improve our capability to deal with incidents of this nature, a capability of which I am very proud.

We have done perhaps better than any other nation in the world at this point, but it is not yet at the level which I think we will probably need in the future just to ensure that level of comfort. In my own view prevention is worth a pound of cure. That will be the emphasis of this Government, this Department, and this Minister.

Our speeches have been cut back in the second part, and we will not have an opportunity to go into some of the details in terms of fisheries and wildlife that I know others will talk to a little later.

In conclusion I would like to say that the incident in Alaska is a tragic incident. We know that the impact on the people in that area, and the impact on the wildlife is extremely unhappy. I have worried when I see school children, as we had on the West Coast, with otters or sea birds that have been impacted by this oil spill, or perhaps have been killed by it.

However, we have to learn a lesson from all this, and find ways that it will not be repeated, whether it is through changes in response, developments of new technology, improvements in the way that tankers are operated through our waters, and a whole increased sensitivity to these issues on the part of the Canadian public and on the part of all of us in the House. That is an assurance that I know I can give on behalf of our Government and on behalf of my colleagues tonight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order the Hon. Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport.

Mr. Charest: I have not had an opportunity to speak with my colleague, the House Leader for the New Democratic Party, so I will speak slowly and maybe he will have a chance to hear me verbatim. I have had a chance to speak with a representative of the Liberal Party. If it is agreed, and I think you will find that that is probably the case, from now on the House would entertain a change in its proceedings to 10-minute speeches, and beyond hours until the last person has spoken. All of this is in recognition of the importance of this issue for the House of Commons and for Canadians.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased the Minister agreed to this type of arrangement. I take it that there will be no objections at all from this side of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps you can just clarify for me, Mr. Speaker. I just came through the lobby and I know that the House Leader is not here at the moment. I understand he was involved in the discussions.

Mr. Charest: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): So agreed.

The Hon. Member for Kent.

Mr. Rex Crawford (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak in the emergency debate on the Valdez oil spill. As my colleagues on this side of the House have stated, the worst spill in U.S. history will prove to have devastating effects on the economy of Alaska and most certainly the wildlife of the West Coast.

It will also force a serious re-examination of the policies governing the transportation of oil, and force us all to re-examine the question: "At what cost development, at what cost to our precious environment?" We must face the issue of sustainable development head-on.

Forty-two million litres, 270,000 barrels of oil, have been spewed by a supertanker that ran aground two weeks ago. Fishermen fear for their livelihood. They fear for their future. Alaskans are asking why it happened, an accident that could have been prevented.

We praise the massive community effort to skim their waters with equipment at hand. Exxon officials seem to be more interested in their public relations and profits than our environmental safety. Environmental groups say that the oil industry has been misleading the North American public for years about the dangers of shipping oil, and being utterly and hopelessly unprepared for this catastrophic environmental disaster.

Ecologists have been saying for years that supertankers used should be specially built for the unique and risky job in that area of the world. The oil industry has constantly and consistently refuted that argument and saying "Everything is fine". No one thought a spill of this magnitude could even happen.

Even Jacques Cousteau has said that the ships currently in use are time bombs. For 30 years Mr. Cousteau has been pushing and pressing for reform of security standards for ships of this type, and better training for sailors and officers.

It is clear that Exxon and the American oil industry were entirely unprepared for a spill of this magnitude, in spite of their words of assurance.

We know that employees working for the Alaska Pipeline were fired when they complained about cut-backs in its program to clean up oil spills. Let this be a message to the Canadian Government, "Cut-backs are dangerous!"

A six-volume environmental report prepared by the U.S. Department of the Interior in March,1972 predicted that oil spills were inevitable. It stated there would probably be more than two million litres of oil spilled along the West Coast. So even then we knew the dangers, and Exxon took the risk without being prepared.

My heart goes out to those fishermen and conservationists who must now face the destruction of the Alaskan habitat and live with the spill's long-term effects on wildlife. I come from an area of Canada where an appreciation and a love of nature is paramount. I live alongside a native reserve where fishing and trapping is a way of life. Even in my riding, spills of another kind have had a terrible impact. Watching the scenes of wildlife devastation on the nightly news shows us how fragile our environment really is. We can never assume the strength of Mother Nature.

In closing, let me say as associate Liberal environment critic, we have heard all the dramatic and emotional aspects of the oil spill here in this emergency debate. But the question that Governments seemingly never ask: "Why do the efforts to control these disasters always have to be so disorganised and impromptu?"

As a recent editorial in the Montreal Gazette stated, there are no "Red Adairs" for oil spills. His sort of specialisation is absent when a tanker leaks. Then, relief operations are almost always "seat-of-the-pant" affairs. Experts often are sent too late—and they are not truly experts. I join with the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) as we support the call of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) that the federal Government launch high-level talks with Washington on better ways to control West Coast supertanker traffic.

This oil spill is a disaster of deadly proportions for the delicate environment of the Pacific coastline. As the assault on the environment continues, it seems that most of us are powerless to do anything, but our Government isn't. Canada should accelerate its fight against U.S. plans to drill for oil in the Arctic Wildlife Refuge near the Yukon border.

Environmental groups say that if drilling were to go ahead there, thousands of caribou that migrate across the border each year would die, and a way of life for native Canadians in the region would be jeopardised.

We must all ask ourselves as Canadians, what price do we pay for economic development, and at what cost to the environment? Human error and incompetence have caused decades of devastation. The Valdez oil spill should never have happened.

Our environment has been neglected, taking a back seat to many other issues. This spill graphically illustrates that a concern for the environment should be first and foremost in our minds. How many more spills like Valdez do we need to make us take constructive and long-term measures rather than defensive, short-term measures?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for permitting me to make a brief contribution to this debate. How easy it is for all of us to be caught up in the emotions that are associated with an accident of the magnitude that we are discussing tonight.

Perhaps at the end it would matter little whether this accident occurred in the South China Sea, whether it occurred off the coast of Alaska or off the coast of Canada. The emotions we feel here tonight are associated with watching nature as it reacts to the damage that humankind has once more inflicted upon it.

I am very angry and saddened about the fact that people charged with the steering and operation of such large systems can be so careless of the discharge of their responsibility, how people can be so careless and how they warrant being charged with the sensitivities of a system that is bound to fail when humans fail. I am angry about our inability to do something about this disaster now.

The fact is that no matter what we talk about here tonight and whom we attach blame to, when an accident like this happens, when nature decides to take over and you have three-metre waves, there is no effective response. I am saddened we did not respond in the first 24 hours when there was a calm sea, when the oil could have been contained around the immediate area where the accident took place. I am saddened and angry that the people responsible did not have the facility in place. Yes, I feel the kind of anger that comes with having to stand by, as the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) has to do and others who were on the site, helplessly watching as dead animals are being washed ashore.

I wonder if anyone has ever seen a bald eagle thrash around in the bush after it has digested the cadaver of a dead animal which is polluted with oil? It makes you very emotional and angry.

There is another thing that makes me angry tonight. I am reminded of the scene of an accident that I came upon, a head-on collision between two cars. There were two people lying there bleeding out of every pore, every bone in their body broken. Nobody knew whether one or both were dead. There were two people standing there fighting about whose fault it was. That is what the Opposition is doing here tonight. They are standing here attaching blame. They are arguing about whose fault it is instead of arguing about what we can learn about this megadisaster, arguing about what we can do to avoid these kinds of things from happening in the future.

Yes, I too was here when we discussed pipelines. The shrillest voices came from the red rump over there. Those were the voices against pipelines in the North and the options to transport oil. Yes, we talked. I remember sitting in the committee.

You people are primitivists. You shut it all down. We all live by a lake somewhere in a log cabin, the smoke curling to the sky. We do not need any more fossil fuel. We do not need any more power dams. These are primitivists sitting over there. They were up on the north shore of Alaska saying you cannot build a pipeline here.

I recall sitting in the committee. There was a very arrogant, aloof witness who pointed out these tankers going up and down the coast. They were talking about the strategy of getting oil down to the lower 49 states. They were worried about not being secure having a pipeline through Canada; so they would rather have tankers going up and down the coast. As if that was a strategic system. Can you imagine, if we ever got into a conflict, how easy it would be to blow these tankers out of the water and mess up all of the coast and the rest of North America? The reason they did not have any trust in us is because of these primitivists who had ideas that you should not be harvesting oil in the north, that you should not bring it down.

I would very much prefer to sit down and talk about the alternatives that we have. There are those who say in ten years from now you will be driving your automobile up to a service station or to a grocery store and purchasing a solid hydrogen fuel cell which you plug into the side of your car and which allows you to drive for two or three weeks. These are all things that are perhaps 50 or 75 years away.

Ms. Copps: That will require research.

Mr. Oberle: We are now speculating about nuclear fusion at room temperature. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, what that will do? Yes, even the Hon. Member from Hamilton will perhaps in her lifetime see where oil and fossil fuels will be used for synthetic conversion and no longer be burned up in our smoke-stacks where they pollute the environment.

The fact is what could we do tomorrow. What have we omitted to do in the last 10 years, and what can we do in the next 10 years? Let us pull out the old plans. The former Premier of British Columbia did go to the United States. I recall the headlines. He was promoting a railway to Prudhoe Bay,—tank cars. My God, I suppose there would have been little platforms for moose to get on and take a little hop to the next pasture. It was a haywire idea. Nevertheless, I give him credit. He did fight the tanker routes, as we all did at the time.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that from 1968 to 1972 Conservatives were not in this House. It was the New Democrats and the Liberals who made all these plans and all these agreements. Now they are blaming us for it.

The fact is that this is an accident of monumental proportions. It is an accident from which we can now do nothing but learn lessons. This is an accident as a result of which we should all get together. When an accident occurs, when an airliner crashes, be it a Soviet airliner, a Korean airliner, an American airliner or be it an earthquake that occurs, we get together to pass a unanimous motion to send aid. We do not worry about whose fault it is or what the consequences are or could have been. The feeling is: "Let us go to see how we can help". Let us go to see how we can help. Let us have a debate, as we are having tonight, in a rational and reasonable way and take politics out of it.

The resignation of a Minister will not scoop up one drop of oil. It will not save the life of one muskrat. It will not save the life of one fish. The Minister had nothing to do with it. If anybody is to blame, it is those people who laid these great designs and schemes in the past. Let us not worry about the past. Let us worry about the future. There are alternatives. By being reasonable and by offering to debate, as we have, and by meeting with people and doing so in a rational and responsible way, we may convince our neighbours that we have a common coast to protect, that we have an attachment to our environment that is part of our Canadian psyche, part of our Canadian culture. We have the right to protect it. We have the right to have it respected by our neighbours.

Our neighbours are just as concerned about the environment. It was said by our friends here today that they were much more active in cleaning up the Grays Harbour spill on their own coast. They are just as concerned as we are. The fact is that we are tied to this source of energy. It represents 20 per cent of the entire needs of the United States. It is strategic to them. They will have to get this oil down there. Let us offer some alternatives. Let us sit down to work out new guidelines.

I recall that when we talked about these tankers, there was this arrogant person I was telling Hon. Members about who was sitting there. When I raised the issue, there was this sort of aloof smile as if to say: "How can this lumberjack from British Columbia know about all these satellite guiding systems that would be steering these tankers? There would be no room for human error. It just would not be possible with all this new technology that we have guiding these systems. Do not worry". We all know that accidents do happen, that systems fail, that humans fail and when it does happen we are saddened and angered by it.

I know that there are alternatives to securing the energy requirements for ourselves and for our neighbours in North America. I know that all of us must work hard to develop alternatives to the system to which we are tied now. Our scientists are working hard on that. Let us not be naive to think that we can do it next week, next year or even 10 years from now. For some time we will be tied to the system that has been built over the last 100 years. We will be tied to develop the best possible technology to make sure that these accidents do not happen. Yes, I will be the first to speak anywhere in the country, here in the House and in Cabinet to make sure that we learn a lesson from this accident, that we will discuss what we have learned with our neighbours and insist that the system be improved to the point where a disaster of this magnitude will never happen again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I want to state tonight that I bet the people of the United States are saying no to the Chairman of Exxon and his apology that he splashed over every American newspaper on Monday. Buying full page ads does not compensate for anything.

The day after the spill occurred and the Alyeska pipeline was closed, the oil price went up and Exxon actually made a profit. What about the rest of us? This is the largest oil spill in North American history. It has serious implications for Arctic regions around the world, for much of the western coasts, for marine life and its food-chain, and for oil and gas activities, particularly in remote and sensitive regions such as the region I represent. This is not just a simple error by an insignificant company as a result of which a few Americans, some birds and some fish have been victimized.

As the Member for Western Arctic, I can say that this tragedy has a direct bearing on the region of Canada from where I come. I want to tell the Members what has taken place in the Beaufort Delta since the accident on Good Friday and the contribution which Canada is making to its neighbours which closely borders my riding. Four Hercules planes have been expedited from Yellowknife and Inuvik with equipment to help with the clean-up of the Valdez tanker spill. Last week I attended a meeting in Calgary of the Arctic Institute of North America of which I am a board member. The oil industry people who were present there led us to understand that the members of the Beaufort Co-op, which consists of Amoco, Gulf and Esso, offered their oil spill equipment and Exxon refused any assistance until Tuesday, five days after the catastrophic spill. They simply did not move fast enough.

Mr. Speaker, 240,000 barrels of oil had spilled from a tanker which had gone aground due to human error and gross negligence. The company said that it would manage on its own. From all indications it has not managed at all.

Another week later Exxon accepted the Canadian offer and the Beaufort Co-op sent miles of fireproof booms, igniters, heli-torches, storage burners and saci burners from the Canadian north to the Port of Valdez. Three Canadians have gone with the equipment to help with the deployment and mobilization. These three people have worked in the North quite extensively. One comes from a community in my constituency, a man by the name of Jack Goose from Aklavik. It seems remote. It seems out of the way and maybe insignificant—perhaps not even possible—but these people in the North have something to contribute.

I want to talk briefly on the comparisons of this spill with the oil and gas activities taking place in the Beaufort Delta region. I recently submitted an intervention to the National Energy Board on the applications by Esso, Gulf and Shell to export gas from the Canadian Arctic. Thus I feel close to the subject. I have some knowledge of it. As well, I was living in Tuktoyaktuk near the Beaufort Sea on the Arctic coastline in the mid-1970s when industry began its offshore activities in the Beaufort.

I am originally from Fort Norman, a small community near Norman Wells, site of one of the first oil discoveries in Canada in 1921, and which is now in production with a pipeline which was constructed in the early 1980s from Norman Wells to Zama, Alberta. Therefore I am familiar with what happens when a small traditional community whose residents basically depend on hunting, trapping and fishing is faced with large scale development. I remember when the Alyeska pipeline was being constructed from Prudhoe Bay to Valdez. There was a lot of controversy, but in particular the people in Valdez did not want a major oil tanker port being built in their area. Valdez is a marine sanctuary like no other in the world. Sea otters, which are a threatened species, live in the waters of Prince William Sound, the water next to Valdez. There are only 12,000, and as the number of dead otters increases, this has implications for their population world-wide.

A pod of killer whales had been sighted going through the water where the oil lies, birds and fish are dying, and yesterday a dead deer was found on a nearby island with its intestines contaminated. Deer are at the top of the food chain. That means that not only animals which are covered with the oil are being affected, but those which depend on other animals in the chain for food are impacted as well.

There are 6,000 Alaskans in that region who depend on the fishing industry for their livelihood. There are two industries, oil and fishing. Why Mr. Exxon thinks he can compensate those residents is ludicrous.

The oil that has spilled from the tankers is thick and waxy because it has been highly heated to flow through the pipeline. Therefore is going to stay in that water and along that coastline and have devastating effects for years to come. Those fishermen cannot be reimbursed by a cheque from Exxon. Those people cannot be compensated for a way of life gone bad.

Exxon, one of the largest multinational and powerful companies in the world cannot right this tragedy. They have done virtually nothing to mitigate the impact on the wildlife or the people.

There was an individual who under unfortunate circumstances brought about the spill. I think it is up to the Government to take some action. The man in charge was a third mate who did not even have proper qualifications. He was 10 miles off course. The Exxon Valdez tanker was two years old, and was supposedly of a state-of-the-art design with the latest navigation equipment, but was not even double-hulled. The best tanker that Exxon has in its fleet did not have the technology in the place where it truly counts.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Blondin: We need high level international dialogue to deal with this devastating situation. Since Valdez opened in the early seventies, over 5 billion barrels of oil have been shipped from that port, 2 million barrels per day for one quarter of the U.S. consumption, and Exxon cannot invest in proper equipment, trained personnel or come up with a half decent contingency plan. I hope that we have learned from this.

President Bush sent his personal advisers to Alaska to get a first-hand look at the catastrophe and they returned to Washington within two days to report that all was well. I hope Canadians will never be overpowered by a giant corporation like Exxon which has abused its power in the United States. Despite this and without a review of the entire event, President Bush says he will continue with plans to drill oil in the Alaska wildlife refuge. This attitude shows absolutely no care and no stewardship for the environment that we as Canadians need to consider. This crime against the people of northern America and the environment adheres to no man's laws when things go wrong. The kinds of situations that arise adhere to no man's laws. They adhere to no man's boundaries. International agreements have to be struck. There has to be high level international dialogue to deal with this problem and it has to be done now. Thank you very much.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hour is late and I do not want to repeat some of the very excellent comments made by my colleagues in the House this evening or to be redundant, but I think some of their insights bear some repetition.

There are times when the adversarial nature of the proceedings in this House are sadly inappropriate. By tradition the distance between the two sides of this House is two sword lengths, but tonight it might as well be a million miles. We are discussing the tragedy that concerns all of us, but the opposition Parties cannot resist creating conflict where there ought to be common purpose.

I believe the Canadian people want to see co-operation in responding to the issues raised by the Alaska oil spill. They are impatient with shrill partisanship and a holier than thou posturing. What the opposition Parties have given us tonight is a depressing mixture of distortion, cant and selective amnesia. Some of my colleagues have already stated a proposition that runs counter to the natural reflexes of the members of the Opposition. That proposition is that the Government of Canada did not create the Alaska oil spill. It should be obvious, but you would never know it from the tone of the Opposition. I think it is important to reflect on the moral premises underlying much of their commentary this evening. There is something wonderful about the spectacle of the members of the Opposition distancing themselves from industrial society.

The Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) talks about the need for alternate means of transport for Alaska oil, but it was his colleagues in the NDP who opposed a pipeline to transport that very oil which is now transported by tanker. Of course they have the luxury of never having to make difficult decisions about how to get Alaska oil to markets. They can be purer than pure, but their leader comes from a riding that earns its wealth from the production of gasoline burning automobiles. Are the NDP prepared to say to Bob White and his auto workers that they oppose the internal combustion engine because the transport of oil creates an environmental hazard?

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) takes equal advantage—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): I am delighted to have awakened the Opposition from their torpor.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): I wish they could have done the same for me.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition takes equal advantage of the luxury of powerlessness, but he did not always have that luxury. He was a member of a Government that was so concerned with the provision of gasoline and heating oil to central Canada that it enforced a policy supported by the NDP that expropriated over $1 billion in wealth in western provinces.

Would the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition be prepared to tell the people of central Canada that they cannot use natural gas or heating oil because of the perils involved in their transport are so high? I think not. We all live in an industrial society, and we collectively bear the responsibility of reconciling the imperatives of that society with the survival of our planet, but it is that responsibility which is embodied in the concept of sustainable development which is the foundation of our Government's commitment to environment in the Throne Speech.

As my colleague, the Associate Minister of Defence, has pointed out, that commitment in the Throne Speech is a very specific and constructive one. The Minister of the Environment has spoken of the honouring of Canada and of the Prime Minister by countries at The Hague conference on the environment. It is sad to see how partisanship can blind the Opposition to the genuine respect earned by our own country on this issue. This does not mean that we are perfect. It means that our efforts in technology and policy are admired around the world. Much reference is made in environmental circles these days to the Brundtland Report which defined the concept of sustainable development. No indoor station is of more value in environmental circles these days than the benediction of St. Brundtland of the environment. Yet Norway is the second worst polluter of the North Sea. Much of its wealth is earned by offshore drilling for oil. Mrs. Brundtland has given no indication that Norway plans to abandon this important economic activity.

Ms. Copps: You are in the wrong Parliament.

Mrs. Kim Campbell (Vancouver Centre): This is in no way to diminish the achievement of the Brundtland Report, but simply to point out that the task of translating environmental enlightenment into policy is not easy.

I think it is also unfortunate that members of the opposition seek to take ownership of concern on this issue. The concern is that of all British Columbians and of all Canadians. The Member for Skeena in his opening statement refers to the Nustuqua spill and its effect on Vancouver Island.

• (2320)

No one has a monopoly on concern about that event. My family were pioneers on Vancouver Island. I am the fifth generation of my family to live there. The clients of my ministry have been there for hundreds of generations. I do not think there is any difference in the depth of our concern and our horror, and the sick feeling one has when looking at the effects of that oil spill on Vancouver Island.

I went to Vancouver Island to see the site of the oil spill. While I am not permitted to mention whether the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is present in the House, I can say that he was not present at the oil spill on Vancouver Island.

I remember standing at Long Beach, talking to the volunteers who were working in a biting cold wind. I spoke to two people from Vancouver Centre who were there as volunteers, like so many others, because they cared so much about the environment. Our trip was arranged courtesy of the Speaker of the House of Commons and included Members of the New Democratic Party as well. We took a helicopter up to Nootka Point where we heard of the concern about the possible peril of the sea otter colony.

One of the impressions that was most vivid for me from that trip was the reality of the British Columbia coastline, the coastline on the east side of Vancouver Island and the difficulty of tackling an oil spill there, with the realities of the weather.

The Hon. Member for Skeena referred to the fisheries and the halibut. My first job as a student was in a fish-packing plant in Prince Rupert. I have seen the halibut up close and, quite frankly, I still cannot eat them.

The fisheries are extremely important and we are all concerned about this industry in our province. The Nestucca generated a vast and concerted effort to monitor and protect our important fisheries resource. Before there was agreement between the Parties in the House to reduce our speeches to 10 minutes, I had a very detailed statement by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans to attend to the concerns of the fishery as a result of the Nestucca spill.

After my visit to Vancouver Island to observe the spill first-hand, I was in constant contact with the Department of the Environment co-ordinator in Tofino.

I can tell you that there was a very concerted effort by a large group of dedicated professionals who were monitoring the fisheries. Some of the fisheries were closed. Ongoing research, both from ships and by divers was carried on. This kind of effort is not very appealing when it comes to headlines. It is not suitable for 35 second clips on the evening news. However, the impression given by Members of the Opposition that there was not a concerted effort to contain the effects of the spill, to monitor it and protect the fisheries is very unfair and very incorrect.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) said that we have learned very much and will continue to learn from the Nestucca oil spill as well as from the Alaska spill. Among those lessons should be a realism about human efforts. No amount of technology, no number of volunteers or others involved in cleaning up oil spills in an area like the east coast of Vancouver Island or the coast of Alaska will ever be able to turn oil polluted beaches to what they were before. Only the long term efforts of nature and cleansing actions of the sea can do that. Even then we do not know how successful that will be in the long term.

We must understand the limits of human effort in dealing with those environmental events. Another lesson we should learn from these spills and our efforts in dealing with them is the futility of moral posturing. We are all citizens of an industrial society, as a number of my colleagues have stated this evening. We all take our cars home from a long day in the House and heat our houses with fossil fuels. It is of no gain in dealing with this issue about the future of our planet in posturing and suggesting that somehow we are not part of the problem. We are all part of the problem.

Perhaps it is too much to ask the Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) to avoid appealing to emotions of resentment and rivalry between regions of this country, but that approach is not only fruitless, it is counterproductive.

In conclusion, I want to reiterate the appeal of the Minister of the Environment for an end to partisanship on the issue of the environment and the fulfilment thereby of the expectations of the Canadian people.

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I was astounded to hear the conclusion of the Member's speech, when she asked for an end to partisanship on the discussion of this issue. I suggest she read the first part of her speech. She will notice the inconsistency in her statement. I do not believe the Member contributed anything to this debate.

I think it is worth while for us to return to the original proposal by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). I congratulate him for introducing this proposal to the House. Given the severity of the oil spill on the west coast of Vancouver Island, which affected my riding substantially and the riding of my colleague, the Member for North Island—Powell River (Mr. Skelly), and given the severity of the oil spill on the West Coast, I like the Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) thought we would have been looking into solutions to this problem and ways to prevent the problem from happening again. I believe that problem solving was the reason the Member for Skeena brought this issue up in the House in the first place.

The first experience we had with an oil spill on the coast was in October last year in the Strait of Juan de Fuca. It created serious damage throughout the Strait and the lower end of George's Strait east of Vancouver Island.

Another spill occurred in December, 1988, which spread up the West Coast of Vancouver Island, affecting the whole West Coast. My family has been four generations on that coast, and values that coast and the environment very much.

We have the further oil spill taking place off the coast of Alaska, which could possibly threaten the coast of British Columbia and the area represented by the Member for Skeena in particular. All of these spills have taken place on the West Coast of Canada. Apparently the Government has not learned how to deal with them, how to prevent them or take significant action to prevent them. Therefore, I think the Opposition has to be concerned.

I would have thought the Government would have brought the issue up in the House, would have developed a program to deal with the issue. Had it done so, it would have received unanimous support from Members of the House to bring the issue forward.

A few months ago my colleague, the Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands (Ms. Hunter), requested an impartial commission of inquiry into the Vancouver Island oil spill. Its purpose is not necessarily to establish blame, although it should do so if it is evident. It would also help Canadians and the people of the West Coast and Members of the House deal with oil spills in a quicker and more effective way than we did with the oil spill on the West Coast.

The Government knew that the spill would happen. It knew that damage would take place. It knows about the currents, winds and wave action on the West Coast as will be explained during the debate. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) knew about the wave and current conditions on the West Coast of Vancouver Island. He knows about the wind conditions.

His staff has testified about those wind, wave and current conditions in other disasters, such as the Ramsey Isle disaster. Fisheries and Oceans officials testified that they know the currents in that area so well that they could have predicted where a ship would go if lost at sea, as well as where oil would go when it is released at sea and drifts north along the coast of Vancouver Island. That whole disaster would have been predicted and could have been controlled early in the game. We would like to see an inquiry that would tell us why the Minister failed to act and why the three ministries involved failed to act in such a way as to prevent the kind of damage that did take place on Vancouver Island.

I certainly do not fault the Hon. Member for Skeena for bringing up this issue in the House today even though the oil has not touched the coast of Canada. I am amazed at some of the responses he is getting from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and from the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard). They are precisely the same responses we got in the initial stages when the oil was initially released off Grays Harbour.

The Washington Department of Environment told the Sause Brothers to take that barge 38 miles out off the coast, and they said the oil would drift out to sea. Anybody who knows the current and wave conditions off the west coast of Washington State knows that the oil will not drift out to sea in that area, it will drift north along the coast of Vancouver Island. Anybody who is familiar with wave, wind and current conditions in that area would have known that for certain, especially this Minister, and especially the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) who has been involved in previous actions and coroners' inquests looking into precisely that kind of problem when it involved ships adrift at sea.

The Minister said to my colleague from Skeena that the winds are going in the wrong direction and the waves are going in the wrong direction and this oil will never come ashore. That is exactly the assurance we got from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and from the Minister of the Environment at the time of the Nootka spill, and it was completely and totally wrong. That is why we have been asking, along with my colleague from Saanich, for an inquiry into this situation. We want to find out why our projections were wrong in that case, who was at fault for those projections and who was at fault for telling the tanker it had to be dragged 38 miles out to sea off the Washington coast, knowing that that oil was going to drift ashore to Canada.

We have heard some very defensive speeches. None have been as defensive as that of the Hon. Associate Minister of Indian Affairs, but there have been some pretty defensive responses from Ministers in this House. I am surprised by that.

The Minister of the Environment talked about their newfound concern for the environment and pointed to the sections in the Throne Speech that deal with the environment imperative. He said that there has never been a Throne Speech like this in the history of Canada. There was one that just came out from the Government of British Columbia, and in fact, I thought it was a direct copy. The Government has established a task force on environment and the economy. As well, the national round table on environment and the economy has been established. I will tell Hon. Members what the British Columbia one is worth. It is worth nothing, absolutely nothing.

Nobody believes Vander Zalm is going to do anything on the environment, and nobody believes that anything will be done of substance by this Minister either. What disturbed me most of all is that at least Bill Vander Zalm, the Premier of the Province of British Columbia, in his Throne Speech, mentioned the oil spill off the West coast. At least he attached some importance to it. I want to say to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans that nothing in here relates to environmental issues on the West Coast.

The Minister talks about cleaning up the Great Lakes, cleaning up the St. Lawrence River, cleaning up the Arctic regions. There is nothing in this Throne Speech that suggests any concern about the environmental damages that were caused by the spillage of oil off the west coast of Canada and the west coast of the United States on three separate occasions over the last year. Why did this Minister not draw that to the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when drafting this Throne Speech in the first place? Why did the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) not emphasize to the Prime Minister that this very important problem should be included in the Throne Speech so that they at least would demonstrate some concern about the environmental quality and the vulnerability of the environment on the west coast of Canada?

There is no concern on the part of this Minister of the Environment about the west coast of Canada, and that is why the issue of the oil spill does not appear in the section of the Throne Speech dealing with environmental issues. That is why we in British Columbia simply do not trust that Minister. We cannot trust that Minister. We feel that he just does not have our environmental concerns at heart.

That is why we are up on our feet in the House of Commons tonight. It is to bring to the House that concern that has been brought to us by our constituents through thousands and thousands of letters and telephone calls from constituents concerned about the oil spill that took place on the west coast of Vancouver Island, the oil spill that took place in Alaska, the oil spill that took place in the lower Straits of Juan de Fuca and the Straits of Georgia. That is why we are on our feet now.

We are not talking about some kind of superior moral view. We are talking about a concern of tens of thousands of our constituents over what is happening to the environment. They know that the spill that took place off the West coast of Vancouver Island—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Phinney) has the floor.

Ms. Beth Phinney (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I particularly wanted to speak tonight because of my personal experience with the Vancouver Island oil spill earlier this year. Although I recognize the difference in size between the two spills, the frustrations of the residents are very similar.

Last January, like many Canadians, I was shocked by the television newscasts of the residents of this area trying to clean up globs of oil before it managed to seep into the sand. Particularly heart-rending were the scenes of volunteers trying to clean the oil off dying birds and off the sea otters covered with oil crying on the oil-slicked rocks.

Each day we heard more and more news about the frustration of the local people and the possible long-term effect upon the area. While these volunteers were working tirelessly, the federal authorities were slow in getting organized.

Once the authorities were eventually organized, the official report said that there was no serious problem. The conflicting reports coming from the Government and the evidence we were receiving through the media convinced me that the only way that I could know the real facts about the situation was to go out there myself and help clean up the beaches.

May I read from an article that I wrote four months ago in the Hamilton news describing my experience? This will show how frustrating this experience was.

Working my way along the beach, picking up dead birds and platter-sized globs of congealed bunker oil, I could not help but wonder what we would do differently if we had an oil spill in Hamilton Bay or along the coast of Lake Ontario or in Halifax or along the Labrador coast.

This oil spill along the western coast of Vancouver Island may not be one of the great marine disasters of this decade, but it has, however, already done considerable environmental damage. Thousands of sea birds have died because some of the oil is sinking. Wildlife that feeds off the bottom such as whales will be in danger. The area's entire bald eagle colony and the colony of sea lions are in danger.

The livelihood of the inhabitants of the area is being affected. The federal Fisheries Department has banned shellfish harvesting. Groundfish, herring and other seafood could also be at risk. A booming tourist business in the area is threatened by the spill; 80 to 85 per cent of the economic base is from tourism and the fishing industry.

The instant the locals saw the first oil globs on their beaches, they mobilized. The federal Government took several days to react. The volunteer dispatch centre sends out teams each morning to areas that have been identified as having had more oil washed in by the tides during the evening. These people work all day collecting the oil in garbage bags and leaving them at drop–off centres where they are picked up by helicopters. These bags are being stored while a decision is being made as to what to do with them.

Most of the supplies, including garbage bags, rubber gloves, rubber boots, overalls, food and the use of telephones, et cetera, has been provided by the local residents.

The work was physically demanding and emotionally draining. Although I worked only one day, it was exhausting and depressing. My boots, gloves and clothes were quickly covered with oil. There was no equipment on this beach for clean–up, just volunteers with garbage bags. Where was the federal Government? It was frustrating, Mr. Speaker. These volunteers were doing their best but they needed money, equipment and manpower. More important, they needed support from this Government.

That was four months ago. We are now hearing the same pleas from the residents in Alaska. They want action. Canadians want action. This particular spill, the experts tell us, is not likely to reach Canadian shores. However, they do caution us that there is a possibility, if only a slim one, that the Canadian coast could be tarnished by this spill.

There are yet unanswered questions about the Vancouver oil spill. According to coastal residents to whom I spoke today, oil was still washing ashore 10 days ago. Our federal Departments of Fisheries and Environment are still doing studies to try to learn what the long–term effects there will be on our natural resources. Our salmon supply, the food stock of many residents of Vancouver Island and the source of many jobs, may be threatened.

Has the Government learned from the Vancouver experience? Has it learned from this Alaskan experience? If the worst happens and our shores are affected by this new spill, for the Government not to be ready is not acceptable. The consequences are too great. We have people trained to fight floods and forest fires. The equipment is also available to fight these disasters. What do we have in place to fight oil spills? Where is this equipment? Where are the experts? Who is responsible? How long will it take Government to mobilize assistance next time? Is there a telephone number Canadians can call in case of another oil spill to get immediate action? How many fish beds have to be destroyed? How many small towns have to be economically devastated?

How many Canadian families will lose their livelihood before the Government takes necessary action?

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It appears the debate will go on for some time. Maybe we in the House could dismiss the Pages so they could go home and get ready for their classes tomorrow.

Mr. Fulton: I think that is appropriate, Mr. Speaker. I think if we need coffee or anything else we can arrange it ourselves.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Therefore, the Pages are dismissed. The Hon. Member for Fredericton (Mr. Bird).

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, I am not on duty here tonight. It is not my duty day. I was home watching television this evening when the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) made his opening address in this debate. I said to my wife that «This really looks worth while. I must say that I commend the Hon. Member for Skeena for the initiative he has taken in introducing the debate and for the thoughtful, knowledgeable and well intentioned manner in which I certainly perceived his opening address. I must say that his was one of the last well–intentioned because once I got here and listened to the other side, I became dismayed how such a noble effort by the Hon. Member for Skeena in such an important context could be diminished in the sort of real politics and theatrics which some of his colleagues and others have displayed here tonight, (on the other side at both ends.)

I would like the people of Canada, particularly those in B.C., the people of Alaska and the rest of the United States to know that this problem is shared by all Canadians, certainly by those from the Atlantic provinces, particularly New Brunswick from where I come. It is not difficult to imagine what such a spill as the Valdez disaster would entail if it were to have happened in the Bay of Fundy or in the Atlantic Ocean off Newfoundland. As a former Minister of Natural Resources in New Brunswick, I can comprehend, so can the citizens of our province, what such a tragedy would do to the migration of the Atlantic salmon and the impact it would have on the generations of fish for years to come. It is not difficult to imagine the unimaginable. We can understand the grim reality that such a spill does impose upon the natural sea and coastal resources of Alaska and the northern Pacific coast.

We can and do sympathize with the people from those areas who have suffered. We do understand and share the concerns, the fears and the worries of our fellow citizens in British Columbia.

Like Chernobyl, and Bhopal, the Valdez spill has put the priority of the environment into stark perspective. It makes us realize how much we have to accomplish here in Canada and in North America as well as throughout the world. This debate has also put the subject of the environment into a political perspective in this House.

It seems that we have two choices about the environment in political terms. We can idealize, dramatize and harangue for resignations, as the Hon. Member Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) did. In my opinion, invoking vulgarities almost in his slang in his attack on the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) is unbecoming of a former Premier of a province such as British Columbia and it makes it difficult to understand that he would really be concerned about anything but the theatrical opportunity this debate represented.

The second choice we have is to acknowledge, as the Minister of the Environment said, I thought sincerely and humbly, so genuinely beseechingly to all Members of the House, that the environment is a special priority that transcends partisan politics. We can acknowledge that we are all part of the environmental problem and we can understand that we must all be part of the environmental solution.

I think that if we were to take the context of the remarks tonight of the Hon. Member for Skeena and the Hon. Minister of the Environment and remove partisan politics we would find that they have collectively made a contribution in this debate about a disaster that does not really even involve so far Canadian soil or water. It does not matter whether it does or not, for the debate is well merited. The interventions sparked by the Hon. Member from Skeena and the Minister of the Environment taken collectively do constitute a contribution in addressing the subject of the environment in the broad context, and one from which we all can learn.

I hope we can learn in this House to approach this subject (Environment) in a collective concerned fashion with criticism, of course, with examination and a healthy debate, but with the goal of sustainable development always before us. Sustainable development will be difficult to achieve. There are great risks to be assessed. There are great trade-offs to be made. There is reality to address.

I believe the Government has been clear before the Valdez disaster. At the Hague conference, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of the Environment demonstrated in a world context the priority of the environment to the Canadian Government. I believe that yesterday's Throne Speech has also been a very clear and strong statement in that same direction. I urge all Hon. Members to take the perspective of constructive debate and the goal of sustainable development for our environment as the cause for all of us. I believe that we shall be successful in making progress toward that elusive objective of sustainable development in this country, and we shall be an example to other countries of the world to follow.

Mr. Raymond Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, one of the interesting aspects of the evening here is the suggestion that politics should be removed from the House of Commons. It is an interesting and intriguing approach.

I always used to think of politics as the process of allocating scarce and valuable resources and to do just that. There are differences of opinion, debates, and different points of view.

The people who live on Vancouver Island and particularly on North Island—Powell River do not believe that the government allocated sufficient resources to protect their environment in last fall's oil spill. If one goes to any single community, it can be found that those people fault this Government for an inappropriate response. I simply convey that message to the House.

I have here a letter addressed to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) from the Tahsis Chamber of Commerce, to which I do not believe he has replied, which simply states that the Government failed. It states that a public inquiry is needed now after 20 years of complacency, after changes in technology, and huge increases in the volume of fuel moving up and down that coast. They reiterated on January 31 the point made by my colleague the Hon Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands (Ms. Hunter) on January 29 that we need a public inquiry.

The issue of politics in here tonight is that the Government does not want a public inquiry. There are things that are going to come out that will not be very complimentary. The speech given by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) in the House absolutely displays incompetence, because they were not able to do a thing in that oil spill. They were negligent in their initial handling of it. They were negligent at every stage in the clean-up. The people who live there know this. It is not a secret. Therefore, the issue tonight in the House is a public inquiry. That coast is in danger. Those communities are in danger.

It is interesting that many people out there told me that the 875,000 litres that washed up the coast of British Columbia were in fact a gift. They do not look at it as a tragedy. They look at it as a gift. Out of this process they learned how hopelessly inadequate the state of preparedness and the state of operating this entire system is. The Minister of Environment, the Minister of Transport, and the Minister of Fisheries in everything they said tonight gave no indication that this Government is moving to prevent the next spill, the larger spill.

We are saying that the only way to get back the confidence of people is appoint Judge Dubin or somebody of his stature and put them to the task through a public inquiry of determing what the state is and what we need to improve. We do need a public inquiry to look at the terms of reference of our international agreements with the United States. Those resources have got to be delivered. They have to be triggered the minute the spill is in place, and they have to be delivered jointly. Both our areas are at risk.

We also have to look at the threat. There have been substantial changes in the transportation, storage, and handling of fuels on the coast of British Columbia and elsewhere. We need to look at what the threat is to that coast. There are some areas today where tankers are going and where oil is stored that should never be used. The environment is too sensitive and the impact will be too destructive. It applies to supertankers, small tankers, barges, fuel lines, oil storage dumps. A public inquiry would look into that threat and determine the magnitude of response necessary to meet it without wholesale destruction of the environment.

We also must have a look at the whole business of transportation of fuel. A supertanker is incredibly dangerous to all our welfare along the coast here. If one equates a supertanker to a 747, a 747 has a crew of three or four people, each one of them with back-up systems in terms of technology, and careful operating procedures where one has to reinforce the activity of the other. With this particular system a captain under the influence of alcohol can go below while sailing through extremely treacherous waters where an accident is predicted, and a third mate, not qualified, can wind up sailing a ship like that. Those procedures are hopelessly inadequate.

There was a suggestion that a pilot actually took a freighter, the Lee Wang Sing and sent it along a coast where it hit a reef and lost all hands. There was a pilot on a vessel in Vancouver Harbour which vessel ran into the Second Narrows Bridge. A judge such as Judge Dubin ought to look at those operating procedures and they ought to be changed. Such a judge would also look at legislation and regulations. Those should be changed. He should be looking at our clean-up, inventory, procedures and locations. He should be looking at technology and making recommendations to the Government for research areas to follow through on, inventories of clean-up materials to be purchased and acquired, and distribution of that material.

The other thing that is really necessary is the volunteer groups. There were people who came from right across Canada to work on the west coast of Vancouver Island on that spill. It was absolute chaos. When they tried phoning the Coast Guard, they could never get anyone to talk to. They would never get a call back. When they asked them to walk certain beaches that were definitely exposed to oil, they would not bother doing so. There are still bags of oil lying on the beach to be picked up. Who knows when that will happen. Those volunteers spent thousands of hours collectively and were not given so much as a thank you. They were not given support necessary to make their efforts successful.

Many of them still believe that that oil spill in the volume of 875,000 litres spread across hundreds of miles of the West Coast was in fact a gift because it showed them how inadequate the system was to deal with. Yet we had been lulled into 20 years of complacency by the Government saying that everything is fine. Modern technology is there, and we have great inventories.

It is interesting that nobody in this day can clean up an oil spill on the high seas. That does not exist at this point. I have seen a model built by an individual named Bill Wylie who lives in Courtenay that in fact appears that it will clean it up. He suggests that seiners on their drums should be carrying a boom, and that those booms on the seiner drums should be deposited in every port up and down the coast of British Columbia. The minute it is time to go, a seiner captain picks up a couple of drums, drops the booms in the water around the spill and waits until the hardware can be brought to the place.

The interesting thing about him is that he has been snubbed by every Government Department responsible for seriously looking at this issue. To this point in time it appears to be the only thing that I see that works. It works in wave action, in wind situations, and it actually recovers the oil and puts it into a caisson which can be drawn back off into a tanker. It is not burned and it does not sink. It is basically a good idea that nobody will listen to.

Back we go even further, Mr Speaker. I know that we will not have a public inquiry. The Tories do not want it, and it is a political issue. I appeal to every municipality on Vancouver Island and the coast of British Columbia to co-operate in sending a delegation to meet with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to demand that it happens. Every regional board, every Indian band, every tribal council on the coast of British Columbia should be pressing the Prime Minister to do the responsible thing, call that public inquiry so that we are not trying to solve these problems in the House of Commons, that we can work from a base of knowledge that would be produced from that inquiry and the recommendations from it, and that collectively we can work in the House together to protect that coast, to prevent spills, and to clean them up efficiently when it happens.

The way to end partisanship is to appoint somebody of the quality of Judge Dubin to head a public inquiry, provide a chance for everybody affected to have a say, and bring forward decent recommendations from technical experts who will let us do our job in this House.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock): I would like to begin my remarks by urging Members to read and reread the remarks made by the Member for Western Arctic (Ms. Blondin). There have been some good speeches made tonight, but I think hers above all others was eloquent. The whole speech deserves attention.

I do not mean to avoid the body of her speech that dealt with the preservation of the environment and the culture in her region of the country but I want to focus on the first two points that she made. One was that she attended a board meeting in Calgary where evidence was presented that a consortium of companies in Calgary offered in the first two days to help Exxon clean up the mess in the first two days, and the company refused it. If that is true and she has evidence to lay on the table, the company ought to have charges laid against it for refusing help like that.

Secondly, I wish members of her own Party and members of the New Democratic Party would listen to what she said when she gave an inventory of the things that the Canadian Government and the Canadian people did regarding the Valdez spill, just out of one location, and that was Yellowknife. She gave a complete inventory of the aircraft used, the equipment on board, and the people who flew to Valdez to help in the clean-up.

The next person speaking for that Party ignored this information and said the Canadian Government should have done something. Talk about a dialogue of the deaf! They do not even hear what their own Members are saying. So I hope Members will again refer to the remarks of the Member for Western Arctic.

I want Members to know that the people of Surrey—White Rock understand what it means to experience an oil spill. Eighteen years ago there was a small accident at Cherry Point. The bunker crude oil from Cherry Point refinery washed up on the beaches of White Rock.

I was amazed at the Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) who mentioned that oil spill and complimented the American kids who helped clean up the mess in the States ignored totally the Canadian kids from White Rock who were organized by the teachers in the schools to go down to the beach and clean up the mess. For once, that New Democrat praised an American; but in doing so, he annoyed and ignored the Canadians. This symbolized for me the debate tonight—the total rejection of anything good that the Government or the people of Canada have done. The Opposition refuse to see anything that is good.

So I say that the people of White Rock understand something of a spill. They know in a small measure the tragedy that we are experiencing in the Gulf of Alaska.

As the Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca spoke, I said to myself, the spill in White Rock was in the early months of 1972. Within six months he had a chance to do something about accidents like that, because at the end of August, 1972, he was elected Premier of the Province of British Columbia.

An Hon. Member: Three long years he was there.

Mr. Friesen: They were three long years, dry years.

So I sent to the Library of Parliament for the Ministry that the Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca appointed when he became Premier of British Columbia. The Premier was the Minister of Finance. We have a Minister of a travel industry; industrial development; recreation and conservation; agriculture; petroleum resources; highways; labour; education; commercial transport; health services and hospital insurance; Minister of Public Works; rehabilitation and social improvement—the guy who lost $200 million—Minister without portfolio. In the whole Ministry there was not a Minister of the Environment to be found. But there was a Premier who sits here tonight and uses phrases, referring to the Ministers of the Crown, such as "pious", "sanctimonious", "cant".

Talk about pious, sanctimonious, and cant. When he had the chance to do something, he wouldn't. Then he comes into this House and berates the Ministers of the Crown for not having done enough. He says "pious nonsense". He says the Ministers of the Crown have a special responsibility. "What have you been doing? Don't you understand the problem?" he asks in this House. That's the Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca. During the three years he was Premier of the province, he did not even appoint a Minister of the Environment. The lights were out. The elevator did not go to the top floor. When he had the chance, he did not take it.

Is it any wonder we pay no attention to what those people say? They have the most responsibility when they are not responsible. Oh, they are so responsible when they have no responsibility, but they are totally irresponsible when they have the responsibility.

An Hon. Member: That is why you are in the Cabinet.

Mr. Friesen: And you never will be.

This is too serious a debate to be berating each other.

An Hon. Member: What a hypocrite!

Mr. Friesen: I am quoting the record, Sir.

An Hon. Member: You are a bag of wind.

An Hon. Member: Talk about the spill. Talk about your Government's—

Mr. Friesen: All right, let's talk about the truth. Where is this spill? The Member from Hamilton says that there should be a state of emergency. Since when does a sovereign country declare a state of emergency in another sovereign country?

An Hon. Member: Ask that of the Liberals.

Mr. Friesen: That is true. That is their nature.

They say: "Why didn't we do something when we could?" The oil started coming down the coast of British Columbia all during the years when the Liberals were in office. It wasn't until 1979 that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Hon. Flora MacDonald, signed the agreement to regulate the traffic through the Straits of Juan de Fuca and through the Haro Straits to make sure that there was the least opportunity for an accident to happen in those vulnerable areas. That's what gives a little bit of protection to the coast of British Columbia, not the cant, not the wind, not the accusations, but the action of a Government when it came into office in 1979.

So I say to the Members here tonight, you can accuse all you want. I know that you will not believe the Ministers of the Crown. I know that you will not believe the members of the Government. But believe the Member for Western Arctic and others who are willing to put it on the record. Let us quit the rhetoric, and let us protect Canada.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): I wish to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, for making this debate possible here tonight and for the opportunity to put forward thoughts on all sides of the House and to deal with what seems to most of us to be the major facets of this issue. To me, the facets are the question of prevention, the question of international standards and regulations, the issue of imposing moratoria, and finally, the most difficult issue of long-term energy policy and our dependence on oil.

Before I go into that, I would like to draw to your attention a curious pattern which develops whenever the Conservative Government finds itself in trouble in matters related to the environment. It conveniently hides behind three claims. The first one, and we have heard it many times before in other debates, and it is the most ludicrous of them all, is that everything that is positive in the environment achieved by Governments began in 1985.

• (0010)

Second, when the heat gets a bit too high it trots out this new element of the Prime Ministers of Canada being hailed abroad and receiving awards. That helps enormously.

Third, when that fails to make an impression on this side of the House, it comes up with this beautiful convincing item saying that Canadians do not like partisanship in the environment. We must all say the same thing. We must unite. We must be supportive of the shortcomings and the failures of this Government. Tonight, two hours ago, the present Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) followed the examples of his two predecessors and did exactly the same thing. What a sham!

The question is what are the steps, the substantial steps, that the Government has taken to ensure that our own practices and regulations at home and those of our neighbors are taken into account and enforced so as to ensure prevention. The question here is a very crucial one because prevention is much more important than reaction. Even the most speedy and quick reaction which the Minister of the Environment invoked in his intervention is not as good as prevention. He will agree with that.

We must find ways of increasing this prevention. How this Government can increase prevention when it has over the years lost its main muscle financially to maintain in the Department of the Environment 330 people which it has lost over the last four years, and with a budget that has not been able to keep up with inflation, is hard to understand. In other words, one can prevent if one has the budget available to carry out that prevention. If one is losing ground to other Departments and to inflation, then the instruments available to Ministers disappear as well. That is what struck me as the weakest measure, the weakest part of the ministerial interventions here tonight.

The problem with the Conservatives is that they are still part of the problem. They are strong on rhetoric but they are weak on substance. When they cannot maintain the strength in their own Department of the Environment, and in Departments that are allied to it, in preventive measures in our marine environment, then one can only react. The necessary preventive measures cannot be taken to be ahead in this game.

There were some interventions tonight also on the matter of international standards for pilots and for the prosecution of companies. It is ridiculous to see in the situation of Exxon that the person who has to pay is the captain and not the company. It is ridiculous to see in the case of Exxon a situation whereby highly qualified, trained pilots are not in charge of the supertanker. Evidently there is something in this whole industry that must be established that is missing.

We must learn from the aviation industry, borrow from the standards that have been established there, and move very quickly internationally to ensure that the marine pilots are of the same competence as the pilots in the air and that those who are guilty of offences, the companies that are guilty of offences, are prosecuted and not the individual.

The lesson is that prevention requires budgets. The Conservatives are part of the problem. With respect to the same steps that have been taken in Washington to which the Minister alluded very vaguely tonight, it is not known what they are leading us to.

What has been done in Washington since this spill on the West Coast is something that the public should know. That should also be debated here so that we can intelligently participate in the building of these new approaches which are so badly needed.

We must also call on the Government, as have others, to hold a public inquiry into Canada's ability to deal quickly with major spills in our water. That is an aspect that also should be made public in the interests of the public and in the interests of all those fine environmental principles which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) invokes when he goes abroad but which he seems to forget when he comes back to Ottawa.

It seems to us also that we must put on hold future offshore exploration projects until the results of such an inquiry are known. It would be a wise course of action.

It would also be desirable to impose a moratorium, possibly in perpetuity, on offshore oil exploration in the Hackett Strait and in the Dixon Entrance for very well known reasons that could be defined if time were available.

It would be desirable to impose a moratorium, possibly in perpetuity, on tanker traffic in Lancaster Sound and in the Northwest Passage. This could happen to us as well one day. We do not want one day to have our fragile Arctic ecology damaged by the movement of tankers through the Northwest Passage and through Lancaster Sound. We have the opportunity now in the light of enormous public pressure and intense public opinion to move on this desirable front.

Finally, as others have before me, we are brought to ask ourselves whether the time has not arrived for us to discuss our long-term energy policy and the fact that we can and must find ways of using more efficiently our oil resources globally, in North America to begin with, and also find ways of developing alternative sources of energy so that we will not depend on oil that has to be shipped from the northern regions to the southern markets.

I see that my time has come to an end. I would like to conclude by saying this. As the proverb states, an ounce of prevention is much more effective than a pound of reaction. The Minister of the Environment, I am sure, would want to have the budgets at his disposal to be preventive out there on the West Coast of Canada as it is desirable for him and his Government to be. We are looking forward to seeing what the Budget will contain to provide this Minister the tools that he needs. We can assure him that if he gets the tools he needs we will support him and applaud him. If he does not get the tools he needs then we will know that on the Conservative side of this House what is being said on the environment is rhetoric, not supported and followed up by substance.

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, there have been a few geography lessons given in this House today and I trust that the Minister of the Environment will take notes on those lessons. given. What we have heard from the other side of the House has not assuaged any of my concerns. There is a crisis of confidence in this Government's ability to address the concerns of oil spills and other environmental disasters which have devastated the West Coast. That crisis of confidence has just increased through this emergency debate.

I commend my colleague from Skeena for pushing this debate, but it certainly has not given me any reassurance that things are going to improve. This Government has shown a pattern of trivializing this type of occurance. It did not respond to my letter of January 31 when I asked for a public inquiry, and now we are hearing criticisms that we are being partisan. All we are doing is acting as responsible members of the Opposition and pointing out that we—and acting for our constituents, those volunteers that went up to the West Coast to clean up—that we want assurance from this Government that there are structures put in place so that it will not happen again, and if it does happen how we can most efficiently clean up the mess and get back to living our lives.

The response from the other side of the House gives me no confidence that they are even willing to put the resources in to do that. What it demonstrates is a fundamental misunderstanding of the problem. It also demonstrates that this Government, as was indicated from the Speech from the Throne, is going to be following its corporate agenda. It is going to be hand in hand with the large corporations like Exxon not to put any regulations in their way, not to get in their way of making big profits.

I think that in today's Globe and Mail one of the columnists said it best. He said, insofar as Governments are concerned, there are important reasons for having them share in the responsibility of the prevention of oil spills, in the preparation for their clean-up and in the clean-up itself. That is all we are asking for, that our Government be responsible, be prepared and start acting for the interests of Canadians.

What we have heard tonight is that the Government wants to take pot shots at those of us who are criticizing it, and what I think is demonstrated over and again is that there is an abdication of responsibility, and that is what we are critical of. It is very interesting that it took my colleague from Skeena to push this debate, although there is a growing crisis on the West Coast, and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) was not even sure of his geography even though this issue has been in the papers for weeks.

We want a public inquiry. We want allocation of national resources to address this problem. We want to make sure that it is not just the poor people, the workers and the Coast Guard, that are taking the flack and the criticism. We want the criticism to go where it is most effective to make real change, to make real changes so that the people of Canada can be assured that their Government is acting on their behalf. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Al Horning (Okanagan Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Coast Guard is lead agency for all marine source spills. As soon as the first site of the oil spill was discovered in the Nestucca incident, the Coast Guard mounted a full operational response. This response included all of the relevant federal and provincial organizations. Altogether over 350 people worked at the peak of the clean-up. This comprised the largest team of environmental and scientific operational personnel ever assembled on the West Coast to address the clean-up operations and the environmental impact assessment. The primary clean-up was undertaken by the ship owner's contractors under supervision of the Canadian Coast Guard.

Under both Canadian and American law, the polluter is responsible for all costs, expenses, and direct damages associated with the marine oil spill. Supporting the response was a team comprised of federal and provincial agencies such as the Department of the Environment and Fisheries and Oceans. The military assisted by providing helicopters and aircraft support.

At the peak of the clean-up operations responding agencies in the contract deployed up to 10 vessels, 13 helicopters and surveillance aircraft, command posts and various other resources. To date over 370 tonnes of oil and oil-related debris have been recovered, most of which is stored at the interim site at Cassidy. Operations were completed on March 19, and the monitoring phase commenced on March 20.

In response to marine pollution accidents, the Canadian Coast Guard has a multilevel contingency plan in place which deals with incidents on a local, regional and international level. In conjunction with the supporting Departments, the Coast Guard conducts exercises to evaluate these plans and to provide training for the multi-disciplined teams, and in the Nestucca incident the joint marine pollution contingency plan was invoked. The Canadian Coast Guard also maintains depots of pollution counter-measures equipment at 50 locations across Canada. This inventory valued at $35 million is available for deployment to any location.

Mr. Speaker, as permanent environment damage is a great concern, a multi-disciplined team of federal-provincial experts was involved throughout the Nestucca response in assessing the spill impact. The scale of this impact assessment exceeded any other previously mounted, and will provide valuable information needed to assess long-term effects.

Mr. Speaker, it is the polluter's responsibility to settle any claims arising out of a spill directly with the claimants. To assist with the processing of claims, the Canadian Coast Guard established a claims assistance office to provide help and advance to potential claimants. The process for documenting claims is based on a system developed following the Kurdistan incident in 1979. Our lawyers are also actively studying every angle of Canadian and American law, to pursue Canadian claims for assistance. In addition the Government is attempting to assist in this process by establishing an appropriate procedure with the polluter for the processing of claims.

Mr. Speaker, the principle that the polluter is responsible for the damage caused by this spill also applies to economic losses. Moreover, as a last result, the Marine Pollution Claims Fund may also be available for economic loss suffered by fishermen.

In conclusion, following every incident a review of the response and operation is undertaken. Incidents such as the Nestucca are unfortunate and we all recognize the need to work hard to prevent reoccurences. In assessing the response and identifying areas for improvement, we are provided with the opportunity to improve our response.

Mr. Speaker, our Government cares, and in times of disaster we will respond to the best of our ability.

Mr. Jack Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, as the only new Member of Parliament in Parliament here, it is my pleasure to speak on behalf of the Inuit of Nunatsiaq and as a representative of the northern people. I am pleased to speak tonight, although it pains me that it had to come to this point before we were able to speak on this issue. This is a disaster of very large consequences and it is part of our land because Inuit occupy a circumpolar world all across from Alaska to Greenland to Canada and to the Soviet Union. So we consider the North as part of our land, and we don't define any international boundaries between the people of the various international regions.

The Valdez spill disaster must cause us all to think about the environment and the costs of such accidents.

• (0030)

As a northerner whose people depend to a large extent on the land, the ocean and its resources, the possibility of a spill like this in the Canadian Arctic is extremely disturbing. The North cannot afford such a disaster.

The North wants and needs development but not at any cost. The National Energy Board will soon begin hearings on applications by Shell, Esso, and Gulf for 20-year licences to export natural gas from the Mackenzie Delta to the United States. A pipeline will be necessary to transport that gas if the applications are approved.

Although times have changed since the Berger Inquiry, and land claims are close to being achieved for the Dene and Métis of the western Arctic and the Inuit of central and eastern Arctic, and the Innuvialuit claim was settled in 1984, there is still the concern that development will proceed. I reiterate that we are not against development to the extent that we can be sure it will be safe for all the people of the Northwest Territories and Alaska.

At the same time, the President of the United States has been considering development or exploration in an area known as 10.0.2 at the Alaska-Yukon border. This land covers the grounds of the Porcupine Caribou herd. President Bush has indicated that the Exxon disaster does not affect whether the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge should be developed because that disaster was likely a result of human error. Most developmental disasters are a result of human error, and I beg to differ with President Bush on this issue.

The full Congress has yet to make a decision on this development. However, there has been much discussion on the issue and it is likely that exploration on this development will begin. If passed, the legislature would be giving its stamp of approval to the opening of the coastal plain of the refuge to environmentally responsible oil and gas exploration, development and protection. As we all aware, however, no development is safe from disaster, whether it is through human error or other means.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will visit President Bush in the near future. His trip will include environmental discussions, including initiatives for the Arctic. The Prime Minister will also receive an environmental award from the International Chamber of Commerce on May 4. I question the merit of this award, based on the slowness of the Government's response to the Exxon Valdez disaster. We have been told by various Ministers that the effect of that disaster is not approaching Canadian waters. The animals in that area, whether it is the seals, whales, salmon or any other wildlife, know no boundaries.

While the Government of the Northwest Territories has approved in principle the building of the pipeline because of the need for economic development in the North, it is qualified by the fact that environmental concerns must be safeguarded.

As the only Inuit Member of Parliament and representative of the true North, which is supposedly strong and free, I have very grave concerns about the whole issue unless there are stringent regulations in effect.

Our people are taught by our elders early in life that above all we must honour the lands, the water, and all that is within them.

The straightforward lesson is communicating to one and all, for our people know that we have survived for thousands of years in all types of conditions because we valued, respected, and honoured all that was around us. We came to understand that rather than forcing the environment to conform to our needs, we developed behaviour that adapts to our environment. How incredibly it is sad that I stand here tonight, believing as strongly as I do in the wisdom of the Inuit elders, and see a situation in which our man-made systems and processes have dealt such a painful life threatening blow to this fragile and unique part of the world. I know that native people in Alaska must share a similar philosophy. They surely must be shaking their heads as they watch the events that are unfolding in their land.

They have lived through various occupations in their land and have seen a steady stream of visitors come to dabble with technology that they swore was failure-proof in an environment in which man can never and should never attempt to rule.

We hear stories of carelessness, recklessness, over confidence, alcoholism, debauchery and gross ignorance on the part of tanker crews and carpet-baggers at Valdez. How must native people feel, along with non-native Alaskans who live off the land and water, being forced into a situation where all the boastful experts were suddenly rendered powerless and ineffectual, drowning along with wildlife in their own technology?

If we are going to develop the North, whether it is in Alaska, Canada or anywhere else in our circumpolar world, we must take finto consideration the people who have lived there for thousands of years without any man-made disasters. It is because they know how to live off the land. People must listen to them rather than making decisions in the boardrooms of America or southern Canada. If they are not heard, I predict more disasters of this type as a result of the carelessness of the developers.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, we would do well to listen to the voices we have heard tonight from Canada's aboriginal people as represented here in Parliament.

On November 21 the people of Victoria and Vancouver Island voted for strong, effective, and progressive voices in Parliament. They voiced their deep concern especially with the issues of the environment. We have in today's emergency debate had a clear demonstration that indeed Vancouver Island and Victoria have finally found their full voice in this House of Commons.

It is really a profound shame that this debate is taking place. If anything good comes of it, it may be that, finally, this Government will get the message that the West Coast exists, that we have real problems and that we will insist that these concerns are addressed in Parliament.

The Speech from the Throne contained many words about the environment and many noble intentions of the Government. A closer reading, however, indicates that the central Canadian perspective of the Government is fully heard in the speech. For example, it contains no reference whatever to the Alaska oil spill, the worst oil spill in the history of North America. It contains no reference whatever to the West coast oil spill that occurred in December and January.

The oil spill we are debating tonight is in fact the twelfth worst oil spill in the history of this planet. I have here a list of the other oil spills. Many of them are common knowledge including the Torrey Canyon, Amoco Cadiz and others.

Despite the fact that this is the worst oil spill in North American history, there was not one word in the Speech from the Throne about it. There was not one word in it about West Coast oil spills. There was talk of cleaning up the problems in the St. Lawrence River. There was talk about cleaning up the problems of acid rain in the Great Lakes and the problems of the Arctic, but there was not one word about the environmental concerns of the sensitive ecological system on the West Coast.

There was not one word in the Speech from the Throne about another subject, forestry, the Carmanah Creek and the Carmanah Valley, the crisis in our forest industry, the overcutting, the problem of job losses in Fletcher Challenge and elsewhere. However, because of the initiative of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and your response, Mr. Speaker, we are having this important debate.

It is worth while to notice that Ministers of the Government have participated in the debate, a healthy sign that they are finally at least forced to explain themselves on the floor of the House of Commons.

I want to put a series of specific proposals to the House. First, I propose that there should be a formal public inquiry into oil spills on the West Coast. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) said that as a result of the oil spills this was the occasion to examine the response of the Government. He said, "of course it will be done." What we say to the Minister is, do not make it an internal departmental inquiry. Instead, make it an open, public inquiry which environmental groups and experts have an opportunity to attend. Give them an opportunity to examine and cross-examine witnesses. Provide them with some resources so that their views can be heard on this very important issue. This is one way to begin to restore some confidence in the whole system of government and in its capacity to respond to the perceived dangers on the West Coast.

Second, we call for an immediate statement as to which Department of Government is responsible for dealing with oil spills. We hear from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard). He has not found it possible, I gather, to attend all parts of this debate. I hope he is listening. The Minister of the Environment seems to take a lead. We hear from the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and from three Ministers of State from British Columbia. It is not clear who is in charge of this problem nor was it clear who was in charge when the west coast spill occurred in December and January. Reports from the front indicated all kinds of chaos, confusion, and disarray. In fact, there was said to be a bureaucratic war going on as to who was actually in charge. The time has come to make it very clear publicly who is accountable for responding to oil spills.

Third, we ask for thorough consultation with environmental and municipal people on Vancouver Island.

Fourth, we ask that there should be compensation for those in the tourist industry and in the fishing industry who have suffered damage from oil spills. It should not be the responsibility of individual Canadians to pursue costly international litigation. The Government should provide immediate compensation and then undertake the litigation itself.

Fifth, we ask for a moratorium on offshore drilling. Sixth, we look to the Government to give some genuine attention to research and development in this area. There has been in my own constituency of Victoria the development of OSCAR. OSCAR is a process for responding to oil spills. It uses quite a different technology from the skimming process that has been used. It is a development which is being pressed by people with long experience in the oil industry and in the marine industry. It is Canadian technology. It is endorsed by private users. We see this as an opportunity to develop Canadian technology, to use Canadian brains and responses to deal with these very difficult environmental disasters, and we would ask the Minister to give this very thorough and independent consideration.

Seventh, we ask that there be imposed standards and controls on all tankers and barges using our territorial waters. Part of the problem we face in Victoria, for example, is that four to six tankers are going by the Straits of Juan de Fuca within just a few miles of Victoria, and these are aging tankers. They are a moving ecological disaster waiting to happen. It will happen, as the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) said, unless this Government moves promptly to impose standards and controls.

Finally, we ask the Government to review the recommendations of the tri-level task force which reported in January.

The Valdez and West Coast oil spills are a warning to the people of Canada, indeed to the people of the world, of what we are doing to our environment. The issue here is not just oil spills. The issue is what we are doing ecologically to this planet.

Once again, people are ahead of their Governments. They are demanding, and we endorse and put forward that demand in the House of Commons, that we treat the challenge to our environment as the fundamental issue of our time. Time is short. We must move to develop alternative energy sources, and a revolution in our way of approaching transportation and fuel. We have to look at new ways of conservation. We must develop a completely new way of addressing the problems that we face.

This has been an important debate. I urge the Government to endorse the ideas put forward.

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, during the last 90 days in my riding, I spent hours and hours talking to many of my constituents, and the number one issue on their agenda was the environment. There is a passionate view, not just in my riding but I believe in all ridings across Canada, that we have a very special opportunity here to set an international standard, an international model, in terms of following recommendations from the Brundtland Commission.

When I came back here on Monday and I listened to the Speech from the Throne, I was really excited. I heard words like, "Canadians possess a unique sense of their relationship to the land whose rich, vast diversity has shaped their values and experience and throughout the regions and across all linguistic and ethnic communities there is a shared concern that we protect our environment for generations of future Canadians," and on it went in the Speech from the Throne. "The national round table on the environment and other initiatives are part of a new environmental agenda which will also include commitments to certain things," and on and on it went. I left the Senate Chamber feeling very excited.

As the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) noted earlier tonight, probably never in the history of a Speech from the Throne have we heard so much in terms of a national Government's commitment to the environment.

We love our country and we all have a vision of it. I believe on this issue the challenge is to take this vision and this feeling we have all talked about and turn it into reality. Earlier tonight the Minister spoke about a non-partisan approach to the environment. I think that is a great way to go in this issue. Again, that statement must become reality. How does that non-partisan approach work? I just do not understand the logic. If we are taking a non-partisan approach to the issue, then why would we not have this formal public inquiry? What is wrong with having a formal public inquiry? It does not make sense to me when we follow the logic of us all working together.

Here we are less than 40 hours after the Speech from the Throne and I am concerned that we are going to be following into the trap of the "mad" treatment, the maximum administrative delay. I say to the Minister he cannot fall into this trap on this issue. This is an issue where we must move with all of the political will of all of the Parties in this House. I am not really sure that we have done our best on this. I am not really sure nor am I convinced that the words of non-partisanship are really as genuine as they sound. I think this issue is a terrific example and an opportunity for us to begin turning those words into action. Even here tonight the Minister can pre-empt me and say I have no problem with a formal public inquiry.

This incident is in the United States but this issue is a global environmental issue. This Minister of the Environment has an opportunity to set a world-class example. There is no one in this House, there is no one in this country who will not back him on this issue as long as we are all working together and as long as we are achieving the common future. I believe that if we are going to get this session on the right foot, we should begin by focusing on the words "let's turn vision into reality". Here is an example where we can show not only Canadians whom we are encouraging to get involved in this issue but we can set an example for our American friends, for our friends all around the world that we are serious, that we will collaborate with them because even collaborating on this issue will be helpful to us, God forbid, should it ever happen in Canada.

Through you, Mr. Speaker, I urge the Minister to make sure that the words in the Speech from the Throne are not words that are diversionary, they are not words that are just rhetoric but words of substance and words of action.

As my colleague from Davenport said earlier this evening, if the Minister acts on these issues in a straightforward manner without an administrative delay approach I know he will have the support of my colleagues.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a particular interest in the urgent debate so appropriately brought forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). In this debate I am talking not only about a community far away, Valdez, Alaska, but my neighbour Alaska. Many of us in the Yukon, in my riding, often visit Alaska. I have visited Valdez on numerous occasions. It is a beautiful community. To see the effects of what has happened with this oil spill is very close to me and close to people in my riding, to all northerners as some of my colleagues from other northern areas have explained, and also to my colleagues from British Columbia who have so recently at first-hand felt the effects of a serious oil spill.

The questions of oil and gas development and its ramifications, good and bad, on the northern economy and the environment are issues that are extremely close to home. It is impossible to live in the North and not be keenly aware of the fragility of the environment. For those of us who have participated in the past in pipeline hearings on the Beaufort Sea, all of the questions that are now coalescing around the Valdez oil spill and its ramifications not just for the United States but also for Canada really bring back memories of those discussions, and in many cases arguments about the feasibility of tanker travel in the North. There were many presentations made about the dangers of this, about the difficulties with shifting sea ice, with icebergs, and exactly the kinds of concerns that, alas, have been exemplified by the Valdez oil spill.

Once again in the North we will be into hearings on gas exports in the coming weeks and again the same issues of weighing the environment, the natural resource, the benefit, the revenue and the expenditure will become before the Canadian public.

Two of my colleagues have mentioned the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, a transboundary park in northern Yukon and Alaska. That happens to be the calving grounds of the Porcupine Caribou herd. That region was set aside because it is the calving grounds. The Porcupine Caribou herd represents not just 150,000 animals but a national and international treasure and a non-renewable resource. However, we see that the American Government is beginning to reconsider its position and is beginning to look at possible drilling on these lands. The Americans are weighing this drilling against the non-renewable international heritage—what are best estimates of the amount of oil recoverable from the lands as being an oil supply of two years for the United States. This is two years of oil versus an irreplaceable international treasure which also happens to be part of a very viable economic system for at least 12 or 15 aboriginal communities.

Those are the kinds of questions that the spill in Valdez again brings forward to our society and asks us to question what we value, and what kind of a system we have created and what some of the ramifications of that system are.

During many of the environmental hearings in which I have participated in the North the question has always come up about the possibility and risks of any kind of development. Some of those will be deemed to be acceptable. That is quite understandable, Mr. Speaker. Economic development, the use of natural resources for all Canadians and northerners, is an important consideration. But the risks are often calculated on a very interesting basis. They are calculated on the risk to the investor, often the oil and gas developer. Rarely are the risks identified. In many ways we have not been able to identify in a realistic and calculable way the risks of exactly the kind of oil spill that has taken place in Valdez.

Earlier someone referred to the Amoco Cadiz case in France off the French coast in 1978. That tanker spilled 200,000 tonnes of crude oil. What were the costs? The French Government in that particular case had already spent $36.7 million on clean-up but could not even estimate the long-term effects on fishing and tourism. We are in exactly the same position, Mr. Speaker.

My colleagues have spoken about the possible effects of this spill as it moves towards the West Coast on the Tatsenshini and Alsek Rivers. Those two rivers supply subsistence fishing for many residents in the area, a commercial fishing industry, tourism, and a very vital environmental wilderness area that is part of the ecosphere and the fundamental environmental basis of the air we breathe and the waters that we drink.

We expect our Governments to act to protect us in these cases. I would like to support two things raised by my colleagues. First of all is most certainly the call for a public inquiry. Any Government, any Parliament, any group of politicians, and indeed citizens who believe what has become almost a cliche, sustainable development, and we should also be talking taking about sustainable environment, must have the opportunity for full and open inquiry when such an event as this happens.

We know that there is no quick fix solution. We know the Valdez oil spill has pointed out to us that the technology does not exist to do the clean-up required. In fact, taxpayers who often pay to encourage that development end up paying a second time to do the clean-up that might occur as a result of accidents such as that at Valdez. Clearly, the taxpayer has a vested interest in such a public inquiry, not only for now but for the future and the long-term consequences for our children and grandchildren.

The previous speaker referred to having to examine the life-style that we have created and become dependent upon. When there was that little blip about the oil scare, Governments were encouraging alternate energy development. The programs of Energy, Mines and Resources in that regard have been cut back to nothing. The programs through Environment Canada to encourage conservation and to look at alternate energy resources in a long-term energy policy have been cut back to virtually nothing.

Canadian taxpayers have a right to know whether the Government is only talking about rhetoric when it comes to the environment. Both members of the House and the Canadian public will therefore be looking very closely to the Budget to see if the Government is prepared to take into account seriously the long-term needs concerning the environment of this country, and indeed that of the international issues.

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, I have to admit some puzzlement at the obviously defensive attitude that appears to have been taken by a number of the speakers and Ministers opposite, in particular the Member for Vancouver Centre (Ms. Campbell).

This debate tonight is not about the Vancouver Island oil spill. It is not about who or what caused the Valdez oil spill, or is it for the wringing of hands with respect to the tragic aftermath of these spills.

This debate is an alarm bell for all Canadians. It is an alarm bell that signals that Canadians do not have confidence in the ability of the Government to prevent an oil spill of significant size such as occurred recently, nor the confidence that the Government has the ability to clean and limit an oil spill such as occurred recently. It is a warning bell not only of that perception, but also that we are not prepared.

We have heard tonight from the Ministers responsible that we have equipment, we have manpower, and we have know-how dispersed across the country, dispersed strategically waiting for the next emergency to occur. That is exactly what we would have heard from Exxon two weeks ago. It would have said exactly the same thing. What did that get for our American neighbours at Valdez? It got them nothing.

We have heard the same rhetoric here today as the Ministers have read from their Ministry briefings listing the many tools, devices, know-how, and skills at our disposal to deal with these things. We know, and Canadians know, that we have not done enough. The proof is in every successive oilspill. They just keep on coming. Every spill and every sea-life kill proves that we still have not yet done enough. That is why we have a crisis in confidence, and that is why we have the debate tonight.

We also know that we do have ways and means to improve. We need vastly improved standards of navigational safety, and we need vastly improved standards in international shipping and international agreements governing the transport of oil.

Why have the Ministers here today, the Ministers who purport to represent all Canadians in matters such as this, Transport, Environment, and Fisheries and Oceans not discussed the improvements that we can and must make? Why has there been no mention of these? It is because they are not there, and that is why there is a crisis in confidence.

We have heard the ministerial rhetoric, and we have heard the travelogues about the beautiful B.C. coast, but that does not get us improvement. We have Armed Forces that have said to us time and time again in this changing world where the Armed Forces will do more than simply shoot bullets, to tell them what to do, give them the tools and they will do the job. Still I see nothing on this.

We have areas where international agreement governing the transport of oil and other commodities could improve the safety conditions, because it is not only rules that prevent these spills, but will assist in preventing these types of spills.

It is my hope that the Ministers opposite will not continue to be blinded by their own rhetoric and the rhetoric of their Ministries that they have done enough and we are ready. I will not permit the Ministers or the Government, and my Party will not permit them to be trapped by the rhetoric of their Ministries. If anything is to be gained from our debate here tonight it will be a recognition by Canadians that the Government of today realizes its own weaknesses in this regard, both real and perceived, and believe me they are perceived, and that the Government will take concrete steps to resolve those weaknesses and thus help to prevent absolutely another Valdez spill.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it disturbs me to have to stand in the House today and speak on this issue, because it is a sorrowful day for this House and Parliament to have to debate this issue. As one of my colleagues pointed out earlier tonight, it has come to this—after 22 years of warnings of environmental catastrophe, predictions by environmentalists and previous provincial administrations of looming environmental damage to the West Coast of British Columbia, of requests that supertanker traffic not be allowed to move throughout the waters close to the inter-tidal zones of the B.C. coast, the inevitable has finally happened.

There is a tendency for the Members in this House toward hyperbole. Sometimes the Members tend to embellish their arguments. In the discussion here tonight that has not been the case.

The issue tonight is truly a disaster of international and global proportions. With the accident at Valdez, we have let loose an ecological and environmental time bomb that we cannot control. We might have controlled it had there been immediate action taken by both the U.S. Government and the Canadian Government before the high-end distillates left the oil mass to create a sticky, globular mass half the size of Nova Scotia, 2,700 square kilometres of sticky, gooey, oily mess adrift on the high seas. No one can predict, certainly not the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) because he cannot even predict when planes will come in on time at the Toronto airport, what will happen to that mass as it drifts on the high seas in the winds and the tides.

The argument with respect to the direction that the oil mass will follow is simply conjecture.

I say to the Minister of the Environment that there is no way he or anyone in the Government can guarantee the people of British Columbia and the people of Canada that the drifting mass of oil will not impact on the B.C. coast at some point in the future. They cannot predict what will happen, and because of that the environmental integrity of the B.C. West Coast is in jeopardy at this very moment.

I want to talk for a moment about the Queen Charlottes, islands that are well known to people in British Columbia and people throughout the globe. It is a surrealistic place that is separated from the B.C. mainland by 100 kilometres of open water. It has been a refuge from the full impact of the last Ice Age. The islands house a unique ecological system, self-contained flora and fauna. It contains the world's largest black bear, the world's second highest eagle nest density, otter, wandering shrew, sea lion, seal, harbour porpoise, peregrine falcon, migrating whales, deer, elk, muskrat, raccoon, and the list goes on.

With spring and coho salmon fishing off the coast of Masset and Skidgate Islands, the Charlottes are truly an environmental heritage for British Columbia and for all of Canada, a way of life for the Haida nation. The area is a veritable treasure-house of environmental and tourist-related activities. To give you an example, people will pay over $2,000 for a boat trip around South Moresby Island. The people who visit these islands are the same people who go trekking in Nepal or on safaris in Africa. They are world-wide travellers, and they are flocking to the Queen Charlottes because of the pristine beauty and unspoiled wilderness that is offered there. These islands have won international recognition as an invaluable environmental and recreational resource. The United Nations has claimed a portion of the islands in the South Moresby area as a world heritage site. Our own federal Government has realized the value of the islands in its negotiations with the Province of British Columbia to make the South Moresby area a national park reserve.

I want to read a quote from National Geographic, 1987, that said:

> The Queen Charlotte Islands cradled off British Columbia's West Coast are among the globe's rare jewels. A dagger-shaped assemblage of 150 islands, the Charlottes are a wilderness of the first rank abounding in treasures.

This jewel of British Columbia's north coast is threatened by a needless tragedy. That tragedy as a result of the oil spill at Valdez may well threaten the sensitive and fragile environmental and ecological systems that are on that island. When you look at the map, you find that the first land mass south of the Alaska Panhandle that the oil could possibly impact is the Queen Charlotte Islands.

Fifty million litres—half the size of Nova Scotia— I say to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard), the devastation that has been created, if it impacts on those islands, could be felt for years or decades. If this spill is allowed to foul the shorelines of the Charlottes, we will not only witness the widespread devastation to marine life but also the devastation to the economic and recreational resources of those islands. Who is going to want to fish on an island that is awash in oil? Who is going to want to visit it?

The impact of a major spill on these islands could wipe out a growing tourism trade that is only starting to be realized and felt in its true potential. To give you an example, a recent travel survey in British Columbia has shown that the most frequent, single, main purpose of trips in northern B.C. is touring. In the northwest section of the province, which includes the Charlottes, touring was preferred by 70 per cent of the respondents. The cruise ship trade now nets British Columbia about $70 million a year with coastal runs up to Alaska. It carries about 15 per cent of the 2.3 million passengers that are cruising annually world-wide.

We have a major resource in our tourism right throughout the coast. The entire tourism industry is threatened by this drifting mass of oil. I say to the Minister that this Government must act now. It must act immediately to avert further environmental catastrophe. We cannot afford to make the same mistake that was made on the West Coast. This Government's inaction toward this looming disaster has been embarrassingly inadequate. The Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) and this Government must get off their duffs and develop an appropriate response to this and future environmental emergencies, because there will be future environmental emergencies.

We demand a full public inquiry into the West Coast oil spills and an inquiry into the inadequacies of this Government's response to those emergencies; the development of effective emergency response mechanisms for the containment of such toxic spills and the consideration of a moratorium on supertanker traffic in the immediate vicinity of Canada's inter-tidal waters; and lastly, a renewed commitment to the development of alternative emergency sources that will lessen the environmental impact on the use of fossil fuels. The people of British Columbia and the people of Canada deserve no less than this action from this Government.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I have sat here now this evening for the last five and a half hours or thereabouts and I have been struck with sympathy for my colleagues and their concern over this tragic incident on the West Coast of Canada. I need not remind this House that Canada is a three-ocean country and, indeed, I am sure our dimensions will extend in those directions.

This tragic oil spill on the West Coast that has sparked this debate hardly needs review here this evening. It has been mentioned many times. Reviewing it from the perspective of a sailor, we are talking about the grounding of a vessel in good visibility, in reasonably good weather. We are talking about a large vessel. You would appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that it is three times the length of a football field. When the captain decides he wants to stop it takes between two and three ship lengths depending on what speed that ship is going at. It is very difficult to manouvre. In fact, it manouvres in a turtle-like manner when everything is working well. But when the red flags start to go up things look worse and worse and worse.

We are looking at a situation in pilotage waters where ships are traditionally in danger and where every single precaution has been taken. Those precautions do not seem to have been taken in this particular instance.

These kinds of accidents are not confined to pilotage errors. They are not necessarily confined to errors in pilotage waters, that is, entering or leaving a confined harbour. There are other sorts of accidents, some that unfortunately put the Valdez oil spill well down, as was suggested earlier, in the world list in size. These accidents are not confined to the Pacific. Let me just relate a few.

Not too long ago four million barrels of oil from two oil wells spilled in the Gulf of Mexico and in the Persian Gulf. About 10 years ago two million barrels spilled as a result of a collision at sea between two supertankers near Trinidad and Tobago. I regret to remind you, Mr. Speaker, and this House that the record of the day was the Torrey Canyon which a few years ago sank off the coast of England and which spilled almost one million barrels of oil. I further regret that it was reported that the various emulsions used and sprayed on the water to contain this oil spill did more damage to the sea life and marine life than the oil spill itself.

In the case of the Exxon Valdez it involved, as we have been told this evening, 240,000 barrels. It has a potential effect on 800 fishermen in season and about 400 tourists, to say nothing of the tragic and decimating effect it has on the marine life and the sea life, and all the other kind of life in that area.

I have would just like to pose a question here this evening to all of us. What happens if there is an oil spill disaster resulting from our Hibernia project off the coast of Newfoundland when it comes into effect? We are looking at an entirely different dimension. We are looking at a lot more than 240,000 barrels of oil. We are looking at a lot more people and a lot more marine life. We are looking at 25,000 fishermen and 6,000 people involved in tourism. We are looking at $350 million in tourism alone. We are looking at the possible disastrous effect on the northern cod which terminates roughly on the Nose of the Bank, the possible decimation of the salmon species, the capelin species, and many other species of fish which abound off the coast of Newfoundland.

Let me not forget the Arctic. My hon. friend from Nunatsiaq referred to a spill in the Arctic, the Northwest Passage. There was a spill recently at the other end of the globe down in the Antarctic. I need not remind anyone here this evening of the disastrous effect that might have as well.

I had the unfortunate personal experience as a young commander to be involved in the clean-up of the Arrow disaster which took place in Chedabucto Bay in Nova Scotia in the spring of 1970. It was not a pleasant experience. It was not a rewarding task. It was impromptu and it was ad hoc. I remember saying to myself at the time: "Please, God, if this ever happens again let us be prepared".

I am concerned that the oil spill severity off Vancouver Island was underestimated. I am referring now to the January spill. It was underestimated to the point that it took government workers from three to five days to become seriously involved. In the meantime, exasperated citizens, most of them volunteers, had already begun the clean-up work. In the case of the Exxon Valdez clean-up efforts I believe the Governor of Alaska referred to the clean-up methods as slow and inadequate.

Why do these efforts to contain disasters of this nature always have to be disorganized and impromptu? We should be ready. We know it is not a question of if; it is a question of when. In 1973 the statisticians said the probability of a big Alaska oil spill was 50 per cent in 20 years. It turned out to be 100 per cent in 16 years.

I submit there is an urgent need to bring all our national resources to bear. There is a need for contingencies. We need more research and development in this area. We need better international arrangements. We need a military-civilian contingency plan to cope with these things. We need better national regulations and stiffer penalties for those who ignore them. We are going to need money. I see no reason why we cannot demand that the oil companies which are making the profits put up the money right now.

In conclusion, this giant tragic oil spill now washing ashore possibly on the shores of Canada, on the West Coast of Canada, reveals the vulnerability of our three oceans to the risk of tanker transport of oil. We live in a three-ocean country. We need a three-ocean perspective which will include a three-ocean oil spill contingency plan now.

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased at the opportunity of speaking to this House again, and I am just unhappy about the fact that we do have to speak about such a disaster as we have been witnessing. I think about the geography of my riding, which is bounded on the north by the Fraser River, on the west by the Straits of Georgia, and on the south by Boundary Bay, and across Boundary Bay we have the Cherry Point refinery which was referred to by the Member for Surrey—White Rock (Mr. Friesen) and this is of course one of the termini of the Alaska oil that we have been discussing tonight. All the west side of my riding is very delicate from a natural point of view and we have the whole Fraser estuary there that is very sensitive to any spills or whatever may happen to it.

During the years I have had the privilege of working out on the West Coast in many different areas. I have worked from Carmenolite in the south up the Markley Sound where the recent oil spill was. I worked up into Niska Sound and into the Patsino area. So I am very familiar with what the terrain is like, and I can really understand what happened with the oil spill on the West Coast in January. I have also had the privilege of working in Fort Simpson which is the last Indian reserve before the Alaska Panhandle and the village of Metlakatla. I have seen the isolation, I have seen the desolation and I have seen the beauty of the West Coast of Canada and would submit, Mr. Speaker, that we have a real disaster at this time in the Alaska Panhandle and in southeastern Alaska. It is an ecological disaster. It is of a magnitude which I think most of us cannot understand. We have never envisioned it. We have not seen it and so I think that we can only go by pictures and our knowledge of the geography of that area. But I think we need to recognize, Mr. Speaker, that this was in American waters.

It was an American ship. It was handled by American people and I do not understand how the Opposition today have been trying to make political gain from such a natural ecological disaster. They have been asking for a Minister's resignation. The Minister had nothing to do with it. It was a different country. It was an area over which he had no control whatsoever. They have complained about the lack of government action, and yet I believe that the Government has done everything that it possibly could do in both of these disasters on the West Coast.

I think we need to ask the question, what could the Government have done that it did not do? First of all, we have been criticized because we did not rush in with extra equipment, with manpower, with ships, and then we have to recognize that indeed these were American waters and we must recognize American sovereignty. When we offered help and it was accepted, then we moved in to do what we could do. It was mentioned that we could have supplied them with booms. Yet we recognized that once that oil had escaped from around the ship and was out into the open ocean and the winds picked up to 100 kilometres an hour, the oil booms were completely useless in that type of situation.

We have been talking about chemicals and we have just mentioned, or the Opposition has just mentioned, that the chemicals did more damage than they do good in many situations. They have been criticized because we did not use mechanical skimmers and again these were not asked for, and we recognized that with the mehanical skimmers that they did have, that they were only able to salvage approximately 3,500 barrels of oil out of the complete spill. I think what we need to recognize is the tremendous magnitude of the spill that did occur and the necessity, as soon as something like that does happen, of attacking the spill with energy, and because this did not happen in Canadian waters and because it was well away from population centres, this was unable to be done as well as this Government would have liked to have had it done.

I think we need to recognize the geography of the country and the sparseness of the population. The ruggedness of the coastline makes it just impossible to clean the beaches, to cleanse the birds, to clean up the messes that were there, and again we recognize the part that the weather had to play in this disaster with winds that blew the oil around, that prevented the skimmers and everything from working. It is something that has to be experienced to realize the strength of the winds and the tides in that particular area.

I think what all this points out to us, Mr. Speaker, is that the most important thing in an oil spill is prevention, and I think that if anything good does come out of this debate tonight, it is the fact that we may be able to develop some better methods of prevention. I think the reason is obvious why we need to do this. With the size of the tankers that are economically essential in this day and age, an immediate response is necessary.

Perhaps we should be considering making double hulls mandatory on all tankers that are plying our waters. Perhaps we should be discussing having mandatory blood tests for all those in command of ships, and we could well imagine the shouts of disaster and infringement of civil rights that we would be hearing if this indeed were passed into law, and we know very well where the loudest protests would be coming from.

Perhaps we need to examine the traffic patterns of shipping off our coasts. As I mentioned, my riding is particularly sensitive, and perhaps we do need to re-examine and make sure that those traffic patterns that we have for our shipping lines are the best ones that are available. Perhaps the time has come to re-examine the use of pipelines in place of ships, the tankers that we are using at the present time, and as I mentioned, perhaps again we need to consider changing our regulations for ships that are using Canadian waters.

I agree that we must make those corporations that are responsible for these types of spills and disasters accountable for the damage which they have done. I think also that we need to conduct more research. We need to make our navigation safer. We recognize again that the ship had the best navigation aids available, but because of true and human error we still had the accident that occurred. We must continue to do research and clean up. We must continue to do research in our shipbuilding. Can we build these tankers to be more safe so if they are punctured in some way that they will not create the pollution that this one has created at the present time?

In summary, Mr. Speaker, let me just say that indeed we have a disaster. I think that again it will be a long time before we can fully comprehend the magnitude of that disaster, and I think that one of the best things that we can salvage from this thing is knowledge that we can use to prevent it from happening again.

I have extreme confidence, one hundred per cent confidence in our Ministers and in our Government. I can see no reason whatsoever to call upon the Minister of the Environment to resign. He did everything that he possible could in this situation. I can see no reason why our Transport Minister should in any way be under a cloud. He did everything that he possibly could, and I think that our Fisheries and Oceans Minister again was fully aware at all times of what was happening during this whole disaster and that the whole government ministerial staff operated without fault. I cannot think of any areas where they should have moved and they did not, and where they should not have moved where they did, and I think again that the Throne Speech that we have heard just yesterday emphasizes this Government's role in improving and helping our environment. I think that the world will unfold in its proper order and I believe that, because of this, Canada will be a better and safer place. Thank you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the hour is late, but I believe that the emergency debate which we have been involved in this evening is one of the most important debates to come before Parliament in the 10 years I have had the honour of representing the community of Burnaby.

• (0140)

On Friday, in Vancouver, my colleagues and I from the New Democratic Party announced at a press conference that we would be calling for an emergency debate as soon as the House was back in session the following Monday, which was yesterday, and that this would be a top priority for us as New Democrats.

I want to pay tribute to the work done by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), our spokesperson on the environment for the New Democratic Party, in successfully persuading the Speaker of the vital importance of this question not just to British Columbians but to all Canadians.

In calling for an emergency debate we are focusing on two fundamental questions, questions which are inextricably linked. One was the response of the Government of Canada to the oil spill off the west coast of Vancouver Island, which occurred on December 22. That was a spill of some 175,000 litres.

Of course, the primary focus of our concern at this time is the disasters off the coast of Alaska in Prince William Sound on March 24, the disaster of the Exxon Valdez with a spill of over 50 million litres of oil.

I say that these two spills are linked because the reality is that we are dealing with a system in which global oil companies have only one objective, that is, the maximization of their global profits. In attempting to maximize their global profits they have, time after time, displayed utter contempt for the environment of this fragile planet.

When we talk about the importance of bringing to justice those who were responsible, both in the criminal courts and in the civil court, I say that the ultimate responsibility for this corporate negligence, for this corporate murder, lies squarely in the boardrooms of Exxon, with the corporate directors who have shown such utter contempt for our environment in their desire to maximize their corporate profits. They must be brought to justice. They must be charged criminally if there is to be any justice at all in dealing with this terrible ecological disaster.

In early January I visited the west coast of Vancouver Island. I visited with a number of my colleagues, including the Speaker of the House himself. I want to thank the Speaker for having organized the particular visit. While I was there I spoke with volunteers who were working against incredible odds. They were volunteers from my constituency of Burnaby—Kingsway, as well as volunteers from literally right across Canada. I met with workers from the Coast Guard, and I want to commend both the volunteers and the workers from the Coast Guard who put in hour after hour of dedication and energy.

However, I also want to ask the questions in the House that they were asking. The volunteers were asking on that beach, as they were struggling to deal with the devastation of the environment, why they struggled alone. Where were the Canadian Armed Forces? Why were they not called in by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) or by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) to assist in this clean-up at the earliest possible opportunity? The volunteers who were there were asking these questions.

I believe the only sensible response to that and many other questions that arise from the west coast oil spill is to heed the call not just by New Democrats, but by environmentalists, native people and many other Canadians, for a full public inquiry into all aspects of this terrible tragedy. Native people on the west coast of Vancouver Island, native people on Haida Gwaii on the Queen Charlottes and elsewhere have warned us for years of the dangers of an oil spill of this nature.

Indeed, I remember a beautiful sunny day in late January standing on a beach on the northern coast of Haida Gwaii of the Queen Charlottes and looking across Dixon Entrance with a number of friends from the Haida nation. We spoke of the disaster off the west coast of Vancouver Island. They asked me to imagine the terrible tragedy if there were ever to be a similar oil spill from the Alaskan tankers which daily ply the coast. That imagined scenario is now a reality. That is what we New Democrats are pleading with the Government to recognize as well.

I was shocked when I heard the speech of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), saying that there is no conceivable way that this spill can reach Canadian waters. I was shocked when I heard the Minister of Transport today saying that it is 1,000 kilometres away so we need not worry about it. I looked at a map of that area, and I know that the Minister of the Environment has looked at the same map. I would hope that they would recognize that if there is any change whatsoever in the winds or the currents this could pose a serious threat to the environment of Canada and the rivers that flow very close to that area. All of them are threatened.

If there is to be any possible risk that this spill will in fact move into Canadian waters, this spill which many of my colleagues have reminded the House is half the size of Nova Scotia, we are simply suggesting that the Government take steps to be ready.

We failed miserably to take those basic steps in dealing with the oil spill off the west coast of Vancouver Island. We stood by, believing that it would not come and would wash out to the ocean. It was too late when finally the oil started to wash up on the shores of the west coast. I have hiked the west coast trail. I have kayaked in Nootka Sound. I have camped at Long Beach. To see firsthand the results of that devastation was very painful for all of us. We do not want to see that again.

I plead with the Minister of the Environment to take the steps that are necessary. Have the containment booms in place. Have the contingency plans available for clean up. Do the testing now of waters in that area to ensure that we know the base levels so that we are ready in the event that disaster strikes.

As well, we should surely recognize that the call by some for drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife refuge must be stopped. If ever we have a lesson to be learned it is not to allow that drilling to take place. I was very saddened to hear President Bush insisting that it was going to go ahead. Again, that mindless drive for profit at all cost must be resisted.

I listened to the eloquence of the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Anawak), the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Ms. Blondin), and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin). I have spoken with Norma Kassi, the MLA for the area who has been so clear and forceful in expressing concern on behalf of native people in that community. I have talked with those who have asked why there are at least no double bottomed tankers to ensure that the transportation is a little safer.

In closing, I want to reiterate our call for a full public inquiry into both the west coast oil spill and the events surrounding the Government's lack of effective response to the Alaskan oil spill.

I recently met with a group of children, grade three students, at Stoney Creek Elementary School in my constituency, and student after student asked me why did it happen, how did it happen. I say that our Government owes the people of Canada an explanation, and I want to plead again with the Government to allow that inquiry to take place. Let us ensure that those children who ask those questions and their children inherit a planet, a country, a province, which respects the environment and does not destroy it.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to participate in this most important debate, this emergency resolution on the Alaskan oil spill. To me, the discussion tonight points out clearly the contrast between how Members on this side of the House would deal with an issue like this and how Members opposite would suggest they would handle the issue.

We have on the one hand the attitude of Members opposite and the pious and patronizing attitudes of the Ministers and their comments. On this side of the House, I am proud that it is the New Democrats who have raised this issue, and particularly the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) who has spoken so eloquently on this issue and who I think has the admiration of all Hon. Members for speaking so clearly and for explaining to all of us how important this issue is. We appreciate his attendance here tonight.

I think the Minister should have provided leadership on this issue and should not be running to try to catch up. In fact, government Members have been running in the last two days since this session began. Yesterday, they fumbled with the Throne Speech, and tonight, they have fallen on their face in their participation in this debate.

I want to respond just briefly to some of the comments raised by the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock (Mr. Friesen) about the Government led by the now Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett), a Government that introduced milestones in environmental protection. I am talking about the environment and land use committee and about the agricultural land reserve, policies that took a leadership role in that time, in that province and in this country today.

There was talk from Hon. Members opposite about how wonderful this Throne Speech was in its comments about the environment. I cannot let this opportunity go by without saying that there was not a single mention in it of our greatest environmental heritage, our forests. I challenge Hon. Members opposite to read that Throne Speech and to see if forestry is mentioned once. There is not a single mention of it.

Despite promises after promises, and after two elections now, for a commitment to legislate a full Department of Forests, there was no mention in this Throne Speech about that most important goal for British Columbia and the Government. Six forestry agreements expired across Canada on April Fool's Day, and that makes some sense for the Government across the way. There is nothing for forestry and there is nothing for the environment.

I remember the debate 22 years ago about the oil tanker traffic and oil moving down the coast in the tankers and the threat to the environment and the comments made by people to those who were concerned about the environment. Of course, it is trendy now to talk about the environment, but there were people then and there are people now, perhaps on both sides of the House, who are concerned about this issue.

We raised those issues then because we suggested and the evidence pointed out that a spill such as that which has happened in Valdez would happen either there or off Vancouver Island or in the Strait of Juan de Fuca, and it has happened. We are dealing with a tanker that was supposed to be of the latest technology. There were people on the bridge who, as far as we know and from all of the news reports, were not supposed to be there. Oil companies have given commitments that they have not lived up to. This has pointed out to Canadians and certainly to Members of the House that this Government, in its failure to respond adequately to the oil spill off the west coast of Vancouver Island, and certainly in speeches and comments from Ministers tonight, is not prepared now to deal with a massive oil spill if it should happen off the west coast of British Columbia again or in the future.

Our debate tonight is to point out the need for the Government to plan. We have not blamed the Government for the oil spill as some Hon. Members and in fact some Ministers have suggested. What we are calling for is an inquiry to look into the issues that have been raised tonight, and the very fact that the Minister has failed to respond to the letter of January 31 from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands (Ms. Hunter), about an inquiry, gives us an indication of the concern that this Government has over the threat to our coast from oil spills. Our call is a responsible one and one that can benefit all sides of the House, the Government and the Opposition and particularly the people of the Province of British Columbia and the people of Canada.

I want to sum up with the comments of the Hon. Member for Burnaby—Kingsway (Mr. Robinson) about the Hon. Members from B.C. who who have raised this issue and made it an issue in the House. We appreciate the support from Hon. Members across Canada who have spoken on this debate tonight. We look forward to that debate continuing and to their ongoing support as we continue to press this Government, and we trust that it will hear our pleas and will act urgently on this matter.

Mr. Dave Worthy (Cariboo—Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, the hour is late, it is two o'clock in the morning, but I have been known to put on some of my best performances after midnight.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Worthy: The situation in the Gulf of Alaska is one that has been portrayed tonight by both sides of the House as a real disaster. It is that. I do not think a single Hon. Member has risen who has not concurred with that.

Even though my riding does not bound on any of the ocean waters—Cariboo—Chilcotin is large but it does not reach the coast—people there are also concerned, though not the environmentalists, not people you would expect to be hearing from. The last call I received was from a secretary in one of the mills. She explained to me that she did not know what I could do about it, but she hoped that there was something that I would be able to contribute. She expressed frustration, she expressed concern and I think it is probably typical of so many of the people who live not only in the Cariboo but of course all over British Columbia and right across Canada.

Why do they see this as such a disaster? Anybody who has sailed the coast of British Columbia, has dug for clams or shucked oysters in one of the Salt Spring Islands, or has had the fortune I had of working years ago when I was a youth and stopping in at all the ports along the west coast of Vancouver Island, would recognize that it is not just the Gulf of Alaska that they are thinking of. It is the proximity of that spill to the previous one off the coast of Washington which of course did impact on some of the British Columbia coast. It is a spectre. Any thinking British Columbian recognizes that with those oil ships plying our coast, that spill could have been in our own waters. We all recognize that that would have been a disaster that none of us would want to face.

We have recognized tonight from all those who have spoken that none of the three parties have a corner on concern about this environmental disaster. I do not think anyone should try to make a political corner out of this. I think the sensible speakers from all Parties have tended to agree that this is a common concern, that we should be looking at this in a positive manner, and that we should be taking from it what we can and coming out stronger.

The emergency debate tonight recognized by the Speaker as being necessary is, in my opinion, probably one of the best things that could have happened now. I was surprised to see that a matter of this much urgency to Canadians was recognized by this House and spoken to as it has been for most of the evening with three to five Ministers in attendance right through. I am impressed with that.

I think the immediate situation with the Alaska spill has been addressed by many Members from both sides of the House. We recognize that there are only certain actions that can be taken. The responsibility for the accident was outside Canadian hands. We recognize now that if there is any potential for harm to Canadian waters or Canadian land we have to be prepared to act. We have heard our Ministers address that. They have gone further than that. That is really what concerns us here tonight. It is not the immediate spill but the spectre of what could have been. We want to know that we are prepared.

We have heard our Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) indicate that he is prepared and will conduct a full review of all of our procedures and regulations to ensure they are adequate to a potential situation that we all fear. I do not want to repeat what everyone else has said, but the Government has placed the environment as its top priority in the Throne Speech and some of the programs that were implemented in the previous session have been mentioned.

We did adopt the Canadian Environmental Protection Act which is considered to be a leader in environment protection in the world. Within three years, we will virtually eliminate all leaded gasoline, and in five years the industrial sulphur dioxide will be cut by 50 per cent. By the end of the century we have set the complete elimination of chemicals that affect our ozone layer. We have doubled the federal contribution for cleaning up the Great Lakes and of course, as has been seen by so many reporting in the press, we have become one of the world leaders, if not the world leader, in pushing for environmental reform.

I think this debate tonight emphasizes the priority the Government has placed on the environment. I am proud to say that I am part of the Government that has been taking the action it has and will continue to take the action that will be required by all Canadians.

I would like to close on a positive note that if we took the essence of most of the speeches tonight and consolidated them—I suggest the Ministers might get their staff to do that—the essence of the discussions will form a very valuable contribution to the environmental program that our Minister is contemplating.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 52(12), I am satisfied that the debate has now been concluded and I therefore declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): This House stands adjourned until later this day at 2 p.m pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 2.06 a.m.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

BRUNDTLAND REPORT—SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT CONCEPT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the Throne Speech the Government proclaims its support for sustainable development, but a commitment to implementing it at home and abroad is simply not there.

There is no commitment to implement sustainable development by way of reviewing budgets, programs and policies in key Departments such as energy, agriculture, fisheries, finance, forestry, regional development, transport, defence, northern development, international aid, science and technology. In addition, we learn the federal Government will only participate in the establishment of a Centre on Sustainable Development in Winnipeg, a retreat from the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) commitment last year to the UN General Assembly. There is not a word about climate warming, about energy policies, about integrating the economy with the environment.

We are afraid that the Government is preaching rather than practising, and prefers image over substance. Canadians believe that to pay lip service to the Brundtland Report is not good enough.

DISASTERS

DEATHS OF CAMROSE FAMILY IN PLANE CRASH

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, today in Camrose, Alberta, a small Prairie city of 16,000 persons, a memorial service will be held to bereave the untimely death of a young family of fine people.

Tony Deis, 35; his wife Marilyn, 34, and their three daughters, Amanda, 10, Jaclyn, 7, and Kimberly, 5, were all killed in a plane crash near Newport, California.

My home city is in shock. Local citizens are still trying to comprehend the magnitude of this unfortunate tragedy. This was a family with unusual talent who worked extensively for the betterment of their community. Everyone who met them thought of them as friends.

On this hollow and unhappy day, the citizens of Camrose grieve. May we, as a collective House of parliamentarians, take some time on this day to reflect on the sadness of this occasion and be reminded of the fragility of life.

Camrose and Canada have lost a family of extraordinary fine character. May we all share in the sorrow.

SPORTS

DUBIN INQUIRY—ACTION TAKEN BY ONTARIO TRACK AND FIELD ASSOCIATION

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is imperative that nothing be done to impede the Dubin Inquiry's pursuit of the truth about the use of banned substances in Canadian and international sport.

The Ontario Track and Field Association's action in withdrawing the records of athletes who have told the truth to the Dubin Inquiry is a blatant threat to the due process of the inquiry which was established with the support of all Parties in the House.

All Canadians, including the sports federations, must be told clearly and firmly by the Government that they are expected to co-operate fully with Mr. Justice Dubin and that they must wait until all the evidence is in and has been reported upon. To do otherwise will be treated by the Government and this House as intentional interference in the inquiry and a contempt of Parliament under whose legislation the inquiry was established.

I ask the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Charest) to step into this matter today. It is time the Minister got tough with sports groups that prejudge the inquiry and interfere with its work. We in this House will not stand by and permit any Canadian sports federation to undermine the due process of this important review.

SPACE AGENCY

MINUTES OF OUTREMONT CITY COUNCIL MEETING

Mr. Jean-Pierre Hogue (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, it gives me tremendous pleasure to present in this House the minutes of a meeting of members of the Outremont City Council held on Monday, April 3, 1989:

Whereas the City of Outremont is located at the centre of the Montreal region and is easily accessible;

Whereas the École polytechnique, the Hautes études commerciales and the Université de Montréal are located on Outremont's border and nearby are McGill University, Concordia University and UQAM (Université du Quebec à Montréal);

Whereas the City of Outremont and the surrounding municipalities, including the City of Montreal, have a considerable pool of technical and intellectual talent that can contribute to the work of the space agency;

Whereas many private companies that have acquired a great reputation in the field of space and communications are near the City of Outremont;

Therefore be it resolved:

That the Government of Canada be asked to establish the head office of the space agency in the City of Outremont;

That City Council supports the efforts that the Member of Parliament for Outremont intends to make to obtain a favourable decision in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, we are very quickly approaching the end of the century. In a few years, we will be in a new millennium.

We must prepare for our entry into a new century, a new millennium, if we want to oppose this crisis of excess. With this in mind, the space agency belongs in the city and constituency of Outremont, because life there has remained on a human scale. It is a suburban city on the slope of Mount Royal, in the geographic centre of the cities on the island, part of one of the most beautiful urban parks in Canada, a city where beauty and socio-cultural diversity come together and contribute to maintaining a personal quality of life.

Outremont has everything required to host the space agency and would be delighted to do so. We have become "modern" while continuing to value tradition—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry but the Hon. Member's time has now expired.

UNITED NATIONS

NAMIBIA—PARTICIPATION OF CANADIAN PERSONNEL IN OBSERVER FORCE

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the United Nations is in the process of sending to Namibia a UN observer force which includes 247 Canadians to supervise the withdrawal of South African troops and SWAPO from Namibia. Since last weekend, approximately 190 rebel troops and Namibian police have been killed in battle. This represents the heaviest fighting and the largest military incursion by guerrilla forces in the 23-year war between South Africa and SWAPO.

The South Africa Government has now demanded that the UN force, presently numbering 1,000 and including 65 Canadian personnel, take immediate action to prevent further SWAPO incursions and to enforce the peace agreement or it will abrogate the treaty and initiate its own military action. The security and safety of Canadian troops appears to be threatened by this dangerous escalation of the conflict.

I call on the Government to inform the House of the status of our peacekeeping force and to make clear what contingency plans it has to ensure the safety of our troops and to secure peace in Namibia.

INDUSTRY

FUTURE OF INGLIS CLOTHES WASHING MACHINE PLANT

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the men and women who make half of Canada's clothes washing machines intend to go on making them for Canadians. Soon after the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal came into force, the Inglis Corporation, 70 per cent owned by Whirlpool in the U.S.A., announced that it will close its only washing machine factory located on Strachan Avenue in Trinity—Spadina. It plans to supply the Canadian market from its huge, newly equipped plant in Ohio.

Within days, 600 enthusiastic plant workers, members of Local 2900, United Steelworkers of America, declared they would mobilize to take over the plant and continue making washing machines for Canadians. Their union, which has carried through half a dozen successful worker buyouts in the United States, bringing money–losing plants back to economic health, is convinced it can do that with the profitable Strachan Avenue enterprise.

Toronto's Mayor Eggleton has agreed to ask Toronto City Council to contribute to the cost of the feasibility study and protect the manufacturing zoning of the Strachan Avenue site. Canada's capitalists may be quitting but Canadian workers will take over.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

PLAQUE COMMEMORATING INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, in 1942 Japanese Canadians were uprooted from their homes, relocated, and interned in camps or deported, because of unrealistic fears and discrimination. On April 1, 40 years to the day that the Government of Canada restored full rights to Japanese Canadians, I attended a plaque unveiling ceremony commemorating their internment at the very site of the staging facility used in the 40s, the Pacific National Exhibition grounds in Vancouver.

The plaque, in English, French, and Japanese, follows up the Prime Minister's announcement last September of a redress settlement for Japanese Canadians. I would like to give special recognition to 88–year–old Reverend Canon Gordon Nakayama of the Diocese of New Westminster who, in a clear, strong voice, described what it was like in 1942 when he had to help comfort the Japanese Canadians who were being forcibly relocated. He then stated: "Now I think Canada is the best country in the world."

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, during the last few weeks, Canadian consumers have been subjected to skyrocketing credit card interest rates. This is not the first time in the Government's history that consumers have suffered as a result of rising credit card interest rates. If the Government maintains its hands–off policy on this issue, it certainly will not be the last.

In March of 1987 recommendations proposed by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, together with the threat by the then Minister of State for Finance, the Hon. Member for London West (Mr. Hockin), managed temporarily to lower the interest charge on unpaid credit card balances. Canadian consumers need a commitment from the Government that they will be adequately protected from the recurrence of rising interest rates in 1989. The Government must ensure that consumers are not victimized by these excessive fees.

CANADIAN DAIRY INDUSTRY – RETENTION OF MARKETING BOARDS URGED

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I am proud to represent the federal riding of Oxford which many colleagues will know is the dairy capital of Canada. Both the dairy industry and Canadians have benefited from a supply management system run by efficient provincial milk marketing boards. As a result, Canadians enjoy dairy products of the highest quality and at price increases well below the cost of living.

I would like to urge our Government and our GATT negotiating officials to resist very strenuously any movement to eliminate or compromise on Article XI of the agreement. In its present form and interpretation, Article XI does not consider domestic marketing boards as providing unfair advantage in international trade.

Further, Canada's milk supply management program which is the envy of many other countries contains the elements for ensuring that world markets are not oversupplied with low–priced dairy products. Thus, the focus of our participation at the GATT negotiations should be on agricultural export subsidies and not on Article XI and our own domestic supply system.

Oral Questions

OIL SPILL CLEAN-UP EQUIPMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. We heard much ado about nothing in the Throne Speech regarding the Government's commitment to the environment. Yesterday in the House of Commons we heard more hollow assurances about the Canadian Government's contingency plan to clean up any possible results of the Exxon Valdez oil spill. Yet we know from information from the Canadian Coast Guard that our Government's equipment is antiquated, out of date,and certainly not able to handle a similar spill of the size of the Exxon Valdez.

How can the Minister continue to plead his concern about the environment when his Government is so obviously unable to back it up with the facts, the dollars and the equipment to do the job?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is one thing to try to raise false alarms. It is another thing to look at the real facts.

The real facts are that this Government and all the resources of the involved Departments stand ready to step in if the improbable arrival of the oil would happen. We have activated our contingency plans. We have hundreds of people on alert. We have stockpiles of equipment ready to be used, so there is no reason to be alarmed.

Furthermore, there is another reason not to be alarmed. According to our information and our close monitoring of the movement of the oil, it is absolutely—well, very highly, almost absolutely impossible for the oil to come down to Canada. We all know that the spill is located now, as it was 11 days ago, at about 1,000 kilometres from the coastal border of the U.S. and Canada, and we know that the movement of the spill has been constantly in a westerly direction toward the open ocean. This has been confirmed this morning by an independent UBC scientist, and our own government scientists have an international reputation.

There is no reason to try to alarm Canadians. This being said, it is absolutely our duty, all of us, to check and to verify if our control traffic systems and response capabilities are able to cope with something improbable that could happen.

VALDEZ OIL SPILL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, there is a simple principle that the Canadian people understand even if the Minister of the Environment does not, and that is that what goes out must come in. It is ridiculous to suggest that an oil spill of the magnitude—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: —of the Valdez is not going to affect—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1420)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Government may consider this a joke but I am sure thousands of people who live on the coast of British Columbia whose livelihood depends on the fisheries and the other industries do not consider this a joke.

As we speak, Exxon, which has hardly been a good corporate citizen, is in the process of floating the Valdez. The oil has not been completely removed from the ship. Is the Minister prepared today to contact the U.S. Government and demand that the U.S. Government and not the company involved supervise any movement of this tanker which may in any way affect the Canadian coastal waters?

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to state my ignorance of a new principle of physics that would have impressed Newton as well. As far as salvaging and refloating the ship is concerned, I can confirm there have been discussions between representatives of the Canadian Coast Guard, the U.S. Coast Guard and Exxon to examine various possibilities. The Canadian Government, through our Coast Guard, has made it clear that no movements would be authorized with the ship, if salvaged, without submission of a complete transportation and evacuation plan. Our conditions for authorizing movements by this ship will be very strict indeed.

SPILLAGE OF PCBS INTO SAINT-MAURICE RIVER

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): We can hardly expect to trust what the Minister says, since in August last year, the other Minister, "mini-bouch", went to Saint-Basile-le-Grand to tell the people there would be no more PCB spills in Quebec. We now know that since Monday, 6,800 litres of PCBs have been spilling into the St. Maurice River, which may affect the drinking water of the people of Trois-Rivières, Shawinigan and Quebec City. I would like to know why the Government expects us to believe the promises they are making now with respect to Canada's West Coast, when what they said about PCBs in Quebec turned out to be false.

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I just received a call with the information that a PCB spill did in fact occur in the St. Maurice River. Before entering the House, I asked my Deputy Minister to check this information, take any emergency measures that may be needed right away and report to me after question period.

AIRPORTS

CANADIAN AVIATION SAFETY BOARD RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Since 1985 there have been at least 57 near collisions within a 50 kilometre radius of Pearson International Airport. Only sheer luck and the grace of God have prevented the occurrence of an immeasurable disaster.

Yesterday the Canadian Aviation Safety Board released two recommendations in response to the three near misses in December, 1988, and in January of this year. It called upon the Minister to implement new safety measures to protect the Canadian traveler. The Minister need not wait the required 90 days since the report says, and I quote.

"These problems should be addressed without delay".

Will the Minister assure this House today of what he will do immediately? In fact, with the safety of the travellers in question, what will he do within the hour to implement those vital recommendations as presented by the Canadian Aviation Safety Board?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board published this report yesterday and we received it today. Meanwhile, however, departmental employees have been working on the problem it raises, and it is a pleasure to be able to inform the Hon. Member that controllers have now been informed of the procedures and given the appropriate training, and the procedures will be in effect as of April 7, in other words, this Friday.

[English]

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. I don't think Canadian travellers can afford to play Russian roulette with air safety as they go into airports.

What are we doing about more air controllers at Pearson International Airport, Mr. Speaker? That is a vital question. What are we doing about more controllers at Pearson International Airport so that the safety of Canadian travellers can be assured?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Thunder-Bay—Nipigon should have listened to his colleague from Port-au-Port—St. Barbe who confirmed that Canadian skies were not insecure, that they were safe.

As for procedures at Lester B. Pearson, obviously there has been a considerable increase in traffic. Our controllers at Lester B. Pearson have a certain number of flights they must control. People who are surprised at the delays at Lester B. Pearson should understand that the directives are quite clear. We handle the number of flights that air traffic controllers are able to control. We have done everything we could.

We have the maximum number of controllers in training at our facility in Cornwall. We have made an appeal to U.S. controller trainees, and we also have people who are being trained in the field.

Mr. Speaker, playing with air safety matters is a very dangerous game. When I, as the Minister of Transport, guarantee that Toronto's airport is safe and that we have all the mechanisms we need, I do that because I think it is true, speaking as a Canadian and not as the Minister of Transport.

OIL SPILLS—STATUS OF TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. Three months ago we had a major oil spill off the West Coast of Vancouver Island, and the Department of the Minister revealed itself to be totally inadequate in rising to the task of cleaning up the damage. We had to rely on the volunteer effort of people in that area to do the job.

We now have another major potential serious situation for Canada which, as the debate in the last 24 hours has shown, once again the Government is totally unprepared to cope with.

What did the Minister of Transport do in the last three months in terms of major reorganization of his Department here in Ottawa and on the ground, both on the West Coast and on the East Coast, in order to cope adequately with such a disaster?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely regret that the Leader of the New Democratic Party is succumbing also to the temptation of using false alarms. We all know that the performance of the Coast Guard and all the Departments involved last January has been completely professional, serious, and very efficient.

I was there. I could see it. I do not know if the Leader of the NDP was there but I was there and I checked personally that everything was going very well. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the process has been followed since then.

We terminated the operations of clean-up a few days ago. We have no answer to the third phase of when it rains what will happen and going to a post-mortem of the old operation.

I think it is under control and we are completely ready to cope with any situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is not directed to this Minister but to the Minister who is responsible for the problem in this region.

[English]

CANADIAN COAST GUARD

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The Minister knows that I am not critizing the particular individuals in the Coast Guard service. I am critizing the Minister for not having enough people and enough equipment on the ground. Everyone in British Columbia knows that. Everyone in British Columbia knows that it was volunteers who did the job.

I want to ask the Minister who is carefully not answering the questions. He is responsible for the Coast Guard, not the Minister of the Environment. I want to ask the Minister responsible what steps have been taken in the Coast Guard, and beyond that, since there is much more shipping on the East Coast than there is on the West Coast, will the Minister do the right thing now and set up a public inquiry into procedures pertinent to the shipping of oil in tankers and clean-up procedures and report back at the earliest possible time to the Government of Canada?

• (1430)

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, when an accident affects the ecology and the environment, the whole Government is concerned. We cannot dissociate the responsibilities of the various ministers and individuals who are working on the operation.

As for the matter of regulations and the rather excessive request for a commission of inquiry, Mr. Speaker, we are a responsible Government. We know where our duty lies, and we know Canadians expect us to review existing regulations and improve, if necessary,—and we don't think it is—our response when intervention is needed.

Mr. Speaker, the House may rest assured that we will do what we have to do so that Canadians will know the environment is in safe hands.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF TRANSPORT ESTABLISH PUBLIC INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister to go back out to Vancouver Island and take a look. My colleagues from British Columbia have told me that they are still cleaning up where it was damaged three months ago.

I want the Minister who is responsible for the Coast Guard to answer the questions. Will the Minister of Transport undertake what he ought to do, the responsibility to have a full public inquiry, so we can get in place the proper regulations that could hopefully head off such disasters in the future?

Hon. Benoit Bouchard (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker.

CANADA–FRANCE AGREEMENT

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. His own officials have confirmed that the fish quotas allotted to France in that infamous agreement last week exceed the catch levels dictated by sound management conservation practices.

Will the Minister of Fisheries explain, to the House and the thousands of fisherman and plant workers who were hung out to dry by that cowardly capitulation to international blackmail last week, his treachery in standing idly by—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question and not use the word "treachery".

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister explain why he stood idly by last week and allowed the conservation advice of his officials to be trampled underfoot? Is it true that the Minister is being ignored, is being silenced, is being muzzled by the Prime Minister on this issue?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, after 12 years of negotiations the Department of Fisheries officials, with the assistance of their Minister and other Ministers here, have concluded an agreement that protects Canadian fishermen in the long run, and succeeded, in a disputed area which is not under Canada's control, in convincing France to reduce the catch of 26,000 tonnes that it allotted itself for the last three years down to under 16,000 tonnes this year.

I wonder if the hon. gentleman would explain to me why it is that the president of the French fishing company Comapeche in St. Malo has stated: "We've been rolled in the mud. Canada has put French fishermen up for sacrifice. I can only say we regret the attitude of Canada." He also said that Canada has been playing a waiting game for three years "So France had to go for an agreement and this is better than nothing. It gives us barely enough to survive, just hardly enough to keep from starving, and there will be some cadavers". That is what the French think of this agreement.

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if that was the muzzle or the muzzle loader. Perhaps the real Minister of Fisheries, the Minister from St. John's West, would explain to us why Mr. Vic Young, the president of the Newfoundland-based Fishery Products, the world's second largest fish company, and a good friend of the Minister, has condemned the deal.

Will the Minister tell us if this deal is the best thing since sliced bread, as he says, why he cannot convince his friends, the officials in Fisheries, and the industry itself that it is a good deal?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, most persons want to take a non-partisan objective approach to this. I wish to quote from a transcript of a program on CBC on April 3, at 12.20 p.m. on which I appeared with Mr. Young. He was asked the question: ". . .do you think the sacrifice was worth the cost of getting the deal?" Mr. Young answered: "Well, I think the deal had to be done, yes. I don't think there's any doubt about that."

Go back to your sources again, my son. You are way behind the times.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INTEGRITY OF OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday, he refused to formally commit himself to maintaining the principle of universality for social programs. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has said that as far as the government was concerned this principle was unchallenged. I would like to remind the Prime Minister that the former Minister of National Health went so far as to write that universality was sacro-sanct and that deficit reduction would not be carried out through a reform of social programs. Then a month later, the government tried to deindex old age pensions and reduced family allowances by 1.2 billion dollars.

My question to the Prime Minister. . .

Some Hon. Members: Out with it!

Mr. Malépart: Don't get excited. I'm getting there. I want to get a clear and honest answer. Can the Prime Minister give senior citizens the assurance that their old age pension cheques will be fully indexed and that those with lower incomes will not be subjected to double taxation? In other words, can the Prime Minister give us the assurance that he will not in any way cut old age pensions to reduce the deficit?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Government made it clear both in the Speech from the Throne and yesterday in response to a question from the Hon. Member that the principle of universality was one which was supported.

The hon. gentleman now is asking for comments related to taxation measures. Those are properly dealt with in the context of a Budget and it would not be appropriate for me either to confirm or deny any suggestions that he puts forward. He should wait for the Budget.

[Translation]

M. Malépart: The cat is almost out of the bag, Mr. Speaker. Mrs. Denis had better get ready for another bout!

INTEGRITY OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister.

[English]

Could the Minister assure the Canadian families that the family allowance will not be cut to reduce the deficit?

[Translation]

Can Canadian families get the assurance that the Conservative government will not cut family allowances to reduce the deficit? Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Heath and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, during its term in office the Government has significantly increased family allowances in Canada. We expect that they will continue to increase in the future.

PC TASK FORCE REPORT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay— Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. When the Liberals tried to cut the deficit by taking apart VIA Rail, just like this Government appears to be set on doing, the now Deputy Prime Minister took a PC Task Force across this country in defence of VIA Rail. Its report entitled "The Last Straw" concluded that the federal Government has a responsibility to ensure that rail passenger services in Canada be retained, modernized, and expanded as an important part of our national transportation system.

Will the Government live up to its report and its promises of the 1984 election by ensuring that VIA will not only receive the funds necessary to maintain its existing operations, but also to modernize it operations? Will he do that?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I gave to an Hon. Member the same answer I will now give the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan. The answer was that any decision concerning VIA Rail or any other Crown corporation for that matter will be made in due time.

• (1440)

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL COMMITMENT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I am quoting from a newspaper article. When Maritime Tory MPs plead for VIA's life and the Minister himself has told his own constituents "There will be cuts", it is no wonder the people of Canada suspect the worst. Will the Minister make a commitment in this House that VIA will not be cut back at all so it can maintain its existing operations?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoit Bouchard (Minister of Transports): Mr. Speaker, I receive representations on all issues I have to deal with, but this in no way changes my earlier answer. When a decision has to be made on VIA Rail, I will make it.

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, the constituents in my riding of Erie and the people across Canada have a growing concern about the huge deficit that we have.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fretz: The Minister of Finance deserves congratulation for the fine work that he has done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Fretz: Canadians are well aware of the fine job the Minister of Finance has done—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mississauga East.

UNIVERSALITY OF PROGRAMS

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Throne Speech contends that an expanded economy is the only way to maintain our cherished Canadian social programs. Canadians know that the only way to maintain social programs is for the Government to protect the sacred trust.

Why is the Government not prepared at this time to commit itself to maintaining the universality of existing social programs?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Perhaps the Hon. Member was absent the last couple of days when this question was asked. The Government supports the concept of universality.

The point which the Hon. Member makes is an important one. During the tenure of this Government, we have provided jobs to over 1,300,000 Canadians. We have provided new opportunities for Canadians, and we have done away with the massive unemployment and inflation that were robbing Canadians of their opportunity to get ahead.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND OLD AGE PENSIONS

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): I can appreciate the Minister's reply, but there is a difference between principle and application. I can also appreciate that perhaps his colleague, the Minister of Finance will torpedo another one of the Minister's ships.

My supplementary is that seniors know from previous experience the value of this Government's word. Can the Minister reassure this House that programs such as family allowances and old age pensions will still be available to all Canadians?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we have always supported the concept of universal payments. I have indicated this on several occasions both yesterday and today. Most importantly, when we are worried about the condition of the weakest and poorest in our society, what is essential is that the Government get its economic house in order and not return to the days in which Canada's pensioners saw their life savings stolen from them by the cruel tax of inflation as a result of prolific government spending.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION FUNDING—STUDENT'S HUNGER STRIKE

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs. I met with eight students from Thunder Bay who are on the fifteenth day of a hunger strike to protest changes to the post-secondary education funding of native students. This is a crisis. This is a very serious life-threatening situation.

How can the Minister on the one hand sing the praises of this successful program and on the other hand impose an arbitrary capping to these funds? How can anyone take seriously the reference to aboriginal people in the Throne Speech when the aboriginal people have just received such a slap in the face from the Government?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): First of all, I would like to congratulate my colleague on her appointment as critic.

Secondly, I would like to agree in part with my honourable colleague that the hunger strike is a life-threatening situation, and I urge the students to put an end to it and go back to university.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

LEVEL OF FEDERAL SPENDING

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): In view of the devastating effect this amendment of the education policy will have on thousands of native students, will the Minister reconsider his position and put a moratorium on the financial freeze so that we can see whether the Government has a true commitment to the aboriginal people of Canada?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): As I have already indicated to the students on the hunger strike in a letter to them after they made a request in writing last week, and I quote: "Every response to the consultations was reviewed carefully, and we listened to what was said. Important changes to the policy were made, and my officials have been instructed to review the policy periodically to ensure that it is responsive to the changing needs and priorities of students and Indian communities."

My response today is the same. I am prepared to review the new policy as it is put in place. If there are improvements to be brought forward, I will bring them forward.

POSITION OF ALBERTA CONSERVATIVE CAUCUS MEMBERS

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): I have a supplementary question to direct to the Prime Minister. I have a letter addressed to him from the Chair of the Alberta Conservative caucus which states:

> We believe that the effect from these proposed cut-backs will be severely negative with unfortunate ramifications to Native education and our political acceptability.

Will the Prime Minister listen to his own Alberta colleagues, which include the Deputy Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and put a moratorium on the capping of this program and restore the program to what it was before?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): All the people of Canada who have looked carefully at the new guidelines realize there are no cut-backs.

REQUEST THAT PROGRAM BE RESTORED TO FORMER STATUS

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Everybody who has examined the new guidelines finds that with the increase in native population, as a result of Bill C-31, and the fact that the vast majority of those people are around the age of 25, the demand for post-secondary education will be growing in coming years. Capping the program will mean that more native Indian people will be denied post-secondary education.

At a time when the Government in its Throne Speech is expressing a commitment to literacy, native economic development and native languages, it does not make sense to put a cap on the program. Will the Minister consider removing the cap and restoring the program?

• (1450)

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Obviously it would be a lot simpler if everybody read the guidelines. There has been no cap put on at this time. Two years ago my predecessor announced that this program would have to function within its budget. Notwithstanding that, the budget has been increased since then by 10 per cent and will most probably continue to grow as needs continue to grow. There is no Government, Mr. Speaker, that has done as much for Indian people and northern people in this country as this Government has.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE BUDGET

DATE OF PRESENTATION

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. When will this House and the country receive the Minister's Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must say I appreciated the previous question that was tending in that direction. Mr. Speaker, we are going to have a Budget in a very short while. It is absolutely essential that we in this House understand the significance and the importance of the deficit and debt problem that we have, and I know that a number of Hon. Members on both sides of the House have acknowledged the seriousness of this problem. We propose to address this in the Budget.

The Budget will be brought down on April 27, and at that time we will be able to respond to the concerns that have been expressed by people, as I said, on both sides of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

VIA RAIL

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Prime Minister. In 1984 the present Deputy Prime Minister announced that he was going to "put romance back into passenger rail", but now the Prime Minister has threatened to force an unwanted divorce. Mr. Speaker, I hope that today the Prime Minister, having misled the country with his mischievous misrepresentations—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that he is going a little too far. Would the Hon. Member put his question leaving out those words?

Mr. Dionne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister have the honesty today to lift the threat of execution from VIA Rail, and will he do it now?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I said earlier, as I stated to my colleague yesterday, that concerning the operations of Crown corporations coming under the Departement of Transport, decisions are made on an ongoing basis. We will continue to do so, and that is the only announcement I wish to make.

[English]

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I had addressed my question to Charlie McCarthy, not Edgar Bergen. Or vice-versa; it doesn't make much difference.

An Hon. Member: The question is from Mickey Mouse.

Mr. Dionne: Mr. Speaker, during the 1981 VIA Rail debate the Conservative Party argued that no decision on VIA Rail should be taken without "the right to hold public hearings, to be heard and have an opportunity to express concern about the criteria of public convenience and necessity."

Will the Prime Minister make a commitment now to hold public hearings before any cuts occur in VIA Rail?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Member puts the same question twenty times, I will give him the same answer twenty times.

DROUGHT ASSISTANCE COMPENSATION PAYMENTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Grains and Oil Seeds. Last November 10 he promised that he would bring in a drought assistance program providing up to $40 per acre for wheat in the worst affected areas of western Canada and up to $50 per acre for corn in the worst drought affected areas in eastern Canada. So far, practically no farmers have received any assistance, even though they are getting ready to put in their crops.

Will the Minister stand in this place and answer one simple question? Are the amounts that he had announced last November, with or without any provincial government participation, to be paid, because the interim amounts have been very small and certainly do not represent 70 per cent of the amount that was promised last fall?

Will he be paying up to $40 per acre for wheat in western Canada where the crop is totally lost, and up to $50 per acre in eastern Canada for corn where the crop is totally lost, as he promised in this press release last November 10?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, we are in the process of making interim payments as the Hon. Member knows, which amount to $12 an acre in parts of western Canada and up to $16 an acre in Ontario for corn and soybeans.

The estimates that we talked about last fall stand exactly the same. Nothing has changed. It is a program that is designed based on crop concerns, information we gathered from the provinces, and we have identified about 65,000 producers who are eligible for interim payment. At the end of this week we anticipate about one quarter of those cheques being in the mail, and we anticipate all the interim cheques being in the mail by the 3rd of May.

SIZE OF PAYMENTS

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the same Minister. I want to point out to the House that the Minister represents the same riding, the same area where I grew up.

I am not happy about that, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): It is an embarrassment to be in the same riding—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member would put his question again.

Mr. Harvard: Farmers need that money now. They are getting into seeding. They do not need the money in July. The question is this: Are you going to come through with a full $850 million or are you going to ask the provincial Government to kick in a share?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, I was trying to keep it a secret that we both grew up in the same area, and I am not happy about it either. Mr. Speaker, with that kind of a performance, I am not too sure that any us would agree that he ever did grow up either.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mayer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I happen to live in the same area and farm in the same area, and I want to tell the Hon. Member as a farmer that farmers need money in June and July, and that is when they are going to be getting money and it is going to be of assistance to them, and they are getting it now. Between $250 million and $300 million is going to be in the mail to farmers by the 3rd of May. That is a fair amount of money.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

MEMBER FOR CHAMBLY—ALLEGATIONS OF FRAUD AND ABUSE OF TRUST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. According to a statement to the RCMP made on November 9, 1988 by the Prime Minister's Former Chief Secretary Peter White, the Conservative Member for Chambly, and I quote: "is concerned because he believes he has been involved in improper actions in 1985 and 1986."

When did the Prime Minister for the first time hear of those serious allegations, which led to an RCMP investigation into corruption, fraud and breach of trust charges? What steps did the Prime Minister take to check those allegations, before he approved Richard Grisé's candidacy?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and minister State (Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I believe the facts mentioned by the Hon. Member come under the responsibility of the Solicitor General. From time to time, Mr. Speaker, the RCMP launches investigations in Canada. I believe it is complety improper in this House to make public comments on those investigations, because this would hinder the RCMP in the proper conduct of their activities.

• (1500)

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Grisé's candidacy was approved by the Prime Minister, not the Solicitor General.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister. The RCMP seized all documents pertaining to the electors in the constituency of Chambly and the Conservative Member has disappeared from the picture.

What actions will the Prime Minister undertake to ensure that constituents in Chambly are not penalized under these very serious circumstances?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Sollicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, in my mind a Minister of the Crown should not enter into irresponsible speculations. In this country, everyone is entitled to a fair trial. If the Hon. Member is aware of facts involving any individual, let him go to the RCMP and make a statement—and this applies to all candidates in his own party.

It is the RCMP's job to make investigations. The matter is presently under investigation and there will be no further comment in this House on irresponsible speculations.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TABLING OF ANNOTATED STANDING ORDERS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to table in both official languages the annotated Standing Orders of the House of Commons, an important new reference work on parliamentary procedure.

I have the honour to table in both official languages the annotated Standing Orders of the House of Commons, a thorough reference work on parliamentary procedure.

[English]

Over the past three years, staff, under the direction of the Clerk and Deputy Clerk have been working toward the publication of this companion volume to the Standing Orders which provides almost 500 pages of thorough and up-to-date commentaries, historical summaries and reference notes on each Standing Order of the House.

The annotated version of the Standing Orders is intended to make livelier and more productive reading and especially to provide more practical information.

A brief commentary is given beside each Standing Order, which describes the current interpretation given to the rule.

The historical background and development of the Standing Order and a description of significant changes which may have been made since Confederation are also provided.

All this is followed by references which constitute an essential collection of examples of the rules' application.

[English]

The annotated version of the Standing Orders is intended to make livelier, richer and more productive reading, and especially to provide more practical information.

A brief commentary is given beside each Standing Order, which describes the current interpretation given to the rule. The historical background and development of the Standing Order and a description of significant changes which may have been made since Confederation are also provided. All this is followed by references which constitute an essential collection of examples of the rules' application.

I know the annotated Standing Orders will be a valuable complement to other works of reference on the procedures of the House and as such I hope all Members will find it both useful and informative as they carry out their duties.

I know all Hon. Members will want to join me in complimenting the Clerk, Deputy Clerk and all their staff on an absolutely superb work which will be of great benefit to our deliberations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I know it is unusual to do so under tabling of documents, but let me say that I have had an opportunity to review somewhat, not at length, the annotated Standing Orders book. I think it is an immense contribution to this House.

I want to join with you and I am sure all colleagues in the House in complimenting the Clerks and everyone who was part of it. I notice that it expanded on our history in this place. I think that is important and valuable. I am not sure my friend from Ottawa—Vanier needs the assistance since he has most of this committed to memory, at least that is what he assures me whenever we are arguing the points.

I am sure that you worked your way through the first 400 pages, Mr. Speaker, and are now working on the annotations and footnotes. For my purposes, I want to be able to find emergency debate. The Table has been of great assistance to me in the last 100 times I have had to look it up.

I do not think I should go on any longer because there are more speeches to be made today, except to say that this is a work of art. In fact, it is a gift from the Clerk Emeritus, our Clerk and all of those who worked so hard to put it together. On behalf of myself, my colleagues, all Members of the House and those who follow us, I want to say thank you to everyone else.

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) whose remarks were generous and certainly well intended, I believe, may have some difficulty in finding in this new work the item "emergency debate". However, I suggest he might look under "oil spill".

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition I want to commend the team of people who put together this volume of the annotated Standing Orders of the House for their outstanding work. This work is a tremendous contribution not only to Canadian parliamentary law but to the facilitation of the operations of this House.

I hope that the kind words of the Government House Leader and Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) indicate a commitment that he and the Government take these rules so seriously that they will no longer have recourse to using their majority to suspend or throw these rules out the window anytime it suits their purpose. If what the Government House Leader and Minister of Justice says about these rules is to be taken seriously, and certainly I intend my remarks about these rules to be taken seriously and I am sure that will be the case for the spokesperson for the New Democratic Party, we must not only praise those who produced this outstanding volume, we must commit ourselves to live by and within these rules if parliamentary government is to be taken seriously.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleagues on behalf of New Democrats in the House of Commons to extend my thanks and appreciation to all of those who made these new Standing Orders with the appropriate references available for us today. I suspect that many of us, let alone people who watch this process, often are mystified as to just what is happening. I suspect many of us shared that mystery in trying to understand why we are doing certain things, trying to understand precedents and so on.

Something that makes this particular reference work different is that it is our own. We have always had to depend on outside reference work. This we have done ourselves and it reflects our Parliament. It is very professionally done and very practical. Indeed, it is a milestone in Canadian parliamentary jurisprudence. It is an excellent work, and, as the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) indicated, it is a piece of art. To those of us who try to make sense out of the mystery that surrounds this place, it is a piece of art and we appreciate it very much.

I did not argue that yesterday, but I consider it to be a serious breach of Members' privileges.

However, given that the situation is an ongoing one and I raised it yesterday, I will not pursue the question of privilege today, but I will flag it as a matter that I will take the liberty to raise again in the House of Commons if the Government does not proclaim this Bill as soon as possible.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF DELEGATION TO ENVIRONMENT CONFERENCE

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 34, I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the report of the official parliamentary delegation to the Conference on the Environment in the Arctic in Moscow, U.S.S.R., on January 28 to February 3. This was the first time for the Soviet Union to host such a conference of parliamentarians to discuss the circumpolar environment, and a tone of utmost co-operation was evident throughout the conference.

I was particularly pleased to hear in the Throne Speech this week of our country's determination to work with other northern allies and neighbours to develop a new co-operative ethic in the Arctic. It was further discussed that subsequent meetings of parliamentary delegations be held concerning the circumpolar environment. I table the document with you today.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-201, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code (scabs and essential services).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Plamondon: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to introduce a Bill to amend the Canada Labour Code so as to prevent Crown corporations from using scabs during a labour dispute.

I want to be consistent with the approach I took two years ago when I joined the picket line in the Canada Post dispute to show my disdain for the antidemocratic, antisocial and retrograde use of scabs during a dispute, particularly since this was on the first day of the strike.

