Yet my hon. friends behind me are to be condemned for advising a personal friend of their own what he should do in an election, while a Minister of the Crown, under a Reform Government, is to write letters and form alliances with the Ontario Government, and promise $8,000 for the township of Brudenell in order to secure votes for the Reform candidate. Then there is the case of Dr. Strange, of Kingston, and I think the hon. member for South Huron remembers that. Dr. Strange held a semi-official position, and his great crime was that in 1874 he voted for the then right hon. member for Kingston (Sir John A. Macdonald), who had no patronage to bestow, and nothing to give. That was his crime, and it is a crime, perhaps, in the eyes of the Reform party that men should stand by their leader, even when he has fallen. There was some discussion over it in this House, and also rather a serious discussion in court in regard to that case. I remember that the hon. member for South Huron read a letter to the effect that Dr. Strange went to the house of a voter and upon discovering that the man had voted for Mr. Carruthers, he told that voter that his wife need never enter his house again for medicine? The Reform Government could not stand such a threat as that. The idea that that unfortunate woman whose husband had voted for the Reform party, was denied the privilege of taking Dr. Strange's medicine, was so unpleasant that the hon. gentlemen opposite, then in power, administered a dose to Dr. Strange, and he immediately disappeared from the scene of action and was also deprived of his salary. Then take a case in this vicinity; hon. gentlemen remember that Mr. James Harvey was dismissed in 1876 from the charge of the works on the Madawaska River. The reason given was that he had, in 1871, caused financial loss to some lumbermen by carelessness. The member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) gave it as his opinion that the reason was that he had spoken disrespectfully of the Government. Turning to the debates of 1877 we find that Mr. Mackenzie said on 11th April of that year:

"There was never a clear case made out of any person neglecting his duties, but that person was dismissed without the slightest hesitation. He protested against anyone bringing up a case in the House when a man was removed for sufficient cause. He was quite sure that the hon. gentlemen opposite knew very well that it had not been a peculiarity of his own or of the Government to dismiss people for political reasons. They had great reason to do so on many occasions, and they had exercised a forbearance towards people in office that never was manifested by the hon. gentlemen opposite. They had allowed that forbearance to go a great deal too far in protecting men who had used their offices in order to injure the Government they served. But he could tell the hon. gentlemen opposite and all such office-holders that that was at an end."

The hon. gentleman also said:

"The remarks of the hon. member for North Renfrew were generally speaking correct. He did state to a deputation that called upon him, that he had been informed that this man had spoken most disrespectfully of the Government and himself, and he told that deputation, as he now told the House, that he would permit no public officer to speak disrespectfully of the Government they served."

The headsman's axe fell; the fiat went forth that Liberals would not permit even an expression of opinion on the part of officials. Why, Sir, had hon. gentlemen opposite been able to dismiss the whole electorate in 1878 they would have done it, for no Government that has ever been in power or ever will be in power were more disrespectfully spoken of and more summarily and disrespectfully ejected from office than was that Government when appealing to the country in that year. More than that, when you look at the case of Mr. Harvey, a man of position and influence, who has served the country twenty years, and who, since being reinstated, has filled a similar position and discharged his duties with every satisfaction, both to the Government and to the people of the district where he lived, I think it will be admitted that political feeling came in and that his dismissal was because Mr. Harvey had spoken against the Government or dared to remain a pronounced Conservative. Take again a case alluded to by the hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum), that of J. B. Smythe. He was superintendent of the southern section of the Welland Canal, dismissed on the 16th of January, 1874, by the personal order of the then hon. Minister of Public Works. On the 16th of January, 1874, a telegram from the Public Works, at Ottawa, directed: "Suspend John B. Smythe, because there are serious charges against him." He was suspended forthwith, although up to that time a faithful public servant. On the 21st of January a largely signed petition, bearing the names of many leading Reformers, asked that he might be restored. On the 3rd of February, Mr. Page, the chief engineer of canals, endorsed upon the petition: "Mr. Smythe, was, I believe, a foreman on the central part of the Welland Canal, but having no knowledge of the reason of his suspension, I am unable to say whether or not he should be reinstated." On the 20th of February, Mr. Smythe wrote, demanding an investigation, and in May Mr. Bodwell, the superintendent, wrote concerning the matter. On this letter the following endorsation appeared: "Will attend to this when I visit the canal. A.M." Brief, but expressive; in fact, all Liberal Ministers acted similarly; but the Minister of the Interior was more concise; he always disposed of cases with "No.—D. M.;" and "No.—D. M.," it was. A Grit was afterwards appointed, and it was subsequently discovered that the heinous offence of which Mr. Smythe was guilty was that he declared himself to be an out-and-out Conservative. He had a right to vote; but because he signified his intention of using his franchise he was dismissed and only restored to office five years afterwards. I refer to another case from Ontario: That of Lewis Hodgins. He was a gentleman respectably connected, of unimpeachable character, being a lighthouse keeper at Salmon Point, Prince Edward County, in 1874. He was charged with using abusive language towards the Government, in which the late Sir Albert Smith was Minister of Marine and Fisheries. A copy of the charge was sent to Hodgins, who replied:

"I beg to say that I did vote against Mr. Walter Ross at the elections in 1874; but as to using any violent or profane language concerning the present Government, I deny it altogether, and I furnish you with a statement signed by supporters of Mr. Ross, and all immediate neighbors, and who would have heard me if I had been guilty of any of the charges with which I am accused. Party feeling runs very high in this county, and this is done simply to injure a political opponent."

In corroboration of this the following certificate was forwarded to the Minister:—

"We the undersigned supporters of Walter Ross, M.P., for the county of Prince Edward, hereby certify that we are personally acquainted with Lewis Hodgins, lighthouse keeper, at Salmon Point, and we also certify that we never heard him use any abusive language concerning Mr. Ross or the present Ministry, but on the other hand we have heard him speak in their favor. We believe Mr. Hodgins is a faithful and efficient servant, and one who has discharged the duties of his office to the satisfaction of the public generally."

Twenty Reform supporters of Mr. Ross signed this, but he was dismissed by the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries and another man appointed. I desire now to show that these were not isolated cases, but that officials were doomed to submit to the guillotine, not only in Ontario but in Quebec and in Cape Breton as well as Nova Scotia generally, and at other points. I will take some Quebec cases. Here is the case of Philipe Loiselle, postmaster at Paspebiac. He was dismissed on mere suspicion; no evidence was produced showing that he had been guilty of any crime or offence against the postal regulations. He asked for an investigation, was refused, and that was all the satisfaction he got.

Mr. LANGELIER. He was dismissed by the present Government.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I can only inform the hon. gentleman that if he has been a close observer of the political history of Canada he will find this case mentioned; an investigation was asked for and refused, and although no charge was made against this postmaster he was dismissed.

Mr. LANGELIER. He was dismissed by the previous Government, he was reinstated by this Government and again he was dismissed by this Government.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. The hon. gentleman must see that I am quoting cases which occurred at the time when the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was in power. Then there was the case of Mr. Cyr, postmaster at Maria. Perhaps the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langelier) knows him. Then there was the case of Mr. Vallée, postmaster at St. Thomas, the son of a leading politician, afterwards member for Portneuf. The son was one of the ablest young men in the Province of Quebec, and because he was an able young man, and, unfortunately for himself, because he was a Conservative, his father was dismissed from office. Then there was the case of Mr. Jolicœur, postmaster at Crane Island, who was dismissed without any investigation whatever. In 1879, Mr. Vallée, member for Portneuf, stated in his place in Parliament that:

"During the general elections of 1878, one of the principal officers of the Dominion Government at Quebec had on the morning of the 17th of September declared to the employees under him: 'Gentlemen, if to-day you do not vote as you should, to-morrow you will be dismissed.'"

Here was a public official, receiving the public money contributed by the Canadian tax-payers generally, telling those other officials that if they did not vote for the Government candidate that day they would be dismissed. The next day, the 18th September, 1878, the employees remained on and the Government which made the threat were dismissed instead. In Quebec county, at the same election, one O'Brien, then drawing a large salary in the Customs at Quebec, left his official duties for days and weeks to canvass against the Conservative candidate. Captain Lavoie of the Government vessel Rimouski abandoned his boat to go to Rimouski to work against Sir Hector Langevin, the present Minister of Public Works. And so far back as 1874, the commander of the Government steamer Glendon violated his duties by using the boat on an electioneering tour along Gaspé Bay, collecting money to protest the election won by Dr. Fortin, the present able member for Gaspé.

Mr. MILLS. There was a boat of that sort used in Lambton in 1872.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I think that was a boat of larger size, and only wish it had been used with better effect. Then hon. gentlemen will remember the case of Régis Cardinal which came up in this House in 1879. Although hon. gentlemen opposite, and especially those who come from the Province of Quebec, knew that Régis Cardinal had in the election of 1878 interfered in the election of Jacques Cartier—whether he had anything to do with the celebrated ballot box case I do not know—but we know that he went to Mr. Cook, a contractor and urged that if he would vote for Mr. Laflamme he (Laflamme) would look after him and his contracts afterwards, and yet, despite the truth of these statements hon. gentlemen opposite had the audacity to bring up the case of Cardinal's dismissal in the House. The hon. member for South Huron said if it could be shown that any man had used his public position as an official to influence an election, he would be the first to dismiss him. The hon. gentleman's friends—I do not know that he did personally—were the first to take up Cardinal's case, and the first to condemn the Government for punishing him for interfering in an election. Now let us go to Nova Scotia for a short time. The late Mr. Howe once said that the smaller the pits the fiercer the rats fought. I find that the little Island of Cape Breton has seen some hard fighting politically, and men there have their misunderstandings and disagreements, many of them not merely political in their character, but personal. Hon. gentlemen will remember that Mr. Ross, Mr. Vail and Mr. Jones were Ministers of Militia at that time—a long line of chivalrous warriors, who believed in decapitating their enemies. With the exception of the assertion which was made that the hon. member for Digby once said that he wished the Fenians might come into Canada, so that he might be able to show what our men were made of——

Mr. VAIL. I never used such an expression.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. It was asserted that the hon. gentleman said so. I do not think he did, if he says he did not, but at the same time the assertion was made.

Mr. VAIL. It might be made by some very irresponsible man, but no responsible party ever made it.

An hon. MEMBER. Probably it was Mr. Jones.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. No, it was the hon. member for Digby, and it appeared in the papers at that time.

Mr. VAIL. I do not think such a thing appeared in the papers.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I do not wish to insinuate anything, I merely say that the hon. gentleman displayed a great deal more activity than his friends gave him credit for if he made the remark. But these gentlemen certainly believed in the torture of official decapitation in the Province of Nova Scotia. And in Cape Breton I have a long list of cases where such official decapitation took place; there was a perfect slaughter of the innocents there. I find in the list five pilot commissioners, five shipping masters, a postmaster, a collector of customs, a lighthouse keeper and a preventive officer. In fact business was suspended all along the line, for every man in the island who had an office was suspended.

Mr. MACKINTOSH.

Mr. MILLS. When was that?

Mr. MACKINTOSH. In 1874 and 1875. I do not think the hon. gentleman was then in office.

Mr. VAIL. Give the names and circumstances?

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I will give the hon. gentleman the names and also introduce him to his newly found friend Mr. Roche. In the shipping master's department: Captain McGregor, of North Sidney, was replaced by Mr. Corbett; Captain Brookman, of Port Sidney, by Mr. William Oliver; R. McDonald, of Lingan, by Mr. Roche (the gentleman of whose welfare the leader of the Opposition is so solicitous); Captain McNeil, of Little Glace Bay, was dismissed and reappointed, but again dismissed.

Mr. VAIL. When was this done?

Mr. MACKINTOSH. The hon. gentleman was in the Province then and should remember the names.

Mr. VAIL. Give the dates.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. It was between 1875 and 1876; the hon. gentleman can look them up at his leisure. Jos. McPherson, of Cow Bay, was replaced by R. Macpherson, and one, by some mistake or other, voted for the Reform candidate, and by some mistake or other he was reappointed; and to add to the ghastly irony of the economical cry—for the Reform party always do everything with a view to economy—they put the Conservative out of the office, and what took place? They added another to the list and appointed two in place of one.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Dandelions.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. The hon. gentleman may talk about dandelions, but it is far preferable to belong to that honorable brigade than to a brigade of dandy liars. When these hon. gentlemen came up to Ontario, what did they say? They said: We found scores and scores of men appointed to offices in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and we deemed it proper in the interest of public economy, and in order that we might cover the expenditure by the revenue—we found it necessary to dismiss those men. But when we look at the records of the country, it is found that in every case where they dismissed a Conservative, either his office was filled by a Reformer, or else the office was split in two, and two Reformers put there. We find in the case to which I was alluding, that W. H. McAlpine was appointed to Louisburg, and they dismissed five, and in the interest of economy they appointed six at the same salary. The collector of customs at New Glasgow filled a position at $200 a year, and to the new man whom they appointed in the interest of economy, they gave $600. Then, in 1876 the Reform party became bold, either because they had been losing a number of elections, or else that they hoped by announcing the policy that "to the victors belong the spoils" they would induce the honest yeomanry of the country to stand by them. In 1876, John Baine, Angus Morrison and Charles L. Campbell were dismissed from office as landing officers at Great Bras d'Or, Cape Breton—because they voted for the opposition candidate, and the terrible offence of which young Campbell was guilty was that he voted confidence in his own father. These hon. gentlemen were so amazed at a son voting confidence in his father, that they dismissed him on the ground that he was too young; and then, by way of proof that they did everything honestly and above board, they dismissed three men on the alleged ground that they were too old. There is no report in the Department against them; they asked for an investigation, but they got no satisfaction, being told that it was because of their age. One was sixty-two, another seventy-two, and the other twenty-three; and yet they dismissed young Campbell because he voted for his father, one of the most respected men in Nova Scotia, or in this House; and to day they try to desire to pillory two hon. members of this House because an hon. member advised a friend to do what was right—advised him that he had better keep clear of all entanglements, and vote for the Government candidate. But hon. gentlemen may ask for the proof of all this. I am here to give the proof. Some hon. gentlemen opposite were in this House in 1879, when the proof was produced; when Mr. Huntington in his place challenged those opposite to give proofs, and Mr. Robitaille, then a member of this House, gave several instances, one after another, which none of them denied. I also find that Mr. Macdonald, of Cape Breton, read from official documents as to a case in his county in which the unfortunate wrote:

"I have been superseded in the way office very suddenly, and without warning. Would you be pleased to favor me with the cause of my dismissal?"

Here was an honest, straightforward man putting an honest, straightforward question to the department, and here is the answer:

"I am desired by the Postmaster General to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 1st instant, and in reply, beg to inform you that it was found expedient in the interest of the public service to supersede you in the charge of the way office in the county of Cape Breton."

That was the reply. It was in the interest of the public service to supersede him without giving him any character, to dismiss him in disgrace, to send him out to be sneered at by his neighbors; and yet hon. gentlemen opposite assert my hon. friends have on this occasion been guilty of a great crime because they advised a friend not to put himself in a false position, and to beware of the terrible results of the policy applied by the Reform party to their opponents. I have mentioned this case simply to show where Government coercion was used either directly, or through the members. But there are cases of coercion on record which gentlemen cannot deny. I take the case of A. McIntosh, a railway mail clerk of Glengarry. In the local elections of 1875, Mr. McDonald, Postmaster General, wrote to Mr. Mowat:

"We are doing all we can for you. Eastern counties solid."

This is the way he did it:

P.O. INSPECTOR'S OFFICE, MONTREAL, 7th Jan, 1875.

"To A. McINTOSH, Railway Mail Clerk, Island Pond.

"The Postmaster General has been pleased to grant you ten days' leave of absence, dating from Friday next, the 8th inst.

"E. F. KING, P.O.I."

The Postmaster General deemed proper, in his great kindness and consideration, to allow him ten days' leave of absence, because there was an election pending in Glengarry, where this young man was popular and had a large number of connections. But, although that was not put in the letter, his eyes were opened when he got to Montreal, where he read:

"P.O. INSPECTOR'S OFFICE, MONTREAL, 7th Jan., 1875.

"Memo. for Mr. McIntosh,

"Mr. Murphy will show you the memo I have just addressed to him. You will doubtless have received a letter from the Postmaster General, who expects to see you at Alexandria on Saturday. You thus, of course, continue west at once, on Saturday.

"E. F. KING, P.O.I."

Here was the Postmaster General himself instilling into the mind of an official the worst kind of corruption—corruption paid for out of the public exchequer—corruption which, if it succeeded, would end in producing absolute chaos in this country. We find the Postmaster General of that day ready to degrade himself by leaving his office and going to Alexandria to meet a clerk to see how, by means of corruption, an election could be carried in the county of Glengarry. When the Postmaster General met young McIntosh, what did he say? That he heard that he had a great deal of influence in Glengarry, and he asked him to take ten days' holidays, and go quietly through the county canvassing it for the Government candidate. Well, Sir, this young man declined the offer; he said he was a Conservative, and could not face his friends if he deserted his party; he said besides that, that he never would desert his party; and for that act of bravery and loyalty to his chief, his junior was appointed over him. That was an election for the Local House. Then came an election for the Commons, in which Mr. McNab was the Government candidate, and Dr. McMillan, the Opposition candidate. A letter was again written to Mr. McIntosh offering him promotion, but he refused to oppose Dr McMillan, and then the following letter was written:—

"P. O. INSPECTOR'S OFFICE, MONTREAL, 13th July, 1875.

"Mr. A. McINTOSH, Railway Mail Clerk, Island Pond,

"SIR,—I beg to inform you that I am advised by the Secretary of the Department that the Postmaster General has been pleased to dispense with your further services as railway mail clerk. Will you please therefore transfer to Mr. Wm. Murphy at Island Pond, your mail keys and other post office property that you may possess.

"Yours very truly,

"E. F. KING, P.O.I."

After the elections, because McIntosh would not work in the interest of Mr. McNab, and because he worked for Dr. McMillan, he received his dismissal from the Reform Government, some supporters of which are to-day condemning an hon. member because he wrote in the most generous spirit, advising his friend not to interfere in the election unless he voted for the Government candidate. Here is a telegram which was sent by Mr. McDonald, the Postmaster General, to the postmaster at Carillon in the election between my hon. friend the member for Argenteuil, (Mr. Abbott) and Dr. Christie:

"You are reported as taking a very active part against the Government candidate for Argenteuil county. I will only add, I think you are making a mistake. Government officials should not oppose Government candidates.

"D. A. McDONALD."

And because my hon. friends from Cape Breton make the same assertion, and give their friends the same advice, hon. gentlemen have for six weeks been gibbetting these gentlemen in newspapers, placing their names upon the Order paper, postponing day by day their case, and now bringing it up at the end of the Session, when they know there can be no ample examination into the charge. Hon. gentlemen will remember that in 1874 the Government banks used coercion. They will remember the coercion exercised by the Hon. John Simpson, when $400,000 was deposited in the Bank of Ontario for electioneering purposes, and we all remember the evidence given by that lamented gentleman when he was in the witness box before a jury. He said: "I mesmerised them in batches of fifteen and sixteen, and turned a hundred that night at Glen's." I hold that was not simply Government coercion, but far worse than Government coercion, because the public money went to pay that expenditure—went to meet the loss of interest upon such deposits. Look back to the election in Muskoka in 1872. We have all heard of D. M. Card, who figures at every election, and whose name appears in every page of the Public Accounts in Ontario. That gentleman is ubiquitous and a reformer of Reformers, because, whenever he gets a chance, his hand is in the public purse. He was sent to do work in Muskoka for the Ontario Government. He took a letter from Mr. Paxton, M.P.P. for Peterboro', to Mr. Cockburn, the Grit candidate for Muskoka. I will not read the whole letter because it will take too long, but in it Mr. Paxton was told: "You will find D. M. Card a splendid man in elections." He was found a capital man in the elections, and the following year we find his name figuring in the Public Accounts of Ontario to the extent of $3,500 for colonisation roads. But there is another case I desire to refer to. The leader of the Opposition brings this charge and is supported by his friends. He poses as a purist, as a gentleman whose hands would never be soiled by an act of corruption; but I will say, what I would say to his face if he were here, that he allows others to stain their hands while he pulls the wires and endeavors to keep his reputation clear. He does not take the responsibility of the actions of his supporters and protect them as a brave and chivalrous leader would, but sacrifices his friends for the sake of protecting himself. I go back to the entrance of the hon. gentleman into official life. We all remember the terrible Proton scandal, and I will read a telegram which was produced in evidence before a committee of the House, and which would have been produced officially, as official evidence, in the Sessional Papers of Ontario, had not the Reform Government, when they got a subservient majority in Ontario refused to print the report, and to day one cannot find in the Ontario Sessional Papers the report I have now in my possession. I am glad I have it, and will take this occasion, as hon. gentlemen opposite have brought up a discussion as to the purity of parties, to put it on record. On the 23rd December, 1871, this telegram was sent to Adam Oliver, M.P.P. fort West Durham, then M.P.P. for West Bruce:

"Where is Lewis? He is wanted in Proton at once. Can you start him to-night? Most important.

"J. K. KERR."

Mr. Kerr is brother-in-law and partner of the hon. member for West Durham. And what was Lewis wanted for?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Immense.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I challenge hon. gentlemen to deny a single point I have made. I am reading from the report of the committee, and challenge them to deny it. Hon. gentlemen will remember that that committee was moved for in the House. That committee was given, and it was then re-arranged so that the Grits could put upon it more reliable friends. But despite that, the committee reported as follows:—

"The Government of Ontario, in order to defeat A. W. Lauder, Esq., in South Grey, resorted to the unconstitutional practice of employing Government employees to canvass the electors of Proton. Mr. Lauder moved for a committee to enquire into the circumstances, but Mr. Blake thought fit to name his own committee. The committee, after hearing the evidence, unanimously report as follows:—

"'That the evidence adduced before the committee, confirms the statement made in the affidavits of John McDowell, John Abbott, William Hughes, William Robinson and James Hay, in so far as regards the interference of John W. Lewis, a Government land valuator, with the recent election in South Grey, and that the said Lewis made the statements to certain electors in the township of Proton, which are set forth in said affidavits.'"

Those affidavits stated that Lewis was a Government official, that he was sent by members of the Government, not to coerce the electors, but to advise them, that he was a valuator of the land and used his position to coerce the electors into supporting the Government candidate.

An hon. MEMBER. When did that happen?

Mr MACKINTOSH. The hon. gentleman is perfectly well acquainted with the facts, and I am satisfied were he standing on a public platform to-day he would defend every one of them.

Mr. McCRANEY. Give us a little of the Pacific scandal.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. This was in 1871-72.

Mr. McMULLEN. Give us a little about printing contracts.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. The reason I allude to these facts is that I have to go back to the time when hon. gentlemen were in power. So seldom have they been in power and so many years have yet to come before they will be in power, that they cannot blame me if I am unable to find any other period of their official life than that referred to.

An hon. MEMBER. They are in office now.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I would advise the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) to keep very quiet.

Mr. MACKINTOSH.

Mr. McMULLEN. Tell us about printing contracts.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I hope the hon. gentleman will never get anything more serious than a printing contract before he leaves the city. The report proceeds:

"That the said John W. Lewis was at the time of such interference by him, in the employ of the Government as a land valuator. That the said John W. Lewis had with him, at the time of the election in South Grey, the book which he originally used while valuing the lands in the township of Proton, and from which the books returned to the Crown Lands Department were made up. That the said Lewis was telegraphed to go to Proton by Adam Oliver, M.P.P., while he was engaged in Houghton in the discharge of his duties as a Government land valuator, and that such telegram was sent in consequence of a receipt of a telegram from J. K. Kerr, barrister, of Toronto, in reference to said Lewis going to Grey. That subsequent to the receipt by said Lewis of said telegram from said Oliver, the said J. K. Kerr and he met at the railway station at Hamilton (on the return of the said Lewis from Houghton) and subsequently during the evening of the same day, the said J. K. Kerr, in Toronto, furnished the said Lewis with $25 to assist in attempting to secure the defeat in South Grey, of A. W. Lauder, M.P.P."

An hon. MEMBER. How much?

Mr. MACKINTOSH. $25, but his regular salary went on. At that time, you could buy Grits very cheap. They were more plentiful than at present.

Mr. MILLS. They were not Grits; it was the other side he bought.

Mr. MACKINTOSH:

"That no evidence has been adduced to show that the Hon. E. Blake knew that Lewis was going to Grey, or that he had any communication whatever with him."

No evidence was aduced. Mr. Kerr, his brother-in-law, sitting in his office, evolved this out of his own imagination, got up from his chair, telegraphed to Mr. Oliver, met Lewis at the train, gave him $25—and the leader of the Government knew nothing whatever about it! But more:

"That evidence has been adduced to show that the said Lewis, on the night before he proceeded to South Grey, had a personal interview at the American Hotel, in Toronto, with the Hon. Archibald McKellar, Commissioner of Public Works, and a member of the Ontario Government

"That at the time of the said interview, the said Hon. Archibald McKellar knew, or during it learned, that the said Lewis was going up to South Grey to assist in attempting to secure the election of N. Dickey, the candidate who was running in opposition to A. W. Lauder, M.P.P., and that at that time the said Hon. A. McKellar knew that the said Lewis was a Government land valuator."

Here we have it brought home by a partisan committee appointed by the hon. gentleman, then leader of the Government, the member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), that Mr. McKellar, his Commissioner of Public Works, knew that Lewis was a Government land valuator, and knowingly sent him into South Grey in order to coerce the electors of that county, knowing also that he took with him copies of the Crown lands books. Yet hon. gentlemen would vote that perfectly pure and honest. There is not one—nay, perhaps there are a few who would not do it—but the majority of them would say that was angelic in its inspiration, and that my hon. friends, the members for Cape Breton, have been guilty of the blackest crime, because one of them simply wrote to a friend not to vote against the Government candidate, because he would likely be dismissed, for the reason that the patronage would belong to Mr. McDougall, one of the members for that district, if the board was changed at all. Then the report goes on:

"That, at the said interview, the said Hon. A. McKellar assured the said Lewis that the Blake Government would deal liberally with the electors in Proton, and that it was their policy to carry out with reference to the valuations in the county of Grey the same policy which they advocated while in Opposition.

"That no evidence has been produced before the committee connecting any other member of the Government with the South Grey election."

Here was a Minister of the Crown, a colleague of the hon. member for West Durham, found guilty of sending a land valuator out to coerce electors, and, with this evidence on record, hon. gentlemen opposite ask the House, and through the House the country, to believe that the Conservative party is guilty of coercion in elections, guilty of degrading the electorate, guilty of using their power in a tyrannical manner. Why, the ballot was a protection for Mr. Roche, but the fact is he must have publicly said he was opposing the Conservative candidate, thereby coming within the rule laid down by the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright). Mr. Dodd warned him against doing it, warned him against using his office, against using his influence with pilots, for he must have been doing that.

Mr. MILLS. No.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. No?

Mr. MILLS. He must have been asked for his vote by the other side?

Mr. MACKINTOSH. Does the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) imagine that the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Dodd) followed him round and watched to see who asked him to vote? Mr. Dodd told Mr. Roche, who virtually asked him for advice afterwards, what the rule was, that the patronage belonged to the member, and that, if any changes took place he would get his dismissal, he would be removed, he would lose his office. That being so, why does the hon. gentleman try to make out that there was anything wrong with regard to my hon. friend? I shall not detain the House any longer.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman has said nothing about the Weeks case yet.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I do not think, as far as that case goes, that there was any Government coercion. I have not said anything about the Weeks case, but I am reminded by the interruption of the hon. gentleman of the case of O'Brien, who went into Lennox with his dark lantern, who sat in a room, and, when the victims were brought in, turned his dark lantern on them, and, as he identified his men, the cash of the Reform party of Toronto was paid over for votes. That was proved in court, and yet the hon. gentleman asks what about the Weeks case? The hon. gentleman should remember that there are cases after cases in which they have been guilty of these offences, and at every period of their offence, whenever a great corruptionist is identified, he is either a relative of or a Reformer who holds a public position from the Reform party. Who are their champions to-day? Who are the frontispieces of the Reform party to-day? The very men whom the courts of law have condemned for corruption, and yet my honorable friend from Bothwell falls back on the Weeks case. I could mention case after case. There was the case in Toronto where the law clerk was sent away because he was afraid of an investigation. When the hon. gentleman talks about Weeks, I ask him to stamp O'Brien on his escutcheon, Jimmy O'Brien as they call him there, who is sitting in the library, doing nothing, drawing his salary, and is used by the Government of Ontario for elections, making promises of office to the people of Lennox, giving them money, violating all the rules of Parliament and every law of the land. Hon. gentlemen opposite would defend that, and to-day because my hon. friend from Cape Breton cautions a man against being too active in an election and voting against the Government candidate, because he does what all hon. gentlemen opposite have been guilty of, a quarter of what they have been guilty of, he is to be condemned and consigned to oblivion. Their record is too well known, and I have placed these cases on record in order to get them in the concrete. They will go to every part of the Dominion, and the people will see, as they always do when we discuss public affairs, that the Conservative party is at all times prepared to defend itself and to give fair play to all men, and I do not hesitate to say the country will consider that, in holding my hon. friends up to public execration for six weeks past, a great wrong has been done. They have not committed the wrong, but wrong has been done to them. If they had committed a crime, they should have been indicted immediately on the meeting of the House, but hon. gentlemen opposite kept the papers in their hands; they said they had been corresponding with Mr. Roche, they said that the evidence was damaging against those hon. members, and yet—knowing had they violated their positions as members of Parliament, they should be tried and forthwith suffer the penalties of their offence—they kept the documents back, they kept the charge hanging over them, they sent the papers over the country condemning them, and now the House is about to prorogue, they indict these gentlemen and endeavor to injure them. I do not think they will injure them. I think the remarks of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in explaining this case, will be satisfactory to all men, and I trust, so far as hon. gentlemen opposite are concerned, they will take all these cases that have come before the House this Session and seriously consider the consequences. What have they produced? They have produced only acrimony, ill-feeling and misunderstanding. The member for South Grey laughs. I dare say he would laugh if his nearest friends were suffering, but let hon. gentlemen remember not only those who are present but the hearts at home they are lacerating. Let them think of the mothers at home and the children at home who are shocked by the charges preferred, who are pained by the ruthless attacks made upon those they have loved and respected. When they can do that, they will be fit and worthy members of Parliament; and I feel when such a marvellous change takes place the result will be that they will no longer remain with their present party. I will not trouble the House longer. I seldom occupy the time of Parliament at any great length, but think it right to place this statement on the official records of the House.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Tell us more about Proton.

Mr. ORTON. I desire to move an amendment to the motion before the House. It is this:

That all the words after the word "that" to the end of the question be left out and the following be inserted instead thereof:—

The Order for the second reading of Bill (No. 104) to amend the Canada Temperance Act of 1876, be now read.

Mr. Speaker, in moving this amendment——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman is out of order.

Mr. ORTON. I think I am perfectly in order. The course I have taken may appear an extraordinary one, but the importance of the question, which must be admitted by all in this House, is a sufficient excuse for my course. The Session is now drawing to a close, and the questions involved in the various amendments to the Canada Temperance Act are of the greatest importance to a large class of people. Numerous representations have been made to this House from large portions of our people in reference to this important question. Some have prayed that amendments be made to the Canada Temperance Act to make it more effective, and this is a very important phase of the question. It has been shown by many representations to this House that so far the Act has been utterly inoperative. We have had memorials, not only from a large number of electors in this country, but from municipalities where the Act has been tried, and it is found by these memorials that the Act has not been as useful as its advocates hoped it would be. We are all thoroughly alive to the importance of doing away with the evil of intemperance, and if amendments can be made to this Act that will make it more effective in that direction, I think they should receive the consideration of this House, and that even at this late period of the Session this question should be taken up. I will read t you one of the reasons why I have introduced a measure for the amendment of the Canada Temperance Act. It is a resolution of the town council of Orangeville in my own county, one of the largest towns in that district. They have had the Act in operation for one year. The electors of the town of Orangeville voted for the Canada Temperance Act by a large majority, about two to one, and after the experience of one year their representatives in the town council passed the following resolution :—

"Whereas the Scott Act has been in force here from the 1st of May last without furthering the cause of temperance or morality, and at the same time a large monetary loss to the town.

"That we believe an Act of Parliament cannot be properly enforced where a large number of the people are opposed to its working, and only tends to educate the people to be law-breakers rather than good citizens;

"That we believe the only successful course for temperance people to pursue is moral suasion, and that a well regulated License Act is far superior as a temperance measure to any Act of total prohibition. Therefore be it resolved :—

"That a wise course for the Federal Parliament to pursue at the present Session would be to amend the Scott Act by allowing the issue of a wine and beer license and that the clerk be instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to Dr. Orton to present to the Government."

That was one reason why I introduce the present measure. I will also read what the town council of Milton stated in reference to this subject. That council sent the following petition to this Parliament :—

"To the Honorable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled.

"The petition of the undersigned council of the town of Milton humbly showeth :—

"That whereas the town of Milton and the county of Halton are under the Canada Temperance Act of 1878, commonly known as the Scott Act.

"And whereas as the welfare of the town of Milton demands that the representatives of the people shall exercice their thoughtful and serious convictions of the value of the aforesaid law, it is hereby

"Resolved—That it is the opinion of this council that, after a trial of the Scott Act extending over a period of four years, and based upon the very strongest evidence and our own observation daily, notwithstanding the lost of revenue consequent upon this law being in force, the results are that the town has been seriously injured; the drunkenness has increased instead of diminished; that the drinking of intoxicating liquor has not been confined to those who, before the Act came into force, were considered habitual drunkards, but has made fearful havoc among our young men, who have been inticed into shebeens, as well as plied with liquor on the streets; that these shebeens have been the cause of serious immorality in our midst, and that, owing to these undoubted facts, which may be verified by anyone desirous of so doing, it is almost impossible for the local authorities to maintain that condition of law and order which is desirable, and which was the wonted condition of our town before the advent of the Scott Act. Therefore this Council prays your honorable body to remove the cause of so serious a scandal from our midst :—

"1st. By repealing the Canada Temperance Act of 1878.

"2nd. Or granting the right to bring on a repeal vote on a petition signed by one-third of the electors in any constituency in which it is in force.

3rd. Or amending the said Act so as to permit the sale of ale, beer, and light wines, and your petitioners will ever pray."

Now, Sir, I might read any number of memorials of the same character. I have one in my hand from the municipality of Alliston, another from the municipality of Seaforth. I will just read the one from the municipality of Alliston :

"The memorial of the council of the corporation of Alliston, in the county of Simcoe, respectfully showeth :—

"The municipality of Alliston and the county of Simcoe are under the operation of the Canada Temperance Act of 1878, known as the Scott Act, from which much revenue is lost, both in the municipality and the remaining municipal corporations in the said county of Simcoe;

"That against the falling off of receipts, there is no corresponding gain, nor as a matter of fact, any gain whatever.

"On the contrary close observation and undoubted testimony establish the fact that the operation of the Scott Act in this village is a great blow to morals,—that drunkenness has increased, that the sale of intoxicants is not confined to a limited number as heretofore having largely gone into the hands of the lawless who have opened up disreputable shebeens in which outlaws are sheltered despite the prohibitive character of the Canada Temperance Act of 1878.

"That in view of the upper failure of this measure to reach the end it professes to aim at, it is well-nigh impossible for the local authorities to maintain that desirable condition of law and order which was the wonted state of affairs in Alliston previous to the inauguration of the Scott Act.

"Wherefore the council of the corporation of the village of Alliston humbly and respectfully pray that Your Excellency will remove the cause of the many troubles the Scott Act has caused by having the said Act repealed, or by amending it so as to legalise the sale of ale, beer and light wine in counties where the Canada Temperance Act is inforce."

Now, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the amendment that I have brought before this House, it is for the purpose of amending the Scott Act so as to allow the sale of beer and light wines of a certain strength, wines of a certain per-cent. of alcoholic strength, and beer of a strength of 7 per cent. I wish to state this in order that the House may be possessed of the intentions and character of the amendment. In the second part of the Bill, I propose that in counties where the Act has been in operation, and is in operation now or is about to be put in operation, it shall not come into force in those counties, but after the lapse of one year the electors of such county or city, or such electoral district, may, upon petition of one-fourth of the electors qualified to vote, obtain a new election in order that the people may decide whether they will allow beer and light wines to be exempted from the operation of Canada Temperance Act. In reference to the probable effect of this amendment, I desire to state, in the first place, that by such an amendment of the Scott Act, the temperance party would obtain a large accession to their strength, a large accession of people to assist them in carrying the law into effect; and even the people engaged in the trade would assist them in carrying it out. It would be in their interest to do so. There is not an hotelkeeper, but it would be in his own interest to abstain from selling ardent spirits, because it is more profitable to sell beer and light wines; and also because a provision could be made, under the licenses granted them, that bonds should be given to a very large amount, which would no doubt be carried out by the local authorities, so that in the event of an infringement of the law, the parties would loose their licenses and would have to pay a heavy sum by way of forfeitures. So, everything goes to indicate that permission to sell beer and light wines would do great and permanent good to the cause of temperance. If, after that Act had been in force for a certain length of time, it was bound to be inoperative, then the only other course open would be total prohibition. That gives the only proper mode by which this evil can be done away with—to prevent the manufacture and importation of spirits of all kinds. I have always maintained that in my opinion that is the only course likely to succeed, and if that was done, the honest and proper way would be to compensate those who have invested largely in the manufacture of ales and beer and alcoholic beverages. What is the character of the present law? It prevents the sale of wine and beer in those districts where the Act is passed. On this point I may refer to a judgment recently given in the State of Kansas. A brewer brought an action in regard to this very question and the decision given by the judge was that the State had no right whatever to prohibit the manufacture and sale of an article of that kind or to prohibit the business without awarding some compensation; and the judge gave very many strong and able arguments in support of his decision, which, were it not so late an hour, I would read to the House. I call the attention of the House to that fact. It is a question whether the Canada Temperance Act in its present shape is constitutional, and can be at all carried out. I therefore say that the only possible way to cure this evil is to have a prohibitory liquor law, and the only honest way to carry that out is to give a fair compensation to those who have been carrying on the business in accordance with the law. I ask the House to go into the consideration of the amendments to the Canada Temperance Act. Before doing so I had hoped that the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) who has introduced a motion also amending the Canada Temperance Act with the object of making it more effectual, would have had his Bill brought forward. I do not desire to override that Act, but I wish to have these amendments introduced, and I believe they will be effectual amendments, and such as will commend themselves to the country at large.

Mr. ALLISON. Notwithstanding the amendment of the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Orton) it appears to me that in justice to the hon. members for Cape Breton (Mr. Dodd and Mr. McDougall) this question should be first settled, and while I do not desire to weary the House with a lengthy speech I desire to offer a few remarks in reply to the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) and also corroborate some of the remarks of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Mackintosh) with respect to dismissals in Nova Scotia by the Government presided over by the hon. member for East York. I take this opportunity of saying that in the county which I represent not a single dismissal was made by the Government of the present Premier from 1867 down to 1873, and that during the régime of the Mackenzie Administration in three Departments, which I distinctly recollect—the Department of Railways and Canals, the Department of Marine and Fisheries and particularly the Post Office, a number of dismissals were made solely for political reasons. In some instances, particularly with respect to the Post Office Department, those who were dismissed were among the young men of the county and among those against whom no charge was made or could be made of malfeasance in office. They were dismissed on political grounds and to make room for violent political partisans of the Reform party. It will be remembered that shortly after the advent of that party to power it was announced by its leader that he would "elevate the standard of political morality and conduct public business on principles which honest men could approve and by practices which could bear the light of day." And it remained for that party to commence the dismissal of officials for political reasons. Those gentlemen had come into power with an immense majority at their back, with a splendid arena in which to exhibit the scrupulous and manly virtues they professed, with a commanding position on which to "elevate the standard of public moralty," and with none to oppose but a party that was so routed that it could not rally, and so trampled on that it could not rise for twenty years; a party which they pronounced not only injudicious but infatuated in retaining as its leader a general who, it was their boast, was so wounded that he would never be able to recover. After five years of such exceptionally favorable opportunity and trial they at length came before the tribunal of the people of Canada, in whose intelligence and impartial justice as their judges they had expressed the utmost confidence, day after day, down to the very hour of trial, and what was the result? The result, as you know well, was that the very party which these gentlemen only five short years before pronounced to be routed, shattered and demoralised, with the selfsame leader at its front, came into possession of the field. And at the next meeting of Parliament, the very man on whose political neck it was their boast they had their triumphant heel for the term of his natural life; the very man as to whom they confidently and contemptuously boasted that he would never again occupy the exalted position of the premiership, again walked into this Commons House, by the will of the people, as Premier of Canada, with two-thirds of the members of this august body at his back. And when he returned to power what was his conduct with regard to political dismissals? I recollect very well, and if the hon. member for Halifax, the Deputy Speaker of this House, is present he will recollect very well, a meeting which the supporters of the Government, elected in 1878 from Nova Scotia, held, when they went to the Premier, not for the purpose of obtaining the dismissal of political opponents, but for the purpose of obtaining the reinstatement of those who had been dismissed, wholly and solely on political grounds. The supporters of the Government from Nova Scotia met to demand, or to request, as I believed then, and as I believe still, justly to request, the reinstatement of those whose dismissal was solely due to political consideration. What was the reply which the Premier of the Government gave? It was as nearly as I can recollect in these words: "I am exceedingly sorry if any of our own friends have been unfairly treated or unjustly dismissed, but so opposed am I to the principle of political dismissals that I would rather, if possible, provide for such of our friends as had been treated in that manner in some other way, and allow those who have been appointed to those places remain where they are, and for this reason:—those men who have been called by the Reform party to those positions may have been called in good faith, they may have given up other positions for that purpose, and I am not willing, hard as it may appear to you, to disturb them; it is the fault of the other party, and not ours." And, as the members for Nova Scotia know, the right hon. the Premier positively refused us that which we considered but justice. Coming here as new members we asked it in all good faith, and I repeat the statement that a number of dismissals were made in my own county solely on political grounds, and in the persons of men against whom no possible charge was made or could have been made. Now I do not wish to detain the House, but have given a few plain statements of facts, to which I invite attention and to which I challenge contradiction, and I leave the members of this House and the people of this country, irrespective of party, to draw their own inferences therefrom.

Mr. BERGIN. I move in amendment to the amendment that all the words after that be struck out and the following inserted:—

Resume the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Taylor for Committee of the Whole to consider a resolution declaring it expedient to bring in a Bill to regulate the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, butterine and other substitutes for butter.

I propose to give you something more substantial than beer and wine. I propose to give you something solid, and before proceeding with the discussion of the dead dogs and the glandered horses, let me say that I regret that the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton) did not move the Bill of the hon. gentleman for North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson), so that we might have had an opportunity of discussing fairly and squarely the temperance question. I am one of those who believe that the Canada Temperance Act ought to have a fair trial in the counties in which it has been adopted by the people. And I think, Sir, that we are not in a position to pronounce either for or against the success of that Act until it has been provided with the necessary machinery for its enforcement. But as the hon. gentleman has not chosen to do that, but to make another motion, I have thought it well to take the opportunity of supplementing to-night the remarks which I made when the motion of the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue was before the House some time since. You will remember that on that occasion I showed the material of which oleomargarine is made and the process of manufacture; but I did not on that occasion explain to the House the manner in which the refuse was disposed of, and I think that, perhaps, I had better do that now. I do not know that many gentlemen in this House understand how hogs are manufactured in certain portions of the United States. When explaining the other night how glandered horses and choleraic hogs and animals dying of pleuro-pneumonia were converted into oleomargarine, I mentioned that the offal went to the bottom of the vats, and that it was then taken away, but the places to which it was taken I omitted to mention. It is taken to the piggeries attached to the factories, or sold to the pork-packers and butchers in the cities in which this oleomargarine is manufactured, and there converted into pork. The hogs that, during the process of consuming this refuse, die, are again returned to the oleomargarine factory and once more converted into oleomargarine. Those that do not die are sold to the butchers and taken to the slaughter houses, and visitors from Canada and other portions of the civilised world are treated to the pork so manufactured, and upon their bread they take a little of the oleomargarine that was manufactured from them before they were converted for the first time into pork. This is no fancy picture, but it is the truth and from actual observation. No more gigantic fraud has ever been perpetrated on the people of this country than the manufacture of this stuff, but is it confined entirely to the so-called factories of oleomargarine and butterine? Many of the finest soap factories in the country, and many of the well-puffed oil refineries of the country are nothing more nor less than oleomargarine manufactories. In fact, Sir, it is not quite a settled question yet, whether or not the first stage after the separation of the fat in the production of oleomargarine is not the production of soap. In fact oleomargarine is nothing but a highly purified kind of soap, and, as you perfume it, or do not perfume it, you have oleomargarine or scented soap. This compound of pork, as I told you, of diseased animals, is also made from the various fats that are picked from kitchens and gutters and the vilest purlieus of the different cities, and it is sold in almost every town in Canada as butter. Why, Sir, it is not over a fortnight since, in conversation with a lady from Montreal, when she was boasting of the delicious butter they got there, manufactured by the Messrs. Jones, of Brockville, and for which she paid only 45 cents, that I discovered she was feasting upon oleomargarine. The Messrs. Jones sell all their butter in New York at $. per pound, and this lady fancied she was buying it in Montreal at 45 cents a pound. I discovered that it was the same article which was sold as gilt-edged Eastern Townships butter in the markets of Montreal, whereas it is oleomargarine, manufactured at Hunter's Point, New York. This is the sort of stuff that it is proposed we shall license the manufacture of in this country, that we are asked to substitute for the product of the cow fed upon the rich natural grasses of the country - the product of the labor of the wives and daughters of our farmers; and we know how the wives and daughters of our farmers work to make good butter, in order that they may support themselves and their families. If this material is allowed to be manufactured and sold in Canada, there is an end to our dairy business; it will be no longer profitable for the wives and daughters of our farmers to manufacture butter. The material of which it is made does not cost more than a cent a pound; the manufacture does not cost much more than a couple of cents in addition; and by the time it is put in packages and offered for sale as pure butter, it does not cost much more than 4 cents a pound. And, Sir, when I tell you that it can be made so closely to resemble the genuine article as to render it difficult, if not impossible, to distinguish the genuine from the fraudulent, you will see how necessary it is that the strictest precautions should be taken to throw safeguards around the manufacture of butter in this country. Perhaps it may not be out of place to read to the House an extract from the Globe of Thursday last. It is not often that anyone who desires that any weight should be attached to what he says will quote from the Globe; but I propose to quote from it to-night in support of my argument, and not alone because of that, but because it gives, as a reason for its advice, a reason which does away with all the arguments hon. gentlemen opposite have used in favor of free trade—in fact, gives away their whole case, and shows that protection, and protection alone, is the true remedy for the troubles of the farmers of this country. The Globe, with an impudence most astonishing, in the face of the fact that a member of the Opposition from one of the western counties had the audacity to stand up in this House and advocate the use of this vile material, which he said he fed to his men without their knowing what it was—the Globe, with equal audacity, claims, forsooth, that the Reformers of this House are the men to whom the farmers of Canada are indebted for the prohibition of the manufacture of oleomargarine in this country. Then it says:

"The consumers of butter also will be saved from the danger of using as butter a compound of the most villainous character, which is often poisonous."

This is true, and it is not often we read anything true in the Globe.—

"But something more is necessary to make the protection to health and industry complete. Some kinds of oleomargarine resemble butter so closely in appearance, taste and smell, that its true character can only be ascertained by careful scientific test. We do not import butter, nor do we want to import any. A prohibitory duty on butter or any article entered as butter, added to the prohibition of oleomargarine or other imitations of butter, would certainly exclude the noxious article. In default of this prohibition of the import of butter, oleomargarine will certainly be brought in."

Now, what is the difference between a prohibitory duty and prohibition? A difference but of degree. Here the whole case is given away. The Globe frankly, but perhaps not knowingly, tells the farmers of this country that protection is necessary for them, otherwise their dairy industry will be destroyed. How can the farmer compete with the product of these dead and rotten animals? The produce of the cows will soon entirely be displaced, and milk that ought to be made into butter and cheese will be driven from the market. True butter is driven out of the market by thousands of tons of this oleomargarine which is imported to take its place, at a loss of tens of thousands, I might say hundreds of thousands of dollars to the farmers of the country. The reports of the agricultural boards in England show that the yearly loss to the English farmers amounts to many millions of pounds sterling. In this connection it is well to take a passing glance at the value of our dairy products in this country. It is well to do this in the face of the large quantity of the imitations of butter which is being imported. I have not been able to procure satisfactory statistics as to the full number of cows in Canada; but I am able to give the statistics relating to twenty-three counties in Ontario, which are fairly average counties and from which we can see the terrible loss which is being inflicted on the people of this country by the manufacture of this article. In 1884 there were 710,511 cows in Ontario. The produce of butter from them per cow for the season was $30.34, and the daily average 18 cents and a fraction. The amount of butter made was 32,844,269 lbs., which was sold at an average of 21 $\frac{62}{100}$ cents per lb. Now, to show how this article was injuring the butter trade, let me quote the quantity of butter that was made in twenty-three counties in Ontario in 1883 as compared with 1884. In 1883, there were made in these counties 243,902 lbs. of butter, and in 1884 only 147,924 lbs., or a falling off of 95,978 lbs. If you multiply that number by nine, which would be nearly the proportion for the whole Dominion, you will find that the falling off was something over 1,000,000 lbs. of butter in one year in the product of the country. Now, Sir, what was done with the milk which under other circumstances would have been used? The farmers resorted to making cheese, the result of which was a large increase in the quantity of cheese and a decrease in the quantity of butter. The market in consequence became, not only here but abroad, flooded with cheese, because in the United States the same effect followed the manufacture of butterine and oleomargarine as follow its importation here. They were unable to make butter and sell it at a profit, and were obliged to make cheese, which we have been doing since 1883. Owing to the over supply, prices fell, and at one time this year cheese was almost unsaleable. In 1883 the value of butter was $51,817 according to the returns of the Bureau of Agriculture. In 1884 its value was $32,087, showing a total falling off, in the 23 counties to which I refer, of $19,729 in butter alone. In 1883, the value of butter per cow was $17.21; in 1884 it had decreased to $13.71, showing a loss of $3.50 per cow. Multiply the number of cows 710,519 by $3.50, and you will find that the loss on this account was $2,486,730 on butter alone. The report of the Ontario Bureau of Agriculture concludes thus:

"If the returns establish anything, it is that a larger return is received from creameries which make butter and cheese than from creameries which make butter alone.

In 1883 the manufacture of cheese amounted to 134,446 lbs., and in 1884, to 259,688; or in place of the butter made in 1883 we made in 1884, 155,242 lbs. of cheese, and a consequent diminution of butter. The increase in the value of cheese in 1884, was $9,000 over its value of $11,218 in 1883, which entailed, of course, a corresponding falling off in the value of butter. No one can view these statements without alrarm. They confirm the statement I made that if importations be permitted, we will soon destroy our dairy interests, as it can be manufactured at about 4 cents a lb. If it were manufactured out of good healthy fat, as it could be, one would almost be inclined to admit that at certain times, during periods of depression, it would be well to have such a substitute, but we cannot trifle with the danger; we cannot permit it to be manufactured, because experience has shown that the manufacturers will not use healthy material. They use nothing but diseased animals and the very filthiest material, besides chemicals which are of poisonous nature, and there can be no doubt whatever that many diseases are the result of the consumption of oleomargarine. Therefore, we ask the Government, and, in fact, the Government has promised to do so, to prohibit the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine, and if we have to-night resumed the discussion on this subject, it is that we may impress more forcibly on the Government, not only the mode by which, but the material of which this stuff is made. We wish to impress upon the House the injury which will result from its manufacture, and the injury goes even further, because we have presented to us as food, pork, the refuse from the manufacture of this oleomargarine, and we have, besides, the terrible loss inflicted on the dairy interests of the country. For these reasons, I feel it is in the interest of the farmers that the attention of the Government should be directed to a trade which can have but most pernicious results, and I trust the Government will prevent the manufacture of this article, not only by prohibiting the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine, but also by establishing such a rigid inspection of soap factories and oil refineries, that it cannot in any shape or form, or under any pretence, be offered for sale.

