NEAR THE KING'S HIGHWAY. Bury me near the broad high-way
In the midst of the noisy town,
Where the rathe of wheels and the clatter of hoofs
Go thundering up and down;
For they trod on my heart with a me-ciless trend;
Let them t ample it now, as it lies with the dead,
In the dust of oblivion down.

Why should the early dews distil
On the grass that covers me?
And the bright drops hang like a woman's te
For a form she may not see;
When the tears I shed were as salt as brine,
and none came over to mingle with mine
In the days when such should be.

No 1 dig my grave by the crowded street
In the middle of traffic and trade:
Where men are winners and men are beat,
And fortunes are lost or made.
For I. while I lived, was wounded and torn,
And own in the cruel battle borne.
A prisoner, and betrayed. For flowers are meet for the loved and gay
In the joy of the marriage train;
And tears are idle, for joy can weep,
And rleasure as well as pain.
But a mundred life, it should never be named.
And the song is false from the lips that blamed,
and the hands have toiled in vain.

The turnouts are stunning. Few cities can boast of such drives as New York when they are fluc. A dozen avenues lead to the Park. A half dozen boulevards lead from the Park to the road. A dozen horses can drive abreast. There is no crowd and everything that has legs is in demand. The prospect is that the fluc sleighing will continue for some time to come. Vanderbilt has a little coterie of his own. The old Commodore looks like a Prince. Like Saul of Kish he sits head and shoulders above his associates. He dresses from head to foot in furs and drives like the wind. He leads, of course. Nobody who expects any points of the Commodore would pass on the road. The Vanderbilt clique, as they are called, men who serve him and do his bidding, comprise a lawyer or two, one of two clergymen and a handful of brokers. The old railroad King sits bolt upright, erect as a Mohawk warrior, his hair white as the snow over which he trayels. Away the party drive like Brombones and his gang, everybody yielding the road, for a man who can draw his check for seventy millions has the right of way. There are a thousand trotters on the road, and they make things lively.

refer to has a great quantity of cabs as eiegant as private turnouts. The price is 51 for any part of the city. But the system is what commends it to the public patronage. A cab can be summoned from any hotel in the city at any hour of day or night. The price is no more at midnight than it is at noon-day; during a or night. The price is no more at midnight than it is at noon-day; during a violent storm than it is in sunshine. If a driver is known to charge more than the regular fare he is instantly dismissed. This is probably the stepping stone to the cheap cab system of London into New York.

Dr. Spring's folks have one of the fluest church editices in the State; certainly, the finest location, with a reputation that would make the fortune of any man; has a very meagre congregation. The society want a mhilster overtopping as its steeple and as commanding as lts position. The third pulpit is the First Baptist pulpit. The edition is an elegant one of brown stone. It has a very superior location in upper New York. The pastor, Rev. T. D. Anderson, was well-known in the East from his long settlement at Roxbury. He was settled in lower New York, where he had a plain but large congregation. The substantial but homely editice was sold and a pretuitions structure excited up-town. The day the house was dedicated one of the prominent men said. "Yes, we have got one of the best edifices in town. Now we want a star preacher." The fate of the pastor was sealed from the start. A fair congregation was gathered, but the house was not full, the revenues were low and the gallerles yawned with emptiness. The first step toward the removal was the reducing of the salary. The pastor took offence at this and resigned, the congregation to take effect on the first of May. Who is the main to fill the pulpit, crowd the pews, raise the revenue, lift the debt, is a problem. To supply the want of first class preachers in England Spurgeon established his college. The great pastor does not think much of the present system of setting young men to learn to preach under thors who cannot keep an audience awake five minutes. Place him to learn to preach under thors who cannot keep an audience awake five minutes. Place him to learn to preach under thors who cannot keep an audience awake five minutes. "Why, this is it," said the primo basso, as the bar arrived and he joined in with a jar that made the inquirer's teeth chatter, "Jounce on a golden a-alter."

"Can't be possible," thought the inquirer; so turning to a shrill treble on his other hand, he said, "What is that last line that you all sing?"

"Last line? Oh, that is it; now, sir, jine in, 'Jounced her a golden altar."

It was too ridiculous to hear some thirty voices "Jouncing her" in this way, so after the singing was over the curious editor borrowed a hymn book of one of the choir and sooght the line in question, which he found read "John saw a golden altar."