I introduce this Bill in the hope that all Members in the House will support it, especially now that we are just beginning to implement the Free Trade Agreement. We have to show that labour relations in Canada are altogether different from those which prevail in the United States, that we want not only to stay ahead in that field but also improve labour conditions in this country so they will be quite different from those south of the border.

I thank my colleague from Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn) for supporting my Bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO REVISE LISTING OF COMMITTEES

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to revise Standing Order 104(2) which is the listing of committees. Copies have been provided to the House Leaders of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party. I would move:

By unanimous consent, it was ordered, —That Standing Order 104(2) be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(2) The standing committees, which shall consist of not less than seven and not more than fifteen Members, and for which lists of members are to be prepared, are those on:

(a) Aboriginal Affairs;

(b) Agriculture;

(c) Communications, Culture, Citizenship and Multiculturalism;

(r) Public Accounts: and

(s) Transport.

NOTE: For the purpose of this Standing Order, a Parliamentary Secretary shall not be a member of a standing committee which has in its mandate the review of a department to which the said Parliamentary Secretary is attached."

That Standing Order 108(3) be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(3) The mandate of the Standing Committee on

(a) Communications, Culture, Citizenship and Multiculturalism shall include, among other matters:

(i) the monitoring of the implementation of the principles of the federal multiculturalism policy throughout the Government of Canada and in order – to encourage the departments and agencies of the federal government to reflect the multicultural diversity of the nation; and

– to examine existing and new programs and policies of federal departments and agencies to encourage sensitivity to multicultural concerns and to preserve and enhance the multicultural reality of our nation; and

(ii) the review of policies, programs and their administration, in the areas of citizenship, citizenship development and promotion and related programs which provide opportunities for fuller participation in the educational, economic and social life of Canada.

(b) Elections, Privileges, Procedure and Private Members' Business shall include, among other matters:

(i) The review of and report on the Standing orders and procedure in the House and its committees; and

(ii) the selection of items of Private Members' Business pursuant to Standing Order 92, and the consideration of business related to Private Bills;

(c) Human Rights and the Status of Disabled Persons shall include among other matters:

(i) the reviews of any report on the reports of the Canadian Human Rights Commission which shall be deemed permanently referred to the Committee immediately after they are laid upon the Table; and

(ii) the proposing, promoting, monitoring and assessing of initiatives aimed at the integration and equality of disabled persons in all sectors of Canadian Society;

(d) Management and Members' Service shall include, among other matters:

(i) the review of and report to the Speaker as well as the Board of Internal Economy, on the administration of the House and the provision of services and facilities to Members provided that all matters related thereto shall be deemed to have been permanently referred to the Committee upon its membership having been established; and

(ii) the review of and report on the effectiveness, management and operation, together with the operational and expenditure plans of all operations which are under the joint administration and control of the two Houses and other related matters as the Committee deems fit;

(e) Public Accounts shall include, among other matters, review of and report on the Public Accounts of Canada and all reports of the Auditor General of Canada which shall be severally deemed permanently referred to the Committee immediately after they are laid upon the Table; and any other matter which the House shall, from time to time, refer to the Standing Committee."

And, that the references in Standing Orders 91, 92, 132, 133(2), (3) and (4), 135(1), 140 and 141(4) to the "Standing Committee of Private Members'Business" be changed to the "Standing Committee of Elections, Privileges, Procedure and Private Members' Business".

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

DESIGNATION OF ROUGE RIVER VALLEY BREV

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present, on behalf of constituents of Scarborough, a petition which concerns the Rouge River Valley in Scarborough, and this is the first petition of the second Session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament that I would like to present.

This is a particularly beautiful area of Metro Toronto. The petitioners are calling upon the federal Government to protect this endangered wildlife and wilderness area in the Rouge Valley. This has become a particularly crucial issue because the provincial Government is presently threatening to put a garbage dump or a freeway right through this unique, environmentally sound area.

The federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) has already established his support for this protection. The Mayor of Scarborough has supported this as have the Rouge Valley System and the Coalition of Scarborough Community Associations. The petitioners call upon the federal Government to work with the Government of Ontario to establish the Rouge River Valley as a Canadian heritage land or a provincial park.

PROPOSED SALES TAX ON MUSIC LESSONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate that I table these petitions, given the date of the budget in April.

Constituents of mine humbly submit that the sales tax on music lessons will hurt the average family for whom music education will become too costly. With the sales tax on music lessons, Canadian children will suffer, talent will go undeveloped and the future of Canadian music both nationally and internationally will be jeopardized. Music educators are active participants in education departments in every province of Canada. Their knowledge and expertise provides students with qualifications which enable them to enter our universities and faculties of music.

Wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray that the Government consider music study as an educational process and therefore exempt music education from the proposed sales tax.

PROPOSED CLOSURE OF POSTAL STATION -VICTORIA

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and privilege to present a petition signed by several dozen of my constituents which states that whereas the Canada Post Office Corporation has threatened to effect closure of the Victoria Post Office, wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject proposals which will decrease the postal service to our local community, to take strong and immediate steps to assure us that our post office, which serves a great need in our community, will not be closed, put out on contract, relocated to another community, replaced with supermailboxes or any other inferior service.

VIA RAIL—GOVERNMENT COMMITMENTS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege to table two petitions in the House today. They have been certified correct pursuant to Standing Order 36 by the Clerk of Petitions.

The first is with regard to the need for an effective and efficient national passenger rail system in Canada. The petitioners point out the record of the previous Liberal Government and the current record of this Government and call upon the Government to live up to its original pledge to support Via Rail, to abandon plans for further cuts to its budget and to operate the necessary resources to allow Via to operate as a modern effective transportation company rather than a museum.

POST- SECONDARY EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): The second petition, Mr. Speaker, deals with a matter of very urgent importance. A number of students from my community, Thunder Bay, who are actually residents of all of northwestern Ontario are currently on a fast or a hunger strike and call upon the Government to put a moratorium in place dealing with post-secondary funding.

These petitioners from Thunder Bay call upon the Government to fulfil its rightful obligation and duty by withdrawing the draft policy and begin a process of consultation with First Nations and First Nations' students who will be most affected by the said policy.

Point of Order—Mr. Lewis

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORT CHARGE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 52, I ask leave to propose a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration. This concerns the need to renegotiate or cancel if necessary the 15 per cent softwood lumber export charge which remains on lumber produced in Ontario for export to the United States.

This export charge is especially harmful to the softwood lumber industry in northern Ontario, which has already suffered losses of hundreds of jobs due to the combined effect of the export charge and a higher Canada/U.S. exchange rate. The export charges are a severe burden on the industry and the Government's failure to seek and negotiate the charge with the U.S. requires the attention of the House and urgent action by the Government.

Mr. Speaker: I should say to Hon. Members and to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) who, of course, gave me notice of this application, and I have looked at it carefully, the matter, of course, is of considerable concern to the Hon. Member and to many Canadians.

However, I have to advise the Hon. Member, taking a careful look at the rules that I must be guided by in calling for an emergency debate, that the situation at the moment at least does not merit that.

I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention.

POINT OF ORDER

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, immediately before Orders of the Day are called, I would like to indicate that there has been the usual discussions among the Parties, and it is agreed today we will have both the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr Turner) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party complete their contributions to the address debate today and that immediately thereafter the House will adjourn. That would mean that in the event the Leader of the New Democratic Party's remarks went beyond six o'clock p.m., the time would be extended to allow him to finish his remarks.

I would like to point out, if I may, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has written to the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition with respect to his activities today. He will be required to greet the President of Costa Rica at the airport at 5 p.m. and, therefore, he may not be able to be in attendance for the completion of the remarks of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition or the Leader of the New Democratic Party. Obviously the Prime Minister regrets that because of this diplomatic commitment he is unable to be here for the major speeches. That is why he took the precaution of writing to the individuals and that is why I have confirmed it in writing.

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for an address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her speech at the opening of the session.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank all of my colleagues on both sides of the House, from all quarters of the House, for their best wishes during my recent operation and recovery. I am pleased to report that the healing process appears to have been successful and I am feeling renewed, refreshed and reinvigorated.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra:) My first reaction to the Throne Speech is that the document is not a confident agenda of a Government heading into its second mandate. Indeed, it is a tired repetition of some of the same old lines we have heard before. It is not as if the Government has not had enough time. It has had 97 days to explain to Canadians whether it intends to break election promises, raise taxes or cut expenditures. After waiting all this time, we now know that the Government intends to do all three. Canadians are going to get shafted by the Mulroney Government, shafted by a new regressive and inflationary value added tax or consumption tax; shafted by tax increases; shafted by a policy of high interest rates; shafted by the Prime Minister's broken promises on investment programs and shafted by changes to the unemployment insurance system.

What about child care? We have just a vague promise. There is no commitment to legislation. There is no commitment to do anything about post-secondary education in this country when most Canadians recognize that education is the key to our future. There is not a word in this speech about the housing crisis. There is no mention of minority language rights. Air safety is not mentioned. There is no mention of the renewal of the ERDA agreements, fundamental as they are to regional equality and regional development in the country. What about the commitment in the speech to do something about predatory overfishing on the Atlantic coast three days after this Government sold out Newfoundland to the French? What about the claim in the speech that the Government's regional development programs are working well? Tell that to Atlantic Canadians. Tell that to people in northern and eastern Ontario. Tell that to people in western Canada. How about yet another promise of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to clean up the ethics of his own Government? That will hold until the next scandal.

Speaking of scandals, Mr. Speaker. I was pleased about one feature of the Throne Speech. I was pleased that the Governor General was permitted to read the speech herself. After his recent breakthrough at the Academy Awards, I was surprised that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) did not try to elbow Her Excellency out of the way!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: And the winner is. . .

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There are presidential tendencies by this Government and this Prime Minister but at least that decorum was maintained.

As is the tradition, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the mover and the seconder of the Speech from the Throne, the Hon. Members for Calgary Southeast (Mr. Richardson) and Bourassa (Mrs. Gibeau) respectively. Considering the limited material that they had to work with, I felt that they were fertile in terms of creativity, did the best that they could, and indeed made excellent personal speeches.

• (1530)

We are happy to welcome our new members, men and women from all regions in this country, including the Territories. They are taking their first steps in Parliament, but they are dedicated, hardworking, observant and very determined to represent their constituents effectively.

Mr. Speaker, you may rely on our full co-operation in maintaining the high standards, dignity and discipline expected in this House. However, I wish to inform the Prime Minister it is our firm resolve to form a vigilant and vigourous opposition. We intend to remind the Government as often as necessary that Canada is not the private domain of the rich and powerful, of the businessmen of this country. This country also belongs to people across Canada who cannot make ends meet. There are businessmen who try to make a profit at any cost, but there are people across this country who are suffering and who need the assistance of governments at both levels.

[English]

Parliament, except for two weeks in December, has not been sitting for six months. As Parliamentarians we have had a wasted winter. After the November election we were called back only briefly to accede to the trade deal. We lived up to our commitments. Since then the Government has been on autopilot, drifting, delaying the recall of the House. Meanwhile, Canadians have been caught, hit with sky-rocketing interest rates, accelerated concentration of economic power in the hands of fewer and fewer people; foreign take-overs, mergers. American Express has come to Canada and it is "not going home without it". In fact, we have given them a bag.

Air safety is in chaos. Talking about air transport, there has been nothing but ministerial sloppiness and incompetence. Following the Gander crash we demanded a full public inquiry. The Government denied that there was a problem, yet the Canadian Aviation Safety Board gave the Government a split decision on the reasons for the crash. We needed a public inquiry. Safety warnings were not passed on to the airlines in time. Twenty-four people lost their lives in the Dryden crash. An assistant Deputy Minister of Transport was fired. There was confusion and turmoil in the Department. Canadians are worried. Are our skies safe? We have two Ministers and neither one is doing the job. There is ministerial incompetence, and departmental chaos.

Where is the plan to deal with spiralling interest rates? Where is the plan to deal with the devastating impact that those rates are having across the country? How high will the Government allow these rates to go? How high will the Minister accede to the Governor's wish to push them higher and higher, 14, 15, or 16 per cent. Where does it stop? I suppose we must await the Budget.

After spending four years of slashing the budgets of environmental programs, of ravaging Environment Canada, the Government and the Prime Minister had a deathbed repentance during the election and they discovered finally what the Throne Speech eloquently calls the environmental imperative. It talks of limits on toxic chemicals, improving water quality, protecting the Arctic, and an acid rain treaty with the United States. We understand that vocabulary here; that was our program.

There is also something called an environmental partners' fund to encourage awareness of the environment. We do not need anything as Canadians to make us more aware of the environment. Canadians are aware of the environment. They know that four years of inaction and budget cuts have taken a severe toll on the efforts of Canadians to meet the environmental challenge ahead of us. Canadians want action and not rhetoric. So far all we have seen is the Prime Minister grandstanding at an environmental conference in Europe.

The following is what the respected international environmental group Friends of the Earth had to say about Canada and two of the other countries at that conference in The Hague. "Particularly hypocritical are the Canadian, Dutch, and Italian Governments which have in turn slashed energy efficiency and conservation budgets in recent years." So much for that award. The Prime Minister in this type of posture is embarrassing all of us. I challenge him to get serious.

If last night's debate is any indication of the preparedness of this Government on environmental matters when we debated on an emergency status the Alaska Canada oil spill, then the Government is hopelessly unprepared. The policy announced last night was "Don't worry Canadians, it will all blow away." Wait for the right tides, wait for the right winds, and pray to God that nothing happens. That was the policy of the Minister of the Environment(Mr. Bouchard).

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign, the Prime Minister shouted from the roof tops that Canadian men and women should vote for his party because, and I quote: "We can manage this country. We can manage change." But where did all those change managers go? They vanished into thin air. The only memorable incident since then was a statement by the Minister of Finance who solemnly informed us that his Government did not intend to keep its election promises. No less! The only statement in four months!

During the campaign, the same Minister of Finance made a very clear distinction between the Government's policies and election promises. He denigrated our platform. Our political platform was just a bunch of election promises but the Government's election promises were commitments! Quite a difference! He defended that position seriously, talking about billions of dollars that would be spent. Well, we were wrong to believe the Minister of Finance.

Before the House resumed sitting, the Minister had already changed his mind. He put all those billions back in his pocket, because today, four months later, we can no longer afford to spend them. Mr. Speaker, this Government, this Prime Minister and his Minister of Finance have fooled us with their promises. This Government has quite simply deceived Canadians across the country.

It is quite obvious they never had the slightest intention of keeping their word or meeting their commitments. They were only interested in buying Canadian voters, in buying the election so they could sell this country at a discount to the Americans.

[English]

During the last election the Liberal Party fought what we believe was a good, tough, and clean campaign. We talked about the issues. We talked about losing control over the economic and social levers necessary to shape our future, and the disastrous impact the trade deal will have on this country because it abandons those levers and surrenders our sovereignty.

We were told by the Prime Minister, when he launched the negotiations with the United States, that the sole purpose of a primary bilateral deal with the U.S. was secure access into the American market. We told him that that meant two things. It meant an exception from American protectionist trade law, and it also meant a dispute settlement mechanism to enforce that exemption. The issue of secure access to the American market was never discussed or defended by the Prime Minister during the last election, and with reason.

Under Articles 1902 and 1904 of the trade agreement, American trade law, countervail, antidumping, surtax, and quotas can still be applied against Canadian exports. Under the American Statutes of 1930, the Trade Act of 1974, and the Omnibus Trade Bill of 1988, the same laws still apply against our lumber, our potash, our steel, our fish, and they are still to be applied on a daily basis by the Americans. True, we have a dispute mechanism. We have a tribunal headed-up on our side, coincidentally, by strong supporters of the deal. This tribunal cannot challenge American law. Under the agreement, it can only apply that law against American judicial precedent and practice.

Those on our side who were fortunate enough to meet with the senior members of the U.S. Congress and who asked if there was any way to negotiate a more secure access to the U.S. market were told by Senators on the Republic democratic side that there is no way the United States Congress would ever yield its jurisdiction over trade law. That being so, the sole purpose of this deal was not obtained. It is not a free trade agreement. It is not even a trade deal. It is the Sale of Canada Act.

Look what we gave away! Energy. Americans wanted secure access to our energy, and they got it, especially in times of shortage. The same regime applies to all our renewable and non-renewable resources, including water.

There is now an explosion of plans to export trillions of cubic metres of natural gas from our Arctic. I welcome that development for the people of the Territories. However, since deregulation, gas exports to the United States have increased by over 70 per cent. This is going to continue. Because of the proportionality regime in the trade deal, we could find ourselves as Canadians locked into supplying 60 to 65 per cent of our gas to the United States at bargain basement prices. Once those volumes are established, we are bound by those volumes under the trade agreement. The upcoming National Energy Board hearings do not make much difference because that body has been turned into nothing more than a monitoring agency with no authority to limit or change export levels.

Agriculture. We on this side of the House told the Government and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) that there was no way we could contemplate free trade in agriculture. Our climates are too different. Our growing season is shorter. Our costs are higher. Our burdens are heavier. Yet our farmers' cash crops, vegetables, fruits, and horticulture and everything that was protected by marketing boards is now thrown into direct competition with the farmers of California, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi and Alabama. They have a 12-month growing season, and our farmers are caught in a climate they have been dealing with for over two centuries in a very courageous fashion.

The agricultural supply-management system will be negotiated away. We were warned that food processing would move out. Quaker Oats, Heinz and McCain's have already said they are leaving.

Fishing. We have talked about fishing in this House, but what this agreement did was give up our rights under GATT. There is no exemption in favour of our fishing people or our fishing processors as the Government claims.

Control over foreign investment. The screening has evaporated to a limit of $150 million on a direct acquisition and no limit on an indirect takeover. We now have unlimited takeovers. In anticipation of the trade deal, the increase in foreign ownership was under way prior to the election. According to Investment Canada's report for 1987-88, foreign takeovers, 70 per cent of which were American, increased sharply to $22.2 billion worth of investment, up from $12.5 billion the year before. American business is now poised under the deal to pick up Canadian companies at bargain basement prices.

Capital markets. We said repeatedly that our banking insurance and investment industries are now wide open to American penetration, particularly banking. We do not have any reciprocal rights into the American market, primarily because of state jurisdiction over banking and the prohibition against linking banking and investment under the American legislation. We do not have reciprocal rights. American Express was at our doors the very day of the election, and they will be the first of many.

During the election campaign, we won the battle for the minds and hearts of Canadians. On the trade issue, more than one and a half million people voted against that deal than voted for it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We won the message. The message was winning the election for us. The Conservatives did not respond to our message on trade, a message that Canadians were concerned about. They attacked the messenger. They launched an unprecedented, personal attack on my character, sincerity and competence. Their negative ad campaign was a textbook model to be studied for obvious comparisons to similar events south of the border.

We also saw the unprecedented intervention of big business with millions of dollars, uncovered by the Election Expenses Act, in an advertising campaign in support of the deal.

We saw democracy stripped of its majesty. It was a cynical manipulation of public opinion, a power-hungry reach for the lower side of human nature. The Government was playing to fear and not to the pride of a nation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I say again to the Prime Minister: You have a tarnished mandate. You have a sullied victory. You bought an election and sold out a country, and Canadians will not allow this country to be sold out!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Over four million Canadians have supported the Liberal Party. Fifty-seven per cent of Canadians voted against the deal. Canadians in eight out of ten provinces voted against the deal. We will continue to oppose the trade deal in accordance with the mandate given to us by those who supported us. We will seek to lessen its negative impact on Canadians by promoting adequate adjustment programs, programs the Prime Minister guaranteed Canadians would be in place in time to prevent any hardships that might follow the deal. Once again, the Prime Minister has made promises that he will not and cannot keep.

How often did we hear from the Prime Minister that the trade deal was not going to hurt anybody? The Prime Minister and his friends in the business community knew that thousands of workers ran the risk of losing their jobs in the so-called "rationalization" of North American business. The Prime Minister said it would not be a problem because his Government would bring in adjustment programs. We all remember that.

Now we have the long-awaited de Grandpré Commission appointed by this Government. Mr. de Grandpré and his colleagues have stated that there cannot be adjustment programs targeted to help those who are hurt by the trade deal. The reason he says there can be no specific programs to ease the pain is that the impact of the trade deal is so large and varied. Once more, either the Prime Minister did not know what he was talking about, did not know the facts, or simply did not want to let the facts interfere with his story during the election campaign.

It is now the duty of this Prime Minister and Government to provide Canadian workers with adequate adjustment programs. On this side of the House we will insist that they be sensible programs directed specifically to the workers who will pay for the Prime Minister's trade deal with their jobs, financial insecurity and social dislocation.

We also intend to be vigilant and watchful during the five to seven years of negotiation on the definition of "subsidy". Those subsidy negotiations are critical for us. They will define what future Canadian Governments can or cannot do for individuals and for the disadvantaged regions of the country. Canada has agreed under the deal to negotiate for the next five to seven years over what is an allowable subsidy. The real negotiations are now under way. This Government signed a trade deal with the United States before all its terms were negotiated or signed. That is like signing a real estate contract to sell your house before you have agreed to negotiate the terms. The Americans have aggressively stated, their goals in these negotiations. They include removal of the exemption for Canadian culture, an end to any investment screening of business, a definition of an unfair subsidy as any Canadian Government, law, regulation, or practice that is "an adverse impact upon American business and producers".

This is a vital issue facing Canada. This vital issue facing us in the next few years is the negotiation of subsidy. Yet there is not a single word about these negotiations in the text of the Throne Speech.

[Translation]

Who is going to negotiate for us? Will the provinces be involved? Will we, as Members of the House of Commons who, after all, represent Canadians, be informed of all the aspects of these negotiations? The Prime Minister made a solemn commitment that social programs and regional development would never be affected, but we have heard all this before. We have heard this tune many times. We have also heard the Prime Minister refer to our social programs as a sacred trust, but that did not keep him from trying to deindex old age pensions. Today, the threat looms even larger, when we hear the Prime Minister's friends, Canadian businessmen, demanding cutbacks in our social programs. Incredible, what a difference a few months make in the Conservative vocabulary! During the last election campaign, social programs had once again become inviolate and sacred. In Quebec City, taking his own mother as witness, the Prime Minister said, and I quote:

> Why would I want to hurt my mother?

In public, businessmen claimed that the Mulroney agreement had nothing to do with social programs and would have no impact on them.

However, even before the election we thought there was something fishy when we read the September bulletin of the Conseil du patronat. In its bulletin, the Conseil du patronat maintains that to remain competitive with the United States and with their American rivals, Quebec businessmen should no longer be required to finance certain health insurance programs.

More recently, the President of the Manufacturers Association, Mr. Laurent Thibault, wanted the Government to reduce the deficit by cutting certain social programs because, and I quote:

> They undermine our ability to make the transition to free trade.

The Canadian Chamber of Commerce sings the same tune. Pressure on our social programs does not have to come from the United States. The Prime Minister's friends are quite capable of bringing that pressure to bear themselves.

[English]

The trade issue will haunt this Parliament and our country. It has added fuel to the merger mania. It has thrown open our businesses to American takeovers. I have heard the arguments—synergism, more efficiency, more productivity—but in a world where the Japanese have led the way into the smaller decision-making groups, to bringing decisions to the work floor and the factory, I have never seen convincing proof.

Where are the new jobs as a result of these mergers and takeovers? Where is the new technology? Where are the new ideas? Where is the new efficiency? The case has not been proven. I say once again that the trade deal is takeovers unlimited. It is what the economists call the rationalization of North American businesses, rationalization in favour of American businesses at the expense of Canadian workers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, you read about it every day. No sooner was the election over than there were plant closings, mergers, takeovers, Gillette, British Footwear, Northern Telecom, Texaco, Wardair, Consolidated Bathurst. The list goes on and on.

Combine that growing concentration of economic power in Montreal, in Toronto, especially across the border, with the deregulation and privatization of our transport services in this country sponsored by this Government—Air Canada, VIA Rail, Canadian National—and you have the trend toward the shutting down of rural and small town Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity in private legal practice to appear in several major cases before the regulatory agencies of this country and of the provinces. There used to be a phrase in our statutes: "Public convenience and necessity". It meant that anyone who wanted a licence to transport goods or people across this country had to prove public necessity, had to prove public convenience and had to prove that equal service would be given to Canadians no matter where they lived in this country. That has been eliminated and now market forces are king.

Privatization. We have seen before our eyes the elimination and dissipation and dilution of the public infrastructure of transportation in this country, publicly owned, again to ensure that there was equal service no matter where you live. Now the service of Air Canada has been cut—Stephenville, Sydney—I could go through all the communities. The same fares will be paid, but not the same service, not the same style of aircraft. We are getting to a situation with VIA Rail. What have the Conservatives argued for years in opposition? They argued that VIA Rail should be strengthened, that we should have high speed passenger trains, particularly on the Quebec City/Windsor corridor, that we should have high speed trains to allow us to compete with other industrial nations to take the load off the airports, off our highways which are becoming more and more congested around our major cities and to reduce automobile pollution.

In 1985 the Deputy Prime Minister said this: It is now time to turn VIA into a strong system that is cost effective, national in scope and one which Canadians will be proud of and will use. That is the Member of Parliament from Vegreville.

The current Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) is now contemplating the elimination of passenger rail service in this country supported by the Prime Minister who says use it or lose it, quoting statistics that only 20 per cent of it is being used anyway.

Well, he is wrong again. The proper figure according to VIA is 52.4 per cent with even higher capacity on lines in more populous areas. As my colleague from Miramichi has put it so well, if the Prime Minister is determined to scuttle VIA Rail, the least we can expect is he tell the public the truth.

Ms. Copps: That would be a switch.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We appeared this morning with the Atlantic caucus under the chairmanship of the Member of Parliament for Beausejour in New Brunswick. We heard the workers from Atlantic Canada wondering what their future and their jobs were under this governmental policy of dismantling VIA Rail. We now know that the Liberal Members are being joined by the Atlantic Members who are expressing the same concerns, that if this is a free parliamentary system, we want to see those Atlantic Members from the Conservative Party join us in protesting what has happened.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I notice that the Hon. Member for Annapolis is keeping his counsel and his head low in a rather unusual prudent fashion, but anyway I recognize him as a friend of long standing, and I am sure that he must be wrestling with this particular problem.

What happens, Mr. Speaker, is that if you live in this country anywhere outside of Vancouver, outside of Toronto or outside of Montreal, under this policy of concentration of power, deregulation and privatization of our transportation services, dismantling of our rural postal routes, you are going to be out of luck because the Tory Government has abandoned 120 years of nation building where every Canadian was to be given equal service and treated equally.They have now embraced the philosophy of the unfettered free market.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, this country was not built solely on market forces. We built this country east and west and north with a railway and a national airline and a national highway and a pipeline and a broadcasting system. We built it with a public infrastructure. We built it against the pull of north/south market forces. We built a public infrastructure to bind this country together. We opposed the trade deal so vigorously because that deal was a sell-out of everything that we had stood for and upon which the country had been built. The same philosophy of the trade deal permeates the Throne Speech: laissez-faire, free market forces, neo-conservatism, profits before people, let the weak take care of themselves, the strong will profit and everything is fine, Jack.

We will be an aggressive opposition, Mr. Speaker. We are going to stand up for the less powerful in our country. We are going to continue to hold this Government to account every step of the way. We are going to monitor this trade deal. We are going to challenge the growing concentration of economic power. We are going to oppose the shut down of rural and small town Canada. We are going to highlight the despoiling of our environment. We are going to resist the deterioration of our health care and other social services. I warn the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that we are going to give the upcoming Budget sharp scrutiny.

The Prime Minister now talks about reducing the public debt. What happened since 1984? Who is responsible for the situation that this country finds itself in?

Since the Government assumed power in September, 1984, it has pushed up the public debt from $170 billion to over $320 billion today. It has piled up as much public debt as every previous Government since Confederation. It did that in only four years—despite the biggest tax increases for individuals in Canadian history. The tax increases over the last four years have been larger than they were during two world wars.

Despite the strength in the economy the Government has spent the last four years mismanaging the country's finances and piling debt on top of debt. It is now asking Canadians to pick up the tab. The Prime Minister knew the numbers. The Minister of Finance knew the numbers. They have misled Canadians. They are now going to answer to Canadians for what they have done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

M. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)—Mr. Speaker, we must be extremely vigilant. The Government's drift, its inability to act in a coherent, thoughtful way in dealing with the great problems of this country are a serious threat to all Canadians.

This House has not sat for six months, except for a few days in December. In the meantime, a significant number of events have occurred and they have very tangibly altered the mood and the unity of our country.

Absent, invisible and silent since last fall, the Prime Minister has let the situation deteriorate to a point where basic values are now either being threatened or downright trampled underfoot.

The whole history of Canada, since the very day it was founded, reflects the fragile balance between the two founding peoples and the two language communities. It is the duty of all of us here in the House, the elected representatives of the Canadian people, to work zealously, carefully and generously to cement the links between these two language communities.

Mr. Speaker, when I entered this House for the first time in 1962, as a Member from Quebec, we were just beginning to provide services in both official languages. That was thanks to John George Diefenbaker. He must be given credit. During Mr. Pearson's administration, there was sensitivity to the problems of national unity and of accessibility for both languages, especially at the federal level to begin with. Mr. Pearson appointed André Laurendeau and Davie Dunton to prepare the Laurendeau-Dunton report on bilingualism and biculturalism.

Thanks to these inquiries, we were finally able, under Mr. Trudeau's administration, to present an official languages bill.

Then, in 1969, I was Justice Minister. I crossed the country because I had much responsibility for this bill. I consulted the provincial governments, I negotiated with the attorneys general of the four western provinces because there were objections, I appeared before provincial legislative committees throughout Canada and, as in all cases involving language, this law to legitimize equal status for our country's two official languages was hard to accept in some parts of our country. We needed great patience and determination to reach our goal.

But we did reach it, thanks to Canadians' tolerance, generosity and good will.

I have thus spent much of my public life advancing the cause of French in Canada and especially ensuring the key position of Quebec in our Canadian Confederation.

It was in this spirit, Mr. Speaker, that in an interview with the Montreal daily Le Devoir in June 1986, I presented a reform plan to bring Quebec back to the constitutional negotiating table.

Of course Quebec is legally tied to the 1982 agreement, but the Government of Quebec did not sign the document. I do not intend to delve into the reasons for that. We had to complete the 1982 initiative so that Quebec would politically, emotionally and psychologically regain its place in the great Canadian family. We had to anchor Quebec in Canada. We had to make sure that all Quebecers, Anglophones and Francophones alike, would feel at home within the Canadian confederation.

Our non-partisan propositions did reach that objective, so much so that Premier Bourassa at the time described them as being positive, precise and concise. Despite its flaws, the agreement signed at Meech Lake a year later was indeed a step ahead. We supported it then and we still do now. However right from the beginning we kept saying here in the House and through our Senate colleagues that it had to be improved and we introduced the appropriate amendments. I am still firmly convinced that these improvements are an essential aspect of the proper balance in Canada's federalism.

Unfortunately the Prime Minister chose to take an uncompromising and radical attitude. He has systematically refused to consider our coherent and legitimate propositions. And so did the Premier of Quebec. What is worse still is that by rejecting the Supreme Court ruling on Bill 101 last December, the Premier of Quebec struck a hard blow against the spirit of national reconciliation.

It seems clear to me that by endorsing the concept of a distinct society in Quebec we as Members acknowledge, in the regulations and facts alike, the role and status of Quebec's Francophone majority. In the same breath, and just as clearly and as explicitely, we acknowledge the role and status of the Anglophone minority in that province. It is the fact that these two communities are jointly and solidly bound which makes Quebec distinct. My interpretation of a distinct society has been re-affirmed by the Supreme Court ruling. The Supreme Court confirmed that approach. In an enlightened and concisely drafted ruling the Court expressed the view that the language of each of the two Quebec communities ought to be reflected in the linguistic fabric of the province.

Quebec must protect, Quebec must promote the French language. Yes, that principle is absolutely essential. French must be mandatory and have priority and supremacy everywhere. There can be no exception. French must be the language of work in Quebec, at the office, in the plant and in the boardroom as well.

That is the most convincing and effective instrument to make everybody and particularly new immigrants learn French and then blend easily with Quebec's Francophone majority. The Government of Quebec has laws and regulations to preserve Quebec's identity and promote the French language. That too has been confirmed by the Supreme Court.

The federal Government has tangible means to promote French throughout the country. I would therefore urge both governments, the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premier of Quebec, to take every means available to them to make French the language which all Quebecers will spontaneously use in their day to day activities. Still, it seems just as clear to me that, in Quebec as elsewhere, respect must be shown for the minorities' freedom of expression.

Well, by using the notwithstanding clause to deny the rights of Anglophone Quebecers, Mr. Bourassa not only violated the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, but also his own Quebec Charter of Rights. Mr. Bourassa himself admitted it during a press conference held on March 14 when he stated, and I quote: "It is the first time in history of this province that a Quebec Premier did not hesitate to deny individual freedoms to protect and defend the French language.

Mr. Bourassa's decision to allow Quebec's anglophone minority to use its language on indoor signs only, not even everywhere, is a superficial response to a complex question. It is a response not contemplated or permitted within the parameters of the Supreme Court judgment. It is a response which is neither good for Quebec nor good for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Every Member of the House from all sides will know that I said the same thing in the same terms when the Premier of Saskatchewan and the Premier of Alberta in turn refused to recognize the full impact of Supreme Court of Canada decisions. I said it was bad for Canada then. It is bad for Canada now. They have the same duty to protect French minority linguistic rights in their provinces that the Province of Quebec has reciprocally in Quebec.

By his silence and his inaction, the Prime Minister of Canada is an accomplice to a direct attack on the basic fundamental rights of the Quebec anglophone minority. In December I pressed him to come out strongly. You can recall the whole week of the second week of the trade debate, day after day in Question Period this Party pressed the Prime Minister for a firm position on Quebec's reaction to the Supreme Court decision and Bill 178. Because he gave us no reaction, contrast it with what he wrote a few months earlier to Premier Devine of Saskatchewan when the Supreme Court handed down its decision on the Saskatchewan language rights case. I quote the Prime Minister's letter to Premier Devine:

> In its judgment, the Court observed that language rights are rooted in a deeply sensitive Canadian reality and are reflected in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which establishes among our fundamental constitutional values the acknowledgement of English and French as the official languages of this country. Thus I know you will share my view that the issues raised in the Supreme Court decision go well beyond the borders of Saskatchewan. They have implications for all provinces. Indeed, they go to the essence of the Canadian Federation.

That same letter should have been sent to Premier Bourassa in the same terms.

What did the Prime Minister say about Quebec Law 178? Nothing. What did he do about the Quebec law? Nothing. I know that I have heard in certain quarters people ask: "What are you worried about? It is just commercial signs". The Supreme Court of Canada was quite clear. Commercial signs form part of the fundamental right of free expression, and liberty of expression is part of the most essential character of liberty in this country. There is no way that any Government can duck that implication by saying it is just a matter of commercial signs.

Rights are rights, as Clifford Lincoln said in the l'Assemblée Nationale the day he resigned from the Quebec Cabinet. I do not know whether there has ever been in any forum in this country in recent years a better speech than that. This is what he said:

> Rights are rights. There is no such thing as inside rights and outside rights. No such a thing as rights for the tall and rights for the short. No such a thing as rights for the front and rights for the back, or rights for the east and rights for the west. Rights are links in a chain of fundamental value that binds all individuals in a society that must, to be credible, be just and fair.

Well, by using the notwithstanding clause to curtail the rights of the minority, Mr. Bourassa sent out a terrible message of intolerance. How did the Prime Minister of Canada respond, the Prime Minister whose mandate is to protect, promote, develop and saveguard our national unity? He decided to pit regions against regions. He said something in one place while his ministers said something entirely different elsewhere. Moreover, he made all sorts of statements while disregarding the true facts. He simply continued what he had done during the election campaign, Mr. Speaker. For days and weeks on end, the Conservative Leader proclaimed everywhere in Quebec that I was going to tear up the Meech Lake Accord. Well, everyone knew, including the Prime Minister, that I have always supported this Accord against hell and high water from the very beginning. In spite of the enormous difficulties I faced as a political leader because of this position, I never changed my mind, whatever the price I had to pay. Through his despicable behaviour, the Prime Minister was guilty of the worst kind of petty politics which has no place in such an important debate for the unity and future of our country.

Here is another example of his treachery. When the Supreme Court of Canada handed down its decision on Bill 101, the Prime Minister of Canada stated, and I quote:

> The notwithstanding clause is inconsistent with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

That is clear. Meanwhile, the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Bouchard), the then Secretary of State, contended that the use of the notwithstanding clause was, in his own words, "absolutely essential".

Well, the main responsibility of the Secretary of State of Canada is to protect minorities wherever they are in this country. What an outrage! A Secretary of State directly associated with the violation of rights of both our minorities!

Again, the Prime Minister kept quiet. Not a word, not a rebuttal. Later, when we wanted to question the Secretary of State himself, he did not even show up in the House. He simply behaved in a weak and cowardly manner, preferring to hide not to have to account for his action. He tried to use the same strategy for a while yesterday. Finally, I told one of his colleagues: Canada does not operate under a presidential system but a parliamentary system. The Ministers are not here simply to make statements but also to listen. That is important.

That our Prime Minister should have done nothing is all together unacceptable. He should have corrected this situation as soon as possible. Even today, we still do not know the real position of the Government on this issue in spite of the ambiguous rhetoric used in the Speech from the Throne. The fact is, the Prime Minister has absolutely no intention of enforcing the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. So far, he has had all the time in the world and every opportunity to delete the notwithstanding clause from the Constitution. That is a proposition we had made ourselves and which was endorsed at our November 1986 Convention, but the Prime Minister would not even lift a finger. He never raised this issue with his counterparts during the Meech Lake negociations. Mr. Bourassa's offensive on the language issue, concealed with the silent support of the Prime Minister of Canada, triggered a strong reaction throughout the country.

With every passing day, those of us who have supported and still support the concept of Meech Lake meet with growing hostility towards the Accord. And this attitude contrasts with the very nature of this country and its citizens, since Canadians are first and foremost a tolerant people with an inborn sense of justice and equity. This also applies to Quebec Anglophones, whom I have had the privilege and honour of representing for many years in this House.

But, Mr. Speaker, the Anglophones from Quebec also want to protect and to promote the French language and culture. They have chosen to stay in Quebec. They are willing to work and live in French. They want to contribute to the development of the province of Quebec.

There is no need to suppress all the other languages to ensure the influential development of the French language. The vast majority of Quebecers, Francophones as well as Anglophones, show goodwill and an immense potential and a profound desire for cooperation.

Consequently, these feelings must be developed, this goodwill must be built upon.

• (1620)

While this House was not sitting, I had the opportunity to travel across Canada to over half the provinces. I found the mood of the country sour. The Meech Lake Accord is fragile. Quebec's language legislation has revived old feelings of mistrust. The repercussions of the trade deal are starting to be felt in the loss of sovereignty, the unprecedented spate of mergers and takeovers and the growth of economic concentration of power. The Government's high interest rate policy is causing hesitation and hardship. The Minister of Finance has vowed to break election promises. The Government is not enjoying a honeymoon. This Government has already dissipated the good will of Canadians.

We are a tolerant and hard working people. Generally speaking, we are receptive to the needs of others. We are willing to make sacrifices, but for us Canadians, one word is key to our response, and it is "fairness". The solution has to be fair and it has to be seen to be fair.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This Government has pitted region against region, favouring the wealthy and large corporate interests, leaving lower and middle class income Canadians to their own resources. This Government has demonstrated a meanness of spirit, a callous disregard for so many Canadians.

The sole value that this Government has promoted since 1984 has been money and profits and the glory of the free market. The Conservative Party and the Prime Minister see Canada as little more than a mini version of the United States. They ignore the historical, geographical and cultural differences which make us unique.

The Americans were born of revolution. We were created by the joining of the British and French traditions. Their constitution calls for life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Ours calls for peace, order and good Government.

The American frontier has been closed for almost a century. Ours remains open. Our northern frontier is a vital symbol for us. The Americans are a giant melting pot. We are a cultural mosaic. They are unilingual. We enjoy two official languages. Ours is a parliamentary tradition. Theirs is a presidential system with the separation of powers.

We as Canadians are more influenced than any other nation on earth except perhaps the Russians by our geography, by our environment, by our vast expanse of wilderness. Americans put their faith in market forces. We put our faith in the goal of fairness and sharing, and we believe that those goals are better met with a mixed economy.

I believe that over the coming years, as Canadians, we will need to look to ourselves and to our own traditions to respond to the challenges we are going to face. This Government has not made it easier for us, because while we admire our American friends, we do not want to become American. With respect, American answers are not necessarily Canadian answers.

People from across Canada tell me that no matter how they voted, somehow they rediscovered a sense of Canadianism in themselves, that in the election, they had a very difficult decision to make: Was this good for us as a country, was this good for us as Canadians.

I believe that as Canadians, we can and will rediscover the sense of our own identity which defines us as a nation. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we in this Party intend to speak out loudly and often in this Parliament to encourage and promote that rediscovery of our identity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Our agenda for the future includes the close monitoring of the trade deal, especially on the subsidy negotiations, to protect what is left of our sovereignty. Our agenda includes a strategic plan for our economy, a plan which incorporates the need for training and retraining for young people and for those older workers who have been displaced by new technology, a plan which has a national apprenticeship program as a central feature and reflects our firm commitment to education as a key to individual growth, to economic prosperity and to our ability to compete, a plan which recognizes and encourages the research and the development which are critical to our growth and expansion, a plan which will encourage our industries to widen their range of trade into horizons beyond this continent into the Pacific Rim, Europe and the Third World.

Our agenda will also reflect our environmental consciousness as Canadians. A concept of sustainable development must indeed guide our economic and political decision making not only here in Canada but around the world. Our very lives and health depend on it.

The march toward real social justice must not only continue, it must be accelerated. We must forge a new social consensus which will reverse the trend under this Government of increasing the gap between rich and poor, and the fact that the fastest growing group of poor is children is a sad commentary on our failure to come to grips with the reality of poverty in our country.

We must reach our goal of full equality between men and women in all areas of our society starting with the workplace. We must once and for all recognize the legitimate aspirations, the historic aspirations, the inherent rights of the native peoples of this country and move toward self-government.

Every Canadian in every part of Canada must be given an equal chance to participate fully in our country. We must convince even the most sceptical that social justice is not only fair, it is good business. The rights of the individual, for a Liberal, must remain paramount.

We must also, all of us, do our best to rekindle the bonds between our two linguistic communities, to encourage and revive the spirit of harmony and tolerance which is lacking today.

As Canadians, we must do our part to encourage the continued improvement of relations between the superpowers. The recent initiatives on disarmament are very encouraging. There are still, however, numerous regional conflicts, regional problems, around the world claiming, thousands of innocent lives, and Canadians must reclaim our leadership role in the search for peace.

I am confident that the values on which this country was built can survive. It will take great effort, more effort, to realize our vision for our country in view of the unprecedented challenges I have recited. We in this Party are committed to meeting those challenges. We will continue to fight for a more generous, fair and sovereign Canada. It is for this reason that I move, seconded by the Deputy Leader of the Opposition, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), that the following words be added to the Address:

That this House regrets that Your Excellency's advisors continue to show indifference toward the economic and social well-being of lower and middle-income Canadians and contempt for Canadian democratic institutions by dishonouring commitments to the Canadian people with regard to the implementation of the Canada-U.S. trade deal, by abandoning Canadian farm, fisheries and forest workers, by ignoring the dangerous acceleration of concentration of corporate power, by refusing to act properly and firmly to assure public ccess to and the safety of the Canadian transportation system, by abdicating responsibility for health care, housing and senior citizens, by failing to protect the rights of minorities across Canada, by deserting the federal role in research, technological and economic development, and by circumventing the authority of the House of Commons with regard to the expenditure of public moneys and by presenting Parliament a program empty of anything save a clear desire to dismantle the Canadian social safety net while imposing an oppressive and inequitable fiscal regime.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I find the amendment to be in order.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in my view—and I suspect I am by no means unique in this regard—a Speech from the Throne ought to be a call to action to all Canadians to come together and move toward overcoming, if not actually succeeding immediately, our common problems in an equitable fashion. It should be a challenge to a nation to achieve more fairness, a greater sense of justice. It should be clear and balanced in its economics and noble in its goals.

Instead of doing this, the Government has given us a Throne Speech aimed at benefiting only one part of the Canadian community to the detriment of Canadians in all the rest of the country.

I say—and I want to make this clear in my speech as I continue this afternoon—that the Government may well have had, as it did, the organized and financial support of the business community in the election that took place last fall. But it is the people in this country who actually did the voting—including those who voted for the Conservative Party—such as nurses, fishermen, miners, loggers, steel workers, bank clerks, and housewives.

The Government we now have that has produced this Throne Speech was elected therefore by all the people. A government elected by all the people must serve the interests of all the people and not just the minority of the privileged and the powerful.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Just as after the 1984 election, so too this time the Government is producing a hidden agenda. After 1984 we got the trade deal. As all Canadians know, the trade deal was not discussed at all in the 1984 campaign. And during the 1988 election we had promises not only by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) but by candidates who are now elected as Members of Parliament for the Conservative Party, promises on economic growth, on regional development and on tax fairness.

Now we are getting a policy of slashing, cut-backs and tax increases affecting ordinary Canadians in every part of our land. Instead of inspiring Canadians with a commanding call to work for justice, this Throne Speech will do just the opposite. It will remind Canadians of what the Conservative pollsters told them before the last election, something which they have always suspected about the Conservatives: Theirs is a Party where policies and programs are not aimed at benefiting the majority. The Conservative Government is one that carries out all its objectives in the interests of all those who already have too much power and influence in our society.

I can tell you now—and the House has already seen it in the past 24 hours—that New Democratic Party Members of Parliament elected in the fall of 1988—having in particular seen this Throne Speech and having heard in the past weeks what is the real agenda of the Conservative Party—have no intention of sitting back and letting it happen. We are going to oppose with determined vigour every Bill that flows out of this Throne Speech and every budget item that will come in the weeks ahead.

Not only have the Conservatives turned up side down what they campaigned on in so many regions of the country in the fall of 1988. They have ignored one of their most crucial commitments which some of us thought at least they might take some steps toward resolving. During the election campaign and after, in the debates that took place here in the House of Commons during the Christmas period, the Government promised—in terms of the few negative consequences, which it acknowledged might flow from the great trade deal in terms of certain sectors of the economy—that it would produce a compensatory program to deal with the men and women who will be laid off in certain sectors and that it would deal with the communities so affected.

The Prime Minister, as is his wont, characterizes the approach of the Government in terms of such words as "generous" and "massive". "Massive adjustment program" and "a generous program" were also used. Then, with typical understatement, the Prime Minister said that it would be "the finest program" that exists anywhere in the world in terms of aiding the men and women who would have inflicted upon them, as a consequence of a deal against which most Canadians voted, an economic program that forced them out of a job. We now know that the Government has no intention of doing that.

[Translation]

Instead of keeping its promises, the Government is examining the totally inadequate recommendations made by the Grandpré Commission. Before and during the election, business lobbyists launched an aggressive campaign to promote free trade with the Americans and support the Conservative Party. The interests of Canadian workers have been ignored so that the Government can meet the agenda set by his friends in the business world.

[English]

Since the election we have seen coming into being what clearly members of the business community had in mind when they gave support to the Conservatives in that election, and specifically for the trade deal.

In the period leading up to the Throne Speech, from speeches, from selected press releases of Ministers of the Crown, and from public comments and statements made by representatives of the business community all across the land, we have seen that the Conservatives and the business community together have one narrowly focused agenda. What they have done is to focus solely on substantial cuts to government spending and on their joint desire to impose a massive regressive new sales tax on the people of Canada. They are not going to get away with either one.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I wish to spend a minute to show that this is not simply rhetoric or a predetermined attitude that we have as a social democratic party that these results would inevitably have occurred. Sometimes we are surprised. It would have been nice to have been surprised and not to have seen the co-ordinated attack on the people of Canada—because that is the way I wish to put it—by the business lobby and the Conservative Government in recent weeks.

The Business Council on National Issues, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the C.D. Howe Institute, and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. All have had one message in their submissions to the Government in recent weeks, and in their calculated release of this information to the public of Canada in the period leading up to the Throne Speech. The message was clear: There had to be cut-backs in the public sector in general and on social programs in particular.

Members of the business community would like to convince the people of Canada that their agenda is somewhat different from that. They would like us to believe that what they are really concerned about, and exclusively concerned about, is the deficit. I do not believe for a minute that this is the case. I believe that some of them do have a concern with the deficit, and that is their priority. It is not ours.

However, there should be no illusion in our type of society—whether it is here in Canada, in western Europe, or in the United States of America—that there is an ongoing battle of power in society between those who already have substantial amounts in our economic system and the rest of the general population. That battle was being openly waged prior to the Throne Speech, and the business community saw, as a perfect instrument for gaining power, maintaining it, and using it to advantage, the Conservative Party of Canada.

If members of the business community were allegedly only concerned about the deficit, why did they not make some different proposals from the ones that they did? Why is it that they only focused on social programs and the need, to use their terms, for a "reformed" sales tax? Sales tax is the most regressive form of taxation in any society. Did members of those business groups that I have listed come forward and say: "Let us put an end to all those economically ineffective but lucrative programs that benefit us?"

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Broadbent: That would have saved some drain on the deficit. However, they did not do that. Did they come forward and propose a minimum tax on all corporations that are profitable? This tax already exists not only in the United States of America, but also in many other industrial countries in the world? Did they do that?

Some Hon. Members: No, No!

Mr. Broadbent: The absence of such a minimum tax in Canada is also a drain on the deficit. If they were really concerned about the deficit, why did they not propose such a tax?

As my colleague, has just said, did the business community come forward and say: "My goodness, there are over $30 billion in deferred taxes out there? This is shocking. What a drain on the deficit that is. This must be stopped." Collecting such taxes would help bring down the deficit that the business community is allegedly concerned about. But no, Mr. Speaker, they did not say a word about the deferred taxes.

That is the priority of members of the business community. They are not the politicians, and that is their right in a free society. However, we should not have any illusions about what they are up to, and the net affects of such a policy. The people I hold responsible are not the private citizens in the business community. I hold responsible the Conservative politicians who form the Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The business community and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) have not talked about these drains on the deficit, or about these overwhelmingly ineffective economic devices that are remarkably advantageous to a certain group and, from the point of view of equity, should be radically reformed. The Minister of Finance and the business community did not talk about these at all. All they talked about was the need to have cut-backs in social programs, such as the unemployment insurance scheme or such as putting an end to universality of family allowances and cutting regional programs that are absolutely essential to average and poor families in Canada.

I remind the Conservatives who were elected that it is the average families and poor families who make up the majority of Canadians, and just once the Government should listen to a majority instead of a minority.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Yesterday I got up out of bed and turned on the CBC. I believe I was listening to a NABET announcer, however I am not sure. I heard the news yesterday morning. I heard that wonderful voice of the Minister of Finance talking from Washington, which is singularly appropriate. Michael has a tough time deciding whether he is in Ottawa or Washington. It does not make a lot of difference to him. What he was saying surprised me. One of the things about the Minister of Finance, and I will be frank, is that he is normally straightforward. If he had written the Throne Speech, at least we would have got the goods straight instead of all this malarkey. We will get it straight—even if we do not like it—when we see the Budget in a few weeks.

The Minister of Finance stated that he could accept a levelling off, a turning down of the economy at this time. That is alarming, Mr. Speaker, because his argument was that the economy is overheated and as Minister of Finance he would not be unhappy to see some cooling off. We in the New Democratic Party say just the opposite at this time. Whatever Michael Wilson may think, most parts of this country have not fully recovered from the recession that began in the early 1980s. We do not say that it is time to turn down the economy. We still need economic growth in this country.

• (1650)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: At a time when we have more than a million men and women unemployed, it is totally irresponsible for a Minister of Finance to say he can willingly accept a downturn in the economy. We need an economic policy of growth that puts its emphasis on regional development and a tax fairness phased in over the next few years whose ultimate goal is not virtual full employment in only one part of Canada but virtual full employment from coast to coast.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We believe, as has been achieved elsewhere in this world by social democratic Governments, that we can have an approach to the economy which does not accept that we must have a trade off between unemployment and inflation. We believe that if we have the right mix of policies, of taxes and interest rates, of getting the private sector and the public sector to work together, we could achieve the goals I have just alluded to.

The growing inequity in our taxation system is flagrant. Because we have no minimum income tax for profitable corporations, the Treasury loses nearly $1 billion a year. Because large profitable corporations do not pay their fair share of income tax, Canadian families are paying more than their share.

Instead of eliminating this inequity, the Conservatives expect to squeeze billions more out of Canadian families by introducing their new regressive sales tax. Year after year, the Auditor General points out that corporations owe billions of dollars in differed income tax. The total amount is now over $30 billion, most of which will never be paid.

The speech from the Throne contains no indication that the next Budget will oblige large corporations to pay their share.

Mr. Speaker, there are countries where corporations do pay their share, and it is high time corporations here in Canada did as well.

Mr. Speaker, to promote economic growth, it is generally desirable to promote competition. The Conservatives often talk about the importance of being competitive. However, Canada has the highest rate of corporate concentration among industrialized countries. Our economy is becoming increasingly concentrated. Nine families own 46 per cent of the total share-value of the 300 most important companies quoted on the Toronto Stock Exchange.

Recently, Canadian consumers and Canadian workers who were directly affected could do nothing about the purchase of Wardair by Canadian, the Molson and Carling merger, Imperial Oil's purchase of Texaco Canada and the takeover of Consolidated Bathurst by a Chicago company. Because of the investment interest deduction, these recent mergers will cost the Treasury millions of dollars.

Instead of making decisions to remedy this situation, the minister responsible gave his blessing. Instead of changing the tax system that encourages this process, the Conservatives want to cut the budget for social programs.

[English]

What about interest rates? Interest rates stand today in the neighbourhood of 13 per cent. As our critic for financial matters pointed out in the House yesterday, real interest rates are already as high as they were at the highest peak during the Liberal's period in office at the beginning of the 1980s. At that time, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the present Minister of Finance when they were in opposition said that this was an horrendous and unacceptable situation. It was unacceptable then with a Liberal Government, and it is unacceptable now with a Conservative Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Such interest rates are terrible for small businesses, bad for men and women and families who want to buy homes or renew mortgages, terrible for farmers across Canada, particularly those on the Prairies where in the last few years almost nothing has gone in the right direction. Now these groups are being hit with record levels of interest rates once again.

A Government preoccupied with the issue of the deficit is well aware that for each percentage point rise in the interest rate, debt charges to the people of Canada increase by $1.5 billion. The difference in the actual interest rate and the rate projected by the Government in its 1988 Budget, if sustained for one year alone, will add a whopping $7.9 billion to the deficit for which the people of Canada will have to pay.

The Minister of Finance was in Washington at a meeting of the G-7. I do not want to pretend that the Canadian Government or any other Government could act in complete isolation from what is going on in the industrial world in terms of interest rate policy. But there is some room for freedom, and we have not exercised that. In terms of our historical relationship between Canada and the United States, we could still have lower interest rates than we now have.

There are so many Conservative Governments now in the industrial world that when the G-7 gets together it is like a meeting of the Albany Club; It is the Conservatives gathered together on a world-wide basis, regrettably with only one or two exceptions. The Government ought to be concerned about the negative effects of high interest rates in the regions outside southern Ontario and southern Quebec.

At the G-7 level, instead of automatically assuming a very conservative ideology on interest rates, there should be a determined effort by Ministers of Finance for all the industrial countries to understand what happened in the early 1980s. At that time, the same industrial countries began to increase interest rates to head off inflation. If we do that long enough, if we put millions of workers out of work, which is exactly what happened in Western Europe and North America, instead of healing a sick economy we kill a patient. This process did curtail inflation, but at untold and unacceptable costs in the life experience of millions of people here in Canada and abroad.

Mr. Broadbent: What our Minister of Finance ought to be doing at the G–7 meeting is trying to get the other countries there to understand the lessons from the early 1980s and to make sure that the same errors are not repeated with this lock-step high interest rate policy going into the 1990s.

The Government has been indifferent to the consequences of its economic policy, particularly on the regions of the country. It has been particularly indifferent to the fact that the majority of the provinces have not got back to where they were in the pre–1981 period in terms of unemployment. We in this Party believe—and this goes to the root in so many ways of what it means to be a social democrat—that for the large majority of people, men and women, and clearly it now is with the majority of women in the labour force outside the home, that the major source of human contentment comes from having a job. We cannot remain indifferent to the persistent high unemployment reality. Thus we say to the Government: instead of what it is doing in attacking the Unemployment Insurance Program in this Throne Speech it ought to be attacking unemployment. That is where the problem is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I am making an argument that if there is the right mix of policies one can deal with inflation, the need for more jobs and the problem of debt. I point out that every time the level of unemployment drops by one percentage point there is added some $2 billion to the Treasury because men and women are paying taxes instead of collecting unemployment insurance and companies, most of them, are also paying taxes.

We in this Party believe that men and women in Atlantic Canada, in northern Ontario and in northern Quebec, in the Prairies and in British Columbia ought to have the human right to get a job for its own sake. If they cannot do that then those of us who have political power are ultimately responsible. We believe it is important for its own right. But I also want to say as a Canadian leading a national Party that this country of ours cannot persist with a kind of two Canada's policy. We cannot persist in this country of ours to accept that there can be almost full employment in central Canada but permanent high levels of unemployment outside central Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It is important for its own right but it is also important for something called national unity. If we want to avoid irrational conflict, if we want to promote a sense of the Canadian family, then we have to promote a sense of equality of opportunity for all members of the Canadian family.

In terms of the regional concerns that any national Government of this country ought to have, both before and during the recent election the trade deal as it was discussed by myself and by my colleagues had as one of its core elements a negative impact on regional development policies. I say that because for those of us who believe in a mixed economy, serious regional development policies involve government action. Government action and government subsidies are regarded in that culture to the south of us as being unacceptable. They are not unacceptable to us. We accept them as desirable in principle. If we want to get a certain kind of industry going, perhaps in Alberta or in New Brunswick, because initially it may not be able to compete with southern Ontario, California or some other place, then it has to be given a kick-start to get it under way, as it was built in one part of Canada by a high tariff policy for so many years. To get it under way in certain parts of Canada, we say on principle that government involvement and government intervention are desirable.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Because of the cultural differences between the United States of America and Canada where profoundly different historical patterns have developed, we have said that the trade deal definition of what would constitute a subsidy inevitably would impact negatively on our capacity to have our kind of regional development policy. This was pooh-poohed by the Prime Minister before the election and during the election. It was pooh-poohed by principal spokespersons for the business community when I raised it during the course of the election. We were told not to worry about it.

We have seen the consequence already, after the deal was signed, after we got things in place in this country, after the Conservative Government did the bidding of U.S. interests. What did we see? In Cape Breton we saw the Sydney Steel Corporation being singled out by the United States. Why? It was because it receives government assistance. For the American tradition this is an unacceptable subsidy.

We have seen the same attitudes being expressed in terms of processing our fish in this country for export. For God's sake, what kind of freedom does one have as a nation—which wants to develop its own resources—if it does not retain the right to finish to whatever level of processing a product in its own country before it is exported? Under this deal now the Americans are taking actions that could completely undermine the tradition that we want to add to in this Party, a tradition of practical and serious regional development policies which do indeed involve government participation with the private sector.

I want to say about this particular aspect of the trade deal that discussions are going on now between Canada and the United States on what constitutes a subsidy, or an appropriate subsidy. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that all the members of the New Democratic Party caucus, no matter from where they come, have an interest in Canada as a whole. We are going to do everything we can to assure that at least the traditional Canadian definition of what constitutes an appropriate and acceptable definition of regional development policy will remain in Canada.

On the same issue of regional fairness in this country, some of us were not entirely surprised when in the past 10 days we heard that the Government froze the discussions that were going on with the provinces concerning regional development policy. Suddenly, they all came to a halt. We know why. What the Government is going to do is put a freeze on funds that were traditionally going out in recent years in adequate amounts to the provinces for regional development. We will see the final results of this, of course, when we see the Budget of the Minister of Finance.

The Government's adherence to the simplistic and self-serving big business agenda is also seen very clearly in its response to the problems of VIA Rail. VIA Rail, the passenger aspect of rail transportation in our country, has its equivalents in every successful industrial country in western Europe. It has its equivalent now in the United States, where even the United States has put public capital into Amtrak to make sure it works.

A few years ago the Conservatives blasted the Liberals at the time—and I was amused to hear the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) say today that the Conservatives are going to be doing some wicked things about VIA Rail. I was here in 1980, and I say to the Leader of the Opposition that it was the Liberals who cut VIA Rail first, not the Conservatives. The present Leader of the Opposition is saying that he was not here.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is right. You were making a good speech.

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the Leader of the Opposition that if he was not here then, he may not be here in a short period of time either, and the Liberal Party is the Liberal Party. It said one thing when it was in power and another thing after.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to say not only to the Leader of the Opposition, who agrees right now with the position that we are taking on VIA Rail, but to others that this is important. It is important in most regions of Canada including where there are many Conservative seats. I am sure they are following with interest the debate on VIA Rail. It is an essential public service that can be made profitable.

• (1710)

I have had occasion, with my caucus colleagues, to meet representatives of Atlantic Canada today about VIA Rail. I pointed out to them that in my constituency of Oshawa, in the automotive sector for passenger travel, the company called General Motors put $2 billion of investment into one little community. General Motors does not expect to have a return within weeks or within months on that investment. General Motors plans years down the road to get a return on that investment. We say that there is only one group in our society that will make sure that VIA Rail will pay off in the future, and that is the people of Canada. Only the people of Canada through the Government of Canada can put money into VIA Rail to make it exciting and a much better service. It is good now, but the service could be much better, and the people of Canada through the Government of Canada should be doing that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I say to some of the Conservatives here today who may have a bit of interest in this issue that one of the new bits of information I got from listening to people today was to learn Bombardier, a Canadian company, is currently supplying new equipment to Amtrak in the United States. It is not only supplying equipment to make Amtrak better, but it is doing so with subsidies from the Canadian Government through the Export Development Corporation.

Canadian taxpayers are helping Bombardier sell equipment to make Amtrak better for American passengers. I say to the Conservative Government: "If you can subsidize rail service in the United States, why can't you do it even more effectively here in Canada?"

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: As I said, Mr. Speaker, in a different context instead of derailing VIA Rail, why does the Government not simply sink its nuclear submarine policy?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: There are a couple of other priorities that we in this Party believe that this Government should be addressing in a much more serious way which have either been inadequately dealt with or ignored. One of these I want to mention is child care. The policy announced by the Government prior to the last election concerned every person working in the field—man, woman, easterner, westerner, Quebecois.

Quebecers or citizens of another region.

[English]

Everyone who knew something about child care condemned the program. There was not an expert that I talked to who thought it was effective. It seemed merely to be a politically expedient scheme so the Conservatives could say they were going to do something about child care. It was very regressive, as we pointed out at the time. It was to provide less money for new child care spaces than was already in the works under existing programs.

I had hoped that at least in this area of social policy the Government of Canada would have been responding to the real needs of our people and would have come back and said: "We are going to bring in child care. We are going to produce a child care program that is going to be universally accessible, that is going to be adequate for our children, and that is going to be available at a reasonable cost, at a rate that all people who need it can afford". That is what they should have been doing.

I want to say, in particular as a man, that it is important for future families that child care be available and that it meet the real needs of our children, as they are the ones who are affected by this. The family structure is so profoundly changed from the days when I grew up. At some point one hopes men and women will share the parental burden on an equal basis, but we are kidding ourselves if we do not understand the real problem today. In terms of psychological requirement if I can put it that way, women want to work. Most of them are now outside the home. For culturally induced reasons they have feelings, much more profound than those of us of the male sex, in that they need to look after children.

We should understand that, if we really believe that a woman ought to have a real choice not just an abstract choice to stay at home, which is a desirable and legitimate choice. If a woman really wants to get out and work and feel that her children are going to be adequately looked after, we need an adequate child care program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, if you look at the Conservative Throne Speech and at all the statements that were made by the Ministers before it was presented, and what surely we are going to be getting from the Minister of Finance when he brings down his Budget, you will see that it means only one thing, that the persistent high levels of unemployment will remain and probably get worse. There will be an increase, not a reduction, in corporate concentration. There will be an exacerbation, not a reduction in regional tension. There will be cuts to social programs like unemployment insurance. There will be more money for the wealthy and less for the poor, greater benefits for large corporations and less for the smaller.

This need not be the case. It must not be the case and it would not be the case if we had a New Democratic Party Government in Canada. I can tell you that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: What we need is imaginative leadership which understands that economic policy must transcend the narrow priorities of one part of the Canadian community. With the right mix of policies, as I have said, on interest rates, on taxes, on investment in the private and public sector, with anti-inflation policies that are directed at certain regions when inflation occurs there, we can build the kind of Canada that would go way beyond the dreams of those who currently hold power in this Parliament.

I want now to say something about the environment, Mr. Speaker.

We have inherited one of the most beautiful countries on this planet. Travelling from Newfoundland to Vancouver, from Whitehorse to Quebec City in any season is always very pleasant. For too long we have ravaged the beauty of our country and threatened the heritage of future generations with disappearance.

As the Brundtland Commission has shown, as television reports have illustrated, as all children now know, the problem of the environment, from the forests of Brazil to the ozone layer, is global. The future of the human race depends on concerted, well-chosen international political action. All governments must commit themselves to sustainable economic development and respect for our environment. Yes, the problem is global, but to obtain concrete results, each country must act on its own territory. Otherwise, this noble objective will become another overlooked cliché!

Consider the response of the Government to the oil spill almost two weeks ago and to another one off the west coast of Vancouver Island three months ago. We have seen a Government that has learned all the right clichés.

During the last election campaign I was proud of my Party which had, months before the election, laid out serious proposals on the environment. We were proud to take that to the people of Canada in the fall of 1988. Suddenly the Government, no doubt after it did its polling, found that the people of Canada were light years ahead of it on the environment. It began to talk about the environment during the election. The new Minister has talked about the environment since. Canadians are fed up with talk. They want to see some concrete action from the Government on the question of the environment.

Nothing was so indicative of its seeming opaqueness on the subject as the Minister's reply in the House today. The people of Vancouver Island are still working on a spill that took place three months ago. First, the Minister even refused to answer the question. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) acted as if everything was fine, nothing needed to be done and the Government was not responsible for the fiasco three months ago.

We believe there should be a royal commission that could act quickly and thoroughly on this subject. There are problems now, but if we do not take corrective action there will be problems in the future and the Government will be held responsible. In that context, some of the specific proposals I want to put forward now are drafted in such a way that we put legal obligations on the Government rather than depend simply on political will.

The Parliament of Canada must take the following action during the next session.

First, pass a charter of environmental rights that would give citizens access to all environmental information and the right to sue governments on environmental matters.

Show that we are as concerned about the environment as we are about property by including in the Criminal Code penalties for serious environmental infractions.

Pass a law requiring Cabinet to make all its economic decisions comply with the principle of sustainable development.

This is absolutely necessary to give real meaning to what the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Environment have said about sustainable development.

Canadian legislation must be clear and override the trade agreement, which fundamentally contradicts the principle of sustainable development.

From now on, the protection of our land, our air, our water and our trees must not be negotiable. That is our policy.

[English]

I want to turn now to foreign policy. There has been what can only be described as the most serious absence of leadership by the Government on foreign policy issues. It is either doing nothing, doing it too late, or the Prime Minister is saying one thing while the Secretary of State for External Affairs is saying another.

The Government was the last representative of a country in the western world to recognize that Chairman Arafat had something positive, necessary and long overdue to say in his statements in Algiers and Geneva. The situation in the Middle East is terribly complex. I will not presume to be an expert on it, but some of us have followed it carefully and know that some of the conditions which have to be met include Palestinian rights and the right of Israel to exist. Israel is a good friend of Canada and there is no change in that policy. But it is totally unacceptable to the people of Canada for Canada to lag so far behind in accepting change when it has taken place in that part of the world.

I said on other occasions that the Prime Minister at one point showed leadership in the Commonwealth on the South African issue. I heard from others who were at the meeting that on one important occasion the Prime Minister took on the Prime Minister of Great Britain in a commendable fashion in the interest of the black majority of South Africa. Again, the Government seems to have taken a fashionable approach to international politics as it has done with other issues.

What seems to have been the policy a few years ago has been dropped by the Government. The leadership that was forthcoming then has been abandoned because the Government has refused to follow through on the Prime Minister's 1985 commitment at the United Nations to produce a comprehensive set of sanctions against South Africa, as we ought to have in place.

Let us turn to East-West relations. Beyond any question, in terms of its ultimate impact on Canada and the world, the relationship between the Soviet Bloc and Western Bloc is by far the most important.

In saying this, I may obviously and clearly be wrong in my judgment, but if one looks at the history of the 20th century, apart from the abomination of the Second World War, two globally significant people in terms of their impact on history have emerged. One of them was Lenin, most of whose consequences I frankly suggest were negative, whatever the aspirations. When Lenin arrived at the Finland station in the early part of this century, history in a global sense began to move in one direction.

The other man of great and world significance who has come on the scene—and we must understand that he is trying to undo so much that has been wrong—is Mr. Gorbachev of the Soviet Union. We should understand that and give support to those remarkable reforms that have been taking place.

I ask all Members of the House, particularly those in the Government of Canada, to think about the changes that have been made in the last three years by this remarkable man and the obviously progressive people with him. Let us consider the unilateral action that has been taken by the Soviet Union, such as on site inspection in the Soviet Union.

I recall talking to Mr. Gorbachev when he was here before he became the head of his Party. The issue of on site inspection in the Soviet Union was discussed. He intimated in conversation that it may happen. It was never accepted before. There is now on site inspection in the Soviet Union.

There is the unilateral withdrawal from Afghanistan, uncensored news reports, the travels of Sakharov and Bonner. There is the permission of critical theatre and printing. There is even an open competition for election, albeit within a one-Party system, but we will watch and see what happens with that.

There have been remarkable changes in that society in the last few years, and I repeat that they were unilateral. I also say on behalf not only of my colleagues, but, I am sure, of progressive and humane people in Canada and all over the world, that they were changes that were overdue and desirable. But what remarkable tenacity and courage must have been required by a number of people in that very different society from ours who launched them. So I am saying, therefore, if these changes are going on in a country that will have a major impact on the world, whether we like it or not, Canada should not be ignoring these initiatives. We should be responding by taking initiatives of our own as a country.

Surely we must understand in the West that if Mr. Gorbachev and what he stands for fails, the situation will not get better, it will get worse, and we will see or could see the return of the Cold War and all that that could mean, first and foremost for the people of the Soviet Union themselves, but also for us in terms of international politics.

This move toward democracy in the Soviet Union is important to men and women in the Soviet Union, important to men and women in the Baltic states, important to the people of East Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia and Hungary. It is important to men and women all over the world.

We have a role to play. It is a minor role, but it should not be dismissed. We have exercised that role in the past and surely we should be doing it now. I ask on behalf of the people of Canada, where is the Canadian voice?

A current discussion within NATO, for example, has Margaret Thatcher wanting to modernize nuclear weapons. Chancellor Kohl of West Germany is undecided, but the Prime Minister of Norway and the head of the Government in Spain are opposed and are openly saying that they should not be modernized. I say that instead of sitting back and watching the debate take place between Margaret Thatcher on one hand and Mrs. Brundtland on the other, the Prime Minister of Canada should make our position clear, and we should say that we are against the modernization of nuclear weapons.

There are other things that we can do to complement in part what I have said already are the unilateral actions by the Soviet Union. We can get rid of that decision to build nuclear submarines that is economically foolish and irresponsible in terms of world peace. We should say no to that right away. We should also put an end to the tests of air-launched Cruise missiles.

Again, I talked about that particular issue with Mr. Gorbachev when he was in this country, and he was quite candid in what he had to say. If we want to move in a sensible direction there, we should say we will put an end to tests in Canada. And then we could say to the Soviets, who are our northern neighbours: Let us initially have a joint treaty whereby they will not hold any tests and we will not hold any tests, and let us develop verification procedures together, because the Cruise field is complex. Let us try that, and then we could make it the basis, perhaps, of a global test. We are their northern neighbour. We have access. We have a role to play and that would be a constructive initiative. It would be something useful. I again say to the Prime Minister: "Get out and do it".

I also say that we should take seriously, instead of dismissing cynically, what Mr. Gorbachev had to say about the Arctic. We should test him on the seriousness of his proposals by talking about the Kola Peninsula and see just how seriously they are prepared to make changes in that part of the world.

In this context, I want to say that these kinds of steps taken by a Canadian leader ought not to be seen, as is so often suggested by Conservatives, as anti-American. The low level of argumentation that has to be dealt with is almost embarrassing. Anyway, look at Mr. Pearson, a Canadian Prime Minister, not of my Party, obviously. He incurred the wrath of Lyndon Johnson at one time on Vietnam. Pierre Trudeau's disarmament moves annoyed Ronald Reagan. Mr. Diefenbaker, I remember at one time, did the same thing about Bomarc missiles.

I say to our Prime Minister that these Canadians did not do it because they were anti-American or to annoy the Americans. They did it because they were interested in making some realistic Canadian contribution to peace, and they stood up as independent Canadians and understood that the United States is a different country and that we can make our own polices.

I want to conclude my remarks in this vein by saying to the Prime Minister, certainly go to Moscow. Go without illusions, but understand that the Soviet Union has changed. Go there, speak up for freedom, speak up for disarmament, speak up for global peace. Do this and you will have every New Democrat, every Liberal, every Canadian in the country, I am sure, behind you, but go, Mr. Prime Minister, and do those things.

I want to conclude by saying that Governments, in my view, should be acting at home and abroad, in domestic and foreign policy, to promote the confidence and the security of the people of Canada. Now is the time to use the instruments of government to meet the needs of Canadians for jobs, for child care, for safe transportation, for environmental protection, and for regional fairness. Now is the time for lower interest rates, strong regional development programs and corporate tax reform. Now is the time to promote greater fairness and equality within Canada and peace and disarmament in the world at large. Now is the time to do our part, not complacently to leave Canada as it is but to see and achieve what Canada might become.

Having said that, I want to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis):

> That the amendment be amended by adding the following words: "And specifically regrets the failure of the Government to protect the environment through the criminalization of environmental offences and thorough review of the environmental impact of government initiatives: to establish a national child care program with national objectives of care; to provide a coherent, well-articulated foreign policy for Canada at a time when leadership is required; to put the needs of ordinary Canadians ahead of those of its corporate friends; to make sure that wealthy Canadian corporations and individuals carry their fair share of the tax burden; to provide assistance to workers dislocated by the trade deal and/or corporate restructuring; to meet the needs of Canada's regions; or to commit itself to a policy of full employment for all Canadians; and finally to ameliorate the harm caused to Canadian families and regions through its high interest policy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I find the subamendment to be in order.

ORDER IN COUNCIL

TABLING OF APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table, in both official languages, a number of Order in Council appointments which were made by the Government in early 1989. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 110(1), these are deemed referred to the appropriate Standing Committees, a list of which is attached.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet, pursuant to Section 61 of the Canadian Human Rights Act, I wish to table copies of the 1988 annual report of the Canadian Human Rights Commission.

CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops) moved for leave to introduce Bill C–202, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (cattle rustling and range cattle).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask leave of the House to introduce a private Member's Bill regarding cattle rustling. In many parts of Canada, hundreds of head of cattle are lost or disappear each year, and the police are well aware that a number of these cattle are lost because of cattle rustlers. While there has been a traditional way of dealing with this problem, it is no longer accepted in our country. This private Member's Bill would at least make the penalties severe enough to hopefully deter people from pursuing this very unscrupulous practice.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie) moved for leave to introduce Bill C–203, an Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act (food irradiation).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my Bill is to amend the Food and Drugs Act. It would have the effect of placing a moratorium on the irradiation of foods in Canada and on the export of food irradiation equipment.

It would also put into effect a study to look into the whole aspect of food irradiation and would require a report to the House of Commons before any further action takes place on this important topic.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

LISTING OF MEMBERS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there have been the usual consultations with Members of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party. I move:

> That a committee be appointed to prepare and report in accordance with Standing order 104 and 113, lists of Members to compose the Standing, Legislative and Joint Committees of this House; and

Order Paper Questions

That the committee be composed of: Messrs. Boudria, Charest, Cooper, Gauthier, Hawkes, Layton and Murphy.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition now that the House of Commons is sitting. It has been duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions.

In their petition Canadians have expressed concern with the high unemployment rate in Canada expressing the fact that it is one of the highest unemployment rates of the western industrialized nations and, whereas, unemployment continues to be higher than it was for all but two years between 1946 and 1981 and whereas all Canadians should have the right to meaningful employment, the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to establish full employment as its first priority.

OBSERVANCE OF SABBATH

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition on behalf of constituents in my riding of the City of Nepean. This has been approved pursuant to Standing Order 136.

Whereas it is the desire of Christians throughout the world to safeguard the sanctity of the Christian Sabbath, the Lord's Day, and whereas we sincerely believe the only way to achieve the above objective is through uniform legislation at the national level of all Christian countries and whereas as Christians are tolerant and respectful of the legitimate wishes of other faiths, Jewish, Muslim and Hindu to observe the Sabbath, therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to consider our concerns regarding the above proposed and hopefully pass Sabbath observance legislation that is fair and just for everyone.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. Further petitions?

PROCLAMATION OF NON-SMOKER'S HEALTH ACT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition from a number of residents of Canada concerning the Non-Smokers Health Bill and the fact that the Government has not proclaimed this Act. The petitioners state that whereas environmental tobacco smoke is injurious to the health of Canadians working in a smoking environment and to Canadians travelling in smoke contaminated common carriers, and whereas in recognition of this Parliament which passed a Non-Smokers Health Act in June, 1988 which provided protection from environmental tobacco smoke to federally regulated workers and travellers, and whereas the Government of Canada has failed to proclaim and enforce this Act, therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to request the Government of Canada to proclaim and enforce the Non-Smokers Health Act.

VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour today to present a petition on behalf of a number of Canadians pursuant to Standing Order 36, which petition has been approved by the Clerk of Petitions.

This is a petition concerning Via Rail. Whereas rail transportation can be an effective and efficient means of public transportation and, whereas passenger rail service has played an important role in the establishment of Canada and the development of a Canadian identity, and whereas subsidies required by rail transit are not out disproportionate to subsidies required for road or air transit and wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to encourage and assist Via Rail to expand its operations and become a more efficient and widely used form of public transportation.

REQUEST THAT NUCLEAR SUBMARINE FUNDS GO TO MEDICAL RESEARCH

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions to present on behalf of constituents of Hochelaga—Maisonneuve, the South Shore, Bourassa, Laval, Longueuil and Montreal West. All those people are asking the Conservative Government to renounce its commitment to build nuclear-powered submarines and to spend that money instead on health, to help solve problems at the hospital level, as well as on research on AIDS, cancer and other illnesses.

The House resumed from Wednesday, April 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for an address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her speech at the opening of the Session; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Turner, Vancouver Quadra (p. 131) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Broadbent (p. 140).

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada have again entrusted to the Progressive Conservative Party the leadership of their Government. They have given us a full mandate to govern and we intend to do so firmly, effectively and well on behalf of all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: This week, as in 1984 and again in 1986, the Speech from the Throne was laid before Parliament and it contained our vision of Canada's future. As before, we have set ourselves a task I think appropriate to the times. Our agenda in the first mandate was ambitious. Canada was at that time feeling the winds of change. It needed a program to channel its energy and chart its course, and that, with the imperfections that result in a democratic institution from governing, is what we tried to do and in large measure I believe that is what we accomplished.

Now in 1989 Canada once more looks to the future and we do so with great anticipation. The Government's vision for this mandate builds on the achievements of the first. It is a big vision for a big country, a challenge to a land of limitless promise.

[Translation]

And, as the election made clear, it is a vision shared by Francophones and Anglophones, by men and women, by the first Canadians and by the newest Canadians, by farmers and fishermen, labourers and professionals, by Canadians from all walks of life and all regions who told the Canadian Government: Go right ahead! We support your program for economic recovery and national reconciliation. You did a good job during your first mandate, so let's see you do it again for a second one!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mulroney: It is a vision of a flourishing land, respected abroad, competitive in commerce, caring and compassionate at home, a land tolerant of differences, conscious of its responsibilities, above all to its natural heritage, and united in the uniqueness of its traditions. It is a vision for a nation that is open to the world and to the opportunities this openess presents. It is a vision for a nation that expects its government to govern, and to be willing to make the difficult decisions that are sometimes necessary. Our nation understands that its continued prosperity is not assured without wisdom in setting public policy. Our potential can be realized if we rely on our strengths, to build and create, and earn what we wish to enjoy.

Our government came to office in September of 1984, following a period of great economic difficulty and internal division that was painful for all Canadians. Federal–Provincial relations were marked by confrontation. The Constitution had been repatriated without the agreement of the government of Quebec. Western provinces deeply resented the government of Canada's unilateral interventions in the energy field. The Atlantic provinces were frustrated with the government's approach to offshore energy management, and with the lack of progress in regional economic development. The economy was weak, with excessively high inflation and unemployment rates.

[English]

Perversely, Mr. Speaker, federal Government policies acted as obstacles to economic recovery, both by inhibiting investment and over-regulating the private sector. The federal Government's own fiscal situation represented a fundamental impediment to sustained economic prosperity. In fact, by 1984 the federal deficit was at an unprecedented level and growing at a rate which was unsustainable and would ultimately ruin us.

In these circumstances the Government devoted considerable effort to rebuilding the national and economic foundations of Canada. With regard to the Meech Lake Accord, I salute the leaders of the other political parties in this Chamber for their leadership on the sensitive national issue—the Meech Lake Accord took the first critical steps with regard to restoring Quebec to the constitutional fold.

Destructive energy policies that had ravaged western Canada so unfairly for so long were dismantled, and new energy accords were reached in the West, the North, and the Atlantic region.

New approaches to regional development were implemented and critical resource sectors such as energy and agriculture were assured of greater equity. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I sit next to the Minister of Agriculture—the Minister of other things as well, it all depends on the day—I sit next to a Minister of Agriculture whose Department was responsible, in four years, for increasing aid to farmers in Canada by an amount in excess of 400 per cent. That is a commitment to the farmers of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The degree of Government intervention in the economy was considerably reduced. Crown Corporations, which no longer served a public policy role, were privatized. Corporate and personal income tax systems were reformed in an equitable manner to meet the needs of a modern and competitive economy.

Legislation was passed which improved substantially the economic framework within which individual Canadians and Canadian companies were called on to operate on an individual basis and to become more competitive with their counterparts both in the United States and around the world.

In a large measure, these initiatives resulted in the country's strong economic performance. After years of languishing at the bottom of the heap in terms of productivity gains, since 1985 Canada has made very solid improvements. Last week this did not receive eight column headline attention, but it should have. It is a most significant indicator of the national well-being in terms of our capacity to grow, to sell, and to create jobs. Last week Statistics Canada revealed that in 1988 Canadian labour productivity showed an impressive improvement of 2.9 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Productivity is a dull, unglamorous thing that does not attract much attention from our friends in the Opposition. All it has to do with is the well-being of Canada and the future of jobs for our youth. If it does not mean much to some, it means a great deal to people on the Government benches.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Productivity is the key to competitiveness and prosperity. It is the key to greater market shares and more jobs. It is the only way our products will be accepted internationally, being sold around the world, and thereby creating jobs at home. They do not buy our products because of the colour of our eyes or the cut of our jib. They buy them if they are of good quality and produced at internationally competitive prices. Productivity growth had been arrested for so long in Canada that our economy was gravely debilitated. All Canadians from all political parties should take pride in the fact that Canada's productivity growth is now coming back because it means better days for Canada, and in particular it means jobs for Canada's youth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: This one example in large measure can make a point: sound management of the economy works out in the end to be better for everyone, business, labour, and consumers alike.

I was interested to listen to the Leader of the Opposition yesterday referring to big business and the Conservative Party. I represent a constituency called Charlevoix, which includes my home town of Baie Comeau. It is populated largely by paper mill workers, people who work in aluminum factories, people who drive cabs and work hard. There are no big businessmen to speak of around. The Conservative candidate in that riding won almost 80 per cent of the vote. That means we are supported by the ordinary Canadians, the people who know what good Government is all about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Our vision for the future set out in our first two Throne Speeches resulted in the signing and ratification of the Free Trade Agreement with the United States, an agreement which represented a trade policy to be sure, but a little more for our nation because it is a statement about Canada and its people, about their outward, open, competitive view of the world, a world which is increasingly interdependent and in which Canadians want to play a full part.

The Speech from the Throne is about confirming that vision and taking the next steps which flow from that decision to allow Canadians in many important areas of international life to excel and to compete and to win. Building on strengths begins with a sense of realism. No nation can increase investment, build world-class industries and compete with the best, if it is not even paying its own way. We must put our fiscal house in order so that our economy can maintain its expansion.

My colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), will soon table a Budget that will further that objective. The Government will continue to encourage economic development by promoting conditions which will generate confidence on the part of consumers and investors alike. In the last four years we reversed the trend of run-away Government spending. We reduced the deficit by more than $10 billion. The deficit as a percentage of GDP declined from over 8 per cent to under 5 per cent. The economy has been performing very strongly. Canada's rate of job creation in that period was the highest of the major industrialized nations.

The best social policy in my judgment is a job. With this Government, Canadians have created over 1.4 million new jobs, bringing down unemployment from 11.7 per cent to 7.6 per cent. That is social policy. That is the record of accomplishment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Madam Speaker, since 1984 our Gross Domestic Product has grown in real terms by 4.1 per cent per annum, a performance surpassed only by Japan among the major industrialized countries. This was done by establishing clearly our resolve to stop the build-up of Government on the cuff, to end the process of putting today's programs on our children's charge account for them to pay.

While we have made progress on the deficit, its very size requires renewed commitment by all of us to reduce it still further. When the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) came back into politics some four or five years ago one of the statements that I think he made during his leadership campaign was with respect to his intention to reduce the federal deficit by 50 per cent, I believe, in five years. So when the Minister of Finance brings in his Budget I know the Leader of the Opposition will be on his feet seconding the motion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: While we have made progress on the deficit, we require renewed commitment. Every significant event in the life of our nation had a beginning, a moment when political decisions were made that set Canada on a course that ultimately would produce important consequences. So it was with the national debt.

At the end of this country's first 100 years of history, in 1967, the national debt—the sum total of all the deficits in our history—totalled only $18 billion. The cost of servicing the debt at that time absorbed 12 cents on every dollar of Government revenues.

Decisions made in the late 1960s and the early 1970s changed the debt flow in Canada from a trickle to a flood. By the end of fiscal year 1984-1985 that sum had risen to almost $200 billion. The cost of servicing the debt then absorbed nearly 32 cents on every dollar of Government revenue, and the Liberal Party had been in office during almost the entire life of that growth of the debt. That is where it began. These are the people who are responsible for the tragedy that befell Canada.

Canada was inexorably being placed in a fiscal strait-jacket. The time bomb cemented into the economy in the 15 years prior to 1984, with a tenfold increase in the national debt, remains undefused and constitutes today the principal obstacle to Canada's economic well-being. Every one knows that it takes more than four years to dig out from under such a mountain of debt built up over a decade and a half. Just servicing these obligations forces us to divert an increasing share of our resources. Because of the commitments of the Leader of the Opposition I know that he will speak to his caucus, united that they are, and that caucus will rise as one and support a program of fiscal prudence in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Speaking of comments in the House of Commons, I listened yesterday with amazement as once again the Leader of the Opposition indicated that he had not lost the election, he had won it. I want to congratulate him today on his victory, surrounded as he is by his Ministers.

Ms. Copps: Gracious you ain't.

Mr. Mulroney: Had it not been, according to the speech of the Leader, for the resources injected into the electoral debate by the supporters of free trade, the Liberal Party would have been victorious.

I have a great deal of respect for the Leader of the Opposition. But look at the contempt that that signifies for the Canadian people. What an insult to their judgment, their intelligence and the very purpose of democratic debate during an election campaign.

Yesterday, again, we witnessed a return to talk about selling out and shutting down and tearing up and all of those other splendid phrases that the Leader of the Opposition used so often and so long. I thought that the people of Canada had shown last November what they thought of these tactics—Canadians do not want empty rhetoric. What they seek from a Government is a consistent, coherent, confident plan of action. That is what the Government brought forward.

Yesterday, the Leader of the Opposition was blaming an awful lot of things on the Free Trade Agreement. He was decrying it again. He was indicating that people voted for the Free Trade Agreement because somebody bought their votes. This is very injurious to ordinary Canadian voters. But I was interested in comments made not last week, but last night by the Hon. Jean Chrétien speaking in Hull. I quote what he said last night as quoted in Le Journal de Montréal, an article by Jean Denis Girouard, their distinguished parliamentary correspondent. He says that Mr. Chrétien last night said—

> I was proud of Quebecers who showed their enterprise and boldness by supporting free trade during the last election campaign.

Mr. Chrétien says that Quebecers did not vote for free trade because they were bribed or bought but because of their enterprises and boldness, and for once I could not agree more with Jean Chrétien.

[English]

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, if Mr. Chrétien only got to Hull last night, Mr. Peterson got to Paris. There is a message there somewhere, but I am not sure what it is.

But lo and behold in The Toronto Star—and if it is in the Star it is accurate—there is a report that states the following. Let me quote:

> At a luncheon hosted yesterday by the Paris Chamber of Commerce, Peterson made a strong plea to liberalize and expand trade between Europe and North America, despite protectionist pressures. . .
> Both sides, he said, must take advantage of the Canada–U.S. free trade agreement and the decision by the European Community countries to form a single market in 1992. . .
> Meanwhile, Ontario Trade Minister Monte Kwinter who, like Peterson, and was an opponent of the trade deal before it was signed, is telling French investors that the deal provides them with an excellent opportunity to enter the U.S. market from Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: As my mother used to say: "You can dress him up, but you can't take him out".

• (1140)

In light of the kinds of comments that were made yesterday, and I don't plan to rebut every one that was made by my right hon. friend, I think it is important that I draw something to his attention, given the fact that he seemed very strongly to be making the case that there had been some kind of a mistake. The voters had made a mistake. The Liberals should have won the election. This is a temporary aberration. I draw to his attention an excellent article by Andrew Cohen that appeared yesterday or the day before that deals briefly with liberalism and it says this—I don't believe he is a supporter of the Conservative Party, but he says:

> It won't show in the figures, but the sharpest increase in cross-border trade since last November's elections is surely in the mutual consolations of grieving Liberals. Though they have been out of power for several years in both Canada and the U.S., it is only now starting to sink in that perhaps this is no mere fluke, an endearing little show of defiance by an electorate that still knows its natural rulers, but is a rather stiff repudiation. . .
> The Liberals lunged straight for the moral jugular; their opponents are always not only wrong, but evil or at best complacent.
> This is the true source of the decline of modern liberalism.
> It no longer stands, as it once did, for the downtrodden. It stands for privilege; for the systematic distortion of economic activity to benefit well organized pressure groups. It is not about summoning the strong to the aid of the weak.
> It has become a squalid auction of state favours to the highest political bidder. John Kennedy challenged Americans to "ask what you can do for your country". Liberalism in Canada as in the U.S., invited the powerful to ask what their country could do for them.

There is the difference between liberalism and conservatism today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Maybe it would be helpful, rather than to do what my right hon. friend did, to take a page from the very thoughtful expression or view by the Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) in a number of speeches after the election in which he indicated, well, you know, maybe the other guys didn't steal the election, that maybe there is something that the Liberals should be looking at themselves. Maybe we are not perfect and maybe Canadians and Québecers will look at us again if we reflect more faithfully the values and traditions in which they believe and we present policy that they can support. I respectfully urge the Leader of the Opposition to talk to his excellent Member of Parliament because I think he might learn a few things for the next campaign.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I look forward to seeing my right hon. friend in the next campaign.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: And in fact I know the Leader of the Opposition and I both look forward to seeing the Leader of the NDP in the next campaign because we know the NDP cannot do any better. That is for sure.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, money that could go to social and cultural and environmental and defence programs goes instead to pay the mounting interest on the national debt, which this year claims 31 cents of every dollar of government revenue. These payments are completely non-discretionary. They are unfortunately not expenditures we can cut. And, bad as it is, that is not all.

Large deficits contribute to rising interest rates. Business investment becomes more expensive. Many projects are scaled down or delayed as a consequence. Jobs are not created. Prosperity narrows. Every new or renewed mortgage becomes more expensive—as does every family car bought on credit and every student loan. Interest rates are indifferent, even disdainful, of the borrower's ability to pay, of his or her plans or problems, of the benefits the investment could create.

Nothing this Government can do, Mr. Speaker, will help all Canadians and the average Quebec voter more than getting interest rates down. To get interest rates down, we have to get the deficit down.

Canadians know that expenditure restraint is not an end in itself: it is necessary to sustain our prosperity. And I am confident that in the end, Canadians who share our vision of Canada, who believe in the potential of this unsurpassed land, who know that our prosperity depends on our competitiveness, who realize that support for social programs and the arts depends on Canada's economic health, will—I think massively—endorse the program of the Progressive Conservative Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mulroney: The important part of our program is tax reform. Many people may not even know that there is a federal sales tax, but there has been one since 1924. It has been no less pernicious for being invisible. It is a profoundly discriminatory tax—it discriminates against consumers and against Canadian producers. Over time, it has hampered our industries' competitiveness as they take on firms from around the world. And it is unfair in its impact on consumers.

Sales tax reform will be implemented in an equitable and effective way to boost our exports, stimulate investment and provide a secure and reliable source of revenues to sustain the essential government services which define us as a nation. Building an economy that is competitive will fuel our prosperity, safeguard our jobs, underwrite our social programs, finance our cultural and scientific development and give us a seat at the table of international affairs.

[English]

We will do this, Mr. Speaker, by doing what Canadians can do extremely well, trading to earn our way in the world. Last year for example we exported 34 per cent of everything we produced. Among the major industrialized countries, only Germany has a more export-oriented economy. In population we rank thirty-first in the world; in trade, seventh. According to GATT, Canada counted for 4 per cent of all the trade in the world, a remarkable figure, a remarkable accomplishment for a nation such as ours. While consolidating our largest and most fruitful trading relationship and implementing the free trade agreement with the United States, we will extend our horizons to GATT, to the success of the Uruguay Round, to our friends in Europe and to the remarkable possibilities that exist for Canada and for all of us in the Asia Pacific region. What we are seeking are fair rules of trade and the elimination of barriers.

Canada's agricultural producers can compete with farmers anywhere if the game is fair. But in the name of international agricultural trade, in that kind of forum, all people cannot compete with their European and American counterparts when trade distorting subsidies ignore market disciplines and threaten to break national budgets. Nor can our fishermen observe prudent fishing regulations and turn a blind eye to predatory fishing practices outside our 200-mile limit. We will insist on an end to such abuses in all of our international representations. I believe that the Government of Canada, the Parliament of Canada, can make substantial progress on behalf of our fishermen and our farmers across the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, competitiveness demands initiative, dedication and determination. In the field of science and technology, we believe in channelling our efforts to achieve international leadership through the creation of centres of excellence and through the development of strategic technologies. Competitiveness means we need a sophisticated human resource strategy for the 1990s to deal with the diminishing importance of traditional industries, the rapid growth of the service sector, of a new and complex technology. The unemployment insurance system can play a better role.

• (1150)

We must recognize expanding sectors and prepare workers for the job skills that are going to be progressively in demand. We must together capitalize opportunities in generating incentives to employment and our programs for the unemployed must be made fully consistent with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We will continue to promote literacy in education so basic to a competitive society. Competitiveness means as well ensuring that the various regions of this country benefit from the prosperity generated by our trading relationships and by our expanding economy. The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency for the Atlantic region, the Western Diversification Office for Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, FEDNOR for northern Ontario and our programs for Quebec will all have their funding continued for the five-year planning period.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Competitiveness means extending our programs to encourage native economic development so that our native populations can participate in Canada's economic opportunities.

The Government's emphasis on the environment is an element, too, of our recognition of Canada's increasing exposure to world-wide forces. The ozone layer above that protects the earth from the sun's ultra-violet rays is diminishing. Twenty-two billion tons of carbon dioxide from fossil fuels are being pumped into the world's atmosphere each year. This CO*in2*xx is heating up our climate, with hazards we are only beginning to understand. Moreover, forests which process carbon dioxide are disappearing at a breathtaking rate: Twenty-five million tons of sulphur dioxide fall every year in Canada and the United States in the form of acid rain that is destroying our lakes and rivers, damaging our forests and monuments and threatening our health.

It is well past the time that these issues be not only addressed but resolved. Mr. Speaker, environmental protection, like charity, begins at home. The National Round Table on the Environment and the Economy has been established to provide leadership to meet the environmental challenges of economic growth.

I have personally modified Cabinet committee processes and tasked the Minister of the Environment with ensuring that environmental considerations are fully taken into account before Government acts or supports any initiative financially.

The Federal Government and the provinces are cutting Canada's own acid rain emissions in half. We will not be satisfied until we see parallel action in the United States and until we have an accord which guarantees that the requisite reductions will be made and provides Canada with the added security of an enforceable international document. We have committed ourselves to end within 10 years or sooner if possible the use of CFCs, which destroy the ozone layer.

Abroad, we will continue to work diligently within the United Nations to make sustainable development a reality.

[English]

We will play, Mr. Speaker, our full part as the nations of the world come to grips, or try to, with the infinite complexity of climatic change. We will continue to provide leadership within the international community in the world-wide effort to develop international laws and legal principles to protect the atmosphere, the common heritage of all mankind.

The very distinguished columnist in the New York Times, Flora Lewis, recently wrote:

> The environment is being considered as a global issue. States proposed at a ground-breaking conference in The Hague this month to submit voluntarily to international policing and to make sure their citizens comply with agreed rules. There are profound shifts, in the perceptions of the world coming unevenly in spasmodic verses but with a momentum reaching the stage of destiny.

Some initially criticized the Hague Conference. Some initially criticized Canada's participation. But we went, we assumed our responsibilities, we participated actively, and I think that Canada, once again, contributed to an impressive end result.

While realizing this sustainable development in building a competitive society, we must not, however, abandon compassion as a cornerstone of this Government's social policy. We must never forget that the purpose of ending the crushing burden of debt and of generating new national wealth through competitiveness and trade is not for the pleasure of doing it in the abstract; it is being done to enable us to provide new support for the family, for the elderly, particularly those with lower incomes that is possible in a society that succeeds.

I think this is a fundamental difference between our Party and others in the House of Commons. Only a government that brings about strong economic growth, new wealth and new prosperity, that creates a deeper pool of prosperity, only that kind of government and that kind of country can guarantee new social programs for our citizens.

And so a strong economy ensures the means to support those social benefits which we associate with our very identity as Canadians.

We remain committed to a national child care program. We will address the problems of family violence and sexual abuse against children. The curse of drugs must not go unanswered in our society.

In September of 1986 in Vancouver, I stated that the illegal use of drugs in Canada had become an epidemic which undermines our economic as well as our social fabric. That view, Mr. Speaker, was greeted with some considerable scepticism in some interesting quarters.

Last week, in an editorial entitled "A Tragic Epidemic", Kevin Doyle, the editor of Maclean's magazine, described the Canadian reality in these words, and I quote:

> In the not so distant past, heroin and cocaine were drugs that destroyed lives in Manhatten, Miami or London. Drug use was only read about in Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal or Halifax. Sometimes police seized illegal drugs at a Canadian airport, but it was all a very remote affair. No longer.
> Now it would be difficult to find a Canadian at any level of society or in any part of the country who has not been touched in some way by the effects of the stunningly rapid spread of drug abuse, armed robberies to get money to support the habit and violence among gangs who supply the deadly material.

This is a serious problem for all Canadians. It is starting to attack the foundations of Canada's families. It is debilitating Canada's youth. I thought, in 1986, it was an epidemic and I said so, I believe it is worse today and all Governments must cooperate with police forces, with educational institutions to deal effectively with this great challenge to our national well–being.

[Translation]

We have never sacrificed care and compassion in our national attitudes and programs while developing our potential to create the wealth to support a standard of social benefits which is the envy of many countries. We are highly regarded in the world. Others see us as one of the most prosperous, humane and promising nations on earth. Our vast geographic inheritance, our history, our two official languages, our native peoples and enterprising immigrants, all combine to create a society of civility and tolerance. A unique identity about which we have every reason to be proud. But our job is not done, far from it!

• (1200)

[English]

The only thing, Mr. Speaker, that I really took exception to in the speech by the Leader of the Opposition yesterday were his comments about language. He made some brave statements and I have to answer them, and I will. He made some brave statements about his devotion to high principles and then he proceeded to fabricate the whole cloth, my own position on the subject of the use by the Government of Quebec of Section 33 of the Constitution Act 1982, to override the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

He is quoted in this way: "By his silence, by his inaction, the Prime Minister of Canada is an accomplice to a direct attack on the rights of the Anglophone minority in Quebec". That is what the Leader of the Opposition said.

Another quote: "And what did the Prime Minister say about Quebec law 178? Nothing. What did he do about the Quebec law? Nothing."

These were statements by the Leader of the Opposition about an event that took place in mid and late December in the House of Commons, and the Leader of the NDP was here with me and we both spoke to this issue, and he knows and every other Member of the House knows that that statement by the Leader of the Opposition is false in its entirety and unworthy of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that I was prompt, and a lot more prompt than the Leader of the Opposition, I might add, in making plain my rejection of this action by the Government of Quebec.

On December 19, which was a Monday, there was an exchange and the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), in Hansard, said in a question to me. He said: "Is it not true that the federal Government has the responsibility to communicate with the Government of Quebec concerning the measures proposed by Mr. Bourassa yesterday?"

And I responded: "I already communicated with Mr. Bourassa yesterday, and I told him the position of my Government and of this House on such a matter. I expressed the desire, the wish that the Government of Quebec find a formula, as the Supreme Court suggested, whereby the preponderance of French at all times in Quebec would be assured together with the respective minorities and their freedom of expression, as the Supreme Court wanted and as the Quebec Charter wanted as well".

The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce then responded on the second question in regard to my answer. He said: "The Prime Minister seems to have said that he did ask the Prime Minister of Quebec to consider implementing legislation that would respect the judgment of the Supreme Court".

The Member for Shefford then came on: "The Prime Minister said that he expects the Quebec Government to abide by the provisions of the Supreme Court ruling". And I answered that of course we do. The Member for Shefford asked again: "Does the Prime Minister agree with the Supreme Court position concerning the primacy of French inside and outside"? Of course we approve.

And I went on: "I expressed the wish on behalf of all parliamentarians, I think, that both would be reconciled in a Bill whose effect would be to respect fully the French dimension of this Quebec reality, while at the same time respecting the basic values in the Québec Charter of Rights and Freedoms". That was on December 19.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Before the Bill came in.

Mr. Mulroney: Before the Bill came in.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is right.

Mr. Mulroney: On the 20th in response to questions from the Member for Ottawa—Vanier, I said: "Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend's question is troubling, because according to answers given yesterday and published in Le Devoir, and I quote: "Mrs. Finestone congratulated Brian Mulroney for defending minority rights yesterday. Mr. Allmand concluded by saying that he was satisfied with the Prime Minister's statement that the decision of the court and the two leaders, federal and provincial should be respected". This is what was stated in the House of Commons. Now, perhaps my right hon. friend will want to rise at an appropriate time and apologize for his comment. While this debate was going on and while we were defending minority rights in the Province of Quebec, as elsewhere—and there may have been reasons for it—the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was not here. I was here defending minority rights, as I always am.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Now we get to December 21, three days later, and in comes the Leader of the Opposition. His question is:

> Does the Prime Minister approve of the legislation introduced by Premier Bourassa applying the so-called inside-outside formula which excludes the use of non-French signs outside business establishments? Does he think that the Bill meets the test of the Supreme Court of Canada judgment?

My response is:

> Mr. Speaker, in the last two days I have indicated that I neither approve of it nor do I believe that it meets the test of what the Supreme Court said. and I indicated this in response to the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce and other Members of the Leader of the Opposition's Party. . .
> Anything less than that, of course, is disappointing to us. I have conveyed this to the House time and time again. I have responded to Members of the Leader's Party. In respect of the protection of minority rights in the Province of Quebec both the Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) and the Member for Notre-Dame-de Grâce complimented me and congratulated the Government on its stand on Monday and Tuesday.

I know the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce to be a man of honour and he complimented me for my stand in defending minority rights in December. I know he will rise in his place and do no less today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I know that my right hon. friend, will, upon reflection, want to correct that very serious mistake and the fact that he made it about my participation in this debate on this very sensitive national issue. I know that given the opportunity he will rise and do that.

Let me talk briefly about another aspect that is tied in. The framers of the flawed Constitution Act of 1982 inserted the notwithstanding clause which limits our most fundamental rights and freedoms. They did not do so in order to reconcile the Canadian family and build a solid and lasting constitutional edifice. Rather, they did so hurriedly in order to achieve their cherished agenda of repatriation with an entrenched Charter of Rights.

I always thought, Mr. Speaker, very fundamentally, that a Constitution ought to do two things: First, it ought to unite a nation and, secondly, it ought to protect the inalienable nature of individual rights. The Constitution of 1981–82 did neither. The Constitution, which is supposed to bring unity and protect individual rights, was (a) rejected by the National Assembly of the Province of Quebec, Liberals and PQ alike at that time. For the first time in history it diminished the rights of the National Assembly. So, the first test of the Constitution failed. It did not enhance national unity.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps no less importantly, if a Constitution does not have the reason of protecting your individual liberties, those of your family, to freedom of expression, freedom of association, freedom of the press, if all of these rights are not protected and rendered in inalienable in the Constitution, what is the Constitution about? The Government of Canada surrendered a notwithstanding clause in 1981–82, which said, in effect, "we hereby guarantee Canadians their fundamental right to language, to religion and to association, but, by the way, we forgot to tell you, these fundamental rights can be overridden if the Premier of Prince Edward Island or Saskatchewan or Quebec decides that it is in his interest to take them away.

In 1982, that is the grave flaw that was embedded into the Constitution. I am not commenting now on the use of that clause. That clause was given to the Premiers. It was given to them. We will have to ask why it was given, and I want to tell you right now, Mr. Speaker, that I am told that the view was that we had to get a deal, time was running out. A constitution that does not bring Canadians together, that is not accepted by all Canadians, and a constitution that does not protect the inalienable and imprescriptible individual rights of individual Canadians is not worth the paper it is written on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Party voted for it.

Mr. Mulroney: This flawed constitution in 1981–82 contains—and I will talk to my hon. friend. There is a clause in there, and my hon. friend is as opposed to it as I am, that causes grave concern to all Canadians now that Canadians understand the significance of that clause.

I want to say about the notwithstanding clause that never before nor since in our history has a Prime Minister of Canada made a concession of such magnitude and importance. Never before has the surrender of rights been so total and abject. It is difficult to conceive of a negotiating blunder more damaging to the strength and the leadership of the Supreme Court of Canada and to Canada's federal institutions than that which took place in 1981 and 1982, and I know that all Members of the House will want to work together over the next years as best we can to make sure that this constitution is improved and that that major fatal flaw of 1981, which reduces your individual rights and mine, which holds them hostage, is dealt with collectively with the Premiers so that all Canadians have their fundamental rights and know they exist forever.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We have in particular, Mr. Speaker, a major gap to fill, the ratification of the Meech Lake Accord. I believe the words of Sir John A. Macdonald are as true today as the day he uttered them. "We are a great country", he said, "and shall become one of the greatest in the universe if we preserve it. We shall sink into insignificance and adversity if we suffer it to be broken."

With Quebec a willing participant in Confederation, with Canada enthusiastically made whole again, I believe there is little that we cannot achieve together. Without Quebec's adherence, our prospects darken. Never before have the prospects for constitutional reconciliation been so starkly simple or so close to our grasp. Never before has the risk of disappointment contained such consequences for our future.

I again salute and underline the contribution and the leadership of the Leader of the NDP, and in particular the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, on a very important national issue.

Last week, I conveyed congratulations to the Hon. J. W. Pickersgill on his important role 40 years ago in making Newfoundland a part of Canada. He contributed significantly to this historic result and performed, I thought, a major act of nation building by an individual whose entire life has been a commitment to Canada and to our national unit. I think he has had a most distinguished career in Canada and has been a pillar of the Liberal Party over four decades. As principal secretary, I think Clerk of the Privy Council, senior adviser, Member of Parliament and senior cabinet Minister, Mr. Pickersgill has a unique understanding of constitutional negotiations, of their import and their impact, and a sensitive appreciation of the nuances of Canadian federalism.

Jack Pickersgill is now a man approaching 84 years of age. He has no more political battles to win. He has no more mountains to climb. It was instructive, therefore, to re-read what Mr. Pickersgill said in his analysis of the Meech Lake Accord. "On the eve of that meeting," he wrote, "I would not have given the First Ministers one chance in 10 of success. I was excited and delighted when they reached accord. Once I read the document," Mr. Pickersgill said, "I was satisfied it met the requirements of Quebec without in any way reducing the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. I was delighted by the generous and united reception of the miracle of Meech Lake by all parties in Parliament."

He concluded by saying, "If we allow this opportunity to pass, my guess is that it will probably not arise again for another generation and never again on such reasonable terms."

Great sadness for nations and people and families alike arise from opportunities lost. There is now an opportunity for Canada within our reach, one that shall, according to one of Canada's most distinguished sons, not arise again on such reasonable terms.

So what shall Manitobans and New Brunswickers do? Legislators representing 93 per cent of Canadians have already endorsed the Meech Lake Accord. The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, the Leader of the New Democratic Party and myself in my capacity as Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party have all endorsed the Accord. What shall Manitobans and New Brunswickers do? Shall they complete the process and bind the nation strongly together, or wait for a better deal that may never come while constitutional paralysis slowly envelopes the nation?

Canadians do not consider the Meech Lake Accord to be the last word in our constitutional evolution. Rather, they have in mind a variety of next steps which are pressing and which require discussion. If this discussion is to become possible, whether on the very important questions of Senate reform, aboriginal and linguistic rights, roles and responsibilities in relation to the fishery, and strengthening of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, this can all come to pass once the Meech Lake Accord is fully ratified and implemented. Failure to ratify carries with it its own consequences.

Mr. Speaker, this is a time of extraordinary potential both at home and abroad. As we speak, winds of hope are blowing across Canada.

Confrontation and stereotypes are giving way to new attitudes founded on economic reality. Constructive internationalism is needed, and Canada is certainly prepared to play its part. The government is encouraged by the signs of change in the Soviet Union and elsewhere, by a new emphasis on the forms of democracy in these countries.

We are also genuinely impressed, it must be said, by the creative and daring leadership provided by President Gorbachev. Such a will to improve, to build, and to reach out should not go unanswered. Reform is welcome if it lessens tensions in the world and increases the likelihood of peace. If we attain lasting peace, obviously, that is a wonderful benefit not only for Canada but for the world.

But we must temper our optimism with prudence. The Soviet Union remains a military superpower. It is not a free society as we know the term. Free speech remains a privilege, not a right. Parliamentary democracy as we know it here in our country does not exist, despite the encouraging reforms that we now see thanks to Mr. Gorbachev's vigorous intervention and the push he is giving his country to become a more modern and efficient state. Power still remains the prerogative of a few. That is why we must keep intact our relationships with our allies in NATO and NORAD, our basic relationships with our historic allies, and do our best to sustain our commitment to collective security in Europe and elsewhere. We will always do our part in peacekeeping, whenever the United Nations needs us.

In international, as in national affairs, Canada has been dealt a strong hand. It is our privilege to help to coordinate the economic policies of the industrialized world at the G–7 and the Economic Summit, to be the only country that is a member of the Commonwealth and a founding member of the Francophone Summit and to have a vested interest in the continued success of GATT.

But as a privileged nation, we also know our duty to offer our assistance in international development, in defence of human rights, in the relief of famine and suffering in areas of the world less developed or less fortunate.

[English]

And so, Mr. Speaker, as we meet again at the outset of this second session of the thirty–fourth Parliament, I am honoured to lead Her Majesty's Government whose legislative program has been placed before this House. Our priorities are clear. We will put our fiscal house in order so that our economy can remain strong and competitive. We will reinforce Canada's compassionate traditions so that those less fortunate will have their opportunity to grow as well. We will preserve Canada's environment so that future generations can enjoy it as we have. We will celebrate Canada's uniqueness so that the civility and tolerance of Canadians may be an example to the world. We will play our role constructively so that perhaps we can contribute to making the world a somewhat better place.

Much is a stake for Canada in the years ahead. There are few limits to what is possible if we as parliamentarians, as Canadians, occasionally set aside necessary partisanship and work together from time to time toward larger goals for the good of the nation. We hope that all Canadians will join us in realising the bright future which history holds for Canada.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

RAFFERTY–ALAMEDA DAM CONSTRUCTION PROJECT

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that I shall interrupt the proceedings briefly to hear an application for an emergency debate from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg Transcona (Mr. Blaikie). I want to say to the Hon. Member that it was my error that this was not heard earlier. I now recognize the Hon. Member.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Minister for the Environment (Mr. L. Bouchard) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) are still here. The reason that I am seeking an emergency debate with respect to the Rafferty–Alameda Dam construction project is that since the House sat before Christmas it has come to the attention of the Canadian public, and I hope finally the Minister of the Environment, that federal lands are involved in this project. One of the contentions made by a previous Minister of the Environment of the Government was that there was no need for a federal environmental assessment review of this project because there were no federal lands involved.

It was my hope that the Minister of the Environment would have lived up to his responsibilities by now and called for that kind of an inquiry. He has not done that. I think it is an emergency. The project is about to begin and it is about time the Parliament of Canada had an opportunity to debate fully this particular project and debate fully whether or not the Minister for the Environment has lived to his responsibilities in this regard. I believe he has not and that he has let down the people of Manitoba, in particular, Manitobans whose concerns have not been taken into account so far.

Mr. Speaker: I will consider the Hon. Members comments. I should say to all hon. members and the public that it is, of course, a matter of considerable concern to many Canadians. Whether it is appropriate to seek an emergency debate, that is what I will consider.

Again, I want to apologise to the Hon. Member for not having heard his motion earlier this morning.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if in rendering your judgment on whether or not an emergency debate is appropriate in the circumstance you could at that time give the House the benefit of your interpretation of Standing Order 52 (2) and 52 (3) that a written statement on the matter proposed to be discussed be delivered to yourself. Then in Standing Order 52 (3) it states:

> When requesting leave to propose such a motion, the Member shall rise in his or her place and present without argument the statement referred to in Section (2) of this Standing Order.

We appreciate the need for emergency debates. They have a place. That was shown on Tuesday night. They have to be presented in accordance with the rules, otherwise we get into argument and it is a one-sided argument. I have no problem with a two-sided argument but I have a lot of difficulty with that kind of rhetoric being a called a statement as referred to in the rules.

Mr. Speaker: First, I thank the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) for his intervention. I think there is some justice in his observations. In the interest of all Members I will come back later on this afternoon and perhaps clarify and in a modest way give some guidance to all of us.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I want to make one short comment. If you read Standing Order 52 (4), and I will read it:

> The Speaker shall decide, without any debate, whether or not the matter is proper to be discussed.

It is up to the Speaker.

Mr. Merrithew: Nobody is arguing without.

Mr. Gauthier: No reasons are required. No explanations are required. I hope the Government is not arguing that the Speaker should now explain how he comes to his decisions, because that would be completely wrong.

Mr. Lewis: No, we are not doing that.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the House and I know the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) wishes to get on with debate, but let me say this: I did not take the intervention of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) as argument meeting the matters that were put forward by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg Transcona (Mr. Blaikie). The Minister of Justice is saying that there are rules by which an application for an emergency debate is to be made. I think what the Minister of Justice is saying—and as the Speaker of the House I must listen to him—is that he has some concern that perhaps we have strayed away from the rule a little bit. I will take that under consideration. I think it is a legitimate comment and I will come back to try to assist the House.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is absolutely right that there is not to be argument. The Speaker must make the decision and, of course, as Hon. Members know as a consequence of the deliberations of the reform committee, the Speaker has been urged not to give reasons.

I welcome the interventions that are made and I will come back to the House on the subject later today.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed from Wednesday, April 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for an address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her speech at the opening of the session, and the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 131) and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Broadbent (p. 140).

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, unlike the Prime Minister who just spoke, we ordinary Members have only 20 minutes to speak in this important debate. Consequently, we are restricted to a few key subjects.

The Prime Minister referred to certain remarks I made and to certain questions I had put in December with respect to the language question, and I wish to deal with that first.

I put my question to the Prime Minister on Monday, December 19, the day after Premier Bourassa had held a press conference during which he announced his intentions with respect to language legislation. It is true that in answer to my question the Prime Minister said that he had called Premier Bourassa on Sunday and that he had expressed the view that the use of the notwithstanding clause was not correct, and that he thought that what was proposed by the Government of Quebec was an inappropriate response to the Supreme Court judgment.

Commenting on his response, I thought the principles enunciated in his response were fine. However, a few days later the Secretary of State, the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Bouchard), the Minister responsible for the official language minorities in this country, made exactly the opposite statement, and he was not even present in the House while this issue was under discussion. He stayed away.

In this instance we had an important Minister on a cabinet matter, on a Government matter, expressing a view quite different from that of the Prime Minister. The Secretary of State said that he supported the use of the notwithstanding clause. He thought it was justified. I believe that soon afterwards the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard), his neighbour in the Lac-Saint-Jean area, made similar remarks, as did other members of the Quebec Conservative caucus.

One can tolerate back-benchers having a different view from that of the Prime Minister. However, under our parliamentary system, one cannot tolerate important Ministers having different views from those of the Prime Minister on a subject like this. The Prime Minister was allowing the Government to speak with two voices, one to the nationalists in Quebec, another to the Anglophones in Quebec and the people outside Quebec. Members of the Government were speaking with a forked tongue; they were giving the impression that they were on both sides of the issue. On that, Mr. Speaker, I cannot congratulate the Government, and I cannot accept its policy.

If the Prime Minister was sincere in what he said to me on December 19, he should have fired the Secretary of State from the cabinet, and he should have fired the Minister of Transport from the cabinet.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Simply transferring him from the position of Secretary of State to another cabinet portfolio is not enough in our system of Government. Perhaps on a minor policy matter one could accept this, but this is not a minor policy matter. In this case we are discussing under what circumstances one can suspend the basic rights of this country. The Prime Minister stated that he did not support the use of the notwithstanding clause. The Secretary of State at the time, now the Minister of the Environment, stated that he did and that he thought it was essential that the notwithstanding clause be present.

In our system of Government one cannot tolerate that type of split within the cabinet. If the Prime Minister was sincere in what he said to me on December 19, he should fire the Secretary of State, now the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of Transport, and any other Minister in his cabinet who holds that position.

Today I accuse the Prime Minister of using double-talk to me on December 19. On that day he announced principles of which I can approve. He said the right thing. But then he backed off and allowed members of his Government to speak with different voices to different groups in this country.

With respect to the sincerity of the Prime Minister with respect to the notwithstanding clause, and if he felt so strongly opposed to it, why was it not on the table for the constitutional discussions which took place at the time of the Meech Lake Accord? We could have recognised many of the principles contained in the Meech Lake Accord, as our party had suggested, and still get rid of the notwithstanding clause.

The Prime Minister did not do that, and he is still not doing that. He is not proposing that the notwithstanding clause be put to the provinces to be removed from the Constitution. Again, one wonders about the sincerity of the Prime Minister on this particular question.

At this time I fully support the statement made by my leader yesterday. I thought it was an outstanding statement in favour of minority rights everywhere in this country. If it were pursued by the Government, it would enhance national unity. It is a type of policy that, if pursued by the Premier and the Government of Quebec, it would enhance national unity and give support to the Meech Lake Accord. Unfortunately, that policy is not being pursued.

I have been here for 23 years. One of my highest priorities has been the protection and the guarantee of minority language rights. Year after year I have fought in the House and in the Joint Committee on Official Languages for the protection and the enhancement of the French language. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who sits on the committee with me knows that I have done that. Time and again I have made a statement to the effect that Ontario should opt into Section 133 of the Constitution Act of 1867. I do not have to take second place to anyone in that respect.

However, in order to protect and promote the language rights of any one group it is not necessary to suppress the language rights of another group.

As the Supreme Court stated in its judgment, which we support, it is quite appropriate to have a law in Quebec, or anywhere in Canada, in which the use of one language is insisted upon, whether it is English or French, or even to insist upon the priority of one language, and that provision is made for the protection and the promotion of that language. All that is totally acceptable, as the Supreme Court has stated. However, it is not acceptable to suppress one language in order to protect another language.

When one says things like this, very often he or she may be accused of being insensitive to those people who want to protect the French language. I want to rebut that very clearly. The Anglophone population in Quebec now stands solidly behind the principle that the French language and culture in Quebec must be protected, promoted, and allowed to flourish not only in Quebec but throughout the country. We agree with that. Most of us are having our children educated in immersion courses or in French schools. At the present time, I understand that the Anglophone youth population of Quebec is more bilingual than the Francophone youth population. There is goodwill there. The type of law that was introduced by the Premier of Quebec does not support that type of unity between the two language groups.

I want to remind the House that in 1982, when the first draft of the Constitution was presented to the House, it did not contain the notwithstanding clause. It was a very good document and I supported it 100 per cent. I had always been in favour of an entrenched Charter of Rights. I was in favour of the repatriation, and I was in favour of an amendment clause which had been required for many generations.

However, at the last minute, following the counsel of the Supreme Court of Canada, there was another federal-provincial conference. It was at that point, at the request of certain provinces and not the federal Government, that the notwithstanding clause and other clauses were introduced, such as Section 59 which weakened language rights and other clauses which weakened aboriginal rights. I finally voted against the Constitution. I made my point clear at that time and I am consistent today.

If the Prime Minister says he was not treated fairly yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition, let him make as strong a statement in favour of minority language rights as did the Leader of the Opposition yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Let him stand in his place and say similar words, not only for the Anglophones in Quebec, but for the Francophones throughout the country, both in Quebec and in the other provinces. If the other Ministers in his cabinet do not agree with what he says, then to show his sincerity on this matter they should be fired.

I wish to deal with some other matters in the short time left to me. At the very beginning of the Speech from the Throne the Government states:

> My Ministers believe that continued progress in reducing the deficit is a vital necessity if Canada's economic well-being is to be secured.

Madam Speaker, what a farce, what nonsense! This sort of declaration comes from a Government which in the pre-electoral period last year, that is, from May 30 to September 13, 1988—that short period before the election—announced or promised new programs amounting to $12.2 billion. If we add on the promises to buy a fleet of nuclear submarines and 300 new tanks, we see the promises amount to $20 billion. This is in the pre-electoral period.

Then, during the election campaign, after the election was called, another $16.9 billion in promises were added on top of the $20 billion. In the by-election in Lac-Saint-Jean where the famous Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard), at one time the Secretary of State, was elected, in order to get him elected this Government, which says it is concerned about deficits, promised commitments amounting to $163 million. That was in just one by-election.

During the last Parliament the Government bestowed benefits amounting to $288 million in the Prime Minister's riding of Manicouagan.

After the election in the Speech from the Throne we get a statement whereby the Government states that reducing the deficit is a vital necessity. There is no doubt that some of the projects promised before the election and during the election are good ones and should be implemented. But what is wrong is the hypocrisy and the dishonesty of the Government. Before the election it was promising and spending money like prodigal sons on everyone's favourite project from the East Coast to the West Coast. Now, immediately after the election, it is setting us up to cancel these projects and cut back on many others.

The Conservatives' pre-electoral and electoral tactics were a massive con game on the Canadian people and have to be condemned in the strongest terms.

I refer to an article written by John Ferguson, a well-known economic journalist in the country, an article in his column published on February 4, 1989, in which the headline reads "Tories do sudden about-face on severity of the debt". In the article Mr. Ferguson points out, and correctly so, that in the Budget of the Minister of Finance of last February he said: "Our challenge in 1984 was to restore fiscal stability and rebuild credibility in the management of Government finances". "That is exactly what we did", said the Minister of Finance. So in other words, they had solved that. We were given the impression that it was the time now to go on and spend money in the pre-electoral period.

In speaking to some businessmen in New York in December, and I am quoting Mr. Ferguson: "The Minister of Finance crowed about the Tories' achievements on the spending control front during the first mandate".

If the Government had solved the problem last year, why all of a sudden do we now have a crisis with respect to the deficit that will lead, we believe—and we are waiting for the Estimates and for the Budget to be tabled—to a severe slashing of important Government programs, many of them important to the Canadian people? This is not untypical of this Government, a Government which promises one thing and does another, which flip-flops all over the place.

We say that the deficit is important, but we also say that what is more important is economic growth which, in the long run, is the best way to reduce the deficit and, in addition, a fair distribution of that growth. Economic growth cannot be promoted by wholesale cuts in certain Government programs which are essential for economic infrastructure and development. In particular, if one is interested in economic growth one does not cut programs for post-secondary education, for training, for upgrading, for research and development, for transportation and communications infrastructure and for industrial modernisation. If one is interested in economic growth and really doing something about the deficit one does not cut those kind of programs because they lead to growth in the economy and to an increased income for the Canadian Government. One does not cut programs which help people buy the very basic necessities of life. All that money is received by these people at the bottom level of our income status, all that money is recycled in the economy for food, shelter and other basic goods and services.

With respect to the great claims of the Government that the economy of Canada is in wonderful shape and that we should all be extremely pleased, let me remind Members that a rate of unemployment at 7.6 per cent is still a higher rate than we had in 1981 before the recession. In 1981 we had a 7.5 per cent unemployment rate. In the period from 1965 to 1980, years which were mostly under Liberal Governments as was pointed out by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the average rate of unemployment was 5.6 per cent. Here we have a government boasting of an unemployment rate of 7.6 per cent when more than 1.2 million people are still unemployed.

I know some Members over there are very insensitive when they hear the truth on this subject. We still have in this country five provinces with over 10 per cent unemployment. The Province of Quebec is just under 10 per cent. Here we have a situation in which the largest province in population of course is affecting the national figures. Thank God things are good in Ontario—we have a Liberal Government in Ontario. But the point is that in the regions of the country the economy is not good. There are still over one million Canadians unemployed and the rates of unemployment in the Atlantic provinces, British Columbia and Quebec are highly unsatisfactory.

If the Government is looking for things to cut, as we have said before, it could cut out those nuclear submarines which I note this morning have been criticized once again. I have here a Canadian Press article which appeared in today's newspaper, the title of which is: "Nuclear subs waste of money, retired U.S. admiral warns". He is quoted as saying that Canada's planned fleet of nuclear-powered submarines will run into huge cost over-runs, will quickly become obsolete and make little strategic sense. This is what retired U.S. Navy Rear Admiral Eugene Carroll said yesterday. He is the Deputy Director of The Centre for Defence Information in Washington.

In addition, if the Government is really interested in cuts, and if it is intent on listening to its friends in the Canadian Manufacturing Association, it might call for cuts in subsidies and grants to the corporate sector. According to a study that was completed late in 1988, and I am referring to an article reporting on that study, business has demanded cuts in spending on social programs to reduce the $28 billion a year deficit but seems to be ignoring the fact that its share of federal largesse has grown while its share of the tax burden has shrunk. As a percentage of Gross Domestic Product, the value of all goods and services produced in the country spending on business through subsidies and other assistance increased from less than 1 per cent in 1970 to a peak of 2.5 per cent in the mid 1980s. Spending on persons meanwhile has declined steadily since peaking at about 7 per cent of Gross Domestic Product during the recession to about 6 per cent of Gross Domestic Product today. I would encourage the Government to look at that side if it insists on cutting in order to deal with the deficit.

The Speech from the Throne also talks of changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act. But it does not state exactly what it has in mind. We can presume, however, that it wants to cut here as well. We will be looking very closely to see what the Government will propose. I know there are some in this country who will say it is good, that unemployment insurance is too high, it encourages laziness and all those other sort of slogans that we hear from time to time. That is an extremely narrow view. Unemployment insurance was introduced by a Liberal Government in the 1940s following the great depression of the 1930s when there was no unemployment insurance and people had to stand in breadlines. The unemployed had no way of paying for their groceries or for their rent, the basic necessities of life. Unemployment insurance was introduced by Liberals to take care of that situation. It must be kept in place and be kept up to date to still take care of that situation.

Of course there are abuses. But the abuses are relatively low and they are far less than the abuses that are made with respect to the tax system. We must correct the abuses. We will support measures to correct abuses, but we also want to make certain that there are no savage cuts in the system.

Madam Speaker, I see that you are telling me that my time is coming to an end. At the beginning of the last Parliament the Government said that this was a high priority. It appointed the Forget Commission. It sat for over a year and made a report with about 50 recommendations. The Government did not accept any of them. It referred the report to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, which had a Tory majority. We studied the question for more than a year and made about 70 recommendations. The Government did not implement any of them. It could not make up its mind. It completely copped out on the whole question. Here we are again about to go through the same exercise.

I want to say this to the Government: we will be ready to support measures to improve the Unemployment Insurance Act to take out the inequities, to make it a more effective system, but we will not support slashing and cutting the unemployment insurance system so people are not able to buy their food or to pay their rent when they are put out of work against their will.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne) Are there questions or comments?

• (1250)

Mr. Charest: Question or comment, Madam Speaker. I was interested in the Hon. Member's remarks about the notwithstanding clause, and I know that he has an interest in that issue. I was wondering whether he would like to comment on the fact that a well known Member of the Liberal Party, the federal Liberal caucus, the Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), has stated a very strong and unequivocal position on the notwithstanding clause? Could he explain for the House, Madam Speaker, what he thinks of the position taken by the Hon. Member for Laurier—Saint-Marie?

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, I said that one can tolerate and one could tolerate people in the Conservative Party as well backbenchers who would take a different position from the Prime Minister and from the Government. That has always been accepted. You have had cases of that in both Parties. But within our parliamentary system it is not acceptable for a Minister of the Crown, one of the Privy Counsellors sitting in Cabinet with the Prime Minister, to take a different position from that of the Prime Minister on a critical issue such as this. So we can tolerate the fact that some of your backbenchers might disagree with the Prime Minister, and the fact that some people in our caucus disagree with the position stated by the Leader can be tolerated. We are not in government and we are not running the country through a cabinet system.

What cannot be accepted is when a government, meaning the Cabinet of this country, speaks with two voices on a most important issue. According to our system, either the Prime Minister fires the Minister in question, or the Minister, if he is honourable, resigns from the Cabinet because he cannot accept the policy of the Prime Minister.

In this case, that is not being done. Two different messages are being sent out to the country to please whatever group wishes to hear them.

Mr. Riis: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I listened with interest to the Hon. Member's presentation and I found it to be, as usual, very thoughtful and indicating an understanding particularly of the regions of the country, and I know that the Hon. Member has travelled extensively and knows Canada well. I wonder if he would explain how he feels this Government has reacted in terms of really understanding and meeting the needs of the regions of Canada.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, if I had had unlimited time, as did the leaders of the Parties, I could have gone on for hours giving example after example of how the regions have been ignored. The Prime Minister boasted this morning about how he won the election, but we have to remind him again and again that he only got the majority of votes in two out of ten provinces. And if one looks at Atlantic Canada, the Liberal Party won the overwhelming number of votes and seats there. If we look at other parts of the country that are underdeveloped economically, such as northern Ontario, the Government did not win the seats there. In the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, the Government did not win a seat.

The regions of this country that have been ignored sent a message to the Government. You did not win the popular vote. Madam Speaker, I hope they keep in mind, when they are about to introduce some of these programs that they are thinking about in Cabinet—to cut programs—that they remember that their program was not accepted by a majority of voters in this country. I think our leader referred to it yesterday. I think 56 per cent of the electorate rejected the Government and the Government's programs. They only won a majority of votes in two provinces, Quebec and Alberta. So they do not have a total mandate, and they should keep that in mind. What is amusing, Madam Speaker, is that they do not want to think about that, but if the people who are harping over there now—and a lot of them were not here between 1980 and 1984—but if they look at the speeches that the Tories made in this House between 1980 and 1984 when such things as the National Energy Program were taking place, they were saying you do not have a mandate, you have no majority in Alberta, despite the fact that we had the majority in Parliament and we thought it was the right thing to do. So be consistent.

I guess I am asking too much when I am asking Tories to be consistent.

Mr. Hopkins: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I want to ask my colleague who has just spoken if he noted in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) remarks this morning that the Prime Minister was desperately trying to downplay all the special interest money that was thrown into the election within the last 10 days before election day, and he mentioned the regions this morning again, but he was very convenient in leaving out eastern Ontario where there is no regional development at all.

In relation to the Prime Minister's remarks, he stated that we were accusing them of buying the election. We were not doing that—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. I would think that the Hon. Member would have questions on his colleague's speech and not on the preceding intervention in the House.

Mr. Hopkins: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, but the fact that they were intertwined, it is rather difficult to separate them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: Madam Speaker, it is obvious that they are agreeing with me across the way.

The Hon. Member knows the regions of Canada very well, and regional development programs. He also knows the employment situation in Canada very well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: Does he realize that there are regions of this country that do not have accurate unemployment figures because they are averaged in with more prosperous areas in StatsCanada? I wonder if the Hon. Member would comment on that because it is very relative to what he was saying about unemployment and about regions left out in Canada.

Mr. Allmand: Well, Madam Speaker, the statistics on employment are rather confusing. A lot of Canadians do not realize that the statistics are not accumulated by simply counting the unemployed, but they are done through a survey system. This system, of course, has a tendency to ignore the less populated areas. Although we get the rates in the populated area, the surveys are not as complete. For example, one thing that in my opinion distorts the figures is that if you work one hour a week, you are counted as employed.

There are a lot of other things. The way they count people out of the labour force and therefore unemployed is another bit of distortion. But your original question as to the Prime Minister's attempt to make the situation sound much rosier than it is really is typical of the Prime Minister and a Conservative Government who are expert in the politics of rhetoric, experts in posturing, experts in smokescreens.

While I was happy with what the Prime Minister said to me on December 19, I became quickly disenchanted when he allowed his Secretary of State responsible for Official Languages to say exactly the opposite thing in French in Quebec and give the impression that he was doing one thing for Anglophones and linguistic minorities outside of Quebec, and another thing for Francophones inside of Quebec, a completely different policy tolerated. That is not acceptable, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The time for questions and comments has expired. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—REMOVAL OF FOREIGN ARMIES URGED

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of the House the plight of the people of Lebanon who, after 14 years of strife, are suffering deprivation, terror, and death.

This morning, before Parliament, we had 2,000 Canadians of Lebanese origin who came here. Along with many of my colleagues from both sides of the House—and I have to thank them for their presence this morning—I heard the Lebanese community here in Canada call upon us to call upon the Government of Canada to use all its diplomatic levers through the United Nations to rid Lebanon of all foreign armies.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Lebanon have suffered much in the past 14 years. They are a determined people. They are a passionate people, but they are a specific people. Let them have the chance so that peace may be established in the part of the world that was once the cradle of civilization. Thank you very much.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

CONSTITUTION OF AUTONOMOUS REGIONAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): On Monday, April 10, Mr. Speaker, Inuit and White citizens alike will elect the six members of the constituent assembly which will draft the constitution of a future autonomous regional government for the area.

This election is the result of the process initiated in November 1983 by the then Québec Premier René Lévesque when he asked the Inuit to elect their own responsible government.

Having decided in 1987 that territorial rather than ethnic considerations should be the basis for their government, the citizens held a referendum and the majority stated that the members of the constituent assembly would be elected by universal suffrage rather than appointed by the regional corporations, and that their work would be financed by a voluntary tax.

Twice the National Assembly of Québec passed a unanimous resolution asking the chief electoral officer to provide expert advice to the people of Nunavik to ensure that the election is carried out in accordance with the basic rules of democracy.

To the citizens of Nunavik, Mr. Speaker, I say: Kanatamiolimaate opigochoukpout amalou sapoummissoutik ilitinik.

You have the admiration and support of all Canadians!

POLAND—ACCORD REACHED BETWEEN SOLIDARNOSC MOVEMENT AND GOVERNMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I know that all Members of the House will join with me in expressing congratulations to the Polish people who yesterday achieved great progress toward the signing of an accord by the Government and the Solidarity movement.

This accord, which reinstates the legal status of Solidarnosc and allows for the first democratic elections in Poland since the Second World War, marks a significant step towards national reconciliation.

The agreement represents a great achievement for Nobel Peace Laureate Lech Walesa and the Solidarnosc movement. They have shown enormous courage and determination over the last several years, and it is very gratifying, indeed, to witness their success.

What has occurred in Poland reflects other changes in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union that the Canadian Government has yet to respond to adequately in its analysis of East–West relations. We urge the Canadian Government to do some new thinking of its own.

RED CROSS

ASSISTANCE TO VICTIMS OF ARMENIAN EARTHQUAKE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, I visited Soviet Armenia last week, along with three Canadian Armenian leaders. I want to praise the Red Cross for their vital assistance following the disastrous earthquake on December 7, 1988, in which 50,000 to 100,000 people lost their lives.

We visited several areas, including the town of Spitak which was totally destroyed. Of the 50,000 persons who lived there, approximately 20,000 perished.

The Canadian Government contributed $5 million through the Red Cross and Canadians donated clothes and medical supplies and other assistance totalling almost another $10 million

The real need now is for homes. Five hundred thousand Soviet Armenians are homeless. Many are living in tents and shacks. Winter is only six months away. I urge the Government and Canadians to give further assistance.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON – REMOVAL OF FOREIGN ARMIES URGED

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, today I call for an end to the suffering in Lebanon. The people of Lebanon have endured 15 years of war, destruction, violence and terror.

Civil war has broken out, and once again we are witnessing the effect that the occupation of foreign military forces are vhaving on this already devastated country.

I am therefore calling upon the Canadian Government to continue to exercise a leadership role in peacekeeping by pressing for the withdrawal of all foreign military forces currently occupying Lebanon, with the exception of the United Nations Forces.

Like all other nations, the Lebanese people should have the right to cultural independence and self-government without any outside influence. Now is the time to put an end to the slaughter!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

BILL C-74 – IMPORTANCE OF IMPLEMENTING REGULATIONS

Mr. Denis Pronovost (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, for the second time in less than three months, the Belgo pulp and paper mill in Shawinigan has been responsible for a major discharge of pollutants into the Saint-Maurice River.

This mill, Mr. Speaker, is recognized as one of the worst polluters in the whole country.

Parliament passed Bill C-74 respecting the protection of the environment in May 1988. I now ask the Minister to implement as soon as possible the necessary regulations to make this act truly operational. Time has come for uncooperative corporations to toe the line. It is also our duty to do so. This is precisely the task which the government will tackle in the coming weeks with a firm commitment on this issue.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CALL FOR APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, today the Minister responsible for Canada Post received a letter from the Canadian Union of Postal Workers citing cases of worker harassment and severe inefficiencies within the postal system.

In that letter CUPW called for a Royal Commission of Inquiry into the management practices, accessibility, quality and level of service in the Canada Post Corporation.

I and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, are well aware of the problems facing the people who work for Canada Post and the people who receive the services of Canada Post.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we welcome the call for the Royal Commission and urge the Government to take the only responsible route open to it today—acknowledge that problems exist within the Post Office and, indeed, that operations there are not perfect, and agree to this reasonable request made today by the president of CUPW.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY—FUND RAISING IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock): Mr. Speaker, several years ago the New Democrats of Ontario were caught laundering money on behalf of civic politicians in the city of Toronto. They got their knuckles rapped, but that did not stop the operation. They simply moved it to British Columbia.

In a fund raising letter, the Mayor of Surrey says:

> To help please mail a cheque to the Surrey Civic Electors, 7222 King George Highway, Surrey, B.C.
> P.S. Remember this donation is tax receiptable if made out to the NDP and you get a tax credit of 75 per cent for the 1st $100—donated per year, 50 per cent for the next $400—donated per year.