Mr. JAMIESON. I have a good deal to say on this complex question. I fear I shall not be able to get through to-night, but I do not intend to make all my remarks at present, because we will likely go into committee, where I will have an opportunity of discussing it more at length. It is an old adage, that it is generally the unexpected that happens, and I think that adage has been verified to-night. When the question before the House was presented, I had no idea the hon. member for Wellington would complicate it by making the amendment he has made. It was certainly a pretty sharp curve, but when the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Bergin) brought on his amendment, and drew on this triangular fight, it was still more unexpected to me. I am heartily glad my Bill amending the Canada Temperance Act is not mixed up with oleomargarine and butterine, being the product of rotten dogs and horses, and with the poor man's wine and beer, the product of log wood and bluestone, and some other substance, of which I am not aware, but of which, I have no doubt, the hon. member for Centre Wellington could give a very honest definition if time permitted. It seems to me this unrestricted manufacture of oleomargarine is going to be a great calamity to the notorious Mathew Roche. What will history say when this celebrated gentleman goes down to oblivion, submerged by oleomargarine, butterine, wine and beer? I cannot answer that question, but will leave it to the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton) when we get into Committee of the Whole. I suppose he has already spoken on this question, and cannot make his speech over again. The hon. member, perhaps, should he have an opportunity of replying to me, will say that I set the example last year, when I took a similar step to that which he has taken to-night for the purpose of furthering a Bill which I then had in charge. I made an explanation on that occasion which I think was satisfactory to the House. At all events, the House were convinced, and I took it for granted they were satisfied with the explanation I had made. It will be within the recollection of the House, perhaps, or of those who were present on that occasion, that the reason which I gave for setting aside the rules of procedure was this, that after the Dominion Alliance had held their meeting here in the city of Ottawa, the legislative committee of that alliance were requested to press for what they considered necessary legislation for the purpose of perfecting the Canada Temperance Act. It was after the commencement of the Session when the Dominion Alliance met, and it necessarily took some time to draft a bill such as the Bill we submitted to the House on that occasion. After that Bill was drafted, it was one of the instructions of the alliance that the Government should be asked to take charge of it in the interests of the Temperance legislation known as the Canada Temperance Act, and, after the committee were called together, they waited upon the Government and placed the draft of that Bill in the hands of the Government. I do not pretend to say that the present Government are less expeditious in their movements than any other Government. I think in that respect they are just about as good, if not a good deal better than most of the Governments the country has had. However, I suppose owing to the vast importance, the length and depth and breadth of the question, it took them a long time to arrive at a conclusion whether they would take charge of the measure or not. It seemed to be conceded at the outset that, seeing that the Canada Temperance Act was in the first instance a Government measure, introduced in the Senate and passed by this House and placed upon the Statute-book of the Dominion, in consequence of that it was the duty of the Government to provide proper machinery for its enforcement. I believe it was two or three weeks before we got an answer from the Government, and that answer was in the negative. After we got an answer from the Government on the question, we again had to call together the legislative committee of the Dominion Alliance in order to take counsel together as to what course we would pursue in reference to the measure. It was then decided that we would introduce that measure at once into the House, and I had the honor of being selected by that committee for the purpose of taking charge of it. When I introduced the measure, I explained these circumstances to the House, and gave that as a reason why we were so late in the Session in bringing it in, and, when I moved to place that measure higher up on the motion paper, or at least to give it precedence over other measures on the Order paper, I gave that as the reason why I thought it advisable to disturb or set aside the ordinary procedure of the House. No such reason has been given by the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton) for pursuing the extraordinary course he has pursued on the present occasion. I have charge of a measure which is now on the Order paper, and which, in my judgment, is a measure much more worthy of receiving the prompt consideration of this House than that which has been introduced by the hon. member for Centre Wellington. But I was rather late in introducing that measure. I had, and have not yet lost, hope that I may be able to reach it this Session. I confess that the discussion of this multifarious question is likely to interfere to some extent with the consideration of my Bill, but that cannot be helped. I trust that the Canada Temperance Act will be worked, imperfect as it may be, if we are not able to secure the passage of the amending measure which I have had the honor of introducing into this House. I make these remarks for the purpose of informing the House why I did not on this occasion pursue the same course which I pursued last Session. I thought from the temper of the House on that occasion, it would not be a wise thing to repeat the course of procedure which I pursued last Session. If it had not been for that fact, I would have been only too anxious to ask the House, as my hon. friend from Centre Wellington has asked the House, to give preference to my measure. I do not know anything, or at least very much, about oleomargarine or butterine, and I know just about as little about wine or beer. I am glad to say we have the Scott Act in my county and we have not much wine or beer now, and I never saw oleomargarine or butterine in my life. My constituents do not deal in these spurious articles. I am much surprised at the nature of the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Centre Wellington. I do not wish to take up the time of the House unnecessarily, but, as this is a very important question and this is a very indulgent House, I have no doubt it will indulge me while I make a few explanatory remarks in reference to the condition of the Scott Act in this country, and, after I succeed in doing that, I shall possibly deal in a very succinct way with the Bill of the hon. member for Centre Wellington.

Mr. IRVINE. What is the attitude of the Government towards the Canada Temperance Act?

Mr. JAMIESON. If I have time, I shall be most happy to deal with that question, but now it has got so complicated, I think I will leave it in the hands of the hon. member for Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Irvine), and I have no doubt he will ably deal with that phase of the question. Seeing he is in opposition, it will be more in keeping with his position to do so than for me, seeing that I am a loyal supporter of the Government. The hon. member for Centre Wellington has thought proper to disturb the Canada Temperance Act. I think he is taking upon himself a work which he will regret I believe the hon. member for Centre Wellington has the Canada Temperance Act in force in his own county. I understand that, in addition to that, he has some five or six breweries in his county. I do not know, I would not insinuate that the hon. member has anything to do with breweries. I believe he is a medical man. Unless it may be in the way of chemical analysis, or something of that kind, of the compounds used in the production of beer, I do not suppose he would attempt for a moment to have any other interest in it or contact with it. And, Sir, the Canada Temperance Act has been submitted to a very large number of counties and cities in this Dominion. It may be new to some that the Act is now in force in sixty-six counties and cities, where it has been brought into operation by the votes of the respectable electors of those several counties and cities. By the provisions of that Act, once it is adopted, it must continue in force for a period of three years. Now, Sir, I lay it down as a fair proposition, and I defy the hon. member for Centre Wellington to controvert my proposition, that when once the people of any county or city have by their votes solemnly approved of this law, this Parliament has no right, no moral right, at all events, to deprive them of the advantages which they have secured for themselves by the adoption of this Act. But what does the hon. member for Centre Wellington attempt to do by this measure? Why, Sir, he asks this House to deprive the people of those counties of their just rights under the Canada Temperance Act. I think it would be a most unfortunate thing, and one which the people would resent, whether Conservatives or Reformers, if this House were to sanction any such measure as that proposed by the hon. member. He proposes by his Bill that in every county and city which has adopted the Canada Temperance Act, a repeal vote may be brought on immediately after the Governor General gives his sanction to this measure, should it pass this House, But, Sir, I have no apprehensions whatever; I am not at all afraid that this measure will ever pass this House. I believe that on both sides of this House we have men of principle, men of character, who will not be parties to any measure which would deprive the people of this country of their just rights upon this question. Why, Sir, it is the most extraordinary proposition I ever heard in my life. It is monstrous that after the people of this country have passed upon a measure by such great majorities, their rights should be taken from them at the instance of the hon. member for Centre Wellington. After 124,212 electors of this Dominion have pronounced in favor of the Canada Temperance Act, the hon. member comes here and pulls out of his pocket a resolution, or a petition, or something of that kind, from some obscure town or village in his county, and he says: The people of this Dominion are tired of this Canada Temperance Act. In face of the figures that I have quoted I say that it is preposterous to introduce such a Bill, because some obscure town or village in western Ontario, perhaps by a narrow vote in the council, asks this Parliament to repeal this Act—for that is practically what the hon. gentleman asks us to do. Sir, if the alternative were placed before me at this moment, whether I would accept a repeal of the Canada Temperance Act or accept the Bill of the hon. gentleman, I would not hesitate a single moment, I would say: Repeal the Act at once, do not trifle with it, do not make a mockery of it. If the Act is not working as it should do, if it is not fulfilling the expectations of those who promoted it, and those who adopted it in the several counties, then, in the name of all that is just, when the proper time comes for the people to pronounce upon its efficiency or deficiency, let them do it in the same way in which they ratified it. Repeal it, but do not attempt to mar it, don't attempt to destroy it, and then turn round and say to the people that the Act has been a failure. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman professes to believe that this measure is in the interest of temperance, that it is for the purpose of promoting sobriety and ultimately promoting prohibition in this country. Sir, I am astonished that any hon. member possessing sufficient intelligence and ability to find his way into the Parliament of this country, should advance such an argument as that. I contend that it is the duty of both the great parties represented in this Parliament to give to those who are promoting the Canada Temperance Act such machinery as will enable them fairly to test this question. I tell you, Sir, that there is a sentiment in this country that will not quickly subside upon this question; I tell you, Sir, that the people of this country, from one end to the other, have been aroused upon this question, and will not submit to be trifled with. Let this Parliament, for a single instant, entertain the principle embodied in the measure of my hon. friend from Centre Wellington, and I say that when they go back and surrender to the electors of their constituencies the trust they have reposed in them, they will find that that trust will not be again reposed in them, because I believe that it will be the opinion of the electors of this country that the men who have, by their votes in this House, impaired the Canada Temperance Act, have been recreant to the trust imposed in them. Now, Sir, there is the wine and beer question. I have no faith in wine and beer. I lost faith in them long ago, because I never had any. There was in England a Reformer once, I suppose somewhat of the character of the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton). The drinking of gin and ardent spirits was the general habit among the enlightened people of our mother land, and the great politicians of that day suddenly awakened to the fact that some remedy might be provided by which the people would be weaned from the use of ardent spirits and induced to use milder and more nutritious beverages. The idea suddenly occurred to them that the use of ale and cider would be a very fine and proper substitute for ardent spirits, and in 1830 on that line an Act was passed to permit the general sale of beer and cider by retail in England. By that Act any householder could, on giving bonds and sureties and paying a guinea, obtain a license to sell beer and cider. The Act was passed almost unanimously I believe by the House. Everybody took a fancy to it and thought it a very good measure. However, it turned out that they were very much mistaken. The Duke of Wellington was one of the able champions of that measure; Lord Brougham also supported it; and the Duke thought the carrying of that measure was about as great a triumph as his victory over Napoleon at the battle of Waterloo. But let us get at the sequel. The Rev. Sydney Smith depicted the effects of that measure. I read:

"The Rev. Sydney Smith, who had expected and predicted great and beneficent results, wrote only two weeks after the Act took effect: 'The new Beer Bill has begun its operations. Everybody is drunk. Those who are not singing are sprawling. The sovereign people are in a beastly condition. The demoralisation was so general and continuous, that the Duke of Wellington and Lord Brougham confessed to a change of opinion before a year had elapsed.'"

Such was the result in the mother land of a measure similar to that introduced by the hon. member for Centre Wellington, and I have no doubt that in the Dominion of Canada the result would be almost similar. I am entirely opposed to the measure introduced by the hon. member for Centre Wellington. I believe if a man drinks at all, it should be on the multum in parvo system. I do not think that the use of beer would be beneficial to any class of the people. A medical man with whom I was conversing the other day, a very high authority, denounced the use of beer in the strongest terms. "Why," said he, "beer is the very worst drink a man can take; it makes him stupid and stolid, and takes all the life out of him. If a man drinks at all he should drink something exhilarating and stimulating, and not something that will make him torpid and stupid." I believe that will be the effect if this measure introduced by the hon. gentleman should become law. Let me illustrate. He said the difference between a man who drinks beer and a man who drinks ardent spirits was about the difference between a bug and a flea; one was sleepy and stupid and the other was lively and active. I give that as an illustration, though it is not quite in keeping with the subject; it would be more in keeping with the oleomargarine and butterine question than with the wine and beer question. However as this is a complex question I trust some liberty will be allowed. Indeed, the House has been very indulgent, but I do not desire to trespass upon the time of other hon. members who are skilled in the discussion of questions of this kind, seeing that this is a very complicated and difficult question; and with these disjointed remarks I will allow the question now to fall into the hands of those members who are more able to deal with it than I am.

Mr. ORTON. I desire to offer a few remarks. Although oleomargarine is a most important question I had thought that it was permanently settled by the Government promising to take action on the matter, and I have heard it said outside this House that the reason why that order was kept on the paper was for an object which I would not like to state here as actuating any hon. member. It has been stated outside of the House, however, that it was kept on the Order paper for the express purpose of preventing an expression of opinion on this very important question of the Canada Temperance Act. I hope that to-night the House will express through its representatives its opinion in regard to this question, as to whether it would not be advisable in the interests of temperance to pass such an Act as I have introduced for a second reading. Notwithstanding the remarks of the hon. gentleman, I think this Act would do a very great deal of good to the cause he has at heart. I hope instead of arguing in favor of postponement he will accede to the vote being taken, and I shall be happy to assist him forward with his measure so as to make the Canada Temperance Act, what I believe it will be, a useful temperance measure.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not desire to prolong the discussion. The hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) was not here last Monday when this question was under discussion and therefore he moved the amendment. That as the Government intend dealing with this question and although they have not done so yet, I expect they will during this present week; and owing to the article which appeared in the Globe this week, I think it is all the more important that it should be dealt with promptly. I would therefore prefer having the matter remain on the Order paper as it is, and so I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentlemen having seconded the other motion, cannot move the adjournment of the debate.

Amendment of Mr. Bergin to the amendment negatived.

Amendment of Mr. Orton negatived.

House then divided on motion of Mr. Blake.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 18th May, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE FRANCHISE ACT, 1885.

Mr. THOMPSON, in moving for leave to introduce Bill (No. 138) to amend the Franchise Act, 1885, said: I will explain to the House briefly what the provisions of this Bill are. The first provision is intended to dispense with the necessity existing under the present Act for the assessment rolls being procured by the revising officer in each year. That has been attended with considerable expense, although in the present year it was necessary in order to form the first list. The lists having been once formed and established by proper revision, it will be a comparatively easy matter in future years to proceed without the same information in detail which is involved in the provisions followed this year, of having the assessment lists and the rolls of electors. The second provision of the Bill of importance is to make it clear that in all parts of the Dominion, as was provided in respect of one or two of the Provinces, the revising officer need not hold the court for the revision of the list in every polling sub-division. It was provided in the Act of last year that in the Province of Nova Scotia he should sit for not less than three sub-divisions, and that provision is, by this Bill, extended to the whole Dominion, so that there shall be no sitting for revision of the lists in districts of less than three polling sub-divisions. There is also a provision that one applicant may be substituted for another in the case of an applicant desiring to object to a vote, or to have a vote put on, so the right of the voter shall not depend upon the withdrawal or perseverance of the applicant, but that, if the applicant should withdraw his application, another person may be substituted for him, and the enquiry may be continued notwithstanding the withdrawal. Some inconvenience has been found also to arise from the requirement of the existing Act, that whenever more than 200 voters appear on the list of any polling sub-division the limits of that sub-division should be changed so as to reduce the number again to 200. Departing so frequently as that would require the revising officers to do, from the established and known limits of the polling sub-divisions, is attended with some inconvenience, and seems unnecessary, because a larger number than 200 might, with propriety, be included in the polling sub-division. For the present, it is suggested that the existing polling sub-divisions shall stand, until the number of voters that shall be included in them by the various revisions that may be made from year to year shall reach 400, and then the limits of the division shall be changed, in order to reduce the number, as is provided in the Act of this year. There is also a clause intended to cheapen somewhat the printing which the Act requires, by making more simple the revising officer's list. It was found in practice that there were more columns for information in reference to voters than were absolutely required, and we propose to dispense with three of these columns, thereby considerably lessening the cost of the printing.

Mr. MILLS. What columns?

Mr. THOMPSON. I cannot state from memory, but we take off four columns and add one, and make a net gain of three. The hon. gentleman will see that the other columns are ample to provide for all the information that is required. In addition to that, I have only to mention that the oaths to be put to the electors are provided in this Bill, as I stated the other day they would be.

Mr. MILLS. No change in the qualification of wage earners?

Mr. THOMPSON. No.

Mr. MILLS. May I ask whether the voters' lists are to be reprinted? The hon. gentleman knows that under the law as it now stands the voters' list is made up and prepared in the first instance, and when a large number of names are added it becomes necessary, under the present law, to reprint the voters' lists in consequence of the additions and erasures, and the change of the polling division limits. That system is not interfered with?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is proposed, as regards the list this year, that it shall not be necessary to change the existing limits of the sub-divisions, I mean the provision that there shall be no more than 200 in each; and year by year the operation of this Bill will be that the revising officers, as soon as possible after the 1st of January, shall make a yearly revision of the lists and cause them to be printed and posted up, and then, after the final revision, the lists are printed and established as the voters' lists.

Mr. SCRIVER. Do I understand the Minister to say that the changes already made by the revising officers in the polling sub-divisions will continue?

Mr. THOMPSON. Those will have to be established. The lists, in so far as they are made, are confirmed by this Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE QUEBEC HARBOR COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House do, to-morrow, resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:—

1. That in addition to the sums authorised by the Acts 36 Victoria, chapter 62, and 43 Victoria, chapter 17, to be raised in the manner hereinafter mentioned, for the relief of the Quebec Harbor Commissioners and the improvement of the said harbor, it shall be lawful for the Governor in Council to raise, by the issue of debentures bearing interest, payable half yearly, at a rate not exceeding 4 per cent. per annum, a further sum of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars.
2. That the sum so raised may be advanced, from time to time, to the said commissioners, to enable them to complete their wet and tidal docks, now in course of construction in the said harbor.
3. That the repayment by the commissioners of the sum so advanced shall be provided for in the manner prescribed by the Act first above cited, as amended by the Act 46 Victoria, chapter 39, for the repayment of the sums advanced to the commissioners under it, and subject to the provisions of the said Act in that behalf.

Motion agreed to.

THE HON. J. S. C. WURTELE.

Mr. LANGELIER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to ask the Secretary of State a question. A few weeks ago I asked if the commission of the Hon. Mr. Wurtele as a Judge of the Superior Court had been sent to him. I received a reply from the Government that the commission was being prepared, and would be sent down in a few days. Some days have elapsed, and I understand the commission has not been received. I should like to know whether the thing has been forgotten, or when the commission is to be sent?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The thing has not been forgotten. The gentleman has received an official communication of the Order in Council appointing him, and Mr. Wurtele has not yet accepted.

NORTH-WEST DISTURBANCES—CLAIMS.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In the absence of the Minister of Militia, perhaps the hon. Minister of Public Works will know when the report of the North-West operations and the war claims, as the Minister calls them, is to be presented. The Minister of Public Works will remember that, when passing the Militia Estimates, the Minister of Militia intimated that this information would be brought down, perhaps, early this week.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am unable to answer the question; the Minister of Militia will be in his place in a short time.

TRENT VALLEY CANAL.

Mr. COOK. I wish to enquire from the Government when the return respecting the estimated cost of the Trent Valley Canal will be submitted. The Chief Engineer was here some days ago, and no doubt the information has been obtained.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The report is in course of preparation and will be brought down as soon as possible.

CUSTOMS SEIZURE AT MONTREAL.

Mr. GAULT. Seeing the Minister of Customs in his place, I should like to ask if a settlement has been made with respect to the seizure that has taken place in the city of Montreal. A most important seizure took place there some time ago, and it created much excitement. It is stated that the Government had compromised the matter——

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman wishes to put a question to the Minister, he may do so, and the Minister may reply if he pleases; but the hon. gentleman must not discuss the matter.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. McLELAN moved the third reading of Bill (No. 131) further to amend the Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. WATSON. Before this motion is adopted I wish to move an amendment. I think another opportunity has been provided this House when they can ask the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to make certain modifications in their contract. The modifications which I seek to have granted are in connection with the monopoly clause. We had hoped, in Manitoba, that ere this the right to build railways to the southern boundary of the Province would have been granted, and the local charters not have been disallowed. We had reason to hope that such would be the case from the repeated representations made by members of the Government, both in the House and out of it; but such, unfortunately, has not been the case, and this is therefore a suitable opportunity to ask the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to concede the right to grant charters to railway companies to build lines in south and south-eastern portions of Manitoba. It is not necessary for me to occupy much time in order to impress the House with the importance of this subject to the Province. I need only refer to the fact that there have been some seven or eight charters applied for this year that are in conflict with the monopoly clause of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we had the report of the chairman of the Railway Committee yesterday that four different Bills were rejected on account of that particular clause, clause 15 of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract. Besides, the member for Provencher (Mr. Royal) had a Bill which he saw fit to withdraw; the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Pruyn) had also a Bill which he withdrew—in all there was six different Bills. One Bill was passed and a charter granted, but with a special clause inserted. It is a Bill to grant power to build a railway in British Columbia, and because that railway will run in a different direction from what is stated in clause 15 of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, there is a provision placed in the Bill that the Canadian Pacific Railway has to consent to the construction of the work. To my mind that is a very humiliating position for this House to occupy. While the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are seeking modifications from year to year, this House has it also in its power to ask certain modifications from the Canadian Pacific Railway, and this is an opportune time to do so. When the company have squared up accounts with the Government we shall have no power to ask modifications unless we pay for them. It has been contended by Manitoba that the Province has a right to charter railways to the limits of the Province. They contend that they possess that right under the British North American Act, and that such right is granted to all the other Provinces, and Manitoba should not be made an exception to the rule. We enjoyed that right previous to the granting of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract in 1880, and prior to the assent being given by Parliament to that contract the Local Legislature protested in the most strenuous terms against the Government entering into such a contract as would prevent the building of railways in the Province. The motion was moved in the Manitoba Legislature by the present member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross). It was passed on 24th December, 1880, and reads as follows:—

"Mr. Ross moved an address to the Governor General, praying that the contract proposed with the syndicate may not be entered into, inasmuch as said terms we find unacceptable to the people of Manitoba and the North-West Territories, more particularly part of clause 11 and clauses 14, 15 and 16."

Clause 15 relates to disallowance, and clause 16 is another very unjust clause and it relates to exemption from taxation. That was the view expressed by the Local Legislature previous to the contract being entered into. The Government were aware that it was not acceptable to the Province of Manitoba. Although such was the feeling, the people were satisfied to a certain extent by the explanations made by the First Minister and the member for Cardwell, who is now Minister of the Interior. At that time both those hon. gentlemen stated that clause 15 did not interfere with the rights of the Province. I will read the words used by those hon. gentlemen during the debate. The First Minister, in discussing this question on January 17th, 1881, said:

"In order to give them a chance, we have provided that the Dominion Parliament—mind you, the Dominion Parliament: we cannot check any other Parliament; we cannot check Ontario, we cannot check Manitoba."

Those were the words used at that time, and the people of Manitoba thought, by such statements being made during the discussion on the Canadian Pacific Railway by the First Minister, that Manitoba would have the right to grant charters to a railway for any route within the boundaries of the Province, without being interfered with by the Dominion. The hon. member for Cardwell, the present Minister of the Interior, in discussing the same question on January 20th, said:

"But we are told now that because of the fifteen miles there never can be any other railway into this country. To what does that apply? Simply to the territories over which the Dominion Parliament has control. There is nothing to prevent Manitoba now, if it thinks proper, granting a charter for a railway from Winnipeg to the boundary line. At this very moment there is a company in course of organisation to build a railway from Winnipeg to West Lynn, on the boundary. And after this agreement is ratified, this provision does not take away from Manitoba a single right it possesses; in fact, this Parliament could not take away those rights. It has the same rights as the other Provinces for the incorporation of railway companies within the boundary of the Province itself, and there is nothing to prevent the Province of Manitoba from chartering a railway from Winnipeg to the boundary to connect with any southern railway. The only guarantee which this company has under the contract is that their traffic shall not be tapped far west in the prairie section, thus diverting the traffic away from the line to a foreign line, but there is nothing to prevent a railway being built in Manitoba, within the Province, that would carry the traffic to any railway that may tap it from the American side."

That is the position with respect to this matter.

Mr. WATSON. Page 576, Volume 1, of the Debates of 1880-81. That was the position of affairs at that time, and those were the views expressed by the Minister of Interior, and since that time that hon. gentleman has apparently held the same views, because I find that the impression he left upon the minds of the people, when he made this visit to the North-West, according to the reports of his travels, was that he still held the same views to which he had given expression in 1881. I find in the Winnipeg Commercial, in a review of the year's work by the Board of Trade of that city, a paragraph which shows that that was the impression left upon the minds of that board, by the remarks he made during his visit there last summer. It states:

"During the past summer and fall several prominent individuals from Ottawa have visited this city, and your board have not been slow to impress matters in the interests of Manitoba trade upon such. A petition asking for the discontinuance of the railway disallowance policy of the Dominion Government, which has been such a burden on the trade of the Province, was presented with the signatures of the best men of this city attached, to the Honorable the Minister of the Interior during his late visit, and elicited from him an expression of the hope and belief that the policy of the Government would soon cease to call for the maintenance of this railway restriction."

That is the impression he left on the Board of Trade, which I may say is composed of the best men of the Province of Manitoba, men who have an interest in looking into all matters affecting the welfare of that Province. But, notwithstanding that, an Act was disallowed last March, after those statements were made. Last Session before the Railway Committee we were given to understand, when an application was made for a charter to build a road from Portage la Prairie to Lake of the Woods, and that charter was not granted because it conflicted with clause 15 of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, that we would have the right, so soon as the road was completed North of Lake Superior, to obtain such a charter; but that charter was applied for this year, and it was reported on unfavorably as a road which should not be constructed. The people of the Province of Manitoba have not been complaining of this monopoly for the last two years, for the reason that it was stated by Sir Charles Tupper, in his speech on the Canadian Pacific Railway loan, that as soon as the road was constructed north of Lake Superior the Government would no longer see fit to disallow those Acts. Sir Charles Tupper, during that debate in 1884, Volume 1, page 109, of Hansard, states:

"I am glad to be able to state to the House that, although, true to that policy, the Government refused to give assent to the construction of lines within the Province of Manitoba to connect with American railways to the south, such is the evidence presented by the operation of the line so far as it has gone, such is the conclusion arrived at by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself in regard to the ability of a through line of the Canadian Pacific Railway to take care of itself, and by the inherent power of its own advantages to maintain its position notwithstanding any competition to which it may be subjected, although we have no power, under the charter, to touch any portion of the country in the North-West Territories, we are now in a position to review and to reconsider the policy of the late Government, and the policy of the present Government, as to the continued necessity for any long period of protecting the Canadian Pacific Railway against competition."

He said further:

"I am glad to be able to state to the House that such is the confidence of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the power of the Canadian Pacific Railway to protect itself, that when the line is constructed north of Lake Superior, the Government feel it will not be incumbent upon them to preserve the position they have hitherto felt bound to preserve, that of refusing to consent to the construction of lines within the Province of Manitoba, connecting it with American railways to the south."

Now, Mr. Speaker, at that time the Minister of Railways, to my mind, practically pledged this House and the Government to the fact that, as soon as the road was constructed north of Lake Superior, the Government would no longer see fit to disallow the local Acts of Manitoba, and would allow competing lines to the south. Making this statement when he was asking the House to grant a large loan to that company, he gave a pledge to the people of the Province of Manitoba, and the Dominion as a whole, that, as soon as this work was constructed, the Government would grant the right to the Province of Manitoba to build lines to the south, and this being the case, the people of that Province have remained quiet, fully expecting a fulfilment of that promise. But such has not been the case. The best hopes of the people of the Province have been disappointed, and now they are rousing up to the fact that the Government do intend to allow this monopoly for twenty years from the passage of the Act; and there is a great feeling of discontent rising in that Province with the conduct of the Government in disallowing those charters. In 1881 the Manitoba Legislature passed several Acts for the building of railroads; there was an Act passed for the building of a railway from Winnipeg in a south-easterly direction, there was the Manitoba Tramway Company's Act and the Emerson and North-Western Railway Act. Those charters were disallowed, notwithstanding the statements made by the First Minister and the Minister of the Interior during the Canadian Pacific Railway debate in 1880, and, as was further stated by different gentlemen while this matter was under debate in 1884, that roads should be allowed to the south as soon as the Canadian Pacific Railway was constructed to the north of Lake Superior. Fully believing that the Government did intend to ask the Canadian Pacific Railway to relinquish their right to this monopoly, they remained quiet. But I may read a report of a portion of the proceedings of a meeting which took place in Winnipeg on March 19th, 1886. This was previous to the disallowance of the last local Act for the Manitoba Central Railway, a railway which was entirely within the boundaries of the old Province of Manitoba. This meeting was called by proclamation of the Mayor of Winnipeg, who presided, and there were a large number of very prominent gentlemen who addressed the meeting:

"In his opening address, the chairman observed that the question before the meeting was one of the most important that ever came before the people in the interests of this country.

"He trusted that nothing of a political nature would enter into the complexion of the meeting. It should be a business meeting, as the question was one in which all were interested."

The Mayor of Winnipeg is a very prominent Conservative, and so is Mr. James H. Ashdown, the mover of these resolutions. Before moving them he said:

"The matter was one in which all were vitally interested. As an old resident, one who had come here in 1868, when Winnipeg was in its infancy, and who had joined in all the battles fought, and whose voice had been heard with no uncertain sound when the occasion justified, he felt that one of those occasions had arisen, and that he was justified in coming and speaking with no uncertain sound upon this subject. He trusted that the resolutions which it would be his duty to move would meet with the support of every loyal man, whatever his nationality, color, party or creed might be. On this subject there could be no dividing line. The chairman had well said that this was purely a business question. There was not upon the continent of America a single city that had been prosperous but had found in its day the question of railways to be the great burning question, and no city of prominence that he knew had succeeded without more than one line of railway centreing in it. He moved the following resolution, which was applauded during the reading and at its close:—

"That whereas, the Province of Manitoba at the time of the passing of the Canadian Pacific Railway charter, had the undoubted right to grant charters for the construction of railways within its boundaries;

"And whereas, there is no provision in the Canadian Pacific Railway charter inconsistent with the right of the Province to charter such railways;

"And whereas, the action of the Dominion Government in hitherto disallowing Provincial railway charters has had the effect of rendering inoperative such right of this Province;

"And whereas, the Hon. Sir Charles Tupper, the then Minister of Railways and Canals, in his speech in the House of Commons during the Session of 1884, in moving the House into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the resolution granting a loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway, said that as soon as the road was completed the monopoly would be withdrawn;

"Be it resolved that this meeting affirms the right of this Province to charter its own railways.

"That it is absolutely necessary in the commercial and all other interests of this city and the Province, that the Dominion Government should not disallow the charter of the Manitoba Central Railway, by the construction of which a competitive route to the east would be secured.

"That this meeting affirms and concurs in the position taken by the Board of Trade and City Council in relation to the vital importance of securing such communication.

"That this meeting humbly prays that His Excellency the Governor General may be graciously pleased not to disallow the said Manitoba Central Railway Act."

Mr. Ashdown continued to speak to the resolutions in the same strain. Now, it cannot be claimed that this question is one raised for mere party purposes, in order to find fault with the Government or the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It is raised because it vitally affects the interests of the people of Manitoba and the North-West Territories. The railway is now constructed, and we have to accept the situation, whatever differences of opinion we may have had in the past, as to the mode or the time of construction; and while I wish all success to the Pacific Railway as a Canadian enterprise, I also feel that the interests of the territory through which it runs should be considered. The company have it within their power to control the freight rates of the Province of Manitoba. I am not going into any lengthened comparison of its froight rates with those of other roads. I know it is contended by hon. gentlemen opposite that the freight rates of the Canadian Pacific Railway are more reasonable than those of any other railway. I do not wish to argue that question; but if such is the case, there should be no necessity for continuing the monopoly clause, as the low rates should themselves be sufficient protection for the company against competition, and I think the promise made by Sir Charles Tupper in 1884 should be carried out, and that the company should have such confidence in their carrying powers as to be able to defy competition to the south. Notwithstanding that, we have the fact before us that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company do take advantage of the monopoly they enjoy in Manitoba, for freight from the south is practically shut off. I will give the rates charged from Montreal to Winnipeg over the different roads. The Grand Trunk Railway receives, for 850 miles haul, from Montreal to Chicago, 30 cents per 100 lbs.; the union roads from Chicago to St. Paul receive, for 409 miles haul, 40 cents per 100 lbs.; the St. Paul and Manitoba Railway, for 393 miles haul, from St. Paul to Emerson, receive 60 cents per 100 lbs.; and the Canadian Pacific Railway, for 65 miles haul, from Emerson to Winnipeg, receives 40 cents per 100 lbs. While the rates may be reasonable for some long hauls, the local rates are not reasonable; and these figures show that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company do discriminate against any roads but their own carrying freight into the country. While we have no right to interfere with the freight rates of American railways, still we know that the St. Paul and Manitoba Railway is a monopoly road. For carrying freight from St. Paul to Emerson, 393 miles, that road charges 60 cents per 100 lbs., and the Canadian Pacific Railway for carrying freight from Emersom to Winnipeg, 65 miles, charges 40 cents per 100 lbs., that is, for carrying freight 456 miles, these two monopoly roads charge $1 per 100 lbs., while roads conducted on commercial principles charge 30 cents per 100 lbs., for carrying freight upwards of 1200 miles. These figures show that the monopoly roads do take advantage of their monopoly. The North-West Council have complained against the rates charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway. In a memorial from the members of that Council who visited Ottawa a short time ago, which memorial was laid on the Table of the House a few days ago, they state:

"That notwithstanding the repeated assertions to the contrary, the freight rates imposed by the Canadian Pacific Railway are yet found to be a severe tax on the productions of the North-West. This Council therefore respectfully suggest that the influence of the Government should be used to induce the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to reduce their rates so as to compare favorably with the rates in the Provinces of the Dominion, who have the advantage of railway competition."

Now, as I believe we should not overlook the present opportunity, but should make an attempt to obtain from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company the release of the monopoly in Manitoba, I beg leave to move:

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with the instructions to provide that as a condition of granting the proposed relief to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, it shall be stipulated that the company shall no longer claim that no lines of railway shall be permitted to be constructed within Manitoba south of the Canadian Pacific Railway, except such lines as shall run south-west, or to the westward of south-west, and that no line of railway should be permitted to be constructed within fifteen miles of latitude forty-nine.

Mr. ORTON. I wish to make a few very brief remarks in reference to this motion. No doubt it is very important to the North-West that it should have the cheapest possible rates provided for people coming in to settle, but I do not think the course the hon. gentleman has taken is one calculated to bring about that desirable result. I believe it is of the highest importance to the future railway development of the North-West that the absolute and complete success of the Canadian Pacific Railway should be assured, so that the capitalists of the world, upon whom we depend in the future for building our roads, should have the utmost possible confidence in railway enterprises in that country. I do not think the time has arrived when it is in the interests of Manitoba or the North-West to agitate in a manner that would cause the people of Canada to break faith with the Canadian Pacific Railway, who have just, and only just, completed one of the greatest railway enterprises of the present age. I think the right course is to wait patiently until that country becomes a little further settled, and to unite the efforts of the whole people of the North-West in developing that new pathway to the granary markets of Europe, the Hudson Bay Railway. What would be the effect of the resolution of the hon. gentleman upon that channel of trade? It would be of a most disastrous character. There is not a step the hon. gentleman could take which is more calculated to injure that great enterprise than the one he has taken, because it would have the effect of completely destroying the confidence of British capitalists in the good faith of the people of Canada. The course the hon. gentleman has taken is calculated to do the greatest possible amount of injury to the district he represents. He also is attempting to advocate the interests of the people of Winnipeg. How does that tally with his advocacy of a railway to the south, extending from Portage la Prairie to the Lake of the Woods? That may be a most desirable railway, but I hold it is essentially important that we should secure the absolute success of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and certainly the railway the hon. gentleman advocates would not conduce to the best interests of Winnipeg. I do not think the people of Winnipeg have very much faith in the hon. gentleman's advocacy of their cause. Winnipeg is at a disadvantage to-day, and it would be better in the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway if she were placed more on an equality with Montreal in her commercial relations. She is to-day the commercial and financial centre of the whole North-West Territories, and I hope good counsel will prevail in the board of the Canadian Pacific Railway, by which Winnipeg will receive more favorable terms in freight. At the same time, I have not yet discovered that the hon. gentleman who has just spoken has said or done anything in all his course to advance the interests of that important city of the North-West. His course, in the various discussions which have taken place concerning the Canadian Pacific Railway, has been at variance with the best interests and the future welfare of the North-West. What was that country under the régime of the Government of hon. gentlemen opposite? I know settlers from my own county, neighbors of the hon. gentleman living opposite him in the county of Marquette, living at Portage la Prairie, who went there years before the hon. gentleman saw the country and struggled along without hope. Not one, but hundreds and thousands of people, the early adventurers who went there, waited, hopelessly watching, under the policy of the late Administration, for a change; and if it had not been for the wise and discreet policy of the present Government, the very town the hon. gentleman represents would not have had railway communication. We would instead have had the Canadian Pacific Railway running from Selkirk through a most barren district, entirely escaping the most important portion of Manitoba and the North-West; to-day the city of Winnipeg would be largely cut off from the trade of the west, while Portage la Prairie would be without any railway facilities whatever. Therefore, I say that the course of the hon. gentleman has not been a patriotic one; it has not been in the interests of the people he represents. If he were to advocate other railways through his own constituency going north, for which there is plenty of room, through that country about to be settled by Scandinavians, he would do better than he will by trying to deprive the Canadian Pacific Railway of its right and bring ruin upon the railway enterprises of the great North-West.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think before the amendment is voted on that the House ought to hear from the Government what their policy is on the important question raised by my hon. friend. I do not, however, refer so much to the question of what is to be done with the territory outside the old province of Manitoba, as to what the Government's policy is with respect to railways chartered through the original Province of Manitoba. Over and over again, hopes have been held out to the people and the Legislature of Manitoba, that, as soon as the Canadian Pacific Railway was completed, the restrictions imposed by the Government, through the veto power, would be removed. Over and over again, during the debate, on the inception of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as my hon. friend has truly said, the House was led to understand that the Government would in no way interfere with Manitoba charters; and over and over again, since that time, notably by the present High Commissioner, Sir Charles Tupper, hopes, I would almost say assurances, were held out that as soon as the Canadian Pacific Railway was completed, all restrictions should be removed in that particular direction. Now, apparently the policy of the Government has altered again. They have again disallowed an Act of the Manitoba Legislature, and I think before this Bill goes through they ought to state what they propose to do—at any rate, with respect to the old Province. There can be no doubt that the question is becoming a standing grievance in the minds of the people of Manitoba. Myself, I shall not enter now into the discussion of the question whether it was wise or not to confer a monopoly power on the Canadian Pacific Railway. My views on that are sufficiently well known, but I say that, in any case, even admitting, for the sake of argument, that that may have been justified, the time has arrived for a liberal policy being adopted now. I believe it would be in the highest degree in the interests of the people of Canada, in the interests of the people of Manitoba, and, in the long run, even in the interests of the proprietors of the Canadian Pacific Railway themselves. No man can deny that up to the present time our efforts to colonise Manitoba and the countries adjacent have been very far indeed from a success. The total population that has gone in there is pitifully small, and that has been largely due to the existence of this identical monopoly clause. However, the present point is to know what the intention of the Government is on that point, and that I think they ought to state to the House. Not merely has settlement been impeded, but it is quite clear to all who have paid the least attention to the doings of that Legislature, that so keenly is this felt that they are obliged to seek now for other outlets through the Hudson Bay and elsewhere. I am strongly inclined to think that a mere statement made in this House by the Prime Minister, that they were going to give effect to the promises held out by Sir Charles Tupper as long as two years ago, would have an extremely beneficial effect on the settlement of the whole Province of Manitoba at least, and indirectly on the North West; and looking at the very liberal manner in which we have treated the Canadian Pacific Railway, I am bound to say I think the least the Government could have done would have been to obtain some relaxation of the terms; but, if they cannot or will not do that, the least they can do is to state to the House that they intend henceforward to carry out, as far as old Manitoba is concerned, the pledge which was made by the First Minister, then Minister of the Interior, and subsequently by Sir Charles Tupper, that now that the Canadian Pacific Railway is completed, they will no longer exercise their veto power to the disadvantage of the people of Manitoba.

Mr. ROYAL. It seems to me there is something else in connection with this question which it is important to know, and I may be permitted to make one remark in connection with it. For the last five or six years, in the Province of Manitoba, there have been renewed attempts to excite public feelings on that question of the disallowance of charters. With regard to the true spirit of the excitement that is being raised now and then in that Province, I will repeat here what the First Minister of the Province very recently said on this question. He said in the Legislature of the Province:

"Gentlemen will come to this House with charters and insist on having those charters just as they place them before the House, that no interference be made by the House with their particular desire in that respect, and when, after they have been informed that these Acts would be subject to disallowance, and when they have insisted on their passage as they presented them to this House, then they should not be chagrined at the consequences It would appear that the desire of these individuals was that those Acts should be disallowed. Charters were presented to this House more for the purpose of excitement than for the purpose of promoting any other object."

I may also be permitted to read an extract from a paper which is published not very far from the county I have the honor to represent, a county which is very much interested in the question now raised by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson). The International of Emerson said recently:

"The people of Manitoba have again been thrown into a state of irritation by the disallowance of two railway charters granted by the Provincial Legislature, the Emerson and North-Western and the Manitoba Central. Practically, we do not suppose the disallowance of these two charters will affect the material interests of the Province one iota, because we do not believe that, if allowed to stand, one mile of railway would have been constructed under them. They were paper charters, that is all. The promoters could not put a dollar into them, and could not induce anyone else to."

I do not believe that the hon. gentleman from Marquette could have established by facts to this House that this disallowance has been a cause of ruin to the Province of Manitoba, while, on the other hand, we have the fact before the Parliament and the country which was stated by the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton), that we have lost nothing by that disallowance so far, but have gained the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is the very life not only of Manitoba but also of the North-West Territories.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The amendment moved by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) says "that the Bill should be referred back to a Committee of the Whole, with power to provide that as a condition of granting the proposed relief to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company." Well, some portion of the Bill is a relief to the Dominion of Canada, and not to the Pacific Railway Company. The hon. gentleman proposes, under this amendment, that we shall not take the $20,000,000 which the company are to pay back.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The $30,000,000 were such an excellent security, we were told a year ago.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope I shall not be interrupted, at any rate. This is part of the relief to be granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The terms, with the exception of one clause relating to the $5,000,000 of bonds held to secure the continuous running of the road for ten years, form one agreement. The company agrees to pay us $20,000,000; we agree to take the money, and we agree to take for the payment of the balance which is under $10,000,000, lands at $1.50 an acre. That is the agreement as a whole. I suppose the hon. gentleman does not wish to repudiate that. They must go together. The condition on which we get the $20,000,000——

Mr. MILLS. And give them $10,000,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD,—is that we buy back, as it were, a number of acres at $1.50 an acre to cover $10,000,000, or whatever the amount may be. I hear the hon. gentleman from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) speaking about that arrangement, and I would say it was a most satisfactory arrangement. I heard it said on the other side, while this Bill or the resolutions were in progress, that we were merely taking our land back again. By the Bill of last year with respect to this sum of $10,000,000, or $9,800,000, I think it is, we were to look to the lands to pay it, and, in case the sale of all the lands of the subsidy proved insufficient to pay the $10,000,000, we had an ultimate claim upon the railway itself. Now, everyone knows that we should never arrive at that ultimate claim. The lands are so valuable that there cannot be any doubt that they will pay the $10,000,000. The hon. gentlemen opposite will not deny that, in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway, they would amount to much more than $10,000,000. The hon. gentleman cannot deny that some of them contended that these lands would amount to much more than $10,000,000. The hon. gentleman knows that the leader of the Opposition stated that these lands were worth from $2 to $10 an acre, according to their position. I will not read the extracts—I have got them here—on the various subjects, the leader of the Opposition stating that within the railway belt a considerable portion of which will fall under this arrangement to the Government, the lands were worth from $5 to $7 an acre. Under these circumstances, when we get the land back at $1.50 an acre, I think we are making a very good bargain, and that there is not the slightest danger of the Dominion Treasury not being recouped to the utmost extent out of the land that we take. We are to have a fair average value of the land in taking it over, a fair average value of the quality and the situation of the land; and, according to the reiterated statement of the hon. gentlemen opposite, we would have infinitely more in the Dominion Treasury when these lands are sold, than $10,000,000. My hon. friend who sits behind me, the Minister of the Interior, will sell those lands just as well as Mr. McTavish sells the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; he will sell them at the same prices, he will receive the money, and he will keep an account of that money, and when all the sales of these lands are footed up, it will be found that we have not only received $10,000,000 with interest, but much more. In the meantime, while we make this arrangement, making a final settlement with the Canadian Pacific Railway with respect to the indebtedness which was incurred only a year ago, that company will stand in the markets of the world free and unencumbered from any claims on the part of the Dominion Government. They will want, as we know they will want, from their statements of what their future developments are to be, what they design it to be, and what they are going to make it, they will want a large sum of money, and these sums of money are to be expended in Canada, or for the benefit of Canada; and they will be able to raise this money when they go into the markets of the world to New York, Paris or Amsterdam, as they have done before; they can raise money on the most advantageous terms, because there is not the sign of a claim against them by the Dominion Government. Therefore the arrangement is a most satisfactory one, satisfactory in the highest degree to the company for the reasons I have given to you. They are freed from any claim or encumbrance held over them by the Dominion of Canada; they can go into the markets free and unencumbered, with all their road finished, with all their future before them, with the prospect of an enormous trade; they can go into the markets of the world, after this measure is passed, with every prospect of becoming a great commercial success. On the other hand, the Canadian Government and the Canadian Parliament are, by assisting them in this arrangement, aiding and assisting in the development, the growth, the progress and the prosperity of Canada; they are at the same time taking care that by no possibility can there be any pecuniary loss, if my hon. friend who sits behind me only sees that the land which he takes back is held at the same prices for which these very lands are put into the market by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It is an arrangement satisfactory to both sides. I am quite sure that this House and this country will consider that such an arrangement is advantageous to both sides, assisting at once, not postponing it to the future, but assisting this company in raising money, or by pledging the main road and their various auxiliary roads, to enable them to raise the sums of money that they need by which means that road will become a great factor in the future progress and the prosperity of Canada. Now, Sir, with respect to what the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) has said as to the policy of the Government with respect to the disallowance of railway Bills. I can only say, Sir, that the policy of the Government is one which will commend itself, I think, to the common sense and patriotism of every man in this House—it is simply to keep as much of the trade of the western country for the benefit of Canada as a whole, as we can secure. I say, Sir, at once, that even with that praiseworthy object, this Parliament ought not to make any restriction that would injure the North-West itself. In the course that was taken in the original agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway in the first place, we put in these clauses, giving them a certain protection for twenty years and giving them certain advantages. These clauses were put in not only for the benefit of the company, but for the benefit of the trade of Canada. We did not want to build a road running from the Pacific to Winnipeg, from the west to the east, and have that road tapped by continual lines running to the south, and running with the United States railways from the extreme west to the extreme east, so that every few miles as we are coming eastward, we will say, from the foot of the Rocky Mountains, every few miles we find local railways built by American money, built by American railways, for the purpose of taking off the legitimate trade of our own country, bleeding it, leading off the trade by these little streams, so that by the time it got to Winnipeg, there would be no trade left, it would all have gone to the United States. The Canadian Pacific Railway has been compared in that regard to the River Rhine which, starting from its source a mighty river, is bled by small streams and before it arrives at the ocean, it is almost lost in the sands. So would be the Canadian trade of the Canadian Pacific Railway coming eastward, if it were allowed to be bled and depleted every few miles by railways running to the south and carrying off the trade to the United States. I quite agree with my hon. friend for Wellington when he says that the speech of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) will not be received favorably by the people of Winnipeg when he advocates strongly as many lines as possible. The idea my hon. friend speaks of, that as many lines should be run towards the south as possible, will not be popular there, these lines becoming the law of the land, so many rival charters being held in the hands of speculators to sell, because every one of these lines will be quoted in the market in England as a reason for not investing in the Hudson Bay Railway. But, Sir, when the hon. gentleman speaks to us about our policy, I will see what was the policy of the Government of which he was himself a member, of the Government of the hon. member for East York. This was their policy, stated in the measure introduced, I think, by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills); we find their policy in a clause which they put in the Railway Bill:

"No company shall be incorporated under the provisions of this Act for the construction of any railway having the same general direction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, or any branch thereof, at a nearer distance than forty miles."

My hon. friend from East York announced in his speech, and I think also in State papers, that he would not allow the trade of the North-West Territory to be carried off into American channels, taking it away from our Canadian railways. Who built the railway, whose money was it? It was the money of the older Provinces of the Dominion, it was the money of Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces. Did they build that railway as a local road to run from the foot of the Rocky Mountains to Winnipeg, a mere local road allowing every kind of branch line to be built to carry away the trade of our great North-West off to the United States? That was not the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. That is not our policy. Allusion has been made to the remarks of myself when the Canadian Pacific Railway charter was before us, and that I had stated we would not interfere with the action of the Manitoba Legislature. I did say so, and that is true. We cannot interfere. We were then legislating as a Legislature, we were proposing to pass the Canadian Pacific Railway Act, and part of the agreement which was before the House, and to which the sanction of the House was asked, was this clause:

"For twenty years from the date hereof no line of railway shall be authorized by the Dominion Parliament to be constructed south of the Canadian Pacific Railway from any point at or near Canadian Pacific Railway, except such lines as shall run south-west or to the west of south-west."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

And so on. So we were asked, would this clause be obligatory on the Legislature of Manitoba? We said: No; we cannot legislate for the Province of Manitoba."