I would call on the Minister of National Revenue, Mr. Speaker, to do a complete audit of the books of the New Democratic Party in B.C. to see to what extent the Canadian people have been robbed of their money.

If they are not going to be ethical they should at least be legal.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CALL FOR APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, early this morning the Canadian Union of Postal Workers made a formal request to the Minister responsible for Canada Post to institute a Royal Commission of Inquiry into the management practices, accessibility, quality and level of service offered by the Canada Post Corporation.

Mr. Speaker, there have been no fewer than three suicides this year of Canada Post employees. There are 52,000 grievances of employees right now and the level of service has been deteriorating steadily.

On behalf of my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, I want to urge the Minister to initiate this Royal Commission of Inquiry at the earliest opportunity. There is no doubt that the grieving employees are not always right, Mr. Speaker, but they cannot be always wrong either, and the Government should do something to improve the level of service and the working conditions at Canada Post.

WORLD JUNIOR WOMEN'S CURLING CHAMPIONSHIP WON BY FUNK RINK

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (St. Albert): Mr. Speaker, on Easter Sunday four young women from Spruce Grove, Alberta, became the toast of the curling world.

The Funk Rink, coached by Carole Larsen, with Laurelle Fund, lead, and Cindy Larsen, second, and Sandy Symyrozum, third, and Ladawn Funk, skip, won the World Junior Women's Curling Championship.

With superior skill they successfully met and beat the top competitors from around the globe. These young women are to be admired for their sportsmanship, their determination, their grace under pressure. Certainly, they set an example for young people everywhere.

• (1410)

Mr. Speaker, I am sure I speak for all Canadians and for my colleagues in the House when I offer these young women our heartiest congratulations as World Curling Champs.

Three cheers for the funky foursome from Spruce Grove, Alberta!

TRADE

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—COUNTERVAIL DUTY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, on February 23, 1989 the U. S. Department of Commerce levied a countervail against Sydney Steel Corporation. They did this to the extent of 103.55 per cent, basing their decision, their preliminary decision, on all the government assistance that Sysco had received. They did this, believing that in the Canada-U.S. trade agreement, a subsidy included regional development. On that list of subsidies and on that list of regional development programs they included economic regional development agreements and general development agreements, the backbone of the regional development program in this country. Yet there is no definition in the trade agreement of a subsidy, because the Government did not include one.

I would ask the Government, and particularly the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), to press as hard as he possibly can for the abolition of this countervail against Sydney Steel Corporation, because under the global provisions of the Canada-U.S. trade agreement it should not be there anyway. And if not, then a corporation like Sysco that has taken advantage of Canadian programs, abided by Canadian laws, will be punished retroactively by the laws of the United States.

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute a young man from my riding who, last month, brought great honour to himself and to his entire country when he won the World's Figure Skating Championship in Paris, France.

Mr. Kurt Browning, from Caroline, Alberta, captured the title in stunning fashion after he landed one of his patented quadruple jumps. Through Kurt's hard work, courage and perseverance, he has earned the right to be called the best in the world at what he does.

Mr. Speaker, there is seldom unanimity in this House, but I am confident that all Members will join me today in offering our sincerest congratulations to a fine young Canadian and men's World Figure Skating Champion, Mr. Kurt Browning.

SUDBURY NEUTRINO OBSERVATORY PROJECT

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): I rise today on behalf of my constituents and on behalf of all Canadians to inform this House of a very important scientific project, the Sudbury Neutrino Observatory.

This project affords Canada a unique opportunity to establish a major underground science laboratory of the highest international stature and to perform a truly fundamental experiment of world class.

A neutrino is a particle given off by the sun, and by studying its properties in a unique location deep within Creighton Mine, scientists will have a more complete understanding of the universe.

We are deeply concerned about delays in a funding decision. There are great economic as well as scientific benefits to be gained by this laboratory.

Substantial financial contributions are expected from outside Canada and further delays could jeopardize this support. I ask that a definite commitment be made now, by the federal Government.

TRIBUTE TO MEMORY OF MARCEL LORTIE

Mr Charles DeBlois (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, some time ago, the people of the riding of Montmorency—Orléans and Beauport in particular learned of the passing of Dr Marcel Lortie, a forest engineer who, through his research on tree pathology and the protection of forests, has become a renowned defender of the environment.

In recognition of his remarkable scientific accomplishments and his relentless involvement in the life of his community, notably in the field of education, Dr Lortie was awarded several awards during his brilliant career, in particular the service medal of the Order of Canada last October.

It is my hope that in the not too distant future the government will sponsor an environmental project bearing the name of Marcel Lortie. For my part, I have the honour to inform the House that I have asked the Commission de toponymie du Quebec to add the name of the deceased to its roster, thus ensuring that the great Canadian that was Marcel Lortie will soon be remembered by a place or a building named after him.

INNU PROTEST AGAINST MILITARY LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Today in a courtroom in Northwest River, Labrador, or Nitassinan, 38 people stand charged for desperately trying to draw attention to the fact that military aircraft come screaming over the treetops of their homeland, destroying their livelihood, and threatening the health of their children.

Two of the basic principles which define our national character are that we are not an imperial military power, and that no one should be deprived of the use of their property without due process.

The Government of Canada has a legal and historical obligation to protect the interests of our original Canadian peoples. Platitudes will not stop the sonic booms, the bomb runs at the 30 tactical targets in the area, or the radiation from laser guided bombs. So, I ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux) to press his colleagues to drop the charges against the 38 Innu, and to declare a moratorium on this invasion of the Innu homeland until the environmental review process is complete, and he has negotiated with the Innu in good faith.

THE ENVIRONMENT

SPILLAGE OF TOXIC PRODUCTS INTO SHAWINIGAN RIVER—MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF EVENTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment.

At 4.30 p.m. Tuesday, 7,500 litres of oil contaminated with PCBs poured into the Shawinigan River. At 7.30 p.m. the same day, the Quebec Department of the Environment was informed of the spill. The federal Environment Minister knew nothing about it until 2.15 pm yesterday, shortly before Oral question Perdiod.

When the Environment Minister was informed of the spill, the oil slick had already spread over a distance of 30 kilometres.

On Tuesday night when we had our debate, and when the Minister told the House that oil and toxic waste spills were his number one priorities, the oil slick was spreading in Shawinigan, and he knew nothing about it.

Could the Minister explain the lack of competence he and his Department have shown?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would like to confirm part of the information given just now by the Leader of the Opposition.

I agree that my Department was not notified of the spill when it occurred, and as you know, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act stipulates that a company that is either affected by or causes a spill must immediately notify the federal Environment Department, and this requirement was not met. When we heard about the spill yesterday at noon, it was through the media, and I have therefore asked my officials to look at the possibility of pressing charges against this breach of the provisions of the legislation.

I immediately sent inspectors to the site, however. We have been in touch with the health authorites in Ottawa, and we had legal samples of the river water taken to ascertain whether the water was a health hazard. According to the federal health authorites, it is not. Meanwhile, pumping operations are under way. Last night I spoke to my Quebec counterpart, Mrs. Bacon. We are co-operating closely on this, and the situation is under control.

EMERGENCY MEASURES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, better late than never!

The Minister said the other night that he bases his policy decisions only on concrete facts. Here are some facts:

First, it is the second time in four months that toxic substances have been spilled at that plant. It is also a fact that an internal Environment Canada document named Consolidated Bathurst as one of the most polluting companies in Canada. It is also a fact that the Minister here is responsible for protecting the environment. It is also a fact that he was not aware of a toxic spill although he should have been.

So, what inspection measures—not last-minute, but ongoing—exist to prevent such a catastrophe from happening elsewhere in the country? Why does the Minister not have a mechanism in place to be informed of such a spill as soon as it happens?

• (1420)

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the law passed by this Parliament last June, on the initiative of the Government led by Mr. Mulroney, allows us to regulate the use of some toxic substances, all priority toxic substances, including the PCBs involved in the Shawinigan spill. I have asked my officials to look into the possibility of legal proceedings in this case, in the light of the inspectors' reports we will obtain.

However, this responsibility is shared with the provincial government. The provincial government also has its own inspection system. We are working in close cooperation. It is a lesson we have learned from the mistakes of past governments of which the Opposition Leader's colleagues were part. And I would point out that we can take the action we do now, Mr. Speaker, because of a law passed by this Government where there was absolutely nothing before.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is making a statement to deny that there was a lack of co-ordination between the two governments.

[English]

MINISTER'S PRIORITIES

The Minister also promised when he was sworn in to his new Department that there would be tough new rules for pulp and paper companies. I ask him what that proves when he is not enforcing the existing rules.

Does the Minister say that in pollution matters, and we have heard him here for two days and one night, it is enough for him to say that we are lucky that the clean-up of the spill off Vancouver Island was done by volunteers because the Government was not fast enough; that we are lucky that the Valdez spill off the Alaska Panhandle has not spread yet into Canadian waters, that we are lucky that Hydro-Québec had a dam on the Shawinigan River so that the PCB spill did not go further?

If cleaning up toxic spills is the number one priority of the Minister, why did he not know earlier about this particular spill? Why was there no mechanism in place? Why did he not have in place a plan on the part of the federal Government to control and contain that spill in better co-ordination with the province?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition asked 50 questions in a single sentence. He also referred to spills. Was he talking about the Alaska incident? In that case it is obvious that the Canadian Government has no jurisdiction. This is not its responsibility, nor is it up to this Government to clean up the Alaska oil spill.

With respect to the Shawinigan spill, if that is the one the environment-conscious Leader of the Opposition had in mind, Quebec Government teams and local contractors—paid by the Belgo Company—have undertaken pumping operations to remove the PCB contaminated oil slick. We have been advised that the operations are going smoothly and that the health of the public is not endangered. That is the essential consideration.

As to the rest, reference was made—I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I am taking more time than I should but I was asked a number of questions—to the pollution caused by paper companies.

I must point out to the House that this is the first time a Government has forced companies throughout Canada to provide information which will enable us within a few months to issue the strictest regulations ever in this sector.

REVIEW BY DEPARTMENTAL AUDIT BRANCH—MINISTER'S INTENTIONS

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I have here in my hand a document prepared by the internal audit branch of the Department of Transport dated June 1987. It clearly outlines that the Government totally failed to prepare for the wide-ranging effects of airline deregulation. The review points to critical shortages of air carrier inspectors, air traffic controllers and other safety personnel which greatly contributed to potentially endangering the lives of hundreds of thousands of air travellers in Canada. Your own Department, Minister, told you two years ago what has to be done. Would you tell the Canadian air traveller today—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I could assist the Hon. Member and ask him to put the question through the Chair to the Minister.

Mr. Comuzzi: Mr. Speaker, would he tell the people and this House today what he intends to do with respect to the safety of air travel in Canada considering that document?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have always refused to deal with leaked documents in this House and it is certainly not today that I am about to do so now.

My hon. friend has raised the issue of air travel safety in Canada, an important issue which certainly deserves the Hon. Leader of the Opposition's attention, so that he may understand what was said yesterday and again today, namely, that a process to deal with definite issues was implemented last week. My reply today is the same as yesterday, for the question is unchanged: We feel that the resources available to the Department of Transport are adequate.

This morning, however, I met for two hours with the representatives of air line companies, air line pilots, and air traffic controllers to define ways and means to assess these resources, and I have promised them that, on top of the billions of dollars which the Government has already spent on air safety since 1984, that if as a result of the review carried out by the air industry and the Department of Transport the need to increase the resources was evident, we would certainly increase them. Therefore, as usual, on the basis of the available data, we are acting as a responsible Government.

HAMILTON AIRPORT—REQUEST THAT TRAFFIC BE DIVERTED FROM PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Leader of the Official Opposition needs no direction from the Minister of Transport on whether he should be paying attention in the House of Commons or not. How long have we been hearing these promises from the Minister of Transport? Since 1984? It is promises, promises. Where is the vision?

What the travelling public wants is concrete action from the Minister, not temporary, makeshift approaches to air safety.

The question is this. In light of his statement of February 21, 1989, that Hamilton Airport will unavoidably play a part in the decision the Minister would make in relation to the current air traffic problems, will the Minister then order the redirection of some air traffic such as small planes, executive jets, charter aircraft or cargo aircraft, the stuff that is making it so chaotic at Pearson, to Hamilton Airport immediately?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): On March 9, Mr. Speaker, together with my colleague the Minister of State (Transport), I initiated in Toronto an evaluation process ot the current air traffic problems not only at the Lester B. Pearson airport, but everywhere over the Toronto air corridor. We have received 62 different briefs. We have met hundreds of persons and received hundreds of recommendations. Some of them deal with Hamilton, others with Buttonville, Oshawa, and Pearson proper. We are in the process of reviewing these recommendations. Concerning the air traffic not only over Hamilton but also Toronto, I repeat what I said at the time, namely, that decisions will be made without delay on the basis of the air traffic situation as a whole.

DEREGULATION OF AIRLINE INDUSTRY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The internal audit branch document is dated June, 1987, the same month that Bill C–18, the Act to deregulate air travel, was passed by this House. That Act was not proclaimed for another four months. The document went to the Deputy Minister. The Deputy Minister or one of his associates asked for a further review. That review came back saying that the document was basically sound.

• (1430)

I want to know why the Government did not put a hold on the proclamation of deregulation of air transportation until such time as it had the resources necessary to ensure it would happen in a safe way.

Second, I want to know, and the people of Canada want to know, what the Government will finally and specifically do to change the approach, to restructure the Department of Transport, so we have a safe air system in this country.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, once again, it is not a matter of referring to a document as my colleague suggests. Even more so since he sent me a letter today on this question and he said in a press conference today that he would not raise the issue in the House. Well! Let us just say that it has always been the New Democrats' tactic to associate the deregulation of transport with safety. That has nothing to do with it. Canadians today are glad to have an air traffic system that makes air travel accessible almost everywhere in Canada. The industry has developed considerably and at the same time, we have maintained an excellent level of air safety. Last year, there were 5,600,000 take–offs and landings at Canadian airports with a minimum of accidents. I think that my colleague is really going out on a limb when he says now, despite what even the Liberal Party has said, that Canadian skies are unsafe.

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO ENHANCE AIR SAFETY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. It is incredible that a Government that was warned by the Opposition during the debate on freedom to move, during the debate on Bill C-18, that what it was doing would make travel less safe, should proceed as it did. The Government's own Department said the same thing.

What will the Minister do in a concrete way to make air travel safer in this country?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I tried to explain to my colleague—and I think that the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan is acting honestly—what resources we had available for aviation safety. I should tell him that since 1984, the Government has, among other things, invested billions of dollars in upgrading the radar control system. We in Canada will have one of the most "state-of-the-art" systems in the world, with the best technology. We now have extremely qualified pilots, controllers and other personnel. Once again, Mr. Speaker, as I have always said, I repeat that air safety exists in Canada, but I also said that we have met everyone who could help us improve it and we will meet with them again. So, once more, I repeat that air safety exists in Canada, as my friend very well knows.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

ERDA—FUNDING IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It concerns the Speech from the Throne.

After four months of uncertainty, the people of Atlantic Canada and, indeed, all regions of Canada waited for the Government to state quite clearly its full commitment to regional development programs. But, on Monday, after 11 pages of rhetoric and thousands of empty words, there were four letters that the people of Atlantic Canada were waiting for but did not find. Those four letters are ERDA, Economic and Regional Development programs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. MacDonald: While I have the attention of the Government, Mr. Speaker, I suggest perhaps it would add in that word in the next Speech from the Throne, and maybe the Prime Minister could answer a question concerning its absence.

Will the Prime Minister please give the assurance to this House, to the people of Atlantic Canada, and to the Premiers of Atlantic Canada that his Government will continue to pursue the ERDA process and that he will immediately remove the freeze which his Ministers have put on that program?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, while the Hon. Member was preparing his question he ought have been in the House where he would have heard the Prime Minister say, just a couple of hours ago, that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency for the Atlantic region, the Western Diversification Office for Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, FEDNOR for northern Ontario, and our programs for Québec will all have their funding continued for the next five-year planning period.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister was in Nova Scotia and announced the formation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, he took great pains to tell the people of Atlantic Canada that this was new money and it was in addition to established programs funding, such as the Economic and Regional Development Agreements on which Atlantic Canada, northern Ontario and western Canada depend.

Is he prepared to say in this House today, as he said when he announced ACOA, that the Government is still committed to the economic regional development process to help wealth creation and distribution in this country?

Mr. Crosbie: Why are you so against it?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it will be in tomorrow's Hansard twice. The Prime Minister said it earlier today. I repeated it by quoting from the Prime Minister's speech.

Ms. Copps: It is a different program.

Mr. Andre: This Government is committed to co-operative economic regional development programs. I do not know how the Prime Minister could have been clearer in his answers, Mr. Speaker.

AVIATION INDUSTRY

TWIN OTTER AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same Minister, the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The Twin Otter aircraft has been a truly remarkable Canadian success story. Since 1966, 844 have been produced in Canada. It has made Canada a world leader in STOL technology and in transportation in remote regions throughout the globe. When the Government sold off de Havilland—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Peterson: —in 1986—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Peterson: —it did not exact one single guarantee for the ongoing production of the Twin Otter in Canada.

My question—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peterson: Is the Government prepared to assure Canadians that it will take steps necessary to ensure the ongoing production in Canada of the Twin Otter?

Mr. Crosbie: What about the Beaver? I support the Beaver.

An Hon. Member: What about the Kittyhawk? Should we go back to producing it again?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the Twin Otter has been a remarkably successful aircraft. They have been produced in large numbers and they are flying all over the world, but so have a lot of other aircraft. The DC-3 was a successful aircraft. But technology has changed. We are into the modern era. There are new airplanes based on the Twin Otter model that are being produced.

If, in fact, there were a market for the older style rather than the newer style of aircraft, I am sure de Havilland would continue to produce them.

BOEING TOOL DESTRUCTION ORDER

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the report commissioned by the Government from Burns Fry has indicated to Canadians that there is a global market still for the Twin Otter.

• (1440)

There are Canadian firms that are prepared to produce the Twin Otter in Canada. The problem is the following. Boeing has issued an order for the destruction of all the tooling necessary to produce any more Twin Otters. Canadians do not want to see the Twin Otter go the way of the Avro Arrow.

Is the Government prepared to intervene today, immediately, and stop that tool destruction order that is being put in force by Boeing?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): A few years ago the Government of Canada was running two airline manufacturers and the taxpayers of Canada were pouring in billion of dollars of subsidies.

Now that they are in the private sector both situations have improved remarkably. The taxpayers are no longer subsidizing the way they were in the past. The Hon. Member is suggesting that we return to those bad old days.

If he knows of private companies that want to continue the production of this aircraft, and they are going to do it with their money and not with the taxpayers' money, then certainly they could make a deal with de Havilland and continue that production. We have not forbidden that activity. They are free to go ahead and do that.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

ERDA AGREEMENTS—FEDERAL FUNDING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My question is directed to the Minister answering questions on regional development. He asked a minute ago how it would be possible to be more specific about regional development funds. I want to give him an opportunity to be more specific.

I listened with interest to the Prime Minister's speech this morning, and what he had to say about funding for ACOA and the Western Diversification Fund. He stated that the funds for those programs would be maintained. He did not mention the ERDA Agreements.

In western Canada there are 39 such agreements, and 16 of them have lapsed; in Atlantic Canada there are 46 agreements, and 24 of them have lapsed. That is different funding from what the Prime Minister spoke about this morning.

Will the Minister guarantee the people of western Canada and Atlantic Canada that the funding equivalent for those ERDA Agreements that have been lapsed will be maintained in the coming years?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister clearly indicated that the funding for all the programs that the Government had put in place over the last three years will continue for a five-year period.

As a Government we have clearly committed, and we remain committed, to the idea of joint development arrangements with our provincial partners.

The question the Hon. Member is asking me about the details in terms of dollars and cents will have to await the Budget.

SYSCO STEEL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I say to the Minister that I am interested in details, and the people of western and Atlantic Canada are also interested in details.

Earlier the Prime Minister, and the Minister who quoted him, did not mention the ERDA Agreements. That is what I am asking about. He mentioned a specific agency in western Canada and a specific agency in Atlantic Canada that have quite different budgets independent of the ERDA Agreements.

The Premiers in western Canada and Atlantic Canada are concerned about ERDA Agreements.

In February of this year the United States Government made a ruling in terms of the trade agreement against Sysco Steel, in part based on the specific inclusion, and I have it here for the Minister if he is yelling. The specific inclusion of the ERDA Agreements is one of the reasons these have not been renewed. That case has already been made in the United States against ERDA Agreements.

If it is not so, what action has the Government taken to re-establish the full legitimacy of the Sysco program?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I hate to repeat the arguments that were made ad nauseam during the election campaign.

Our regional development programs are not threatened by any Free Trade Agreement. Last year, next year, any particular situation can be challenged in respect of whether or not it represents a trade subsidy. The Free Trade Agreement has not changed that one bit.

This Government remains committed to joint economic development arrangements with our provincial partners. We do not necessarily mean committed to every—there may be some changes—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: If the Hon. Member has the patience to wait three weeks he will see the Budget from my colleague, the Minister of Finance, and then he can make his judgments.

Mr. Broadbent: The people of Atlantic Canada and western Canada have already had imposed upon them a high interest rate policy designed for inflation in Toronto. They want guarantees that they are going to have the same money for regional development, and they want them now.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign, the Prime Minister promised that regional development programs would not be affected by the Free Trade Agreement. The Americans decided otherwise. In February, they made a decision that went against our regional development programs.

Is the Minister prepared to guarantee this decision will not have a negative impact on these programs in the future?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. These economic regional development programs are not challenged or affected by the Free Trade Agreement.

This Party, this Government, has demonstrated in a tangible manner more commitment to the regions of this country and to their economic prosperity than any previous Government. We remain committed.

STEETLEY QUARRIES – REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION UNDER ENVIRONMENT PROTECTION ACT

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): My question is for the Minister of the Environment. In my riding we have an environmental time bomb that is waiting to go off, and last week it almost did. We had the evacuation of 75 to 100 families as a result of a mysterious fire at Steetley Quarries.

In view of specific mention in the Speech from the Throne that the federal Government intends "to further the process of cleaning up dangerous land sites", and because many of my constituents are outraged about an earlier history of PCBs stored at that site, and they are worried about Steetley's extremely cosy reationship with Ontario's provincial authorities responsible for guarding the public interest in connection with the site, will the Minister consider invoking Section 108 of the Canadian Environment Protection Act to determine precisely what sensitive toxic materials Steetley has been dumping, burying, and burning on the escarpment?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the Hon. Member that happily the new federal law on the environment provides a way to cope with this type of question.

Section 108 of this law authorizes any two persons who are residents of Canada to petition the Minister to trigger an investigation into any alleged impropriety. The only thing to do is get such a petition, and I will be happy to respond to it.

BELGO PLANT – REQUEST THAT PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION MEASURES BE TIGHTENED

Mr. Denis Pronovost (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, for the information of the Leader of the Opposition whose comments a few minutes ago were somewhat confused when he mentioned the name of the town of Shawinigan for the first time in his life, and considering the fact that the Belgo plant in Shawinigan comes under provincial jurisdiction and the fact that the St.Maurice River is also under provincial jurisdiction, could the Minister of the Environment ask his provincial counterpart whether her province's environmental regulations could be applied more strictly in the case of the Belgo plant in Shawinigan?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as I had the privilege of stating earlier in my reply to the Leader of the Opposition, I have already been in touch with my counterpart, the Quebec Environment Minister. I will be discussing the situation with her later today, and I may add that Canada's new environmental legislation has expanded the role of the federal Government and the Department of the Environment. Today, on the basis of the new regulations, we are able to intervene to punish the reprehensible acts that constitute a violation of these regulations.

HOUSING

MINISTER'S INFLUENCE

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Housing. The Minister's appointment has raised many hopes and expectations. Unfortunately, these hopes have been dashed by the complete absence of any reference to housing in the Throne Speech. This is a matter of renewed concern for Canada's 100,000 homeless and for low-income Canadians who want decent housing.

My question is as follows: Are we to conclude that the Minister has no influence on his cabinet colleagues or should we conclude that the Minister's appointment was merely a way for the Government to stop his questions and criticism in the House, in other words, keep him quiet?

• (1450)

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear that the Hon. Member shares with me my concern and that of the Government with the housing crisis, the housing problems in Canada. He also shares the concern with the housing problems of low-income Canadians.

I think he will agree with me that the appointment by the Prime Minister of a Minister solely responsible for nothing but housing is an indication of the priority this Government places on the subject.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Redway: If the Hon. Member will cast his memory back to the last Speech from the Throne he will know that there was nothing in it with respect to the release of the Downsview Airport land either. In fact, it was released. We will be proceeding with other measures to improve housing for Canadians.

CONSTRUCTION OF HOUSES ON DOWNSVIEW SITE

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister will allow me to ask him a question about the Downsview lands.

On December 15 last this Minister, then a back-bencher, asked a question in relation to housing on the Downsview site. It is not surprising that the answer coming from the then Minister was far from satisfactory. Therefore, will this Minister now give us a response to his original question which demonstrates the understanding and the compassion that the previous Minister was simply not capable of giving?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Martin: Will he tell us the precise date upon which we will see housing being built on this site? Will he confirm that much more than 25 per cent of the site will be made available for affordable housing for seniors and the handicapped?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that we are proceeding as quickly as possible with the development of the site.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Redway: First, we are dealing with the Department of National Defence to shift the defence housing that is currently on the site on to another part of the site. Second, we are proceeding to put in place with the Municipality of North York a development agreement in order to put housing on the site just as quickly as we possibly can.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

VISIBLE MINORITIES—REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE AMENDED

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. On March 21 the Canadian Ethnocultural Council published a report indicating that the employment equity legislation was not working and that visible minorities are still seriously under-represented in major corporations under federal jurisdiction. The CEC studied 16 companies. Only three of these had acceptable records. A December report of her own Department made similar findings.

Considering that there has been an unfortunate increase in Canada of racial incidents in recent months will the Minister now agree to amend the employment equity legislation to apply sanctions against those firms which fail to obey the law?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): I want to thank the Hon. Member for his interest in a social measure our Government introduced in 1986. Ninety-six per cent of the companies affected by this measure have submitted their reports, which proves the measure was both important and necessary. However, need I remind the Hon. Member that since we are working with people, there is always room for improvement!

[English]

REQUEST THAT ALL GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS BE INCLUDED IN LEGISLATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, that answer is totally unacceptable. Of course in the employment equity legislation the only thing the companies have to do is report. They do not have to show any progress. They really do not have to implement employment equity legislation. There should be sanctions in that legislation.

Another recent report shows that visible minorities are less than 1 per cent in federal government Departments when they should be more than 6 per cent. It is difficult for the Government to preach to the private sector when its own record is bad.

Will the Minister now in these circumstances amend the employment equity legislation to cover all federal government Departments so they will have the same requirements as the private sector even though she is not enforcing them against the private sector?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, the Government introduced a measure that had never existed before. I am referring to our Government, the one I represent. We submitted a report. Progress has been made but there is room for improvement. Sanctions have been imposed on companies that failed to comply with the legislation, and of course we intend to comply with the legislation and enforce it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NAMIBIA—ACTIONS OF UNITED NATIONS PEACE FORCE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who until now seems to have accepted the South African version of the bloody slaughter in Namibia. Is the Secretary of State now prepared to admit that the South African story was too hastily and tragically accepted by a UN contingent because the actions of the Security Council, of which Canada is a member, were too inadequate, too badly organized, too badly led, and too badly intimidated to act effectively?

Will he also admit that the process in Namibia has from the beginning been flawed in allowing the South African Government to manipulate events down there? Is it not about time something was done to straighten up that mess?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the Hon. Member's rhetoric gets ahead of the facts. He is asking this House to suggest that the Namibia peace plan, which I had thought we all hoped would succeed, is a fraud. I do not regard it as a fraud.

Mr. Riis: He did not say that.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I regard it to be something that is very gravely threatened now by events in southern Africa. It seems to me that it is the job of this country, and it should be the determination of Members of the House, to do everything we can to ensure that all parties—SWAPO, South Africa, and anyone else involved—respect the agreement so that we can get on with keeping peace in Namibia and in southern Africa. That is what we are trying to do. I had hoped that we would have the co-operation of the Hon. Member in doing that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROLE OF CANADA IN SECURITY COUNCIL

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs dishonours himself and this House by using words that I did not use.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: The Speaker will know that this Government abdicated its responsibility as a member of the contact group, allowed the UN Council on Namibia to be excluded from the peace process, and was a participant when inadequate troops on behalf of the peace-keeping forces of the United Nations were sent to South Africa. My question to him is simple and straightforward.

Is the Secretary of State prepared to act in the Security Council to ensure that the peace accord, including the elections, is fairly and equitably implemented? In particular, will he demand and assist the rapid deployment of the 7,500-person peace force that was supposed to have been sent there rather than the 4,500 that are not there yet?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I misquoted the Hon. Member I will certainly apologize for that. The record will show whether in fact he called the peace plan in Namibia a fraud or not. There were problems with the development—

Some Hon. Members: Flawed!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There were problems, Mr. Speaker, with the development of that process. Those were problems that Canada acted on very vigorously at the time to try to resolve. Among the ways in which the problems involving the setting up of UNTAG was resolved was to get an agreement—and Canada was instrumental in getting that agreement—that the Secretary General, if he believed it was necessary, could recommend to the Security Council that there be an increase in the number of the UNTAG troops up to the figure that had been agreed upon some several years ago. That was a provision that proved to be acceptable to all members of the Security Council.

We are not here debating history. Surely, our preoccupation has to be how do we repair a peace operation that is going badly in Namibia now? The preoccupation of this Government has been to try to get more troops in quickly. We have already urged more deployment. We have already indicated that in addition to the Canadians who are already there we are prepared to send Canadian troops in more quickly, if that would be helpful. We are looking at other ways in which we and other countries which are participating in UNTAG might help to speed up the deployment.

This is a serious problem. It should not be treated trivially or for partisan reasons in this House. Surely we all have a determination and obligation here to try to make the UN peace plan in Namibia effective, a plan on which Canadians have worked so long.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

RAFFERTY-ALAMEDA DAM CONSTRUCTION PROJECT—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: Earlier today, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg Transcona (Mr. Blaikie) applied to the Chair for an emergency debate involving a proposed operation on the Rafferty-Alameda part of the Province of Saskatchewan. His concern was, of course, that some people have wanted a federal environmental assessment review project done before construction begins. It is of course a matter of interest and concern to all Members of the House that I have to say to the Hon. Member that it does not come within the proper terms of the rule for an emergency debate, at least not at this time. I also want to say to the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) that I indicated that as a consequence of his request to the Chair earlier today, I would come back to the House at an appropriate time and discuss very briefly the guidelines that exist for the introduction of an emergency debate, and I will do that, but I would prefer to do it perhaps later this week.

I should advise Hon. Members that I have a joint application on a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) and the Hon. Member for Kingston and the The Islands (Mr. Milliken). I will hear the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands.

PRIVILEGE

GRANTING OF SUPPLY

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, to say that I am pleased to rise on this question of privilege today would not be accurate, but I feel it is incumbent on me to raise this issue before the House because I think it is a very serious question of privilege that affects the rights of all Hon. Members. To state the point very succinctly, it is my position that our privileges as Members have been breached in that we have been denied our ancient right to grant or withhold supply.

I say that, Mr. Speaker, because this is a right that is held by all Hon. Members of this House of Commons, and it is one that has been held from the very earliest times. Over hundreds of years, Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary system has evolved a series of rules for dealing with the business of supply and the right of the House to control that business.

The law in this regard is clearly stated in the Financial Administration Act, and I would like to read, Mr. Speaker, Section 26 of that Act which states the following:

> Subject to the Constitution Act, 1867 to 1982, no payment shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund without the authority of Parliament.

The right of Parliament to control finances of the country have been undoubted and has been written upon by many of the learned writers on parliamentary law. I would like to cite a couple of the authorities. I refer to Bourinot's Second Edition, and I am using an older edition because I want to indicate the ancient nature of this right. On page 543 the author states:

> The principal purpose of the House of Commons, in fact, is the consideration and criticism of the estimates and the taxes required to meet the public expenditures; and the committees in question—

Here he is talking about the committee of Supply and the committee of Ways and Means.

> —and the committees in question are the parliamentary machinery by means of which the House chiefly exercises its political and constitutional functions.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing more fundamental to the operation of this House than the business of supply.

The point is further dealt with in a quote in Bourinot at page 546 and the learned author is quoting Erskine May, the Ninth Edition which was the last edition written by that learned parliamentary jurist. He says the following:

> The ancient constitutional doctrine that the redress of grievances is to be considered before the granting of supplies, is now represented by the practice of permitting every description of amendment to be moved on the question for the speaker leaving the chair, before going into the committee of supply or ways and means.

The next citation, Sir, that I rely on is in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, the Fifth Edition, at page 181, Citation 539 (2) and the citation sets out the relationship, Mr. Speaker, between the sovereign and this House in matters relating to supply. It is very clear, and it says the following:

> The sovereign, being the executive power, is charged with the management of all the revenue of the state and with all payments for the public service. The Crown, therefore, acting with the advice of its responsible ministers, makes known to the Commons the pecuniary necessities of the Government; the Commons, in return, grants such aids or supplies as are required to satisfy these demands; and they provide by taxes, and by the appropriation of other sources of the public income, the ways and means to meet the supplies which they have granted. Thus the Crown demands money, the Commons grants it, and the House of Lords assents to the grants: but the Commons do not vote money unless such taxation be necessary for the Public Service, as declared by the Crown through its constitutional advisers.

That is the basic position that has been the law of this country since Confederation. It has been part of the constitutional law of the United Kingdom for over 400 years.

An Hon. Member: It is not in the Yellow Pages.

Mr. Milliken: The assertions concerning the right of this House to grant supply have been maintained on numerous occasions, and I would like to quote two very distinguished former Members of this House. Hon. Members opposite I am sure will be aware of at least one of these occasions because it was a famous occasion. I would like to quote from the Right Hon. William Lyon McKenzie King and on a particularly famous occasion on June 30, 1926 when he was asking certain questions in this House which caused acute embarrassment to my friends' predecessors. On page 5212 of Hansard for June 30, 1926, Mr. King said the following:

> I want this information before we vote public money to hon. gentleman who, in our opinion, are not entitled to spend one five-cent piece of the public money. I ask my hon. friend who is now leaving the House whether he has taken any oath of office this year.

Mr. Speaker, that quotation again indicates the ongoing nature of the right of this House to question supply proceedings and, indeed, Sir Henry Drayton who was answering as head of the Government at that time—the Government went down the next day, as you will know—indicated that he had no objection to Mr. King's statement of policy in that regard. It was unquestioned that in fact the House of Commons had the right to withhold or grant supply.

I quote another person, Sir, the Right Honourable John George Diefenbaker, when he was Leader of the Opposition. On October 21, 1963, on a motion that the House go into Committee of Supply which was the equivalent of our current day supply motions, he said at page 3823 of Hansard the following:

> Mr. Speaker, this is a traditional opportunity that is provided in the House of Commons for the bringing before the House of such matters as are of importance and deserve the consideration of the House. It is historic, it is traditional and it assures a privilege that is part and parcel of parliamentary government. It enables the house to give consideration to those matters which, in the opinion of its membership, have not been dealt with in a proper or expeditious manner. Furthermore, it enables the house, where amendments are moved, to judge the government of the day on the basis of any amendment or subamendment that may be put forward.

I probably do not need to refer to Standing Order 80(1), Mr. Speaker, but I will do so because it is so direct and it points again to the rights of this House in particular on this matter, and it reads as follows:

> All aids and supplies granted to the Sovereign by the Parliament of Canada are the sole gift—

I stress the word "gift".

> —of the House of Commons, and all bills for granting such aids and supplies ought to begin with the House, as it is the undoubted right of the House to direct, limit, and appoint in all such bills the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of such grants, which are not alterable by the Senate.

In the commentary in the new annotated Standing Orders which Your Honour tabled just yesterday in this House and which I think are excellent, it states the following, and I think it is very important:

> Section 1 of Standing Order 80, unchanged from Confederation, asserts the Commons' claim to pre-eminence in financial matters. The text copies a resolution from the United Kingdom passed in 1678—

Over 300 years ago, Sir.

> —and is based on section 53 of the Constitution Act, 1867, which states that 'Bills for appropriating any part of the public revenue, or for imposing any tax or impost, shall originate in the House of Commons'.

I could go on reading the rest of the commentary but the point of the reference, Mr. Speaker, is to stress the authority of the House of Commons. That authority is asserted every time this House attends in the other place for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to a money Bill. You, Mr. Speaker, on every occasion, when we attend there and Royal Assent is sought to a money Bill ask for that Royal Assent personally in these words. Perhaps I could quote Your Honour:

> May it Please Your Honour:
> The Commons of Canada have voted Supplies required to enable the Government to defray certain expenses of the Public Service.
> "In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following Bill—

Then you give the title of the Bill.

> —to which Bills I humbly request Your Honour's assent

Those words, Mr. Speaker, have been used since Confederation in the granting of Royal Assent to money Bills in this Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, what is the position that we find ourselves in today that has caused this problem? I refer again to Beauchesne's, page 167, Citation 476. The author here is discussing the Business of Supply. He says:

> The action taken by the House of Commons upon the request for aids and supply for the Public Service made in the Speech from the Throne, is for the appointment, pursuant to—

Now Standing Order 81(1)

> —of a continuing Order of the Day for the consideration of the Business of Supply.

What has happened in this particular case? I suggest that in every Speech from the Throne since Confederation, except for three, the speech has contained particular words, and those words have occurred at the end—or very close to the end—of every speech. I will read the words because they are instructive. The Governor General or the Sovereign always reads these. The words are as follows:

> Members of the House of Commons, you will be asked to appropriate the funds required for the services and payments authorized by Parliament.

The three Speeches from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, in which those words have not occurred are the following: First fall of 1930, which was a special session called by the then Prime Minister Bennett, to raise duties and excise taxes in Canada to protect us from the ravages of the Depression. The second was on December 12, 1988, when we were called to deal with one item of business, the Free Trade Agreement. And the third was on Monday, April 3, 1989, Mr. Speaker. There was no request in the Throne Speech on Monday that this House take on its constitutional responsibilities to deal with supply.

Mr. Speaker, it is unprecedented. Upon our return from the other place, following our attendance there for the Speech from the Throne, as recorded on page 5 of Hansard, the President of the Treasury Board, pursuant to Standing Order 81, moved: "That the House at its next sitting consider the Business of Supply." And that motion was agreed to on Monday of this week, Sir. Why did we move to consider the Business of Supply when no supply had been requested from Her Excellency, the Governor General, at the opening of the session? It was not on the agenda.

I suggest that the reason it was not included in the Speech from the Throne is that this Government did not know what it was doing. It has, in my submission, no appreciation of the constitutional niceties of this country. It acts without any sense, in my submission, of parliamentary propriety and it is ignoring the essentials of the Canadian Constitution in the way it has conducted itself.

The Government has chosen to ignore the privileges and rights of the Members of this House and it has chosen to help itself to the Treasury of Canada by passing Orders in Council and having signed Governor General's warrants.

This year alone, from the information I have obtained, three Governor General's warrants have been passed. The dates of those are January 19, February 16, and April 1.

This is, in my submission, Sir, unprecedented. Never before have the provisions of the Financial Administration Act relating to Governor General's warrants being used at a time when Parliament had sat following an election. Always, the right to appropriate to themselves the public moneys of Canada, by using Governor General's warrants has been exercised before during an election campaign or in the period following an election and before Parliament had been recalled.

The difficulty that the Government has found itself in, Sir, is particularly serious because of the passage on April 1 of an Order in Council permitting the issue of yet another warrant, and I suggest that it constitutes a flagrant abuse of the rights of this House.

We were here in December, Sir; supply could have been asked for, could have been sought and granted at that session or in the period following. Mr. Speaker, we adjourned until the beginning of April. We could have been called in March. Since 1950, Mr. Speaker, this House has sat in March for a considerable period of the month of March in every year except three: In 1958—and my friends opposite will recall that there was an election campaign going on in the country that year, which ended on March 31. In 1963 there was another election campaign which ended more happily.

And in 1980 an election had just ended the previous month and so the House had not yet been recalled. Only on those three occasions, since 1950, has this House of Commons not sat during the month of March. We could have been recalled in the month of March to deal with the Business of Supply and to see that the Government got the money to which it was entitled after due consideration and after an opportunity for the Members of this House, Sir, to present their grievances. But I submit that in its abuse of the intention of the Financial Administration Act which was not to permit this wholesale plundering of the Treasury, the Government is attempting to take unto itself the power to spend the public money without recourse to Parliament.

And that, Sir, comes from a Party which has always claimed to be a stout defender of this institution. By scooping this money from the public purse without the authority of this House, Mr. Speaker, I say that the Government has tampered with the tax dollars that it has extracted from Canadians in an improper manner and it has violated the essential privileges of every Member of this House.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to join in raising this issue, that a letter was jointly signed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands and myself. I want, first, Mr. Speaker, to state that I feel we have a prima facie case of privilege, and if you agree with us that we do, then I am willing to move the motion necessary to refer this to the appropriate committee.

Mr. Speaker, of course you will be aware that the parliamentary privileges of Members of this House, as defined by Erskine May in his 20th Edition state that parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the high court of Parliament and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their function.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to note—and the Government across will presumably state in defence of the issue before us today—that the Financial Administration Act, in their view, enables them to do what it is that they have done over the last few months, which is to seek Governor General's warrants on three occasions since January 1.

While the Government could make a case for two of those Governor General's warrants, Mr. Speaker, it certainly has no legitimacy at all in making this kind of justification in the third case, which is the warrant that was sought in the period after April 1, after the fiscal year had terminated.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Order in Council 1989—545 was dated April 1, 1989, and it authorized the Government to spend some $6.2 billion, those funds to carry it through for the next 45 days. I should say that is an amount of up to $6.2 billion, because of course the Government could choose to raise less than that amount if it so wished.

Now, Mr. Speaker, under Section 47 of the Financial Administration Act, the government has also borrowed $1 billion of those dollars. Not only, of course, have they spent the dollars in question, but they have had to borrow $1 billion of those dollars. The issue that is important here, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government, in 1985 or so, invoked that the privileges of this House had been abused by the fact that the Senate was delaying an Appropriation Bill at that time and that in turn caused the Government to have to borrow on short-term notes at higher interest rates.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that these latest funds borrowed under Section 47 of the Financial Administration Act, were borrowed in exactly the same manner as those funds that were borrowed in the past and for which the Government claimed that it was having to borrow in a manner which was inappropriate and only to be used in an emergency, that emergency allegedly having been caused by someone else.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Governor General's warrants have not been used very many times since Confederation. I should note that we are the only country in the Commonwealth that still has such an instrument. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, in the British House of Commons, if the House were defeated on a motion of want of confidence, it would meet the next day and vote hold supply for the government to last for the electoral period and a sufficient amount of time afterwards in order to have a quick recall of Parliament so that Parliament could then exercise its traditional role of granting or denying supply.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are only 10 occasions this century in which supply was given or granted to government by way of a Governor General's warrant. On every one of those occasions, supply was sought to cover the period immediately after the election. At this time the Government argued that it did not have sufficient time to recall Parliament.

That argument was sometimes made by the Opposition, be it Conservative or Liberal Opposition, that the Government indeed did have sufficient time. I remind you of the 1979 election, Mr. Speaker, in which the Government took a particularly long time to recall Parliament and then, of course, in the interval it did not have the funds necessary to operate.

This particular issue is without precedent simply because Parliament already had sat and the only reason that Parliament did not give supply to the Government is that the Government never sought supply from Parliament. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but as my distinguished and learned colleague has indicated, it has failed to seek supply on two separate occasions.

The new annotated Standing Orders provided to us—although, of course, the only official version is the green version we have—are the version that the Government was showing in the House a few moments ago as the ideal source of reference from which to argue these points. I bring to the attention of the Government House Leader that it states very clearly under the explanation note to Standing Order 81 that: "At the commencement of each session the House shall designate by motion a continuing order of the day for the consideration of supply". It states further that this particular provision is there because of the convention that has always existed whereby in the Throne Speech you find the phrase that my distinguished colleague raised with you a little earlier, whereby the Governor General states that you will be asked to appropriate the funds required to carry on the services and expenditures authorized by Parliament.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the actions of the Government in this particular case were not only erroneous in the fact that they sought to gain funds to operate the Government by Governor General's warrant in the new fiscal year, which it they cannot possibly legitimize under either the Financial Administration Act or any of our conventions—and no Estimates, of course, but they fail as well, Mr. Speaker, and I think more importantly, in not requesting supply in the traditional way.

I want to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by bringing to your attention excerpts from the Encyclopaedia of Parliament, 1972 by Philip Laundy—a person that we all know. Mr. Laundy states the following at page 609 of that document: "The House of Commons has exclusive control over financial business and all financial legislation. . .". He continues: "The House of Lords is not empowered to amend a money Bill. . ." He states further: "The granting of public money and the imposition of taxation are strictly the functions of Parliament,. . .". They are strictly the function of Parliament, Mr. Speaker, and I think that you will want perhaps to review that document when you arrive at your conclusions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in closing I just want to bring to your attention the fact that several authorities in parliamentary matters have discussed this issue in the past. Indeed, it was Senator Eugene Forsey who, upon several occasions, raised this issue in the Senate saying it was inappropriate for Parliament to be dispensed with in such a cavalier manner by the Government, that Parliament in fact should be granted its traditional role to grant or deny supply to the Government.

If there ever was a justification to use the Financial Administration Act this certainly is the case, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the only example in which the Financial Administration Act was used outside of an electoral period was to repair the roof of the first Parliament Building in the 1890s, and at that time the session was so short that it was impossible to recall Parliament in order to vote the funds to fix the roof. So the Government sought at that point the Governor General's warrant to do so.

I do not know if there is any leak in the roof up there on the Government side, but I submit that in modern times such as these in which we live, there is very little excuse at any time to use a Governor General's warrant, and perhaps we should seriously consider abolishing that kind of an instrument from our Financial Administration Act. Notwithstanding the fact that I recognize that it is there, that provision of the Financial Administration Act was never meant to supersede the traditional role and duties of this Parliament. We have a right not only to grant or to deny supply but we have a right to air the grievances of Parliament and the grievances of the people of Canada prior to granting or denying that supply.

In this particular period, $6.2 billion has been raised and $1 billion has been borrowed without asking the consent of this Parliament. I think that after examining this, you will find that we indeed have a prima facie case of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) in a moment, but before moving on to the Hon. Member for Kamloops, I wonder if I could ask the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) or the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) if, in the extensive research which they have obviously done, they have been able to determine when historically the first Throne Speech appears.

Second, can they advise the Chair as to whether that Throne Speech was prepared by the Commons or prepared the King's Council. It may take a little while to find that information, but I would like to have it.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I am pleased to participate in this debate on this important matter, though, as others have indicated, I would prefer not to even have this discussion.

I think what has been raised today is obviously fundamental to what we do here. This is one of those rare occasions when general members of the public bring to one's attention what they believe is an impropriety of the way Parliament is conducting its business. I must say that while we were awaiting the recall of Parliament, a number of constituents brought to my attention the fact that the Government was in fact using Governor General warrants. They did not refer to it as that, but through the short news reports they read, they were wondering if this was an appropriate way for Parliament to proceed.

As previous speakers have indicated, and I do not plan to go over the material which they presented extremely well, the fact is that the Government has now obtained in excess of $6 billion though the use of Governor General warrants when in fact Parliament could have been sitting and should have been sitting. As a matter of fact, you will be aware, Mr. Speaker, that a number of Members actually called to your attention the need, in their opinion, for the House to resume.

We as parliamentarians all understand that the fundamental task before us is to examine carefully the way the Government uses, or in some cases, some of us would believe misuses, the taxpayers' money. That is our fundamental task. That is why we have been elected from our various constituencies.

At this time, it is appropriate that we examine carefully and either grant or withhold supply. Most of us look forward to that process. As a matter of fact, the House Leaders met to arrange at least for the remaining part of this session ways and means of dealing with supply to get around some of the problems we face because of the summer interruption. We take our jobs very seriously in this respect.

As the others have indicated, we have seen the Government spending public money without the authority of Parliament when there is no reason for it. We understand that in the past, Governor General warrants have been used, but there has been a point with one exception, and that was, of course, when the House was simply unable to be called and to have called the House would perhaps have been inappropriate, but such was not the case during this interval.

I think this is a very serious issue, serious enough that one's constituents bring it to one's attention. I only regret that I had not raised this earlier, but I am pleased that my colleagues in the Official Opposition have done so.

Consider that in this century, this action has been taken only 10 times. I think we must ask ourselves as Members of Parliament, if this procedure, this process, is not concluded, and the Government feels it quite appropriate to simply not have Parliament sit and to use Governor General warrants to obtain the necessary funds to enable it to fulfil its obligations as it sees them, parliamentarians would not be in a position to examine carefully the items of supply before the various Standing Committees.

I simply conclude by saying that I join with my colleagues from the Official Opposition. I believe it is a very serious violation of the privileges of every Member and a violation of the tradition of Parliament as we have come to know it in Canada. I join with them in asking you to give this very serious consideration, which I know you will. Quite frankly, I look forward to listening to the Government House Leader explain why he feels it is appropriate that once again, and I hate to have to say it, the Government is abusing the traditions of Parliament and the privileges of Members of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Before hearing the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis), perhaps the Hon. Members who have spoken might be of further assistance to the Chair. I would like their view as to exactly at what point the expenditure of public funds becomes legitimate, if one accepts the premise of the argument that is being put to the Chair. In other words, let us assume that the House comes back as it did on April 3. Are Hon. Members then saying that the Government cannot spend money between April 3 and until such date as committees have considered estimates and they have been passed by the House, or is there some other way that the Government can deal with that period which would be a hiatus period, if the argument Hon. Members are putting forward is valid?.

I ask that because I am trying to see clearly the point that is being made. Certainly the fundamental principle that the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken), the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) and the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) have put forward is an ancient one. I think it goes almost without saying, but in trying to deal with the situation now, the Chair may need a little bit of practical advice as to just how a Government would deal with the situation, if it did not use the Financial Administration Act.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could assist the Chair in submitting to you that one will not object, at least I will not object, to the fact that the Government has to spend money in order to continue the operations of the Government during an electoral period, and it has to do that without seeking the advice and consent of Parliament. We could argue, I suppose, philosophically, that we should meet for a number of hours immediately before declaring an election or immediately after it is declared in order to grant supply. I suppose there is a philosophical case to be made for that, but I think that is a point which we could debate when making proposed changes to the Financial Administration Act at some point in the future.

However, that is not the most fundamental point that my colleagues and I were trying to bring to your attention today. It is the immediate one of the use of Governor General warrants. You see the Government had obviously sought Supply for a period of time last summer. It received that Supply, voted by this House, granted later by Her Majesty's representative. What we are objecting to is that after the electoral period, after a reasonable time to recall Parliament, the Government did not choose to ask for Supply. Not only can that case be made but it goes even further, Mr. Speaker. Parliament was recalled. Parliament sat. The Government not only did not seek Supply by way of a Bill, the Government did not even include the traditional motion asking for Supply in the Throne Speech.

Parliament adjourned in December. It could have come back after New Year's some time in order to grant Supply to this Government again. Parliament was not recalled. As a matter of fact, it was prorogued only to return after the fiscal year had ended. Having done that, returned once the fiscal year had ended and a new year had commenced without any funds to operate the Government, then the Government in the new Throne Speech failed again to ask the traditional request of being granted Supply for the purposes of administering the Government.

In fact, it is not the philosophical issue at this immediate moment that we are arguing of doing away with the use of Governor General warrants pursuant to the Financial Administration Act, although we could make that case in the future, it is the misuse of that portion, misuse in such a way that it has denied this Parliament of its fundamental rights and obligations to decide whether or not this Government should have funding and to be able to air the traditional grievances of the citizens before making that decision. That is the right that has been taken away from us. It has been taken away from us by the inaction of the Government in failing to ask for Supply by the inaction in the Throne Speech, by the Government's failing to ask for a money Bill last fall and by the Government failing once again to ask for Supply in the April 3 Throne Speech. There is a further case that the Government deliberately prorogued Parliament rather than recalling it for the purpose of having Parliament deal with the issue of Supply.

That is really the immediate issue that we are bringing to you attention, Mr. Speaker. It is the use or misuse of the Financial Administration Act in a way which is contrary to rights and privileges as parliamentarians.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, to answer the question quite directly on a specific means by which the Government can obtain Supply, I would suggest that it would be open to the Government if it had not scooped the money out of the Treasury already to introduce an interim Supply Bill. In this House this used to be the standard practice. The Government could have done it by calling us last week asking for an interim Supply Bill even before the Speech from the Throne had been dealt with and got it through in a day. Instead of that, the Government chose to wait until after the financial year had begun, called Parliament then and, in effect, trampled on the rights and privileges of the Members of the House.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I realize there are Members who wish to speak in the Throne Speech debate, I will be very brief and stick to the rules.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can help the Minister because I have taken a little time myself in asking some questions. I think I have the point.

I would be very pleased to hear the Minister but I do not think he has to go on overly long.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I got so wrapped up in this, I actually started reading into the books, Mr. Speaker. Let me do this very quickly. Now that we have decided what the burning issue in Kamloops was during the recess, Governor General warrants, let me say this. I think that we have had an interesting debate in the wrong place. First, privilege has to be raised at the first opportunity available. Since this is day four, let us rule out day one. The matter should have been raised on either Tuesday or Wednesday.

Mr. Milliken: It was.

Mr. Lewis: It was not raised on either of those days.

Mr. Milliken: I gave notice.

Mr. Lewis: It was not raised in the House. The Hon. Member simply waited for an appropriate time or perhaps time to get his act together. Two, as I read the Annotated Orders at page 160, it is usually a brief, presentation as to why the Speaker should rule that a prima facie case exists.

I would like to refer hon. friends to Hansard of April 5, 1989, in which a motion was passed with the consent of all members of the House which said "that the Supply proceedings for the 1988 calendar year be subject to the following provisions".

Surely if my hon. friends had a dispute with the way Supply was being dealt with, that was the time to raise this very burning question of privilege, not two days later. First, they were late in submitting it and my hon. friends participated in the unanimous consent in the House for that particular motion.

I submit, and this has nothing to do with the question of privilege, but it was the argument raised during the question of privilege that the Financial Administration Act has three requirements for the issuing of warrants, and all of those requirements have been met. One, Parliament was not in session when they were issued. Two, a payment was urgently required for the public good. Three, there was no other appropriation from which the payment may be made.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is no case of privilege. Even if there were it was too late. It was too late because my hon. friends participated in the House order which decided the matter.

In view of your very interesting admonition, I think that will close my argument.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Minister of Justice. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to deal very briefly with the point that I understand the Government House Leader to be trying to make that the question of privilege has been raised too late.

Let us look very quickly at the sequence. The Throne Speech was read Monday. It was published in Hansard Tuesday. Notice was given yesterday. Under those circumstances I think it could well be argued that we have raised the matter in a very timely fashion. Furthermore, if it had been possible to raise the matter earlier, the effect would have been to act in a rather discourteous manner, first, to members of the government Party who moved and seconded the Address and Reply to the Speech from the Throne, and, second, the House Leader's own Party Leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I do not think that our ability to argue and to have considered the point of privilege in question should be prejudiced in any way through our willingness to deal in a courteous manner with the Prime Minister and Members of his Party.

I respectfully submit that this matter has been submitted in a timely fashion and its importance is such that it deserves to be given the consideration that I know you are interested in giving to it even though it has been raised today rather than yesterday. In any event, I submit that the sequence of events indicates that this has been raised in a very timely fashion.

Furthermore I am informed that the warrants have not yet been tabled in this House. My colleagues found out about them only through telephoning. Maybe the argument might be made on the other hand that we have raised this not too late but too early—I do not want to undermine my own argument by saying that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I just want to illustrate that I think we have done this in a finely balanced way. We have treated the Prime Minister and members of his Party with courtesy in not interrupting or holding up their speeches in raising this point. We have enabled the speech to be printed in Hansard so that we could study it and we have raised this matter, therefore, as I said, at a very timely and appropriate point. I submit that this matter deserves to be considered on its merits.

Mr. Speaker: I think in fairness to all Hon. Members I should point out that on April 3, we attended in the other place. On April 4 there were two short speeches and then by House agreement the House adjourned. Yesterday was Leaders' day, and yesterday I received in writing notice of this application.

• (1550)

I am not making any ruling on the point made by the Hon. Minister of Justice. It ought to be clear both to Hon. Members and to the public that this notice came in fairly early.

Yesterday, it was again a question of courtesy to the Leaders that it was suggested that this matter be argued today as opposed to yesterday. As I say, I am not pre-judging the argument of the Hon. Minister of Justice.

I want to put another question to Hon. Members, and perhaps the Hon. Minister of Justice would wish to address his mind to the following. Is the suggestion being made that in view of what has taken place, or what has not taken place, which is is really the argument, that the allotment of money under the Financial Administration Act is somehow or other illegal? Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to answer that question.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am not arguing that the Government is acting illegally. I am submitting to you that the Government is using an Act illegitimately and in contravention of our constitutional conventions. That is the argument that I am placing before you.

The Government had scheduled the recall of this House for earlier this year. Had parliament been recalled at that time the Government would have had to have a Speech from the Throne, table its Estimates, and have the Supply debate all before March 31 in order to seek Supply.

By proroguing the House at the time that it did, the Government did not have to answer to the grievances of the people for that period of time. In fact it created a situation whereby instead of answering to the House for its supply Bill, it used a Governor General's Warrant in order to get the money, and in so doing it was not answerable to any one. That is what the Government has done.

By deliberately proroguing the House and immediately after proroguing it seeking Supply by an instrument such as the Financial Administration Act, it has created a situation whereby we have been denied our rights and privileges as parliamentarians to state the case of the people before granting or denying Supply to the Government. That is the most fundamental role which has existed since the 17th Century and why this institution is here.

That is the case that we are putting before you, Mr. Speaker. One of the fundamental reasons why we were sent to parliament is to state whether or not the Government should have funds to operate, whether or not we as parliamentarians choose to place our confidence in the Government, or deny our confidence to the Government. We have been denied that opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: Let me just ask another question. Do the moneys that have been allocated as a consequence of using the Financial Administration Act not show up eventually? Are they not part of Estimates that are ultimately voted on?

Mr. Lewis: It is a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: It may be a question of privilege that is before the House. In order to determine it, I want to fully understand just exactly what the situation is.

Mr. Milliken: To answer your question, Sir, in strict legal terms the provisions of Section 30 of the Financial Administration Act do make it possible for the Government to act in the manner that it has.

There are conventions in our Constitution and Hon. gentlemen opposite are well aware of those conventions. They went to court over the Constitution in 1981 or 1982 and discovered that. The Supreme Court of Canada said that there were certain conventions in the Canadian Constitution that must be observed. It is our position that those conventions have been breached in this instance.

Under Section 30, Subsection 4 or 5, it is clear that the moneys that have been appropriated by Governor General's Warrants will be included in the Supply Bills that are introduced and indeed they are deemed to be included in them. Therefore, in a sense, parliament will have an opportunity to vote those moneys and indeed they will be in. We will have to deal with it. However, it is ex post facto. It is being done after the event.

My learned friend, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has indicated that it is being done as of April 1 on Estimates that do not exist. In other words, the Warrants for money are being granted and there are no Estimates here or anywhere else that anybody has seen on which that money is being granted. The normal practice is do it on the basis of the Estimates that already exist.

Mr. Speaker: I think that I have heard enough argument. The Hon. Member for Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: The question you raise is appropriate. As my Hon. friend has indicated it is after the fact and before parliamentarians have had an opportunity to evaluate what funds were appropriated via the Governor General Warrants, and the breakdown as to those funds again is after the expenditures have already been made.

Our job here as Members of Parliament is to review how the Government plans to spend the taxpayers' money before those expenditures are made, and not after the fact. In terms of enabling us to do our job properly as parliamentarians this matter has to be taken very seriously. If it is not taken seriously, we can begin to conjure up just what type of procedure, perhaps not this Government, but future Governments might use and abuse. As we have seen in this case the use of Governor General Warrants under the Financial Administration Act was never intended.

Mr. Speaker: I thank Hon. Members and the Hon. Minister of Justice for their arguments. I will consider the matter very carefully and report back to the House.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Turner, Vancouver Quadra (p. 131) and on the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Broadbent (p. 140).

Mr. Brian O'Kurley (Elk Island): Madam Speaker, it is an honour and great privilege to speak to the Parliament of Canada today in support of the Speech from the Throne which was presented so eloquently by Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada.

In those words so graciously spoken, the head of the Canadian Government offered to her people something that is indeed valuable and extremely precious. It was something that the good people of this great nation have come to expect from Government.

The Throne Speech offers Canadians from sea to sea a vision of the future much like that which was held by our parents and their parents before them, and like those visions that were held by the pioneers who built this nation through hard work and determination into one of the greatest societies in the world.

The vision expressed in the Throne Speech is a vision of Canada that is confident, unified, and strong. It is a vision of Canada that holds a unique identity among nations, a Canada that leads the world community with new ideas. It is a vision of Canada that is vibrant and progressive, but also caring and compassionate. As a country and as individuals we as Canadians have achieved many things over the years, but now is the time to build for the future.

My wife and I have been blessed with three wonderful children, the oldest being six years of age. We are pleased to be expecting our fourth child this spring.

I accepted this challenge as a Member of Parliament because I believe that we in this country have an opportunity to work together to build a better future for our children. What kind of Canada do we want our children to inherit? Shall we offer them a country that is riddled with debt and crippled by economic mismanagement? Shall we offer the next generation a Canada that is afraid and weak? Shall we leave our children a country that is divided and selfish? Shall we offer them a barren and polluted Canada?

I say no. No, our children deserve better than that. Who in this House does not want to leave the next generation of Canadians with a unified, healthy and caring nation?

Today, I would like to describe an action plan that will enable us to realize that positive vision for Canada, an action plan that will give us a guide in building the kind of Canada that we will be able to offer to our children with dignity.

In the Throne Speech the Government set out five main objectives. They are: building a stronger economy, protecting our environment, a caring and compassionate society, fostering the values that make Canada unique and a commitment to national unity. Today, I would like to discuss these objectives and the challenge we face together. I believe it is a plan which deserves support. Let me start with the economic challenge.

The first objective is to have a stronger economy, a stronger Canada. Since 1984 we have done pretty well as a country. We have enjoyed tremendous income growth and job creation. For example, in my riding of Elk Island in the Fort Saskatchewan area we have seen numerous expansions in the petrochemical and technological areas. Farmers from Hay Lake to Chipman have had record crop yields. Our economic performance has outpaced virtually all the major nation, and we have cut our annual deficit by $10 billion. Our challenge is to maintain that economic performance in a world that is increasingly competitive, increasingly interdependent, and increasingly subject to inflationary pressures. To do that it is clear we must ensure that inflation and interest rates stay down. Alberta in particular must be considered in regard to controlling interest rates, both in the short term and in the long term. That means we must continue reducing our annual deficit.

I believe all Canadians will support that effort once they understand the consequences of complacency. Our problem is not so much each annual deficit but the massive debt we have built up over the past two decades. Despite our efforts since 1984, annual interest payments on the national debt now consume 31 cents of every dollar of government revenue, leaving only 69 cents for government programs. Right now, we are borrowing money each year solely to pay this interest on past debt. That means we must pay even larger interest payments the next year, 34 cents on the dollar, then 37 cents, and on and on and on. The trend is clear. The more we spend on interest the less we have for everything else. When interest rates rise, as they have recently, that just makes the problem worse. One does not to have a Ph.D. in economics to see what we have to do.

If we want to keep our economy on track and avoid a return to the stagflation of the years prior to 1984, if we want our tax dollars to go toward social programs and not just interest payments, then we have to reduce further expenditures and begin paying our way. It is simply a question of paying a little now or paying a lot more later.

Continuing deficit reduction will affect what we can do over the next four years. It certainly is not all people will see in the economic sphere. They will see a new sales tax system which will replace the current federal sales tax system, a self-inflicted wound that is costing Canadians jobs. We need a modern sales tax that will not discriminate against Canadian producers and will generate the revenues we need to maintain social services.

If we are to accept reform in the tax system, we must consider the uniqueness of the Province of Alberta. We must work together with Alberta to ensure the economic stability and growth in that province. We will also be hearing more about the GATT trade negotiations as we seek to gain better access to markets in Europe, Asia and to bring order to agricultural trade. There will be action in science and technology with centres of excellence and a greater focus on strategic technologies.

In Elk Island, I will work to ensure that the Canadian Government works together with the private sector to take advantage of new market opportunities in the area of new technology. Companies like Sherritt Gordon are world leaders in the area of advanced industrial materials. We will be building on our new grass roots approach to regional development.

I will work with the counties of Camrose, Leduc, Beaver, Strathcona and Lamont, as well as with the private sector, in an attempt to create more jobs for our people. We will be modernizing our business laws governing bankruptcy and financial institutions. Copyright laws have just been revised to protect the rights of writers and performers.

I might also suggest that we should also review those laws with the consideration for the educational needs of students in our riding, students like those from the New Sarepta High School who are visiting the nation's capital today from the riding of Elk Island.

There will be further privatization of those Crown corporations which no longer serve a public policy role. Perhaps most important is that we will see a major emphasis on upgrading the skills of Canadians, a human resource strategy for the 1990s. That will entail investing in literacy programs, education, training and retraining. Our goal is to turn our social safety net into a trampoline by redirecting more of our resources into skills training so we can help people get a new or better job rather than just pay people not to work.

Continuing deficit reduction so that inflation and interest rates can fall, sales tax reform, a focus on multilateral trade negotiations, investments in new technologies, continuing our grass roots approach to regional development, modernizing our business laws, further privatization and a human resource strategy for the 1990s, are all actions that will help build a stronger, competitive and modern economy, a stronger economy that will produce the jobs and wealth we need to maintain our way of life.

The second objective is that of protecting the environment. During the past year, it has become clear that the world is facing an environmental challenge of unprecedented magnitude. This problem is becoming more and more serious.

Within the past week a major chemical spill occurred near my old home Town of Lamont. Incidents like this are becoming more common. There is no time to sit around blaming one another. It is time for action. Our goal is to develop policies that reflect the concept of sustainable development where economic policies are not divorced from their environmental impact.

We are going to see the creation of a centre for the international promotion of sustainable development in Winnipeg. You will be hearing more about the round table on the environment and the economy which is being chaired by the President of McGill University.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) has been given new responsibilities to ensure that environmental issues are fully considered in the course of government decision making.

There will be new regulations to limit the impact of toxic chemicals, actions to protect the arctic environment, new legislation to improve water quality, legislation to ensure an appropriate environmental assessment review process, negotiations, both with the U.S. and globally, measures to improve the quality of the atmosphere, initiatives to clean up the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River and, together with the provinces, action to clean up dangerous land sites.

However, environmental protection is not just the job of Governments. It is the responsibility of each and every one of us. That is why we plan to encourage individual Canadians to become more aware of the environment, the establishment of an environmental partners fund, the promotion of environmentally friendly products, and programs to encourage recycling.

Environmental protection is not just about minimizing damaged land. It is also about economic opportunities. We are going to encourage the expansion of Canada's environmental industry and promote research and development not just to find solutions to our own environmental problems, but to create export opportunities for equipment, knowledge and environmentally friendly products.

A concentrated government effort to protect our environment, increased public participation and the encouragement of the expansion of Canada's environmental industry are three elements of a comprehensive approach to protect our environment.

Another objective is a caring and compassionate society. Canadians have always placed a premium on tolerance and fairness. We care about the quality of life in this country for all our citizens, and we have always recognized our obligation to help the less fortunate, both at home and abroad. The Mulroney Government shares these values.

Ironically that is why deficit reduction is so important to ensure our ability to maintain quality social programs in the years ahead. That is why, despite our financial problems, we will continue to provide assistance to families and the elderly while directing greater assistance toward those with low incomes.

However, income security is only one of the major challenges facing our society. Legislation will be introduced to create a national child care program. If we are to have a program of this nature, I personally would like to see that the benefits are offered equally to mothers who choose to stay at home to raise their children as well as to working ones.

The struggle to reduce family violence, child abuse and drug abuse will continue, as will research into AIDS and the diseases of ageing. Criminal law reform will continue, including a review of the Young Offenders Act, and we will be addressing the issue of abortion.

In so doing we are also concerned that scientific advances in reproductive technology, artificial insemination, in vitro fertilization, embryo transfer and surrogate parenting will outpace our ability to deal with the moral, ethical, legal and social implications. That is why we will commence a royal commission to inquire into the implications of new reproductive technologies for Canadian society.

These are all actions which address the challenges in our changing Canadian society. Our approach will reflect Canadian values, and it is our intention to ensure that these values are promoted in the wider global community.

That is also why we intend to continue to take a stand in defence of human rights and to fight the scourge of famine. That is why we will work with our northern allies and neighbours to develop a new co-operative ethic in the Arctic. That is why we will continue to be a strong supporter of the United Nations and its agencies and will participate in peacekeeping activities.

That is why we will expand over-all immigration levels while continuing to apply fairly but firmly the new legislation on refugees. That is why we will continue our strong support for international disarmament and will lend our voice to those seeking peace in troubled areas of the world. A caring, compassionate society based on fairness and tolerance that describes Canada today. Those are the values that will underpin our domestic and foreign policies.

The final objective is a commitment to national unity, fostering the values that make Canada unique. Our country is one of the most dynamic, peaceful and promising nations in the world. When we compare our situation with that of others, we realize why a foreign diplomat once described Canada as a solution in search of a problem. We have achieved much in little more than a century. We have much to be thankful for and much to celebrate. We are to have a big celebration in 1992 on our one hundred and twenty-fifth birthday to do just that.

In the meantime, we want to bring Canadians together as individuals. We will continue to support the development of our cultural life and our rich multicultural heritage. Elk Island is rich in culture with many people of British, German and Ukrainian descent, as well as people of French and Dutch heritage and many, many others. We will ensure that Canada's cultural voice can be seen and heard in broadcasting, film and video. We will be introducing a new Citizenship Act, and we will establishing a Canadian race and relations foundation to encourage racial harmony.

We will also be taking steps to ensure that our political institutions remain strong. We are going to build upon the recent achievements in parliamentary reform. There will be new conflict of interest standards for parliamentarians, and there will be a commission to recommend changes and reforms to electoral laws. I would like to see more consideration given to seniors and rural votes when electoral laws are reviewed.

Finally, we will continue to seek a constitution for all Canadians, Albertan and Québecers alike. We believe the ratification of the Meech Lake Accord is indispensable to the further evolution of the Canadian Constitution, and with Québec once again at the table as a willing participant. We can get on with the issues of Senate reform, aboriginal and linguistic rights, the roles and responsibilities over the fisheries resource, and the ways to strengthen the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Meech Lake Accord may not be perfect, but it does represent progress. It offers more autonomy to the provinces in areas like Senate appointments, immigration and the appointment of Supreme Court judges. Cultural policies, a new Citizenship Act, measures to promote cultural harmony, parliamentary reform, constitutional progress are the materials of our commitment to national unity and to the fostering of values that make Canada unique.

In conclusion, those are just some of the initiatives we will see from the Government over the next four years, but no doubt that is not all that we will see and hear. In Elk Island we will see industrial expansion and growth in small business and manufacturing. We will see more effective and efficient farming practices.

You and I both know, Madam Speaker, that no matter what the Government does, no matter how responsible or successful it is, we will also see the opposition Parties criticizing every move that is made, predicting disaster at every turn, and offering no constructive advice just as they have done since 1984. However, the Government's resolve is firm and our plan is not about placating special interests. It is about the national interest.

You will also see the opposition Parties criticizing every move that is made, predicting disaster at every turn and offering no constructive advice, just as they have done since 1984. But the Government's resolve is firm. Our plan is not about placating special interests. It is about the national interest. Let us work together to realize a positive vision for Canada. Let us work together to build a better Canada. Let us all work together from all Parties, from all regions of the country to build a better future for Canada.

Merci beaucoup, Madame le président.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments.

[Translation]

M. Malépart: Madam Speaker, I would first like to congratulate the Hon. Member for his remarks. One could see that he is a new Member. I know he spoke from the heart. But he blamed the Opposition. I would like to remind him that it was under pressure from the Opposition that the Government finally lived up to its commitment following an attempt to cut old age pensions. It was under pressure from the Opposition that the Government gave back their unemployment benefit entitlements to people in his riding. It was under pressure from the Opposition that the Government backed down after having announced it was going to tax stable commodities such as bread and butter. I should think that the Hon. Member will realize that Members on both sides of the House can play a positive role, but that opposition is our only guarantee against dictatorship.

[English]

Mr. O'Kurley: I thank the Hon. Member from the Opposition for that statement. I would just like to respond by saying that with respect to old age pensions I think Canada as a nation can be proud that we are leaders in the world community in providing well-being for our seniors and for many of our citizens.

There were discussions during the last term with respect to various different ways of trying to solve some of the problems in many of the social programs. I think it is fair to say that it is not unreasonable for a government to look at all programs and to look at ways of making them more efficient and more effective and make them serve the purpose which they were intended to serve.

I appreciate the comment that the Opposition does have a role. I appreciate the Opposition when it provides constructive criticism and when it plays a useful and purposeful role in this House.

Mr. Whittaker: Thank you, Madam Speaker. In the early 1980s, we witnessed something similar to what is occurring under this Government, the raising of interest rates which began sky-rocketing, the subsequent destruction of many small business persons within Canada, but particularly in the West and in the eastern provinces.

At the present time we have interest rates once again rising, and the Member has indicated that in fact it is causing part of our problem with the stabilization within the Government's deficit problem.

Small businesses need assurance, as do young persons borrowing money for the first time that those interest rates will be lowered and stabilized.

My question is, if we do not stabilize the interest rates, how can the small business person and the new home owner have any confidence in the economic programs of this Progressive Conservative Government?

Mr. O'Kurley: Again, I will thank the Member for his very reasonable question with regard to interest rates. Madam Speaker, interest rates are set or used as a tool not only to control inflation in our own various regions of our own country, but they are also used as a tool to influence our competitive position in the international trading community. Unfortunately, we, as a country, are not an island. We live in a global community. Perhaps we have to recognize the realities of living in an international community if we want to keep our country strong in the long run. Perhaps we might have to do some things that are uncomfortable in the short run. I agree with you that there are parts of the country that suffer a negative impact when interest rates rise. However, I would like to commend governments like the Progressive Conservative Government in the Province of Alberta who have implemented an interest shielding program for people wanting to get new mortgages. I think that perhaps we have to look at very positive ways of dealing with the regional problems while, at the same time, not compromising our international interests.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Boyer: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was listening, with interest, to the speech by the Honourable Member for Elk Island (Mr. O'Kurley) and I want to congratulate him for having covered such a wide range of the issues that are now, as a result of the Throne Speech, before the second session of our 34th Parliament.

One of the many topics that he touched on, Madam Speaker, related to the Government's announced intention to establish a royal commission to look into many aspects relating to human life.

In the last Parliament when the soleful question of abortion was before us I proposed something along the lines of what I called a human life Act which would deal in a single comprehensive statute, outside of the Criminal Code, with the abortion issue, but also questions of surrogate motherhood, in vitro fertilization, fetal transplants, and many other aspects involving human life throughout the entire life cycle from beginning to end.

I would just like to ask the Hon. Member, Madam Speaker, if he has any particular thoughts along this subject. His speech referred to many different initiatives by the Government, but in light of the announced intention to deal with this through a royal commission that will examine this full range of issues currently affecting human life from a scientific, medical, legal, moral and ethialc point of view, if he has any particular thoughts that he might like to share with the House at this time that would be helpful as the Government makes its plans for the launching of this royal commission.

Mr. O'Kurley: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for that very thoughtful question.

Madam Speaker, with regard to the question and with regard to the royal commission that will be set up, I think the over–all theme that should be considered while we are implementing this task force and implementing the strategies is that this task force will be dealing with a number of controversial issues. When we are dealing in the framework of morals and ethics there is sometimes great, great controversy. What I would suggest is that we should move towards a spirit of co–operation rather than towards what was, in the past, a spirit of confrontation. We should try to find ways of accommodating the wishes and the needs of both sides of an issue so that we can become more compassionate with regard to the views of others. And I think that with that spirit of co–operation we can achieve many things.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period of questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate.

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am pleased to rise today in response to the Government's Speech from the Throne read by Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada on April 3, and argued so forcefully today by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and yesterday by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

It is with a great deal of pleasure also that I return to this House after its recent three months recess, a recess during which I spent a great amount of time touring through my constituency meeting with people, ordinary Canadians who have expressed their concerns to me about everything from interest rates and drought relief to the delivery of postal services in rural communities and the price of wheat in Canada.

If there is one thing I learned on my visits to these kitchen tables, coffee shops and meeting halls it is that this Government now, only four months into its second term of office, has completely lost touch with the people of this country. If this Government, Madam Speaker, had spent any amount of time talking to the people about what it should do to turn this economy around, it would have brought out a Throne Speech, not a Throne Speech such as this one.

While I agree there is an international problem and the Government must be vigilant, it must be prepared to fight for Canadians in the international arena. However, the Government must also be prepared to stand by our producers here at home. We cannot abandon those producers while we go off and fight a foreign war. The Government seems to be doing just that.

I referred earlier to the poorly designed drought program, retroactive changes to the Western Grain Stabilization Program, and the removal of oats from the export jurisdiction of the Wheat Board. Most important right now is that ever-increasing rate of interest charged on farm and small business loans. The Government is abandoning farmers to the whims of the market-place and refusing to stand in the trenches and fight that financial battle with them.

What about those interest rates? What about the interest rates in the Throne Speech? I do not seem to be able to find much reference in the Throne Speech. I do not seem to be able to find anything that says this Government wants to control the rate of interest charged to the most important segments of our economy—farmers and small business people or anyone else for that matter.

The Government's Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is a strong supporter of the Bank of Canada and the present policy of letting interest rates rise to whatever level he wants. Western MPs, MLAs and Premiers have called for lower rates, and the Government is not listening. This Government had the opportunity in the Throne Speech to show the people of Canada that it cared about the ordinary Canadian farmer, the ordinary Canadian business persons, and the ordinary Canadian homeowner by telling them that they would intervene in the economy and control this spiral.

We know who wins with high interest rates. The winners are the wealthy with the money in the bank, the large corporations with the strong cash flows, real estate speculators, and of course the banks and financial institutions. They are the winners, not the ordinary Canadian. There is unlikely a single individual or business in The Battlefords—Meadowlake constituency, the area that I represent, who or which will benefit from these high interest rates. An easing in the bank rate must begin immediately, and it is only the Government that can force action like that.

My constituents are also concerned about energy policy, forestry policy, and the future of Regional Development Programs. Where in this Throne Speech are those matters dealt with, Madam Speaker? Where in this entire document setting out the Government's priorities for the coming year does this Government tell us that it is planning to meet the concerns of western Canadians?

We do not know about forestry, energy, agriculture, regional development, interest rates—any of those things. Where is this Government going? Really, I am very much concerned. These are the wheels that drive the western economy and they are all that is left, or they are all left out of this Government's priorities for the coming year. I could speak for a considerable length of time on what is missing from the Throne Speech, but let me mention just a couple more.

The first ones are the plans for aboriginal self-government and the plans for rural Canada being established by the Post Office. I have read this Throne Speech many times, and I could not tell my Indian constituents what this Government thinks it should do this year on meeting the terms of its previous commitment to Indian people.

In this House on Tuesday there were 14 young Indian people currently on a hunger strike because this Government has cut Indian educational programs. In my riding, as in others, federal and provincial subagreements have not been renewed. These agreements provided much needed financial assistance to the Indian and Métis communities. The Government's Throne Speech says that it will extend programs to assist native economic development, but we have had no signs. There is no idea of any real commitment to such a process.

Indian people in my riding, just as in ridings across the country, are asking this Government to let them become a part of our democratic process which recognized their right to their own future. The Government's current devolution strategy is wrong. It is wrong, not because it gives Indian people a greater and ever-increasing say in the administration of their own affairs, but because it does not provide the foundation, the structure or the resources needed to allow for adequate administration of their own affairs.

Indian issues will be important in this country this year. Therefore, I think it is important that this Government recognize it and state that it is its priority in this House of Commons and in the Throne Speech.

I have been talking again about what is not in the Throne Speech, but before I carry on and conclude there are two more points I want to make. There is just one paragraph after the Government's flimsy reference to Native Economic Development Programs in the Throne Speech. If this Government had spent any amount of time talking to the people about what it should do to turn this economy around, it would not have brought out a Throne Speech such as this one.

Before the last election the Government promised the world, and barely squeaked into office with 43 per cent of the popular vote. That is almost seven points less than it had in the previous election four years earlier. There was no clear mandate given to this Government on any issue, but the public's expectations ran high. The people who voted Conservative were looking for a Government that would look after those who were needlessly battling an out of control economy. Those people have been let down.

Looking back over the past three months that elected Members of the House of Commons have been unable to question the Government on its activities, for those of us in western Canada, in particular, there are more questions than answers and the economy continues to oppress ordinary Canadians.

The Throne Speech which is supposed to give the country, through the Government, its direction for the next year does not address the problems I have seen by touring through my constituency and talking to my constituents about their concerns. My colleagues have also expressed to me the concerns of their constituents gathered during this three-month recess.

What I have heard over that period of time are complaints about high interest rates, poorly designed and administered agriculture programs, such as the Drought Assistance Program now under way.

Tax reform is not only more complicated but seems to be costing us more money. The subject I have heard more about than any other, except perhaps high interest rates, is the removal by the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) of oats from the export jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Farmers in rural Canada did not give this Government a mandate to tamper with any of these government programs, let alone the one which guarantees the sale of their product. Western farmers have protested this move loudly and strongly, but the Government has cotton in its ears. Perhaps it has chaff between its ears, Madam Speaker. Whatever, the Government has failed to hear, to listen to, or to understand these voices from the Prairies, just as it failed to hear or chose to ignore the pleadings of Canadians prior to entering into the Free Trade Agreement.

The last time I was in this Chamber was during the week before Christmas when I spoke on the free trade legislation. I never felt so bad in my life as I stood here expressing the opinions of my constituents, and the members of the Government across the way talked and yelled and interrupted my speech constantly throughout that time. They did, I might add, the same thing to every speech from members of the Opposition throughout this House. They refused to listen, Madam Speaker, and they refuse to listen now. The people of Canada, and particularly the people of western Canada that I represent, want lower interest rates, well administered programs, more fairness in our income tax system and strong marketing boards to sustain and build a rural economy.

Instead, in the past three months we have had just the opposite, and in the future what can we expect? What do you see when you look at the content of the Throne Speech? A lot of rhetoric, a lot of words with very little thought behind them, a plan for the future that begs for detail, and for more information. How can I begin to plan my work for this session of Parliament with this document?

I am concerned about the financial crisis in agriculture. I am concerned because every single community in my constituency depends on the economic well-being of agriculture to survive. In reading this Throne Speech, I do not know what are the Government's plans for the future. There is only one reference in this entire document to agriculture. Only once is the word "agriculture" even written in this document. Can you believe that? An industry as large as agriculture in such crisis in this country, in such turmoil, and there is only one fleeting reference to it in this entire document, this Government's plan for the future.

An Hon. Member: Shameful, shameful!

Mr. Taylor: What is that reference, Madam Speaker, a reference to the trouble in the international marketplace? I agree there is an international problem and the Government must be vigilant. It must be prepared to fight for Canadians in the international arena, but the Government must also be prepared to stand by our producers here at home. We cannot abandon those producers while we go off and fight a foreign war. The Government seems to be doing just that.

• (1640)

I have been talking about what is not in the Throne Speech.

Before I conclude, there are two more points I want to make. Just one paragraph after the Government's flimsy reference to native economic development programs, the Throne Speech reports that this Government will continue its privatization of federal Crown corporations. While I do not support the concept of privatization, I have at least to applaud this Government for saying what it means in this case.

In my province, the provincial Government of Premier Grant Devine is so afraid of the word "privatization" that he has created an entirely new cabinet post. He would not call it the Department of Privatization but calls the Department of Public Participation in an attempt to cover up its real agenda, which is turning over resources and utilities to the private sector. I should mention that ordinary Saskatchewan residents, who will likely give Mr. Devine a retirement send-off soon, call this privatization initiative not privatization but piratization.

In any case, the Throne Speech of the Government insists on moving ahead with turning over public assets to the private sector. The Crown corporation that I am most concerned about, as this Party's Post Office critic, is the Post Office, a Crown corporation which is slowly, piece by piece, being privatized without public debate, without public input and without a public mandate of any kind.

Just today, I attended a press conference with the national president of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, Mr. Jean-Claude Parrot. He has called on this Government to initiate a royal commission into the operations of the Post Office. Things are so bad there that suicides have taken place. Mr. Parrot says that the workplace at Canada Post is like a powder keg waiting to explode. The only responsible course of action that the Government can take is to launch an investigation and do it immediately. I whole-heartedly support their call for a royal commission and applaud the courage of postal workers for the stance they have taken.

I just want to read briefly from the letter the postal workers sent to the Minister responsible for Canada Post today. Mr. Parrot is quoted as saying:

> The fuse is short and getting shorter. Management's abuse of workers has increased over the last year to a point where, if not stopped, the post office will blow apart. A public inquiry is the only way to expose what is really going on in the post office. It is the only way to make Canada Post management. . .accountable to the public. It is the only way to prevent all out chaos in the postal system.

He goes on in his letter to say:

> Mr. Minister, in April 1989, it must be said that Canada Post Corporation has failed disastrously to fulfill the mandate granted it by Parliament in 1981. Service levels have declined to the point where Canada Post has become an object of ridicule and anger throughout Canada's communities. Labour relations have declined to the point where Canada Post's workers are treated by management, at best, as naughty children requiring constant discipline and surveillance, and at worst, as an enemy encampment requiring eradication.

He concludes:

> A Royal Commission will clear the air and reveal for all to see the truth of what is happening in Canada Post. As well, it will serve to reestablish the legislative mandate of the Canada Post Corporation Act as the guiding light of the Corporation's activities and functions—a development which is crucial to postal workers and to service for Canadians.

This Government and specifically the Ministers responsible for Canada Post will hear a lot more from me about this subject in the near future. Let me flag a few things today in terms of the Throne Speech commitment to privatization.

During the election campaign in western Canada, there was a lot of talk among voters about the quality of life in rural Canada and that in recent years, that quality of life was diminishing. The closure or amalgamation of rural post offices, the reduction in rural postal routes and the elimination or downgrading of rural postal services are just more indications that the federal Government has no commitment to the existing quality of life in rural Canada.

This Government has a vision of rural Canada that is not the same vision that is shared by residents of rural Canada. It is not the same vision that our parents and our grandparents had when they settled in rural Canada. The vision of this Government is a rural Canada which responds to the needs of the market-place, and the market-place is demanding few people and fewer services in the rural areas of Canada.

We are already seeing a decay in rural life throughout Saskatchewan. Branch lines are gone, schools have closed, the hospital system is under review and post offices are closing. I recently visited the community of Leoville, a small community situated north of Spiritwood near the centre of my riding. There they have a deathly fear that their post office is being taken away from them. They are not interested in the conversion program proposed by Canada Post.

The president of the Leoville Chamber of Commerce and the owner-manager of the local grocery store tells me that they as a community have had to fight for everything that they have got. They are going to fight for this post office and it is right to fly the Canadian flag over a federal Government building in their community. I say bravo to Mr. Lalonde in Leoville and to municipal officials all across Canada who are willing to fight for what they believe in. I will be there for that battle in Leoville and any other place that comes along because I believe the direction being taken by Canada Post and endorsed by this Government is wrong.

If the Government was committed to a strong, well-populated rural area with active, spirited people, it would ensure primary producers an adequate return for their labours and it would ensure that the community infrastructure remained in place. The heart of that infrastructure in many cases is the rural post office. The most obvious detrimental effect to life in rural Canada today, besides the disastrous lack of positive agricultural policies, is the Government's decision to cut back funding to the Post Office and its activities in rural Canada.

The new directive to Canada Post is to make money. It is the one government service that has been told to make money and, more important, to make profits. We do not expect the military to make profits nor the RCMP, medical clinics, the Law Reform Commission, the Farm Credit Corporation, universities or hospitals. They do not have to make profits and we should not expect them to. They provide services to Canadian people in areas where people need services. They respond to the needs of Canadian people. That is what Canada Post is there to do and that is what Canada Post has to do. Yet this Government has decided that the Post Office should make a profit. The one government service that touches the lives of all Canadians in every community for their entire lives is supposed to make a profit. We know that the cut-backs from that directive will have their most serious effects in rural Canada.

Thank God for rural community spirit. We would not be here today if it were not for that dogged determination of the rural spirit, never say die. It is the pioneering spirit that built our towns and villages in the past and it is that spirit that will keep them going in the future, despite the efforts of this Government.

One can only hope that the Government will open its ears and accept the wishes, desires and dreams of the Canadian people that are being spoken to Members of Parliament right across Canada while they sit in coffee shops and kitchens and listen to real, ordinary Canadians. I have heard those desires throughout my constituency during the last three months. I trust that my contribution here today with the background of having talked to my constituents helps the Government to understand a little better the direction in which it should be headed.

I look forward with great anticipation to the Government's Budget due for public attention on April 27. That Budget, I hope, will deliver some specifics that the Throne Speech does not deliver, specifics that tell us the direction in which we are headed and what it will cost us. I am afraid I do not expect very much, but I am looking forward, I hope, to a few surprises.

Mr. Hockin: Madam Speaker, I would like to join the House in congratulating the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Taylor) for his comprehensive remarks. I know that the Hon. Member will take his duties seriously, so let me take a minute to ask him three questions, not provocative ones, but ones that I feel he would like to answer.

First, I heard what the Hon. Member had to say on privatization. Is there any instance when he would support privatization of any public enterprise? I understand that one can take a particular example and argue against it. What I am in search of from his Party and from him are situations where it is wise to privatize. If it is never wise to privatize, then we have a member and a Party which is seriously out of tune with the times and even with other social democratic Parties.

Second, let me refer to our interest rates. I appreciate the Member's concern about The Battlefords—Meadowlake and other parts of Canada where high interest rates are particularly a problem. Was the Member suggesting that we should arbitrarily lower interest rates in a particular region and then subject the country, perhaps, and that region to an outflow of capital which would end up leaving even less investment resource in those regions than existed before the artificially lowering of interest rates?

Is he saying that the country as a whole should arbitrarily lower interest rates 2 per cent, 3 per cent or 4 per cent and trigger an outflow of capital from the country to jurisdictions that are paying market rates of interest? That is, in fact, the logical concomitant of what the Member is suggesting. I do want to probe the Member a bit to get his answer.

Finally, I know he is particularly interested in Native Economic Development Programs and as the Minister in charge of those I want to tell him, and I think he is aware of this, we had an intensive consultation process last year on how to redesign the program. I hope he heard in the Speech from the Throne that the present NEDB program is being extended into July and following that the Government wisely, based upon the consultation process, should design the best possible programs for natives. Does the Member have any suggestions of what programs of that sort should look like?

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I thank the Minister for his question. I appreciate the opportunity to expand on the information that I was providing to the House in my short remarks earlier. I appreciate the indulgence of the House for allowing me to say a few words on these important matters.

Privatization is very important to me. Privatization is something that should not occur in areas of resources, utilities, the service sector where monopoly issues are at stake. But there are likely circumstances where privatization is acceptable. I will not dispute totally that privatization is a bad thing. Throughout Canada and around the world we are seeing efforts where services have ceased to become essential to the needs of the people of the country.

When something is essential or when it deals with our resources, government intervention, government activity, government ability to control the economics of it is imperative. I speak particularly for my people back home when I say that on the issue of potash, natural gas, electric or insurance these are things that should remain within the public domain. I thank the Minister very much for bringing that to the attention of my constituents.

On the issue of interest rates, yes, I believe that is within the domain of the Government, that it should be a priority of the Government arbitrarily to bring down the interest rates one, two or three points and should do so immediately. The fear of capital leaving the country can be contained by the use of exchange controls. A Government that is interested in helping to maintain and build the economy of the regions and the areas of this country can find ways to deal with this matter irrespective of the activities of American financial interests.

On the final point of Native Economic Development Programs, I think the very best sources of information are the Indian people themselves. The national and provincial native organizations must be called in regularly and be enabled to provide the direction and initiative that is required in the future and in the Constitution.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the reply the Member has just made. It is refreshing to hear the New Democratic Party restating its much more doctrinaire positions. It masked them successfully over the last ten years, ever since the Winnipeg convention.

Now we hear again a little more honest restatement of socialist policy, that the Government should own the major resources of the country. It should arbitrarily cap interest rates and have financial economies as in Kenya, Tanzania, Cuba, Hungary and Poland. They are great examples to follow in financial policy, Madam Speaker.

I was interested in the Member's comments regarding cutting—and he used the word cutting—the educational programs for native Indians. I would like to point out to him that the post-secondary program for our native people has increased in enrolment from 3,500 in the academic year of 1977-78 to this year's academic year of 15,000. The budget has increased from $9 million from 1977-78 to $130 million in 1988-89. It has still not been cut. If the Member wants to insist that the program has been cut, will he give some evidence to the House for his statement that the Government has cut that program?

Mr Taylor: First, I make no apologies for being interested in a more caring and better administered economy. I make no apologies whatever for having that interest in my heart.

Second, on the matter of the Indian education programs, the people who are affected by those problems are the ones who are on hunger strikes or who are marching in the streets and occupying offices.

The Indian people know that the cuts are there and that they do not have access to the post-secondary system that they need. I think it is time the Government met with those people on hunger strikes and met with the Indian people who are concerned about the inadequate funding for post-secondary education. When the Government does that, then we can get down to talking about figures, the need and where we are going.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member's brilliant presentation in his analysis of the situation which the country faces. I have a question for him.

He comes from western Canada. I have been trying to think of a single government program where the West gets its fair share based on its population. I have struggled for the past nine years to find a single example of where western Canada gets it fair share of anything. I have yet to find that.

Has my hon. friend come across any government initiative in a comprehensive national program based on population base where the West gets its fair share? Has the Hon. Member been able to determine any single federal program of that nature?

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the question from my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis), a Member who has a great deal more experience than I have in this Chamber and a Member who has had many more years than I to investigate this matter. In my short period of time I too have failed to find any program whatever that would deliver a fair shake to the people of western Canada. I hope eventually that with the skills which the Member displays and the skills I hope to acquire we will one day be able, if we cannot find them, create programs to give a fair share to western Canada.

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Madam Speaker, it is a great honour for me to take part in a debate so crucial to the future of this country. I think that this Throne Speech sets the best goals and aspirations for Canada and Canadians. As a new Member, I am proud to be a part of the team led by our Prime Minister, who is a strong and wise leader. I am also proud to be a member of this Progressive Conservative Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McCreath: For a Nova Scotian, my French is not that bad, if I say so myself.

Some Hon. Members: Very good!

[English]

Mr. McCreath: It is remarkable the extent to which my concept of Canada is reflected in the goals and objectives set forth in the first page of the Speech from the Throne which marvellously articulates a concept of the direction in which our country should go in the years ahead.

My concept of Canada is a Canada economically strong and self-reliant. It is a Canada that makes effective use of the abundant resources that we have at our disposal and makes careful exploitation of those resources in order to provide the greatest benefit, not only for Canada and Canadians but indeed for the people of the world.

It is a Canada in which we have as our goal the social security and safety of every Canadian. It is a Canada that seeks full employment for every Canadian and an adequate and meaningful job for every person who wishes to have one within our country. It is a Canada that welcomes the challenge of economic development, that looks to the opportunities of international trade, and is prepared to reach out to all the corners of the world.

One of the important initiatives undertaken by the Government in recent years was when it recognized the potential impact of our multicultural society for the development of trade, because it was prepared to capitalize on the linkages that we have with all the peoples of the world.

As an immigrant nation with citizens from countries all over the world we are in an unique position to develop trade and take advantage of not only the personal connections which Canadians have, but the linguistic skills that give us linkages into every country of the world.

My Canada is a Canada that is a nation of people who have respect for this wonderful land with its natural endowment of resources, including the air we breathe, the water we drink, our fields and forests, our lakes, rivers and oceans, our birds and animals and, most important of all, our people, be they young or old, men or women, recent arrivals or multi-generational Canadians, anglais, francais, ou d'autres.

Above all, Canada is a land of diversity. A key to understanding this country is understanding the implications of our diversity from one end of the country to the other. Diversity exists in Canada on many planes, cultural, linguistic, socio-economic, climactic, geographical and, as a Nova Scotian, one of which I am so well aware, regional.

Diversity means for Canadians that we have differing perspectives toward national issues. We do not all approach national issues in the same manner. Understanding comes from recognizing and, more important, accepting the implications of the differing perspectives of Canadians from different regions with different languages and different cultures.

The real challenge of those who are charged with governing this country is to come to grips with the fact that they have to recognize that Canadians see issues differently and that they are prepared to accommodate the legitimate and reasonable aspirations of Canadians from different regions with different cultures and linguistic groups.

At the same time, provision must be made for alleviating measures for those Canadians who will be disadvantaged by the national consensus. Let us face it, Madam Speaker, one cannot at all times accommodate what are often very diverse or differing needs on any given issue or any given policy decision. Therefore, Government has to be prepared to provide alleviating measures for those who may from time to time be disadvantaged by specific proposals or issues. That is why programs are targeted at responding to specific regional development needs. Such programs, most recently articulated in the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and comparable programs, to target the particular needs of regions such as my own are in fact a cornerstone of Canadian society, a cornerstone of governmental policy and practice. I am delighted that this concept was clearly and unequivocally reinforced in the Speech from the Throne that was delivered on Monday last.

My Canada is a compassionate, caring society which extends to all its people. In a nation with the wealth and resources that we have, no Canadians should suffer from lack of adequate housing or nutrition, or from lack of adequate health care services or social security. One of the blessings we have developed over the years is probably the best health-care system in the world, a health-care system that is safeguarded and preserved, and under the sound economic management of this Government will grow during the years to come.

Our society is one in which Canadians should never suffer from deprivation or from violence, particularly violence in the home. As a priority we must ensure that our children are safe and that they do not suffer from child abuse or neglect in any way. We must ensure that our children have the best education because they are our resource for developing this country in the future.

Our Canada must be a Canada in which there is respect and dignity for all, particularly for our senior citizens, and for those who suffer from disabilities.

Self-reliance goes hand in hand with self-respect. Our national goal must be to ensure that basic social needs and security are recognized as the basic rights for all Canadians.

My Canada is a multicultural Canada. For the past 400 years we have been a nation of immigrants; even the native peoples originally came from other lands. Our nation will continue to be a nation of immigrants.

In recent years every economic demographic study done has shown that in the years ahead we will have a need for more immigrants. Therefore, our immigration system is vitally important to the future of this country. It must be a system that is fair and open to all, all who meet the legitimate criteria for entrance. At the same time, it must be one that is fair to those who have special needs. We must have provisions for bona fide refugees, those whose lives are indeed imperilled in their lands of origin. However, at the same time the system must be fair in the sense of requiring that all of those who wish to come to our country are prepared to wait their fair turn in line. In this regard I compliment the Government for the efforts and the provisions it has put in place in an effort to come to grips with this extremely difficult problem that has plagued our country over the past two or three years.

Our multicultural Canada must be based on two concepts that are the bases of the Canadian Multiculturalism Act that was enacted by Parliament last year, the concept of cultural freedom, the concept that every Canadian is free to be what he or she perceives themselves to be, and on the concept of equity and fairness for all. That means equality of access as well as equality of opportunity.

Over the years ahead we must build on the Canadian Multiculturalism Act. We must extend the implications of the employment equity provisions. In the Speech from the Throne reference was made to revisions to the Citizenship Act. I see the Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship) (Mr. Weiner) is present. I look forward, Mr. Minister, to seeing those provisions coming forth.

This is the vision of Canada that we must work toward. Let me tell you, Madam Speaker, how the South Shore, my constituency, fits into this perspective. I believe it remarkably typifies the best of what is Canadian. It is a constituency that extends 150 miles from my home in Hubbards to Charlesville, a community that Canadians will remember. It was the community that was so hospitable to the refugees who came to our shores through the night a year and a half ago.

It extends from the Atlantic ocean 40 to 50 miles inland to the fields and forests of New Ross, New Germany, and Caledonia. It also contains a variety of coastal islands. I am fortunate, when I visit all my constituency, that I not only travel on planes and on highways. I also travel by boat as my constituency contains islands extending down the coast from East Iron Bound to Seal Island.

The South Shore constituency comprises the historic counties of Lunenburg, Queens and Shelburne on the majestic Light House Route. I want to say to all Members of the House that they will find no better place to spend next summer than visiting the South Shore and driving the beautiful Light House Route and visiting the many marvellous and beautiful sights. They include historic towns such as Lunenburg, the home of the Bluenose, and the Bounty, where the Fisheries Museum of the Atlantic provides one of the most interesting spectacles for all visitors. It is rwhere one of the largest fish plants in the world can be seen, the National Sea Plant, as well as the historic boat building centre of Mahone Bay with its 11 churches.

There is the industrial centre of Bridgewater, Nova Scotia, on the beautiful La Have River, a town that has benefited from industrial growth while at the same time retaining the natural charm and beauty of the area. There is Chester, Blandford, New Ross, New Germany, West Northfield and Riverport right out on the ocean, Queens County, the forestry capital of Canada, with its sawmills and Greenfield, and Caledonia, Liverpool, the historic privateering town with its Bowater Mersey paper mill and its Mersey Seafoods and Stempro, Port Medway, Milton and, yes, Port Mouton, a town I will talk about in a moment. Of course, there is also Kejim Kujik National Park. It comprises as well Shelburne County, probably the fishing centre of Canada if not of North America, where we have fishing communities extending from Port Lehebert on the east to Woods Harbour on the west and such significant and important towns as Shelburne, Barrington, Clark's Harbour, and I might say the historic town of Lockeport to which my ancestors came and settled 200 years ago.

Fishery is a large part of what the South Shore is all about. As go the fisheries, so goes life on the South Shore, in particular life in Shelburne County and along coastal Lunenburg and Queens Counties.

We have done very well in recent years in our management of the scallop, lobster and swordfish industries. We have had the implementation of a limited entry system which, while frustrating to some, at least has the advantage of providing control of the industry.

We now have a burgeoning new tuna industry. We had a wonderful fall when the tuna came off southwestern Nova Scotia. We look forward in the next couple of weeks to seeing the tuna management plan for 1989. It is important that in establishing that plan we see controls put in place to ensure that we do not create an over-capacity problem. There should be no new entrants in the tuna fishing industry in Atlantic Canada this year. Nor should there be transfers. Those licensed to fish in southwestern Nova Scotia should fish there. Those licensed to fish in the other areas should fish there. But we should be prepared to provide the necessary quota transfers to ensure that we take full advantage of the quotas that are available to us.

We have a new industry developing in the flounder area. I would like to see those fishermen identified as specialists as we deal with the difficult problem of diversifying our groundfish industry so as to take advantage of under-utilized species.

The groundfish, of course, represents our major problem. It has been in the news lately. The three fish plant closings that were announced in the last month or so were in the South Shore constituency. We are gravely concerned about the future there. We are going to need support not only from the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon), who has been most supportive and who showed the wisdom a year and a half ago to set up the groundfish capacity committee whose report I have with me, but the support of other Ministers. The committee reported just recently. It has come forward with some very excellent recommendations that will provide long-term solutions to our groundfish problem, putting forth various ideas such as the designation of specialists and generalists within the fishing industry that makes greater efforts to reduce our capacity.

Our capacity problem is the one that has really precipitated the groundfish problem. It is a problem that was developed 10 or 12 years ago when the policy of the Government of the day was to provide a fishing licence for virtually anybody who wanted one. Unfortunately, that Government did not make provision to ensure that there were as many fish in the ocean as required for all the people who wanted to fish them. Thank goodness this Government is in power. It has the courage to tackle such problems. I want to compliment the Minister of Fisheries for the efforts and the manner in which he has undertaken to deal with this most difficult problem. I call on the Government of Canada to support the efforts of that Minister. We are going to need the support of Ministers far beyond the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In the short term we are going to need adjustment.

On March 9, for example, the village of Port Mouton, a village of 800 people, suffered the tragic news that the one and only major plant in that town was being closed—45 full-time employees—and another 150 seasonal employees were put out of work. We have to do that—

An Hon. Member: Free trade!

Mr. McCreath: This has nothing to do with free trade. We need immediately to have an industrial adjustment program put in place. I am pleased to say that on inquiry I discovered that the officials of the Department of Employment and Immigration immediately approached Clearwater to set up that agreement. They are still waiting to hear back. It seems the President of Clearwater has been out of the country since then. I call upon him and I call upon Clearwater to get together with the officials from the Department to get an agreement in place that will help those workers quickly and as soon as possible. I know the Department will move quickly as well in Port Medway.

Shelburne County is another situation. We have over 120 fish plants in Shelburne County. You know, Madam Speaker, you cannot run a fish plant without fish. It would be a simple thing for this Minister to do what certain of his predecessors did and say if you want to fish the ocean out, go ahead and do it. This Minister is too responsible to do that. His responsibility is to preserve that very important resource for future Canadians. That is the challenge he has undertaken. Meanwhile, in the short term we have to be prepared to do the work that will alleviate the difficulties that our people face.

In Shelburne County we have to put in place as soon as possible a Community Futures Program. An application has been put forward. Because, thank goodness, unemployment was not high three years ago, we have not to date been deemed to be qualified. But I know that this program under the Canadian Jobs Strategy has been considerably beneficial to many, many Nova Scotians. For example, in the fiscal year 1987-88 some 700 workers from the fishing sector in Nova Scotia received over $1 million in assistance through the Canadian Jobs Strategy. Since its implementation, nine areas in the Province of Nova Scotia have been selected for assistance out of the Community Futures Program. I am going to be urging and pressing the Government of Canada to move as quickly as possible to see that we have a Community Futures Program put in place in Shelburne County as soon as possible.

We want to take full advantage of ACOA. ACOA has been a marvellous thing for Atlantic Canadians. Since its inception in 1987 up until March 17 of this year, ACOA has approved 89 applications from the South Shore. I look to there being at least 89 more this year. This has meant an injection of over $5 million into our local economy. This money, along with approximately $22 million from the private sector, has directly created 198 jobs, maintained another 24 and this, of course, does not account for the indirect spin-offs that come. We must be prepared to use ACOA creatively to assist the fishing industry and the communities dependent upon the fishing industry to adjust to the implications of the problem we are going to have in the groundfish industry as we look ahead.

Madam Speaker, I see my time is almost up. I would like to have talked about industries that are booming in the South Shore. Our Christmas tree industry is one. It awaits the implementation of the Forest Resource Development agreement which is critically important in establishing the research necessary to develop that industry.

I would like to have talked about the needs for postal service that my hon. friend opposite talked about earlier. Postal services are extremely important to people in rural areas. I would like to have talked about the maintenance of our rail links for transportation purposes, but those will have to wait for another day.

In concluding, I wish to thank the House for its attention and you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to participate.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Madam Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member who just finished his speech. I must say his French was very good indeed, and I would encourage him to keep up the good work. In fact, I thought his speech was pretty good until he started to talk about fisheries and to establish a connection between fisheries and the Throne Speech. He told us about the problems in his area with fish processing plants and fishing overcapacity. Everybody knows there are serious problems in the fisheries industry along the coast of Nova Scotia, and these problems are not about to disappear in a matter of weeks or months. The Government must take some kind of action to find out what is going on and try to find ways to prevent a situation like the one at the Port Mouton plant which closed its doors, which meant a loss of jobs for the people in that community. It should not tolerate that kind of situation. The Government must act and deal with these problems. And why couldn't the Government and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans include in the Throne Speech some measures or proposals for examining these serious problems and finding a solution?

I refuse to believe that the Hon. Member who represents a riding where the fisheries industry plays an essential role is satisfied with the scanty mention of fisheries in the Throne Speech. I am sure he would have wanted to see more than that.

• (1720)

Mr. McCreath: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I thank the Hon. Member for giving me an opportunity to speak further on the subject of fisheries.

First of all, I think that what was set before us in the Throne Speech was a concept of Canada and a set of goals and objectives. It was done in a very comprehensive way, and I think it was an extremely well written document.

With respect to the issues raised in the fishery, I am sure the Hon. Member is fully aware of the diligent work that has been undertaken over the course of the last year. If he is not, I would be more than delighted to provide him with a copy of the report of the Scotia Fundy Ground Fish Industry Capacity Advisory Committee.

It is a committee, Madam Speaker, that has in its membership representatives of all the major organizations involved in fishing in Atlantic Canada; the Eastern Fisherman's Federation, the Eastern Shore Fishermen's Protective Association, the Grand Manan Fishermen's Association, the Maritime Fishermen's Union, the Nova Scotia Draggermen's Association, the South West Fixed Gear Operators and representatives from the province as well.

The study is under way. The capacity committee has provided and filed its first phase report. It is my understanding that the Minister has now requested a detailed process for implementing the very sound recommendations that are here. We do not need a further study. The work has been done in the first phase, is now being done in the second phase, and I think the important thing is that as these industry representatives have become involved in this process Members opposite will take an active interest in the excellent work that is being done. But we have to face one fundamental reality. The Government of Canada, indeed Hon. Members opposite, cannot create fish. We have to face the fact that we have a serious problem because we in the Scotia–Fundy region we have overharvested the fish that are there.

It would be very easy for me as a Member from this side to go on criticizing the previous Government for what they did or did not do in the past. Who knows? Had any group been in power, perhaps they would have done the same thing.

It is partly the result of the extension of the 200-mile offshore zone, partly the change in technology from wooden boats to fibreglass boats, the fact that when you replace the one with the other, you can very easily get what we call jumbo boats that create a greater capacity to harvest more fish, but the bottom line is that there are not enough fish in the ocean.

The responsibility of the Minister of Fisheries is to safeguard that resource. It is interesting to see that if you go down the government benches, he is the only Minister who under legislation has a responsibility for managing a resource—

The Acting Speaker (Madam Champagne): The Hon. Member from Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) on a point of order.

Mr. McCreath: I am perhaps getting carried away. I will stop and allow the Hon. Member to ask his question.

Mr. James: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I would like to congratulate the Member for South Shore (Mr. McCreath) on an excellent speech. I know the people of his constituency are going to be very well represented.

I was also pleased to hear that we have elected someone who has somewhat of a rural constituency—150 miles long. It must have some rural component to it. It seemed to me the Member from The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Taylor) seemed to be indicating that the NDP, his Party, had a corner on the rural constituencies, and that is certainly not the case.

I would also like to commend him on applying for the Community Futures Programs because it is certainly an excellent one and I know it will serve him well.

What I would just like to ask him, though, so I can give my colleague the opportunity to ask his question, is to have his evaluation of the Free Trade Agreement and how it will be of assistance to him because, as he knows, it was an important point in the Throne Speech and is something we are going to carry on and implement.

Mr. McCreath: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I do not think there is an industry in Canada that will benefit as much from the Free Trade Agreement with the United States as our fishing industry, and there is no constituency in Canada that will benefit so much as the South Shore constituency. Seventy per cent of the fish that we in Nova Scotia goes to the United States. The securing of the American market, which is what we achieved through that agreement, has tremendous potential. It means that for such fish as we are able to catch, we shall have access to the principal market.

The second most important aspect of that agreement is that it ensures that American fishing vessels will not have access to get back on Georges Bank. That is one of the things they were concerned about during the course of the negotiations.

Senator Mitchell from Maine, for example, opposed the Free Trade Agreement because it did not provide an opportunity for Maine fishermen to get back on Georges Bank. Our fishermen have had their interests safeguarded by that provision. The fact that over the next few years the duties will be removed on cooked and processed fish means that we are going to have an opportunity to do more value-added work, more processing of fish in Canada prior to its being sent to the United States because our fish processors are more competent. They are more efficient.

Studies done by companies like National Sea have clearly demonstrated that there is a higher degree of productivity on the part of our fish processors in Canada and Nova Scotia than in the United States. We look forward to the fact that we are going to see more fish processing done on our shores and jobs will be created as a result.

I look forward to the possibility—

An Hon. Member: Your time is up!

Mr. McCreath: My friend, when you come from an area with fishermen, you have got to be able to stand up and tell them the way it is. We look forward to the—

An Hon. Member: You have just started here. Watch your blood pressure.

Mr. McCreath: Does that count against my time? Anyway, what was the point I was trying to make? My compliments to the Member opposite. I will stop now.

Mr. Whittaker: Madam Speaker, I did enjoy the tour on which we were taken by the Member for South Shore (Mr. McCreath) around his riding and the identification of the fisheries and the fish of Nova Scotia. I want to talk briefly about the fact that most of us in Canada, through one, two, three and four generations, have been and are immigrants to Canada and unfortunately, over the last four years in particular, the immigration level has fallen substantially in this country so that from the high under the Liberal Government, as I understand it, it has now dropped approximately 80,000 from that highest point. My question to the Member is this: Does he agree with the Economic Council of Canada which recommends that substantial increases in the numbers of immigrants to Canada will ensure the stable economic growth of this country? If so, will you encourage our Party to encourage our Party to substantially increase immigration so that we can have economic growth in this country? Thank you, Madam Speaker.

• (1730)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It will have to be a short answer from the Hon. Member for South Shore.

Mr. McCreath: Madam Speaker, that is my biggest challenge since I became a Member.

Briefly, Madam Speaker, I have not read the report to which the Hon. Member refers. Clearly, this country needs immigration. It is my understanding that the Government has in fact increased immigration levels for 1989. I expect that we will see that the Government will in fact establish immigration levels consistent with what we can accommodate in terms of people arriving and settling in this country, while at the same time responding to the needs of Canada in terms of its economic development in the area of immigration.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, it is with great humility, pride and obeisance that I, as a new Member of Parliament, now rise in this most honoured Chamber to respond to the Speech from the Throne, what it says and what it fails to say.

I am also pleased that Parliament, where we ought to do more than just listen, has finally reconvened to deal with the present issues our nation is currently facing.

I would like to briefly indicate to the House that it has been most fulfilling to serve my constituents and to open my constituency office six days a week, 365 days a year.

I am a new Canadian. I came to this country one score and one year ago full of dreams and expectations. Canada has allowed me to fulfil most of those dreams. However, I never began to dream until a year ago that I would aspire to join you here, to repay the many blessings my adopted country has bestowed upon me.

Indeed, I am proud to be a Canadian. I am fortunate and humbly proud to be the first Filipino Canadian ever elected to this House of Commons, the forum for national debate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pagtakhan: At this juncture, allow me to remind you that for 26 years the people of Winnipeg North had in this office the voice of Mr. David Orlikow. His long career in Parliament was always rooted in his care for people. He earned their respect and their trust, and he has earned mine. Hence, it was with an amalgam of feelings that I accepted the victory of last November 21.

As the new Member for this riding, I want to express my profound gratitude to the constituents of Winnipeg North for whom I speak today and who join me in speaking for all Canadians in all walks of life and of all national origins.

I will do my utmost to uphold the longstanding reputation of Winnipeg North as a well represented and very stable riding. I say this will all humility, for I believe you will share my stand when I champion the cause of fairness and social justice, when I speak for openness and candour during parliamentary debate, when I ask that we do not spread misunderstanding and hate, when I ask that there be no misuse of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I believe you will all stand by me.

As a physician I am used to treating the illnesses of patients. As a parliamentarian, I hope to contribute greatly to treating the illnesses of our society, the ills of unemployment, homelessness, intolerance, unfairness, illiteracy, injustice and poverty.

My childhood has taught me what it is to have very little in life. This has led me to appreciate even more the true meaning of open opportunities, fairness and tolerance—strong Canadian values. Winnipeg North stands for all these values. The people of Winnipeg North have a message for this Government and for all Canadians. We believe in protecting the mosaic of our varied cultures and reject the melting of them. We insist on total door-to-door-mail services and reject supermailboxes. We insist on maintaining our train service and reject its dismantling. We treasure our social programs and reject the deindexation and cuts. We believe in adequate funding for national voluntary organizations. We cannot accept that they suffer the axe of a blind and non-discriminating cut-back policy.

I have been elected as a Liberal because I am a Liberal. I believe in freedom and in social justice, for freedom without social justice is only freedom for the very few rich and powerful, not freedom for all, the poor and the middle class.

I and my fellow Liberals believe in free enterprise. We reward success and we are not jealous, but we also believe that those who have should help those who have not and we help those who have not that they may help others. It is that Liberal philosophy that has brought to this country our social umbrella which has made Canada a better, stronger and more compassionate place to live in. Programs like our universal medicare, Unemployment Insurance, family allowance, the Canada Pension Plan, Old Age Security, Guaranteed Income Supplement, and many others have all been put in place by Liberal Governments. That is why I am proud to belong to the Liberal Party.

These programs are now part of our national fabric and we will vigorously defend them. We will not let this Conservative Government cut any of our vital programs. We will not tolerate any further burdens being placed on the back of this country's weak, its poor, its unemployed, its disabled or disadvantaged. It is bad enough that in the last four years, because of the Tory philosophy and the Government agenda, the gap between those who have none and who have has grown consistently wider.

It is very difficult for a person like me to accept—and I grieve it—that in a country as rich and as developed as Canada there are, in 1989, more than four million poor, half of them the youth of our country. We should also remember that there are many poor citizens in the Third World countries and Canada must take a leadership role in easing their debt burden.

It is unbelievable that in our prosperous country in 1989 there are thousands of homeless people, among whom are mothers with young children, and the Government does not even find it appropriate to put this onerous problem on its agenda in the Throne Speech.

Prosperity ought not to be measured only in terms of increased productivity, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said, for many, but also in terms of no more poor, no more line-ups for heart surgery or cancer treatment, no more indignity to our aboriginal people, no inequity in employment for visible minorities and new citizens. Madam Speaker, a Race Relations Foundation is not enough. Employment equity is a must.

No, the Government felt it is not important at this point because the Government has a new obsession, the deficit. In four years, in one single term, this Government has nearly doubled the public debt, from $170 billion to $320 billion. Yes, it almost doubled the accumulated deficit of more than 100 years and that despite the biggest tax increase in Canadian history, particularly for the poor and the middle-class. In the Throne Speech, the Government tried to camouflage the deficit by saying it has decreased in percentage. It did not have the courage to say, in absolute terms, that it has increased, indeed. With its pre-election promises, the Government knew it was promising an even bigger deficit; with its post-election obsession to cut it, this Government, in essence, was not candid with the Canadian electorate, reminiscent of its free trade posture prior to the election of 1984.

Let us not ask the question, how much wealth we have, but let us ask the question, what use we make of the wealth we have. The debt that we now have has created assets for our country, has established public schools, hospitals and many other public institutions that we cherish. Now the Government wants to cut badly, everything, everywhere, especially in social programs because their good friends in big business, who advertised for them during the election, are saying now that social programs threaten their ability to compete.

The new buzz words now are review, reform, revise and readjust. We are not naive, nor ignorant, nor dumb. We know very well that they are all code words for cutting, chopping and deindexing.

Has this Government not learned its lesson, that it cannot tamper under any disguise with the principle of universality of our national social programs? If the Government thinks it can tamper with our social security net, it had better be ready for a fight, because fight we will put up.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pagtakhan: Vigilant we shall be so that our fears do not come true, especially for the health care sector.

Health, Madam Speaker, has always been at the centre of my professional life. As a physician and a medical teacher I have dedicated all my professional life to the cure of illnesses and the promotion of health. Now, as a parliamentarian, health remains a prime concern I approach with renewed commitment. I am very grateful, therefore, to my Leader for giving me the responsibility of associate critic for health. He trusts that I, with my colleague from Cape Breton—East Richmond, will keep a very close watch on our medicare system, and we will. He trusts that we will force the Government to put the health of Canadians ahead of any other considerations, and we will.

Already many incidents have been raised in only a few weeks while the House was not sitting. We have even seen that the health safety procedures used by the Department of Health are not secure enough to ensure the full protection of Canadians. Therefore, Madam Speaker, I ask the Government to update immediately its procedures regarding the distribution and the sale of any food or other products that may in one way or another be harmful to our people.

The procedures have to be clear enough that we always know what is going to happen at any given time that a product appears to be dangerous. Canadians can no longer tolerate a health safety policy of cyclical boldness and indecisiveness. The basic approach to health safety is not difficult. The Government has only to yield and move. Yes, a newly developed policy may at times be disturbing for the industry, the distributors and the merchants. I realize that. I also know that health is too precious of a God given gift to play with. When we talk about thousands of lives that are threatened by unsafe food, drugs and pesticides, I say, health protection is the very first priority. Profit becomes irrelevant.

Even in these days of restrictions and budget cutting, the Government should make a very special effort to enhance its financial support for medical research. It is my privilege, indeed, to have the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) as a Liberal colleague. He has fought bravely to regain his full health. He has started a crusade to help find the increased resources for medical research. Along with thousands of Canadians who have signed his petition he is asking the Government to review its decision to purchase nuclear submarines and redirect the money to medical research and medical services. I have great admiration for the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie. He can count on my full support and that of my fellow Liberals. I hope as well that he can count on yours, Madam Speaker, for the benefit of so many Canadians.

What my colleagues and I are asking the Government is to invest in people, because Canadians are our most valuable resource. When we invest in keeping them in good health, when we train them for the new jobs, when we upgrade our educational system, when we create day care facilities, we invest in people and therefore we invest in our country. However, the Conservative Government does not think that way. The Government appears to subordinate people to profit just as if this country was a private business, probably as has been said a subsidiary of an American firm.

That is why my Leader, my colleagues and I believe that the next few years of this Government—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is with deep regret that I must interrupt the Hon. Member.

It being 5.45 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 50(5), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the sub-amendment. Accordingly, the question is as follows—

Mr. Pagtakhan: Madam Speaker, I am a new Member of Parliament. I would like you to be compassionate and to realize—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

.Mr. Pagtakhan: Madam Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. For the benefit of the Hon. Member and of the public who are now listening to us, I will try to explain to the Hon. Member what is happening.

There was an understanding much earlier that at 5.45 today all proceedings would be interrupted and all necessary questions would be put to the House. It was the decision of this House that this procedure would be in place. It is the Standing Order. I must put the question to the House, which is why I apologized for interrupting the Hon. Member. However, it is my duty at this time.

Therefore, the question is on the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Broadbent. Mr. Broadbent moved:

> That the amendment be amended by adding the following words: "And specifically regrets the failure of the Government to protect the environment through the criminalization of environmental offences and thorough review of the environmental impact of government initiatives: to establish a national child care program with national objectives of care; to provide a coherent, well-articulated foreign policy for Canada at a time when leadership is required; to put the needs of ordinary Canadians ahead of those of its corporate friends; to make sure that wealthy Canadian corporations and individuals carry their fair share of the tax burden; to provide assistance to workers dislocated by the trade deal and/or corporate restructuring; to meet the needs of Canada's regions; or to commit itself to a policy of full employment for all Canadians; and finally to ameliorate the harm caused to Canadian families and regions through its high interest policy.
> BREV

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the amendment to the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment, which was negatived on the following division:

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Thursday, April 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for an address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her speech at the opening of the session, and on the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

> That this House regrets that Your Excellency's advisors continue to show indifference toward the economic and social well-being of lower and middle-income Canadians and contempt for Canadian democratic institutions by dishonouring commitments to the Canadian people with regard to the implementation of the Canada-U.S. trade deal, by abandoning Canadian farm, fisheries and forest workers, by ignoring the dangerous acceleration of concentration of corporate power, by refusing to act properly and firmly to assure public access to and the safety of the Canadian transportation system, by abdicating responsibility for health care, housing and senior citizens, by failing to protect the rights of minorities across Canada, by deserting the federal role in research, technological and economic development, and by circumventing the authority of the House of Commons with regard to the expenditure of public moneys and by presenting Parliament a program empty of anything save a clear desire to dismantle the Canadian social safety net while imposing an oppressive and inequitable fiscal regime.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity that I have had in the Thirty-Fourth Parliament to address the House of Commons. I want to congratulate you and your colleagues most sincerely on your new responsibilities. You discharged those responsibilities in the past with distinction and I am convinced you will do so in the future as well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: I also am a veteran of sixteen and a half years in the House of Commons and want to welcome the new Members. I know that each of them will find the challenges here to be enormously rewarding. I think they will find that new friendships are built and that their time here is an opportunity for them to make a very important contribution to Canada.

I want as well to take the time to congratulate my critics on the opposition side of the House for their responsibilities. I followed with a great deal of interest the releases that were put out by the two opposition Parties with regard to the assignment of shadow Cabinet responsibilities. After a good deal of adding, Mr. Speaker, I discovered that the opposition Parties had appointed no fewer than 14 critics, co-critics, associate critics and assistant associate critics to monitor the health, the welfare, the state of our seniors and the fitness of our nation. All of us should be impressed by this new-found interest on the part of the Opposition. Most important, what is striking to me is that the Opposition has found a formula for work sharing that if it were to apply across the board in Canada, it could eliminate unemployment overnight, which is something I will commend to my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: The past six months have been a period of great change for Canadians. In November this Government, once again, received the support of the Canadian people, winning the first back-to-back majority of any Government since that of Louis St. Laurent in 1953. We won support for our policies, for our leadership and for our plans for the future. As Canadians know, we signed the Free Trade Agreement to give Canadians access to larger markets, to provide more jobs and to increase the number of people capable of paying into our system of social benefits rather than simply drawing upon it.

We made a commitment then as we do now that the Free Trade Agreement will not destroy our Canadian culture, deprive us of our water or damage our social programs. Indeed, exactly the opposite is the case. Just as the Auto Pact has brought new prosperity to Canadians, so will the Free Trade Agreement. That prosperity will give us the wealth that is necessary to support Canada's cultural life to enhance our environment and to extend our social programs.

Our network of social programs is an integral part of our identity as Canadians. We are proud of the fact that we have one of the finest health care systems anywhere in the world. We see the excellence of this system as one of the features which distinguishes us from our neighbours to the south.

[Translation]

For example, this year in Canada, we will spend some $50 billion, or $2,000 per Canadian, for accessible health care services of superior quality that meet the needs of our population.

[English]

That is a lot of money. Spending by my Department in support of health and welfare is, in fact, the largest single program expenditure which this Government makes. Even that figure is eclipsed by our annual interest payments on the national debt. That is why as we continue to improve our system we must do so in a financially responsible manner. We cannot afford to return to the recession of the 1970s and early 1980s when runaway inflation robbed the pensioners of their life savings, of their dignity and independence, when the level of unemployment was so high that young people looking for jobs were told that their skills were not needed. The sound base that we need to protect our social programs is a strong economic system.

Today, Mr. Speaker, some 31 cents of every tax dollar goes just to pay the interest on the mountain of debt that Ottawa has accumulated over the years. Unless action is taken quickly, that figure will grow and it will grow very rapidly indeed. If Canada is to remain solvent, the interest on the national debt is the first payment that must be made each year before anything else is funded, before pensions, health care, cultural programs, the defence of our nation and before environmental protection.

All of the programs that we think are essential for Government to provide for Canadians must share what is left after the interest has been paid. If the interest payments continue to grow unchecked, they will threaten not only our ability to bring in new programs to meet changing conditions but also our ability to maintain the programs which we have today. We owe it to our children upon whom we are piling this enormous debt burden and to those who depend upon Government to provide essential services to prevent that crisis from developing.

In Monday's Speech from the Throne the Government promised firm leadership in overcoming the environmental threat to our planet. This is a particularly important initiative from a health point of view.

For example, each 1 per cent decrease in the ozone layer can mean a 4 per cent to 6 per cent increase in certain skin cancers. Dirty water or contaminated food supplies can be responsible for food poisoning, cancers, and other disorders. The health of our nation is intimately linked to the safety of our environment, the air that we breathe and the water that we drink.

[Translation]

This Government's commitment to favour sustainable development, to clean up and protect our major waterways and to eliminate the scourge of acid rain will greatly improve the average Canadian's welfare.

[English]

This is only one of our commitments to an improved lifestyle. There are others. As we look for ways in the next four years to make progress in building a country where the health and safety of our citizens is paramount, we will be placing new emphasis on AIDS treatment and prevention, dealing with drug abuse, reducing family violence, implementing a child care program, finding better ways to treat diseases of the elderly, continuing the fight against tobacco and alcohol abuse, and launching a Royal Commission on Reproductive Technologies.

There is not time today to discuss all of these vital initiatives. However, I would like to touch on a few of them, starting with AIDS. Canadian doctors identified the first case in 1982. Since then they have reported 2,500 cases. Half have died already.

It is a terrible, fatal disease that is spreading throughout the world. The World Health Organization has estimated that 450,000 people may already have the disease and, in Africa alone, there may be 10 million people who have been infected by the virus that causes AIDS. In the United States AIDS has already claimed more lives than were lost in the Vietnam war.

It would be wonderful to be able to say that we have AIDS beaten. Unfortunately, we cannot do so. We have no effective cure and we do not expect a vaccine until the end of the century. Hundreds of thousands of lives will be lost before the disease is finally eradicated, but it can be beaten if we commit ourselves to finding a solution.

The lives of the people affected by the HIV virus can be lengthened and brightened immeasurably if we act in an intelligent and compassionate manner.

Most important, we know how people get the disease, and that it is very difficult to get if the correct precautions are taken.

In the past few weeks I have had the opportunity to meet with a number of groups fighting the disease and to visit an AIDS hospice, Casey House, in Toronto. I was impressed with how many people have become so involved in helping to deal with the epidemic. I was deeply touched by the courage of both the people who are living with AIDS, and of the people who care for them. They left me with a new sense of hope.

Research and education has lengthened the probable life span of someone diagnosed with AIDS from 24 months to as much as 36 months, and possibly more. There has been a resulting change in philosophy from simply helping someone to die with dignity to improving their quality of life and teaching them how to live with the disease.

While I am very concerned about the spread of AIDS, I am also very worried about the misinformation that spreads along with it. A survey conducted in Ontario found that most people do not want to be exposed to AIDS patients. One in five believes that children with AIDS should not be allowed to attend school.

Some public officials have called for the isolation of people with AIDS, in some cases by removing students from school and in other cases by taking away the jobs of people who have AIDS.

Instead of receiving understanding and respect for their human dignity, people with AIDS are faced with losing their families and friends and having their homes and their jobs taken away from them. It is a cruel and a destructive reaction by a society that considers itself compassionate and civilized.

From a public health perspective it would be difficult to think of a better way to spread the disease than to drive those who are afflicted underground.

I have been in contact with my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), to discuss adopting a policy for federal employees encountering AIDS in the workplace. I hope by setting an example at the federal level we can encourage other Governments and organizations to adopt guidelines which are reasonable and safe, and which respect individual rights and human dignity.

We are working hard at the federal level to improve our research and develop our educational programs. We have established a Federal Centre for AIDS and have so far committed $168 million to research, education, and community outreach.

AIDS is a problem that respects no national borders. To stop its spread we will have to pool our resources and information at the international level. For this reason we have dedicated $17.5 million to the World Health Organization's Global Program on AIDS and, in June, we will host 10,000 participants from around the world to the Fifth International Conference on AIDS in Montreal.

There are a number of other health and welfare issues that also need urgent attention.

As the father of two children, I am keenly aware that there is not a community in Canada where illicit drugs are not available. When I was Solicitor General I was shocked to receive estimates by the RCMP which indicated that each year Canadians spend almost as much on illegal drugs as they do on the defence of our country—over $10 billion dollars a year.

Our police forces have been very good at enforcing our laws and dealing strongly with traffickers, but the more that I learn about the issue, the more I realize that simply enforcing laws will not free this country from illegal drugs. Even in prisons, where we maintain 24 hour supervision, we are not able to get rid of drugs completely.

The difficulty, of course, is that if we dwell exclusively on enforcement, we are focusing attention on the symptom and not on the cause. Enforcement is essential, and we are committed to taking the profit out of crime, but we cannot deal with the issue by force alone. We have to provide treatment, adequate legislation and, most important, we have to remove the demand for drugs.

Last month I signed seven federal-provincial agreements which will provide funding for alcohol and drug abuse programs throughout Canada. I expect to be signing similar agreements with other provinces over the next few weeks. These agreements, which will provide $20 million this and each subsequent year, are part of our Government's five-year National Drug Strategy, designed to help those caught up the in the vicious circle of drug abuse.

Our current legislation is complex and not totally responsive to emerging trends in drug abuse. The recent increase in the use of "designer drugs" and "look alike drugs" which are not covered by the Narcotic Control Act or the Food and Drug Act is an ongoing problem.

It is a problem which will be addressed shortly when we introduce legislation on psychoactive substance control to control the sale of those new drugs. The Bill will strengthen our ability to combat traffickers, while removing obstacles to the proper medical and scientific use of psychoactive substances.

One of the awful things about drug abuse is that it usually involves our young people. The more I learn about the problem, the more convinced I am that this is only one area where the needs of our youth are not being fully met today.

A truly civilized and caring society must put a priority on our children. Since 1971 the proportion of one-income families has fallen to 25 per cent of all families, while the number of two-income families has risen to almost half. Combined with this is the fact that the number of single parent families is rising rapidly.

[Translation]

There is no doubt that child care is an important matter and that the Government must actively support this service. During the past year, the federal Government spent about $625 million on it, as much as all the provinces together.

[English]

We have a $100 million Child Care Initiatives Fund which, among other projects, is funding a conference of 1,200, organized by the Canadian Child Day Care Federation, being held in Winnipeg as we speak. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated in his address yesterday, we remain committed to implementing a national child care program. Until we pass new legislation, we will continue to support provincial funding of child care programs through the Canada Assistance Plan for those families most in need.

• (1020)

I am also deeply concerned about the incidence of family violence and child abuse in Canada. A 1987 report by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women estimated that as many as one million women in Canada may be battered each year by the men they live with. The Badgley Report stated that 42 per cent of the population have been victims of unwanted sexual acts during their lives and that most of the victims have been children. Those are shocking statistics. They require Government action.

Family violence inflicts devastating costs on individuals, on families and on society as a whole. That damage, both physical and emotional, can have long-term effects on people's lives.

We are currently in our first of a four-year program which involves six federal Departments and $40 million to help to address the problem of family violence. One of the cornerstones, Project Haven, is a program operating through CMHC to build 500 new emergency shelter units across Canada. All together our new shelters will enable us to house an additional 25,000 battered women and children each year.

Because we recognize the importance of community participation, we funded 89 projects last year to improve our response to family violence. These projects range from a national survey of elder abuse to sensitivity training for teachers, doctors and lawyers who may be able to detect and help in instances of abuse. The sexual abuse of children is one of the best examples of the painful and concealed problem which must be confronted openly and honestly.

We have many projects and substantial funding devoted to this problem, but realize that there is a pressing need for better information on what is often a family's deepest and darkest secret. For this reason I have a special advisor on child sexual abuse, Mr. Rix Rogers, who will be reporting to me by this fall on how best to proceed with federal initiatives.

[Translation]

Finally, we must deal with an aging society. During the next 15 years, the number of elderly in Canada will more than double. We must find ways to help seniors age serenely, while maintaining their independence and quality of life as long as possible.

[English]

It is heart-breaking to see an otherwise healthy senior citizen whose mind has been afflicted by Alzheimer's disease or has been crippled by osteoporosis. The Department of National Health and Welfare will commit an average of $4 million each year to research into diseases which inhibit the independence of our older people. Our challenge is to achieve a healthy and productive life for every Canadian.

These are just some of the areas which I believe deserve more attention. Mr. Speaker, you will see a renewed commitment in the fight against AIDS and drug abuse. We will develop further our programs on child sexual abuse and family violence, the hidden tragedies which can destroy people's lives. We will encourage research into diseases associated with aging so that seniors can have lives of independence and dignity.

Today, April 7, is World Health Day. In Canada we are blessed with high standards for health and quality of life which are not shared by much of the rest of the world. In many countries, the issue is not the quality of life, it is survival of the self. As we develop our health system through legislation, research and education, we must help Canadians to help themselves, and also to help those who are less fortunate.

[Translation]

We have reason to be proud, but we must also be realistic about the problems facing us. I have the firm hope that by working together, we can make real improvements.

[English]

It is a challenge that is worthy of us all. It is one that will pay very rich rewards indeed if we succeed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I have two short comments and questions to ask of the Minister of National Health and Welfare(Mr. Beatty). As he began his remarks he talked about the mountain of debt that the Government has got to work with. I am very concerned about that, as are all Canadians.

I just wondered if he would be more explicit. My understanding, as I go back through the records, is that in 117 years before this Government took over the mountain of debt it had accumulated was somewhere in the $150 billion to $160 billion range. In the next four or five years this Government has apparently run it up to an accumulated deficit of somewhere in the range of $220 billion or $225 billion. I am wondering just how much responsibility for that mess his Government is willing to take.

As well, the Minister spoke about the useless unemployment that was created before his Government took over. I am wondering if he would look into or admit to the use of bureaucratic means to achieve less unemployment. I refer to the situation that applies in many rural areas where the unemployment insurance department refuses people unemployment insurance unless they will abandon their small communities and go into the cities for jobs after they have lost jobs in those small communities. Those people no longer show up in the statistics. They are just as unemployed as they were before.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's questions and I will try to deal with them in a serious way. The issue of debt is one which is continuing to grow in Canada. We are proud of the fact that this Government took a deficit of some $38 billion which we inherited and in each of the four years following that we were able to cut that federal deficit and ultimately to reduce it by some $10 billion a year. But that is not good enough.

What we are doing is simply reducing the rate at which the national debt continues to grow. If our concern in this Parliament is to provide for our children in a way that is compassionate, that understands and anticipates their needs, it is important that we not simply defer to future generations the responsibility for coming to grips with that growing national debt.

Most important, as the Minister charged with the responsibility for Canada's social programs, I know that when we reach a stage where 31 cents out of every dollar that is being raised from the taxpayers of Canada is going just to service the interest on the national debt, and that this figure continues to grow year after year, it poses a very real threat to the very survival of Canada's social programs.

The Hon. Member raises a question in which there was a partisan element, but I think the question was a serious one. It deserves a serious response.

Canadians from one coast to another have a right to expect a serious debate in Parliament and across the country about, first, whether we acknowledge as a priority that Canada's economic house has to be put in order, that the Government of Canada is not immune from the laws of economics, that we cannot repeal them and that the same rules govern ordinary households, small businesses or family farms have to apply to Government as well. One cannot constantly be spending more money than one is bringing in without very serious problems indeed.

Does every Member of Parliament acknowledge that there is a critical and growing problem with this mountain of federal debt? That is the first question.

Mr. Milliken: Why didn't you do something about it over the last four years?

Mr. Beatty: Exactly. Let us start with an acknowledgement from all sides of the House—if we can get it—that there is a real problem. Then let us have honest solutions proposed, not sophistry, not sleight of hand, but honest solutions proposed from all sides of the House about how to attack this. What we have seen, Mr. Speaker, in the House of Commons in Question Period and in debate over the course of this week is constant calls by Members of Parliament to increase spending, not to make any cuts in any areas, not to change the tax system but to simply defer to future generations dealing with that national debt.

Second, the hon. gentleman asked me about unemployment. I will respond to it very quickly. I also represent a rural area. What I have seen since 1984 is a dramatic turn around in terms of the opportunities for Canadians to participate fully in the labour force. This has happened across Canada where some 1,300,000 new jobs have been created. This is not sleight of hand. It is real, and I would welcome the Hon. Member to come to my constituency, my rural area. I would be pleased to show him an example of Canadians who have been able to find productive and meaningful work, not work-fair, not hand-outs and short-term jobs provided by Government, but meaningful, constructive, productive, challenging and secure jobs in the private sector as a result of the new economic climate. We are determined to build on that to provide new opportunities for other Canadians as well.

Mr. Waddell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I found the Hon. Minister's remarks on AIDS very sensitive and important. Just a couple of weeks ago I attended a funeral for one of my campaign workers, a person I have known for a long time, who died of this terrible disease. I have read Randy Shilts' book, And the Band Played On, I believe it is called, which demonstrated the American response as pretty pathetic. Health care was held back by discrimination and by bureaucratic inertia. It was sometimes held back by outright lies to the people in that it was known that the blood banks were probably contaminated and nothing was done about that for at least a year. The book is a pretty sad indictment.

I hope that the Hon. Minister's and his Department's actions Are as strong as his words on this matter. He made a reference to setting an example at the federal level. I would draw his attention to the work of the City of Vancouver, especially the Board of Education, and the work that was done there at the municipal level. It has not been the federal level that has been so active there. It has been the municipalities that have dealt with the matters of discrimination. I would compare the response by the elected officials and the politicians of the City of Vancouver, for example, with the pathetic and ignorant response of Andy Haydon from the greater Ottawa regional district, or whatever it is called. So I hope the Minister will look at what Vancouver has done.

What occurred to me in reading the material was that here we have our scientists, the disease control centre, the American scientists, the world scientists if you like, looking at solutions, trying to find a vaccine and trying to find ways of treatment, new drugs. There is a drug called pentamidine, as I understand it, which helps with pneumonia cases. The Canadian Government was very slow to allow people with AIDS to use it. So I want to ask the Minister two questions. One, what is happening in terms of making new experimental drugs available more quickly to people with AIDS? Second, how does he feel about what our scientific efforts should be in research? Should we be doing it here in Canada? Should we be helping the Pasteur Institute in France, or helping the Americans in Atlanta and elsewhere, or should we be doing the research here?

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, that was a very thoughtful intervention by the Hon. Member. I think any of us who have lost a friend or colleague to AIDS cannot help but be moved by the human element of the disease. Indeed, one of the things that perhaps allows the sort of insensitivity we have seen in all too many cases across Canada is the fact that it is possible to de-personalize it and say this is somebody we do not know who has not touched my life and whose life is in jeopardy, and so I am not threatened by it, that we should ghettoize these people and shut them off from the rest of society.

I could not agree more fully with the Hon. Member that all too often the response has been that when support and assistance were most needed, people with AIDS would be told they could lose their jobs, their family, their housing or their friends as a result of having contracted the disease. It is a disgraceful response by a society which claims to be civilized.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will look at examples from Vancouver and elsewhere. What disturbs me is that the Hon. Member cited another case where people were not fairly treated, and I fully agree with him. I also read Randy Shilts' book. It is a powerful indictment as to the way in which governments have dealt with the issue of AIDS.

The Hon. Member mentioned one incident that has taken place. There is another involving a school board near Toronto which announced a policy of excluding people with AIDS from the school system. It is disturbing that these are common examples, outrageous examples of what people living with AIDS can in many instances expect from one coast to the other, and that is what we have to change.

The Hon. Member asked me two specific questions. The first is in regard to what is happening as far as making new drugs available. We are working very closely with the drug companies in order to encourage them to bring drugs on to the market. Secondly, we have written to doctors to indicate to them that the Emergency Drug Release Program is in place, that for drugs that are not approved in Canada as yet, emergency release can be made if a doctor gets in touch with the Department of National Health and Welfare and indicates that he or she believes it is important that the drug be released to a patient. This should help to bring these new drugs to patients more quickly.

Mr. Speaker, one of the key issues that has been of concern to people working with AIDS and to the gay community has been the question of drug trials in Canada, the issue of double blind placebo testing. One of the things they have pressed for is to ensure that there are elements as well of so-called open-arm testing which will enable people who are afflicted with the disease to have the opportunity to take advantage of new drugs.

Mr. Speaker, I will be communicating with the drug companies in Canada to make it clear to them that the Federal Government will entertain and approve proposals made by Canadian pharmaceutical manufacturers which include responsible programs for open-arm testing. I think this will also help to make these pharmaceuticals more available to people.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked me how we should be focusing our limited research dollars. Should we be doing everything in Canada or should we be co-operating internationally? I think the answer must be both. Clearly, AIDS is an issue which cuts across all national borders. It is important that we co-ordinate and not replicate work that is being done elsewhere. There are unique contributions that our researchers here in Canada can make, and I want to see us identify those in conjunction with people working in the community to target our money where it can be of the greatest benefit to try to find a cure for this dreaded disease.

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a new Member, I consider it a privilege to stand up and address the Speech from the Throne.

Before I become specific on the Speech from the Throne, I would like to go back to an incident that happened in my family about three weeks ago. My 13 year old daughter, Jennifer, came home from school and said, "Dad, we had a career day in class today. We all had to tell the kids what our fathers and mothers were doing in terms of their careers. When I told them you were a Member of Parliament, I received a lot of derision". She said, "I was really embarrassed to tell them. They were not only laughing at me, but they said their parents thought the life of an MP was one where you earn a lot of money but do not do a lot of work, that they see you in the House of Commons every day laughing at one another, making snide remarks at one another". As a result, I kind of reflected and wondered, what am I doing here? How did I get into this?

I went back to 1978 when I first came to this city and met a public servant by the name of Craig Carpenter who had worked for over 25 years in the Public Service of Canada. He was a man who not only loved his job and loved the Public Service, but loved Canada. He provided a lot of inspiration for me.

That experience led to the rare privilege of working with the Rt. Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau. He also loves this country. He understood the Public Service and he knew that the Government of Canada is responsible for policy-making for all Canadians, especially those regions of the country that need special help and those people who are disadvantaged.

It was that inspiration that led me to run in Broadview—Greenwood in the last election. When I debated and when I knocked on doors, I would tell my constituents, "If you vote for me, you will not just be voting for someone who will service Broadview—Greenwood. I told them I wanted to go back to Ottawa because I wanted to speak for Canada, not just Broadview—Greenwood, not just Toronto, not just Ontario, but for all of Canada. So with that in mind as my reason for being here, I want to start from the outset with the number one concern in my riding and how it was addressed in the Speech from the Throne, that being free trade.

Over 80 per cent of the people of Broadview—Greenwood voted against the free trade deal. It is not that the people of my riding were against freer trade. I am a business man and I am not against freer trade, but I did say repeatedly that I do not believe that chapter 16 of this contract, unlimited, unregulated investment, will work.

This country was built with regulated investment. I am not against foreign investment. In the last 90 days before Parliament resumed, we saw enough mergers and takeovers. The Government should have been right up front in terms of the free trade deal and should have mentioned right from the outset that it would make sure that the only instrument we have left, the bureau of competition policy, would get all the support it needed to make sure that these mergers and takeovers were in the best interests of Canada. The point I am trying to make is that I just do not understand how we can control the Canadian economy when we have given away the levers.

This is an area in which the Speech from the Throne was sadly lacking. I only hope that over the next little while, the Government will refocus on this issue before we go too far down the track.

The second issue that excited me about the Speech from the Throne, and I say this sincerely, was the issue of the environment.

Before I get any further into my remarks, I want to say that in the last few days when calling home and talking about the Speech from the Throne, many people asked me what a Speech from the Throne is, what it means. I say to those in my constituency and others who are listening today that a Speech from the Throne is like a list you have at home, a list of all the things you are going to do over the next three or four months in your house, whether it be shopping for groceries, making repairs or planning the program you will live by in your house.

I want to tell this House that I think the commitment to the environment in the Speech from the Throne was good. I only hope that the vision in that Throne Speech can become action. If it does not become action, then again we go back to rhetoric. The Minister has an opportunity to be not only a national hero but an international hero if he implements this vision.

Thinking of the environment, I want to touch on Meech Lake for a minute. I ran in my riding promoting the amendments to Meech Lake. Make no mistake about it, it was a serious issue in Broadview—Greenwood. Many people were focusing on the Meech Lake Accord. One of the things we talked about was national programs.

National programs create national will and from national will we get patriotism. I believe that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) has an opportunity to make sure, through the issue of the environment, that we create national will. No province should be allowed to opt out of any national program dealing with the environment. This will lead this Minister of the Environment to realize that just maybe there is room for one or two amendments in the Meech Lake Accord. I think his environment portfolio will lead to that realization.

The environment is not just a national issue, it is an international issue. This Government tends to think of cutting, cutting, cutting. It should focus more on creativity. I want to be constructive here. The Hon. Member who spoke previously spoke about using this House in a positive way. I want to participate in this House in a positive way, so I want to throw some creativity at the Minister of the Environment.

For many years, we have been known for our peacekeeping forces around the world, in Cypress, the Middle East and elsewhere. Why can this Minister not organize environmental forces that will go around the world in times of crisis? The incident in Valdez would have been one place where the Minister could have sent a special environmental force. The environment is not a local or national issue, it is an international issue, and I do not know of a Government in the world that, in a moment of crisis, would turn down a special Canadian force on the environment. I hope the Minister will consider this a constructive idea.

When I was walking along Rideau Street the other night, I passed by the armouries on Wurtemburg Street and saw the millions of dollars worth of equipment sitting there idle. We have to turn some of these forces into constructive use for the environment.

As well, I want to address you, Mr. Speaker, on the issue of the environment. My House of Commons business card is on recycled paper, but I could not get the House of Commons to print this business card because it was not printed on Canadian paper. If we are to be serious about the issue of the environment, we should begin right here in this House. The Speaker should consider a directive that all Members of Parliament use recycled paper for their cards and stationery. If we are to be serious about this, it should start right here in this House.

I want to continue speaking about the environment for a few more minutes. My riding is very excited about hosting this September the first populace summit on the environment in the Don Valley in Toronto, and I must say we are getting terrific support from the Department of the Environment and from the Minister of the Environment, and the diplomatic corps in the community is coming together. This is the kind of action that we need on a constant basis if we are to get ahead of this issue.

Being very specific again, I want the House to know that I share many of the concerns about the deficit, but as everyone has to believe on this side of the House, the deficit should not be put on the backs of those people who are least capable of handling it. Again, we have an opportunity to look at the deficit in a different way. Why not create a larger economic pie? Why not use environmental technology?

In Vancouver, there is an organization that has created clean air technology, Ballard Industries on the North Shore. They need $10 million to go into production, and by the turn of the century, they could have a billion-dollar industry which will create tens of thousands of new jobs. The Government would get all kinds of support in creating new environmental technology which will serve not only the environment but our deficit.

There is an organization in Burlington, Ontario, that is working on reverse osmosis. We should get behind these organizations that for years have been suffering without support because the environment was not at the top of the agenda. If we can give them that support right now, I think they will generate the kind of money that will address the deficit in a constructive way.

That is why the Government has to be very careful in the next four years. For the last while, the focus of the Government has been on the bankers it knows and the armaments it builds up. It must shift its emphasis to the mouths we have to feed and the environment we have to protect. That is where we should be going.

I also want to deal with the section in the Speech from the Throne about the caring nation. I could not get over the lack of concern in specific terms for the senior citizens of Canada. The Government, in its very first Budget, shook the seniors of Canada in an unprecedented way. I would have thought it would have been much more sensitive in light of what has been going on, and I think this not just because seniors represent 50 per cent of the riding of Broadview—Greenwood.

The seniors of Canada have worked for years to make this country what it is. I will not prejudge the Budget, because I do not know what is in it, but God forbid that this Government should tamper with the seniors of Canada again. I can only hope that that will not be the case.

I also want to talk about another specific issue. In my riding a basement apartment less than 600 square feet rents for about $1,350 a month. How can a single mother or father handle that?

The Government has talked about a national day care program and its legislation, Bill C-144, was ready to proceed. While it needs amendment, we must begin an action plan on this issue immediately. A national day care program is essential, not only for ridings like Broadview—Greenwood but throughout the country. It is another area where the vision must become a reality.

My last point about a caring society concerns drugs. In my riding drugs are being sold to children in grade school. Some four months ago a principal of a grade school in my riding came to me with a mason jar filled with syringes. He said he had found it under the portable classrooms.

The drug issue is very serious and I suggest the Government consider establishing a drug czar who would have access to all the communications resources, technical resources and the resources of the RCMP. The problem is already far out of hand and God forbid that we should see an environment developing here similar to the one in Washington today. We should learn from the example in Washington and prevent the problem from occurring here. The Government should start by appointing a drug czar who would bring special focus to this problem.

I have talked about free trade, the environment, seniors, day care and drugs. Now let me make a point about the Public Service of Canada. I have noticed in the last six months that there is a great deal of lethargy in the Public Service of Canada at present. The Government should be addressing this problem. Many do not realize that the Public Service of Canada is the engineroom for this Chamber. I have talked to many public servants who believe in their jobs as a vocation. Many public servants believe in Canada but they have faced too much pressure as a result of cuts imposed by the Government, cuts that have not always been correct. I make this statement constructively.

I am not proposing to fatten the Public Service, but many good public servants have been ruined because the Government has made cuts in the wrong area. For example, our immigration officers here and abroad are under tremendous pressure. Many other public servants in other departments should be given the proper assistance to implement the policies that come from this Chamber. It has been said that you are only as good as the factory. The factory must be in good shape but right now the Public Service is demoralized and needs serious attention.

Finally, I want to talk about multiculturalism. I am not convinced that the present approach to multiculturalism is the correct one. We should take an entirely different approach to the area of multiculturalism.

The Government should consider a super ministry of culture which makes multiculturalism our national symbol. This issue has been given simple add-on status to a department for too long. I know that my co-critic shares this view.

I hope this matter is put on the agenda early in the Government's mandate. Perhaps we can learn from Walt Disney who had inscribed on his hard hat, when he was building Disneyland, the word "imagineering". It is a blend of imagination and engineering which made Disneyland what it is. We have to apply that blend of imagination and engineering to much of the public policy we discuss in this House.

In conclusion, it was 10 years ago when Craig Carpenter and Pierre Elliott Trudeau inspired me to get into public life. I only hope that our activities in this House in the next few years will cause me and all of us to set an example that will encourage other Canadians to get into public life. My ultimate satisfaction will be for my daughter Jennifer to finally go back to school and be proud that her father is an MP.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, let me congratulate the Hon. Member on his maiden speech. What is the present position of the federal Liberal Party with respect to the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord?

Mr. Mills: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows what the Party position is. We in this House voted for and supported the Meech Lake Accord, with nine amendments which the press has never reported. I realize that the Hon. Member's Party has amendments as well, but not as many.

An Hon. Member: Not as good.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the new Member of Parliament for Broadview—Greenwood (Mr. Mills) for sharing with the House and all colleagues a fresh vision from Broadview—Greenwood. It behooves that Member in the far corner to ask a question about the position of this Party on Meech Lake as opposed to taking a look at his own Party.

Perhaps while I have the floor I can ask the Member to go into some detail about the environmental conference he is initiating not only on a local basis but on an international scale?

Mr. Mills: Mr. Speaker, this is an opportunity for the Government and the private sector to get together. I salute the Loblaw Company, the largest food company in the world, which has decided to get behind our world summit on the environment in the Don Valley. We now have the support of all levels of government, the Province of Quebec, the Province of Ontario. We will have over 70 speakers coming from around the world. It will be the first populace summit on the environment that has ever been held on the planet. In the past these summits have been for politicians and specialists on the environment. I want to extend a personal invitation to every Member of the House to attend.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—CONTACTS BETWEEN CANADA AND PALESTINIAN LIBERATION ORGANIZATION

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, the recent initiative by the Government of Canada to upgrade its level of contact with the Palestinian Liberation Organization and to reinforce its support for self-determination for the Palestinians is to be commended.

Canada has long been well regarded by all parties in the Middle East as a peacekeeper and a moderate, trusted voice. This move will further reinforce that position.

HEALTH

WITHDRAWAL FROM SALE OF DRUG ADVOCATED

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, Canada is the only country in the world still selling Diclectin, the generic copy of Bendectin, an anti-nausea drug which has been linked to birth defects when taken by pregnant women.

Bendectin was voluntarily withdrawn by its manufacturer in 1983 because of the high number of lawsuits brought by parents on behalf of children with birth defects linked to this drug. Why Canada would continue to allow the generic copy to be sold when so much uncertainty surrounds this product is incomprehensible.

The Government claims the drug has not been withdrawn because there is insufficient proof it causes birth defects. Many Canadian families do not agree. These people have not a shadow of a doubt that their child's defects are directly related to this drug.

I therefore call on the Government to launch a full investigation immediately into the drug Bendectin and its generic Diclectin, and to prohibit the company from marketing this drug until such time as it is proven safe for use.

I think Canadian families have every right to be heard in this matter rather than just a word given to the Department of Health and Welfare and by the manufacturer of this drug. The Department of Health and Welfare has never done an investigation into this drug.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

TRIBUTE TO DYNAMISM OF SEPT-ÎLES

Mr. Charles A. Langlois (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, the Chamber of Commerce of Sept-Îles is celebrating its 35th anniversary this year. The Chamber is organizing several events, including an evening to recognize its former presidents. This will be held on Saturday, April 8 and will highlight the involvement of many women and men in improving the community, economic and cultural life of Sept-Îles.

I am pleased to call on all Members of the House of Commons to join me in paying special tribute to all the people of Sept-Îles who over the last 35 years have worked together to make their community a dynamic, well-organized city. Special mention goes to Gustave Blouin, one of the founders of the Chamber who represented the riding of Manicouagan in the House of Commons for many years.

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

CALL FOR RETENTION AS ENTITY

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, two days ago it was reported that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) was considering cutting, slashing and/or privatizing all or part of the National Arts Centre. Such a move would be viewed with dismay by the vast majority of Canadians, Canadians who view the promotion of arts and culture as a national priority and one for which the National Arts Centre is a leading institution.

Moreover, slashing the National Arts Centre would be devastating to my riding of Nepean and the National Capital Region as a whole. Were the NAC Orchestra to be privatized, a move that is under consideration, the resulting hunt for corporate funding would have a chilling effect on the fund-raising ability of all the region's cultural groups.

Instead of another "Night at the Opera", and in keeping with the "commitment to the growth and development of Canada's cultural life" outlined in the Throne Speech, I urge the Minister of Communications to look for ways of increasing funding for arts and culture in Canada rather than ways of cutting it back.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

FIRE SERVICES EXEMPLARY MEDAL

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, the Fire Services Exemplary Medal was established in 1985 and is one of three national medals honouring Canadians who serve the public in dangerous professions. Medals were previously established for the police in 1983 and Correctional Service employees in 1984.

Firefighters who have served 20 or more years with exemplary service are eligible to receive this honour only if they were active in service on or after August 29, 1985. Many Canadians who risked their lives in this honourable and dangerous profession are being discriminated against because they retired on or before August 28, 1985.

I urge the federal Government to recognize the great, personal risk taken by these Canadians, and to honour all who qualified on or before August 29, 1985.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE CEASEFIRE AND GREATER ACCESS TO CANADIAN CONSULAR SERVICES

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, an immense world tragedy is now taking place before our eyes in Lebanon. What is happening there is unacceptable and the Government of Canada must be very active in the United Nations and initiate joint action with other countries for an immediate cease-fire.

More than 200,000 wonderful Lebanese Canadians of all religions beg us to increase our efforts to help poor, beloved Lebanon. We must support Lebanon's sovereignty and independence. Like the countries of the European Economic Community, the Vatican, France and the United States, all allies and friends of Canada, we must insist on the unconditional withdrawal of all non-Lebanese armed forces, except for the UN peacekeeping force. And we must offer diplomatic assistance to Lebanon in this cruel phase of its history.

I urge the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to please open a temporary office in Cyprus for all the consular and diplomatic requirements of Lebanon, since it is absolutely unacceptable and unthinkable to ask the Lebanese to go to Damascus for their consular needs. So I ask the Minister, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs, to whom I will not put any questions today as I had warned him, to take this action. And I think that the 200,000 Lebanese Canadians of all religions will be eternally grateful to him.

WORLD HEALTH DAY

NECESSITY TO ADOPT HEALTHY LIFESTYLES

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) stated this morning, April 7 is World Health Day. The international community has set this day aside to encourage us to reflect on health as a precious individual asset and to recognize the right of all people to health. It is also a day to remind us that health is the responsibility of both the individual and the community.

While action by Governments at all levels is an essential element in improving the health of people, it is not the whole answer. Individuals must share the responsibility for their own health by adopting healthy lifestyles. The acceptance of such personal responsibility depends greatly on the ability of our health workers, educators, and decision-makers to communicate appropriate health information to every man, woman, and child. In an effort to address that need, the theme of this year's World Health Day is "Let's talk health/Parlons santé".

THE FRANCHISE

EXTENSION TO CANADIANS WORKING ABROAD

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in the last Parliament, I introduced a Private Member's Bill and a motion to give Canadians who work abroad, for example, the workers for CUSO, and other non-government organizations, the right to vote in Canadian general elections. Canadian diplomats and soldiers can vote but not others who are working abroad. I had a good hearing in committee, but when the legislation came forward there was no change.

About a week ago I saw the Soviet elections. Every Soviet citizen working or vacationing in Canada went to the Soviet embassy and voted on election day. I say, Mr. Speaker, are the Soviets more democratic than we Canadians? I ask you, Mr. Speaker, let's have a little more perestroika here in Canada. Let's catch up to the new Soviet democracy and allow our non-government organization workers who work abroad to vote in Canadian elections by going to a Canadian embassy.

WINE INDUSTRY

PRIORITY SOUGHT FOR USE OF CANADIAN WINES AT PARLIAMENTARY FUNCTIONS

Mr. Ken Atkinson (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, within the past few weeks the federal Government and the Government of Ontario reached a final agreement to ensure compensation is given to Ontario grape growers for the removal of surplus vines as well as of those vines which do not yield the varieties of grapes conducive to producing premium wines. This action will allow the grape and wine industry to further develop high quality wines.

Given the extreme competitiveness of today's market, the continued enhancement of premium wines is crucial to the long-term survival of the Canadian wine industry.

It is very important that all Canadians realize that we have in our own backyard, wines which have won awards at many international competitions.

In support of this industry, we as parliamentarians should continue to ensure that Canadian wines are given priority when planning events to be held in conjunction with the House of Commons, as well as events sponsored by the various political Parties and associations.

WORLD HEALTH DAY

POOR HEALTH OF ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of World Health Day. While this is a very important occasion around the globe, I would like to draw Hon. Members' attention to a health crisis which exists right here in our own country.

It is no secret that the health of Canada's aboriginal peoples is a most pressing issue. Housing shortages have led many to live in sub-standard housing. Inadequate water and sewer infrastructures have contributed to the poor health of First Nations. Insufficient funding for health care services and facilities does not meet the increasing needs of those trying to rectify the situation.

S. O. 31

In recent months we have heard of PCB contamination, mercury pollution, and tuberculosis outbreaks in some native communities, some of which are located in my riding.

I urge the Government to make a firm commitment to improved funding for programs which will ensure that the health of our First Nations people is restored.

THE ENVIRONMENT

GOVERNMENT PRIORITIES

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted with the strong emphasis on the environment in the Throne Speech.

As a Member of Parliament who is concerned about our quality of life and has been militant in environmental affairs in the last few years, I wholeheartedly support the various initiatives announced in the Throne Speech: to promote sustainable development; to enlarge the responsibilities of the Department of the Environment to ensure that environmental issues are fully considered in the course of its decision making; to negotiate an acid rain accord with the United States; to develop and adopt clean production processes; to improve the quality of our water; and to establish the Environmental Partners Fund.

These initiatives are a response to my own expectations and demands and those of my fellow citizens.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Progressive Conservative Government has made the environment one of its top priorities and intends to continue the unique leadership it has shown in this area.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

PROGRESS TOWARD INTERNATIONAL TEST BAN TREATY

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, on April 5 an unprecedented breakthrough was announced in the effort to end nuclear test explosions. Under the terms of the partial test ban treaty signed in 1963 by Khruschev and Kennedy, a conference must be convened to discuss its conversion into a comprehensive test ban if so requested by one-third of the 116 countries which originally ratified it.

The breakthrough came last week, Mr. Speaker, when Tanzania added its name to a list of 38 countries calling for the amendment conference. It is incomprehensible that the Canadian Government remains opposed to this progressive move which would open the doors to further dialogue on the reduction of nuclear arms. To doom negotiations to failure before they have begun is very unwise.

We must do all we can to rid the world of life-threatening nuclear arms now, and our Government should encourage and support the amendment conference which would bring us closer to this goal.

TAXATION

PROPOSED NATIONAL SALES TAX—FORECAST OF IMPACT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, today Liberal and Tory Finance Ministers from across the country are gathering behind closed doors cutting a deal on a national sales tax. That deal will be one of the biggest tax grabs in the history of our country.

How big is that Tory tax grab going to be? The former Chairman of the Finance Committee said some $10 billion. The Ontario Minister of Finance says $14 billion. I suggest that ordinary Canadians hang onto their wallets because this tax will amount to about $1,000 for every man, woman, and child.

That Tory tax grab will mean a sales tax in many provinces of 16 per cent, 17 per cent, 18 per cent, and 19 per cent. For the ordinary Canadian people this will be recessionary. It will drive up the inflation rate, interest rates, and unemployment.

I say to the Canadian people it is time to stand up and say no to the Tory tax grab. Say no to the Tories trying to take more money from your pockets. No.

IMMIGRATION

DEMAND THAT OFFICIALS APOLOGIZE TO COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, several weeks ago the immigration office in Toronto refused to provide a briefing on the new refugee legislation to a community organization in the community of Jane Finch in my riding of York West. The reason for this was that the officers said the community was "too dangerous" to enter.

I wish to tell the Minister and the Government that this was a slap and a severe blow to the integrity and the fibre of that proud community.

Jane Finch is not some simple geographic intersection. It is a proud community made up of proud, hard working Canadians, which deserves full and equal service. In addition to slamming the integrity of the community the Government is also undermining the principle of equal service to all Canadians, regardless of who they are and where they live.

I call upon the Minister of Immigration (Mrs. MacDougall) to reverse this very offensive behaviour by her officials, and to render a public apology to the community and immediately establish a proper briefing for an organization that is willing to co-operate and work hand-in-hand with the Government on refugee legislation.

The community is sick and tired of people who cast innuendoes and very easy stigmas on a community that has to work very, very hard to refute unfair allegations.

THE LATE MURDO MARTIN

Mr. Cid Samson (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Murdo Martin who served as the Member of Parliament for Timmins from 1957 to 1968, and who passed away in January.

Murdo's years of service to our country started during the Second World War when he served overseas with the Canadian Army.

Murdo was a firefighter and was very active in his union where he became the president. He also was president of the Cochrane District Labour Council and of his local credit union.

He presented himself as the CCF candidate in Timmins in the 1957 general election, an election which he won. He stood for better things for working people. He survived the Diefenbaker sweep of 1958 and helped the CCF transform itself into the NDP in 1961. He also won re-election in 1962, 1963, and in 1965.

I believe that the greatest tribute to Murdo's political skill and commitment to his constituents was this string of re-elections.

Since leaving this Chamber, Murdo remained active in the local NDP and labour movement in Timmins. His help and advice to me will always be remembered, and his commitment to working people will never be forgotten.

May I conclude by offering my sympathies to Grace Martin and the rest of his family. Timmins and this Chamber have lost a great friend.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

FEDERAL SUBSIDIES FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

Yesterday the Canadian Human Rights Commissioner tabled his annual report. Among the other things he had to say was this:

> An Indian youngster in Canada has a better chance of being sent to prison than completing university.

The Human Rights Commissioner singled out the Minister of Indian Affairs for criticism for his decision to limit federal subsidies for post-secondary education for the native people.

How can the Prime Minister allow his Government to carry on with that disgraceful decision? Does he not understand that for our native people education is the only way out?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Right Hon. Member for his question. I want to tell him right away that we do agree that education is the way out. That is why we have reviewed the guidelines in order to make them more workable so that more native students can achieve a university degree.

I would like to point out to the right hon. gentleman that since 1984 the budget with respect to post-secondary education for native students has nearly doubled.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the reply of the Minister ought to be read in conjunction with the Prime Minister's comment some time ago when Bill C-31 was before the House, that post-secondary education would not be cut nor would other facilities to our native people as a result of widening the definition of status.

RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF FUNDING FOR POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Since the Minister himself answered my question, I have to say he failed to show any sensivity to the Commissioner's comments, and I would therefore repeat what the Chief Commissioner said: An Indian youngster has a better chance of being sent to prison than completing university.

This is a national tragedy.

And the only answer the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development gave the striking students was: Go back to school.

I want to ask the Prime Minister once more to tell his Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to reverse his decision and restore funding for post-secondary education for our Native people.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that being the kind of man he is, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would not want to mislead Canadians by being less than accurate in his rendering of my answers.

First of all, I gave more than one answer. I believe I made it quite clear, Mr. Speaker, that since this program started operating with a budget, it has expanded by 10 per cent. I also said that the program will probably continue to expand as needs increase, and that we are of course considering new needs in terms of Bill C-31 which our Government introduced in order to correct a form of discrimination that has existed in Canada for a long time.

COLLEGE STUDENTS ON HUNGER STRIKE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I do not think that the House should be any more impressed with that answer than the Commissioner of Human Rights was when he singled the Minister out for criticism in his report.

As the Minister knows, a group of college students are now in their 17th day of a hunger strike to protest a policy which the Commissioner of Human Rights has termed a national tragedy. He has called it a national disgrace. Yet the Minister refuses to meet these students. By his attitude, I want to suggest to him he is perhaps compounding the potential tragedy that we have here.

Will the Minister, and through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Prime Minister, will the Prime Minister order his Minister to demonstrate some common decency and meet with the students to see whether he cannot recognize that the policy that he is leading is highly discriminatory to a very vulnerable people to whom we owe more than we are giving?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to try to play cuteness with the Right Hon. Member, but I am not impressed with his question either.

On the other hand, I do want to indicate to the House, to all Canadians, and particularly to the people who are directly concerned, that I am taking this issue very seriously, that I am prepared to sit down and discuss with whomever is interested the policy—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): With the students?

Mr. Cadieux: I have already indicated that, if it is demonstrated that the policy can be improved, I will look at it, and will obviously be interested in improving the policy.

However, this has to be done in normal circumstances. As I did earlier this week, I again urge the students to put an end to their strike and I will meet with them.

I would like to point out a suggestion that was sent by Lakehead University and Confederation College. They are specifically urging the students to put an end to the strike, and to start a bilateral process, and I am prepared to do that.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET STUDENTS

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Artic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs. I have met in private with the Minister, and I have pleaded with him. I have expressed the concerns of those students to the Minister, and I plead again to the Minister to meet with these students.

Does the Minister want to have these students continue their fast over the weekend and have the blood of those students on his hands on Monday morning?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Blondin: I find his comments to be insensitive and irrelevant to the situation at hand. Will the Minister meet with those students?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will meet with the students as soon as they put an end to their hunger strike, at whatever time they decide.

CONSULTATIVE PROCESS

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Artic): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is the following.

The cap on the education funding restricts the number of native students who want to attend post-secondary education. On that note, I have spoken to the Grand Chief of the Assembly of First Nations, Mr. George Erasmus.

Will the Minister commit to establishing a bilateral consultative process between the federal Government and First Nations native communities, which the Prime Minister committed to in a statement in the House on April, 1985, and put a moratorium on the new policy changes until this consultation process is firmly established and implemented?

The Prime Minister's words were: "There will be no cut to Indian programs". In that statement there was also a statement that inferred that inflation costs would be kept in line with the needs of the native students.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, there are many questions in that supplementary question. I will try to address all of them, if time is given to me.

First of all I wish to indicate to the House, to all Canadians, and particularly those people interested, that there is already a bilateral process between Grand Chief Erasmus and myself. We have already met.

Ms. Blondin: There is not.

Mr. Cadieux: We are scheduled to meet Monday on concerns that the Grand Chief may have. Education is one of them. I have been given the report that they have prepared, and we are looking into it. If Grand Chief Erasmus wants to speak to me on post-secondary education specifically on Monday, obviously I will do that. I am open to speak with every Grand Chief in the country on whatever subject they wish, Mr. Speaker, under normal circumstances.

With respect to commitments of the Prime Minister and this Government, not only was this program not cut, it has increased 10 per cent in the last two years.

Ms. Blondin: Over 3 years.

Mr. Cadieux: I usually listen to questions. Perhaps I could be given the same courtesy and the Hon. Member would listen to my answers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cadieux: Since 1984 expenditures with respect to natives have gone from $2.7 billion to $3.4 billion.

SUSPENSION OF HUNGER STRIKE—MINISTER'S UNDERTAKING

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question on the same serious matter. Today a band of courageous native students entered the 17th day of a hunger strike against the cruel educational policies of the Government.

The Minister has agreed to meet the students, only if they first end their hunger strike. In a spirit of compromise the students have agreed to suspend their strike in order to bring their case to the Minister.

Will the Minister agree now, in response to that compromise, to an immediate meeting with the hunger strikers in order to resolve this crisis and prevent permanent injury to those native students?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I agree with the suggestion that was made by Lakehead University and Confederation College which states:

> In order to resolve the current impasse and, in the true spirit of the consultative process in a democratic system, we strongly urge that:
> (i) In recognition of the deteriorating health of the participants, the Native student hunger strike in protest of the implemented changes to Native post-secondary education payments be ended immediately.
> (ii) Representatives of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs and the Native Peoples resolve the present impasse through bilateral discussions.

Not only will it be representatives of the Department. I am prepared to meet with them as soon as they put an end to the hunger strike.

REQUEST FOR COMMITMENT ON FUNDING

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, the students have agreed to hold up their hunger strike while the Minister meets with them. He has it within his power to stop this matter here and now, if he wants to.

Will the Minister meet with the students? Will he commit to ensuring that no Indian students will be refused post-secondary education in this country because of financial barriers imposed by his Government?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, again, the budget has been increasing with respect to post-secondary education. I presume that it will continue to increase. I will meet with the students at their convenience, as soon as they put an end to their hunger strike.

NEGO;TIATIONS WITH ELECTED NATIVE LEADERS

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, it is time that the Minister ended his double-talk about there being no cuts in this program. There are cuts in this program, and it is time that he stopped trying to pretend that they are not there.

In the consultation process that the Government talks about, over 500 groups and individuals were consulted. Not one of them supported the Government's proposal on these post-secondary education measures.

Mr. McKnight: False, false.

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Not one of them, Mr. Speaker, and that is from the Department's own officials. Will the Government do what it should have done in the first place and begin bilateral negotiations with elected native leaders to ensure that this matter can be dealt with in an effective, proper, and quick manner?

• (1130)

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, since January 30, I have been meeting with elected native leaders. I will continue to do so. To my knowledge elected native leaders do not use means such as hunger strikes to meet with me. On the contrary, they meet with me under normal circumstances and I am prepared to continue to do that.

With respect to the policy and the guidelines, they have been in force since April 1. They will apply to the students commencing university or college on September 1. In the meantime, under normal circumstances, I am prepared to look at the guidelines with whomever is interested. If they can be improved upon, we will improve upon them.

THE CONSTITUTION

REQUEST THAT THE PRIME MINISTER WITHDRAW CERTAIN REMARKS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Yesterday during his speech in the House, the Prime Minister got carried away by his own rhetoric and went so far as to say that the Constitution of this country was not worth the paper it was written on.

Today I want to ask the Prime Minister who, as the first legislator of Canada, is responsible for protecting the basic law of this country, whether he will take this opportunity to apologize and withdraw what he said, because he who discredits the Constitution discredits Canada.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in 1982 the federal Government surrendered the notwithstanding clause to the provinces, thus enabling the provincial legislatures to override decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada, as the Hon. Member well knows, and to ignore the most fundamental rights and freedoms of our society.

Thanks to this clause,—and I am perhaps by these words leaving myself open to further comment by the Hon. Member—the legislatures can pass legislation restricting freedom of conscience, peaceful assembly, association and religion, freedom of thought, opinion and expression, including the freedom of the press.

Therefore, by invoking the clause I condemned yesterday, the legislatures can deny citizens the right to life, liberty and personal security, the right not to be arbitrarily detained or imprisoned, the right to be informed promptly of the reasons of one's arrest or detention, and even worse, of the right to be assisted by counsel, the right to habeas corpus, the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty, and so forth.

These are some of the rights that may be suppressed by a given legislature, and this quite extraordinary clause was agreed to in the 1981–82 negotiations by the federal Government.

It always has been my contention that a constitution should unite a nation. The Hon. Member for Shefford knows perfectly well that the Quebec National Assembly vigourously rejected the proposal made in 1981–82. First and foremost, however, the Constitution must protect the most fundamental rights of a country's citizens. And as you see, that is not the case.

That is why I believe the Constitution drafted in 1981–82 leaves much to be desired.

NOTWITHSTANDING CLAUSE—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister. If he was so appalled at the provisions in the "notwithstanding clause", how come at Meech Lake he forgot to have that provision removed?

After the partisan debating he had yesterday, does he not feel he is moving the "notwithstanding clause" into a symbol for Quebec, pushing Quebec's Premier into making statements he never made before, opening a "from now on" era and becoming a symbol of the "Québec" way of doing things? Does the Prime Minister feel he advanced the debate yesterday, or does he not rather feel he may have undermined an eventual withdrawal of the "notwithstanding" clause, but most of all his Meech Lake Agreement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had no idea I was going to wound the feelings of the Hon. Member who himself does not beat around the bush when referring to Government proposals. He never had any qualms about speaking his mind. . .

Mr. Lapierre: Not on the Constitution!

Mr. Mulroney: Not on the Constitution! Oh no! Not on the Constitution! But the former Prime Minister gave his views on the Constitution as reported in Robert Sheppard and Michael Valpy's book, and I quote:

[English]

> When Mr. Trudeau was asked if he considered the 1981 Constitution a success he replied, "No, I consider it an abject failure".

[Translation]

In my view, the basic constitutional document should do two things; first of all, unify the country. To me, a constitution that is not supported across the land, in this case Quebec, is not a true constitution in the first place. Secondly, a constitution should protect the basic rights of citizens. But in this Constitution the legislator has been allowed to infringe upon basic rights. Certainly the Hon. Member will agree the aim of Meech Lake was not to fill offhand all the gaps, but rather to bring them. . . Careful! And as the Hon. Member will tell his colleagues, it was to finally get Quebec back into the constitutional fold, after having been left out.

[English]

NOTWITHSTANDING CLAUSE—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. He will know that in the consideration of the amending process that eventually resulted in Meech Lake it was the position of this Party that the notwithstanding clause should be on the agenda and that that clause should be withdrawn.

Can the Prime Minister tell us now why he was able to go to Meech Lake, why he was able to consider it such an enormous success when the clause which he now considers such a fundamental error was not even addressed by him, was not raised to be amended? How can he ask Canadians to accept that?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my friend asked me why the notwithstanding clause was not withdrawn. It is a legitimate question.

Mr. Kaplan: So what is the answer?

Mr. Mulroney: The other question that should be asked is why was the notwithstanding clause included in the first place. Why was it included in the first place?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): It was your Tory Premiers from western Canada who wanted it.

Mr. Mulroney: Don't try to blame somebody else.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Peter Lougheed is responsible for that, you charlatan. It was your friends and accomplices.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CONTACT PREMIERS ON ISSUE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): The Prime Minister may need a history lesson.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: I suggest a simple examination of those times will show that that was the price that had to be paid for patriation, and for the Charter of Rights.

Mr. Mulroney: Too much the price.

Mr. Marchi: Your Party supported it, Brian.

Mr. Kaplan: Why is he not now prepared to ask his colleagues, the provincial Premiers, to get together and to withdraw the notwithstanding clause, as this Party has been urging since the Meech Lake round was first conceived?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says that his Government surrendered the notwithstanding clause because it was the price that had to be paid. I tell my hon. friend he paid a price that was much too high for Canada and for the fundamental rights of Canadian citizens.

Mr. Gauthier: You voted for it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: Look at them applaud. They all voted for it.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Tell us how you voted, Joe.

Mr. Mulroney: They also know, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Stand up and tell us how you voted. You were all there.

Mr. Speaker: I think that there is still part of the question the Right Hon. Prime Minister has not dealt with. I would recognize him for the remainder of the answer.

• (1140)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact my hon. friend says that it was the price that had to be paid by the Government. The Government made a value judgment. I happen to believe that that price was excessive. It was the greatest price that a federal Parliament has ever been called upon to pay in regard to the protection of our most fundamental liberties of expression, of religion, and of association.

What we did at Meech Lake was begin the process of trying to correct, as well, another serious flaw, because there were two. That was to bring Québec into the Constitution, and I know that my friend talks about Meech Lake with respect and affection because he supported Meech Lake and I thank him for that.

EMPLOYMENT

TRAINING PROGRAM EXPENDITURES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I have here a memo that says that Canada Employment is cutting training budgets for disadvantaged youth, immigrant women and women, who are learning untraditional skills.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Langdon: These will be cut by 25 per cent in London, Toronto, Ottawa and other parts of Ontario. Given the Throne Speech commitment to increase training in this country, how can the Prime Minister justify these cut-backs to some of the most disadvantaged people in our society?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to what memo my hon. colleague is referring. What I can say to him is that we are spending now in Canada just through the Canadian Jobs Strategy, in excess of $1.7 billion a year. Approximately 40 per cent to 50per cent of that money goes to young people between the ages of 15 to 24 years of age.

It is interesting that today of all days he would ask this question, because he offers me the opportunity to announce that unemployment in this country has gone down from 7.6 per cent to 7.5 per cent this month for the unemployed youth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear! Hear!

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Minister, of course, has not answered the question. He has not pointed out that the $1.7 billion dollar figure is a cut from the $2 billion figure that the Government spent in its first year in office.

I want this Minister, if he feels so strongly, to give us an assurance that there will be no cuts to training programs, that in fact training programs for these disadvantaged groups will increase as they should in a fair country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear! Hear!

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I know that my hon. colleague from the NDP would not want to let the facts get in the way of debate. Let me refresh his memory.

On October 27, 1988, the Department of Employment and Immigration announced a $25 million initiative to assist immigrant women. Since this Government has been in power, Mr. Speaker, we have put together the Canadian Jobs Strategy which puts the emphasis on training and retraining for young people. Our summer student program works.

The level of unemployment in this country is down, and the hon. member can hold onto his seat because he is going to be seeing some action in the area of training and retraining from this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear! Hear!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

TUG BOAT EXPLOSION OFF VANCOUVER ISLAND

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of the Environment. It refers to the fuel barge, the Sea Giant, moving off Vancouver Island early this morning. Will he tell us if there was an explosion? Will he tell us if there were any hydrocarbons that went into the water? What has the Canadian Government done about it, and what does it intend to do about it in the future?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, thank you. I must report to the House that an accident occurred last night at 2100 hours Pacific Daylight Time on an American tug towing a barge 14 miles west of Vancouver Island off Esperanza Inlet. Happily I can say that this accident did not cause any spill, but the Sea Giant was sailing from Point Whales, Washington, to Ketchikan, Alaska, and the barge was and is loaded with 61,000 barrels of light fuel.

Last night an explosion happened on the Sea Giant, and they had to disengage the tug so as to prevent the fire from spreading to the barge. At this time the barge is loose without any tug pulling it, and the report we have is that there is no spill. Our coast guard, under the instructions of the Ministry of Transport, has dispatched a vessel and a helicopter to the scene and the weather is calm. One American tug, the Storm Queen, is already there on the scene. We are waiting for two more American tugs. They should be there in a few hours./ At least one of them will have the power to secure a tow line and resume the sailing of the barge to Alaska.

I must say that we have constant communication through the Tofino Radar Station and the emergency Coast Guard centre of communication in Vancouver. It is confirmed that there is no spill, no leak, and that everything should be under control in a few hours.

CLARIFICATION REQUESTED

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, just two days ago, outside this House, the Minister of the Environment gave his commitment that the Canadian Government would personally have the right to approve any plan about removal of the vessel before the vessel was to be moved. How can he now say that there was an explosion, and presumably he personally and his Department are responsible for putting together the plan for removal?

An Hon. Member: That is another one.

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would like to clarify the facts in the mind of the Hon. Deputy because those are not the same ships. The ship I talked about yesterday and two days ago was the Valdez supertanker which was involved in the accident in Alaska, but we are talking now about a tug normally towing a barge of fuel from Washington to Alaska. It is a very different accident.

An explosion occurred on this tug last night. The barge is still in a stable position. There is a light wind. It did not drift toward our coast, and all measures have been taken now to secure the position, and in a few hours this barge will be on her way again to Alaska without any spill.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, given it is the second time in a few days that there is a risk to the Pacific Coast of Canada, I would like to ask the Minister whether he would be prepared to invoke his authority under the Canada Shipping Act and, in fact, make sure that the Canadian Government, and not an American company like Exxon or some other company, is responsible for making sure of the safety of this vessel and of the other vessel? Will he invoke his authority under the Canada Shipping Act?

• (1150)

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had listened to what I said she would have noticed that the accident occurred in international waters—

Ms. Copps: It is a 200-mile limit.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Fourteen miles is two miles off our own waters. It is an American accident involving American ships in international waters. Although it happened in American waters, we are taking all the measures I have explained to control the situation. We will be ready to assist and watch the situation. Everything will be back in order in a few hours. There is no need to alarm Canadians about that now.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES SOFTWOOD LUMBER AGREEMENT—U.KS. SENATOR'S ACCUSATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. This morning in Washington, the Chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Trade accused Canada of widespread cheating under the softwood lumber agreement. I believe the Minister would agree that this kind of public insult should not be tolerated. I expect the Government will make an appropriate response this morning to this attempt to intimidate and insult this country.

More important, does this not provide further proof that the softwood lumber agreement is unworkable, that it is punitive to the interests of Canadian producers, that it is causing major fractions between the two countries? Does he not believe that it is time to begin negotiation for revocation and repudiation of this agreement?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman surely understands that there are, I think, 102 Senators in the United States of America and we cannot be held responsible for the remarks or comments made by any of them. The suggestion that there has been any fraud involved in the softwood lumber situation is a matter that is under investigation by the responsible Department.

In reference to the softwood lumber situation generally, there have been consultations with the provinces and the trade. This is a complicated issue to which there are no simple solutions. We are reviewing the situation. When we believe there is action we can take that would be an advantage to Canadians and Canadian softwood lumber exporters, we will take such action.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister piques my curiosity as to whether the two additional Senators now in the United States are required as part of the Free Trade Agreement and they are now part of Canadian representation.

REQUEST THAT REPUDIATION OF AGREEMENT BE NEGOTIATED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the testimony heard before the subcommittee this morning it was stated that the Minister for International Trade in his first meeting with Mrs. Carla Hills, the new U.S. trade negotiator, has in fact asked for a negotiation on the softwood lumber agreement. Will the Minister confirm whether there will be discussions dealing with the revocation of or changes to the softwood lumber agreement?

Is the Minister prepared to tell Canadians whether the Government of Canada now recognizes the softwood lumber agreement was a bad agreement, a bad deal for this country? Is it now prepared to pursue direct negotiations with the United States to repudiate that agreement?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we do not propose to simply repudiate an agreement. This was an agreement entered into to save Canada from even worse consequences. At least the revenues that are collected under the 15 per cent export tax or under the increased stumpage charges remain in Canada.

In fact, while I may not have the figure exactly, I believe in Ontario some $50 million to $60 million has gone to the province from the export tax, that would not have gone to Ontario. There are hundreds of millions of dollars that have stayed in Canada which would not have stayed in Canada if it had not been for this Memorandum of Agreement.

The facts are that the softwood lumber market has changed. The softwood lumber market is softer in the United States. Prices are going down. The same is true in Canada. The economic circumstances have changed. The exchange rate has changed. Therefore we think it would be reasonable for changes to be made in this arrangement. Whether the United States will agree is another question. We have pointed out these facts to the United States. There have been no formal negotiations in this connection, however.

ABORIGINAL LPEOPLES

INNU OF NEWFOUNDLAND – PROTECTION AGAINST LOW-LEVEL MILITARY FLIGHTS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister who, I am sure, is aware of the ongoing trial of some 38 Innu in Newfoundland at this time. In my judgment these people are guilty of only one thing, that is, of defending their homeland against what they perceive as an invasion.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to do what many groups have been urging upon the Government and drop the charges, wait until the Federal Environmental Assessment Review is done, and declare a moratorium on low-level flight testing? Will he come to an arrangement with those people that will protect their land and their interests?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member recognizes in his statement that there are Innu who are facing court charges at the present time. They are now in court.

All I can inform the Hon. Member is that when I went to Goose Bay I had planned the trip for two weeks. I wanted a meeting with the Innu leaders. I went to meet with other leaders at the same time. On the Friday I was there, at 11.30 the Innu agreed to meet. I hoped it would be a productive discussion where we could talk and make arrangements that could benefit both the people of Happy Valley-Goose Bay, and its economy, and the needs of the Innu people. At that time I was not allowed the opportunity to discuss with the Innu leaders.

Let me make a suggestion to the Hon. Member. If those groups who claim to be supporting the Innu and their cause, if they would not be seen in some people's mind to be using the Innu for other means, would support the Innu in their land claims so they can assemble their needs, I think we could have very productive talks.

Mr. Blaikie: The Innu have made no such claim that they are being used by these groups. They have worked with these groups over the years and the Minister does a disservice to all the people who have been involved in this struggle to suggest anything else.

REQUEST THAT CHARGES AGAINST PROTESTERS BE DROPPED

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's response, but I will direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister because it is Canadian moral credibility abroad which is at stake here. We know that there were demonstrations in several European capitals yesterday about this particular issue. The fact is that in the name of defence Canada—quite correctly—is seen to be committing an act of aggression against an element of its own people, the Innu in Newfoundland.

When will the Prime Minister take a personal interest in this matter to see to it that justice is done, the charges against these people are dropped, and a fair arrangement is arrived at with these people? They have never surrendered title to their land. They are entitled to be dealt with fairly, not the way they have been dealt with up to now.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member should be aware, there are other individuals who live in Labrador. There is an economy there that depends greatly on the expenditures that take place within the region from the Goose Bay defence establishment.

If I had the opportunity to talk with the Innu leaders I would have informed them that no new nations would fly until the environmental impact study had been done and the FEAR panels had concluded their work. I would have informed the Innu that the flights that will take place this year will be approximately the same number as last year. I would have liked to talk to the Innu to be able to ask them what resources they may need to take part in the FEAR panel that will be called.

• (1200)

An environmental impact study was started some two years ago by my predecessor at a cost of over $6.5 million. I certainly hope that Members will allow that study to take its due course and we will then be able to make new assessments as to whatever the needs may be for the people of Goose Bay and Happy Valley and for the some 1,100 Innu in Labrador.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member for Ottawa West to put a single question, please.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

VISIBLE MINORITY REPRESENTATION IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Yesterday in the House the Government showed no concern that the representation of visible minorities in federally regulated industries and in the Public Service is abysmal.

Visible minorities represent 6.4 per cent of the working population of Canada but only 2.6 per cent of employees in Government Departments. How does the Minister explain this obvious discrimination in hiring and what does he intend to do about it? Is he aware that visible minorities represented 12 per cent of applications for federal government employment last year but only 3.3 per cent of hirings?

This is shameful, Mr. Speaker, and I ask the Minister what measures he will take to give visible minority Canadians an equal opportunity to be employed by their Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, since 1984 the Government is concerned with representation issues in the Public Service and also in the industries that are under the federal jurisdiction. And I can tell you that when we examine the data, we can see that important improvements have been registered in every sector. Regulations now in place should ensure on the one hand that we get timely situation reports and on the other, that policies are established to promote the employment of women, natives, people with handicaps and visible minorities in the Public Service and in the industries that come under the federal jurisdiction.

That is an objective that the Government is actively pursuing. Progress has been made and more is expected in the years to come.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am going to ask the indulgence of the Minister of the Environment to take one supplementary from an Hon. Member from the West coast, the Hon. Member for Victoria.

Introduction of Bills

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

WEST COAST—THREAT POSED BY TANKER AND BARGE TRAFFIC

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate the Minister of the Environment for the geography lesson given to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. We appreciate it.

The issue of the barge separation is yet again a demonstration of the fact that tanker and barge traffic on the West Coast is a threat to the very fragile environment of the West Coast. I would like to ask the Minister if he would again overrule the Minister of Transport who, the other day, said there would be no public inquiry, and make a commitment on behalf of the Government that the issue of oil spills and tanker traffic will be open to a full, public, independent inquiry in the immediate future.

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would like to use this occasion to correct myself and clarify part of something I said. The first time I described the site of the accident involving the barge, I correctly referred to international waters, and in the heat of the exchange that followed I might have used the term American waters, which of course is wrong. It was really international waters.

As to the question, in my view the accident of last night confirms the decision of this Government to review the rules governing the traffic off the West Coast of Canada, and we will conduct this review with the utmost swiftness, seriousness and efficiency. Our Deputy Ministers will directly report to all the Ministers involved, and we should have a preliminary report very soon so as to be able to know if we can improve those very efficient rules which were very seriously set up 10 years ago, but we should know if it is possible to improve them. At the same time, we will certainly see to the possibility of improving the response if the prevention would fail.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Minister for granting the indulgence because we are well past the time for Question Period. I think there is occasionally merit in extending the Question Period, but I want to make it very clear that this will not be a pattern. I thank the Minister and I thank the Hon. Member.

POINT OF ORDER

CORRECTION OF STATEMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, at the end of Question Period yesterday, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair (Mr. McCurdy) and I were involved in an exchange. I have had the opportunity to consult Hansard, and I am of the conclusion that I misheard and misquoted the Hon. Member in an exchange relating to Namibia. He used the word "flawed". I heard the word "fraud". I apologize. I indicated to him that if I was wrong, I would apologize. I was wrong, and I apologize.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, the statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) honours this House and preserves the honour that we all respect in him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORTATION ACCIDENT INVESTIGATION BOARD ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-2, an Act to establish the Transportation Accident Investigation Board.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Transport my basic responsibility is to enhance air safety throughout the country, and of course there should be no doubt about my commitment to take all appropriate measures to that end. In my statement last week I said that, at the earliest opportunity, I would introduce a Bill concerning the establishment of an independent board to look into air, sea, and rail accidents, and this is what I am doing today.

[English]

With the concurrence of this House, I will be referring the legislation to the Standing Committee on Transport. I will be seeking its views to ensure we have a clear definition of the roles of the board, the chairman and the investigators.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I hope all Hon. Members will co-operate and I urge them to give speedy approval to this Bill of utmost importance for maintaining safety.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister has created a precedent of sorts. Ministers do not usually make statements when introducing bills. Since he did make a few remarks I think the Official Opposition should also comment on this matter. I heard the Minister say that he will be referring the Bill to a standing committee of the House or to a legislative committee and, with that in mind, he has asked for the support of the House. For the time being I am not sure whether we agree with him on that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On the point raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), the short statement made by the Minister concerning this Bill does not amount to a precedent. It is a rare occurrence, I must agree, but not a precedent. The Minister has the right to do so. I would not want to debate the issue with the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier who is fully conversant with the Standing Orders.

Mr. Gauthier: Perhaps we might ask the House to be as agreeable with the Official Opposition and let a Member on this side make a brief comment on the Minister's initiative, a very constructive statement, as it happens.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Should Opposition Members wish to comment on the remarks of a Minister, I would suggest they seek unanimous consent, and undoubtedly that is what they would do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. John Bosley (Don Valley West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-204, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act, addition to the official list of electors.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bosley: The right to vote is our most precious democratic right. During the last election, many Canadians in urban ridings were missed by the enumerators and lost that precious right. That is utterly unacceptable. The purpose of this Bill is to guarantee every Canadian that their right to vote will be protected by amending the Elections Act to allow every Canadian the right that now exists in rural ridings, the right to register to vote even on election day.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-205, an Act to amend the Canada Shipping Act, attachment and assignment of wages.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Ms. Black: The purpose of my Bill is to amend the Canada Shipping Act. This will affect the collection of family maintenance payments owed by those involved in commercial fishing. This would ensure that family support payments are paid and that parties to family support agreements have the means of ensuring collection of these debts regardless of employment in commercial shipping.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CAPITAL ACT

M. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-206, an Act to amend the National Capital Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: The purpose of this Bill is to enlarge the territory of the National Capital Commission in an easterly direction from the City of Ottawa, the effect of which would make the National Capital Region east of the city roughly the equivalent size that it is west of the city. The proposed Bill has the support of all municipalities involved as well as the united Counties of Prescott—Russell.

Perhaps I should take this opportunity to thank the Mayor of the Town of Rockland, Mr. Jean-Marc Lalonde, and Mr. Jamie Lawson, a legislative intern who worked in the preparation of this Bill.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CRIMINAL CODE

M. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-207, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (hate propaganda—age group).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: The purpose of this Bill is to amend the Criminal Code in a manner that would change the definition of "hate propaganda" so as to define "age group" as being a possible criterion under the provisions of "obscenity". No one would be permitted to discriminate against someone by reason of age, the purpose of which would be to ban the importation of a product known as "garbage-pail kids", which are offensive cards depicting the mutilation of children.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CRIMINAL CODE

M. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-208, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (peeping Toms).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: The purpose of this Bill is to change the definition of Section 173 of the Criminal Code. The "peeping Tom" provision of the Criminal Code only permits charges under that provision to be laid for an offence occurring at night. Someone who prowls on the property of another in the daytime cannot be charged under the "peeping Tom" provision of the Criminal Code. The amendment would remove the words "at night", permitting such charges to be laid at any time. This is an important amendment and has the support of several women's organizations in Canada.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

LABELLING OF FOOD INGREDIENTS

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to submit a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 on behalf of a group of my constituents concerned with the labelling of foods sold by restaurants and fast food chains. The petitioners require that legislation and regulations be enacted to institute ingredient labelling of take-out and fast food, and public access to a complete list of food ingredients for sale in the restaurant establishments.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED PENSION CHANGES

Mr. Ross Reid (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I would like to present a petition that has been certified correct as to form and content. The petition is on behalf of 450 Newfoundlanders and Labradorians who risk their lives and security every day as policemen, firemen and wardens. The prayer of the petition is that the Government not move to unilaterally change pensions by proceeding with proposed to legislation affecting properly negotiated pensions, pensions which these people have planned around and are depending upon.

INCOME TAX DEDUCTIONS FOR TOOLS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of 1,600 Albertans who are mechanics in that province. They are petitioning their Government to reconsider its tax laws as they affect the ability of mechanics to deduct the cost of tools from their income for tax purposes. As is usual in efforts like these, there is an enormous amount of work done by one individual. In this case, it is a young mechanic by the name of Chris Grieve. He travelled across the Province of Alberta and spoke to many people. It was quite a considerable effort to gather that many signatures from one professional group in a province as diverse as Alberta.

CHILDREN'S BILL OF RIGHTS

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured today to present a petition on behalf of Canadians who are calling on the Government to establish a children's bill of rights protecting all children in this country from poverty, hunger and homelessness.

AIR TRANSPORT DEREGULATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and honour to present a petition on behalf of a large number of Canadians concerned that deregulation in the air industry will lead to reduced safety and service. They believe deregulation of the airline industry has led to reduced viability of many airline companies and has increased the market share of a few large firms. They have a long list of concerns regarding deregulation in the airline industry. Fundamentally they are calling upon Parliament to ensure that the transportation industry is efficiently and effectively regulated to ensure that safety and fair quality services are provided to the travelling public.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech of the opening of the session; and on the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (page 131).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We have approximately four minutes left in the question and comment period. The Hon. Member for LaSalle—Emard (Mr. Martin).

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Mr. Mills) has an extensive record in environmental matters. He is very knowledgeable.

Given the fact that there has been extensive comment on the fact that shoppers still lack environmentally safe packages, would he please talk to us about what education is required in that area?

Mr. Mills: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my hon. colleague for his question.

There exists in the Department of the Environment a program ready to go for environmentally friendly products in packaging, which I think would go a long way in pushing along product and consumer awareness for environmentally friendly products. It awaits the direction of the Minister. I think that is important to do quickly because there are signs that consumers are confused over safe packaging.

I just want to quote from a recent survey done by the Grocery Products Manufacturing Association. Eighty per cent of consumers are willing to pay more for biodegradable or recyclable packaging, but only one-third at this point in time look on the packaging for environmentally safe labelling.

This survey lets us know that we have a long way to go in educating people. I hope that the Minister will give that direction to his Department immediately. At our summit on the environment in the Don Valley we will be featuring over 300 consumer products from every region of this country that have passed environmentally friendly standards. This as well will go a long way in raising the consciousness of consumers to purchase environmentally friendly products.

The only way we will succeed in galvanizing the will of the country around the environment is not just by dealing with it at a bureaucratic or at a political level, but we must deal with it at the consumer level as well. In order to get that consumer activated we must guide him along the way.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, maybe I could be given an opportunity to ask a brief question since it is the Hon. Member's first opportunity to speak in the House.

I am aware that it is reported that the Hon. Member had $250,000 spent in pre-election funding before the election was called in his riding. Does he know something about this job worth $75,000 a year that I do not know?

Second, is the Member now in favour of putting limits on pre-election campaign spending so that people do not buy seats to come into this Chamber?

Mr. McDermid: He wasn't a former Premier.

Mr. Mills: First, the Hon. Member has his facts wrong.

Mr. McDermid: That is why he is no longer Premier.

Mr. Mills: It was close to $150,000. But I must tell the Hon. Member that my opponent, an incumbent—and I include all of us in this House—over a four-year period I think has about a $2 million advantage.

Mr. Barrett: Doing their job.

Mr. Mills: Yes, doing their job. I think part of the reason I was elected is that maybe the job was not being done well enough in the riding.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mills: I would like to answer the Hon. Member's question on pre-election spending. I think once candidates are nominated by the Party, I believe that the Government of Canada should give them some support in order to get to the election period. I do not think the current system is correct.

What was the last question, I am sorry?

Mr. Barrett: What was worth it in the job?

Mr. Mills: There are some days, I must say, that I kind of wonder. But unlike the Hon. Member for Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) I had the rare privilege of working for the greatest Prime Minister this country ever had. He inspired me to come to this town and work. I love it here. I love my country. Maybe eventually the Member will discover that working in the national Parliament is much more exciting than acting as a parochial Premier.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now terminated. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure and an honour to participate in the debate. I want to thank Members opposite for the arrangements that were made to make this possible today.

I want to begin my presentation in the House today by saying that I believe November 21, 1988—the day of the federal election—will go down in Canadian history as likely the second most significant date. The first, of course, being July 1, 1867, when we saw the beginning of Canada formally occur. Then 121 years later, on November 21, 1988, with the re-election of the Conservative Government we saw the beginning of the end of Canada as we have known it.

An Hon. Member: Really?

Mr. Riis: The reason is that the Government decided to proceed with the Free Trade Agreement with the United States, which is the dismantling of Canada, the reorganizing of Canada, the rearranging of Canada to make us an integral part of the United States. What has to be recognized is that the Government lacked the support of the people of Canada generally.

When you look at the way people voted, not how the constituencies or gerrymandering and so on occurred to take advantage of the political situation, and their voting patterns, you will find that 57 per cent of the people voted againsts the Conservatives in the last general election. People in eight our of ten provinces voted against the Conservatives and people in two out of two Territories voted against the Conservatives.

We are talking about a minority position, and yet the Government has taken that minority position because of the way the country is organized around constituencies and decided to end Canada as we know it and integrate us into the United States. This was due in large part not because the people of Canada understood clearly the implications of the trade deal, but because through an incredible amount of election advertising, the likes of which we have never seen before, Canadians were sold a bill of goods, and to a certain extent, were misrepresented and misled. Look at the advertising that went into the free trade deal. The Progressive Conservative Party of Canada alone spent over $5 million. The large corporate sector, including the Business Council on National Issues, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, groups like the Fraser Institute and the major media outlets, spent in combination $19 million.

The lowest blow of all is that this deal had not been sanctioned by the Parliament of Canada, yet the Government felt it had the go-ahead to spend taxpayers' money on an initiative which had not been sanctioned, and paid $32 million for an advertising total of $56 million for the trade deal. Up against that were the individuals from the opposition Parties speaking against the trade deal. The people of Canada were misled through some very misleading advertising, and the Conservatives managed to get 43 per cent of the people's support and that enabled the Government to proceed. That is why I say that November 21, 1988, will be a very historic day in Canadian history. That was the day the end really began.

I do not want to speak today about the trade deal. That is not the purpose of this. The trade deal which the Government signed will haunt this country, this Parliament and this Government forever. We saw immediately after the deal was signed the various companies collapsing and hundreds and thousands of jobs being lost.

I have before me a document that goes on and on: "Gillette in Montreal, 590 jobs; Pittsburgh Paints in Toronto, 139 jobs; Northern Telecom in Belleville, 87ebec, 100 jobs; Chrysler Canada in Ajax, 430 jobs; Taurus Shoes in Québec, 100 jobs". I could go on for pages and pages listing businesses that have closed down because they have decided to move their operations to the United States or to northern Mexico.

We must recognize that the Government has decided to run the country in a rather unique manner. The House has not sat in the last six months, with the exception of two weeks in December when the Government jammed the trade deal through. It costs $1 million per day when the House does not sit, and we have not sat for six months, with the exception of two weeks.

While the House has not been sitting and while Parliament has not been able to function, what has happened across the country? We have seen interest rates sky-rocket once again. Now they are in the 13 per cent area. Yesterday they inched up again. How high will they go before the Government decides to take action? Will it be 14 per cent, 16 per cent, 18 per cent, or 20 per cent? For a while under a Liberal Government they went up as high as 22 per cent. How high do interest rates have to go before the Government says that enough is enough?

The Government has recognized that there are two Canadas. There is the Canada of Toronto, and there is the rest of the country. In terms of policy these interest rates reflect a reality in one city of this country, while the rest of the country must pay the price. As a westerner one would be hard pressed to find a single person who would say that this monetary policy is the correct one.

The Premier of Alberta, the Premier of Saskatchewan, the Premier of Manitoba, as a matter of fact, every single Premier came to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and begged him to come to his senses, to stop the interest rate nonsense, and to start bringing down the rates.

I would hope sometime in the debate to hear Members stand up and say that they are in favour of this high interest rate policy; I have not yet heard anyone from the government side or the opposition side say so. Why do we have Members of the House who tolerate this policy which is strangling and smothering the regions in their efforts to dig out of the recessionary times of 1981.

We have seen corporate concentration take place and accelerate, and the focussing of economic, political, and social power into fewer and fewer hands. Since the Government has taken office, which is not too many years—too many but not that many—there have been more than 3,000 foreign takeovers in this country. That means there are 3,000 Canadian companies which are no longer Canadian. No longer are they making decisions about their future in Canada. Those decisions are being made primarily in the United States, Germany, Japan, Hong Kong, or wherever. As we sit here in this session, on average, four foreign takeovers a day are occurring in our country.

As part of that process, corporate concentration and the concentration of power are increasing. Today it is unbelievable, but we are the only western industrialized nation with seven families now controlling 50 per cent of the value of the Toronto Stock Exchange top 300. That type of concentration would not be found in a single other western industrialized nation. What we are doing about it? The Government has instituted policies to accelerate the process of more and more concentration. That is another one that we have been waiting for.

American Express has come into Canada. It said that it wanted to be a bank in Canada. It is not a bank in the United States or anywhere in the world, but it wanted to have banking status in Canada. The Minister of Finance said that that was fine, and gave that status to American Express. It is not going home without taking the rest of us with them. That is exactly the result.

Do Canadians realize that, because of the amount of foreign ownership and foreign control of our economy, every hour of the day, every hour of the week, every hour of the month, and every hour of the year, $1.5 million leaves our country in the form of dividend payments or payments back to parent companies? That is $1.5 million every single hour of the year because so much of our economy is owned and controlled from outside Canada. Not only is the Government not doing anything to slow or reverse this process, but its policies are accelerating and increasing this situation.

Today we heard the terrible news that the regional disparities in our country are widening, that the gap between rich and poor is widening. A central core around the City of Toronto is prospering and increasing, and the rest of the country is falling relatively further and further behind. This is despicable.

How is the Government reacting to regional disparities increasing in the country, and the increasing gap between the "haves" and the "have nots"? Its response is to cut further support to the regions of this country. That is what the Government is doing in relation to ERDA. In those agreements federal and provision Governments work together to provide assistance and encouragement to develop the regional economies of the country. The Government states that it is not going to do that in the future. It is going to cut back support for the regions of the country. As the Minister from Toronto said during the election "if in the future you want a job, you better move to Toronto". If one lives in Chicoutimi, Corner Brook, Red Deer, Moose Jaw, or Kamloops this Government's idea of your future is to suggest moving to Toronto. That is the type of regional economic expansion programs the Government has in mind.

Mr. Volpe: They won't be able to live there.

Mr. Riis: As my hon. friend has indicated, Mr. Speaker, once you get there if you have $300,000 you might be able to purchase a home, if it is available.

We are seeing a Government emerge with a view that its role is to provide encouragement and support for the privileged, the wealthy, the haves. The others, the average Canadian citizen, is on his or her own. It is called the laissez-faire approach. It is the market-place approach.

This country was not built on the free market. From day one the Government of Canada and the provincial Governments have recognized that unless we take action, and to a certain extent are involved in the market, we will have a North American market that will essentially be owned and controlled from the United States. Therefore, we built a national rail system, a national air system, a national highway system, a municipal infrastructure, and a public broadcasting system.

Over the years we took all types of measures to link up and bind the country together with an east-west emphasis. Now the Government has abandoned that thought. This is neo-conservatism at its worst. It is something that would make John Diefenbaker and John A. Macdonald turn in their graves. The Government has decided to abandon what we have struggled with for 122 years in terms of fighting to bind this country together into something meaningful. As of the election of November 21, 1988 the Government abandoned that and decided that it was quite prepared to become an extension of the United States.

The Government did not have the mandate to that in 1988. I am confident that in 1992, when the people of Canada finally realize what the Government has done to them, it will be terminated from doing this any further into the future.

I remember when the Hon.Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) was running for the Conservatives. He stated that Government members could not tell the people of Canada what they were going to do "because if we did, they would never vote for us". How right he was. There are times when the Minister for International Trade speaks the truth. He spoke the truth when he said: "If we told the people of Canada what we will do, they would never vote for us".

Does anybody remember during the 1984 election the Government indicating that it wanted to introduce the free trade deal? It was not mentioned even a single time in that campaign. During the campaign of 1988 did anyone from the government benches mention that the Government was going to slash social programs, cut back support for small business, abandon the family farm, and cut back on a whole range of social programs? No. The Government made all kinds of promises.

I have to give the Minister of Finance credit where credit is due. He has now said: "You know all those promises that we made during the election? Well, I am afraid we are going not going to be able to keep them". At least he has been honest and up front. The other day the Minister responsible for regional economic development also was up front when he stated that all those programs to assist the regions in developing their economies would also have to be cut back. The Government says that we have a deficit problem. We have a deficit problem. We have many problems. We have environmental problems. We have deficit and other problems.

• (1240)

When a deficit problem is solved there are two fundamental choices to make. Taxes can be raised on everybody, there can be cut-backs on programs that affect everybody, or something can be done on a specialized basis. This is where the political Parties differ. The Conservative idea of reducing the deficit is to give tax breaks and grants out to the large corporate sector, not to mention the rich and the privileged, with the assumption that they somehow will let this money filter down to assist the economy, and raise everybody's taxes.

As a sensible person, Mr. Speaker, you would say surely to goodness the conservatives would not have that approach. They have that approach. Today, as we sit here in the house of commons, the Ministers of Finance from across the country are meeting with the federal Minister of Finance to find ways and means to implement the new national sales tax.

Do you realize, Mr. sPeaker, what that means to the average Canadian family? To think that on top of the provincial sales tax of 5 per cent, 7 per cent, 9 per cent, the federal Government is now going to pile on its tax. This will mean that when one buys baby diapers or a book, when one goes to the movies or gets drycleaning and laundry done, or when one buys a car, a house or a suit, one will pay 19 per cent or 20 per cent sales tax.

Mr. McDermid: There is already a tax on cars.

Mr. Riis: The Minister is yelling across the way that there is already a sales tax on music lessons, that there is already a sales tax on movie tickets.

Mr. McDermid: There is already a tax on cars.

Mr. Riis: He is absolutely false when he says that. There is no sales tax on movie tickets. There is no sales tax to pay when one goes to the bowling alley. There is no sales tax on bingo tickets. Yet this Government is going to tax literally everything that moves in the country, and a lot of things that do not even move—tax, tax, tax.

Since this Conservative Government was elected there has never been in canadian history as large a tax grab as has occurred in the last four and one-half years; never even during wartime when taxes were introduced for the war effort.

These people have gouged. They have ripped. They have dug in. They have pulled out more money from taxpayers. Oops, I should not say "taxpayers" because that implies the corporate sector as well, one sector that has been overlooked. There are still 60,000 large, profitable corporations that do not pay even a single penny in income tax. There are many that pay $1, $20 or $100, but there are 60,000 large, profitable corporations that do not even pay a single penny. That is the idea of conservative tax reform—no taxes on the wealthy, no taxes on the large corporations in many instances.

However, I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the small welding shop down the street, the person running a beauty salon up the street, and the person running a small cafe are all paying. they are all paying and paying and paying. For every Budget that is brought in they pay more, but this same privileged group, this group of 60,000 profitable corporations, does not even pay a penny, to say nothing at all of those which pay $1, $2 or $3. This is not a fair tax system, but a Conservative way to reduce the deficit.

There is another way. It is called the New Democrat way. It is where we start saying, for example, that one way to reduce the deficit is not to buy nuclear submarines—this Government is still going ahead with nuclear submarines—but to assist the forest industry where we can generate a great deal more. Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, that in the Throne Speech the forest industry is not even mentioned? Farmers and ranchers are not even mentioned. The mining industry is not even mentioned. Tourism is not even mentioned.

In other words, those of us who come from the regions of the country, which of course are most of us, are not mentioned in the Throne Speech. This is a Throne Speech again designed for central Canada, specifically Toronto. This has to change. Our idea as New Democrats is let us ask these profitable corporations to pay something, a minimum corporate tax. Let us abandon this nuclear submarine madness and save ourselves billions and billions of dollars. Let us put out some of these lush government contracts to tendering so that people will have a chance to tender. We could save hundreds of millions of dollars. But now the Government uses it to reward corporate pals. There is no tendering, Mr. Speaker, and this involves billions of dollars. It is amazing.

What was absent from the Throne Speech was any reference to the West Coast oil spill, the largest in North American history. There was some rhetoric about the environment.

I would like to conclude my remarks by moving a subamendment that reads as follows:

That the amendment be amended by adding the following words: "and, specifically, that the House regrets the failure of the Government to provide adequate resources to deal with environmental crises and accidents; to regulate and enforce environmental laws; to monitor the state of our air, lands and waters; and to provide national standards of environmental protection".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair finds the subamendment to be in order.

On questions and comments the Chair recognizes the Hon. Minister of State for Privatization.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy my colleague's speeches in the House. He always throws figures around. I am not sure where he gets his facts and figures from. Most of the time when we look into them we find that they are very inadequate.

There are a couple of questions I want to ask. First, with respect to interest rates he said that he would lower interest rates in the country. If he were to lower interest rates in the country or to make regional interest rates as some of his colleagues have suggested, how would he stem the flow of capital out of those regions where there were low interest rates, which actually need the investment capital, to areas of the country where there are high interest rates? Or, how would he stem the flow of capital out of the country, chasing higher interest rates? What is the NDP policy on that type of thing? How would it stop the flow of capital?

Second, how would the Hon. Member maintain inflation in the country? How would he stop the inflationary pressures that we are experiencing, not only in this country but in the other countries of the world? How would he have lower interest rates than his partners in the G–7, all of whom have been raising their interest rates lately because of the fear of inflation, because they do not want to go back to 1980 and 1981 when the Liberals sat back and let inflation run away? Then they had to give us extremely bitter medicine of some 22 per cent. That is the first thing I want to ask him.

The second question I would like him to cover is with respect to what he had to say about the sales tax. I do not think there is anyone in this country who would disagree that we need sales tax reform. Our domestic products are put at a disadvantage of some 25 per cent with those that they compete with from imports because of our outdated, outmoded manufacturing sales tax of 12 per cent.

Across the House I did not say music lessons. He knows I did not. I said "cars". There is a 12 per cent manufacturers' sales tax on automobiles today, on everything that is manufactured in this country, including bingo cards I might say.

Mr. Riis: Not the bingo games.

Mr. McDermid: There is a 12 per cent tax on the printing of those bingo cards.

I want to ask him what he would do or what the NDP would do to reform this antiquated, outmoded, unproductive sales tax system. Would he do what his socialist friends did in New Zealand or Australia where they taxed food and everything else—everything—when they changed their tax system? What would the NDP do?

• (1250)

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Minister asks three or four questions, but I will endeavour to respond to each one. By the way, just to clarify the record, under the Conservative sales tax approach, Mr. Speaker, you have to pay a fee to play bingo in many cases. Not only will the cards be taxed, but just the ability to play will also be taxed.

Mr. McDermid: You are wrong there.

Mr. Riis: As well as getting your hair cut, getting your eyes checked, your teeth fixed or your new suit, everything is going to be taxed, Mr. Speaker. I will come back to that.

First of all I will respond to the matter of interest rates. I do not know if Canadians are generally aware of the fact that real interest rates are higher than they have ever been in this entire decade. The real interest rate is the prime rate. We reduce the inflation factor to get the real interest rate. They are higher now than they were in 1980 through 1988.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Riis: They are higher than at any time in this decade, with the exception of perhaps one month back in 1981. That is just a fact when we talk about high interest rates.

I must ask the Hon. Member why it is that our interest rates have to be so much higher than those in the United State. Not a single premier says that they need to be.

Let us assume that we can bring down our interest rates two or three percentage points to equal at least what they are in the United States. Why do I make this proposal? It is that if we reduce interest rates by 1 per cent, we cut the deficit and the debt significantly.

Our debt is large. I cannot sleep some night at night because I am reminded that the Conservatives have increased the debt on our children from $170 billion when they took office to over $320 billion today. They do not have a right to leave this kind of legacy to our children. Our debt has increased under this Government, and it is going up by billions of dollars a month. That is the reality. It is unbelievable. A lot of us have trouble sleeping because we are concerned about our children and our children's children.

By reducing interest rates one percentage point, we can really knock off billions of dollars from our debt repayment expectation.

What should we be doing when it comes to interest rates? We can drop them down one to three percentage points, again to bring us in line with the United States. We will also have a window of opportunity in July of this summer at the G-7 meeting to discuss a variety of things of mutual concern.

Why should our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) not put interest rates on that agenda and say: "let us work together to bring down these rates, in concert one with another"? He has not identified that as a priority for the next G-7 meeting in July, and I urge him to consider that.

The other question was on the sales tax. What the Minister of State for Privatization (Mr. McDermid) always forgets to ask me is my view on the 60,000 large profitable corporations that never pay any tax. He never asked me if I think this is a good idea.

An Hon. Member: We do not have 60,000.

Mr. Riis: That is right, Mr. Speaker, we do not have 60,000 large profitable corporations. We have 60,219 large profitable corporations not paying a single penny in income tax. Maybe, if they were paying their fair share, we would not have to impose a national sales tax on children's clothing.

As we stand here today, there are $30 billion in deferred corporate taxes. If we just charged interest and did not ask them to pay back, there is $3 billion just like that. Then we would not have to ask to impose a special sales tax on children's story books, pet foods and so on, but that is a priority of this Government. It wants to tax children's things and housing. I think I made my point.

I covered interest rates, inflation, and sales tax. What I also covered, Mr. Speaker, was what the Minister of Finance said—

An Hon. Member: What would you do, Nelson?

Mr. Riis: On Thursday of this week, the Minister of Finance said the following:

> I am quite prepared to reduce the level of economic activity in Canada.

Now here is the Minister of Finance saying that things are heating up too much. Mr. Speaker, I will tell you that he has not been out West or out East for a long time. He has not been into northern Québec and northern Ontario or to the far North at all, because if he had travelled and talked to a single person in the regions of this country he would not say our economy is overheated. For one weekend, rather than go down to Bay Street and talk to his corporate pals, he should get out and talk to ordinary Canadian citizens across the country. If he did so and he responded to their needs, he would change this Government's economic policy accordingly.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles DeBlois (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I return to my task in the House after several months of reflection and work in my constituency, and I would like to start by saying how happy I am that you, Mr. Speaker, and your team are still with us and offering you my full co-operation with the task at hand. I am pleased because a Member of Parliament, in addition to representing his riding, is also a member of a parliamentary body. The work we do here in the House is an essential part of our task in general, because we not only have a duty to defend the interests of our constituencies but also to be aware of the national concerns of this great country of ours, from coast to coast.

I would like to start by saying how delighted I am that the Throne Speech read by the Governor General reflects our resolve to act on our election commitments, which include our commitment to protecting the environment, to the economy and to the neediest in our society whom we intend to continue to support, whatever Hon. Members opposite, the Liberals in the Official Opposition and the NDP, care to think.

Mr. Speaker, I found the following rather amusing. I read a lot of newspapers, as a former reporter. I noticed that a Liberal who was suggesting that those who are well off should not be given a pension, in order to help those who are disadvantaged, was quickly criticized by that protector of the needy and the poor, the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). Let me explain. One of his colleagues, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—North (Mr. MacLaren) had dared to suggest that family allowances or old age pensions should not be paid to those people who are well off. So, the protector of the poor rose to say he was going to challenge that suggestion and fight it in caucus!

The Leader of the Official Opposition said in his one-hour speech, among other things: "We intend to remind the Government as often as necessary that Canada is not the private domain of the rich and the powerful, of the businessmen of this country. This country also belongs to people across Canada who cannot make ends meet." And we heard the usual emotional outpourings about the little guy and the unemployed. What a farce! I see that both Opposition Parties failed to take advantage of the period when the House was in recess to improve their thinking. After what happened during the free trade debate, I expected to meet with an Opposition that would show greater clarity and rigour in debate.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the Throne Speech is excellent in this respect. It is straightforward and responsible. For some years, because of the Liberal legacy, we have been saddled with an enormous deficit, and we shall have the fortitude to take the measures that are necessary to spare future generations the terrible burden of a debt that is increasing every second, every minute and every hour of our existence in this country.

Some commentators and some Members opposite say that the Speech is just a lot of generalities without substance. Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote Michel Roy, one of the most respected editorial writers of this country, who wrote recently:

It is amazing to hear some commentators repeat over and over again that the Throne Speech is vague. Characteristically, however, inaugural speeches announce the broad directions a government intends to take, the philosophy that underlies its legislative program. And take note of this: "The terms of the Throne Speech leave no doubt as to this Government's commitment to a determined deficit reduction. In one sentence, the author of the speech perfectly illustrates how serious the present situation is: My Government is now borrowing money solely to pay the interest on previous borrowings".

• (1300)

It is therefore my view that everyone who listened to that speech in good faith could take note of this Government's will to do what previous governments had not done, namely to roll up their sleeves and to continue putting the brakes on the current deficit growth.

In that respect I am pleased to note the comments of an industrialist in my constituency who recently wrote to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, who is taking surveys all around:

"Comments or suggestions to your Member of Parliament: 1. I hope that my M.P. stops playing Father Christmas." Of course, this was written before I was elected, Mr. Speaker.

"Stop playing Father Christmas with our money, cut altogether subsidies, especially to non-profit organizations and businesses who in the same country are making same products as non-subsidized firms."

2. "That my M.P. really tackles the elimination of the deficit."

So I think the mandate is quite clear, and this is but an example out of a thousand. People expect us to make an effort, they expect sacrifices. This is not easy, and I think everyone of us will have to pay the price. We have the will to be brave enough to go ahead and make sure public finance is put on a sounder basis.

So we are facing an opposition that is a bad loser bent on revenge. I was listening to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) who constantly suggests free trade, which we sold out to the United States, free trade means the end of our sovereignty, our Canadian way of doing things. I find that amusing, because Mr. Opposition Leader has Members in his caucus who are starting to see the light, although belatedly. Let me show you this headline—Marc Lalonde!—You heard of him? Marc Lalonde turns coat and becomes free trader! This is in Le Devoir of March 15, 1989.

Amusing! I find its never too late to see the light. With time, I think our friends opposite will finally understand. Two days ago in France Mr. Peterson, the Ontario Premier, applauded the merits of free trade in Europe, etc. Of course he said that abroad. Come now! Let's stop kidding the people! With time, we must come to realize that a majority of Canadians opted for much more direct and active trade with the United States.

As far as the New Democratic Party is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I heard the cassettes again. We just heard the Leader restate his defence of the poor and the oppressed. I think the resigning leader set matters straight when he very clearly stated on page 131 of Hansard of last Wednesday:

> We are going to oppose with determined vigour every bill that floors out of this Throne Speech and every budget item that will come in the weeks ahead.

Talk of constructive opposition! Even before having seen anything, they will fight with determined vigour, not one but every bill, whatever. They will oppose for the sake of opposing.

I am a bit surprised. I would expect the Opposition to be constructive, positive. They could at least say: Let's wait and see. Who knows? The New Democratic Party says there might come up a bill to help the poor. But no! From the outset, they'll oppose every bill, all the gang of them.

Let me come to the core of my speech, Mr. Speaker. I would like to make two series of comments. The first one concerns the so-called Parliament holidays. For some time we have been hearing the Opposition suggest we had been sitting in our constituencies for six months. We were not putting the House to work. It's like saying MPs were just sitting on their behinds. I for one can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that since the end of the Christmas holidays, I have been in my constituency's office every day. I have my office diary here. I challenge any Member in this House to come and see in my diary what I have been doing for three months.

Also on this subject, I heard the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Mr. Mills) just give this very gripping testimony about his little daughter who was humiliated in school because people started to laugh when she said that her father was a Member of Parliament. I understand them, those young people. And part of it is that some journalists on Parliament Hill never stopped talking about "holidays".

Recently, Mr. Speaker, on the opening of the House, we saw in The Citizen, "Commons holiday ends".

We saw others. Here is Mr. Weston:

[English]

"MP's old and new are in a particularly scrappy mood after their 14-week parliamentary break".

[Translation]

I am not in a scrappy mood. I am in great shape and it is not because I have just been on vacation, believe me.

Mr. MacGillivray says here:

[English]

"The Members could use the extra weeks because they had been put to work so quickly after the November 21 election".

[Translation]

Another one says here:

[English]

"The three months that Parliament has not been sitting has in simple terms cost taxpayers $50 million to staff and maintain the empty Chamber and mostly empty Members' offices".

[Translation]

What a disgrace! Like the employees in my riding office. I have had five for the past three months. I am not afraid to name them: Claude Beauchamp, Ginette Hupé, Marie Garneau, Lisette Harvey and Solange Veilleux. When these people saw that, these people who were paid for three months, who worked day and night in my riding office, they were literally insulted.

I sort of get the feeling sometimes that Parliamentary reporters here on the Hill deal with national subjects. I know, because I was a parliamentary correspondent at the National Assembly. What interests them is the big national issues: sales tax, submarines. But what we do in our ridings, the ordinary backbenchers, does not interest them. None of them comes to our ridings to see what we do. I find that absolutely shameful; I find that shocking.

And, Mr. Speaker, you know my love for Latin quotations. Do they come to my mind? The ancients said, De minimis non curat praetor. It means that the magistrate does not care about minor details. Some journalists on Parliament Hill do not care about the small fry—the MP in his riding. That does not interest them. For them, it is nuclear issues, nuclear submarines, privatization. What we do in our constituencies does not interest them.

I think of a guy like Michel Vastel. He is not a bad fellow, he writes a lot and works hard. I find him interesting at times, and he wrote this, "The House of Commons costs us $190 million this year, of which $105 million is for the Members of Parliament alone. However, they are not paid just to attend their constituents' funerals and weddings or to look after social security cheques, although these duties are important. What Mr. Mulroney is doing is an affront to parliamentary democracy".

Well look, do these people live in the clouds? I know, I was a parliamentary reporter in Quebec City and it was dull when the legislature was not sitting. People not doing investigative journalism who want official news. . . the House is not sitting, there are no press conferences. They have nothing to give their boss. The boss asks them, "What report are you doing for me tonight?". But nothing has happened. The House is not sitting. So what these people should normally. . . and I am not accusing all journalists, Mr. Speaker. There are some excellent ones, thank God!

But some of them distort the facts and lead people to believe that when we are not in the House, we are on vacation or travelling. We are having fun, whatever. Well, I think it is time for the people listening to us to know what a Member who wants to take his constituency work seriously does! And I am not the only one, many. . . I just mentioned the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood who went to Quebec City for three weeks to learn French. I congratulate him, even though he is an opponent. He used those three months to learn the country's other official language. If all Anglophones had the courage to do that, I would be really proud. I went to Toronto for a week to start to learn English, to improve, and I will be happy on the day I can tell you what I think in English.

But that being said, it was not a waste of time. I think it is one of the great benefits of the House of Commons to provide all Members and their spouses with the opportunity to improve their ability in the second language. I worked on it, I was not loafing by going to Toronto to study English. From nine in the morning till nine in the evening, I was with teachers and I was there to learn. Yes, thank you, Mr. Speaker.

• (1310)

Mrs. Maheu: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! The Hon. Member from Saint-Laurent on a point of order.

Mrs. Maheu: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the words used by the Hon. Member opposite are not unparliamentary. He has repeated them twice.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This kind of language should not be used. Although I do not think it has led to any disorder, I would ask the Hon. Member to refrain from using it.

Mr. DeBlois: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your comment, and I will be careful not to use this kind of language. You will understand that in the heat of debate and especially with such attentive listeners, I might sometimes express myself by using images which are in common use in my region. This might seem trivial, but when ordinary people speak loud and clear, they use images of that kind. I have not invented them, I have just picked them up. And I respect these people even if they do not always use the language of Shakespeare or the sophisticated language of certain intellectuals.

Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to report on what I have done. Let me say, for example, that in the past three months, I have opened 325 files involving my constituents. I am extremely proud to say that I have spoken with all the people in the riding of Montmorency who have phoned me or come to visit me in my constituency office. In this way, I have helped 188 individuals about such things as employment assistance, tax problems, old age pensions, unemployment insurance, housing. Private businessmen also come to me to get information about federal programs. I have been in touch with public servants on their behalf. Furthermore, representatives from 88 non profit organizations have come to see me about federal programs in such areas as employment and immigration, housing, community affairs, and so on. And then there are municipal matters. Half a dozen mayors from my riding have come to see me.

Add to all this, Mr. Speaker, the preparation of my householder, which is a source of great pride for me. With this publication, I have done a survey in my riding. Gentlemen opposite may laugh. Some find it amusing when we consult the people. For my part, I am very proud to do so. I conducted a poll on the abortion issue. Instead of making lofty speeches, instead of holding forth, instead of blathering as some of my friends opposite are doing, I went to hear what the people of my riding had to say, I got some mail and at the appropriate time and place I will know what to say to convey the feelings of my constituents.

In spite of all that, Mr. Speaker, I did have an opportunity to be away from my riding for a couple of weeks to represent my country on the United Nations Commission on Human Rights—one of my Liberal opponents was even a member of our party—where I had a close look at the leading role Canada is playing to uphold and promote human rights.

Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, this information will enlighten my colleagues in the House. I should think we all agree on that score and that most of us take advantage of these parliamentary recesses to be close to our relatives and our constituents.

A second point, Mr. Speaker, and I will conclude my remarks. As a Quebecer I can tell you that I felt insulted by the words of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) concerning Premier Bourassa of Quebec. My speech this afternoon gives me an opportunity to say that I am at one with the Quebec Premier who knows the importance of protecting the rights and the French fact in this country.

Once again, of course, Premier Bourassa had to invoke the notwithstanding clause. He did not have much choice because the Constitution foisted on us by the Liberals prevented Quebec from joining the Constitution. If we want to promote French as we are cleared to do by the Supreme Court, we have to be practical and pragmatic, and in that respect I am certainly not going to blame the Premier of Quebec—brothers as we are through race and culture—for taking steps to enhance the promotion of French within the huge Anglophone majority in Canada and in the United States. As a matter of fact, a number of the Liberal colleagues of the Leader of the Opposition—and I understand there will soon be a leadership convention—including the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre), or people like Francis Fox and other former MPs, have all said: We lost our roots in Quebec during the last election. Mr. Turner's speech was just the way again to sink your roots in Quebec. I am ashamed about the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition, and in that context I am proud of the remarks of my leader the Prime Minister and of the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of asking the Hon. Member what he will be sitting on in coming weeks, as undoubtedly you will be glad to hear. Among other things, I am pleased to learn that he sent a householder, an excellent news, and I commend him for sharing his experience with the House of Commons.

I want to get back to some of the remarks he made in his speech. He said the Opposition had not been constructive enough, and he blamed the Leader of the Official Opposition and the leader of the New Democratic Party for taking a negative approach with respect to his Government. According to him we should be a lot more constructive, even when the Government does not act properly, which is the case presently.

I should like to ask my colleague opposite if one can conclude that he thought the Conservative Opposition was constructive during the many years they were on this side, particularly under the "leadership" of one Eric Nielsen who was acting Leader of the Opposition for a number of years while waiting for the present leader to find a riding somewhere so he would have a seat in the House of Commons. Specifically I should like to ask him whether he agreed with the attitude of some Members who at one time were prepared to chain themselves to the clerk's table to protest against a legislative measure, or whether he did not see anything wrong with the other incident one night when Conservative Members—led by the Hon. Member for Calgary who is now a Minister of the Crown—decided to surround the chair of the Speaker of the House of Commons.

I wonder whether he approves of that kind of thing or of the pairing system we used to have in the past when an Opposition Member and a Government Member had to leave the country together with a parliamentary delegation. Conservative Members broke the agreement, they sneaked out of their beds in Europe in the middle of the night to catch a Concorde flight and fly back early in the morning in an attempt to defeat the Government. Is that what my colleague on the other side calls constructive opposition?

Mr. DeBlois: Mr. Speaker, obviously, I appreciate the historical knowledge of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). Of course I do not live in the past. How should I put it? I am not a blindly partisan Member of Parliament and I do not support anything that might have been done, on any side of the House, against any positive position in this Chamber. You can keep harping on some past history, but I will not lose any sleep over it. I am here in 1989; I was not here ten years ago. From now on, personally, when it is a matter of programs, of official languages, I think I shall try to contribute as positively as I can to the debate and I hope that the Opposition will be able to give us positive arguments, whatever their limitations and the constraints they are under.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member for Montmorency—Orleans (Mr. DeBlois) and I would like to ask him a question because it occurred to me that maybe something had been forgotten in his speech. He was talking about the deficit and the burden his Government inherited from the Liberal Government in 1984. Mr. Speaker, my question to the Hon. Member is: Does he know what the deficit was in 1984 and does he know what the deficit is now, after four years of Conservative Government?

Mr. DeBlois: Mr. Speaker, in 1960, I think, we paid 12 cents per dollar of tax—the tax you and I paid—and now, for all Canadians, 31 cents of every tax dollar is just for interest on the debt. So calculate the difference; you are good with figures. You will see the difference between the two deficits.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I would ask my hon. colleague, who obviously is very strong in mathematics and we already know his ability in Latin, so we will not talk about those things more than we have to. But I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether the Hon. Member would be ready to give us his version of the figures, the numbers. He can explain it any way he wants. What was the national debt in 1984, not in 1960? What was the national debt in 1984 and where is it today?

Mr. DeBlois: Mr. Speaker, it is of course very easy to ask questions on figures. I will get on the bus now and ask another Member what the deficit was in 1963. We do not carry that information around in our pockets! Come on!

Mr. Speaker, I am obviously not able to have them on hand, but those figures are known, I have them in my office, I can call my secretary and get you the answer. Those are known facts. If the Hon. Member is really in good faith, he will listen with interest next Monday to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who will show us the true situation of the deficit in Canada.

Mrs. Copps: Since my honourable colleague is asking the question, I would like to pursue the matter because it seems to me that for the past couple of weeks the Conservatives have put the blame for the deficit and the national debt on the Liberal.

I would like to ask him if he is aware that over the past four years, during which a by-election was bought and billions of dollars were spent on friends of the government, the national debt has doubled. Is he aware of that?

M. DeBlois: Mr. Speaker, I take note of my honorable colleague's question. Once again, my remarks this afternoon were not meant to go into details since I would obviously have had to bring along a whole series of documents.

It is generally agreed among students of the economy that one of the reasons for the deficit is the sort of pattern the major change brought about by the Liberals when they were in office, the consequences of which we are now saddled with. I could give you a ton of references. But just read the newspapers and I think you'll get quite enough information.

Next Monday, I repeat, you will get answers to all these questions.

[English]

Mr. Keyes: Just as the Member mentioned that one day he would like to speak to us in English, I too would very soon like to address him in French.

I too worked very hard in my constituency and here in Ottawa during the three-month recess. How was your trip to France?

I wonder if the Member would give me an explanation or outline his attitudes on taxes directed toward music lessons. Would you favour such an idea or oppose such an idea?

[Translation]

Mr. DeBlois: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question is clearly premature. The government is currently examining, with courage and firm resolve, means of reducing the deficit; in this respect, I must say that I am not the Minister of Finance. Have the courage to ask the question to the appropriate Minister!

As for my trips, Mr. Speaker, I am quite comfortable in speaking about them, and I even gave a half-hour interview on that very subject the other day. I believe it is important that our constituents know that, within our duties as Members of Parliament, there is also Canada's place on the international scene that must be taken into account.

Therefore, I am not ashamed to have been on that trip, I went to Geneva, to the Human Rights Commission, with the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). And like him, I added on a few days for visits, and I believe this was quite appropriate; and I am sure that the Hon. Member would be the last to blame me for that.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): In rising for debate on the Throne Speech, I must change gears. Normally the opening days of a session on the Throne Speech are akin to spring training in baseball. You are there to warm up the arm, get your pitchers in place, get your legs in shape, and begin preparing for the real competition. The real battle will begin once you head into the major leagues.

Unfortunately in this debate, a disturbing, disquieting element has been introduced. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke yesterday on his view of the Constitution, his attitude toward the protection of rights in this country. No Canadian and no Member of Parliament can let lie the assertions and the derogation of prime ministerial responsibility that we heard yesterday. We cannot allow a statement of that sort to lie without a response. It would be the first time in the history of this country that the First Minister of this nation, charged with the responsibility of being the protector of the fundamental laws of this land, describes them as being worthless. It is incredible and beyond belief that the steward who is responsible for giving inspiration to school children, men and women, and to all citizens about respect for the law, about an acceptance and a toleration for the constitutional framework that we have, can be so cavalier and callous in his dismissal of it. It is a remarkable and unprecedented intervention by the Prime Minister of this country. I hope we will never see it again.

The Prime Minister has done a great disservice to all Canadians for purely crass, political, partisan reasons. He has regurgitated that strange streak of revenge that is embodied in his soul in an effort to get back at the previous Prime Minister and the Liberals. He has to wreak his bile on somebody, so he tries to regurgitate history by saying Mr. Trudeau and the Liberals were responsible for some of the impasses that we now have in the constitutional development of this country. The fact that the Prime Minister will twist, turn, and distort history does not bother him a bit.

That type of assertion has been false and is irresponsible. I think all Members of Parliament should use this opportunity of the Throne Speech to remind the Prime Minister of his solemn oath of office, which is to defend the laws of this country, not to break them down and crash them to bits.

I want to take issue with the assertion the Prime Minister made. He attempted to demonstrate that the Government of which I was a member was itself responsible for undermining national unity by introducing and passing in this Parliament the ratification of the new Constitution in 1981 and 1982. What an incredible, silly, stupid assertion to make.

As the Prime Minister well knows, that was an historical moment. One of the great attributes of great politicians, of which he is not, is to seize the moment. Fortunately, we had a Prime Minister who understood how to seize the moment. Mr. Trudeau saw that convergence of events, that may not occur in this country for another 100 years, come together with a change to repatriate and restore our Constitution into Canadian control and to provide Canadians with a Charter of Rights that has become one of the most important documents in the history of Canada.

If you read the legal, judicial and constitutional experts, they say that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms reflects the new reality of Canada. It reflects the new rights, powers and privileges that have been denied women for so long. It gives expression to the multicultural character of this country. This is a document written in the 1980s, not 100 years ago. It gives expression to a new sense of rights of aboriginal people that have been denied for so long. Each of the articles in that charter are now in front of the courts across this country. They are being tested by lawyers to demonstrate how we can broaden, expand, elaborate and shape the law. To say the Constitution means nothing, that it is not worth the paper it is written on, is a total denial of what is taking place in a dynamic and effervescent way in this country. In Family Courts, Juvenile Courts or Supreme Courts of this country, cases are being heard based upon that Charter.

The Prime Minister says that because we had to agree to the "notwithstanding clause" somehow the Constitution is worthless. Well, I say to you for all the many Canadians who feel that the Charter is their endowment and the ratification of their rightful place in Canadian society, the words of the Prime Minister will sound hollow and sour in their ears.

Mr. Speaker, even on the notwithstanding clause, let us look at a little bit of the history. I do not want to regurgitate but I want to say something very clearly.

There was one reason only why the previous Liberal Government accepted a notwithstanding clause. That was because Premiers of provinces, including Conservative Premiers—the Sterling Lyons and the Peter Lougheeds of this world—would not allow any constitutional development to take place unless they got that clause. It was an expression of that virulent provincialism that is so much alive in this country today, where we are fragmenting the country into pieces. That is the reason.

There was nothing in the original proposal by the Liberal Government, by Mr. Trudeau, by Mr. Chrétien, by the Cabinet of the country, by the Parliamentary assembly. It was clearly an unequivocal condition of approval heaped upon us by a group of provincial Premiers, who have a very different concept of Canada and a very different view of how this country should be governed. They did not believe in the supremacy of the individual and that at the base of all law should be individual rights. They said no. The collective rights of a provincial majority in our assemblies takes precedence.

I understand that. That is, in a sense, the traditional kind of Conservative theology. It represents that societies are organized around groups, regions or collectivities, not around individuals. He was joined by the New Democratic Premier of Saskatchewan who shared that view. That is why we are so different from the other two parties. It is because we have put as the basic premise of everything the sacred democracy, the right of the individual. But that was challenged by provincial Premiers.

The Hon. Member for Lethbridge (Mr. Thacker) laughs about that.

Mr. Thacker: Did the National Energy Program support the individual?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): He laughs about the rights of individuals. He laughs about the fact that it was his own colleague, Peter Lougheed from the Province of Alberta, supported by the Member from Lethbridge who insisted upon the notwithstanding clause.

Mr. Thacker: Did the National Energy Program support the individual?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): If anybody is responsible, it is the Member from Lethbridge.

It is not sufficient to have Members of the Conservative Party try to cover up their own calumny of several years ago by now having their Prime Minister get up ranting and raving about the iniquity of the notwithstanding clause. Like the Soviets did when they took over, they are trying to rewrite history. We have across from us our own example of that kind of re-interpretation of fundamental fact.

The important point is not who was responsible. What is important is that it is there and it has been used in a way to suppress individual rights. Surely that is the real lesson that has to be learned. Surely the responsibility is not upon the Government of Canada to change that. The fact of the matter is that when the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) had that opportunity behind the closed doors of Meech Lake, he did not use it. He did not even bother to raise it.

An hon. Member: He did not think it was a problem.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): That is right! At that time I did not hear the Prime Minister saying anything about that when he came before the House of Commons. We listened very carefully when he spoke about his Constitutional proposals. I heard nothing about the notwithstanding clause. Liberals raised it. Our Justice critic raised it. Our Leader raised it and said that should be part of the package. We introduced it as part of the amendments. I ask this: it is not too difficult a question. Even a Conservative Member of Parliament could understand it. If it was such a big problem, if it was such a terrible sin, if it was such a horrible smirch on the honour of Canada, then when we brought in the amendment why did not the Prime Minister and his colleagues agree to it? Why did they vote against it? It would not have been hard to do.

I listened to the Prime Minister yesterday and today he was in high dudgeon. High dudgeon is okay after the fact. But when he had the chance, where was he? I know where he was. I know where the Prime Minister was. He was not dealing with it at that point because he was trying to make a deal.

We see it as a problem, Mr. Speaker. We want it changed. We think it is very important for the operation of federalism to make that change. When our Leader spoke in the Throne Speech debate, again it was a question of trying to solicit from the Prime Minister a clear statement, not a high roll of anger but a clear statement.

My colleagues and I remember very well the period of this assembly just before Christmas when the issue emerged because of the Premier of Quebec's use of the notwithstanding clause. We had the then Secretary of State sneaking behind the curtains rushing out to give little press conferences for the Quebec press saying he thought it was a good idea while the Prime Minister was in here saying he did not think it was a good idea. We could never get the two of them to agree as to who was right. The only good thing I can say about having the present Minister of the Environment (Mr. L. Bouchard) in his existing portfolio is that he is no longer the Secretary of State. He is no longer responsible for defending minority rights. What a paltry record he had in that position.

The Conservatives are the Government and we want to know. Even after all this time it is hard for them to recognize their responsibilities. When you start out not believing in Government, it is kind of hard to recognize its importance. But the Conservatives are in Government and they must take responsibility. It is pretty easy to end this debate. All the Prime Minister has to do is say "Okay, let us get this House of Commons together and come to an agreement on how we get rid of this clause". He does not have to dance around in his Gucci shoes. He does not have to jump up and down in anger and push and shove and yell and scream. All he has to do is say "Let us get the Commons together and do it". We are on side. The New Democrats are on side. I say to the Prime Minister wherever he may be, whichever watering hole he may be in at this moment, let him sort of decide what he is prepared to do.

[Translation]

Mr. Corbeil: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! The Minister of Labour (M. Corbeil) on a point of order.

Mr. Corbeil: Mr. Speaker, I do not think this characterization of the Prime Minister is in order in the House of Commons.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think that the Hon. Member from Winnipeg—South-Centre knows the Rules.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister is not here, I suppose I must send him an invitation to get a response to my proposed solution on the notwithstanding clause.

[English]

Before I conclude, I think it is also important that this kind of shell game come to an end. I thought after getting a second mandate we would have a somewhat different kind of Prime Minister. I thought maybe we would get someone a little more honest and straightforward. He is now a world's statesman. He has turned the Government of Canada into a travel agency to arrange his world tours. I thought maybe this time we would get things a little more in order and that when we got the Throne Speech maybe we would get some straight facts. Again, I listened to the speech yesterday. Was it a whopper. You should have heard the things the Prime Minister was saying, Mr. Speaker, about why the economy was going wrong and why we have to get the deficit down.

I had the occasion to pick out a speech that was given by the present Prime Minister when he was Leader of the Opposition. It is fascinating to note what he said in 1984 and what he is saying now. In 1984 he said that "one of the reasons this Liberal Government is so terrible is that there is a flight of capital from Canada. That is what is driving interest rates up". He went on to say, "There is a flight of job creating capital". He said $17 billion has left the country. "As a result, this huge equity outflow is forcing the dollar down and interest rates up and we must do something about it".

Is it not true that last year some $30 billion left Canada? It is almost double under the Tory regime as to what it was under the Liberal regime. I did not hear the Prime Minister talk of that. I did not hear him talking about the reason for the flight of capital is because he has lost control over the whole question of foreign investment.

Then we come to the great matter of the deficit. Was he mad in 1984. You should have heard him. "Those Liberals, and the debt has reached $180 million". That is what he said as the Tory Leader of the Opposition in 1984. In 1988, it is $340 billion. As long as this this debtor's spiral continues, long-term interest rates will not be coming down. What was true in 1984 is true in 1988, and we had better do something about it. I did not hear the Prime Minister attribute those types of causes.

Here is an another titbit. This is the Prime Minister of research and development. He is the one who states that high technology is going to make the day. Back in 1984 he stated that the present rate of spending was terrible because only 1.3 per cent of GDP was spent on R and D. After five years of Conservative Government, it is now 1.2 per cent. We are even falling behind.

When one looks at the cut-backs in all the departments, one has to ask where was the Prime Minister when he should have been reading his 1984 speeches? I am going to send this speech to him, Mr. Speaker. This would be an awfully good speech for 1988. We only have to upgrade those figures. We only have to double the figures on the deficit, double the figures on the interest rates, and send him the speech. The only problems are his solutions, and that is where we always come a little bit of a cropper.

Tories are not very good at solutions. They do not know how to use Government very well. They do not have an understanding of the public sector. They do not have a sense of its capacity or ability to serve Canadians. We know how the Government serves its friends, but we are not so sure how it serves the rest of the country, which represents 99.9 per cent.

Unfortunately, when one refers to the Throne Speech, I guess we can say that the masquerade is over. The charade has come to an end. We no longer have those Tories talking about themselves as being Progressive Conservatives. Now we have the real agenda. Now we have the hard-rock, neo-conservative, put-it-to-them, jackboot philosophy that we knew was there all the time.

We have a Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) who in her brief tenure in office has made Margaret Thatcher look like Mother Theresa in terms of compassion and caring. We have a Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) who drops so many messes that I feel I should take a newspaper into the House and swat him on the nose every day to clean up those messes. He does not have an understanding of his portfolio.

The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), the highly respected senior statesman of the party, is now hiding behind the desk because his brave promises of saving VIA Rail for western Canada are now going on the cutting room floor of the Treasury Board. The Government is betraying itself.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) has finally climbed out of his bathtub and is now preparing to do the same in the health and welfare field that he did in the area of defence, that is, to resurrect the cold war. This time it is not a cold war against Russia. It is going to be a cold war against poor people, aging people, and all those others who look toward Government for some kind of survival.

I tried to find a way of describing the Throne Speech. My vocabulary was not sufficient. I went to the new Oxford Dictionary and found the interesting word "entropy". It means lack of judgment, lack of guidance, chaos, no planning, no direction, no path. That is a good way of describing what we have. However, underneath it is that mean-spirited sense that the Government is not there to try to provide a sense of direction, a feeling amongst Canadians that they can rely upon a Government that will respond. There is a sense of a Government that carries a blind eye to the reality of the world. It does not care about the takeovers, acquisitions, and restructuring of our economy. It gives two lines to foreign policy. There are enormous things happening in the world. Disarmament and arms control are becoming one of the great opportunities of our time.

I spent a little time becoming acquainted with the area of international trade. The Government talks about our new opportunities in Europe and Asia. The Free Trade Agreement with the United States gets a passing mention. Now the Government is talking about Europe and Asia and how we are going to do great things there. It does not mention that in the last couple of years it has cut back all the expenditures on trade development, trade promotion, and trade fairs.

Our current accounts are falling. In 1985 we had a $900 million surplus with the United Kingdom. Now it is a $3.1 billion deficit. In 1985 we had a $327 million surplus with European trading companies. Now it is a $4 billion deficit. We are falling behind in every area of the world. At the same time, the Government is cutting expenditures to help small and medium-sized business to provide promotion and development of trade opportunities around the world.

Once again this document is exposed as being a totally fallacious accounting. It does not deal with reality. It deals with the fact that the Government is going to squeeze, pummel, and inflict pain upon the Canadian people for its own incompetence, mismanagement, and flagrancy. The message of the Throne Speech is that someone has to pay the price for Tory incompetence. The Official Opposition will not let the Government get away without telling the people of Canada exactly what is going on in the House of Commons.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, during the course of the Hon. Member's remarks he referred to the deficit and, of course, that was one of the matters referred to in the Speech from the Throne. It has been drawn to my attention that, in The Toronto Star of March 21, a member of the Hon. Member's party, and I believe the financial critic for the party, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren), was quoted as saying:

> The federal deficit could be reduced by taxing back family allowance and old security payments from those who don't need them, the new Liberal finance critic suggests . . .if the Conservatives dare touch such programs directly the move will be attacked by the Liberals and blamed on free trade, even if the trade deal isn't to blame.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, he stated:

> But drastic action—possibly including both tax increases and spending cuts—is needed to cut the federal deficit. . .

Could the Hon. Member tell me if he agrees with the statements of the finance critic of his own party? Is it the official policy of the Liberal Party, as outlined by the finance critic, that the deficit should be reduced both by expenditure cuts and by tax increases?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): I am pleased to answer that question. The critic for finance in our caucus has a very difficult job trying to explain or understand Conservative policy. The only expression that we have heard from the Minister of Finance in the last several months is his declaration that Canada is now in the same category as Brazil, Mexico, and Venezuela. He was not prepared to talk to the press and tell them exactly what was going on. Our finance critic, who is a man of enormous generosity, compassion and understanding felt that it was important to outline to Canadians, by way of the interview, what type of options the Tories are considering.

That is all he said in looking at this hokum that is now being told about the deficit. Part of the problem is that we can never get the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in the country long enough to tell us what is going on. I guess he got his frequent flyer points from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and as a result he is part of that world-wide network that the Tory Party is now engaged in. Our critic of finance stays home, and as a result he was simply trying to provide an important public service by outlining to Canadians what types of terrible Draconian options the Tories were going to be putting forward as part of their deficit reduction measures.

As a result, Canadians are more alerted and now understand what uncivil and deliberate tactics have been followed in this deficit game that the Government is playing. I think the Hon. Member, before he became a member of the bench, used to have a certain reputation for honesty and would appreciate the fact that our critic for finance is now saying something that he himself probably would have liked to have said.

• (1350)

Mr. McDermid: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that if the records were checked over the first mandate of this Government, they would clearly show that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was in this House a lot more than the Hon. Member.

Mr. Speaker: On questions and comments the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett).

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Hon. Member who spoke in the context of his own history and experience in this Chamber. I want to frame it with as much generosity as possible. I want to ask him what worthy cause was served by the statements of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) yesterday in terms of nation building. What was the intent of making that type of attack on the Constitution when the framework of Canada was under severe attack and it called for a consensus of all political leaders?

At that particular time—not that I am in defence of the Liberal Party—there was statecraft taking place in the construction of a Constitution that would have not solved every problem. One of the decisions was to include the notwithstanding clause at the insistence of two very right wing provincial Premiers, as well as the Premier of Saskatchewan. It was resisted by the then Leader of the Opposition who later became the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark).

I put this question to the Hon. Member. What is the mischief that is intended here? We understand that the Prime Minister can kick the Opposition, kick the New Democratic Party, but to attack the former Tory Prime Minister who agreed to that compromise is some kind of mischief that spells another agenda.

I ask the Hon. Member who has more experience at these higher levels of Government to explain to me what kind of Machiavellian reason would inspire the Prime Minister to lower himself to that kind of irrational debate, dragging out arguments from the past that add nothing to positive nation building? Was it the purpose of attacking his own colleague sitting next to him? Or is he moving ground away from the position that he has entrapped himself in dealing with Quebec today?

We have real serious problems in the country. They call for some leadership, thought, prudence, caution and wisdom. We did not see any of that yesterday. The Hon. Member has been here a long time. Has he seen that kind of performance before from a person who sits in that seat? I did not expect it, neither did editorialists. Perhaps the Hon. Member could explain to me what the real motivation of that absurd attack yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, after the Hon. Member's assertion with respect to my time in the House and my long experience I feel I should apply for my old age pension.

First, I believe that matters such as this are so fundamental that the kind of performance we saw yesterday is of no service to anyone. I would not want to attribute any undue motivation to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The fact that he may have certain historical reasons for differing with his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), on fundamental matters is in the public record. Who am I to say that history is now repeating itself?

What I want to say is this. I expect better from a Prime Minister of Canada, especially this Prime Minister. One of his attributes that I did admire—there are not many but there is one I did admire—was illustrated when he came to this House. We were at that time dealing with the very difficult issue of French language rights in Manitoba, based upon the Supreme Court decision. I presented a resolution on behalf of our Party in terms of urging the Province of Manitoba to agree with the decision, to go along with it. The newly arrived Leader of the Opposition made a very eloquent, very strong, very provocative and important statement supporting that resolution. He gave a real sense of the protection of rights across Canada. I think we all admired and respected the statement at that time.

I want to know this: If he could say it in 1984, where was he in 1989? Why the change? Why the retreat? Is it because it is a different province? Is it because it is a different region? I do not know. The fact of the matter is he had a precedent. He had shown his capacity to understand a sense of nation building. What we have seen since does not give me much confidence about what he is doing now. That statement yesterday has set this country back another 20 years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: For the last question and comment the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Edmonton Southeast.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the House that in 1973 when the Member from British Columbia was briefly Premier of British Columbia he was asking that the entire Canadian oil industry be nationalized. The Member from Fort Garry was supporting the National Energy Program. So let us talk about walking your talk, to the Member from Fort Garry.

When he left office the deficit was $38 billion. I am told, and I hope he will contradict me, that when he left office, Mr. Speaker, he had 90 men and women from the Department of Transport, his Department, working on his ministerial staff. If I am wrong, he will tell me how many he did have doing that. I regard that as being a gross abuse of ministerial office.

What we are talking about today is walking your talk. I put it that nobody is in a worse position than the Hon. Member who just spoke, and his companion, his petit copain ici, à côté to discuss this subject.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would correct the response by pointing out that in 1973 this nation was in an energy crisis. I said British Columbia would take a pan-Canadian position and share our oil and gas with all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Debate.

Mr. Barrett: Just to correct the record, I said that we would share the oil and gas with all Canadians—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think we will resume debate.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I make a response?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will have a short answer from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre and then we will resume debate.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much your generosity. I will just give the Hon. Member a very quick answer.

I have had occasion to briefly thumb through the Hon. Member's book—it does not take much more than a brief thumb through. The fact of the matter is something caught my eye. It was the enormous condemnation of his own Government's efforts in western Canada.

I would remind him that when I was Minister of Transport that Department introduced the modernization of the railways, brought $9 billion worth of investments into that region and signed ERDA agreements worth $2 billion—none of which has been repeated by his own Government. I say to him that if that was worth 90 people working, then they had better get 180 people working.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Garth Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to be taking part in the debate on the Speech from the Throne, as it is a privilege to sit in this House. Our debate here centres around Canada's obvious problems, around our national goals, around the Government agenda and the future.

The Throne Speech touched on many areas but those which impressed me most were, first, the crying need for fiscal responsibility in the country, to really tackle our budget deficit and our national debt. I was also struck by the words of caring about the environment in the Throne Speech. I thought that was really a pivotal part in it. Perhaps this is our greatest responsibility to the future. I was certainly struck as well by comments on reforming the tax system. I think that Canadians really want us to work toward a fairer tax system in general.

Before I comment on some of those areas, I would like to say a couple of words about politics and partisanship. Some issues are simply too important for politics and for party positions. For example, I think environmental concerns should rise above politics. I also think that in many ways economics should rise above politics. In both of these instances we are talking about something fragile and wonderful, that is, the future. For example, if we poison our waters, pollute our air, our soil and our earth, then it is those who come after us who will really suffer. It is the same with our economy. If we indebt our land, if we bankrupt our children, the same will happen. If we indebt ourselves to foreign lenders, then it is not our generation that suffers immediately, but the generations which come after us.

These are clearly not Conservative problems, nor Liberal problems. They are not New Democratic problems. They are all of our problems. I think the Speech from the Throne indicated that the government is going to make reducing the deficit a national priority, and I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I stand 100 per cent behind that objective. I feel the Minister of Finance is most responsible in throwing every effort into cutting down the amount we are forced to borrow to run Canada.

Politicians have been too reluctant to talk about our finances. Maybe some of them do not understand. Maybe some of them do not care. Maybe others thought Canadians were not concerned about who pays the bills and how. Maybe the polsters told the politicians that talk about deficits is not sexy with taxpayers, and so politicians have not really been talking about Canada's dirty little economic secret, but it is clearly too late to pretend that it does not exist.

We have a national debt of $325 billion. Every year it costs us close to $30 billion just to pay the interest on that existing debt. Now the taxes that Canada collects are basically enough to support the expenditures that the government makes, but we do not have close to the $30 billion it that it takes to service that debt. So we borrow it, and every year that we borrow, our debt increases that much further. That is why we have a deficit. It is the interest payment on the debt.

It means every hour, every day, our country falls deeper into debt, and during the few minutes I am going to be standing here, Canada will fall into debt by another $1 million. Today alone, Friday, April 7, our country will be $18 million more indebted than it was at the end of the day yesterday. At the end of this year, our country will be thirty thousand million dollars more in debt than it was last year.

If we ran a business that way, the business would be bankrupt. If your family handled its finances that way, the family would be insolvent, homeless and penniless, and yet here is Canada living on borrowed money and borrowed time, and only now have we really started to talk about getting it back on track.

So I say that it is not a partisan problem. It is simply a tragic problem that we all need to address. I do not think that Canada should run deficits, and I do not think that deficits are anything more than deferred taxation. Deferred from where? Well, from future generations. Deficits are the economic equivalent of toxic pollution of the environment. They are like cutting down rain forests, like polluting water, like pumping sulphur into the atmosphere.

Deficits are irresponsible because they pollute the future. Deficits bring debt, and debt will kill Canada. It is just that simple. Debt will impair our ability to set our own interest rates for example. Debt will ensure that taxes will forever rise, and the middle class as a result will slowly be wiped out. Debts also put our social programs at risk. These deficits that we are running simply represent a transfer of wealth from one generation to the next, from the future generation to ours.

As the Finance Minister has said, it is time to be building for the future and not borrowing from it. So what are we going to do about it?

The Speech from the Throne started to pave the way, and that is why I support it. It paves the way for the Finance Minister to bring in a budget on April 27, which will be responsible and tough and which will do the right things. Doubtless there will be special interest groups and critics who will howl on budget night. But I would like to ask, who among us would be Finance Minister on that night? Who has the courage to stand up and tell Canadians what to do? It takes guts for a politician to do that. It takes guts for a politician to promise people less instead of incessantly promising them more. It takes guts to stand here and tell Canadians they have to make sacrifices, when life seems good and credit at the bank is easy to get, but it has got to be done. There is no choice.

Everyone is saying it. For example, the Chamber of Commerce did a survey the other day that found that only 9 per cent of Canadian businesses thought the Government had done enough to reduce the deficit. The International Monetary Fund, as we know, wants our Government to cut the deficit by $9 billion. If it does not, it warns that we are going to be incurring deficits well above $30 billion for quite some time.

Editorial writers from across the country have been urging the government to do something about it, do more, cut further, be more responsible. Business groups have been there at the bar urging us as well, and I will quote from a speech given the other day by the President of the Business Council for National Issues:

> Interest payments on the national debt today add up to more than twice what is spent on our major elderly benefit programs combined. Old Age Security, Guaranteed Income Supplements and Spouse Allowances are three times more than the federal government spends on all economic and regional development programs. Even more worrisome is the prospect of recession, saddled with large deficits and soaring debts of servicing costs, the capacity of the country to respond to a significant economic slow-down is alarmingly limited.

Yes, those are voices from the business community, voices of people who have studied the economics of the situation and who are frankly concerned about it, but the business people are not standing alone. Standing shoulder to shoulder with them are legions of ordinary people.

Over the last few days, Mr. Speaker, my office has been swamped with hundreds of letters from individual Canadians who are concerned about the defict and who want a strong message related to the Finance Minister.

I would like to quote just a couple of comments that have come in.

Linda Adshead of Mississauga, Ontario writes me:

> During the last federal election, my two major concerns were the deficit and the future of our environment. I feel that if we do not get these things under control, we will not have a country to worry about. The deficit has been a concern of mine for many years. It is now out of control, and something has to be done about it now.

Pat Kenler of Whitby, Ontario writes me:

> The massive debt which the people of this country must support is overwhelming. When the budget is brought down in April, drastic spending cut-backs must be enforced. I am truly concerned about my future as a Canadian. I agree we should promote patriotism where Canadians should stop bitching about what the government does for them. We are in a country so vast, so full of resources that there is opportunity for everyone. Please cut back on all the money that is handed to people to get their vote.

Helen Gordon of Mono Mills, Ontario writes me:

> The situation is as grave as the great depression. What should be done? First of all, action by all citizens, politicians, corporations, bureaucrats. Governments must reduce spending. Citizens will have to pay more taxes as do corporations. Lobbyists will have to reduce, if not eliminate, grandiose ideas of government grants for everything. Citizens will have to realize they cannot have it all. National support programs will have to be monitored and reduced to within operable range. Full co-operation from all aspects of society demands a tough attitude. This will not be easy. We have had it that way for too long. The time of decision is at hand.

Mrs. Penny of Mississauga, Ontario writes me:

> I have reached the age of 60 and have watched with dismay our ever increasing spending and consequent debt. Everyone has been paid too much and lived beyond their means for the past 30 years. Shame and thrift used to be two very important words. We used to brag about how little we pay for something. Now all of us brag about how much we pay.

The Gaylord family of Campbellville, Ontario write me:

> Mr. Turner, we are prepared to help where we can. At J.F. Kennedy's exhortation is needed as a philosophy: "Ask not what your country can do for you; ask what you can do for your country."
>
> Help us convince the majority in government that we need to reduce the deficit, that spending reductions are essential, that social programs need to be reviewed.

• (1410)

Lynn Schnitter of Stroud, Ontario, writes me:

> I have read what you have written on the deficit. I looked at our five-year old son and I realized I must write to you now.
> You see, I don't want our son growing up in a banana republic, nor do I want him to be part of a future USA north. We are trying hard to provide him with the financial security for our future and we are certainly not counting on our Canada pension for ourselves. We have swallowed personal sacrifices in the past and present and would do so again for the economic well-being not only of ourselves but for our country.

These are the voices of the people. It is not big business, not partisans, not politicians, just people. They know that deficits breed high interest rates. The people know that all we get is a vicious circle of more debt which threatens people further. It threatens their families, threatens their jobs and threatens our whole future.

We have a situation now that if deficits are not trimmed and debt is not refinanced, we will simply lose the ability to set our own interest rate policy. That will mean that homeownership will slip through the fingers of more and more Canadians as mortgage rates rise unchecked. It will make it harder for people to afford consumer and durable goods. That will ultimately result in the loss of jobs for thousands of Canadians. How long will we allow this to keep on?

Can we not say on April 27, when the Budget is brought in, that this is where Canada stands, this is where Canada says enough, from here on we manage events, we pay our own way. We are honest, we are upfront. We tell people what comes next. We ask for fairness for all. I think we can do it.

Between Confederation and Canada's Centennial in 1967, the country ran up $28 billion in debt. For that we built a transcontinental railway, we fought and won two world wars. But in the next 21 years we increased the national debt by 1,000 per cent, to the point where now we are one of the most indebted peoples on the face of the earth. At this rate it is only a matter of time before our whole national economy is threatened and we lose the ability to finance medicare, social programs, health, education, and all the rest for which we have fought so hard.

Obviously in a situation like this the Government needs the help of everyone. In particular, the country needs the help of those of us in the House.

I listened to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) this morning trying to make a similar point, that all of us share the responsibility for getting the country back on track. All of us know that the ultimate threat we faced to our spending programs is $30 billion a year in additional borrowing. That one thought alone should bring us above the partisan frame, and I hope it does.

The problem can only be solved if we act as responsible individuals, especially here. Instead of simply dumping by rote upon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on April 27, it is my hope that all the words that are spoken in response to what he does are constructive and designed to help Canada. Nobody wants more taxes, especially me. I am probably one of the few Members of the House who has had the privilege in the past to be outside waving a sign in front of this Parliament, talking about exactly this, the issue of taxation. What we face now is a war for Canada's future. What the Throne Speech tells us is that we have a duty, simply, clearly, responsibly, to take action.

I would rather see billions of dollars more spent every year on caring for my parents in their old age, or caring for the environment for our children, than I would see those billions go to foreign lenders in Tokyo and New York.

My seat here in the House of Commons falls on an imaginary line running between government members and opposition Members. My greatest hope is that during this session we can reach across the imaginary lines, lay down the rhetoric, and do something right for Canada.

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Halton—Peel (Mr. Turner) on his speech. He has thought a great deal about what he wanted to say in the House.

If he is to cut the social programs, does that mean he would tell not only the House but the caucus and his Ministers that he is not in favour of the universality of the programs we have now with regard to family allowances, old age pensions and medicare? Would he tell us his personal view on the Government's proposed expenditure on the nuclear submarines?

Mr. Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, I support a progressive tax system which effectively takes from those who do not require social assistance programs and social assistance payments, and returns it to the federal treasury. I think that is the fairest way of dealing with the situation at this particular time.

As far as the nuclear submarine program is concerned, the Government has a plan by which over the course of the next 25 years annual expenditures are roughly $300 million will be expended to finance the construction of the submarines. Certainly the defence policy White Paper clearly defines the need. If we do make the argument and believe that we should defend Canada, it clearly stated that that was the most effective way of doing it.

I think we must go beyond merely looking at that expenditure because the cuts that will be required for the additional revenues will be in the area of $5 billion to $7 billion. We need to go much further than that program.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I want to welcome the Hon. Member to the House and congratulate him on his maiden speech. I enjoyed his comments about the deficit. I remind the House that the accumulated deficit has in fact doubled in the last four or five years under the Government of which he is a part.

During his analysis I believe he stated that deficits caused higher interest rates. Yet my observation in the last four or five years, while we were running up the first $38 billion annual deficit which the Conservative Government shared with the previous Liberal Government, followed by a series of $30 billion plus deficits, is that interest rates actually dropped because we permitted the Canadian dollar to drop. When we had a 68-cent dollar, we had relatively low interest rates. The Government, for some reason, seems to be instructing the—

• (1420)

Mr. McDermid: That is not right.

Mr. Althouse: Yes, it is right. Check the data.

Mr. McDermid: Interest rates were about the same as they are today when the dollar was at 69 cents.

Mr. Althouse: If the Hon. Member will check, he will find that the interest rates have gone up nearly 4 per cent at a time when the dollar has gone up from 68 to about 83 or 84 cents.

The reason I raise it is that it seems the data do not fit with the theory generally abroad that deficits cause rising interest rates, and this is important for deficit cutters like the Hon. Member for Halton—Peel (Mr. Turner), because when the interest rate is kept down, that means that there is less cost in servicing that deficit. If we would go from a 12 per cent to an 8 per cent interest rate, for instance, rather than paying just over $30 billion a year in financing costs, that would drop to $20 billion and there would be an additional $10 billion for discretionary spending, or perhaps even a reduction of the accumulated deficit.

I was just wondering where the Hon. Member's analysis goes in that regard. Low interest rates and low dollars permit this country to continue to be a very valuable exporter and encourage the exports that helped us to maintain particularly the hinterland regions like mine.

Mr. Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, I am also pleased to respond to that question, and I think it is well put by the Hon. Member.

In terms of interest rates, it would be clearly impossible for the Government to instruct the Bank of Canada merely to cause an across the board reduction in interest rates. That would simply send a negative signal to world markets and would result in a drop in our currency. Ultimately, that would accelerate the problem by forcing us to re-examine our interest rate policy in order to rescue our currency. So I do not think that is an alternative.

I am sure the Hon. Member knows quite well the theory of supply and demand. When there is a great demand for a commodity, the price of it goes up. Simply put, the price of money is interest, and when there is great demand for the commodity of money, the price of money goes up. When a Government puts great demands on the capital markets, as a result we have competition for available funds and we do see interest rates rise as a result of that.

There is another element coming into play, of course. We do have an inflationary problem in Canada, particularly in central Canada. It is important for us to address and deal with that problem early on before it accelerates. We are in an economic situation now not unlike that of the late 1970s. It is important for us to put the brakes on the economy slowly, responsibly, before it runs away, and we have an inflation problem that takes double-digit interest rates to deal with. An ounce of cure now is much better than a pound of prevention later, and I fully support the Bank of Canada's policy.

Mr. Martin (LaSalle—Emard): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to the cost of the submarine program. It is my underscored understanding that Jane's Fighting Ships, the most authoritative document on this particular issue, has brought that cost in at some $20 million, substantially in excess of the Government's estimates. I wonder if the Hon. Member would like to comment on that.

I also wonder if the Hon. Member would like to comment on the fact that it is estimated that the vast majority of the technical work on these submarines will in fact be contracted abroad; in other words, that there will really be no industrial offsets or benefits to Canada apart from rather rudimentary steelwork.

Mr. Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, I will not presume to answer for my colleague, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight), and I think that that question should rightfully be directed to him at Question Period.

All I can say is that Jane's Fighting Ships is not an agency of the federal Government and I doubt it has more inside information than those who prepared our estimates, but I would ask that the Hon. Member direct that question to the Defence Minister.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity this afternoon to take part in the debate on the second Throne Speech of the Thirty-Fourth Parliament. Some people may assume we are talking about the inaugural speech, Mr. Speaker, but that is not the case. In fact, we had a very short session before Christmas to accommodate the agreement negotiated by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and his U.S. counterpart, the President of the United States.

I must say that I regret the outcome of the first session. I regret that the Canadian Government, despite our efforts to convince them that they were on the wrong track, nevertheless decided to ratify this Free Trade Agreement which in both the short and long term will be harmful to Canada's economy.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by taking this opportunity to thank the people of the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell for their tremendous support during the last election campaign. I am particularly thankful, Mr. Speaker, that my constituents decided to ask me to sit for a second term in this Chamber, and that they did so by giving me a vast majority, nearly 26,000 votes more than my nearest opponent. I am very thankful, and hope that during the next four or five years, I will be able to fulfil the duties attached to a mandate I was given with such an impressive majority.

[English]

The riding that I represent is indeed a very special one. I am sure that each MP thinks that the constituency he or she represents is the nicest, and it is after the one that I represent. We are probably all correct, of course.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, Glengarry, of course, is the home of the first Premier of the Province of Ontario, Sir John Sandfield MacDonald. It is also the birthplace of the United Empire Loyalist movement, and it is, of course, a very, very special place in the hearts and minds of many Canadians.

Indeed, the Scottish tradition of Glengarry is still alive and well and there are still the occasional Glengarrian who can still speak Gaelic, although there are few of them left.

[Translation]

In Prescott County, however, which is quite different from the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, most of my constituents are Francophones. For instance, Longueuil Township, which is located in Prescott County, was known as the Seigneurie de Longueuil before the Constitution Act of 1791. At the time part of New France, it is now part of the electoral district I have the honour and the privilege of representing.

[English]

The County of Russell is different again from the two others. It is near the City of Ottawa. It is the area which is perhaps the closest to me for it is near that part of the riding in which I live. I live in the Township of Cumberland in Ottawa—Carleton near Russell County. I consider myself to be a resident of that area, an area where I have spent all of my life.

I also represent a very small portion of Stormont County, namely the Island of Cornwall in which we have the Akwasasne Indian community, a people who are very, very proud but have had considerable difficulty in functioning in an area which is part of Ontario, part of Quebec and part of New York State, all within the same community.

This difficulty has been with us for some time and successive Governments have failed, in my view, to assist the residents of Akwasasne properly. It is my hope that during the next few years, together, we in this Parliament can work constructively to assist the people of Akwasasne. If we succeed, perhaps some day the people of Akwasasne will exercise their right to the franchise. No one in Akwesasne voted in the last election, period. No one voted in the previous election or ever before that. There is one instance where one person voted in Akwesasne in the 1950s, and he was chased away from the community for having done so. That is a sad reflection on our inability to help those people. If we in this Parliament could ever convince them to do otherwise, then it would be a great day. If we could convince them to vote, it means that we will have earned that respect from that which we have failed to do thus far.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the main themes of the Throne Speech are as follows: The Prime Minister favours (1) a strong economy; (2) protection of the environment; (3) he wants Canada to continue to be a caring nation; and (4) he wants to promote the values of Canadian citizenship. Those were the four main themes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to address them one by one and give you my impressions on these themes, not as isolated concepts but in terms of the Conservative Government's past record and any action we will see in the future.

[English]

This Government, during the last election campaign, accused the opposition Parties of making commitments which they said were not in the best interests of Canada. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) chastised the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and told him he was making promises he should not be making. Some very astute people in the media said to the Prime Minister: "Haven't you made promises?" "Oh, no," said the Prime Minister, "that is not the same. When I make promises, they are not really promises. They are commitments. We already have all that money in the Budget. We already have all that money in the Estimates, and of course we will deliver on everything we have committed to".

There are rumblings across the way that not only will they not be delivering on those promises, but they will cut back on what Canadians have already. For instance, the constituency I represent and the one represented by my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Stormont—Dundas (Mr. Kilger), are served by VIA Rail. It is very important for our area. We are now hearing that there will be severe cut-backs, if not a total shut-down of that Crown corporation, at a time when the service is being more and more utilized by the Canadian public. There has been an increase in use in the last 12 months at VIA Rail of in excess of 10 per cent. If we did not have a VIA Rail, we would probably be planning to build one right now. Of course we would want it better than the way it is working. That is true of most things, but that does not mean that we should be shutting it down at the time that we are now.

Let us look at what the Government was promising to Canadians in the period between May 30 and September 30, 1988—I am sorry, I should retract that, the commitments that the Conservative Government of Canada was making, because we have been told by the Prime Minister, and we would never want to contradict him, that they are not promises but commitments.

On May 30 in Ottawa, the Minister responsible for multiculturalism promised $62 million of funding for multiculturalism over five years. I am waiting to see whether that will stay in the Budget.

On May 31 in Calgary, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) promised $12 million for the emergency drought relief program for prairie farmers. We all know how poorly that program is being administered.

On June 3, 1988, in Montreal the Prime Minister promised $110 million for clean up of the St. Lawrence.

On June 7 in Ottawa, the Minister of National Health and Welfare promised $40 million for victims of family violence.

On June 7, the Secretary of State at that time, the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Bouchard), promised $1.4 billion federal funding for teaching and promotion of bilingualism. That is a bit much coming from that gentleman.

On June 8 in Winnipeg, the Minister of Health promised $129 million for an AIDS research program.

On June 9, the Prime Minister promised $515 million for economic development over five years in the Province of Quebec.

On June 14 in Alma, the Prime Minister—need I remind you what was happening around June 14 in the Alma/Lac-Saint-Jean area. A certain person flew across the ocean and descended upon Lac-Saint-Jean to come and give his presents to the area.

An Hon. Member: Very expensive.

Mr. Boudria: Very expensive fellow, yes. The Prime Minister promised—

An Hon. Member: He got re-elected.

Mr. Boudria: Listen closely across the way. We will ask questions later.

The Prime Minister promised $40 million to build a road from Lac-Saint-Jean to James Bay. What happened on June 16 in Alma, a long period afterwards, two days? The fact that we were in the middle of a by-election to elect the Prime Minister's friend to Parliament had nothing to do with this, and I would never be suspicious of that. On June 16, the friend in question, who was the candidate for the by-election, promised $1.5 million to establish a new youth employment centre in the riding he was running in at that time.

On June 20 in St. John's, Newfoundland, the Minister responsible for external trade promised $800 million as federal compensation for the callous closure of the Newfoundland railway.

On June 23 in Ottawa, the former Minister of Communications, who was soundly defeated by my learned colleague from Kingston and the Islands on November 21, had promised $250 million to support the Canadian film industry.

On June 23, the same Minister promised $35 million of extra funding for the CBC for future expansion.

On June 24, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), alias the Minister responsible for the Post Office, promised $1.6 million as a bail-out for the Consumers' Association of Canada.

This is all before the election just happened, too.

An Hon. Member: There was no national debt then.

Mr. Boudria: There was no national debt. It was only in the area of $300 billion before the election. What's $300 billion?

Let me continue, because there is more.

An Hon. Member: Pretty exciting.

Mr. Boudria: I know it is exciting but let me continue.

On June 25, the Minister for multiculturalism promised $900,000 for government advertising. I know that is hard to believe, government advertising.

On June 26 in British Columbia, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans awarded a $1.8 million contract to carry out research.

On June 27, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs announced $5 million to establish a national review board to monitor Canada Post.

On June 27, the Minister of Agriculture, together with his colleague from Nova Scotia, the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), announced a $30 million federal government program to assist Nova Scotia agriculture.

On June 28, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced $38 million in duty remissions to those poor fellows at Goodyear.

On June 29 in Ottawa, the Minister responsible for regional industrial expansion announced $7.2 million to establish international trade centres across Canada.

I could go on and on describing the millions and billions being spent. Let me give you another example where money was spent.

An Hon. Member: Committed.

Mr. Boudria: I am sorry, committed. I am sorry for that faux pas. I would never want to accuse the Tories of promising or otherwise spending. They are committing money, according to the vocabulary dictated to us by the great one himself, the Prime Minister.

I will go a little further and describe that on July 20, the amateur Minister of fitness and sports—no, I am sorry—the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sports—

An Hon. Member: Captain steroid.

Mr. Boudria: —promised $600 million in contracts over the next four years.

The then Minister of Defence on July 21 announced the purchase of 820 northern terrain all-weather vehicles. That is a cost of $420 million.