Mr. MILLS. You cannot "check."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman need not interrupt me. We can only legislate within our power. Suppose we placed in that Act a clause that the Manitoba legislature should not for twenty years grant any charter for a railway except in a particular direction, that would have been an infringement of provincial rights, and we would have heard no end of howl about it. I said we could not interfere with the Manitoba Legislature. I said they can legislate in any way they please, and we can only pledge ourselves as to what the Dominion Parliament would do. In the same we cannot interfere with the Legislatures of Ontario, of Quebec, as I said in my speech which the hon. gentleman quoted. But that does not interfere with, it has no connection with, the executive power given to the central authority to exercise the power of disallowance as regards any Act passed by any Legislature which is detrimental or injurious to the interest of the whole Dominion. Why, I have heard the hon. gentleman quote again and again as against me and as against the course of the Government, the rules that were laid down in a minute drawn by myself, pointing out the occasions on which the Executive Government of the Dominion could properly interfere with legislation of the Provinces; and that has been quoted approvingly as against the action of the Government. It has been said that we have gone further in our anxiety for centralisation; that we have gone further than the principles laid down in the minute. That has been accepted by the other side, and acted upon, and it is charged that we did not adhere to that minute. I do not admit that those statements were correct. But the principle is laid down there, that in any case where an Act was ultra vires, of course it ought to be disallowed; or if an Act was contrary to the interests of the Dominion as a whole, the Government ought to exercise the power of disallowance, just in the same spirit, to no greater extent, but to the same extent, as Her Majesty's advisers in England could and would properly exercise the power of disallowing any Act of this Parliament if it was found to be injurious to the interest of the Empire. Her Majesty's Government would disallow any Act, although within our power if not objected to, if in their opinion it was opposed to the interests of the Empire as a whole. So we claim, and that paper claims the same power here: That we might disallow any local measure which was contrary to the interests of the Dominion as a whole. In regard to the disallowance of those Bills, it was done in a great degree to help the Canadian Pacific Railway; it was not to allow other companies to take away their trade before the line had begun to be operated, that before the company could have the railway finished or a locomotive running on it or a single train moved, lines would be built, in effect foreign railways, to carry the traffic of the North-West to the south of the line, before, I say, the Canadian Pacific Railway had the opportunity of showing what they could do, before they made their great connections and established trade from the extreme west through the Province of Ontario to the sea at Quebec and Halifax. I say that the people of the older Provinces who built the road had a right to expect that their interests would be protected; that they would not be taxed, and we have heard from hon. gentlemen opposite how much we were to be taxed—to say nothing about the bonds or the land we have advanced, $25,000,000 in cash, and we have given them hundreds of miles of line already built by us—that they should not hand over the money to the injury rather than to the advantage of the older Provinces which provided all the money and had undertaken all the responsibility. That is the policy of the Government, and to that we will adhere. Suppose, and it is very unlikely, that the Canadian Pacific should for some reason or other—the ways of railways are inscrutable—desire to have a number of railways running from their line in the North-West in connection with the railways of the United States, would we, if we thought it was against the interest of the trade of Canada, yield to that proposition because the Canadian Pacific Railway Company thought it would suit the interest of their shareholders? No. This provision is laid down not only for the interests of the railway but still more for the interest of the trade of Canada as a whole. I have said more than I intended to say and more perhaps than my slowly returning strength makes it prudent for me to say, because I feel very strongly on this matter, that we must adhere to the principle adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite then in power and carried out by us in the same spirit, the patriotic spirit, of making this railway the greatest channel for the trade of the whole of Canada, not of any section of it or of any locality, but of the Dominion as a whole. Now the road helps British Columbia, the great North-West and Manitoba—it helps all the Provinces; and we are now rapidly bringing in the little Island of Prince Edward, which might have seemed to be cut off from the advantages of the railway, we are even bringing in that Island by our legislation and subsidy to have a direct interest in the trade of the Canadian Pacific Railway like the larger and older continental Provinces. I think that this House, concurring in the views which I have so imperfectly expressed, will vote down this amendment.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman has expressed himself with a good deal of warmth and vigor upon this very important question. He has intimated that it would be in the highest degree detrimental to the public interest to allow the Canadian Pacific to connect with railways in the United States. The hon. gentleman has shown a good deal more interest, it seems to me, in protecting in this way — if that be called a necessary protection — the Canadian Pacific Railway Company than he has in protecting the railways that are more immediately under the control of the Administration. Now, Sir, we have railways in the eastern portion of this Dominion which have been built at the expense of the public Treasury. We have railways that are at the present time officered and manned—if I may use the expression—at the public expense, and if I remember rightly the hon. gentleman has voted a large subsidy to build a railway in competition with this railway of Canada—in fact to build a short line across the State of Maine. Now if the hon. gentleman had told the House what there was specially in the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to make such a policy in the North-West absolutely necessary to the well-being of the country, and absolutely necessary to the maintenance of our common sense and patriotism—for the hon. gentleman said that both the patriotism and the common sense of the House showed that such a course was the only proper one to pursue in the public interest—I would like the hon. gentleman to explain to the House how it was not even permissible, or consistent with the common sense or patriotism, to have railway connection with railways south of the 49th parallel, while to the east we have not only railway connection permitted, but we have large subsidies granted from the public Treasury to construct those railways on the other side. Now, I say that the policy of the Government and the course they are pursuing to the west of Lake Superior, and the course they are pursuing to the east of the St. Lawrence, are wholly different; and the hon. gentleman would have done well, when he undertook to emphasise this feature of their policy to the west, if he had given some explanation of their policy in the east, and had pointed out how it was right and proper and in the public interest to subsidise a railway in the State of Maine, while it is not even permissible west of Lake Superior to permit railway connection with the railways of the United States. Now, the hon. gentleman said that he informed the House that we could not legislate for Manitoba. Well, I do not know in what sense he used that expression. Did he mean to say that we cannot here pass legislation which is within the jurisdiction of the Local Legislature of Manitoba? Nobody ever pretended any such thing could be done. No, Sir, the hon. gentleman did not use such an expression; he did not speak in the direction in which he spoke to-day. Then the Canadian Pacific Railway charter was under consideration, the question was whether the Government were going to exercise their power of disallowance, in the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and in the furtherance of those provisions contained in the contract, and the hon. gentleman used the expression—not that we cannot legislate in the interests of Manitoba, but that we cannot check Manitoba. Those were the words he used. He intimated then that it was not in the power of the Government, acting in the spirit of the constitution, to disallow Acts passed by the Local Legislature, within the authority of the Local Legislature, nor was it their intention to do so. Now we have the words the hon. gentleman used in that discussion. He said:

"In order to give them a chance we have provided that the Dominion Parliament—mind you the Dominion Parliament, we cannot check any other Parliament.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. MILLS. Yes: The hon. gentleman says we cannot, what? We shall not legislate here in this House contrary to the provisions of this contract, but that we cannot prevent the Province of Manitoba from so legislating; we cannot prevent the Province of Ontario from so legislating. Well, Sir, did not the hon. gentleman prevent the Province of Manitoba from so legislating when he disallowed their legislation? Does the hon. gentleman pretend to say that he meant that we would not undertake to prevent an Act formally being passed by the Local Legislature, but we intend to disallow it? Is that the meaning of the expression used by the hon. gentleman? Why, Sir, it is perfectly clear that what he wished to convey to the House was, that in the furtherance, the fulfilment, of the engagement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company the Government here would not advise the exercise of the prerogative of disallowance, with reference to the legislation of the Province of Manitoba or the Province of Ontario. He says:

"In order to give them a chance we have provided that the Dominion Parliament—mind you the Dominion Parliament, we cannot check any other Parliament, we cannot check Ontario, we cannot check Manitoba—shall, for the first ten years after the construction of the road, give their own road, into which they are putting so much money and so much land, a fair chance of existence."

That was the position taken by the hon. gentleman, and so the House understood him. Those words will admit of but one construction. There was no expression about legislation which would have had any meaning that would not have been inconsistent with that faculty of common sense to which the hon. gentleman has appealed. It is clear that he meant one thing, and that was that we would not undertake, by the exercise of the power of disallowance, to control the action of the legislature of Manitoba with reference to railways chartered by that Province. The hon. the First Minister was followed in that discussion by the present Minister of the Interior; and that hon. gentleman's speech shows how he understood the expression. We have only to look at the point which was under discussion to understand his meaning. The question was, how far the Government would undertake to interfere with the freedom of the Local Legislatures of the different Provinces in carrying out their provincial policy, and the hon. gentleman said, in speaking of that question:

"We are told now that because of the fifteen miles there never can be any other railway into this country. To what does that apply? Simply to the Territories over which the Dominion Parliament has control. There is nothing to prevent Manitoba now, if it thinks proper, granting a charter from Winnipeg to the boundary line."

The hon. gentleman says that is true. But did the hon. gentleman mean that the Province of Manitoba was to be free to pass its laws? Everybody knew that; nobody questioned that. That was not the point at issue. The point at issue was, will the Government interfere with the freedom and the rights of the Province, for the purpose of furthering its policy—its contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. That was the question, and the hon. gentleman and the present Minister of Interior both said. It shall not be done. There is nothing required by this contract on the part of the Government to interfere with the Province. Now, I will go further and maintain that the hon. gentleman violated the spirit and intent of the constitution in the exercise of this power of disallowance. I say that we in the Parliament of Canada, while we have a right to legislate in the interests of the public, have only a right to do so within the limits of the constitution, as set forth in the British North America Act. We are told there that certain powers which belonged to the Provinces before there was a British North America Act—because certain powers are defined and limited, and a portion of them are taken away; the residue of them, under the 92nd section of the Act, were powers which they possessed before. Well, Sir, in the exercise of these reserved powers they may see proper, in the interests of the Province, to pass a certain railway charter, or adopt any other act of public policy, within their constitutional limits. I say that neither this Parliament nor the Government can exercise the prerogative of the Crown, to interfere with them constitutionally, any more than they can with the people of the State of New York. They have no more right in the one case than in the other. That power of disallowance can be only properly exercised when the Provincial Act is ultra vires——

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There was no necessity for disallowance then.

Mr. MILLS. I admit it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. MILLS. I have always contended so, and I think the abuse that has been made of that power shows that to be the case. The speeches of both the First Minister and the Minister of the Interior show that in order to get the assent of Parliament to that arrangement, they sought to satisfy Parliament that this power of disallowance would not be used for the purpose of encroaching upon the freedom of the Provinces in carrying out their own views of public policy within their own jurisdiction. Now, the hon. gentleman says that we have to consider the public interest as well as the interest of the railway company in the arrangement which is now being made. Well, Sir, when it is proposed to take $20,000,000 in payment of a debt of $30,000,000, the concession will be held to be on the side of the party receiving the money; but the hon. gentleman says: Oh, the company are giving us back lands that are worth more than the difference between the $30,000,000 and the $20,000,000. That may be so, but the statement of the hon. gentleman does not add anything to the evidence of that fact. The hon. gentleman cannot have forgotten that he made a statement of his expectations in 1880 in reference to those lands; in fact, he had then great expectations. He told us what he expected was going to be the increase in population in the Territories year after year, the cost of the management of public lands, the area sold, and the amount of money realised. I have before me that statement, and I find that the hon. gentleman calculated that by the year 1890 we should receive $71,000,000 in cash, and that we should pay out for the management and survey of public lands $2,400,000, leaving us something like $69,000,000 in cash to apply towards recouping ourselves for the money we had advanced towards the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Six years of that period have now elapsed, and in looking over the Public Accounts I find that we have paid out over $3,600,000, instead of $2,400,000, for the management and survey of public lands, and we have received something like $4,000,000; so that instead of having $69,000,000 to apply towards the cost of construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, we have less than $1,000,000. Therefore we cannot attach very much importance to the conclusions the hon. gentleman has reached.

Mr. BOWELL. How many Acts did you disallow while you were in power?

Mr. MILLS. We never disallowed an Act that we believed to be within the jurisdiction——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman cannot find an Act that was disallowed on any other ground than that it was ultra vires.

Mr. BOWELL. How about the Act respecting Escheats?

Mr. MILLS. I will not further tresspass on the indulgence of the House. I think it will be in the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company themselves that the Government should not exercise the power they propose to retain on behalf of the company. Listening to the speech of the First Minister, one would suppose that the country was held in the interest of the railway. I do not take that view. I suppose the railway was constructed in the interest of the country for the purpose of developing it. I admit that we have no possible interest to do anything but what is best for the railway company. The construction of other railways, and the furnishing of facilities for settlement may not be regarded by the railway company as advantageous to them; but I believe that whatever will contribute to the settlement and the general development of the country will in the end prove beneficial to the Canadian Pacific Railway itself. I am satisfied that the removal of these restrictions would largely promote the prosperity of the country, and would be in the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway itself.

Mr. FOSTER. I should not have said a word in this debate except for the position in which my hon. friend who has just taken his seat has sought to put this question. It is not the first time he has evinced his hostility to any measure which has tended to lighten the disabilities or to increase the commercial prosperity of the Maritime Provinces, not only as a member of this House, but as a publisher and editor of a paper. In both of these situations, he has taken occasion again and again to evince that hostility to the Maritime Provinces, of which he has given another instance this afternoon. He has spoken of the subsidising of a railway, commonly known as the Short Line Railway, to unite the Maritime Provinces by a shorter line of communication with the central part of Canada and the Great West; and if there was any point in his argument at all, it led to this conclusion, that it was a wrong action on the part of this Government to subsidise a road leading to the Maritime Provinces by a shorter route than any existing at present—that it was wrong to subsidise the Short Line Railway running through the State of Maine.

Mr. GILLMOR. He never said anything of the sort.

Mr. FOSTER. He did say that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. FOSTER. Hon. gentlemen, although they have a great deal of prescience, and a great deal of prophetic vision, should wait until they hear what my statement is before they attempt to divine the meaning of it. My hon. friend said that the Premier was wrong in adopting the policy that the Canadian Pacific road should be subsidised from the Great West round by the head of Lake Superior, and that no road should be allowed to lead the freight down to the United States border and through the American States; and the hon. gentleman wanted to know, if it was right that the road which runs around Lake Superior should be kept from being tapped by branches running into the United States, how it was right to subsidise with the people's money a line running through the State of Maine, to cut off what he considered the profits upon freight going by the longer route of the Intercolonial Railway. That was the position my hon. friend took; and if there was any point in his argument it was that it was wrong for the Government to subsidise the Short Line Railway running through the State of Maine. I say there is no inconsistency in those two positions. The line running through the State of Maine was subsidised in order to enable the Maritime Provinces to reach the great line around Lake Superior and the lines running through the central part of Canada by the shortest possible route. It was that reason which animated men of both political parties in the Maritime Provinces to demand a subsidy for that road from this Government year after year, and not to rest satisfied until it was granted. I know that the hon. member for Bothwell did not vote for that subsidy; he left very suddenly at the time the vote came on; and he has evinced his hostility to it on several occasions. By the longer route, the Intercolonial Railway, passing where it does, the Maritime Provinces were placed at the greatest possible disadvantage in their trade relations with the central and western portions of Canada, and the object of building the shorter line of communication was to put the Maritime Provinces in as good a position as they could be placed in that respect. The very reason which dictated that wise policy is the same reason which says that for a period of years at least that road, which is meant to bind the trade of the central portions of Canada with the west, shall not be tapped by roads which will dissipate that trade, and, instead of binding this country together in a commercial whole, would send the commerce of the country dribbling out in little streamlets all along that line of railway.

Mr. MILLS. Why was the road built in the first place? Why did the Government spend $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 in building the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. MITCHELL. I will tell you why by-and-bye.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman knows why well enough. The debate on Confederation, the arguments which led the statesmen of that period to consent, as a condition of Confederation, to that road being built in the way it was, the hon. gentleman knows quite well. My hon. friend says that the great expectations of the party in power have not been realised. Well, there are great expectations and there are little expectations; and I will never charge the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) with nourishing great expectations with reference to this country. If he nourishes any expectations at all, they are expectations which are small and minifying of the prospects and the future of this country, and it ill becomes him, or the hon. gentlemen for whom he speaks, to talk about the failure of expectations. I have here a little volume which, if I were to read it, would show the little expectations hon. gentlemen opposite held with reference to there ever being a single dollar of the amount which was loaned to the Canadian Pacific Railway being paid back to the country. Nearly every hon. gentleman who spoke on that side declared, if not with the same emphasis, yet almost to the same effect as the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) did, when, in one of the debates, he said: "I would as soon believe that the waters would flow back from the sea to the lakes as that one cent of that money will ever come back from the Canadian Pacific Railway exchequer to the Dominion Exchequer." That is a sample of the little expectations which hon. gentlemen opposite indulge in. I would rather indulge in great expectations, if they looked forward to a noble and grand future, and be somewhat disappointed, than indulge in small expectations of the future of the country. I simply rise to state to the House clearly, so that they will see, as I have no doubt they have seen the drift of the arguments of hon. gentlemen opposite, and the inconsistent position the hon. gentleman took when he attacked, as he has so often attacked, the vote of money this House gave to build up the trade interests of the Maritime Provinces, by securing to them what hon. gentlemen on each side of him voted for and spoke for and were very anxious to get.

Mr. FAIRBANK. I shall detain the House but a few moments. I wish first to express my satisfaction, and I think the feeling is common to the entire House, at the vigor with which the First Minister addressed the House on this subject. It gives us unmistakeable evidence of his restoration to health. For the disallowance of Manitoba local charters, the Government is from day to day responsible, and they do not shirk that responsibility, but rather glory in it. For the monopoly of the Canadian Pacific Railway and its effects they are also responsible. They are also responsible for monopoly west of Manitoba, but that responsibility was incurred at the time of making the contract. We are all glad to get back two-thirds of the money, and I believe there would be no serious objection whatever to taking back the land if it were free land. If it were free land, it would be worth considerably more than we are paying for it. It may be worth, under existing circumstances, all that we give for it, but I do not rise to discuss that portion of the question. That the land is not free of railway monopoly is the reason we are offered it instead of money. Had it been free, it would not have been the company's land to-day to offer to us, because it would have been in the hands of settlers who had purchased it. The reason it is not, is because it is suffering from the disavantages of a monopoly. Hon. gentlemen may quote rates. I do not care what the rates are; I do not care even if they be cheaper than they are anywhere else, the settler rests under the liability that he may at any time be charged rates above what he can pay or what he may be willing to pay. That is the great drawback to the settlement of the country, as the last few years have shown. To my mind—perhaps it is not a logical mind—there is a strange want of logic in the reasons advanced by the three speakers opposite. First, we are told by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Royal) that the railway charters are disallowed because they are mere paper charters, because their promoters cannot build a mile of railway and cannot put a dollar into the concern. We are told, in the second place, by the right hon. the First Minister, that he is opposed to roads being built every few miles along the line. There are two sets of objections: One that the roads would not be built, and the other that they would be too many. As a final argument, we are told that we should not allow the people to enjoy their natural rights of building their railways where they choose, because the old Provinces have advanced the money to build the main line; and in the same breath the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton) says to disallow the charters is the best possible thing that could happen to the North-West, because disallowing them will probably have the effect of bringing about the construction of the Hudson Bay Railway. If the Hudson Bay Railway is to be built, how are the old Provinces going to be recouped for their expenditure on the main line. What is the practical difference to the old Provinces if the trade drifts into the United States, or goes by the outlet of Hudson Bay? Is Hudson Bay or its outlets in the old Provinces? Where is the great advantage of preventing trade going to the United States in order to foster a line going to Hudson Bay? The First Minister is undoubtedly sincere, but many men before him have been sincere on a wrong policy. He has, rather indirectly intimated that the railway company themselves are not wedded to this policy. He has said that if they choose, as the courses which railways pursue are doubtful and uncertain —if they believed it to be their interest, at any time, to allow roads to be built, running to the south, the Government would not allow them. The last speaker has referred to binding the Provinces together. My opinion is that the best way in which we can possibly bind the Provinces together is by promoting content among their inhabitants, making the people of the North-West satisfied, contented, and you have produced the strongest possible band with which you can bind them to the Eastern Provinces. I believe they are not contented. I have myself heard language in that country which I am sorry to hear in any portion of the Dominion upon this subject. What have we to fear, or what have the railway company to fear from competition from the other side? With the great cash subsidy that they have received, with the large land subsidy that they have received, with the free railroads that they have received, with their proximity to the head waters of the St. Lawrence, at Thunder Bay, I believe they are in a position to compete successfully, very successfully, with any possible railway on the American side or any system of railways. I believe, furthermore, that with these great advantages it is quite possible, and I hope yet to see it, that they will penetrate the line that we are now debarred from crossing, and will draw business to our side rather than take it the other way. There are two policies in relation to dealing with the expressed wishes of the people. One is to concede to them gracefully and fairly; the other is to concede to them when you can no longer resist them. I fear very much that in this question of railways in the North-West, we are pursuing the latter policy. We are debarred from crossing the line with railroads, but the right hon. the Prime Minister must know that, though the Government may prevent railways from crossing that line, they cannot in the future, any more than in the past, prevent our citizens from crossing it, and, if discontent reigns in that vast country, they will, not only from it but from the old Provinces as well, continue to cross that line, although railroads are prevented from crossing.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman would have the House believe that there is great discontent in the North-West occasioned by the rates that are being charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have waited patiently thinking that perhaps, when hon. gentlemen were making the statement, they would come down to the figures and would attempt to show that the Canadian Pacific Railway is charging more for the carriage of freight from the North-West eastward or in any other direction than competing railways in the United States. When we turn to the figures, we find that the inhabitants of the North-West are especially favored in freight rates compared to the settlers in the American North-West. In 1884, a comparison was given of the charges on freight between the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Union Pacific, and the St. Paul and Minneapolis Railway for 500 miles. The charge on 100 lbs. of wheat was 30 cts. by the Canadian Pacific Railway, $1 by the Union Pacific, 68 cts. by the Northern Pacific, and 30 cts. by the St. Paul and Minneapolis. In 1885, the Canadian Pacific Railway give a comparison of their rates with the rates charged by a number of railways in the United States. The rate charged by the Canadian Pacific Railway per ton, per 100 miles, is $1.20; by the Northern Pacific, $1.96; by the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba, $1.80; by the Union Pacific, $1.91; by the Central Pacific, $1.96; by the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, $1.28; by the Chicago and North-Western, $1.31; by the Atcheson, Topeka and Santa Fe, $1.79; by the Illinois Central, $1.31; by the Boston and Lowell, $2.33; by the New York and New England, $1.72; and by the Boston and Providence, $2.83. So that from the figures given hon. gentlemen opposite will see that the Canadian Pacific Railway are not using any monopoly that they claim they have, and that the hon. gentlemen stated they have, injuriously to the settlers of the North-West, that their average rate for freight is actually less than on all these railways I have named, showing that there is nothing to complain of in the rates of freight as compared with other railways in the United States and more particularly in the North-West. Hon. gentlemen opposite have spoken of Manitoba and the disallowance of Acts in Manitoba, forgetting that Manitoba to-day is very different from the Manitoba of 1881, when the Canadian Pacific Railway charter was granted and assented to, that the Province of Manitoba is ten times as large to-day as it was then. On the 15th February, 1881, when the Canadian Pacific Railway charter became law, the total area of Manitoba was 9,500,000 acres. At the same Session, after the railway charter was granted, the Province of Manitoba came here asking that her boundaries should be extended, and they were extended, so that she at present has an area of 96,000,000 acres. The Province of Manitoba accepted that increased area upon the condition that all the provisions that we had made in the railway charter should be observed and held over that acquired territory. The Government of Manitoba acknowledged and accepted the principle that the traffic and trade of the Canadian Pacific Railway should not be tapped and should not be drawn south into the United States, the principle which we had acted upon and which the hon. gentlemen who preceded us in the Government acted upon in the legislation which they passed in 1878 in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. WATSON. In the added territory.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes, Manitoba acknowledged the principle that it was right and proper that that traffic should not be drawn south.

Mr. WATSON. Not the old Province.

Mr. McLELAN. And nine-tenths of the area of the Province of Manitoba has been acquired and given to the Province since the Canadian Pacific Railway charter was assented to.

Mr. WATSON. All the Acts that have been disallowed have been in reference to the old Province of Manitoba.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has referred to a statement made by the right hon. the Premier, respecting the expectations we had of receipts from the North-West, and has made a comparison, limiting it only to the cash receipts by the Government. The House will remember that the Premier made his calculations before the granting of the Canadian Pacific Railway charter, and that he embraced the whole of the receipts from the lands to be sold in the North-West. Since the railway charter was granted, in 1881, the receipts by the company and by the Government for lands, in cash, have been $14,361,406, a pretty fair return since 1881; and there have been lands sold, exclusive of those sold to colonisation companies, upon which there is due, and will be paid to the company and the Government, about $6,500,000; so that the return, either in cash or in the balance yet uncollected, is nearly $21,000,000 since 1881. When we look at it in that respect, and take the amount of cash received by the company and by the Government since the granting of this charter in 1881, we find that there has been a pretty fair return from the lands, from which we can, I think, calculate that in the next few years, when the road is in operation and the country is opened up, the returns from the lands of the North-West will be a very considerable augmentation to the revenues of the country.

Mr. DAVIES. I cannot see what conclusion the hon. gentleman intended to draw from his argument that a certain amount of money had been received from the North-West lands by the Canadian Pacific Railway. That was not the question under discussion. The only point alluded to by my hon. friend was the question of the amount of money we have received, from the sale of land in the North-West Territory, and how nearly the prediction of the hon. Premier of the enormous number of millions we would receive, has been verified by the fact. That, Sir, is not the question under discussion. I am sure the Premier must have appreciated both the motive and the result which followed from the rising of the Minister of Marine to make clear that which he did not make clear himself. The Minister was very much afraid that the policy of the Government was not fairly understood, although the leader had taken no small pains and no little time to explain that policy; therefore he rose to throw a little more light upon the subject. And what is the result? The hon. gentleman avoided the question under discussion altogether, and attempted, not willingly, I hope, to distort the argument advanced by my hon. friend at my left. Now what was the position which the hon. member for Bothwell took upon this matter? He says the policy of the Government, when they built the Intercolonial Railway a few years ago, was to build it on British territory altogether, was to ignore commercial reasons altogether, and to build it as far away from the American frontier as they possibly could. The result of that policy was the useless expenditure of some twenty millions of money; I use the word useless, because now, as he says, you propose to run a new and short line from Montreal to the east, not through British territory at all, but through American territory. Now he says, the money of the people of the Dominion built the road to the east of Montreal, and it builds the road in the western country, so that if it is right and proper that in the eastern portion of the Dominion you should expend the public money in subsidising a road which is to run through American territory, how can you justify a refusal to allow private corporations to build roads in the western part of the Dominion which may run from the Canadian Pacific Railway to American territory—not with public money, but with that of private companies? Now, Sir, I do not think that upon this matter Parliament has been treated fairly by the hon. gentleman. It has been shown already that when he sought to induce this House to agree to the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, he explained clearly that the intention was not to hamper or to check the increase of roads from the Canadian Pacific Railway to the American boundary. He explained that clearly and distinctly, and afterwards what policy did the hon. gentleman adopt? When the Manitoba Legislature took him at his word and passed charters allowing the construction of roads from the Canadian Pacific Railway through the territory of the old Province of Manitoba, the hon. gentleman says he penned a Minute of Council overriding their legislation and preventing it from becoming law, upon several grounds, one of which was that it did interfere and did conflict with the charter granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman says "no," but I referred a short time ago to the Minute of Council which he mentioned, and if the hon. gentleman will refer to it he will find that he distinctly takes both grounds. I will refer the hon. gentleman to the Sessional Papers in volume 18, 1885, page 44, where he will find that the Acts for the construction of the Winnipeg and South-Eastern Railway Company, the Manitoba Tramway Company, the Emerson and North-Western, and the Manitoba Act, and the Acts for the construction of two lines in British Columbia, were reported upon by the Minister of Justice, and in that report those Acts were recommended for disallowance. Why? Because their terms conflicted with the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, in the first place, and because the policy of the Government, which was confirmed by Parliament and acquiesced in by the Legislature of Manitoba, with reference to the added territory only, was intended to prevent that diversion. So that the hon. gentleman asked in his recommendation for the disallowance of these Acts, and he did so on the grounds that they were distinctly at variance with the contract of the Canadian Pacific Railway, notwithstanding the pledge he had given in this House, that it was not the intention of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract to interfere with the construction of these roads. Now, what was the other ground? On the ground that it was not in the interest of the public that these lines should be allowed to be built to draw away traffic from the Canadian Pacific Railway. Sir, that policy was repudiated in this House by the Minister of Railways, in 1884. When the hon. gentleman sought to induce this House to agree to the contract, he, as First Minister, put a construction upon that contract which, when it suited his purpose, he afterwards repudiated, when he wanted these Acts to be disallowed. Afterwards, when the Government sought to induce this House to agree to a loan of $30,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway, what inducements did they offer? The Minister of Railways, speaking on behalf of the Government, speaking as the mouth-piece of the Government, distinctly told to the House if we would grant them that $30,000,000, the policy of the Government with regard to disallowing these Acts, would be reversed. The Minister of Railways, on that occasion, made a lengthy speech in the course of which, he said:

"I am glad to be able to state to the House, that such is the confidence of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the power of the Canadian Pacific Railway to protect itself, that when the line is constructed north of Lake Superior, the Government feel it will not be incumbent upon them to preserve the position they have hitherto felt bound to preserve, that of refusing to consent to the construction of lines within the Province of Manitoba, connecting it with American railways to the south. I can give no better evidence to the House and the country of the advanced position which we consider this great enterprise of the Canadian Pacific Railway has attained, than when I say that I feel it is consistent with what we owe to the people of this country and to that great national work, that the Government should not deem it incumbent upon themselves to pursue the restrictive policy within the Province of Manitoba which we have hitherto been obliged to maintain."

There, Sir, was a solemn pledge and compact made, so far as a Minister could make a pledge to, and compact with, the House, that if we would loan $30,000,000 the previous restrictive policy of the Government would be reversed, these lines should be allowed to be built, and we stand in that position. To-day we have a construction placed by the First Minister upon the contract of the Canadian Pacific Railway at variance with that placed upon it when it was brought down for ratification; and we have the pledge given by the Minister of Railways—that if we would make that loan to the company their policy should be reversed—deliberately repudiated. We have that pledge broken, and we have the First Minister coming here to-day, snapping his fingers at that pledge, and saying it is not the intention of the Government to reverse that policy at all, and that after the House had been induced to vote money on that pledge. I say the House has not been treated fairly, I say the people of Manitoba are not being treated fairly. The Minister of Finance intimates that a comparison of the rates of the Canadian Pacific Railway with the rates of several lines of American railways, will be in favor of the Canadian line. That may or may not be, I have not had the opportunity of comparing them. But, Sir, what answer is that to the people, to the farmers, to the settlers, to the immigrants, who went within fifteen miles of the boundary, and who have yet no railway facilities, and no hope of getting any, if the policy of the hon. gentleman is persisted in? Why, Sir, growing grain there will have to be abandoned, for they will have no means of getting it out of the country. The hon. gentleman states in this House that he has two distinct policies; one, as far as the North-West is concerned, directly at variance with the policy which he has adopted in the eastern part of the Dominion. In the eastern part of the Dominion he allows this Canadian Pacific Railway and the Intercolonial Railway to be tapped, and runs the former railway into a foreign country. He adopts a policy the effect of which will be to divert trade from British soil. Sir, we know how this Chamber rang a few years ago with the grand policy which was comprised in the words: "Our railway shall run from ocean to ocean on British soil." All foreigners were to be excluded; there was not a foreigner from the south to be allowed to tap our roads or trade with us at all. All those statements, all that is reversed now, so far as the eastern Provinces are concerned, all that policy with regard to building the railway on British soil, and all that policy was approved by the hon. gentleman who is now Minister of Marine and Fisheries and it was cheered to the echo by hon. gentlemen opposite. When that policy was reversed and one directly opposite was introduced and the hon. gentleman declares that he intends to prevent the construction of those roads, that policy is also cheered to the echo, and it really appeared that any policy which the right hon. gentleman chooses to announce will receive the cheers of very many hon. gentlemen behind him.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And of the whole country.

Mr. DAVIES. Not of the whole country, as the hon. gentleman will learn to his cost before very many months have passed over his head. The hon. gentleman is crowing before he is out of the woods. He is going to appeal to the people shortly, we understand, and I venture to predict that when he does so some of his brightest aspirations will receive a very rude shock. But that is not exactly germane to the particular point now before the House. That particular point is, whether the pledges given by the Government in this regard are to be kept; whether faith is to be kept with the people of Manitoba; whether this policy, the results of which are so detrimental to the interests of the settlers in Manitoba, is to be maintained or not; whether that country is to be opened up by new lines, or whether the restrictive policy which had been repudiated in 1884 is to be again restored and maintained intact.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). In regard to the hon. gentleman's remarks with respect to hon. members following the policy laid down by the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government, all I can say is, that we have on more than one occasion in the past appealed to our constituents on the policy so provided, and have not been met with disapproval, but, on the contrary, that policy has been sustained. So I believe it will be at the next election, when we have to go before our constituents. Upon this particular question before the House, as a representative from Ontario I have no hesitation whatever in following the leader of the Government, and I am very much surprised to hear hon. members from Ontario or Quebec or the Maritime Provinces expressing any doubt as to the propriety of the legislation of the Government and the course which the leader has announced as the policy of the Government on this question, or expressing approval for one moment of the amendment of the hon. member for Marquette. Looking at the question from the standpoint of the older Provinces, we cannot but say that the direct effect of a policy such as the amendment now before the House proposes to introduce will be injurious to the interests of Ontario, Quebec and the older Provinces. We have risked our money, we have sacrificed our money, we have been told by hon. gentlemen opposite that we have gone into a ruinous experiment, that we have loaded ourselves with debt in order to build the Canadian Pacific Railway; and are we to stand by and see our interests threatened and everything done that will assist in procuring legislation, the effect of which will be to take the whole benefit of the trade of Manitoba and the North-West into the United States and through the United States and divert it from the older Provinces. To support the amendment of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) would be suicidal on the part of representatives from Ontario or Quebec, and probably the representatives from the eastern Provinces are in the same position. Certainly as to the representatives from Ontario and Quebec there can hardly be more than one opinion on this point, that the construction of lines tapping the Canadian Pacific Railway and leading in an easterly direction from that line into the United States, into Minnesota or Dakota or the Territories, will most directly injure the interests of the older Provinces. We do not feel as if, after risking so much for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, having built it as we have done with such wonderful success as to evoke the admiration of the world, and having secured an all-rail route through Canada on our own soil, we do not approve of the idea of the whole benefit of that great enterprise being diverted from the paths of those whose money has built the road. I grant that in some points of view it might be beneficial to residents of Manitoba and the North-West to have railway competition and American railways tapping the Canadian Pacific Railway, competing with it and dividing trade with it. But with all kindness and consideration for the interests of our western fellow-subjects I submit that it is not for them to urge such demands upon us at the present moment. I submit they ought to consider that we have made sacrifices, we have risked our money in building the railway, and it is only right and reasonable that we should protect the interests of the older Provinces in securing the trade of the country coming through Canada rather than through the United States. I was, therefore, much gratified at hearing the statement of the leader of the Government that if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should come to the Government and say they wished clause 15 repealed, it would then be a matter for consideration by the Government as to whether in the interests of the whole Dominion it was right and proper it should be repealed. For that clause is as important in the interests of the older Provinces as it is in the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. As a matter of fairness to the Canadian Pacific Railway under the circumstances of the case I do not think it is right we should now seek the abandonment of that clause, which is part of the contract and upon the faith of which the road was built. No, we should not in fairness endeavor to exact such terms from the company; but in looking at the question from the standpoint of the interests of the older Provinces I was gratified to hear the declaration of the leader of the Government, and it was with surprise I heard any hon. member from the older Provinces advocating the amendment of the hon. member from Marquette.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am only going to occupy a very few moments in expressing my opinion of the amendment. As a motion I entirely disapprove of it. I have been an advocate of the Canadian Pacific Railway on public grounds, because I believed it was in the interest of the country that it should be built. I have sustained the Administration in every measure brought in in connection with it, and I give them credit for having displayed the courage to go through with it, and it required a good deal of courage to go on from time to time in the face of the opposition of hon. gentlemen opposite. I have been astounded, and I have been more than surprised to-day to find the opposition still maintained on the other side of the House. To what is it those hon. gentlemen object? Do they still want to discredit an enterprise that is a credit and honor to Canada, because that is what several of the speeches have done this Session? I am surprised that the hon. gentleman who is in my eye, who is so vigorous in his expressions and clear in his utterances and whose speeches are always attentively listened to by this House—I regret to find that he, at this late date, keeps up this antagonism, not to the Government alone but to the enterprise itself; because whatever he may choose to do with respect to the Government that is a matter for himself; but that hon. gentleman and the leader of that party who is not now present and those who support him should long ago have become convinced that the Canadian Pacific Railway was an institution bound to be completed. It had received the aid of the Government—and magnanimous aid was given to the company,—and public confidence, and certainly within the last year we were surprised into the belief that this undertaking would be completed. There was a time when there were grave doubts as to whether it would be completed or not. And I have no doubt of this, if it had not been for the aid the Government rendered, and the manly stand they took—and I give them great credit for it—in coming to the assistance of that great enterprise and that combination of men who deserved every support and encouragement the country could give them, it was questionable whether the railway would have been in such a position that we should see it completed in our time. Sir, it is about time that the opposition to that scheme should disappear from the other side of the House. Let us look at the matter from a practical point of view. Hon. gentlemen opposite say they hope to carry the country at the next election. Well, he would be a pretty wise man who could predict the result of the next election, but I think there is a growing party between the two great parties, and when the appeal is made to the country, and when I issue my manifesto to the people, as I may possibly do before the general election, many of these gentlemen behind the Government, and many of those behind the leader of the Opposition, who vote on party lines, will find, when they go to their constituents, that they will ask them to entrust them with some discretion, to vote outside of party whips, according to their judgment, their conscience and their sense of right. Hon. gentlemen opposite, as a matter of policy, should bear in mind that the strict party line of voting on questions of public importance is not the course which is likely to create confidence in them in the minds of the public. Is it policy for them to drive away a great institution which has power in the State, and is bound to govern the State some of these days; it governs the House now just as powerfully as the Grand Trunk did a few years ago, but it is more discreet and it does not threaten them. It endeavors to accomplish the object in another way, by showing that the public interests are involved, and that as a matter of policy, hon. gentlemen should cease their opposition to an enterprise which, however much they may have attacked the Government for entering upon it, they should discuss matters on their merits, but not in a way which will throw discredit on it, or create a want of confidence in it. That is all I have to say on that point, except this, that I am going to vote right straight through for the resolutions. If any of you had any doubt about it, you have none now I hope. And now a word as to what the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) said, when he asked the question about the Intercolonial, and endeavored to contrast the different policy of the Government with regard to the clause in the Manitoba resolutions, and pointed out that they were subsidising the Short Line Railway to the Maritime Provinces. Well, Sir, I am no dog in the manger. I advocated the Intercolonial road; I believe I was, in my own humble way, a factor in endeavoring to secure it, and I take this opportunity of paying tribute to gentlemen from the Province of Quebec, and especially to one gentleman from that Province who occupied a position in the Cabinet. I take this opportunity of saying that to the late Sir George Cartier we are largely indebted for the Intercolonial Railway. In saying that, I do not wish to detract in any way from the credit which is due to the right hon. Premier, who behaved through those long negotiations with a great deal of skill and judgment, who was prepared to ascertain and to accept what was public opinion as he found it, who endeavored to gauge public opinion and judge what would be best in the interests of the country. I give the right hon. gentleman credit for that, and in my opinion he adopted that course, after the matter had been discussed for six months in the Cabinet, and for months, I believe, or certainly for many weeks, in this House, the right hon. gentleman decided in the Cabinet to adopt the route by which the Intercolonial now runs. The hon. member for Bothwell says: Why was that route adopted; why did not they adopt a shorter line then? I presume that was the line of the hon. gentleman's argument. A shorter line would not have attained the object in view then, because it would have gone through foreign territory, and we wanted, first of all, to promote the security of this portion of the Empire, by giving us a military line, by giving us connection from Halifax to Montreal, as we partly had at that time for the west. It was partly on military grounds and partly for other reasons. It was not a question of a short line through Maine, but of a line by the River St. John or one by the present route—that was the question; and after a full consideration, after elaborate surveys and reports had been made at considerable expense, the Government came to a decision which I do not regret to-day, although the distance may be longer to certain points of the Lower Provinces than by the proposed new line. Now where is the similarity, where is the comparison of such a policy as that and the policy which has been adopted in the west? Sir, as has been better said by gentlemen who have preceded me than I can say it, the older Provinces of the Dominion have spent their money and risked the credit of our nation—for nation I shall call it—in endeavoring to promote the settlement and development of the West, in endeavoring to extend its population and open up communication with the Pacific. They have done that, and when they have done that, I would say to the people of Manitoba, through their representatives and through the press, that Manitoba has been pretty well attended to. And, while I am anxious as any man to settle up Manitoba and promote her interests, she must not expect that every other interest is to be sacrificed to her. Sir, our first duty is to Canada, and not to anyone Province, not to New Brunswick, or Nova Scotia, or Prince Edward Island, or Ontario, or Quebec or Manitoba. Our first duty is to Canada, and the interests of Canada at the present time call for us to maintain the trade of that western country for the communication which we have opened up at an enormous expense to the Treasury and to her people. Sir, there is a time coming, and I believe it will come before long, when that restriction will be removed. I believe it should be removed as soon as it can be done with safety to that great enterprise and without detriment to the interests of the people of Canada at large. But this is not the time to do it. This is not the time, when there is a Bill before the House to get back $20,000,000 of cash, and the restoration of a portion of our lands to wipe out the debt, which hon. gentlemen opposite said never would be paid. In saying that they did great discredit to the enterprise, which was then struggling into existence; and they should now atone for it by coming out manfully to support that enterprise, and by saying to the country by a unanimous vote: We approve of this; we never thought that money would be paid back; we are proud to see it, and accept it; all party interests will sink before the public interest and our desire to promote the public credit.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I wish to say a few words on this question as it is so important that I think it should not be hurried through.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I for one would like very much to know that the Government could see their way clear to have such an arrangement made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that this objectionable clause restraining others from building railways within fifteen miles of the border would be done away with. It certainly has created a great deal of contention. It has been the cause of more contention, perhaps, than the thing is really worth; for, I believe, if the concession were made, that there would be only such railways built as would be paying enterprises, and that a great many charters which are now thought of because the clause is there would not be dreamed of if the clause were removed. It is true, as has been argued by some hon. gentlemen, among them by the hon. member for Marquette who moved this amendment, that hopes were held out to this Parliament that when the road was completed this clause would be swept away. Last Session there were several Bills before the Railway Committee, which were objected to by the Minister of Railways and thrown out, because the road was not completed. This year we had it announced in His Excellency's Speech from the Throne that the railway was about completed; we know that it is, to all intents and purposes, completed to the Pacific coast; the last rail has been laid; therefore the contention of last Session cannot be made this Session. I listened with the greatest interest and attention to the able speech of the right hon. leader of the Government, who, in his usual exhaustive, clear and convincing manner, argued that it would be bad policy for the Government to have this clause swept away; and I understood him to say, what I never before heard contended, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself could not build lines south and east or south-west to the border.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, no.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Then I was misinformed. I understood the hon. Premier to say this—perhaps he did not intend it—that suppose they themselves proposed to build lines to the border, tapping the great trunk line stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the Government would not allow them to do so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me, or perhaps I may have expressed myself imperfectly. I said the clause in the Bill was for the protection of the Dominion particularly, as well as for the benefit of the railway, and that even if the railway company desired to give up that clause, if we thought it was in the interest of the Dominion to keep it there, it must remain there.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Then the railway company themselves can build all the lines they like. They now own two lines running from Winnipeg into Dakota and Minnesota. It is proposed to run a line from Brandon to the boundary line; but the Canadian Pacific Railway Company say, no, you must not do that, because it will tap our trunk line. Well, suppose it does. I do not believe it will carry grain into the United States, because—I believe I made use of this argument in this House before, and I know it is a correct argument—grain is sold at a higher price in Manitoba than it is at St. Vincent, across the line; in fact, Americans have sent their grain into our country, paid the duty, and sold it there; therefore it is not likely that grain would be taken from a richer market into a poorer market. Then, why should not we have the freest intercourse with the neighboring republic so far as passenger traffic is concerned? We are doing it down here; why should we not do it in the west? The railway company say, we will build lines, but you shall not build them except where you get our consent. I understand that the other day in the Railway Committee, the consent of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was said to have been obtained that a line should be built in British Columbia against the spirit and the letter of this clause. Now, the charter which the company obtained from this House is not a cast iron charter; they have been the first to break it, if it has been broken. If a man contracts with me to build a house, and puts all the clauses in which are necessary to protect himself, and agrees to build that house within a certain time, and represents himself as wealthy and able to build the house, and after he has been two or three months at the work comes to me and says, I shall utterly fail and be ruined if you do not advance me more money than the contract stipulated; and if he does that, not once merely, but two or three times, I do not think he can come to me afterwards, when I want him to release some clause in the contract, and say, no, that was not the agreement between us; but I say, were you not the first to break it, and come to me and ask me to help you out of holes and quagmires, and why should you not help me now? Now, I think this great railway company, with their enormous wealth and capital, after coming here and being aided by us so liberally, after we lent them $30,000,000, and gave them all sorts of concessions since, can fairly be asked, when the interests of a large section of people of this country, a daily growing people—the right arm of this Dominion, to quote the words of the hon. member for East York—demand it, and when it is necessary, in order to allay discontent, and strife, and wrangling, that they should give up this clause, and let anybody build a railway who has money to build it. If that were done you may be sure that a great many charters would disappear, and only the wholesome, the useful, and the sound charters would stand. I presume my hon. friend who moved this amendment does not intend to press it to a vote. He has heard the Government announcement of the policy to be pursued; but while I have been, and am to-day, an advocate of this road, while I admire the energy with which the company have carried on their work, and give them all the credit that is due to them, yet, as representing an eastern constituency which tells me to my face every day, you have taxed us to build this road, and I have said to them over and over again, there are objectionable clauses which will be swept away as soon as the road is built, and we shall have our money back and this great country will be on the line of prosperity with other countries, going on conquering and to conquer, growing wealthy and great. But I shall have to tell them that the time has not yet come when this objectionable clause can be swept away, when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will allow it to be swept away, although the railway is built. I find myself in that awkward position, but I trust that when we meet here again next Session, then at least we shall get relief from this clause, and shall be allowed to build our roads where we like. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have certainly had a great many concessions granted to them; and there is, perhaps, nobody who ought to be more congratulated than the hon. Premier himself upon this, almost the work of his life. It has, no doubt, been a cause of anxiety and solicitude to him far beyond what most people think; and he is, perhaps, a little more solicitous on that account for the creation of his own hand. Perhaps the child has attained such beautiful proportions that it has really mastered the parent, to the extent that his affections are completely with his offspring, and he can see no wrong in it, and cannot do too much for it. It is such a fat, sleek, well-fed young one, so handsome, promising and lusty, that he bestows all his affections on it, while the rest of the children have to go without proper clothes and necessary nourishment. His affection is pardonable. We all have our pets, and I was never more struck in my life with a picture than I was last fall with a cartoon in Grip, and Grip often gets off very good things. The cartoon represented a fair in Toronto. There were all kinds of animals there and manufactures, and all sorts of things, and prominent in the show was a great big pen with one solitary big sow in it. She was too fat to stand almost, and she was labelled "C.P.R."—and there stood the Premier, in the garb of an old farmer, pointing to the sow with a look of pride, saying: "Look at her; fatted all myself;" and certainly he has got the fattest sow ever fattened in the North-West or in the Dominion of Canada.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. North-westerly not son'-westerly.

Mr. WOODWORTH. No wonder, he looks at the curl of the sow's little tail; the sow is so fat that it has almost no tail at all, and the feed that has gone into it and the proportions it has attained, have made it so dear to his affections, that I am afraid he has taken all the swill and given it to this pet. However we can pardon this, because, no doubt, it is necessary to the happiness and prosperity of the animal that it should be well fed. But I think now it has been so well fed and taken care of, a little exercise might do it good, so that it would not want to lie down all the time. I am no pessimist in regard to the road; I believe it is going to develop the country and give an impetus to it nothing else could have given. I believe we are going to see the fruits of our labors in that direction; I believe it is a continental road; I believe that it has a geographical position which is going to baffle the most astute engineers on the continent of America in endeavoring to establish competition with it; but while I believe in the road and in this great country, and while I am of that age that I can look forward with great hope to see the fulfilment of a great many, at least, of the glowing predictions that have been made, yet I think there should be reason and moderation shown; and while this great enterprise enjoys the confidence of this Parliament and the country we should not have it larger than Parliament, we should not have it dictate to Parliament, but Parliament should still have the control and management of that road, which is so closely interwoven with everything that pertains to our life as a Confederation.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Watson.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I beg to move that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend the same by striking out the provision for cancelling $10,000,000 of the Canadian Pacific Railway debt to the Government by the retention of a part of their land grant.

Amendment negatived on a division.

Mr. TROW. I think when hon. gentlemen opposite understand the motion I am about to make, they will have no objection to it. The fundamental principle of Government is to tax all properties alike, and I presume it is the interest of the country, and of Manitoba and the North-West in particular, in this case, that all properties should be liable to taxation. I have no desire to move any amendment that would interfere with the settlements already made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; my amendment is merely that the property sold by the company will be liable to taxation. Taxation is the basis of municipal government, and all lands that are not subject to taxation are a drawback to immediate settlement, for the construction of roads, and the erection of school houses. The amendment I intend to propose will do no injustice to the syndicate; it is merely intended to meet the case of capitalists who purchase at times a whole township and whose purchase is not known to the public. I do not mean to say that the syndicate would connive at keeping secret the purchase of lands, so that they might not be taxed, but there are cases of purchases of lands which are not known to the municipal authorities for years after the sale was effected, and the result is these lands do not contribute, as they should, to municipal improvements? Let a return be made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company similar to a return made by the Crown Lands Department in Ontario, either quarterly, semi-annually or annually, and the public will be greatly benefited. I beg therefore to move in amendment:

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend the same by providing that it shall be the duty of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to publish periodically to the proper authorities a list of the lands forming part of their land grant, which they have sold or may from time to time sell, with the intent that such lands may be taxed like other lands in the same municipalities.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman said he was going to make a very reasonable proposition. I think it is a reasonable proposition, that is to say, that the Canadian Pacific Railway shall publish regularly, either by laying before the House or in some other way by which publicity is given, the lands that they sell. I was at first under the impression that the hon. gentleman was going to attack the privilege the company have got in the Act. Of course we could not do that. There would be a direct breach of the contract. Has the hon. gentleman got a clause prepared to put in the Act?

Mr. TROW. No, I have not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is a reasonable proposition. I do not know that we ought to stop the passage of the Bill for that purpose, however.

Mr. TROW. Will the hon. leader of the Government prepare the amendment?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, no. I have no ojection to go into committee on it.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. TROW moved that the following be added as section 7*a*:—

The company shall lay before the House of Commons, within the first fifteen days of the meeting of Parliament, a list of all lands sold by them during the year ending on the 1st day of October in each year, together with the names of the purchasers.

Motion agreed to.

Committee rose and amendment concurred in.

Mr. McLELAN moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. McCARTHY moved in amendment:

That the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of amending the same by embodying therein the provisions of the resolution prepared by the Board of Trade of the city of Toronto, at the request of the then Minister of Railways, and which was referred to by him in his place in Parliament on the 7th February, 1881, providing for equal mileage rates going from or to Toronto by Ontario railways.

He said: This, in substance, is to provide for an equal mileage rate for the traffic passing over the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is to go to the Ontario system of railways south of that line. By the charter, provision was made that all reasonable facilities should be afforded to the Ontario and Pacific Junction Railway when it should be completed to the point of junction with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canada Central Railway Company, for the receiving, forwarding and delivering of traffic upon and over the railways of the said companies respectively, and for the return of carriages, trucks, &c. Then it went on to provide, that the rate of carriage should be the same for that particular line of road as it was upon the Canadian Pacific Railway itself east of Callander, that is to say, that the rate which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company charged should be made equal for the benefit of the Ontario system of railways. During the passage of the Canadian Pacific Railway Act, the Toronto Board of Trade became alarmed at the prospect that the Canadian Pacific Railway would acquire the Canada Central, and further, that the railway would acquire, or might acquire, as seemed then quite probable, what was known as the Ottawa and Occidental, the road from Ottawa to the city of Montreal. They memorialised the Government and asked that provision should be made, which was not quite made in the charter itself, that if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company did aquire this continuous line of railway from Callander, which was to be the terminal point of the road, to Montreal, the freight which might come from Callander to Toronto, Hamilton and the western part of Ontario, should be carried at a fair and equal mileage rate, so that the Province of Ontario and the chief cities of that Province should have fair play in the freight that came from the North-West, and in the goods that were to go from the older Provinces to the North-West. The memorial which was presented to the Government contained these provisions: It was represented that it would practically transfer the terminus of the road from Callander where, as we thought probable, it was arranged that the terminus of the road was to be, to Montreal, and the result of that would be that it would give the Province of Quebec a strong and direct interest to divert the traffic of the North-West away from the Ontario system of railways and centres of trade, so as to pass it over the whole length of their easterly lines. Therefore the Board of Trade went on in their memorial to say, that they protested against power being granted without a most stringent provision being made to prevent injustice to Ontario traffic, and they urged upon the Government that in order to protect Ontario interests it was absolutely necessary that no higher mileage rates should be charged on Ontario traffic over the Canadian Pacific Railway west of Lake Nipissing, than that which would be charged pro rata on eastern traffic in proportion to the whole distance of its carriage by the railways owned or operated by the syndicate; or, in other words, that the syndicate should not be permitted to place any higher mileage rates on the portion of their railway through which the Ontario traffic must pass than on the portion over which the eastern traffic must pass. The result of that memorial to the Government was that negotiations were entered into between the Government and the railway company and the Government reported to the deputation that the railway company had agreed to the following proposition. It was the determined intention of the Government, as represented by Sir Charles Tupper, the then Minister of Railways, that the interests of Ontario should be fully looked after. It was their aim that each Province should have the full benefit of its natural position, and they would regard it as a national calamity if they failed in providing equal facilities for all. The understanding with the railway company was clear upon that point, and as it was proverbially difficult to provide against the ingenuity of the railway management, the Minister of the day promised that he would be glad to have the advantage of any suggestions from the board, which would serve to strengthen the clause, so as to procure this desirable result. The Board of Trade thus invited to formulate a proposition, did so, and they sent to the Minister of Railways this clause, which I will read:

"And in the event of the (Pacific) company's acquiring, amalgamating with, or leasing, or holding and operating the said Canada Central Railway, or purchasing, acquiring or holding or operating any line or lines of railway, or acquiring running powers over any railway, as in this section provided for, then and in any such case, it shall be unlawful for the company to make, and the company shall not make, any greater or higher charge for the carriage of traffic passing to and from the Ontario and Pacific Junction Railway over any part of the company's line, west of Callander station, than the lowest mileage rate charged by the company for the carriage over such part of their line, on other similar traffic, and such lowest mileage rate shall in every such case be ascertained by apportioning upon the mileage of such part of an equal pro rata share of the whole charge made by the company for the carriage of such similar traffic over the whole of that portion of the line of railway operated by the company, or over which they shall have such running power, lying to the eastward of the point of shipment or destination, as the case may be, upon their said line, of such traffic passing to or from the Ontario and Pacific Junction Railway."

Now, the meaning of that in less technical language than is used in the resolution, is this: That whatever charge the Canadian Pacific Railway makes in carrying goods from the North-West to the city of Montreal, or from the city of Montreal to the North-West, that rate should be made into a pro rata mileage rate, and the Ontario system of railways should have the benefit of that pro rata mileage rate. Now, nothing can be fairer than that proposition. Some portions of Ontario have natural advantages in their nearness to the North-West, as the cities of the sea-board have natural advantages in being free from the expense of carriage, and it is only reasonable and proper, and I am not surprised to find, that the Minister of Railways did promise that these natural advantages of proximity should be enjoyed fairly by all the Provinces of the Dominion, each having contributed, according to their means and according to their population, to the building of this great national highway. All the Province of Ontario desired then, or desires now, is that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be equal to the Province according to the rate they charge yearly to the great competitive point of the city of Montreal. Let me explain, Mr. Speaker, what I mean by that. If goods are brought to Winnipeg from Montreal, the distance being somewhere, I believe, in the neighborhood of 1,400 or 1,500 miles, then the charge is made for that whole haul, and is to be put into a mileage rate, and when that traffic reaches Callander and it is delivered over to any Ontario railway, the rate to be charged to the Ontario railway, be that railway one or another, is to be its fair mileage proportion of the whole carriage to the city of Montreal. After this deputation came to Ottawa and presented this memorial to the Minister of Railways, and after he had required that they should formulate some resolution to be placed in an Act of Parliament, the hon. member for West Durham asked in his place in the House, what had been the result of the resolution of the Board of Trade, and what the railway company had said upon the subject. I find it is reported in Hansard of 7th February, 1881, that Mr. Blake made this enquiry:

"Whether there has been any correspondence between any member of the Government and the Toronto Board of Trade on the subject of rates to be charged on the Canadian Pacific Railway; whether any agreement has been made on the subject; at what date such agreement, if any, was made; and whether it will be laid on the Table."

Sir Charles Tupper answered as follows:—

"A communication was received from the Toronto Board of Trade suggesting a clause"——

I have just read the clause.

"which would provide for equal mileage rates for the traffic going from Toronto on Ontario railways. That proposal, made by that Board of Trade, as to what would meet their views, was considered unobjectionable and has been agreed to. The date on which that communication was made by me to the president of the Toronto board was, I think, the 2nd February. I do not see any objection to laying the communication on the Table."

So here we have first the memorial of the Board of Trade directing attention to this very important matter in the interest of Ontario; we have the request of the Minister to the Board of Trade to prepare a resolution on the subject, which was to be incorporated in a Bill or some agreement with the railway company; we have the Minister stating in Parliament that the resolution had been shown to the railway company and accepted by them as being unobjectionable; and now I want at this stage, probably the last we shall have to do with this railway company, and before they get liberty from this House to take the step proposed, to carry out this arrangement and embody it in an Act of Parliament. But I will direct attention to what the railway did do. The company passed a resolution which will be found in the Votes and Proceedings, and also in the schedule to the Act incorporating the Northern Pacific Junction Railway, providing, among other matters, or running powers over any road which they might build rom the junction at Warrapit River to Sault Ste. Marie in ase they should build that branch. It then went on to rovide for the matter to which I am calling attention, as ollows:—

"In the event of the company purchasing, acquiring, amalgamating with, leasing or holding and operating the Canada Central Railway, the said Callander station shall continue to be a neutral or receiving and distributing point common to the Canada Central Railway and any railway in the Province of Ontario, running southwards from said Callander station; and in that case all traffic to or from any point in the West or North-West, coming from or destined for any such Ontario railway shall be carried to or from Callander station at the same mileage rate as similar traffic to or from such point coming from or destined for the said Canada Central Railway; and such mileage rate shall not be greater than the average rate per mile charged for similar traffic from the point of shipment on the Canadian Pacific Railway to the point of destination on the Canada Central Railway, or from the point of shipment on the said Canada Central Railway to the point of destination on the Canadian Pacific Railway, as the case may be."

The resolution goes on to provide as to what the meaning of the word traffic shall be, and so on. I did not read, as I ought to have done, the earlier part of the resolution. It is as follows:—

"And whereas in the course of the debate upon the Canadian Pacific Railway Act certain questions arose which the contractors present at Ottawa deemed it expedient to meet, by agreeing that this company would enter into certain undertakings with the Government of Canada so soon as it should be organised, and it is expedient to provide for entering into such arrangements."

I have read the portion which pertains to the present point. The company then undertook, on its being arranged, to enter into an agreement to the effect that the same mileage rates will be charged, practically, on the goods passing over the line of railway and coming to the Ontario system of railways as was to be charged on the goods which passed down to the city of Montreal. But this resolution has never been carried out. The company have never entered into any such contract or agreement with the Government; and the resolution does not go so far as the resolution of the Board of Trade; it does not go to the full extent, although I have no doubt it was supposed at the time that it did carry out the spirit and intent of that resolution, because the resolution merely binds the company with respect to traffic which passes from the Canadian Pacific Railway to the Canada Central and from the Canada Central back to the Canadian Pacific Railway—in other words, it merely obliges the railway company to charge a mileage rate divided as it was between Ottawa and the North-West instead of Montreal and the North-West, leaving this loop-hole for the railway to discriminate against Ontario and its chief cities. They could charge a sum, say of $100, for a car between Winnipeg and Montreal. In adjusting the rate they can put all the $100 on that portion of the traffic which ends at Ottawa, leaving the portion fr m Ottawa onwards to be carried free—I know I am giving an extreme case—so increasing the mileage rate on traffic to Ontario so much per mile, whereas it ought to be the same if the sum were distributed over the whole length of line between Winnipeg and Montreal. I do not think the House will object to such an amendment of the charter of the company as will carry out what was intended by the charter. I am not moving in the direction of imposing any greater burdens upon the company; I do not design to alter their contract or do anything not intended from the first in the contract made between the company and the Government, because by section 24 of the charter it will be seen they did intend, and Sir Charles Tupper so stated to the Toronto Board of Trade, by section 24 to make those ample provisions for the protection of the trade of the chief Provinces, if I may so term it, of the Dominion. That clause provides merely, however, for an interchange of traffic and fair mileage rate with one particular railway, namely, the only railway which then had a charter to build the link—the Ontario and Pacific Junction Railway. That railway has not been built, and therefore that clause of the Act which was intended to give that link which it was supposed would be constructed between Callander and Toronto, this interchange of traffic and fair mileage rates does not apply. Instead of that railway there is another road respecting which we had so much discussion last night. But the resolution does not speak merely of one road; it speaks of all roads; it refers to any road which may at any time be brought to the mutual distributing point, Callander. So I submit that my resolution ought to be adopted, and I trust it will be adopted by this House. To summarise the points in order to make them plain, I would repeat that the spirit of the contract between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Government did provide, or there was an intention to provide, for free interchange of traffic between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Ontario system of railways; that that clause now fails of its effect because the particular railway then chartered and then supposed to be the line which would go to Callander has not been built and may never be built, for another road has taken its place. And then I point to the resolution which the contractors, who were present when the discussion took place in the House, agreed that they should enter into with the Government, which they had not yet done, providing for an equal mileage rate on this system of railway in the manner I have pointed out. Now I will carry this resolution one step beyond the express language of the clause. No one, no matter what his interests in the Canadian Pacific Railway may be—no one, I submit, can object to the incorporation of this resolution made by the company, in which they pledged themselves to enter into a contract with the Government to the purport and effect set forth in this resolution: I say no person can object to that. They have not done so, and it is certainly a most inefficient way of binding a railway company to perform its duties to the public. A contract by the Government, not incorporated in an Act of Parliament, is one which it would be very difficult to enforce. For my part, I do not know exactly how it could be enforced. Let us assume for instance that the contract is made, that the Government on the one part had entered into a bargain in writing with the company under the seal of the company, that they would carry out this agreement; if that contract was violated I would like to know—I ask any gentleman who is opposed to this motion to point out—by what means, by what process or what suit might be instituted which would enable the company which was not getting the benefit intended to be derived from this system, to have this carried out. I do not think it could be done, Sir. The only way, it seems to me that could be done, is to make it part of their obligation to the public, which, if they violate, it will be open to any member of the community who is damaged by the violation of it to seek the ordinary and proper redress. But, as I stated, this resolution goes one step further, because, technically, the resolutions stop short here at Ottawa. It binds the company to an equal mileage rate from the North-West to any point on the Canada Central, and we know that the Canada Central stops here at Ottawa; but it does not bind the company to what was intended by the Board of Trade of Toronto, or to what the Minister of Railways told this House the company had agreed to, though I have no doubt it was done in perfect good faith all round. I have no doubt the members of the company at that time, having acquired or being about to acquire the Canada Central, not having at that time acquired the Occidental road, were dealing merely with what they had, and doing all they could to carry out the desire of the Toronto Board of Trade and fulfil the obligations which the Minister thought they ought to assume. But, as a matter of fact, we find that couched in this language it is not in my judgment sufficient to enable the system of railways in the Provinces to have that fair right and that fair play to which they are entitled. Now, I may mention, Sir, that this matter was under discussion of the Board of Trade of Toronto yesterday, and I have received a telegram from the vice-president of the Board of Trade, the acting president of that board, saying that the council of the Board of Trade not having come to any determination, the matter has been postponed for consideration at a meeting of the Board of Trade, to be held to-morrow at 3 o'clock. In the meantime the Bill is now being read the third time. The position is therefore this: A bargain has been made between the Government and the company, that the Government would release the indebtedness of the $10,000,000, and in lieu of that would accept so many millions of acres of land. If this Act of Parliament was merely carrying out that particular bargain, I, for my part, would not be here making this motion. The Government having made that bargain and the company having paid the $10,000,000 in pursuance of that bargain, I do not think it would be either just or right, for me, at all events, supporting the Government, to impose on the railway company a term which is not to be found in this latter agreement. But the company have asked the Government to release $5,000,000 of bonds. The company are not entitled to that release. It is a matter of favor. I have no objection to it. I think the purpose for which that $5,000,000 was deposited has been practically served, but, at the same time, this is the last link binding the company to the Government. Deliver up the $5,000,000 of bonds, the debt being practically paid, and the connection between the company and the Government seems to me to be at an end. Before, therefore, the people of this country part with the $5,000,000 of bonds to the railway company, is the proper time, it appears to me, to have a resolution, or any matter of this kind, placed in the charter which ought to have been placed there at an earlier date. Now, it is argued, on behalf of the company themselves, that this is a scheme or device on the part of the Northern Pacific Junction Company to obtain all the traffic coming over the Canadian Pacific Railway destined for Toronto and the western part of Ontario. It is a scheme upon their part, it is said, to prevent the Canadian Pacific Railway Company carrying round by Smith's Falls and by the Ontario and Quebec, which is part of their system, so much of that traffic, if they choose to do it, at an equal or a less rate. There is, no doubt, some force in that objection, but if nothing is done what will be the result? The result, undoubtedly, will be this—that if the Canadian Pacific Railway is to be permitted to carry over its own system of railways, by discrimination against the Northern Pacific Railway—if it is to be permitted to carry over its own system of railways, so as to compete with this Ontario link, the Ontario link will be starved out. No man sending goods from, or forwarding goods to, the North-West, if he can get the same rate around by Smith's Falls, although it is 200 miles further, will think of sending goods by the more natural channel, because he will have to run the risk—I may say he will have to see the certain fate staring him in the face, that his goods will not be so expeditiously shipped by the Canadian Pacific Railway, who will be in active competition with this link between Gravenhurst and Callander. So the first objection I make to what the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are now seeking is this: They ought not to be permitted, I submit, to monopolise that trade in such a way that they can absolutely control it to the prejudice of this Ontario link, because, if it is controlled, if that trade is diverted, the Ontario link will undoubtedly be squeezed out, and must ultimately fall into the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway, because it cannot live. But the means I propose in these resolutions that the competition, which it is so desirable in the interests of the whole Province that they should exist, shall not be done away with. What I submit as a fair result is this: If the Canadian Pacific Railway Company charges an equal mileage rate, the road having the shortest haul, as this Ontario link has, will undoubtedly have an advantage, an advantage it is entitled to by reason of its being a shorter line; but if that line assumes to charge exorbitant or improper rates, it has always a competitive road by Smith's Falls, a part of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to keep it in check. I, therefore, propose to move:

That the said Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole with power to insert the following clause:—

Section 24 of the Act, passed in the 44th year of Her Majesty's reign, chapter 1, is hereby repealed, and in lieu thereof it is enacted that, notwithstanding the acquisition by the company of the Canada Central Railway and other railways beyond the original eastern terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, near the east end of Lake Nipissing, the point of junction of the Canadian Pacific Railway with the Northern and Pacific Junction Railway, now constructed southward from the said original eastern terminus, shall be, and continue to be, a neutral or receiving and distributing point, common to the Canadian Pacific Railway and to all railways running southward from the said point of junction.

The reason the Northern Pacific Junction Railway is mentioned here, is that it does not strike the Canadian Pacific Railway at the exact point that is called Callander, or rather Callander has been a moveable quantity; it has sometimes been at one point and sometimes at another; but the design of the amendment is that that point of junction which may be called Callander, shall be the point where the distribution of the traffic shall take place, and that that point shall be a neutral point. The proposed section goes on:

And all traffic coming or going by way of the portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway, westerly of such neutral junction point, and by way of any of the said railways running southward aforesaid——

shall be carried by the company upon the portion of its railway westerly of such neutral junction point to or from such point at the same mileage rate as the company shall carry thereupon similar traffic coming or going by way thereof, and by way of the said railway formerly known as the Canada Central Railway; and such mileage rate shall not be greater than the average rate per mile of any through rate charged or received by the company for similar traffic passing such neutral junction point from the place of shipment or any part of the company's present or future system of railways between Callander and Montreal—

The resolution as placed in my hands originally read, "between Callander and any point on the Canadian Pacific Railway system," which would not be fair to the Canadian Pacific Railway and would not be fair, I take it, to the people of Ontario, because it would practically prevent the Canadian Pacific Railway, by means of the Ontario and Quebec, acting as a competitive line with the Northern Pacific Junction Railway, and I do not desire that that competition should be in anyway limited.— to the place of destination thereon, whether such traffic shall originate or terminate thereon, or be received from or delivered to the other railway companies or other carriers at such places respectively; and without granting or allowing any preference or advantage to the traffic coming from or going by the company's own railways over such traffic coming from or going by any of the said railways running southward as aforesaid; nor shall the company subject any railway company operating any of the said railways running southward as aforesaid, or any particular description of traffic, to any prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever, reserving, however, to the company, the right of making special rates—— for purchasers of land or for immigrants or intending immigrants, which special rates shall not govern or affect the rates of passenger traffic as between the company and any company operating any of the said railways running southward.

Then it goes on to describe the meaning of the word traffic, and the rest of the clause is, I think, in the usual terms. I think the House will understand the purport of the amendment, which I move, seconded by Mr. O'Brien.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think the House would be much wiser, Mr. Speaker, if you had the labor of reading that long amendment over again in English and French, because it is so long and so complicated that it would not in any way enlighten us as to the effect of the amendment, even after the lucid statement of my hon. friend; and nobody can be more lucid than my hon friend when he likes. My hon. friend, of course, knows perfectly well that this House cannot and would not make a leap in the dark at the very last moment by adopting this long and elaborate resolution which he has explained at such length and with such ability. I remember reading about the trial of Thelwall, I think, for high treason, at which Lord Eldon, then Sir John Scott, made a speech nine hours in order to prove that Thelwall was guilty of high treason; and the court and the country said that if it took him nine hours to show that Thelwall was guilty of high treason, he ought to be acquitted. So, if it takes a resolution of this length to set forth what is fair to Ontario, I think that is pretty fair primâ facie evidence against the resolution. Of course, my hon. friend could not think, and does not think in any way, of obstructing that portion of the Bill which provides for the payment of the $20,000,000 and the acceptance of land for $10,000,000. He merely says that as the company are asking for the release of the $5,000,000 of bonds, that is a favor, and he therefore moves this resolution. Well, there is no connection between the $5,000,000 of bonds which are pledged to the Government for the running of the road for ten years, and a tariff arrangement like the one proposed. My hon. friend very astutely talks about this railway being in the interest of Ontario and Ontario trade. This resolution has very little to do with Ontario trade, but it has a great deal to do with the attempted monopoly by Mr. Barker of all the trade over the Northern Railway. It is really such an attempt made by Mr. Barker, who is a friend of mine, and whom I greatly respect, and who thinks a great deal of his railway; and my hon. friend admits that the original draft of this amendment, as prepared by Mr. Barker, would simply hand over a monopoly of all the traffic west of Toronto to the Northern Railway. My hon. friend would not stand that, and he proposes this resolution, which would not so completely monopolise the trade in the hands of one railway as it would in the form originally drawn by Mr. Barker. My hon. friend has read the resolutions which were passed by the Board of Trade in Toronto some years ago. My hon. friend has correctly stated the proposition that board made; but there were negotiations afterwards, and the resolutions arrived at are contained in schedule B attached to the charter of the North-Western and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company. The conclusion of the whole matter was that an arrangement was made, which I think the House will consider a fair one, that Callander, which was then considered the terminal point of the Canadian Pacific Railway, should be the distributing point for traffic. The distance from Callander to Toronto is the same within three miles as the distance from Callander to Ottawa; and therefore it was understood that there should be no cutting down of rates as between Callander and Ottawa and between Callander and Toronto, but that they should be the same to both points. That was perfectly fair and has been acted upon ever since. The Board of Trade of Toronto was quite satisfied until Mr. Barker became alarmed lest his monopoly or attempted monopoly might be affected, and now the proposition is this: That although the distance from Callander to Montreal is 119 miles longer than the road from Callander to Toronto, the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be obliged to carry from Callander to Montreal.

Mr. McCARTHY. No; I am afraid I have not been very lucid.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That, I think, is the proposition of my hon. friend.

Mr. McCARTHY. Not at all. The proposition I make is this: That the Canadian Pacific Railway should carry from Winnipeg or any other point in the North-West to Montreal at an equal mileage rate, and that, as Toronto is 100 miles nearer to the North-West than Montreal, Toronto and the western Provinces should have the benefit of that equal mileage rate. That is the effect of the proposition, so that if the traffic that passes to Montreal is $100 per car, a proportion of that $100, divided according to the mileage proportion, shall end at Callander, and then the traffic shall go from Callander to be distributed over Ontario, with its fair proportion of that mileage rate. It is not at all proposed to discriminate against Montreal, but to prevent the Canadian Pacific Railway discriminating against Toronto in favor of Montreal; or, in other words, carrying to Montreal on the same terms as to Toronto.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The proposition, as expressed by Mr. Barker, was simply this: The Canadian Pacific Railway is a very powerful road, and can do what it likes; it can, from Winnipeg to Callander, put on heavy rates, and therefore afford to carry from Callander to Ottawa and Montreal for nothing or for a nominal rate. That cannot be. The Railway Committee, under the control of the Minister of Railways, can fully settle that, and under the General Railway Act that can be prevented; and when my hon friend succeeds, as he will some time or other, in getting a railway commission, that will prevent any injustice of the kind; but after all, the whole scope of this resolution, if carried, is that it will, in fact, as I am informed by the president and the vice-president and manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway, be equivalent to saying that the Canadian Pacific Railway shall not compete for the traffic of Western Ontario.

Mr. McCARTHY. That was the resolution as drawn up by Mr. Barker, but the resolution now drawn up has no such effect.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The original proposition was really to prevent the Canadian Pacific Railway having anything to do with the traffic west of Toronto by the railways that touch at or near Toronto.

Mr. McCARTHY. Over the Ontario and Quebec.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes. This proposition is simply to keep up high rates for the benefit of the Northern Railway, and I am quite satisfied that, as much as the Canadian Pacific Railway, would desire to have the means of selling $5,000,000 of bonds and applying the amount to the extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway, they would much rather keep the clause out than have this proposition of my hon. friend made. They consider it altogether contrary to the arrangement made in the schedule, which my hon. friend has read, which was in fact accepted by both railways and the Toronto Board of Trade, until Mr. Barker went to Toronto and stirred up the Board of Trade there last week. I believe the board met yesterday and could not come to any agreement. They were stirred up by the authorities of the Northern road, and Mr. Van Horne went there to fight the battle of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is just equivalent to this, that I consider we will be depriving the Canadian Pacific Railway of the use of $5,000,000 to extend their road in order to assist the Northern to keep a quasi, if not an actual, monopoly to the full extent.

Mr. MILLS. What would be the position of the Canadian Pacific Railway if Callander had been the eastern terminus, and if arrangements had been made to give equal facilities to the railways connecting there? Would it not have been to give effect to precisely such a proposition as the hon. gentleman has moved in amendment to this Bill. Supposing the terminus had been at Callander, railways from Montreal and Toronto, wishing to connect at that point, would, if the Canadian Pacific Railway applied anything like uniform rates over its entire line, have stood on exactly the same footing, because the Canadian Pacific Railway would have had nothing to do with the regulations of rates further east than Callander.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. MILLS. Very well. Then if the eastern terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway is placed at Montreal, the hon. gentleman's proposition is that whatever rates they make between Winnipeg or any western point of Montreal per mile shall apply to that portion of the road eastward to the point where the Toronto railways connect with it. That is precisely the effect of the hon. gentleman's proposition. It does not give any special advantage to the Toronto traffic, but places it upon the footing of equality, and it places a large portion of Ontario, which otherwise could not use the road, but which has been obliged to contribute towards its construction, upon a footing of equality. At present, I know that a large section of Ontario will never use the Canadian Pacific Railway, and can never use it, because their connection with the West generally must be through American territory. Take the whole country almost from Brantford westward. I could leave the city of London and go to St. Paul as easily as I could get the nearest station on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That must always be the case; geographically it is the case. In order to give a large section of a Province some compensation for the large contributions which they have made to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, there should be a provision in the Bill such as that proposed by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy).

Mr. EDGAR. I am glad that at last the hon. member who is president of the Northern Pacific Junction has interested himself sufficiently in the question which I have endeavored to bring before the House on two or three occasions—that of giving the Ontario connection of the Canadian Pacific Railway something like a fair chance of competing with the eastern portion of that line for the freight of the North-West—to address the House. Although he has not succeeded in convincing the leader of the Government or the House that there is much in the question, I venture to say that it is for all that a very important one. I find by a report in to-day's paper that the council of the Board of Trade in Toronto had a very important meeting. Mr. Van Horne was there and Mr. Barker was there, and they discussed the matter very fully. This difficulty has all arisen from the fact that this thing has been allowed by the Government to drift, the Government who gave this $12,000 a mile to enable Ontario to form this connection with the Pacific Railway. They entered into a contract with the Northern Pacific Junction, under which they agreed to give this $12,000 a mile, and also made certain stipulations about an agreement of this kind being made with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Government, ever since they entered into that agreement, have not seen that it has been carried out at all. The result is that everything is at sixes and sevens, and nothing has been done in a business-like way. Neither the Canadian Pacific Railway, nor the Northern Junction, nor the city of Toronto, nor the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), nor anybody else, seems to be satisfied, because nothing whatever has been done, and the thing has been left in a hopeless state of confusion, notwithstanding that the contract made in 1884, under which the $12,000 a mile was given, stipulated that this thing was to be attended to within six months, that is, in October, 1884, it has been allowed to drift, and we find that even the hon. member for Simcoe, with his lucid powers of exposition, has been utterly unable to make anyone in this House understand how the thing stands to-day. There is something to be said, too, for the view put forward by the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think, while it would be a most deplorable thing that there should be a monopoly in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway to serve Toronto and the west, it would be still more deplorable that any agreement should be entered into which would give the Northern Railway a monopoly of that service. What we should aim at is to give fair competition, to allow the Northern Railway to have its rights, and to allow the Canadian Pacific Railway to have a right to carry freight round by the longer branch, by the way of Smith's Falls if they like. If they choose to carry it at a loss all that way, let them do it, it may not benefit them, but it will benefit everyone else, and it does not lie in the mouth of the Northern Railway, getting their $12,000 a mile subsidy, to complain, if they get fair play. It seems to me that a reasonable and fair and proper solution of this difficulty would be to place the Northern Pacific Junction Railway exactly where the old Ontario Pacific Junction Railway was placed by the Canadian Pacific Railway charter, section 24. That charter specifically provides that the Ontario and Pacific Railway Company shall have fair play as between it and the old Canada Central, and that not only the traffic arrangements shall be fair, but the mileage rates also. I think that was drawn with considerable care. I know that gentlemen connected with the Toronto Board of Trade had something to do with preparing it, and that the Minister of Railways then, Sir Charles Tupper, conceded to their view, and that section was drawn. Now, instead of creating new conditions and new terms, I am sure the Canadian Pacific Railway ought to be satisfied; and the Northern Junction ought to be perfectly satisfied if this section 24 of the Canadian Pacific Railway Act is made to apply to the Northern Pacific Junction instead of the Ontario Pacific, which has not been built. Therefore, if it would not be delaying the passage of this important measure very long, and I do not think it would, I would suggest a short clause of this kind, which I think would be fair all round, and, as far as I can see, would meet the case:

That the provisions of section 24, of 44 Victoria, chapter 1, so far as the same relate to the Ontario and Pacific Junction Railway, shall also apply to the Northern Pacific Junction Railway Company.

That does not take anybody by surprise. It is not unfair to anybody. It may not give Mr. Barker the monopoly he seeks, but I do not think it is desirable he should have it, and I do not think it will give the Canadian Pacific Railway a monopoly of that trade either.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The proposal of the hon. member who has just spoken is very nearly that of the resolution now before the House, the only difference being that, I think, it is less favorable to the general interests of the Dominion, because it regulates the rate simply by the distance to Ottawa instead of by the distance to Montreal, and I think the mover of this resolution has shown very good ground why the rate should be based on the distance to Montreal and not on the distance to Ottawa. That is a matter of comparatively less importance. The right hon. the head of the Government has a happy way of laughing out of the House anything he does not wish to oppose on more serious grounds, and, on this occasion I think he has shown his usual skill and ability in accomplishing that object.

Mr. McCARTHY. Not yet.

Mr. O'BRIEN. But I venture to appeal from Philip after dinner to Philip before dinner, and I think I can answer the right hon. gentleman's speech after dinner, by the speech he made in this House before dinner. I think everything in his argument, which has reference to the amendment of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), applies with equal and even greater force to the resolution which is now before the House. If the policy is the correct one, and I am not going to dispute it now, though I think that, if it were pressed very much further, it would be attended with very serious results—if it is right to say that the Canadian Pacific Railway shall, in the public interests, be fenced about with all sorts of protection in Manitoba and the North-West, if that is sound, and I am not now questioning it, it is equally right and consistent with the general trade interests of the Dominion that all the Provinces with whose money this railway has been built, for whose interests we fence this railway about in the North-West, should be secured fair play when the trade comes down to those older Provinces. The original arrangement was perfectly fair and reasonable, and it is embodied in this resolution. It is that Callander should really be the beginning of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the principle laid down by this resolution is that all lines east of that shall be entitled to stand on precisely the same footing, whether they run to one part of the Dominion or to the other. The argument in favor of the Province of Ontario I think stands beyond all question. I think it is perfectly clear that, if those Provinces have an interest in the trade of the Pacific Railway, in the trade which is to be brought by the Pacific Railway, it is equally clear that, when that trade comes to the limit of these Provinces, they should all stand on the same footing, and the Canadian Pacific Railway should not be in a position to do injustice to anyone of them or to any portion of these Provinces The right hon. gentleman said that the Canadian Pacific Railway objected to this clause, and therefore this clause was not to be inserted. I have supported the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think that the policy was a good one is best proved by its success, but now that it is built, I think we are entitled to see that that railway, with its enormous powers and its enormous influence, is not permitted to use those powers or that influence to the disadvantage of any portion of the Dominion, especially that which contributed the most largely to its construction. If that is a fair ground, we have a good reason for the proposal before the House. If it can be shown, as I think it has been shown, that unless some such provision as that now proposed is made, that portion of Ontario which is affected by this resolution will stand in a very unfavorable position as compared with the rest of the Dominion, then the resolution now before the House ought to be adopted. Now, the argument of the right hon. gentleman, with reference to the Northern Railway, I think is hardly fair. I do not think it is in the power of the Northern Railway Company to establish a monopoly. The Government have all the power they need to have to regulate rates and traffic upon the Northern Pacific Junction, so that they can prevent Mr. Barker from establishing a monopoly. They can prevent him from using any privilege he has from the geographical position of that line, to the detriment of other lines. I understand that in the charter, and the various arrangements with regard to the Northern Pacific Junction, which was built by this country as a link connecting the Canadian Pacific Railway with the Ontario system of railways, it was provided that ample security shall exist for preventing that which is, to all intents and purposes, regarded as a neutral link between the two points, from being used by Mr. Barker or anybody else for the purpose of injuring the traffic of any other railways. If such a provision is not made, it certainly ought to be made; but I believe the Government have ample power to deal with the question. I do not think there is anything in the conduct, either of Mr. Barker or the Northern Railway Company, to justify the idea that they are acting in such a purely selfish spirit as the hon. gentleman would lead us to believe. I think that, whether the motion before the House, or a similar one, is adopted or not, the interest of the Province of Ontario requires that something should be done in this House to bring about the result which is desired.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think it would be right to take the question without someone from the Maritime Provinces explaining the attitude which they occupy. But before doing so I may say that I listened with a great deal of attention to the very verbose circumlocution contained in the resolution of the hon. gentleman who moved the amendment to the Bill. Now, that gentleman put his case very plausibly indeed. He gave us the history of the transactions connected with the building of that link, with the legislation which had taken place, and with the conditions of that legislation, and he went on to explain the attitude which would be assumed by the Canadian Pacific Railway if they were allowed to have this legislation now before us, which is the last opportunity, as he says, when we can check the power of the Canadian Pacific Railway by parliamentary action. Sir, the question before the House has been well explained by the First Minister. It is not a question with which this amendment of my hon. friend has fairly any right to be considered, nor is it one to which his amendment should be attached. What are the facts of this matter? Is it not known to every one that the General Railway Act gives to the Committee of the Privy Council the power to regulate the terms upon which railways shall interchange traffic? Is not that the rule that guides the whole railway system of to-day? Yet my hon. friend wishes to tack on a compromising resolution which I venture to say not ten men in this House understand.

An hon. MEMBER. Not one man.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, I think perhaps the hon. gentleman himself who read it understands it, but I question whether almost anybody else does understand it, for I listened to it with a good deal of attention, and I must confess that it is difficult to conclude, with the most careful reading of that document, what the practical legal effect of it will be upon these railways. Now, Sir, to bring down the point free from all this verbiage, the object of my hon. friend is this: He has stated to the House that the Parliament of Canada, by the condition which was attached to the charter, wished to protect the trade of the city of Toronto, and the western and eastern portions of the Province of Ontario. Sir, I think that position is perfectly correct; but he says that the Canadian Pacific Railway has to carry by Smith's Falls, a distance of 447 miles from Toronto, to Callander, or Thorncliffe, or wherever the point of junction is, against a distance which, if carried over the Pacific Junction Railway, would be only 227 miles; that is to say, the railway which my hon. friend represents has only to go from Toronto, 227 miles, while the Canadian Pacific Railway, to compete with them for the Toronto peninsula, and the traffic of the peninsula east and west, would have to carry 447 miles, a distance of 217 miles against the Canadian Pacific Railway. The contention of my hon. friend was, the other day, that if the Canadian Pacific Railway carry freight from Toronto, 447 miles, to Thorncliffe, and thence on to Winnipeg, as against the 227 miles from Toronto to Thorncliffe by the Northern Pacific Junction, they would have to reduce their rates on the whole distance from Thorncliffe to Winnipeg in favor of the Pacific Junction Railway as against their own road. Now, I ask any man whether that is fair or not. The distance from Carleton Place to Thorncliffe is about the distance from Toronto to Thorncliffe, and if the Canadian Pacific Railway are willing to carry over their road freight from Toronto to Winnipeg the same as they are willing to carry it the same distance from Carleton Place to Winnipeg, I want to know what unfairness there is in that, or what there is that militates against the Province of Ontario. But the point my hon. friend wants to accomplish is to keep the Canadian Pacific Railway out of the city of Toronto and out of the trade east and west of Toronto; and when he talks about monopoly, the object is not to prevent a monopoly being effected by this arrangement, but to create a monopoly for his own road by preventing the Canadian Pacific Railway carrying 447 miles as cheaply as his line carries 227 miles. There is the whole thing in a nutshell, so far as Ontario is concerned. The object of my hon. friend is not to promote the interests of the Province of Ontario so much as the interests of his own road—that is what it is, wiping away all the verbiage and coming down to hard pan. Now, Sir, we have got something to say about the road from a maritime standpoint, and I would invite the attention of gentlemen who represent that section of the country, including those from the Province of Quebec. We have spent a great deal of money. It is not Ontario alone, assuming that the argument of my hon. friend is correct, that is to be considered in the proposition which the hon. gentleman has submitted, but we have got to consider the interests of the eastern portion of the Dominion as well. We have all contributed to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we have contributed very handsomely to the construction of my hon. friend's road, when we gave $12,000 a mile, with a prospect of $20,000 more if the Government took it over and his views had been carried out. These Provinces which have contributed that money, have some right to be considered in a measure of that kind; have some right to demand that some condition shall be put in that Bill which will not militate in the future and for all time, against the interests of the eastern Provinces which will be affected by the operation of that traffic. Sir, what is the object of it? The object of Mr. Barker, when he prepared his resolution, was to wipe out the traffic of the eastern portion of this Dominion, and if we, a thousand miles from this to the sea, desired to send a train load of frozen fish, or preserved fish, or any other commodity which we produce down there, to Winnipeg, if the same thing has got to be carried from Toronto, we have an additional haul of a thousand odd miles, and we are prevented from getting the benefit of that long haul as against their 227 miles of a short haul, which, by this resolution, he demands that the Canadian Pacific Railway shall reduce to the average rate over the whole haul. That is a true statement of the position and the effect the resolution would have, and the motion is therefore one to which the House should not assent or entertain.

Mr. COOK. I regret the hon. leader of the Government should have characterised the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) as the representative of Mr. Barker. I am sure the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is moved by the very best motives in the interests of Ontario in this matter. Speaking for the western portion of Ontario I know that Toronto and the west desire there should be a competing railway with the Canadian Pacific Railway in that regard. They do not wish to have their traffic by way of Smith's Falls to the North-West. They also desire that any freight coming from the North-West shall find a short route and be delivered in Toronto and the western portion of Ontario at as cheap a rate as possible. The Ontario railway system it is thought in that part of the country should have an inlet and outlet to the North-West by the most expeditious route possible. I desire to draw the attention of the member for North Simcoe to the condition of the Northern Railway. That railway, I must say, is in a very disgraceful condition; one can scarcely travel upon it. I know the hon. gentleman has no pecuniary interest in that railway, but now that he has become interested in the Northern Pacific Junction from Gravenhurst to Callander and that it is to be leased by the Northern and North-Western Railway, I hope he will endeavor to use some influence with the Northern Railway to keep it in better running condition. There has been some talk that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company propose to monopolise or at least to buy the Northern Railway. If the two great systems, the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific, propose to gobble up all the side lines of railway, I should prefer that the Northern fall into the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway, from the fact that it would be a competing line from Georgian Bay. The Grand Trunk owns the Midland at the present time. The Northern is a competitor with that line from Orillia and points north; but I hope, if the Canadian Pacific Railway does purchase the Northern, it will not do as the Grand Trunk has done with the Midland. The Grand Trunk has made the Midland a side line, and carries but very little freight over it; so much is this the case that the people are not properly served by the railway owing to the monopoly that exists. I trust this resolution will pass, because it is of vast interest to that section of the country. If this resolution tends to create a monopoly—which I do not understand it does—I hope hon. members will accept the suggestion made by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar); and if the hon. member for North Simcoe will not adopt that resolution, let him frame one himself, so that the House will not imagine that he proposes to make a monopoly of the line in question. I am sure all the hon. gentleman desires is to have a competing line for the people of western Ontario. I am glad to be in accord with the hon. gentleman on this occasion, because it is the only time I have had the pleasure of acknowledging that he was right.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I do not think the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is treating the House with fairness on the present occasion. The hon. gentleman has brought forward what is admittedly a most complicated resolution, on the motion for the third reading, a resolution dealing with a difficult and abstruse subject, with which few hon. members are familiarly acquainted; and, in fact, I think the observation of the hon. member for Northumberland, that only ten members understood it, might be reduced to a much smaller number, because no one member could listen to the resolution moved by the hon. gentleman, and thoroughly understand in a moment its effect. It undoubtedly needs a railway expert, and that one of very great ability, to listen to a long resolution of that kind, and immediately grasp the full effect of it. Is it fair or right for the hon. gentleman, on the third reading of the Bill, to call upon the House suddenly to pronounce an opinion upon this complicated question? If the hon. gentleman had desired to bring this matter before the House on this Bill, he could have done it at an earlier stage. He could have given notice that he intended to make this motion, and it could have been placed on the Order paper, and we would have known what was coming up and could have read the proposed resolution. Not having done that, I confess that so far as I am concerned, although I am not altogether unfamiliar with legislation of this kind, I cannot at the moment take in the full effect of the hon. gentleman's amendment. But the hon. gentleman has argued that it should be adopted on the ground that this is the last opportunity we shall have of dealing with or controlling the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I do not think that argument is correct. If we pass this Bill without amendments the company is still subjected to the control of Parliament. The Act incorporating it is a public Act. There is the clause to which the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) has referred, contained in that public Act, and we can legislate next Session or at any future Session just as well as we can at present and exercise as complete control over the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at that time as on the present occasion, when we are asked all in a hurry, without understanding the subject, to adopt the clause which the hon. member for Simcoe has suggested. There is also, as the hon. the First Minister has said, the provisions and powers of the General Railway Act, and also the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to deal with unjust discriminations, to say nothing of the Railway Commission, if it is ever created. However, there is no doubt that the matter remains within the jurisdiction of Parliament, and if next Session it is found necessary to legislate so as to protect the interests of any section of the country, be it Toronto or Ontario, or Montreal or the eastern Provinces, it is within our power to do so and we are not debarred from doing so by passing this Bill. The House is asked to add this clause hurriedly, without due consideration and without understanding the effect and scope of it. I have looked at the clause that my hon. friend from West Ontario referred to, with a view of seeing whether his suggestion to substitute the name of the Northern Pacific Junction for the Ontario Pacific Junction would ensure complete justice being done in the matter, and I do not think it would. Clause 24, of the Canadian Pacific Railway Act, was framed at a time when the Canada Central was an independent road, and was not part of the Canadian Pacific Railway any more than the Ontario Pacific Junction; and the whole of that clause speaks of the three roads—the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Ontario and Pacific Junction, and the Canada Central—as free and independent roads, and provides that no one of them shall discriminate against another. But, of course, as soon as the Canada Central became part and parcel of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as it did some years ago, this clause became inapplicable, and a more extensive alteration of it will be necessary than that which my hon. friend from West Ontario suggests. But I say that the re-framing of it should be made next Session, after we have had sufficient time to consider it thoroughly, after members of this House thoroughly understand what they are about. There is another reason why I think we ought not hurriedly, on the present occasion, to adopt the proposal of my hon. friend, and that is because I am disposed to look with some suspicion upon it, and to think that while he says that, if it be not passed, the Canadian Pacific Railway will be able to monopolise the trade so as to completely control it between Toronto, Hamilton and other western points, and Thorncliffe and the Canadian Pacific Railway generally. I am inclined to think that the object of the clause, as originally drawn, was rather to enable the Pacific Junction to monopolise the trade. In fact, the hon. gentleman practically admits that, because he says that the clause as handed to him—I presume by the Northern and Pacific Junction Railway—was such that it would not have had the desired result; that it would have discriminated in favor of the Northern Pacific Railway. He admits that, on the face of it, that clause was so unjust that he would not bring it forward, and so he altered it. But it may turn out that the sting of the clause has not yet been removed, and that it is still open to the objection that it is a clause introduced in favor of a particular road, rather than in the general interests of the public. The effect of that clause, as altered by the hon. gentleman, would be to prevent the Canadian Pacific Railway from competing for the trade of Toronto, Hamilton, and other western points in Canada, against the Northern Pacific Junction. Now, we do not want that. We do not want to create a monopoly in favor of the Northern Pacific Junction any more than a monopoly in favor of the Canadian Pacific Railway. What we want is that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be able to come to Toronto and compete with the Northern Pacific Junction, so as to provide the lowest possible freights for those having goods to ship; and while my hon. friend says that the result of leaving matters as they are will be that the Canadian Pacific Railway will be able to starve out the Pacific Junction, I confess that, to my mind, it is incomprehensible how a road which has 447 miles to carry its traffic can starve out a road which has only 217. That is contrary to common sense. If a road with a mileage of over 400 miles is anxious to come and compete with a road of less than half that mileage, the public will be benefited and cannot suffer. I think, therefore, the hon. gentleman should not, at this late period of the Session, and at this late stage of the Bill, ask the House to adopt such a radical resolution as he proposes, and about which we have had no opportunity to inform ourselves.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I have no wish to prolong the discussion, but this is a matter which, while of great importance to the Province with which I am connected, is of more especial importance to the locality that I more particularly represent. Of so much much importance was it felt to be, that a number of ridings in my own immediate vicinity, after privately talking over the matter, charged me with a resolution in amendment, similar in purport to that which has been moved by my hon. friend from Simcoe. Now I confess, without professing to be an expert in drawing Parliamentary resolutions, or in railway matters, I think the argument of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), if it proves anything, proves too much to be satisfactory to a representative from Ontario. The House to-day has already declared that we shall only have access to the North-West through connections with the Canadian Pacific Railway. I need not remind those in this House who are familiar with business that it is not many months ago that the Canadian Pacific Railway deemed it in their interest as a corporation—and I have no fault to find with them for taking that view—to readjust the rates upon which they carry passengers and traffic upon that short line of railway which connects Winnipeg with the American system to the south, and by means of that system and the Grand Trunk, with the cities of Toronto and Hamilton; and every business man knows the position of affairs in so far as the business of that road was concerned. They managed so to adjust their trains and local rates upon that road as practically to force traffic over their own road by other directions. Now, we have practically no access into the North-West except by that connection. If the argument of the hon. member for Northumberland proves anything, it proves that he wants to leave in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway the power so to adjust local rates between Winnipeg and Callander as to enable them to carry freight from Hamilton and Toronto, around 444 miles and charge them a rate for that distance, compel them to pay what will be a fair haulage rate over those 444 miles, that, under other more reasonable circumstances they would only have to pay for half that distance.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to explain. I can scarcely imagine how he could draw such a conclusion from anything I said, when we bear in mind that, under the General Railway Act, the Government have power to regulate rates; and, therefore, the Canadian Pacific Railway could not put an improper rate between Winnipeg and Callander.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I think I heard the First Minister say to-night that the ways of railway managers were something remarkable, and I know that shippers have reason to realise the truth of that statement. But, Sir, if this is simply a provision to make sure that they shall not discriminate unfairly between Callander and Winnipeg, why should there be any difficulty about that?

Mr. MITCHELL. It is not that; it is more than that.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). What I want on behalf of the business men of my section is that we have a fair and equitable arrangement. We contributed largely to the construction of this original Canadian Pacific Railway, in common with the Maritime Provinces and other sections of the Dominion. We were interested in getting fair and equitable connection with that country. But if that railway expects to compete with 220 miles by carrying freight around 440 miles. I fear that, unless there is a very strong and plain statement in the Act somewhere, it will be found that rates will be adjusted unfairly for that purpose. I think it is of prime importance that we should have such an amendment as the one before us, and the proof of such a necessity, is the fact that, when this grant was made to the junction railway connecting the Northern and North-Western Railways and the Canadian system generally with the Canadian Pacific Railway, so much pains were taken to make provision for the proper and equitable carriage of freight over that line, showing that where one party had control of the business connection of the country it was felt desirable it should not be handled to the detriment of any other party. I need not tell you that the Canadian Pacific Railway is an immense corporation. When that company was chartered, it was not expected that they were going to extend their lines all over the country as they have done. It was only a short time after the charter was granted that we found them competing with the Grand Trunk system in the western part of Ontario; and we know how keen competition is between railway companies for traffic. Therefore I feel, so far as the interests of Ontario are concerned, that something in the direction of the resolution proposed by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) or the more simple one referred to by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), is essential before we pass this Bill. My hon. friend has referred to the fact that the Maritime Provinces have also contributed to the construction of this railway and have an interest in seeing that no Province gets an undue advantage. I agree with him; but I contend that Ontario, as a part of this Dominion, is bearing a very large proportion of the annual interest charged to the country for the construction of the long railway system known as the Intercolonial, by which the Maritime Provinces are able to connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway system. For that reason alone I think no discrimination should be established against the Province of Ontario. If it had been open to us to reach the North-West by another system, then we would have a fair guarantee that business principles would control the operation of this company; but the House has decided to-day that we are to be placed at the mercy of this company, and I do not think it wise to leave ourselves in that position, judging from their operations in the past.

Mr. EVERETT. I trust that the members of this House will be exceedingly careful before they decide to tie the hands of the railway company, and cause the people in the eastern Provinces to suffer in the future by any arrangement which they may now make. It is well understood by all engaged in railway operations that the longer the distance over which a railway carries freight, the smaller is the cost per mile of carrying it; and it must always be so. I hope hon. members will remember that the day is not far distant when St. John and Halifax and other maritime ports will receive for shipment a considerable quantity of freight passing over the Canadian Pacific Railway; and if anything is unwisely done, the whole of that business may be blocked. If the principle advocated by some hon. gentlemen that the same rate per mile should be charged for carrying freight from some point in the west to Callander, or to the city of Montreal, is adopted, the principle might be extended to carrying freight from some point in the west to Winnipeg as to Callander. But that is not a sound principle, and I hope it will not be acted upon by this House. I trust that this House will remember that the people of the Maritime Provinces, although few in number as compared with other portions of the Dominion, pay their share for building the railways which have been built throughout the country by means of public subsidies; and I trust they will also bear in mind that the direct advantages accruing from the construction of the railways already built by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, accrues more largely to the people of the west, particularly to the Province of Ontario. They derive benefits such as we cannot derive, because those railways are constructed in their midst. Some hon. gentlemen have referred to the advantage we of the Lower Provinces derive from the Intercolonial Railway. A great many members of this House, and a great many people throughout the country seem to think that the Intercolonial Railway was built simply for the use of the people of the Maritime Provinces. Why, Sir, that railway has opened facilities for the carrying on of business operations to the great advantage of the people of Ontario and Quebec; they have enjoyed as great benefits from that railway as we have; and some in the Maritime Provinces feel that by the competition which it has brought to bear upon us we have rather suffered. I trust that hon. members will bear in mind that we have some rights in this matter as well as the people of Ontario. Let us not tie the hands of the railway company; let us leave this matter in the hands of the Government and their Railway Committee, so that fair rates will be secured for the future.

Mr. FAIRBANK. It has been repeated several times during this discussion that this proposition is so involved, so intricate, and so verbose that not ten men in the House can understand it. I do not think it is open to that charge. I think some of the remarks recently made clearly show that it is not. As I understand it, it proposes that the rate from the North-West per mile shall be the same to the junction as it is to Montreal. It seems to me that there is nothing very intricate or involved in that. Now, if the rate per mile to that point, at which it connects with the Ontario system, was to be very different from the rate to Montreal, I would ask, for what object did we grant $1,300,000 to tap the Canadian Pacific Railway there. Hon. members must understand that members coming from the western part of Ontario feel a special interest in this question. Regarding Toronto as the commercial metropolis of that Province, we want to look at its position in relation to this railway. The three points, Callander, Toronto and Smith's Falls, form the three angles, very nearly of an equilateral triangle. If the Canadian Pacific Railway were not to be tapped at Callander, the business of Ontario would be forced to pay the cost of carrying freight around the two sides of the triangle instead of across it, which certainly would not be in the interest of Ontario. The difficulty of reaching the Canadian Pacific Railway from western Ontario is very obvious to any person who will but cast a glance at the map. I have seen car loads of wheat standing at the mills in the town where I live, which were brought to the county of Lambton by way of Smith's Falls. Now, this resolution simply proposes, as I understand it, that the railway may be tapped at a point 220 miles farther west. Take the reverse proposition, and what does it amount to? It amounts practically to this—moving Ontario 220 miles eastward. Hon. gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces must bear in mind that we from Ontario have supported the proposition to grant money for a short line for them; and if they ask for a short line for themselves, is it proper that they should force a long line upon us? Ontario has been a pretty large contributor to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Why should she be deprived of her geographical position? If she is nearer that market, why should legislation force freight 200 miles out of its way? I think the proposition is not a fair one. If it be claimed that it is creating a monopoly in any other direction, let us deal with that monopoly. When it was proposed to grant this bonus to the Junction Railway, I suggested, although quite young in the House, that the proper course would be for the Government to maintain their control of that railway. I think so now. Had the Government maintained perfect control of that, extending the system down to the vicinity of Lake Simcoe, where it really strikes the Ontario system of railways, no possible monopoly could be created. If the danger rests in that direction, let us remedy it from that point, and not actually force the business over 200 miles out of its way.