On July 21, the Minister of Health announced a program of $1 billion for day care. By the million and by the billion, all from a Government during an election campaign. It was telling us then that it had all that money in the budget, all that money in the Estimates. If it were true then, Mr. Speaker, what happened to the estimation process, I ask you, if right now we have to cut back? Our colleague from Halton was telling us a while ago we had to cut back. At that time he was a writer, probably criticizing some of these outrageous promises that were being made. I do not know what happened. As my distinguished colleagues behind me say, the Tories obviously peeled back on some of the commitments they had made.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in the Throne Speech the federal Government said we must protect the environment. Saying so is easy. It's like saying we should like apple pie. Of course we do, and of course we should or at least most people will want to protect the environment. However, when we see that during the last Parliament, during the last four years, the Government cut back staff at the Department of the Environment and either made budget cuts or at any rate refused to increase the budget and votes for the Department of the Environment in proportion to the rate of inflation, how can we be expected to take the Conservative Government seriously? Mr. Speaker, not long ago I heard on the media that an organization in the United States was going to present a medal or some kind of award to the Prime Minister for what he has done for the environment. It is nice to see that some Conservative Members are applauding, since the same group that wants to congratulate the Prime Minister has some of the biggest polluters in North America among its members who, last year, congratulated President Regan. Would you want to be associated with what Ronald Reagan did for the environment?

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Perhaps the Tory Member who just applauded would like that kind of association, but I wouldn't, Mr. Speaker. Not me.

[English]

The Prime Minister said in the Throne Speech in his thirteenth theme that we should be a generous society. It is hard to believe that the Prime Minister is serious about this issue of being a generous society. I know that not everyone will agree with me on the following topic, but in my opinion any society who fails after this length of time to have any kind of legislation to protect those least able to help themselves—I am speaking here of the unborn—can hardly call itself a generous society under anyone's definition.

I respectfully submit that the failure of the Government to commit itself to a law on abortion—and I know we do not all agree on what the law should contain but it even failed to state that it wanted to have a law—in my view is totally inappropriate.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister told us he wanted to promote the values of Canadian citizenship. How can we take this statement seriously, when during the last three months, the Government has been using Governor General's warrants instead of facing the House? How can we, when the Prime Minister himself repudiated the Constitution of our country in this very House yesterday? I ask Hon. Members opposite: How can we take these comments seriously?

[English]

In conclusion, I want to state that in eastern Ontario, outside the general area of the City of Ottawa proper, there still is considerable hardship and considerable unemployment. This Government has promised in the Throne Speech to have regional development programs for the Atlantic, for western Canada and for northern Ontario. All previous Governments had recognized that northern and eastern Ontario needed development. This particular Government has neglected the words "eastern Ontario". We, as Liberals, have 12 out of 14 seats in eastern Ontario. We refuse to subscribe to the doctrine dictated to us by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). We want to stand up and we want our share for this part of our great country.

[Translation]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like once more to thank my constituents of Glengarry–Prescott–Russell for the honour and privilege of representing them during another term.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am informed an incident is happening outside the House, and people inside are asked to remain here, even at 3 o'clock, until we can leave.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, I noted with interest the last speaker's comments on government spending and the attitude of the Government toward its spending.

This leads me into another area near and dear to the hearts of westerners, particularly those in the Province of British Columbia, that of patronage contracts and the letting of procurements. In British Columbia, from 1984 through to 1988, procurement dropped from approximately 6 per cent to approximately 4 per cent, with British Columbians having approximately 11.5 per cent of the Canadian population. Given this inequitable situation, what is the position of the Hon. Member's Party with to the letting of government contracts? Will he encourage his Party and his Leader as a Member from British Columbia to encourage equity in the area of patronage contracts and in the area of letting government procurement contracts?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to apologize to the Hon. Member for having missed the first few moments of his question. Our Deputy Whip informed me of the present unfortunate situation going on outside the Chamber, and I will leave that for the present moment. I do apologize. It was not that I did not want to pay attention to his question which is undoubtedly very important.

In the area of the awarding of contracts during the last Parliament and so far in this Parliament, I have been the Government's operations critic for our Party. One of the tasks for such a role in the last Parliament was to establish constructive criticism in awards of contracts, public sector ethics, lobbying legislation and so on, as policies for our Party.

Those were announced during the last Parliament. I was one of the people who contributed to the present lobbying legislation that we now have, which has not been promulgated yet, I do not think. At least it is not in effect at the present time, but we did adopt it as a Parliament during the last Parliament. I think it was a good effort in all-Party co-operation.

In terms of other public works and supply and service contracts, some measures have been improved over the last two or three years.

I think everyone will say—and even the Prime Minister acknowledged that particularly in the beginning of his mandate in 1984-85 or so—that there were considerable difficulties in the administration of that. I am not going to get into the activities that went on, the charges and so on that have occurred. Those are there on the public record.

I think what we have to do, and some of these things have taken place already, is to ensure that we lower the threshold which is utilized in order to determine what contract goes out for public tender. We need to enforce the regulations in so far as determining what the exceptions are to those tendering procedures. There are always emergencies when we have to call a plumber in the middle of the night to repair a facility, a boiler or a heating system. I think we all recognize that this kind of situation must continue. .

We must tighten up the rules as much as we can. We must also strengthen the conflict of laws that we have not only for Members of Parliament and cabinet Minister but for some of the senior civil servants as well. I think the stricter those rules the better they will be. Some people have said that stricter conflict of interest rules will discourage people from entering public office. I hold exactly the opposite view. In fact, hopefully the stricter the rules, the better the system will be. If the system is better, people will be more attracted to run for public office because it will enjoy a higher level of reputation than it does at certain unfortunate times right now.

Mr. Denis Pronovost (Saint-Maurice): First, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to say a few words in this hour of debate that is coming to an end today on the Throne Speech. Also, I would like in the first place to take this opportunity to thank my constituents in Saint-Maurice for trusting me on November 21, 1988, when they elected me as their first Progressive Conservative MP in 97 years.

During the Throne Speech, Mr. Speaker, numerous references were made to all areas involving the environment, and my constituency has been very much in the headlines these last few days with the PCB spill from the Belgo plant in Shawinigan. People in my constituency have been very concerned, because this is the second toxic spill from that plant in three months and they have every reason to be disturbed. The Belgo plant in Shawinigan has been in breach of the environment laws on many occasions over these last few years, a fact that has surfaced a number of times.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I was very amazed during these last weeks to see how much the whole issue of the environment is an important one to people in my constituency and to Canadians from sea to sea.

I had the opportunity, pleasure and privilege to rise three times in this House in two days on the matter of the Saint-Maurice river pollution. I did some research to find out about the behaviour of the two Liberal Members who were my predecessors during the last 25 years.

To my great stupefaction, Mr. Speaker, and to the shame of my constituents, we have found that in 25 years of Liberal government, not once did these two Liberal Members, Mr. Chrétien and Mr. Grondin, find a way to rise in this House to condemn the pollution and very deteriorated state of the Saint-Maurice river.

It was my pleasure to do so on three occasions in two days. And the constituents in Saint-Maurice wondered why Jean Chrétien did not do that. Why did he not rise in this House during the 20 years he represented us here, why he did not do so? We understood why last year, Mr. Speaker, when Jean Chrétien was elected to the board of Consolidated Bathurst. We are paying the price for 21 years of silence. Jean Chrétien was rewarded for not saying a word in this House and for having let the Saint-Maurice river become one of the most polluted in Canada. Today, Mr. Speaker, pollutants are often spilled in the Saint-Maurice river. Consolidated Bathurst, Belgo Division, has never had any trouble with the federal government.

We now have a new Minister of the Environment (M. Lucien Bouchard), who will not be pushed around. The new Minister of the Environment is not afraid of Consolidated Bathurst. He has said in this House that if Consolidated Bathurst has broken the law, the Federal government will take legal proceedings. During 25 years of silence, never did Jean Chrétien, who was Minister of Finance, who headed about every Department, never did Jean Chrétien, with all his power and influence, dare say such a thing. The citizens of Saint-Maurice sure fixed his wagon along with that of his gang on November 21 last when the Liberal candidate finished third, behind the socialist candidate.

In a by-election held in my riding barely two years ago, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal candidate got 65 percent of the vote. In two years, the Liberal Party in my riding, a so-called Liberal stronghold has fallen to 19 percent. And the next time, Mr. Speaker, he will lose his deposit!

The environment was a major issue during the election campaign. It was therefore conforting to see the Leader of the Opposition (M. Turner), contrary to the New Democrats for whom Québec does not exist as far as pollution is concerned and who remained silent, rise in this House and, although he was a bit mixed up, pronounced for the first time in his life the name of the city of Shawinigan. He has been haunted by the city of Shawiningan for the past four years! He nevertheless rose to ask a question about pollution in the Saint-Maurice River. However, the Leader of the Opposition does not know, Mr. Speaker, that the Saint-Maurice river is under provincial jurisdiction, that Consolidated Bathurst is a provincially chartered corporation. But the fact remains that, although this matter comes under provincial jurisdiction, the Minister of the Environment has looked into the problem, into the whole issue.

EXTRADITION ACT

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-209, an Act to amend the Extradition Act (appeal).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, this Bill that I am introducing, seconded by Bob Horner of Mississauga West, is in response to the blatant injustices which exist in Canada today which permit fugitives such as Charles Ng and Joseph Kindler entry into our country to seek haven from foreign authorities, with more legal avenues and opportunities than what is available to a Canadian citizen who is accused of committing a crime here in Canada. To add insult to injury, our Government is spending millions of dollars harbouring these fugitives as they endeavour to escape justice.

The purpose of this Bill, entitled an Act to amend the Extradition Act, will be to streamline the extradition process now in place in Canada by first eliminating the fugitives' right to apply for a writ of habeas corpus and substitute it with a straight appeal before the relevant provincial court of appeal, and second, by removing any appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. This Bill will limit the number of recourses a fugitive has available to only one level of appeal. This Bill will also provide the Minister of Justice with the option to release the fugitive into the hands of foreign authorities either immediately or wait until the fugitive has been dealt with fully by the Canadian penal system; meaning that fugitives will not have to complete their sentence here in Canada before being extradited.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CRIMINAL CODE AND SUPREME COURT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): moved for leave to introduce Bill C-210, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and the Supreme Court Act (habeas corpus).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill, also seconded by the Member from Mississauga West (Mr. Horner) entitled an Act to amend the Criminal Code and the Supreme Court Act, will limit the recourses available to a fugitive in this country by amending both the Criminal Code and the Supreme Court Act to remove any possible right to appeal a habeas corpus judgment to either the Provincial Court of Appeal or the Supreme Court of Canada. This Bill will provide the appropriate amendments to ensure that there is only one appeal stage; i.e., the writ of habeas corpus available to a fugitive committed to prison under the Extradition Act before the case is handed over to the Minister of Justice. It is my hope that this Bill will tighten up the extradition process in this country, a process which is weighed down heavily by inadequacies, illustrated most recently by the cases of Charles Ng, Joseph Kindler and many others who have been able to prolong their stay in our country through the costly and timely use of our legal system.

In summary, it eliminates appeal to the Provincial Court of Appeal. It eliminates appeal to the Supreme Court. It leaves the fugitive with only the writ of habeas corpus.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Introduction of Bills

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-211, an Act to amend the Financial Administration Act (session of Parliament).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to prevent the kind of abuse that we witnessed in the last few months on the part of the Government in the use of Governor General's warrants. The purpose is to amend the Bill for greater clarity to ensure that not just the spirit of the Constitution, but in fact the letter of the law is observed, and that the proposal is to change the law to prevent the issue of the Governor General's warrants from the date of the recall of Parliament until its dissolution to the time of an election. That is the technical effect of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-212, an Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act (cautionary label on alcoholic beverage containers).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to provide a cautionary label on all bottles of liquor, wine, beer and spirits, that would indicate clearly that excessive use of this particular liquor would result in driving impairment.

Also, I believe the label ought to include the ingredients. Many people react negatively to certain ingredients. We require virtually everything else sold in stores to indicate the contents, yet when it comes to liquor we do not expect the same.

Also, we provide a warning on packages of cigarettes. I think that on the most abused drug in society it would be appropriate that labels reflect that same concern.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-213, an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act (loss leadering).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to finally put on the books a prohibition against one of the most retrogressive predatory pricing practices, namely loss leadering. Loss leadering is defined as the selling of a product below the cost of production of that product. It has been used to drive out competition in the marketplace and, once the competition has been driven out, the price goes up, forever upward and onward.

My Bill would declare it a predatory pricing practice and prohibit it just as we do other predatory pricing practices.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

LIMITATION OF INTEREST RATES AND FEES IN RELATION TO CREDIT CARD ACCOUNTS

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-214, An Act to provide for the limitation of interest rates and fees in relation to credit card accounts.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, this is another example of rapacious banks and other lending institutions having skyrocketing interest rates on credit cards. For example, the prime rate is now 13.5 per cent and bank credit cards and retail store credit cards are at 20 per cent, 27 per cent and up to 33 per cent interest rates.

We have to reign in these dogs of the marketplace. We will put them on a short leash. My Bill is designed to do exactly that. I know I am supported by the former chairman of the Finance Committee. We are going to limit that spread of interest rates in which they are gouging consumers with rapacious interest rates.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA PENSION PLAN ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved for leave to introduce Bill C–215, an Act to amend the Canada Pension Plan (survivor's pensions).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, this Bill is designed to eliminate the discriminatory element of the Canada Pension Plan Act as it relates to disability pensions. For example, the Canada Pension Act says that the surviving spouse of a person who has been collecting Canada Pension Plan disability, if 34 years of age or younger, would not be able to collect the surviving benefits. My Bill is designed to remove that discrimination based on age.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved for leave to introduce Bill C–216, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (leave of absence).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to extend the leave of absence provisions respecting a candidate in a federal election. If that candidate is successful, my Bill would ensure that that successful candidate, on application for leave of absence, would get that leave of absence for as long as that person is elected to the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved for leave to introduce Bill C–217, an Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act (priority of claims).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to correct an anomaly in the Bankruptcy Act in terms of claims. In cases where a company goes bankrupt, the first priority is to the Government of Canada, second, to the banks, and third, whatever is left goes to the employees.

In this Bill I intend to change the priority of claims and put the contributions of employees with respect to their pension plan, wages, holiday pay and salaries as a first priority with everything else second. That is a maximum of $9,000.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

FOREST RESOURCE MANAGEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure, indeed privilege, to present a petition on behalf of a number of petitioners who are concerned that the forest industry of Canada generates $3 billion annually in tax revenue to provincial and federal Governments and for every dollar the Government collects in taxes from the forest industry, only five cents is reinvested into the forest resource. The petition goes on at some length about the concern regarding the forest resource. Fundamentally, they are calling upon Parliament to develop new national forestry initiatives, promote more effective and sustainable forestry practices and consider the advisability of increasing spending on reforestation and promoting genuine sustained yield management of our forests.

DESIGNATION OF ROUGE RIVER VALLEY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present to the House today a petition which has been certified by the Clerk of Petitions. This petition is entitled: "Help Save the Rouge Valley". The Rouge Valley System is a unique and precious natural area in Scarborough on the east boundary of Metro Toronto.

• (1120)

This land was land-banked by the provincial Government in the mid-seventies. The present Liberal Government of the province is considering putting a dump or a freeway in the area. The petitioners are outraged with this and believe that protecting this endangered wildlife and wilderness area is indeed in the national interest.

The petitioners are joined by the Mayor of the City of Scarborough, hundreds of volunteers from Save the Rouge Valley System, the Coalition of Scarborough Community Associations and indeed the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard).

The undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to work with the Government of Ontario to establish the Rouge River Valley System as a Canadian heritage land or a provincial park.

NON-PROFIT AND CO-OP HOUSING

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition under Standing Order 36 signed by several persons from the Ottawa area. They petition the Parliament of Canada to increase government financial commitments to non-profit and co-op housing, recognizing the very serious situation that exists not only locally in Ottawa but throughout Canada with respect to geared-to-income housing and co-op housing.

SITUATION RESPECTING WOMEN IN RURAL AREAS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition which deals with the concerns of rural communities. Thirty-five per cent of rural Saskatchewan women hold two jobs, one on the farm and one in the community. A Manitoba survey suggested that the average working week of a rural woman consisted of 95 hours, including 54 hours of housework and 23 hours of farm chores.

This petition asks the Government to consider the advisability of ensuring that adequate resources are directed toward the needs of rural women and their families, committing funds to the development of ongoing child care services in all regions, with particular sensitivity to the needs of rural and farm families.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT—REQUEST FOR REVIEW

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present a petition signed by more than 300 upset citizens from the Township of Shuniah which borders on the City of Thunder Bay. A vicious, fatal beating of a 64-year old Shuniah employee on July 10, 1988, by two youths, their subsequent trial and maximum sentence of only three years in secured custody has eroded the confidence of this community in our system. The citizens of Shuniah, led by Reeve John Clark and by the person who spearheaded the petition, Mary Stahl, thus call upon Parliament to review and change the Young Offenders Act so that sentences can be more proportionate to the gravity of the offence.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members if we might have consent to revert to the introduction of Private Members' Bills. One was missed.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-218, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (automatic weapons).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to amend the Criminal Code to prohibit the importation of automatic weapons and semi-automatic weapons that may be converted into an automatic weapon. We note with concern the views being expressed by police and other law officers, and I hope that this Bill will express those concerns.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. GAUTHIER—SECURITY ON HILL

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We had an unfortunate incident on Parliament Hill last Friday. The hostage-taking caused some positions to be taken and some reactions to it. Being one of the Members who were here and could see with my own eyes how the forces and House of Commons security reacted, I would like, on behalf of all Members of my party, for the Liberals in any case, and probably on behalf of all other Members too, to say that we were very impressed.

[English]

We were very impressed with the way the security staff handled themselves on Friday. I want them to know that we thank them and tell them that we appreciate very much the difficult situation they were in on Friday. We hope that they are each individually given our thanks by the Sergeant at Arms who did an excellent job also.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise on behalf of my caucus. We held a caucus meeting this morning, and indeed all the caucus members present wanted to reflect their appreciation for the excellent work done by our security people.

Over the weekend, we heard a great deal of positive reaction and accolades given to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the Ottawa Police Force. Those of us who were in the building at the time could only be impressed with the way our security forces went about their work. The initiation of their emergency response plan was first-class. Let us hope that they never have to introduce that emergency response plan again.

[Translation]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, we in the Conservative Party feel almost the same way. It was a wonderful response.

[English]

I was in the Chamber on Friday and I believe that the situation was well handled. The staff of the Whip's office held a staff meeting this morning in which we reviewed the past week. That meeting was adjourned on Friday when we were asked to leave the House, so we carried on with it this morning. At that meeting I learned that the response of staff members throughout the Hill was very positive.

Members' staff and the staff that served the House so well all felt some comfort with the response that came from our security forces. They felt that people knew what they were doing and that it was handled expeditiously and well. I would like to congratulate the Sergeant at Arms and his people for that response and tell them that indeed, all members of this Hill community can take comfort from the response. When faced with a challenge, they rose to it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: As Hon. Members know, there will, of course, be a full review of the security procedures which we have in the House and we will try to do that as quickly and as expeditiously as possible.

I thank the Hon. Members very much for what they have just said. The reaction of all our security people was of the highest order and a relationship was established very quickly during the event between our own security forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, a relationship which seems to have worked effectively.

However, after an incident like this, it is, I think, appropriate to review everything that happened. As soon as that review is done by the Sergeant at Arms, it will be presented at the very earliest opportunity to the Board of Internal Economy. If at that time further steps, changes or additions are necessary, of course we will deal with it at that time.

[Translation]

I thank all Hon. Members very much for their statements, especially after an event that clearly was very dangerous.

[English]

I think we can all be very, very glad that events worked out as well as they did.

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Friday, April 7, consideration of the Motion of Mr. Richardson for an address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session; and on the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (page 131) and the sub-amendment of Mr. Riis (page 236).

Mr. Denis Pronovost (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I had the honour to be speaking in the House last Friday when some unfortunate incident occurred—that event on Parliament Hill. I will tell you that it was quite impressive. And I would like to join the other Members who have already spoken about the professionalism of the police forces here on the Hill and of the House of Commons security staff.

Mr. Speaker, when we left on Friday, we were talking about a very important aspect of the Speech from the Throne: the priority which this Government has decided to give to the environment. I very briefly referred to the fact that as a Member for that constituency I had the opportunity on three occasions since the House reconvened to rise on the matter of the Saint-Maurice River pollution, while my predecessors, the two Liberal Members who sat here before me for 25 years, namely Messrs Chrétien and Grondin, never found the way even once to rise in this House to condemn the Saint-Maurice River pollution and have corrections made.

I also stated this was quite understandable in the case of Mr. Chrétien, as we realized last year when he rose to Consolidated Bathurst's Board of Directors. This is how Consolidated Bathurst thanked Jean Chrétien for 25 years of silence, 25 years during which they polluted the Saint-Maurice River.

As witness to that pollution among others, Mr. Speaker, we had headlines last week. My constituents and other Canadians perhaps should be reminded that in addition to last week's PCB spill, earlier this year Consolidated Bathurst spilled 750,000 litres of sodium disulfite in the Saint-Maurice River at Shawinigan.

Consolidated Bathurst over the years injected into that river in Shawinigan 20,000 tons of pulp. Admittedly the company has undertaken a degree of clean-up. We reminded the president of Stone Container in Chicago it was essential that clean-up operations be carried out and this summer Consolidated Bathurst will begin removing a significant part of the matter that found its way into the Saint-Maurice River.

What was noticeable in the area last week was how much the whole issue of the environment was directly linked to the Throne Speech and my constituents' perception of this Government's responsibility. Also, the lack of professionalism of the part of the Opposition.

The Leader of the Opposition rose in this House to ask questions that should have been put to the Quebec's National Assembly rather than to the House of Commons. The Leader of the Opposition neglected to ask the one question that came under the Minister of Environment (Mr. Bouchard).

As far as Hon. Members to the extreme left are concerned, the NDP Socialists, they were the shame of New Democratic supporters in my area, Mr. Speaker. They are not listening to my comments, although they could profit from them.

Our socialist Members did not take a single opportunity to ask the Minister of the Environment some intelligent questions about the St. Maurice River and the Consolidated Bathurst spill. This so embarrassed the NDP spokesman in my riding that he felt obliged to hold a press conference to apologize for the Members of the NDP Caucus who did not have time to show an interest in Quebec.

We on the Government side realize that the NDP shows an interest in Québecers once every four years, before election time, and we see the results today here in the House, Mr. Speaker.

Environmental issues will be a priority for Canadians in the years to come. I would like to talk about a specific case. The St. Maurice River in our part of the country is one of the most beautiful waterways in Canada and, if it happened to be located in Europe, would be one of their major, well-known rivers. The St. Maurice is well-known unfortunately, because of the pollution that has accumulated in this river, and today we can no longer enjoy its beauties as we have in the past. People cannot even move freely on the river because of the obsolete practice of floating logs that still continues on this waterway.

However, thanks to this Government's policies and the splendid co-operation that exists with the Government of Quebec, I am positive that someday we will be able to stop the floating of logs in my riding.

Mr. Speaker, there are also some very alarming statistics that should urge this House and, in fact, all Canadians to consider the matter.

In Québec today, 30 metric tons of woodchips are left to rot on the premises of sawmills throughout the province. This is the equivalent of about 510,000 Québec trees felled during the last few years. Every week, Mr. Speaker, another 6,000 tons of chips is dumped on the premises of Quebec's independent sawmills, the equivalent of about 100,000 trees a week which are simply wasted because pulp and paper companies don't want to use the chips that are already available. If we put a value of $10 on every tree cut on public land in the Province of Quebec, pulp and paper companies are aiding and abetting a weekly loss of $1 million in addition to the $5,100,000 already accumulated at the sawmills. Meanwhile, pulp and paper companies like Consolidated Bathurst keep cutting trees despite the fact that all this stuff is just rotting away. It is time they started recycling.

It would be an effective solution that would not cost the Government a cent, but we must let the public know this is important for the environment.

I would also point out to the House that last week's toxic spill has prompted Environment Canada to schedule for this summer a toxicological and ecological study on the Saint-Maurice River with a view to assessing the impact of dioxin-, furan- and PCB-related pollution resulting from last week's incidents.

In that respect I want to commend the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)) who did not hesitate a second to take a series of concrete measures in this case as he did when disaster struck along the Alaskan and Canadian coasts. Whatever Opposition Members may say, Mr. Speaker, we do have a Minister of the Environment who lives up to his responsibilities in all such matters.

In the Speech from the Throne the Government did state that the environment would be its second priority. Time has come for action rather than trying to look for scapegoats. Another Government objective is to refine the policy which is geared to the concept of sustainable development—interdependence between world environement conditions and economic growth requirements. With that in mind our Government has established the National Round Table on the Environment and the Economy which most quarters welcomed as a constructive step to undo the harm of 20 years of Liberal administration when environmental issues were never raised in this House in spite of the many urgings by the then Opposition to the Liberal Government.

My constituents are also deeply concerned about the deficit. In the mail I receive and in weekend conversations I have with the residents of the Saint-Maurice ridings people never fail to refer to the days when Jean Chrétien was Minister of Finance and spent public funds as if money was going out of style. So today, unfortunately, as the Government we Conservatives have to re-assess the whole problem. We have to pick up the broken pieces. In the forthcoming budget the Government will make sure that Canadians eventually have again ready access to the kind of social services they deserve.

• (1130)

[English]

Interest rates rise when the Government borrows too much. Everyone is aware of that except Members on the Opposition side. The more money the Government borrows, the higher the interest rate for everybody. As a result, it becomes more expensive to invest in new machines and to build new homes and factories. Money spent paying interest on the debt cannot be used for social programs. It is becoming harder to find money for new programs. Our social programs could suffer if we do not work now to lower the deficit. Since its election in September 1984, our Government has lowered the deficit in a slow but steady way. More needs to be done. The amount of money borrowed to pay for the deficit debt is still growing. As a result, interest costs are still rising too fast. Federal government borrowing is still putting too much pressure on interest rates. The deficit is falling because spending is being held down while the economy has been growing. Approximately 1.5 million people have found jobs. More businesses are making profits. Therefore, income from taxes has climbed at a faster rate than spending. The economy has been doing well in this country, and we must thank the Government for that. The Government's policy has been working.

• (1140)

Lowering the deficit is an important part of that policy. Investment in new factories and equipment is at a record level.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in my riding, over the 20 years that the Liberal Party was in power and Jean Chrétien was our Member of Parliament, we lost 12,000 manufacturing jobs. What a shame for the riding of Saint-Maurice! Over those 20 years, we saw the population of the towns in my riding drop dramatically. When Mr. Chrétien was Minister of Finance in this House, the unemployment rate in my riding was 22 per cent, Mr. Speaker. It was a tragedy for our riding, which has lost a third of its population over the last 30 years.

During one week in 1983, three big companies—Gulf Canada, CIL and Dupont of Canada—announced that they were closing their factories in Shawinigan, all in the same week. During that week, Jean Chrétien was in this House and nothing was done by the Liberal Government of the time to correct the mistakes that had been made! No special plan to reorient local industry was developed. Over the past four years, this Government has corrected those mistakes and is now preparing to do even more. Although that Hon. Member who represented my riding for 20 years was more interested by issues other than his constituents' future, our Government has undertaken to make the necessary changes. I shall give just one example. This year, Mr. Speaker, we will open the most modern textile dyeing mill in North America, because the people in our riding, unlike those in the Opposition, said when the time came that they would get ready to face free trade the right way—with action. As for investors, Perfecta Dyeing has invested $7 million in the most modern textile plant in North America, with some substantial assistance from this Government. Thanks to the Free Trade Agreement, we will be able to take on the American textile market much more vigorously.

Where I come from, that is what we did and what we will continue to do over the coming years, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to refer to other projects. Last week there was a lot of talk about Consolidated Bathurst and their environment control problems. Company management are not blameless but they do have a positive approach in that field and we will encourage them to pursue their efforts along those lines. Consolidated Bathurst will invest $225 million in their Grand-Mère mill and a sizeable amount in their Shawinigan mill.

Mr. Speaker, we will be keeping a close watch on all the company investments to ensure that these projects protect the environment, that eventually the residents of the riding of Saint-Maurice may enjoy their river as it used to be, and that the Saint-Maurice River region become a first-class tourist attraction. The people of my riding know that the action of this Government concerning environmental issues will pave the way for a second economic upsurge in my region, yet they cannot forget the depression they experienced under the Liberals' 20-year régime.

Mr. Speaker, imagine for a moment a riding like Saint-Maurice which 58,000 people call home and which saw 12,000 manufacturing jobs vanish over the 20 years Jean Chrétien was in office. Few and far between are ridings in this country which lived through such a depression, yet now this same individual has begun to speak in various communities throughout the country—behind the back of the Leader of the Opposition—intent on keeping Canadians heavily indebted and arguing that deficits are not important.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if Liberal Members in this House do not see to it that Jean Chrétien remain in the private sector, we on this side of the House will do it for them at the next election.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to point out for the benefit of this House how utterly dishonest the New Democratic Party were during the last election in my constituency. The defeated NPD candidate crisscrossed the constituency promising the erection of 22 senior citizen community centres, although this is under provincial and municipal jurisdiction. Gentlemen to my extreme left, this is the reason why your candidate is not sitting with you in this House today, and this is the reason why for the first time in 97 years my constituency elected a progressive conservative member.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me this morning; I will have other opportunities over the coming weeks to return to this matter, because the House of Commons in my view is the natural forum for this kind of debate.

[English]

Mr. Riis: I listened with interest to the comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Pronovost). He injected a bit of politics into the House of Commons. We are all aghast at that, Mr. Speaker.

My hon. friend indicated a concern about the environment and the fact that his Government has taken some initiatives. He failed to mention that one of the major initiatives taken by the Government was to cut programs for conservation and the development of alternate energy. Over the years, those programs have been gutted. The Hon. Member failed to mention that. I simply raise it for his information.

The Hon. Member also referred to the debt of the country. Under the Conservative Government the debt has increased almost 100 per cent. When the Conservatives took office the debt was $170 billion. Today it is in excess of $320 billion. On top of that, the Government plans to go ahead and purchase a very expensive fleet of nuclear-powered submarines. The Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice failed to indicate whether he supported the massive funding for nuclear-powered Hunter attack submarines. Perhaps in his response he will take the opportunity to indicate his position.

The Hon. Member also mentioned plant closures. I believe that we will have to get used to that fact, Mr. Speaker, now that we have signed the trade deal.

Over the past number of years the Province of Quebec has dumped an awful lot of its raw municipal sewage, both from industrial sewage and domestic sewage, directly into our water systems. Literally, hundreds of communities have been flushing toilets directly into the St. Lawrence River. This has been happening not only in Quebec, but I refer to Quebec because of the Hon. Member's constituency.

One of the ways to deal with that situation would be to introduce a municipal infrastructure program where the federal Government would participate with provincial Governments, which would participate with the local Government in one-third, one-third, and one-third funding in order to allow the local municipality to develop the proper sewage treatment facilities and the proper sewage and water infrastructure.

It is interesting to note that every single city and every single province in Canada agrees to participate in this funding co-operative. The only hold-out is the federal Government. The New Democratic Party has stated that it is in favour of supporting that type of positive initiative, as has the Official Opposition. Only the Conservatives have said that they are not interested in participating.

Every city, every province, and two out of the three political Parties in Canada believe in cleaning up our environment through the use of municipal infrastructure funding from the federal Government in co-operation with provincial and local Governments. How does the Hon. Member feel about that initiative? Would he take steps to encourage the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to introduce that in the upcoming Budget on April 27?

[Translation]

Mr. Pronovost: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his numerous questions. I would like to point out to the House however that if the Hon. Member's comments are any indication, clearly that New Democratic Member did not invent the calculator. Looking at what he said on the accumulated deficit in particular, I think everyone can see the deficit accumulated mainly when my predecessor Mr. Chrétien and the Leader of the Opposition were ministers of Finance cannot disappear in a matter of months. I think that is quite clear. This is why I would invite the Hon. New Democratic Member to take his calculator one more time and figure that out. Because if by any chance we could have made that deficit disappear within one year, immediately the Hon. Member would have risen in this House.

He always did anyway. He always rose every time this Government took important steps in a serious, competent, professional way to reduce the deficit over these last four years; that Hon. Member and his Party always advocated increasing the national deficit. It was never serious. Just like during the good old Créditiste days! And for that matter, I am reminded by many Western members of some Créditiste members who used to sit here and suggested we should print dollars with a dollar machine. In some way what some New Democratic Members are advocating is a modern version of the Social Credit we used to have in Québec. Let us print dollars, Mr. Speaker, let us have a deficit! Not to worry, the debt will be paid back later on. Except that right now, nearly one-third of the national debt must be taken from taxes Canadian men and women are now paying, and we will no have no more leeway to pay it back further down the road because of the kind of mismanagement that has been going on for so many years, even though we would be glad if we could give social programs everything we would like to.

This is why this Government at this point in time, just as it has been these last four years, is committed to solve the mismanagement problems that arose during those previous years. Concerning the environment in this House, Mr. Speaker, as I said you only have to look at the kind of comments that were made last week. The Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party rises today to address the problems of pollution in Québec, but last week, when we had a specific problem, no one in his caucus had a sensible question for the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Lucien Bouchard). No one in the NDP caucus, which shows an interest in Québec every four years, bothered to rise in the House and address this particular issue.

Before the election, as I sat and watched the proceedings, the NDP Members all made a point of rising in the House and speaking French, and I congratulate those who did. But since November 21, Mr. Speaker, lo and behold, most Members of the New Democratic Party have forgotten their French, except perhaps for the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent).

The NDP, which shows its concern for Québec once every four years, has never been able to win a single seat in the province. And until the NDP learns its lesson. . .

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Hon. Member is a new Member of the House. I wonder if he would not think twice about condemning Members of Parliament for not being proficient in the other language of our country? I want to say that many of our Members are working hard to become proficient in the French language. We are proud of that initiative, Mr. Speaker, and that effort. I do not think it adds to the House of Commons when one Member criticises another Member of Parliament for not speaking in one language or another.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pronovost: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the House that most Members understood what I meant. Before November 21 they did speak French, and now, after November 21, they don't speak French any more on the NDP side. Canadians listening to us today understood perfectly what I meant, even Canadians in NDP ridings.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for the NDP was upset when he realized, four months after the election, that his caucus no longer spoke French here in the House. Mr. Speaker, they are very upset.

However, the people in the Opposition may still be frustrated about the results of the election on November 21, but we are taking concrete steps every day to help Canadians clean up the environment in this country.

We have taken steps and we will take more, and Canadians don't need the Opposition's negative comments, an Opposition that today, especially in the ranks of the socialists, is unable to come forward with concrete alternatives when criticizing the Government's policies.

So far, Mr. Speaker, all the initiatives on environmental matters have been taken on this side of the House, and for that very reason I am proud to be part of this Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has now expired. The Hon. Member for New-Westminster—Burnaby (Ms. Black).

[English]

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to rise today to address this House in response to the Throne Speech given by the Governor General last week. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) showed his contempt for the Constitution of Canada by saying that he did not think it was worth the paper it was written on. Well, I would like to say that his comment would apply better to the Throne Speech and the comments that were not made on the issue of equality of women.

I have received many letters, Mr. Speaker, from groups and individuals concerning the Government's funding of anti-equality groups. How should they view the assurance of a commitment to equality in the Throne Speech in light of funding to a group which opposes women's inclusion in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

A recent article in Saturday Night quoted some Tory Members of Parliament on the subject of women's rights. I do not know if these Members actually said these things, but if they did, it does show an appalling lack of appreciation for what the women who have gone before us have done and for what was accomplished by the women who are struggling.

I speak of women like Agnes MacPhail, who was the first woman Member of Parliament and a member of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation who overcame incredible barriers to sit in this Chamber. I speak of the women of Canada who struggled long and hard to win the right to vote for the women of Canada, and I speak of the women today who staff shelters for battered women, the rape crisis centres, women who are still fighting and winning in the courts, women who are attempting to change policy and build a future where our children can live in peace with our world neighbours, each participating as full and equal citizens.

These women working together in groups to provide services and to promote positive change are the women who deserve support from the Government, not groups who are trying to turn back the clock.

Yet another example of the Government's failure to live up to its pretty words about equality is in the area of language training for immigrant women. During the election campaign, the Government threw some money at language training, but continued to refuse to remove the discrimination against immigrant women inherent in government language training programs. Government policy still makes it very difficult for many immigrant women to learn an official language of Canada and escape their job ghettos, as they are not eligible for the same training allowances as most immigrant men.

I was pleased to see in the Throne Speech, Mr. Speaker, that the Government is now prepared to bring its unemployment insurance program in line with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I hope that this means that natural fathers will now have the same parental leave benefits under the UI program as do adoptive fathers. I sincerely hope that it does not mean that all adoptive benefits will be taken away. This Government has deliberately imposed inequality on young Canadian families by putting the onus on natural mothers to take care of infants.

In the Throne Speech, the Government promised to amend the unemployment insurance program to supposedly improve the program's fairness. Everyone who has suffered from this Government's idea of fairness has taken this to mean, especially in light of deficit reduction, cuts to the UI program.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. MacDougall) said that those who need UI benefits would continue to receive them. There are already many who need UI benefits who are not currently receiving them.

I received a letter from a woman in British Columbia who was experiencing a very difficult pregnancy. Her work involved standing at a cash register all day, and this contributed to heavy bleeding. She qualified for UI medical benefits for a time while she was going through this experience, but when the time came for her to then collect on maternity benefits, she discovered that she was ineligible for benefits because of medical benefits. Is this the fairness the Government is talking about?

Max Yalden, the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, stated last week that women and visible minorities in the Public Service fare worse than in the labour force at large. I am pleased to see that the Government is finally recognising its failure in this area. It mentioned the task force on barriers to the employment and promotion of women in the Public Service. The issue of workplace discrimination against women and minorities is already well documented. It has been studied to death.

Women have been telling the Government for the past decade how totally unfair the Government is as an employer. We have already seen Nicole Morgan's excellent report on women in the Public Service to attest to this fact. I have a prime example of the Government's commitment to women in the Public Service. There is not one word in the Throne Speech about enforcing the Government's own employment equity targets or legislation. As well, in the area of pay equity in federal jurisdiction, employers are not required to prepare pay equity plans. This leaves it up to the individual to research his or her own discriminatory situation and make a complaint on their own to the Human Rights Commission. There must be enforcement.

All of this means that the Government has no commitment to equality, except on paper. The idea that I would like to convey is that if the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has a commitment to equality, let us see him enforce his own legislation.

Mr. Yalden also speaks of major delays in the Public Service pay equity study. This study has not produced any results in four years. I quote the Human Rights Commission Report:

> Administrative delay and bureaucratic infighting remain more the hallmark of the program thus far than any genuine move toward pay equity. Either Government means business on equal pay or it does not.

I suggest that it does not.

The Throne Speech did contain one sentence about the Government remaining committed to a national child care program. How can the Government remain committed to such a program when it was never committed to a truly national program with national standards in the first place?

The one sentence in the Throne Speech about child care seems to mean that the Government remains committed to an inadequate piece of legislation. Child care advocates unanimously denounced this legislation. The Prime Minister's commitment to child care was so great that he refused to wait just a few short hours before the Senate passed the Bill before calling the general election. His commitment was so great that he stated on national television that he did not need to consult with child advocacy groups. Now I am very much afraid that with the Government's fetish about deficit reduction, it will be the children of Canada who suffer from deficit reduction.

I want to commend the Government on its annoucement of a royal commission on new reproductive technologies. As you may know, this is a New Democratic Party policy and, as such, New Democrats have been calling for a royal commission for many years. It only goes to show, as others have said, that New Democrats have a policy that is worth stealing.

A royal commission is necessary. It is very necessary in order to gather information on how new reproductive technologies will affect our family structures, to determine the legal status of surrogacy contracts and of children who now have two biological mothers.

We need to think about what regulations are necessary to prevent the commercialisation of women's reproductive capacities so that poor women are never in the future used as baby factories. We need a royal commission that is impartial.

I have some concerns about the royal commission, however. These new reproductive technologies have been developed and administered overwhelmingly by men. It is important that at least 50 per cent of this royal commission be made up of women and for all of its members to be aware of women's equality issues. The mandate should include specific consideration of women's reproductive health and women's rights. Since the New Democratic Party policy on a royal commission was used, I hope the Government will also use the caring philosophy behind that policy.

I also would like an assurance from the Government that this royal commission will be given a mandate to travel across the country and receive input from women's groups and women involved in the process, as well as the medical and legal experts from all regions of Canada.

The Government has side-stepped the issue of abortion again. The Throne Speech contains only a vague reference to abortion, but absolutely nothing about the prevention of unwanted pregnancy, which is surely the real key to reducing the number of abortions in Canada.

Within the past four years the Government has cut the funding to Planned Parenthood by $61,000. The Government is now talking about cuts to the Unemployment Insurance Program, which comprises maternity leave, and economically harsh measures to cut the deficit, which will make it even harder for young mothers to survive economically.

I share the concern of my hon. friends who have spoken to the Throne Speech on the question of the universality of programs. The Government has already short-changed mothers and poor families by deindexing family allowance. I hope no other step-by-step destruction of the Family Allowance Program is planned. The Throne Speech seems to be rather vague on this matter.

In my riding we have two food banks that have been running for a number of years. We also have children who go to school hungry. That is the reality of poverty. It strikes young children. It strikes senior citizens attempting to get by on very limited pensions. It strikes young families who are caught in a never ending struggle against a never ending cycle of poverty.

The spectre of homelessness is no longer unique to other parts of the world. It has arrived on our doorstep. It is our reality in Canada.

I am seriously worried that the Government has closed its eyes to the reality of Canadian life. I am worried that the attack on universality is an attempt to demean those who most need this economic security.

The Government has blatantly neglected the needs of many Canadians by failing to address the rapid acceleration of interest rates.

This lack of concern has meant that the worsening central interest rate policy is now at a critical stage. Arbitrarily designed to cool inflation in the hot southern Ontario economy, this policy is strangling development in every other region.

Why has the federal Government failed to listen to the Canadian Premiers who have called for moderation in interest rates? Why has the federal Government turned its back on the small business person in my home province of British Columbia, which, while wishing to expand or begin a business venture, cannot afford to borrow the money to do so?

Why has the Government turned away from the young family faced with skyrocketing mortgage rates for its first home because housing prices in Toronto are out of control?

If the Federal Government were truly interested in deficit control, it would realize that high interest rates contribute to the worsening of the deficit. It knows that its own Department of Finance figures state that a 1 per cent increase in interest rates per year adds $1.5 billion to the annual deficit. Instead, the Government seems to have chosen to strike out against those who most need the help.

It will slash the Unemployment Insurance Program at a time when cut-backs and lack of job development have meant that productive Canadians, who want to work, instead must rely on unemployment insurance or welfare benefits.

The Government will introduce what is perhaps the harshest, most regressive tax in recent history, a national sales tax, which will hit hardest at low and middle income Canadians, a tax which is nothing if not inflationary.

Women make up the majority of the poor in this country. Women make up a majority of the elderly. One out of every two unattached elderly women in Canada is living below the poverty line. The Government first tried to deindex their pensions and now in the Throne Speech has announced its intention to take away even more money from these poor women through regressive sales tax. Many low-income people do not file income tax returns. They will never see this sales tax money again, and they certainly will not see it in the form of social programs after government cut-backs.

The incidence of low income in my riding is 23 per cent. Almost one quarter of my constituents will be extremely hard hit by this Tory tax measure. Why does the Government not tax the 60,000 profitable corporations that do not pay any tax rather than taxing the families of Canada into poverty?

In a rather wonderous turn of cheek, the Government has suddenly seen the environmental imperative. Canadians may be excused for approaching this pronouncement with a tinge of cynicism, cynicism which would be unwarranted had we not seen massive eliminations within the federal environmental programs just a few short years ago, had we not known that this is a Government which has no national vision of the needs of Canadians. I would suspect that someone saw a poll which said that the environment was of concern to Canadians and suddenly the Government is talking about it.

As a Member of Parliament from British Columbia, I have several concerns over the present condition of future plans for the Fraser River. One third of my province is considered to be a part of the Fraser River watershed. It has played an integral part in our province's economic and social development. It is one of the largest salmon streams on the West Coast and it remains a vastly important component of my constituency of New Westminster—Burnaby.

Such a critical system can no longer be taken for granted. The reality today is that the Fraser River is seriously polluted. Emissions from pulp and paper mills, effluent from upstream communities and erosion from decimated forests have endangered the Fraser River. It is time to develop a multi-faceted approach to this situation. We must work together to see that toxins are stopped at source. The need for reforestation is immediate. Closer monitoring and strong penalties must be enforced for those who continue to discharge pollutants. Now as at no other time in our history, it is the time for commitment to the environment. I join with other Canadians in saying that the Tory record is just not strong enough in this regard.

There is talk in the Throne Speech of a caring and a compassionate society. The Government is offering a spot of compassion to the homeless people rather than shelter and food. It is offering a few minutes of compassion to women rather than concrete measures to promote equality. It is offering compassion for the dead birds of the B.C. coast rather than any sort of effective action to prevent environmental disasters. In the future Canadians want a great deal more from this Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Since there are no questions or comments, I recognize the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Robitaille).

[Translation]

M. Jean-Marc Robitaille (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to speak in this House as the elected representative of the riding of Terrebonne and on behalf of its citizens.

I would like to thank the people of my riding for having put their trust in me on November 21 last in a resounding way, with a majority of close to 23,000 votes.

Mr. Speaker, my intention is to be up to the task and that is why I am speaking today in this House.

The riding of Terrebonne is located on Montreal's North Shore. The Mille-Isles River from east to west and the Saint-Lawrence River runs along its eastern tip.

Cousisting mainly of the regional municipalities of L'Assomption and des Moulins, Terrebonne is the most densely populated riding in Québec. With 92,000 voters and close to 125,000 people, it is the fourth largest in Canada.

Its inhabitants are mainly young people, young families, couples with one, two or three children, with both parents on the labour market taking an active part in the life of their family and their community. For these people, a promising future still means a lot.

Mr. Speaker, the future also means a lot for our parents, our senior citizens. Fond of our traditional values, having helped to build this great country, they are entitled to a secure retirement. They are entitled to it and they deserve it, Mr. Speaker. You will understand the anger they felt when they realized that that security may have been jeopardized by the irresponsible borrowing, the thoughtlessness and the total lack of vision of the former Liberal government which had deceived them. Let us make no mistake, Mr. Speaker, the national debt was not created by our government. We unfortunately inherited it in 1984 along with many other unpleasant surprises.

Although I recognize that recalling these facts will not help in any way to put things straight, it can be useful to do so if only to show these people that we are firmly committed not to repeat these errors, despite the futile criticisms of the Liberal and New Democratic opposition and their desperate efforts to bring back a system which nobody wants except maybe those who had the privilege to be associated with them.

My riding, as I have said earlier, is made up of two major regions where the extraordinary and "dynamic" development reflect this will to succeed and to excel, this openness and this determination to take up the many challenges awaiting us in the next century.

The people I represent, like other Canadians, are aware of the many problems facing us, but they are ready to tackle them. I too am aware of these problems, and like them I am confident that we have the capacity, the imagination and the intelligence to overcome them. Some might feel I am overly optimistic, but the truth is that I have confidence as a Canadian, our most precious natural resource, namely self-confidence.

What the people want, Mr. Speaker, is a responsible government, a government which gives them the facts instead of constantly trying to sweeten the pill for political or partisan considerations, a government which takes its responsibilities, which trusts Canadians and respects their maturity.

That is why Canadians elected us and why they did not elect you. The canadian people want the truth, and the Throne Speech gives an accurate picture of the current situation in this country and a clear indication of the Government's intentions and its firm resolve to act responsibly where others have failed to do so.

Since 1984, Canada's economic performance has outpaced virtually all of the world's major industrialized nations. Revenues increased considerably, and the number of jobs rose steadily to a total of $1.3 million between 1984 and 1988. The annual deficit has declined by approximately $10 billion. Our challenge is to maintain that expansion in a world economic environment that is increasingly subject to inflationary pressures. Our worst problem is not the annual deficit but the enormous cumulative debt we have acquired over the last 20 years.

Despite the Government's efforts since 1984, the interest on our present debt costs Canadians 31 cents of every tax dollar. That is a lot! Where will it all end, Mr. Speaker, if we do not take appropriate action? Forty cents, fifty cents of every dollar? No, Mr. Speaker. The answer is simple: Either we start paying today or we suffer tomorrow and send the bill to our children. We will not leave them that kind of legacy. Never, Mr. Speaker!

• (1220)

Like most Canadians, we cannot afford to bury our heads in the sand. During the next four years we will have to deal with the need to reduce the deficit while taking new initiatives. However, our work in the economic sector goes beyond reducing the deficit. The current federal sales tax is inefficient, inequitable and obsolete, and is costing us jobs. The present system favours imports at the expense of our exports and will make Canada lose nearly $8 billion in economic spinoffs and economic activity in this country. Our two opposition parties are well aware of this. We will replace the present sales tax with a fairer sales tax that will ensure the Canadian economy is fully competitive and that will maintain a stable source of revenues to finance social programs.

However, Mr. Speaker, to me the most important measure in this Throne Speech is the decision to develop the skills of Canadians. It means we will adopt a comprehensive human resource strategy for the 1990s, which will include literacy, education, training and re-training programs. Like the people in my riding, Canadians don't want to spend years on unemployment insurance. They don't want charity. They want to earn an honest living, with dignity. They want good jobs. They want to acquire the skills they need to get those jobs.

Our objective will be to make the Unemployment Insurance Program fairer and more effective by directing more resources toward active training, to help people find other jobs or simply better jobs, instead of paying them for doing nothing.

By maintaining our efforts to reduce the deficit and bring down inflation and interest rates, and especially to guarantee the continued existence of our social programs; through the reform of federal sales tax; with a sustained commitment to multilateral negotiations; through investment in new technology; by continuing our approach to regional development; by updating our trade legislation; through further privatization; and with a human resource strategy for the 1990s, we will be able to build a stronger and more competitive economy. To sum up, an economy that leads to the kind of jobs and prosperity needed to sustain our quality of life, the quality of life of every Canadian man and woman. This is what the people want. This is what we have been elected for, and this is what we are going to achieve, Mr. Speaker.

As I said earlier, the eastern part of my constituency borders on the great St. Lawrence River. Furthermore, two important rivers, the Mille Isles and the Assomption flow through my constituency. River pollution and environment problems are a daily fact of life in my constituency. I need not tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this is of real concern to my constituents. Just like them, I am very much aware of the actions and intentions put forward by this Government in the Throne Speech.

I must add that the steps taken over these last four years by this Government, as well as the $110-million clean-up plan for the St. Lawrence River, have met with very much satisfaction in my constituency.

The environment priority in the Throne Speech points to our concern for and commitment to the quality of the environment for every Canadian man and woman.

During the past year, the people understood that the world as a whole must face an environment challenge of unprecedented scale. We need not look for scape-goats, nor should we make this a near partisan issue. The time has come for action. This Government's goal is to develop policies based on the concept of viable development, which meaning the interconnection between States, the global environment and the need for economic growth.

In that area, thanks to this Government's action, Canada on October 17, 1988 was complimented for its exemplary role in connection with the global environment. Dr. Noel Brown, from the United Nations Environment Protection Program, stated before the Association for the Control of Air Pollution, an international group composed of hundreds of members, that Canada set an example for nations around the world to follow in the area of environmental protection, and to quote Dr. Brown:

> If a Nobel Prize were created for analyzing the complexities of sustainable development, that is, making economic decisions that respect the environment, Canada would be one of the candidates.

I believe that we should be proud of such comments that prove beyond any doubt that our actions and policies are sound and appropriate, and they encourage us to continue in the same direction.

With this in mind, the Government will participate in the establishment of a centre for the international promotion of sustainable development, to be located in Winnipeg.

Still along the same lines, it is important to mention as well that very recently, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) was given new responsibilities in order that environmental considerations would be fully integrated into the overall decision-making process.

Environmental protection depends not only on the Government, but on every one of us. That is why we will try to make all citizens more aware of environmental problems. An environmental partnership fund will be created and the manufacture and use of environmentally friendly products, as well as promotion and recycling programs, will be encouraged.

Mr. Speaker, let me now point out the remarkable work of two environmental organizations that started in my riding, namely the A court d'eau Movement and the Quebec Environment Foundation. Its founding president, Louis-Paul Allard, and one of its most active members, Arthur Dubé, are doing outstanding work and making a most positive contribution to the environmental cause. We must work in partnership with these people who are devoting a large part of their life, Mr. Speaker, to their fellow citizens' welfare.

Environmental protection does not only involve reducing the harmful effects of pollution. It also creates economic opportunities.

We shall therefore encourage the growth of the Canadian environmental industry and research and development, not only to find solutions to our environmental problems, but also to find export markets for equipment, goods and know-how.

So continued government efforts for environmental protection, increased citizen participation and support for our environmental industry are the three key elements of a comprehensive environmental protection strategy.

Mr. Speaker, I know that I do not have much time left to conclude my speech. I would have a lot to say because the Speech from the Throne says a lot about it: there are many commitments in the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks by saying quite simply to the House that the speech from the Throne fully meets the expectations of my constituents and of all Canadian men and women.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker. . . and of course we could talk about a number of other issues such as the ratification of the Meech Lake Agreement and the national day care program which is so important to the people of my riding. Unfortunately it was put on the back burner because of the uncompromising attitude of Liberal senators just before the elections. They did not feel like endorsing that project, and many others indeed. The Senate has to be the undemocratically elected House. . .

Mr. Speaker, the contents of the Throne from the Speech meet the expectations of my constituents. For all these reasons and to ensure prosperity for all Canadians, Mr. Speaker, I intend to support the motion concerning the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne moved by my colleague the Hon. Member for Calgary Southeast (Mr. Richardson) and seconded by the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mrs. Gibeau).

Mr. Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Rocheleau).

Mr. Rocheleau: Mr. Speaker, I listened closely to some of the remarks of our colleague the Hon. Member for Terrebonne and, like him, I am very much concerned about Canada's current deficit. Still I would point out to our Conservative colleague that his Government has been in office here in Ottawa since 1984 and that in that time the Canadian debt has doubled.

Mr. Speaker, I am also quite concerned over the fact that 30 cents of each dollar have to be set aside to service the debt. I appreciate that the Government has to find concrete solutions to reduce the Canadian debt and cut down the deficit, but it has to do so in such a way that inflation will not soar to the higher levels we had in the past.

Mr. Speaker, there is a question I should like to ask my colleague from Terrebonne. We have been told that the Government will implement a new sales tax to replace the existing provincial sales tax. I would ask my colleague whether discussions are being held with the various provinces about this new tax. As you would know, Mr. Speaker, several Canadian provinces do not have a sales tax, while the taxes levied by others vary widely from one jurisdiction to the next.

I wish to know whether the Federal Government intends to implement this new sales tax, what impact it will have on inflation on the one hand, and the current interest rates on the other. Knowing what influence interest rates have on Canada's debt, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that in the present circumstances and in view of all the Canadian provinces request to bring down the interest rates, the Government is moving in the right direction.

Mr. Robitaille: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's comment and his question which I am pleased to address.

As to the deficit, Mr. Speaker, let me recall some simple figures. In 1980–81, you had a deficit of $13.522 billion which had increased to $38.324 billion by 1984–85. The national debt which was at $18.523 billion in 1970–71 under a previous Liberal Government had increased to $199 billion by 1984–85, to a projected $293.351 billion in 1987–88.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that when we were elected in 1984, we inherited an annual deficit of some $38 billion. Even if we managed to reduce the deficit by $10 billion, it is clear that there still remains a deficit of $28 billion per year, and the Hon. Member will understand that a deficit is something that accumulates, and it did continue to accumulate even during the past four years.

On the other hand, I could have understood if the Hon. Member had asked me the following question: How is it that our national debt was not higher over the past four years? It would have been higher if we had not taken appropriate measures.

Concerning the sales tax reform, the Hon. Member seems to ask whether we intend to carry out a sales tax reform. I think he is about the only one who is not yet aware of that. We have been talking about it for quite some time now and almost everybody knows it.

Even certain financial critics of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party recognized before the election that our Federal sales tax scheme was somewhat archaic and inadequate.

As to whether there are negotiations, again I am surprised that the Hon. Member who once was a Member of the Quebec National Assembly is not aware that; yes, there are negotiations going on with the provinces.

The purpose of these negotiations. . . you will understand that I am just a Member of this House, I am not the Minister of Finance and I am not involved in these negotiations. Yet, I can tell the Hon. Member this: I trust that we will be able to co-operate with the provinces and develop a tax system which is more equitable and does not overburden the Canadian economy.

Mr. Whittaker: I listened with interest to the discussion of the Hon. Member regarding seniors and their entitlement to a good pension, to safety, and to security.

In speaking to seniors over the last few years I note that since 1985 there has been some apprehension regarding the Government and its attitude toward seniors and the security the Hon. Member spoke of that seniors are seeking. In particular, there are insecure feelings among seniors that the Government is not doing what it should to ensure that seniors can live with that security and that they have adequate pensions in order that they can live above the poverty level. There are inadequate pension provisions for those seniors who have not worked for a wage, but who have worked as homemakers.

Will the Hon. Member encourage his Government to work toward ensuring that the homemaking spouse is provided with a pension at least equal to that of the wage-earning spouse?

[Translation]

Mr. Robitaille: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. Concerning our senior citizens, I should like to remind him, when he referred to their insecurity, that his Party and the Liberal Party did not hesitate during the last election campaign to alarm our senior citizens and foster insecurity. They are themselves the creators of insecurity!

Mr. Speaker, I should add simply that this sort of insecurity being felt by senior citizens is the result of the indifference, the deficit and the poor administration of a Liberal Government which over 20 years jeopardized our senior citizens' programs and security. I will urge my Government to take the necessary steps to counteract the dire effects of a deficit, a national debt which definitely endangers our social programs, namely those for senior citizens.

[English]

Mr. Comuzzi: On several occasions the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr Robitaille) has stated that the Department of Finance was going to replace the present sales tax system with a fairer sales tax system. I know of no sales tax system that is fair. It has always been my understanding that a sales tax system is regressive. It affects those people who can least afford to pay. The aged are affected by a sales tax system, as are young families with children. Information comes to us that non-prescribed drugs and denture work will be affected by the new sales tax system. Therefore, it really is a regressive sales tax system.

Does the Hon. Member anticipate that this fairer sales tax system that he talks about will affect those very people whom we, as Members of Parliament, are supposed to be protecting? Second, I would like to question his arithmetic. He has some confusion with respect to what a debt is, and what the deficit is. It is my understanding that the deficit is that which we do not collect during the course of the year, and the accumulated deficits make up the debt of this country. It seems that he is blaming the former Government for the accumulated debt. He seems to forget that four years ago, when the present Government took office, the debt of this country was $150 billion and today it is $322 billion.

• (1240)

Mr. Speaker: I have to say that the Hon. Member's time has expired. If I have unanimous consent, I will give the Hon. Member a minute to answer the question. Do I have unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Robitaille: Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief. I thank the Hon. Member for his comments. When he refers to a sales tax reform, it is clear that the Hon. Member and his Party played the prophets of doom and gloom by prematurely announcing to the public that medicine and food would be taxed, when we have just indicated that the sales tax reform is being negotiated with the provinces. It is certainly premature, and I warn the Hon. Member not to make such insinuation without knowing exactly what the sales tax reform will be all about. The Hon. Member stated that a tax reform is always regressive. Just to hear him talk, it is easy to realize that he adhere to the notion helped by the Liberal Party whereby all tax schemes are regressive; That party has always perceived that in this way.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, let me emphasize that if the Hon. Member feels I am somewhat confused about the distinction between deficit and debt, there is no doubt that the Canadian people are just as confused.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I welcome this opportunity to take part in the Throne Speech debate and to have some of my views recorded.

We got to know this Government quite well in the past four years. We watch with some fascination and considerable distress as it pursues its right-wing agenda. We know its extreme faith in the market-driven system to the point that it can be all things to all people. We know that this Government wants to align the Canadian economy with the economic model in the United States. Certainly the recently implemented trade agreement is a reflection of that. Of course, this has been reflected in the Throne Speech of last week.

We were hoping for something a little better, but I suppose that is unrealistic. After all a leopard cannot change its spots. I am afraid that this country and its economy will drift further and further into the jungle of unfettered capitalism. It is going to be more dog eat dog, putting profits before people, thereby widening the gap between rich and poor.

In the next few minutes, I would like to touch on a number of themes including deficit reduction, the need for a caring and compassionate society and, of course, the concerns of the West, particularly my home province of Manitoba.

Let us talk first about the deficit. It is, after all, the talk of the town and of the country. The present Government has raised the profile of the deficit to unprecedented heights, and it used last week's Throne Speech for that particular purpose. No one likes deficits. It would be better if we could clear the accounts and have revenues meeting expenses. The voters tell us all the time, especially in the past few months, that they want the deficit addressed in a very serious way. We as responsible politicians should respond to that in a responsible way.

Deficit reduction will have to be done in an orderly fashion and with sensitivity, and certainly it cannot be carried out upon the backs of poor Canadians. After all, they are the last who should be waging this fight. While there is a need to bring the deficit down, we do have to question some of the Government's motives. I ask the question, Mr. Speaker, why this extraordinary and sudden preoccupation of the Government with the deficit right now?

This preoccupation by the Government regarding the deficit started the minute the polls closed on November 21. Why was there not this preoccupation about the deficit during the election campaign? After all, the deficit existed during the campaign. Why was there not this preoccupation and this talk of deficit before the election campaign?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harvard: The deficit was there. Did that stop the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of this country from making promises totalling some $16 billion? No, it did not. Therefore we have to question the motives of the Government. The deficit was there when the Government decided to purchase nuclear submarines. Did that stop the Government? No, it did not. So why this sudden preoccupation with the deficit? Why not six months ago? Why not a year ago? Why not at any time during the period when this Government was pushing the national debt upward from a level of $170 billion to where it is now at about $322 billion? When the Government was spending the money at that time, was it concerned about the deficit? It does not seem so.

I ask the question, what is going on with the Government? Is this some kind of a set-up? Is it a trick on the part of the Government to cut social spending? Is it a trick on the part of the Government to somehow weaken the institution of the Government in this country, thereby weakening our ability to govern ourselves? It certainly would fit in very nicely with the free trade agenda, would it not? So, Mr. Speaker, we have to question the government's motives.

I also want to talk about the need for a caring and compassionate society. I want to address that matter because the Government reminds us of its devotion to a caring and compassionate society, but of course we all remember what this Government tried to do a few years back concerning the old age pension. It is almost certain, if you can take Government words at face value, that the unemployment insurance program will be the next target. After all, the Minister responsible for UIC has said that only those in need will get benefits, and that has a kind of ominous ring to it.

It would be rather ironic at this particular time to be targeting the unemployment insurance program. I say that because in recent weeks and months, particularly since this Government was re-elected, we have witnessed and experienced in this country an unprecedented spate of mergers, take-overs, acquisitions and that has produced lay-offs and plants closures in almost every province. I think this would be a very bad time to strip down the unemployment insurance program.

Let us look at this spate of mergers and take-overs and consider where is the caring and compassion in that process. Some of the lay-offs took place without any notice or consultation whatsoever. The suddenness of such a lay-off to a worker is frightening. Workers are at work and one day are faced with the pink slip, their jobs gone with a simple handshake. There is no reason given for the lay-off, except for the general explanation that it is good for the company, good for the industry and will strength the operation and efficiency of the company.

One must ask the larger question: What is in it for the community at large? What is in it for the country as a whole? Does this increased concentration of industry produce jobs? No. Does it produce better technology? There is certainly no guarantee of that. Does it result in greater competition? Not often. Does it bring retail prices down? No. In fact, it would probably allow prices to float upward.

When we look at the spate of mergers we must ask what is in them for ordinary Canadians who are trying hard every day to eke out a living and support their families. In Winnipeg a couple of months ago we were told that one of our beer plants would be closed. Some of us who live in that city might look to that kind of announcement with some favour if only knew that we were not sharing only the pain, since there is pain when jobs are lost. After the announcement, one of the companies involved said that as a result of the take-over the company was looking forward to dramatic increases in sales in the United States. That is good news because one assumes more sales means more profits. But where is the benefit for the Province of Manitoba in this case?

If more sales mean more profits, more production and more jobs, will we be included in the action? It is not likely. If anything, some Manitobans will probably have to go elsewhere in the country to seek the jobs that may be generated as a result of the increased sales in the U.S. market. We have already witnessed that in the Province of Manitoba. Workers who want to live in their beloved province have had to go elsewhere to find work. We have to be sceptical. Big business in Canada is restructuring the economy. Very often, those of us in the region feel that we are getting the short end of the stick. While this happens the Government not only seems to be quite indifferent to the process, but in fact approves of it.

The view of the Government seems to be: "Let the marketplace decide. The marketplace always knows best". That is not the Canadian way. If Canadians had always followed the dictates of the marketplace, going back to 1867, it is quite unlikely that we would have had the transcontinental railway or the Trans-Canada Highway. We certainly would not have had the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the National Film Board or even the Canadian Wheat Board.

I also want to talk about worker adjustment. That is an issue that needs to be addressed in the wake of the implementation of the trade agreement, and which must be considered in the context of a caring and compassionate society. During the election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that victims of the trade agreement would be taken care of. He was showing a sensitivity to anyone who may lose their job as a result of the agreement. I think many Canadians believed the Prime Minister and, toward that end, the de Grandpré Commission was established. Many of us not only wanted to believe in that particular process, we thought it would be serious and looked forward to its recommendations. That was not to be. Only a few weeks ago we were told that the problem is too big and workers who would be laid off or were already laid off as a result of the trade agreement could not be identified. Tell that to the victims of the trade agreement. They know.

The Government's failure in this regard is hardly consistent with its talk about the need for a caring and compassionate society. Of course, a Government that is dedicated to caring and compassion certainly does not trample on the low and middle income earners of this country. But that is exactly what it will do with the implementation of a national sales tax. It is a regressive tax that will tax every Canadian, rich or poor, for goods and services they require. It will be inflationary. In fact, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) confirmed that the other day when he said it would be inflationary.

The tax will be an administrative nightmare. There will be all kinds of red tape and paperwork. It will be a horrendous burden on the shoulders of small businessmen in this country.

What will the Government tax? It will tax music lessons, for example. In fact, a woman in my riding says that this tax is a direct attack on families and their children. The Government will tax haircuts, movies, cab rides, visits to the dentist, repairs to homes, tax on sales of new homes, life and property insurance, fares on trains and buses. The list goes on and on. It will tax services by credit unions and banks, services by lawyers, electricians, plumbers and painters. There will even be an application of this tax on services provided by commercially operated homes for seniors and the infirm. It will be a bonanza for the tax man. As a result of this national sales tax, billions of dollars will flow out of the pockets of Canadians and into the coffers of the Government. So much for the caring and compassionate society described by the Government.

There is also the issue of Established Programs Financing. The Government has weakened its commitment in the area of EPF payments. There has been a drop of 2 per cent in the growth rate since 1986. This has a direct impact on the health care system in the country and on post-secondary education because 71 per cent of EPF payments go to the health care system in Canada and the remaining 29 per cent goes to post-secondary education.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will have two minutes remaining in his speech plus 10 minutes for questions and comments after three o'clock.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AIR TRANSPORT

TERMINATION OF DC-9 SERVICE IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to draw to the attention of the House the recent decision of Air Canada to terminate its DC-9 service in Cape Breton. This is another economic blow to the economy of Cape Breton. Not only has Air Canada reduced the quality of service to the people of Cape Breton but it has also reduced the staff at the Sydney Airport. I find it interesting that tickets for Air Canada's smaller planes which are replacing the DC-9s are at the same price if not higher than the DC-9 fares. How can Air Canada justify this and then turn around and at the same time displace 46 permanent employees?

It is very clear that the Government of Canada does not believe in equality of economic opportunity for all Canadians. We in Cape Breton need a first-class airline service, and this decision underlines the fact that the Government of Canada is not really committed to regional economic development in that it is leaving that function solely to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. The Tories have been arguing for deregulation for quite some time. Now, we, the people of Cape Breton, see the real impact of deregulation and what it will mean for smaller communities across Canada; namely, cuts, cuts, and more cuts.

NATIONAL PARKS

GRASSLANDS NATIONAL PARK—OPENING OF VISITORS' CENTRE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, last Friday at Val Marie in southwestern Saskatchewan, sod was turned marking the start of the visitors' centre for the Grasslands National Park. The Grasslands is Canada's 29th national park and Saskatchewan's second. This 350 square mile area will preserve for all time the last remnants of native prairie in North America.

The park not only protects the many natural features of the Grasslands but also saves endangered wildlife and birds and unique cultural and archaelogical treasures. Several million dollars will be spent for acquisitions and development in the Grasslands over the next five years. Land will be acquired exclusively through voluntary sale, thereby respecting the private property rights of ranching families.

Canada's national parks system is the only one in the world with such a grassland reserve, a unique ecosystem in the natural heritage of Canada. I congratulate both Governments and especially all those individuals and groups who persevered in making the Grasslands National Park a reality.

POVERTY

CALL FOR SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, on Saturday I had the opportunity to be at Queen's Park in Toronto to welcome the March on Poverty walkers as they arrived from across Ontario. I am from British Columbia and we in British Columbia know all too well the growing problem of poverty with our large food banks and our school programs to feed hungry children.

I read with alarm the New Brunswick Minister's task force report outlining New Brunswick's growing problems of poverty and inadequate housing. However, I was shocked and dismayed to find that in Ontario, the most wealthy and affluent part of Canada, there is also a growing problem of poverty. People on low incomes are being driven further into poverty by the total lack of affordable housing.

I call upon the Government to take steps to bring in the needed child care program, to increase funding for affordable housing and to insist that the provinces provide adequate income security programs. Canada is not a third world country. There is no excuse for having 20 per cent of our children living in poverty. We in the New Democratic Party demand that this Government act and meet its responsibilities now.

TRIBUTE TO INUIT LEADER MARK R. GORDON

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Mark R. Gordon, a prominent Inuit leader from northern Québec who died in Montreal on Friday. Mark was 36 years old.

Mark helped negotiate the James Bay and northern Québec land claims settlement during the 1970s. He also served as president of Makivik Corporation, the organization set up by northern Québec Inuit to manage the claim settlement funds. He was an eloquent spokesman for Inuit in the aboriginal constitutional negotiations with first Ministers over the last number of years.

All Inuit are mourning the untimely and unfortunate death of this intelligent and articulate young man who worked so hard for the good of his people. The aboriginal people of Canada have lost an outstanding colleague. Canadians have lost a leader of national stature. All those who knew him, including Members of this House, will remember him for his dedication and commitment. We will remember his contribution to the Inuit across the circumpolar world and to all of Canada.

WORLD CURLING CHAMPIONSHIPS WON BY CANADIAN TEAMS

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Milwaukee, Canada's women's team skipped by Heather Houston and our men's team skipped by Pat Ryan both won their respective World Curling Championships. I realize that the rules of this House prohibit me from using this occasion for congratulatory messages, but as a frustrated old curler who has been trying for 30 years to draw to the four foot, I must at least take this opportunity to join with all Canadians who share the pride of having these two fine teams return Canada to the position of world curling supremacy.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON – HIJACKING INCIDENT ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, April 6, at least 2,000 Canadians of Lebanese origin conducted a peaceful, orderly demonstration on Parliament Hill. They were protesting the destruction, violence and terror which has plagued the citizens of Lebanon for 15 years of war caused by the invasion of foreigners. Their plea was strong and clear for Canada to use all its diplomatic levers through the United Nations to achieve peace in Lebanon.

Last Friday, an unfortunate and regrettable incident took place on Parliament Hill. Charles Yakoub, a Canadian who was born in Beirut, Lebanon, apparently became overly distraught over the plight of his parents who live in Lebanon. Since the recent bombardment of East Beirut, his parents have been living underground with no water and no electricity.

While the bus hijacking incident will have to be dealt with by the courts, I know all Hon. Members of the House will agree with me that this one isolated incident which ended, fortunately, without harm to anyone, will in no way diminish the respect we have for the outstanding contributions made to our Canadian society over many years by the thousands of Canadians of Lebanese origin.

SPORTS

WORLD CURLING CHAMPIONSHIPS—TRIBUTE TO CANADIAN TEAMS

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, like my colleague, I am pleased to announce that yesterday, Canadian rinks swept both the men's and the women's world curling titles in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. I am sure that all Hon. Members want to join me in congratulating the victorious Thunder Bay team of skip Heather Houston, lead Tracy Kennedy, second Diane Adams, third Lorraine Lang and alternate Gloria Taylor who beat Trine Trulson's Norwegian rink. This team showed the chief umpires that they not only came to curl but they also came to win. This marks the fifth time in six years that our women's side has won the world championships.

Congratulations are also in order for Pat Ryan's Edmonton rink. It is events such as this which make us all prouder to be Canadians. It reminds us that rural and small-town Canada are part of the fabric which makes this country so great. Good stuff, Heather! Good stuff, Bill! Good stuff, Thunder Bay!

NATIVE PEOPLE

INAUGURATION OF A SCHOOL IN WASWANIPI, ABITIBI

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on March 30, the new Willie J. Happyjack School was officially opened in Waswanipi, Abitibi. It has 20 classrooms from junior kindergarten to secondary V inclusive.

According to the Cree School Board, that school has approximately 340 students. It costs $5.2 millions, of which $3.8 millions or 75 percent are borne by the Federal Government and the remaining $1.4 million by the Government of Quebec.

I am pleased with this achievement because I have much at heart the education of young Crees.

Mr. Speaker, I offer my congratulations to the people of Waswanipi for their action and their determination and my thanks to the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs (M. Cadieux)!

ENVIRONMENT

EFFECTS OF EXPANSION PROPOSAL BY TRANS MOUNTAIN PIPELINE COMPANY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, residents of the North Burnaby area of my constituency are strongly opposed to the increased environmental dangers, including air and water pollution, arising from the August, 1988 National Energy Board approval of an expansion proposal by Trans Mountain Pipeline Co. This proposal will mean three new storage tanks on Burnaby Mountain and a major increase in tanker and barge traffic in the Burrard Inlet, up from 15 tankers last year to 48 tankers and barges after the expansion.

We have seen the recent devastation caused by the Alaska oil spill and the West Coast oil spill, and we do not want to take the chance of a major disaster when Westridge terminal becomes the busiest hazardous goods loading dock in the Port of Vancouver. I urge the federal Government to order immediately a full environmental impact assessment of this dangerous proposal and in the meantime to say no to any expansion by Trans Mountain Pipeline Co. We cannot afford to take the risk of yet another major oil spill, this time in the sheltered waters of Burrard Inlet. When will the federal Government show leadership on this important environmental issue? When will the federal Government stand up, not just for residents of North Burnaby, but for residents throughout the lower mainland of British Columbia?

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION URGED BY SOCIAL STUDIES CLASS AT R.I. BAKER SCHOOL IN COALDALE, ALBERTA

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge): The grade 8A Social Studies class at the R.I. Baker School in Coaldale, Alberta, with guidance from their teacher, Mr. Perry Mirkovich, have just completed a project designed to inform and combat the sinister effects of acid rain. The more they learned, the more alarmed they became. They informed others in their school and through the mass media informed others across Canada. As well, they changed several of their own personal habits. They chose February 15, 1989, as Acid Rain Prevention Day and invited all secondary students in Alberta to write to the federal Acting Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard).

Their plea is as follows:

> On behalf of the youth of the world, we, the grade 8A Social Studies class of R. I. Baker School, ask you, our nation's leaders, to place as a top priority the conservation and wise use of our environment so that the children of the future may enjoy the rewards of a cleaner world.

RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT AND EDUCATION

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE NATIONAL CONSORTIUM OF SCIENTIFIC AND EDUCATIONAL SOCIETIES

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, over the course of this week, Members will have an important opportunity to meet the national consortium of scientific and educational societies representing over 55,000 researchers and over 450,000 post-secondary students. These people will be on Parliament Hill for the purpose of speaking with Members. They are here to talk about Canada's crisis in research, development and education and its impact on our national well-being and economic strength.

[Translation]

Their message comes at the right moment. The National Advisory Board for Science and Technology and the deGrandpré Commission both urge the Federal Government to take concrete steps that will indicate it is well aware that research and development is of paramount importance.

[English]

I call upon Members to meet with representatives of the consortium this week. I urge the Government to double the base budgets of the three research-granting councils and index them at a rate of 1.5 times the annual growth rate of GNP; to convene a First Ministers' meeting to discuss the crisis in post-secondary education; to expand federal government research in such vital areas as agriculture, health, the environment and space; and to modernize and increase funding for student financial assistance.

Mr. Al Horning (Okanagan Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask the rest of the Members to join me in congratulating a Kelowna resident, Pat Ryan, who with his Edmonton team yesterday won the World Curling Championship in Milwaukee. As many Canadians will know, Mr. Ryan defeated another Kelowna resident, Mr. Rick Folk, for the Canadian championship.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PROTECTION OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I rise today confident that I speak for millions of Canadians when I express alarm at the lack of seeming urgency on the part of the Government to address the problem that has been created in this country when we have no legislation in place to protect the pre-born. Under the heading of "A Caring Nation' in the Throne Speech, some slightly vague reference was made to abortion. I urge the Government to get their priorities in order and show a new level of humaneness and show real care for the pre-born who are the most defenceless in our society.

HEALTH

CANCER-RELATED MORTALITY AMONG SYSCO WORKERS

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): An ongoing steelworkers' union-sponsored survey into cancer-related mortality among former Sysco steel coke oven workers in Cape Breton shows, based on 103 known deaths, a cancer morbidity rate of 53.3 per cent.

Despite these alarming facts plus government knowledge of information contained in two related "internal" reports by Environment Canada which have been "restricted" from public access from 1974, the attitude of both senior Governments has, according to the union, been "anything but co-operative".

Despite the fact that these workers have died and the ovens are closed, there is still a problem to solve. These workers—both dead and alive—and their families need help in establishing claims. Their community needs help in cleaning up the mess of corporate and government neglect.

The Minister of Health should agree now to the two-year request for a meeting with the union. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) should immediately release the 1974 reports. The Government should move quickly to initiate the comprehensive community environmental study which has been recommended.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CONSTITUTION

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—NOTWITHSTANDING CLAUSE—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully last week to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) speech in the Throne Speech debate. I have yet to hear the Prime Minister make a clear, unequivocal statement about the Québec language legislation. Instead of criticizing Mr. Bourassa for limiting fundamental rights in Québec, the Prime Minister claims it is the fault of former Prime Minister Trudeau. The Prime Minister says that the 1982 Constitution is not worth the paper it is written on because it contains the notwithstanding clause.

The Prime Minister must recognize that a majority of his Cabinet, including the Deputy Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Health and Welfare, all voted for the 1982 Constitution in this House of Commons. At that time, the present Prime Minister supported Mr. Trudeau's initiative.

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister now state categorically that he deplores the restriction of language rights in Quebec and does not approve Premier Bourassa's or any other Premier's use of the notwithstanding clause to by-pass the Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of errors of fact in regard to the prefatory remarks made by my right hon. friend. However, he is asking me a question that I have answered many times. I believe a Constitution should unite all Canadians, and this one regrettably failed that test. I believe that a Constitution has a fundamental responsibility to render unassailable our basic rights. This Constitution provided for an override clause. I said that because of this, the Constitution was gravely flawed. This is one of the reasons I have worked hard with other Members of the House to begin the process of improving it. My views on the notwithstanding clause and its use have been made very clear. I think my right hon. friend would agree that that clarity is on the record.

As Prime Minister and as a citizen, I accept and always have accepted the Constitution as the fundamental law of the land. However, there is an obligation on me to point out what I believe to be serious deficiencies in the Constitution and to try to correct them. The Constitution failed the test of unity. The Constitution should bring all Canadians together, and it did not. Because it should protect our fundamental rights and it did not, I thought it was not inappropriate for me to say that this was a gravely flawed Constitution.

NOTWITHSTANDING CLAUSE—PROPOSED RESOLUTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister has repeated again this afternoon what he said last week, namely that he is appalled by the existence of the notwithstanding clause, yet I remind him that in four and a half years as Prime Minister, he had the opportunity preceding the negotiations of Meech Lake, and he took no action to remove it. I have taken the trouble of drafting a resolution. Will he agree to a recorded vote of this House of Commons this afternoon or at an early opportunity denying Parliament the right to use the notwithstanding clause? In constitutional terms, will the Prime Minister agree to a resolution to the effect that the House of Commons will not use its powers under Section 33 of the Constitution?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to look carefully at any suggestions that come from my right hon. friend as to how the Constitution can be improved.

The Constitution of Canada, I suppose like all others, is a living document that is amended from time to time, as are others in other jurisdictions, for reasons of new situations that the citizens and the Members wish to correct and improve.

I will be happy to look very carefully at any views expressed by my right hon. friend.

Almost unanimously the House supported the Meech Lake Accord. The principal obligation on all of us, given the leadership by the Leader of the NDP, the Leader of the Liberal Party, and myself, is to be as persuasive as we can with regard to those provinces that have not yet ratified the Meech Lake Accord, and to indicate to them how important it is for the future of Canada that the document, already ratified by the House of Commons, receive approval in those two provinces.

NOTWITHSTANDING CLAUSE—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to help the Prime Minister take another initiative because I take the Prime Minister at his word. I have a resolution here in front of me. Is the Prime Minister prepared to accept a resolution that the House of Commons undertakes immediately never to use the notwithstanding clause? And furthermore, is the Prime Minister prepared to let the House vote this afternoon or at an early opportunity to delete the notwithstanding clause from the Constitution itself?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, normally this kind of discussion takes place beforehand among the leaders of the various parties in the House. I already indicated to my right hon. friend that I would be pleased to look carefully at any proposal he might submit.

First and foremost, we have a process that involves another problem with the Constitution. My friend raises the problem of minority rights and the notwithstanding clause. There is another equally serious problem, the exclusion of Quebec from the Constitution. And I do think that the Hon. Member for Shefford is right. Indeed, under the circumstances, it may be even more serious.

Now, together we have built a procedure that would finally allow Quebec back into the Canadian Constitution. It is definitely the national priority, because I tell you without reservations that for me, the Canadian Constitution without Quebec in it is seriously flawed. That is why it would take. . . We need Quebec in the Constitution just as we need Ontario. For me, the Canadian Constitution without Ontario would also be seriously flawed. Quebec was excluded. We must do everything that can honourably be done now to bring Quebec back in and that is what the Meech Lake Accord does for all Canadians.

NATIONAL SECURITY

BUS HIJACKING—REPORTED LACK OF COMMUNICATION BETWEEN POLICE FORCES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The hijacking incident on Friday raises some very serious questions about national security and the ability of our policy forces to respond quickly, effectively, and co-operatively with respect to acts of terrorism.

Reports indicate that Ports Canada police and the Québec Provincial Police failed to notify the RCMP in a timely fashion. The RCMP only found out about the incident two hours after it began when the hijacked bus rolled onto Parliament Hill.

Can the Solicitor General explain to the House this serious and terrible breakdown in communication? Can he explain why Ports Canada, that is within federal jurisdiction, did not notify the RCMP?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to point out to the House—and I think everyone is aware of this—that criminal charges have already been laid before the court, after the events that took place on Friday, and of course, that public statements on the incident should be made with extreme caution. I would therefore urge all Members of the House to be very cautious in this respect.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be in order, especially since the House is meeting today for the first time since the incident, to offer on behalf of this House and on behalf of all Canadians our warmest congratulations to the RCMP which acted in a truly exceptional matter, considering the circumstances.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Blais: I think that with me, all Members will want to commend the competence and calm shown, as the Hon. Member pointed out, by the RCMP, by our security here in the House, and I would say also by Members and their staff who quickly responded to requests that they evacuate the building. This is an important factor. It is a situation that does not occur very often. Mr. Speaker, we were able to demonstrate that the RCMP and its entire team were able to react quickly and effectively, and I think all Canadians are glad they were able to do so.

[English]

REPORTED FAILURE TO NOTIFY ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the RCMP and Ottawa Police ought to be commended for acting responsibly, effectively, and professionally in bringing the incident to a successful conclusion. However, that is not at issue.

What is at issue is how the incident was initially dealt with, and why it took more than two hours before the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the national police in Canada, became aware of this hijacking.

I fully realize that criminal charges have been laid and are pending, and my question is not directed toward the criminal charges, but with respect to how the government agencies reacted to this particular incident. I believe the people of Canada have a right to know.

Why is it that Ports Canada police and the Québec Provincial Police failed to notify the Royal Canadian Mounted Police immediately? Why did it take two hours before the RCMP became aware of this incident? Does the Solicitor General not believe that national security and the safety of Parliament and of those who are here was compromised as a result of that terrible breakdown in communication?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to emphasize here in the House that the security of Canadians is a major responsibility that we do not take lightly. We, and the RCMP especially, demonstrated that we do take the public's security seriously, and I think we made this clear on Friday.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back, if I may, to a few other points raised by the Hon. Member's question. I would like to say that throughout this incident it was clear that there was a very high degree of co-operation among all parties involved, including the RCMP, security on the Hill and other services including the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. As for other parties that may have been involved before, that is an important point. I asked the RCMP Commissioner to discuss the matter with the Director of the Quebec Provincial Police, and this has already been done. I personally spoke to the Quebec Minister of Public Security this morning to discuss the matter, and I asked the RCMP Commissioner to make a complete review of the situation and the sequence of events, because I have every confidence in the close co-operation that we receive from the Quebec Provincial Police. This morning the Commissioner assured me that the relationship was excellent and that there was very close co-operation with the RCMP, and I am convinced this will continue. There is no question about that.

EFFECT OF CONTEMPLATED CHANGES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Last week the Minister told the House that the changes to the unemployment insurance program contemplated by the Government will still mean that Canadians in need will be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. We took that clearly to mean that many Canadians were going to be cut off, and that the Government was going to define arbitrarily what need means.

In this context, will the Minister today confirm that the Government is contemplating a change that would have the effect of removing one million Canadians annually from entitlement to unemployment insurance?

• (1430)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I said last week that those Canadians in need of unemployment insurance will continue to have access to it, and I am sure the Hon. Member will be prepared to wait for a statement that I intend to make in the House tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock on this topic.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FUNDING OF RETRAINING PROGRAMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we will look forward to that with interest, but apprehensive Canadians would like the Minister to answer that question clearly now to clear the ground in advance.

I would like to ask the Minister another question. A story that the Minister has no doubt heard, and even contemplated, is that the Government plans to finance retraining programs with money taken from the Unemployment Insurance Fund. This would amount to the unemployed paying for their own retraining.

Will the Minister guarantee that the Government will not impose this injustice on unemployed Canadians?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to have a lot of things that he would like to say today, and I would suggest to him that he take my first answer at its word and wait for tomorrow.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PROGRAM CHANGES – MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister gave no assurances as to this Government's intention not to insist that the unemployed themselves pay for the changes in the UI Program.

Why won't the Minister give us that assurance now?

[English]

Hon. Barbara MacDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, what I said in response to questions last week, inside and outside, the House was that the unemployed in Canada want to work, and the key to their having jobs is job opportunity, and the key to job opportunity is training. I am sure beyond that the Hon. Member will be happy to wait until tomorrow.

SIZE OF BENEFITS – REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL COMMITMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the same Minister. We are putting questions to her today because we hope we will be able to convince her not to slash the program she has in mind, before tomorrow. We are hoping that reason will prevail, and that she will not lock the door on some unwanted changes.

Will the Minister make a commitment today not to reduce benefits that workers require to buy groceries, to pay rent, to keep alive while they are unemployed against their will? Particularly will she make a commitment not to reduce benefits so that unemployed workers will be thrown on provincial welfare schemes to stay alive?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will make a commitment that reason will prevail.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, we are pleading with the Minister to take these things seriously. In the last Parliament we had a Standing Committee of this House on Labour, Employment and Immigration that studied this matter for almost a year and came out with the unanimous report, with a Tory majority, which made 90 recommendations to improve the unemployment insurance system vastly and to eliminate abuses, but not to slash benefits for workers.

I ask the Minister whether she will give serious attention to that report and implement those recommendations rather than the Forget recommendations which were very reactionary.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say that I have looked at all the reports that have had to do with this matter. I said last week that the thrust of our statement will not be in the direction of Forget. There will be many reports that are taken into account.

TRADE

CHANGES TO SOFTWOOD LUMBER AGREEMENT – GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, I will direct my question to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister.

Friday last, the Minister for International Trade recognized his Government felt it reasonable to bring changes to the softwood lumber agreement. But, to use his own words, "there has been no negotiations in this connection."

My question is very simply this: Since the Minister recognized economic conditions had changed, what changes to that unacceptable agreement is the Government proposing? Did you consult with provinces? Further, would you tell us what is your agenda to negotiate with the United States the renoval of that bad agreement?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it has always been this Government's practice to hold consultations with affected sectors of the Canadian industry. There will be such a follow-up process in this case.

[English]

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS FOR AFFECTED WORKERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, with all due apology, the Minister did not answer my question.

His colleague on Friday said there must be changes in the softwood lumber agreement. The United States has said it will not make any changes. In the meantime we have hundreds of workers losing their jobs. Is it not the responsibility of the Government now to indicate clearly what its plan of action will be?

Will you provide some adjustment programs for the workers losing their jobs in that industry? When will you begin negotiations with the United States to end that particular accord? What is the direction that this Government intends to take to eliminate what is becoming a very serious burden and handicap on the softwood lumber industry of Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do apologize to the Member. I thought I had responded to his question about consultation. If there are to be changes sought in this agreement, it will be the practice of this Government in that case, as it has been in the past, to consult with the members of the industry and other Canadians who are directly affected.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

BUS HIJACKING—TIMING OF INFORMATION

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General and relates to the hostage taking on Friday.

Despite the competence of the RCMP and the officers involved in solving the hostage taking, clearly, there was a total breakdown of communication in this case. The bus should have been stopped long before it got to Parliament Hill. At what point were the RCMP informed of the hostage taking, and what steps did they take to communicate that information to Ottawa?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Sollicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I answered earlier that I have personally asked the Commissioner of the RCMP, with whom I have been in close contact during all those events and since, to check with all the police forces involved, including the Quebec Sûreté, the Montreal Harbour Police and all others that may have been involved in the incident, so that we may gather all the facts. I even contacted the Speaker of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, so that all personnel involved with security, here on Parliament Hill, may be assured that the RCMP will cooperate with them to gather all the facts in this matter.

In view of this, I believe it would not be appropriate to make further comments before we have all the facts gathered over the next few days. I believe the Hon. Member should do as I do, wait for those facts to be gathered before making any further comments.

[English]

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, the Sûreté de Québec have said that they informed the RCMP within half an hour of being informed by Ports Canada and they in fact learned of it from the Greyhound Bus Company.

In view of the importance of this issue and that this was the first hostage taking of a bus in North America, will the Minister agree to refer this whole episode to the Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General so that we can get appropriate answers for the people of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Sollicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, the facts referred by the Hon. Member were commented by some newspapers this morning. This is part of the information now going round. For that reason I have asked the Commissioner of the RCMP to make a review, as we should under the circumstances when such incidents happen. We should be happy that thanks to the RCMP's careful work the incident had such a favourable ending. I think that if we could trust them Friday to solve the incident, we should trust the RCMP Commissioner to bring us all the facts, in cooperation with all the people involved, both at the provincial and federal level. Then only will we be in a position to make a judgment.

SUMMER FALLOW ACREAGE PAYMENTS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Grains and Oil Seeds. It concerns the Canadian Crop Drought Assistance Program.

Will provision be made under the Program for payment for unusual acres of summer fallow and, if so, what criteria will be used in order to determine those acreages?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, when we announced the Program in November we said that because the Program is based on seeded acreage and is crop specific, if producers had seeded less in 1988 than they had previously we would be willing to go back and look at the previous five-year average in order to arrive at something more fair concerning their own farms.

Second, we will refer that matter for specific recommendations to the review committees once they are established. We are very close to announcing them. I suspect that within the next ten days the review committees will be in place.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR-POWERED SUBMARINES—SOVIET DISASTER

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, my question which is for the Minister of National Defence, is directed to the Associate Minister.

In view of the tragic sinking of the Soviet nuclear submarine 300 miles north of Norway over the weekend, the uncertainty regarding the security of the nuclear reactor involved, both in the short-term and the long-term, and the concern of Canadians about this very sensitive subject, particularly in light of the parallel they draw with the Canadian North, does the Minister intend to pursue the acquisition of nuclear-powered submarines for Canada with the same vigour as that of his predecessor?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first I think my colleague and all Members of the House would like to express their deep sympathies to the friends and families of the Russian submariners who lost their lives in this very tragic accident.

Second, the reports we have received to date indicate that the accident was not related to the nuclear reactor on board and that there are no indications of any radiation leakage from the accident. This of course will be monitored very closely and we will be keeping in touch with international authorities.

It is not inconsistent because, as I am sure my hon. friend knows, of some 400 nuclear submarines operating there has never been to date, to our knowledge, an accident which has involved fissionable material leaking into the waters. In fact, these have proven to be much more environmentally sound than many of the fossil fuel driven submarines.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for her interim reply and certainly note a certain amount of knowledge on the subject. I do not disagree with some of the things she has said—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mifflin: —but would certainly call into question the concern and perception Canadians have on this subject. The Hon. Minister mentioned this one particular instance—

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Mifflin: I am coming to my question. There have been four others where nuclear submarines have sunk in the last 20 years and indeed there is a record of 13 near misses over that period of time. I think the last one of a general concern to people was on January 26 last year when a Polaris submarine came within two minutes of having a problem.

Will the Minister reconsider her response in view of this record and in view of the commitment of the Government?

The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead talked about our commitment to NATO. I believe they do not want nuclear submarines from Canada but patrol frigates.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Mifflin: In view of the concern that people have for statistics, will the Minister re-affirm her position and remember that people wondered what was going to happen with the Exxon Valdez before there was a problem.

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure there was a question; however, the discussion was extremely interesting. On April 27 we will be looking forward to a Budget, at which time our resources will be known and we in the Department of Defence will be making our decisions about major acquisitions at that time.

FOOD

SALE OF IRRADIATED FOOD

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that the Government intends to amend the federal Food and Drug Regulations to allow irradiated food to be sold in Canada, why is the Government rejecting the recommendations of an all-Party committee that food irradiation not be allowed in Canada until specific safety questions are addressed?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this question is more properly addressed to me in that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is responsible for labelling. The policy is the responsibility of Health and Welfare.

After extensive study the Government is convinced that the safety of irradiation can be proven. In addition, there is a good deal of evidence that irradiation can help to reduce the incidents of food-borne disease and can lead to preservation of food at a time when millions of people around the world are starving.

[Translation]

LABELLING OF FOOD PRODUCTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to whoever is willing to answer it. If the Government insists on ignoring the recommendations of its own committee, Canadians have at least a right to know if their food has been partially or completely irradiated. Will the Minister demand that that information appear on food labels?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we intend to require labelling where significant irradiation has taken place. If there are suggestions for improvements to any of the regulations when Members have had a chance to see them, we would be glad to entertain that.

A study done for the Department of National Health and Welfare recently came to the conclusion that in Canada each year there are probably some 627,200 cases of salmonella poisoning at a cost of $946 million. If we can do something to reduce the suffering of Canadians who are affected by food-borne disease, if we can do something to prevent the wastage of food at a time when much of the world goes hungry, I think we should consider it as long as the safety of consumers can always be paramount.

FORESTRY

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENTS – ADMINISTRATIVE RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, Canada's forests are facing many challenges, including the Softwood Lumber Agreement.

In a speech at Prince George last Thursday, the Deputy Minister of Forests gave the strongest signal yet that forestry agreements with British Columbia and other provinces will be administered by agencies like the Western Diversification Office or the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

My question is directed to the Minister of State for Forests. Will he assure the House that funding for forestry agreements will be increased and that his Department, and his Department alone, will be responsible for administering forestry agreements with the provinces?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps you will permit me to congratulate my hon. friend who is asking his first question as forestry critic and who comes from the spruce capital of Canada.

I can assure him that federal resources will be available and a federal commitment is in place that is designed to assist the provinces to shift to more intensive forest management regimes, which include non-timber values, more integrated management regimes which include the social aspects of our forests. That commitment is as strong or stronger now than it ever was. I know that the Hon. Member will be pleased with the results after the Budget.

• (1450)

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION AT FIRST MINISTER'S CONFERENCE

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, if the Throne Speech is any indication, Canadian forests are in trouble because there was not one word about forests in the Throne Speech.

My supplementary question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. On or about April 17, the Minister of State for Forests will be releasing a major 900-page study on the future of forestry in Canada. It points out the need for major structural changes and new market developments in this area.

In light of the importance of forestry to Canada, I would ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister if he would consider putting forestry at the top of the agenda at the next First Minister's Conference yet to be scheduled.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, the Government has acted where others have talked and written.

The Forest Resource Development Agreements have literally started a new industry in the Hon. Member's own city and mine. Over 1,600 jobs were created as a result of the silvicultural arrangements that were funded through the co-operative agreement with the province.

These agreements will continue to be jointly funded and we intend to strengthen our resolve to remove the backlog of NSR lands and to shift our industry, the provinces and ourselves to a practice which is more responsible in terms of our custodial responsibility for our forests.

NATIONAL SCIENCES AND ENGINEERING RESEARCH COUNCIL

MCMASTER UNIVERSITY NUCLEAR REACTOR

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. McMaster University at Hamilton, Ontario, is home to a nuclear reactor which is vital to medical and educational research and which serves hundreds of scientists and engineers from around the world. It is the first and remains the largest of its kind in the Commonwealth.

However, this facility is in jeopardy because the Federal National Sciences and Engineering Research Council has denied McMaster a request for upgrading and has also cut the McMaster nuclear reactor core budget by $600,000. The jobs of 15 people as well as all the high-tech spinoffs that such a project creates will be shut down.

Can the Minister explain why NSERC has cut funding to the McMaster nuclear reactor and why the Government is not supporting research and development as recommended by the de Grandpré Commission?

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, the decision not to fund the McMaster reactor was taken by NSERC as it went through all the priority items on its agenda. In its opinion, the McMaster reactor did not have nearly the same priority as many of the other items that were on the agenda.

In terms of funding science and technology, let me remind my hon. colleague that it was this Government that put $240 million into the Centres of Excellence Program, an extra $200 million into the Granting Councils over the next few years, and $80 million into the Canada Scholarship Program, as well as $500 million into technology. That indicates to me that we take science and technology pretty seriously.

REASON FOR DECISION ON FUNDING

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, if the Government takes science and technology so seriously, then why is research and development headed this way instead of that way?

My question is directed to the Hon. Member who was the former President of the University of Guelph. The former President of the University of Guelph has told us that NSERC is doing this because it has decided to do this. The reason it decided to withdraw funding from the McMaster reactor is because "it is not attracting bright, young scientists". Is that the answer from NSERC?

Does the Minister agree with this reasoning or will he admit that the real reason behind it all is that his Government will not allocate funding to NSERC so that NSERC can put the funding where it is needed, research and development, and specifically McMaster University and its nuclear reactor?

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons the McMaster reactor is no longer a first-rate reactor is that it needs a major upgrade in its core. That major upgrade would cost a significant amount of money. There was a real question, even if the upgrade were to have been done, whether that reactor could compete with other facilities across Canada.

SALE OF CONNAUGHT LABORATORIES TO FOREIGN INTERESTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The Connaught laboratories, where insulin was discovered, are the biggest makers of pharmaceutical drugs in Canada and will soon be sold to the Institut Mérieux, a company controlled by the French Government. In addition, the Lumonics company, which comes third in the laser technology industry thanks to a technology licensed by the Canadian Government, will be sold to a Japanese company. What does the Government intend to do to prevent the sale of such national research and development companies to foreign interests, a deal which the French or the Japanese Government would certainly not allow?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, these transactions, as indeed any such transaction, are now reviewable by Investment Canada, and under the Investment Canada Act I am precluded from giving any details of that review and whatever recommendations might come out of that review.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, this is just a part of a long series of acquisitions of high technology companies in Canada. Both of them are focal. Both are hugely significant.

The Government, as well as allowing this purchase, has contrived a Free Trade Agreement that costs us strategic procurement, subsidies, and other measures appropriate to encourage research and development. Will the Government not act to ensure that we lose no further research and development intensive companies, than those we already have lost as a result of the Government's policies?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the President of Dupont International told me recently that as a result of free trade, significant portions of their research are being moved from Delaware to Canada because Canadian science and research is more productive.

The point is that there are transactions occurring in the market-place. I am concerned and interested, more than that, committed along with the Government which has so indicated in the Throne Speech, to seeing Canada's research and development efforts grow, not shrink, and to seeing the development of new R and D and high-tech companies in Canada. If the Hon. Member will have patience, he will see that the policies of the Government will produce that kind of growth over the next months and years.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

LABOUR RELATIONS—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office and concerns the administration of Canada Post.

The Minister will know that the Canadian Union of Postal Workers last week asked for a Royal Commission of Inquiry into the management and the operations of Canada Post. Given the sour state of labour negotiations at Canada Post, the three suicides of employees this year, the 52,000-case backlog of grievances, the closure of rural post offices and the general deteriorating service in urban areas, will the Minister immediately mandate such a Commission of Inquiry, and if not, why not?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons is that most of the so-called facts the Hon. Member proffered are not facts, they are false. The fact is that service has been improving. The Post Office is more efficient. Absenteeism has been reduced. The fact is that things are improving so much that Jean Claude Parrot is worrying he will not have anything to complain about and has recruited the Hon. Member to put those false accusations before the House.

• (1500)

Mr. Boudria: It is quite evident the Minister has been watching that video cassette Canada Post has produced.

PRODUCTION OF VIDEO CASSETTES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question to the Minister responsible or irresponsible for Canada Post.

How can he, as Minister responsible for that agency, tolerate the fact that Canada Post, instead of dealing with the employees I mentioned earlier, prefers to invest $1.5 million to produce videos boasting about its inability to deliver mail? How can the Minister explain that?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): I find it ironic that a union would complain about management communicating with the employees. The cassette in question congratulates the employees on improved service and performance. The only one it offends is Jean Claude Parrot and his lackeys on the other side who come here to make those complaints.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech of the opening of the session; and on the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 131); and on the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Riis (p. 236).

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): I want to finish off my remarks by expressing some concerns relevant to my home province of Manitoba. We Manitobans feel that we are good Canadians. We don't want special treatment in Canada. We want only equal treatment, nothing less and nothing more. We want our share of the national wealth. We want a Government that is sensitive and committed to regional development. We want a Government that will work hard to even out the economy. We in Manitoba are concerned about an over-heated economy in southern Ontario. Meanwhile, there are serious pockets of unemployment in other parts of the country. We are concerned about the Government's high interest rate policy. It is there to cool down the economy in southern Ontario and to dampen inflation in the country. I suggest strongly that we do not have serious inflationary problems in the Province of Manitoba.

In our province, we still remember the CF-18 affair. That is something that will not leave us for a long while. We are concerned about VIA Rail. We are concerned about the Government cutting that service, not only because there would be a loss of jobs, but VIA Rail is important to many small communities in the Province of Manitoba.

We are concerned about this Government's commitment to the environment. We noted with some distress in the Throne Speech that the Government is backing away from the international centre for promotion of sustainable development in the Province of Manitoba, particularly in my home city of Winnipeg. The Prime Minister made a big to-do about that in the election campaign. Now we are concerned that the Government is backing away from that commitment.

We are also concerned about eight earlier agreements that expired at the end of March. They were worth more than $400 million to the Province of Manitoba. At the expiration of those agreements, more than $90 million was not spent. We feel those agreements, which represented grants to a host of economic activities, are very important, to Manitoba and the entire West.

I want to conclude by saying we as an Opposition want to be vigilant. We want to watch this Government. While we will offer vigorous opposition, we will do it responsibly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I would like to congratulate the Member for his speech.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: Having had the pleasure of listening to him before lunch, he should be commended on the depth of the issues he has raised and the quality of his intervention.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Very perceptive.

Mr. Gauthier: As our critic for Western Diversification, I take it that Members will hear from this Member very often in this House where he will stand and defend the interests of western Canadians and the constituents he represents.

[Translation]

I would like to ask the Hon. Member. . . and that gives me great pleasure. With regard to the Speech from the Throne that we are discussing—and particularly the amendment moved by the leader of the Opposition which is before the House, and on which the question will be put later on today at 5:30, and which will hopefully be agreed to since it would improve the Speech from the Throne—I think something is lacking in that Speech, Mr. Speaker, because it does not deal with important issues such as daycare and some social matters related to the unemployment insurance system which is about to be slashed, the new commodity tax, a regressive and inflationary tax with which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will hit us on April 27, and the training and development of our workers following the U.S.-Canada free trade agreement.

Mr. Speaker, I want to give the Hon. Member the opportunity to explain how he thinks the West will react to this violent and vicious attack against low-income earners, against their means of livelihood, and their ability to provide for their families. I want to know what he thinks of the regressive side of the Speech from the Throne, especially of the sales tax which will apply to all goods and services, except food, of course. How do the people in Western Canada react to this regressive sales tax, which is I think for us a step in the wrong direction?

[English]

Mr. Harvard: I want to thank my hon. friend from Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for his kind remarks. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, I have watched this Member with much interest since I came to the House in December and believe I can learn a lot from him.

I want to tell my hon. friend that I had a deluge of letters and phone calls about the proposed national sales tax. The voters in my riding are not stupid. Their eyes and ears are open. They know exactly what the national sales tax will do. It will attack low-income groups, medium-income groups, and all Canadians. This is the most regressive tax that this Government can come up with. The incredible thing is the Government has already admitted that the tax will be inflationary, particularly in its early stages. This was admitted to and confirmed by no less than the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) the other day. We already have problems with our economy. For the Government to impose this type of inflationary, regressive tax on the Canadian people is irresponsible in the extreme.

I want to add a concern I have about interest rates, because I have received many calls and letters about it. There is not only the concern that we in the Province of Manitoba are having to share an extra burden because of the high interest rates that are apparently there to dampen down and cool off the economy in southern Ontario, but there is another concern we have. Many people have noted there is an increasing and unprecedented difference between Canadian and American interest rates. It is currently about two percentage points. What that does is it sucks American money and cash into Canada. That pushes up the Canadian dollar. We have seen that since the election. We have seen that since the implementation of the trade agreement. What does that do? It makes it much more difficult to compete in U.S. markets. It was something that we warned the voters about during the campaign. It was something was pointed out over and over again by my good friend from Winnipeg South Centre. Not only that, but in the wake of the implementation of the trade agreement—

• (1510)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Halifax West on a point of order.

Mr. Crosby: I believe that the House is well aware of the purpose of question and comment, and the need for a response in reply to the question. I do not think that there is any authority to go on at length on a new subject, interest rates, which was not even raised by the questioner.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sure that the Hon. Member will be winding down, and then I will allow the Hon. Member for Halifax West to pose his question. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James.

Mr. Harvard: I am very surprised that my friend opposite would raise this. If the Hon. Member cannot see a connection between high interest rates and a concern about a national sales tax, then he better return to school, because there is a direct relationship.

Since the implementation of the trade agreement, that agreement has pushed up the value of Canadian companies. Therefore, there has been an unprecedented wave of mergers, acquisitions, and take-overs. The agreement is causing more foreign take-overs of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Crosby: I wish to tell the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James that, in terms of schooling and education, he could do with a little education on parliamentary procedure before he comes in here and destroys the whole purpose of the question and comment period.

In his speech he talked about the national debt and the deficit. Canadians owe $322 billion with a mounting deficit of $30 million a year, started by his own Leader.

Mr. Gauthier: One hundred and seventy-seven billion dollars of that was yours.

Mr. Crosby: Everyone in Canada realizes there has to be something done. This weekend the Ottawa Citizen published a special supplement asking Canadians to deal with the subject of the deficit and the national debt.

In view of the mounting evidence, and in view of the fact that 31 cents of every tax revenue dollar is spent on interest payments in respect of the deficit and the national debt, and the fact that it is mounting and that it will continue to, does the Hon. Member think that any responsible Government can ignore this fact? Is the Hon. Member suggesting that we should not raise taxes or reduce expenditures in order to deal with this problem?

Perhaps the Hon. Member would tell us what he proposes to do, to answer the Ottawa Citizen, and to answer the people across Canada who write editorials and make comments, for example, professors and editorial writers. Everybody states that we must reduce the national deficit and attack the national debt. Is the Hon. Member telling the House of Commons that he disagrees with that opinion, and that he does not think it is necessary to take any action? Is that his point? Was the Hon. Member elected to tell that to the House of Commons?

Mr. Harvard: Might I suggest that my hon. friend opposite is a johnny-come-lately. The deficit has been around for a number of years. The Government has contributed over 100 per cent to the national debt, taking it from $170 billion to $322 billion. Where was the Hon. Member last summer when the Government was making promises totalling $16 billion which added to the deficit and to the national debt? Were Members opposite concerned about this deficit when they were making the decision to purchase the nuclear submarines? Suddenly, after the campaign is over and the election has expired, the Government becomes all concerned about the national deficit. Of course, we should be concerned about it and we do want to bring it down. However, we want to bring it down in an orderly fashion and in a sensitive manner. Members of the Opposition do not want to bring down the deficit on the backs of poor and low-income Canadians. We will not have any part of that.

We have to question the motives of the Government. It has been expressing much concern about the deficit. Why did the Government not do this six months ago, or one year ago? The Government is more responsible for this reduction than anyone else.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now terminated. The Hon. Member for Outremont.

• (1520)

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Hogue (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I am proud to take part in this Address debate. The task at end is not easy and the mandate some of us are assuming, I feel, is very significant. Each of us has a part to play, and whatever our political stripes, it is not only a right, but a duty. No one in this House is taking it lightly. A country like ours, so large and diversified from one region to the next, from one city to the next, from one province to the next must be managed not only with vision, but also with wisdom and courage. No matter what Party is in Government or what Parties are in the Opposition, the objectives are the same: make sure that our very beautiful and complex country continues to grow, thereby ensuring that every Canadian has his place in the sun, plant his tree, can cultivate his garden and enrich his heritage.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, as the popular saying goes, nothing is free, you must pay for what you get. And if someone decides to mortgage his health, his life or his property, the time comes when he must suffer the consequences. This is a universally accepted fact. Everybody agrees with it, even if some often behave as though they wanted to forget that simple reality.

As soon as it was elected in 1984, our Government turned the page on a great many dark years because of the distrust and misunderstanding which had poisoned Federal Provincial relations and threatened the very unity of our country. It made strong decisions and took the necessary actions to help our economy recover and create the job opportunities which are the motor of our prosperity. It gave Canada a new international direction and developed at home programs to ensure true social justice.

I indicated in a speech I made in December that on November 21, Canadians had chosen a new direction. They selected a number of representatives to sit in this House and asked us to plan for their future as well as our own.

Last week, the two Leaders of the Opposition Parties replied to the Speech from the Throne. They mentioned that Canada had changed. It has changed indeed. But this country of ours is not only changing, it is growing, maturing, thereby becoming more complex. Also, Mr. Speaker, the ways to deal with issues have changed. The means which had proved economical for decades and even for half centuries are no longer adequate in today's context.

We are nearing very quickly the end of this century. Not only will we have the opportunity to live through this event which occurs only once every 100 years, but we will enter at the same time a new millennium. Years come and go as they have since the adoption of our calendar and the years 1999 and 2000 will obviously be no different. However, the turn of a century always takes on a particular significance. It is traditionally a period when people ask themselves questions, sometimes even worry about what the future holds for them.

We feel a need to label everything and, in certain quarters, this is accompanied by a strong tendency towards reductionism.

The affluent society which came into being during the 50's has rightly or wrongly been called the post-industrial society. This judgment was quite narrow especially since it did not encompass the whole world. Everybody wanted to get more than his neighbour. Many tried to increase their wealth with any thought being given to the consequences. The so-called post-industrial society was the leisure society. This leisure society was to emerge in the 70's. Machines would do everything. Robots would be at our service. The first half of the century had witnessed great strides in mechanization. But during that period, one might say the seeds had been planted. The harvest started to emerge in the 50's. There seemed to be no limit. Science and reason were in. They cohabitated in a sort of way which made superior beings out those who worshipped them. Scientists thought only in terms of correlation and, if the correlation was weak, there was no link. It was to be rejected. Statistics and scientific rigour were to define the intellectuals, those to be in place.

However, it is also in this century that nazism, reared its ugly head leading to the massacre of German, Austrian, Hungarian, French and other Jews. Reason was law, and science also, supported by scientific rigour, of course.

While man was inventing and producing more and more tools, he did not see that those tools were shaping him. He had also learned to measure time and he thought he could control it. He did not realize that, in the end, it was time that controlled him. Besides, at the end of his life, man always admits to himself that he didn't have enough time to do what he had to do.

Our challenge of today and, probably, of the next century will be managing moderation. Our entry into the space age will show us all the advantages and disadvantages of excessiveness. Certainly, we cannot and must not stop progress, just like we cannot stop time.

However, for that very reason, we must realize the need to harness that excessiveness and to let it operate within an acceptable framework. Our life cannot be successful without standards.

Therefore, we must prepare our entry into the next century and millennium if we want to solve that excessiveness crisis and prevent further oil spills which would destroy us. That world of paradoxical reality and double constraint must be accepted. There are other possibilities. However, we have become modern while preserving our values.

Another challenge, Mr. Speaker, is to harmonize tradition with progress. As Touraine said, we are living a crisis of modernity, a time of paradox, a time of double constraint.

In the last election, the Canadian people have renewed their faith in Mr. Mulroney, probably because they were still quite satisfied with his performance. They already knew that new times were coming. They knew that because they can read the signs and hear the alarms. They knew that we had to open up. They accepted the free trade challenge. They know that the coming years will not be easy. They know that we must set the tone and show moderation.

In fact, a nation's maturity and self-sufficiency can be recognized by its capacity to produce and develop while accepting restrictions. Last November, Canadians clearly chose a Government which can not only conform to demanding standards but which also intends to set even bolder objectives. That is what the Speech from the Throne announces, Mr. Speaker. And I am honoured to be associated with the exciting mission that the Government and our leader, Mr. Mulroney, have given themselves.

I am honoured to take part in the development of the country along the lines of the new courses and policies set forth in the Speech from the Throne. The challenge for excellence protects us from excesses while preserving the aspirations of the people.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has stated a few basic objectives, including the enhancement of those values which make Canada the unique country it is. The economy may be the subject of discussions in all circles and some people may be inclined to believe that the science of economics leads the world, but we must come to realize that economics stem from culture and values.

We must come to realize that economics depend on the stability of those values because the relation between economics and culture and values is one of subordination. There cannot possibly be equality between both fields since culture must essentially precede economics. In a reduction context one is often tempted to think that economics prevail over culture.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne is a national unity commitment which is aimed at promoting the values which make Canada a unique country in the world. Indeed Canada is now considered to be one of the most dynamic, pacific and promising countries of the world. A foreign diplomat once said that Canada is a pampered country which does not experience serious difficulties.

Such is our outstanding achievement after slightly more than a century of history, a fact which has to be acknowledged in a very special way. As a matter of fact, in 1992 we will celebrate the 125th anniversary of Canada and the 350th anniversary of the foundation of Montreal. As we are wont to do, we will emphasize Canada's cultural wealth.

Our sights will remain set on the challenge of our country's cultural life and our rich multicultural legacy. We will improve the distribution of Canadian cultural products. Concrete measures will be taken concerning citizenship, and the Government will establish the structures required to further promote harmony between races.

There is no question of reducing everything to a common denominator and attempting to make all Canadians look alike. It is much more a matter of building on individual differences in order to increase the effectiveness of synergia. The country will thus be able to avoid a situation where power becomes the be-all and the end-all.

In that case, the phenomenon of unlimited growth occurs. It is a cancer.

Mr. Speaker, we must be proud of this Throne Speech because it is uplifting, courageous and challenging with a sense of responsibility towards the future. Another aspect of this Throne Speech also has our support, the part about a caring and generous society. For Canadians, tolerance and justice are paramount. Our society is concerned with the quality of life of its people. We have always honoured our obligation to come to the help of those in need here and abroad.

The Mulroney government shares these Canadian values. That is why the reduction of the deficit is so important. It will allow us to maintain quality social programs for future generations. And that is also why, despite our passing financial problems, we will continue helping families and senior citizens with greater emphasis for low incomes Canadians.

Income security is but one of the many challenges facing our society. We will also table legislation providing for the establishment of a national child care program.

The government will pursue its fight against family violence, child abuse and drug abuse and support research on AIDS and the diseases of the elderly.

The government will continue to support the efforts of the United Nations and its organizations and to participate in peace-keeping missions.

And that is why we will continue to strongly encourage further progress in international disarmament and to give our support to those who work for peace in the troubled regions of the world. Our caring and humane country is founded on justice and tolerance. Those are the values underlying our national and foreign policies which are cherished by Canadians.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, under the guidance of our leader, Mr. Mulroney, our government will be active in the field of science and technology establishing centers of excellence and programs based on strategic technologies.

However, our most important economic policy is without a doubt the development of our nation's work force. Our government will implement a comprehensive human resource strategy for the years to come, and that includes literacy, education, training and retraining programs.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Minister of Finance who, as a good father should, will bring us back to reality in introducing a budget which will remind us that our economic resources should not control our lives. The budget he is going to introduce in due course will protect us against the dangers of immoderation. He will challenge us to new levels of excellence. Finally, I just want to say how proud I am to represent the people from Outremont within this Progressive-Conservative government, led by a great captain, our leader, Mr. Mulroney.

• (1530)

[English]

Mr. Comuzzi: Mr. Speaker, I join the Member for Outremont (Mr. Hogue) in wishing everyone in the House to live beyond the year 2000. I hope that is the case for all of us who are here today.

I enjoyed his remarks inasmuch as he gave a cultural and institutional history of Canada in the early part of this century and the time after the 1950s, which showed the contradictions Canadians have had to face since the early 1950s. He mentioned the challenges to harmonize tradition and progress, and to be able to work with progress and restraint.

I think it is important to note what the Hon. Member said as he brought us through the 1950s, the 1960s and the 1970s. He said that the Government accepted the challenges of free trade and went on to say that as we head into the 1990s, free trade will not be easy. He said that because we have accepted the Free Trade Agreement the years ahead will not be easy for Canada. What did he mean by saying the years ahead would not be easy for Canadians?

[Translation]

M. Hogue: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my friend in the Opposition for the nice things he said about my speech. I do hope he will be around, in this country if not in this House, when we reach the year 2000. We will certainly need people like him.

There is no doubt in my mind that in the years to come we will live, as I mentioned earlier, in a very contradictory world, since technology has progressed so much over the last 200 years while men have been living at their own pace. In business schools, we call that dichotomy an organizational misfit, and that dichotomy cannot regress nor diminish. I was comparing and commenting on the measures that our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will introduce in a few days, and which we are all trying to guesstimate, a budget which will allow each and every Canadian to better live and influence his future by using our human resources instead of relying on the financial resources, which merely the outcome of our labour.

And that represents a challenge which we have already taken up and which we will continue to face. I firmly believe that the new century will see Canada become the nation as was predicted a few years back: Canada will be the nation of the twenty-first century.

[English]

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, what concerned me about the Speech from the Throne was that one of the most serious threats to our youth, one of the most serious threats to law and order in Canada was given just a passing reference in the Speech from the Throne. I am referring to the drug abuse problem in Canada.

While it might be glamorous for the media and others to talk about drugs in amateur sport, the real drug problem is with the young people in Canada. It was much to my chagrin that I noted in the Speech from the Throne that there was only passing reference, after the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) called it an epidemic several years ago. The problem is getting worse.

In a few short years we will have the same problem as that which exists in the United States with respect to crack. We have been fortunate thus far but there is no reason why the problem that exists in the United States will not find its way here.

It is for that reason I believe it to be a national tragedy that ought to be dealt with in a forthright fashion immediately. We know the problems associated with drug abuse. There was a parliamentary committee that investigated that very problem just a few years ago. Yet the Government does not appear to be taking the problem seriously.

We know that a lot of violence is associated with drug abuse, especially with crack abuse. We know what the root problems are and we also know the problem appears, regrettably, to be concentrated in the black community.

Why has the Prime Minister and the Government chosen simply to give it passing reference in the Speech from the Throne? What does the Government specifically intend to do to address that problem during the course of this mandate? It is one thing to talk a big game about the problem of drug abuse in Canada, it is another thing to do something about it.

• (1540)

Will the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) give the same care and attention to this problem, the problem of drug abuse, that he has given to the steroid abuse by a bunch of macho athletes who are bent on cheating in order to succeed? Does the Hon. Member not believe it more important in terms of Canada's priorities to hold a Royal Commission of inquiry into the drug problem, the real drug problem in Canada? Can he assure Canadians that the Conservative Government will make it a top priority and will spend the resources necessary to combat that very serious problem?

[Translation]

Mr. Hogue: Mr. Speaker, such a broad question would certainly require someone with much more specialized knowledge than I have, but it makes a former university professor want to open up and approach this issue from different points of view and really spend an hour discussing it. But I am still glad to have allowed two questions of this kind and such an important one as the problem my friend opposite raises.

I am not in a special position to evaluate the quality of the Speech from the Throne. Anyway, I did assess it and I said that I supported it and was proud of it. I do not see the point in being specific about programs when the Government announces its overall policies. The Government opens these various chapters, so to speak, presents them and, during the session, they will be filled out page by page and discussed with those authorized to do so.

My friend opposite knows very well that a newcomer to politics is not to presume he is something else. I know the difference between the status of a backbencher and the roles various Members have, the roles of the various people in this House, and my role is not to legislate or state my personal positions for the time being, or state the Government's position on issues like drugs. However, there is no doubt that if drugs are singled out or dealt with specifically, nothing will be solved—they are part of an overall problem. And that is why in my answer, I dealt much more with what Touraine was talking about, of this crisis we are entering, this paradox, where to some extent, balance in society seems to be giving way to excess. The problem of sense versus power, of moderation versus excess and the questions we must all raise about these fundamental issues will no doubt lead us to deal specifically with this matter of drugs in due course.

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, during the last election witnessed the emergence of a novel, unique phenomenon. For the first time in many years Canadians started to discuss our future as a country. The election now is behind us. However, our collective reflection on this country's future has but started. The current Throne Speech debate in my view is closely linked to that reflection.

[English]

Having avoided the issue throughout the long election campaign, the Government has at long last told us where it stands. At a time when thousands of Canadian workers need help adjusting to economic change, the Government stands for extensive discussions. At a time when the gap between the rich and the poor is widening every day, the Government stands aside. At a time when virtually every nation in the world is seeking new ways to create new wealth and economic opportunity, the Government stands pat.

On Monday last, instead of providing us with a prelude to a new decade, to a new century, we heard the last gasp of the old. Rarely has a political Party in office been given such an opportunity to demonstrate vision and rarely has a political Party failed so badly.

The problem is not just what the speech contained, it is what it did not contain: a belief in the capacity of the Canadian people, working through their Government, to meet the challenges ahead. Therein lies a fundamental difference between Liberals and Tories.

Clearly, this administration does not share our belief in the capacity of Government to evolve with society. It does not believe that Government can be an effective tool to help improve the lives of Canadians. That, unfortunately, is the essential message of the Speech from the Throne. That is why the Government signed a very one-sided trade deal, giving away the very tools that a modern state requires to develop its economy. That is why it is dismantling Crown corporations without giving any thought to the creation of new ones to meet new needs. That is why it stands by as high-tech company after high tech company representing the industrial future of Canada falls under foreign control. That is why our social programs have been put under the gun for four years.

This administration claims that its hands are tied by the deficit. That is garbage. Its objectives are not economic, they are ideological, an ideology that went out with the potato famine of the 1840s. The deficit is a problem and it is a very real one, but its solution does not lie in taking a broad axe to our social safety net. Canada has created a network of social programs of which we can be proud. We do not turn our backs on the sick. We do not walk away from the poor. Now, however, the Canadian commitment to social justice is coming under attack.

[Translation]

Our universities and our whole health care system are under attack, as are our senior citizens. And now, for the first time in our history, the generation of people under 30 is not assured a higher living standard than that enjoyed by their parents.

Deficit, reduction, yes! But not at any cost, and certainly not without reflection. Because as long as we limit ourselves to that budget exercize, we are not concerned with identifying new, more efficient ways to deliver existing services. The end result is that our cities more and more resemble those in the United States, and the drugs problem is getting worse.

Of course needs are changing. And our ability to adequately meet those needs certainly must change in turn. But it is no accident that Canada today is recognized as a caring, welcoming society.

It is because we always understood that we could improve our living standards by helping each other.

That is what Canadians implemented. That is their vision of the Government's positive role, and that is what is lacking in the Throne Speech.

• (1550)

[English]

The Tories claim to be a modern Government. I think they are frozen in the 1950s. Will you tell me why, in the very year the United States and Soviet Russia begin the most promising series of arms reduction initiatives since World War II, this Government signs an order for eight to twelve nuclear submarines at a estimated cost between $16 billion and $20 billion, nuclear submarines that are obsolete on the drawing board, nuclear submarines, the first of which will be delivered in the year 1998 and the last sometime after the year 2020, in a world that will be substantially different from the one in which we are now living?

I understand that a month and a half ago the Prime Minister of the country went over to Europe to receive an award for the environment. I doubt if that was the reason he went. I suspect he really went in order to repair the Maginot Line.

We as a political Party on this side of the House believe in the private sector, but we also believe in the positive role of government. That is why we disagree with the unspoken message of the Throne Speech. It asks not how can you make government more effective, but simply how can you make it smaller? Dismantling is seen as an end in itself. Redirection, modernization and the institution of government are not seen as tools of contemporary nation–building by the Tories.

For example, no one disputes that government programs can outlive their usefulness, but the mixed economy has not outlived its usefulness, nor will it, because Canadians will not limit their reach. We are not saying that we should dig in our heels to hold on to every last initiative spawned by former Governments. Far from it. What we are saying is that we should not deprive the Canadian people of the programs and institutions they require to meet the needs of the 1990s.

For instance, the Throne Speech did not once mention "housing", and yet lack of adequate shelter is one of the most pressing challenges this nation faces.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Martin: Despite the fact that over 100,000 Canadians are homeless, despite the fact that one of every three tenants has to spend more than 30 per cent of their income on rent, despite the fact that countless Canadian families are losing hope of ever owning a home, this Government did not feel that housing was worth a single comment. Shelter in a climate such as Canada's is not a privilege. It is a right. Furthermore, home or co–op ownership is not just a roof overhead. It is also an important source of income security and community stability. In a society without roots, it provides much needed cohesion. Home ownership is the most important investment decision that most people will ever make.

[Translation]

By making it impossible for some people to become homeowners, you deprive them of their main reason to be involved in economic activities. If you want to see what happens in major urban areas where people do not feel comfortable and are no longer concerned about their environment, see what's happening to our American friends.

[English]

Canadian cities, going the way of their American counterparts, could well be the price we will pay for letting home ownership get beyond the reach of the average Canadian. That is why it was so incredible that housing was missing so completely from the Throne Speech.

As far as shelter for the homeless, transition homes for the battered and the abused, decent rental accommodations for countless Canadians, this Government's lack of concern is simply beyond human comprehension.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

So far, Mr. Speaker, we have emphasized some of the issues which the Government has ignored in this Speech from the Throne, but what about those it did address? Again, it is clear that the Government does not understand how to use its resources to develop a strong Canada. It prefers to remain idle while hoping that everything will turn out for the best. One has to wonder. For instance, the same Government which intends to use its Unemployment Insurance Funds to finance training programs has been for over four years merely slashing funds allocated to the training and re–training programs. Under these circumstances, who could trust such a Government?

[English]

This Government talks of adjustment assistance, and then the chairman of its own panel says that such assistance may well be countervailable under the trade deal. Then the Tories would have us take them seriously.

The Throne Speech speaks of the trade deal. It is enough to send shivers up your spine. In the first round, the Tories gave up most of Canada's bargaining chips before they sat down at the table to negotiate. They gave up on FIRA. They gave up on softwood lumber. They did not get a single concession in return. What they did was to take a dive in the first round. What will they do in the second?

I will tell you what they will do in the second. What we hear now is that the United States is gearing up to attack our subsidy programs. We hear the Government questioning the cost of regional development. They are beginning to hoist the white flag and the battle has yet to begin.

[Translation]

Anything else in the Throne Speech? The environment. The Government is quite eloquent about it, but the time is no longer for fancy rhetoric, but for strong action, because we can no longer think in terms of compromise.

[English]

Who in this House will forget the scene of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) sitting there, having entrapped the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) in his lethargy, the two of them denying that one of the greatest ecological disasters of all time, the Valdez spill, posts no present or future danger to Canada? Their refusal to come to grips with the problem before them symbolizes the failure of this administration's concept of government. I believe this will become the symbol of the Government's chronic inability to come to grips with the problems of the 1990s.

[Translation]

Curiously, Mr. Speaker, this Government which refuses to look toward the future is not learning from the past. Problems exist. However, there is something we should never forget: the strength of a nation lies in its ability to overcome its greatest weaknesses. Canada's strength comes from its vast geographic areas and low population density. If our railroads became one of the greatest achievements of the 19th Century, it is because our territory demanded it.

If our telecommunication industry is today a world leader, it is again because the Canadian people demand it. When a great country meets challenges, its population lives up to the challenge and that is the message the Throne Speech should have sent out.

[English]

Canada requires contemporary solutions to contemporary problems. We face economic decisions of breathtaking opportunity. We face new social demands of unparalleled magnitude.

• (1600)

In both cases we will meet the challenge ahead only if government does not give up its ability to lead. Some day the NDP may well learn that government is not always the solution. On the other hand, it is time for the Tories to learn that government is not always the problem. Tories believe that the answer is cutting back, while Liberals believe in moving ahead. Tories believe in restraint, and Liberals believe in adjustment. For the Tories, restraint means eliminating programs instead of making them work better; restraint means allowing people to drift along instead of helping them to move ahead.

Let us be clear about one thing. Canada will not be able to move ahead. Canada will not be able to keep pace, much less take its place in the forefront of the nations of the world by restraining innovation, opportunity, and growth. Instead, we have to ensure our nation's ability to adjust. Canadians have to come to grips with the global market–place. We have to adjust to a changing workplace. We have to adjust to new environmental norms. Government has a crucial role to play in guiding that very process.

How does government play that role? It does so through policies that open the playing field to many who have been sidelined in the past, such as senior citizens, disabled Canadians, and single mothers. It does so by ensuring a role for the private sector to carve out niches to meet the demands of an ever–evolving society. It does so by setting the stage for entrepreneurship and innovation.

In conclusion, it does so by rising far above the sterile role prescribed for it in the Throne Speech of April 3, 1989.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I was interested in what the Hon. Member had to say about the omission of housing from the Throne Speech.

The Government appointed a new Minister of State for Housing (Mr. Redway). There have been reports of remarks he has made indicating a renewed commitment to housing.

Has the Hon. Member noted any change in the previous Conservative policy of neglect of housing since the current Minister responsible for housing has taken office?

I would also like to ask the Hon. Member his views on the lack of any commitment in the Throne Speech to a national infrastructure program to assist towns and cities across the country to renew their basic infrastructure of roads, bridges, sewer systems, and the like.

Does the Hon. Member agree that such a program would be a form of investment in the future of this country in that the projects in question would not only give employment to hundreds of thousands of people who would be paying taxes and adding to the revenues of the Government and receiving less in the way of welfare and unemployment insurance payments, but would also help make our economy more competitive?

I have seen studies that strongly indicate that a national infrastructure program would increase the over–all efficiency of the Canadian economy.

I wonder if the Hon. Member could respond to the points I have raised?

Mr. Martin: I thank the Hon. Member for his questions.

At the time of the appointment of the Minister of State for Housing (Mr. Redway), having listened to his criticisms and comments in the House of Commons, I, and many Canadians, felt that at last we had a Minister who was going to take an interest in his portfolio. I need only refer to the unfortunate comments of his predecessor, the now famous Minister of the homeless.

Unfortunately, it has now become manifest that that appointment was a way of silencing a very effective critic by bringing him within the circle. From the lack of any mention of housing within the Throne Speech, it is clear that the Government has effectively shut up a man who, on the Government's side of the House, might well have been the conscience for vast untold numbers of Canadians who are now devoid of shelter.

The problem is not only limited to the lack of reference within the Throne Speech. It is manifest in the lack of response to the countless groups that have come before the Government and asked for an increase in aid, asked for a roof over their heads, asked for warmth in the months of January and February, and who have been turned away with a casual wave: "We will have to see when the Budget comes down", and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) then casually stands up and states that there will be nothing for the homeless; there will be nothing for the young people in this country who want to buy new homes; there will be nothing to provide co–op ownership, which is a unique way of sharing in property for those who cannot buy their own homes. There will be nothing because the Government does not believe that people should be helped.

The infrastructure question is very well taken. Time and again it has been demonstrated that the multiplier effect of the work that would go into building sewers and bridges, and improving roads, would repay itself many times over in jobs and tax revenues. Yet the Government refuses even to consider its responsibility in that area.

More important, without any social conscience in any way, shape, or form, the Government stated that it was going to be concerned with the environment. One of the most important polluters of rivers and bays are major municipalities that cannot afford decent water or sewage treatment. The Government states that it is concerned about the environment, but it denies funding to municipality after municipality to clean up the water that we drink and the air that we breathe.

Our cities are in the front line of virtually every social problem that we face: the environment, housing, the drug problem, and lack of skills. To deprive our cities of the moneys that they require is to deprive current and future generations of the intellectual and physical sustenance that they require. There is no greater example of the Government's lack of conscience and lack of understanding of the needs of nationhood than the fact that its members sit there, fat cats, refusing to help out those people who live in an increasingly urbanized society.

The answer I give to the Hon. Member is one of great discouragement. As a rookie Member of Parliament I have been sitting here and looking at Members without conscience across the aisle. I wish that I could say that they will live up to their responsibilities, but unfortunately their record does not enable me to do so.

Mr. Rodriguez: I listened intently, and I am impressed with the commitment of the Member to Canada. I am impressed with his concern for a blueprint that would create employment. I have two questions that I wish to ask. Given all of the things that he has stated, how does he feel about the development of the shipping industry in Canada with respect to registering Canadian ships and flagging Canadian ships, which is an important aspect and one in which we had some leadership until a previous Liberal Government destroyed our merchant fleet?

Second, I heard many of the Hon. Member's colleagues wanting to support VIA Rail and continue the subsidies to VIA Rail. Does the Hon. Member maintain the position that VIA Rail should be continued and expanded, and that the subsidies should be continued in order that we give greater options to travellers, so that instead of using buses—particularly Voyageur—they would be able to use VIA passenger rail service?

• (1610)

Mr. Martin (Lasalle–Emard): Mr. Speaker, again I thank the Member for his question, and I especially admire his ability to stay within context.

As far as the first question is concerned, the one having to do with the flag registration, the fact is that as a result of the unfortunate drought in western Canada a substantial portion of the Great Lakes fleet is going to be laid up. As a result of that, there are going to be jobs lost arising out of a crop failure in western Canada and some ships have been flagged out, ships which undoubtedly will be coming back into the Lakes next year when indeed the crops in western Canada begin to grow once again.

But the Member raises a very important question, and that is why in this country do we not have a merchant marine? Why in this country can we not have a tax system that will give us the same benefits that the Norwegians have and other countries which desire to see their own flags flying? The answer, Mr. Speaker, is again a failure to understand the laws of international commerce and to understand nationhood.

So I feel very badly and I would hope that the industry which has put forth a plan for registry of ships would be listened to.

On the other hand, you see, this is it. Here is an industry that would like to create jobs for Canadians, and the hard–hearted Minister says: "To heck with creating jobs for Canadians. I have got my job. I am a Minister of the Government. I do not need to create jobs." Well, you may want to deprive Canadian sailors of jobs, but the Canadian sailors are going to have their day of reckoning.

As to the second question, the Member made a clear statement: why we should give jobs to bus drivers when we can give them to locomotive engineers? I do not understand that. I think we should be able to provide jobs to locomotive engineers and to conductors and at the same time provide jobs for bus drivers and truck drivers. I do not think any Member in this House should be discriminating against any Canadian industry as the Member did in his question. I get carried away in the face of such inequity, Mr. Speaker.

Let me just simply say that my personal position on this particular issue is that I would hope that Canadians will never be deprived of adequate transport in the regions. I would hope that we would never find a situation in the Maritime Provinces, in northern Ontario, in northern Québec or in western Canada where train service would simply disappear. It would not be reasonable. Nobody should ever discriminate against the regions of this country, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. MacKay).

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a distinct pleasure to be recognized following the remarks made by the distinguished Member from Montreal who has just spoken. To some of us have been here in the House to experience many speeches from the Throne, and the Member who has just spoken provides a very interesting link with history because his father distinguished himself very greatly in this House.

It is significant also that this is the first time that a Government has had the honour to bring forward a Speech from the Throne at the beginning of a second majority mandate since the father of the Member who has just spoken was in the House of Commons. I think, Mr. Speaker, this is significant because I would be the first to concede that going back to the 1950s to which the Member referred, the Liberal Government of that day did give leadership. They were good managers.

I remember reading in Time magazine when I was a little boy that the management of Canada's affairs was a source of some envy to other nations of the world, but unfortunately to put it in perspective, when we take a look at the latter 1960s, and the 1970s, the record seems to be much less clear.

I think it is fair to say that when you look back to when the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau first came into office, we had the same basic concerns in many areas that we have today.

Mr. Andre: Everything is worse.

Mr. MacKay: I took a little trip back through memory lane and read some of these speeches from the Throne in the 1960s and 1970s, and it was interesting. I have here a reference involving the environment in 1969, and I am reading a quote here. Water was among most precious of our resources, that Speech from the Throne said, "and evidence of past failure to rehabilitate our water resources is there for all to see".

The Liberal Party has struggled mightily with resources and with the environment, and I guess the culmination, came forward not long ago, on March 8th in The Citizen when Greg Weston of recent biographical fame noted that the Liberal Party, which was millions of dollars in debt, spent half a million dollars decrying the terrible state of a particular lake. "I have never been so angry in my entire life", begins the letter signed by Liberal Party secretary, Marie-Andreé Bastien. It turns out that after spending half a million dollars, Mr. Speaker, raising a lot of partisan comments, that the Liberal Party through their spokesperson had to admit, and this is a direct quote:

> When faced with the fact that this was not a dead lake but a very healthy beaver dam in a very healthy national park, I said to my husband, oh, my God, it's a beaver dam. A senior Liberal estimates the mailing cost to the debt-ridden Party of more than half a million dollars.

So it can be said, and I realize I am being partisan here, but I cannot resist the jibe, that the Liberal Party in this case does not know the difference between a beaver dam and a dead lake. So this is not a very reassuring example of a contemporary awareness of the seriousness of environmental concerns.

Mr. Speaker, our Speech from the Throne in this particular case does bear testimony that we have honoured the commitments of the last four years. I think it is fair to say that even the most partisan of critics opposite would admit that in the past four years our country is considerably better off than it has been, that we have systematically reduced the budgetary deficit for the first time since the 1950s, that we have created over a million jobs, that more people can afford housing, more people are in better economic circumstances today than they were when our Government came into office in 1984.

Mr. Speaker, housing was never an easy problem. I remember 10 years ago, when I was Minister of Housing for a short time, we were faced with the infamous AHOP program. There were three AHOP programs as the Member from Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) will remember. On top of that we had in Ontario the Home Ownership Plan. What was the result of all this subsidizing and paying people to live in houses? People were walking away from their housing, tossing their keys in and saying it was not worth it.

Mr. Speaker, there are no simplistic solutions for housing. It means that people have got to be given employment and that constructive measures have got to be taken, and this our Government has been doing over the past four years. But why are we faced with such a financial problem today? Environment does not just refer to a physical environment. We have to look at our physical environment, but we also have to look at our social, political and financial environment. We have one-fifth of the world's fresh water. We have the longest coast lines. We are a neighbour of two superpowers. We look out on three oceans and speak several languages, including our two founding languages, and yet with all these resources, Sir, and all this potential, we have not yet quite filled the great Liberal Prime Minister Wilfred Laurier's prediction that the 20th Century would indeed belong to us.