Mr. McCARTHY. With the indulgence of the House, I would like to say a word or two in reply to what has fallen from some hon. gentlemen opposite. Having made this proposition and occupying the unfortunate position as it appears to be, of president of the road which comes under circumstances of suspicion, all I can say is I moved it, not in the interest of the road of which I happen to be president, but in the interest of the Province to which I belong, and it is a matter in which I take great interest. The House must look at the resolution, and see whether it is so worded as to create monopoly or create special advantages for that line of railway, or whether, on the whole, it does not give, as I have endeavored, in recasting the resolution, to make it give, fair-play to the Province of Ontario as distinguished from and as a part of the whole Dominion. I will say one word more, and that is with respect to what is called the verbose and indirect form of the resolution, and some other adjective was used, which, perhaps, very fairly expresses what it appears to be the lay mind. But it is necessary, if this clause 24 is to be amended, that it should be amended in some such form of words as that which is to be found in the resolution. Only a moment ago, the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) moved a resolution laying down a proposition; but when he was asked for the clause, he was obliged to admit he had not based his resolution on the clause, and it had to be framed over again at the Table to suit the clause. I have given the clause, but if the House thinks that is too involved, uncertain, verbose, or indirect, let me put the resolution in a simple form. Let me substitute this resolution, and let the committee deal with the clause. I will just say, in answer to the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), that the mere substitution in the 24th clause of "Northern Pacific Junction" for "the Ontario and Pacific Junction" would be quite ineffective, as the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron) has made quite plain. The circumstances have wholly changed since that clause was drawn. The Canada Central, which was then an independent line, having become part of the Canadian Pacific Railway, clause 24 is wholly inoperative as it stands. What I desire is not that clause 24 should be embodied, but that the resolution, which the Toronto Board of Trade adopted, and which was drawn up with great care by Mr. Justice Ferguson at their request, which was assented to by the Government of that day, according to the statement made by the then Minister of Railways, Sir Charles Tupper, and which was assented to by the Railway Committee, should be now placed in the Bill. With the permission of the House, I will move my amendment:

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the committee, with instructions that they be at liberty to amend the said Act by embodying therein the provisions of the resolution prepared by the Board of Trade, at the city of Toronto, at the request of the then Minister of Railways, and which was referred to by him in his place in Parliament on the 7th February, 1881, providing for equal mileage rates, going from or to Toronto by Ontario railways.

That is the resolution which Sir Charles Tupper stated in his place in the House, that the Government had accepted, and that the railway company had agreed to. I do not see, under the circumstances, how the Premier can go back on it. If that was the promise then made, at the instance of the Board of Trade, by the then Minister of Railways, and assented to by the company, and which we find embodied in a resolution—a resolution not merely to be found in the Northern Pacific Junction Railway Act, but in the Votes and Proceedings No. 23—I really cannot understand what possible objection there can now be to carrying it out. I desire to say one word in defence of Mr. Barker, who, I think, has been rather unfairly dealt with. It is true that since that time the Board of Trade have not stirred in the matter. And why not? Why the Board of Trade at Toronto had the assurance of a Minister of the Crown, given in his place in Parliament, that the resolution they had prepared at his request had been agreed to by the railway company and accepted by the Government; and the Board of Trade, under such circumstances, could not do anything more than rest satisfied with such a statement. But when this railway was about being built, when the manager, Mr. Barker, as he was in duty bound to do by the contract made with the Government—the contract which has been referred to by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) and which is to be found in the contract made between the Government and the company,—and which contained as a condition of the company accepting the bonus that they would make an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway—approached the Canadian Pacific Railway, he was told that no agreement could be made, that the company were not bound by Sir Charles Tupper's statement or by the resolution centered in the Act, that the Act had never been carried out, that circumstances had so changed, that that section was practically a dead letter; the Canadian Pacific Railway practically said: We will make no bargain with you, one way or the other. In defence of the company of which Mr. Barker is manager, Mr. Barker did seek to get a change, which, perhaps, from his point of view was not unfair, but which from my point of view, standing here as a representative, I did think was going too far in preventing competition.

Mr. MITCHELL. Hear, hear.

Mr. McCARTHY. But my hon. friend who cheers that statement is willing to give the absolute monopoly of the trade to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. MITCHELL. I contradict that.

Mr. McCARTHY. What is his object then when he gets up in his place and speaks against putting in the amendment? What possible competition can there be if the amendment is not put in?

Mr. MITCHELL. I will tell you directly.

Mr. McCARTHY. I will be glad to hear from the hon. gentleman. There cannot be any competition between the Canadian Pacific Railway who will control the traffic and any other railway, if this amendment be not inserted. I can give you an illustration to prove this: A man wants to send goods to Toronto to the West. The Canadian Pacific Railway say: We will carry your goods to Winnipeg at exactly the same rate as by the Pacific Junction. Will any man send his goods by the latter road, knowing that when the goods reach the junction, the Canadian Pacific Railway will say: We have our own goods to attend to first, and will look after yours in a day or so, when convenient. The traffic will inevitably go around by their own road, and the result will be there will be practically no competition. The resolution I have proposed, and which is the resolution agreed to, as I have already stated, by the Government, through Sir Charles Tupper, is one by which I desire simply to get rid of a clause that is unfair. I admit I am to blame for not bringing this matter forward earlier. My simple excuse is that I have been endeavoring to arrange with the railway company. It is no surprise to them. I think it is no surprise to some of my hon. friends here. I think they have known something about this before. They are well prepared to speak on behalf of that particular part of the Dominion from which they come, and in the interests which they here uphold. It is no surprise to them. I have been endeavoring to arrange with the railway company a fair agreement which would have prevented a resolution of this kind, and would have saved the time of the House. The company, however, say: There is our charter, we decline to alter a word of it. I have nothing therefore to do, but, even at this late hour, on the third reading, to bring forward this resolution, which I do. It is not yet too late. It is a matter of such importance that even if we do delay the Session for twenty-four hours, even if we sit here for another day, I think none of us would suffer very much. I want it distinctly understood that I am not proposing anything new, that I am willing to take the resolution which the Minister of Railways told us in his place in Parliament, the Government had agreed to and the Canadian Pacific Railway had accepted. If the House will allow me, I will substitute the amendment I have made, in order to meet the views of some of my hon. friends around me, for the one which has been read, or, if that one is voted down, this can be moved afterwards.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think, after the allusions the hon. gentleman has made to the views I have expressed here, I should be allowed to say one or two words in explanation. The hon. gentleman has made a personal allusion to the knowledge I have had of this matter. I can say to the hon. gentleman that until the beginning of this week I had not the slightest knowledge that any difficulty had arisen or that any correspondence was going on in relation to this question between the two railroads. I heard of it purely by accident, and when I heard of it, happening to be in company where the conversation was going on, I felt, from the slight knowledge I had of railway working, that it was likely to interfere with the interests of the section of the country from which I came. When I heard what it was, I took some trouble to learn what were the demands made by Mr. Barker, and if the demands made by him, upon the basis of which he was negotiating with the general manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to whom I went for information, had been carried out, if the general manager had agreed to them, I have no hesitation in saying that it would have irreparably injured the traffic and the trade of Quebec and the eastern Provinces of the Dominion; more, it would have injured the trade of the Province of Ontario. Another point to which the hon. gentleman has referred is this: he says it is trying to exclude the Northern Railway from an existence in the trade between Toronto and the West. What is it doing? It is simply giving Toronto a competing line on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and, as stated at an earlier stage of this debate, if the Ontario Pacific cannot live by carrying for one mile as cheaply as the other road carries for two, the Ontario Pacific has no need for existence. The other point, and the only one to which I wish to refer, is where my hon. friend spoke of the non-existence of any remedy provided this addition is not made to the Bill. As stated before, no man knows better than the hon. gentleman, under the provisions of the General Railway Act, the Railway Committee of the Privy Council have full powers to regulate rates, to control tariffs and to arrange difficulties between railways. What better arrangement do we want? Has there ever been a practical difficulty as to the arrangements between railways that has not been provided for and dealt with by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council? That power still exists, and that power can remedy the very difficulties to which my hon. friend refers. I will not repeat the arguments of the hon. gentleman from South Victoria, but his arguments against any amendment at all of that character, which we have not time to consider at this late hour, is one that I think will recommend itself to the consideration of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There can be no objection to the hon. gentleman substituting his other amendment now.

Mr. McCARTHY withdrew the amendment which had been put.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is moved by Mr. McCarthy:

That this Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole House with instructions to amend section 24 of Canadian Pacific Railway charter by providing that equal mileage rates must be given by that company to any railway running southward from Callander station on the line of said railway, and that Callander station should continue to be a neutral and distributing point.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is not the amendment the hon. gentleman read.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes, I think so.

Mr. SPEAKER. Call in the members.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Although the members are called in, it appears that the wrong amendment was put in your hands.

Mr. SPEAKER. This is the amendment which the hon. gentleman intended to substitute:

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend said Act by embodying therein the provisions of the resolution prepared by the Board of Trade of the city of Toronto, at the request of the then Minister of Railways, and which was referred to by him in his place in Parliament, on the 7th February, 1881, provided for equal mileage rates going from or to Toronto by Ontario railways.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Now that this resolution is read, it is a striking instance of the inconsistency of this whole proceeding. Here we have a specific Bill with a specific object. It has been through all its stages but the last, and now the hon. gentleman proposes to refer it back again to committee to make this important amendment. We cannot go into this until the Canadian Pacific Railway has the opportunity of being heard. It was no fault of the House and no fault of the Canadian Pacific Railway that the hon. gentleman did not bring this matter before the House two months ago, and the reason why it was not brought down before, I have no hesitation in saying, is that it is for the purpose of putting the screw to the railway, because they happened to come and make a reasonable proposition to this House. They say: You shall not have what by resolution we declared the other day was right. This Bill is founded on certain resolutions. Those resolutions were considered in committee in full. They were discussed upon their merits, and upon their merits it was decided that a Bill should be founded upon them, and at the last moment the hon. gentleman says: I know we have no right to do it, but we will force the Canadian Pacific Railway by putting the screw to them. I think it is unfair. I have no hesitation in saying it is unfair. It is done in a sort of blackmailing system by the Northern Railway in a way I do not like, and there is no necessity for it in the world, because the Railway Committee of the Privy Council have full control, and can have their full control over tariffs and can prevent the possibility of one railway overriding another and treating it wrongly in the way of tariffs. There is no doubt about that. If the Railway Committee of the Privy Council do not act according to the approbation of this House, this House will very shortly show the committee, and the Government of the day of which the committee is a portion, that they do not consider that the Railway Committee has done its duty.

House divided on amendment of Mr. McCarthy.

Mr. PLATT. Notwithstanding that I understood the First Minister to say that this House cannot pass important amendments to this measure without consulting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or in other words, that this House cannot legislate without consulting that authority, I venture to make a proposition which I think will not be considered either verbose or difficult to understand; it is provoked by the fact that this Bill proposes to lay violent hands upon what has generally been considered a very important safeguard in the original contract for the construction of this road. As the point has been d scussed largely at a previous stage of this Bill, I shall simply move the following amendment:—

That the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of amending the same by striking out the provision for a release of the security of five millions for the operation of the line.

Amendment negatived on a division.

Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—CUSTOMS SEIZURE AT MONTREAL.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. GAULT. Before you go into Supply, I wish to bring before this House some circumstances connected with a seizure which took place in the city of Montreal recently, and which has caused a great deal of excitement in the mercantile community there. We first heard of this matter through the public press, where it was stated that the firm of Patterson, Kissock & Co. had been seized, and that the Government had sent officers into the establishment and demanded their books, that the firm had refused to exhibit their books, and that then the officers had been sent to their warehouse, slept there all night, and the next morning an attempt was made to turn these officers out of the establishment, when one of them drew a revolver and presented it at one of the clerks, the result being that the officers held possession of the establishment. After that we heard of the police being called in. The street was crowded with people, and nothing was seen but policemen, bailifs and legal gentlemen, tramping up and down, and a great crowd of people gathered in the street. I may say that this matter was said to be three times worse than another seizure which had already taken place in Montreal, in which the parties had paid to the Government the sum of $36,000. It is said that the second seizure was much worse, and the proof obtainable against them was clearer than against the first case. To-day we see by the press that the Government has compromised the matter on the payment of $2,000, at the suggestion of the English creditors. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to know if the Government have compromised that matter, and if their officers are authorised to compromise cases of that kind without consulting the Minister of Customs. The merchants of Montreal feel very strongly about this. They think that they have been selling goods at no profit; when their travellers went west they found other travellers able to sell goods 10 and 12 per cent. cheaper than they. The very oldest houses in Montreal have made no money for three years, and the reason is now evident why they have made no money. On behalf of the honest merchants I ask the Minister of Customs to say whether this matter has been compromised, because it is felt in Montreal that no compromise whatever should be made in a case of this kind, and that the Department should do their duty and the firm made to do theirs, so that justice may be done to all.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman has based all his statements upon newspaper reports and, although an old newspaper man myself, I do not propose to hold either myself or the Government responsible for the version given by the press of what has taken place in the city of Montreal with reference to seizures there. In regard to the seizure to which my hon. friend has called attention, I have simply to say that I am not in a position to give that information to the House which I trust I may be able to give in a few days. The frauds were discovered by some of the special agents connected with the Customs Department. They went to the establishment and, with the knowledge they had of what had taken place, demanded, under a certain section of the Customs Act, an examination of the books; and the firm, whether by their own mere motion, or by advice, refused to surrender the books. They were then threatened with seizure, and the difficulties to which my hon. friend has referred, to a certain extent did occur. It became a question whether the authority which is vested in the officers under the Customs Act, should be exercised without interference of the civil authorities, or whether the civil authorities should issue a certain process, and prevent them from carrying out what they believed to be their duty. I believe a difficulty did occur between some of the officers of the court and the officers of the Customs, who then proceeded to seize the goods which were in the establishment. Another question arose as to whether they had a right to seize any goods that had not actually been improperly entered, or which had not been smuggled into the country. While negotiations were going on, two representatives of the English creditors called upon me and desired to know if an arrangement could not be made by which the business would not be closed. I replied, that the only arrangement that could possibly be made would be, that the parties, Messrs. Patterson & Kissock, should acknowledge the Customs authority, that they should submit to an examination of their books, whatever they might have, and surrender all the invoices which were in their possession, in order that a thorough and full investigation of the frauds which are supposed to have been committed could be arrived at. It transpired, I believe, although I am speaking now under correction, that some of the invoices had been destroyed. I then suggested that they should make a full statement of all their affairs, and if that could not be done in any other way we should send to England and their creditors should furnish a statement of the business transactions with this firm in order that we could compare that statement with the entries which had been made at the Customs, and then ascertain the extent to which frauds had been committed, and that upon no other consideration would I listen to any proposition which would lead to a compromise. I may say that so far as regards the statement made that a compromise has been effected, I have no knowledge of any compromise having been made. I state on behalf of the Government that no instructions were given by me to make any compromise in this matter. When the officer left the city in the company of the gentlemen to whom I have referred, he was informed to act strictly under the instructions of counsel, Messrs. Church and Hall, and that nothing should be done that would compromise the Customs or by which any authority which we had claimed should be conceded. What has been done since that time I am not prepared to say. If the frauds committed only amount to $2,000—of which I have no knowledge—that is all we could collect with the penalties. But I have no knowledge as to any settlement having been effected, nor have I had any report from the officer since the conversation to which I have alluded, and consequently am not in a position to give as full information as I would like to furnish. I trust I will be able to answer more fully in a few days.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Subsidy to line of steamers between France and Quebec..... $56,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think only $2,000 were paid last year.

Mr. LANGELIER. I observe there is a change in this item from that of the previous year. Two years ago and last year there was a condition affixed to that grant, namely, that the French Government should give an equal sum, this being done in order to secure that service. It is within my own experience that only one steamer of that line came to Quebec last year.

Mr. BOWELL. That accounts for the sum of only $2,000 being paid.

Mr. LANGELIER. I am quite in favor of this grant if we can secure a French line to Quebec. I understand that some other steamers of that line came to the Dominion, but did not reach Quebec, only Halifax. I think $2,000 is too large a subsidy for only one steamer. I would like to ask the Government if they have ascertained that, with that subsidy, without any subsidy from the French Government, those steamers would be able to keep up a fortnightly service between France and Quebec?

Mr. BOWELL. The contract to which the hon. gentleman refers has been cancelled from the fact that they were unable to carry it out, and I think the sum of $2,000—though I wish to speak under correction—is the sum which was equitably due the company for the service which they performed. The hon. gentleman is quite right in stating that the former grant was given conditional on the French Government granting an equal sum. The Government failed to make any arrangement with the French Government by which a joint subsidy could be granted in order to secure this service. Propositions have been made, I believe, to the Government for the establishment of a service between the St. Lawrence and France, and the Government are so anxious to establish that line, if it is possible to do so, that they thought it better to place a sum in the Estimates granting a bonus in order to secure the service, if necessary, independently of the French Government. If the object which we all desire, can be obtained by this means no doubt we will be able to open up a considerable trade with France which does not now exist. One very important industry in this country to which I might call the attention of the House would be developed if we should succeed in establishing that line. As the hon. gentleman knows, there is a surtax charged on our phosphates now taken to France which passed through an English port. An extensive market for phosphates would be opened if we could get into the country without the payment of that surtax. It is now charged upon every ton of phosphates which goes into France by way of England, and if by the establishment of this line we could get them directly into France, they would go free into that country, and that particular branch of industry alone would be greatly benefited, especially in the Provinces in which this valuable mineral is found.

Mr. LANGELIER. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman as to the importance of maintaining this line. I understand from him that no arrangement has yet been made, and that the amount will be put at the disposal of the Government to be granted to any company which the Government consider to be able to undertake the service. There is no particular contract I understand.

Mr. BOWELL. No, but negotiations are going on which we think will end successfully.

Subsidy to line of steamers between Liverpool or London, or both, and St. John, N.B., and Halifax, N.S., a port in the Dominion to be the terminal port..... .....$25,000 00

Mr. WELDON. With what line is the contract continued?

Mr. BOWELL. It is the Furness Line.

Mr. WELDON. Is the contract still continuing?

Mr. BOWELL. I think so, but I will make a note of it.

Steam communication from Port Mulgrave to East Bay, C.B.....$6,000 00

Mr. PAINT. When this subsidy was agreed upon between Cape Breton members, it was understood that these steamers should call at Hay Cove, county of Richmond. There is ample time for the boat to call, and I would desire the Postmaster General to see that this service is performed, as it is of great importance to this port and to the 5,000 people in the district contiguous to it.

Steam communication between Canada and Antwerp or Germany.....$24,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this contract being carried out or has it lapsed? Apparently only a portion of the subsidy was paid.

Mr. BOWELL. There were two lines that were proposed to be subsidised, one running from Hamburg and the other running from Antwerp. One of them, I think, has failed, and it is only proposed to vote half the former amount this year, and this will be given to one of the lines.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman know whether any considerable additional trade has been developed in that direction?

Mr. BOWELL. With some of the steamers there has, but with others there has not. I might state that we made it a condition this year that the manifests of every trip outward and inward should be sent to the Finance Minister, and he has all the information which will show to the House the nature and quantity of the goods which were carried.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My chief reason for putting the question was that as we have recently paid a large sum for the exhibition held at Antwerp, I was anxious to know whether any development of trade has resulted from it.

Mr. BOWELL. I have not noticed that it has as yet.

Mr. GAULT. The agent expects a very large increase of trade this season. A large amount of window glass came out by one vessel, and I think 45,000 bushels of rye was shipped home by one vessel.

For steam communication between Canso and Port Hood, daily, touching at railway terminus, Port Mulgrave, and such other places within above limits as may be agreed upon, to provide for continuance of service during winter, on the Port Mulgrave and Canso section $5,000 00

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). This resolution, as it is worded, does not fully express the service. A person would infer that it was a daily service, which it is not; it is rather a triangular service; it touches at Port Mulgrave, the eastern terminus of the railway, the extreme southern limit is Canso, and the extreme northern limit is Mabou. I propose to change the wording so as to make it read:

For steam communication between Canso, Port Hood and Mabou, and such other places between above limits as may be agreed upon, touching daily at railway terminus at Port Mulgrave, and also to provide for continuance of service during winter on the Port Mulgrave and Canso section.

Mr. PAINT. That should contain the word Arichat.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Arichat, Guysboro', Port Mulgrave and Port Hood, are intermediate points, all of which the service will take in just as if they were named.

Mr. KIRK. Except that it is necessary for the Government to obtain an agreement from the company or the individual performing the service that the steamers must touch at Arichat and Guysboro'. But I think the resolution as proposed by my hon. friend from Inverness is quite sufficient, and it is necessary, because there is really no sense in the resolution as it stands. This amount of $5,000 is not half enough to do justice to the service. It ought to be $15,000 at least.

Mr. BOWELL. There can be no ojection to changing the wording to meet the object the Government have in view of granting the subsidy; and if my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Paint) thinks the steamers will pass Arichat unless it is named in the resolution, I have no objection to adding it.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I have no objection to inserting Arichat.

Mr. PAINT. The hon. member for Inverness has nothing to say about that. The steamers call at Arichat by way of compliment, and they are paid for doing it; but if it is named in the resolution, there will be no question about it, and they will be obliged to call there. As Guysboro' is some twenty miles out of the way, it is necessary that it should be inserted.

Mr. KIRK. If it is intended to serve those towns, they should all be inserted.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). This vote has been in the Estimates for the past five years, and during that time, the service has been faithfully performed, the steamers always touching at both Arichat and Guysboro'. But I have no objection to inserting them.

Mr. KIRK. What about increasing the vote?

Mr. BOWELL. That is a matter we will take into very serious consideration.

Mr. KIRK. This vote is intended to give those towns which have no railway facilities the advantage of communication with the railways that have been built at an enormous expense to the country. Although I know it is invidious to draw comparisons, and I do not wish to do so, with any injurious effect, at any rate, I notice that there is one item, at least here for service, which is not any more important, or perhaps not as important, as the one we are discussing, and for which there is $12,500 voted, namely, the subsidy between Campbellton and Gaspé and intermediate ports. Yet only $5,000 is given for this service for three counties that have no railway communication whatever. I maintain we should have a better service than simply a steamer calling twice a week at those ports. If we had the sum doubled we would have a steamer calling four times a week, and that is as little as might be expected by people who have paid their share towards building railways in the North-West and throughout the Dominion, and have no railways of their own.

Mr. PAINT. I am able to speak from experience of the steamer Admiral, which runs from Dalhousie to Gaspé and touches at twenty places on the way. It is a very exposed and risky service and not over-paid at all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before leaving this subject, I would ask in what position we stand with regard to the Montreal Ocean Steamship Company. Last year the Postmaster General brought down a contract which was objected to and was withdrawn by order of the Government. Can the hon. gentleman state exactly how the negotiations stand, and what is proposed to be done touching the renewal of the subsidy?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The contract has not been changed, but has been allowed to continue until now. The Government have taken the matter into consideration, and it is likely that tenders will be called for, for the new service. They have not been called for yet. We intend asking for better and swifter steamers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman know on concurrence what terms the Government propose to insist on. This is a matter of very great importance, because the speed of the Atlantic steamers has been increasing so rapidly that our St. Lawrence route will be put at a great disadvantage, unless stringent measures are taken to ensure an equally good service.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will let the hon. gentleman know on concurrence what the Government intend doing.

Maintenance and repairs of Government steamers...$130,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Last year we required apparently $177,000 on this. I have no desire that the hon. gentleman should spend any more than he asks, but I would like to know whether this is a mere guess vote or whether he really thinks we can keep the expenditure down to $130,000.

Mr. FOSTER. La Canadienne and the Lansdowne will be used, the latter for the most of the summer and the former for a portion of the time, as fishery and police protection vessels, and their maintenance will be charged to the fishery and police protection vote. The Napoléon III and La Canadienne are still at Quebec, the Sir James Douglas is at British Columbia, and the Newfield is at Halifax and the Druid at Quebec.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We usually receive some receipts from these steamers. What did they consist of this year?

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness).

Mr. FOSTER. We received some receipts. For instance cables are laid, in the laying of which the Newfield was employed last year and the cost charged to Public Works Department. When vessels are towed off or otherwise helped by these steamers, a certain amount comes in from that source.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would suggest to the Minister of Customs who is acting for the Minister of Finance that we should have a more detailed account of the receipts for these several services. With a correct system of book-keeping, there ought to be no difficulty about this. That is a matter which I had intended to call the attention of the Public Accounts Committee to, and probably will do so, but I mention it now for the information of the Minister, that he may confer with the Minister of Finance about it.

Mr. BOWELL. I understand that you want a more detailed statement of the receipts.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes. They are generally put down in lump. I dare say that has been the practice but I think we ought to get a little fuller account.

Mr. VAIL. Is it intended to keep the Lansdowne the whole year in the service she is in now?

Mr. FOSTER. It is intended to keep her in that service for the whole season or nearly all. There may be a few days in which she may have to do some busy work in the Bay of Fundy. As there is very little cable laying to be done, it is thought that the other boats will be able to overtake the rest of the service.

Mr. VAIL. Is the Lansdowne doing her work satisfactorily?

Mr. FOSTER. I believe so.

Mr. VAIL. I saw in one of the papers that she started to go from St. John for Digby with this American schooner, and the schooner ran away from her. Her speed does not appear to be what we expected.

Mr. FOSTER. She got her at last.

Mr. PAINT. Were there any repairs on the steamer Newfield last year?

Mr. FOSTER. I believe there were.

Mr. PAINT. Do you know the amount?

Mr. FOSTER. No, I have not got it now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. At least $11,732 was entered for last year. If the hon. gentleman thinks it desirable, we can get the details, I dare say, in the Public Accounts.

Mr. PAINT. No, I do not want them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The sum was nearly $12,000.

Mr. PAINT. Yes, but the repairs were new boilers and were extensive, and I do not wonder at the amount.

Rewards for saving life and life-boat service..... $8,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have any new life-boat stations been instituted, or does the hon. Minister propose to institute any?

Mr. FOSTER. A certain number of new life stations were instituted last year. We got, I think, twelve new boats of the best pattern, and they have been distributed to different stations, some of them, of course, going to the stations formerly established, where old and less serviceable boats were, and others going to new stations.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have any been put on Prince Edward county, in Ontario? That is a portion of the coast of Lake Ontario, on which every year there are two or three wrecks, sometimes more, and they have been generally attended with considerable loss of life. This matter has been pressed upon the attention of the hon. gentleman's predecessors. There is one station there, I think, or perhaps two stations.

Mr. FOSTER. Two new life-boats have been placed in Prince Edward County, one at Poplar Point and the other at Wellington.

Mr. PLATT. Is it the intention to order the construction of any new life-boats during the current year?

Mr. FOSTER. It is not yet decided. We ordered some last year. Of course, the service is still in its infancy, and, although we like to extend it as much as possible, we have to take consideration of the funds at our disposal. There are some places which especially require life stations, and it may be quite possible that some half dozen will be established for this year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do you compute is the cost of each station?

Mr. FOSTER. It is not very heavy. After the equipment is placed there, we have a captain who is paid $75 for the season, and he and the crew receive something for each drill.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. About how much would each station be supposed to represent?

Mr. FOSTER. The captain gets $75 per annum and $1.50 for fourteen half days' drill, and the crew receive $1.50 for fourteen half days' drill. If these were added together a simple computation would tell the cost.

Mr. PLATT. How many men constitute the crew?

Mr. FOSTER. Twelve, I think.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose $400 or $500 would cover it.

Mr. DAWSON. Last year something was said about putting some of these boats on the upper lakes, but I do not think anything has been done so far. I would be very glad if the Minister would keep it in mind for the future.

Mr. FOSTER. There is one at Goderich. That is the furthest on the lakes.

Mr. WILSON. Has the Minister established any life-boat station on Lake Erie?

Mr. FOSTER. There is a life-boat station at Port Rowan.

Mr. WILSON. Is there any other?

Mr. FOSTER. I think there is one at Port Stanley.

Mr. WILSON. Has the crew there been fully completed?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. McCRANEY. I desire to call the Minister's attention to the lake to the west of Toronto. There is no life-saving station at all between Toronto and Hamilton, and of late years a number of very sad accidents have taken place there. I hope that, at any rate, as soon as the Government are in a position they will take this matter into consideration and do something in that way. There are several ports between Toronto and Hamilton, and so far none of them has been supplied, nor is any provision made at all for the saving of life.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no doubt that is true, but we must remember that the inside and outside coast line of Canada is a great many thousand miles in extent, and it would require a very large expense, and a great deal of time, to overtake all the work which is necessary to be done.

Mr. PLATT. The question I asked in regard to the construction of additional life-boats, does not mean that I desire that any more should be constructed, or any more stations established, until those which are now established are made much more efficient than they now are. I see the same amount is asked this year as was voted last year. Last year several new life-boats were procured. If none are to be obtained this year, in what way is it intended to expend the $8,000? It will be more than the captains and the crews will require.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think I stated that no more would be purchased or that no new stations would be established. I think I said that it was probable that there would. Another question which will receive consideration is whether these crews would not be made more efficient by making them paid crews, not simply paid for days' drill, but under a salary sufficiently large to make them feel that their services could be properly called upon.

Mr. PLATT. I hope the Minister will give that his very favorable consideration. I have urged every Session that something more should be done to perfect these establishments than has been done. The Minister says there are twelve men to a crew. I think the regulations provides that the captain and six men shall constitute a crew.

Mr. FOSTER. Probably I was mistaken then.

Mr. PLATT. But I wish to draw special attention to the fact that the names of the crew do not seem to be known to the Department, although the names of the captains are known. The captains have been in the habit of calling the men out for drill, and selecting anyone they can pick up. Under these circumstances, the system of instruction amounts to nothing. In the Wellington station, I find by the Public Accounts that eleven men were paid instead of six, and the eleven men who were paid were men whom the captain happened to find upon the street upon the day when he wished to go out to drill. The captains have no control over the crews, who are simply volunteers, and drill once or twice, or three times a year, perhaps. The instruction, consequently, is worthless, and the captains admit such to be the case. Again, complaints have been made to me from captains of life-boats, that the instructions they have received are not such as will enable them to render assistance to vessels in distress, unless it appears to them plainly evident that life is in danger. I understand that instructions have been issued that they are not to take out the life-boat to save property. Now, when property is in danger it is very likely that life is in danger, and I think the instructions should be changed, and that the saving of property as well as the saving of life, should be made one of its duties. Now, Sir, I have contended every Session that the service will be as good as worthless, and the money as good as thrown away, until those stations are made more efficient, until there is something like a system of instruction. I advocate the establishment somewhere on the coast of our lakes, of a central station to serve as a sort a school of instruction, under some responsible officer who will train, at least, one crew that may be depended upon, that there may be some system so that these men will be under the obligation to obey the captain, and will turn out whenever he sees fit to call them. I am told by one of the captains in my county that in fair weather he may possibly get a crew, but in bad weather it is impossible for him to do so; that on two or three occasions when he thought there was danger of his being called upon, he had not the men he could rely upon. I hope the Minister will give more attention to perfecting this branch of the service, rather than extending it. I think the suggestion I have made time and again for the establishment of a central station, will aid in securing a service approaching near to what a life-saving service is supposed to be, and I think such a one ought to be established, so that we may have at least one crew who will be efficiently drilled, and who can furnish instructors to other stations throughout the country. I know, from communication and association with members of life-saving crews on the other side of the water, that they look upon ours as a complete sham. Why, there is not a sailor on our lake who knows where the stations are located. The sailors do not put any confidence whatever upon our life-saving service. On the other side of the lake, every man is supplied with a list showing exactly where the stations are, and the masters know where they can expect relief in case of disaster. Here there is nothing of that kind, and instead of spending money for the extension of the number of these stations, it would be far better to spend it in perfecting those we have in existence.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sorry the hon. gentleman has given so poor an account of the life-boat service, and the enterprise of the sailors in his county. Although this may be true of the hon. gentleman's own county, there are amongst those companies, even though they are volunteers, some very efficient ones.

Mr. PLATT. I grant that.

Mr. FOSTER. In the first place, they have a good boat, and that is important when danger is liable to be incurred. They have a captain in charge who is responsible, and it is not impossible to get even volunteers who, when life is in danger, will be on hand. I know it is difficult to get men to attend to this for $1.50 a day for drill. However the system is not by any means worthless, and it is doing much as we hope to make it do.

Mr. COCHRANE. If the life-boat service is so inefficient in Prince Edward, I think it is time that the Department should see that a crew is furnished who will do their duty, and in whom the mariners may have some confidence.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Last year the total sum expended for five crews was barely $913; it is utterly impossible to expect an efficient service for an average of $180 per crew, including captain and men. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has ever inspected any English or Irish life-saving stations.

Mr. FOSTER. I have never seen either.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There, the crews are regularly trained, and such a thing would not be thought of, except in case of accident, as going out to sea on a dangerous night with a mere scratch crew. If they are to do good service they must be accustomed to work together. The sum is altogether inadequate to obtain good service, and it would be by the merest chance that you could succeed in obtaining a good crew where all that is allowed for six or seven men is about $100, after deducting the $75 which is paid to the captain.

Mr. GUILLET. In the Cobourg station I can report that the captain has made no complaints to me of any difficulty in keeping a volunteer crew together. He has the same crew this year he had last; the men drill regularly, and they have made no complaints. The service appears to be in a very satisfactory condition, and the crew is most efficient. I know that the life-saving service at Cobourg is known to many sailors on the lake.

Mr. PLATT. The hon. gentleman must be aware that the town of Cobourg is a different place from Poplar Point, situated on the south side of what is called Long Point in the county of Prince Edward, and a sparsely settled neighborhood. A station is situated in the small village of Wellington, and, so far as location is concerned, the Minister will not have to go as far away as Presqu'Isle, or even Prince Edward Island, to find a better place for the location of a life-saving station, than Wellington. I have always contended that on account of its location the station there was useless. The point where a life-saving station should be is at Salmon Point. The station at Poplar Point is in a sparsely settled neighborhood, the people being chiefly fishermen, amongst whom there are as good boatmen as can be found in Canada, and who are willing to lend a helping hand in case of danger. Cases of danger have arisen, and the life-boat has been at their command, but so little were they accustomed to its use that when life was to be saved a few years ago, the fishermen preferred to go out in their own boat to risk taking the life-boat, because they did not know how to manage it. In the village of Wellington there is a life-boat well provided, but the boat at Poplar Point has been lying in an ice-house, a damp place, filled with snow in the winter. I think the boats, generally, are described as being valuable; those who are able to judge say they are valuable. They have two first-class life-boats and two efficient captains. Beyond that they say there is nothing that can be called a life-saving service. I do not ask now a change in the location of the life-boats, but that the captains should be given crews to command, and know, when danger arises, where to call on crews to assist them. We cannot expect to have crews unless we pay them. We should have one or two stations properly conducted, and with efficient crews, so that they could give instructions, and the stations should be supplied with every appliance known for the rescue of the imperilled mariner, and thus encouragement should be given. I admit that in case of danger many men in Wellington will be found prepared to face danger. The captains have no regular crews, and although names have been given to the Department, instead of six names eleven names were given. The boats sometimes went out with full crews and sometimes with half-crews. I hope some change will be made in some of the stations so that we may be able to say in the future that we have a life-saving service in Canada.

Investigation into Wrecks and Casualties..... $1,500 00

Mr. VAIL. For what purpose is this expenditure asked?

Mr. FOSTER. Wrecks take place and they are reported to the Department, and the Department pays a small fee for the information, I think $2 for each wreck reported.

Montreal and Quebec Water and River Police ... $40,000 00

Mr. PAINT. I should like to see a similar expenditure for St. John, Halifax and Sydney, especially for Sydney, where there are 300 steamers a year.

Removal of obstructions in navigable rivers..... $14,000 00

Mr. FOSTER. There is a large increase in this item over last year. It is due to the sinking of the steamship Ottawa, a large vessel which sank in the River St. Lawrence. We had a man working on the vessel part of last year, and it was found impossible to raise her. Tenders were asked for and a contract has been entered into for $12,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman expect to receive any amount to recoup the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. No, we have no reasonable expectation of getting anything in return. The man in charge last year was to recoup himself by what he brought up from the vessel. He obtained a quantity of iron, but it did not pay him I think, for his work.

Mr. PAINT. I call the attention of the Minister to the fact that there is a wreck in Wren River, which has been in the channel two years, although it could be removed for a small sum, about $1,000.

Winter Mail Service, Prince Edward Island.....$5,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this a new vote?

Mr. FOSTER. It is a new vote, but an amount of $4,000 has been transferred from the Post Office Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where is the money to be expended?

Mr. FOSTER. It is for the winter ice-boat service between the capes. Formerly it was done by contract, but last year it was taken over as a Government work. Boat-houses have been erected and boats provided, and those items account for the large increase for the present year. Probably the service can be done for $4,000 next year, now that boats have been built and boathouses provided.

Salaries, &c., of Lighthouse Keepers..... $175,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is an increase of about $2,000 for Ontario. What is that caused by?

Mr. FOSTER. There are each year new lighthouses being erected, and consequently new keepers have to be employed. There is a yearly increase in the salaries corresponding with the yearly increase in the service. If the hon. gentleman will look at the statistics he will find the amount is very large.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many new lighthouses does the Department expect to place in Ontario?

Mr. FOSTER. There are two new ones being built for the upper lakes, and three or four others will be placed in Ontario. The list has not yet been made up; it will be brought down and laid before the House before concurrence.

Mr. DAWSON. The expenditure on lighthouses for the upper lakes will have to be a great deal larger than it has been hitherto, both in the number of the lights and in their maintenance, because the shipping is increasing very rapidly in the upper lakes. In order to give an idea how shipping is increasing, I may say that, at Owen Sound, where the tonnage a few years ago was very limited, now amounts to nearly half a million tons yearly. Take again Port Arthur which has over half a million of tons yearly now, and so on with other ports. To give a still further idea of how the shipping on these lakes is increasing, I may mention that at the port of Duluth the shipping last year amounted to 900,000 tons. Now, as these lakes become covered with fleets, further provision will have to be made in the way of additional lighthouses as well as for beacons and buoys. There were appropriations made for beacons on the St. Mary's River some years ago, but they have not been put there yet. In fact, I do not know that they would be of much use. What we want is light-houses and range-lights, which will enable vessels to pass up and down at night. With the increasing trade of the upper lakes, the Government will have to look forward in the future to a very considerably increased expenditure in the way of keeeping up lighthouses, life-saving apparatus, and in other ways. I had to draw attention, last year, to the loss, within a few years, of no less than twelve vessels with a large loss of life, and, last year, we had the lamentable loss of the Algoma, wrecked not in Canadian territory, but on the boundary line near Passage Island. No doubt, the wreck arose from a mistake on the part of the officers navigating the vessel, so that the fault was not in the lights.

Maintenance and repairs to lights, for whistles, buoys and beacons, to humane establishments, and provision depots..... $323,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a considerable increase here.

Mr. FOSTER. Arising from the same cause as exists in the case of salaries and allowances.

Mr. GORDON. I would like to enquire of the Minister if it is proposed to establish fog whistles at the various light-houses in the Gulf of Georgia, during the coming year. It will be remembered that a serious accident occurred there last season, by which a very valuable ship became a total wreck, the ship and cargo being valued at something like $130,000, and during one period last summer there was great inconvenience to the steamships frequenting the Port Nanaimo, owing to the dense fog in the gulf during a portion of the summer. The steamships which frequent that port are very valuable, and the trade is very important. No less than 357,000 tons of coal were shipped from that port last year, and that will convey to the House the importance of maintaining a perfect system of lights and fog whistles up and down the gulf, more especially so, now that we are going to have a line of large steamships running from Vancouver to China and Japan. I think every precaution should be taken, and, if I mistake not, the pilotage authorities of Burrard Inlet, Nanaimo and Victoria, have memorialised the Department to have those fog whistles and also a number of buoys, in order to mark the dangerous points that protrude in the gulf. I cannot press upon the Government too strongly the importance of this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. The representations which my hon. friend has made are fresh in memory. They have arrived within the last month or two, and I have had reports and am having reports made upon them; and I have no doubt that in the course of time these improvements will gradually be made. There is no doubt that more money will have to be expended in these works on the British Columbia coast than has been spent in years past, owing to the large development which has taken place and will take place there. I will bear his representations in mind.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think there should be some further explanation on this vote, as a sum of $31,000 is asked additional to what was granted in 1885. Now, the sum for Cape Race light and fog whistle may be fairly deducted, as we receive compensation for a large part of that; but even then, an increase of $27,000 over and above the sum sufficient for the purpose of 1885 seems to me a good deal more than has been sufficiently accounted for. A great many of these items which we are asked to vote in very large sums, are susceptible of being carelessly used; and I do not think so large a vote should be given without some fuller explanation of the cause of this addition of $27,000.

Mr. FOSTER. It is very difficult to give all the items; they are so various. I have no doubt the deputy has made a careful computation of what is required. The increases for lamps, lanterns, oil, &c., are due to the fact that the more lighthouses we have the more lamps are used, and the more oil is consumed. Many of these increases are owing to the increased number of lighthouses we have to supply. In repairs to lighthouses there is an increase of $5,500, which I must say is a large item. In buoys and beacons there is an increase of $2,000, which is due, I think, to the importation of a number of gas buoys of a new and improved pattern. The system was entered on a year or two ago; and as the buoys do very good and economical work, the system is to be completed this year. I cannot give any fuller explanation of the increases.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that last year $292,000 was expended, and $308,900 was voted; the increase would be something like $31,000 in two years. I think it is high time the Government should improve the lighthouse service along the north shore of Lake Superior and in the Georgian Bay; and if the hon. Minister had been able to announce that he was going to make some decided improvements there, I could understand this increase; but as he has made no such announcement, I do not see why so large an amount is required. The shores in that district are very rocky and dangerous, and the Government should certainly make some provision to prevent such serious disasters, with loss of life, as have occurred there during the last few years. Any person who has travelled along those shores, as I have done, will easily realise how easy it is for a boat on a dark night to meet with a serious accident.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has not read the report, or he would have seen that a very large expenditure was made last year and the year before in those upper lakes. In last year's report I find that a light was placed at the entrance to Tobermory Harbor, Georgian Bay, and lights at Manitowaning, Cape Robert, North Sister Rock, Wilson's Channel, and Shoal Point, as well as a fog horn at Cove Island, in Georgian Bay, and a temporary light at Spanish River. A lighthouse has also been placed at Rainy River, a lighthouse and fog trumpet are in course of construction at Caribou Island, in Lake Superior, and tenders have been invited for the erection of a lighthouse at Victoria Island, in Lake Superior.

Mr. McMULLEN. I quite agree that considerable improvements have been made, but there is very great length of cost.

Mr. PAINT. One lighthouse in Lake Erie cost $25,000. We, in Nova Scotia erect about thirty with that amount.

Mr. DAWSON. Great progress has been made during the last few years in the erection of lighthouses in that part of the country. Last year we had five new lights. But I would correct my hon. friend from Centre Wellington in one thing. The north coast of Lake Huron is an exceedingly dangerous coast, but the north coast of Lake Superior is a very safe coast. A vessel need never be more than two hours run from a good safe harbor on that coast, and all that is wanted is a few additional lights to make its navigation the safest on Canadian waters. The north coast of Lake Huron, on the contrary, is exceedingly dangerous, and there is no more dangerous place than the Georgian Bay. I might point out that a very important life-saving station would be on the Great Duck Island, for there have been wrecks in that direction. As new lights are placed year after year, the navigation of these lakes will become safer.

Completion and construction of lighthouses and fog alarms $40,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We ought to have a list of the various works on which the hon. gentleman proposes to expend this amount.

Mr. FOSTER. I mentioned a few moments ago that there should be such a list before the House. It is being prepared and will be laid on the Table before concurrence. I am sorry it could not be ready in time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman can state generally the number of lighthouses, and the places where they are to be constructed, that would awswer. Otherwise the item ought to stand.

Mr. FOSTER. It would be far more satisfactory to have the list. This is the usual vote.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And the usual custom is to lay on the Table, at the time this vote is asked for, a detailed statement.

Mr. FOSTER. I will have to ask the indulgence of the House this time.

Mr. McMULLEN.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Cannot the hon. gentleman give a general idea where the chief expenditure in the country will take place? Will it take place in the upper lakes or in the Lower Provinces?

Mr. FOSTER. I would rather not give an incomplete statement. I am going through the Provinces one by one, making a list of all the lighthouses.

Mr. WELDON. My hon. friend has invited tenders for a fog alarm to be placed at the west Quaco Head. At what particular spot do they propose to place it there? Formerly the lighthouse was on the ledge, the raceway running between that and the main land. Some years ago the lighthouse was burnt down, and a new lighthouse erected on the bluff on the mainland; but since the alteration there have been several wrecks, whereas none had occurred for years previous. One vessel went to pieces, and the men escaped by getting on the foundation of the old lighthouse, only to become frozen to death, with one exception, before assistance could reach them. Had there been a lighthouse on that spot, these men's lives would have been saved. The matter underwent legal investigation, and a large number of facts came out, to which I will not now allow allude; but I wish to ask whether the fog alarm could not be placed on the ledge, because, in case of danger, there is a chance of saving life there. If a vessel strikes the ledge, when the raceway is full, it is impossible to send out assistance to it in a storm. Had the new lighthouse been on the site of the old one, those men would have been alive to-day. This is such a serious matter that a fog horn should be placed, if possible, on the ledge so that it would become a place of refuge in case of disaster. There have been several instances of vessels being wrecked at the same place, but fortunately without loss of life.

Mr. KIRK. I am sorry the hon. the Minister had not the list prepared and submitted to the House so that we might know where the lighthouses were intended to be built. The hon. gentleman has said it is only the usual vote, but it is usual for the Government sometimes not to build lighthouses where they proposed to build them. Previous to the Session of 1882, a petition was presented to the Minister from the county of Guysboro' asking that a lighthouse be built on Goose Island, an island opposite the harbor of Isaacs and Country Harbor. The petition was submitted to the agent at Halifax, who reported favorably. The lists presented to Parliament showed that a lighthouse was to be built at a cost of $2,000 on that island. It was not built in 1882 or 1883. I asked the Minister of Marine and Fisheries why, and he said it was the intention of the Government to build the lighthouse; but it was not built when the House met in 1884. Again, in the Session of 1884, I asked the question, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries explained the reason. He said the owners of the soil refused to sell at a reasonable rate, but it was the intention of the Government to expropriate as much as was necessary. The lighthouse, however, has not been built yet, and I would like to know whether the Government will again submit to Parliament a sum to build it. It is due to the people that it should be built; it is necessary, according to the report of the Government's own engineer, and it is due to the Government to carry out the promise they made in 1882.

Mr. VAIL. I want to bring a matter up in connection with the petition I represented to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. It is merely for a harbor light for the inhabitants of a cove in Digby. It is a long reef that puts out from the mouth of the harbor that vessels are liable to get upon, and it is simply a small affair, merely a lantern erected on the end of the wharf to guide vessels in. I hope the Minister will take that into consideration.

Maintaining buoys and beacons in the St. Lawrence River, below Montreal..... $7,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How comes this ? This appears to be an entirely new vote, and to be practically saddling the Dominion with a new charge of a considerable amount in præsenti, which may rise to larger proportions hereafter.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is mistaken. It is not a new vote. It has been voted every year since 1880 or 1881, being granted at that time for reasons which I have no doubt were good, and it has been the usual vote since that time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where is it charged in 1885-86 ?

Mr. FOSTER. In that year I think it was not voted, and the item will appear in the Supplementary Estimates.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who paid it ?

Mr. FOSTER. It was omitted by some mistake or error, and it will be remedied in the Supplementary Estimates this year.

Mr. GAULT. Who paid that sum last year ?

Mr. BOWELL. This is an item that has been assumed for some years.

Mr. VAIL. I should like to know, if this amount is paid for buoys in the River St. Lawrence, why an appropriation is not made for the Maritime Provinces. I know a number of rivers there where parties have been applying for buoys, and the answer has been that it is not the business of the Department to provide buoys.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend must know that buoys are placed all over the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. VAIL. I am speaking of buoys in rivers, to assist vessels in going through drawbridges.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course it depends on the nature of the river.

Mr. VAIL. If the nature of the river is such as to require a drawbridge, it is the duty of the Government to furnish buoys.

Mr. BOWELL. There are no drawbridges in this.

Mr. VAIL. There are in the Maritime Provinces, in the cases I refer to. If buoys are furnished in the St. Lawrence River, I do not see why they are not in the rivers of the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend must know that they are.

Mr. VAIL. I am glad to hear the Minister say so, because probably the same answer will not be returned to such applications in future.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not follow that every river should be buoyed, any more than that every place can have a lighthouse where one would be advantageous.

Mr. WELDON. How is it that the cost of the Montreal harbor is placed on the Dominion ? Every other harbor has to provide its own buoys.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not simply the port of Montreal, but the district of Montreal, which extends from the boundary of Quebec and Ontario down to Portneuf, nearly to Quebec, it is the whole of that river. When the change was made from the old Trinity House, and the Harbor Commissioners took over that service, a steamer was given them, and, on condition of that, they were to have charge of the buoys; but the steamer wore out or went to pieces, and representation was made that the Harbor Commissioners should not have the labor of buoying the whole River St. Lawrence from the Ontario boundary down to Quebec. That representation was favorably heard, I think in 1880, and since that time the Dominion Government has paid for the placing of buoys there, as they do in the St. John River and other rivers, at their own expense.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There appears to be some error about this $7,000. Not only does it not appear to have been voted in 1885-86, but it does not appear to have been paid in 1884-85.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is right. It was not paid in 1884-85, and was not voted in 1885-86, but it was not forgotten, and the demand, though delayed, has been made.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then it is quite a new departure, if for two years it was omitted from the Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. No; it was omitted from the Estimates only one year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand that it was placed in the Estimates in 1884-85, and not applied for ?

Mr. FOSTER. I believe it was—a most wonderful thing.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the member for Montreal (Mr. Gault) can explain.

Mr. GAULT. I cannot. I am surprised that the Harbor Commissioners were so slack in applying for this, because I presume it goes through their hands.

Observatories, Toronto, Kingston and Montreal.. $6,250 00

Mr. GAULT. The amount of $500 for the Montreal Observatory ought to be increased.

Mr. LANGELIER. I do not see anything for the observatory at Quebec.

Meteorological observatories, including instruments and cost of telegraphing weather warnings..... $50,000 00

Mr. WELDON. Are there any observations taken at Sackville now ?

Mr. FOSTER. I think so.

Mr. WELDON. Because two years ago there was a change made, by which a very efficient officer was removed from the position in St. John, and I doubt if a man equally efficient was put in his stead. The statement made by the Minister was that it was to save expense, but I see that the expense now is larger than it was in 1882. I see there is nothing for Sackville. It was stated that the observatory was taken from Fredericton to Sackville.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. WELDON. Is it still at Fredericton ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Committee rose and reported,

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1:35 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 19th May, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Bill (No. 8) respecting the Lennox Passage Bridge Company.

DUNNVILLE DAM AND BRIDGE TOLLS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 139) respecting tolls over the Dunnville Dam and Bridge connecting works constructed over the Grand River. He said: This work gives an annual revenue of $320. The Government think that the bridge might be made a free bridge without detriment to the public service.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

EXPLORATION OF HUDSON'S BAY AND STRAITS.

Mr. ROYAL asked, In sending the Alert to visit the Hudson's Straits last year, was it intended by the Government that the navigability of these waters should be tested by the said vessel, or was the Alert sent for the sole purpose of visiting the posts established along the coast of the Straits by the Government in 1884?

Mr. FOSTER. In sending the Alert to visit the Hudson's Straits last year it was intended by the Government that the navigability of these waters should be tested by that vessel, as that was the primary object of fitting out the expedition to the Hudson's Bay and Straits in 1884-85. The visiting of the posts established along the coasts of the straits by the expedition was a secondary matter altogether, and was not supposed to interfere with the primary object of the expedition in any way beyond a few days delay. A very important element of these expeditions was obtaining information relative to the temperature both in Hudson's Bay and Straits at certain seasons of the year, as this information has an essential bearing on the question as to whether the route could be utilised for commercial purposes, and the commander of the expedition considered it advisable to visit the stations of observation on his way into the bay, in case relief might have been required by any of the observers, who had been stationed there during the previous eleven months.

WORKS ON THE INTERCOLONIAL.

Mr. LESAGE asked, Under the order of what superintendent or employee of the Intercolonial Railway did Mr. James McGuire, of Quebec, construct a reservoir and lay pipes in the Intercolonial Railway station at Lévis? Who took over and inspected those works, and what was the cost?

Mr. THOMPSON. The reservoir and laying of pipes in the Intercolonial Railway station at Lévis were works done under the orders and superintendence of W. B. Mackenzie, assistant engineer. Mr. Mackenzie inspected and took over those works; the cost was $106.21.

Mr. LESAGE asked, On whose order did Mr. F. B. Atkinson repair the Intercolonial Railway wharf at Lévis? How many toise of stone were paid for, and at what rate per toise? Who inspected the work, and upon whose order was payment directed to be made?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Mr. THOMPSON. The contract was awarded to Atkinson, the lowest tenderer. Four hundred and thirty-six toise of stone were paid for, at the rate of $3.20 per toise. The work was inspected by Piton & Ritchie. The payment was made by order of Mr. Ritchie.

ADVANCES TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. DAVIES asked, Whether any application has been made by the Government of Prince Edward Island for any advance to that Province out of the capital amount standing to its credit, and upon which interest is now being paid? 2. Whether any application has been made by or on behalf of the Government of Prince Edward Island for any payment to that Province of the sum of $125,000 or any other sum beyond those already paid to that Province? 3. If any such application has been made, what is the nature of the claim, and is it the intention of the Government to accede to it in whole or in part? 4. Has the claim of the Island Government in respect to a refund for moneys expended on wharves and piers been finally settled, or is the same still standing open and unsettled?

Mr. McLELAN. To the first, second and third questions the answer is, no such applications have been made.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will answer the last question, although I answered it the other day. The Island Government made a claim, and in the first instance we admitted a portion of that claim to the amount of $54,000. Later on a second claim was made, of which we admitted $24,000 or $25,000.

APPEALS AGAINST FRENCH CANADIANS.

Mr. TASSE asked, La Patrie, of Montreal, having asserted, in its issue of 11th May, that the head of the Government, not long since, wrote a letter which was published in the Winnipeg Siftings, in which Sir John Macdonald made a contingent appeal to the faithful battalions of Winnipeg against the French Canadians, what is to be thought of that accusation?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot say what is to be thought of such an accusation.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think the question is not in order.

Mr. SPEAKER. That part of it beginning "what is to be thought," &c.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Besides that, it contains assertions which require to be proved.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know whether La Patrie of Montreal has asserted anything, because I have not seen La Patrie.

Mr. MACKENZIE. You do not study it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; I am not in the line of La Patrie. I do not know what is to be thought of this statement by other people, but I know it to be a falsehood.

COMPENSATION FOR LOSS OF REGISTERED LETTERS, &c.

Mr. EVERETT asked, Is it the intention of the Government to take into consideration the propriety of adopting for Canada an arrangement similar to that made by the British Post Office Department for granting "compensation for loss or damage of registered letters and packages?"

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This matter is receiving the consideration of the Government.

BADDECK, N.S., CUSTOM HOUSE.

Mr. KIRK asked, Who is the contractor for work being done in connection with Baddeck, N.S., custom house? Was the contract let by public or private tender, and what is the amount? How much did the site cost, and of whom was it purchased? How much has the work already cost?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The contractor's name is R. H. Hill. The contract was let by public tender, and the amount of the contract is $7,500. The site cost $1,133.35, including legal expenses, and it was purchased from Mr. A. T. Macdonald. The contract is being executed.

ESTUARY OF THE NATASKOWAN.

Mr. BÉCHARD (for Mr. LANGELIER) asked, What is the yearly rent paid to Government by the tenant of the estuary of the River Nataskowan? For what number of years does his lease run, and has he paid his rent regularly in advance each year?

Mr. FOSTER. The yearly rent is $650. The lease has yet four years to run. The rent has been regularly paid, with the exception of 1885.

JOHN MOODY.

Mr. LISTER asked, Whether John Moody, formerly an officer of the Government in the Fishery Department, is now in the employ of the Government, in that or any other Department? If so, what is the name of the office held by him? When was he appointed? What salary does he receive? How much has he been paid in each year since his first employment, in the way of salary or otherwise? If not now employed by the Government, when and why were his services dispensed with?

Mr. FOSTER. John Moody is now in the employ of the Government as Fishery Overseer, at a salary of $50 per year. His other disbursements, from 1880 to 1884, inclusive, have been, respectively, per annum, $4, $9, $15.50, $12 and $13.50.

MUTUAL LIFE ASSOCIATION OF CANADA.

Mr. HOLTON asked, Has the position of the cash deposit of the "Mutual Life Association of Canada" been changed by the Government? If so, in what sense?

Mr. McLELAN. It has been changed from municipal debenture bonds to a bank cash deposit.

EUGÈNE HAMOND.

Mr. BÉCHARD (for Mr. LANGELIER) asked, Whether Eugène Hamond, of St. Thomas, county of Montmagny, has been appointed to any Government office or employment? If so, to what office has he been appointed, when, and at what salary?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Eugène Hamond has been appointed to the office of Harbor Master at St. Thomas, at a salary not to exceed $200 per year of the fees collected. He was appointed by Order in Council, September 21st, 1885.

RELATIONS OF CATHOLICS TO POLITICAL PARTIES.

Mr. TASSÉ asked, Whether the Government has cognisance of a document addressed to the electors of Ontario, under date of 26th October, 1882, the which document, signed "Frank Smith and John O'Donohoe," contained, amongst other things, the following declaration:—

"There are two political parties in this country, one calling itself the Conservative or Liberal-Conservative, the other the Liberal or Reform party; each claiming the confidence of the country, each having a certain following among the people, each having certain traditions and a certain measure of support among the Catholic people.

"The undersigned, in common with large numbers of their Catholic fellow-countrymen, are in alliance with the Conservative or Liberal-Conservative party. They recognise in that party and in its policy the strongest claim on their support as citizens; and as Catholics, they declare that the history of the country will show that it is from this party only that the Catholic people have received fair representation in the Cabinet and in the Senate, a fair distribution of the public patronage, and a fair support at all times for Catholic candidates at the polls.

"On the other hand, they assert with confidence that the relations between the Liberal or Reform party and the Catholic people, have been most unsatisfactory to the latter. When the Reform party had power to use, and patronage to bestow, the Catholic people, even that portion of the Catholic people in direct alliance with them remained without representation of a proper character in the Government and the Senate; Catholic candidates were openly abandoned by the Liberals at the polls; and the public patronage was distributed without regard to their interests under a system of administration which practically recognised such interests as regarded the rest of the population. And for several years at an earlier period than this, the Catholic Church, its doctrines, ceremonies, religious orders, bishops, priests, and people, were the victims of the incessant and blasphemous vituperation of the recognised organs of the Liberal party; while in the press, in the Legislature and at the polls, the Conservative party acted in friendly accord with the support of the Catholic Church and people.

"The alliance between the two parties in Dominion and Provincial affairs is now complete; the Conservatives and Reformers of Ontario, are now in alliance with the Conservatives and Reformers of the Dominion. Each has made public profession of this union. And as Catholics the undersigned, in common with thousands of their fellow-Catholics, are desirous of legitimately giving their aid to their political friends in this Province, in the fullest confidence that their policy will be as just and their acts as generous as in Dominion affairs. Though the Conservative party in Ontario affairs have been for years in Opposition, there is nothing in the published speeches of their leaders or in their published resolutions adopted in convention with which as citizens they do not heartily concur, and nothing that as Catholics they are called on to disagree with. Our Separate School system owes much to the wisdom of the Conservative party. That party are supported in the Legislature by some of our fellow-Catholics. They have nominated several of our fellow-Catholics as their candidates, and when in power, they will be as faithful to their Catholic friends as the Catholic Conservatives have been to them." Is Mr. John O'Donohoe who signed the said document the gentleman who was made a member of the Senate?

Mr. MILLS. I object to this question. Here is a long statement of facts, on which the question is based, and of which we have no knowledge. We have no such document before us, and we do not know whether any such document was ever published or written or not; we cannot know in this House, under the circumstances, whether it is in existence or not; and I maintain that it is not in order for the hon. gentleman to base a question on a disputable statement of fact.

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule is:

"In both Houses questions are constantly put to Ministers of the Crown concerning measures pending in Parliament, or public affairs and matters of administration; and to particular members who have charge of a Bill, or who have given notices of motions, or are otherwise concerned in some business before the House. A question may be asked concerning the intentions of the Government, in any matters of legislation or administration, but not as to their abstract opinions upon general questions of policy."

I must say this is not a question affecting any Bill or matter before the House, nor does it refer to public affairs or matters of administration. I think it is not a question that should be asked—not unless the Government choose to answer it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can say I do not know whether the Government has cognisance or not——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—of the document referred to, but I do know that the Mr. John O'Donohoe who signed that document is the gentleman who is now a member of the Senate.

TIMBER DUES OF MR. HERMAN COOK.

Mr. TAYLOR asked, Was any sum, and if so, how much, due to the Government or the Indian Department by Mr. Herman Cook, as dues for timber cut on Indian lands in the Georgian Bay, during the years 1872-73? Did Mr. Cook pay such indebtedness? and if so, in what sums and at what dates? If Mr. Cook has not paid these dues, why not? Whether the said claim still remains unpaid or unsettled, and if not, when, and under what circumstances was any settlement thereof made, and what were the terms and conditions of any such settlement?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is the answer furnished by the Department:

"Mr. H. H. Cook, in 1870, acquired a timber license to cut pine and oak trees on the following islands in Georgian Bay: Christian, Hope, Beckwith, Giant's Tomb, and Beausoliel. In the season of 1872-73 he cut a quantity of pine on these islands, the dues on which amounted to $3,879.95; on October 1, 1873, he paid cash $2,079.95, and gave a bond for the balance, $1,800.00, bearing interest at 6 per cent. He was called upon several times to pay the bond and interest thereon, but failed to do so. In July, 1875, he wrote to the Superintendent General (Mr. Laird), asking for a renewal of the bond, owing to the dulness of the lumber trade. On the 7th July the order to renew the bond was given by Mr. Laird. On February 3rd, 1877, Mr. Cook wrote to the Department enclosing a statement showing that the men employed by him to measure the pine timber in 1872-73, had made an over-return of 927,017 feet, the dues on which amounted to $1,486.24. Nothing appears to have been done in the matter until 1st October, 1878, when the remission was made by Mr. Mills, of the above sum $1,486.24, and interest thereon, from the date of the bond, 1st October, 1873, five years, in accordance with a declaration of William Telfer, Mr. Cook's bookkeeper at Toronto. On the 2nd October, Mr. Cook paid to Mr. Mills the sum of $313.76, and interest, which, together with the amount remitted, made up the amount of bond $1,800."

THE HOME RULE RESOLUTION.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex) asked, On what day and at what hour was the resolution of this House on the Home Rule question communicated to Sir Charles Tupper, as the First Minister stated in the House it had been? Did the communication forwarded to Sir Charles Tupper contain the resolution of this House only, or did it contain any or all, and if any other than the resolution, which of the motions submitted on the question? Were the division lists or the votes in any or all of the divisions on the question forwarded, and if any were communicated, which?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think I stated the circumstances before. On the adjournment of the debate on the Home Rule resolution, I asked Mr. Johnson, who is Reuter's correspondent, to send the resolution at once to Reuter, so that it might be communicated to the press and otherwise. In the morning, I sent for Mr. Johnson, and found that he had not sent the whole resolution verbatim et literatim. Thereupon I made my secretary telegraph the whole resolution to Sir Charles Tupper, and instructed him to print it at once and send a copy of it to every member of the House of Commons. Besides sending the resolution itself under the Order of this House, I telegraphed to Sir Charles Tupper, for his own information, the whole of the proceedings.

IMPERFECT RETURN.

Mr. CASEY. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Militia to one or two returns and the absence of several others. In the first place, I moved:

"For a return of all horses, ponies, cattle, furs, waggons, carts and other property seized by the mounted police or expeditionary force while on service in the North-West between March 27th and August 1st, with the disposition made of the same, the names of persons from whom such seizures were made, and the amounts (if any) paid, received, or now payable or receivable on account of such property."

This is all the return contained:

"To Officer Commanding N. W. M. P., Battleford.

"CAMP FORT PITT, June 30th, 1885.

"It would be advisable to take in charge all the property of all those half-breeds now at Battleford who lately delivered themselves up from rebel camp until their innocence is proved, there being strong doubts on the loyalty of the whole of them.

(Signed) "FRED. MIDDLETON,
"M. General."

That is the only return I got to that Order, and I submit it is treating the House with disrespect to bring down a return of this kind in answer to the Ordor. This is not, and does not pretend to be, a return. My reason for asking the return was evident on the face of the Order. It has been constantly charged in the press and in private conversation that property was improperly seized by men of the force, and I hoped to be able to clear them of such a charge; but if the Minister of Militia will afford no means of clearing them, the fact will lie with him. Again, there were two or three returns moved for which are not brought down, and some of which are comparatively brief. I asked for a statement in gross, under certain heads, of the total expenditure, somewhat differently arranged from the way in which it is to be found in the Public Accounts. We have not had that return yet. Ten months after the close of the campaign, it ought to be possible to make up the accounts, and the obvious way of making them up would be the way I suggested.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman in his expression of opinion that the obvious way of making up the account was exactly the way he thinks is the proper one. I told the hon. gentleman, when he moved for the return, that the information he required it would take considerable time to prepare, and that I did not expect he would get it this Session.

Mr. CASEY. Oh, no.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I say, oh, yes.

Mr. CASEY. I appeal to Hansard.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I told the hon. gentleman we would have to go through every account so as to put the different items under the headings he required. I told him I would bring the return down as soon as possible, and I did not refuse to bring down any return. It simply could not be brought down in time; the officers of the Department said it would take a long time to prepare it, because every account handed over to the Auditor General would have to be gone through again, and every item placed under the heading required by the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman speaks of disrespect to the House. I brought down the return which was handed to me by the officers of the Department, and that return evidently indicates that no such seizure as the hon. gentleman referred to in his motion has been made. That is all. The General, as a precautionary measure, indicated it would be prudent to take charge of the property, as reported in that return, but it is quite evident no seizure was made.

Mr. CASEY. If the hon. Minister told me what he now says he did, I certainly did not hear him. My recollection still is that he told me he would be able to bring it down in a short time. I do not doubt his word, but his memory.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman told me, moreover, that if I brought down what I could he would be perfectly satisfied.

HOME RULE RESOLUTION.

Mr. MILLS. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of the House to a telegram sent to the London Times, at the instance of the First Minister, which, the House will see, does not fairly represent the proceedings of this House, which the telegram purports to represent. After the Order of the House that you, Sir, should be the medium of communication, it was scarcely respectful to the House, on the part of the First Minister, to give instructions to an outsider to send news of our proceedings to the English people, and that gentleman certainly sent a telegram which gave an erroneous impression of the facts, and his telegram was before the English public at least twenty-four hours before the actual facts were disclosed. The telegram purports to come from Philadelphia, and is in these words:

"In the Dominion House of Commons yesterday Mr. Blake's resolution in favor of Home Rule for Ireland was discussed. The debate resulted in the adoption, by 117 to 61 votes, of an amendment moved by Mr. Costigan, Minister of Inland Revenue declaring:

"That in view of the fact that Parliament addressed Her Majesty on this subject in 1882, receiving from the Earl of Kimberley a not altogether satisfactory response, this House earnestly hopes that such measures will be adopted by the Imperial Parliament as will, while preserving the integrity and well-being of the Empire and the rights and status of the minority, be satisfactory to the people of Ireland, and as will permanently remove the discontent so long unhappily prevailing in that country."

The word "status" is underlined, and underlined no doubt to show that the principal object of this Parliament, in passing the resolution, was to suggest a plan for the protection of the minority, and not with the view of urging the Imperial Government to grant Home Rule to Ireland.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Where is that dated?

Mr. MILLS. Philadelphia, 7th April.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In the absence of the First Minister, I may say that the House remembers well what the First Minister said when the question was put to him. He said that, immediately after the sitting of the House that night, he saw Reuter's agent, and asked him to telegraph the whole proceedings.

Mr. MILLS. This is the telegram.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The next morning, having ascertained that, instead of telegraphing the resolutions, he had only sent a synopsis of or resumé, the First Minister took care that all the resolutions before the House and the divisions should be cabled to the High Commissioner for Canada, with instructions to have them published immediately, and they were published in the Times. The High Commissioner was instructed also to have the resolution of the House printed and distributed to every member of the House of Commons.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may state that I conceived it to be my duty to communicate an attested copy of the resolution to the High Commissioner, with the request he would carry out the desire of the House as contained in that resolution.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Did you feel it incumbent on you to send the resolution passed by the House, or to send all the resolutions?

Mr. SPEAKER. No, I sent an attested copy of the resolution adopted by the House.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Which you understood was the wish of the House, and nothing more?

Mr. SPEAKER. I simply communicated that, and nothing more—an attested copy.

CHIGNECTO MARINE TRANSPORT RAILWAY.

Mr. THOMPSON moved concurrence in the amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 105) to amend the Act to provide for the granting of a subsidy to the Chignecto Marine Transport Railway Company. He said: It is simply a clause ratifying the contract which was made.

Mr. DAVIES. I could not hear a word of the hon. gentleman's explanation.

Mr. THOMPSON. The object of the Act was, as my hon. friend knows, to validate a contract which had been made by the Minister of Railways, in October last, with the company in charge of this work, and the clause does that explicitly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the hon. gentleman have the goodness to speak louder.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Senate has simply added a section declaring that that contract is confirmed, as the Act did in effect before.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Speaker order the amendment to be read, for I cannot catch, from what my hon. friend says, what the meaning of it is.

Mr. SPEAKER read the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. I must again protest against the passage of a measure of this kind, which involves this country to the extent of over $3,000,000. I am not going to take up the time of the House by discussing it again, but I protest against fixing upon this country, in order to give the promoters of this company facilities for inducing English capitalists or others to go into this enterprise, an amount of liability for which the country will get no benefit at all.

Motion agreed to, on a division, and amendments concurred in.

HALIFAX REFORMATORY FOR JUVENILE OFFENDERS.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 134) to amend an Act respecting a reformatory for certain juvenile offenders in the county of Halifax, in the Province of Nova Scotia.—(Mr. Thompson.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. WELDON. Is this a Dominion or a Provincial institution?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is a Dominion institution, that is, the powers are conferred by the Dominion authority. In Halifax, there are two industrial schools or reformatories, one for Protestant boys and the other for Roman Catholic boys. This is the latter, and the hon. Senator who introduced the Bill is, I think, himself one of the managers, or, at any rate, is largely interested in the management, and he informs me that since the establishment of this institution a considerable number of boys have been sent there who can safely be allowed, after a short time of instruction and confinement, to go at large, that depending upon good behavior, and he has suggested this method of applying what is known as the ticket-of-leave system to this institution. I have no personal acquaintance with the matter, but have been willing to give my consent to its being tried, especially as it is the strong wish of those who are concerned in the institution.

Mr. WELDON. It is not supported by Dominion funds?

Mr. THOMPSON. No.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

OFFENCES AGAINST THE PERSON.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 135) to amend an Act respecting offences against the person.—(Mr. Thompson.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It is a good sign of the times to find that, as the Session grows older, my hon. friend grows wiser. I introduced a Bill in the earlier part of the Session, making every accused person competent to give evidence in his own behalf. The hon. gentleman strongly opposed that Bill. He called upon his followers to vote it down, and they voted it down accordingly. Now he fathers a Bill which goes a great deal further than mine. He proposes to make the wife a competent witness, not for, but against, her husband. I have no objection to that proposal. It is necessary, if the law is to be carried out, under the decision in the case of the Queen vs. Bissell, in which it was held by the Superior Courts of Ontario that the wife was not a competent witness. That is practically doing away with the Statute altogether, and I am in favor of this Bill in that respect. But if the wife is made a competent witness against the husband, upon what principle can the hon. gentleman refuse to allow the husband to give evidence in his own behalf? To make the Bill perfect and just to both parties, the wife ought to be a competent witness against the husband, but the husband ought not to be excluded from giving evidence in his own behalf. If his mouth is closed, as it is under this law, his wife can enter the witness-box and tell her own story and get a conviction against her husband on one point. To make the Bill perfect, if the wife is a competent witness, the husband should be a competent witness. I suggest to the hon. Minister that he should add a provision that such accused person shall be a competent witness in his own behalf.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have no objection to the amendment, but I do not see that the hon. gentleman should object to my growing wiser as I grow older.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I do not object; I am glad of it.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman seems to have a singular notion, however, that, ever since the defeat of that Bill to allow criminals to give evidence in their own behalf, every Bill is one like that. Now, this is a Bill of a very different character. It is simply to render competent the wife to give evidence against the husband on a charge of desertion. In some of the Provinces it has been held that she is competent, but by a decision in an Ontario court, the one, I presume, to which the hon. gentleman referred, it has been decided that she was not competent in consequence of an old English decision based on the principle that she had an interest. However, I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The court in this case were divided in opinion.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

THE LAW RESPECTING THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. THOMPSON moved the second reading of Bill (No. 133) further to amend the law respecting the North-West Territories.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 4,

Mr. THOMPSON. Those were the laws that were in force there at the time the territories were acquired by England.

Mr. MILLS. I do not know as to the exact position of these territories. Of course, the Hudson Bay Company claimed to have jurisdiction over them, and did, as a matter of fact, exercise a kind of jurisdiction in the territories from 1820 to 1870, but whether the English law could be in force in the territories at that particular time, or whether it would be any other law, it would be difficult to say. In 1763, those territories were conquered by Canada, and were surrendered to the Crown of Great Britain by the Treaty of Paris. The French reserved all the territory that was west of the Mississippi as far north as the source of the river, but all the territories that were further north than the source of the Mississippi River and that were embraced in the Province of Canada, were ceded, and they are so marked on the map by the English and French commissioners in 1773, at the time the cession took place, as French territory. Now, while the English law, in so far as it is applicable to a new country, becomes the law of that country when it is acquired by discovery and is colonised by settlers from the Mother Country, that is not the rule where the territory is acquired by conquest, as this was. Besides, that rule only applies up to the time the territories were actually taken possession of, which would not be until 1870, and unless the law is brought into force by this Statute, it would not be in force of its own vigor in consequence of the occupation of settlers.

Mr. THOMPSON. I cannot agree with that view. I think the law was in force.

Mr. MILLS. Now?

Mr. THOMPSON. I think the English law does apply in case of conquest. The law of the conquering country prevails. That is of no consequence here, however. The intention is to bring in force the civil and criminal laws of England in respect to those matters on which the Parliament of Canada has not legislated, so as to bring in force there the common law, at any rate. I think that is the meaning and the interpretation.

Mr. MILLS. With respect to the introduction of the English law, it is laid down by the authorities, that in the ase of a conquered country, the law remains in force until it is superseded by the King. The King has power in himself for purposes of legislation as regards a conquered country; but his legislation and power of dealing with the country is superseded by the action of Parliament. If the Legislature should make concessions, then the King's power is gone altogether. The difficulty in dealing with this country arises as to whether the French law was in force in that country at the time the territory was acquired in 1766. There can be no doubt that the Governors of Canada from 1729 till 1759 exercised jurisdiction over the country. They issued licenses to various parties to trade there; they established a number of trading posts, and at the time Quebec was taken there were over fifty French soldiers in that country.

On section 14,

Mr. WELDON. I think it would be a great deal better to adopt the practice which is now in force in Ontario, or some of the other Provinces, instead of that which is in force in England, under wholly different circumstances.

Mr. THOMPSON. The object of this is not at all to introduce the English practice, but to provide for the powers of the court, and I thought it better to assimilate it in this respect to the sister court of Manitoba. However, the clause may stand.

Mr. MILLS. There is another matter which I think ought to be considered in connection with this question, and that is as to how far you will allow the court to exercise jurisdiction in cases of contempt out of court. There is no doubt the law on that subject is now obsolete, or should be so regarded, and, while it is necessary that a court should have power to punish for contempt committed in the court, I think it is wholly inconsistent with our modern notions to allow the court to exercise jurisdiction in cases of contempt out of court, where the party is practically deprived of the right of trial under the laws. In many of the American States that power has been greatly abridged. For instance, a member of the court may be severely criticised, and it may be the party has done a great injustice to the court, but, after all, why not let the court be vindicated the same as any other party, in accordance with the law of the land, instead of taking the law into its own hands?

Mr. THOMPSON. I think that in that respect this court should be put on the same footing as the courts of the other Provinces, as in course of time it will no doubt be fully as important as the other courts in respect of the volume of business, &c. I think, therefore, it should have as full powers to protect itself as the courts of the other Provinces.

On section 18,

Mr. MILLS. Is it intended to give the court jurisdiction to amend its own procedure and to make rules and regulations?

Mr. THOMPSON. The North-West Council at present have power to deal with that subject.

Mr. MILLS. The judges would be better qualified to deal with it.

Mr. THOMPSON. They practically do now. The North-West Council prescribe the procedure, and the judges sitting at that council are really left to deal with the matter. I do not see any objection to giving them power directly to do it.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I think it is an objectionable thing to allow judges to be members of the North-West Council.

On section 20,

Mr. MILLS. Is it intended to continue the appointment of sheriffs and clerks by the Governor in Council when the Territories have full representation?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is intended that the appointments shall be from here.

On section 22,

Mr. THOMPSON. I think the sheriff should be required to give security before entering upon his duties, and I move the following in place of this clause:—

Before entering on the duties of his office each of the sheriffs to be appointed under this Act shall give security by bond or by guarantee in some guarantee company, approved of by the Governor in Council, in the sum of $2,000, and the clerks shall each give like security in the sum of $1,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Would it not be better to limit it to a guarantee?

Mr. THOMPSON. It might be difficult in that country to get a guarantee, and I thought I had better allow the option.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 35,

Mr. DAVIES. Are the powers of the deputies defined, or is it necessary to define them?

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think it is necessary to define them. The Interpretation Act says that whatever may be done by an officer may be done by his deputy.

Committee rose and reported progress.

QUEBEC HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

House resolved itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions (page 1342) respecting the improvements of the harbor of Quebec.—(Mr. McLelan.)

(In the Committee.)

On resolution 1,

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This matter was explained the other day, but I will repeat the explanation. This work was undertaken, I think, in 1875, and the works were authorised by Order in Council at that period. The works have progressed since, and, as they progressed, the Government, with the sanction of Parliament, advanced the sums required to continue them. Last year I promised that I would have an examination made during the recess to see which would be the best mode of completing the docks and making the city side of the dock water tight, as required. This has been examined by Mr. Perley, the Chief Engineer of the Department, and Mr. Sandford Fleming. They have reported three schemes for the completion of that work on the city side. The first scheme would be to build a water-tight wall from the gas works, or the portion of the dock which is next to the gas works, by a street which is reserved in the concessions to the proprietors there, and to carry at the same time the sewer of the city, which empties into the harbor there, along the wall to the St. Lawrence. The objection to that scheme is that we would thus have to purchase property of large value where the small vessels, schooners and so on, come every season, and this would increase largely the expenditure that would be required for this work. We have, therefore, thought it would be better not to go in for that expense, because if we adopted this first scheme, as there would be only one entrance to the one dock, the small craft would have to be admitted at the same time and would be interfering constantly with the large vessels admitted to the dock. The Government have, therefore, thought that that plan should not be adopted. The second plan is to start from the same point near the gas works, and follow what is called the commissioners' line, which was fixed years ago, and come to what is called the cross-wall, where the lock is being built. By this means, we would still have to purchase property to a very great extent, because we would be interfering with the access to a number of these wharves, and therefore have to pay an indemnity to these parties. Thus the second scheme has also been put aside. The third scheme, which has been adopted and for which we ask money now, is that instead of following the commissioners' line, a wall should be built north of that line, in order to leave access to the wharves between the wall and the end of those wharves. Thus we would bring that wall from the gas works down to the cross-wall, but a portion of the cross-wall would remain open, for the purpose of giving a separate access to these wharves, without going through the lock, which will be the lock of the dock. Thus we would have hardly any property to purchase, we would have no damage to pay, and we would not have to interfere with the sewage of the city, which we would not divert at all, and thus we would be quite independent of those proprietors. Another reason is, that by building this wall, by the third scheme, we would have not only on the Louise Embankment side large berths for the ships that would visit the wet dock, but would also have alongside the other wall that we are now asking money for a large number of berths for vessels, thus doubling the capacity for wharfage purpose of the dock, without increasing the expense of the building of the work. These are about the works that have been decided upon in order to complete the dock.

Mr. LANGELIER. If I understand the explanations of the hon. Minister, the plan adopted by the Government consists in building the cross-wall which is now being built——

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is now under contract.

Mr. LANGELIER. Not up to Dalhousie street, but to stop at what is called the commissioners' line.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. LANGELIER. But what would be done with the portion of the cross-wall which is commenced? I understand that it has been commenced in a portion that is not now to be built.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That portion is not built, so there will be no work lost.

Mr. GAULT. I have no objection whatever to this money being voted for the harbor of Quebec, but, at the same time, I think it is about time the Government took into consideration the necessity of assuming the Lake St. Peter debt. The Lake St. Peter channel is as much a canal as any other canal in Canada, and I think the Government should take that into consideration.

Mr. CURRAN. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken has referred to a subject which has been a burning question for a considerable length of time. The people, not only of Montreal, but in various sections of the country, have taken it into consideration and have spoken favorably of the assumption by the Government of that particular debt. No doubt this is not a gift to the harbor of Quebec; it is a loan upon interest, but while we may expect, perhaps, at some future day, that the Government will take into their favorable consideration the application that has been made to them, and which has been supported by various Ministers, and successive Administrations, I think I may also ask the Government, now that the port of Quebec is being attended to, to take into their favorable consideration the city of Montreal, and the absolute necessity that exists for the construction of a bridge across the Lachine Canal, which will not involve a very great outlay. I have laid before the Government facts and figures which must convince any body of gentlemen who are desirous of doing fair play, of the absolute necessity of a bridge being constructed for the protection of life and property near the present Wellington Bridge over the Lachine Canal. I hope we will have some assurance from the Government that they will consider this matter, and that a sum will be put into the Supplementary Estimates to accomplish this work.

Mr. MITCHELL. I like the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), but he would be much more practical if he would propound a resolution, upon which a vote could be taken, than he is by making vague statements as to what he would desire if the Government would be pleased to do it. It is useless to talk about what we would desire; what we want is a proposition asking the Government to do what is right for the city of Montreal, and, if my hon. friend will make a motion embodying what he has said, I will be very happy to vote for it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to my hon. friend for Montreal Centre, I may say that to day I saw the Minister of Railways and Canals on the subject of the bridge in question, and he told me that he had given orders to study that subject in order to see how the complaints could be met. He has every desire, and there is every desire on the part of the Government, to do what we can in order to remedy the evil complained of. I know that bridge is frequented by a very large portion of the inhabitants of Montreal, by a large number of vehicles, along with foot passengers, and the surprise is that we have not to deplore loss of life every day at that point. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the Minister of Railways is desirous of coming to the relief of Montreal in that respect. I may say to the hon. gentleman who spoke last, that, if he continues to have the same confidence in us that he recently had, he will rely upon what we say when we tell him that our intention is to meet the wishes of Montreal as far as possible. We have never refused to any portion of the country, and especially to Montreal, any reasonable demand that was made. I may say that this is one of those reasonable demands that will be taken up by the Government with the intention of remedying the evil complained of.

Mr. MACKENZIE. As this matter is before the House, I would like to know the financial position of the Quebec Harbor Trust.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Trust, after paying the ordinary expenses of every kind for salaries, repairs to their property, &c., have left a sum sufficient to enable them to pay 4 per cent. interest and 1 per cent. of a sinking fund on about $750,000. That covers their debt, except the debt on these docks. Of course, we are hastening the completion of the docks in order that they may be ready to give a return, for we expect that the interest and sinking fund will be obtained, and more than that. We expect that these docks will be a paying work, and that as soon as they are completed we will have a revenue sufficient not only to pay the interest on the sinking fund, but to leave a surplus to the commission. Of course that depends altogether on the trade.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Do I understand that the interest is only paid on the old issue of bonds and not on the new?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, not on the new.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total debt at present, exclusive of this three-quarters of a million, without this present loan which you propose to give?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Including this present loan, it would be about $2,875,000.

Mr. DAVIES. That is $2,120,000 altogether, at the present time, is the existing debt?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am speaking of those works. The first amount that was advanced to the board was $1,200,000, and out of that they paid the debt of the commission at the time, of about $750,000. They pay interest on that and the sinking fund. Then other sums have been advanced to the commission since for these docks.

Mr. MITCHELL. How much?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. About a million dollars.

Mr. MITCHELL. I can only say that if the district of Montreal had so able a representative in the Cabinet as my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, I am sure the request would have been granted that has come so frequently from the city of Montreal, from the Harbor Trust, from the Board of Trade, from the Corn Exchange, and from public meetings, and their demands would not have been in vain, as they have been to a very large extent. I am not a representative of the city of Montreal, but I am a citizen of Montreal, and in that capacity I state here that the port of Montreal has not received that attention from the Government which its great importance demands, and if she only had a representative in the Cabinet who would do for her what the Minister of Public Works does for the district of Quebec, she would get what she is fairly entitled to.

Mr. GAULT. I am very much pleased that the Minister has taken up that question with regard to the bridge over the Lachine Canal. A great many people are constantly crossing that bridge.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think I have allowed that subject to be discussed as far as it ought to be.

Resolutions concurred in.

Mr. McLELAN introduced Bill (No. 140) respecting improvements of the harbor of Quebec.

Bill read the first time.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 141) further to amend the law of evidence in certain cases (from the Senate).—(Mr. Thompson.)

INSURANCE.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 111) respecting insurance.—(Mr. Thompson.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 4,

Mr. THOMPSON. A question has been suggested since the Committee on Banking and Commerce passed the Bill, which may be worthy of some consideration. The clause provides, among other things, that, excepting on conditions named, no company shall transact any business of life, fire or inland marine insurance in Canada. It has been suggested that the words are more stringent than they were intended to be, and that the prohibition of transacting any business of insurance might apply to a person such, for instance, as an inspector of a foreign company here for the purpose of making an inspection. Before the committee it was understood that no prohibition would be enacted against the Manufacturers' Insurance Company, on account of the particular circumstances of that company. It has been said that a prohibition against transacting any business of insurance might apply against an officer of that company who came here to make an inspection of property. That, of course, was not intended; I do not think it is the effect of the clause; but if it is thought to be the effect of the clause, I suggest that the words "carry on" be substituted for "transact."

Mr. MULOCK. I quite agree with the tenor of the remarks made by the Minister of Justice, but I am afraid he is going to defeat the object by adopting the words suggested. What is necessary to guard against is the transaction of insurance business as between the company and third parties. I am afraid if we use the words "carry on," more than merely taking risks would be necessary in order that this section should apply, as it was desired to apply to the case of receiving applications.

Mr. THOMPSON. This clause will certainly cover the case of brokers canvassing for applications in Canada.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Immigration Expenses $279,925

Mr. McMULLEN. What are supposed to be the duties of the agent at Ottawa? It appears to me singular that there should be an agent here at $1,300 a year.

Mr. CARLING. The agent at Ottawa is a most efficient man. A very large number of immigrants come here, just as they do to other agencies, and the Ottawa agent has the distribution of them throughout the whole Ottawa valley.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can easily understand the necessity of having agents and complete staffs at such points as Montreal and Quebec; but I think to pay $1,300 for an agent at Ottawa is extravagant. I do not think it is ever the case that a lot of immigrants come straight through to Ottawa, and seek to get the information here as to where they can get lands and where it is most desirable to settle. We might as well have an agent in the city of Hull. I admit that it might be well to have some person to give directions to parties who might enquire; but I would like to know how many immigrants this agent received last year, where they were distributed, and generally what amount of work he has done?

Mr. CARLING. It is impossible for me to give that information just now. This gentleman has been an agent here for a great many years; he was here when the hon. gentleman's friends were in power; and he is considered one of the most efficient agents in the service of the Government. A large number of immigrants do come straight through to Ottawa; I think it was only yesterday that a large number came here. I shall be glad to furnish the hon. gentleman with information as to the number of immigrants who came last year, and how they were distributed.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have no desire to express want of confidence in the efficiency of the agent. I have no doubt he is an efficient man.

Mr. CARLING. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the annual report, he will find the number of immigrants who came here, and how they were distributed.

Mr. McMULLEN. No doubt the report contains that information, but I think the Minister should be prepared to give it to us here. It is pretty difficult to read all those reports. I think we have had this Session quite enough answers of that kind. If we can do without this agent, I think we should cut him off.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Whatever may be the merits of the Ottawa agent, one thing is tolerably certain, that an enormous number of the immigrants who have been reported as having settled in Canada, have disappeared in a most unaccountable fashion. Year after year for the last nineteen years—I am bound to say under the Administration of which I was a member, as well as under this Administration—we have had statements that 20,000, 30,000, 50,000, 113,000, 120,000 immigrants have come to this country. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that our census returns show conclusively that of the immigrants reported by our officers and agents as having settled in Canada, not 25 per cent. can by any possibility have remained. That is perfectly clear, at any rate, as regards the two censuses of 1871 and 1881, and something must be very much amiss in the mode in which those returns are made. Looking back to 1867, and taking up the returns of the hon. gentleman's Department, we find that about 900,000 immigrants—I think the exact figures are 875,000—are stated to have settled in Canada during the last eighteen or nineteen years. I am not censuring the hon. gentleman's individual management, I am speaking of the whole subject of immigration; and it is perfectly absurd to suppose that any such number of immigrants have remained in Canada. It is a matter of grave doubt whether the total increase of our population during the nineteen years since Confederation has amounted to 900,000. It is undoubted that one of two things have occurred. Either these immigrants have merely passed through Canada, or they have displaced other people here. It is quite clear that these returns, setting forth that so many people have settled here, are entirely unreliable. It may be—I do not pretend to say it is not—the case that these immigrants have declared to the hon. gentleman's officers they intend to stop here, but we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that a vast proportion of them have not stayed here. That is quite demonstrable from the census returns as late as 1881, and the other returns, the various municipal returns, especially for Ontario, all go to show, in the strongest possible fashion, that the immigrants either do not stay in the country or thrust out Canadians to make place for them. Under either of these conditions it cannot be said we are doing a very sensible thing in spending the money we spend for the purpose of bringing immigrants to the country. The hon. gentleman, if he has studied the question, must be aware that, according to our municipal returns, the total increase in Ontario for the last four or five years renders it impossible to suppose that anything like the number of immigrants reported to have come in, can have settled here.

Committee rose, and it being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 79) respecting the Napanee, Tamworth and Quebec Railway Company.—(Mr. White, Hastings.)

Bill (No. 119) to incorporate the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway and Steamship Company.—(Mr. Royal.)

Bill (No. 87) to incorporate the Columbia Valley Railway Company.—(Mr. Tupper.)—[Title changed to "The Kootenay and Athabasca Railway Company."]

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

Mr. McMULLEN.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McMULLEN. I was remarking just before six o'clock, that I thought there was little or nothing to do in this office at Ottawa. I see that $3,217.08 was spent in the Ottawa immigration office last year for salaries and contingencies. I notice that all the agent has reported is some 1,200 that arrived here in that time. That is about $3 a head. I cannot see the necessity of continuing that office with the immense expense attached to it. Of course, the Minister of Agriculture is perhaps in a better position to judge what is necessary than any member of the House, but it appears to me quite absurd. Kingston, where there is an amount of $1,300 to be voted for the agent, is another point where there is considerable expense, $3,056.25 having been spent there last year for salaries and contingencies.

Mr. CARLING. There is no additional charge. It is the same as it was last year, and these agencies have to be kept up. The number of immigrants last year may have been less than in the previous year, but there is every probability that it will be larger this year.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that last year $2,956.25 was spent for salaries and contingencies in the Hamilton office, for which a vote of $1,250 is now asked for the agent. I really cannot see that much immigration business can be done in Hamilton. I can understand that in Toronto it is absolutely necessary that you should have an efficient staff, but I cannot understand why at Hamilton, which is so very close to Toronto, only 39 miles, we should have the additional expense of an agency. I admit that it is pretty hard to cut these things down, and that it would not be a very popular thing for any Minister of Agriculture to undertake, but it should be inaugurated, and I believe that anyone who would enter upon that matter would receive the thanks of this entire Dominion. There is a large amount of money spent in connection with immigration that is not at all necessary. We ought to reorganise the whole system, and we should begin by cutting off these useless agencies. Of course the agents all try to show that there is business done, because they expect, if they did not, they would lose their position. Even in Ottawa I notice there is an extended report. I dare say the agent has plenty of time to prepare it, probably half a year, for I do not think he works half a year. I do not see the necessity for an agent at Hamilton.

Mr. CARLING. A very large number of immigrants come by way of Suspension Bridge, and Hamilton is looked upon as a distributing station for western Ontario. We have immigration buildings there and a very good officer, and every attention is paid to immigrants who come by that particular route,

Mr. McMULLEN. I should like to ask——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, carried.

Mr. McMULLEN. We will get through all the sooner if you will keep quiet. You are not going to scare me—not a bit. I want to know if there is any assistance given to immigrants coming by way of New York? Do we get immigrants by way of New York, or is our assistance confined to those who come by the Atlantic to Quebec?

Mr. CARLING. No assistance whatever is given to immigrants coming by way of New York.

Mr. McMULLEN. How is it, then, that immigrants come in by way of Suspension Bridge?

Mr. CARLING. Immigrants that come by the Cunard and White Star lines to Canada come by way of Suspension Bridge. All the immigrants that come to the country are not assisted. Out of the 80,000 that came to this country last year, only 7,000 or 8,000 were assisted.

Mr. WILSON. On this item of $1,000 for London, I would ask what number of immigrants arrived there, and where are they distributed?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The CHAIRMAN. Order, order.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If order cannot be maintained, we will have to move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Hon. gentlemen are interrupting the business by their disorder.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to get some information as to the services this man in London performs during the year. I do not object to his being paid a reasonable amount, but I want to know whether he is doing enough for the amount he receives.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I move that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again. Unless hon. gentlemen can keep their own supporters in order while these Estimates are discussed, it is idle to go on.

Mr. MULOCK. I think that is a most proper motion to make; we are now granting supplies to Her Majesty, and there is no matter more important to the people than a proper disposition of the taxes they pay. We are bound to give the most serious consideration to every proposition involving the creation of taxes, and if this committee is not prepared to-night to give that consideration to these matters which they demand, then it is quite clear that we cannot go on.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have no doubt that the committee wishes to get on with the business, and proceed with the voting of supplies to Her Majesty, and, therefore, being convinced of that, as I have no doubt the hon. gentleman is, who has made the motion, I hope he will withdraw his motion and let us proceed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman will use his influence with his supporters to allow these items to be fairly discussed, I certainly will withdraw it; but it is absurd to suppose that we can go on with the discussion in the midst of cat-calls and all kinds of noises.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Withdraw.

The CHAIRMAN. I declare the motion lost.

Mr. WILSON. I think this motion should be put to the House.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is lost.

Mr. WILSON. I was on my feet before the motion was put. I desire to express my sentiments upon the motion, and I think I am in my right. We are perfectly prepared to go on with the Estimates, but I shall expect that the Minister leading the House will do his utmost to keep his supporters in order. I desire to ask the Minister where the immigrants arriving in London are distributed?

Mr. CARLING. I find by the report that 1,160 arrived at London, and they were distributed in the western part of Ontario. Mr. Smythe, the agent, gives great attention to strangers. When they arrive he takes care of them, and they are well pleased.

Mr. WILSON. Does the agent devote his whole attention to this part of the business?

Mr. CARLING. I believe he does.

Mr. WILSON. The Minister is not aware that he has any other business at all?

Mr. CARLING. No, I am not.

Mr. McMULLEN. Suppose these immigrants come in at Montreal, are they again reported when they get to London? Are they reported at any other point before they reach London?

Mr. CARLING. I think they are reported either at Hamilton or at Quebec, when they arrive. They are sent from Quebec. The agent at Quebec has information from different agents where immigrants are required, and he sends them to the different points.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). It was stated last year in reference to some of these local agents, that they acted as agents for the disposal of farms, and in that capacity they were making a good deal of money, and, in some cases, rather acting to the prejudice of those who were coming to the country. I have never heard this alleged with reference to the agent at London, but this is the only opportunity I have had, on account of the disorder of the committee, of calling the Minister's attention to the subject.

Mr. CARLING. I am not aware that any such charge was made against any particular agent, but there is no doubt that farmers, or parties who have land or farms for sale, give the number of the lots, and probably the price, to the agent, so that he can give the information to the immigrants who may desire to purchase. But I am not aware at the present moment of any charge having been made against an agent of receiving commissions, and I am not aware that any investigation has been made into any such case.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have known a case where an immigration agent has cut advertisements out of a paper of farms for sale and sent them to the parties who advertised, saying that if they chose to give him the sale of the farm he would undertake to sell it for a certain percentage, or for $25 or $50, so much being paid down. I know there has been such a case, but I do not know that the Government were aware of it. I saw one case myself where an agent had cut out an advertisement and sent it to the party who advertised the sale, saying he had opportunities of making sales, and for a certain sum he would try and procure a purchaser. It is desirable that immigration agents should give all the directions possible to immigrants or parties seeking to buy farms; but where an immigration agent uses his position to improve his own personal circumstances it is not well that the practice should be encouraged.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman should give the name of the agent. It is scarcely fair for the hon. member not to submit the name to the Minister in order that he may bring the agent to answer the charge. I can quite understand that any agent acting in that manner would not be doing what it is his duty to do and what he is paid for doing. If an agent is giving voluntary information to parties, it is all right; but if the hon. gentleman says that he has seen advertisements by immigration agents of farms to sell, then he ought to be candid enough to give the committee the names so that the Minister can make enquiries.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. member for Perth misunderstood me. What I said was, that an immigration agent had cut an advertisement out of a paper and sent it to the party advertising a farm, stating that, if a commission was given, he might possibly find a purchaser at a certain figure. He did not advertise himself as agent; but he cut out an advertisement and sent it to the party saying that he had good opportunities of selling property.

Mr. TROW. In regard to this question, it is an easy matter to name the agent. It is Mr. Donaldson of Toronto. We are aware that he does advertise very extensively. I do not know that he does very material injury either to the immigration Department or to immigrants. Men of limited means are thus informed where they can obtain homesteads in the older Provinces, particularly in Ontario.

The commission if he receives any, and I presume he does, is paid by the party who employs him. It is no particular injury to the immigrant, but is if anything a benefit because he gets information from Mr. Donaldson for which he does not pay, and the commission comes out of the pockets of the persons who sell the property.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It may be true in this particular case, but I doubt that it is a wise policy to allow an immigration agent to make profits from selling farms. It may be and very likely is the case in the instance of the particular agent alluded to by the hon. gentleman, that good rather than harm results; but the Minister will see that it is a practice very liable to abuse.

Mr. CARLING. I am informed that it is contrary to the instructions of the Department and is not done with their knowledge. It is not done by all or any of the agents with the approval or consent of the Government. The Government's attention having been called to it they will put a stop to it.

Mr. MULOCK. I am glad to hear the Minister so express himself. While in many instances it may be advantageous to the immigrant to get honest information from anyone, yet the Government runs the danger of compromising itself if its immigration agents are in a position where they can injure those whom they should protect. If an immigration agent is acting for the vendor of property, he, of course, has the interest of the vendor at heart, for it must be remembered that one party cannot be both buyer and seller. Immigrants who arrive here are unacquainted with the value of property; they are not in a position to decide for themselves; they cannot rely on their own judgment, and therefore they must rely on the agent who gives him advice. If in such a case as has been referred to the agent should make a mistake, either unintentionally or from corrupt motives, and the immigrant should be deceived, it would operate against the Government, which would be more or less compromised by that Act, although it was done without the Government's sanction or approval. I am therefore glad that the Minister has intimated that the Government oppose agents acting as middlemen, and I hope that if any practice of the kind referred to has sprung up the Department will take immediate steps to intimate to the agents that the practice must be for the future discontinued.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman give the committee any information of the state of immigration into the North-West up to the present time?

Mr. CARLING. I have no report, but the information we have shows that immigrants have gone in in large numbers, which is very gratifying indeed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the hon. gentleman mean by large numbers?

Mr. CARLING. Five car loads of immigrants have gone up in one train, and other trains have been in the same way filled, so that we have reason to believe that a very large number of immigrants have settled in the North-West this season. I know of fifty German immigrants who have gone to Regina and become settlers in that immediate neighborhood. From the reports we have of the agents of the steamship and railway companies we have reason to believe there will be a large immigration into the North-West this season.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would have supposed that the hon. gentleman would have received returns from that agency ere this.

Mr. CARLING. It is rather soon yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I saw a statement made recently that valuable immigrants from Hungary are expected. What information has the hon. gentleman on this subject. They have come in under the auspices of Count d'Esterhazy, a well-known family.

Mr. CARLING. I believe the Count has gone up to the North-West within the last few days and that he has fifty Hungarian families with him, and others are expected to follow.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What arrangements have been made with him? He has received, I think, a special grant of land.

Mr. CARLING. There is no special grant, but they will be placed on lands as contiguous as possible.

Mr. GAULT. I know the steamship agents expect a very large immigration. The steamship Parisian brought 600 steerage passengers on her last voyage. There must have been at least 2,500 passengers arrived this spring from Liverpool at the port of Montreal.

Mr. TROW. Is there any necessity for an agent at these various points in the North-West, Brandon, Qu'Appelle, Medicine Hat and so on. They are all on the line of railway, and, as a matter of necessity, all those who pass Brandon will have to proceed westward to Qu'Appelle and thence to Medicine Hat.