We have seen a country like Argentina, a distinguished representative of which was in the gallery today, which in the 1930s had a gross national product and resources of the same as ours—my friend tells me he was from Brazil. Well, the same comparison could be made about Brazil. Countries with great resources and great potential do not always realize them. Potential is a wonderful thing to have, but it can be a heavy burden if it is not realized. So when we congratulate ourselves and say what a wonderful country we are, how unique we are, how fortunate we are, how sensitive we are, perhaps it is time for us to step outside our national psyche and ask how does the rest of the world look at Canada. Just maybe they see us as a very fortunate, large, rich country that has not been managing itself too well during the past couple of decades.

I think all Canadians must come to grips with the realization that we have to do better and it is incumbent upon us to make a lot better use of the God-given resources we have in order to manage our country and our affairs in such a way that we can protect the very social fabric that we have often talked about as setting an example to the world. We cannot in all conscience go on spending a great deal more money than we take in and not realize that somewhere down the line it is inhibiting our sovereignty, hindering our options and eventually will menace those very social programs of which we are so proud.

In 1971, when I first was elected to Ottawa and this place, the country's debt was less than $20 billion. Two years later, the gentleman whom some people call the Father of the Modern Canadian Deficit—I would not say that but some people indicate that it is the Leader of the Liberal Party when he was Minister of Finance—brought in an expansionary budget to attack inflation and high unemployment rates while the national deficit at that point reached about $24 billion. Since that time the finances of the country have steadily worsened at an alarming rate.

Mr. Milliken: Especially in the last four years.

Mr. MacKay: My hon. friend says especially in the last four years. Perhaps I should deal with that. In the last four years, despite very strong efforts which reduced the deficit year by year, it was not enough to cope successfully with the monstrous debt stock that the Government inherited.

Mr. Milliken: Nonsense.

Mr. MacKay: My friend knows, if he and I were in business and owed a million dollars and wanted to save the old family farm and the business, we would have to raise a lot of money every year. Let us assume the interest at that time was 10%. We would have to raise $100,000 every year in order to keep that $1 million from getting to the point where it might cause us to lose everything. This Government, being in that position, did its best, as he and I would do, to bring down the defict by raising more money and attacking the deficit. Unfortunately, despite our best efforts, the debt stock has continued to grow. That is the challenge that faces this Government, faces this country and faces all Members of Parliament.

We have to look at what our basic economic picture will produce if there are not some fundamental changes. I believe it is worthy to quote a very great Member of Parliament and our former national leader, Robert Stanfield, who added when he was speaking to this House on one occasion, that a Conservative must be concerned about the effects of economic growth, what it does to our environment, what kind of living conditions it creates, what is its effect on the countryside and what is its effect on our cities, whether all parts of the nation benefit or only some parts, and whether a greater feeling of justice, fairness and self-fulfillment results from this growth, thereby strengthening the social order and improving the quality of national life.

Mr. Stanfield further added that the Conservative tradition has been to interfere only where necessary, but to interfere where necessary in order to achieve social and national objectives. Perhaps this is an answer to my colleague from Montreal who raised a similar philosophic point on behalf of the Liberal Party.

It has been said more colloquially that the difference between a Liberal and a Conservative is that if a Conservative sees someone drowning in deep water, 30 feet off a dock, he will throw him 20 feet of rope and say: "Struggle over, grasp the rope and we will save you". If a Liberal is confronted with this pathetic situation, he will throw 40 feet of rope to the unfortunate person and when he grasps it the Liberal will let go, run away and find another good deed to do. There are different ways to look for solutions for people in trouble.

Loyal to our traditions, a Progressive Conservative Government has proposed in this particular Speech from the Throne several measures aimed at achieving social and national objectives. This is not a Christmas tree approach that we have taken. Some Governments in the past have done this, but ours is rather a thematic approach. We have made a commitment to building a stronger economy, to protecting our environment, working toward a caring and compassionate society, fostering the values that make Canada unique and, of course, a commitment to national unity. I am very proud to be part of a Government which, in the Conservative tradition, strives to ensure that all regions of the country benefit from a healthy economy.

I am particularly pleased about our Government's commitment to Atlantic Canada and the continuation of funding for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and ensuring that the Government's procurement policies become increasingly responsible to regional considerations. The Agency in particular for which I am responsible is playing an essential role in the renewal of the entrepreneurial spirit in Atlantic Canada. Through a direct assistance program, through an advocacy role, its co-operation and co-ordination mandates, ACOA has already levered more than $2 billion of private investments and assisted in the creation of over 10,000 new jobs.

As Minister responsible for this Agency, I want to assure the House and colleagues that I will do my best to ensure that ACOA remains responsive to the region's needs through extensive consultation with the business community, academe, labour and all other interested parties. Many believe that ACOA should be encouraged to play a bigger role in assisting entrepreneurs to find new markets, to obtain adequate business management training, benefit from export opportunities arising from the Free Trade Agreement and, in other words, to help this country move into the 21st century by adopting new technologies, new techniques with help for all those who require it in the small and medium business sector.

The consultation process yet to be announced will aim to determine whether ACOA's policy framework is adequate or if it should be adjusted, as my colleague has suggested, to meet present and future challenges facing Atlantic Canada's entrepreneurs.

In closing, I look forward to the implementation of the Government's objectives as set out in the Speech from the Throne. As an Atlantic Canadian, I believe that economic and social measures such as the reform of the Unemployment Insurance Program, more responsive procurement policies, the work of ACOA, and working toward a national child care program will ensure that our region benefits from a healthier economy, therefore ensuring a better quality of life for all Canadians. At the same time I cannot resist putting on the record in the House one of my favourite quotes from a great American who, as part of that select group of Americans who helped to build that great republic, had pretty definite ideas on the role of government. Thomas Jefferson said:

> I place economy among the first and most important virtues, and public debt as the greatest of dangers to be feared. To preserve our independence, we must not let our rulers load us with perpetual debt. If we run into such debts, we must be taxed in our meat and drink, in our necessities and in our comforts, in our labour and in our amusements. If we can prevent the Government from wasting the labour of the people, under the pretence of caring for them, they will be happy.

There is some truth in that, although it was spoken a long time ago. While it is tempting for all of us to expect the Government to do a great deal to help, as well it should, there is also some truth in the maxim that any Government that is big enough to give you all you want is also big enough to take all you have got.

Mrs. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the Hon. Member's question about how Canada is seen in the rest of the world. It is my impression that Canada's reputation in the world has dwindled considerably in recent years. One of the reasons for that is Canada is seen to be more and more tied to U.S. policy.

However, referring to the Speech from the Throne, I was particularly distressed that in referring to Canada's reputation the Government does not give a substantive commitment to maintaining its current level of overseas development assistance and, in fact, increasing those levels as was set out as a commitment some years ago. The Government continues to fall back on that commitment. It is very important that the Government recognize that the amount of development assistance we give to the world is directly related to the economic health of this country. Canada is not a country that lives in isolation from the rest of the world. We are part of an interdependent global community.

• (1630)

Not only does our overseas development assistance affect the economic health of our own country, it also affects the security of Canada. Canada, along with other western nations, has held the notion of relating security to only East–West conflict situations. I would suggest that the Government look more closely at the fact that our greatest security problems are more on a North–South basis than an East–West one.

Overseas development assistance will affect security. Our assistance must be enhanced and increased, not decreased. At the very minimum, development assistance must be maintained.

The environmental impact of overseas development assistance is also important. The environment is important in Canada but environmental issues around the world also affect us here.

I would suggest that the Hon. Minister address these facts when he wonders what Canada's reputation is in the world today.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I wish to respond as follows: I think my colleague across the way raises some excellent points. I believe that our overseas development aid is very important and has a very high priority. I am one of those who would not, under ordinary circumstances, want to see our overseas aid curtailed. However, we must wait until we see what our fiscal resources are. I take the Hon. Member's observations very seriously. We should be targeting our overseas development aid as much as possible to environmentally sensitive areas to help ensure that countries that have identified clear priorities that benefit them greatly are assisted, not only with issues dealing with the environment but with food, with medical aid and with educational supplies.

I believe we have an excellent record in that respect and have spent well over $2 billion in this regard in the last period of time—

Mrs. Landry: It was $2.7 billion.

Mr. MacKay: My colleague informs me that it was $2.7 billion. On the other hand, I believe it is necessary for us to take stock of how other countries regard us, simply because we have so many resources and such a tradition and such a capacity to improve ourselves and thereby pass along benefits to them through ODA that we can no longer afford to get ourselves in the position in which the moneys we pay to service past borrowings are restricting our options. This affects not only our ability to provide our own social programs, but if this trend is not checked, inevitably we will have to cut back on ODA.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member for Northumberland (Mrs. Stewart) have a further question or comment?

Mrs. Stewart: No, Mr. Speaker, I will take it up another time.

Mr. Mifflin: Mr. Speaker, I have in mind a comment and a question on the Hon. Minister's remarks. I note with great interest that the Minister spoke in glowing terms about ACOA which is very important, of course, to the Maritimes, and in particular to Newfoundland.

I had a recent briefing and discussions with the people concerned and, indeed, involved with the ACOA business. There is no question that while ACOA has done a tremendous job in helping the economy of Newfoundland, there is a particular aspect of it that is slowing down the good it can do. I would like to bring to the Minister's attention this legitimate concern, not one clearly for the subject of debate.

Quite frankly, I do not have with me the input numbers for the reduction of staff as a result of the previous combined efforts of the old DREE department and ACOA. Rather than treat it in input terms, I would like to relate to it in output terms.

If my memory serves me correctly, for account executives looking after this kind of business, one person can look after between 10 and 20 accounts. It has been brought to my attention that in the case of ACOA in Newfoundland, one account executive has the responsibility for about 50 accounts, well above what is normally expected. The end result is that those who are making application for legitimate grants, loans and assistance in getting the economy of Newfoundland off the ground do not have access to the kind of expertise and professional advice that was intended when ACOA was first set up. The end result is that there is a certain level of frustration and discouragement which could be ameliorated, if not indeed totally rectified, if this situation were to be looked at.

I would ask the Minister to comment on this and indeed to do something to rectify the situation.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my colleague's comments and I will take them most seriously. I believe it is fair to say that ACOA, in its present configuration, is quite different from DREE and then later DRIE because decisions are intended to be made on a more expeditious basis in the Atlantic region. It is the only agency, I believe, at least east of Ottawa, that has that capacity now and has most of its resources and decision-making powers in the region it serves.

We do not wish to overly bureaucratize the agency. I think it is fair to say that in the short period of time it has been in operation, a tremendous number of offers have been taken up. In the Hon. Member's province, well over 3,000 jobs have been created and many more have been maintained.

I am not suggesting to the Hon. Member or to the House for one moment that the administration is working perfectly or that there is not room for changes and improvements, not only in the methodology but in the policies. Therefore, I will take that very seriously.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you were somewhat taken aback, at least intrigued, by the response of the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Andre) to the question I asked today. Hon. Members will recall that the question was based on Connaught Laboratories, perhaps the largest pharmaceutical corporation in Canada. It is an historic enterprise, the place, after all, where Banting and Best developed insulin, one of the singular discoveries in Canadian scientific history. Connaught Laboratories, it has been reported, will be purchased by the Institute Merieux. The interesting thing about that institute is that it is owned by the French government.

At the same time, I referred in my question to the fact that Lumonics Inc. was to be purchased by a Japanese firm, Sumitomo Heavy Industries Ltd., and it should be noted that Lumonics is the third largest laser technology corporation in the world. It is a very successful research and development enterprise, as is Connaught, as well. Their expenditures on research and development are quite high as compared to those of almost any other corporation in Canada. Over 10 per cent of sales are invested in research and development.

There is another signal fact that ought to be referred to in respect to Lumonics and that is that one of the small impediments—and with this Government, I am sure it is a tiny impediment—is that Lumonics has based its success on a government-owned licence for the essential technology that has been the basis for Lumonics' success. The Minister rose and hemmed and hawed as if he did not know what was happening. I am sure that was the case. The matter was of such trivial significance to him he completely forgot; but he got himself together. He said he was talking to a Dupont corporate type who said they were going to build some new research in Canada. That comes as no surprise to anybody that Dupont will do a little bit in Canada. They will do a little bit in Canada whether this Government did anything or not. That is the nature of the chemical industry.

• (1640)

The significance of the demise of these two Canadian companies is far more important than any piddling amount of research that Dupont will do in its branch plants in Canada. Connaught was Canadian owned. Lumonics was Canadian owned. One of the problems for research and development in this country is that Canadian companies are where we find research being done. The difficulty Canada faces with respect to industrial research and development is that American and other foreign-owned companies do no research in this country. As an expression of gross domestic product invested in research and development compared with other countries, we do extraordinarily poorly.

One of the strong suits of this Government should be its understanding of the economy and commitment to competitiveness. One of the obvious characteristics of the modern economic world is that a country like Canada cannot continue to be dependent exclusively on its forests, fisheries and mines in order to continue to thrive economically.

There are a number of reasons for this, having to do with the necessity of sustainable development and increased competition from alternative sources and the resources which have meant so much to Canada. Part of it is due to the substitution of other substances and materials in manufacture for the materials that we have dug from the ground and cut from our forests. It is clear that if Canada is to thrive in the future, it cannot function exclusively on the basis of the exploitation of our resources. It must function by harnessing the intelligence and the creativity of its people. That is fundamental.

This is not a new discovery on my part, but it is certainly true that this is a discovery that has had little impact in this place. Much of what might be said in criticism of the Government could be directed at all Members of Parliament collectively. In our synergism with the press, we search for the short term answers for what happens in the storm outside or what will happen within the next year. Due to that short-term sight and the absence of a clear understanding of the significance of science, research and development, and because of the universal ignorance in the press and media of the importance of science, treated as if it were too arcane to be reported in simple terms, we have dug ourselves a very deep hole and must dig ourselves out very soon.

The Prime Minister was aware of the difficult straits in which Canada finds itself. Back in 1984, he said that his starting line was the technological dimension: Either we go into the game and become important players in the major leagues, or we will become a nation that will in its entire lifetime play in the Junior B circuit.

Why did he say that? He said that because Canada was bringing up the tail-end among the industrial nations with regard to its activities in the area of science, research and development.

In 1984, about 1.35% of our Gross Domestic Product was being invested in research and development. What is called "Gross Domestic Investment" in research and development was 2.3%, about one-half that of our major industrial competitors.

There are some other telling statistics. Not only have we not advanced a single decimal point with respect to percentage of GDP invested in research and development, we are falling behind other countries who recognized the necessity for a significant improvement in their research and development. We must produce the kinds of jobs that provide security for Canadians and that allows Canada the opportunity to make a significant contribution to peace and social security for others in this world. If one compares the period from 1971 to 1985, the United States rose 10 per cent. They were already high by comparison with us. In 1971, we were exactly where we are right now. Japan, in that period, has gone up 35%, Germany 20% and France 15%. You may say, Mr. Speaker, those are big countries. It is understandable that they are able to increase their investment at that rate, but if one looks at Sweden in that period, their percentage of investment in research and development has doubled. Their target is over 3% of GDP to be invested in research and development.

Look at the other parameters. If one looks at the rate of industrial investment in research and development, Canada ranks eleventh among industrial nations. There has been much said about Canada's high proportion of Government investment in research and development. Canada ranks ninth in Government-funded research and development. A significant aspect of our efforts in research and development is the number of trained personnel, the number of scientists and engineers that we have. We rank fourteenth!

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. McCurdy: One may have expected that since 1984 in view of the eloquent remarks about research and development made by the Prime Minister, we would have had in response to his promise some significant advance in the direction of a 2.5% rate. In fact, we have not gone ahead a single one-hundredth of a point.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. McCurdy: If one looks at research and development expenditures by the Government since 1984, in real terms those expenditures have dropped by 3.5% in that period of time.

An Hon. Member: Another broken promise.

Mr. McCurdy: I do not want to take too much time with this, because everybody knows about it. If one looks at what the prospects are, should there be an increase in investment in research and development, one has to look at what our universities are producing. Are we going to have the personnel? Expenditures in the university have gone down. The Government has already cancelled $2 billion in expenditures for university operating costs over a five-year period of time. The universities are in a disgraceful state of affairs. Real investment in the universities on a per student basis has gone down by 11 per cent. We are already dragging our tails in respect to the percentage of the population that is involved in research and development. In the Throne Speech one would have expected to hear some type of clarion call that something more was going to be done than has been done in the past.

• (1650)

Let me pause for a moment in case there is someone on the Liberal benches that is as condemning as I am of the Government. Not only was the Liberal record worse, but it was a disgrace. Between 1971 and 1984 there were times when the percentage of GDP spent on research was as low as 1.0l per cent. It did not go up under the aegis of the Liberals. Not once did the Liberals have a five-year program for R and D in the universities.

When it comes to rhetoric, and when it comes to the mounting of organizational structures, the Progressive Conservatives have not done too badly. They are to be congratulated for the construction of a National Advisory Council on Science and Technology. They are to be congratulated for their program Innovation. They are to be congratulated for an increased number of scientific scholarships for university students. They are to be congratulated for an increase in investments in museums and that type of thing to increase the awareness of science. For all of that they are to be congratulated.

They might even accept a note of congratulation for having agreed to create a Parliamentary Committee on Science, Research and Development. That committee included a non-partisan group of Parliamentarians interested in science. One of the problems was that committee began to notice that we were getting an awful lot more B.S. than action. I am sorry to say that that committee met its demise. People wanted to decrease the number of committees, that that committee on Science, Research and Development was beginning to bring too much focus on science, research and development. People may begin to understand that research and development is important to the future of this country and to jobs for Canadians. Therefore, the committee was buried under a committee designation of something like industry, technology and northern development.

In congratulating my own Party and my own effectiveness in negotiation, the name has been changed so that at least it mentions science. It is a tragedy. At long last Parliament had begun to address the ignorance of the House about research and development, and had brought into focus the necessity for us becoming better informed about the fundamental importance of research and development to the future of this country.

As I stated earlier, one expected to find in the Throne Speech some indication that more was going to be done to improve this disgraceful record, and that something would be done to counteract the deterioration in our possibilities for producing jobs where jobs must be produced in the technology and knowledge areas of industry and business. What does it state? It states that the National Advisory Board in Science and Technology has been created. It is doing fine, and it has done some nice things. That is all there is.

If there is one fundamental stupidity on the part of the Government, it is what it has done to our prospects for science, research and development as a result of the Free Trade Agreement. One only needs to refer to a couple of the tools that one might use to improve science research and development. One is to use strategic procurement. Under the Free Trade Agreement we could use strategic procurement if we were going to encourage research in the United States. We cannot say that we are going to provide that contracts be let to Canadian companies in order that they can develop the technology for Canadian purposes and have it directed to Canadian companies.

Where does research occur in this country? It occurs among Canadian-owned companies that are worth less than $150 million. The vast majority of research occurs in companies of such size. Northern Telecom is the only company in the whole country that invests more than $300 million a year in research. There are 21 such companies in the United States. We have said that any company in Canada worth less than $150 million can be acquired without review. If they develop new technology, that technology can be bought by the Americans without review, and the technology and the jobs go to the United States. But then, of course, we use subsidies. We are in the process of negotiating away those subsidies. What are we left with as the means and the levers for developing industrial research and development in this country? We have very little.

In the Throne Speech I had hoped to see some reference and suggestions as to what the Government might do to change this dreadful situation where we are falling further and further behind those countries with which we must compete.

I wish you were not rising now, Mr. Speaker, because I want to talk about what the Government is going to do to the transfer payments, and what it is going to do to the universities to make them even worse off than they are now. I know that you are interested in the subject.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I enjoy listening to the Hon. Member. However, I regret that his time has expired.

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): I commend the Hon. Member on an excellent speech. In some aspects he touched on research and development. I would like to ask him his views on education. The Government has not made a solid commitment to education, especially when it comes to the issue of transfer payments to the provinces. In our view, every dollar that the federal Government puts toward education should go toward education. In the past, it has been the practice of the provinces that that money put toward education never goes toward education. In fact, it goes toward other programs.

What is the policy of the hon. member's Party vis-a-vis the transfer payments? What is his Party's policy toward education?

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): I know that you are very pleased, Mr. Speaker, that you will have an opportunity to be further edified.

There are two aspects of universities that are at issue. The Hon. Member referred to the operating support for universities through transfer payments, which is established program funding. The Government has cut this at a time when all of us in the House, who had given any thought at all to the situation in the universities, were saying that those transfer payments for post-secondary education should not be cut. Instead, action should be taken to ensure that the provinces paid their fair share, and that enough was provided at both levels of Government to ensure that there would be opportunity for our youth in the universities to prepare themselves for the technological future, and a future based on research and development used in a sustainable environmental manner.

There is also the issue of university research. What the Government and the Government before it has allowed to happen in universities is catastrophic. At the moment I am not going to dwell on the extraordinary debts incurred by students to go to university, but it is a shame that they should go into debt to go to second rate universities because the Government has failed to meet its responsibilities. Universities which cannot pursue research of high quality are losing its scientists because the Government has not paid any attention to the advice of its own National Advisory Committee on Science and Research which has stated that the amount of money provided to the granting councils of the universities should be doubled, and doubled within two years. That is how urgent the need is. Subsequently, the rate of increase in investment in university research should be 1.5 times the rate of increase in the gross domestic product.

• (1700)

What this Government is doing to the future of Canada is a disgrace. It is a tragedy, and we face bad times if we think that we are going to provide jobs in this country as a branch plant economy dependent upon other country's technology for producing jobs here. Japan, the United Kingdon, France, Germany and the U.S.A. are not doing research and development to produce jobs in Canada. We have to do that ourselves.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Humboldt (Mr. Hovdebo).

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, the Government has spent a lot of time and effort recently trying to convince us that we can depend on the private sector to take over the research and development which they are cutting out of the public sector. We have a lot of good examples of this; the reduction in funding to the National Research Council and other areas. Why do you say that the private sector will not take over that load from the public sector?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I just said a moment ago that we do not expect the Japanese, the Germans, the French or the English to make investments in research and development to produce jobs in Canada. One of this country's biggest problems is the very high proportion of industry owned by foreign investors. What have we done? We have ensured that an even higher percentage of our key industrial enterprises will be opened up to the Americans and what prospects we might had of development and research in those areas.

Inevitably government has a role in its research laboratories, the National Research Council, albeit in co-operation with industry but not too short-sightedly so, to advance research and development and to fill the gap that is not filled by that big portion of industry which is foreign controlled, but what is happening? This Government unleashed an attack on the scientific establishment in government, the NRC has been robbed of funding, robbed of a mission and has become demoralized. This is something all of us hear constantly. There has to be a reorganization of the direction of a reasonable mission for government.

Having had this whole general area of government opened up to advance research and development, one of the things that was suggested last year to which both sides of this House agreed was to have a national mission in research and development akin to the space mission in the United States. It was in fact a government-commissioned study that showed that pursuing a hydrogen fuel mission for Canada would operate on Canada's comparative advantages, and would make it possible within Canada to get the same kind of push in the direction of increased R&D that space research provided in the United States.

What did they do? It should not be such a surprise that they got a little thing going there in Québec ignoring Alberta almost completely, and we have no true hydrogen mission in this country. Right now another interesting thing has happened. Lumonics was involved hydrogen research. It has now been discovered that by using surface catalysis, one can bring about the fusion of deuterium nuclei, and hence produce energy from that process. This is simple and unintensive technologically. Scientists say it is elegant as compared to sophisticated. What that means is that the tools are simple, and brains count a lot.

Something has happened which makes it possible for Canada at the same starting line to enter the race for practical hydrogen fusion technology. One would have thought that the Government would have embarked on a serious effort to test the practicability of this new technology if the experiment has been confirmed, and my understanding is that it has been. I wrote to the Minister and I suggested that the Minister take that initiative, but I do not expect much, we have had so little so far.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are terminated. Debate.

Mrs. Louise Feltham (Wild Rose): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a pleasure for me to speak to this House today in support of the Speech from the Throne which outlines our goals for the future of Canada. The Throne Speech set out five main objectives through which this Government plans to build a strong and a united country. Our plan calls for the building of a stronger economy, for the protection of our environment, for a caring and compassionate society, for the fostering of values that make Canada unique, and for a commitment to national unity. I believe the implementation of these objectives and the challenge we face together will not only strengthen our Government but the people of Canada as a whole.

Today I would like to have had the time to comment on all of these objectives. However, with time constraints, I will be limiting my comments to the one issue that I feel must be of prime importance if we are to be successful with the remaining four objectives.

I refer to the national debt. The people of Alberta and the people of Canada are growing more and more concerned about the increasing national debt. Since 1984, this Conservative Government has made a concerted effort to control that debt and has lowered the deficit in a slow but steady way. However, now it is time for stronger measures, and virtually everyone, politicians of all stripes, 89 per cent of Canadians, business leaders, even social groups, agree that something should be done to reduce the $29 billion a year deficit and the build up of the federal debt which now totals approximately $320 billion.

The Throne Speech offers Canadians from sea to sea a vision of the future, a vision of Canada that is confident, unified and strong. It is a vision of Canada that holds a unique identity among nations, a Canada that leads the world community with new ideas. It is a vision of Canada that is vibrant and progressive but also caring and compassionate.

• (1710)

As a country and as individuals, we as Canadians have achieved much over the years, but now it is time to build for the future, to attain this vision, and to eradicate our national debt.

Why is the deficit a problem? It is often said that a deficit can be used to stimulate a weak economy and essentially this is true if it is used only over a short time. However, when it is used indiscriminately and over a long term it becomes a millstone that makes it virtually impossible for a Government to function effectively. That is where we are headed.

The number one threat to Canada's future is our national debt. Large government deficits mean higher interest rates. It means less investment and fewer jobs. Each year that there is a deficit, the debt grows. That means more and more money must be spent to pay interest on the debt.

Today, 31 cents out of every dollar spent by the federal Government goes to paying interest on our debt. In the long run this affects the ability of this Government, or any other Government, to provide the programs and the services that we as Canadians have come to appreciate.

Some Hon. Members have expressed a fear for the future of our social programs. I also have a fear that our social programs will suffer if we do not work to lower the deficit. For instance, at the present time the Government spends more money on interest payments than on old age security, guaranteed income supplements, spouses' allowance, housing, health, education, and family allowances, all combined.

I am sure we are all in agreement that the time for action is now. We must secure our social programs for the future. Democracy itself may be the reason for the rise in government spending, a government response to the ever-increasing demand for public goods and public services.

Increased government spending is a reflection of our response to events in society, to our social obligations, and to our political pledges to each other. From money paid to parents of a new child to cheques paid each month to senior citizens, the spending activities of government touch every part of our lives from the time we are born until death. We eat bread produced with taxpayers' dollars. We wear clothing made by companies aided by grants. We live in homes financed by publicly backed mortgage funds.

Government spending helps us when we are sick. It provides the opportunity for education and it supports us when we are jobless. In Canada, government balance sheets are not simply facts and figures, a listing of contributions and distributions, they are a result of our collective wants. There is increasing pressure on political leaders to provide their citizens with these wants. The political reality is, however, that deficit reduction does not make good politics. However, I and a majority of Canadians know that something has to be done, and done now.

The public has now become aware of the implications of continuous overspending. It has elected this Government to ensure that the brakes are applied. This does not mean that our job will be an easy one. We must be decisive in our approach to debt reduction and we must educate our citizens on why it is necessary.

We know that not everyone will agree with the policies that are laid down, but it will be our job to ensure the transition between what was thought to be an endless amount of money and control of the national debt be thoughtfully proceeded with. This Government is fully aware that not everyone will agree with the policies that are laid down. I believe in this Government and its ability to rectify the situation. I believe that it has the capability to turn these dark times into good, sound economic times and restore a balance to government financing.

In Alberta there are 26 constituencies and today we have 24 Conservative Members in the House of Commons. Many people would have us believe that the Conservative rode to victory on the back of free trade. That may have been one of the reasons, but the reduction of the national debt most assuredly carried as much importance, especially in my riding, as did the free trade debate. I know from listening to the people of my riding that the grass roots re-elected this Government because they know that the national debt is the number one problem in this country and that this Government would, at the beginning of its mandate, take strong measures to attack that national debt.

How do we reconcile these two objectives: the national debt and a caring and a compassionate Government? Is it possible to bridge that gap? We have spoken about bridging a gap when we refer to a relationship between a parent and a child or between a reporter and a newspaper, but now we are looking at it between deficits and social programs.

Will those two become reconcilable, and where? On April 27, when my hon. colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), brings in the Budget, I know that all considerations will have been given to these complex issues. We will still be considered a Government which is compassionate and caring, but a Government which is strong enough to face the realities of its responsibility. Canadians have told this Government that it is time to bring the national debt under control. This is the year, not next year, not two years from now, but on April 27, 1989.

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Wild Rose (Mrs. Feltham) on her speech and her description of the importance of deficit reduction. Indeed I come from a riding in Alberta, and there it was the number one issue throughout the entire election campaign. My colleague also spoke about the Free Trade Agreement, but deficit reduction was number one out where I come from.

• (1720)

It is interesting to note that in 1967 when the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau came into power, the debt was sitting at $18 billion and when he left it was at $220 billion. In fact, it was growing at approximately 24 per cent per year.

We did tackle the debt in 1984. We were able to cut our spending and bring the deficit down from about $38.7 billion to $28.9 billion. We talked about rising interest rates. Rising interest rates will not control inflation. We simply have to lower the deficit and the debt.

What my colleague said was pretty interesting. She said that 31 cents on every dollar the federal Government takes in, in revenues, goes to service this debt, and she was quite right. If we do not tackle it now, that will go up and up.

I want the Hon. Member to comment on one area. She spoke about a strong and united Canada and a national unity. Just prior to her speaking, I heard members of the Liberal Party talking about forward thinking programs and how they would unite Canada.

I wonder if my colleague might refresh the memories of our Liberal colleagues about what happened in 1981 with a program called the National Energy Program which zeroed in on one industry in particular and what happened to Western Canada under those forward thinking policies. Those policies devastated us. I would ask the the Hon. Member for Wild Rose what she has to say about what happened to Alberta and indeed to western Canada under that forward thinking program.

Mrs. Feltham: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question. When she said it was devastating, she summed it up and I do not think I can add anything further to that. The effect it had on Alberta was devastating.

Mr. Harb: Mr. Speaker, we all worry about the deficit and about putting government spending under control. Not one single Hon. Member here disagrees with some sort of control. The question is how to do this. Do we cut baby bonuses? Do we cut unemployment insurance? What programs do we tackle in order to reduce the deficit?

We in the Liberal Party introduced a package during the election campaign. We spoke about reducing the deficit through job creation, through infrastructure programs, through retraining programs, through investment in research and development, through investment in education, through combating illiteracy. Because of illiteracy by itself, company after company in the private sector has indicated that they are losing in the vicinity $10 billion annually.

The Government should be looking at those things. It is dandy to be talking about cutting the deficit, but there are other means available to the Government in terms of investment in the future of our children, investment in research and development, investment in education and investment in employment retraining, particularly for those who are in their forties and early fifties. We are interested in seeing the Government do something about those kinds of investments, and we will be watching fairly closely to see what will be done.

Dealing with the environment, if the past four years is any indication of what this Government will do, we are in for a rough ride. Of course Canadians voted for the Conservatives, but did they give a majority to the Conservatives in terms of popular vote? No, over 50 per cent of the people of Canada did not vote for Conservative programs and did not go along with the Conservative's ideas.

One must reflect on what we are doing for the future of Canada and what we are investing in the future of our children. We must talk about economic development. Trade by itself is a flashy issue. However, when talking about trade, a very important issue is putting infrastructure in place.

Look at what will happen to the infrastructure of Canada over the next 10 years. In the United States, infrastructure is the number one issue. The United States Government is trying to address that issue. What are we doing here in Canada in terms of investment in infrastructure or sewage treatment plants which, since 1984, have had not one penny put into them? Through one single area, investment in infrastructure, we can generate hundreds of thousands of jobs.

I know that there are many people in this room with municipal backgrounds. I will be watching closely to see what they will do. When they were in municipal politics, they all spoke about government investment in infrastructure. Now we will see delivery. Now we will see commitment.

It is great to talk about deficit reduction, but it is equally important to talk about productivity, education and training for older employees.

I did not want to ask a question because I already know the answer. We have been given a whitewash for the past four years and I hope we will not be given the same whitewash over the next four years. I will wait patiently to see what kind of programs there will be for the environment, infrastructure, education and combating illiteracy. Those are the four important issues I would like to see the Government do something about.

The future does not look too bright. We can tighten the belt, but it is important to make sure that we do not cut our throats at the same time.

Canada is a leading nation in the industrialized world. We have to maintain that role. We must carry on, and we can only carry on by investing in the future of Canadians. We can only carry on by investing in education.

Look at how much we are investing in education. Look at the number of people in Canada who are functionally illiterate. One in every five is considered illiterate.

Mr. Andre: We will be deaf too if you don't tone it down.

Mr. Harb: This is the area we have to tackle. We have to stop talking. It is time to start acting. I am not sure that there is any action. I am not seeing it.

Mr. Andre: There are microphones. You don't have to yell.

Mr. Harb: It is very challenging. I have yet to hear one single speech—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would like to hear the comments of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Andre: From the parking lot.

Mr. Harb: Thank you, Harvie. I have heard speech after speech dealing with deficit cutting. I have yet to hear one single speech focusing on productivity. Those are the things we must concentrate on. It is not important at all to talk, it is far more important to invest in order to produce. The private sector knows that. We always talk about the private sector. We should bring the private sector into a partnership with the federal Government so that the Government may learn from it.

I have been involved in research and development—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe that questions and comments are now terminated and that we can call it 5.30.

• (1730)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5.30 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 50(5), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the subamendment. Accordingly, the question is on the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Riis.

Mr. Riis moved:

That the amendment be amended by adding the following words:

"and, specifically, that the House regrets the failure of the Government to provide adequate resources to deal with environmental crises and accidents; to regulate and enforce environmental laws; to monitor the state of our air, lands and waters; and to provide national standards of environmental protection".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the subamendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the subamendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment, which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the amendment to the amendment lost.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If you were to test the House, you may find unanimous consent to apply the vote we just had to this vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Therefore I will declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we may agree to apply the vote taken on the subamendment to the amendment, but we would like to hear whose amendment we are voting on and what happened exactly. Let us stick to procedure. I think the amendment has to be put to the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Mr. Turner, seconded by Mr. Gray (Windsor West) moved:

That this House regrets that Your Excellency's advisors continue to show indifference toward the economic and social well-being of lower and middle-income Canadians and contempt for Canadian democratic institutions by dishonouring commitments to the Canadian people with regard to the implementation of the Canada-U.S. trade deal, by abandoning Canadian farm, fisheries and forest workers, by ignoring the dangerous acceleration of concentration of corporate power, by refusing to act properly and firmly to assure public access to and the safety of the Canadian transportation system, by abdicating responsibility for health care, housing and senior citizens, by failing to protect the rights of minorities across Canada, by deserting the federal role in research, technological and economic development, and by circumventing the authority of the House of Commons with regard to the expenditure of public moneys and by presenting Parliament a program empty of anything save a clear desire to dismantle the Canadian social safety net while imposing an oppressive and inequitable fiscal regime.

The House divided on the amendment, which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Therefore, I declare the amendment lost on division.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Point of order—

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Which one of the heavy hitters should I recognize?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, talking about heavies, I would not use that word—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, you did say "lost on division". I would like you to know that we did vote and the recorded vote said that we had indeed voted for that amendment—

Some Hon. Members: And lost.

Mr. Gauthier: —and lost, but not on division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 6.05 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6.05 p.m.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

TABLING OF "SUCCESS IN THE WORKS"

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 32(2), I have the honour to table in the House in both official languages this Government's labour force development strategy entitled "Success in the Works".

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise this morning pursuant to Standing Order 33 to inform the House of the Government's new labour force development strategy.

A few moments ago I tabled two documents entitled "Success in the Works", a policy paper and a background paper on Canada's emerging workforce. These documents outline the policy and the rationale behind the labour force development strategy.

[Translation]

This strategy, Mr. Speaker, is aimed at preparing Canadians for the labour market of the 1990's so as to ensure that they will be able to adapt to an evolving work environment.

[English]

It is our goal to encourage in Canada a training ethic within the private sector. We will do this through a national skills development advisory board to provide us with guidance on the needs of the private sector, by increasing funding for greater human resource planning and selected industries and sectors and occupational associations and individual firms by doubling the funding for the industrial adjustment service which helps workers and their companies face technological change, major expansion or closure, and by increasing funding for the Community Futures Program which is now helping 201 small communities plan their own solutions to counter changing market conditions.

Through the labour force development strategy we will place a greater priority on entry level training by taking immediate steps to improve the apprenticeship program, quadrupling our support for co-operative education, and designing a new program for entry level training in emerging skill requirements.

[Translation]

We are also asking the provinces to match increased federal funding for programs which provide job skills training for social assistance recipients and so improve the job prospects of an additional 20,000 people on social assistance.

[English]

Another area where the Government can help unemployed Canadians is through the Unemployment Insurance Program. We intend to shift its focus from one of passive support to an active response built around training and job readiness. Unemployment insurance recipients will now have access to training programs and employment and counselling services earlier in their claim. Funding under Section 26 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, the fundamental training tool of the.program, will be doubled. Unemployment insurance claimants with viable business plans will be able to capitalize their benefits to help defray business start-up costs.

[Translation]

When older workers lose their jobs, they face a much more difficult time returning to the workforce. They will benefit from the programs I just mentioned and from increased funding to employers who hire and retrain displaced workers.

We also intend to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act to make it more equitable, so that it reflects the changing work patterns of Canadians and responds to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

[English]

We will be proposing amendments to provide more flexible sickness and maternity benefits, more generous parental benefits, and extended coverage for the growing number of Canadians who choose to work beyond the age of 65. At the same time, the Government will be addressing fundamental concerns about the Unemployment Insurance Program.

The current minimum qualifying requirements in Canada's Unemployment Insurance Program will be extended from 10 to 14 weeks, to 10 to 20 weeks, depending on regional unemployment rates. In areas where unemployment remains high the qualifying period will not change. Also, we will eliminate the current repeater provisions to improve access to benefits for seasonal workers. However, we propose to increase the penalties for workers who quit without just cause, refuse a suitable job or are fired for misconduct.

Finally, the Government proposes to strengthen considerably the penalties for fraudulent use of the UI program by claimants and employers. Let me assure Hon. Members that there is no question of removing the unemployment insurance safety net for those who truly need it. At the same time, Canadians want a program and particularly the unemployed want a program that helps workers move back into the workforce.

The labour force development strategy will integrate income support for employment services with labour market programs and it will encourage greater private sector involvement. I will be tabling in the House the necessary amending legislation on the Unemployment Insurance Act in late June. I am confident that Members of both this House and of the Senate will study it with great care and will provide Government with their advice and support. Until that time, I will be continuing to consult with other partners, with business, with labour and with provincial Governments, all of which have a share in the future of the opportunities we are trying to build, on how we can best help prepare Canadians and help Canadians prepare themselves for the changes that are coming in the workplace of the future.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, in 1984 and again in 1988 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said he would not cut social programs, that social programs were a sacred trust. Today, once again, the Prime Minister has broken his word with this savage attack on the unemployment insurance system.

The Government is taking $1.3 billion out of the unemployment insurance fund and has not said how many workers will be affected, how many will lose their benefits, how many will go without unemployment insurance, and it has not said what regions will be most hurt by this policy. It is interesting to note that between 1984 and 1989, employment and training programs were cut by 30 per cent by the Government, from $2.2 billion in 1984 when the Liberals left power to $1.5 billion this year, 1989. That was a reduction of $700 million.

This morning the Minister announced that she is putting $800 million back into training programs, almost the same amount her Government took out during the last five years. Over the last five years, the Government created a severe problem in the area of training and skills development and now it is fixing this problem by going back to where we were in 1984. Unfortunately, the major difference and the great inequity in this plan is the manner of paying for these training programs.

In the past and up until today, labour market planning, development and training was paid out of the general tax revenue because these programs benefited the whole community. Now they will be paid for out of the unemployment insurance fund; that is, by the workers and by employer contributions. What does this mean? It means that all workers will pay for training without any assurance that they will benefit from that training. It means that labour-intensive industries will subsidize training for high-tech industries which are often capital intensive. It means that the slow growth regions of Canada will help subsidize the high growth regions. Workers in Atlantic Canada will help subsidize the development of high-skilled training in Toronto, for example. It means that low-paid service workers will help pay for the training of high-tech workers.

Under the present unemployment insurance program, workers and firms pay into a fund knowing that the money will come back to them in the form of benefits if they became unemployed, sick or pregnant. Now, under this proposal, they have no assurance that the money paid in will come back to them in their own regions.

For example, according to the program, $230 million will go for a national skills development advisory board. That is a good thing. It is a board that will give advice to the Government on skills development. However, I would have thought that this would have already been done by the civil servants in the Minister's own Department. This probably means that the Government will be rehiring the people who gave that advice in the past but who were fired, laid off or let go, but they will be paid with unemployment insurance fund money rather than general tax revenue.

Let us look at the $65 million for human resource planning. Again, it is a very good thing, but should that not have been done over the last four or five years? Once again, money will be used from the unemployment insurance fund, money that was available for workers when they were laid off, to pay for human resource planning within the Department of Employment and Immigration.

This proposal raises many questions which are unanswered. For example, will the Unemployment Insurance Commission control these new programs that come under the unemployment insurance program including resource development, the futures program and the like? Will they fall within the ambit of the Commissioners of the Unemployment Insurance Commission? What about part-time workers, a growing percentage of the workforce? How will they be affected by this policy?

A more serious issue is the half-baked approach to this proposal. It is half-baked because it is a proposal to take unemployment insurance money and use it for training skilled workers, but there is no policy to insure work for these workers and no policy to ensure that the work is more equitably distributed in all regions of the country. A labour force development strategy must be combined with a full employment policy, with an industrial strate gy, with an effective regional development policy, a policy for research and development and a policy for post-secondary education. The program announced this morning says nothing of those things.

It is interesting to note that only a few years ago during the last Parliament, through Bill C-96 the Government again savagely cut back on assistance for post-secondary education, programs which go in the same direction as training programs that are talked about in this policy. The Government will train workers, but it is not sure how they will benefit or how they will find employment. Will there be jobs for them in places other than the Golden Horseshoe area around Toronto? How will we ensure that these workers who will be trained will find jobs?

We must recognize that the great growth in jobs since 1984 has been in the service sector where there is low pay, no unions and low benefits. What does this program do for those workers, particularly for those who work over 15 hours a week and must pay into the unemployment insurance fund? Those numbers are growing. How will they benefit from this program? It seems to me that these workers will be subsidizing others' training programs.

Nor has the Government explained how those who are cut off unemployment insurance will pay for their groceries and rent while unemployed. It is clear that the Government is shifting this burden to the provinces, but it has not yet consulted with the provinces with respect to this program and it has made no commitment to the provinces to help them pick up this burden which will have to be covered by the social assistance programs of the provinces.

This is another example of Tory flimflam politics. Before the election, the Tories had the deficit under control and were spending money like profligate children. They promised $22 billion in commitments in the pre-electoral period. They spent over $100 million in the Lac-Saint-Jean byelection. They poured hundreds of millions of dollars into the Manicouagan riding in the years prior to the election. They did this with the biggest tax grab in Canadian history. Now, all of a sudden, after the election, there is a crisis with the deficit. Who is the first to pay the bill? It is the Canadian worker and his unemployment insurance fund.

Interparliamentary Delegation Report

Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said, and I quote, "There is absolutely nothing that will prevent the Government of Canada from maintaining all its social programs, all its regional economic expansion programs, absolutely nothing! We absolutely will maintain all our social programs in full."

Mr. Speaker, once again, the Prime Minister has forgotten his promises and attacked Canadian workers with this policy of cutting unemployment insurance.

[English]

I make a commitment today that we in the Liberal Party will fight against this plan with all the resources at our disposal. The Government is in for the fight of its life!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We in this House of Commons have just witnessed one of the largest thefts in Canadian history. After the last election, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised Canadians they would be protected from the worst effects of free trade. The Government promised it would provide adjustment and training programs for people who lost their jobs. Well, the Dalton Gang of Brian and Michael and Barbara have just strapped on their six-guns and ridden into town to loot the Unemployment Insurance Commission vault.

Canadian workers do not object to paying their UIC premiums because they know it is an insurance policy and insurance fund that will guarantee them some dignity if they lose their jobs. With this program, this Government is robbing Canadians of that dignity. The Department has admitted that many Canadians will lose 10 weeks or more of benefits, even in places where unemployment is 10 per cent. Thousands of Canadians who can claim unemployment insurance today will not be able to after this program is passed. Thousands of Canadians will see their claims expire and be forced on to welfare, which will be an additional cost to the provinces of this country.

What is the Minister doing with the money she is looting from the unemployment insurance fund? Well, she is going to make more money available for parental benefits. The Government deserves no credit for this. It is being forced into this by the courts, not because itwants to or thinks it is right. It proved that when it appealed the court's decision to grant parental benefits.

The Minister says they are going to use some of the money to encourage "the training ethic in the private sector". Why should unemployed people pay for an enhancement of the training ethic in the private sector? It is the failure of the training ethic in the private sector that created the problem of work shortages in the trades. Training ethic in the private sector, indeed.

The de Grandpré report had some ideas about encouraging training in the private sector. It called for a levy-grant system which would force business into injecting some of its own money into training. But this Government will never do that, not when it can steal money from working people. It is putting more money into what it describes as helping social assistance recipients.

I come from the Province of Saskatchewan where it seems this whole idea was hatched. I have seen how the government program works. What the Government is really talking about is forced labour, work for welfare, work or starve. Who are these people? They are the Canadians least able to protect themselves and most deserving of Government help.

I can tell this House that the raid on the unemployment insurance account is only the first raid. In the Department's report, it says:

> Changes to the way the unemployment insurance program is financed will be announced by the Minister of Finance in the forthcoming Budget.

That means the Government will stop paying for regional extended benefits. It will be shifting billions of dollars worth of costs from Government contributions to premium contributions. In other words, it will be taking its deficit reduction off the backs of working people as well as its training programs.

This is a betrayal of the working people of Canada, and there is no way that the New Democratic caucus can support this.

SENIOR CITIZENS COMMISSION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-219, an Act respecting senior citizens.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to establish a senior citizens' commission to study and identify the needs of senior citizens in Canada. The commission would make recommendations to the Governor in Council with respect to the needs of senior citizens. We recognize that advances have been made in providing for seniors in Canada. There is much more that could be done and should be done. This would be a way to accomplish that.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ARCTIC WATERS POLLUTION PREVENTION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-220, an Act to amend the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: The purpose of this Bill is to transfer to the Minister of the Environment responsibility for the operation of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act. By Order in Council dated May 14, 1971, pursuant to Section 28 of the Act, the Governor in Council delegated certain of its powers under the Act to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the Minister of Transport. This Bill would transfer those powers to the Minister of the Environment in an effort to get more environmental consideration of developments in the North.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA WATER PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-221, an Act to protect water in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: The purpose of this Bill is to protect Canada's waters. This Bill would not only protect the water in Canada but would forbid the export of water in Canada by inter-basin transfers. This was an item of considerable debate in the last number of months. With the passing of this Bill, inter-basin transfer of water would be no more.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FRUIT, VEGETABLES AND HONEY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-222, an Act to amend the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act (country of origin).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Ms. Hunter: The purpose of this Bill is to prohibit the sale of fruits and vegetables unless their country of origin is shown on the said fruits and vegetables, on their container, or a sign placed near them. Consumers could then make more informed choices about the type of purchases they make.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

WORKERS MOURNING DAY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-223, an Act respecting a day of mourning for persons killed or injured in the workplace.

Petitions

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Murphy: I rise today to introduce a Bill asking that April 28 of each year be designated as a day of mourning to honour all persons killed or injured in the workplace.

If this Bill passes we will recognize both the enormous numbers of people who are injured or killed while at work, and the great need for a new emphasis on health and safety in the workplace.

According to the latest Labour Canada statistics, one million people are injured in the workplace each year. Deaths from injury average nearly 1,000 each year.

Statistics for deaths that occur because of exposure to unhealthy working conditions are unavailable, because such deaths go largely unreported and uncompensated.

It is my sincere hope that the passage of this Bill will focus Canadian attention on the real need for greater workplace health and safety.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA SAFE DRINKING WATER ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches—Woodbine) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-224, an Act to protect and enhance the quality of drinking water in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Young: The purpose of this Bill is to protect and enhance drinking water quality in Canada. It provides opportunities for public involvement in making regulations and to set maximum permissible levels for contaminants and other substances in drinking water. The regulations would apply to both the public and private water systems.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches—Woodbine) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-225, an Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act (Staff of Members of the House of Commons).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Young: The purpose of this Bill is to provide equitable treatment to the staff of Members of the House of Commons, including the staff of the Speaker of the House of Commons, when their employment is lost as a result of Members ceasing to be Members, by according them the same priority to be appointed to the Public Service that employees in the following offices now enjoy: the office of a Minister, the office of the Leader of the Opposition, the office of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and the office of the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

PROTECTION OF HUMAN LIFE

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to humbly present to this House a petition from my fellow citizens who humbly declare that at this time, there is no law in Canada to protect the lives of unborn children from conception to birth. Because they believe in the sanctity of human life from conception, they also believe in the necessity of a just law to safeguard the right to life of the unborn child and the right to be protected while it grows until it is born. They believe that it is our duty to protect life and they also believe in faith in our future and that this can only be guaranteed by showing respect for life, from the unborn to the elderly. They also believe that families and other groups or communities have the duty to develop various forms of support and shelter to assist future mothers in need. They humbly ask Parliament to draft and pass a law to protect life from the moment of conception, a law that would seek to save the life of the mother and the child at the same time.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 on behalf of a number of Canadians who are concerned about the funding of post-secondary education.

The petitioners are of the opinion that the result of lack of proper educational funding has resulted in increased university tuition, over-crowding of classes, and deteriorating educational facilities. The petitioners believe that this results in Canadian students leaving post-secondary facilities with staggering debt loads. They ask Parliament to consider the advisability of increasing funding for post-secondary education in order to cover the real cost of maintaining accessible quality education for Canadians.

The Province of British Columbia does not provide any funding for post-secondary education, and relies totally on that which comes from the federal Government. This is obviously reneging on its commitment to post-secondary education.

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Monday, April 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her speech of the opening of the session.

The Address--Mr. Foster

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have this opportunity to join in the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I would like to speak about the agriculture industry in Canada since I believe that there is profound unease and concern with respect to exactly where the Government is going in terms of agriculture. The concern may have stemmed from the free trade deal which the Government passed last December and in commitments which the Government made with respect to removing oats from the control of the Canadian Wheat Board.

There is also concern with respect to the promise the Government made last November 10 concerning the provision of $850 million for drought payment. Most of those payments will not arrive until well beyond the seeding period this spring.

There is profound concern in the agriculture community with respect to exactly where the Government is going in all these areas. But perhaps the greatest concern is with respect to the question of free trade and the GATT negotiations. In looking at the document entitled: "Speech from the Throne" most farmers will find very little comfort. There are only three lines in it to suggest where the Government is going with regard to agriculture. It is stated in the document:

> Canada's efficient agricultural producers cannot compete fairly in a world in which trade-distorting subsidies wreak havoc with market disciplines, while bringing undue pressure to bear on the nation's treasury.

Surely, the Government should have more than this to say about the state of agriculture in Canada. It is interesting that one of the themes in the Speech from the Throne is " A Strong Economy". Yet there is no reference to agriculture in terms of that strong economy, even though 17 per cent of Canadians are involved in agriculture or the food processing industry in some way.

Under the theme "Preparing Canada's Future" there is no reference to Canadian agriculture. Under the theme "Jobs for Canadians" there was no reference to agriculture. I can understand why the Government did not want to discuss agriculture under this theme since just about a year ago there was a report that some 25,000 jobs in agriculture had been lost in the previous 12 months in western Canada alone. How much the figure is for the whole country is anyone's guess.

Under the theme "The Environmental Imperative" there is no reference to agriculture. Nor is there a reference to it under the theme "A Caring Nation". That is probably the greatest tip-off that the Government does not care and that it is certainly not concerned about the agony faced by thousands of Canadian farm families in terms of their debt and other problems.

Thus we are left under the theme "Canada's International Role" with the three-line reference to agriculture. Yet part of it is devoted to the suggestion that agriculture and farmers are an undue pressure on the Canadian Treasury.

The Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) announced out of the blue a few months ago that he was removing oats from under the control of the Canadian Wheat Board. That has to be one of the most damning decisions that any Minister has ever made. He certainly has been damned for it.

There are some 24 Canadian Wheat Board advisory groups across western Canada, groups which are elected by the producers themselves. It is interesting to note that at some 22 of the 24 public meetings held by the advisory committees it was demanded that oats be reinstated under the Canadian Wheat Board marketing system. It is also interesting to note that at 10 of the meetings it was demanded that the Minister of Grains and Oilseeds be replaced.

One can see how effective the Minister has been in persuading these 24 advisory committees across the West that his decision with regard to oats was a good one. Clearly, this has to be some type of a pay-off to those in western Canada who are opposed to the Wheat Board. They are smaller groups but they have been opposed to it for years in terms of orderly marketing. This is clearly a pay-off to the big multinational grain companies who want to see the small exporters and the small individual operators out of the business.

It is interesting to note that as members of my caucus held a number of meetings across western Canada with the grain producers it is not now only the small individual farmer who will be hurt by this decision but small private enterprise exporters who will also be hurt since they will now have a secure supply of oats to export into the special niche markets in the U.S. This is something which they now have. We will actually lose this type of orderly marketing.

In Oak Bluff, Manitoba, at the producer committee meeting some 117 voted to see oats remain under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board while 46 voted to have it removed.

Yet if we consider a place such as Wapella, Saskatchewan, we see that some 85 of those attending the Wheat Board Advisory Committee meeting voted to have oats reinstated—zero voted to do what the Minister wanted to do.

Clearly there is great unhappiness and concern with the Minister of Grains and Oilseeds and his cavalier method of removing oats from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board with very little support from the producers themselves. I have not heard anyone say that his approach was the right one especially since he did not consult with the prairie pools or other farm groups. Of course, he was soundly condemned by the pools as well as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture which, in a resolution, demanded that oats be maintained under the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board.

This document does little to reassure farmers of exactly where the Government is going. The Government may argue that it did not really want to spell out its neo-conservative agenda until after the Newfoundland election. This only creates more concern for farmers. The Government will not spell out exactly what it is doing with agriculture until later because of the political fall-out from Newfoundland or other parts of the country. So we have to wait until the Budget comes down later this month.

I believe that there is great concern as well regarding the Government's direction with regard to marketing boards. We argued during the election campaign that marketing boards would be incompatible with the free trade deal because when you remove tariffs on processed foods, it is not possible for the Canadian processing industry to compete with processed foods coming in from the U.S.

Clearly that is exactly what is happening. The Grocery Products Manufacturing Association met recently with some members of our caucus and said,"We simply cannot compete, we told you this before the election, we told you this before the free trade deal went through and we are telling you now that the Government has to get rid of marketing boards or we will have to move our processing industry to the United States."

I am sure that the strategy of the Government is to blame the grocery products manufacturers and to blame GATT for the destruction of the marketing boards.

We believe that that is a real threat. Clearly when you look at the de Grandpré Report, that is the direction in which they are heading. They are saying that we should establish a two-price system for our farm products, marketing commodities like poultry, turkey eggs and the dairy industry. If it is impossible to establish a two-priced marketing system, then they suggest that the quotas be increased. Mr. Speaker, that scenario will ultimately see the destruction of the whole marketing system which, I understand, farmers in Europe and the United States admire very much. They would like to have a system where they are paid on the basis of their cost of production, a formula price which guarantees them an adequate return for their investment, for their labour, for their management. It is a system which has served Canadian agriculture very well.

I suggest that if we hadn't had controlled commodities in dairy and poultry during the past three or four years when prices have been very low for many other farm commodities, the scene would have been much worse than it is today. But clearly the signals coming out from this Government, from the de Grandpré Report, from GATT are that the Government has put the whole question of farm marketing boards, Chapter 11 of GATT, on the negotiation table. Only time will tell, but certainly the signals are very bad.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is significant that the President of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, Don Knoerr, in a press statement on March 29, condemned the de Grandpré Report. He said in his press statements:

> It appears that the only concern expressed by the Council was that Canadian processors must be allowed to obtain their raw product at a price comparable to that in the United States.

He went on to say:

> It is hard to understand how the Advisory Council on Adjustment could, after listening to a few briefs from the processing sector, could conclude that the concerns raised by the Tariff Board were irrelevant, and that no consideration had to be given to measures that may be necessary to maintain a viable horticultural sector in this country.

Clearly the de Grandpré Commission Report was simply to say, we have to look after the processors, not the farmers, that is their problem. So I do not think, Mr. Speaker, there is a very great concern with where exactly this Government is going with regard to national farm marketing boards in this country.

I want to speak as well, Mr. Speaker, about the farm debt situation. Last year the agriculture committee made a number of recommendations with regard to this country's farm debt situation, and yet there was no reference at all to it in the Speech from the Throne. Our report last July indicated there was a $6 billion debt which could not be financed under current available Farm Credit Corporation programs, and yet in the Speech from the Throne we hear nothing.

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture put out a press statement a couple of days ago calling on the Government to be more concerned about the farm debt crisis. It pointed out that only $83 million of a $160 million fund established to assist farmers had been used, that only 253 Ontario farmers out of 1,148 that had gone before the Farm Debt Review Boards had received assistance, in spite of the fact that in 1988 farmers suffered a severe drought, hog prices were very low and interest rates increased dramatically.

We have seen very little action by the Government with regard to the debt situation in this country. We are now facing some of the highest real interest rates in the history of the country. With a 4 per cent inflation rate and a bank rate approaching 14 or 15 per cent, we are looking at real interest rates of around 8 to 10 per cent. Farmers cannot operate with real interest rates at that level.

So we are disappointed that the Speech from the Throne makes no provision for the farm debt situation, no new provisions for the very high interest rate that farmers face this year. The drought assistance will arrive too late and simply will not be of benefit to many producers. Furthermore, the Canadian Crop Drought Assistance Program, which was announced with great flourish last fall, has not been made available to farmers. Farmers have said that it has been one of the most confusing programs ever. Farmers were asked to make their application by March 15, but many of them had not received their application forms.

• (1200)

The headlines in many papers described the difficulties faced in that regard: "Drought Aid Assurances Ring Hollow for Farmers", "Drought Pay Disappoints". Those are just a few headlines from farm papers. Other headlines include: "Politicians Hear Drought Aid Frustrations", and, "Drought Aid Battle Drags On". Thewhole situation is untenable for agriculture in this country.

Therefore I want to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward—Hastings (Mr. Vanclief):

That the following words be added to the Address:

This House regrets that Your Excellency's advisers have failed to recognize the importance of agriculture to Canada's economy:

(1) by only making a three-line reference to agriculture in the Speech from the Throne implying that farmers are a drain on the national treasury;

(2) by removing oats from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board without consulting with, or obtaining the approval of, the major farm organisations thereby adding to concerns that the Board will eventually be dismantled;

(3) by taking a position in the Free Trade negotiations which will lead to a weakening, if not the destruction, of Canada's orderly marketing systems in the grain, poultry, dairy and horticultural sectors, and by not providing adequate adjustment programs as evidenced by the de Grandpré Report;

(4) by failing to commence negotiations with the U.S. on an agricultural subsidy code so that farmers will not face U.S. countervail at the whim of U.S. lobby groups such as is now threatening Canada's pork producers;

(5) by undermining the viability of the beef industry by allowing increasing amounts of "no roll" (ungraded) beef into Canada from the U.S.

(6) by not providing any new initiatives through the Farm Credit Corporation to cope with the farm debt crisis and high interest rates;

This amendment sets out our concerns with the Speech from the Throne and the lack of action by the Government in that regard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We will carry on with questions and comments while I look at the amendment.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I want to comment and ask a question of my friend, the Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), who has served many years in the House and has a special interest in agriculture.

Of course, as is his job, he was critical of the Throne Speech and the Government's policy toward agriculture. However, I note that he was rather temperate and certainly not vociferous in his criticism. In fact, it is probably fair to say that his comments were rather half-hearted. I think he knows that no government in the history of this country has made a commitment to western agriculture equivalent to what this current Government has done over the past four years. I think he will be aware of the continuing commitment that the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer)has made, coming forward with programs such as the Canadian Special Grains Programs I and II, which put $2.1 billion into the Canadian farm economy.

Now there is the Canadian Crop Drought Assistance Program, bringing another $850 million toward those producers in the country who have suffered as a result of the 1988 drought. It is an immensely complicated program that is taking time to put together. However, this is a situation where we have a choice between fairness and simplicity. In this case we are going to opt for fairness. We are going to do the program right to ensure that these moneys are distributed fairly and equitably across the country.

The Hon. Member talked about meetings of the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee that were held in various places across western Canada. I believe the purpose of those meetings was to discuss proposals for quota review, whether the method of allowing farmers delivery should be changed from an acreage base to one based on production. It is true that there was extraneous comment about the matter of oats being removed from the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board, but the thrust of those meetings was to do a quota review. In fact, 77 per cent of the producers in my area are absolutely against those proposals for review being put forward by the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee.

Does the Hon. Member and his Party favour those proposals for review which are being put forward by the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee? Does he feel that the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee is wrong in its recommendations, as indeed many producers feel the advisory committee was wrong in its criticism of the Minister in regard to the decision to remove oats from the jurisdiction of the Board?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia (Mr. Wilson) outlines that the meetings with the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee were held for a number of reasons. There can be no question about the general trend of those Wheat Board meetings when resolutions to reinstate oats under the Canadian Wheat Board marketing systems were passed at 22 out of 24 of the meetings, and resolutions calling for the resignation of the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds were passed at 10 meetings.

In all the years I have been a Member in the House of Commons I do not recall an advisory committee to a Minister and the Wheat Board, a committee that iselected by individual producers in an area, passing a resolution to get rid of the Minister whose agency it is supposed to be advising.

For instance, at the Weyburn meeting in the Hon. Member's area in southern Saskatchewan, a resolution that oats be kept under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board was overwhelmingly passed, with only five voting against it. I believe there were 160 at that meeting and there was overwhelming support. I do not believe there could be any question about whether the vast majority of those producers were opposed to the proposal.

The Minister argues that oats represent a very small volume of the total exports of the Canadian Wheat Board. The concern is not only with the actual decision itself, which tends to favour the Minister's friends in multinational grain companies, but with the process. The Wheat Board represents a group of 140,000 to 150,000 producers. Surely it is a decision that should be made jointly with those producers, rather than by the Minister with whom there was no consultation, according to the prairie pool members whom we met. There was certainly no approval, and that is suggested in my amendment.

I believe the Minister is attempting to make some kind of pay-off or provide a benefit to his friends who are opposed to the whole system of orderly marketing, and to his friends in the multinational grain companies. It is not a decision that is flowing up from the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee. Members of the advisory committee say that in the past couple of years, the Minister has never even attended one of those meetings. If he were to take this action, one would think he would at least consult with his own advisory committee. It is not appointed by him but by the individual producers throughout the prairie region. The advisory board should have a valuable input for the Minister. It is now being given through public meetings held this spring, but the Board should have been able to give it directly to the Minister before he made his decision.

• (1210)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I know how important this topic is so I will allow a very short supplementary question from the Hon. Member and a very short answer.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I am concerned that the wrong impression may be left by the Hon. Member, who knows full well that major farm organizations in Western Canada including the barley growers, the Western Canadian Wheat Growers,the United Grain Growers and indeed, many, many thousands of pool members, in fact support the Minister's decision.

This is a question which was open. There were arguments on both sides. The Minister made a decision. The Hon. Member criticises the Government for not putting a policy into the Throne Speech. Now that policy is in fact laid out by the Minister the Hon. Member is critical of it.

I would like to repeat the question I asked the Hon. Member which he failed to answer in his long-winded response. What is the position of the Hon. Member and of the Liberal Party in so far as quota review is concerned? That was the purpose of the Wheat Board meetings about which he is speaking.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member thinks that that is the way for the Government to make decisions with regard to the Canadian Wheat Board, that tells us exactly why Canadian farmers are very concerned. That is why the Government did not have a lot of support in many areas of Canada on its free trade deal. The people are concerned that the U.S. Government is putting pressure on the Canadian Government to get rid of the Wheat Board. It may become just one more token for the Minister to pass on to Carla Hills, proving that they are doing something to get rid of the Canadian Wheat Board.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, I did not see the Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Humboldt (Mr. Hovdebo) rising. If he has a very short question, I will entertain it. Otherwise, the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the amendment that the Hon. Member put before the House is a limited litany of the shortcomings of the agricultural policy of the Government. I wonder why he did not include in it the fact that the Government has made no move to establish an income security policy which would give some security to Canadian farmers right across Canada.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is impossible, in one amendment, to cover every conceivable problem facing Canadian agriculture. Clearly the Hon. Member for Saskatoont-Humboldt (Mr. Hovdebo) has raised an important issue, one with which I hope the parliamentary committee will deal.

The items I mentioned in my amendment are just some of the most urgent problems with agriculture. Clearly the question of stabilization and income supportis an important one, but I did not add it to this list. There are many other items I could have added as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. In reviewing the amendment, I find it to be in order and I shall accept it.

Mr. René Soetens (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise today to address my colleagues in this House. Of course, the subject of my participation is the debate on the Speech from the Throne delivered by Her Excellency, the Governor General.

In order to participate in this debate, something which I clearly wanted to do, I had to go through a rather intensive job interview, much like all of us here in this House, for a period of some 51 days. I was in competition with four other candidates. In the end, the residents of Ontario riding, the voters, chose me as their voice here in this House.

As a new Member of Parliament for Ontario riding which is made up of the three municipalities of Ajax, Pickering and Whitby, it has been my displeasure to listen to those members of the Opposition here in this House, members of provincial legislatures across Canada and reactionaries across Canada continuously attack the prosperity that we in central Canada enjoy. Yes, my riding, Ontario, is sharing in that prosperity.

I could raise numerous responses to all of those reactionary comments, but I think it is sufficient to point out that during the last four years, Conservatives from Ontario supported the Government in its actions to correct the injustices foisted upon the regions of Canada by the Liberal Government of the previous 16 years.

More significant, however, is the point that when the Liberals were in the process of destroying the fabric of Canada during the 1970s and the early 1980s, Conservatives from Ontario sang a common refrain with Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament from across Canada in opposition. We were the only national Party speaking for Canada. Now, this Speech from the Throne reflects the continuing reality: the Progressive Conservative Party is still the only national Party.

I have listened to my colleagues on the government side relate the good things in the Throne Speech that will be received by their ridings back home. It comes as no surprise to me that the constituents of an Ontario riding have a very similar perspective. During the recent election campaign, I talked about the problems of the deficit, even if my opponents did not want to. In fact, they made spending promises as though we did not even have a debt, never mind a deficit.

At a recent public forum I had with my constituents less than two weeks ago, 80 per cent of the people present wanted the Government to reduce the deficit, to make programs more responsive to those areas in need and to take whatever steps are necessary to accomplish that goal. Yes, central Canada is very active, but I think it rather naive of people to think that inflationary pressures in central Canada will not affect them in their regions.

I would refer Hon. Members to an article in this morning's financial section of the Globe and Mail. It deals with a report by Statistics Canada, and I would like to quote one paragraph from it: "The price of new houses in Vancouver rose faster in February than in any other major city in Canada including Toronto, Statistics Canada reported". I caution all Hon. Members, if they think they are immune to inflation, to watch out.

• (1220)

Just ask the fireman, the policeman, the electrician, the steelworker or any other unionised employee if they are prepared to work for less in your part of Canada when the negotiation process they believe in and participate in clearly uses comparisons to lever their salaries up. Ask the banks, the civil service and corporations which have offices across Canada how difficult it is to promote people who live in the regions because they cannot afford to bring them to Ontario. Do you really believe that people in my riding with large $100,000, $150,000 or $200,000 mortgages can afford high rates any better than people in other ridings, or that small business in an Ontario riding is not affected by the bank rate? Of course it hurts, but at least this Government is trying to do something about it.

In the late 1970s and early 1980s, the Liberal Government of the day did nothing but spend money while mortgages increased or rose to 20 per cent and 21 per cent levels. All they did was spend, spend, spend, while farmers were evicted, businesses of all kinds went broke and homes were repossessed across Canada.

Need I remind this House of the infamous Finance Minister from Cape Breton whose Budget in the early 1980s was so bad that it had 49 amendments within months and was soon thereafter cancelled? His reward was to lead the Liberals in the Senate. The deficit must be reduced, and the Speech from the Throne clearly indicates that it will be.

In Ontario riding, we have very low unemployment levels. It hovers around 4 per cent, yet as can be witnessed in the local media, there are numerous jobs available. I have a copy of one of the newspapers distributed in the local media. It is called the News Advertiser. It is not known for its job opportunities advertising, but I have four pages of ads listing jobs that are available. Let me read some of the jobs that are available in my riding. This is just a sample. A nuclear medicine technologist; a landscape carpenter; a landscape maintenance foreman; kitchen staff and preparation cooks; journeymen; millwrights; management trainees; financial analysts; sales secretaries; drivers; production workers in the marine industry; menu clerks; hair stylists; receptionists; telemarketers; machine operators; accounting manager; assemblers; photographers; journalists; maintenance mechanics; electricians; mechanics. There are jobs for students. There are jobs for mature people. There are full-time jobs. There are part-time jobs. There are even jobs available, subject to retraining, for members of the Opposition when they are defeated in the next election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Soetens: It is too easy to collect unemployment insurance, and this program clearly needs to be responsive. It is not the role of the unemployment insurance fund to support people who do not want to work. If the money were used to retrain people to meet the job skills that are required, this 4 per cent level could be reduced even further. This comment was written prior to the speech this morning of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall). I am happy to endorse the comments that she has put forward in an effort to make the retraining program work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Soetens: When one is served by 13 and 14-year-old students in fast food restaurants or not served at all in retail establishments because they cannot find anyone who wants a job, it says to me that the Government must take steps to match the labour force with the market. Fortunately, those steps were announced this morning and I look forward to their implementation.

Living in an urbanized area next to a big city brings with it many unique problems relating to the environment. All those industries create air pollution. All those people create garbage. All those people use our parks and preserves in such volumes that the use alone disturbs the environment. The household chemicals that go down the sink or the industrial effluent that ends up in the sewer ultimately ends up in the lake. When the beaches are closed because the coliform count in the water is too high, we need action. The Throne Speech promises us that action.

First and foremost, the expanded responsibilities of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) will ensure that environmental issues are fully considered in the course of decision-making. The Government is committed to further limiting the environmental impact of toxic chemicals through new regulations in the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. We will improve the quality of our water through new legislation. We will protect the fragile atmosphere of our Arctic regions. We will clean up the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence, but more important, we will attack the land sites that cause the leachates that hurt the ecology.

Most significantly, the Government of Canada will encourage the expansion of Canada's environmental industry, along with the clean and environmentally efficient production process. The Government will create an environmental partners' fund which will finance initiatives promoting the production and consumption of environmentally sound products and encourage recycling programs. Yes, we will do something about our atmosphere. Whether it is negotiating an agreement with the U.S. on acid rain or working internationally to protect the ozone layer, Canada will play a leading role, just as we have done in the last four years.

Canadians have always placed a premium on tolerance and fairness. We care about the quality of life in this country for all of our citizens. We have always recognized our obligation to help the less fortunate both at home and abroad. The Mulroney Government shares in these values. Ironically, that is why the deficit is so important. We must address it to ensure our ability to maintain the quality of our social programs in the years ahead. That is why, despite our financial problems, we will continue to provide assistance to families and the elderly while directing greater assistance towards those with low incomes.

Income security is only one of the many challenges facing our society. The Government will introduce new legislation to reform Canada's legal system and sentencing practices. I only hope this results in swifter actions through the courts and punishments more suitable to the crime. We are going to review the Young Offenders Act, and if that results in those youths who choose to break the law being more appropriately dealt with, then I am sure all Canadians will cheer that action.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Soetens: The Mulroney Government has a commitment to national unity and fostering the values that make Canada unique. We have achieved much in little more than a century. We have much to be thankful for and much to celebrate, and celebrate we shall in 1992, Canada's one hundred and twenty-fifth birthday.

The Government will also be introducing a new citizenship Act. As well, we will be establishing a new Canadian relations foundation. We will build upon the recent achievements of parliamentary reform. We will establish new conflicts of interest standards for all parliamentarians, and we will have a commission to recommend reforms to the electoral laws. When thousands of people are denied their right to vote because of the incompetence of an enumerator, clearly a review is in order.

The Meech Lake Accord must be ratified. The Senate must have restored to it some useful purpose, and at the same time it must not be allowed to interfere with the will of the elected House of Commons.

Undoubtedly there is much more that the Government can do and must do. Although not defined in the Throne Speech, I trust we will continue our commitment to our Armed Forces by giving them the equipment they need, including those nuclear-propelled submarines. I find it unacceptable that we would expect our Forces to work with anything but the best of equipment and the manpower training that goes along with it.

Finally, we in Ontario riding have been the participants of a very buoyant economy since 1984 and fully expect that this buoyancy will carry on. We are not looking for government hand-outs but instead readily hope that our contribution to Canada by numerous means, including taxation, will allow the Government to continue its regional development programs. We in Ontario riding fully realize that not until all of Canada enjoys the wealth of opportunity that we in Ontario have, can we say we are truly one nation. This government program, through the Speech from the Throne, will continue to work toward that goal.

• (1230)

Mr. Hughes: I wish to make a few comments and also pose a question to my hon. colleague. He mentioned the Unemployment Insurance Program and the changes announced by the Minister this morning. I believe that they are important and necessary changes, and I am sure that many people in my riding will also find that so. These changes reflect the modern needs of our society today. They will help to ensure that all Canadians meet their own needs by using their own initiative, and also providing assistance when it is needed.

The program reinforces the use of private-sector training. That is through a program such as the Community Futures Program. In my riding there are two such programs, one in High River and one in the Crowsnest Pass region. They have a positive track record. I am pleased to see that this program has had an additional $50 million added to it.

My riding is very different from that of the Hon. Member. It is very important to help these small communities to develop a strategy for creating new jobs and employment within those communities.

Another commendable group of initiatives announced this morning will help those who find themselves unemployed to become employed again. The Government will provide 60,000 more people currently on unemployment insurance with an opportunity to gain retraining. There is an additional $350 million applied there. This works for the people in my riding of Macleod. It works in communities such as High River, Fort Macleod, and the Crowsnest Pass region.

Does my hon. colleague find that this is true in the riding that he represents? Is that true in the Towns of Ajax, Pickering, and Whitby? If that is so, then this is a program that is both flexible and adaptable to the needs of all Canadians.

Mr. Soetens: I must agree with the Hon. Member and concur that the announcements this morning will offer tremendous opportunities to the people of the riding of Ontario.

There are numerous jobs available in my riding. There are also numerous people who are collecting unemployment insurance. In various discussions with unemploy ment insurance offices, the problem that appears to exist throughout the riding is that they cannot match the skills to the jobs available. I found it encouraging to hear the Minister announce this morning that there will be increased training emphasis to address that inequity and bring those people who are looking for jobs to the jobs that are available.

There are a number of ways to do that. One of the ways is through counselling. Many people who choose to move to the riding of Ontario from other parts of Canada come with certain expectations, and do not know where to go to look for the variety of jobs available. Improved counselling facilities for those people will be excellent.

One of the best items is the attack on fraudulent claims. That alone will encourage many people to return to the workforce.

Mr. Parker: I wish to question the Hon. Member for Ontario on some of the comments that he made. I hope he realizes that in other parts of Canada, particularly western Canada, there are very serious problems. When he talks about the employment opportunities in Ontario, I wish to tell the Hon. Member that in my riding of Kootenay East, real estate agencies are advertising a $500-bonus for someone to pick up fairly new houses. A $500-bonus is being offered if they will pick up the mortgage on these houses. That is the type of thing going on in my riding.

We have a Community Futures Program which is attempting to establish new businesses. This group is very active and is working very closely with communities and civic leaders to bring about some developments in the area. It cannot find any entrepreneurs who wish to become involved.

Is the Hon. Member suggesting that the unemployed in the area should leave their homes, as they have had to do in my riding, and offer someone $500 to buy their homes in order that they can move to Ontario and pay $200,000 or $300,000 for a home in order to get a job that the Hon. Member is suggesting they may be able to find?

The Hon. Member also talked about a caring society and the environment. I wish to ask the Hon. Member a question with regard to the environment. In my riding there is a pulp mill which is exceeding the level of emissions allowed. Crestbrook Forest Industries is entering into Alberta for a $1.3-billion expansion. Yet in myriding it is exceeding the emission level allowed from its pulp mill.

I have met with representatives of the Department of the Environment with regard to this. For the first time in North America this company is burning in a beehive burner the caustic chemicals coming out of its pulp mill. At the present time the only place that that is being done is in Russia. I have asked the Minister to investigate this, and to date I have not received a response. Are the lakes in Ontario the only places that the Government is considering cleaning up?

We have received a request from the environmental council of Helena, Montana. Residents of northwestern Montana have expressed concern over the burning of caustic chemicals in an open burner.

Mr. McDermid: What do the provincial regulations state?

Mr. Parker: It is not a provincial regulation. If we are talking about cleaning up—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. There are two more questions here. If the Hon. Member would put his question, there will be time to recognize two more Members.

Mr. Parker: This is the first time in North America that this type of pollution is taking place. Caustic chemicals are being burned in an open beehive burner. I have asked the Minister to investigate it. Under this new proposal of cleaning up the environment, the Hon. Member has stated that the Minister is prepared to take action in central Canada and in Ontario, but he is not prepared to take action in western Canada. Will the Hon. Member express concern for all of Canada and not only for his riding of Ontario?

Mr. Soetens: I believe there are two questions, one relating to the environment and one relating to economic activity in the riding of my colleague. I wish to respond to the environmental question first.

The Government has been world-recognized for its leadership in environmental programs. During the last term of the Government the Canadian Environmental Protection Act was passed. It clearly will deal with toxic emissions. If the Member had read the Speech from the Throne, or had been listening, he would have heard that the Government has committed itself to limiting further the environmental impact of toxic chemicals through new regulations in the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. The Government has addressed this point, and it applies across Canada and not only in my riding.

The Hon. Member also makes the point of things being good in the riding of Ontario, and he asked whether we have no concern about the riding of the Hon. Member. I wish to repeat my closing statement, in case the Member did not hear it.

We are not looking for government hand-outs, but instead hope that our contributions to Canada, by numerous means, including taxation, will allow the Government to continue its many regional development programs. We in the riding of Ontario fully realize that not until all of Canada enjoys the wealth of opportunity that we in Ontario have can we say that we are truly one nation.

• (1240)

Mr. Pagtakhan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief comment on the theme "A Caring Nation" found in the Speech from the Throne and on the comments made by the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Soetens).

The Liberal Party is indeed proud to have spent for the poor and the disadvantaged of Canada. We are proud of our record in that regard. I should also note that there were many Members from the Government side who lost during the last election and who would benefit from the retraining program to which the Hon. Member alluded.

Under the theme "A Caring Nation" it states:

> My government is considering the implications of the latest jurisprudence of the Supreme Court of Canada on the subject of abortion—

It is a political sin of omission on the part of the Government not to address this issue with great dispatch. In fact, it is one of the greatest human injustices of all times. More than one year ago Canada lost its law against induced abortion. The Government has not shown leadership on this critical issue. It has only continued to state that it will act. However, by its inaction the Government is responsible for leaving the country with an abortion-on-demand policy. The Government has too long delayed on this issue and, therefore, justice has too long been denied the unborn child. The Government cannot long continue to procrastinate. It must bring forward immediately the necessary legislation to protect the life of the unborn child.

I have two questions for the Hon. Member. In terms of the Race Relations Foundation, the purpose of which is to establish social harmony, I submit that so long as there is employment inequity there will be no social harmony. Will the Hon. Member pressure his Government to ensure that there are sanctions to federal Departments which do not comply with the Employment Equity Act? Second, will he pressure his Government to bring in legislation on abortion before the summer recess?

Mr. Soetens: Mr. Speaker, I will try to respond to the Hon. Member's questions. I agree that there are problems in Canada concerning race relations and also perhaps inequity of employment opportunities. I can only reiterate that a statement made by the Minister of Employment not too long ago addressed successfully the concerns raised by the Hon. Member.

With regard to abortion legislation, I can only refer to the previous legislation which was rushed and hurried. Ultimately, the Supreme Court decided that it was flawed. I can only hope that when and if the Minister brings forward legislation it will be appropriate and that it will not be taken to the Supreme Court and proved to be flawed but that it will stand the test of the laws that are appropriate at the time.

M. Réginald Bélair (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to comment on the Throne Speech pronounced last week.

First of all, I want to say this is a very vague speech, although during the week we started receiving more specific information, this morning for example, when the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) introduced a number of changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act, which are actually quite welcome, with a few exceptions.

Before commenting any further on the subject, I would like to say that I support the stand taken by my Leader (Mr. Turner) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that the notwithstanding clause in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is in direct conflict with the spirit and the intent of the Charter. The House will recall what the Premier of Québec, Mr. Bourassa, did in that province just before Christmas, when Bill 178 impinged on the Anglophones' freedom of speech, specifically in the area of bilingual signs. I know what I am talking about, since Québec Anglophones have been denied that freedom. I am also very concerned as a Franco-Ontarian. However, I want to express my appreciation to the Peterson Government in Ontario for its recent statement that it would never impose that kind of legislation on Franco-Ontarians.

In the Throne Speech, the Government also made some allusions to reducing the deficit. Although they were just, I am very wary of any measure that will be taken to reduce this deficit. There are no specifics. There is a reference to budget cuts. I think we will just have to wait until the bills are introduced in the House, to find out what to expect.

The Government has again made a commitment to earmark certain sums of money for regional development.

If I may go back somewhat in time, the FEDNOR Program was announced in the spring of 1987. I imagine it was a calculated coincidence that we started seeing the colour of that money in the North only a few weeks before or at least not until the month preceding the election in November 1988.

At that time, $100 million was granted over a period of five years, which means $20 million per year. So far we have yet to see any of the $20 million the Government promised us. We are very aware of our isolation, being far from the main urban centres where the economic action is, and we in Northern Ontario intend to make sure we get our share of the pie, in order to help our small businesses.

There was also a reference to subsidies or grants or economic assistance for Native people. I wish the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Cadieux) would visit the reserves in the North and the Arctic and see for himself the conditions in which these people have to live. I will talk about housing later on in my speech.

During the last ten years, we have been talking about political autonomy for Indians. Political autonomy is possible only if Native people are economically independent from the rest of Canada. The potential for economic development exists, but these people do not have the necessary financial resources to develop that potential within their own culture and in their own language, while still living in a cultural context they understand.

I spoke earlier about unemployment insurance, and this morning the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) proposed a number of major changes. There are some positive aspects I would like to mention, especially assistance for older workers who are likely to have trouble finding employment, depending on the economic situation where they live.

Once a person has reached a certain age, it is always difficult to retrain for another job, and the Minister was right to help these people. Where I would like to make a few suggestions is on the subject of fraud. Mr. Speaker, everybody knows there are unemployment insurance profiteers who abuse the system, and the solution would be to appoint more investigators to track them down and bring them before the courts. The suggestion aimed at lengthening the qualifying period for entitlement is not necessarily good: keep in mind the handicapped, people who are not overly talentuous, or others who may be slightly retarded and you will appreciate that these applicants would certainly find it difficult to qualify for unemployment insurance.

The Minister should also consider the case of seasonal workers. To be more specific, an employee must work at least 15 hours a week to be covered. At the end of 20 weeks that employee would qualify for unemployment benefits, having worked 300 hours. What about someone who works 10 hours a week, 52 weeks a year yet does not qualify for benefits with a total of 520 hours of work? I feel that is an injustice which ought to be eliminated by the Government.

The Speech from the Throne refers to environmental matters, and it is obvious that popular pressure has struck a responsive chord in the Government. Suffice it to mention extremely positive aspects concerning toxic chemicals, the quality of our drinking water, and ozone layer protection; the idea is to protect the atmosphere and shield people who inhabit the Earth from harmful sun rays. Our forests is one sector where the Government has fallen short. All one needs to do is fly over Canada's northern expanses and see the ravaging effects of acid rain: ever more reddish spots, our evergreens are turning red because they are being choked by acid rain. Extremely important steps certainly could be taken in that direction. Suffice it to mention in passing that the forest industry is the largest employer in Canada, with one million directly or indirectly employed, a fact which should warrant the Government giving it a little more respect and priority.

Since I am on the forest industry, Mr. Speaker, let me send a very important message to this Government—it concerns the effect of the 15 per cent export surtax slapped on the lumber industry. In February 1989, the Northern Ontario Liberal caucus visited a number of cities. We heard 30 people who made representations on the impact of that surtax on the lumber industry. Let me say only that right now, in Northern Ontario only, five sawmills are shut down. This has meant the loss of 900 jobs, and a number of industry owners and managers told us that currently, a number of mills are operating at a loss or at cost. Combining the exchange rate now estimated at 15 per cent on the Canadian dollar relative to the U.S. dollar, and the surtax, we see Mr. Speaker that the industry is operating with 30 per cent less income than it was on December 30, 1986, when the tentative agreement was signed with the U.S. Trade Department.

I think the Government is extremely aware of the importance of that surtax. Since the damage has been done, would the Government not consider repealing that tax, with the 30–day notice provided for in the Free Trade Agreement, and let the Americans take their countervailing action, that is go before the GATT and attack that tax.

The industry has clearly shown that it too would be ready to help eliminate this tax, even with the aid of an international tribunal, as was suggested to us during our hearings. Surely it cannot be worse that the present situation. We have everything to gain by eliminating this tax.

A few moments ago, my colleague spoke about abortion. I fully agree with what he said to the effect that the Supreme Court a few weeks ago. . . and I would have much preferred that it render a decision on the Borowski case to establish once and for all whether a fetus is a human person from the moment of conception. In my mind, there is no doubt about it, but since we have to live in a country where the Supreme Court is the final authority on any dispute, I am prepared to wait, but I expect the Government to take the necessary action to prevent abortion on demand.

Mr. Speaker, we could also talk about what is not included in the Speech from the Throne, especially the Canadian Government's approach to the U.S. Commerce Department regarding the definition of a subsidy. Everyone knows that this definition will have a major impact on the whole Canadian economy. If the Americans consider a subsidy for small Canadian industries or small businesses to be unfair competition, can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, the impact that will have on our country? We are only 26 million people. Obviously, the number of companies is proportional to the population of Canada compared to the United States and we have an extremely big country geographically. There are wide open spaces between the towns and villages of our land.

Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with the problem of transportation in Canada. Many industries are subsidized for the distance goods have to be shipped, in order to remove any regional disparities that might exist.

Let us also talk a little about housing. In his budget cuts—which have already begun, by the way—I am referring here to RRAP, the Rural Rehabilitation Assistance Program, the former Minister of Housing, whom I see across the aisle, did not see fit to give more money to help poor people repair their houses and renovate, especially in isolated regions.

I just spoke about native people. As far as housing is concerned, one has only to visit remote reservations to see the atrocious conditions in which these people have to live. I am convinced that no one in Canada deserves such a fate and that more money should be given to Indian reservations so that they can provide proper housing for their residents.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will have three minutes left plus comments after three o'clock. Point of order? The Hon. Minister of State.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that the House sat until 1.25 o'clock today because of Statements by Ministers. If I am incorrect I will be happy to break for lunch.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The extension continues only when we reach Government Business. The Throne Speech is not Government Business.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.01 p.m., the House took recess.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUIREMENT FOR LONGER QUALIFYING TIME IN AVALON, NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, my statement concerns the requirement for people in the Avalon region of my riding to have 16 weeks of qualifying time for unemployment insurance benefits increased from the normal requirement of 10 weeks due to the regulations that cause certain things to happen when the unemployment rate drops below 11.5 per cent.

Notwithstanding the Government's new labour force development strategy that was tabled here this morning, my concern and that of my constituents is that the qualifying time has increased while the employment opportunities have not. Of the three UIC regions in Newfoundland, the Avalon region is largely driven by the employment opportunities in the urban area of St. John's. Specifically, the unemployment rate there is in the order of 8 per cent while in other rural parts of the region the rate is more than double, approximately 19 per cent. Yet all recipients are being treated the same. They require 16 weeks instead of 10.

Those outside St. John's have enough trouble obtaining 10 weeks. How can they now be expected to get 16 weeks? They are being devastated.

I have written the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) in more detail and her staff would be aware of this concern.

May I ask the Minister in the strongest terms that the Avalon UIC region in Newfoundland be separated immediately into urban and rural so that UIC recipients in the rural area where unemployment continues to be high can be treated more justly and fairly and in consonance with the employment opportunities available.

NATIONAL WILDLIFE WEEK

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, I would like to urge Canadians to celebrate National Wildlife Week, April 9 to April 15, by taking part in conservation activities across Canada.

S. O. 31

National Wildlife Week was proclaimed in 1947 to raise awareness about the problems affecting wildlife and its habitat and it is just as applicable today. In recent years, many private organizations have joined with Gov ernments to focus public attention on the threats facing wildlife by organizing such activities as nature workshops, wilderness trips, film festivals and special exhibits.

Although the challenge to reverse and prevent damage to our precious wildlife heritage is daunting, the task is one in which Canadians from all walks of life can participate. I urge Canadians everywhere to join with a local conservation organization and participate in wildlife conservation activities throughout the year.

Let us do all we can to make every week wildlife week in Canada.

HEALTH

SAFETY OF MINE WORKERS

Mr. Cid Samson (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, last week in Timmins another miner was killed on the job. This accident is the second such tragedy in the same community in the last two months. While safety remains an overriding problem in this industry, the Government's attitude has been unacceptable.

At the upcoming meeting of the federal and provincial Mines' Ministers, the stated first priority for discussion is to be "maintaining the competitive edge".

I call upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to give the mines portfolio a Minister of State for Mines so this important area will receive the attention it deserves. I call upon the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp) to change the agenda for the August Mines Ministers meeting so that safety for mine workers becomes the priority of the Government. I also call upon all Members of the House to support the Private Members' Bill introduced today by my colleague, the Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), calling for a national day of mourning for workers killed in the workplace. Workers' lives should not be allowed to pay for corporate profit.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, our miners have no use for yet more studies. The research has been done and the recommendations have been made. Now is the time to act responsibly and protect the health and safety of Canadian miners. The Government should give top priority to safety in the mines.

Action is what is needed, Mr. Speaker!

RESEARCH

USE OF ANIMALS FOR TESTING

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, animals have been used for centuries as living tools for the achievement of human knowledge. An estimated two million animals a year are used for research in Canada.

Although there are areas of medical research where animal testing might be necessary, many uses such as testing cosmetics, furniture wax or paint cause unnecessary pain. Animals too often suffer for questionable human gain.

It is unacceptable for animals to be sacrificed for our vanity and it is time that we asked ourselves if the end justifies the means.

I urge the federal Government to encourage research by finding alternatives to senseless animal testing where possible.

Mr. Speaker: I want to bring it to the attention of Hon. Members that I am obliged to make sure that statements stay within the 60 seconds as set out in the rules.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

BILINGUALISM

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the annual report he has just tabled, the Official Languages Commissioner sounds the alarm in connection with bilingualism at Canada Post: under the privatization program of the Conservative Government opposite, franchise operators offer postal services and this is a threat to bilingualism at Canada Post Corporation. The Official Languages Commissioner tells us that the least we could expect would be to have franchise operators sign contracts and make formal commitments with Canada Post with a view to providing bilingual services.

Better still, Mr. Speaker: Why not do away right now with the postal service privatization scheme so that once and for all we would be sure of bilingual services at Canada Post, just as it has always been the case? That is the only solution to the Canada Post bilingualism pro blems.

NATIONAL SOIL CONSERVATION WEEK

Mr. Ken Monteith (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the House that this week is National Soil Conservation Week.

Canadian farmers know that good soil is an important element in producing the quality food products for which Canada is famous. The Government is to be commended for establishing programs such as the Soil and Water Environmental Enhancement Program. This program will assist in reducing the phosphorus loadings in the Lake Erie Basin from cropland run-off and improve the productivity of southwestern Ontario agriculture in reducing or arresting soil erosion.

On behalf of the agricultural community in Elgin County and Norfolk Township, I would like to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) for their foresight. This initiative will ensure that future generations will have productive land to farm and will be able to continue producing Canadian farm products that are wholesome and of high quality.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY INTO IMPACT OF OIL EXPLORATION URGED

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, on December 23, there was a major oil spill off the Washington coast which seriously impacted on the West Coast of Vancouver Island. On March 28, an even more serious oil spill took place off the coast of Alaska, and the effects are still unknown.

On April 5, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) turned down a request for an inquiry. I am asking him to reconsider in view of the fact that at this very moment a press conference is being held in Vancouver where a committee representing some 158 prominent British Columbians are asking in a letter addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for a full inquiry into the environmental and social impacts of the exploration, production and transportation of oil and other dangerous substances in Canadian coastal waters. I ask the Minister of the Environment to reconsider in view of this interest in the Province of British Columbia.

TRIBUTE TO JEAN-MARC HAMEL

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on March 30 last, in the presence of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada, Mrs. Jeanne Sauvé, bestowed on Mr. Jean-Marc Hamel, Chief Electoral Officer of Canada, the Outstanding Achievement Award, the highest award in the Federal Public Service. Under Mr. Hamel, was appointed on June 6 1966, the Canada Elections Act has undergone a positive evolution.

Mr. Speaker, we also appreciate the competence of the impressive team he heads in Ottawa. On behalf of all Elections Canada employees and of all Parliamentarians, I would like to pay a special tribute to Mr. Jean-Marc Hamel and to offer him my most sincere congratulations.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

RESEARCH ON COLD FUSION

Mr. Ross Stevenson (Durham): Mr. Speaker, cold fusion could well revolutionize the energy production and utilization on our planet if this process can be proven and commercialized. The importance of the current research on cold fusion, should it prove routinely verifiable, cannot be exaggerated and would surpass any previous scientific development in history.

The successful development of cold fusion would minimize environmental problems and radically change world political and economic influences now exerted by major oil producers.

My contacts with Canadian and American researchers indicate that many are becoming believers. Two possible pathways of reaction have been identified.

With our vast freshwater supplies and heavy water technology, Canada should be on the forefront of possible development.

EXTERNAL AID

EFFECT OF CUTS IN GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold): Mr. Speaker, as the critic for the Canadian International Development Agency, I like many other Canadians hear persistent rumours that major cut-backs will soon be imposed on government spending. After this morning, we tend to believe it more. These cuts include Canadian aid for Third World development.

• (1410)

I appeal to the Government to do everything in its power to ensure that international aid, particularly that directed to Africa, the poorest of continents, is spared if the Government does in fact reduce its budgetary expenditures. Consider these facts: Per capita income in Africa is lower today in real terms than it was 30 years ago. Between 1979 and 1983, life expectancy declined in nine countries of the sub-Sahara. With regard to education, primary school enrolment has fallen in 12 countries. Surely these people can be made an exception to this lean and mean Government.

TRIBUTE TO THE HON. ROBERT STANFIELD

Hon. David MacDonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, today, April 11, is the 75th birthday of a former distinguished Member of this House and distinguished son of Canada, the Hon. Robert Stanfield. My first recollection of Robert Stanfield is from the provincial election of 1956 where as a young student, I was sent to cover the inevitable re-election of the then Liberal Government of Nova Scotia. I got there too late because Bob Stanfield, having taken over the Party eight years earlier with no members provincially or federally, had achieved a victory.

Bob Stanfield's career would have been complete had he never left Nova Scotia, but in 1967, he accepted the unhappy and difficult task of national leadership. Through three difficult elections and nine years, he re-built this national Party into the central institution it has become today. His unswerving integrity and commitment to full equality in terms of language rights and social justice, his progressive approach to leadership, his belief in the reconciling of regions and of making this an important place for the debate that would make this country viable has contributed much to the public life of Canada. Today we salute a great Canadian on his 75th birthday.

VIA RAIL

EFFECT OF CUT-BACKS IN SERVICE

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, this Government is not a caring and compassionate Government, it is a callous and careless Government.

Via Rail links this Confederation from the East Coast to the West. For many thousands of Canadians, the rail lines through their towns or cities are a symbol of how vast this great country is and how yet we are all Canadians. The Government was callous when it brought up the idea that Via Rail would be cut in the upcoming Budget. Families across the nation wondered if there would be a pink slip waiting for them the next day.

The federal freight rate subsidies are vital to the Atlantic economy. We need these subsidies to transport our goods to market and distribution points in central Canada. We cannot afford to lose 12,000 jobs.

This is a careless Government. Uncertainty at the national level with regard to the continued funding of economic development programs has created chaos among the workers and businesses of Atlantic Canada.

Cut-backs in Via Rail, the Atlantic freight rate subsidies and the Economic Regional Development Assistance Programs appear to be on this Government's agenda. Via Rail, the freight rate subsidies and ERDAs are essential to Atlantic Canada and must be maintained.

WILDLIFE

COURT JUDGMENT ON THE RAFFERTY-ALAMEDA PROJECT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I find it ironic that today, the Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris (Mr. Clark) rose in his place to talk about National Wildlife Week while remaining silent about a judgment rendered on the Rafferty-Alameda project, a judgment that was brought forward as a result of an action taken by the Canadian Wildlife Federation, a judgment which showed that the federal Government did not live up to its responsibilities with respect to a federal environmental assessment on the Rafferty-Alameda dam, a judgment which has quashed the licensing of that dam.

I now call on the Government to correct the error made by the former Minister of the Environment, and I call on the present Minister of the Environment (Mr. L. Bouchard) to live up to his responsibilities, not to appeal the decision, to initiate a federal environmental assessment review and to ensure that Saskatchewan does not defy the law of the land and proceed with this project regardless of the court judgment.

UNEMPLOYMENT

RE-TRAINING PROGRAMS – RESPONSIBILITY FOR FUNDING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Tory Government has not launched an attack on poverty, today it launched an attack on the poor. It has not launched an attack on unemployment, today it launched an attack on the unemployed.

Canadians who honestly and legitimately find themselves out of work or lose their jobs are having their benefits cut by $850 million. Why should a Canadian who, through no fault of his or her own, loses a job, pay for human resources training by big companies? Why are unemployed people, who have to feed their children and pay their rent, pay for training programs in Canada? Why is the Government forcing unemployed people onto welfare to pay for what should be government training programs?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is, of course, wrong on all counts. We are ensuring that people who are unemployed continue to have benefits. Yes, we are saying that they will have different kinds of benefits. We are ensuring that they will have access to training and that they will have the possibility of having secure jobs in the future. We are paying for the kind of training that they will need to have those jobs. That is a better kind of benefit than staying at home when most of them do not want to stay at home.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the issue is who is paying for the training. Under this plan, the unemployed will be paying for the training.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver—Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government is taking money from the unemployed to pay for retraining people who already have jobs. Is the Prime Minister going to pay or the Minister? Certainly not! Québec's textile workers and British Columbia's forestry workers are going to pay. Why should workers who don't have enough money for their rent, clothes and food, have to pay the cost of retraining programs? Why should people who have enough problems of their own, and are unemployed, be made to pay for the cost of retraining others, which is the Government's responsibility?

[English]

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, first I think retraining is the responsibility of all of us because it is the future of Canadian workers that we in this Government are concerned about. The right hon. gentleman is always talking about doom and gloom, but for every story that he can come up with about gloom and doom, I can point to a Canadian who has benefited as a result of the Government's economic policies, and under this program, they will benefit more.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, so much for the Prime Minister's undertaking that our social programs were a sacred trust. So much for his statement made during the debate among the three Leaders, particularly his response to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), that all our social programs would survive the trade deal. So much for his promise during the election campaign that Canada would have the finest adjustment programs in the world for our labour force. All that has gone by the board. Why did the Prime Minister not tell Canadians the truth if this was going to be the result?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, we are making this program a better one, and I do not understand why the Right Hon. Member would suggest that this program is being cut. The size of this program remains the same. The people who are unemployed will now have access not only to income support, but under the training programs in the UI program, programs which are not a new phenomenon but whose funds are being doubled, they will get income support, transportation allowances, child care and the cost of the training program. What could be better for unemployed Canadians than that?

LOSS OR REDUCTION IN BENEFITS – MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

This morning, we had a preview of the Budget which indicated that nearly one million Canadian workers will lose their unemployment insurance benefits, either altogether or partly, as a result of the program announced by the Minister today.

Does the Minister agree with these indications, and if not, what are her own predictions? And is she prepared to produce publicly, here in the House, her own impact study on this issue?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The Government of which this Member was a part did change the entrance requirements under unemployment insurance. We did not invent this. This has been done before. This time it was done in a way that those people will have access to other programs. When his Government did it, it simply extended—reduced the ability of people enter the program. We are saying those people will have access to a secure job and a secure future.

The Hon. Member is saying a million people will be affected. I do not think that number is right. We have been sensitive to regional disparities so people in higher unemployment regions will continue to have access to the program at an earlier date.

We have also eliminated the repeater provision put in by that Government. We made it easier for these people to find a job and to find training. We brought our programs together in a continuum for employed and unemployed to ensure that our workforce in the future has the greatest security of job opportunity in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND – WORKERS' CONTRIBUTIONS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): I asked the Minister to produce her impact studies to show us how many people will be affected by this program. She has not answered that. We want those impact studies.

The Government announced it was taking $850 million out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund by reducing benefits and redirecting moneys to training, labour market development and consultation, worth-while activities, but all matters that in the past were paid for out of general revenue because they benefited all Canadians.

My question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration is this. How can the Government justify this radical attack on the Unemployment Insurance Fund, and what will it do to assure Canadian workers across this country that moneys they have paid into that fund will be returned to them in benefits or training in their own provinces?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The Hon. Member has clearly missed the point because that is exactly what will happen. We had in the past a mixture of programs under the Unemployment Insurance Program and under General Revenues that provide training and benefits to workers. That will continue. What we will do is double the effort under the Unemployment Insurance Program and under the Canadian Jobs Strategy, which remains whole. This is a change from their policies whereby they make work; we make jobs!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: We are reinforcing a positive direction recommended by a committee of this House that unemployment insurance become more active.

FUNDING OF RETRAINING PROGRAMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): No matter how the Minister deals with the issue, the question that workers will be asking right across the country is: "Who will pay for the retraining involved?" Is it the unemployed themselves, as the Government wants to do, or is it those who can afford to pay for retraining programs? That is the issue.

My question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. What she did amounts to taking $1.3 billion out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund, out of the pockets of the unemployed, a direct or indirect tax on them. Why didn't the Minister, as her buddy Ronald Reagan has done in the United States, institute a minimum corporate tax on profitable companies? She could have raised over a billion dollars there and taxed those who could afford to pay, namely, the corporations that are making money, for these changes, instead of the unemployed themselves.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The Leader of the New Democratic Party is singing the same old song. He sings it on every issue. A billion dollars from corporations is supposed to pay for everything.

Let me say that premiums paid into unemployment insurance are paid by employers, as well as employees. It is a benefit to employees who are unemployed or may be unemployed in the future that we will see people changing jobs more often. The Hon. Member knows that. There is a different kind of benefit going to the unemployed now. It is one the unemployed have asked for. They want training and secure jobs. They are ready to pay for them.

REQUEST THAT MINIMUM CORPORATE TAX BE INTRODUCED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The Minister has learned her lines well. Every question she is asked today about who will pay for this, she turns around and talks about retraining. No one on this side of the House is arguing against retraining. We are saying the unemployed should not have to pay for that themselves! That is the issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister is smiling. She is not the one looking for a job.

Why is it the United States can afford to have a minimum corporate tax and other industrial countries can have a minimum corporate tax on profitable companies, and this Government would rather tax the unemployed? Why don't you bring that tax in and do the just thing?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): It is both employed people and corporations that pay for unemployment insurance. It is not the unemployed. The unemployed do not pay for unemployment insurance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss McDougall: Both companies and employees pay into the Unemployment Insurance Fund in order to have access to the benefits of the program. We are shifting the benefits of the program in a way that is more positive and will ensure workers in the long run will have access, not just to money to stay at home, but money to go out and get another job.

Mr. Broadbent: Unlike the United States, we still have 60,000 profitable companies that do not pay any income tax. The Minister may think that is all right, the Conservatives may think that is all right, but the majority of Canadians want that changed.

[Translation]

The unemployed will have to pay for these changes. Does the Minister think that is fair? Why not make the rich or profitable companies pay? Is this the Conservative Party's idea of justice?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The Government has done much to make the tax system more fair in this country. I am interested to hear the Hon. Member quoting Ronald Reagan and the Americans. It is the first time he has ever done that in this House.

Within this program we are dealing with changes to the Unemployment Insurance Program. We will ensure that Canadian workers have access not just to benefits but to the right kinds of benefits under a program that already exists for their benefit. I say that Canadians, Canadian workers, the Canadian unemployed, people like single mothers, social assistance recipients, will all be better off under this program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NUMBER OF WEEKS OF WORK NEEDED TO QUALIFY

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): The Minister said in this House last week:

> Those who need unemployment insurance will get it.

Well they got it today from this Minister. They got it right straight between the eyes.

My question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. According to a document she released today, it says the minimum entrance requirement around Saint John, New Brunswick, will go up from 10 to 15; around Halifax, Nova Scotia, 12 to 18; and around St. John's, Newfoundland, from 10 to 14. That covers the entire Avalon Peninsula. How can the Minister say the unemployed have nothing to fear when now they need additional weeks of work that do not exist?

• (1430)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the people of Newfoundland will benefit considerably from this program in a number of ways.

First, let me point out to the Hon. Member that he has missed something in this. The program for fishermen remains whole, remains the way it is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: Second, we have eliminated the penalty for repeaters. This means that seasonal workers in Newfoundland will be better off.

Third, we have expanded the funding for the Community Futures Program which covers a large number of communities in Newfoundland and in Atlantic Canada. We are giving Newfoundlanders and other people who live in Atlantic Canada hope for a real job with real training.

PENALTIES FOR WORKERS REFUSING SUITABLE JOBS

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the Minister, I have a feeling that perhaps what Newfoundland and the Maritimes will need under this new legislation is a nothwithstanding clause.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: I want to ask the Minister, among the gobbledegook that came out this morning, what did the Minister mean when she said: "We propose to increase the penalties for workers who refuse a suitable job".

Does the Minister mean that a man or a woman who has children to feed will have to take a job at less money than what he or she was receiving on unemployment insurance? How many other hidden hammers will hit Canadians under this legislation?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are going to put all the resources of our Canadian Jobs Strategy and the Unemployment Insurance Programs together to ensure that we can assist people to find suitable jobs sooner.

Is the Hon. Member telling me that he wants the people in Newfoundland to stay home? Is that what he wants? Does he want them to stay unemployed? Does he want them to not have access?

The House Commission in Newfoundland has done some work on this very topic. It has stated that the people in Newfoundland want to work, and we are providing them with the means to do that, and to upgrade their skills under local conditions that are suitable for them.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

FORECAST CUTS IN PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT'S PRE-ELECTION COMMITTMENTS

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In the months leading up the 1988 election the Government announced spending promises totalling $18 billion.

During the election campaign the Minister of Finance explained that these were not promises, they were government spending commitments whose cost was zero.

The Minister assured Canadians that the Government had the money and would not need to increase taxes or reduce spending to honour its promises.

However, yesterday the Minister stated that the Government will reduce spending and increase taxes. Today the first program to be officially cut is unemployment insurance.

Will the Minister of Finance explain why last autumn he was adamant that the Government's election promises could be paid for without cutting existing programs or raising taxes, and why today Canadians are told that there will be severe cuts in government spending and major tax increases immediately ahead?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first may I say right off the top that the Hon. Member's statement that the Unemployment Insurance Program has been cut is quite clearly wrong, and that has been made very clear by my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

There are other things in the very long preamble to the Hon. Member's question which are incorrect. However, I will not get into those.

Yes, we do have a debt problem. The Hon. Member is very clear on that. This problem must be dealt with. I indicated in my speech yesterday in Toronto the basis on which we had to deal with this.

I wish to quote something that the Hon. Members and others in the House will agree with. An article in The Winnipeg Free Press stated: "Any finance minister, of any party, would have to do the same. The issue has little to do with ideology and much to do with paying the price of past irresponsibility", which was in that party, the party of which the Hon. Member is a member of, and which we know we have to deal with and deal with fast.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COST OF MEETING COMMITTMENTS

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, in response to questions the Minister has stated on a number of occasions that high interest rates are responsible for the inability of the Government to meet its election promises, or what the Minister described as spending commitments. Yet, at the time of the election, interest rates were over 10 per cent and climbing. The rate was certainly much higher than forecast in his own last Budget.

Will the Minister now tell the House whether he informed the Prime Minister during the election campaign that the promises he was making, or the spending commitments he was announcing, would be impossible to honour in the face of rising interest rates, and if not, why not?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member goes back and looks at the promises we made during the course of the campaign, he will see that there were very few promises during the campaign.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, there was an increase in interest rates during the month of September and subsequent to the election campaign.

The point that we have to recognize here is that those interest rates, related to increases in interest rates in other countries in the world, are making very clear the exposure that we have as a country today to the high level of debt combined with the high level of interest rates that we have. This is the problem that we have to address, and that we will address in the Budget.

As I said in my remarks yesterday, it is something that is a national issue, a national challenge that must be faced on a national basis.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

AMOUNT OF BENEFITS PAYABLE IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment.

Last night we discovered that officials in her Department had estimated that at least $30 million would be taken in unemployment benefits out of the Province of Newfoundland.

In view of that reality, how can the Minister justify that Newfoundland will receive benefits when $30 million has been pulled out of that province in benefits?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, because the funds will be going back by way of training, by way of Community Futures, and by way of maternity and over 65–benefits. All the benefits that are in this program will be going back into the regions of Canada.

We have made the commitment that we are going to ensure that we are sensitive to regional concerns.

The Hon. Member is taking out the costs and not looking at what is available to benefit Newfoundlanders under this program. If the Hon. Member wants to ensure that Newfoundlanders do not have access to benefits, then he can defend the status quo all he wants. However, the status quo is not working for everyone in the country, and that is why we have to change it.

• (1440)

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, Atlantic Canada has already been hit by the suspension of $500 million in ERDA agreements. Now, $30 million is being pulled out of the pockets of people right across the Province of Newfoundland. Is the Minister trying to make Margaret Thatcher look like a paragon of human kindness compared to this Government? Is that what she is trying to do?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we do not have to take any lessons from the NDP in how to create economic growth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: If you look at Atlantic Canada, Mr. Speaker, since this Government took office in 1984 you will see that there has been a 12.4 per cent increase in the number of jobs. They are good jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: Many of those jobs have come about as a result of programs such as the Community Futures Program in which local enterprises make the decisions about local needs with local business and local workers. I can assure the people of Atlantic Canada and the people of Newfoundland that the Government stands behind them in order to build their future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

EFFECT OF CHANGES ON UNEMPLOYED WORKERS

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. By restricting the requirement for access to unemployment insurance and by tying the period of benefits to the regional unemployment rate the Government is penalizing workers who find themselves unemployed or dislocated through no fault of their own. What does the Minister suggest they do besides reverting to provincial and municipal welfare rolls? What does the Government intend to do to help the provinces which have to pick up the tab?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first, what we have found in the past, and what the people of Canada found when the Government which the Hon. Member supported introduced changes to the entrance requirements, was that people were able to find more work.

We have expanded the provisions for social assistance recipients. If the provinces co-operate with us we will be expanding that to $800 million. That is a very successful program which we introduced under Canadian Jobs Strategy which helps social assistance recipients get off welfare.

I would also remind the Hon. Member that the federal Government does pay half of those costs.

CRITERIA FOR RETRAINING PROGRAMS

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the Minister speaks about co-operation and participation with the provinces. Yet a couple of weeks ago she cancelled meetings with the provinces on precisely this topic.

In the obvious absence of a broad employment industrial strategy can she explain by which criterion or set of criteria she set up the programs? Who will be responsible for developing them? What government employment objectives for disadvantaged regions are being used to create this hodgepodge of programs?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is clearly not a hodgepodge of programs. This is creating a continuum whereby with the private sector, which includes labour and business, and with the provinces we can put together a program that is a continuum. We will ensure that there is entry level training, that there is re-entry level training, and that there is skill upgrading for people on the job.

I suggest that the Hon. Member read the program instead of talking to his friends at Queen's Park who have not read it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

CONSTITUTION'S NOTWITHSTANDING CLAUSE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. It concerns the annual report of the Commissioner of Official Languages, tabled in the House today. In this report we read that 1988 was a stormy on the language scene. Consider Alberta, Saskatchewan and Quebec, which adopted regressive legislation to deal with their language minorities. Meanwhile, the Conservative Government kept quiet and refused to condemn these reactionary policies. We even heard the Secretary of State's predecessor admit that he understood and justified using Section 33, the notwithstanding clause! Recently however, we heard the Prime Minister say that this section was—and these are his own words—"immoral and the mistake of the century". I want to ask the Secretary of State, the present incumbent, what his position is on Section 33. Is he for or against?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister speaks for the Government of Canada. He said very clearly what our position is. We are entirely in favour of promoting language diversity in this country and supporting minority official language communities. The report published by Mr. Fortier this morning admirably compliments what our Department is doing. I will have a chance to discuss the report's recommendations with him at a meeting a week or two.

[English]

ESTABLISHMENT OF REGULATIONS UNDER OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the President of the Treasury Board. In his report the Commissioner of Official Languages talks about the need for action. He talks about the need for a law that has teeth and has regulations. The law passed last year must have regulations. To have them there must be a consultation process. The green light for this process has not been given by Treasury Board or Cabinet.

When will this law be given the regulations required so that it can be followed to the letter and in spirit? When will the Government move on this Bill? Will it wait? Will it drag its feet like it did in introducing the Bill?

In the calendar of events will we see a timetable from the Government to know exactly when this law will come into effect with the appropriate regulations?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, to quote the Commissioner of Official Languages who said, in referring to the new Official Languages Act:

[English]

"The new Act is eloquent testimony of your Government's commitment to greater linguistic harmony and equality".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that regulations are essential in order to implement the new Official Languages Act. After consultations with all Parties in this House, with the departments, with the groups concerned and with parliamentarians, we promised that this would be done. In today's report, the Commissioner said that he hoped regulations would be tabled by the end of 1989. I can assure the Hon. Member that the regulations will be tabled in the House well before that date, so that we can have final consultations with all Members of this House.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DE GRANDPRÉ COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, the Government's intrusion today into the Unemployment Insurance Fund is an admission that its economic policies, including free trade, are a failure.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fisher: The Minister says that the status quo will not do—and the Minister is exactly right. Just under one year ago I worked at a plant where 200 or 300—

Mr. Andre: I am sure that your mother is very proud. Ask a question.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Fisher: Considering the fact that the changes have been made, and that they will very adversely effect unemployed people, why did the Minister not take the advice of the de Grandpré Commission which suggests a levy from people in society who can afford to pay for unemployment insurance, not from the people who are unemployed?

• (1450)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is nice to know that the Hon. Member is now supportive of the de Grandpré Report.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, the premise of the Member is wrong. I would like to thank him for his first question in the House since we have been together in a session, but what we are doing is paying a different kind of benefit under unemployment insurance. It is very important for him to recognize that the kinds of benefits that we are going to be providing under unemployment insurance are the kind that will provide people with training opportunities and with future jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRAINING FOR AVAILABLE JOBS

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the job training which is going to be available will amount primarily to MAC–jobs at MAC–bucks.

I ask the Minister when she is going to get serious about putting in programs which really train people for jobs which are available?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we got serious about this in 1985 when we introduced the Canadian Jobs Strategy. We began then, Mr. Speaker, to move from old programs that make work to new programs that make jobs. We believe in opportunity and we will continue to do that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

REVIEW OF PROVISIONS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Many of the constituents of my riding of Markham are concerned about certain flaws in the Young Offenders Act. They are particularly concerned about the reluctance of judges to refer certain violent crimes committed by 16 and 17–year olds to an adult court.

Since the Speech from the Throne promised a review of the Young Offenders Act, will this be done quickly so that society will be better protected from certain violent young offenders?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate my colleague's interest in this matter. The Government's concern, which I believe is shared by all Members of the House, is that this law balanced protection of person and property with rehabilitation of young people, but there are some concerns about the adequacy of the transfer provisions. There is presently a working group of federal–provincial Ministers and officials looking at this, and the matter is going to be fully discussed at the federal–provincial meetings in Prince Edward Island in June.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

COLD FUSION EXPERIMENTS CONDUCTED IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Ross Stevenson (Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Would the Minister please comment on Canadian experts' views of the cold fusion experiments that are going on in the United States now and their possible potential for commercialization in Canada?

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, my colleague has asked a somewhat difficult question, but I will do my best to explain where we are at the moment. I am not sure that anyone knows whether we have indeed experienced a breakthrough in terms of fusion. We still have a mixed result. Something is obviously going on, but we are not sure that it is indeed fusion. However, the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is following this with some considerable interest and some experiments.

Just a few days ago I established through the vice–president of science of the National Research Council a special committee with special advisers from Canada to track what is going on anywhere in the world so if anything does breakthrough with our experiments or through others, we will be on top of it.

RAFFERTY–ALAMEDA DAM PROJECT

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Yesterday the Federal Court struck down a federal licence for the Rafferty–Alameda Dam project in Saskatchewan. This project was struck down simply because the federal Government did not follow its own guidelines under the environment assessment and review process when issuing the licence.

Considering that the Government has ignored its own regulatory obligation, will the current Minister agree to comply with the decision of the Federal Court as well as apologize to the people of Saskatchewan and Manitoba for the Government's ignoring its sacred trust of the environment?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I had the occasion to read the judgment quickly and I intend to read it more carefully. I am waiting for an analysis from Justice. What I can say is that I will get in touch today with my colleagues in the provincial Government of Saskatchewan about it, and we will make a decision very shortly. Of course the options are whether to comply with the requirements set out in the judgment or to favour an appeal. I can assure the House and the people that this decision will be made taking into full consideration the protection of the environment and the assessment requirement. We will also have to take into account the necessity of meeting the local need for water.

FEDERAL COURT DECISION—PROVINCIAL APPEAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. I hope that he moves quickly. I am sorry to hear that he has not already phoned his Deputy Minister or the Deputy Premier of Saskatchewan who has already announced that he is going to appeal and is going to proceed with construction. Will the Minister assure the House that he will speak to his compatriot in Saskatchewan and ensure that if this appeal does go ahead they will not allow construction to continue?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that my friend understands that it is a matter of minimum courtesy to call my fellow Minister in the provincial Government, and this is an occasion to confirm that the commitment made in the Speech from the Throne about the necessity of implementing a new legislative assessment review was well founded.

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that there will be a single question from the Hon. Member for York West and a single question from the Member from Regina—Qu'Appelle.

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE CLAIMANT APPLICATIONS BACKLOG

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Immigration. On December 28 of last year, the Minister announced measures to deal quickly with the huge and growing backlog of refugee claimants. Yet after three months, nothing has been done and not one case has been processed. On March 31 the announcement was made that they will not begin until the end of summer at the very earliest.

Why announce a plan last December, do nothing for three months, and then in fact postpone the eventuality until the summer? Why won't the Minister, once and for all, end this bureaucratic limbo and get down to the serious business of clearing a human backlog that numbers over 110,000 individuals in this country?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, let me say first of all that we are very sensitive to the human concerns around the backlog. That is why I announced early what we were planning to do. We have spent the intervening months getting ready to ensure that cases get heard as efficiently as possible.

We have also used that time to ensure that people who did not have work permits before have them and are able to work while they are waiting for their claim. They know now what the conditions are and what the criteria will be under the backlog. I think that is a great step forward for those people.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

RAFFERTY—ALAMEDA DAM PROJECT—REQUEST FOR ENVIRONMENTAL REVIEW

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. As he surely knows, a federal judge has told the Government that his predecessor failed to comply with his statutory duty and had exceeded his jurisdiction.

When will the Government recognize that it cannot pay lip service to the environment but has to act and follow its own law? Why will the Minister not stand up in the House today and announce that the Government will order an environmental review, with public meetings and hearings, and that it will request, in fact demand the Province of Saskatchewan to cease construction until there have been full hearings on it? When will you really stand up for the environment instead of just giving lip service to it?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will have to announce the same thing tomorrow but I repeat that I intend to make a conference call with my fellow Ministers in Saskatchewan.

It is certainly true that this Government was right in contemplating and committing itself to present to the House a Bill for a new law implementing a compulsory assessment review process. This will be the only way to remove the current ambiguities from the present process.

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for an address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her speech at the opening of the session; and on the amendment of Mr. Foster (p.326).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Bélair) has three minutes remaining in debate and 10 minutes for questions and comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Réginald Bélair (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have only three minutes left, and I find it rather difficult to get back to my subject, the Throne Speech, after such a long pause. Nevertheless, I would like to raise a number of points. I would have liked to see the Throne Speech deal with the problem of air safety, and more specifically at Toronto's Pearson International Airport. When you travel by air every week and have this nagging feeling that you might not be able to land or your plane might have a mid-air collision, it should be enough to make the Government and the Minister of Transport make this very serious problem one of their top priorities.

Also absent from the Throne Speech was any mention of the purchase of nuclear submarines. I don't think Canada needs them. What good would a few nuclear submarines do if we are stuck in a cross-fire between two world superpowers, the Americans and the Russians? Since we don't have any other form of military support, what good would these nuclear submarines be? The money could be better spent.

[English]

In conclusion, may I reiterate my disappointment at the total exclusion of the forestry issue from the Throne Speech, considering that the industry employs a million people in Canada and the 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber is a very serious blow to its viability. It is extremely urgent that the Government was initiate a new round of negotiations with the United States to eliminate this devastating tax. It is of the utmost importance that the federal-provincial agreements on forestry resource development be renewed. Forest regeneration is the future of the industry. Access roads to reach mature timber must be constructed.

The Government should be praised for creating an independent Ministry of Forestry. Now it should live up to Canadians' expectations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? No questions—

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the opportunity to ask my colleague a question or two. At the outset I want to congratulate him on a very fine speech. He certainly has distinguished himself in the House in the very short time that he has been here. His commitment is not matched by anyone in the House when it comes to matters affecting his particular jurisdiction.

The Member has spent considerable time analyzing the Speech from the Throne. We on this side of the House have been very critical of what has been missing from the Speech from the Throne.

The Speech from the Throne is supposed to outline in principle the general thrust, and general programs of the Government for its mandate for at least this, the Second Session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament. Needless to say, as my hon. friend has pointed out, the Opposition and Canadians generally have been terribly disappointed by the general thrust and direction the Government will have us take.

We noticed today, for example, that the Government appears to be more concerned about the deficit than the lives of Canadians and Canadian families from one end of the country to the other. There was very little mentioned in the Speech from the Throne about the Government's intention to be so brutal in dealing with the deficit.

Is it any wonder that Canadians throughout the country call into question the integrity and honesty of that particular Party and the Government when, during the election campaign, the Government through the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a number of different promises to Canadians? We heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) say today that they did not make very many promises during the election campaign. It was quite laughable to listen to the Minister of Finance say today that the Government did not make many promises. It leads one to ask: When is a promise a promise?

During the election campaign the Minister of Finance said that they were simply election commitments and not promises. We can imply from his comments today during Question Period that because they were not promises, somehow the Government is not bound by the commitments it made to the people of Canada during the election campaign last fall.

My question concerns the Government's integrity and honesty. There is no doubt that my colleague's Conservative opponent in his riding made a lot of promises during the election campaign, no doubt duplicating the promises made by the Government itself. Will the Hon. Member comment on some of the promises that were made by his Conservative opponent in his riding and comment on the Finance Minister's statement today that not very many promises were made? Do his constituents feel, as mine do, that the Government is totally lacking in the area of integrity and honesty?

• (1510)

[Translation]

Mr. Bélair: Yes, Mr. Speaker, a number of promises certainly were made during the election, concerning for example, regional development. The House will remember that in the Spring of 1987, the Government announced the FEDNOR Program. It only took a year before we finally received some moneys from the Government, and by a well-designed coincidence, some projects were accepted only one month before the general election. The intention no doubt at that point was to prove to people in Northern Ontario that a Conservative Member would be more acceptable than a Liberal Member, but I am sorry to tell them that the Conservative candidate was beaten, and by quite a margin!

During the campaign, the Conservative candidate also recognized that the 15 per cent export surtax on softwood lumber was harmful to Northern Ontario's people and forest industry. If we agreed on one thing, that was it. I am not sure whether that candidate was speaking on behalf of his party, but he fully recognized it—anyway the three candidates fully agreed that tax is harmful. We saw the results—five sawmills have shut down since the agreement was signed. There was a loss of 900 jobs, without the governments, then and now, doing anything to launch re-training programs for those employees.

Going further, Mr. Speaker, I could add that across Canada a lot of small sawmills, a lot of independent owners without links to the pulp and paper industry are hurting tremendously.

The message I would like to convey to the Government is to remind the Minister of International Trade, as my colleague from Winnipeg did this week, that he should start anew very serious negotiations with the Americans to repeal that tax that will do new harm across Canada.

[English]

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Bélair) on his speech. He is not only a distinguished Member from northern Ontario, but is also one of our co-critics for forestry. He has done a commendable job of outlining the problems and difficulties of the softwood lumber industry. Clearly, no industry has faced such a difficult time as has that industry in northern Ontario.

The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) suggested a couple of weeks ago that he thought it would be inappropriate to go to Washington now to negotiate. More recently, he has said that he feels there have been changes and that now the whole softwood lumber agreement should be renegotiated.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior just how urgent it is for the Minister to go to Washington or for the American Secretary for Trade to meet with the Minister here in order to renegotiate this agreement. How urgent would this be for communities like Hearst, Sioux Lookout, Thessalon, Thunder Bay and Sault Ste. Marie? How close are those communities to losing jobs and having their mills shut down? Could the Hon. Member outline for the benefit of government Members and the Minister for International Trade just how urgent this situation is?

[Translation]

Mr. Bélair: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the question of the Hon. Member for Algoma. Again I repeat that the message I have for the Government is that the Minister for International Trade should contact the American authorities at the earliest opportunity and attempt to renegotiate an extremely harmful tax.

As I said, five mills have already closed their doors. When in Thunder Bay we met with a very large group of workers who had been laid off just before Christmas. If we combine this tax with the rate of exchange of the Canadian dollar as compared to the American dollar, the result is that the industry must now make do with an income 30 per cent lower than it was on December 31, 1986.

Mr. Speaker, anyone can see that no single industry in Canada would continue to operate after sustaining such huge losses in terms of both profits and manpower. Now, a few words about the impact of these lay-offs. Municipalities have to hand out additional welfare benefits and the workforce is highly depressed. Remember that these people have worked hard to improve their working conditions and then, practically overnight, they are left with absolutely nothing, not even a retraining program. The human consequences are severe, Mr. Speaker, and the Government must take immediate action.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over. Debate. The associate Minister of National defence (Mrs. Collins).

[English]

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, indeed, it is a sincere pleasure to have an opportunity to participate in the debate in response to the Speech from the Throne. First, I would like to pay my respects and offer my congratulations to the Speaker of the House who still remains the first Member ever to have been elected to that position. That is something very important to remember and should not be quickly overlooked. During this Session, while we will not agree on very many things in the House, we certainly have agreed on the unparalleled respect that we have for the Speaker of the House, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) and indeed his Deputy, the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski).

I would also like to extend my very warm welcome to the new Members who are serving in this Thirty Fourth Parliament. Their constituents have placed great trust in them, and I am sure they will never give them any cause to doubt that trust in either their motives or their convictions. It is my sincere hope that our new colleagues will derive as much pleasure from the proceedings of this House as I have during the past four years.

It was just a few short months ago that the people of Canada reaffirmed their support for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and this Government. With the passing of the Free Trade Agreement, businesses across Canada and particularly in my home Province of British Columbia can now begin to plan for the months and years to come with the full understanding that they will not be undermined by wilful Government interference in the market-place.

This Session will be particularly challenging and rewarding to me personally as I have been tasked with the responsibility of serving as a Minister of the Crown, Associate Minister of National Defence. I can assure all Hon. Members that they have my commitment to serve this House and all Canadians with all the vision and vigour that I can muster.

I have heard some say that perhaps my appointment as the first woman to hold a defence portfolio is nothing more than sheer tokenism. I for one certainly disagree with that sentiment. My Cabinet colleague, the former Minister of National Defence, now the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty), was in fact very important in breaking down the barriers to women within the armed forces. I am proud to carry on the work that he began after his appointment nearly three years ago. If my appointment by the Prime Minister is any indication, I would have to suggest that those internal barriers have finally disappeared. As Sir Winston Churchill used to say, this is not the end, this is not even the beginning of the end, but it is perhaps the end of the beginning.

The Canadian Human Rights Tribunal recently released its findings on an issue of fundamental importance to the Canadian Forces and for equality rights in Canada. The tribunal has ruled, as Hon. Members know, that there is no basis in law for the Canadian Forces to restrict the employment of women in either the regular or reserve forces except in submarines. This decision when implemented will open to women combat roles, both on land and at sea, roles which had previously been open to men only. I was pleased to announce on behalf of our Department that we would be fully implementing this decision over the next decade.

I want to stress, however, that the equality of opportunity for women in the Armed Forces is not a goal suddenly imposed. Rather, on the contrary, Canada has been a leader for almost 20 years in the employment of women in military service. Since 1971 when only 1,500 service women were permitted in the regular force, the numbers have risen to some 8,300 today. This represents almost 10 per cent of the current regular Force. Within NATO, Canada is second only to the United States, with 10.2 per cent of its military comprised of women.

The Department of National Defence has many proud traditions and I take much delight in my association with them, and the Minister, the Hon. Member for Kindersley—Lloyminster (Mr. McKnight). Together we have been deeply impressed by the professionalism and dedication of both the civilian and uniformed members of our Department. I would also like to commend both the reserve and the cadet groups across Canada who make up an integral part of our mandate. They have given me the warmest of welcomes, and they know they have no stronger supporter than I.

This Department is steeped with tradition, since the appointment of Sir Georges Etienne Cartier as the first Minister of Militia and Defence under Canada's founding Prime Minister, Sir John A. Macdonald. I believe it is a great challenge and privilege to be the first woman to join the ranks of such distinguished Canadians as Cartier, Mr. Brooke Claxton and Major-General George Randolph Pearkes, another British Columbian who was awarded the Victoria Cross while serving as a uniformed member of the Canadian Armed Forces, and indeed our former colleague, Allan McKinnon from Victoria, whom we miss very much in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: Our Armed Forces are known around the world for their particular talents as keepers of peace, and we in Canada have a very proud tradition in this respect. Yesterday morning I had the opportunity to visit with over 200 young men and women gathered in Petawawa who will be leaving later this week to join the UN peacekeeping forces in Namibia. This group was excited about the opportunities they will be facing. I was deeply impressed by the dedication they were showing to this very challenging task.

As they set forth across the ocean, I want to say a special word of appreciation to them and to their families who will be staying behind. We will be watching them with a great sense of pride as they work in this difficult and challenging situation. They follow in a tradition of similar groups, Canadians who have formed part of the peacekeeping operations in the Suez Canal, in Cyprus where Canada's own Commander Milner is now in charge of the peacekeeping force, and in the Golan Heights. We all wish them a very safe journey.

Another area of our Department I have a particular interest in and wish to encourage is our civilian air search and rescue associations. This responsibility was transferred to National Defence in 1976 and has flourished through a much needed blanket of safety across many remote areas in this vast country. The spirit of altruism shown by the men and women who serve in these associations is a welcome sign of compassion that is often too scarce in today's society.

I hope I can bring a more diverse face to our Armed Forces. As we invite more women to train for the Armed Forces, so too should we recruit more young Canadians from different racial and cultural backgrounds. For many decades, our country has seen the increased predominance of those who were not of British or French origin. Within our Armed Forces, however, such a mixture of backgrounds and heritages is not as strong as it should be. I believe the human face of our Armed Forces should reflect the ever-changing plurality and make-up of Canada. For an institution to be vibrant and dynamic, it needs to mirror the values and character of the community it is required to serve. We have an opportunity to build on the traditions of the past, exploring and accepting new ideas and thoughts that will in the long term make our Armed Forces a stronger and fuller player in Canadian life.

While we celebrate the opening of this session of Parliament we must not overlook another milestone that we, as a country, reached this past week. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization, NATO, just celebrated its fortieth anniversary, which has served as a cornerstone of our Canadian foreign defence policy. NATO was born in the aftermath of the Second World War and has continued to represent the benefits of collective security through 40 years of relative stability in Europe. NATO has been put to many tests, but the unity and determination of the Alliance has not wavered.

NATO provides a regular forum for interaction between different nations and has developed over its 40 years a very healthy economic and trading relationship. Many members of this House have participated in various NATO groups. They have talked to me about the tremendous opportunities and experience it has provided. Today, NATO provides for the common security of over 600 million people in 16 nations on both sides of the Atlantic.

If I might quote my colleague, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark):

The modern era is marked by conflict, yet Europe, the region with the highest concentration of sophisticated weaponry in the world, is enjoying the longest sustained period of peace and stability since the height of the Holy Roman Empire.

An Hon. Member: Thanks to NATO.

Mrs. Collins: Thanks to NATO. That collective success is something in which we should all take pride.

As the Prime Minister said recently, we believe there exists in Canada today a profound desire to get on with the job of preparing a better future for our children and their children. This Government was elected on November 21 to serve our nation. Last week's Throne Speech was a map for the next four years of Government. It has often been said that when you do not know where you are going, any road will take you there. The Opposition is all too familiar with taking any which road, only to end up at a dead end. Our Government has a map that will lead Canadians along the road to continued prosperity, a road map that does not circumvent or miss the important elements that are necessary to every successful journey.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this is a tall order and an enormous challenge, but will remain vigilant in our economic and social policies. I believe it will serve the interests of all Canadians in the years to come.

[English]

Over time, many issues will be discussed in this House. My constituents in the riding of Capilano—Howe Sound will agree with me when I say that perhaps no issue is of more importance at the moment than the protection of our environment. My home province is proud to bask in the splendour of nature's beauty. We are blessed with the expanse of the Rocky Mountains, the crispness of glacier-fed streams, the abundance of animals and marine life, and the grandness of the Sitka spruce trees in the Carmanah Creek Valley. We do not take our good fortune for granted.

The recent disaster of the Exxon Valdez oil tanker off the coast of Alaska brought home the delicate balance between nature and commerce. I was pleased to participate in the emergency debate held in this very place last Tuesday evening. I said that night and will say again, that no system can ever be perfect. This Government has learned from the mistakes of others and is prepared to deal with any difficulties that should threaten the coast or islands of British Columbia. I must remind the members of the Opposition who indicated the Government was somehow responsible for this tragedy that we on this side of the House are here for the sole purpose of representing the best interests of our constituents and to safeguard those delicate balances that contribute to the quality of our daily lives. As such, I can assure Members opposite, when I stand here and tell them that we will do everything in our power to prepare for any future disaster, that is the actual situation, plain and simple.

I too must answer to my constituents. As many of them live on the rocky shores of the Pacific or Georgia Strait, one can be sure that I am paying close attention to developments which come out of the Alaska oil spill, and the lessons that we must learn from this incident.

A concrete example of the commitment of the Government to foster economic development in Pacific Canada was demonstrated last year with the creation of a Pacific directorate of the Department of Supply and Services. On August 6, 1988 my colleague, the Hon. Member for Oakville—Milton (Mr. Jelinek), elevated the status of the office in Vancouver to that of a directorate. That means that British Columbia businesses can do business with the Government of Canada in British Columbia as opposed to coming to Ottawa. Combined with the Western Diversification Office in Vancouver, and the western procurement initiatives announced this past year, one can see that the situation is changing for the better. We can count on the determination of the Hon. Minister responsible for western diversification to bring the situation that much further to one of parity between all regions of Canada.

One aspect of the western economic development in which I have had a particular interest is that of the Asia-Pacific Initiative. This past week I was honoured to be appointed the lead British Columbia Minister responsible for this far-sighted program. It was conceptualized by our dear friend and former Minister for International Trade, the Hon. Pat Carney. With almost one year left in API's mandate, I have already begun to collect advice from the Blue-Chip Advisory Committee which includes members from the private, public, and academic sectors. The advisory committee has appointed task forces that are addressing opportunities and advising both the Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia in the areas of international finance, trade, transportation, tourism, and cultural and social impacts, as well as the export of professional services.

All told, more than 100 senior volunteers from the private sector are engaged in some aspect of this operation. The Asia–Pacific Initiative has built strong links between our country and the many nations of the Pacific Rim which serve both our economic and cultural interests.

I am proud to be a member of a Government that is concerned about the long–term as well as the short–term development of our regions. We are committed to providing an atmosphere where people can be optimistic about their day–to–day lives. Our neighbours and our constituents have asked that we maintain the caring and compassionate aspects of our society. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has promised that this will be done. I can assure all Hon. Members that nothing in the Throne Speech will undermine that commitment. Our Prime Minister is committed to supporting those who are in need of assistance, whether they be seniors, children, veterans, or the handicapped. However, we cannot continue to live beyond our means without inviting disastrous consequences. That is the other message which is so important to convey to Canadians today.

I hope that my own children, who are just reaching adulthood, and all children of Canada, will be able to enjoy the same benefits and opportunities that I have had. This will be impossible unless our generation of Parliamentarians comes to the realization that we cannot continue to spend freely and mortgage the birthright of those who are yet to come. Not to act now would be tantamount to making our children economic hostages and slaves to our own largesse. We cannot allow that to take place. We need resolve and determination if we are to develop the more productive and competitive economy that we have committed to in the Speech from the Throne. We shall bring forward measures in the Budget later this month which will diffuse the ticking time bomb of growing debt, and establish a new framework for fiscal responsibility that my children and yours demand of all of us.

Mr. Robinson: I would like to congratulate the Minister on her historic appointment as Associate Minister of National Defence, and to particularly commend her for the position taken by the Government on the decision of the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal on full involvement of women in combat positions within the Canadian Armed Forces. We welcomed that decision.

I would like to ask the Minister about another equality issue within the Canadian Armed Forces. The Minister will recall that she was a member of the special committee on Equality Rights which reported to the Government of Canada in 1985. It unanimously recommended that the Canadian Armed Forces bring its employment practices into conformity with the Canadian Human Rights Act, as amended, to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. The Member, now Minister, concurred fully in that recommendation of the committee.

In March, 1986, the Government promised to take whatever measures were necessary to ensure that sexual orientation was a prohibited ground of discrimination in relation to all areas of federal jurisdiction.

As the Hon. Minister knows, men and women within the Canadian Armed Forces who happen to be gay or lesbian still are not accorded full equality and justice. I would like to ask the Minister to confirm that the current policy within the Canadian Armed Forces is as stated in a written answer to a question on the Order Paper which I submitted last May. The answer of the then Minister was as follows:

> Current policy has been further modified in that the involuntary release, under Item 5(d) of QR&O Chap 15, of serving members actually engaged in the practice of homosexual activities has been suspended pending government consideration of the Canadian Force policy.

I would like to ask the Minister to confirm that that remains the policy of the Government of Canada. When will the Minister finally recognize the oppression and the cruelty of current policies? Men and women who are qualified and capable of serving their country have their careers in limbo, are not entitled to take part in career development programs, are not entitled to promotions, and their security clearances can be jeopardized. When will the Government finally recognize equality and justice for gays and lesbians within the Armed Forces? When will the Government finally live up to the promises that it made? When will the Minister live up to the commitment that she made as a member of a committee that unanimously recommended equality and no discrimination for gays and lesbians within the Canadian Armed Forces?