Mr. CARLING. I can only say to the hon. gentleman that the distances are great, and that we have now an application for an immigration agency at Regina, as a large number of German immigrants have arrived there and others are following. It is the policy of the Government to erect buildings at these different points for immigrants, so as to be able to give them proper attention, and of course we must supply officers to look after the buildings, to take care of the immigrants, to supply information and to see that they are placed on the land they are looking for.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see there are assistants and caretakers employed at Emerson, Winnipeg and Qu'Appelle. Are they employed all the year round?

Mr. CARLING. As we are trying to practice economy in the Department, we have appointed the assistant at Qu'Appelle as immigration agent at Calgary.

Mr. WATSON. Does the hon. gentleman intend to establish an agency on the Manitoba and North-Western? I believe a petition has been sent in asking for such an agency, and there is a large section of fine agricultural country there.

Mr. CARLING. The Government have decided to put up two buildings, one at Minnedosa and one at Birtle, and they are now under construction. The people of the municipalities have undertaken to take charge of the buildings and furnish the fuel, so that the Government are at no expense whatever beyond that incurred in erecting the building.

Mr. TROW. Would it not be a saving if efficient interpreters were made agents at these different points? If an interpreter is a man of business, why should he not also act as agent?

Mr. CARLING. At Winnipeg we have assistant interpreters and we have also had one at Qu'Appelle. If it is found necessary to have interpreters at these other points no doubt we will supply them, but we must be guided by circumstances. Immigrants come from different countries, Germans, Hungarians, Icelanders and so on, and every precaution is taken to have parties there who understand these various languages to give them necessary information.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). I desire to take this opportunity of again impressing on the Minister of Agriculture the desirability and the justice of increasing the salary of the immigration agent at Victoria, B.C., to at least $1,200. Although comparisons are odious, I notice that the agents at Brandon and Qu'Appelle get $1,400. Now, of my own knowledge, I am perfectly sure that the work performed in British Columbia by the Dominion immigration agent is equal to, if it does not exceed, that of either of those persons. I know that last year some slight increase was made for extra services performed in connection with the Colonial and Indian Exhibition. That, however, has now ceased, and the agent will get only $1,000 a year, the amount which he had previous to that addition. I have no doubt that the Minister is aware that the cost of living in British Columbia is far in excess of the eastern Provinces at least; and, inasmuch as in fixing the salaries for Emerson, Brandon, &c., the increased cost of living has been taken into consideration, I would impress on him the desirability of taking also into consideration the increased cost of living in British Columbia, and placing the agent there on the same footing as other agents in regard to salary. The sum of $1,200 would be the least salary which would be commensurate with the services rendered by that agent to the Department.

Mr. CARLING. The agent at Victoria is looked upon as a very good and a very deserving man. During the past year he has been employed collecting exhibits for the Colonial Exhibition, and the amount paid him for that extra work will bring his salary up to $1,200, not only for this year, but for next year. If we find that immigration increases, as we expect it will, I can only promise that Mr. Jessop's salary shall be favorably considered.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). The hon. gentleman promises consideration, but he does not promise increase. Consideration sometimes goes a long way.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What languages do the interpreters at Winnipeg, Brandon, Qu'Appelle and the North-West Territories speak? Do they all speak the same language, or do any of them speak more than one language?

Mr. CARLING. The interpreter at Winnipeg, I think, speaks three different languages—German, Scandinavian and Norwegian, in addition, of course, to English.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What of the other interpreters?

Mr. CARLING. There are none at Qu'Appelle or Brandon, but if it is necessary to have assistance there we will take care to have men who understand the languages required.

Mr. TROW. Does this item for salaries in the London, Eng., office include rent or books and periodicals?

Mr. CARLING. No, this is for the salaries for the staff only at the London office.

Mr. TROW. How many officials are there on the staff?

Mr. CARLING. There is Mr. Chipman, Mr. Dixon, Mr. Just, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Howard, Mr. Welland, Mr. Colmer, and Mr. Wilkinson, eight in all. They are all in the London office in Victoria street.

Mr. WILSON. What does Mr. Dixon do?

Mr. CARLING. He is one of the clerks of the office, and is a valuable clerk, I believe.

Mr. WILSON. I see that he is spoken of as the librarian. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can explain why a man at nearly $1,000 salary is required there as librarian?

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Dixon has charge of the papers and the archives, and does general work in the office.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that the expenses of the London office last year amounted to $12,767.12. The first item is for decorating, $2,593.93. I would like to know what that is for.

Mr. CARLING. I am unable to give an answer to the hon. gentleman, but I will enquire and give it on concurrence.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There are a number of men who seem to be acting in some capacity, in addition to those the Minister mentioned in connection with the London office.

Mr. CARLING. All the agents in Great Britain and Europe are paid through the London office.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In connection with the salaries of agents in Europe, I see that the Rev. A. Labelle was employed for five months and received $1,500. I thought that gentleman's services were rather in requisition here.

Mr. CARLING. Father Labelle was not an agent, but went on a special mission to France, and brought out a number of immigrants who were located in this section of the country. He is not now in the employment of the Government, but his visit is still having the effect of bringing a number of immigrants to settle in Lower Canada.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Where were they settled, and how many were they?

Mr. CARLING. I cannot give the hon. gentleman that information. I believe part of them settled in this section, and part of them in the North-West.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Was the Rev. Father Labelle acting in connection with the French delegation who were here last year?

Mr. CARLING. Yes. I think that was one of the results of his mission, to bring a number of influential men from France to visit this country.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is Mr. Lukes an agent yet?

Mr. CARLING. No, he is not now in the employment of the Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are Mr. Gaunce and Mr. Beaton still in the service of the Department?

Mr. CARLING. They are not now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What were they doing?

Mr. CARLING. I understand that Mr. Gaunce was an agent from New Brunswick who acted specially for six months.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The expenditure for salaries of agents in Europe was over $10,000 last year, and the hon. gentleman asks $7,300 for next year. In what way does he expect to achieve the reduction? What agents have we in Europe now?

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Dyke at Liverpool, Mr. Foy at Belfast, Mr. Grahame at Glasgow, Mr. Connolly at Dublin, Mr. Down at Bristol, and Mr. Hahn.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to the item of travelling expenses of agents in Europe, $7,300, the Minister's agents apparently act wholly in disregard of the direction to rest every seventh day, for they charge invariably for travelling on Sundays. Mr. Dyke charges $4 per day for 365 days, and Mr. Graham and Mr. Connolly and the others charge the same.

Mr. CARLING. He must live on Sundays as well as Saturdays.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He gets a salary for that. I do not understand how they can be travelling 365 days in the year. This is practically giving them salaries of $3,400 or $2,400, as the case may be. How do they come to occupy all these days in travelling? They must remain at headquarters a great portion of the time, particularly Mr. Dyke.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Dublin agent only gets $2 per day, and the agent at Belfast gets $4.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Home Rule will rectify that, I suppose.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It costs less apparently to stop at Dublin than at any other point.

Mr. CARLING. It is not confined to travelling expenses; it is an allowance made, and regular vouchers are rendered to the Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Department have put it in a lump sum for the whole 365 days. That is not at all a good plan. The hon. gentleman allows $1,460 in the Liverpool agency and in the others except Dublin. Out of that the agent will be probably disposed to save all he can, and not indulge in travelling to any extent. These gentlemen do not travel to any extent, particularly at the Liverpool agency. If this is only a way of increasing the salaries, the Department ought to demand from the House the salaries requisite and not increase them in this fashion. If this has any result, it will be to induce the agents to neglect their duty in travelling and stay at home.

Mr. CARLING. I understand this has to be accounted for and vouchers given for every item. It is limited to a certain amount of expenditure, and the agents have to give to the Department and the chief in London full particulars and vouchers before it is paid. It is not confined to travelling expenses, but also includes incidentals and office expenses. It is not an allowance making any addition to the salary of the agent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They were paid the exact full sum for every day. It must have been exceedingly excellent book-keeping on their part, if they spent exactly the $1,460. The hon. gentleman will find that this is practically an increase in salary. Mr. Dyke, for instance, I believe is an excellent officer, and I dare say so are some of the others, but this is not the way to remunerate them, and it is open to the serious objection that if it is in the interests of the service to travel, they are under the temptation to stay at home.

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Dyke is an excellent officer, and his charges have been found reasonable and moderate.

Mr. TROW. I am very well acquainted with Mr. Dyke, have met him frequently at his office, and have a very high opinion of him; but some of the articles paid for rather astonish me. There are "mounting heads of deer and bullocks." I wonder what advantage these are to immigration; I suppose they ornament the Department.

Mr. CARLING. I think it is for purchases made for the exhibition.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, it is put down under the head of travelling expenses. How does that come under the head of traveling expenses?

Mr. TROW. There is an item for a veterinary surgeon of $51.10. What did they require a veterinary surgeon for?

Mr. CARLING. I cannot give the full particulars at present, but shall be very glad to ascertain and give the information.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Dyke has been successful in the way of securing travelling expenses on Sunday and every other day, but you have a man in Glasgow who beats him. He charges $4 travelling expenses every day in the year, and in addition he charges travelling expenses attending shows $84.80.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend is not just to Mr Dyke, because he charges $206.22 for travelling expenses in addition to his travelling allowance.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It seems to me these travelling expenses have the appearance of being supplements to salaries. The Minister says the Department have the details, but I think he will find they are details respecting other matters. In almost all the accounts, travelling expenses are charged in addition to this allowance of $4 a day. As my hon. friend has said, Mr. Dyke has charged, in addition to his allowance of $4 per day for travelling, $206.22 for travelling expenses. Mr. Grahame charges $84.80 additional. Take the Dublin agency also, there the allowance for travelling is $2 a day, which makes it significant as being a supplementary salary more than anything else, because it is just half the amount allowed to other agents, and that same gentleman has besides a bill for travelling expenses of $332.23. The allowance must be, therefore, a supplementary salary. It would be better if this be the case, that the salaries should be put down in full. Mr. Lukes has a travelling allowance for 10 weeks at $9.75 a week, which is a long way short of $4 a day or even $2 a day, that would seem to indicate he was able to travel 10 weeks at $1.50 a day; perhaps he was not travelling all the time. The next special agent, Mr. Gaunce, has a travelling allowance of 212 days at $1 a day, his ocean passage besides is accounted for at $80, and there is $250 not accounted for. We ought to know something of the value we receive at the hands of this gentleman for this expense. Mr. Lukes, the Rev. Mr. Labelle and Mr. Beaton, who are all special agents, have cost us a large sum of money.

Mr. CARLING. I think this item, as entered in the book, is misleading, and that the amount is not for travelling expenses, but for office expenses.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to Mr. Dyke?

Mr. CARLING. I am speaking of the Dublin office just mentioned. It is really an expenditure in connection with the office.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No, the Minister is wrong. Take the case of Mr. Grahame, you find rent of office, $316.33; taxes, $47.79; office cleaning, $44.90; coal, $7.02; and a lot of other matters outside, so that it cannot be that.

Mr. CARLING. I was speaking about the Dublin office.

Mr. TROW. Why is the discrepancy between the various agents so large in the cost of distributing pamphlets? Mr. Dyke, who has probably the most successful agency in Europe, has $2.43 for distributing pamphlets, and Mr. Grahame, in Glasgow, $4.87, while the Dublin agency has $123 for the same purpose.

Mr. CARLING. There is no allowance for this work, and I suppose the payment will be for the service, whatever it was.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think my hon. friend means to point out that these expenditures are covered up under different headings. You have $4.87 for distributing pamphlets in Glasgow and $123 in another agency. I presume my friend does not think there would be that much difference in the work, but the expenditure must be put down under different heads. The explanation of the Minister with reference to travelling allowances does not hold good, that it includes office rent and other matters in these different agencies. If he will look through the account, he will see that at Belfast, for instance, there is $211.70 for office rent; taxes, $31.63; cleaning office, $58.40; gas, $27.75; coal, $24.33. And so in the Glasgow agency and the Liverpool agency. I think he ought to be able to say what this travelling allowance at $4 a day is expended on, what it is for, for it appears to be nothing more or less than a supplement to the salary of the official, because all other items are entered besides. If it be really a fact that it is merely a supplement to salary so fixed, and it bears that impression, being $4 a day for the whole 365 days, the contention is that it would be better to increase the salary by that amount.

Mr. CARLING. I understand that this money is for office expenses, and in some places for office rent. It is not at all given as an additional salary in any way whatever. All the accounts are rendered to the chief office in London and sent to the office here with vouchers. It is not allowed at all for travelling expenses but for expenses in regard to which full information is given.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How could the Auditor General put in the matter of rent under the head of travelling allowance? He could not do that. Take the case of Mr. Dyke. Here is an item of $909.18 for rent. That shows that the Auditor General recognised the fact that rent was paid, and he puts it under its proper head. If there was any additional rent, he would put it under the same head, and not as a travelling allowance at $4 a day.

Mr. CARLING. I do not know how the report of the Auditor General is made up, but, as far as the Department is concerned, it is as I have said, and every voucher for everything that is expended is given. The agent gets no allowance whatever in addition to salary.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does not this strike the Minister—here are five or six agencies with travelling allowances at $4 a day for 365 days; if that be for contingencies of different amounts, is it not a remarkable thing that in each case they have spent to the very cent, neither more nor less, exactly $4 for each of 365 days? And yet, it is made up of a whole lot of different items. How that can be brought about is a remarkable coincidence.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I have no doubt the money has been expended, but it seems to me that the process of entering it is misleading, so far as we are concerned. We find that the agent at Bristol is not down for any travelling expenses, but he has a most extraordinary bill for postage, amounting last year to $1,753, while the postage bill at the main agency at Liverpool, where all parties agree that one of our most active and energetic agents is placed, is only $684. I think it is plain on the face of it that there is something here that requires explanation. Judging by the statement of the Minister, these expenditures must have been made in every possible way, except in the way they appear upon the face of this page.

Mr. CARLING. Bristol was specially made a distributing point, and a large amount of printed matter was specially sent to that branch for distribution.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). To what point?

Mr. CARLING. To all points in the different counties surrounding that particular locality. I cannot give the different counties. Printed matter to a very great extent, farmers' reports, immigration pamphlets, and documents of all kinds, were sent there to be distributed in that particular section.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). What made me notice the postage account at Liverpool as compared with Bristol is that I find Mr. Dyke, of Liverpool, mentions in his report the large amount of business that has to be done there in the way of supplying information to parties, that being not only the chief point of departure for immigrants from Great Britain, but from other connections. In one respect this seems to fail to give us information on a side very interesting to this House to know about, that is, in what respect and upon what side the expenditure is reached, or where it is accounted for in these reports, that is spent on the continent of Europe for the purpose of reaching a very desirable class of immigrants from the central Provinces of Germany and Austria. We have been laboring for years to establish a nucleus from these countries with the hope that those parties would draw additional immigrants to us, but, when we turn to the reports of the immigration from Germany for instance, which has been the large recruiting ground of the American States for many years and produces a very desirable class of immigrants, we find that year by year the number of our immigrants from that country is steadily shrinking. Last year it seems to have been about half what it was the year before, and that is only an example of the progress backwards which has been going on for several years. In looking down the travelling expenses and other working expenditures of our agents, I look in vain for anything which indicates an expenditure in any way to reach those classes. Now I am aware that there is a difficulty in reaching them by sending agents to spread information, because I remember at an early day the Government arrested our agents and put them in prison. But at the same time we are charged in the lump with considerable expense for this purpose. There are one or two agents who figure upon our permanent list, and I think it would be interesting to this House to know where the expenditure goes that is charged to us and that we are laying out to get immigrants from central Europe and Scandinavia. So far as Great Britain and Ireland are concerned, I think, from the amount of immigration literature that we have paid for for many years past, surely that portion of the country must be pretty well supplied with immigration literature. The amount we have paid for year after year for that purpose, it seems to me, must have brought information to the reach of nearly everybody that was at all accessible. I do think that unless our immigration expenditure is going to be simply a waste of money, our reports of expenditure ought to be in some way re-organised so as to show where the money has gone, instead of having them blanketed under travelling allowance, and postage accounts, and these various statements which, to say the least, seem to have an extraordinary similarity to each other, and do not indicate an ordinary expenditure.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Minister asks for $7,300 to cover this item, and he asked for the same amount last year. Now, the expenditure was $17,565. It is true he told us that he had no special agents just then, but that he might have during the year. But if I take out the special agents—he had then Mr. Beaton, Rev. A. Labelle and Mr. Lukes—to whom he paid about $2,000, it would still leave the travelling expenses of the agents representing the Dominion at Liverpool, Glasgow, Dublin, Belfast and Bristol, and there would be over $15,000 then expended. Now we have all these agents; these amounts were expended before, and now the Minister asks for only $7,300. There is no use asking for a smaller amount when we expended this large amount last year. This discrepancy would seem to point in the direction that there has been an over expenditure; that there has been—I will not say a waste of money, but we will be forced to say that money is wasted unless the Minister can point to some results. Then I call attention to this fact, that while we have these travelling expenses of agents in Europe, we have items covered up in one way or another so that it is impossible to distinguish them. We have an expense made by the London immigration office; and there again comes in a confusion of accounts with this same Mr. Dyke, who is down here for a travelling allowance of $4 per day for every day in the year, including Sundays, with travelling expenses of $206, besides all the other items. He figures through the London agency also; he figures there for the Royal Show of Shrewsbury for $889.15. He figures in another place under the head of travelling expenses, and is paid through the London agency $315.07. These items I have found, others may have escaped my eye. But the Minister will see that the expenditure of money is made through so many different channels, and is entered up in such a way, that it seems difficult to track up the expenditure. There is an actual expenditure among our permanent agents there of double the amount of the estimate the Minister asked for last year, which would seem to confirm the idea that there must be a waste of our money in some regard.

Mr. CARLING. The chief cause of that expenditure to Mr. Dyke was for fitting up the show of the Royal Society at Shrewsbury.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Why was it paid through the London agency, and does not appear in his own Department?

Mr. CARLING. I suppose because it was ordered by the High Commissioner and paid through his office.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. However, that does not answer the point as to the apparent inadequacy of the provision made. Now there is no use in bringing down haphazard estimates to the House. Here we find $7,300 are asked for travelling expenses of agents in Europe. We find that Mr. Dyke, the most of whose expenses appear to be of a permanent character, spent $5,600; that Mr. Grahame spent $3,000; Mr. Connolly spent $2,497; Mr. Foy $2,298. All these appear to be of a class which will be permanent, if this travelling allowance continues. Now, how can the hon. gentleman expect to meet those expenditures out of $7,300? Why, the travelling allowances alone nearly equal the $7,000.

Mr. CARLING. The expenditures I have given are in the Auditor's report as actual travelling and medical expenses.

Contingencies of Canadian and other agencies (not European)..... $30,000 00

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice these contingencies are distributed through several offices. In Quebec, last year, there was $4,499; in Montreal, $2,485; in Ottawa, $1,365; in Toronto, $2,352. Is there any detailed account at all, or what system of checking over those expenses is adopted?

Mr. CARLING. I can only say that these agents render detailed accounts to the Department, with vouchers for every cent that is expended.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This item is a very close approximate to the expenditure. The Minister asks for $30,000, and there was expended last year $29,800. That is in marked contrast with the discrepancy in the last item we discussed. It does appear competent for him to approximate his expenses.

Mr. CARLING. I will give the hon. gentleman the item. This vote comprises fuel, light, labor, general office expenses, telegrams, aid to immigrants, postage, stationery, travelling, agency business, and ordinary wear and tear.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is a great pity some system of checking those expenses could not be found. We may have honest men in some places, but where men are disposed to take advantage of their position to improve their own means to the detriment of the public, it is well to have some system adopted by which we could thoroughly check these expenses. When so large an amount of money is expended, it is desirable we should know that it goes to a proper purpose.

Mr. CARLING. We trust them as honest men, and tell them to give us a return of every item of expenditure, with vouchers. We cannot do any more.

Mr. McMULLEN. What about this item of $1,000 for the Montreal Women's Protection Immigration Society?

Mr. CARLING. That is a grant which has been given for a number of years to the Ladies' Protective Society of Montreal, which renders valuable service to women who come out to this country. It takes charge of women who arrive in the country and keeps them until they get situations and then places them in such positions. There is a large, expenditure by those ladies in addition to this grant.

Mr. BAIN. Do they report to the Department from year to year?

Mr. CARLING. Yes; they send reports of the expenditure.

Mr. GAULT. I know all about this association. It is composed of the very first ladies in Montreal. There are about twenty ladies who find out places for women who come into the country. The ladies endeavor to protect the women as far as possible. They have a Home in Montreal, for which they pay $500 a year, and they have a man at the railway station constantly to meet immigrants and invite the women to the Home. No less than 290 passed through the Home last year. If all the money of the Government is spent as advantageously as is this annual grant, it will indeed be advantageously spent. The ladies have taken a very deep interest in the work, and labor night and day in connection with it. I wish similar institutions were formed in Toronto and other places, and they would be found productive of much good.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a very excellent grant. There is no objection to it. With respect to the general item of $200,000 for immigration expenses, I should like to ask the Minister some questions. In the first place, a very large expenditure has taken place in connection with various newspapers, for instance the London Free Press, the Mail job office and the Montreal Gazette. Were tenders invited for the work given to those offices?

Mr. CARLING. The work done in those offices was done according to a tariff prepared by the Queen's Printer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But was there any tender asked?

Mr. CARLING. No; but a price is fixed by the Queen's Printer for all this kind of printing—a fair, commercial price, which is considered so low that some of the printers, who desired to obtain work, refused to accept those prices. I am told by persons of experience that offices could not take printing at those prices, were it not for the purpose of keeping their men employed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is very philanthropical for those various newspapers, especially the Free Press and Montreal Gazette to take printing at a bare living price, or at a loss, as the hon. gentleman would give us to understand.

Mr. CARLING. With respect to the Free Press, nearly all the money was for lithographing, not for printing.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am strongly of the opinion that the great bulk of this grant is utterly wasted. I am strongly of the opinion that the time has long passed during which we were rendering any service to the country by paying large sums for assisted passages; and I am still more strongly of the opinion that we are not only doing no good to the country, but we are doing positive mischief by subsidising the organs of hon. gentlemen opposite, the Free Press, the Mail job office, the Montreal Gazette and all those worthies out of the sum granted for Dominion immigration. Every year for the last three or four years very large sums ranging from $60,000 to $100,000 have been divided among some half dozen of those newspapers, and I am inclined to think that if the work could be tested it would be found that for 100,000 copies of those articles circulated we do not get one valuable immigrant. We have been examining those publications, and I am bound to say with respect to some of these productions that more utterly trashy articles I never saw. I do not see any charge here or such productions as that of the Rev. Mr. Bray, and I think that probably the discussion in the Public Accounts Committee has rendered the Government indisposed to circulate photographs of themselves, with their biographies, at a cost of $5,000 or $10,000 under the head of immigration literature. In the case of the Minister of Agriculture, I am bound to say that I think he would have personal grounds for objecting if no better photograph of himself was circulated than those which were circulated of his colleagues. With respect to some of those other productions. Here we have 69,000 pamphlets on the North-West, for which we have to pay $3,450. Then we have 100,000, for which we have to pay $5,500; and we have 20,000 "Homes in Canada," at $1,000. The time has come when these productions might, to a very great extent, be discontinued. I doubt exceedingly whether the hon. gentleman is going to render any service whatever by circulating a vast quantity of this description of literature. It appears to me the thing has become simply and solely a means of subsidising certain organs. If the hon. gentleman was giving all this work out by tender, we would have some reasonable guarantee that the work, if it must be done, would be done on reasonable terms; but we all know what it means when certain rates are fixed, when what is called a fair commercial profit is allowed. We all know that half a dozen firms get the work. The Montreal Gazette printed 200,000 British Columbia pamphlets. I doubt exceedingly, unless they were published in Chinese, whether the people of British Columbia have derived any real benefit from the distribution of those 200,000 pamphlets. I should like very much to know where they were sent, or what was done with them. We find that $5,446 was paid for British Columbia pamphlets, and immediately afterwards there is an item of $862 for 40,000 more. It is absurd to say, that by giving all those sums to newspapers for printing, we are going to bring in valuable immigrants. The hon. gentleman has not been long at the head of the Department, but he must know that we get nothing from them. In our various towns and cities complaints are rife, and they come to the knowledge of every one of us who pay any attention to the movements of immigrants, that immigrants are being lured here by rose-colored statements, intimating that all an emigrant has to do is to come to Canada, and there will be competition to employ him at $2, $3 or $4 per day. If we were wise we would put a stop to three-fourths if not nine-tenths of all the expenditure for which the hon. gentleman is now asking a vote.

Mr. CARLING. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will mention one particular pamphlet of that kind. I am not aware of any such documents having been printed by the Department, and, in fact, I am very particular, as my predecessor was, that no publications should go out by the authority of the Department without reliable and truthful information. I think it is hardly fair to charge the papers with jobbery in receiving contracts for printing——

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They do not receive contracts; they get jobs.

Mr. MILLS. They are subsidised.

Mr. CARLING. I do not think so, because the same course was pursued when hon. gentlemen were in power. Any printing that was given was given to their friends; and if friends of the Government do the printing at low prices, at fair commercial prices, they cannot be charged with jobbery, nor can the Government be charged with doing what is unfair or unreasonable. I must say to the hon. gentlemen that the printed matter we prepare is distributed all over Europe, as well as in the United States, and we find from steamboat agents and immigration agents that there is a great demand for information with regard to the Dominion of Canada, and more especially since we have built a railway across the continent and have a vast belt of fertile country opened up for settlement. The people who read of what we have done in that way are anxious to know what inducements are offered to immigrants, and we are careful in preparing such information with regard to the North-West and the resources of Canada as can be relied upon as truthful and accurate. If the hon. gentleman will be kind enough to point out any particular pamphlet which gives inaccurate information with regard to the inducements offered to immigrants and the resources of the country, I shall be glad to receive that information, and no one will be more anxious than I am to put down anything of the kind. I differ from the hon. gentleman as to the large expenditure of money for immigration. We have a large country, as large as that of the United States; our country has been opened up by railways, and we do not want to stand still and leave the land lying there waste without offering some inducements to people to settle upon it. I think that this House and the country will justify the Government in doing everything that is in their power to show to people intending to settle in some new country the great advantages that are to be found in Canada. I do not think the people of this country will grudge any expenditure made in that direction, as long as that expenditure is honestly made; and I believe it is honestly made. So far as I am aware, and so far as the Government are aware of this expenditure, I am sure it is made properly, honestly, and to the best advantage. If it is not so made, we are only too glad to have our attention called to any mistake, or to anything that is improperly done.

Mr. MILLS. I am rather astonished at the observations made by the hon. gentleman who tries to defend this large expenditure on the newspapers of the Government—because after all there is no attempt by the Government to get this printing done in a business kind of way; there is no attempt to get the pamphlets and other work printed at the Government printing office. It is distributed amongst the organs of the Government in the various parts of the country, and it is well for the House to carefully consider what the Government have been doing in this matter. Sir, this expenditure is not an expenditure for the purpose of promoting immigration; but immigration is made a pretext for distributing a certain portion of the public funds amongst certain organs which are supporting the Administration. That is the position of things. The hon. gentleman speaks about the large extent of territory there is in the North-West. There is a large extent of territory there. There is a territory fit for settlement, but has the hon. gentleman or his predecessor in office succeeded in securing the settlement of that country? Why, Sir, according to the reports they have brought down there should have been 150,000 people beyond the limits of Manitoba in the North-West Territory; while, Sir, the returns show that there are only 23,000. The hon. gentleman in securing 23,000 people during the past eight years makes that result a justification for this extraordinary expenditure upon the organs of the Government in every part of this Dominion. Where are those people who are anxious to know about the North-West Territory? Where are those people in Europe, the British Islands and the United States, who are anxious to know about the North-West Territory? If they are so anxious, how is it that the hon. gentleman, notwithstanding this distribution of pamphlets, notwithstanding that he has printed 200,000 pamphlets relating to British Columbia alone, in the Gazette office, has not secured any portion of those people. Sir, the hon. gentleman knows he has not secured them. He knows that the Allan Line carried back from the North-West to Liverpool, last year, a larger number than they carried out from Liverpool for the North-West; and the hon. gentleman was told by an official that the statements made by these people on their return to England, their complaints against the Government and the treatment they received, was doing infinite damage to the cause of immigration to Canada and the North-West Territory. Sir, it is not long since that there was a pamphlet prepared by a gentleman who, I believe, was some time on the Winnipeg Free Press. He has been occasionally employed by the Departments here; he is, I think, at the present time in Toronto—a Mr. Allen. Now, Mr. Allen, published a hand-book relating to the North-West, giving a description of the country—a sort of guide to the North-West. Well, Sir, Mr. Allen has been attempting to establish a newspaper in the interests of hon. gentlemen lately; he has been around seeking subscriptions at the hands of hon. gentlemen. He did not raise the amount required for this enterprise and what does he do? The Minister of Interior, perhaps, can tell what negotiations have been carried on at his instance to know how much Mr. Allen would take for that pamphlet, in order that the Government may obtain the right of publication from him. What is the object of that? Is that for the purpose of promoting immigration? Is it for the purpose of furnishing the people with a guide to enable them to know what is best to do in going to the North-West. No, Sir, it is on a piece with everything else done lately connected with the administration of public affairs. It is an attempt to fly a kite in the interests of the Government; to get up an illustrated paper that Mr. Allen proposes to publish. His friends did not find that they were altogether able to put the scheme afloat, so it is proposed to buy Mr. Allen's interest in this particular publication and to pay Mr. Allen for it, in order that he may obtain in this roundabout way the funds from the public Treasury which the party did not feel itself able to give him for this purpose just now. It is in that way that the Montreal Gazette, the Hamilton Spectator and the London Free Press have been supported for some time back. Now, I have no objection to hon. gentlemen putting their hands in their own pockets if they wish to promote the interests of their own party and sustain themselves in the places they now occupy; but I decline altogether that they shall put their hands into the public Treasury and take money out of it to distribute among their friends to maintain these organs in their own interest. Here is the London Free Press, which is published for $6 a year, but when an election is at hand the agent is sent out and the paper is offered for $3 a year, less than the cost of publication. How, is that done? Because hon. gentlemen have taken $10,000 out of the public Treasury and given it to the publisher of that paper for pamphlets to promote immigration to the North-West which it never received. I think it is time that this system should come to an end. I think it is time that the people of this country should know how they are being fleeced for the purpose of sustaining hon. gentlemen opposite in their present positions. It is time that this system of jobbery and robbery should come to an end, and the people of Canada should not be burdened with an expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars a year, as they are burdened, for the purpose of maintaining those hon. gentlemen in power. Immigration to the North West! Why, nearly all the immigration that went to the North-West has been driven out of the country and across the border.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MILLS. Yes. I have a statement here from the Rev. Mr. Turner, who went to the North-West, and tried in vain to settle there, and afterwards crossed to Dakota. He was employed for the purpose of procuring an enumeration of the county in which he resides, and he found out of 1,235 settlers 1,223 were Canadians who were driven across the border by the system of hon. gentlemen opposite. You tax the people of the North-West for their agricultural implements and for everything they consume, and for what purpose? Why, to find money for the purpose of subsidising these organs of the Government, which profess to be organs of public opinion, but which are the organs of a venal system such as is to be found in no other country in the world where representative government prevails.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I should imagine that the hon. gentleman would have been a little more modest in his attacks on this Government for what he calls corruption, after the statement of the hon. First Minister, in answer to a question this afternoon, in relation to a case in which the hon. gentleman deliberately gave $1,400 of the public funds to a friend of his after the Government of which he is a member had been defeated at the polls, and he had no longer any right to deal with the public funds.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is that statement correct?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The fact is that this Government have paid an average of 33 per cent. less for printing outside of the regular contract than the Government of hon. gentlemen opposite. That matter has been discussed several times, and there is no necessity of further discussing it. I rise for the purpose of pointing out what seems to me to be important. The hon. gentleman says the policy of this Government has been to drive settlers from Manitoba into Dakota. Now, I have in my hand an article from the Winnipeg Free Press, which can hardly be said to be prejudiced against hon. gentlemen opposite, dated the 7th of May, and I will read it to hon. gentlemen in order that they may see what is going on in the North-West at present:

"A young man named Arthur Walker, whose father has a 250-acre farm six miles from Fergus, in the county of Wellington, Ontario, passed through the city three weeks ago to look for land for himself and his brother in Dakota, and has been travelling ever since in that State, but returned here last night to make his future home in Manitoba. He was not very favorably impressed with Dakota as a farming country, and says that the most of the settlers in the new districts there have not made very much progress for the past two years, owing to the failure of the crops by frost and other causes. The want of timber is another drawback, and mud shacks are the rule, with an odd frame house here and there, in many of the largest settlements. He intends to locate near Burnside and go into mixed farming on a large scale. Mr. Anton Frost, an old Dakota settler, arrived by the same train, with his family, for the purpose of going into market gardening and butter making near the city, and two other parties from Texas have been here for some days looking for farm lands. There seems to be a considerable number coming over this year from across the line."

Now, everybody knows that long before we had railway communication into the North-West, and long before it was open for reasonable settlement, large numbers of Canadians went, just as eastern Americans went, to the great west and settled; and the presence of those people has attracted large numbers of others there as well. In that way settlement for a while tended towards Dakota and Minnesota. But a change is taking place to-day, and this spring we find a large number of people coming from Dakota and other western States into our North-West and settling there. I do not know whether it is because of this tendency that we find increased energy on the part of the hon. gentlemen opposite to warn people that the condition of things in our own territory is so bad that they ought not to go there. They have posed as patriots, but they have acted as immigration agents for American companies in the western States. They have done everything they possibly could to discredit our own country, and to promote immigration to the western States. In spite of all they have done, the practical logical facts are teaching the people of Dakota and Minnesota, that our own territory is the better territory to settle in, and they are now coming across; but lest that tendency should increase, we find hon. gentlemen now getting up and warning those people that the position of things and the policy of the Government are so bad that they ought not to venture into that country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have always maintained that our territory was the best, and I have always maintained that nothing but the extreme misgovernment and mismanagement on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite could have ever induced our intelligent Ontario settlers in particular to go from Manitoba into Dakota. I believe it is quite true that Manitoba, and southern Manitoba especially, affords better opportunities for profitable settlement than a very large part of Dakota and Minnesota; and I repeat, that had the Government of Canada left the people alone, had they not interposed in every imaginable way, by the creation of a most odious railway monopoly, by imposing a most arbitrary and absurd tariff upon the people of a new country, and by establishing a system of jobbery and robbery, as my hon. friend truly called it, particularly in connection with the management of the lands of the North-West, to-day, instead of having a miserable 120,000 or 130,000, we would have had at least 500,000 Canadian settlers in Manitoba and the North West. But the effect of the course pursued by hon. gentlemen opposite has been to drive away Canadians who desired to go there, some of whom went there and were found afterwards settling by hundreds and tens of hundreds in the adjacent territory of Dakota. I would be very glad indeed to believe that some of those men are going to come back; I hope and trust they will come back; I have always pressed, as this House knows, for the construction of lines of railway in southern Manitoba, because I knew that that was the only means by which those people could be brought back. And I trust that as southern Manitoba is well provided with railways, we may succeed in diverting the stream of immigration from Dakota to that section. If that can be done, even at this late day, much as we have lost, a great deal may be done for the purpose of reviving the immigration which we desire to settle there. I would ask again why the Government, having to spend $60,000 or $70,000 a year for printing purposes, did not get their printing done under their contract here, where it would have been done a great deal cheaper than it has been, as the Auditor General's accounts show, or why, if they did not choose to have it done here, they did not honestly advertise for tenders before giving it out. If they had done that, and the Montreal Gazette or any other paper, by fair tendering in a fair field, had obtained the contract, nobody would have had anything to say. What we complain of is that the Government have been giving these large sums of public money to their own special friends in the press; we complain that for three or four years, at least, very large sums have been paid to certain subsidised organs, and the one to which the most has been paid, by far, is the organ of which the hon. gentleman who spoke last is, or was, until very lately, the principal proprietor. The Public Accounts show that, mainly through the immigration Department, sums ranging as high as $18,000 or $19,000 a year have been paid to the Montreal Gazette. If the hon. gentleman, who has better means of information, I admit, than I have on that point, will state the exact sum, I will accept his statement.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The $19,000 which have been so much referred to, include the amount of $5,000 granted by Parliament for the printing of the proceedings of the Royal Society. These proceedings, as has been proved by a letter from Dawson Brothers, read some time ago, were given to that firm to be published. The mere type-setting and press work were done by the Gazette, after tenders had been asked for the work by Dawson Brothers; the binding and paper were furnished by Dawson Brothers, and the Government had nothing to do with the matter except to hand over the grant to that firm. I think the hon. gentleman will admit that the Royal Society's proceedings would not have looked as well printed in the form of our blue books, as they do in that issued by Dawson Brothers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, we will call it $14,000 to the Montreal Gazette. With respect to this question of immigration, the hon. Minister stated, I believe, there was no one expenditure which the people of Canada bore more cheerfully than the expenditure for immigration. I will say this, that if the expenditure of several million dollars which has been going on during the last three or four years, had contributed, as it might have, to bringing a class of desirable settlers to Canada, the people would not have grumbled; but the hon. gentleman is much mistaken if he believes the proceedings of the immigration Department and the class of immigrants they have brought out, notably from the great cities, have been such as to give satisfaction to the people of Canada. I can tell the hon. gentleman, that there is no one thing of which a great many people in our large cities complain more justly, than the fact that while employers of labor are protected by the Government at the expense of the public, in a very high degree, the Canadian laborer and artisan, or the man who, in by-gone times, made Canada his home, is subjected to a most unfair competition on the part of many laborers and artisans who were assisted out. That is the daily and hourly complaint which has been voiced again and again by the trades councils and labors unions of all the great cities. It is a most just complaint, seeing that, if you are going to protect the employers of labor, the man who is employed has as great, if not a greater, right to claim at the hands of this House protection. If there is one thing we ought to avoid more than another, it is the importing labor to lower the fair remuneration which the Canadian artisan receives. A great deal of the money which the hon. gentleman or his predecessors have been spending has gone for no other purpose than to bring a very poor class of people to many of our great cities, who, by competition, very seriously reduce the rates of labor in many employments. That is a mistake in every sense of the word. I believe the whole system of immigration for many years back, has been a gigantic failure; our returns show that we have brought in 875,000 people, while, on the other hand, as the hon. gentleman knows, our census returns show that not one in four of these people remain. That is indisputable up to 1881, and all the information we have since been able to gather from our municipal statistics, from the hon. gentleman's own census returns from the North-West, from the statements made in the Manitoba Legislature, and made outside by persons well acquainted with the state of things there, goes to show that since 1881 the hon. gentleman and his predecessor have been quite unsuccessful in retaining the immigrants who have come to Canada. The fact is we have come to a point in Canada when we do not want that class of people whom we have to assist to bring out here. There was a time in our history when those persons might have been desirable immigrants, but that time has passed, and it is cruel to lure out these poor immigrants by extravagant promises. When I speak of extravagant promises to these people, I had reference more particularly to those made to them by some of our immigration agents, whom I cannot particularise. But I can tell the hon. gentleman that I have, again and again, in the streets of our towns and cities, met these people, and they have stated to me—and I do not think there was any reason to suppose they were stating falsely—that they were assured before they left England and Ireland they would get here very high wages in their respective occupations. I have seen them in our streets willing to work but utterly unable to obtain work. I have seen, not once or twice, but scores, I may say hundreds of times, letters from these poor people in the English, Scotch and Irish papers, all making the same complaint that they had been induced to come to Canada on the representation that they would find here abundant employment at high wages, and all repeating the same story that they came out and found employment very difficult to obtain. Now the hon. gentleman knows quite well, or ought to know, as Minister of Agriculture, that even in the Department in which a few years ago we could absorb most of the laborers who came out, namely that of agricultural employment, there is now, except at certain seasons, comparatively little demand for labor in most parts of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The enormous improvement in agricultural implements enable farmers to carry on their work with much less assistance than formerly. It is quite clear, if the hon. gentleman and his agents persist in bringing out paupers or immigrants who depend wholly on their own hands for subsistence, the effect will be that these people will not find work or will have to displace our own people. My own impression is, that in the majority of cases, they do not stay here but make their way to the United States, and for that reason I say that, whatever may have been the case in former years, we have now arrived at the point in which very little service is going to be rendered the public by our continuing to pay assisted passages. I take issue distinctly with my hon. friend on the question of fact, as to whether there is any use in our bringing these people here; and I take issue with him still more strongly on the question, that the people of Canada, as a whole, desire these large charges should be made for the purpose of bringing immigrants here, who, in nine cases out of ten, only serve to reduce the wages of the people employed in Canada.

Mr. CARLING. It is very unfair on the part of the hon. gentleman to state, over and over again, that the Government are encouraging the bringing out of pauper immigration.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have seen it.

Mr. CARLING. I can only say that such is not the case.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I can say it is the case.

Mr. CARLING. If the hon. gentleman knows more about the immigration Department than I do, of course I must give way to him. I stated in the House and produced the figures a month ago to show that, out of 79,000 immigrants that came to this country in 1885, only about 7,000 or 8,000 were in any way assisted by the Government. They were agriculturists, agricultural laborers and domestic servants. Out of the 7,000 or 8,000, not more than 3,000 were fit to work, the remainder being their wives and families. It is most unfair for the hon. gentleman to say over and over again, and for his friends behind him to say over and over again, that the Government are paying hundreds of thousands of dollars in bringing pauper immigration to Canada, when it is not the case. Now, with regard to the statement which the hon. gentleman has made with respect to deceiving immigrants, I ask the hon. gentleman to produce the printed literature, the documents, pamphlets or posters, or anything of the kind, to show that the Government are making any statements to the people who are wishing to emigrate that are not strictly true. No inducements are held out to them to come out here that cannot be realised when they arrive. I say it is most unfair for a gentleman holding the high position he does in this House to invariably charge the Government with doing what is not the fact. The hon. gentleman has asked why the Government give this printing to their particular friends, the London Free Press, the Hamilton Spectator, the Montreal Gazette and other papers friendly to the Government. I ask why did he as Finance Minister, or the immigration Minister who was in the Government with him, not put this up to tender? Why did they not offer some different means of contracting than we are doing?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much did we spend?

Mr. CARLING. I do not know how much they spent, but the principle is the same. If you spent $10,000 in giving it to your newspaper friends, the principle is the same as if you spent $50,000, and it ill becomes the hon. gentleman to charge us with giving favors to our friends of the press when his Government did the same. Besides, the hon. gentleman's Government paid 33 per cent. more than we are paying. Then, with regard to immigration, the cost of those who settled in the country in 1875 was $10.83 per head; in 1876, $11.12 per head; in 1877, $6.78 per head; in 1878, $6.23 per head; in 1879, $4.35 per head; in 1880, $4.71 per head; in 1881, $4.30 per head; in 1882, $3.08 per head; in 1883, $3.15 per head; in 1884, $4.15 per head, and in 1885, $3.92 per head.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Who compiled those figures?

Mr. CARLING. These are taken from the public documents, and I vouch for their correctness.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Who compiled them, though?

Mr. CARLING. I vouch for their correctness.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then the hon. Minister will vouch for all the immigrants being here that the author of that paper says are here, of course?

Mr. CARLING. I see that these returns show that the number of immigrants who settled in Canada in 1874 was 39,373; that it was 27,382 in 1875, 25,633 in 1876, 27,082 in 1877, 29,807 in 1878, 40,492 in 1879, 38,505 in 1880, 47,991 in 1881, 112,458 in 1882, 133,624 in 1883——

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Hear, hear.

Mr. CARLING. Hear, hear. 103,824 in 1884, and 79,169 in 1885. I have endeavored to show that the number of immigrants that have settled in Canada during the years that the present Government have been in power has been much larger than during the years that the hon. gentlemen were in power, and that the immigrants have not cost more than half per head what they cost while those hon. gentlemen were in power. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has made a charge against the press of the country, or that portion of it which is friendly to the Government, and I think it is very unfair of the hon. member to do so, considering that he is connected with the press himself. It appears more like envy or jealousy on the part of the hon. gentleman than for the interest of the country. As I have said before, if the printing that is done for the Government at these offices is done at a fair commercial price, no one has any right to complain, more than that it has been given to a supporter of the Government instead of to an opponent of the Government. With regard to the number of immigrants that settled in this country, I noticed that the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson), when I said 133,000 had settled, said "Hear, hear." I suppose he thought that was a bad thing for the country.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No, no; I only want to know where they are?

Mr. CARLING. The census has not been taken since 1881, five or six years since, and I am sure we have no reliable information as to the population of the country since the census was taken.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, we have.

Mr. CARLING. No, there is no reliable information as to the population of this country at the present time since the census was taken. The statement of the population as given by assessors in Ontario and in different parts of the country, although, perhaps, taken with considerable care, is not information that can be thoroughly relied upon. We have a population coming into the country, and there is no doubt that people are coming and going not only in this country but in other countries. I find that, in the United States, the immigration to that country in 1882 was 788,992, and in 1885 it fell off to 395,346, because the number of people had not been emigrating the last year or two that did emigrate some years ago; but I believe now, with the inducements we have to offer immigrants in this country, the opening up of our great North-West and the suppression of the insurrection which took place last year, that there is a feeling of satisfaction and safety, and that we may expect this year, and perhaps next year, a much larger immigration than we have had before.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman has no right whatever to accuse hon. gentlemen on this side of being unfair to him. We do not condemn him except as being a member of the Government, and so responsible for the proceedings of his predecessors for the existing condition of things, but I do not hesitate to tell him here in my place that I attach no sort of value whatever to any statement made by his Department as to the number of immigrants that have settled in this country. I say further that the statements made by the Department he presides over are utterly false and misleading, in my judgment. There is no sort of ground or justification for the allegation that 103,000 immigrants, or anything like that number, settled in Canada within the last year or two.

Mr. CARLING. The statements were correct when the hon. gentlemen were in power, and the same system is carried out now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think these statements were particularly correct, but I know that no attempt whatever was made to exaggerate them.

Mr. CARLING. They are not exaggerated now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I say they are, and I shall prove it. If immigrants come to any part of Canada at all, everybody knows that they would go to Manitoba or the North-West, or else to Ontario. You have your own census returns in the North-West, showing a most scandalous failure in the settlement of that part of the country. You have the evidence of everybody in Manitoba, from the legislators down, who have any interest in Manitoba, to show that immigrants have not gone there, and that the statements made from year to year on the authority of that Department, as to the number of immigrants who went into Manitoba, were one of two things—either grossly exaggerated or that immigrants went there but did not stay there. Now, as to the Province of Ontario; we have got sufficient evidence as to what has been going on there. Hon. gentlemen ought to know that our assessors returned pretty accurately the annual increase. We have the returns made by the assessors for the ten years from 1871 to 1881, showing a total increase in that Province very nearly equal to the nominal increase as reported by the census, an increase in that time of nearly 300,000 souls which was very nearly what the census gave; and everybody who knows how that census was taken, knows that it was as at least as likely that the assessor's returns of the increase was correct, as that of the census commissioners, because it was taken on an entirely faulty system, the system known as de jure in opposition to that of de facto. I know myself that men who have been absent from this country ten or twelve years were put down under that system as residents here. Now, we turn to these assessors' returns for the Province of Ontario, which hon. gentlemen must know absorbs much the largest proportion of all the immigrants who come to this country, the North-West alone excepted. We find, Sir, that from 1879 to 1880 the assessors returned an increase of 10,000; from 1880 to 1881, 10,000; from 1881 to 1882, 2,000; from 1882 to 1883, 14,000. We find then a large increase, I am happy to say, in the next year of some 40,000 odd. Now, my opinion is that the enormous exodus, which I know to have been going on from Ontario, and which every hon. gentleman who paid any attention to the subject, knows to have gone on in Ontario, went, not to the North-West, I am sorry to say, but to various States in the American union.

Mr. CARLING. What authority have you for that?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have the authority that the people are not here; we have the authority that in hundreds of towns and villages in Ontario the population has remained stationary; we have the authority that from 1870 to 1884 there was no increase at all in the rural population of Ontario according to the assessors. Now, Sir, unless the hon. gentleman is prepared to say that the assessors throughout Ontario have deliberately made false returns, which I do not think he will insist upon, he is shut up to this, that all over Ontario the rural population has remained stationary during the last six or seven years; that in the towns and villages there has been a small increase, in the cities a considerable increase, but the total increase has been vastly below the natural increase of the population. If it be correct that any of these immigrants the hon. gentleman speaks of, have been brought in and have stayed here, they have stayed here only by displacing the existing population, by sending our own people adrift and taking their places. It is the very acme of absurdity, when we know that our people have been going from us in such numbers, to tax the people more heavily by paying large sums of money to bring other people here. Sir, there is no getting away from the assessors' returns, and I tell the hon. gentleman that they are the only returns that approach to accuracy. Since attention has been called to this subject they have been unusually careful in reckoning the population, they have, relatively speaking, increased the number they have put down. Now, if the hon. gentleman, who is a western man, chooses to go through any of the great and fertile counties adjacent to London, he can scarcely go into a township in which he will not find a large number of people all of whom have near kinsmen or kinswomen in the United States. I have over and over again made minute enquiries, taking sections at haphazard, and asking every man who attended my meeting there, what the facts were, and it was the exception and not the rule to find persons who had not near relatives in the United States, from that part of western Canada which the hon. gentleman knows is an exceeding fertile and attractive region, and what is true there is true, though perhaps in a less degree, in other parts of the country. The hon. gentleman must see that if we had kept these 875,000 people who are alleged by his Department to have been settled in Canada within the last nineteen years, our population must have been larger than even he estimates it, or than the Finance Minister estimates it, by 1,100,000 or 1,200,000. Had we added that to our natural increase, and had we obtained these 875,000 people who are said to have settled here, the population of Canada, on the ordinary rules of increase, which anybody can compute, ought to be to-day nearer 7,000,000 than 6,000,000. Now, if the hon. gentleman wants to know where our people have gone he can find out by referring to the United States census, which contains some very curious items of information on this point, because they show not merely that there were 717,000 of Canadian birth in the United States five years ago, but there were 900,000 odd born of Canadian parents on both sides. One reason why our population has been increasing much less rapidly than it ought, has been, as I have more than once pointed out to his predecessors, because the class of emigrants who leave Canada have been the very flower and pick of our population; have been men and women in the prime of life, and I have no doubt whatever that the rate of natural increase in this country has perceptibly diminished from that cause. Now, Sir, those are some of the reasons which induced me utterly to dispute the accuracy of the statements made for the last 18 or 19 years by the Department of Immigration, as to the number of people who are settling here. The hon. member is not going to tell us that they have settled in Prince Edward Island, nor is he going to tell us that they have settled in Nova Scotia, nor that they have settled in New Brunswick. I do not think he will say that they have settled in the French portions of Quebec to any appreciable extent. Have they settled in the Eastern Townships? I think the hon. gentleman will not maintain that. You are shut down to the fact that they have gone either to Manitoba and the North-West or to Ontario.