Mrs. Collins: I would like to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby—Kingsway (Mr. Robinson), for raising this issue on which we have certainly had discussions in the past. I recall our work together on the committee on Equality Rights during 1985 in which we discussed these issues at great length with Canadians across the country. That was one of the reasons that I was particularly pleased that within weeks of my appointment I was able to make the announcement that women would be allowed full access to practically all occupations and trades in the Armed Forces. That certainly reaffirmed the recommendations of that particular parliamentary committee.

Many of the recommendations of that committee caused some concern at the time. I am sure my hon. colleague will recall that. However, in the fullness of time, and it may take some time for all recommendations to be implemented, they will certainly stand in good stead. I feel very proud of the work that we did in that committee.

I would also like to confirm to my colleague that what he has said about the existing policy of the Department of National Defence with respect to sexual orientation is indeed true. Following my former colleague, the now Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty), an appearance was made at the Standing Committee on this subject. At that time he made a commitment that there would not be any involuntary release of personnel because of their sexual orientation, until there was an opportunity for a full review. This was a change from the policy which had existed earlier that involved releases in certain situations.

Since my appointment I, and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight), have been addressing this issue and asking for a review of the policy. I look forward to the opportunity to discuss it with my other colleagues. We will bring forward our report will make it known to Parliament in the fullness of time, which I hope is not too long in the future. I cannot give the Hon. Member a date, but certainly a review is ongoing and I am sure we will keep him well informed of its outcome.

• (1540)

Mr. Pagtakhan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I have indeed derived pleasure from the proceedings of this House. However, I have also derived pain from the Throne Speech. It will impact negatively on the poor and disadvantaged of our country.

As Associate Minister of National Defence, can the Hon. Member in fact muster, as she said, with all vigour, the scrapping of all nuclear submarine programs?

Does the Associate Minister agree that the right to live is the beginning of human right as is stated in The Hague Declaration of last month signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)? If so, will she lobby Cabinet to promptly introduce legislation against induced abortion to protect the right to life of the unborn?

Will the Minister share with the House the position of the Government as to how it will handle and help the unbearable debt that Third World countries now shoulder?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for his question and I will deal with the different parts of it.

With respect to the issue of abortion, I am sure that if the Hon. Member has read Hansard over the past years he is well aware of my personal position on the matter, a position which I have held long before I was involved in politics. There is certainly no wavering from my position that this is a matter of choice for women.

With respect to nuclear submarines, I would like to give a little history on the matter. When the Government took office in 1984 we inherited a situation with respect to our Armed Forces that was utterly terrible. The morale was gone. There was no equipment. If one talked to many of the women and men who served in the Armed Forces they would have seen that it was really a dispirited group. That was as a result of 17 years of neglect under the former Government.

When we formed the Government we initiated the first review of defence policy which resulted in the White Paper on defence tabled in the House in 1987. As I am sure the Hon. Member will recall, we also introduced separate uniforms for the different commands. I must say that that has been a measure which has helped to reinstitute a great sense of pride in the men and women who serve in our Forces.

Uniforms are not enough. We cannot have soldiers, sailors, airmen and submariners without proper equipment. They do not have it. They have not had it. A major part of the White Paper looked at the equipment requirements of our Armed Forces to develop a plan to refurbish them, to give them the proper equipment in order to do the job.

In the Navy, a number of alternatives were put forward. As the Hon. Member knows, we have the frigate program which is going ahead for the construction of a dozen frigates, the Trump program, the mine counter-measure vessels for our reserve forces and the proposed submarine program. If we look around the world we see that the navies of the world all have submarines. It has become the technology of modern navies. Yet Canada, with a tri-ocean coastline and despite 75 years of submarine service, has very outdated oberon-class equipment in the Oberons.

It was the recommendation the of White Paper and of the Department that we should embark on the construction over a long period of time—27 years—of a new, updated modern capability for our Navy in the focus of nuclear-powered submarines. As I said in the House yesterday, we are all facing the Budget which will come down on April 27. There has been a review process. Until we know what the resources will be for our Department we cannot make final decisions about the major capital purchases of a variety of items. I do want to say that the White Paper on defence continues to be the policy of the Government with respect to defence issues.

The Hon. Member asked me about our support to Third World countries. Quite honestly, I cannot think of any Government which has done more with respect to our involvement through CIDA and the involvement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) recently on Third World debt issues than our Government. Our Canadian International Development Agency programs are looked upon around the world with tremendous respect. I look at the work it has done to ensure the improved role of women in Third World countries, something in which we have been a real leader in the various programs that we have developed. I look at the recent developments to decentralize CIDA, to put our people right out on the front lines so that they are knowledgeable about the needs of programs and the tremendous changes that have taken place, and the improvements in our international development programs since this Government has taken office.

I would think that the Hon. Member would want to congratulate the Government on the tremendous role it has played and the sense of responsibility it has shown toward Third World countries. This is in the interests of us all. We all know that unless we can see those Third World countries developing and providing more economic independence for themselves that in the future we will not have markets or good global economy. It is certainly in the interests of us all to help support those initiatives.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but her time has expired. The time allotted for questions and comments has expired. Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Victoria I have an announcement to make.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for an Address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech of the opening of the session; and on the amendment of Mr. Foster (p.326).

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by congratulating you on your re-election to the Chair. You have been a great credit to this institution. It is a matter of great pride for me personally to serve in this House under your Speakership. May I also say that I appreciate very much your personal courtesy on a number of occasions already in this new Parliament.

May I also congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the Hon. Member for Calgary Southeast (Mr. Richardson) and the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mrs. Gibeau).

I would also like to extend my thanks to the voters of Victoria. It is a great honour to represent the community of Victoria and Oak Bay in this House. The constituency of Victoria has been represented by a diverse number of people over the more than 100 years British Columbia has been in Confederation. I suppose the most notable is the first Prime Minister of Canada, Sir John A. Macdonald. All of the Members until today have been either Members of the Liberal Party or the Conservative Party. We now have representing Victoria the first social democrat. I am very pleased and proud of that.

It is my intention to share the perspectives of the people of Victoria. I should say that I think the political evolution of Victoria is only a precursor to the political evolution of the country.

Victoria has the reputation of being a tweed curtain, a rather quiet and retiring place. In fact, it is a very creative, lively and imaginative community. I suppose all of us would be inclined to proclaim the geophysical beauties of our own constituencies, but Victoria is a very beautiful place.

We have a very dynamic arts and cultural community, and have had for many years, producing some of the finest artists and musicians in the country. It is perhaps for that reason that we are particularly upset with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for its persistent failure to provide even the minimum production and broadcasting facilities in Victoria. We have had 50 years of neglect. We are the only capital in Canada which has no radio or television production services, a fact we intend to remedy in the next few years.

I have had some very useful discussions with senior representatives of the CBC. I hope that in the next few years, with the active support of the people of Victoria, we will see a change in that direction.

• (1550)

We are a very active sports community. We have produced champions. It is partly because of that that we took interest in bidding for the Commonwealth Games in 1994. We are very pleased that in Seoul last September, Victoria was given the honour and responsibility of hosting the Commonwealth Games in 1994.

Victoria is a community with above average numbers of seniors, partly because of its commodious climate and its rich cultural diversity. Because of that we are in some respects on the cutting edge of a social change that all communities in Canada are going to face in the years ahead. As a result of a much higher percentage of seniors in the community, there is a need for changes in medical services, in transportation, in community services, in housing, and in policing.

As a result, we have a number of very important and innovative programs in Victoria which I think the country will do well to study. I particularly draw attention to the neighbourhood policing project that, with the support of the Solicitor General's Department, we are finding to be a most effective way of delivering police services in our community.

Having pointed to some of those, let me say that we are not without our problems. I suppose, in keeping with most communities outside the central part of Canada, we have particular problems with the quantity of jobs and the quality of jobs. We have persistently high unemployment and persistently high underemployment. The Minister responsible for employment was proclaiming with great enthusiasm the Government's record in job creation, but we have to look behind the numbers to see the kinds of jobs that have been created.

We in Victoria are as experienced as most other communities in Canada with the problem of low-paid, insecure jobs which do not challenge the minds and creativity of those who hold them. As a result we too suffer a drain of our young people from our community and the lack of challenge the job situation provides.

We are working ourselves on those problems, but I believe the federal Government has a major role to play in diversifying in a regional way the good jobs in this country and planning for the long run so that people can continue to live and work in the communities in which they grew up.

However, underlying what is generally for most people a reasonable standard of living is an anxiety felt all across this land, not for ourselves but for our children and our children's children, an anxiety about the future of this planet.

We hear on the news night after night about the ozone layer, the greenhouse effect, PCBs, oil spills, the destruction of our forests, many of which occurrences we see right around us. This fear is beginning to be reflected in the responses of all political Parties in Canada. I suggest that it is the critical issue before this Parliament.

As a result of this, I come to this Parliament with an agenda which includes a number of specific matters for the community of Victoria. At the top of the list are environmental issues, and a number of specific ones to Victoria include the requirement for land-based sewage treatment. We still pump raw sewage into the Strait of Juan de Fuca. It is a situation which all community leaders have concluded must stop. In due course we will need federal assistance to eliminate it. Studies are now under way by the Capital Regional District to see what the specific requirements are, but in due course in the next couple of years, we will be back to this Parliament and to the Government for assistance. The Government has provided assistance for Halifax. It must provide assistance in this area for communities such as Victoria.

As well, there are specific issues of economic development in which the federal Government is directly involved. I am thinking here of Ogden Point, the lands owned by Transport Canada. It will be a major source of development in the years ahead, and it will be very important for this Government to give sensitive attention to the development of Ogden Point.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, let me move to what I believe is my mandate from the voters of Victoria, to raise issues of national importance with a perspective from our community. I am going to list and try to develop in the few minutes left to me five issues: First, the environment; second, Canada's role in the world; third, issues of national unity; fourth, the questions of national economic development; and fifth, questions of social justice.

On the issue of the environment, I was struck by the references in the Speech from the Throne to the environment, but putting that in juxtaposition with some references made earlier in the Speech to the free market economy. It was as if two different people had written these two sections of the Speech from the Throne. It made me wonder whether the Government has actually read the Brundtland report.

On the one hand, the Government committed itself to the virtues of the free market economy and, second, lauded the Brundtland report. Yet, the Brundtland report is a stunning indictment of the impact of the free market economy over the last 100 years. It is impossible to achieve the objective of saving this planet if we leave economic decisions simply to the workings of the market-place. The Brundtland report states very clearly that there is a place for the market, but it must be overridden by the community imperative of saving the environment.

As the Government moves along the path of increased concern for the environment, I ask that the Government take its concern to its logical conclusion. As we have had the specific issues put to the House during the last 10 days, in each case the Government's response was that it would act more effectively, more quickly. In that lies the long-term strategy for coping with the environmental crisis. No one in this House could believe that if the forests of British Columbia and Canada are left to the forest companies alone to decide we will have any forests left within the next 10 years. The only way that we can preserve the forests is for Governments at all levels to intervene and ensure that they are protected.

We have other environmental issues, but rather than deal with the specific issues, let me just outline some thoughts on a general strategy. The Government must crack down on polluters. The Government must encourage an orderly transition of industries which are recognized as damaging the environment. The costs of that transition cannot properly be expected to be borne by the employees, the workers, even the individual companies that are working in an area which we now see must be phased out. We must work in a planned, effective way from an environmentally destructive economy to an environmentally sustainable one. That transition will require careful, step by step planning. It will have to involve communities, companies, and workers. Plans will have to be put into effect to have a transition. The costs of that transition must be borne by society as a whole. Therefore it will be with great interest that I will be listening to the Budget two weeks from now to see whether it is in any way integrated into the imperative requirements for saving this planet.

• (1600)

We are fortunate in Canada to have economic growth virtually every year. A recession is when we slow down the rate of economic growth, but that economic growth as it is presently structured is leading us to environmental disaster. We must begin to see that there can be no increase in personal wealth for the top half of the earners in this country until we bring the environmental issues under control.

The Budget must deal effectively with consumer spending of those who already have too much. It must begin to divert the economic growth we are looking at over the next number of years toward saving the environment and distributing the goods and services that we produce in this country in a more fair manner.

I want to speak briefly about Canada's role in the world. This is a matter of great concern to the people of Victoria. We are proud of the fact that we have one of the largest peace walks every year in this country. We are a community that is committed to peace. We want to tell the Government that the time has come, given the dramatic developments in the Soviet Bloc, for Canada to take effective and vocal leadership in exacting from the West a flexible response to the initiatives taken on the other side of the Iron Curtain.

This planet has lived in jeopardy of nuclear destruction for 40 years. We have still not moved away from that particular danger. The world is still armed with 50,000 nuclear warheads. It is of crucial importance that we take this moment in history to try to move on both sides, now particularly in the West, to break down the arms race and step back from the abyss, to reduce our reliance on nuclear and conventional weapons.

We also want to see a reduction in the reliance on conventional weapons around the world. We want to see the Government regain the initiative in Southern Africa to rid the world of the evil of apartheid. We want to see the Government finally pay some attention to the needs and concerns of the peoples of the islands of the Pacific who now suffer from living in the world's nuclear backyard.

There are also issues of social justice and national unity. We in the West believe that it is critical that we bring Canada's aboriginal people into Confederation. We agree with the concept of a distinct society. At least I know the vast majority of my constituents believe in the concept of recognizing Québec as a distinct society as acknowledged in the preamble of the Meech Lake Agreement. However, we disagree vehemently with the Prime Minister's intemperate outburst of last week in his attack on the constitutional amendments of 1982 and the development of the Charter.

We say this is a time for patience on all sides of the House. We ask that those from central Canada and Québec in particular, now that Québec has reached a new maturity in Confederation, take a sensitive response and reaction to what is happening in western Canada. There is a deep sense in western Canada of being left out of the decision making.

The Government may say that that is unfair, but it is a view that is a deep-seated reality. The Government has not responded to that, including the Government of the Province of Québec. It is not enough to dig in one's heels on Meech Lake and insist that it be passed without change. There must be an indication of flexibility.

I am proud that this is a bilingual country. I do not agree with those who say that French is being forced down our throats, but it is an attitude which must be dealt with in an understanding way. The way in which Mr. Bourassa responded in December to the Supreme Court decision fell far short of that mark.

Let me address the issues of social justice since this affects the area in which I am critic, particularly that of Solicitor General. There are issues of grave concern to all Members who are concerned about issues of social justice. They include conditions in our prisons, the conditions among our native people, the loneliness of people who are aged, and the grotesque division of wealth in this country. Some people struggle to get the bare necessities. It is a fact in Canada today, I know in British Columbia, that children go to school hungry, and the Government says there is no money to feed them.

As I wind down my speech, I want to conclude by saying something I looked forward to saying since I was elected. I want to pay personal tribute to the Leader of our Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), for the service he has rendered to this country.

I was disappointed when he said that he would step down. I had looked forward to serving in this Parliament under his leadership. Every day that he intervenes in the House I am renewed in the conviction that he has a tremendous place still to play in the history of this country. I believe our Party does him honour and I know this House does him honour.

I am gratefully looking forward to the opportunity of serving Victoria and my country as a Member of Parliament. It is a tremendous honour and one which I believe all Canadians should have the opportunity to experience. As one who has been chosen to exercise that responsibility, I can merely say that I will do my best in this position.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, I too should add my thoughts to those of the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. Brewin) about our Leader and the contribution he has made to this country and our Party in particular. There is still the future to hear from the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Victoria and some of his close associates and friends on being awarded the Commonwealth Games for 1994 in Victoria. It will be a major event for his city and also one of which all of us from British Columbia are proud.

I would like him to comment on the question of our forests which, as I stated during the emergency debate on the massive oil spill off the coast of Alaska, is our greatest environmental heritage. I was pleased that the Hon. Member for Victoria at least mentioned forests in his speech, because we heard nothing about forestry in the Speech from the Throne.

Does he believe there is a train of thought on the government side—perhaps they are all empty cars—on the commitment made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) time and time again about introducing legislation to create a full Department of Forests?

On January 30, he created the portfolio of Minister of State for Forests and said that legislation would follow. Would he comment on the regrettable statement by the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Oberle) who said that establishing a full Department of Forests is not a high priority of the Government.

Knowing the Member's concern about forestry and how it affects his riding, specifically Vancouver Island, does he see any concern about what impact that department may have on British Columbia and Vancouver Island?

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, at one point the Government seemed to commit itself to the idea of having a full department of forestry. That was before the election. It seems to have vanished from its agenda now. This is a matter of great disappointment to the people of our area in particular.

• (1610)

Forestry is British Columbia's number one industry and is perhaps one of the major industries all across Canada. We are finally beginning to recognize the damage that we have done to our forests. Those who have worked in the forests, loggers and members of a number of the unions which I have been associated as legal counsel over a number of years, have for a long time seen what the problems were. They are caused primarily by a lack of management but also by a lack of government intervention to ensure management.

One of the problems is if the Government does not set down any rules, then each company is virtually forced to do what it can get away with. Some companies have a slightly better record than others, but basically, all are driven by the bottom line, and it is their responsibility to their shareholders to try to extract as much as they can in the shortest possible time. This has left our forests denuded.

Even now, if one looks from Victoria toward Salt Spring Island, one can see that even the Gulf Islands are beginning to get caught. If one has an opportunity to fly across Vancouver Island, one will see that this is now becoming a major epidemic. This is happening in the interest of jobs now at the cost of jobs later.

It will be very important for all levels of government and the community to pull together to try to develop programs which will ensure that old growth forests such as the Carmanah Valley are preserved and at the same time ensure, to the fullest extent possible, that the first imperative is conservation.

The second imperative is, as far as possible, to get the maximum number of jobs out of our forests. This will include, for example, policies of prohibiting the export of raw logs and of ensuring the production of forest and lumber products here rather than abroad.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since there are no further questions or comments, the time for questions and comments is now terminated. I recognize the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine).

[Translation]

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, after every election campaign Canadians must expect a description of the Government's major policy orientations. We did that in 1984. After the victory of September 1984, we told Canadians we were going to create jobs, initiate economic renewal and enable Canadians to get jobs. This time again, we recently put forward and are discussing today our orientation for the next few years.

Firstly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to list and probably repeat the four major thrusts of our Throne Speech. First, to build a strong economy, encouraged by incentive and opportunity, an economy fully competitive among the world's trading nations and one in which all Canadians may share its challenges, risks and rewards.

Second, to strongly work out at preserving Canada's environment; to actively encourage increased public interest and involvement, and to give leadership and support to international efforts aimed at fighting the threats to this planet.

Third, to maintain a caring, compassionate society which will be able, through continuing economic prosperity, to meet its obligations and responsibilities to those who are less fortunate and in greatest need.

Fourth, to foster a confident sense of Canada's cultural and national uniqueness.

Mr. Speaker, the first item in our message, and one I consider to be the key to the others is a strong economy. And today I am happy to take part in this statement on our strong economy. I notice that my colleague, the Hon. Member from Langelier (Mr. Loiselle), the Minister of State (Finances), is in the House. Since I am sure he played a part in drawing up this economic statement, whose objectives and philosophy I share, I wish to congratulate him for having mastered, in a few weeks, the complexities of the subject.

Mr. Speaker, a strong economy means getting rid of the public debt. Last year interest payments amounted to $1,300 for every man, woman and child in Canada. For the average family, this works out to $5,000 annually or $400 monthly. This represents a big chunk in our mortgage payments, in our salaries.

Today, Mr. Speaker, $31 out of every $100 collected by Revenue Canada go to pay the interest on old accounts, in many cases, on old grocery bills.

As long as we must spend such a disproportionate share of our total resources on interest payments, the economy will suffer.

To bring the point home, Mr. Speaker, we spend on interest payments twice the amount we spend on pensions and other benefits for senior citizens. We spend nearly 11 million dollars on national defence, yet we spend three times that amount on interest payments on old debts. We spend 20 times as much on interest charges as on job creation programs. We spend 24 times as much on interest as on our regional development programs.

Mr. Speaker, these expenditures must cease. We must get better control of our economy and free ourselves from these interest costs and to do so, we must reduce our deficit. How can we reduce this deficit? We have various possibilities; one of them, which will probably be put forward in the next budget speech, is tighter control of our Government's spending.

When we took power for the first time in 1984, the deficit in our expenditure programs as such, those on which we could decide, including interest costs, was nearly $38 billion. We have progressively reduced it year by year to less than $30 billion. Since the budgets of 1987–88 and 1988–89, our expenditures are less than our revenues—and that is important—if interest charges are excluded. That means that if the Governments that preceded us had not run up such a large debt to keep power from one mandate to the next, we would not have to pay interest costs of over $30 billion today.

Of course, another way of controlling our deficit is to ask Canadians to participate more in what the Government is doing. The Minister of Finance will likely convince Canadians that everyone should pay for the mistakes of those who preceded us over the last 20 years. In the end, Canadians have to pay for the mistakes the Liberals made during all their terms in power, when they were in good economic times and continued to add to our country's debt. So all Canadians will have to tighten their belts some more.

Another way to reduce our deficit, and I am getting into specifics, is to modify our tax system as our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will probably do. Canada's tax system is lagging behind that of most European countries.

• (1620)

I suggest we gradually shift from income taxes to commodity taxes. We must also do away with certain taxes whose only effect is to thwart our economic development, and I have in mind the repeal of the 12 per cent tax on manufactured goods. This tax certainly does nothing to boost our exports because when we try to sell our products in the United States or elsewhere, they cost 12 per cent more. Another consequence of this tax is that it favours foreign imports to the detriment of our domestic producers, in the sense that the importer stands to benefit to the tune of 12 per cent on most of his imported goods because that tax does not apply to the products we buy from the United States or other countries.

The bottom line is that the Canadian manufacturer is the loser, too often to the benefit of his competitors elsewhere in the world. This levy brings in $15 billion a year to the Canadian Government, but it has to go.

Finally, another way to trim our deficit would be to gain better control over inflation so as to make our economy even more prosperous. Sure enough, a lot of people in the Opposition speak out against the official position of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his fight against inflation.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the easy way out would be to signal to the Canadian economy and the various interest groups that no attempt is to be made to control inflation. All we need do is print more money. In the short term this would relieve some of the pressure on rising interest rates because the more money is available, the more lenders lend and interest rates would have to come down.

Should that happen, within a short time—a few months—demand for goods and services of every description would increase because people would have more cash to spend. This higher demand could not be met by the supply, that is by people who make the goods and provide the services.

If you have a given quantity of goods in stock and people want more, you have two options: either you produce more or you raise prices to set a new demand level. With this kind of scenario we would soon find ourselves in a period of raging inflation which would be just as disastrous as what we experienced early in this decade. A policy to control and prevent inflation is therefore a means of controlling our deficit.

Finally, another system that will be put forward in a few months by our Minister of Finance, with whose goals and philosophy I could not agree more, is the value-added tax. That tax will bring the Government the equivalent of the revenue lost because of the lowering of other taxes. The value-added tax will bring the Government $23 billion when implemented, but those $23 billion will not bring one additional cent to the Government of Canada. They will replace $15 billion derived from the tax on manufactured goods. They will replace an estimated $3 billion lost because of tax reductions granted to some individuals.

And also that tax will replace another tax on certain personal tax benefits that were allowed under certain conditions, for a total $23 billion reduction in revenues derived from our present tax system in the areas of income tax and taxes on manufactured goods, in exchange of which the Government will collect $23 billion from the value-added tax. This will not be peculiar to Canada. It is a trend in the Western world. It is a trend in the free world and, for the benefit of my colleagues from the Socialist Party, let me tell them it will become—an income tax will probably be levied soon in the Soviet Union because they have decided among other things to understand and find it valuable to their economy to use certain principles of modern capitalism.

Finally, another solution to balance our budget and reduce the deficit and foster better economic renewal is the continuation of our privatization programs. You know that overall, Crown corporations still end up costing nearly $4 billion and a half to the Canadian taxpayers. Is it normal to ask every Canadian taxpayer to shoulder the unprofitability of certain Crown corporations in a context of economic difficulty? I do not think it is. Our government is sending out a clear signal. We will pursue our policy of privatization because, as Conservatives, we believe that the business community is better able to assess the appropriateness and profitability of an investment, to harness the human and material resources required to produce goods and services in Canada.

We maintain that bureaucrats cannot do this from their offices. Because we believe private enterprise is much more imaginative, much more in touch with reality, we intend to continue giving it greater responsibilities in the management of big corporations which were once owned by the Crown.

There is another major point. We all heard this morning the speech given by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) on the new direction of unemployment insurance programs. Questions come to mind. Canadians from coast to coast often ask themselves about this or that individual who systematically misuses unemployment insurance. These abuses must stop. On the other hand, the Minister stated quite clearly that the government must continue to ensure the security of those who have lost their jobs through no fault of their own. But the government will question more and more the appropriateness of helping those who chronically misuse the system. We must put a stop to this abuse by any Canadian citizen from whatever region. Here again, we will set things straight while caring, as I have said, about those who really need unemployment insurance. On top of that, the Minister said that she would strive to help in the development of our human resources who, because of rapid technological changes, would not have been able to adjust to the lifestyle and jobs of today. Measures to help those people were announced this morning.

Another thing: as a Member of Parliament, I often receive in my riding office people who are entitled to 40 or 45 weeks worth of unemployment insurance benefits. They tell me that they are thinking of starting a small business with their brother-in-law, their friends, their old boss, their son or their daughter. So I went to the unemployment insurance office where I was told that, if I started a small business, I could no longer collect unemployment insurance because I would be unavailable for work. Well, the Minister solved that problem.

An important point made by our Minister of Employment and Immigration in her speech was that anyone eligible for benefits that can amount to $8,000, $10,000, $12,000 or $14,000 can now submit a business plan to the Employment Canada officer and if that plan is considered valid, Employment Canada will immediately give the applicant who wants to start a small business the benefits he or she would have received over 30, 40 or 50 weeks. It is another advantage. Under the old rules, the budding entrepreneur would have lost that money. Now he or she can keep it and may even become a reliable employer and Canadian producer of goods and services. That is cooperation with Canadians. It is a message that we Conservatives have trusted small, medium and big business. We give the unemployed who have difficulty starting a business the opportunity to become employers.

• (1630)

Mr. Speaker, another message. You know that Canadians attach great importance—and it is becoming a matter of life and death throughout the world—we must stress environmental protection more and more. And speaking of the environment, the Speech from the Throne says:

> Protect the environmental integrity of our Arctic regions.

And that, Mr. Speaker, gives us a certain opening, for two reasons. These days, many use environmental reasons to criticize the plan to build nuclear-powered submarines. Everyone knows, Mr. Speaker, that whenever a problem occurs in Canada, either someone is lost in a forest or on a hunting trip or a search mission or someone is lost at sea, the Canadian Forces are called on immediately. If the Canadian Forces had nuclear-powered submarines, instead of asking questions that today cannot be answered. . . Because recently, we saw Arctic mammals on television—and when I say mammals, I include humans—and it was observed that they were accumulating lead, PCBs and chemicals in their systems. At present, we have no way of controlling where that comes from. It is claimed that it might come from Arctic waters. But water in the Arctic is covered with ice twelve months a year. It should be realized the only way to check up on that is by way of submarines which we need, not only for military purposes but for the preventive and curative protection of our environment. The only means therefore is nuclear powered submarines.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, this can also have benefits for our economy, especially in the area where I live.

Finally, the Trone Speech refers to:

> . . . initiatives to clean up the St. Lawrence River.

It is a major economic link between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic. The St. Lawrence will remain the major economic link between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic, but in addition it will become a river of drinking water and this is a matter to which we attach certain priorities.

Finally, our Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney's) position concerning an agreement with the United States on acid rain is stated again. We know that unfortunately we are very good importers of American acid rain, and we know that even if we clean up our own house, we still need an agreement with our neighbors to prevent their acidic emissions. This is part of the Throne Speech message.

A third element in the Throne Speech is the message concerning a caring nation. There are three groups of Canadians: the young, people in the workforce and I consider us here to be part of the working force, and those who were our predecessors in our society, the men and women who made it possible for us to be here today. They need us today, and our message points to the continuation of our generous plans for senior citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I would have more to say on our Throne Speech—I could comment on our co-operation in the search for better agreements with the GATT, but I wish to let other Members rise and have their say on the Throne Speech. In conclusion, I suggest that a favourable evolution of our economy is everyone's business. We must all take part—each one of us must do his or her share, because only in this way will we continue enjoying a better quality of life.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have always listened with great pleasure to the Hon. Member for Lévis who just gave us his views on the Speech from the Throne.

I must say I had trouble seeing nuclear attack submarines as beneficial to the ecology of my country. I found this rather hard to understand, and I am sure the Hon. Member would be willing to explain how an instrument of war could be beneficial to Canada's ecology, and more specifically, how the Hon. Member could possibly make such a statement, considering all the risks of having a vehicle, nuclear-powered or otherwise, in an environmentally sensitive area.

He also referred to the fact we would have to tighten our belts, saying we could not go on spending as if there was no tomorrow. I suggest we now have a good opportunity to save money by cancelling the whole nuclear submarine program which is going to cost Canadian taxpayers about $14 billion, even if they are ecological submarines according to my hon. friend opposite.

I have one last question, and perhaps he can answer all my questions at the same time. It's about this caring society. The Hon. Member referred to a caring society, and speaking as a Canadian, I think that in the past, we have had a society that I would call caring, at least compared to countries that do not have as many social programs as we do to help the needy.

Today, however, we heard the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) say in her speech that unemployment insurance recipients would see their benefits cut rather severely, even if they had very few prospects of finding a job elsewhere.

How can the Hon. Member claim his Government advocates this caring society, considering the statements that were made earlier today?

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I would have been very disappointed if the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell had not asked me a few supplementaries today. We are starting another four-year term together, and I wish him the best of luck. And I hope that at the end of this period, we will be able to renew our mandate together.

First of all, the Hon. Member mentioned the peace-keeping role and how it relates to the manufacturing of nuclear-powered submarines.

Mr. Boudria: I was talking about the ecological role.

Mr. Fontaine: He mentioned the peace-keeping role and the ecological role. I will deal with each one separately.

Because of the improvers state of preparedness of our country and the quality of our military personnel that Canada has enjoyed such credibility over the past decades as a military force and has been called upon as much as 35 times, I believe, not to wage war, but to keep peace. And to be effective as a peace-keeping force, a country must be credible and well equipped. This goes to show that peace-keeping and nuclear-powered submarines can go hand in hand.

Secondly, nuclear-powered submarines present no threat to the environment. They are no more dangerous than conventional submarines. As I have said, nuclear-powered submarines can, for days, weeks and months on end, travel under the polar ice cap conducting studies, taking water-quality samples, identifying sources of pollution which cannot be identified today because we cannot set up equipment there. And this is important because we see the effects of pollution on life in our northern regions.

Precisely because we attach so much importance to the protection of the environment, we need to go up there to see what is going on so as to avoid further accumulations of lead in Arctic life forms.

The Hon. Member wants to know how the Government can contemplate purchasing submarines at a cost of $14 billion. First of all, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell is well aware that these submarines will cost exactly $8 billion, and not $14 billion. He is also aware that this cost will be spread over a 25 year period, which represents an average cost of $300 million a year, and that this purchase is necessary because it is recommended by the experts of our Armed Forces. Mr. Speaker, we certainly hope never to have to use these submarines in time of war, just like my fellow citizens and I hope never to need the services of the police. But when the mayor of our town decides to purchase a more modern car for our policemen, I say it is a good thing for these policemen to have the proprer equipment in case I should need it. And nobody blames the mayor for purchasing this upgraded equipment for our policemen, although we would prefer not to have to use it, but we know it is available. The same situation occurs on a national level. We need police cars to patrol our streets; we need more advanced equipment at the Provincial level, and we need still more sophisticated equipment at the Federal level.

In his last question, he referred to a generous economy. He wants to know on what this generous economy is based. When the Liberals were in power, the Government was most generous in incuring debts which we, our children and grand-children will have to pay back. That was how they redistributed the unearned wealth of the State, by accumulating debts which now amount to $320 billion. That is how generous that Government was!

This Government, on the other hand, is being generous towards those men and women in our society who really need help; Mr. Speaker, we make it possible for our partners in the private sector to grow and make money. It is important to make money. We make it possible for them to make money. In turn, they will pay taxes, so that the Government will finally be able to share the earned wealth, instead of sharing debts which our children and grand-children who have no say about it, will have to pay back.

That is my understanding of a generous economy, Mr. Speaker.

• (1640)

Mr. Kindy: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congragulate you on your re-election. I think that the Edmonton North constituents made a good choice. I wish also to congratulate you for sitting in this House for the past 21 years. It is quite an achievement, and I hope that you will continue to seek the support of your constituents.

I certainly enjoyed the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine), remarks which certainly reflect the policy of this Tory Government. Just the same, I should like to ask him a few questions, especially concerning Crown Corporations. He indicated that was one way we could bring down Canada's debt which now totals $320 billion.

Does the Hon. Member think that if we managed to privatize these corporations with a total value of some $13.5 billion, we could bring down Canada's debt while saving money, because we spend approximately $4 billion every year to operate them? That would make up a total of $17.5 billion. That is one of my questions.

I have a second question concerning the proposed value added tax. By the way, according to a study made in the United States, if that country wanted to institute a value added tax system, it would require approximately 21,000 employees more and cost $700 million to the US Treasury. In Canada, that would mean about 4,000 more civil servants, which would cost our Treasury, that is the Minister of Finance, something like $200 million, and all that, of course, in order to collect about $23 billion, as estimated by my friend, the Hon. Member for Lévis.

I don't normally object to reducing the deficit. It certainly is a good idea. But I wonder if, by applying an added-value tax, we would not be creating another layer of bureaucracy in the Department of Finance. Consequently, shouldn't we look at this problem from another perspective and try to find some other way to achieve a tax reform. For example, we could have a flat income tax rate of, let's say, 15 per cent. It would be simple enough and eliminate the need for more bureaucrats. Those are the two questions I wanted to ask the Hon. Member.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, in response to the first question of the Hon. Member for Calgary-North-East (Mr. Kindy), I would like to show you the results that can be achieved by privatization and I will use, as an example, the Canada Post Corporation. When we were first elected, in 1984, that corporation was losing $381 million. Nowadays, thanks to the guidelines we, in the conservative government, established for the management of this corporation, it is no longer in the red. I use this example because this corporation is now working in cooperation with the private sector, has increased the accessibility and quality of its services to private companies, and has succeeded at no extra cost to Canadian taxpayers.

We also found out other advantages in privatization, in the case of Canadair, for instance, a company, with de Havilland, that swallowed $2.3 billion because of the carelessness of the Liberal administrators who set them up. We made them private companies. Canadair has now increased its personnel. It exports some of its products abroad, and all of them, Canadair, de Havilland and Canadian Arsenals are now profitable and have hired more employees although our privatization objectives had met with objections. The Socialists and Liberals said at the time it was nonsense and that every one of the workers would lose his job. Quite the contrary! Nobody lost his job. Canadians have better jobs and more of them are working.

As for my colleague's concerns regarding the cost of collecting the added-value tax, I must inform him it is a matter that surely worries my colleague from Langelier who is Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Loiselle). I must also point out to him that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is working in co-operation with the representatives of the Finance Ministers of the ten Canadian provinces in an attempt to institutionalize a collection system that will take into account past experiments of previous systems, for example, the collection of tax on manufactured goods. Hopefully, there will be a very close and formal co-operation among provinces. Thus, we expect to reduce to a minimum the collection costs of the added-value tax.

[English]

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the hon. gentleman for taking part in the Throne Speech debate. However, I am sure he would want his copy of Hansard to set the record straight.

He grouped Canadians into three categories—the young, the active and the elderly, as if to imply that the elderly are not active.

On Saturday I delivered an Horizons cheque to a Mrs. Rae in my riding. She is 83 years old and no relation to the leader of the provincial NDP. She lives in an apartment complex in which the seniors have very little to do. Yet, at the age of 83, suffering from arthritis and walking with the use of a cane, she took on a project of setting up a program for senior citizens in two apartment buildings. She is more active than the young people the Hon. Member put in his active category. I think we should set the record straight in this House. Many of the elderly are just as active, and in fact maybe more active, than some of our young Canadians.

• (1650)

I wanted to pose a question to the Hon. Member. I am pleased that he did address the deficit problem, but I wonder if he would set the record straight. I am sure it will look nice in his Hansard when he sends it out to his constituents. What was the public debt when his Party took office in 1984, and what is the public debt today. Could he explain why in the best of economic times, from 1984 to 1989, at a time when Canada never experienced such good economic times before, at a time when his Government sold off many Crown corporations creating billions of dollars as revenue for the Government, why has his Government allowed the public debt to rise to such an extent?

I think his colleague in his question said the public debt is something like $320 billion. So I wonder if he could tell this House exactly what was the accumulated public debt in 1984, what is it today and why his Government allowed it to grow that much?

He blames governments over the last 20 years. Past Governments went through good times, but they also had recessions. They built in a lot of new programs, but here is a Government in the best of economic times boasting to Canadians how they are reducing the deficit while hiding under the mat what is happening to the public debt. This is the real issue here. Let us be honest with Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I will try to give short answers to the two questions of the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Flis).

In his first question he asked me to define what I understand by the young, the active, and the elderly. When I say active, Mr. Speaker, I refer to the group of people defined by Statistics Canada as being the men and women who, usually between the ages of 20 and 60 or 65, are considered in the labour force. That is the word economists and stastisticians use to refer to gainfully employed people.

As to the second question concerning the trend of the deficit between 1984 and 1988, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to explain why our deficit now stands at $320 billion. Why do Canadians have to pay so much for the deficit? Because for years on end—from the time the present Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) was Minister of Finance—the Liberal Government systematically conducted its election campaigns on the strength of very expensive and very costly promises, and it had to pile up a series of deficits. So now we are paying interests on those loans.

When we took over in 1984 the economy was in such bad shape that we could not overdo it in terms of cutting expenditures and raising taxes. First we had to set the economy on an even keel. We did that, but we had no choice but continue to pay interests on the debts of our Liberal predecessors, and pay interests we did. Gentlemen, we had to service your debt and this is why we had to live with a soaring over-all debt in this country. Today, because of the irresponsibility of your colleagues and of your present leader, who was Minister of Finance when the deficits began to pile up. . . It is because of your irresponsibility that Canada has now accumulated a deficit of $320 billion.

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Time, time.

Mr. Speaker: Time marches on. Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate?

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A Speech from the Throne is normally a time for a government to signal its concern about the state of the country, to outline the solutions that government intends to follow. All parliamentarians are concerned about the financial mess this Government has created, and we can understand this Government's preoccupation, if not downright panic, caused by the incompetence of its Ministers.

We also find it incomprehensible that the needs of so many Canadians are not even mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. It is not that those in need expect big chunks of money; they know that these are saved for Club Ritz Carleton, but think of the following: There is no mention of the homeless in this speech. Perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has changed his mind since the election when he said that one homeless person in Canada is too many. Maybe he now agrees with his former Minister of Housing who said that the homeless people do not want permanent homes.

The good intentions of the present housing Minister can do nothing to help those who are living under bridges or who are sleeping in doorways if the Prime Minister will not follow through on his commitment. Money has been spent by this Government to study this problem, but where is the money to solve it? It is certainly not on the streets of Winnipeg.

Also, Mr. Speaker, there has been no mention of the post-secondary education needs of native youth. Yet this Government is content to restrict access to education while saying they are prepared to give more money. They are saying you can go to school, you can get an education, but it has to be on our terms and you have to go where we tell you to go and study what we want you to study.

Even the Minister responsible for this mess follows this line. Those students felt they had no other means of protest other than going on a hunger strike, Mr. Speaker. If you want to talk to the Minister, you have to see him only under his normal conditions. I am not satisfied about this policy, and neither are the native communities across Canada. This is one of the most scandalous changes in the federal attitude toward aboriginal peoples, and this Government is going to let a generation of native students, whose only goal is to better themselves, pay the price.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of poverty in the city of Winnipeg and more specifically in my riding, especially among the elderly. According to official figures, 5,000 people in this group have an annual income of $7,000 or less. There is nothing for the elderly in the Speech from the Throne. The Government is doing nothing about this very serious situation. It proposes nothing.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, on speaking of the elderly in Winnipeg, and in particular Winnipeg North Centre, I am honoured to have an Honorary Officer of the House, Mr. Stanley Knowles, here listening to this address. There is nobody in the history of my city who has fought more arduously and more strenuously over the years for the elderly in Winnipeg North Centre than he has.

An Hon. Member: The Tories put him in.

Mr. Walker: That is right. The Tories have singularly kept Mr. Knowles alive and well, I believe. I would like to say, too, that if there is one admonition that I receive from throughout my constituency it is that if you do not behave yourself, if you are not as good as Stanley, you will be gone by the next election. So your name is very much on my mind, sir.

Mr. Speaker, there has only been a fleeting mention about the plight of agriculture in this country. In those three lines where it is mentioned, there seems to be more concern about the state of the nation's treasury than the state of the family farm. A study done by Brandon University forecasts there will be a loss of 4,600 family farms in Manitoba by the year 1996 unless something positive is done. Without these farms, more people will move from the small towns to the larger centres in search of jobs and opportunities. We have seen this Government's attitude toward those who are unemployed, who will be seeking retraining. There is no mention of that in the Speech from the Throne either.

This Government is also silent on the issue of human rights, international and domestic human rights. There was no mention of reducing or eliminating the apartheid regime in South Africa, no policy to replace the bungling that resulted in censorship in the Rushdie case, no word on a more humane refugee or immigration policy, nothing about the concern for employment or pay equity, not a single hint that this Government will follow through on its promise made in 1985 to include sexual orientation, a group prohibited from discrimination in the Canadian Human Rights Code. Silence is very convenient, but there are people out there in Canada, Winnipeg and abroad who are counting on this Government and this country to stand up and speak for them, people who live in fear of death squads or of repressive regimes, people who have families that they are worried about.

There are people whose economic dependence keeps them from speaking out against discrimination and harassment in the workplace. We hear a lot of noise now but there is nothing in the Throne Speech, the legislative agenda of the Government, to give those people hope.

The Throne Speech mentions nothing about two local issues that are of national concern. I am pleased that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp) is listening to this speech because I know he too is very concerned about the future of Winnipeg, although he does not appear there any more. The first is the National Centre for Disease Control.

The Government states that it is concerned with biotechnology, the fight against AIDS, research into diseases associated with ageing, and a focus on centres of excellence, but there has been no mention in the Speech about following through on this commitment. The commitment was made by the former Minister of National Health and Welfare, the present Minister of Energy, and we await further announcements because it is much needed for the city.

Another matter of equal concern to Winnipeg, to western Canada and the Maritimes as well, is the fact that the Speech from the Throne made no mention of ERDA agreements which need to be renewed immediately by the Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am very worried about the future of my city, and my province. There is too much unemployment in Winnipeg North Centre. During the past five years there has been no federal planning or investment to help remedy this problem. There is no new hope in the Throne Speech for Manitobans. They want the federal Government to play a more important role in the economic development of the city and the province. I say we need programs and agreements for agriculture, science and transport, and so forth. What will my city's future be under a Conservative Government?

[English]

If silence is sometimes convenient, it is also quite eloquent. By its silence the Government speaks volumes on its indifference to the plight of so many people in this country.

Who does the Government care about? Why does it want to govern? More important, for whom does it want to govern? Apparently it does not want to govern for the people of Canada but for interests that we keenly await to unfold in the next couple of years.

The Government masks its silence behind platitudes and carefully crafted statements with just the right amount of spin. It may pat itself on the back for such an accomplishment, but it is offering no comfort for those who live on the edge in our society and are in desperate need of help from our Government. This silence is deadening. This silence is deadly.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss in my duties if I did not congratulate the Hon. Member for giving us such a fine speech this afternoon. I know that all my colleagues, in their usual objective view, will join me in congratulating him.

The Hon. Member comes from Winnipeg, a city which has chosen to elect a large number of Liberal Members. The good voters of Winnipeg should be congratulated as well for their thoughtfulness and wisdom in electing so many Liberal Members. I know they will be well represented in the next few years.

The good voters of Winnipeg have been particularly concerned about issues involving Canada Post. During the last few years we heard much about the so-called supermailboxes. I would hardly consider them super.

I believe that during the last Parliament we heard that people from Winnipeg had objected to the evaluation of their property during the assessment for the purpose of municipal taxes because they had supermailboxes in front of their houses. They said it lowered their property value. The Government denied such a thing and said the supermailboxes were beautiful. It was a great surprise to the Government, but a surprise to no one else, that the Assessment Review Court, or its equivalent in Manitoba, determined that the complaints were in fact correct. These supermailboxes were damaging the value of the property of those homeowners.

Does my colleague agree that the Canada Post policy on supermailboxes has been particularly unfair to those residents living in suburban areas or recently developed areas, who pay the same amount for postage stamps and other Canada Post services yet are offered an inferior service than counterparts living sometimes as close as one street away?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, as usual my colleague has a very effective way of questioning and raising an excellent point about the way we are governed in this country.

My colleagues from Manitoba will recognize that the suburban delivery of mail in Winnipeg North Centre is a most pressing issue. The delivery service throughout Winnipeg has suffered badly due to the actions of Canada Post in the last five years. Several complaints have been raised about the supermailboxes which quite clearly no one in our city considers to be super. They are both of great inconvenience in receiving mail and also a personal cost to those whose property they devalue. Of course, the closer one is to a supermailbox, the less value attributed to one's property. The argument made by Canada Post originally was the opposite.

I think the people of Winnipeg North Centre were punished by Canada Post for many years because the House critic on Canada Post often came from that constituency. I could not believe how poor the mail service is in Winnipeg North Centre as a result of actions taken by the Government. I cannot believe that a Crown corporation could have been acting so incompetently completely independent of the Government, but was merely carrying out the wishes of the Government that wished to silence its critic.

There are several senior citizens in buildings in my riding in Winnipeg who must walk several hundred feet in the middle of winter to get their mail. That is a very difficult proposition for them. Furthermore, the Government wantonly changes mail service from the morning to the afternoon without telling people. They often cannot get their cheques in order to get to the bank on time that day. Many people live at the poverty level in Winnipeg. That is not a minor inconvenience but a major one for them.

Although these problems have been raised with Canada Post several times, it has not been nearly as responsive as one might expect from a Crown corporation. I trust this will change in the future.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the speech by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Walker). Since he was elected just last year, he has not voted on the Meech Lake Agreement. What is his response to the fact that the Province of Manitoba has not yet signed the Meech Lake Agreement?

Will he tell the House what his position would be on the Meech Lake Agreement? Does he believe that if the agreement is signed we will have valuable Senate reform in the sense that it would be an equal, effective and elected Senate? What is his position?

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, again, that is an excellent question. I thank my hon. friend for raising it in the House.

We know that perhaps of people in all the provinces across Canada, Manitobans are most concerned about their Constitution. Presently we are in the middle of a series of hearings in Manitoba in which Members from the House and the Senate of Canada have taken time to speak to the provincial committee and express their views.

Members of the House have voted on Meech Lake in the past. It has not been raised here again. I am surprised that another Member would raise such a hypothetical question, knowing full well that the caucuses of all three Parties are firmly committed to Meech Lake.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I thought it was very interesting that this afternoon one of the government Members said that the Speech from the Throne was a road map for the future. I know that the Hon. Member represents a Manitoba constituency and that agriculture is a very important industry in that province.

• (1710)

I wonder what the Hon. Member thought of the road map that was provided, since we are debating the amendment I put this morning which condemns the Government for providing only three lines in the Speech from the Throne dealing with agriculture, part of that devoted to saying that agriculture and farmers are an undue burden on the nation's Treasury.

The Wheat Board Advisory Committee held four meetings in Manitoba, one in Oak Bluff, one in Holland, one in Melita and one in Swan River. At the Canadian Wheat Board annual meeting in Oak Bluff, 117 voted against the decision of the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) to take oats out of the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, and only 46 voted for it. In Melita, 77 were opposed to the decision and 15 were for it. In Swan River, the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds really struck out because 33 were opposed to the decision and one voted in favour of it.

Since the Hon. Member represents a Manitoba riding, I wonder what he thinks of the whole procedure used by the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds who announced unilaterally, without discussion or consultation or the support of major grain producing farm organizations, that he would remove oats from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for raising this question. In the last few years he has spent many months travelling throughout western Canada being a very effective representative of the interests of western Canadians. I dare say that if it were not for his interventions in the House, Canadians would not have a proper understanding of the importance of agriculture to the western and the Canadian economies.

The Hon. Member raised two points. First, he said that for some reason agriculture is now considered to be an undue burden on the Treasury. I have searched through several Speeches from the Throne, including those of the so-called hated Liberals who never paid attention to western agriculture, and never has a Liberal Government ever described agriculture as an undue burden on the Treasury. Traditionally, the National Treasury has respected the needs of farmers and has done everything it can for the farmers of Canada. We now find ourselves in a situation in which we are anticipating severe negative reactions and actions from the Government based on this notion of an undue burden represented by western Canadian farmers.

I am very curious about what the Government plans to do. More important, I am very interested in finding out what the response will be over the next few months of western Canadian politicians from the other side of the House as we begin to see what the Prime Minister means by an undue burden. Our city's economy is very dependent upon the health of the agricultural community, and I can say right now from representations I have heard that many farmers across Manitoba and the West are very worried about what this will mean to them.

Regarding the Hon. Member's second question, the arbitrary nature of this Government came into full public view when we saw how oats were treated. The Minister responsible for the Wheat Board, and to my surprise he is still responsible for it, arbitrarily announced the removal of oats from the Wheat Board. Some farmers agree with that decision and some disagree with it, but they were unanimous in their condemnation of the process. A Minister should not touch an organization as important to the western Canadian economy as the Wheat Board which has been there for close to 50 years and should not arbitrarily remove one of the most important commodities in western Canadian agriculture.

People say that the volume of oats is not large, but that is not the issue. In a symbolic sense, all the commodities handled by the Wheat Board are very important. I was very sorry to see the Minister make this decision without proper consultation.

Those of us who are not involved directly in the rural economy but who pay attention to it and want to represent it properly in the House were astonished to have to hear representations after the fact when we were powerless to do anything. It should added for the record that the Minister made this decision very callously when the House was not sitting so he would not have to respond in public before us for his actions.

Mr. Epp: Good for him.

Mr. Walker: You may say "good for him" and it may be good for the Minister to be arbitrary. Perhaps the government side—

Mr. Epp: It was good for oats.

Mr. Walker: Perhaps the government side really thinks it is proper to govern without Parliament. However, traditionally, Canadians have looked forward to hearing questions asked of Ministers in the House of Commons. It is unfortunate that we are still here, but we are still here and we will continue to represent western Canadians more properly than the Government will.

Mr. Pagtakhan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief comment and to ask my colleague from Winnipeg North a question on the issue of human dignity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will have to make a very brief comment. I have been very tolerant. If the Hon. Member could just come right to the question, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Pagtakhan: There are still wasted talents, not only among immigrants and new citizens who yet cannot practise their trades and professions because the federal Government has failed to take the leadership to allow this to happen. The Minister of State for Multiculturalism and Citizenship (Mr. Weiner) is present and the Multiculturalism Act has been passed. I was assured by a previous Minister for Multiculturalism, the Hon. Jack Murta, that that Act could provide a mechanism that would allow the orderly accreditation of foreign credentials.

I would ask my colleague if in fact this is—

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With respect to my colleague from Winnipeg, I believe it is well established in this House that questions relating directly to jurisdictions other than that of this House and the federal Government are not within the purview of this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In this particular case, the question is related to the speech made by the Hon. Member, so I see no problem with it. I would hope that the Hon. Member would answer the question.

Mr. Pagtakhan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague if in fact he shares my views.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, as you noted in the intervention, the federal Government chooses its most narrow definition of its responsibility whenever possible. There is an appointed committee which looked into the problem of accreditation among professionals in the new immigrant communities. That committee reported back to the federal Government saying that actions should be taken to increase the opportunities for new Canadians to get into their professions in Canada.

We saw today what the federal Government does. It ditches things on to the provinces so quickly that it does not have to do anything itself. This is a case in point. There should be some leadership on the part of the federal Cabinet on issues relating to the proper employment of new Canadians so that their accreditation is recognized. The federal Government should use its status and its moral authority to make it possible for new Canadians to get proper jobs.

We make no apologies for asking the federal Government to move on this issue.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I begin my comments on the Speech from the Throne by first congratulating you, Mr. Speaker, for your re-election to the House and for your appointment as our Deputy Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

In commenting on the Speech from the Throne, I would like to begin with an economic theme and place it within the context of where we have been and what has been achieved over the past four years, as well as where we are heading now as indicated by the Speech from the Throne.

Since September, 1984, 1,432,000 jobs have been created. To put it another way, from 1984 through to 1988, more jobs were created in Canada than in all of the following countries combined: West Germany, France, Sweden, Belgium, Greece, Finland, Ireland, New Zealand, and Australia.

• (1720)

The national unemployment rate has fallen from 11.6 per cent to 7.5 per cent. In total, Canada's economy has expanded by 19 per cent. In real terms, after taking into account inflation, the economy has expanded by 19 per cent since September, 1984. Business investment in new machinery and equipment has climbed by 76 per cent since 1984. New orders in manufacturing have climbed by 33 per cent. Some 223,000 homes were built in 1988 compared to 135,000 in 1984, the year we were elected to our first mandate.

The number of Canadians living below the poverty line has fallen by 549,000 since 1984. Not only is that figure remarkable and important, but it includes 179,000 fewer children and 61,000 fewer senior citizens. In looking at the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement, it will do much to improve our economic performance.

The Finance Department study concluded that the agreement should lead to the creation of 120,000 net new jobs, while the Economic Council study forecasts 250,000 net new jobs by 1998 over the 10–year phasing–in period of this agreement. With the victory of the Conservative Government, new investment has increased dramatically in my riding and in the cities surrounding my riding of Kitchener—Waterloo, Cambridge and Guelph in southwestern Ontario.

When I look at the question of investment, total capital spending by business is expected to climb by 11 per cent this year, including a 21 per cent increase in manufacturing investment. In the 12 months following the negotiation of the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement, the annual rate of investment in new machinery and equipment climbed by 17 per cent in real terms, after taking inflation into account. To put this in perspective, 17 per cent in one year exceeds the total growth of 12 per cent that occurred in the four and a half years between 1980 and 1984 when the Liberals were in power. The annual number of small business births has climbed by 35 per cent since 1984.

Inflow of direct foreign investment doubled between 1984 and 1988. In my riding and the neighbouring ridings around me, it is difficult to find labourers for construction work to complete many of these construction projects.

Of these 1,432,000 jobs that have been created since September of 1984, including 86,000 in the first three months of this year, 85 per cent of those jobs have been full time. In contrast, 89 per cent of the jobs created by the last Liberal administration were part time.

When I refer to the number of jobs created during the term of this Government, I do not want to suggest that this Government created those jobs. Governments do not create jobs; people create jobs.

What Governments do is create a climate for investment and initiative where people take it upon themselves to create jobs, or Governments bring in policies that reduce that initiative, frighten off new investment and lessen the ability of individuals to create jobs. I am simply stating figures during the time of an administration.

Let us look at job creation as it affects women in our society. Some 807,000 more women are working today than in September, 1984. The unemployment rate for women has fallen by four percentage points since the election, from 11.9 to 7.9.

In comparison, the rate increased by 3.3 points under the last Liberal administration, from 8.6 to 11.9. Perhaps more significant, between 1984 and 1988, the number of women working in managerial and administrative positions climbed by 50 per cent. Managerial and administrative positions accounted for one-quarter of the jobs created for women between 1984 and 1988. Including occupations such as teaching, medicine and law, almost half the jobs created for women between 1984 and 1988 were of a managerial, administrative or professional nature.

If we look at youth unemployment figures from 1984 through to today, that rate has fallen from 18.2 per cent in September of 1984 to 10.6 per cent, its lowest level in 14 years. I was struck by an article in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record entitled "Students to enjoy a boom in summer jobs". The writer of the article had gone to post-secondary institutions in the neighbouring riding of Waterloo. In talking to people at the universities, he found the following:

> Jan Basso, the director of career services at Wilfrid Laurier University, estimates summer-job availability is up by as much as 10 per cent in 1988.
> In addition, Basso said salaries seem to be higher, with many more jobs in the $7-to-$8-an-hour range.
>
> "There are lots and lots of (summer) jobs out there", added Kerry Mahoney, assistant supervisor of the University of Waterloo's career resources centre. "Any student wanting a summer job this year should be able to get one. Many students can be quite particular, especially if they do their research and if they started early."
>
> The increase in the availability of career-related jobs is particularly promising. Sharon Keogh, Conestoga College's career and placement services manager, said jobs range from general labour and clerical to career-related types in everything from construction to computers and accounting.
> Thanks to a strong economy, placement officers with post-secondary institutions say the summer of '89 promises to be a very good year indeed. They say it's going to be even better than 1988, which was considered an exceptionally good year.

A major theme in the Speech from the Throne was the need for deficit reduction. The last Liberal Government, when it was in power from 1980 to 1984, increased spending by an average annual rate of 15.1 per cent. Under this administration, from 1984 to 1988, that increase in spending of 15.1 per cent was reduced to an average of 4.3 per cent, or about equal to inflation. If this Government had continued in 1984 at the Liberal rate of spending, the deficit would not have been reduced from 38.3 down to 28.9, as we expect for this year, but the annual deficit for this year would be about $58 billion higher or approximately $87 billion this year.

We can see what has been achieved and where we have come from. When we took office in 1984, the Liberal Government was spending approximately $16 billion more than it was taking in through taxation. This administration significantly reduced that excessive spending in its first year from $16 billion down to $9 billion, to $3 billion, to $1 billion, and in the past year to $4 billion.

Although we have taken positive action in reducing the amount we are spending compared to the amount we are taking in, it is not good enough because we are constantly adding to the debt. We are adding to the interest we have to pay on that debt. It is a good start, but it is not good enough because we are still adding to the problem. That is why it is essential that government spending is cut, that we increase taxes, and that we continue to promote an expanding economy to create new wealth and tax dollars to help us to address that problem. We can then reduce the annual deficit to the point where we are creating a surplus and can finally begin to attack the national debt to which we keep adding every year. The Speech from the Throne highlighted this issue in sharp focus. It stated that 31 cents out of every dollar that comes into the federal treasury goes to pay interest on the debt. If action is not taken, that will escalate and climb.

• (1730)

Another major theme in the Speech from the Throne was the topic of the environment. Over the last decade it has become very clear that the world is facing an environmental challenge of unprecedented magnitude. It is not productive to sit around and blame one another. It is time for action. If any topic deserves non-partisan treatment, it is this one. We are all to blame, and we must all take action.

During the election the environment emerged as one of the primary issues. Of course, free trade was the prime issue, but the environment was second. In my riding, if the questions were not about free trade, they were about the environment.

The opposition Parties dismissed the record of the Government, but it has proved its commitment to the environment with action and not mere words. In the Speech from the Throne the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a commitment to include the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) as part of the strategic planning and priorities cabinet committee.

Let us review the performance of the Government, where we have come from and where we are heading on this issue. To combat acid rain, the Government passed the toughest car and truck emission control standards in the world. During the last mandate the Prime Minister was able to obtain a commitment from the former President of the United States. It was the first commitment to American-shared responsibility for the problem of acid rain, and also a pledge to spend $2.5 billion to fight acid rain. We are all encouraged by the new administration under President George Bush, and also by initiatives taken in Congress that show a willingness to go further and begin to attack the problem of acid rain. Agreements have also been signed between the federal Government and the provinces to cut acid rain emissions in half by 1994.

Canada also initiated and gained the first worldwide agreement to protect the ozone layer at an international conference held in Montreal in 1987. In 1988, the Government passed the Canadian Environmental Protection Act to ensure that Canadians have a right to a healthy environment.

In the Speech from the Throne we see it is our goal to develop policies that reflect the concept of sustainable development. "Sustainable development" are two very important words which came to us from the United Nations commission which looked at the question of environment and development. I was struck by the words of Prime Minister Brundtland of Norway whose landmark report on environment and development was produced at the United Nations. She had the following to say about Canada and the environment:

> Canada was one of the commission's midwives, one of its strongest political supporters. Few other countries have contributed so greatly to the report as Canada. . .and Canada reacted most strongly and positively to our report, not least by establishing the task force on environment and economy, a unique body in modern policy-making.

The international community is looking at this issue very seriously and when commenting on Canada has stated that a good start has been made.

In the Speech from the Throne there are other initiatives. For example, in Winnipeg there will be the creation of a centre for international promotion of sustainable development. We will hear more about the round table on environment and the economy, chaired by the President of McGill University. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) has been given new responsibilities to ensure that environmental issues are fully considered in the course of all government decision-making.

Environmental protection is not only the job of governments. It is the responsibility of each and every one of us. That is why the Speech from the Throne also stated that we want to encourage individual Canadians to become more aware of the environment with the establishment of an environmental partners' fund, the promotion of environmentally friendly products, and programs to encourage recycling.

I was encouraged by another theme in the Speech from the Throne regarding policies to strengthen the family unit. For too long the family has been neglected by government. I applaud the Prime Minister for his emphasis on the family unit, Canada's basic social institution. After all, the family unit is a fundamental building block of society.

The Government has and will continue to take important steps to curb the abusive influence of drugs upon society. The Prime Minister was truly visionary in his past assessment that drugs were approaching an epidemic level. Therefore, through government initiatives, a commitment was made to spend $210 million on a five-year ongoing program involving five different ministries to fight drug abuse. Without his leadership and the initiatives which he began, Canada would undoubtedly be fighting a battle of even greater magnitude.

I was struck by a small booklet on Canada's youth entitled "Ready For Tomorrow". It was commissioned by the Minister of State for Youth and Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Charest). It is a very good attitudinal study on young people aged 15 to 24. In this age group the young people value certain things as being very important. Although the family was not at the top of the list, it still received a strong two-thirds recognition of being very important in their lives. That is significant.

Those young people are very optimistic about future prospects for traditional marriage and of the family unit as we have always understood it. Some 69 per cent think it is very likely that they will stay married; an additional 29 per cent think it fairly likely they will keep that commitment to the same person for life. Only four in 1,000 think it is likely that they will experience separation and divorce. We would all welcome that statistic.

We should encourage Government and all departments, specifically the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty), the Minister of State for Youth and Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Jelinek) to ensure that all policy decisions taken will help these young people and others, and will help the family unit and contribute to strengthening that unit within our society. I am also encouraged by what the Government has planned to assist in strengthening the family.

I am disappointed that the plague of pornography was not mentioned in the Throne Speech. As a caring and compassionate nation, we must be committed to the eradication of this harmful material. Pornography, like drugs, affects all Canadians, especially youth. Like drug abuse which begins with softer drugs and leads to harder and more damaging drugs, pornography begins at a softer level and progresses to a hard-core level. Extensive research indicates, beyond any reasonable doubt, that pornography is addictive, pornography desensitizes, and if allowed to escalate, hard-core pornography can lead to harmful acting out of that which is portrayed. I strongly urge the Government to bring back one of the two Bills introduced in the last term and that we deal with this question.

Mr. Speaker, you have signalled that I have but one minute left in my allotted time. I am encouraged that the Government will deal with the very difficult and divisive question of abortion. We know it is a difficult question. I am encouraged that it will deal with it. I am prepared to face the responsibility of doing so.

I urge that we as Members of Parliament set an example to the nation and that we all remember something. Let us remember where we are. Let us remember who we are. Let us remember the trust that has been placed in us. Let us govern our behaviour accordingly so that when the country views us in action here, its respect for this federal institution will increase, as well as its respect for Members of Parliament. I may be a bit too optimistic and a bit naive but I still think it is a very high calling to serve one's fellow man in public office. I think it is time for us to all unite together to make sure that when people look at us they say: "That is true, and I would like to do that some day too".

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I was impressed with the comments of the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) and how committed he is to the neo-Tory agenda. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said today that he really did not make any campaign promises, he only made spending commitments. If they are spending commitments then they were made before the election was called. That sounds as if none of those commitments can be broken. But to listen to the Hon. Member for Kitchener, it sounds as if he would like to break as many of those commitments as possible and consider them as promises. I would be interested to know which of the spending commitments catalogued in The Globe and Mail of April 10 he would like to see broken so that he can implement the agenda which he seems to have been spelling out in his speech.

For instance, there is the Hibernia oil field development and $1 billion for the OSLO oil sands project in northern Alberta. There is $800 million over 15 years for the Newfoundland Railroad. There is $515 million over five years for regional development in Quebec. There is $420 million for all-terrain vehicles for the Canadian Forces, as well as $400 million in new equity for the Farm Credit Corporation. There is $400 million for the federal share of the Husky Oil upgrader in Lloydminster, $250 million over five years for the Canadian film industry and $1 billion in additional support for farmers. Since we are debating an amendment which I put relating to farmers, I would be interested to know what the Hon. Member's position is on that one.

There is $150 million for construction of a natural gas pipeline to Vancouver Island, $129 million over five years for AIDS research, $110 million for the clean-up of the St. Lawrence River, $110 million for the national campaign against illiteracy and $88 million for support and adjustment for the grape and wine industry in Ontario and Quebec as a result of the free trade deal. Of course, there is an $8 billion price tag for the new nuclear submarine program.

Obviously, the Hon. Member for Kitchener is very determined that the Government should not keep these commitments, as outlined in his speech. I wonder which ones he thinks the Government should break. It seems evident that the Government in its Budget on April 27 is planning to break some of these, not promises but commitments that were made before the election was called last November.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) I would like to say that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has an excellent record, if we consider his Budgets over the past four years. At those times he brought with him his figures and his spending projections and just where the deficit will be at the end of that time. If I am not mistaken, three out of the four times he was below what he projected and did better than he thought he could do. The other time I believe he was just slightly over. That is a far cry from what we used to see between 1980 and 1984.

I think that if the Hon. Member were to read the whole article he would have noticed that the Minister of Finance indicated that those commitments were made, and that they were called commitments as opposed to promises because each one was budgeted for. Each one was in a Budget of the federal Government. Therefore, he knew that the spending and the requirement for funding was there and accounted for. If the Minister of Finance were here he would echo what I am saying right now. He would say that we have already planned for those expenditures and that they are in the Budget. That is why they are a commitment.

We all know that the Minister of Finance, on behalf of us all, has to deal with the fact of the deficit. He has to deal with the fact that 31 cents out of every dollar taken in goes to pay interest on the debt. We have to reduce that. I am sure my hon. friend wants to join us in reducing that.

I will not exercise my privilege to go on and say where a lot of that debt came from. The Hon. Member knows where it came from. Let us leave it at that. These are commitments that are in the Budget as distinct from promises made by someone else on top of everything else the Government is going to do.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) began his remarks by addressing the Free Trade Agreement. That is one of the reasons I am here. The constituents of Parkdale—High Park voiced a very strong objection to the Free Trade Agreement in its format and its lack of protection for companies which might be affected by it. I am sure that as recently as last weekend the Hon. Member read in many newspapers about a number of companies that manufacture auto parts which are now moving to Mexico where the labour is 55 cents an hour, $5 a day. How is his Government going to address this issue? It is just the tip of the iceberg. There will be hundreds of similar companies moving to Mexico and other countries, or even to the United States where labour is cheaper. Does this mean that we in Canada have to lower our minimum wage? Does it mean we have to lower our pension plan for workers? Does it mean we have to lower our job safety record? Has this Government looked at some way of preserving the jobs of Canadians working in these factories, who are going to be unemployed because the companies are moving to Mexico where the labour is 55 cents a day?

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Flis) is correct in saying that in the past election the Free Trade Agreement was a major issue. I have a great many auto parts suppliers in and around my riding. In fact, if I were to take five of the ridings together around there I would see there are well over 15,000 people who work directly in that market and about another 17,000 who service those people. Of course, there are many others involved. There are over 30,000 people involved either directly or indirectly in the auto parts industry who are benefiting from the fact that those people are very busy and working. It is a very important topic.

In response to the point he has made, I would like to read to him a letter from one of the largest auto parts producers in my riding, Bud Automotive. Let me just read what the President and General Manager of Bud Automotive stated with regard to the Free Trade Agreement in auto parts. He said: "Free trade in the auto industry has been good for Canada and Ontario. But Canada would probably not exist were it not for free trade. The Free Trade Agreement with the United States opens up new enlarged market opportunities for Canadian industries." That is what people directly involved in the auto parts industry are saying. It is one of the largest employers in my riding.

In that context I say to the Hon. Member that Members opposite are always raising the prospect of some fear that a plant might close down here or there. That is the difference between the two sides in this House in this debate. Instead of always looking for an example of one little change, this side of the House says: "Look at all the opportunities that are coming. Look at the new potential that is there". That is the difference. I am sorry it has to be such a sharp difference. Surely, everyone can see that if we secure trade with our largest trading partner and we bring in some rules to govern that trading arrangement and we enlarge the opportunity to trade further within that agreement, then the net result is gain. And there is no question of that. If it were true that everyone was going to move to where it is $4 or $5 an hour or even less, then why have they all not started to move? Why is there not a mass exodus out of the northeastern United States to the southern States, from the southern States into Mexico, et cetera?

Maybe my hon. friend can point to a few examples, but surely the industry itself says that it is going to be good for us, and so I will take their word for it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for New Westminster—Burnaby (Ms. Black). Question or comment?

Ms. Dawn Black: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question to the Member from Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) deals with the early part of his statement. He was waxing on very eloquently about the rosy conditions for the children and women of Canada. He quoted a number of statistics, but he did not say where those statistics came from. I would like the Hon. Member to know that there is today another side to Canada, the side that we never thought we would see. Two societies are forming in Canada.

We see in Toronto and in other major urban centres the plight of the homeless. I know that in my own riding of New Westminster—Burnaby and around the Vancouver Metropolitan area, there are food banks now in operation that were created in the early eighties as a very temporary measure. We have children attending school hungry, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Hon. Member what he has to offer these Canadians in the face of real poverty.

My second question deals with the issue of abortion. He raised the issue of abortion. I would like to know if the Member is proposing recriminalization in Canada of abortion and if that is the position of his Government.

Mr. Reimer: I have a response to the two-part question. For the first part, those figures simply come from the Library here. They are StatsCan figures. Those figures are not debatable figures. Facts are facts, whether you like them or not. You can find those same facts and you can use them any way you wish.

With regard to the plight of the homeless, it is true we have food banks in some of our cities and it is true that even in some of the most affluent areas of our cities and ridings across the country, we have some school children who do not go to school with a proper breakfast.

Mr. Speaker, I would respond that the best social policy then is a job. This Government has got a very good record in encouraging job creation, and the Free Trade Agreement is one part of that strategy. We have to look forward to increasing trade with the Pacific Rim, to increasing our trade with Europe. Let us look at what is going to take place in Europe in 1992, continue to increase jobs and therefore the wealth of this country, to help those in need and create opportunities for full-time jobs.

The second part of the question had to do with abortion. The Government has simply said it is prepared to bring this issue forward. It is a free vote issue on this side of the House. I am not sure what the other Parties will do.

I do not know how many of my colleagues have read the Law Reform Commission Report called the Protection of Life, Crimes Against the Fetus. In the minority report section of that there is a very good statement by Commissioner Maingot which I would like to quote: "The criminal law is our nation's fundamental statement of public policy. It is the instrument by which the community draws a line between the tolerable and intolerable. Criminal law defines those whose interests are worthy of respect and protection, and in my view this should include all members of the human family. Ultimately the criminal law is a mirror of what we are. It reflects our commitment or lack of commitment to human dignity and equality".

Mr. Speaker, when we get into this debate, I am going to stand up on the side of the sanctity of human life and its protection. I hope that when others contribute to this debate, they will realize that whatever we end up doing, that will reflect our collective commitment or lack of commitment to human dignity and to equality. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member's time has expired. Time for questions and comments have expired, and I believe there is not enough time to start another speaker. Therefore, I will call it six o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In accordance with Standing Order 38, a motion to adjourn is deemed to have been made and seconded at this time. Therefore the question is that at this time the House be adjourned.

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—PAYMENT OF COMPENSATION FOR DROUGHT—RELEASE OF DATA

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 4, the first day that this House returned, I stood in my place to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) and got a response from the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer). I was seeking information about the Government's drought program. To this date there has probably not been a farm program in any country that has stirred up more questions nor been waiting longer for answers. In the Question Period we elicited only minimal information from the Minister. He told us, and I quote from page 37 of Hansard:

> The information regarding crop losses and the basis for the maps that were established, the information was based on a loss to coverage ratio through crop insurance records which was exactly the procedure that was used in 1985 that people did not like.

I wanted to put that on the record, Mr. Speaker, because the immediate question is: if people did not like it in 1985, why in heaven's name did the Government perpetuate the same idiotic system on the farmers in the drought of 1988?

He went on to tell us that the final data is not in yet. He tried to tell us that the program was designed by farmers, it is they who wanted us to target it, they wanted us to be crop specific, they wanted to get down to the smallest possible area, this is exactly what in fact we are doing. I take issue with that, Mr. Speaker.

It is quite clear that there was a better way of doing this. The NDP and myself put forward a program for the election last fall to put pressure on the Government to adopt a more sane policy of making drought payments. We had suggested that they use crop insurance data, and the smallest possible unit that it is possible to pay out under crop insurance is on an individual farm basis, farm by farm.

Instead of accepting that rational approach, the Government has once again insisted upon paying on a township by township basis so that each of the farmers who have land in each township will get a different factor of payment for each crop. This tends to be unfair and unequal and, even worse, creates an unnecessary production of data that nobody bothers to generate except on the instruction of the Government for a crop drought payment.

Now, the program that we suggested would have used data that is generated because it has to be by crop insurance, and yet the Government refused to use that data. They could have had the payments in the hands of those farmers who had crop insurance contracts almost immediately.

• (1800)

Most of those farmers had to be investigated and have their claim justified. The amount of loss would be known to the files in crop insurance. The Government rejected that simple and helpful suggestion, to go on and use the system that it is perpetuating on farmers once again. I want to reiterate that it is a system that the Minister himself says: "which was exactly the procedure that we used in 1985, and I stress that people did not like".

I have great difficulty understanding a Government that has this kind of feedback and persists in perpetuating a program that no one liked the last time it was used, and persists in putting it forward again.

It is failing to provide real numbers to people so that they can understand how the program will work. It has been a complete disaster. Although it has been before the public for six months, no one really knows how the program works to this very day.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to provide details on the effective efforts by this Government to deliver the Canadian Crop Drought Assistance Program to Canadian farmers.

The Drought Assistance Program is helping producers who were hurt by the 1988 drought. The Government is making every effort to deliver a program that treats producers in many different circumstances fairly.

We anticipate that about 120,000 producers may qualify for drought assistance, with over 100 different crops in over 4,500 townships. It takes time to develop and deliver a program that deals with so many producers in so many types of circumstances.

On March 3, maps showing preliminary drought zones were issued. The information on these maps is based on preliminary crop insurance data supplied by provincial crop insurance agencies. The administration used this data to define preliminary drought zones so that interim payments could be made to farmers in the hardest hit areas.

These areas are not final. We will be able to announce the final drought areas when all crop insurance data is in.

The Canadian Crop Drought Assistance Program administration is working hard to deliver this program to Canadian farmers. More than 145 people are directly involved in the delivery of the program, including the people on the toll-free line who have been answering up to 4,000 calls a week.

Recently, in response to the number of telephone calls, we doubled the number of operators on the toll-free line to 20.

The administration is putting interim payments into the hands of producers as quickly as possible. About 4,500 townships have been designated as drought areas on the basis of preliminary provincial crop insurance data. More drought areas may be designated when final data is available from provincial crop insurance agencies. That will probably take place by May.

Personalized applications have been mailed to about 120,000 producers in designated drought areas and about 90,000 forms have been returned to date.

I am pleased to inform the House that interim cheques to producers began being mailed the week of March 27. Most should be in the hands of producers by spring seeding.

About 65,000 producers will get interim payments. The payments will average about $4,300 and will total about $280 million. The timing of these interim payments is similar to the timing of interim payments under last year's Special Canadian Grains Program.

Final payments are scheduled to be mailed in July. We are making progress on other aspects of the program as well.

A method for delivering assistance to Ontario horticultural producers has been established. We are working with horticultural groups in other provinces to establish a method of making payments.

Progress is being made in talks with the Province of Québec on a proposal for program delivery. Discussions are continuing with the provinces on cost sharing. In addition, I can tell the House that producer review committees will be established in each province.

This program may be rather complex but it is resulting in individual tailoring of payments and an accurate assessment of each producer's needs.

The Canadian Crop Drought Assistance Program is fair, well targeted, and timely. It is being delivered effectively by the Government.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—SOVIET UNION—PLIGHT OF REFUSNIK

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, last week on April 4, 1989, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to intervene in the tragic case of Mr. Georgy Samoilovich of Moscow, a refusnik who is dying of cancer. I met his wife in Moscow on March 30, 1989.

This former mathematician first applied to leave the Soviet Union with his wife and son in 1972. He was continually refused an exit visa on the contention that he possessed secrets.

Even General Secretary Gorbachev has stated that the possession of secrecy rule should not apply for more than five years. The Samoilovich family has suffered hardship and deprivation for 17 years simply because it wanted to exercise a fundamental human right, the right to leave their country.

I brought up the Samoilovich case with two Soviet officials in Moscow on Thursday, March 30. They were very familiar with this case, and I got the distinct impression that they really had no justifiable reason to deny further Mr. Samoilovich an exit visa, especially when he is so much in need of medical treatment for enlarged lymph glands. This treatment has been offered at the Royal Marsden Hospital in London, England, through the British Embassy in Moscow.

Fortunately, the Samoilovichs were advised on April 5 that he would be allowed to go to London for medical treatment. We are very grateful for this news. We hope it is not too late.

I have been chairman of the Canadian Parliamentary Group for Soviet Jewry since December, 1986.

There is no question that dramatic changes have occurred in the Soviet Union over the past two years. Since General Secretary Gorbachev announced their new policies of glasnost and perestroika, Mr. Gorbachev has both pleased and shocked the world over various announcements of change, particularly those connected with arms reductions and other major decisions such as the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan.

There have also been significant changes in the number of Soviet Jews who have been granted exit visas. In 1982, only 2,688 refusniks were granted exist visas. In 1986, the number dropped to 914. Then surprisingly, the number of refusniks receiving an exist visa increased sharply to 8,155 in 1987 and then more than doubled to 18,965 in 1988.

My previous visit to the Soviet Union was in May, 1987. I led a delegation from the Canadian Parliamentary Group for Soviet Jewry. We met with such high profile refusniks as Ida Nudel and Vladimir Slepak. I also met with members of the refusnik family which I had adopted, the Shnirman family.

Most of these people were released just months after our visit. It was thrilling to see many of these refusniks at the human rights rally sponsored by the North American Jewish Community in Washington, D.C., on Sunday, December 5, 1987. This was on the eve of General Secretary Gorbachev's visit to the U.S. and his meeting with President Reagan. I had the honour to represent Canada at this historic rally and to address over 200,000 people.

As mentioned earlier, many remarkable and progressive initiatives have been announced by the Soviet Union. While most countries in the western world applaud these initiatives, we must harbour some doubt and scepticism when it still takes years for a person dying of cancer to obtain an exit visa.

The Soviet Union wants to host an international human rights conference in Moscow in 1990 or 1991. Before Canada and other nations totally embrace and support this idea, I believe the Soviet Union should be confronted with the facts about many refusniks who are still struggling without success to leave the Soviet Union, and other human rights violations.

On March 29 and on March 30, 1989, I met with several of these desperate, discouraged refusniks in Moscow. I would like to highlight the facts concerning several of these people who simply dream and yearn to live in another country.

Igor Uspensky and his wife first applied to leave the Soviet Union in 1979. They were refused on the basis that Inna's brother, Professor Alexander Ioffe, had worked with classified material 10 years previously. Both Uspensky's were entomologists. In December, 1981, Inna was expelled from the institute and one year later Igor was dismissed. He has worked as a lift operator to avoid being persecuted as a "parasite".

On March 30, I also met with Boris Chernobilsky and his wife Elana along with several other refusniks at their apartment. Mr. Chernobilsky first applied for an exit visa in 1976, 13 years ago.

The latest reason for refusing to grant an exit visa, according to the Soviet authorities, is the lack of a waiver. Boris' mother-in-law will not sign a waiver form which parents and in-laws have been required to sign in recent years.

When I discussed this rule with Soviet officials, and the fact that these in-laws or parents had absolute veto, I pressed the point about why this could not be changed. He mentioned that new laws which will be passed in six to twelve months could very well include a review of that, so there would be an appeal procedure.

The Roitman family of Kishinev was also discussed. They are also being denied an exit visa because Izik's father refuses to sign the waiver form.

• (1810)

There is some good news as well. I was, for instance, led to believe that the Livshitz family may finally receive their exit visa after languishing in despair for 10 years since applying in 1979. They received the good news last week. Similarly, I also got the distinct impression that Soviet authorities may finally reconsider their previous decisions of constant denials of exit visas to the Lurie family.

In closing, I want to commend General Secretary Gorbachev for many of the progressive initiatives put forth, particularly over the past two years. However, there are still many Soviet citizens being denied the simple human right to leave their country. With the stroke of a pen, certain restrictive regulations could be changed. With the stoke of a pen, every one of the these long-standing refusniks could be granted an exit visa.

I urge the Soviet Union to stop using these unfortunate souls as hostages. Let them leave. Let them live. Grant them this basic human right. Only then will the Soviet Union have earned the right to host an international human rights conference.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Markam (Mr. Attewell) for raising the specific case he has and for raising the question of the general policy.

On the same date last week as the Hon. Member for Markam asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) whether he would intervene in order to support Mr. Samoilovich's application for an exit visa to go to London, Mr. Samoilovich was in fact granted permission to leave. I understand that the editors of the Guinness Book of World Records are still debating now whether to grant an award to the Hon. Member for Markam for his acuity and timing or to the Secretary of State for External Affairs for his alacrity in response.

The fact is, of course, that this was just one of a number of cases that has currently been raised by our Government in order to see, under the Helsinki Accord's family reunification provisions, that those seeking freedom in the West are able to obtain permission to come to the West. Certainly the granting of this permission to leave was welcome news.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I hope we will see even fewer cases as the Soviet Union implements the provisions to which it committed itself at a follow-up meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, and on other occasions. Canada will do everything it can to encourage such developments.

FISHERIES—FRENCH OVERFISHING—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, it is now 30 years since an administration led by the late John Diefenbaker made a decision to change the terms of union which joined Newfoundland and Canada back in 1949. That decision brought such a storm of protest across Newfoundland and Labrador that when the next election took place, not one single Tory MP was elected in the Province. As a result of that decision, Newfoundlanders showed all of Canada that they would not knuckle under to such a cowardly backstabbing by any federal Government, whatever the stripe.

Last week, for the second time since Confederation between Newfoundland and Canada, a Government—and it so happens it is a Tory Government once again—has displayed cowardice and weakness by giving away Newfoundland's precious stocks in order to get a mechanism for settling the boundary dispute with France.

Last week in St. John's, the gentleman from St. John's West, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), speaking for the Government said: "We have achieved our major objectives".

What are these objectives he claimed to have achieved last week in St. John's? On what day did he achieve them, by the way? With some sense of humour, the gentleman from St. John's decided to do this to Newfoundlanders on March 31, the fortieth anniversary of Newfoundland joining Canada.

What then were these objectives that the Minister spoke about and was therefore so happy to announce at a news conference on the very anniversary of our coming into Confederation?

First, they gave away northern cod stock. What makes that giveaway of a precious Newfoundland resource to France so grossly offensive is that the scientists have already told us that there is need for a severe reduction with disastrous consequences for jobs in fish plants and perhaps fish plant closures, and disastrous consequences for fishermen both inshore and offshore.

Not only did the gentleman from St. John's West and his buddies give away northern cod stock to France on a silver platter, but they also gave France large allocations of cod and other species on the St. Pierre Bank, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and off Labrador.

Third, on top of all that, the gentleman from St. John's West gave the French access once again to Canadian ports. They have carte blanche to come and go as they wish. They have also been given the right to board Canadian fishing vessels inside Canada's 200-mile management zone. That is where we in Newfoundland draw the line.

When Canada won that hard fought international battle to extend its jurisdiction to 200 miles with the agreement of many countries, all countries lost the right to invade that jurisdiction, to come into that zone and to board vessels willy-nilly at their whim. Last week, of course, with this concession, all that has been changed. The French are now allowed to board these vessels.

I say to the gentleman from St. John's West that this is the biggest outrage, the most disgusting abdication of all in this so-called agreement with France achieved last week. It undoes much of the work that was done so well by one of my predecessor, the late Hon. Don Jamieson, and others back in 1977.

Not only Newfoundlanders but all Canadians should be hopping mad at the Tories for creating this dangerous and insulting precedent in last week's agreement with France. Can anyone in this House or in the country imagine what the French would do if Canadians were allowed to board their fishing vessels within a few miles of their coast?

I am not given to condoning civil disobedience. I am not that kind of person. However, I can foresee real problems arising when French inspectors try to board Canadian fishing vessels within a few miles of the Newfoundland coast or the Canadian coast generally.

It would not surprise me, nor it should surprise Members opposite, particularly the gentleman from St. John's West, if Canadian fishermen will strongly resent French inspectors snooping into their affairs, and it may only be a matter of time before there is a confrontation.

I fear that a confrontation will develop because Canada has kowtowed to France belittled itself as a nation and made itself the laughing stock of the entire world by giving the French the right to provoke, intimidate and harass our fishermen in their own territorial waters. What a complete farce.

I was completely dismayed to note in this sorry affair the willing acquiescence of Newfoundland's representative in the federal Cabinet. For that dastardly deed, for his agreement with this, for standing silently by and allowing the biggest steal in Canadian history to take place, the name of the gentleman from St. John's West will be forever associated with this giveaway and will be forever tarnished as the Newfoundlander who betrayed his province and his country.

• (1820)

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the settlement reached with France is in the best interests of the fishermen of Atlantic Canada, especially those of the Hon. Member's own riding on the south coast of Newfoundland.

The Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's (Mr. Simmons) knows full well that when Canada declared a 200-mile fishing zone in 1977 France also claimed a 200-mile exclusive economic zone off the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. Canada has continued to maintain that France's claim to an area of jurisdiction outside the 12-mile territorial sea has no basis in international law. This conflict has created a large disputed zone which is located within an important fishing area known as 3PS.

The unresolved boundary has been Canada's number one fisheries conservation problem in 3PS, because without a resolution of the conflict or an agreement to refer the dispute to an international court for adjudication, France has taken advantage of the situation to fish excessively in 3PS. French catches went from an average of 4,000 to 5,000 tonnes annually prior to 1983, to over 25,000 tonnes in 1986.

In 1987, Canada took unilateral action to curb the French appetite for Canadian fish. All undisputed Canadian waters of 3PS were closed to French fishing, and Canadian ports were closed to French fishing vessels. France received no allocations in Canadian waters in 1988, and Canadian ports remained closed to French fishing vessels. The settlement announced on March 31 is a first and essential step in solving that conservation problem once and for all. A treaty has been entered into that will send the boundary dispute to international adjudication. A tribunal composed of five judges will declare the boundary.

When the boundary is established, this will end France's ability to overfish in disputed waters once and for all. This is critical to protect the livelihood of fishermen on the south coast of Newfoundland over the long term.

Second, under the terms of settlement, France will reduce its catches in 3PS by more than 40 per cent, from 26,000 tonnes to 15,600 tonnes in 1989. In 1990 and 1991, these French quotas will be reduced by a further 500 tonnes each year.

Third, Canada has imposed important new conservation safeguards that will allow the Government to monitor French catches in disputed waters. For the first time since 1977, France will provide regular and timely reports on catches by its vessels in the disputed zone. Equally important, Canada and France will jointly carry out a series of at-sea inspections of Canadian and French vessels operating in disputed waters.

The rollback of French fishing efforts in 3PS, plus the measures to make sure that the rollback commitment is being respected, will help protect the livelihood of fishermen on Newfoundland's south coast in the short term.

As the Fisheries Council of Canada, National Sea Products, Fisheries Products International, the Newfoundland Fishermen's Union and other representatives of the Canadian fishing industry have all said, the boundary dispute must be resolved, and Canada has reached the best possible settlement to achieve that objective.

On behalf of his constituents, who stand to gain the most from this agreement, the Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's should also welcome this settlement.

VIA RAIL

ATLANTIC CANADA—OPPOSITION TO ELIMINATION OF PASSENGER SERVICE

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, Atlantic Canadians and specifically Prince Edward Islanders will not accept the Tories' agenda of making the rich richer and the poor poorer. The proposed elimination of VIA passenger service is one of the many examples of this agenda.

The constituents of my riding of Hillsborough know what it is like to be cut off from passenger train service. Why? Because we do not have such a service. We have to hop a bus and travel to Moncton. The only tracks left in our red soil are left by the people dragging their feet to the VIA bus.

Aside from the passenger train service, there will be direct and indirect damage done if VIA Rail is canned. Think of the effect on our highways and our tourist industry, and what about the 7,500 Canadians directly employed by VIA Rail? If other industrialized countries can successfully operate such a transportation service, then surely Canada can as well.

NEED FOR SOIL CONSERVATION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, there are only two sources of human food. One is water and the other is soil. Unlike the civilizations of old such as those along the Tigris and Euphrates Rivers, humanity no longer has the option of relocating after it has destroyed its food-producing resources.

One of the great myths of Canadian society is the commonly-held belief that we have an abundance of agricultural land. We do not. Only 7 per cent of Canada's land mass, situated in climatically favourably areas, has been deemed agricultural. Moreover, a very large percentage of Canada's original agricultural land has now been permanently destroyed. More than 50 per cent of the original farmland of Ontario is lost to urban sprawl and transport systems. On the prairies, vast regions of once productive lands are now marginal or barren because of erosion or degradation.

I want to salute the initiative of the Minister of Agriculture to have a task force to consider new and appropriate approaches to soil conservation and crop management. May this process bring about a greater respect for our soils and the need for their conservation and enrichment.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

NATIONAL LIFE ENRICHED BY WORK OF VOLUNTEERS

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): As this is National Volunteer Week, I would like to express most sincere thanks to the millions of people across this country who devote their time and talents to voluntary service. I speak not only on behalf of myself and all my parliamentary colleagues but also for all Canadians who take such fervent pride in our tradition of service to others.

Volunteers are men and women from all walks of life. They are retired, employed, homemakers and students—people from diverse socio-economic backgrounds, people from all religious, racial and culture groupings—Canadians both young and young at heart.

Canada's volunteers play a strong and vital role in our national life. They deliver much-needed human and social services, they champion worthy causes, and they simply make things happen. Volunteers serve on community and citizen action committees and on the boards of volunteer organizations. They place the needs of others before their own. Thanks to them, a stranger becomes a neighbour and a neighbour is more like a friend. All Canadians owe a debt of gratitude to our volunteers, and we, the Members of this House, are honoured to pay tribute to them.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EL SALVADOR—INCREASE IN VIOLATIONS

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker Canadian policy on international development assistance is to link aid to a country's human rights record. Since 1983, Canada has provided over $13 million in bilateral aid to the Government of El Salvador.

With the presidential elections concluded, government-supported violence and repression are on the increase. Last week, Christina Gomez, a Salvadoran leader of the Women's Popular Movement and mother of four, was abducted by heavily-armed men and summarily executed.

Canadians do not want to be associated with a regime which utilizes human rights violations and murder. Canadians are proud of our record of promoting peace, yet our Government, through bilateral aid, does business with this Government which refuses to negotiate a settlement to the nine-year war.

There are dozens of non-governmental organizations promoting peace and the necessary social reform to ensure peace. I call on the Government to reconsider our bilateral aid program to El Salvador so that the aid is channeled through non-governmental organizations until we see a substantial improvement in the human rights environment.

THE HONOURABLE ROBERT C. COATES

APPOINTMENT AS HONORARY CHIEF OF MICMAC INDIAN BAND

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to a former Member of this House who served here faithfully for 31 years. Of course, I am referring to my predecessor, the Hon. Robert C. Coates, and I am pleased to announce that on April 7, Bob was given a very unique honour by Chief Lawrence Paul of the Micmac band in Millbrook near Truro, Nova Scotia.

Bob was made an honorary chief in a very moving ceremony conducted by the band medicine man. This honour is even more significant when one realizes it has never been awarded to anyone before. The new name bestowed on Bob kind of says it all. They have named him "The Chief Who Kept Many Promises", and this title is indicative of the feelings of the constituents of our riding and at least partly explains why he was elected for 11 consecutive terms.

I do not know if protocol calls for him to be referred to as Chief Hon. Bob or Hon. Chief Bob, but whatever it is, it will probably be just plain old Bob to the rest of us. I know you will all join me in congratulating Chief Bob and wishing him good luck in any future opportunities that may present themselves.

ABORTION

CALL FOR LEGISLATION TO PROTECT THE UNBORN

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, many people in my constituency of Cape Breton Highlands—Canso and elsewhere in Canada are deeply distressed that for more than than 14 months there has been abortion on demand in Canada. I share their concerns.

Legislation to protect the unborn in Canada and to fill the void left by the Supreme Court decision of January 28, 1988, is an urgent necessity and is long overdue. The Government's feeble undertaking to study the implications of the Supreme Court jurisprudence is just not good enough. There has been ample time for study. The time now is for action, and action means the speedy introduction of a Bill that reconciles the legitimate right of the mother with protection for the unborn from conception onwards.

• (1410)

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised during the Leaders' debates prior to the election that legislation would be introduced upon the return of the House. I urge the Prime Minister to keep his promise to Canadians and indicate to this House when we can expect to consider this important matter.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BENEFITS OF SYSTEM REFORM

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) unveiled yesterday the government proposals for unemployment insurance reform. Thousands of Canadians across the nation were both surprised and stunned by the news. But for millions of others, it was a clear indication that the government wants to remedy abuses.

Who hasn't heard, at one time or another, of some people who quit their jobs for no reason at all, except to enjoy the good times while living off unemployment insurance benefits? Or of cases of fraud where workers who have a job keep receiving UI benefits?

The proposed reform, Mr. Speaker, must aim at remedy this kind of abuse, but must also give a new direction to Canadians by encouraging them to actively search for new jobs. The reform must give Canadians new hope and means to find work. This reform will guide us, Mr. Speaker! As we enter the era of free trade, we will increase our efforts by directing additionnal funds toward the training of our workers.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

IMPACT OF PROPOSED CHANGES ON CONSTITUENTS OF KOOTENAY EAST

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment on the impact of the Government's recent announcement of changes to the unemployment insurance system on the people of my riding. Many of my constituents are employed in seasonal occupations such as construction, tourism, forestry and the fruit industry. These people play a vital role in the local economy of the East Kootenays. During the off-season, which differs depending on the industry, many seasonal workers depend on unemployment insurance benefits to make ends meet.

Under the past system I had over 80 inquiries relating to UIC. The majority of them come from women employed in seasonal jobs. It is one of the single biggest issues I have dealt with since my election.

While I have no problems with increased funding for retraining, I object to additional funding to be paid for by the unemployed of my riding and the country as a whole. It is clear that the needs of my constituents and the citizens across Canada will be ignored.

My final observation is that if the Government wants to cut the deficit on the backs of the unemployed, it should be up front about it instead of portraying the new system as a measure to help unemployed Canadians.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SUPPORT FOR PROPOSED CHANGES

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) for the announced changes in Canada's Unemployment Insurance Program. In particular, I want to commend the Government for its continuing commitment to worker training programs and job-creation. The future of our country does rest on a skilled and disciplined workforce, and the Minister's priorities are directed to the appropriate areas to achieve this. The fragility of Atlantic Canada's economy was not overlooked.

The announced changes are moving us in the right direction as we prepare to enter the 21st Century.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

DONATIONS TO CANADIAN ALLIANCE FOR TRADE AND JOB OPPORTUNITIES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, during the federal election the so-called non-partisan Canadian Alliance for Trade and Job Opportunities, the primary pro-free trade lobby, spent $5.2 million on behalf of the Conservative Government and the free trade proposal.

I and Mr. Hurtig of the Canadian Council had the audacity to challenge the Council suggesting this was one way for large U.S.-owned multinationals to interfere in the Canadian election process. We were promised there would be full disclosure of where their donations came from. Mr. D'Aquino, the hired gun for the Alliance, had this to say in a letter to every Canadian newspaper. He ". . .looked forward to reading a public retraction. . .when the list of donors is made public next year".

We learned yesterday that some big Canadian corporations, Noranda, Shell and others, donated $250,000. The Royal Bank was a little measly. It only put $200,000 into the pot. All the foreign-owned and controlled corporations refused to disclose what kind of contributions they made to that Alliance.

This represents a serious threat to Canadian democracy. It is a silent, invisible, alternative form of government. I suggest it is time we reform the Elections Act.

SKILLS CANADA PROGRAM

FEDERAL FUNDING FOR BARRIE AND DISTRICT INDUSTRIAL TRAINING COUNCIL

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise before you today with great pleasure and excitement to inform my fellow Members of an historic initiative which occurred in my riding of Simcoe Centre this past Friday.

On behalf of the Hon. Barbara McDougall, Minister of Employment and Immigration, I had the honour of announcing federal funding to the Barrie and District Industrial Training Council that will be used to help launch an experimental project in participating high schools throughout the Simcoe County School District.

Skills Canada is intended to improve the image of manufacturing careers and provide an incentive for students to pursue technical careers boosting the sagging enrollment in many technical colleges and schools and providing technical workers for industrial growth.

This program is unique in Canada. Our Government has shown innovative leadership by providing these start-up funds.

The private sector's initiative is the best catalyst for economic growth, and Skills Canada is a positive and cost-effective method by which the private sector can work in concert with the Government towards educating more skilled workers among the youth of Canada.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CHANGES TO THE SYSTEM – IMPACT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

The Government wants to take unemployment insurance benefits away from the unemployed and replace them with welfare benefits.

Will the Minister confirm that, under the new system she proposes, an unemployed person living in Trois-Rivières will lose up to $3,267 in net benefits?

Will she also confirm that this unemployed person in Trois-Rivières may have to go on welfare nine weeks earlier?

Will she also confirm that the minimum benefit for an unemployed person in Trois-Rivières is $45 a week.

How can the Minister explain that? Why would a resident of Trois-Rivières who did not cheat or abuse the system and who lost a job through no fault of his or her own end up on welfare, with $45 a week?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will not be confirming any such thing. When we look at what we have done with unemployment insurance and the duration of work required to gain entry into the unemployment system, we have increased the entry levels marginally except in very high unemployment areas. The Government of which the Hon. Member was the Leader had done the same thing from time to time. We have ensured there are training, child care and transportation benefits to people taking training. In the process of creating more jobs in that region, which we have done, we will provide training for future opportunities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENTRY LEVEL SKILLS DEVELOPMENT FUND

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I notice the Minister did not challenge the figures I submitted because they were derived from calculations in her document.

I see the Minister of Finance smiling. I do not blame him, because the Minister of Employment and Immigration has done his dirty work for him.

An Hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): She is funding job training at the expense of the unemployed. She is setting up the Minister to slash the contributions of the Government to the Unemployment Insurance Fund when the Minister of Finance brings down his Budget. So he should feel satisfied with that particular manoeuvre.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): How does the Minister justify throwing people off insurance onto welfare? What she says is the Government will give people more training.

Well, I want to refer the Minister to page 7 of her own document which I have read carefully. She says there that the Government, as it refers to the Entry Level Skills Development Fund which she rates at $100 million a year, will take four years to phase in that particular program. In other words, she cuts benefits as of January 1 and takes four years to phase in a training program. My question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration is this. Where does that money go?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): There is no dirty work on this side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: I am extraordinarily proud to be a colleague of the best Minister of Finance this country has ever had.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

Mrs. McDougall: Including the Right Hon. Member.

Mr. Speaker, we have in place now the Canadian Jobs Strategy, which has been helping people to gain employment and to gain training. We will be phasing the programs in as rapidly as we can.

While these programs are phased in, there will be programs available under CJS and under the new program in order to benefit Canadian workers. Under this Government we have created many jobs, and we will continue to do so.

Oral Questions

PRE-ELECTION ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCREASED BENEFITS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): When The Minister was complimenting her colleague, the Minister of Finance, she was looking at me, apparently as if I was going to get some message. I noticed that the Minister for International Trade was clapping very weakly. I can understand that. The Minister and I both had a Budget defeated on the floor of the House of Commons, except we won the election afterwards.

Mr. Beatty: You haven't won one since.

Mr. Crosbie: Those were the good old days.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Member has the floor.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Minister mentioned some dirty work. I very much regret challenging her own integrity in how I put this question.

I would like the Minister to confirm that on November 15, 1988, that is to say only six days before the election, she announced a 7 per cent increase in unemployment insurance benefits.

How can the Minister, four months after the election, justify slashing direct cash payments to unemployed people in this country when six days before the election she announced an increase in those benefits?

How does she explain that as an example of Conservative honesty, and honesty with the people of Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is the Hon. Member who was once quoted as saying: "I never thought I'd see the day when I was calling for more unemployment insurance".

The Hon. Member is suggesting that by providing training benefits, we are not providing benefits. Ten dollars' worth of training is worth a lot more to people on unemployment insurance than $10 which does not take them anywhere.

Canadians want to work and they want training for new opportunities. Under this Government, they are going to get it.

[Translation]

REDUCTION OF BENEFITS – GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie: Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the same Minister or to the Prime minister. How is it that you had the shameless nerve to announce an increase in unemployment insurance benefits when you knew that four months later, without telling the people, you would deceive them, cut the number of weeks and take back much more than you gave them before the election? How come you deceived the people, when you knew?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the arithmetic on other side of the House. We have said that the program remains the same size as it was before. We are going to alter the way the benefits are delivered in a way that will provide more permanent help for Canadians in terms of getting a job in the future and taking advantage of future opportunities.

[Translation]

LOSS OF BENEFITS – GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister does not understand the figures, although they are her own figures we are using. Can you believe that the unemployed are well protected with a Minister like that!

You don't need to have been through university to understand this example. If someone had 32 weeks of unemployment insurance at $200 a week, and he is cut back to 27 weeks, he will lose money. That is simple, clear and straightforward!

Why does the Minister not want to admit that some people, whether they are in Trois-Rivières, Montreal, Toronto or Vancouver, will lose more than $1,000? And that all those who worked less than 12 weeks in 1988 will lose up to $11,000 in unemployment insurance benefits during the year? Why not tell the truth?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in the areas that the Hon. Member refers to there are jobs available right now.

Part of the problem is that the people in those areas don't have the skills to take advantage of those opportunities. We are going to provide those workers with the opportunity to take advantage of new jobs.

AVALON PENINSULA – EFFECT OF CHANGES ON WORKERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister knows from the changes that she has proposed in the scheme that today if an unemployed worker in the Avalon Peninsula in Newfoundland, which includes St. John's, had been able to a get a job for only 10 weeks, he or she would be eligible for benefits of some $8,000 after that to add income to pay for the rent, and to buy food for the family.

According to the scheme that the Minister has introduced that income will be reduce to zero for that worker. In terms of paying the rent and buying food for the family what will the Minister tell that worker in terms of what he or she is supposed to do?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think it is really unfortunate that the Hon. Member continues, as he has done before, to put fear into the hearts of Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: In the Avalon Peninsula the unemployment rate has gone down steadily. It is now lower than it has been for many years, and that is because of the policies of this Government. There are more people working right now than there have ever been before.

Let me also state that in the Province of Newfoundland, there will be $15 million more going into its economy next year under this plan than there will be this year.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am talking about the working family in the Avalon Peninsula. I want to say to the Minister that it is not me cutting away at the Unemployment Insurance Program; it is the Minister, and she should admit that.

With reference to the Avalon Peninsula, today there are 9,000 unemployed in the St. John's region. This Government has put the Hibernia project on hold and has transferred jobs from Newfoundlanders to the French in the fishing sector. High interest rates mean nothing but bad news for the region.

Will the Minister be candid with the unemployed worker in Newfoundland? I repeat, in that region there are 9,000 unemployed. Is the Minister not introducing a policy whose effect will be like a trampoline that will bounce that worker into welfare or all the way to Toronto?

Is that not what the Minister is saying?

Mrs. McDougall: No, Mr. Speaker. As the Hon. Member knows, we have not put Hibernia on hold, and the people who are going to work on Hibernia are going to need skills to take advantage of those opportunities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: Our program is geared specifically to taking advantage of that type of opportunity. I do believe that the Hon. Member thinks that we should still be paying people income support, giving them no hope for the future, and no training programs, other than for blacksmiths.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, we do not believe that those who are already suffering ought to pay for the retraining programs. That is the difference between us.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if we consider the unemployment rate in northern Quebec, in a region that includes the Prime Minister's riding, now an unemployed person who worked for 10 weeks, for example, can get around $4,000 in benefits. But with this program, this working man or woman cannot get benefits, only welfare, not unemployment insurance, only social assistance, and there are no new jobs in that region! Is that the Conservative Party's idea of fairness?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this program has been designed so that it remains sensitive to areas where unemployment is high. It is also sensitive to the fact that local people dealing in a local economy are the best ones to define the jobs. That is why we have the Community Futures Program.

We are not only looking at people in big cities. We are looking at people all across Canada, particularly in high unemployment regions, in isolated regions, and in small communities. They will be among the chief beneficiaries of this program.

• (1430)

BASIC EDUCATIONAL TRAINING REQUIREMENTS

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. She has been talking about the area of skills requirements and skills development. According to her own report, almost one-half of the new jobs by the year 2000 will require more than five years of combined education and training beyond the high school level.

I draw to the Minister's attention that one in six adult Canadians is functionally illiterate. The national drop-out rate, according to her figure, stands at better than 30 per cent. Less than 45 per cent of young people entering high school are being prepared for post-secondary education. More than 70 per cent of Canadians currently enter the job market without post-secondary education or training.

How can the Minister justify cuts in UI benefits to the unemployed in order to fund programs without addressing their basic educational training?

Hon Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the last I heard education was a responsibility of provincial Governments. I suggest that if he is going to get his cue cards from Queen's Park he get some better ones.

We introduced a literacy program. A year ago we announced a literacy program to help adult Canadians with their numerical skills and with their reading and writing skills. We did that because we do think that is important.

But we have also said that we will be working with the provinces because they have a stake in this too. That includes education. We will be working with the provinces on our literacy program, which my colleague, the Secretary of State, announced last year. We are expecting every element in our society to start to pull toward the objectives that we all have to meet.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FEDERAL FINANCIAL PARTICIPATION

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, despite the assurances of the Minister we have been given an indication that there is an absence of an over-all employment strategy. Certainly, yesterday in this House, she gave us an indication that there had not been prior consultation with the provinces, none with the industries, and none with labour.

Under her proposal the unemployed will be taking the burden of the Government's agenda with a 17 per cent cut in UI benefits. Does this mean that, as my Leader said just a few moments ago—

An Hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Volpe: There is only one, and he has been making all the right points.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Volpe: Given the Minister's assurances of just a few months ago that there would be a 7 per cent increase in unemployment insurance benefits, and in light of her current proposal, is the Government reducing its financial participation, which is currently at 26 per cent, or is it abandoning it altogether?

Hon Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, clearly, the Hon. Member is way off base on this matter. We have done a number of things in this program. Let me just point out this to him. Members opposite keep talking about throwing people on welfare. We initiated a program for social assistance that has been very successful. We are increasing that by $100 million. If the provinces join in there will be $200 million more for social assistance recipients. It is a training program. That is what people on welfare want, too. We are not throwing people on to the welfare rolls. We are getting them off unemployment sooner.

ENERGY

HIBERNIA OILFIELD PROJECT—POSITION OF MOBIL OIL COMPANY

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy. As he will know, the deadline for signing the Hibernia development agreement has come and gone. Indeed, last week, the Minister from St. John's West called one of his damage control news conferences to try to explain this latest broken Tory promise.

Mr. Crosbie: Oh, come on!

Mr. Simmons: He is touchy today, Mr. Speaker.

I want to ask the Minister of Energy if he will confirm that Mobil Oil now wants to change the basic design for the production platform to save costs. If so, will he indicate what the job loss will be to Newfoundlanders, and what the lost revenue will be to the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, what I will confirm is that the hon. gentleman's Party opposed the Atlantic Accord. The Atlantic Accord made possible the negotiations for Hibernia. It made possible for the first time in a long time the fact that Newfoundland would be able to get the benefits, the revenues from offshore development.

I have been very public about this, as has my colleague the Minister for International Trade. With the March 31 deadline there were a number of points. First, there were the legal requirements. Second, there was the testing of the financial markets. Third, there was the engineering design. Those are three areas that needed completion.

What we have also said is that the 1995 date for completion and for the first oil flow remains in place.

Those are the details I have given before. There has not been any change. That is what the Minister for International Trade has said. If there are any other differences, I say to the Hon. Member get back to those facts that have been on the table quite openly for quite some time.

TIMETABLE FOR DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, of course the question is whether those facts will still be on the table after next Thursday's election in Newfoundland.

Mr. Crosbie: You are very, very nervous, Roger.

Mr. Simmons: I cannot help it if the Hon. Member for St. John's West feels very nervous about the answers being given by his colleague—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Simmons: The Minister will be aware, Mr. Speaker, that one of the partners in the Hibernia agreement, the Government's own Petro-Can, has in the last day or so labelled the undertaking as a very enormous risk because of oil price uncertainty. Will the Minister assure us that the project's future is not in jeopardy notwithstanding the statements of the vice-president of Petro-Can yesterday? Will it go forward according to the schedule that the Government agreed to in last summer's statement of principles?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can say to the hon. gentleman—and this was also identified earlier—that obviously in any large project energy pricing is a factor. What I will say to him is this. If he waits just for a short period of time, Petro-Canada not only has said publicly but I will make it official again, that it is fully in favour and supports the Hibernia project. It is not only Petro-Canada but Mobil and the other consortium members, as well as the provincial Government and the federal Government, that fully agree with the statement of principles, and we are working for completion of that statement of principles. Election or no election in Newfoundland what is important is the development of Hibernia. What I would hope is that Members opposite would start supporting Hibernia as much as this Government is supporting it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMPACT

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who also happens to be the Minister responsible for the status of women.

The Minister knows that her changes to the Unemployment Insurance Program will have a severe impact on women, especially on young single mothers. Many of these women will be penalized for quitting their jobs when they do have just cause, when they have no other choice. These women face discrimination on the job, sexual harassment, and problems finding child care, particularly with shift jobs. These women and their families will face up to three months with no income.

Can the Minister ensure that not one woman will fall through the cracks of this legislation and be charged these outrageous penalties?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for her question. I want to assure her that among the chief beneficiaries of the new program will be women, including single mothers. I think the Hon. Member would agree that what we have done on maternity benefits and parental benefits is something about which all Members of this House should be proud. That will be of particular help to that group.

When we talk about quitting without just cause we are talking about people who walk away from a job without a reason. Sexual harassment, or the transfer of a spouse to another city, or unsafe working conditions are other categories. Those are the three most important ones. The impact on women, when those are the things that they have a great concern about, will not affect their ability to collect benefits.

• (1440)

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE WOMEN WILL NOT BE PENALIZED

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): I am sure that we are pleased with the extension to parental benefits, but I would remind the Minister that this initiative was pushed on the Government by the courts of Canada. Women may have the right to appeal an unfair penalty through unemployment insurance, but we know that the immigrant women of Canada do not appeal in many instances. They do not have the same access in our society to the appeal process. What assurances can the Minister give that no women will be unfairly penalized through these new measures?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in answer let me just deal with the preamble. We were not forced to do this by the courts. In fact we went further than the judgment because we incorporated sickness benefits in a way that had nothing whatsoever to do with the court decision. Under these rules, parents are going to have much more flexibility around special benefits including sickness benefits as well as maternity benefits. That is important for women to know. So I hope that she will not obscure those facts.

Secondly, immigrant women are the people who are going to benefit from this. They are the people who need the training the most. They need to think about jobs beyond the minimum wage. They need to think about getting into non-traditional jobs that these training programs are going to provide. We have done more for immigrant women than any Government in the history of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AID

LEVEL OF OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): My question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of External Relations. The North-South Institute this morning informed me of their concern about budget cuts to Canada's official development assistance. In fact, in the Throne Speech, the Government does not give a substantive commitment to maintaining its current level of overseas development assistance.

In the speech delivered by the Prime Minister to the United Nations General Assembly last September 29, he affirmed that Canadian assistance will continue to increase to reach the target of .6 per cent of the GNP by 1995, and the desired .7 per cent by the year 2,000.

Will the Minister guarantee a continued commitment to this objective?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well I cannot comment at this time on her speculations on the budget for development assistance, and that the Minister of Finance will bring down his Budget on April 27. However, for the benefit of the Hon. Member, I would like to add that since this Government came to power, our development assistance program has had the highest growth rate of any of the Government's non-statutory programs, and that this year's budget for development assistance is $1 billion more than it was in 1983–84. I think we should remember that, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

ELIMINATION OF POVERTY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): My supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is again to the Minister of External Relations. In the words of the Prime Minister himself, "Poverty undermines security. Alleviating poverty must be given a new priority on national and international agendas. We must work to achieve social justice for the poorest of our world". And then the Prime Minister states, "Increased development assistance, especially to the poorest countries, is another imperative."

Why do the Prime Minister and the Minister not confirm right now that they will at least maintain their present level of commitment to the poor of our world?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to words spoken by the Prime Minister which I wholeheartedly endorse. I would also like to add, for the benefit of the Hon. Member, a passage from the Throne Speech which refers to Canada's international mission, and I will give her the quote:

> My Government will continue to take a strong stand in defence of human rights. It will continue to be among the leaders in peacekeeping, in international development, in strengthening international organizations, and in relieving the devastation of famine or of national disaster.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to add that since 1984, thanks to the Prime Minister's leadership, Canada has acquired an international dimension, and that is something we must not forget.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State. Repeatedly the Conservative Government indicated that research and development activities are essential to the development of a competitive Canadian society. Current support for research and development in Canada is at 1.42 per cent of the Gross National Product, roughly half of what it is for the U.S., Japan, and Sweden. The Conservatives, when in opposition, had committed themselves as the future Government to increase research and development activities to 2.5 per cent of the Gross National Product.

Some Hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Duhamel: Is the Minister prepared to commit himself today to finally meeting his Party's 1984 campaign promises?

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, this is basically the same question that we answered the other day, and let me remind my colleagues—

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): And the same stupid answer.

Mr. Winegard: In the last two years, and in particular the last year, this Government has promised through the Prime Minister's National Advisory Board on Science and Technology to put $1.3 billion into this field. I can give you some of the details. There was $240 million into the Centres of Excellence Program that will bring together universities and industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Winegard: There was $80 million into the Canada Scholarship Program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Winegard: Another $200 million into the Granting Councils over the next five years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Winegard: Another $200 million into the new technologies, biotechnology—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, I have got a long list, but I am sure the Member gets the point.

FINANCING OF COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. Ronald Duhamel (Saint-Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship). The federal Government's contribution to provincial financing of post-secondary education and health services is based on the average Gross National Product, calculated over a period of three years, less 2 per cent. I may add that this formula is 2 per cent less than the one used by the previous Liberal Government.

Is the Minister prepared to make a commitment today to provide a level of financial support that will at least maintain this level of financing for our colleges and universities?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, I suppose we will have to wait and see what the Minister of Finance says on April 27.

I am sure all Canadians are getting impatient, but the time will soon be right.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

FUNDING OF POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION—STUDENTS' HUNGER STRIKE

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs. As he knows, those Indian students who are fighting the unjust freeze in native post-secondary education are ending their 22nd day of the hunger strike. Permanent damage to their livers and kidneys is expected soon if they do not stop. In fact there is a tragedy just around the corner, as the Minister knows. The Minister continues to swagger like a schoolyard bully while refusing to meet these students who are being held hostage by him. Will he stop this swaggering? Will he agree to meet those students immediately so that he can play his role and stop permanent injury to these students?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated already in the House last week, I am prepared to meet with the students as soon as they put an end to their hunger strike. I was also informed on Monday of the new demands, or repeat of the demands of these students, when they state that their demands are a moratorium on any changes to the E-12 policy, an establishment of a bilateral process at the grass-roots community level on secondary and post-secondary education matters.

I have already indicated that a bilateral process of discussion already exists. I am prepared to review the new guidelines. If they can be improved and I can be convinced that improvements are needed, we will certainly look at them and bring them in. But that has to be done in normal circumstances.

CONDITION OF STUDENTS

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, we know what the Minister's consultation with Indian groups has been. Not one of the over 560 groups he consulted prior to this change accepted and agreed with the Department's changes. We know what that consultation means; it does not mean anything.

The Government indicated in the Throne Speech that it will take measures to ensure that native peoples participate fully "in Canada's economic development prospects and to this end will be extending its program to assist native economic development". On the one hand the Government says something, on the other hand the Government does something else. It is time the Minister took action and it is time he made these changes.

My supplementary question—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): It is shocking the way these Members carry on.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: The subject matter, of course, is serious. I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Do one or more of these students have to die before the Minister acts?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I already indicated a few moments ago, the first demand of the students is that I put a moratorium on any changes to the E12 policy. I am being asked to put a moratorium on improvements to the E12 policy.

I want to indicate to the House that consultation was carried out. As a matter of fact, I have a document of the First Nations called "Tradition and Education: Towards a Vision of Our Future", Volume 2. I would like my hon. friend to read the document. I think it is very important. It states:

> Currently, student eligibility for resourcing is covered under a DIAND document entitled Circular E12.

That is policy to which they want to revert.

> It sets rigid criteria for student eligibility and limits the amount that First Nations councils and education authorities can resource students. Circular E12 does not account for the actual financial needs of individual students and the cost-of-living in the area of the post-secondary institution.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for London—Middlesex.

CANADA SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM—MAINTENANCE OF STANDARDS BY STUDENTS

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Earlier he referred to the blue chip investment our Government made in the young people of Canada through our Canada Scholarship Program in Science and Technology. However, it has come to my attention that some students in this program are not meeting the minimum high standards such as those held at the University of Western Ontario in my district.

Will the Minister assure Canadians that he is on guard to ensure that for this first-class investment we maintain first-class participation of our students, both to enter the program and to carry on with the program? Will he give Canadians that assurance?

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, the simple answer to the question is yes. We will insist that all those entering into the second year of this program do so only if they have a first-class standing. I tried to make that clear last weekend in Montreal when we announced the second year of the program. The 350 students who were with us were thrilled at that kind of announcement because they recognize that they wanted the excellence themselves.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

RAFFERTY—ALAMEDA DAMN PROJECT—REQUEST FOR ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT ASSESSMENT

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. I have in my hand a question—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Read it.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. I have in my hand a letter from the provincial Minister of Natural Resources in the Government of Manitoba, addressed to the Minister, requesting that the federal Government not appeal the decision on the Rafferty-Alameda Dam, and to proceed immediately with an environmental impact assessment. Of course, this has been the position of the Opposition for several months now.

Will the Minister indicate to the House that he is ready to proceed with such an environmental assessment review? Will he proceed with it vigorously in terms of public participation, public hearings and scientific research?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce to the House and my hon. friend that today I have instructed officials from my Department to undertake a complete assessment of the impacts of the Rafferty-Alameda Dam project on the United States, Manitoba, fish, migratory birds and federal lands.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: It is about time.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): I will have discussions with my colleagues whose Departments might be affected by the judgment. I will particularly obtain the view of my colleague, the Attorney General.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Given that the Federal Court ruled that there is a duty owed to the public, and an essential part of the process did not occur, will he reassure the House that this process will be public and open to all people who wish to speak to this issue?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I just said, and I repeat, that the due process of assessment will be followed.

PUBLIC HEARINGS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Am I correct in understanding that what the Minister has just stated is that the Government will not proceed with an environmental assessment review process, an EARP, that there will be no public hearings on this and that instead the Government is going to have an impact study before deciding whether to go ahead with a full investment or impact study? Am I correct in that?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that we sit in the same House. What I said in plain English—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): —is that there will be a complete assessment of the impacts of this project on the United States, Manitoba, wildlife, fish, migratory birds and federal lands. You will find them in the judgment. As far as legal aspects are concerned, my colleague will see to it.

It is a very serious question. There are many questions raised in this judgment. It is a very important judgment. I deal with the practical environmental questions, and as far as those purposes are concerned we will proceed to the complete process of assessment.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister again in very slow and plain English—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member can put his question.

Mr. de Jong: Will there be an environmental assessment review process and will there be public hearings?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, a complete review will be held. We all know that there are two stages. The first stage is to conduct studies. Those studies of the aspects I just mentioned will be conducted. When we have read the studies, and according to the conclusions, the Minister always has, in due process, to make a decision as to whether or not there will be a public hearing. That will be a decision to make after we get the results of the study. That is the normal process.

FISHERIES

SITUATION IN ATLANTIC REGION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Atlantic fisheries are going through very difficult times. The inshore and midshore fisheries are in a full-fledged crisis situation. Fish stocks are declining. We have overcapacity, both with respect to fishing vessels and processing plants, and the Minister seems to be totally ignorant of the situation.

Some plants have already closed down and other plants are about to do so. Several thousand jobs are at stake. A number have been lost already.

My question is simply this: What immediate steps does the Minister intend to take to examine this very serious situation and help these communities?

[English]

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for the question. Of course, as we go through the 1989 fishing season, we are plagued with a problem of overcapacity and depressed prices for the fundamental groundfish products, but I should point out that in the past fishing year, there were 100,000 tonnes of other non-surplus stocks available to the fishery of Atlantic Canada. We are working with the various fishermen's advisory committees to find better ways to make use of these non-surplus stocks which have not been harvested in past years.

We have also just announced a new enterprise allocation program for the gulf in the Hon. Member's area, and we have taken a number of other important positive initiatives to deal with this very real problem.

Mr. Speaker: I would advise Hon. Members that that concludes Question Period.

DEPLOYMENT OF PEACEKEEPING FORCES TO NAMIBIA

STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I rise on this occasion to deposit in the Chamber an Order in Council approving the deployment of Canadian forces in support of the United Nations peacekeeping operation in Namibia.

I would like to take this opportunity to once again underline the importance that this Government attaches to international peacekeeping and peaceful resolution of disputes. Much has been made in recent months about the radical improvement in international relations. This is best reflected in the increased rhythm of peacekeeping activity in various parts of the world.

My colleague and predecessor, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty), stood in this House only last September and again in December to comment on Canada's peacekeeping efforts around the world and to comment again on the dedication and commitment of our Canadian Forces members to the cause of peace in foreign countries near and far.

Canada has participated in virtually every peacekeeping operation undertaken by the United Nations since the end of the Second World War. Canadian peacekeepers currently serve in such far-off places as Cyprus, Syria, the Sinai, Iran and Iraq, Afghanistan and now Namibia.

Later this afternoon, the largest contingent of troops will be on their way to Namibia. I know these men and women and their families are acutely aware of the magnitude of the tasks facing them and their individual responsibilities for the success of this mission. They know of the important role they play in preserving peace in that region and ensuring the independence of the world's newest nation. They also know of the proud tradition of Canadian peacekeepers who have gone before them and of the respect and the appreciation of the world for their efforts.

I would also like to point out to my colleagues that we have this week responded to an additional call from the United Nations above and beyond our troop commitments and will be providing additional air support for the speedy deployment of the UN force.

Peace is a precious thing. It needs to be nurtured. It needs to be cultivated with patience and with diligence. It is hard sometimes and at times it is dangerous work. It cannot be taken for granted. Canada is committed to this task, and when the United Nations has asked for our assistance in the past, we have not hesitated to respond. We will not hesitate to respond in the future.

I know that all Hon. Members wish to join in offering our best wishes and support to the Canadian peacekeepers. I cannot think of a more appropriate role for our forces and for our nation.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition, I am pleased to say that of course we approve of this decision of the Government, which by Order in Council officially approves the deployment of Canadian Forces in support of the United Nations peacekeeping operation in Namibia. Obviously, we are even more pleased when we remember that one of our former colleagues, the Hon. Don Jamieson, and then-Canadian Ambassador William Barton were both the driving forces at the United Nations to present Resolution 435, which was the first original resolution of the Security Council on the process of Namibian independence.

Of course, we also join the Hon. Minister in wishing these Canadian soldiers good luck and in thanking them for agreeing to participate on behalf of all Canadians in this effort for peace anywhere in the world.

The Liberal Party of Canada has always been a great advocate of using the Canadian Forces for such peace missions. In this regard, I need only recall the words of my leader, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), in a very important speech that he gave in Vancouver, where he outlined the main points of foreign policy as advocated by the Liberal Party and in which he reproached the Conservative Government for a certain timidity over the past four years in not offering the United Nations the greatest possible use of Canadian troops abroad.

The Minister's remarks are unfortunately incomplete and I deplore his failure to say anything about the situation in Namibia since April 1. Obviously, the recent incidents, the loss of life of many SWAPO members, greatly concern us Canadians. When the Minister tells us that he is sending troops to that part of the world, he should give us an overview of the situation and give a report to us in the House, to the Canadian people and especially to the families of these service people who are going to that troubled part of the world. Is the Minister absolutely sure that this peace mission is able to do the work that it is supposed to do in Namibia?

I need only say that originally, we were talking about a United Nations force of some 7,000 soldiers. We know that there will only be 4,000. Many impartial observers consider this force much too small to really do the job, for we all hope that it will make a tangible contribution to peace in that part of the world. Now, the Minister is completely silent on this matter.

Secondly, he does not say either that troops should already be on the scene. This process that should eventually lead to Namibian independence is already underway. As he speaks to us in this House, barely one quarter of the military forces have arrived. We are unable to explain this situation. And by the way, since the Minister told us that he agreed to make additional air support available to the United Nations for the more effective deployment of troops, I wonder why this offer of additional support from Canada was not made several weeks ago already, so that those men and women who will go in the coming days to help this United Nations contingent would already be in place and performing their peacekeeping duties.

• (1510)

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I welcome the Minister's announcement. We share with the Government and Canadians the considerable pride we have in the role our Canadian Forces have played in peace-keeping operations around the world. That they are serving with distinction whether in Cyprus, Syria, the Sinai, Iran, Iraq or Afghanistan signifies the commitment of Canadians to the peaceful resolution of disputes. It is the reason why our Forces are recipients of the Nobel Peace Prize.

In the case of Namibia, as recent events attest, Canadian troops are entering a sensitive and dangerous situation. They are there to oversee the implementation of Namibian independence resulting from negotiations which did not involve the Namibian Contact group, of which Canada is a member, nor the UN Council for Namibia, but rather Angola, Cuba and South Africa. SWAPO and the myriad South African occupying forces have been engaged in bloody conflict. This is partially a result of confusion surrounding the peace process, perhaps exploited by both sides. It is equally the result of the failure of the Security Council, of which Canada is a member, to ensure speedy deployment of UNTAG forces in sufficient numbers.

Canada is highly respected in southern Africa. Its participation in UNTAG will be welcomed. However, the safety and effectiveness of our Forces as well as Canada's prestige will depend upon Canada's role in restoring trust and confidence in the role of the UN itself. That will require that the strength of UNTAG forces be set at the agreed upon level of 7,500 persons. It will depend upon ensuring that the elections are not controlled by South Africa but by the United Nations, and that there be a stop to South African manipulation and intimidation. Only then will Namibia become the world's newest nation.

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Pursuant to S.O. 34(1), it is my privilege, Mr. Speaker, to table in both official languages the report of the Official Delegation of the Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association on the Forum on Strengthening Democracy held in San Jose, Costa Rica February 6-8, 1989, and their visit to Guatemala of 8-10 February, 1989.

Concerning the report on the meetings prior to the 7th Parliamentary and Scientific Conference and the meeting preparatory to the XVIIth Annual Meeting with the European Parliament held from January 30 to February 3 and on March 29-30, 1989.

As Canadian parliamentarians, we are all agreed on the principle of establishing a Central American Parliament to foster peace, tolerance and understanding among the peoples of Central America. When Costa Rica ratifies the proposal to create such a Central-American Parliament, Canada will consider financial support towards that end.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-226, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (election expenses).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Murphy: The purpose of this private Member's Bill is to clarify the definition of election expenses under the Canada Elections Act.

If passed, this Bill will significantly change the manner in which expense are defined. All expenses and liabilities incurred for the purpose of directly or indirectly promoting a particular registered Party will be considered the expenses of that Party.

In every election some candidates are able to exceed the appropriate spending limits because of the fuzziness of the Elections Act. This Bill will remove that confusion.

If this Bill had been passed before the last election, it would have resolved what happened in the past. It would have clarified the problem that existed with regard to the definition of election expenses that were identified by the all-Party committee looking into the matter of the campaign expenses of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse).

Ideally, I would like to see companion legislation proposed either by the Government or the Opposition that will deal specifically with the role of advertising by third Parties in Canada's elections. This is necessary in order for us to have a clean election Act that all Parties, all individuals, all corporations, and all unions are able to live up to.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-227, an Act to amend the Labour Code (severance pay).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fisher: It gives me great pleasure to introduce this Bill. It will have the effect of ensuring more adequate severance pay for older, longer-service workers, namely, those with more than 20 years of service.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

AUDITOR GENERAL ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-228, an Act to amend the Auditor General Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hovdebo: The purpose of this Bill is to make the office of the Auditor General a more current and effective institution by allowing it to report comprehensive audits as they are completed, rather than once a year as at present.

For many years, at least the last 10 years, public accounts committees have supported this idea. Many Members from both sides of the House have also supported the move.

The Bill is very simple and it would only require the addition of one word to allow the Auditor General to report as each comprehensive audit is completed.

Motion agreed, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-229, an Act to amend the Young Offenders Act (murder).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Karygiannis: It gives me great pleasure to introduce this Bill which proposes amendments to the Young Offenders Act.

Canadians are demanding changes to the Young Offenders Act. The amendment that I am proposing would go a long way toward achieving the necessary changes to this Act.

The Conservative Government has waited too long to consider changes. The people of Canada demand action now.

The need to protect society is far greater than the need to protect the young offender.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-230, an Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act (oats and barley).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Laporte: I am pleased to introduce a Bill which amends the Canadian Wheat Board Act. Lately there has been a definite need for such a Bill. This Bill will give producers of oats and barley the same legislative protection as wheat producers presently have, which is protection from uncaring, out-of-touch Governments which are neither consultative nor considerate.

If this Bill is adopted, the Government will be obliged to bring any proposed changes to Wheat Board marketing of oats and barley before the House as legislation.

The Government will then have to consult with and hear the views of the people affected by its policies, something which it unfortunately does not presently practice.

The Wheat Board is funded by agricultural producers and they should have a say in changes that take place.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-231, an Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act (list of ingredients).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I wish to introduce this Bill to amend the Food and Drugs Act because there are many people who don't know what is in the food they eat in a restaurant.

[English]

This Bill would compel every restaurant to make available for public consultation a list, either in French or in English, of all ingredients in any food sold by it, with the intention of informing consumers and giving them the

It is a life-saving measure. I believe in the last Parliament it received the support of Members on all sides of the House, and I fully expect that in this Parliament it will become the law.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-232, an Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act (sexual orientation).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting once again a Private Member's Bill, the purpose of which is to implement the repeated recommendations of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, and the unanimous recommendation of the parliamentary committee on equality rights to prohibit discrimination within federal jurisdiction on the basis of sexual orientation. At the present time, lesbians, bisexuals, and gay men are not protected from discrimination in employment or access to services or accommodation. As the Canadian Human Rights Commission points out:

> . . .it has long been on record, for example, as favouring the inclusion of sexual orientation as a prohibitive type of discrimination, as is already the case in Quebec, Manitoba, Ontario and the Yukon. There is absolutely no question that such discrimination exists and that it is socially harmful.

Hopefully, the Government will finally act on its promise to move forward on legislation in this important area.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Robinson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At a time in which historic breakthroughs are being made in the struggle for peace and disarmament, I believe that this would represent a small step on the course toward disarmament. The Bill would declare the Canadian Arctic to be a nuclear weapons free zone. Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, this would be part of a global initiative to declare northern zones in the U.S.S.R., in Canada, in Scandinavia, and elsewhere to be nuclear weapons free zones, as the first step on the road toward a nuclear weapons free Canada and indeed, a nuclear weapons free world.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-234, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (gun control).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Robinson: The purpose of this Bill is to extend the present law relating to firearms acquisition certificates to the ownership, possession and use of firearms, and to change firearms acquisition certificate to firearms possession certificate. The Bill would apply the criteria at present for a stipulated firearms acquisition certificate, to firearms ownership, possession, and use. There is a clear need to strengthen legislation in Canada in the area of gun control. We have seen many recent examples of that. I would hope that the House would support this important legislation that will result in the saving of human life.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-235, an Act to amend the Criminal Code.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to repeal Section 43 of the Criminal Code. That would in effect prevent parents and any persons standing in the place of parents from using force toward a child as a means of correction. This was recommended by the Canadian Commission on the International Year of the Child, by the Canadian Council on Children and Youth, and indeed we have seen circumstances in which Section 43 has been used as a shield to cover considerable violence directed toward children and young people.

I would hope that we would recognize the serious problem of the physical and sexual abuse of children in Canada, and take this important step to repeal that section of the Criminal Code that does allow the use of force and violence against young people and children.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-236, an Act to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act (reports to Parliament)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to ensure that the long standing recommendation of the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, that he transmit his annual or special reports directly to Parliament, as opposed to the Minister of Justice be implemented. In the most recent annual report of the commission, it stated that the commission believes its administrative independence from Government should be more clearly established. The purpose of this is because it is fundamental that the protection of human rights not be exposed to the possibility of arbitrary interventions by the executive, and because it is in the interest of the state itself that the agency it has designated to act in the public interest be manifestly able to do so independently and in a publicly accountable manner.

This is a long-standing recommendation of the Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Human Rights Commission to report directly to Parliament, and I would hope that Members on all sides of the House would be prepared to support this recommendation.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties, and tomorrow after Question Period I will be indicating the order of business for the balance of this week and next week. The discussion among the Parties related to the fact that we will be calling the eighth day of the Throne Speech on Friday. I think you would find that there would be unanimous consent for me to place the following motion immediately, and for the vote to take place immediately without debate. I move:

> That on Friday, April 14, 1989, the eighth and final designated day for resumed debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, in the event of any demanded recorded division or divisions, such recorded division shall be deferred until 6:00 o'clock p.m. on Monday, April 17, 1989.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents pursuant to Standing Order 36 that indicates their concern regarding the Government's intentions in terms of changes to the unemployment insurance program. Rather than take time to go through a whole list of concerns, fundamentally they are asking that Parliament reject any proposals to fund the much needed retraining programs from unemployment benefit funds.

DESIGNATION OF ROUGE RIVER VALLEY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to present to the House of Commons today a petition on behalf of a number of residents of Scarborough. The petitioners seek the assistance of Parliament to help save the Rouge River Valley system.

The petition states that the Rouge River Valley, which is in Scarborough on the east boundary of Metro Toronto, is a unique and precious natural area. It is crucial to protect the endangered wildlife and wilderness areas. It is in the national interest to do so. That national interest to preserve the Rouge River Valley system is shared by the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard). I am indeed pleased to state that the Minister of the Environment has accepted an invitation to tour the Rouge River Valley area. That will take place on Sunday, April 16. He will see first hand the beauty and the majestic qualities of the valley system.

• (1540)

Therefore, the petitioners join with the Mayor of Scarborough, the hundreds of volunteers of Save the Rouge River Valley System, the Coalition of Scarborough Community Associations and humbly pray and call upon Parliament to work with the Government of Ontario to establish the Rouge River Valley System as Canadian heritage land or a provincial park.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—IMPACT ON DAIRY FARMERS

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me today to rise to present a petition to the House signed by almost 250 dairy farmers and citizens of southwestern Ontario. They are concerned that their marketing system may be in jeopardy due to the implementation of the Free Trade Agreement and the current round of GATT negotiations.

Canadian dairy farmers have developed the most sophisticated marketing system of any dairy people in the world and provide high quality products for our consumers. The Canadian systems have been geared to domestic requirements and have not contributed to surpluses in world markets.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to instruct the Government to hold the Canadian system up as an example to the rest of the world and to protect it in its entirety at all costs.

OPPOSITION TO TAXATION OF MUSIC LESSONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition signed by the residents of the capital area concerning the forthcoming Budget on April 27.

The petitioners state that a sales tax on music lessons will hurt the average family for whom music education would become too costly. They state that with a sales tax on music lessons Canadian children will suffer, talent will be undeveloped and the future of Canadian music, both nationally and internationally, will be jeopardized, that music educators are active participants in education departments, and that their knowledge and expertise prepares students with qualifications enabling them to enter university faculties of music. Wherefore the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to consider music studies as an educational process. Therefore music education should be exempted from the proposed sales tax.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour today to present a number of petitions. The first three petitions are on behalf of residents of Thompson, Wabowden and Paint Lake in northern Manitoba and several other communities in the north of Canada. These communities were removed from a list of prescribed areas eligible for full northern tax benefits. The petitioners believe that the actions of the Minister were arbitrary and unfair, especially considering the fact that this was done before the Government appointed task force on tax benefits for northern and isolated areas reports back to the Government.

The petitioners believe that this is unheard of and makes a mockery of the entire task force.

I would like to point out that there will be over 5,000 signatures introduced into the House of Commons over the next few days.

Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to direct the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to reconsider this major change of heart for the 1988 taxation year, and that there be no changes to any taxpayer currently residing in a community within the prescribed areas until the task force has completed its report.

Point of Order—Mr. Gauthier

IMPOSITION OF TELECOMMUNICATIONS TAX

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege today to present a petition signed by more than 200 citizens of Thunder Bay. They are concerned about the Government's imposition of a 10 per cent telecommunications tax on long distance telephone calls.

Residents of northern Ontario are compelled to make more long distance calls due to the density of population and the distances between communities.

Therefore the petitioners call upon the Government to impose ceilings on the amount of telecommunications tax any individual is required to pay.

UTILIZATION OF PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier I have a number of petitions to present. The second group that I will be dealing with today concerns the Port of Churchill. Residents of the communities of York Landing, Cross Lake, Gillam and Churchill, Manitoba have all sent petitions which I will be introducing today. There will be a number of petitions from other communities across western Canada.

The petitioners call upon the Government to have full utilization of the Port of Churchill. They believe it will improve the economy of Canada's prairie provinces. There is need for the federal Government to develop the obvious potential of Canada's only inland seaport.

Therefore your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to direct the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board to ensure that at the very least 3 per cent of Canada's annual grain shipment should be shipped through the Port of Churchill, and that the Government aggressively pursue additional ways to utilize this important seaport to ship exports other than grain.

OPPOSITION TO TAXATION OF MUSIC LESSONS

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition on behalf of some Canadian citizens. It has been duly certified by the Clerk of Petitions pursuant to Standing Order 36.

The petitioners request that the House consider the petitioners' view that the proposed sales tax not include a tax on music lessons. If the tax goes through the petitioners feel that music education will become too costly for the average Canadian family. It is imperative that music studies should be considered as an educational process and therefore not taxable.

The undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to exempt music education from the proposed sales tax.

The Deputy Speaker: I see the Hon. Member for Lambton—Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) is standing in his place. I will recognize the Hon. Member on Petitions. Normally, I ask that members do all their petitions once they have the floor.

MARKING OF BEEF IMPORTS

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition on another matter from some other producers in my riding, the beef producers. They state that whereas the Canadian beef industry is being undermined by increasing amounts of unrolled or ungraded beef being imported into Canada from the United States; whereas this beef is being sold to Canadian consumers who are expecting high quality Grade A Canadian beef; and where these imports are not identified as a quality or grade, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to take immediate action to require that all imported beef in carcass form or as boxed beef be marked as to the Canadian grade equivalent.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all the questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. GAUTHIER—DURATION OF SPEECHES DURING ADDRESS IN REPLY TO THE SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): On point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, there has been consultation among the Parties in the House about the fact that we all have quite a few Members who would like to speak in the current debate. Considering that Standing Order 52 provides that Members may speak for 20 minutes, with a ten-minute period for questions and comments, I think it would be in the interests of the House and all its Members to agree to cut our speaking time to 15 minutes, with five minutes for questions and comments.

This way, Mr. Speaker,—and I would ask the Chair to be strict about enforcing the Standing Orders—we could give more Members an opportunity to speak in this debate the next two days and perhaps give more of our newly-elected Members a chance as well.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations. I understand the proposal being put forward is for 15 minute speeches followed by 5 minutes for questions and comments. That is to be the rule for the remaining part of the Throne Speech debate. As long as we see this as not setting any kind of precedent it is in the best interests of the House and in the best interests of members of all Parties.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that those discussions have taken place. We are pleased to co-operate. We think it is an excellent opportunity to ensure that we have as many Members involved in this debate as is possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the proposal?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for an address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech of the opening of the session; and on the amendment of Mr. Foster:

That the following be added to the Address:

"This House regrets that Your Excellency's advisors have failed to recognize the importance of agriculture to Canada's economy:

(1) by only making a three-line reference to agriculture in the Speech from the Throne implying that farmers are a drain on the national treasury;

(2) by removing oats from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board without consulting with, or obtaining the approval of, the major farm organizations thereby adding to concerns that the Board will eventually be dismantled;

(3) by taking a position in the Free Trade negotiations which will lead to a weakening, if not the destruction, of Canada's orderly marketing systems in the grain, poultry, dairy and horticultural sectors and by not providing adequate adjustment programs as evidenced by the de Grandpré Report;

(4) by failing to commence negotiations with the U.S. on an agricultural subsidy code so that farmers will not face U.S. countervail at the whim of U.S. lobby groups such as is now threatening Canada's pork producers;

(5) by undermining the viability of the beef industry by allowing increasing amounts of "no roll" (ungraded) beef into Canada from the U.S.; and

(6) by not providing any new initiatives through the Farm Credit Corporation to cope with the farm debt crisis and high interest rates."

Mr. Mauricio Bevilacqua (York North): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise for my first time in this House to respond to the Speech from the Throne.

First, I would like to say how proud I am to have been elected to the House of Commons and to represent the people of Canada's most populated riding, the riding of York North. Getting here, I must say, was a bit difficult. As a matter of fact, I am perhaps the only Member in the House who had to win the same election twice before he could take his seat. I think my experience has given me a greater appreciation for the meaning of the often heard expression "better late than never".

No greater honour can be bestowed upon a Canadian than to have been elected by one's fellow citizens to the Parliament of Canada. This was possible only because of the overwhelming support I received from the hard working, compassionate and caring people who reside in the riding of York North. I am extremely grateful to them for their vote of confidence and their expression of faith in my candidacy.

I pledge to my constituents that I will carry out the duties and responsibilities associated with being a Member of Parliament to the best of my abilities. I will devote my full energies with integrity, honesty and compassion as we attempt to build a strong and just Canadian society.

At this point, I must take some time to thank all those people who devoted time and energy and their commitment to my campaign, and more important to the cause and division that it represented. I am a Member of Parliament today because of those people.

Also kindly permit me to thank those people who have been very close to me throughout my life, my wife, Ellena, my son Jean-Paul, my parents, my sister, my brothers and my in-laws. Without their help, I would not have been able to sit in this House.

If would like to say a few words about the riding of York North. I guess it can be best described as a dynamic socially and economically diverse area just north of Metropolitan Toronto. It is Canada's most populated riding consisting of four large townships, Aurora, Richmond Hill, Vaughn and King with an estimated population of approximately 180,000. It is a very interesting community of urban and rural regions creating a unique environment.

As I mentioned earlier my journey to Ottawa was not an easy one, but I must say that I was very pleased to hear in the Speech from the Throne that the Government will appoint a commission of inquiry to make recommendations for needed changes and reforms to the electoral laws. I endorse their initiative. However, I must make very clear that that endorsement is conditional on the reform and that changes to the legislation be effective before the next general election. I hope that the commission does not become merely another way to further delay the progress in this very important and fundamental area of legislation.

Last April 3 when I finally got to the House of Commons, I realized that many years ago when I chose the Liberal Party of Canada as my political home, I made the right choice because it was the Liberal Party of Canada that allowed the son of an immigrant worker to seek public office, the Party that chose inclusion over exclusion. I have always believed that participation in political life in our nation is a passion and a vocation, and that the true politician is one who exercises that passion by fighting for causes that reflect the progressive vision of Canada of moving this country ahead without leaving anyone behind. I chose the Liberal Party as my political home because my faith in this philosophy, our belief in liberalism, gives us the strength to confront the powerful, to challenge the status quo, to question and seek the truth. Our faith in our Party has given us the strength to fight against anything and anyone that attempts to prevent the fulfilment of our dreams as citizens of this country.

Our Party has traditionally been the Party of reconciliation reaching out to unfairly treated minorities, to the dissatisfied regions, to disadvantaged groups of all kind and responding to their needs without alienating other segments of Canadian society.

In this Parliament today we meet at a crossroads, not at a point of arrival, but a point of departure. Where do we go from here? We must act on an agenda that challenges this generation as previous problems challenged our forefathers.

I see that agenda in the face of the single mother, who, with her children, has to stand in front of the local food bank for their daily meal. I see it in the apprehension of the 45 year-old factory worker who understands the personal threat imposed by this Government's insensitive free trade deal. I see it in the inequity of this Government's budget which has unfairly burdened our middle class while rewarding the chosen few. I see it in a failure to crack down on our drug problem which is ruining many young lives. I see it in the hurt the people feel when they are denied rightful opportunities because of discrimination based on sex, race, religion or ethnic origin and the frustration that they feel knowing that their children will be unfairly carrying the baggage of this ugly reality.

I see it in the human sufferings in South Africa, in Ethiopia, in the Middle East which cry out for a politics of caring and humanity. I see it in a country as rich as ours where there are still people without shelter, food or proper medical care.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bevilacqua: I see it in the sad eyes of the child sitting on the steps alone waiting for her parents to come home because our country fails to see the light when it comes to a national day care program.

While the Speech from the Throne used forceful language when talking about spending cuts, it was deliberately vague in reference to programs that might involve new money. If we are to plan for the future of Canada, we better start with the growing need for quality child care. The Government should recognize this and begin to plan for the future.

My concerns are obvious. We must decide what type of society we want to live in. Do we want a market-driven, profit comes first, people-last society or a compassionate, caring society that rewards people's efforts yet has the ability to help the weak and the disadvantaged.

Therefore, when I went to the Senate to hear the Speech from the Throne, I noticed that the over-all focus of this Government was on deficit reduction, and that reducing the deficit is of vital necessity if Canada's economic well- being is to be secured.

I would like, first of all, to be on the record as an individual who believes in the importance of being fiscally responsible. However, I sense that deficit reduction has become such a tunnel-vision view that I fear it will overwhelm all other issues mentioned or not mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. I am also wondering why this Government, that is going to raise taxes and cut spending, never told the Canadian people during the election campaign.

Over the past four years Canadians have been subjected to the sharpest tax hikes in Canada's history. These increases were introduced in spite of promises to the contrary. The speech was deliberately vague on what tax changes might be expected, but very clear that the taxes will occur. I wonder why this Government cannot tell Canadians exactly what it intends to do instead of keeping Canadians in the dark.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bevilacqua: I conclude my remarks by saying that the Throne Speech needs to be seriously examined by all Canadians. There is no reference to federal programs for housing or disposable federal land holdings for affordable housing or how the courts will deal with the Youth Offenders Act. No timetable for legislation was given.

Having the honour of being appointed associate critic for youth, I would be remiss in not mentioning the greatest resource Canada has as being in fact our youth.

• (1600)

I firmly believe that all government policy should take into consideration the impact that it has on youth and the environment. We must continue to establish programs which encourage young people to acquire skills necessary to meet the future demands of our economy.

Drug use in Canada, especially among our youth, continues to rise. I strongly support drug prevention programs and increased law enforcement to bring this problem under control.

Finally, I want to congratulate all Members in the House on their election. Let them always be mindful of the responsibilities we have toward Canadians and to never forget that what we do and, more important, what we do not do, seriously affects the future of this country. Canada is many people, many regions, many cultures and many ideas, with one thing in common: we all strive to attain economic and social justice. It is our responsibility to achieve it.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, first I want to congratulate my colleague, the Member for York North (Mr. Bevilacqua), for his excellent speech. We waited a long time to have a colleague from York North after the election. It is quite evident that he was well worth waiting for. I am sure I speak on behalf of all my colleagues.

The Hon. Member stated how compassionate our society should be. I agree with that and everything he said in his speech.

The fourth fundamental objective listed by the Government in the Speech from the Throne is to foster a confident sense of Canada's culture and national uniqueness in which Canadians may have a greater sense of their common values and common citizenship.

As my colleague will know, this country was largely built against forces dragging us toward the United States. We have traditionally used such tools as the construction and maintenance of a national railway in order to keep the various parts of our country together.

I represent Glengarry, in which there is the town of Alexandria. It was founded by Father Alexander Macdonell in the early 1800s. We have the Montreal to Ottawa rail line, and the Mayor of Alexandria has written a small poem about the potential closure of the rail line. I want to read it and ask my colleague about his impressions on the maintenance of a national railway.

The poem is as follows:

Have you ever heard the story
Of how Brian came to shame
I'll tell you so you'll understand
He is trying to scrap our trains

No wonder that we are proud of
Via Rail from sea to sea
And here's the way you politicians
Please! Just let it be.

Sure'n our families and our workers
Need a train that's bright and clean
Cause you see were are not Prime Minister
And we have no limousines.

We are proud to be Canadians
So please treat us all the same
You see we don't have buses
And we can't afford a plane

Oh the airways and the highways
Are quite crowded, use your brain
Shut them down, it seems it's your way
Then we'll get to keep our trains

Coast to coast we were united
By our railways great and grand
That is why we are so excited
Canada our native land.

Does my colleague believe, as I do, that it is important to maintain our national rail service in order to link the various parts of our country together and to fight those pressures we have always had in this country which draw us toward the United States? Does he believe, as I do, that it is important to keep that railway in order to strengthen the national identity?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. MacDonald (Rosedale)): I am sorry to tell the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Bevilacqua) that he will just have a couple of minutes to answer his colleague.

Mr. Bevilacqua: I want to thank the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) for his question. It seems to me that now more than ever it is important to maintain a sense of national identity as Canadians.

Historically, I believe the railway has been something which has maintained that very essential nationhood that is Canada. It is also important that when we talk about the railway we also talk about the people in the multicultural diversity of Canada who use those railways to see what Canada is all about.

With respect to the issue of multiculturalism, I think the time has come for us to begin to review our policy and look at Canadians as equal partners in building this great land. During the election I began to look at new ways to deal with the social reality of Canada in cultural terms. I began to see that indeed we must review the policy of multiculturalism, to make it all-embracing rather than perhaps risk it becoming a policy of ghettoization. By that, I mean when we talk about the policy of multiculturalism we should be talking about English and French Canadians in the same way as we talk about Italian, Portuguese and Greek Canadians.

I think it is time to initiate a policy that perhaps looks at the establishment of a super ministry of culture that will bring in everyone throughout the country.

We have talked about the railway and the people. I think they are both important elements in Canada.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In order not to be accused of plagiarism, I should mention that the poem I read was written by Mr. Jean-Paul Touchette, Mayor of Alexandria.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, in my first address to the House I want to begin by congratulating you upon your appointment and the Speaker for his election to office. I was privileged to have been able to work for the Speaker during his term as Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He governed for the whole country with distinction and my respect for him has only grown in the short time I have been in this Chamber. Once again, I offer my congratulations and best wishes.

I would also like to congratulate the mover of the Address to the Speech from the Throne, the Member for Calgary Southeast (Mr. Richardson), and the seconder, the Member for Bourassa (Mrs. Gibeau), for their significant and thoughtful remarks. While the Member for Calgary Southeast and I often disagree in our views on hockey—he actually thinks the Flames might beat the Oilers—we stand together in our support for the recent Speech from the Throne.

I would also like to take this opportunity to thank my constituents of Edmonton—Strathcona for their support during the past election. I look forward to serving this recently redistributed constituency which encompasses the south centre of the City of Edmonton. It includes the historic old Strathcona area, the home of the Frinse Theatre Festival, the famous Strathcona Hotel and the Princess Theatre.

Historically, the City of Strathcona amalgamated with the City of Edmonton in 1912. At one time the riding of Strathcona went as far east as Lloydminster, and so far south that it almost went to Calgary.

• (1610)

Edmonton—Strathcona shares with the rest of the city the beauty of the wide and deep North Saskatchewan River whose valley is reserved for parkland, playgrounds, picnic areas and golf courses.

My riding is home to the University of Alberta, the second largest university in this country, a world-class institution with world-class scholars and facilities. The university is keenly interested in our Government's science and technology initiatives and is looking forward to becoming partners with the federal Government in a number of endeavours. I am here to make that happen.

Also a part of Edmonton—Strathcona is the Walter C. MacKenzie Health Sciences Centre, a state of the art hospital with enormous teaching and research facilities. It, too, is excited about many of our Government's initiatives.

The City of Strathcona was named after Donald Smith, Lord Strathcona and Mount Royal, who drove the last spike of the CPR home. Lord Strathcona also served our country with distinction as a Conservative Member of this House. One might say that Conservative roots in Edmonton—Strathcona run deep. As a railway magnate, he contributed to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the impossible dream which joined Canada from sea to sea and made this country truly united.

It was the railway which facilitated settlement to the west and it is the railway which continues to play a vital role in the western economy and way of life. It is for this reason that my constituents and indeed all westerners support the survival of the VIA Rail service in our communities.

As a new Member, it is an honour for me to participate in the discussion on the speech given by the Governor General last week in the Senate Chamber. The people of Edmonton—Strathcona and all Canadians know this to be a Government of action and initiative and are looking for policies which will enable Canada to better compete in world markets. This is where the future prosperity of our country lies. This is why Canadians voted last November in support of the Free Trade Agreement with the United States. Canadians realized that liberalized trade was necessary to guarantee a healthier economy.

A first step toward this goal is the adoption of a strong commitment to increasing research and development. Canada must pursue an aggressive stance in the area of science and technology. Much has already been done. On March 12, 1987, Canada's first ever national science and technology policy initiative was signed by federal, provincial and territorial Governments. This project is to be commended in that it acknowledges at all levels of Government the importance of technological advancement to Canada.

As well, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced the creation of a national advisory board for science and technology. Its purpose is to offer the Government honest suggestions for the improvement of the status of science and technology in Canada. The Prime Minister himself is the chairman.

In addition, in January of 1988 the Government announced a Centres of Excellence program to encourage research and development in universities. This move signals a recognition of the importance of ongoing research at post-secondary institutions. The University of Alberta is looking forward to participating in this program.

As part of the commitment of the Edmonton government caucus to this purpose, a task force on science and technology and economic development in Edmonton is currently being put together. It will consider ways of bringing increased federal participation in research and development to the City of Edmonton. I must commend my caucus colleagues for putting together this task force.

Advances in science and technology are important, but these exciting initiatives cannot take place if measures to control Canada's debt are not vigorously pursued. During the past week of debate on the Throne Speech, much has been said about the deficit and the importance of reducing it. On April 27, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will announce this Government's Budget. A plan which will address the urgency Canadians feel toward the debt problem, a plan which emphasizes restraint and which will include measures to reduce the deficit and bring Canadians out from under the burden of the previous fiscal mismanagement, will be introduced.

It is mind-boggling, to say the least, when one considers that 31 cents of every dollar of government revenue go toward annual interest payments. Money is being borrowed solely to pay interest on the debt of the past. How can any Government pursue effective programs for the well-being of its citizens with such an oppressive weight upon it? It is my conviction and the conviction of this Government that this burden must be lifted. It will be lifted.

The Government further demonstrates its commitment to ensuring a better Canada for its young people through its acknowledgement of the necessity of addressing our environmental problems. We are spoiled here in Canada in that we enjoy a nation diverse in the character of its regions: the warm beauty of the western coast, the stark challenge of the Rockies, the rolling prairies, the sprawling urban centres in Ontario and Quebec and the historic surroundings of Atlantic Canada. These are precious features of our country, a proud legacy which we must protect for future generations.

This Government has illustrated its resolution to safeguarding Canada's environment and has committed itself to policies which reflect the concept of sustainable development, an exciting proposal in which economic policies are not removed from their environmental impact. This Government's endorsement of sustainable development demonstrates a commitment to pursue policies which do not treat economics and the environment as independent of each other.

The creation of the National Round Table on the Environment and the Economy as well as initiatives mentioned in the Throne Speech, such as the intention to limit the impact of toxic chemicals through regulations in the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, the creation of a centre for the international promotion of sustainable development to be located in Winnipeg, the promotion of environmentally friendly products and others are policies which the citizens of Edmonton—Strathcona and indeed all of Canada encourage and support. They are important for today and important for tomorrow as well.

Canada's future, for that is what we have been discussing this past week, will be shaped through our ability to adjust and compete in the technologies of tomorrow. It will be shaped through our ability to reduce and manage our deficit. It will be shaped too by our ability to accept responsibility for the damage being done to the environment and to reverse the frightening trends of today.

Canada's future will be shaped as well by our ability to face the challenges of constitutional change. The Meech Lake Accord has provided Canadians with the opportunity to strengthen our Constitution and to reinforce national unity. For the people of Edmonton—Strathcona, our Government's commitment to this purpose brings Senate reform that much closer to its realization.

Our Government has supported western Canada and has done much to alleviate western feelings of alienation. It was our Government that ended the National Energy Program, a Liberal program which crippled the western economy. It was our Government which eliminated the PGRT, a tax that devastated the oil sector in the West. It was our Government which put an end to discriminatory freight rates which favoured central Canada. Our Government has provided the avenue for the meaningful Senate reform the West has been seeking.

Last December, I rose in this House to express my wholehearted support for the Triple-E concept of reform of the Senate. I reaffirm today my commitment to that proposal and encourage those who are working, as I am, for a Senate which is elected, equal and effective. Only through election can the Senate have the mandate to act in the manner originally defined for it. Only through equal representation can the Senate ensure that the concerns of each province are heard. Only through redefining the powers of the Senate can it be made effective in its intended role.

The Speech from the Throne has made clear the commitment this Government has to improving Canada's ability to hold its own in a world grown more competitive in its nature. There are many challenges ahead that this Government is dedicated to meeting, challenges which this Government must address to ensure a prosperous future for all of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Pronovost: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, who is a newcomer to the House like myself and many other Members, took a very broad view and referred to all the regions in this country, something I appreciated very much. He spoke to environmental issues among other things. I am referring to the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Thorkelson), one of the youngest Members in this House.

I would like to ask him the following question. He made a reference to the Meech Lake Accord. Considering the political climate in this country when the Liberals were in power, when we had almost total confrontation between the federal Government and the provinces, how does he see a re-elected Conservative Government as being instrumental in making Canada the united country it was before Liberal attempts to achieve the opposite?

[English]

Mr. Thorkelson: I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question. I agree that before the Meech Lake Accord was arrived at, there was much dissension and conflict within our federal system. The people in western Canada for the most part support the Meech Lake Accord because it helps Canadians shape their own destiny. It helps communities achieve their own aspirations and goals.

The Meech Lake Accord puts Senate reform at the top of the constitutional agenda, which is very important to western Canada. Premiers, by submitting lists of names to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), have an input into an important institution. In Alberta, Premier Getty has indicated he will hold an election to help him put together a list for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I support this. The people of Alberta support this. I believe we will have our first election for a senator next fall during the civic elections. I encourage the Premier of Alberta to go forward with a plan to elect a nominee and submit a list with that nominee, the second runner-up and the third runner-up, to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Harb: I want to congratulate the new Member on his speech. We have much in common. We are both interested in research and development. I appreciate it when the Hon. Member says we should be working together in order to improve in this area. The idea of a task force in Edmonton is a great one, and I hope the Government will get the signal from what is happening in Edmonton and start task forces all across the nation. I believe many of the solutions are in the hands of the communities. The communities know what needs to be done. They need tools provided by the Government. They need incentives and assistance programs.

I was involved with the research and development industry for a number of years. We have companies we can be proud of, Northern Telecom and others. This industry is penetrating the Japanese market like never before. It is prospering in the North American and European markets. Assistance in that field would be appreciated. The Hon. Member through his caucus and committee work should push the Government to invest more in research and development.

I am in total agreement with the Hon. Member that we have to save VIA Rail. We must work collectively to save VIA Rail. It is a reflection of what Canada is all about. It is the link that connects the east and west. It is a symbol of Canadian unity. It is a part of Canadian heritage.

My question to the Hon. Member is, how will you pressure the Government to save VIA Rail?

Mr. Thorkelson: I have indicated my support for VIA Rail. It was the railway that built the west. It continues to play a very important role in western Canada, moving goods in and out of western Canada.

The Edmonton-Jasper-Vancouver run is very important. Many Japanese tourists come into Edmonton. They take the train overnight through the Rockies. VIA Rail is very important to tourism.

I have discussed my support for VIA Rail with my caucus colleagues and discussions are ongoing. However, we must wait and analyse the global impact of other programs. We must be efficient.

With respect to science and technology, I thank you for your comments. I will direct them to our caucus. Our caucus has been supportive and pro-active in putting together a task force. We hope we can come to a consensus of where we should specialize in science and technology in Edmonton. In Alberta we have a resource base. We want to add knowledge and value to that. We need to examine the whole question. When we do that, I will report the findings of this task force to the House.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): The Hon. Member mentioned the matter of deficit reduction. One of the banner programs the Government is contemplating is the imposition of a new national super sales tax estimated to generate between $8 billion and $10 billion in new revenue each year. That is approximately $1,000 a year for the average Canadian family.

The National Council on Welfare has informed us that for a family earning $100,000 a year, the sales taxes currently in place in Canada will gobble up approximately 4 per cent of that family's annual income. If they are earning $40,000 a year, sales taxes will take better than 6 per cent of their income. If they are struggling and trying to manage on $10,000 a year, that family will pay approximately 11.5 per cent of its income in sales taxes.

The Conservative Government of the Province of Alberta is implacably opposed to the imposition of this new national sales tax, as has been stated by Premier Getty, Alberta's Treasurer, Mr. Johnston, and by the New Democratic Party in Alberta. I will not pretend to speak for the Liberal Party in Alberta. They seem to have trouble determining that themselves.

• (1630)

Given all of this, given the nearly unanimous opposition to the creation of an at-the-till sales tax in Alberta for the first time, will the Hon. Member oppose the tax in this House?

Mr. Thorkelson: I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his five-minute question on the sales tax issue. The Hon. Member should know that when the sales tax, business transfer tax or value added tax is finally implemented, the 3 per cent surcharge on our taxes will come off. There will be tax credits for low-income Canadians.

One of the issues in this proposed national sales tax program is that we have a patchwork across the nation of different goods; some are taxed and some are not. It will be a lower rate, more broadly applied. In Alberta there is an awful lot of capital investment in the oil industry, in manufacturing and in other industries, that are taxed at a high rate. The rate will be lower. There will greater economic growth.

No, I am not opposed to the imposition of a business transfer tax, or a value added tax, or a new equitable and fairer sales tax.

Miss Deborah Gray (Beaver River): Mr. Speaker, as a new Member speaking for the first time in the House of Commons, I wish to congratulate and thank those who make this institution what it is.

I wish to congratulate the Speaker on his re-election as Speaker of the House, and sincerely thank him and the House staff for all the help and assistance they provide to new Members.

I wish to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and each Member of the Government on their re-election and, as a western Canadian, thank them for their willingness to pursue the free trade initiative.

I also wish to congratulate the leaders and Members of the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party on their re-election.

In particular, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Young), and the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey), for introducing me to the House on Monday, April 3.

I would also like to extend my condolences to the family and friends of Beaver River's original Member-elect, Mr. John Dahmer, whose untimely death necessitated the by-election in our riding.

I am especially pleased to note that the word "reform" is creeping into the Government's vocabulary, and appears at least four times in the Speech from the Throne in reference to tax reform, reform of Canada's legal system, parliamentary reform, and reform of the electoral process.

The word "reform" means constructive change and represents a long and honourable tradition in Canadian politics from coast to coast.

It was the reform parties and reformers of Upper and Lower Canada and Atlantic Canada who secured representative and responsible Government for the Canadian colonies, and thus laid the foundation for Confederation.

In the West there have been five major reform movements since 1870: Riel and the Métis, Haultain and the Independents, the Progressive Party, and the Depression Parties of Social Credit and the CCF. Each of these played a distinctive role in advancing western economic, social, and constitutional interests within Confederation.

As the first elected Member of the new Reform Party of Canada, I hope to build upon this great tradition and bring a fresh and positive perspective to the deliberations of the House and the analysis of the Government's Speech from the Throne.

Most importantly, I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate and thank the people of Beaver River for their willingness to be political pioneers.

Beaver River is a new federal riding in Alberta stretching from just east of Edmonton all the way to the Saskatchewan border. It encompasses an area of approximately 28,000 square kilometres inhabited by approximately 72,000 people.

Its three most basic industries are agriculture, energy and forestry. Our towns and businesses provide goods and services to these industries and the people employed by them. We also service a growing tourist trade attracted by our numerous and beautiful northern lakes.

Communities of Beaver River include Namao and Cold Lake, each the site of a major armed services base. Beaver River includes farming communities of Gibbons, Smoky Lake, Warspite, Thorhild and Waskatenau, many of them established and settled by pioneers of Ukrainian origin.

Beaver River includes the town and oil fields of Redwater, the site of a major oil strike in Alberta after Leduc. It includes the towns of Grand Centre, Bonnyville, and Elk Point in the heart of Alberta's heavy oil country.

Beaver River is the home of seven major Indian reserves and four Métis colonies. It includes the towns of Lac la Biche, soon to be the site of a new pulp mill, and St. Paul, one of the oldest francophone communities in Alberta.

I am pleased to report that grassroots democracy is alive and well in Beaver River. Our people, in the recent by-election, seriously considered and expressed themselves on several of the major items contained in the Speech from the Throne, items which ought to have become major issues in the general election, but unfortunately did not because of the preoccupation with free trade.

Rightly or wrongly, many of our people believe that the legislative programs of the federal Government are too centralized in their orientation, focused on managing Toronto's economic boom and meeting Quebec's constitutional demands, to the neglect of the needs and interests of the more thinly populated resource producing areas of the country.

Rightly or wrongly, many of our people believe that the processes whereby the federal Government makes policy and decisions are executive processes dominated by that arm of the Government and beyond the reach or involvement of the common people.

For example, our people feel utterly powerless to influence the high interest rate policy of the Bank of Canada, or the imposition of a national sales tax, despite the fact that our businesses, home-owners, and taxpayers simply cannot afford to pay more interest and more taxes.

Our people are not unsympathetic to constitutional amendments to make Quebec more at home in Confederation, but they want concurrent constitutional amendments, namely, meaningful Senate reform to make the West feel more at home in Confederation.

In the past generation, Mr. Speaker, it is the West which has experienced the National Energy Program and the CF-18 decision, not Quebec. It is the West's grievances which the Government should be addressing with at least as much fervour as it brings to Quebec's demands.

In its present form, the Meech Lake Accord thus fails completely to win the support of the people of the West, and the executive dominated process under which the Meech Lake Accord was developed is even more unattractive to our people than its contents.

To us, Meech Lake is not an example of democratic constitution building, but executive federalism run amok. Professor Schwartz of the University of Manitoba says Canada is moving towards government "of the government, by the government, and for the government". The Beaver River, I must report, Mr. Speaker, is not a tributary of Meech Lake. Its waters come from different sources and flow in a different direction.

I will be distributing summaries of the Government's Throne Speech and Budget Speech throughout Beaver River. I will be holding meetings in all our major communities to discuss these important documents. I shall then undertake to report back to the House, not necessarily what I think, not simply what my Party thinks, but what the people of Beaver River think about the Government's legislative program and budgetary measures.

The people of Beaver River are not as partisan as those of us here. They will not denounce the Government's legislative program as the embodiment of all evil and perversity, as some Hon. Members have done. Nor will they eulogize the Government's program as the embodiment of all virtue and wisdom, as other Hon. Members have done.

They will be more objective. They will ask and expect answers to simple, blunt, common-sense questions concerning each of the Government's legislative and budgetary proposals.

They will ask: Is it necessary? Is it fair? Who gets help and who gets hurt? Is it practical? What does it cost? Can we afford it?

I know my fellow citizens of Beaver River well enough that I can anticipate at least some of their reactions to the contents of the Speech from the Throne. For example, they will welcome the Government's commitment to environmental conservation, though they will wonder how it will work in practice.

They will welcome the Government's commitment to a strong economy and deficit reduction, but they will be looking for signs of real cost-cutting at the top, and in the thick layer of middle management that characterizes so many Government programs, before they will be willing to make sacrifices at their level.

They will frown as they read the words that the new federal sales tax is to be "fair and equitable", and they will not believe such words. Our people, you see, Mr. Speaker, were told that the National Energy Program, followed by two years of the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax, were to be fair and equitable, programs and taxes which crippled the economy of Beaver River.

They will laugh, especially the Indian people, when they read that the Government believes "extending its programs to assist native economic development" will enable native people to "participate fully in Canada's economic development projects". The current programs, they say, simply do not work.

Lastly, the people of Beaver River will ask about the gaps in the Speech from the Throne. For example, they will wonder why there is no clear directive from the Government to the Bank of Canada concerning interest rates which are working immense hardship among small businesses and home-owners in the regions of the country where the economy is certainly not over-heated, and has not been for a long time.

• (1640)

They will also ask why the Government does not feel, in response to the demands of western Canadians, the same sense of urgency to pursue meaningful Senate reform as it feels in pursuing Meech Lake in response to the demands of Quebec. They will ask why the Government insists on subordinating Senate reform to the Meech Lake Accord.

I would ask the Government and the Members of this House to regard the concerns of the people of Beaver River as they would those of their own constituencies. The people of Beaver River are uneasy patriots, and look forward to the day when they become truly fair and equitable partners in confederation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to start off by congratulating our hon. colleague, the Member for Beaver River (Miss Grey), both in her speech and, of course, on her election. The Hon. Member is the most recent Member to be elected to the House of Commons. I think I speak on behalf of all Members when I offer the Hon. Member our congratulations.

The Hon. Member speaks of the executive type of federalism that we have, which I believe was the expression used in her speech. She was obviously speaking of the ever-increasing power of the Cabinet over the other institutions of our country, namely, Parliament. I wonder if the Member has yet had an opportunity to acquaint herself with the fact that, contrary to tradition, the Government usually requests in the Throne Speech that Parliament grant Supply. In other words, from time to time Parliament gives the Government money in order to operate. This Throne Speech does not include those key words, which are not only very traditional and historic, but are part of the conventions of how we operate as a Parliament.

Second, I want to bring the following proposition to the Member. The Government had an obligation to bring in Estimates, and to obtain Supply from Parliament last winter. In other words, to obtain funds in order to operate. Instead of doing that, the Government chose to prorogue Parliament in order not to have to go through the series of Supply days, or opposition days, as we commonly refer to them here. Instead, they prorogued Parliament and did not return until now. They went to see the Governor General in order to get an executive warrant to obtain funds in order to continue the operations of Government, rather than to ask this Parliament, the way we are supposed to do it under our conventions.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is what Premier Getty did in Alberta, too.

Mr. Boudria: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) expresses the fact that that is what the Leader of the Government in Alberta had done as well.

I want to ask our new colleague if she does not agree with me that it is time we gave back to Parliament not only new powers, as some people are talking about, but at least restore the powers to Parliament that it has traditionally had in our country. I thought these powers still existed until I came to the sad realization only a few short days ago in this House that this Government, during the last recess, had made many of the powers we formerly had disappear by that one request for Supply to the Governor General, instead of seeking that consent from Parliament.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Beaver River.

Miss Grey: I think what we are talking about is what should the federal Government be doing in terms of executive federalism. I do not want to comment on the whole idea of Supply. Obviously, I am not going to be arrogant enough to assume that I know everything that goes on in the House. What I will say is I think the triangle of true democracy has been inverted, whereby when we are looking in the social studies textbooks at elected representatives going to Ottawa with their constituents' concerns, unfortunately that triangle has become inverted. We believe very strongly in direct representation by the people. What we have seen is that triangle upside down, with Government sending their representatives back to their home constituencies with Ottawa's words for them. That triangle is inverted.

Mr. Dorin: I would like to welcome the newest Member to the House, congratulate her on being elected and on her speech. In her speech the Hon. Member talked about a number of items that were either in or not in the Throne Speech and made some comments. Yesterday we had an announcement detailing one of the items that was in the Throne Speech, and that was the overhaul of the unemployment insurance program. Details were provided on that yesterday and I would like to ask the Member for Beaver River what the Hon. Member thinks about the proposals with regard to amendments to the unemployment insurance program.

Miss Grey: I do not recall seeing the details of that in the Throne Speech.

An Hon. Member: It wasn't there.

Miss Grey: I think the people of Alberta, and the people of Canada are concerned about the Government reducing the debt. This debt has skyrocketed in the last four years, and the people in the west, as you know, are very disgruntled about that. If in fact the unemployment insurance rethinking, restructuring, will help the people and in turn do something about this staggering debt, then yes, I think it is good. I am a little disturbed about the cloudiness of the money and where it will come from and what will happen. If you discuss it with your constituents you will get a very clear idea of what they think you should be saying to this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Elk Island (Mr. O'Kurley) on a short question and comment.

Mr. O'Kurley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to offer my congratulations to the new Member for Beaver River. The Member speaks about the deficit and the problem of controlling spending. The Member also suggested that one of the areas of concern is middle management. My question to the Member is this: What percentage of government spending goes into what you call middle management? What specific Departments would you recommend or suggest for cutting spending in these areas?

Miss Grey: Your point is well taken. I do not have figures in terms of exactly how many dollars are allocated to that. What we are concerned about is a symbolic gesture from the top which would say that we in the higher ranking echelons are willing to tighten our belts and make some personal sacrifices, thereby sending a signal to the man on the street. I have to speak personally and say that at 36 years of age I do not know that at age 42 I should be entitled to a fully indexed pension. If I choose not to get re-elected after that, or do not get re-elected, that is my prerogative. I could probably go back quite comfortably into the workforce.

Specifically, the Nielsen task force came up with 200 recommendations as to what could be done in terms of cutting out this thick layer at the top. There is a symbolic gesture. There is a real gesture, and there is a sense of taking advantage of the recommendations made by the Nielsen task force, many of which the Government has not acted on.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Member for Beaver River (Miss Grey) on her excellent debut in the House of Commons, and excellent speech. We can all understand why she got elected. The Hon. Member made a very forthright presentation here. The Member talks about an inverted triangle, not a Palliser Triangle. The Member is talking about the inverted triangle of government. Does she think that contributing to that inverted triangle, as far as she is concerned, is an over heavy cabinet structure with 39 or 40 members, the largest cabinet structure in Canadian history? Does she think the country would do well to eliminate about half those people opposite?

• (1650)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Grey: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the spirit with which the Right Hon. Member asked that.

Mr. McDermid: Tell him about the National Energy Program.

Miss Grey: I think the important thing here is how efficient is the Government. If the Cabinet had been getting larger and larger and the debt had been getting smaller and smaller, I would have said: Hear, hear! I have not seen that happen, unfortunately.

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by defending the Conservative Government from an unjust criticism made of it. Critics of the Government have claimed in the past that the Government has no philosophy and no ideas, that it is driven solely by polls and that it has no vision of the country. This was finally disproved by the Speech from the Throne brought before the House on April 3. The Government has a well-defined philosophy, a neo-Conservative agenda that it is determined to force down the throats of every Canadian. No longer can it be said that the Government has a hidden agenda. The soft words of the Throne Speech barely cover the iron fist of the Conservative Government.

The Prime Minister's unctuous words cannot disguise the threats to ordinary Canadians promised by his Government. No longer will the economically disadvantaged be protected. No longer will a democratic government defend the sick, the unemployed, the poor, our first nations and our farmers. Instead, all will be subject to the iron discipline of the market-place where the strong survive and the losers are cast off.

No disadvantaged, no hard-pressed group of Canadians is safe from attack by this Government. We have seen that with the unemployed. We have seen it with Indian post-secondary students. Yet privileged groups, big business, the most well-off are safe. Billions in corporate deferred taxes are left alone. Some 60,000 Canadians who pay no tax are left alone. The rich who do not pay their fair share of taxes are not shouldering their fair burden of the deficit problem on which the Government is concentrating. Let us look at the Speech from the Throne and ask what the Government is saying and compare it with what the Government is doing.

For example, the Throne Speech indicates that the Government is convinced that the Canadian people will endorse its efforts to control federal spending in order to maintain economic stability and continued growth. Even if this is true, what does it say about the way the Government is going about it? In terms of the unemployment insurance changes, if yesterday is any indication the Canadian people disagree fundamentally. The rich and the powerful, such as the corporations, like the changes, but that is all. Ordinary folk, those who may need UIC after losing their jobs to free trade, global reorganization or whatever, do not like it. Neither do the three million people who used UIC last year, even though the majority of them used it through no fault of their own.

The Speech from the Throne carries on by stating that the Government believes fundamentally in those social benefits which support the family and the elderly while recognizing the need to direct more assistance toward those with low incomes. Yet through tax policy to date and the proposed national sales tax the Government continues to grab money from low-income Canadians. Through assistance cuts to the provinces the Government has reduced health services and social services available to them. On the one hand the Government talks about caring for Canadians while on the other hand it makes life more difficult for them.

The deficit is important. But there are many ways of dealing with it without attacking the less well-off. We should not forget that the Government has contributed over 50 per cent to the total deficit since 1984. Even though I am sure the Government is aware of other alternatives to cut the deficit, it continues to do so on the backs of less well-off Canadians and continues to ignore alternative suggestions which would be more fair and more appropriate.

I have three suggestions to make in this regard. We could deal with the interest rate. The Bank of Canada rate has risen from a low of 7.14 per cent in March of 1987 to over 12 per cent today. We all know that a 1 per cent reduction in interest rates reduces payments on the deficit by $1.5 billion. A slight easing of interest rates, maybe 1 per cent or 2 per cent, would help us avoid some of these problems. It would help us avoid a serious economic downturn which is a serious possibility in the regions of Canada. It would also assist in limiting the growth of the deficit. So there is room in interest rate policy to address the deficit.

Similarly, with regard to job creation and economic initiatives, austerity on the fiscal side has tended at least in the regions to choke economic growth. Anybody who wants to question that should spend some time in the regions. The Government seems to view as acceptable an unemployment rate of between 7.5 per cent and 8 per cent—over one million Canadians without work. Given that each 1 per cent drop in the jobless rate produces $2 billion in net federal revenues, action on this front is itself a deficit reduction strategy.

The Government has a responsibility to introduce effective policies and programs to generate high quality jobs, high paying jobs—not part-time jobs and not jobs in the service sector at minimum wage—particularly in Canada's regions. Investments and upgrading municipal infrastructure, environmental protection, single-industry town diversification and research and development, for example, would not only create jobs but guarantee future income source.

What about the taxation system, a system which is becoming increasingly unfair? It is not one which is becoming more fair. In 1986, for example, the Auditor General estimated that the total annual value of personal and corporate tax breaks in the country was $28 billion. The Government could immediately move to limit or eliminate some corporate and personal tax breaks, contributing to the reduction of the deficit as well as to increasing public confidence in the tax system. We all know about corporate taxes, about profitable corporations paying no tax. We all know about rich Canadians who pay no tax. We all know that 1 per cent of the richest taxpayers in the country have had their taxes cut by the Government since 1984, while those less well-off have had to increase their tax burden. That is not a fair tax system. We could increase the fairness of the tax system and contribute to reduction of the deficit.

The Neilsen Task Force, as another Hon. Member pointed out, suggested that if we open Government procurement to more tendering we could save between a quarter and half a billion dollars a year.

Last, we might look at defence spending which has increased by over one-third in the four years since this Government took office in 1984, making defence one of the fastest growing areas of federal Government expenditure.

We do not need to attack the deficit by attacking those less well-off in society. We can find other ways. We can find other more fair ways.

From the beginning, the CCF and the NDP have articulated and put into practice the slogan, "people before profits". In doing so in my province, the Province of Saskatchewan, we have managed the government of the province in a way which has benefited people first and taken people first as an important agenda item. Government is about choices. Governments can put people first, or they might not. This Government has chosen not to. Saskatchewan, under the New Democratic Government, up until 1982 had lower taxes than it has now, higher social benefits and a balanced budget. Since the Progressive Conservative Government came to office, taxes have increased, social benefits have been reduced and a deficit has been created.

It is not necessary to take out the Government's deficit reduction program on the backs of less well-off Canadians. There is a more fair and appropriate way to do it. The Government has chosen not to put people first. We need only look at the United States and the United Kingdom to see the price paid by ordinary people there, governments to which this Government pays so much attention. We can see it at work in Canada, too. The gap between the rich and the poor is getting larger. Four million Canadians live at or below the poverty line, and children in large numbers go to bed hungry. This Government must not close its eyes to this situation. Rhetoric on the part of the Government is not enough. Governments have an obligation and a duty to address the concerns of those less well off in society, and Canadians who are less well off have a right to have their concerns addressed. Instead, this Government does what the privileged, the wealthy, and the corporate establishment wants. It responds to their concerns, not to the concerns of ordinary Canadians. The Throne Speech makes that quite clear.

This Government has reneged on its pre-election statements and has reneged on its obligations to less well off Canadians. Cut-backs in health and post-secondary education funding to the provinces will take place in the Budget of April 27. This is not only short-sighted, but it poses difficulties and is painful to those less well off Canadians who cannot afford health care and education on their own.

Canadians are our most important resource, and to reduce contributions to the provinces which will reduce expenditures in our health and post-secondary education systems is folly at best. Indeed, this Government's policy on these matters fails even within its own sense of priority in economic terms. An investment in the future in healthy and well educated Canadians can only bring returns.

The people of Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing defeated a senior and well respected cabinet Minister of the previous Government. He was not defeated because he was a bad MP. He was defeated because the policies of his Party did not represent what the people of Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing thought were important. They did not represent a people first ideology.

The people of Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing voted against free trade. They were worried that the deal would result in fewer jobs in Canada. They were mocked by the Prime Minister and told that they did not understand what was happening. They were worried about threats to social programs and about the system of supply management which protects Saskatchewan farm families. The Prime Minister promised that all these would be untouched. Yet in the last few weeks, indeed yesterday, we have seen major attacks on social programs and on the Wheat Board. We have seen many job losses over the last short while. The Government says one thing and it does another.

In addition, we have seen a great disappointment with the Throne Speech among not only Saskatchewan farm families but other Canadian farm families too. As the amendment of the Official Opposition indicates, totally inadequate consideration was given to the problems of agriculture in this country.

In 1985 the Minister of Agriculture, after an ad hoc drought program that year which seemed not to be satisfactory, promised a permanent program in the future so that farmers would know where they stood financially. Yet we still have not seen it.

In the last election, the New Democratic Party's family farm protection policy put forward a strategy which could ensure that farmers would know where they stood from year to year and would know, when they planted their crop, what they could expect to receive from it. We argued strongly for strengthening farm marketing boards and supply management, for fairer alternatives to farm debt and for more tax fairness for farmers. We encouraged farm soil and water conservation policies. We argued to reduce the input costs experienced by farmers, and we argued for better commodity handling and transportation.

The Throne Speech makes no mention of addressing these problems, and I would like to move an amendment to the amendment which is presently on the floor, seconded by the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Burnaby (Ms. Black). It adds two items to the amendment and reads as follows:

> (7) by yet again ignoring the need for permanent crop disaster program as promised in December of 1985; and
> (8) by ignoring the needs of rural communities for basic income security and the refusal to provide a Family Farm Stabilization Program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the amendment to the amendment and finds it to be in order.

There will be a five-minute question and comment period.

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment. As I was listening to the Hon. Member across the way stating that the Conservative Government had created a national debt, I would just like to make it clear on the record that in 1984 the previous Government left us with an annual deficit of some $38 billion. I do believe that it does not take a rocket scientist to realize that in the operation of the administration of this country that two factors come into play. One is our cumulative national deficit and our annual national debt.

In 1984, if my memory serves me correctly, I believe the national debt was approximately $190 billion, with an annual deficit in 1983-84 of some $38 billion. I would assume that if the Opposition had stayed in power our annual deficit would have sky-rocketed to more than $38 billion.

If we add four years times $40 billion, being very conservative to the Opposition, we arrive without servicing our cumulative debt at over $350 billion. If my memory serves me right, in 1985 the Opposition, after the economic statement of our great Minister of Finance, predicted that there would be in excess of over 200,000 jobs.

We know that just the opposite is true. There have been over a million jobs created by this Government in four short years. I would like to impress upon the Official Opposition and the NDP that the Conservatives did not create our national debt. If the Official Opposition had stayed in power, we would not be going into the year 2000; we would be running away from it.

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the questioner is not a rocket scientist. The point I wanted to make, and the point that is simply not admitted to by the Government, is that more than half of the accumulated deficit has been accumulated in its years of power.

An Hon. Member: Bad management.

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): It is not a matter that can be generally ignored. It is true that over the last number of years we have seen a reduction in the deficit, but let us ask on whose backs that reduction has come. We have seen tax increases on less well off Canadians. That cannot be denied. They have been taken advantage of in this deficit reduction process. There is no doubt about that.

What I have been trying to argue for, and what the Opposition and the New Democratic Party have continually argued for, is that if we are going to attack this deficit let us at least do it fairly. Let us be sure that corporations pay their fair share of taxes. Let us at least make sure that those 60,000 Canadians who do not pay any taxes pay their fair share.

Surely we cannot accept as a proper way of taxing Canadians that we tax those whose total income for the year is below the poverty line. The poverty line for a single person living in a Canadian city is around $11,000. We start taxing those people at $6,000, while we let Canadians earning over $50,000 pay no tax at all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

• (1710)

[Translation]

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate ont the Speech from the Throne, and I will certainly have a few things to say to the dreamers who were telling us how to reduce the deficit.

After listening to speeches by several Members of the Opposition, our socialist dreamers and our Liberal friends, I think that at this stage, Mr. Speaker, we should remember that by re-electing our Government on November 21, Canadian voters indicated that they agreed with the way we as a Government had managed Canada during the previous four years. They were satisfied with our responsible approach to the economy and to how that economy should be managed, and I think they were also pleased with steps taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), by the Government and the House of Commons regarding our plans for national reconciliation.

By re-electing our Gouvernment on November 21, Canadians expressed their approval of the plans for the future proposed by the Prime Minister and the Government, plans based on a continuum that will lead to a stronger economy, a more caring society and a more united Canada. This vision of the future, Mr. Speaker, was based on the conviction held by Members of our Party that Canadians have the talent, energy and determination to face the future with confidence, confident in our identity as Canadians, our values and our culture.

As for the Opposition Parties, we all know what they promised Canadian voters! What the Liberal Party had to offer and it did have something to offer—was fear, withdrawal, and a desire to go back to times long since past. Canadians simply said no to all that. Canadians said no, and despite the fact that the Liberals perpetreated acts of intellectual terrorism across the country, despite the fact that they again wanted to tell Canadians the country did not have what it takes to face the future, Canadians said: No thanks. Canadians are people who have confidence in their own capabilities, but the Leader of the Liberal Party still rises in the House to say that Canadians made a mistake. He will not respect the will of the people! I heard him say last week it was our friends in the business world, Mr. Speaker, who helped us win the election. For a gentleman who spent almost ten years on Bay Street, I think he is rather quick to repudiate his friends. Unless it was the other way round, and his friends repudiated him!

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, and this is something the Opposition refuses to admit, that since 1984, we have been the Government of all Canadians, and that is why we were re-elected on November 21.

We are now starting on our second mandate in the same spirit with which we approached our first, with a renewed desire to stimulate economic growth and regional development, and a constant concern for social justice and equal opportunities in our regions.

[English]

I have listened closely in the last few days to the statements made by opposition Members in this House. To hear them speak, it is as if the Speech from the Throne were only about reducing the deficit. That is all they take from the Speech from the Throne. However, anyone who cares to read it to see what the Government has proposed will know that it is a plan for the next four years for the benefit of Canadians from all regions of Canada.

These people prefer to ignore the fact that reducing the deficit is not an end in itself but is, rather, an essential condition for achieving our objectives. These objectives are laid out in the Speech from the Throne. If we have to talk about the deficit today, it is because of the army of Santa Clauses on the other side of the House from an earlier Government.

I have heard many complaints from the two Parties in the Opposition. They were sorry that there was not a long list of promises in the Speech from the Throne. We have not said we would be everything to everyone. Rather, we have placed before Canadians a plan and objectives for what I suspect all Canadians want to maintain, that is, to ensure that in the future our kids can also benefit from the rich country that Canada is.

We are a trading nation. We are an exporting nation. The opening up of new markets will bring exceptional opportunities, provided that our economy is competitive and flexible. We intend to take the necessary steps to ensure that our industries and businesses adapt rapidly to the new market conditions. For example, it is proposed in the Speech from the Throne that we will assist small and medium sized businesses that wish to enter new export markets.

In this more open economy assistance to business will also involve two key activities—technological development and human resources development. This means that literacy training, occupational retraining and education are the keys for a workforce that is better qualified for higher quality jobs. These are also the conditions needed to penetrate an increasingly competitive marketplace effectively.

I think these objectives mean spending public funds in a way that returns dividends to society as a whole. That is what I think Canadians expect of us.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, last fall we asked Canadians to say yes to an exciting challenge. We did so because we knew that our fellow citizens do not have cold feet. They have confidence. They have the talent to do better what others do well. What the Speech from the Throne offers them today is to provide this great plan of freer trade, not only with the United States but also with other countries in the world, with the best chance of success. At the same time, the Government will continue to fight regional disparities.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Speech from the Throne announces that funding will be maintained for economic development agencies such as ACOA in Atlantic Canada, FEDNOR in northern Ontario and the Western Economic Diversification Office.

We will also continue to help those in greatest need: our seniors, our low income people, our youth, and especially those who are victims of family violence.

[English]

Building a prosperous economy, maintaining our social programs and developing our regions in a harmonious way must be accompanied by a strengthening of Canadian unity.

Nearly two years ago, the Prime Minister of Canada and the 10 provincial Premiers signed an historic agreement, an agreement which returned Québec to the constitutional fold, which recognized its status as a distinct society within Canada and which committed the country's leaders to protecting Canada's linguistic minorities.

As a Canadian and as an Acadian from New Brunswick, I am delighted by the signing of the Meech Lake Accord. For reasons of their own the Premiers of Manitoba and New Brunswick have not felt themselves bound by the commitment of their predecessors. As a citizen of New Brunswick and a Francophone from that province, I regret the hesitation of provincial authorities in ratifying the Accord. No one on this side of the House has ever claimed that the Meech Lake Accord is perfect. We are saying that it is an essential basis on which Canadians will build their constitutional future.

• (1720)

In a brief that I presented to the special committee of the Legislative Assembly of New Brunswick, I said: "There is not one provision in this Accord which can put in jeopardy the rights of, or cause a backward step for, any group whether it be linguistic minority, women or native".

The Meech Lake Accord is a monument of balance and realism accomplished at the price of long and hard negotiation. It would be irresponsible to jeopardize it by opening new negotiations. If we took this route, we would be opening Pandora's box and heading for a new constitutional crisis that could drag on for a very long time. As Canadians concerned for the unity of our country, we cannot allow this to happen.

New Brunswick has always played an active role in the constitutional development of Canada. Two great Premiers, Messrs. Robichaud and Hatfield, have been leaders in promoting both official languages and the equality of their communities. In ratifying the Meech Lake Accord, Premier McKenna would be joining this great tradition of fairness and generosity in New Brunswick. He would be fulfilling the wishes of Acadians and Francophones in his Province of New Brunswick. After the passage of Bill C–72 last year, the language communities would have available, with Meech, another instrument to serve their rights.

[Translation]

Of course, the Accord is not a constitutional panacea. The Government admits this in the Speech from the Throne by promising, once the Accord is ratified, to proceed with negotiations on Senate reform, aboriginal rights, fisheries roles and responsibilities and the language issue.

This is much more than politics, Mr. Speaker. It is the very future of the country, its balance, its ability to respond to changes, to meet requirements of flexibility and modernity.

The Canada of the Meech Lake Accord corresponds to reality and is not just a mental concept. It is made up of different people united by a common attachment to their country and inspired by a common feeling of fairness, tolerance and sharing. This vision of Canada must be written into the country's Constitution as quickly as possible.

Another challenge faced by Canadans is the environment. I am deeply satisfied that in the Throne Speech this Government put forward a plan to ensure that we will leave our children and their children a healthy–environmental heritage. Steps are put forward in the Throne Speech to ensure that our environment is protected, not by lip service but rather by taking action, implementing programs. It is my belief Canadians will welcome that initiative taken by this Government.

Another item in the Throne Speech involves social programs. Of course when we are working at creating wealth, at meeting social needs, protecting the quality of life, this as I said earlier is something we are doing for the benefit of future generations, because they must not have to shoulder the burden of our neglect.

And this is what is involved also when we speak today of reducing the deficit and the national debt.

We were famous over these last four years, Mr. Speaker, for being the first Government in decades with a serious commitment to tackle the deficit. I remember hearing in this House the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of those dreamers the necktie socialists tell Canadians our budget reductions in 1984 were going to lose hundreds of thousands of jobs in Canada.

The result is that 1.4 million jobs were created during those four years. And again we will hear the same prophets of doom after the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has delivered his Budget speech. However Canadians have already seen the positive results of our sound financial administration.

Mr. Speaker, I see that you are about to interrupt me. It is unfortunate that time be so short, but I am sure the Budget speech will provide us with a number of opportunities to respond to those who dream about bringing the deficit down and would have Canadians believe that a mere 60 taxpayers is all we need to reduce the deficit by $30 billion!

[English]

Mr. Nunziata: I want to ask the Hon. Member about an important issue facing our country, one that was given only a cursory glance in the Throne Speech. It is a problem that is destroying the very fabric of our nation and our youth. It will continue to destroy many young people in Canada. The problem is that of drug abuse.

I have concerns regarding the priorities of this Government and how it intends to deal with this issue. It was important for the Government to hold a royal commission of inquiry into drug abuse in amateur sport. We are all concerned about that, but that problem pales in comparison to the real drug problem in Canada. I am sure there is a problem in the Minister's own riding when it comes to drug abuse.

We in Canada have been fortunate that the drug problem is not as bad as it is in the United States. I had a conversation with several crown attorneys last week. They expressed serious concerns about the crack problem in Canada. They indicated that in three to five years our drug problems will be comparable to those in the United States. We are all familiar with the problem of crack, a derivative of cocaine. It creates violence. The City of Washington in the United States now holds the record for the most number of drug related deaths.

I would like to ask the Minister what the Government intends to do about this serious problem. Will he recommend to his cabinet colleagues and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that there be a royal commission of inquiry into the drug abuse problem in Canada?

Will he urge his colleagues in Cabinet to give this problem the priority it deserves? In the Throne Speech a few days ago, this problem was not given the prominence it deserves. May I hear from the Minister?

Mr. Valcourt: But for the tone of the Hon. Member's question, I am tempted to recall—

An Hon. Member: Do it.

Mr. Valcourt: I will. A few years ago, the Prime Minister was in Vancouver talking about this exact problem.

An Hon. Member: All he does is talk.

Mr. Valcourt: No, no. There were people in the House that laughed at the drug problem. They said the Prime Minister was exaggerating. They were the very people who were criticizing the Government for the Prime Minister alerting Canadians to the problem of drug abuse among young Canadians. You were laughing in those days. Today the Hon. Member is suggesting to us that this is a new problem. It is not a new problem. It is a problem the Prime Minister and others in the House identified long ago.

An Hon. Member: He was jumping on Reagan's bandwagon.

Mr. Valcourt: There is a proposal in the Speech from the Throne. We know that this Government has allocated resources to fight drugs. The Prime Minister has a legitimate and personal concern about this issue. I think the Hon. Member can rest assured, if Members opposite want to work in co-operation with the Government, we will take every possible step to protect youths from this huge problem of drugs in Canada. Late conversions are better than none, and this is a welcome one.

[English]

Accordingly, the first question in on the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment to the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment, which was negatived on the following division:

BANK ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State for Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-9, an Act to amend the Bank Act.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a Bill that will provide for better disclosure of bank charges and that will improve the mechanism by which consumers can make known their complaints.

[English]

This Bill is the fulfilment of the commitment of the Government to reintroduce a bank service charge Bill which died on the Order Paper last year.

Whereas the old Bill only covered personal accounts, the scope of the new Bill is broadened to include business accounts. The new Bill also includes some technical changes.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PETITIONS

ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT REVIEW

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce a petition in the House pursuant to Standing Order 36. This petition falls out of the Rafferty-Alameda issue. The Government was brought kicking and screaming into this matter as a result of the court decision to carry out the appropriate environmental review of the matter. The petitioners are concerned about this unwillingness of the Government until forced by the courts. They are submitting this petition and humbly praying and calling upon Parliament to enact an environmental assessment review law requiring all initiatives under federal jurisdiction to receive open scrutiny and public comment. This law will establish strict criteria.

INCOME TAX SYSTEM

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to rise under Standing Order 36 to present a petition signed by several persons who are criticizing the Government for an unfair and complex income tax system. They call upon the Parliament of Canada to introduce a simpler and fairer tax system that establishes a better balance between corporate and personal taxes and restores indexation to the Child Tax Credit.

• (1110)

UTILIZATION OF PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present 17 petitions signed by more than 600 people on the use of the Port of Churchill. This is in addition to the four petitions that I tabled yesterday.

The people of the communities The Pas, Moose Lake, and South Indian Lake have expressed their concern with the lack of use of The Port of Churchill. In their opinion, they believe that the Port of Churchill could improve the economies of Canada's prairie provinces, and that there is is a need for the federal Government to develop the obvious potential of Canada's only inland seaport.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to direct the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board to ensure that, at the very least, 3 per cent of Canada's annual grain shipments be shipped through the Port of Churchill, and that the Government aggressively pursue additional ways to utilize this important seaport to ship exports other than grain.

NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES – ALTERNATE USE OF FUNDS

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition on behalf of the Senior Citizens Council of Saint-Laurent. As with several other petitions that I have had the pleasure of presenting to the House, the Senior Citizens Council of Saint-Laurent is requesting that the federal Government invest the $4 billion that was scheduled for nuclear powered submarines into research for AIDS, cancer, and cardiovascular illnesses.

I also have the same petition to present on behalf of the concerned parishioners of St.-Paul's Lutheran Church in Saint-Laurent.

OPPOSITION TO PURCHASE OF NUCLEAR SUBMARINES

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to you another petition from the Saint-Sixte Social Club in Saint-Laurent asking for the same thing, namely that Canadians' mental and physical health should be considered a priority for the federal Government and that health should take precedence over nuclear submarines.

LOCATION OF CANADIAN SPACE AGENCY

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from the high-tech industry workers in Saint-Laurent requesting that Parliament establish the Canadian Space Agency in the riding of Saint-Laurent because of the infrastructures which are already in place.

I have another petition with fairly close to 1,000 signatures from Bombardier Canadair—

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT SPACE AGENCY BE LOCATED IN SAINT-LAURENT

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to you another petition from Bombardier-Canadair asking the Government of Canada to take the necessary action to set up the Space Agency in the riding of Saint-Laurent, which has all the essential infrastructure to create a favourable environment so this agency can achieve optimal performance and world influence.

OPPOSITION TO PURCHASE OF NUCLEAR SUBMARINES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from the Conservative ridings of Lachine, Bourassa, Mercier, Verdun, Rosemont and Laval and from the beautiful riding of Laurier—Sainte-Marie. These men and women ask the Conservative Government to cancel the construction of two nuclear-powered submarines costing $2 billion each, or $4 billion in all, and to take this money and spend it on health, which is important for everyone, on research into cancer, cardiovascular diseases, AIDS, etc. and to give this money to hospitals so that they can buy equipment to heal the sick.

RESUMPTION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The House resumed from Wednesday, April 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Richardson for an address to Her Excellency the Governor General in reply to her Speech at the opening of the session.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, at the outset, I want to greatly acknowledge the support I received during the last election, and on an ongoing basis, from the members of the riding of Mount Royal. It is on their behalf that I rise to respond to the Speech from the Throne, and I hope I reflect—and I believe I do reflect—the majority views held in that riding.

Every Government makes a Throne Speech, and every Parliament debates it, but the fundamental aim of a Throne Speech is to present a Government's vision of the future. It is to present a Government's evaluation of where it is, where society is, and where it plans to go. Its vision, in other words, for Canada.

I would suggest that this Throne Speech is one the Government can ill afford to be proud of. It is one that looks at a very complex society in an international world that is becoming more and more complex and shrinking nonetheless in terms of international global action. This Government does not seem to be wakening up in the same country, with the same people and the same concerns as those people whom I know, and who are reflected through 57 per cent of the vote of this country.

Canadians are not impressed with this Throne Speech. It is a one-issue, deficit-cutting mind-set, market-force philosophy, and a very narrow-minded vision. The Government cannot and should not be proud of the message it is sending out. This is a Government that will cut wherever possible, and just as an assailant would, it indiscriminately cuts down anything that crosses its path. It is showing an inhumane face where it should have a human and warm response to the people of Canada.

Whether it is cutting benefits to the unemployed, failing to provide adequate resource services for the immigration system—and in my riding immigration is a very serious issue—whether it is ignoring the real needs of workers with respect to retraining and upgrading of skills in reading and in understanding new technologies, Canadians are wondering what type of cold, heartless, Tory Government they bought into in all blindness, I would suggest, in November.

When a family needs space for a quality child care facility, Canadians expect the Government to have solved that space problem, not only talk about it.

The Government talked about the environment, it did not indicate any direct action in one of the most crucial and important areas that affects each and every Canadian, regardless of the political spectrum in which they find themselves.

In general, I would suggest that the Throne Speech leaves many Canadians wondering whether Conservatives see many of the challenges that face real Canadians in real neighbourhoods which they deal with every day of the week. I suggest that the Government has no human face.

I am afraid that all we have in the Throne Speech is a lot of the same old tune, and perhaps a few new words with promises that have been recycled and which reflect the fact that the Government failed to act in its last mandate and we can expect very little from it in this one except cuts, cuts, cuts.

The Government agenda is not based on offering better services to the residents of my riding, or of any other riding. Instead, it wishes to disregard those needs. It wants to arbitrarily make cuts wherever it can, and in the view of the Government this is supposed to make it a better world for all Canadians.

While I may have very well-to-do and comfortable citizens on either end of my riding, the centre of my riding is soft. It is an extremely high unemployment area, and the type of proposals this Government puts forward will certainly not help those residents.

Does anyone expect Canadians to be impressed by the fact that it took the Tory Government five months, from November 21 to April 3, to supposedly study and consult about its new mandate. Then the Government had the nerve to deposit a Throne Speech that was one of empty rhetoric. We have vague promises, vague solutions, with a few surprises that had never been promised during the course of its campaign. If this is the best that the Conservatives can come up with in almost half a year of thinking, is there any hope left for the next four years?

Where have all the great promises gone? What happened to the promises of the best adjustment and retraining programs in the world? Well, one heard the new Atilla the Hun, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) tell us where she plans to go. If I was a marginal worker, the last in and the first out, the Minister does not give me much comfort or hope. The fact is that the Minister is in the process of enabling us to depopulate our regions by giving most of our regional people who want to retrain great opportunity and a plane ticket. Of course, there will not be any more railways. We will have to take the plane to go where? To the centre cities of our country. It is a disgrace and the Government should be ashamed of itself.

What about the assurances that no social programs would be cut? What does one call the unemployment insurance system? It was an insurance system that is part of the social fabric of this country which is being cut. This will touch tens of thousands of Canadians. Members opposite know that as well as I do. I am glad I am not going to be in their shoes when they return to their ridings and face their very angry constituents.

I would suggest now that the polls are closed, the ballots have been counted, the votes are all in, and Canadians cannot change their mind, the real Tory agenda is left out of the bag. This Government is not showing leadership, nor are Canadians impressed. I see Canadians returning to their old views of this Government before long. Once they settle into their old ways, the habit of putting out nice packaging on empty policies will once again erode the Government's favour.

The return to the old dark days of Tory Government is not far off because their Budget is coming. It is true we have had all kinds of leaks. It is rather unusual. I thought Don McGillivray handled it very well. His article about how our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was the advance man for his own Budget indicates his concern about how badly it is going to be received. He is trying a temporizing measure in order to soften the blow, telling Canadians: get ready, tighten your belt. Tighten it so tight you can hardly breathe, so that when I present the facts you will open up one notch and say, thank God, I did not drop dead. I am only half-way there.

The old saying was Tory days are dark days. Tory Government is tough Government. I can tell you, tough times are Tory times. I am glad to see all my colleagues happily smiling about the fact that Tory times are tough times. Other than the upper-income bracket, I wonder who else is going to enjoy that kind of approach.

In the Throne Speech there is a section called a caring nation. There is a section called national issues. I would like to talk about the language crisis. If this Government was not in hiding, if this Government had been present and taking leadership when issues of serious concern were facing this nation, perhaps we could have avoided many of the issues of concern.

With respect to the issue of language crisis, I put this point to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). When the Government of Québec told the province and the country of its plan to trample linguistic minority rights in the province, to ignore the Supreme Court of Canada's carefully crafted and thoughtful distinction as it described what could be a well-understood principle of the distinctiveness of Québec society, where was our Prime Minister?

Where was his voice? Where were the words other than soft rhetoric? The Prime Minister's rhetoric was harsh when it came to Alberta and Saskatchewan, but when it came to the English-speaking minority of Québec, where was he? I suggest that the destabilization of that community and that society is serious. I suggest that the Prime Minister's voice was absent at a very important time. When the Government of Québec trampled on linguistic rights and minority rights through Bill C-178, that was the moment that the Prime Minister, and no one else, should have acted, should have interceded, and should have challenged the Premier of Québec not to ignore the Charter of Rights, not to ignore the three courts including the Supreme Court, the Québec Court, not to ignore and let wither his own commitment to minority rights, and to ask for the withdrawal of this reprehensible piece of legislation.

Unfortunately for us that historic moment was lost. The Prime Minister did not prevail, nor did his views. I guess we really could not have expected otherwise from this Prime Minister because we now know the Prime Minister believes that the Constitution is not worth the paper it was written on. Therefore, what point was there in his standing up and speaking up for minority linguistic rights? If it was so important for him to amend and to look at Meech Lake, why was it so important if he did not believe in the Constitution in the first place?

The Prime Minister could have been forceful and effective as he was with Alberta and Saskatchewan. He could have redoubled his efforts to ensure that Québec respected freedom of expression, and have Québec accept the view that protecting and promoting the French language and culture did not require the sacrifice of minority rights, a view I fundamentally and completely believe in. Québec's French language needs promotion, protection, and an understanding heart and attitude by English-speaking minorities in Québec.

There are far more creative ways to approach that issue without trampling on English rights in that province, or French rights, for that matter, anywhere across this land. There should be a stamp of bilingual Canada from coast to coast. I have said that from the day I came into this House, from the day we started to look at broadcast and cultural issues. We must see to the stamp of a bilingual Canada, because two languages open the doors to two wonderful cultures, allow us to travel in this world and be better understood by all people. Three cultures and three languages would be better, or four or five, but certainly we should have the two which are the official languages of Canada and the social contract of this country. I acknowledge that the Prime Minister's statement in support of minority rights was made, but my point is, what good are mere words when they do not produce the absolute recognition of minority rights.

This week the Prime Minister refused a chance to really make his mark for minority rights by supporting the motion of my Leader, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), that would have obliged the federal Government never to use the notwithstanding clause of the Constitution to override fundamental freedoms of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Did he take that opportunity? No. As the Leader of the Opposition said, if the Prime Minister is really committed to minority language rights, this would be the way to at least show the direction. The lack of leadership is rather obvious. Once again the Prime Minister lost the moment, and only history will judge that loss.

I applaud this year's report of Mr. D'Iberville Fortier, our Official Languages Commissioner. I support his call for full federal leadership in the protection of minority rights. The anglophone experience remains a humbling one in Québec for the time being, but my hope is that this Government will in the remainder of its mandate ensure that its commitments to minority rights become more than just words by ensuring that minority rights are not trampled upon again by any Government, federal or provincial.

The second issue that I wanted to address relates to corporate concentration and take-overs, which is talking about Canada's future.

[Translation]

The lack of leadership is apparent from this Government's failure to provide any kind of vision for Canada. They are selling off our heritage. If they don't believe me, I suggest they read the paper we were sent by the F.T.Q. which urges us to stop this cultural and economic take-over.

I believe that the F.T.Q. and the Caisse de dépôt have expressed their concern and their disapproval of this Government's failure to act. In a word, our common heritage is going down the drain.

I will read what they wrote:

> that deregulation, privatization and free trade have precipitated an unprecendented wave of sales, mergers and restructuring;
> that plant crossings by Gillette in Ville St-Laurent, by Jarman Shoes in Lachine, Kruger in East Montreal, and shutdowns announced at Northern Telecom in Aylmer and Sanyo in ville St-Laurent, will result in numerous lay-offs.

Other companies are mentioned as well. This is something that has been completely ignored.

> that other companies have merged or are thinking of doing so to survive free trade, thus causing even more lay-offs, for instance, Domglass with Consumers, Canadian International with Wardair, Molson with O'Keefe and Imperial Oil with Texaco; > that Canadian companies are being sold or are about to be sold to American interests which are buying us lock, stock and barrel;

I hope that sooner or later, the Government is going to look at this country and decide whether it is going to sell everything we own.

• (1130)

[English]

The Government has been hiding from a wave of mergers and take-overs that have begun to sweep the country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to conclude her speech. Before questions and comments I will give another minute to the Member so that she may conclude.

Mrs. Finestone: If I have to terminate, I will just deal very quickly with one other area in which I feel the Government has changed its mind and has failed in its leadership.

I refer to its choice to end restrictions on official contact with the PLO allowing for upgrading to top level. Speaking for myself, I regret my Government's turn toward increased contact with the PLO, an organization that has proposed of late a moderate agenda for western consumption while reaffirming to its own people in Arabic the PLO's commitment to the strategy of stages for the liberation of all of Palestine. This is an organization that professes a willingness to reach political compromise, yet still refuses to repudiate its covenant which calls for Israel's destruction.

I must also express deep personal concern regarding the endorsement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) of Palestinian self-determination. Because of its particular meaning in the lexicon of the Middle East, and its code word effect, I fear that many will choose to interpret his comments to mean Canadian support for an independent Palestinian state, or whatever else the Palestinians will unilaterally choose. That interpretation would contradict longstanding Canadian policy which has assiduously avoided pre-judging the outcome of negotiations. Indeed, Canada has, and I trust will, continue to support vigorously a peace process based upon direct negotiations between the concerned parties and an incremental approach toward lasting peace in that region.

At another time I will indicate my concerns in terms of the communications and culture dossier in my remarks following the Speech from the Throne. I hope that although there are many comments made about communications and culture as a senior issue the item—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions and comments?

[Translation]

Ms. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in what the Hon. Member or Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) had to say in her response to the Speech from the Throne. She said that the unemployment rate was incredibly high in her fiding. My comments being those of someone not from her riding, I imagine the Hon. Member would say that my perception of Mount Royal is perhaps slanted. However, when we think of Mount Royal, we think of a riding that is relatively well-off, compared to rural ridings where the unemployment rate is sometimes as high as 17 or 18 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member of Mount Royal whether— She appears to be, and of course all Opposition Members are, against the unemployment insurance reform program. After all, they are against practically everything. Canadians know that, Mr. Speaker.

She forgot some very important points. For instance, she said her party was against the program, but have they offered any alternative? I wish she would tell me, for instance, why she is against the fact that the Government helps someone who is on unemployment insurance and who enters a retraining program to get a steady job. The world is changing, and companies are changing as well. She doesn't mention that. She criticizes the program without offering any alternatives. Let's talk about the retraining program let the Hon. Member tell us quite honestly whether she is against employees enrolling in a retraining program. That was my first point.

My second point is that she did not mention the positive aspects. She did not mention that the Government has added nearly ten weeks of parental leave to the existing maternity leave for women.

This is a very positive measure which women have been asking for for a long time. Of course, the Hon. Member would rather overlook the positive aspects of the Minister's unemployment insurance reform!

Finally, Mr. Speaker, she mentioned a language crisis. There is no such thing! There is a sign crisis in Québec, not a language crisis. Canadians agree as far as our two official languages are concerned. However, Québec has a sign crisis. They are trying to distort reality, Mr. Speaker, by making the notwithstanding clause look like the end of the world. The Hon. Member is a great fan of the former leader of the Liberal Party, Pierre Elliot Trudeau. She cannot be that fond of him today, since he was the one who gave the provinces the notwithstanding clause. The Hon. Member is more or less saying: Well, we gave you a clause, and now we don't want you to use it. So the notwithstanding clause is the provinces' business, and signage is the business of the province of Québec. The Hon. Member knows that. They are playing petty politics with a subject that deserves to be taken seriously, more seriously than the attitude reflected in what the Hon. Member has been saying in the House.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, it may be because of ignorance or lack of understanding of what is going on in my constituency of Mount Royal that my colleague failed to grasp the points I was trying to make. But I made myself very clear; I said that the people living in two areas of my riding can be considered well off, but that there is also a high level of unemployment in the center of my constituency. We are the immigration centre of Montreal, the landing point of immigrants coming from over 35 countries. We are a reflection of Quebec's reality. We are proud of these immigrants. We are proud of their input, of their contribution to our society. But we have to remember that they are starting a new life here, in Canada, and they need some form of training suitable for our new market. But if you don't give them the necessary assistance through unemployment insurance and training, they will contribute nothing. So far the necessary assistance has not been for the coming.

Next you talked about the sign language crisis, you said I made a big fuss about that. Well, let me tell you that when you are rejected from your home, you will know how it feels to be an outcast. I was—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would remind Members that because of the order that the House adopted yesterday speeches are 15 minutes and the question and comment period is only five minutes. That does not give much time, so I would ask Members to keep their comments or questions short. The same applies to those who are answering.

We will resume debate with the Hon. Member for Red Deer.

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, like my hon. colleague, I too welcome the opportunity to participate in the Throne Speech debate. Every time I enter this Chamber I do so with a profound sense of gratitude to the electorate of Red Deer who entrusted me with the privilege and responsibility of representing and speaking for them. On their behalf, it is my intention to work as diligently as possible to make certain that their views are heard by this Government.

We in Alberta were very pleased that the honour of moving the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne was given to an Albertan. I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Calgary Southeast (Mr. Richardson) and the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mrs. Gibeau) on the excellent speeches they gave to introduce this debate.

Although the two Hon. Members represent ridings that are very distant from each other, and they each spoke in one of the official languages of Canada, they articulated a common vision for Canada. In the Throne Speech Her Excellency the Governor General outlined the Government's vision for the country. She laid out the goals and priorities for this mandate. I want to take this opportunity to reflect and discuss how these issues will affect my riding.

On November 21 of last year the voters of Red Deer returned a Member to the Progressive Conservative Government. They voted for the Canadian-American Free Trade Agreement. They voted for fiscal responsibility. They voted for the Party best able to govern. In Red Deer they voted for the Government, the first Government in many years, that paid attention to the issues and concerns of westerners.

In 1984, the Government that took office recognized the needs and aspirations of the regions of the country and set about to rectify some longstanding ill feelings. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) showed real leadership in bringing together the First Ministers to discuss constitutional change. Through co-operation and effort he reached a milestone in constitutional history, the Meech Lake Accord, an Accord supported by all 10 Premiers and all three federal Parties. This spirit of conciliation and harmony laid the groundwork for a more unified, dynamic and competitive country. Prior to 1984, Mr. Speaker, Red Deer, like the rest of Alberta, was deep in the throes of a recession that had been fueled in part by the disastrous national energy policy, a policy which devastated the small Canadian-owned service companies. The Government dismantled this program. We also got rid of the petroleum gas revenue tax. As a first step in the mandate of the first session of this Parliament we achieved secure access to the huge U.S. market by means of the Free Trade Agreement.

• (1140)

To quote the well known Alberta journalist who has not always been in support of this Party, "If Brian Mulroney can achieve the free trade with the United States, he will have done more for western Canada than any other Prime Minister in Canadian history".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fee: The positive impact of the Free Trade Agreement has already been felt. We have seen increased investment in Alberta. In my riding a consortium headed by Shell Canada is planning to invest some $700 million to build a state-of-the-art natural gas and sulphur recovery plant near Caroline, Alberta. The plant is going to create some 1,200 construction jobs and over 150 permanent jobs. Over $17 million a year will be pumped into our local economy.

Another positive example: Just north of my riding, Novacor Chemicals is investing some $600 million to expand its petro-chemical plant in Joffre. According to the president of Novacor himself, "This investment would not have happened without the Free Trade Agreement". Access to the U.S. market and lower tariffs will create 200 new permanent jobs in Joffre.

Agriculture is still critical to the economy of my constituency, Mr. Speaker. For a variety of reasons known to most of the Members of this House farmers are hurting. Some have lost their farms, but when you talk to the farmers, they acknowledge that never has a government done so much for agriculture as has the Conservative Government in the last four years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fee: This Government was there when farmers needed it, whether because of low prices or drought. If not for the billions of dollars paid in support during the last four years, there would have been many more farms lost. The problems that are facing agriculture are complex. They are not going to be solved overnight, but this Government, through its Ministers, is working with farm groups and actively pursuing reform of the crop insurance system and a stabilization program in order to provide farmers with a more secure market-oriented environment.

The fundamental problem facing farmers across the country is one of uncertainty. We cannot go on responding to emergencies on an ad hoc basis. We need to have a system in place that will allow farmers to plan for the long term.

Agricultural reform is also needed at the international level. International trade subsidy wars are devastating our farming economy. Rural subsidies now cost approximately $200 billion a year. I believe that our farmers are the very best in the world. Our products are quality products. We can compete against anybody, but it is difficult to compete against the world treasuries of other Governments. Canada and this Government have taken a leadership role in negotiations to eliminate unfair agricultural subsidies. I congratulate the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) and his officials for their part in the recent GATT negotiations at Geneva that achieved some significant agreement in this area.

There are those who say the West has been ignored. They have not been paying attention. This Government has been listening and acting, and will continue to listen and act for the West and for all of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fee: On November 21 last, Canadians also voted for a government that believes in fiscal responsibility. We have reduced the rate of growth of the annual deficit. We are now taking in more money than we spend on government programs. If it were not for the responsibility of paying interest on a massive debt, we would be in the black today. This Government has made progress on the deficit, but we still have to deal with the problem of the accumulated public debt.

We now pay almost a third of every tax dollar on interest charges. To put this in perspective, we spend more money on debt programs than we do on any other single government program. We spend twice as much on debt programs as we do on government assistance to the elderly. We spend 12 times more on debt payments than we do on the total family allowance payments. We spend three times as much on debt charges as we do for the entire defence budget.

The more we borrow to pay for government spending, Mr. Speaker, the greater goes the upward pressure on interest rates. This is a serious concern to the people of my province and my constituency. We have a very valid and real concern over rising interest rates, but to combat those interest rates, we have to reduce our debt. I am very thankful that our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has a plan and is prepared to do that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fee: The message that I have gotten from my constituents has been loud and clear: eliminate the deficit, reduce government spending. Above and beyond that, they tell me that Government cannot and should not be all things to all people. We are a caring and a compassionate country. We accept that we have a moral and social responsibility to help those in genuine need. But surely we realize that only with a vibrant growing economy can we afford to give the best social programs.

A liberalized trading environment which encourages and rewards initiative will help the regions and economic development. Traditionally Alberta has been a major producer of primary products. We have got our agricultural product and our energy products. In the past, because of preferential freight rates and high tariff walls, our manufactured goods have been imported from other areas. The Free Trade Agreement is going to open new markets to us and encourage investment in value-added manufacturing. This Government will continue its role in diversification by providing direct assistance to the western diversification office. This, too, is good news for the West.

The Government is also committed to dismantling unnecessary interprovincial trade barriers. In my riding, there is already evidence to support the positive impacts of liberalized trade. A company called Sun Pine Forest Products in Rocky Mountain House is investing some $32 million to build a new sawmill and timber processing plant which, when completed ,will employ about 270 people. Much of the product that they finish will be exported to the United States.

In the City of Red Deer, the case of Drummond Brewery proves that the spirit of entrepreneurialship is alive and well in Red Deer. This is a small brewery. It was recently purchased by local businessmen and some employees of the plant. It is now aggressively expanding to market a new product in Alberta and to the United States called Dry Beer.

It is the small businessmen who are the backbone of our economy. We need entrepreneurs because it is they who get out and create wealth and jobs, not the Government. Our responsibility is to set the mood, to encourage small businessmen to build and invest for tomorrow and to create jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fee: We are very anxious for economic development, Mr. Speaker, but not at any cost. We see more and more every day how important the environment is to our health and well-being. The emergency debate last week discussed the devastating effects of the Valdez oil spill. We have all heard scientific reports about the greenhouse effect, the ozone layer and acid rain.

The people of Red Deer value the richness and the beauty of the land. This riding is a showcase for the very best that Alberta has to offer. We have the Rocky Mountains and a portion of Banff National Park in the West. We go from there to the ranch lands and the foothills which give way to the lush farmlands in scenic Red Deer River Valley in the east. The people of Red Deer exemplify what the Governor General was referring to when she said in the Throne Speech:

> Canadians possess a unique sense of their relationship to the land, a land whose vast, rich diversity has shaped their values and experiences.

It is because people of Red Deer value and respect our natural resources, Mr. Speaker, that they applaud the Government's commitment to the environment. The Throne Speech makes it abundantly clear that this Government is fully committed to the principle of sustainable development as articulated in the Brundtland Commission. We can have economic growth, and we can protect our environment.

• (1150)

This is a concern that we are facing right now in my riding. I mentioned the Caroline area gas development group. This project has raised some serious questions about the effect of the industry on the environment and on our life-style. A very good dialogue has been established between the developers and the residents in the Caroline—Rocky Mountain House corridor. The developers have met with local land owners and concerned groups. They have established a local advisory council. I am confident that this consultative process will continue.

Having been the mayor of a small town for the last 11 years, I know first-hand the difficulties that municipalities have faced with regard to waste management. There is an accepted need for better handling of all our wastes.

I want to salute the initiative taken by the Government of Alberta with respect to hazardous materials. It has established, developed and is operating a special waste management facility at Swan Hills, where hazardous wastes can be safely disposed of in an environmentally conscious manner.

We realize the world is facing an environmental challenge. It is a challenge that goes beyond municipal, provincial and federal levels. It is international. Pollution obeys no borders. All of us must be concerned. Everyone must be involved.

There are many challenges ahead of us. Like the people of my constituency, I am not afraid of challenges, I like them. Our challenge is to make this remarkable country an even better place to leave to our children. I look forward to working with my colleagues on both sides of the House in contributing toward that goal.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, first I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for his inaugural speech in the House of Commons. During his speech he referred to the issue of the deficit and the national debt. I am sure he knows that 50 per cent of the total national debt has been accumulated since the Conservative Government came to power in 1984.

I want to discuss some of the cut-backs envisaged by the Government, particularly in the area of unemployment insurance. Is it the view of his Party that the present cut-backs are fair and equitable? I do not think they are. For instance, unemployment in the constituency I represent in Prescott County is 13 per cent. In Glengarry County it is 11 per cent. However, because we are located in eastern Ontario in which lies the City of Ottawa, we are in the same Statistic Canada zone and therefore are evaluated as though we had an unemployment rate of 5.7 per cent. Therefore, in my riding the benefits have been cut from 52 weeks to 35 weeks under the Minister's scheme, and the waiting period has been extended from 14 weeks to 20 weeks. Does he think that is fair in an area that has 13 per cent unemployment?

Mr. Fee: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to stand up and be able to respond to a question that is usually directed to our friends and colleagues in the front benches. This question has been directed repeatedly during Question Period in the last couple of days to one of our Ministers. I feel she has done a very admirable job in answering the question.

First, there are no cut-backs. We are not cutting back on the amount of money; it is being re-allocated in a way that is far more useful to Canadians. I talked to the people in my riding. I believe I have a very good relationship with them and a knowledge of their views. The people in my riding are a caring and compassionate people. They understand that there are people with needs and there are social programs to meet those needs. We want to help people gain meaningful employment. We do not want to pay people who quit jobs unnecessarily and do not want to work. We want to provide programs to train them to get meaningful employment. That is the gist of the employment program that has been announced by the Minister.

The people in my riding to whom I have spoke support that initiative. They think Canada will benefit and they believe that we will be a stronger country because of it.

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, I always find it interesting to listen to Members opposite describe how the country has prospered over the last four years and how great it will be in the future. The Hon. Member talked about the farm community and how it has managed under the Conservative Government, with its management of crop stabilization.

I come from a riding where the Free Trade Agreement is not helping but hindering farmers in my area. The grape-growing farmers in the area have been devastated by the Agreement and the Government's attitude toward them. As well, the soft fruit industry has been flushed down the tubes as a result of the Government's attitude to them in the Free Trade Agreement. They have been sacrificed on the altar of the Free Trade Agreement.

The Hon. Member talks about how well small business has done. I agree with him completely that small business is the backbone of Canada. Yet in my riding I hear complaints from small business people who make their living from farmers and the farm community, which has also been flushed down the tubes by the Conservative Government.

Will the Member push his Government to bring some equity to farmers in the Okanagan region? Will he push his Government to ensure an equitable system of income stablization for the western farmers and farmers in the Okanagan Valley of the British Columbia region?

Mr. Fee: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind answering those questions at all. I am proud of what has happened with the Government. I am not necessarily proud nor pleased with the state of the agricultural economy in this country.

If the Hon. Member listened to my comments, he would have heard me say that farmers in this country have been devastated for the last few years. If it had not been for the subsidy programs put in place by our Government, I do not think we would have a viable agricultural sector in Canada now.

Those of us who are new to the House have a lot to learn. People must realize that when we discuss free trade there is a difference between what is affected by the GATT and what is affected by the Free Trade Agreement. When we discuss grapes, we are talking about something put in place by the GATT Agreement, not necessarily the Free Trade Agreement.

The Hon. Member asks what I would do to encourage our Minister and the Government in regard to subsidies for farmers. I would encourage the Minister to carry on as he has. He has been holding meetings with farm groups and farmers from coast to coast in Canada. He is soliciting input from the people who are working there. He is getting their ideas and will formulate his policy based on the recommendations he gets from the people who are most effective. I think that will be the basis for good Government and positive programs in the months and years ahead.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the House will know that in the Speech from the Throne there is a reference to the continued progress in reducing the deficit. I would like to deal with that for a moment, particularly for the benefit of Members opposite who are making claims about fiscal responsibility on the part of the Government they support.

When the Government came to power in September, 1984, alas, the deficit of the Government of Canada, according to figures from the Department of Finance, amounted to $177 billion. It was due to a number of reasons, including the fact that during the world recession we suffered in 1982 and 1983 the Liberal Government of Canada pumped money into the economy to create jobs when employment was very high. That was a very important social economic initiative which served to provide the necessary shock absorbers to overcome a very difficult period in Canada and elsewhere.

I want to draw the attention of the House to the fact that today, when considering figures about the deficit of the Government of Canada, we see that it is an astonishing amount of $321 billion. This means that from the time the Progressive Conservative Party came to power in September, 1984, until today, there has been an increase in the deficit of $144 billion. That is the reality. To make in the Speech from the Throne a reference to continued progress in reducing the deficit is really taking the Canadian public for a ride, to say the least. It just shows the sense of irresponsibility on the part of government Members, including the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Fee) who just finished his speech a moment ago, who are claiming that the Government is committed to fiscal responsibility.

How can a Government be committed to fiscal responsibility if it is capable, in the four years since it came into power, of increasing the deficit of Canada by $144 billion? That defeats the imagination and the intellect of anyone. Only Tories can attempt to create that kind of a smokescreen, though I am sure most Members present in the Chamber right now do not believe it. However, some perhaps do if they are absorbed or drowning in their own rhetoric. The record of this Government since it came into power is an increase in the deficit of $144 billion. So much for fiscal responsibility.

Let us look for a moment at this immense preoccupation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Because of reasons well beyond the control of this Government, the Minister of Finance feels that we must reduce the deficit. Because of international expansion in the economies of the world, we had four years of expansion in our economy as well. The pie has become larger. The wealth of this nation is greater. Therefore, as a percentage of our Gross Domestic Product, a fancy economic phrase to reflect the wealth of the nation at any given time, the deficit has gone down from roughly 7 per cent in 1985 to 4.9 per cent in the fiscal year just concluded, 1988–89. As a percentage of our total wealth, the deficit is shrinking by over 2 percentage points. This means that the obsession on the part of the Minister of Finance with the deficit has to be justified, explained and corroborated against the trend in the figures.

The figures are important because we have to look at these figures not in abstract, not in isolation, but as they relate to the total picture. When we do as I am attempting to do this morning, which is to attempt to relate the deficit as a percentage of our total wealth, we find a decline in that percentage. That means that on the whole, the deficit is coming down as a percentage of the total.

It is true that we have high interest rates which are probably the result of mismanagement on the part of the Government and which could be the subject of another speech, were it not for the fact that I would like to deal with the environment. That is another matter. The important main points are that as a percentage of the total, the deficit is going down and that during the first Parliament in which these Progressive Conservatives were responsible for the finances of this nation, the deficit went up by nothing less than $144 billion in the name of fiscal responsibility.

Let me move on to this great title in the Speech from the Throne, "The Environmental Imperative". It is a very impressive title, I must say. It really makes one stop and think: "The Environmental Imperative". Who wrote it, one might ask. Yet when one reads what comes under this high-sounding title, one begins to wonder.

For the benefit of new Members across who perhaps do not know certain things which are, however, on the record, the Government which wrote this Speech from the Throne is the same Government which cut from Environment Canada, during the last Parliament, some 336 jobs. It is the same Government which increased its Budget, in the last year of the previous Parliament, 1988-89, by 3.6 per cent while the over- all increase in all government spending was 8 per cent. In some Departments, it was 11 per cent or 14 per cent and even 24 per cent as in the case of Agriculture.It is the same Government that watched the shrinking of the Environment Canada budget by more than $70 million between 1984 and 1989 because of inflation. Not only was the Department of the Environment not able to keep up with inflation in the previous term of the Progressive Conservative Government, but it lost ground to inflation to the tune of some $70 million.

Let us look at what we find in the Throne Speech under this impressive heading. We find a reference to a Drinking Water Act. That would be good were it not for the fact that it was also promised in the 1984 election campaign. Do you remember that, Mr. Speaker? Some of us do, unfortunately. It was promised in 1984, but the Government is now able to trot it out to make it seem to be a novel thought, something that all of a sudden has inspired and illuminated the progressive thinkers across the aisle.

What else do we find? We find a promise to introduce environmental assessment legislation. That is good stuff too, no doubt. However, it was also promised in the 1984 election campaign. Not only that, but in the light of the federal judge's decision on the Rafferty-Alameda dam, which is based on a Liberal Order in Council of June 1984 from which he drew the powers, this environmental assessment legislation may no longer be necessary.

We also find in the Speech from the Throne under research and development a promise of leadership. This time it is a promise of leadership, whatever that means. We do not know. It is interesting to compare this promise of leadership with the fact that during the 1984 election campaign, the then not yet Prime Minister and the so-called Progressive Conservative Party said that they would double research and development spending, but they have now chosen to go for leadership.

Then we find in the Speech from the Throne a promise to create regulations for toxic chemicals. This again sounds very good, but whoever drafted it under the instruction of the Government did not realize that the power to write regulations for toxic chemicals is already in place. We have an Act in place, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, to do exactly that.

Then there is a reference to support for environmentally sustainable development but no commitment on how to do it and where to do it. There is a tiny reference to participating in the creation of the sustainable development centre in Winnipeg. Here the language deserves a moment of attention. It is quite different from the commitment the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) made before the General Assembly of the United Nations last summer when he committed himself and his Government and therefore the Canadian nation to establishing such a centre. There was no qualification or wavering. There was no shade of meaning. It was a clear-cut commitment to establish. Instead, we find during this term that the Government will participate in the creation of such a centre. That means if Manitoba puts money on the table, perhaps Ottawa will do something. It is no longer the clear-cut federal commitment that earned the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) applause at the United Nations when he made that speech.

We should also approach what is missing in this Speech from the Throne. The first item that comes to mind is that there is no reference to expansion of our national park system, something Canadians hold dearly and something that should be on the agenda of a Speech from the Throne.

Second, this Government does not realize we have a major issue of global climate warming. Not one word or reference is made to climate warming and the role of the Government of Canada to tackle this long-term, difficult issue. It does not exist on the agenda of the Government for this session of Parliament.

Flowing from that, there is not one word or reference in the Speech from the Throne to energy policies. These policies are essential if we are to tackle the question of global warming. There is no commitment to energy efficiency. There is no commitment to launch a new wave of R and D into renewable resources of energy. There is no commitment to reduce our dependence on the burning of fossil fuels that contribute to the climate warming trend. This is astounding.

There is no reference in the Speech from the Throne to how this Government wants to implement sustainable development by integrating the economy and the environment. Budgets and programs must be announced to integrate the two.

I see my time is up.

Mr. Pagtakhan: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to hear my hon. colleague clearly dissect the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Blaikie: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Transcona (Mr. Blaikie) rises on a point of order. I know what it will be.

Mr. Blaikie: You know what it will be, Mr. Speaker, because I have raised it before. The intent of the question and comment period is—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I know full well what the intent is.

Mr. Blaikie: —to hear Members from other Parties first. That is my understanding.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member is correct in everything he is saying. If the Member for Winnipeg—Transcona will give me a little time I will become familiar with the ridings. I knew this Member's riding. The Member for his Party normally would be chosen first and will be chosen at this time.

Mr. Brewin: I rise on a point of order. If the general rules are that you recognize someone from the other Parties first, Mr. Speaker, it would be possible to do so now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is left to the discretion of the Speaker. I have chosen this Member now. I will choose the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. Brewin) when the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Pagtakhan) has finished. I understand what the Member for Winnipeg—Transcona is saying.

Mr. Pagtakhan: I remain convinced that this Government has exercised fiscal dishonesty rather than fiscal responsibility. This Government is a government of promises and not a government of commitment.

I remain convinced that the Government—

Mr. Merrithew: Where is the question?

Mr. Pagtakhan: I am coming to it. I remain convinced that the establishment in Winnipeg of an environmental centre for sustainable development may be in jeopardy. The Manitoba caucus for the Liberal Party will fight the Government on that issue.

My question is directed to the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). How does he see the issue of interest ratebearing on the deficit?

Mr. Caccia: It is an interesting question, and I wish I could master the economic knowledge to answer the question in an expeditious manner. There is a definite relationship, and one should be aware of that. However, to give the Members from Winnipeg—Transcona and Victoria (Mr. Brewin) a chance to ask their burning questions and rehash the past—

Mr. Brewin: I do not want to miss the opportunity to rehash yours.

Mr. Caccia: The Tories love the word "leadership". When it comes to the crunch and putting money on the table, they somehow waver.

The future of the centre in Winnieg will fall victim to lack of leadership by the same Prime Minister, Government and Party who proclaimed they are the champions of giving leadership. It would be a sad development if the Government were not to keep the word the Prime Minister gave to the General Assembly of the United Nations.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I had intended to give some compliments to the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), but I will have to reduce my comments in order to give him a chance to reply. I remember him as a progressive member of city council in Toronto. I watched his career with interest. It stands as a mark for other progressive Liberals as to the fate that awaits them in the Liberal Party. I always thought the Member should be a member of our Party.

The Hon. Member for Davenport talked about deficit budget cutting—

Mr. Merrithew: You see, Charles, you missed an opportunity.

Mr. Brewin: Yes. The Member may have gone further had he chosen better at the beginning.

The Hon. Member gave his speech largely on the Budget. There is one element of the Budget we look forward to with anticipation. That is the treatment of defence spending. There is a likelihood that defence spending will be treated by this Government as a sacred cow, that it will not look hard at how military expenditures are directed in this country. We heard rumours that nuclear subs will be retained. Excuses are being trotted out as to why that should be.

There are hard questions that should be asked about the extent of expenditures on the military in this country. We all honour the work of those in the armed services. That does not put them beyond the requirement that services rendered to this country be subject to a rigorous set of questions. The services rendered in anticipating potential military risk to this country, are they responding to any likely risk at all? How do frigates respond to any perceived risk or threat to the security of this country? What is the military expenditure in Europe? I am looking forward to the Member's response.

• (1220)

Mr. Caccia: I thank the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. Brewin) for his kind and generous words. It seems that he has put forward the question and answer much better than I could.

When examining whether or not the defence budget should be of a certain size, first I have to ask, who will attack us? Who is going to attack Canada? Until that question is clarified, a defence budget cannot be defined. It is as basic is that.

Second, what is on the agenda of the world? What issue is there to warrant a war? Is there item that would warrant a war? That is also a question that ought to be tackled and an answer provided.

Unfortunately, the Progressive Conservatives live with a psychosis of the 1940s and 1950s and have not realized that the world is changing very rapidly. Therefore, they are launching budgets for defence which may have been warranted in the 1930s. History is full of examples of generals who have been preparing themselves for the past war.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to speak to the House. I am always honoured to address the Chamber, particularly on Speeches from the Throne which give us latitude to talk about a range of subjects.

First, I wish to express my thanks to the people of Crowfoot for once again allowing me to be here in the Parliament of Canada. I believe that the past four years between 1984 and 1988 have been particularly advantageous for western Canada, and certainly no place more than the Province of Alberta, by the fact that the Progressive Conservatives have served as the Government of Canada.

During that period of time we were able to put in place the Free Trade Agreement. It was ratified in the early part of this term. It was a great national debate, and one on which people believing strongly in their country took different points of view. I believe that no matter what side of the issue the people were on, they did so from the conviction of how deeply they loved Canada.

Having said that, it is now a period of time when observations can be made. Certainly on the Prairies there is new investment coming into our country. In western Canada, where the bulk of our red meats comes from, we were sending them to other parts of the world for processing. We are now developing processing plants. I single out particularly one of the most technologically advanced meat packing facilities in the High River community of Alberta that will put in place a world-class meat processing and packing unit that will largely be aimed at the western United States coastline, particularly focused on the City of Los Angeles. Because of the reduction of tariffs we will have an opportunity to penetrate that market and to value add to bring into realization the opportunities of new jobs that come from added manufacturing.

The same point can be made with respect to the petrochemical industries. On the issues of ethane and methane we have had to climb over tariff barriers of 16 per cent and 18 per cent respectively. Now, because of the opportunity for tariff reductions, we have a capacity to penetrate a market and to manufacture rather than to export raw product through pipeline, and thereby create jobs.

Those who were the great defenders and stated that we ought not to have such an arrangement, in effect were continuing to ask not only for the export of natural gas through the pipelines to another country, but to ask for the export of the jobs of sons and daughters through that same pipeline by denying opportunity to value add and create job opportunities.

In grain, in manufacturing, and in the red meat producing areas of our country, that part of the western area of the Prairies, we certainly have enriched opportunities to penetrate not only the western United States market, but because of the skills and the technological advancement of those manufacturing bases, also to penetrate Asia.

We have to pay increasingly more attention to Asia. By the year 2005, 70 per cent of the world's population will be on the Asian continent. It behooves Canada, but more importantly it is a signal to western Canada, to pay significant attention to Asia, its dynamics, and potential.

In the last Parliament I was pleased to have a fairly influential role in attempting to bring about the Terra Agreement between Canada and China. The Terra Agreement may not be well-known to many Members of the House of Commons, although I know it is well-known to members of the Alberta caucus. It is a program of relationship signed between Canada and China to do first research, and then to expand to a world-class travelling museum that will focus on palaeontology, or specifically to talk about the dinosaurs of the Red Deer River Valley of Alberta—

Mr. Robinson: The Alberta caucus.

Mr. Malone: —and the Mongolian desert of China.

One of the Members of Parliament from the New Democratic Party thought he saw some humour in talking about dinosaurs. I want the Hon. Member to know that when people who attend exhibits around the world are polled as to what it is that they want to see, whether it is in Sydney, Australia, New York, or Paris, the number one exhibit that those people want to see is that of the dinosaurs.

The new Museum of Palaeontology in Drumheller, Alberta which is in my constituency, looked too large when it was built a few years ago, and is now overcrowded. Last year 600,000 people, mostly world citizens, attended that magnificent and spectacular museum.

When this program is in place between Canada and China, there will be a world-class travelling museum equal to that of the King Tut exhibit that will focus a new emphasis on tourism in western Canada and will bring world citizens from far and wide to see the tremendous history of this large creature that roamed in that area some 60 million years ago.

I want to talk about some things that we can do in this Parliament to pay tribute to some of the groundwork that has already been established. First, there is a great deal of work and effort to be undertaken with respect to the GATT. I am proud of the fact that I belong to a Party that took the initiative with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. In Tokyo 3 or four years ago the Prime Minister first raised the subject of agricultural subsidies. That was followed up in Uruguay by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) when he insisted that agriculture be on the agenda for the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. It was Canada's persistence that forced that issue to be on the agenda, which it never was before, and which was resisted very strongly particularly by those in the European Economic Community.

This past week we started to see the results of the GATT negotiations. New corner posts are being struck and new commitments are being made to bring about a resolution that will hold some hope for our farmers, unlike that which we have seen in the past four, five, or six years. Today Canadian farmers come up against a $200 billion subsidy wall in Europe and in the United States and have to compete against that treasury force in order to get our product on the international shelf. Here we are as a small nation of 25, 26, 27 million people having to come up against an international wall of treasury support by the United States and Europe of $200 billion. Clearly, that has the capacity to destroy our farmers, unless we are able to bring about a negotiated settlement of the General Agreement on TARIFFS and Trade. I am so pleased that at least that past inflexible position of the GATT has been broken and the optimism is there. I wish our negotiators well for the sake of agriculture.

• (1230)

In Alberta it is important that we give some new attention to hydrogen as an optional fuel. There is a desire among some in Ontario and the Province of Québec to do research into the potential of hydrogen fuels. It is my hope that as a nation we can jointly recognize that this is a concept that has the capacity to be researched, developed and worked upon in both sides of the coun0ztry at the same time. I believe that Ontario and Québec from its hydro power has a capacity to do some work with hydrogen. Likewise, I believe the Province of Alberta with its natural gas resources from which hydrogen development can likely be advanced more quickly is a very key and important player in this development.

It is important that we start looking for options for fossil fuels, because any concern that we have for the environment will have a tone of hollowness to it, as long as we have only the perspective of fossil fuels now or in the future. I hope that we can continue to work as two sides of this country, to enhance and advance the utilization of hydrogen as a fuel in this country. In the interim it would seem to me that the time has come when we should signal to the manufacturing basin of Canada in southern Ontario that they should pay more attention to the utilization of low-sulphur coals from the west, rather than bringing in the high pollutant coals that they are presently importing from the United States. One of the major causes of acid rain from our sources is the fact that the present coals are high in sulphur, and high, therefore, in the emisions of sulphur dioxide. I believe there are other options for which we can spend Canadian dollars in Canada, buy from ourselves, and at the same time have a tremendous and positive impact on the reduction of acid rain within our country.

I want to talk about the debt for a few moments, and to say that I have never heard anything quite so hollow as I did a few moments ago when I heard the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) try to dismiss the seriousness of the debt in this country. The debt is growing at a rate where the interest on the debt itself is now increasing at $3 million an hour. That is the kind of burden that this country faces. Every day we have loaded upon us another $80 million of burden. Those who would like to somehow turn a deaf ear to that signal, and pretend that we can go on with programs and government expenditures without raising taxes and without ever paying our debt, are the same people who would relish anything that they might achieve for themselves today, as long as they can put the burden of that price into the future, and on their children. If this issue is not tackled now it will lie as a burden for all future generations. That is a burden that is unacceptable and absolutely and totally inappropriate. We are in a situation where that debt must be brought under control.

The debt stands as one of the major engines of the present situation of high interest rates. When we talk about the debt there is in this country a tremendous notion among the individual citizens that the debt is the federal Government's debt. But it is not just limited to that. The fact of the matter is that the private debt in this country is double that of the federal Government's debt. When some agency, like the International Monetary Fund, or World Bank, takes a look at the question of the country's debt, it does not ask only the question as to what is the federal Government's debt. It wants to know that nation's debt position. In other words, it is asking the question about the private sector, the federal Government, provincial Governments and municipalities. All those totalled together are something in excess of $1 trillion. That is the number that we need to focus on, that magnitude of 26 million people, a $1 trillion in debt. It is with a view to that scope of burden that we have to address the whole question. It is with the realization that it is not just the federal Government's problem, it is a Canadian problem at every government level and in our private lives.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Kootenay West—Revelstoke (Mr. Kristiansen).

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) a question, but first of all I would like to assure him that I along with my family have also enjoyed the exhibits at Drumheller. I and countless other Canadians look forward to the day when all of the various members of dinosaur species, including some of the Members opposite and those who have been opposite in the previous four years, will find themselves on permanent display as an example of the interesting but quaint relic of ages past.

More seriously, we have seen a lot of examples of dinosaurs' wrecks in the statement on UIC changes by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) in the House the other day. But there are a few examples that obviously were inspired by some of the gentler members of the species. One of those is the provision within that statement that is allowing workers access to benefits during labour disputes in which they are not direct participants, and allow workers to draw sickness or maternity benefits even when a labour dispute takes place at their place of employment.

I am interested in hearing from one of the Members opposite, in particular the Member for Crowfoot, as fond as he is of dinosaur exhibits and their history, to give me his rationale, or the Government's rationale and justification for those changes, which many of us welcome. These will be welcomed by a number of working people across the country, particularly by pulp and paper workers of Canada Local No. 1 in Castlegar, who have asked for some of those changes. Coming from someone of a conservative bend I am particularly interested to hear how the Hon. Member justifies, when there is no loss of earnings, the drawing of sickness or maternity benefits even when a labour dispute is taking place at that employee's place of employment, and thus there is no interruption of earnings. That may be a valid and a very proper social program, but I would like to hear from that particular Member of the Conservative caucus, or in the future perhaps any other Member, as to what their rationale is for that, and whether they think those provisions are going to survive the first labour dispute under federal jurisdiction that takes place after these proposals are hopefully implemented.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say to the Hon. Member for Kootenay West—Revelstoke (Mr. Kristiansen), that I do not find any particular amount of humour in him playing around with the notion of the dinosaur museum, or the museum of palaeontology. I know there have been expressions in the past about the dinosaur disappearing, and all of the other expressions that go with that. This is one of Canada's finest exhibits. This is one of Canada's most proud tourist attractions. Within a very few years, perhaps as short a time as three to five years, it will be the second largest attraction of tourists in Alberta, next to that of Banff National Park. I submit that we should see it as Canadians with a sense of pride. It is not a matter for tongue-in-cheek remarks. It is a very fine Canadian exhibit.

I wish now to deal with the question concerning unemployment insurance and the changes that have been made and which were announced by the Minister a couple of days ago. I cannot think of anything that would give me more pride, and I believe Canadian workers more of a sense of stability, than to have the realization that workers and employers jointly through the efforts of the Unemployment Insurance Program will be taking at least some of those funds to put Canadians into a position of retraining. In this way they will have the skills and abilities to do what they want to do, that is, to be employed and to retain their dignity through being able to work.

Only a socialist would think that once one has lost his job it becomes the duty of the Government to pay that person to stay off the job. It is our view and intention to put those people into the position where, because of their capacity to work from the training they will have received, they will have the dignity to go back and to be employed meaningfully as they ought to be.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Burnaby—Kingsway.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour and a privilege to be able to participate once again in the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I will have had the honour of serving as a Member of this House for 10 years in the coming month of May. I was first elected in May of 1979.

I want to take this opportunity to thank my constituents in the new constituency that I represent, the new constituency of Burnaby—Kingsway, for their solid support in the most recent federal election. It is a new constituency. I want to say particularly to those who live in the newer parts of my riding, the North Burnaby part of the constituency and in the City of Vancouver itself, that I will certainly do whatever I can to work hard on their behalf, to stay in touch with them, to communicate with them and to remain accountable to them.

As well, I want to say that certainly I know that my colleague from Kootenay was not implying that the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) did not represent with eloquence and distinction the dinosaur perspective from his constituency. I know he certainly did not intend to suggest that.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I also want to congratulate the Speaker of the House and yourself as the Deputy Speaker for your re-election at such prominent and distinguished positions in our Parliament.

The fact that the NDP was unable to elect one single Member in the province of Quebec was, as far as I am concerned, a major disappointment in the last election. Having personally worked very hard to convince the people in that province to trust us, I was saddened by the results. We will, of course, continue our work in Quebec, but I did feel very disappointed. We will have to step up our efforts in order to get the respect and support we need from the people of Quebec.

I know that we had excellent candidates and that those people will keep on working in Quebec. I am sure that they will succeed in the next election and that we will finally have New Democrat Members from the province of Quebec.

[English]

Responding in the brief time that is available to me to the Speech from the Throne, I want to place my remarks in the context of the concerns of my constituents, the fundamental concerns that have been raised by them, whether it be in the area of jobs and job creation, of post-secondary education, of peace and disarmament, of environmental protection on other concerns, including equality for women and minorities. I want also to speak briefly from my perspective as spokesperson for my Party on justice and human rights.

[Translation]

But first of all, Mr. Speaker, I must object to the cruel and unfair cuts to the Canadian unemployment insurance system.

Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign, Conservative candidates never said a word about their intention to cut unemployment insurance benefits. The province of Quebec will be hard hit by the bill the Conservative government will introduce. This new bill will put more pressure on the welfare system, and as a result of course local taxes will be raised.

We were told how important training is. It certainly is. However, Mr. Speaker, let's not forget that in Canada, for example, the employers contribution to professional training in 1987 was only $1.5 billion while in the U.S. American companies contribute $80 billion every year to this end. In Canada, three out of four companies offer no training at all.

So, you see, Mr. Speaker, it is the responsibility of larger Canadian companies to spend more money for training. However, their friends in the Conservative government have decided, instead of asking them to pay the cost of training, to charge it to the Canadian workers. That decision, Mr. Speaker, is unfair and unacceptable. What do you think will be, Mr. Speaker, the effects of such a decision in the more deprived areas of Quebec—for example, in Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean and the Mauricie, where the unemployment level is over 12 per cent? Workers will have to work three more weeks before being eligible to receive unemployment insurance benefits for a shorter period of time of eight or nine weeks. There is no doubt in my mind, Mr. Speaker, that this is totally unfair.

Mr. Speaker, it is very clear, I believe, that these cuts in the unemployment insurance program really represent a subtle attempt to harmonize with the American unemployment insurance system as part of the Canada—U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

For example, in the United States, the eligibility criteria for the unemployment insurance program are approximately the same as those our Government is now proposing. So it is very clear that the Conservative Government is cutting benefits for Canadian workers along the lines of the Free Trade Agreement and for us in the NDP, that is totally unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, at the same time, the Conservative Government talks about eliminating or suggests the possibility of eliminating passenger rail service—VIA Rail. Mr. Speaker, obviously about 90 per cent of Quebecers are against this proposal of the Conservative Government. If the Conservative Government wants to cut, Mr. Speaker, it would be better to cut the crazy program to buy nuclear submarines. Mr. Speaker, it would be much more important to give priority to improving rail service in Canada instead of trying to eliminate it.

[English]

During the last federal election the Conservatives were silent on cuts to unemployment insurance. We did not hear anything from them at that time. They were silent on cut-backs to VIA Rail. They said nothing about tax increases.

We all remember the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) when he said in one of his moments of candour for which he is so well known: "Mr. Speaker, we cannot tell the people of Canada what we do as a Government because if we did they would never vote for us". He is right. What we have seen is that the Government has failed to keep the promises that it made to the people of Canada.

The Speech from the Throne talks of—and I quote now from the speech— "maintaining a caring and compassionate society". What kind of caring, compassionate society is it when the Conservative Government allows an economy in which over one million children live in poverty? What kind of caring and compassionate society is it when the Government knows that the line-ups at the food banks are getting longer, that the number of the homeless is getting greater and that the number of hungry children is increasing? At the same time we have the obscenity of the great disparities in wealth and income in our country. Just last week The Financial Post reported under the headline "Pay Bulges for Top Earners" the fact that the number of Canadian top executives who earned more than $1 million in fiscal year 1988 has more than doubled over the previous year.

• (1250)

The head of MacMillan Bloedel received total compensation of $625,000 in 1988. Their number two vice-president, Don McLaughlin, received total compensation of over $400,000. The head of Canadian Pacific receives over $1 million a year, at the same time that Canadian Pacific pensioners in too many cases are living below the poverty line. It is that profound disparity between rich and poor which is increasing under this Government.

We know as well the national shame of the treatment of native people in this country. It is tragic that we have a situation in which native young people are on a hunger strike seeking to prevent cut-backs in the post-secondary education program which in fact has been a success in ensuring greater participation of native people in post-secondary education.

I recently returned from Labrador where I met with the Innu who are fighting a battle for the survival of their nation against low-level flights by aircraft which in some cases fly at 100 feet above their traditional hunting and gathering places. These Innu, and those who support them, are being tried as criminals in the courts when in fact the true criminals are those who are responsible for the flights that are destroying their way of life.

We have seen the level of suicides and attempted suicide among the young people, the level of child neglect and abuse, the level of alcoholism and poverty, the level of unemployment. I spoke with one of the young leaders, Peter Penashue, who said that the only hope of the Innu people at this point is to shame the rest of Canada to make them aware of the fact that their nation is being destroyed, that it is under attack. I would hope that the Government would heed that plea and would put an end to the low-level flights.

As Justice critic for the New Democratic Party, I must point out the absence of any reference in the Speech from the Throne to a promise of amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act, amendments in the area of improving pay equity provisions, equal pay for equal value, amendments to expand prohibitive grounds of discrimination to include sexual orientation and political belief, amendments promised long ago in the area of reasonable accommodation, assisting particularly Canada's religious minorities and the disabled, amendments to assure direct reporting by the commission to Parliament.

In other justice areas there has been no commitment to strengthening freedom of information legislation, no commitment to improving sentencing in Canada, no commitment to taking tough and effective action, no long overdue action on Nazi war criminals, no promise that this Government will not recriminalize abortion and no promise to improve Canada's legal aid system.

The Speech from the Throne is silent on the housing crisis which faces Canadians, particularly which faces the people in British Columbia and in my own community of Burnaby and Vancouver, silent on high interest rates, zero vacancy rates for rental accommodation, incredibly high housing prices which make it impossible for people to get into the housing market. In fact as New Democrats, we say the time is long overdue for tough action, for a tax to eliminate the profits from speculation in housing. We are disappointed that the Government has not acted on that.

In the area of the environment, why has the Government not responded to the call for a public inquiry in the devastating oil spills off the West Coast of Vancouver Island and in Alaska? Why was the Government silent on this most important question?

[Translation]

Why the silence on acid rain that is destroying maple trees in the Province of Quebec?

[English]

Why the silence on forestry? It is the most important industry in the Province of British Columbia, and yet there is not one word on our vital forest industry. There is no excuse for that failure to act in this important area.

In concluding my remarks on the Speech from the Throne, I want to again condemn the Government for its absence of vision, for its absence of any sense of hope for the future for our young people, indeed for all Canadians and for moving us toward a country which will be meaner, crueler, which will not respect the environment, which will increase the gap between rich and poor. I fear as well that in the international domain, the Government will cut back on our obligations to those who are poor in other parts of the world, and will cut back on our foreign aid.

I have not spoken much in terms of praise, but I did welcome the decision of the Government to upgrade its contacts with the representatives of the Palestinians in the Middle East, the PLO. I would hope that the Government would continue to push for an international peace conference and would recognize the right of self-determination of the Palestinians.

I wonder who it is that speaks for the Liberal Party on this question? Is it the Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) who condemned those contacts?

[Translation]

Does the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) support them? Who speaks for the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker?

[English]

In conclusion, once again I want to thank my constituents for the support they have shown to me and assure them that I will speak out on their behalf over the coming years. I will speak out for justice, for peace and disarmament, for full employment, for equality and for a more decent Canada. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the speech by the Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party, from British-Columbia, and I must admit I was rather surprised by some of the comments he made before the House, especially when he referred to the last election campaign and our Government's promise regarding universality and similar issues.

I wonder whether the Hon. Member misread, because he related these issues to the unemployment insurance reform tabled in the House by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall). He said that the Gouvernment had been less than forthright with Canadian workers. Mr. Speaker, he said the Government was incapable of keeping its promises and was making cuts.

Mr. Speaker, he did not read a single word of what the Minister tabled in the House, and I would like to ask him, since we are now into questions and comments, how he explains the fact that the Government, under the same program, will increase the number of weeks of unemployment insurance benefits from 15 to 30 weeks for mothers and single parents. Why didn't the Member for the New Democratic Party mention that Canadians 65 years old and over will now be able to draw their unemployment insurance benefits which had been cut by the Liberal? Why did the Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! Order! I am very sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member from Champlain (Mr. Champagne), but since it is nearly one o'clock, I will give the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) one minute to reply.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for giving me a chance to stress the impact of cuts in unemployment insurance. In Montreal for instance, a person will have to work 16 weeks instead of 10 to be entitled to a minimum of 27 weeks of benefits, as opposed to the current 32 weeks. In Québec City, a person will need 18 weeks of employment instead of 12 for a minimum of 21 weeks of benefits instead of 26.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to increases in benefits, but the truth is that this reform constitutes an attack on Canadian workers and the Canadian unemployed. Why should the unemployed have to pay for training? Why shouldn't the big corporations pay their fair share, Mr. Speaker?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.00 p.m. the House took recess.

TRANSPORT

EFFECT OF FREIGHT SUBSIDY CUTS IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my grave concern over the effect that cuts in freight subsidies provided to shippers in the Atlantic Provinces will have on the economy of Prince Edward Island.

The Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Program is the cornerstone of the transportation policy in Atlantic Canada. Since the program's inception over 60 years ago, it has stood as an effective means of support for Atlantic Canada's fragile industrial base. It is essential to maintain a competitive position in the Canadian market-place for manufacturers and producers in the Atlantic region.

I am also concerned about the possibility that the Feed Freight Assistance Program could be affected by budget cuts.

I hope that the Government's recent review of this program will result not in cuts but in increased benefits to producers in Atlantic Canada. Fiscal restraint cannot and should not be administered at the expense of the fragile economy of the Atlantic Provinces.

IMPORTANCE OF MONTREAL-ABITIBI PASSENGER RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, passenger train service from Montreal to cities like Abitibi is vital, and must not be eliminated.

Mr. Speaker, VIA Rail will have to respect the needs of remote areas like ours.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

LOSS OF BENEFITS

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, according to the latest monthly labour force survey, the level of unemployment in the Okanagan—Shuswap now exceeds 19.6 per cent. People are out of work not because of a lack of job training but because of a lack of jobs.

The recent proposal of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) to carve $1.3 billion out of unemployment benefits to finance job training programs will not help the unemployed in the Okanagan—Shuswap where there are precious few jobs to be had.

No one in the House argues with the intrinsic value of job training initiatives. But in many regions of our country we also need a healthy dose of job creation.

By savaging the unemployment insurance benefits the Minister has disqualified thousands of our unemployed from receiving financial assistance. Others will be forced to pay for their own training. Does the Minister not recognize that while taking these training programs our unemployed still have to eat, or does she expect them to eat cake?

ASSISTANCE FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA POTATO FARMERS

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak in favour of the British Columbia Vegetable Marketing Commission's application for financial assistance on the 1988 potato crop. Members are certainly aware of the assistance offered for drought stricken crops, but are likely unaware of the disastrous problems cause by flooding in the Fraser Valley of British Columbia, including my riding of Delta. Due to these rains, some 8,000 tonnes of late potatoes were drowned out and never harvested. Eighty per cent of the producing area was affected, impacting negatively on 58 per cent of the provincial crop.

The 1988 floods are another in a series of hardships for these farmers. They have also been hit by years of low prices, and have twice been forced to pursue anti-dumping suits against U.S. producers. Although both of these suits were successful, the legal fees reached $120,000, with no government assistance.

I call on the Department of Agriculture to assist the potato farmers of Delta, as they attempt to recover from this ruinous 1988 crop year.

CALL FOR REJECTION OF DE GRANDPRÉ COMMISSION'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, let me point out to the House, particularly to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), part-time Minister of Agriculture, that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has come out strongly against the recommendations of the de Grandpré Commission as it relates to agriculture. In fact, Mr. Don Knoerr, the President of C.F.A. went so far as to say: "If I hadn't appeared before the Council myself I would question whether they had even talked to farmers".

The recommendations for agriculture in this report will not only hurt supply management, it will destroy it.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister to stand in the House today and reject those recommendations. If he is not prepared to do that, will he please have full consultations with farmers and their organizations before he makes any decision?

The constituents of Haldimand—Norfolk have worked hard for and depend on the stability of supply management. Once rights and freedoms are taken away they are very difficult to get back. My colleagues and I will not stand idly by and see that happen.

NATIONAL CHILD SAFETY WEEK

Mrs. Louise Feltham (Wildrose): Mr. Speaker, as you know, April 16 to April 22 is a very special week. It is National Child Safety Week in Canada. I can scarcely think of a value more important to any society than the safety of its children, and Canadian society is no exception.

It is my firm belief that the single most important resource of this rich country is our children, for it is they who will be the leaders and the decision-makers of tomorrow. Simply put, our children are our future.

The safety of Canadian children is an issue which concerns us every day of the year. But this week we remind Canadians that we all have a responsibility for our children's safety, a shared responsibility which will not end on April 22. No, each and every Canadian has a vital role to play each day in making Canada a safer place for our children to grow up.

Unfortunately, our children face many serious hazards every day and I implore Canadians everywhere to employ care and common sense—

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

Mrs. Feltham: —in caring for our children.

POLITICAL PARTIES

ADVERTISING PRACTICES

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the House to a $14,000 advertisement on page A-11 of today's The Globe and Mail. This advertisement contains a thoroughly repugnant picture of an infant shackled by a ball and chain. The text below this tasteless picture concerns the need to cut Canada's deficit.

Last November during the federal election campaign this country saw corporate Canada finance the free trade agenda of the Conservative Party through an unprecedented amount of advertising. Now that free trade is an unfortunate fact of Canadian life, it appears that corporate Canada is continuing to act as front men for Conservative policies. While our Parties may disagree on just how the deficit should be addressed, I think all Members would agree that ads such as this are distasteful, inappropriate and unacceptable to all Canadians. I call upon the Government to make this known to its supporters.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

TRIBUTE TO VOLUNTEERS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to take this opportunity to recognize the important contributions made by a group of valuable Canadians, namely, volunteers. Volunteers are being honoured across Canada through National Volunteer Week. It is also important for Canadians to use this week as an opportunity to realize just how important the role played by volunteers is to our society.

Each day volunteers make significant differences to the lives of those around them. Many organizations such as the Red Cross, firefighters, Canadian Cancer Society, Big Brothers and Big Sisters, would be unable to offer the same range or quality of services without volunteers.

As the Member of Parliament for Erie, I want to join my fellow Canadians in saying thank you to volunteers, for giving of their time and energy, and for making a difference.

ROYAL WINNIPEG BALLET

TRIBUTE TO CO-FOUNDER BETTY FARRALLY AND ARTISTIC DIRECTOR HENNY JURIENS

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, The Royal Winnipeg Ballet is in mourning following the loss this week of both its co-founder, Betty Farrally and its popular artistic director, Henny Juriens. On behalf of my colleagues and all Canadians who have enjoyed the Royal Winnipeg Ballet, I wish to express our sadness and sympathy to the families and friends of both these great contributors to Canadian culture. Fifty years ago, Betty Farrally co-founded a dance studio. The Royal Winnipeg Ballet evolved from the performance club established for its best students. Today, it is a company that all Winnipegers and indeed all Canadians take great pride in. We were all saddened to learn of the death of this great cultural pioneer.

• (1410)

Henny Jurriens and his wife Judy died tragically Sunday. Mr. Jurriens is remembered as an enthusiastic and popular member of the troupe. Both Betty Farrally and Henny Jurriens will be sorely missed by Canada's cultural community. Their contributions will long be remembered.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

TRIBUTE TO CANADIAN VOLUNTEERS

Mr. Yvon Côté (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, April 17th will mark the beginning of a special week honouring Canadian volunteers who so generously participate in social and community activities, and particularly in recreation, cultural, sport and service programs offered to the needy.

We don't always know the names of these volunteers, but we do know about the unlimited generosity and tireless efforts they put in their work. Unfortunately, we often ignore the expenses these people incur for the association and community they serve!

If the municipal, provincial or even federal governments were to pay the salaries and expenses of all the volunteers, they would be faced, I think, with costs beyond belief.

I for one would like the various government levels to be more sensitive to the financial needs of volunteer organizations.

In conclusion, I wish to express my gratitude to all the volunteers in the 52 cities and municipalities of my beloved constituency of Richmond-Wolfe.

VIA RAIL

SUPPORT FOR UPGRADING OF SERVICE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, there are precious few issues on which 89 per cent of Canadians agree, yet Gallup informs us that 89 per cent of us from every region of Canada want VIA Rail retained and upgraded. Given the tools to do the job, VIA could increase its service and ridership dramatically, yet the Tories have consistently sabotaged efforts VIA has made to improve itself as part of the Government's agenda eventually to destroy VIA Rail completely.

At this moment, the final assault is being led by Erik Neilsen, the Tory who has always called for VIA's end, as he holds hearings in an effort to mobilize popular opinion against VIA Rail. The Government and Mr. Neilsen have failed. Eighty-nine per cent of Canadians disagree with this Tory agenda item. They feel betrayed since, during the election campaign, the Tories said they would expand VIA. Now they are in the process of destroying it.

The Government should listen to the people, keep its promise, live up to its word and keep VIA Rail. If the Government must cut, may I suggest that it cut Mr. Neilsen.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SUPPORT FOR CHANGES TO PROGRAM

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) announced the Government's progressive new labour force development strategy and improvements to the unemployment insurance program which currently costs over $13 billion a year. The focus of the unemployment insurance program will shift from passive income support to a more constructive and active involvement in the labour market. More generous UI benefits for new parents and workers over 65 years of age were announced.

However, there will be an increase in the penalties for workers who quit without just cause, refuse a suitable job or are fired for misconduct. Penalties for fraudulent use of the UI program for workers and/or employers will be significantly increased.

I applaud the Minister. The proposed changes will help all Canadians cope better with the changing workplace of the 1990s and beyond while maintaining a caring and compassionate approach for those who are truly in need.

FISHERIES

RESTRICTIONS ON P.E.I. SNOW CRAB FISHERMEN

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, the 1989 snow crab management plan for the Gulf of St. Lawrence announced by departmental officials last week is grossly unfair. Under the plan, the P.E.I. snow crab fishermen are limited to set 30 traps in a small zone where stocks have been depleted and are greatly at risk. New Brunswick and Québec fishermen are allowed to set five times as many traps and their mobility is not restricted.

The plan calls for elimination of the fall season which will spell disaster for fishermen, fish plant workers and entire fishery communities in my riding. To add insult to injury, for the fourth year in a row, 14 permit holders are left without permanent licenses. I say to the Minister that the time is up. Give Prince Edward Island fishermen a fair deal now.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

FUTURE OF HOTEL MACDONALD IN EDMONTON

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton Southwest): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to the attention of the House the plight of the historical Hotel Macdonald in downtown Edmonton. This is a fine structure that has stood since 1915. It is a vintage historical landmark and was designated as such in 1985 after having sat idle for two years, having been phased out by the CN hotel chain. Since that time, it has been acquired by Canadian Pacific and is still awaiting restoration.

CP has recently announced a $500 million restoration program for its hotel properties not including the Hotel Macdonald. I call upon Canadian Pacific to either restore Hotel Macdonald and remove the eyesore from the heart of Edmonton or sell it to someone who will.

ELECTION CAMPAIGN STATEMENTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). On October 13, 1988, in the middle of the election campaign, the Prime Minister and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) appeared at what was a major Conservative election rally at the Hotel Newfoundland. My question is about what the Minister for International Trade said at that event. I want to quote from the St. John's Evening Telegram:

> The federal Government has no plans to make changes to the unemployment insurance program, Trade Minister John Crosbie said. "It's complete nonsense," he replied to questioning by reporters.

Then the reporters asked the Minister whether he had checked this with the Prime Minister, and the answer was:

> "You're damn right I asked him (the Prime Minister) about it and he said no. No one is planning any changes in the unemployment insurance program. There hasn't been any change proposed to us since we dealt with the Forget Commission. We're not contemplating any changes," Mr. Crosbie said adamantly.

To put it bluntly, either the Prime Minister did not tell the truth to the Minister for International Trade, or the Minister for International Trade did not tell the truth to Canadians in the midst of the election campaign. I want to ask the Prime Minister who is telling the truth in this particular instance.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is a Member who is very good at changing his own tune, because I will tell you what he said.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: On Tuesday, July 24, 1984—

Some Hon. Members: Answer the question!

Mrs. McDougall: You do not want to hear it, do you? This is what the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said when he was the Prime Minister of Canada in July, 1984. He said:

> Yes, we must sustain our unemployment insurance systems. It must be converted somewhat to a training and a retraining system.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I went on to say that never should those funds be taken out of the pockets of the unemployed. They should be paid for by the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I notice that neither the Prime Minister nor the Minister for International Trade had the guts to respond to that particular question.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member can put his question in appropriate language.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the headline in the St. John's, Nfld. newspaper during the election campaign was:

> Change unemployment insurance? "No way," says Crosbie.

The Minister for International Trade told the Canadian public that he had asked the Prime Minister whether there would be changes to the unemployment insurance program and that the Prime Minister had answered him that there would be none.

If the Minister believed that he was telling the truth, then he was misled by the Prime Minister himself. I would like the Prime Minister to tell us whether he misled the Minister or whether it was the Minister who misled the Canadian public.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the program that we announced provides $15 million more for the Province of Newfoundland.

• (1420)

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): It is unacceptable when a quotation like this is read in the House of Commons to the Prime Minister and the Minister for International Trade, both of them present at that meeting—I doubt whether the Minister of Employment and Immigration was there—and neither of them deigns to stand up and reply to this particular quotation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: That is out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I remind Hon. Members that there is no obligation on any Minister to answer.

An Hon. Member: We know that.

Mr. Speaker: I am reminding Hon. Members of what the rule is. Comments along that line are very close to being out of order. The right hon. gentleman may put his question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is not often we hear in this House about a $1.3 billion falsehood.

An Hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yesterday the Minister of Employment and Immigration was asked why the Government did not tell the truth during the election campaign. This is what she said to the House: "We were somewhat pre-occupied during the fall in terms of the kind of attention we were paying to ongoing issues". Too preoccupied to tell the truth!

My question is directed to the Prime Minister. When is he going to admit candidly that his Government lied to Canadians during the last election?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, because the Hon. Member cannot find any substance in this policy that is not in the interests of Canadians, he is becoming singularly abusive.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE SYSTEM—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, it is sad that the silence of the Prime Minister and the Minister involved prove beyond any doubt that working people were misled during the last election campaign.

I will give our national "Charlie Brown" a chance to correct himself.

My question is for the Right Hon. the Prime Minister. Following the statement by the Minister for International Trade that mentions beyond any doubt that he consulted you and that the people could be reassured that nothing would be changed in the unemployment insurance program to penalize them, why— Can the Prime Minister answer this question?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it improves the unemployment insurance program for Quebecers, among other Canadians. It is time that this Hon. Member admitted it.

CUTS IN BENEFITS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration, since the Prime Minister, by keeping silent, admits that he misled the people. The Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of State are trying to convince the Canadian people that the only ones to be penalized are dishonest workers who cheat unemployment insurance.

Can the Minister explain to us why a man or woman in Quebec City who has worked for 30 years and paid unemployment insurance premiums will have 9 weeks of benefits or $3,267 cut off with her new program?

[English]

Why are the workers of Hamilton, St. Catharines and Windsor losing ten weeks of benefits, or $3,000?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The Hon. Member is ignoring that there is a value in training for the people of Québec and other Canadians. Yes, we have changed some things within the unemployment insurance system just as that Government did when it went from a flat entry of eight weeks to a variable entry of 10 to 14 weeks. There is nothing different in what we today from what they did then, except we provide benefits for all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PROPOSED CHANGES IN UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE REGULATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. During the election campaign and Leaders' debate in the fall, I suggested to the Prime Minister the trade deal would jeopardize existing levels of Canada's regional development and social policies. The Prime Minister at that time denied the argument, but he went on to say: "The problem is not in the text. It is somewhere down the road".

The Prime Minister knows the proposed changes in the unemployment insurance regulations raised from 4 per cent to 6 per cent the level at which regional benefits can click in. Will the Prime Minister admit this move from 4 per cent to 6 per cent is not accidental, because 6 per cent is precisely the level that exists in the United States?

Will he also acknowledge that the harmonization of Canadian social programs down to the level of the United States has already started?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Let Barbara answer.

An Hon. Member: Does he speak?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am having trouble following the Leader of the NDP. Today he is being critical of things in the United States. A few days ago he was encouraging us to support Ronald Reagan and his tax policies.

The changes announced are designed to—

Some Hon. Members: Harmonize.

Mr. Mulroney: I will be happy to try and answer.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, they are designed to contribute to something I know offends socialist ears—the creation of new wealth and new jobs for Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: from September of 1984 until March of this year, unemployment went down from 11.6 per cent to 7.5 per cent. One million, four hundred thousand new jobs have been created for Canadians from one part of the country to the other. That is what we were elected to do. That is exactly what we will continue to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOCIAL PROGRAMS—PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT DURING ELECTION CAMPAIGN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister has an indefensible case, he answers a question that was not answered—he answers one that was not asked.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister is smiling. The Prime Minister promised Canadian workers that social programs would not be affected. It is the Prime Minister who has betrayed those social programs since the election. That is the case.

My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Does he stand behind what he said in the election campaign that social programs would not be affected? If that is the case, can the Prime Minister tell the people of Canada how we have changed the click-in point for regional unemployment insurance benefits to coincide with the United States? The Government has betrayed Canadian workers, and the Prime Minister should admit it.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): I do not think that providing jobs and better benefits for Canadian workers is a fundamental violation of social programs. It is making them better. It is a made-in-Canada policy. It recognizes regional disparities. The Member is caught in the old socialist ways, and the status quo does not work. That is why we are here and not you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

DURATION OF BENEFIT PAYMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, nothing so discredited the Government, after the election of 1984, as the experience of Canadians who found that, in 1984, the Government said one thing and did another thing. The Government is doing exactly the same thing this time.

I will ask the Prime Minister, who seems indifferent both to Canadian workers and the promises that he made, or the Minister, to deal with the following. Not only has the regional rate changed at which benefits click in to coincide with the United States, but also the duration for which Canadians can claim benefits coincidentally has moved downward to the U.S. level.

For example, will the Minister acknowledge that a Canadian worker from Vancouver Island who, prior to the announced changes worked for 20 weeks, was eligible for 50 weeks of benefits and is now eligible for only 39 weeks? Coincidence of coincidence, that is the same as Washington State.

Is that or is it not harmonization?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member does not recognize that the United States does not have a national system, and that we do have a national system. We have recognized regional realities in Canada historically. We have continued to do it in this program.

I might point out that the average duration that unemployment insurance is claimed is 22 weeks. We intend to get people back into jobs faster and into training programs faster in order that they can have the jobs of tomorrow. That is a Canadian policy, and it will continue to be a Canadian policy.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER FOR INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I want to return to the matter raised by the Leader of the Opposition earlier today. This question can only be answered by the Prime Minister, because it concerns an important matter of credibility in the Government.

Did the Minister for International Trade ask the Prime Minister to confirm that there would be no changes in the unemployment insurance system before October 14? Did he tell the Minister that there would be no such changes to the effect that "Mr. Crosbie said he asked the Prime Minister about the report and he said no, the Government has no plans to change the plan. No one is planning any changes in the unemployment insurance program."

I ask the Prime Minister, was he approached in this manner by the Minister for International Trade? Did he give that answer to the Minister?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the statement that I made—

Mr. Gauthier: Who is he answering for? Who are you answering for, the Prime Minister?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Charest: What are you complaining about?

Mr. Crosbie: I am answering for myself and for the Government, Mr. Speaker, in reply to a question asked by the hon. gentleman opposite.

The statement that I made on October 13 in reply to the suggestion that UI benefits were about to be cut, which was a suggestion that the opposition Leaders were making in the usual unscrupulous manner at that time, was absolutely correct. Those statements were complete nonsense. UI benefits were not about to be cut.

At the present time those benefits have not been cut, because over-all there are positive changes involving increases in benefits, as well as some changes in benefits in Newfoundland, as well as in Canada.

There was nothing planned at that time because the Minister of Employment and Immigration never produced any plans for these suggested changes until after the new year some time in February, and certainly not last October.

My statements are absolutely correct. They were in response to devious falsehoods being put about at that time by the opposition Leader.

REPORT OF QUERY DIRECTED TO PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is making the situation worse. The credibility of the Government is becoming even lower than it has been at any time before.

The Minister very clearly stated that it is complete nonsense. He asked the Prime Minister about the report, and he said: "No, the Government has no plans to make changes. You're damned right I asked the Prime Minister about it and he said no, no one is planning any changes in the unemployment insurance program".

I again ask the Prime Minister, was he approached by the Minister for International Trade? Did he give that answer to the Minister? If so, how can he justify these cruel changes today?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, everything that I said on October 13 was correct. It remains correct today. It will be correct tomorrow. It will be correct in five-years time.

As to whether or not I approached the Prime Minister, I am not going to inform the hon. gentleman when and how often I approach the Prime Minister, but it is a lot more often than he approaches the Leader of the Opposition.

TRAINING NEEDS OF WOMEN

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Nowhere in her announcement on Tuesday did the Minister mention the particular training needs of women, especially sole-support parents who are under-paid, under-educated, and often dependent on social benefits to provide for their families.

Even as the Minister spoke in the House, programs out there helping those women get training and jobs are being cut.

Why has the Minister failed to address the particular training needs of women properly, especially women with dependent children? What does the Minister intend to do to satisfy these training needs?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we have done as a Government, ever since we announced the Canadian Jobs Strategy in 1985, is take into account the particular needs of women. We are doing that with this program. Women will be the chief beneficiaries. They are the ones who need the training and who can take advantage of this training. While they do that, they will be provided with income support, with training support, with child care, and with transportation allowances. They will be the ones who will benefit from this.

REQUEST THAT WOMEN HAVE EQUAL ACCESS TO TRAINING

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, after four years of the Canadian Jobs Strategy, 5.5 million Canadian women earn under $15,000 a year. Women earn only 66 cents for every dollar that men earn.

This week the House learned that the private sector is not giving women an equal chance at jobs. Now the Minister wants to take away women's benefits. She wants to give them to the private sector, and she wants to trust the private sector to provide training for women.

Why is there no guarantee from the Government that women will have equal access to training and to good jobs?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the guarantee from this Government is that women have continued to be better off under this Government than they were in the past.

Mr. Allmand: Baloney, Barbara!

Mrs. McDougall: The parental benefits and the paternity benefits that we put into this program are specifically designed for women. The programs that are there will ensure that the business community gives women a chance to have their jobs and continue their jobs after they have borne children. It will ensure that they provide training for women, just as we do under the Canadian Jobs Strategy, where we have particular targets for targets that they are taking advantage of.

I have visited the training programs for women across the country and they are working well.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

BRITISH COLUMBIA FISHERY – PROCESSING OF FISH IN CANADA

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister for International Trade. The fishing industry in British Columbia is concerned, as all Canadians should be, at the prospect of losing our right to process Canadian salmon and herring in Canada. With regard to ongoing negotiations with the United States, will the Minister assure the House that his Government will reject the so-called Murphy 2 proposal which would allow the Americans to purchase fish directly from B.C. vessels without a Canadian landing requirement?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries and I have been engaged for a number of months now in dealing with the situation cited by the Hon. Member.

A GATT panel found that the present regulations, soon to be revoked, prohibiting any export of certain kinds of salmon from British Columbia, were contrary to the GATT rules. We accepted the GATT panel report.