An hon. MEMBER. To British Columbia.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Some to British Columbia. They have had a Chinese immigration to a considerable amount, I am willing to allow, of ten or twelve thousand. I dare say that there has been a considerable immigration there; but there has not been, unhappily, to the North-West and there has not been, unhappily, to Ontario. It is no use for hon. gentlemen to shut their eyes to the plain fact that all over Ontario to-day, in the rural districts, the population is very nearly stationary in a great number of constituencies, and that in a great number of the smaller towns the population is almost stationary. Now, there may be difficulties about ascertaining the exact population in some of the outlying districts, but there is very little difficulty in ascertaining accurately the population in the numerous towns and cities which dot Ontario; and these, without exception, show that the population has either been stationary, or that it has failed to keep up the natural increase, and consequently there has been no room for these immigrants, unless, as I say, by the process of displacement. It is not to be supposed that our condition differs very greatly from that of other countries. I am quite aware, I have said it over and over again that much the same condition of things has taken place in the States of the Union under similar conditions. Let us not make the mistake of boasting that we have a larger population than we possess. This process has been going on for many years. Our one chance, in my opinion, of adding largely to our population was the adoption of a wise policy in the North-West, and the reason, as I have told the hon. gentleman, why I object so much to his policy is, because I think that between the heavy tariff of the Government, the railway monopoly, and the impolitic land regulations the Government have utterly failed to avail themselves of innumerable opportunities given to them of stopping the exodus from Canada, and particularly from the North-West.

Mr. FOSTER. This question of immigration is, of course, an interesting one, and we shall not help it in this country by endeavoring to prove that our policy has been of a very useless character. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, in his last remark, that we will not help things by endeavoring to show that our population has increased more than it has increased. That is true. But, on the other hand, it is equally true that we will not help things by endeavoring, in Parliament or in public, to prove that the population of this country has, in an immense number of constituencies, become diminished, and that the whole immigration effort which has been made in this country for the last ten years, has proved of no benefit. That alternative, when compared with the first mentioned alternative, is not the one to be preferred in this country. The first point that comes up for discussion is, whether it is a good principle to make public the resources of the country, or not. Some say that all this publishing of our resources is a thing of no use and of immense cost. I do not believe it. I think we have to act in this matter in the light of similar efforts after immigrants made in other countries and in the United States, and although the Government itself may not have gone into the business of immigration attractions as has the Dominion Government, this work has been equally as well done and as widely done by the immense railway companies and land companies which have flooded not only Europe and Great Britain and the eastern States of the Union but also this Dominion with accounts of their advantages, put forward in the most attractive style, by maps and pamphlets, delineations of the features and resources of the country. And this literature having been spread everywhere has had its effect in drawing attention of emigration centres to the advantages offered by the United States. Now I think there is more need of Canada attempting to carry out this course than for the United States because the Dominion came later into prominence as offering an attractive field for immigrants. It comes into the field in competition specially with the United States, which had its advantages portrayed in those ways that I have spoken of, and widely circulated in the centres of emigration movement. If Canada were to make itself known at all, if it was to attract the attention of those people, we must do it by this same system of circulating pamphlets and books and maps, showing in a popular manner what this country is, what advantages it offers, and so make it attractive to immigrants. I do not think there can be any exception taken to this proposition, that fairly judicious advertising of the resources of the country is a necessary and judicious act on the part of the Government. The next proposition that comes up is one of cost. The hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) stated boldly, and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) also stated very strongly, that this was a giving of money, that the amount which was paid for instance to the Free Press of London and the Gazette of Montreal and to those other papers for pamphlets and maps was money given to those papers. The hon. gentlemen do not seem to take into account, and he would lead the country not to take into account, the fact that a quid pro quo was obtained in connection with those printing contracts.

Mr. MILLS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman ignores the fact that the printing was done, that the composition took place and that the work was struck off, and before the hon. gentleman can make a single effective point he has got to show that an extravagant price was paid for having those documents published. I leave it to this House to say whether the hon. gentleman attempted to show there were extravagant prices paid. He did not. He simply held up the items, mentioned the amounts paid and the newspapers to which they were paid, and he did not take into account what any fair-minded man would have done, that work was given for the payment made. The hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) made some very strong statements, being spurred up by the almost fierce speech of the hon. member for Bothwell, and he made some very strong statements which I do not think he substantiated before this House. He declared, and he ought to explain that to this House in view of the position in which he stands and the weight which his speeches carry—he made the statement broadly here and persisted in it, that the pamphlets issued by the Department of Agriculture were misleading, that they made certain promises which had no foundation in fact, that they promised that certain wages would be given which were not given.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, no; I spoke of promises made by agents of the Department to immigrants who have come out here, and I have been informed as to that fact by immigrants themselves, and I have seen, as I have stated over and over again, their communications in English papers.

Mr. FOSTER. If that was what the hon. gentleman said, I am glad to have the correction, but I certainly understood him, in the course of the debate—either the hon. member for Huron or the hon. member for Bothwell—to declare that the pamphlets themselves were misleading. That was the impression I gathered; if it is not what the hon. gentleman meant to state, I am glad to find out such is not the fact. I know there has been much said in the House and the country, and those broad statements have been made that the pamphlets issued and the representations made by our responsible agents have been misleading, and that people were deluded by them and brought to this country under false pretences. Another statement the hon. gentleman did make, and as regards that I am certain I am not mistaken, was, that the people were going out of the North-West by tens and by tens of hundreds. If that is the truth he should certainly give some grounds for the statement and bring forward some proof. Did the hon. gentleman give a single proof of the bald assertion he made, that people were going out of the Canadian North-West by tens of hundreds, which means by the thousand? I do not think he did; I do not think he can do so. As a general assertion, it may do very well for an irresponsible man, but as an assertion to be made from the seat occupied by my hon. friend, in his responsible position, I think he should have thought before he made it, or else he should have proved the assertion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I can do it.

Mr. FOSTER. He should have proved it to the satisfaction of this House. He does not believe—it would not do—it is not part of his creed at all to believe in statistics which emanate from Canadian authorities. He does not believe that the statistics and statements which have been gathered by our own painstaking officers, by our own Departments, and in our own country, are true. Afterwards, when cornered by the statement of the Minister of Agriculture that these were now gotten up on the very same basis that they were during the régime of my hon. friend, he turned around and said he never had much faith in them; and, towards the close of his speech, he said he believed they had been wrong for the last nineteen years. Now, my hon. friend did himself great injustice; he did the party to which he belongs great injustice, and he did the country of which he is a citizen still greater injustice when he sat still and quiet for nineteen years, and never thought to open his mouth until within the last two or three years. Why, Sir, by so doing he was guilty of complicity in the arrangement of the basis which has become stated and settled, and which it seems has put our country on the wrong line entirely in this respect. He was just as wrong there as he showed himself to be in a remark which slipped out very quietly—but still slipped out—that there was not so much difference if only a little wrong was committed as if a great wrong was committed, that is, that the principle did not amount to anything. But the hon. gentleman believes in something. If he does not believe in the trustworthiness of Canadian officials and Canadian statistics, he has every faith in the statements and statistics of the officers of the United States. My hon. friend beside him will probably get up before the debate closes, and will cite the wonderful revelations made by these wonderful statisticians along the line of the Grand Trunk Railway, which have been floating around through this country for so many years, showing the great efflux of people from this country to the United States. There is no limit to the extent to which my hon. friend's credulity will stretch itself, when he has to swallow the statements of American officials, and there is no limit to the amount of his incredulity, when he is asked to take a single statement made by the painstaking officials of our own Canadian Department. Now I can show that my hon. friend rather let himself into a trap. How does he show, when he was talking about the efflux of immigrants from our own North-West into the American North-West, how did he undertake—if he made any proof at all—to prove that they did go out? In this way: by taking the Canadian statistics as to how many went in and as to how many are in. It suits him to take Canadian statistics as true, both for the number going in and the number who are in, when he wants to prove that a great many have gone over into the north west States. But when he has to prove that people come and stay in our own country, he does not think Canadian statistics are worth anything in that point of view. Well, but why have they gone? If they have gone out of our own North-West Territory into the territories to the south of us, why have they gone? The hon. gentleman has told us why. He says: It is your high-handed, your iniquitous, your oppressive tariff that drives them out. Whither did they go, and to what country are they driven? To a country in which the tariff is higher, and, according to my hon. friend's logic, more oppressive. Now that is not consequential reasoning. If people are driven out by a certain evil, they are not likely to go to a country where the evil is tenfold greater, or threefold greater, or any greater. They go to a country where there is relief from that evil. According to my hon. friend a protective tariff drives them out of our country and drives them into the arms of a country having a protective tariff far higher than ours. Again, he says railroad monopolies drive them out. Our North-West has a railway through it, and that monopoly is so great and so grinding that the people are led to flee from that country, and to go to the north western States. Yet the hon. gentleman knows that a comparison was read in this House no longer ago than yesterday—a comparison of the railway rates in our own North-West and those in the north-west States of the Union—in which our rates stood far better in comparison with them, both for freight and for passenger traffic. Now, if the hon. gentleman says they are driven out, let him prove it, but let him give some more sensible reason than that they are driven out from our country by the tariff and the railway into a country where both the tariff and the railway rates are a great deal higher than they are in our own. The hon. gentleman says he travelled around amongst a number of constituencies, and especially around London, and that he met with people and talked with them, and when he talked with them he found that they had relations in the United States of America. Now, Sir, that is the very strongest reason why the policy pursued by this Government, and the policy of this country which supports the Government, for these years that have been past is proved to be a wise policy. Why have they relatives in the United States? Those relatives went there years ago, before our own North-West was opened at all; and I venture to state this, without fear of contradiction, that if our own North-West had been opened as early for this country as the North-West of the United States was opened for the United States, these relatives of our people would have gone to our own country, and the sources which draw people to that country would have been planted there as they were planted in the United States, because our North-West was not opened at all. That is a disadvantage we had to start with. We are later in the field. Our North-West was opened later, and we have that disadvantage to contend against, that certain of our own people in the earlier days have gone to the American North-West. Their relatives are there, and they draw their own kind; and it is better for us, instead of magnifying that, to magnify the resources and capabilities of our own North-West, so that we may plant a nucleus of our own people there, who will, in future years, continue to draw around it relatives and friends from this distant part of the country. The hon. gentleman says then that immigrants do not go to Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. That may be true to a certain extent, but my hon. friend should not make that a complaint against the immigration policy of this country. It is not so. Geographical difficulties surely cannot be said to be the result of a policy, and national difficulties or national considerations cannot be said to be the result of a tariff policy or the like of that. Why, Sir, the very same thing takes places in other countries beside our own. If the hon. gentleman was a citizen of the State of Maine, or the State of Vermont, or the State of New York—if he was a citizen of almost anyone of the New England States and was disposed to decry that country, as he is disposed to decry this country, he could stand up in his place and make the same statement, that these populations are practically stationary; that some of them are even going backward in population. These are not the results of policy but of something deeper than any policy. They are what take place in every country which has different sections, older and newer, when the new are opened up and the populations of the old run out towards them. So, I think the policy of this Government, in stretching every nerve to make the people of other countries acquainted with the resources of Canada, and to place those resources before them in an attractive light, is a policy that this country will uphold, a policy which in the end will be proven even more wise than we think it at the present time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to call attention to two or three material facts which hon. gentlemen have not thought it convenient to pay any attention to. With reference to the relative expenditure of the two Governments on pamphlets and such objects, I find that in 1878 the total amount paid by the late Administration for pamphlets and advertising for immigration purposes was $4,193, against $80,000 paid for paper and printing alone during the past year, and $100,000 during the year before. That shows what the relative economy of the two Governments was in that respect. As for the other statement, that we have no evidence of the utter and disastrous failure of this miserable policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, why, Sir, the very Customs returns published by my hon. friend the Minister of Customs, as far back as 1884, claim 248,000 people in the North-West Territories; and when we come to sift those figures, what do we find? That there are not 140,000 white people in the whole North-West and Manitoba put together. Is that proof enough for the Minister of Marine? The hon. gentleman, I suppose, in the toils incident to the position of a newly-fledged Minister, has not had time to read the reports, or he would see that year after year 30,000, 40,000, 50,000 people were stated to have gone into the North-West since 1881 by the hon. Minister of Agriculture. Where are those people? We know they are not there; they have not come back to Ontario, because there is nothing in the assessors' returns that we possess to show any additional population to equal their number. The inference is perfectly clear that they have gone outside of this Dominion, and, if so, where could they go except to the United States? Now, Sir, it is not true that in the last 14 or 15 years Dakota and the north-western States have had a better chance than our North-West. In 1871 the population of Dakota was 12,000; in 1885 it was 420,000.

Mr. McLELAN. How many in the first 10 years?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Between 1871 and 1878 the total population of Dakota was reported at about 80,000 to 90,000, and in the United States census at 130,000. The greatest increase has taken place in the last four or five years. Since 1878 we have had every access to our own Territories, and I am speaking of what I have seen when I say that our own people were pouring into that territory, that they would have been delighted to settle in that country, and nothing but the impolicy of the Government drove them away; and when hon. gentlemen tell us that they go from a slightly protected country to a more highly protected country, they only show that they have not mastered the A, B, C of the protective system. Everybody knows that a protective system is infinitely less injurious when applied on a large scale in a gigantic country like the United States than in a small country like Canada. In fact, a very moderate system works very much greater harm in a small country, with very limited markets, like Canada, than a high protective system does in a large country like the United States. I have always pointed out that a country like the United States could adopt a protective system with a minimum of injury to the people, but that in a small country like Canada, with our Provinces separated as they are, it works infinite mischief; and people go from Canada to the United States, because they find the protective system infinitely less mischievous there than they do here.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). The hon. gentleman has made two or three statements which I think it would be unwise to let go to the old country uncontradicted. He said that farm laborers were poorly paid. Now, every gentleman in this House or in the country who has paid the slightest attention to that subject must know that at no period in the history of this country for thirty-five years has manual labor of all kinds, agricultural as well as mechanical, been as well paid as it is to-day; and the very reverse of the hon. gentleman's statement with regard to the effect on the use of agricultural implements on the wages of agricultural laborers is the case. So scarce and so dear is agricultural labor to-day that if it were not for the use of machinery, the farmers would be at a loss to carry on their business. As for the mechanics, such as bricklayers, carpenters, and men of that stamp, the wages they are receiving to-day are almost fabulous as compared with those they received fifteen or twenty years ago It is no wonder we cannot get immigrants. It is not four weeks since I heard it stated in this House that mechanics should not be brought to this country, because they would starve in the public streets. There is no healthy, able-bodied man who cannot procure any kind of manual labor in this country that he wants, and at remunerative wages. I know that in large towns and cities there are large numbers of people who are in a chronic state of distress, and nothing will drive them out of that; no government policy will ever prevent that, it is the evil of human nature. With regard to people being driven out of Manitoba by the tariff—and agricultural implements were specially referred to by the hon. member for Bothwell—I have no hesitation in saying that prices on every line of agricultural implements are from 15 to 25 per cent. cheaper to-day than they were five years ago; and I think I am correct in saying that nine-tenths of all the implements put into the market to-day are of Canadian manufacture. Hon. gentlemen have called for specific items, and I will mention one—the breaking plough, which has been the subject of so much debate in this House. Four years ago the John Deer plough was put in the market at $28 retail all along the railway line, and a Canadian plough manufactured by Frost & Wood, not many miles from this city, was put in for $24. The Deer plough came down $2 and the Canadian plough came down $2. Last summer, the John Deer plough was sold for $21 or $22, and to-day it is put on the market at $18. I have letters here from people in the country in which they say that the preference for the Deer plough over the Canadian was a mere matter of sentiment. At first, people preferred the article which had been made by men long accustomed to manufacturing for prairie work; but they find that our own people are quite as competent to manufacture a useful and durable article as the Americans. I can say that the Canadian plough, which was sold there four years ago for $24, was, during this Session, offered by tender to the Interior Department for $14, exactly one-half the price of similar ploughs five years ago.

Mr. WATSON. This immigration question is one that interests Manitoba deeply, and one in which I have always felt a great interest since I have had the honor of occupying a seat in the House. I have always been under the impression that false reports of the number of immigrants who went to the North-West, are not calculated to advance the interests of immigration to that country. That has not been the opinion held by hon. gentlemen opposite, I know from experience, the Government apparently want to blind people to the facts of the case by stating that a certain number went in each year and that the country is prosperous. But what are the facts? We find that the population of Manitoba, according to the census of 4th April, 1881, was 59,189 and that of the North-West Territories 6,974. According to the immigration report of the Department of Agriculture, we find that in 1881 the Department claims 22,000 immigrants went into Manitoba and the North-West; in 1882 they claimed 58,751; in 1883, 42,792; in 1884, 24,440, and in 1885, 7,000. In 1885, the year of the rebellion, of course, there are reasons why immigration was less than usual. This makes a total of 221,146 people who ought to be there to-day. The census has been taken for the Territories, and I find there are little over 23,000 whites in the Territories. This is allowing nothing for the natural increase, which is pretty large in Manitoba and the Territories. I find a discrepancy in the figures, apparently, when contrasted with the estimate of the population of Manitoba to-day. As was stated in the House a few days ago, the population of Manitoba to-day is placed at 110,000, which would make, with Territories, a total population with whites of 133,000; deducting this from the 221,146, we find about 88,146 of a discrepancy. I maintain that giving figures which are not correct and leading this House to believe that the course of immigratien was being directed into that country has had an injurious effect. The first Session I had the honor of a seat in this House, I acted on the Standing Committee dealing with Immigration, and when the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, at one of our meetings, made the statement that 13,000 Americans had emigrated from the American side into Manitoba during that year, 1883, I ventured to contradict his statement. I stated it was false. What was the reply? It was: "For God's sake, if we get a good report, let us have it." That was the reply made by the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson). But I maintain that false statements are not in the best interests of the country; I ventured to correct the statement, because I was not aware it was the duty of a representative of a constituency in Manitoba, when he knew a statement was not correct, to remain silent. Now, I think there is no doubt but that there is a discrepancy. What are the reasons the people did not think fit to stay in that country? They did not leave because they thought the soil is not better than it is in Dakota. The Minister of the Interior read from the Free Press of Winnipeg—and he might read from it at any time, because that paper has always stood by Manitoba, because it has always advocated our interests and claimed that we had better soil than can be found in Dakota—but that paper has stated the reasons why the people do not stop in Manitoba. It said the land through southern Manitoba was locked up, the land in the west was locked up for colonisation purposes.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No land was locked up for colonisation purposes.

Mr. WATSON. There was; and at one time a large portion of southern Manitoba was withdrawn from homestead, as well as large tracts in other portions of Manitoba and the North West. A mile belt was reserved along the railway. The land policy was frequently changed.

Mr. BOWELL. Every change has been to make it more liberal. Has it not?

Mr. WATSON. Not in the first place.

Mr. BOWELL. When is the first place.

Mr. WATSON. In 1879, you could get 160 acres homestead free; in 1880-81 you got only 80 acres, and 80 acres at $2 per acre as pre-emption. The changes in the regulations went on so rapidly that people going into the country could not feel a certainty as to what the land regulations might be. With reference to the agricultural implements, the tariff drove people out of the country. The hon. gentleman talks of ploughs. Why the Copp Brothers, of Hamilton, shipped a cargo of ploughs to the North-West, not one of which was fit to plough with.

Mr. FERGUSON. What is the case now?

Mr. WATSON. Where are your settlers? Many of them have left on this account. But I admit that now Canadian agricultural implements are almost equal to the American.

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes, and cheaper.

Mr. WATSON. This protective system built up the manufactures at the cost of immigration to the North-West. People, if they could not secure agricultural implements at reasonable prices, would not stop in the country. I know of men who left the Province because they could not secure proper implements. Self-binders, for instance, in 1880, cost $340 in Manitoba, while you could buy them at $200 in Dakota, and that was your grand system of protection. That policy has been a curse to the North-West.

Mr. FERGUSON. What can you buy them for now?

Mr. WATSON. For $250, and in Dakota for $190. Another reason which kept our immigration back is the railway monopoly. It was stated, a couple of years ago, by the First Minister, that he would not allow the Manitoba and South-Western Railway to be built through one of the finest sections in Manitoba, because American capitalists were interested in the road, but we find he is prepared to ask this House to vote millions of dollars to build a line through the State of Maine. Hundreds of men left the country because they had not railway communication, and because the Manitoba and South-Western, which was to have been built four or five years ago, has not yet been extended so as to reach the settlers, who went in with the prospect of having a railway years ago. We have a better soil and country in the North-West and Manitoba for general agricultural farming than they have in the western States. We have larger yields of wheat, and we enjoy better climate. And with all these advantages we have not got the immigration, and I am sorry to say I know of settlements in Dakota that are entirely built up of Canadian people. I was also sorry to see in the Toronto Mail, a paper which hon. gentlemen almost swear by, when it was apologising for having only 23,000 whites in the North-West Territories, the statement that it was a fact, and the sooner they realised it the better, that the North-West could not be settled up until Dakota was settled up, and that they could not expect many people to go into the North-West until Dakota was settled. I was sorry to see such a statement. I believe that we have such inducements in Manitoba that people would come into that country in preference to going to Dakota, with equal advantages. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that members on this side of the House are trying to decry the country because they state that the country has grievances. If it has grievances, this is the place to ventilate them and to right them. Do not say that it is all right because the Minister of Agriculture comes forward and says there are 60,000 or 70,000 immigrants gone into the North-West, when it is not the case.

In that way you are deceived, you are only putting off the evil day. You take the census and you find out what your population is. I contend that, if that North-West country had been properly governed, instead of 133,000 people in Manitoba and the North-West, we ought to have had half a million people there, and, if the immigration had continued according to what it was in 1879–80, with the natural growth we would have had 400,000 or 500,000 people there. The country was progressing rapidly, but the progress was interfered with by the changes in the land policy, by the monopoly given to the railway and by locking up lands for colonisation purposes.

Mr. FOSTER. They were not locked up for colonisation purposes.

Mr. WATSON. I tell the hon. gentleman they were. He for one is interested in colonisation lands. He is interested in getting hold of the few immigrants who do go to the North-West. He has got men along the line who get $10 a piece to rope them on to his land, and for what purpose? For the purpose of getting a quarter section for each settler for half price. That is the way the lands in the North-West are disposed of. I hope in the future we may have correct returns made of the immigration into the North-West. I hope we may know the exact amount of immigration that go each year to that country, and the number of settlers who remain in the country, and then we shall know the reasons why some do not. As to that young man whom the Free Press speaks of, and the Minister of Interior spoke of to-night, who came from Fergus, were the member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton) resides, I do not see why he should go in search of land in Dakota before he went to Manitoba. Surely the member for Centre Wellington should have induced him to go to Manitoba before he went to Dakota, but still, after going to Dakota and hunting all through it for land, he has come back to settle in Manitoba because he finds the land is better there. I believe he is right, but why should he go to Dakota?

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). He went to see Mr. Pardee.

Mr. BOWELL. He went to go on Mr. Pardee's land.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). He might go to Florida to see Mr. Chapleau's land.

Mr. WATSON. There is no better immigration agent in the world than a contented settler, and, if you make the people in that country contented, they will induce others to go and reside there. I hope the Government will pursue such a policy that, in five years, instead of coming down here and finding the population 80,000 or 90,000 short, they will find the population that they expect in the Territories. If these people go there, they should remain there. There is nothing to induce them to go out of that country. There are no natural disadvantages to make them leave Manitoba and go to Dakota, and I hope such means will be used by the Minister of Agriculture as will induce immigration of the right class to settle in Manitoba.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I desire to call attention to one point in the remarks of the hon. gentleman. He talks about the reservations made by this Government and the injury which resulted to the North-West from these reservations. I shall simply state the facts, without any comment, as to what was the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. I am not saying it was a bad policy, I am not condemning it, I am simply stating what it was and what the motive was which prompted it when they were in office. On the 24th December, 1874, an Order in Council was passed—and I cannot do better than read it in full—as to reservations, and you will see the object that they had was that, having regard to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, they were anxious to reserve the lands from settlement in order that they might have them to do as they pleased with them for the construction of that railway:

Mr. WATSON.

"On a memorandum dated 24th December, 1874, from the hon. the Minister of the Interior, stating that, in view of the location of the Canadian Pacific Railway line westerly from the present limits of the Province of Ontario, he submits that in all probability during the coming season there will be a disposition manifested on the part of settlers going into the Province of Manitoba to squat upon lands along the route, thus possibly embarrassing the Government in carrying out the provisions of the Railway Act of last Session, and under these circumstances he recommends that he be authorised to give public notice to the effect that all lands within twenty miles on each side of the line surveyed, and upon which the telegraph is now under construction, are for the present withdrawn from sale or settlement under the Dominion Lands Act, and that no rights of entry upon the said lands by parties who may have entered thereon after the issue of this notice will be recognised by the Government until further notice.

"The lands so withdrawn to include also a district twenty miles to the westward of Fort Pelly.

"The committee advise that the requisite authority be granted.

That only went a certain way westward. I will give you another Order in Council passed on the 28th February, 1876.

"On a memorandum, dated 21st February, 1876, from the hon. the Minister of Interior, reporting that public considerations make it expedient to select the site for the proposed seat of the Government of the North-West Territories at a point westerly of Livingstone.

"That the late surveys for the Canadian Pacific Railway and the construction of the telegraph line have developed the fact that the crossing of the Battle River, some 250 miles west of Fort Pelly, possesses special advantages as a site for the proposed city.

"That the Battle River is said to be 175 feet across, in low water, with a depth of twelve feet, and is believed to be navigable for many miles towards its source.

"That the soil in the vicinity is excellent, and the country generally eligible for settlement, and the general position is central and convenient for the Territories.

"That in view of the above he recommends that a block four miles square, making in all a block of sixteen square miles, be reserved at such a point in the vicinity of the junction of the Battle and Saskatchewan Rivers, as may be found most convenient for a town site, which may be constituted the future seat of the Government of the North-West Territories."

There was a reservation of sixteen square miles for a possible town site in the future, upon which no one was to be permitted to settle, although the very reason given for the reservation was that it was admirably adapted for settlement. The Order in Council then proceeded to make a much larger reservation, as follows:—

"He further recommends that the lands for twenty miles on both sides of the telegraph line as laid out, extending from a point twenty miles westerly of Fort Pelly to a point twenty miles westerly of the mouth of the Battle River, be withdrawn for the present from sale or settlement, as an extension of the reserve already set apart in connection with the construction of the Pacific Railway.

"The committee submit the above recommendations for Your Excellency's approval.

Then, on the 22nd April, 1876, there was a further Order in Council on the subject of these reservations, as follows:—

"On a memorandum, dated 21st April, 1878, from the hon. the Minister of the Interior, stating, with reference to the question of withdrawal of lands in the vicinity of the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway from ordinary sale and settlement, to be disposed of at a future period in connection with the construction of the railway, that in view of avoiding possible difficulties with persons taking up land upon or in the vicinity of the line, as surveyed, to the westward of Battle River, it is, in his opinion, expedient to extend the reserve authorised by the Order in Council in that behalf, dated the 28th February last, and recommending, therefore, that the lands for 20 miles on each side of the line of the railway, from a point 20 miles westerly of the Battle River to Jasper House, in the Yellow Head Pass, through the Rocky Mountains, be withdrawn accordingly.

"The committee submit the above recommendations for Your Excellency's approval."

There were three Orders in Council passed from 1874 to 1876, two of them in 1876, one in February and one in April, reserving a forty-mile belt through what everybody admits is an excellent part of that country, because the Government might require it hereafter for the building of the railway.

Mr. WATSON. Hon. gentlemen on that side of the House claimed that about twenty miles each side of that track is of no use, that it was nothing but a muskeg swamp.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). All I can say to the hon. gentleman is that the reservation by the first Order in Council was not at that point at all, it was on the ordinary Prince Albert trail, west of Portage la Prairie where the hon. gentleman lives. It reserved the Prince Albert district, the Battleford district and the Edmonton district, all admittedly good lands, and it reserved them up to Jasper House. The hon. gentleman surely does not pretend to say that the whole of the country for twenty miles on each side of the railway was unfit for settlement, that the Government seriously contemplated building a railway from Selkirk to Jasper House through a country that was not fit for settlement. On the contrary, the Order in Council which I have read states that the reason for the reservation was that the country was so attractive for settlers that they would probably go in there and squat. Then, Sir, on the 9th November, 1877, there was this report:

"On a report dated 30th October, 1877, from the hon. the Minister of the Interior, stating that in consequence of the rapidly increasing demand for lands for settlement in Manitoba, and also of the continued dissatisfaction at the locking up of the lands withdrawn for twenty miles on each side of the line surveyed for the Canadian Pacific Railway by the Order in Council of the 26th December, 1874, he is of opinion —

Here is a modification—

"that it is expedient to effect some amelioration of the conditions of the said Order in Council so far as relates to the lands within the Province."

Only the land within the Province, nothing beyond—

"He, therefore, recommends that the lands in Manitoba withdrawn as above be thrown open to actual settlement, but not for homestead or pre-emption entry, or for entry by military bounty or police warrants, or for ordinary sale; no person to be allowed to acquire more than one-half section, or 320 acres, and such land to be paid for by the occupant at whatever rate and upon such terms as may be fixed therefor by the Government when the remainder of the lands in the Province of this class are disposed of.

"He further recommends that persons desiring to acquire such lands shall, previous to settlement thereon, be required to be entered therefor at the nearest Dominion Lands office; and in order to prove their good faith, the applicants shall be obliged in each case to make a payment in advance, at the time of entry, of $1 per acre in cash on account of the purchase, and further be required to settle on and commence to cultivate the land within one year from the date of entry, or in default thereof the payment so made to be forfeited.

"No scrip of any kind, or military bounty, or police warrants, to be receivable in payment of the lands above described.

"The Minister observes that the withdrawal of the lands in question was effected under section 105 of the Dominion Lands Act, circumstances not permitting the application thereto of the Act 37 Vic., cap. 14, which provides for the construction of the railway, and as no statute exists authorising the special mode above suggested of disposing of the lands withdrawn, it will be advisable to confirm the action proposed to be taken as above in that respect, by legislation during the ensuing Session of Parliament.

"The committee concur in the foregoing report, and recommend that the same be approved and acted on."

Then came the first Order in Council passed after the present Government came in, on the 24th October, 1879:

"On a report, dated 22nd October, 1879, from the hon. the Minister of the Interior, stating that the provisions recently made for the disposal of certain public lands set apart for the purposes of the Canadian Pacific Railway have rendered it expedient that the Order in Council of the 9th November, 1877, respecting the lands reserved for twenty miles on each side of the then surveyed line of the Canadian Pacific Railway through the Province of Manitoba, should be cancelled, and he recommends that the same be cancelled accordingly.

"The committee submit the above reccommendation for Your Excellency's approval."

Thus one of the very first things this Government did was to cancel this Order in Council under which settlers coming in had to pay $1 down in cash at the time of entry, and were to commence their settlement duties and perform them as they are required to do now, when they get the land for nothing, and if they failed to perform them they were to forfeit the payment they had made, and in addition to this they were subject to any other payment Government might exact from them after the railway was built. And hon. gentlemen who adopted that principle in the North-West actually talk about the illiberality of the policy of the present Government, under which, with railway facilities furnished, within the 20-mile belt—or within the one-mile belt, after the time had passed when it was necessary to make the reservation to prevent speculative settlement—even within the mile belt, people can settle on their homestead and get 160 acres of land for nothing, by the simple performance of the ordinary duties under which they were able to get it for $1 down, and such further sum as the Government might impose on them, under the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, I think I may fairly say, under these circumstances, that it does not lie in the mouth of hon. gentlemen opposite to talk about the land policy of the Government as being illiberal, or to refer to the reservations made from time to time by this Government—reservations which may have been wise or not, but which at that time were pressed upon the Government upon the ground that the lands were going to be so valuable that it would be a pity to allow them to go, because the Government might through them largely recoup the country for the expenditure on the Canadian Pacific Railway. Looked at now after the event, with the experience of the last three or four years, with the bursting of the boom then upon us, and which dazzled the minds of the best business men in Canada, it may be all right to turn around and say we ought not to have done so. Personally I wish it had not been done, I think it was a mistake to do it—I have no hesitation in saying that—but that is a piece of wisdom after the event, which is a very cheap commodity. It was done in accordance with the best business sentiment of this country and of Manitoba. But it did not last long and that land was open for settlement. I think the reservation only lasted about a year, if I remember rightly. Then, Sir, as to the reservation of the mile belt. Why, everyone knows that at that time there was a boom with regard to town lots, and a disposition to squat in the hope of getting a town lot, and it was desirable to reserve the mile belt on each side until the railway was built and the stations were fixed. The mile belt was then thrown open, and settlers can go in there now and settle. Then the hon. gentleman states that the land was locked up from settlement by colonisation companies. Nothing of the kind. No colonisation tract interfered in the slightest degree with the even sections. Every even section is open to homestead and pre-emption, the same as lands in any other part of the North-West and anybody can go in there and settle upon them. I believe one of the things which has caused the absence of so large an influx of population into the North-West as many believed would have taken place, and as we regret has not taken place, has been the persistent efforts of the hon. gentlemen opposite to decry our land policy, to impress upon people going in there that there was something very bad in our land laws, something which prevented their getting as good a chance as they would find in Dakota and Minnesota, and in addition to that was the fact there was already a large Canadian population in those States, attracting their neighbors to go there instead of going into our own territory. It ought, however, to be remembered when hon. gentlemen tell us that the population of the North-West to-day has not much increased—and I have heard persons say that the population has not increased—that when the census was taken in 1881 all that part of Manitoba which is west of the old western boundary was in the North-West; and when I tell hon. gentlemen that in one constituency, Selkirk, represented by Mr. Sutherland, which is largely within that new Territory, there are 15,000 voters on the list, it cannot be contended that there has not been a considerable influx of population into that country.

Mr. WATSON. When the hon. Minister talks about 15,000 voters being on the list, perhaps he will tell us how many are resident voters?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is a conundrum. Probably the member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) is on the list; I do not know.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no doubt I am.

Mr. WATSON. That list may embrace almost everyone n this House. No doubt, the Minister of the Interior himself is on the list. I am glad to know that the Minister has come to the conclusion that the railway route laid down by the late Administration ran through a good tract of country. When the hon. gentleman talks about the reservation on the Portage plains, it must be remembered that they did not come into that reservation, because it was more than twenty miles from the proposed railway tract. The hon. gentleman got away back to 1876, to find out that the Mackenzie Government reserved a block of four miles square for a town site at Battleford. That is a small thing to bring up. The hon. gentleman has, however, seen fit to justify the reservation of a mile belt the full length of the railway. I am not here to justify any wrong-doing that might have occurred during the late Administration. If I see any wrongs committed in the administration of affairs in the North-West it is my duty to point them out, and two wrongs do not make one right. The old reply is made, and steps are at once taken to hunt up an old Order in Council of the Mackenzie Administration. In regard to the North-West, which is a new country, we ought to learn from experience. That being the case, the hon. gentleman should not use those arguments in replying to statements made from this side of the House.

Mr. WALLACE (York). The hon. gentleman who has just sat down was a little inconsistent in his remarks. He told us that he believed in that country; and yet on every occasion he decries that country.

Mr. WATSON. No.

Mr. WALLACE (York). The hon. gentleman never rises to his feet but he takes occasion during the greater portion of his remarks to run down the North-West——

Mr. WATSON. No.

Mr. WALLACE (York)—to run down that country which gives him a living and which sends him here as a representative. The hon. gentleman says the objection to the North-West is the iniquitous land laws. I remember when the land laws were being discussed here four years ago. That hon. gentleman took an active part in amending the Act; he came down to the front seat and criticised almost every clause. He was satisfied with the Bill.

Mr. WATSON. No.

Mr. WALLACE (York). That was his course. Hansard will show how he has decried the country, and also how he was satisfied with the Land Bill.

Mr. WATSON. The Hansard will show that I proposed amendments which were voted down.

Mr. WALLACE (York). The hon. gentleman said the amendments then made were almost identical with his views as to what they should be. The Hansard will also show the hon. gentleman's inconsistency. He states that the lands were locked up by being placed in the hands of colonisation companies. The Minister of the Interior has shown that such is not the fact, that there is not a particle of truth in that assertion, that every even numbered section in those tracts is open for settlement as is any other portion of the North-West, and those even sections have always been so. The hon. gentleman, however, says they are locked up by colonisation companies, and yet he tells us in the same breath that those same colonisation companies who were locking up the land are so exceedingly anxious to get settlers that they are willing to give $10 each to get them from the railway lands. I do not know what logic there is in such remarks. We have a large colonisation tract many miles from the railway; we have put there 231 homesteaders during the last four years, drawn from England, Ireland and Scotland. We have sent out agents there this year and we are getting a large number to come out from the old country to settle on our tract in the North-West. We went to the United States, to the State of Illinois, and got fifteen homesteaders who had gone from the county of York in 1876-77 when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. They went to the North-West and settled in York colony, and are well satisfied to-day. The hon. gentleman has also spoken about railway monopoly. We have a great railway in the North-West and we are rapidly getting more railways. It cannot be contradicted that we have lower rates for freight and for passengers than any American railway in the American North-West. We have greater facilities. We know that last year thousands of bushels of wheat were sent from the American side and brought into the Dominion and sent over our railways, paying the duty, and they were sent by our route because the rates were much cheaper than the American lines. Yet hon. gentlemen opposite take occasion every time they speak here, and still more in their campaign speeches, to decry the North-West and make statements which are utterly devoid of fact. I hope hon. gentlemen will learn, if they learn nothing else, to have a little patriotism in their remarks.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is scarcely necessary to allude to anything said by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, in regard to the hon. member for Marquette running down the North-West. I think no one in the House will be prepared to receive that statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think not. Unfortunately for the hon. gentleman who made that statement, we have had an instance of the length to which he is prepared to make statements under the excitement of debate, when he sought to lead the country to understand that certain telegrams, known to be forgeries and fabrications, were genuine documents. The House will not be prepared to receive with any degree of marked confidence any statement the hon. gentleman may make, and members of the House know that the member behind me (Mr. Watson) stands to-day the only recognised true representative of Manitoba and the North-West Territories.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh! as a Grit?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). And the people of Manitoba and the North-West recognise him as such a representative and openly declare it, and the hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace) cannot hope to damage the reputation of the hon. gentleman in the eyes of members of this House and in the eyes of the people whose interests he represents. The charge that gentlemen on this side go about decrying their country is one which hon. gentlemen opposite have so often made that possibly they may actually believe it themselves. The hon. member for South Huron told them, as he always told them, that we have there a country which was superior in many respects to the western States; and that has been the unvarying sentiment of gentlemen on this side. We have pointed out that the climate is equally as good, that the soil is, if anything, more fertile, and that, while we may deplore the visitations of storms and tornadoes among the people of the western States, we could rejoice in the marked advantage we possessed over them in that respect. That is what we have said, and it gives additional force to the statements made by the Opposition, who do not decry the country, but decry the Government whose energies seem to be bent upon doing what in them lies to retard its progress, instead of aiding in its development. They must not make the mistake that they are continually making, of thinking that they and the country are synonymous terms. The country is all right; it is the Government we complain of. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. White) went as far back as the land regulations of 1874, and, while I shall not follow him in all he said, there is a point I shall mention incidentally, that as far back even as 1874 there were a great many people in that country; and in 1880 when the census was taken, under the Administration of that country by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, we had, at any rate, 122,000 souls in that country. Now, under the administration of these hon. gentlemen, after tens of millions of dollars have been expended to build a railway, with a railway completed there, with an expenditure of millions upon millions of the people's money in order to promote immigration, what is the record of hon. gentlemen in that land of ours, that is a better home for settlers than is offered to them in the western States? What have they accomplished? Why, Sir, they have put in less that 51,000 in those five years, with the expenditure of all that money. We maintain that the expenditure of that money, which is being spent to promote immigration, has failed in its object, and if, for a moment, the attention of the committee was diverted from that question, it was to point out, by the fact of the small increase in the population there, that the vote of that money, which if wisely applied would have had a beneficial influence, has been thwarted by other influences which have been sinister in their nature. The Minister found fault with the hon. member for Huron for stating that he did not accept the figures of his Department, and I must say here, as the hon. member for South Huron said, that in making these statements the Minister of Agriculture must not understand them as personal attacks upon himself. He has done what is a manly thing on his part. He has assumed to answer for, and to be responsible for, his Department, and in that respect he deserves credit over and above his illustrious immediate predecessor, inasmuch as he does rise to defend his Department and does not sit dumb, as that gentleman did, not answering a question or defending his administration. But let us take the Minister on his own basis. He says: I assume the correctness of these figures; I stand by the figures which have been compiled by my Department. Then, when I made an interjection, he seemed to think that I was glad that there were not so many immigrants as the figures show; and I said no; that I would rejoice if it were so, but that I could not take his own figures as proving such a result. Another hon. gentleman objects because the hon. member for South Huron said that a great many people have gone out of the country, and they say they have not. Their proposition is then that all the figures given us by the Department of Agriculture, with reference to immigrants coming into this country, are correct, and their other statement is that people have not left the country to go to the United States. The Minister of Agriculture has given to this House, year after year, the following statements, as he can find out for himself; that, between 1880 and 1885, 154,403 souls went into Manitoba and the North-West Territories. The Minister says these figures are correct; I stand by them. Very well. We had according to the census—we are not taking American figures but the census compiled by that gentleman's own Department, and he says I stand by those figures—we had according to the census in 1880, 122,400 souls there. Therefore, according to the hon. gentleman's own figures, we had in 1885, 276,803 in that country. Now, Sir, we have the gentleman's own figures of the estimates of the population of the Province of Manitoba in the year 1885, because they made a settlement with that Province upon it, and, according to those figures, the population of Manitoba was 125,000. Then, Sir, we have the figures furnished by that hon. gentleman's Department, in 1885, of the number of souls by actual count in the three districts of the North-West Territories in that year, and the number was 48,363 souls, Indians and all included. Therefore, according to the hon. gentleman's own set of figures, there were in 1885 actually 173,363 souls in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and, according to another set of the hon. gentleman's own figures, which he will stand by, there should be there 276,803 souls. These are all his own figures, and he says he will abide by them. I have not used any figures but those from his own Department, and, therefore, there is a discrepancy of 103,410 souls, or that number less than he says went into that country. Now, if that be so, how will the other hon. gentleman maintain his proposition that none have gone out? Will the Minister of Marine rise and state again, with such a jaunty air, that the hon. member for South Huron made a statement, but that he did not prove it? There are 103,410 people that, according to the Minister, went into that country, who are not there now; and therefore, if not there, they must have gone away. I am bound to say that my own opinion is not that those 103,410 went into the country and left it; but I do believe, from a number of circumstances, that many more did leave it than we could have desired. But while I do not believe that number have gone, yet I am of necessity impelled to take the position that the figures which have been furnished by the Department to this House and to the country are not correct, and cannot be correct. If the one set is right the other is wrong, and if one is wrong we have no reliance upon any of them. The hon. gentleman says the same system is pursued now as was pursued under the Mackenzie Administration. Then that hon. gentleman found fault with the figures taken at Port Huron when they said that the United States officials there gave us crooked reports. We had the officer from that place, and we had his testimony that precisely the same rule was followed in counting the immigrants from Canada to the United States at that port during the time they said the figures were false, that the same system exactly prevailed that prevailed at the time of the Mackenzie Administration, and, therefore, the same result would follow. Take the American statistics and compare the number that left during the time of the Mackenzie régime with the number that left during the régime of the present Administration, and you will see how greatly augmented has been the exodus of our people. Now, Sir, these are facts; these are arguments based on positions hon. gentlemen opposite themselves have taken; and all their airy speeches and denunciations of gentlemen on this side of the House for lack of patriotism go for nothing at all. These statements must be met. I wish the Minister of Marine had been in his place, he would have seen that there is a way of proving the statement made be the hon. member for South Huron that the people ary leaving the country. There are the figures, and either he must admit that 103,000 have gone out, or that the figures the Minister of Agriculture gave are not correct. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Ferguson), speaking of the charge that the system of the Government had made living in the North-West very dear, stated that a Canadian plough could be bought there as cheaply as an American plough, and it was as good a plough—that it was nothing but sentiment against the Canadian plough that existed in the mind of the people. I am glad to know that; but I will ask the hon. gentleman how he will justify the Government in stipulating, in their advertisements for Indian supplies year after year, that the plough to be given to the Indians should be the John Deer plough. The Indian Department would not have a Canadian plough, and the reason the First Minister gave and brought down in a report of the Department, was that the Canadian plough was unfit for the work. How will the hon. gentleman justify such statements made by the First Minister and his Department?

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). How long ago was it that he made that declaration?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If the hon. gentleman will take the trouble to go up to the Routine and Records Office and ask for a return I obtained of tenders for supplies to the Indian Department he will see that that is reported.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). In what year?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think it was under discussion last year or the year before; and the hon. gentleman said that these Canadian ploughs have been as good for years.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). Two or three years.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That has been done for three years. Whether the John Deer plough was specified in the tenders of this year, I do not know, but it was last year, because when I asked the First Minister, he said the form of tender was the same as it had been the year before. The line of argument adopted by the Minister of Marine was like the line we are told the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson), adopted in another place, when testimony was being given regarding the immigration into the North-West. A glowing account was being given of the thousands of Americans who were going into our territory; and one gentleman who knew that country well felt that that statement was not correct, that it was impossible that such a number could go in; and he felt compelled, from his own knowledge, to contradict the statement. Then the hon. member for North Perth begged for pity's sake that he should not say it is so, whether it is true or not, so as to boom the country. In the same way the Minister of Marine regrets the statements made; if things are not as good as they are set forth by the Department, it is not well to point that out; it is not well to let the people know these things, because if you adopt the plan of telling them that these statements are not true, that there are not so many people in the country as there were said to have been, the tendency will be to dampen the ardor of those intending to go into the country. Is that the policy to be deliberately adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite? Is it an honest policy? If it be not an honest policy it cannot succeed. Does the hon. member for North Perth not know that the line he takes, that in advertising our country we are to deliberately misrepresent it, and paint in glowing colors that which it does not possess, is like the policy of a merchant who advertises great bargains which he does not give, and is declared by his disappointed customers to be a deceiver, and the consequence is that his business is ruined? Does he not know that if we spread abroad reports which are not founded in fact, and bring people into the country who might have been satisfied with it if the truth had been told without exaggeration, people will find their glowing anticipations disappointed, and what will be the result? Why, Sir, letters of disappointment will go to warn the friends left behind not to come to the country; and I venture to say, without fear of contradiction from hon. gentlemen opposite, that a letter from a bonâ fide settler expressing disappointment and regret at what he found in this country, going back to his native land and among his own people, will have a greater deterrent effect on those who intended to come than even 10,000 of the hon. gentleman's pamphlets can overcome. This whole system of assisted immigration in the hands of the present Government has been a great, an utter failure. The hon. gentleman wants proof. I will give him another proof. I have proven from their own figures that the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite has been a lamentable failure in Manitoba and the North-West; but what has been its effects in the rest of the Dominion? There is a simple way of working it out. The estimated population of the Dominion of Canada this year, as given by the Minister of Finance—and I suppose hon. gentlemen opposite will accept his authority—is 4,700,000.

Mr. McLELAN. I claimed 4,800,000; but I took off 100,000 to accommodate hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Well, take 4,800,000. When the census was taken in 1881 the population was 4,324,810. Now, I suppose hon. gentlemen opposite will agree with me that 2 per cent. per annum is a very low rate to take for the natural increase of a country, especially a country like Canada. That we know is below the natural increase. But if I estimate the natural increase on 4,324,810 for five years at that rate, making the simple calculation without compounding it, without a single immigrant coming in during the five years, we should have had this year 4,750,290, or 57,290 souls more than the Minister of Finance claimed we had. There is another proof taken from the hon. gentleman's own figures; and in face of all this hon. gentlemen opposite rise and say that gentlemen making these statements are making statements without foundation. I have given the figures on which we have based our conclusions, and I have some more remarks to make, but will take my seat to give the Minister an opportunity of explaining these figures.

Mr. HESSON. I suppose, as long as we have an immigration policy, we will have these debates from time to time. No doubt it will never be possible to satisfy hon. gentlemen opposite that we are likely to get value for our money, or that our expenditure on immigration is at all a wise outlay, but when they were in office, they did everything possible also to encourage immigration. They did not succeed to the extent they desired, or to any extent which their expenditure might justify, but we are not disposed to find fault with them for that. What we found fault with them for, at the time, was that they took no means to procure employment for the immigrants after bringing them out. Whether their expenditure on immigration was wise or unwise, their treatment of their immigrants was most unwise. Whether the immigrant happened to be a mechanic or a laboring man, he found on his arrival that there was no employment to be obtained by him. On the other hand, if there is one thing that marks the conduct of this Government more than another, it is their anxiety to find employment for the class of people who come to our shores. Hon. gentlemen opposite have said, over and over again, that it is no part of the duty of the Government to bring out people who are not able to take care of themselves. But we do not assist that class.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). You do.

Mr. HESSON. Not to anything like the extent the Government of hon. gentlemen opposite did. We are not doing it at all. Distinct instructions are given to our agents everywhere, and I can appeal to the report of the Commissioner of Immigration for Ontario, Mr. Hardy, to prove it has not been done, and that there is no desire to do so.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Commission on children at $2 each, $2,450, and on children under 12 years at $2.00¾ each, $4,071.21.

Mr. HESSON. I had no idea the hon. gentleman was so rude. He will have his opportunity to speak by-and-bye, and should not interrupt me; I did not interfere with him when he was speaking.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I beg your pardon.

Mr. HESSON. I was referring to the fact the report of the Ontario Commissioner of Immigration does not bear out the statements made to-night with regard to the expenditure of this Government or that of the Ontario Government, being in the direction of bringing out people unable to take care of themselves. The hon. member for Brant contends that we ought to have 276,000 souls in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, but I desire to point out the fact that the hon. gentleman, however anxious he may be to be accurate in his statements, still requires to be watched, as he has omitted altogether from his reckoning the fact that a large territory has been added to Manitoba, which was not counted in at the time the census was taken.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What has that to do with it. I took both Manitoba and the North-West Territories.

Mr. HESSON. You took the census of 1881.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Which included the Territories.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). You do not understand the thing.

Mr. HESSON. You omitted the whole settlement from the original boundary of Manitoba to Alberta.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Will the hon. gentleman allow me to state?

Mr. HESSON. You will have your opportunity just now. The hon. gentleman has also omitted, in his anxiety to be honest, to refer to the fact that a very large number of people have left Manitoba and the North-West to go to British Columbia. That was pointed out to him by one of the hon. gentlemen who represent British Columbia, but he omits it altogether. This only shows how anxious the hon. gentleman is to belittle the efforts made to induce people to come into the country. If the hon. gentleman had his ears open when the Minister of the Interior read the Orders in Council which were passed when the Mackenzie Government were in power, and heard described the course they pursued with reference to their Orders in Council, he would have been able to find a sufficient reason for our not having as many settlers in the North West as would otherwise have been there. What was the conduct of the hon. gentlemen opposite when in office? They shut out settlement along the line of railway by hindering squatters and settlers taking up lands, and compelling them if they wanted to settle, to purchase the land at any price the Government might choose to name. Was that such an inducement as the hon. gentleman would suppose would lead to settlers coming into the country? If hon. gentlemen opposite had then pursued a liberal policy; if they had given homesteads to the settlers, we would have no talk about an exodus to the States, but would have kept all our settlers in the country. We are of course, I presume, in this House all actuated by the same desire to see our country prosper, but it is lamentable to find on every occasion, when the North-West question is brought up, men in this House, who profess to represent Manitoba, always willing to look on the dark side and present that Province in a very gloomy light. Referring to the select committee which was held some years ago, to which the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has alluded, a statement was made by a witness before the committee who had lived in southern Manitoba on the borders of the United States, and therefore knew what he was talking about, the correctness of which the hon. gentleman denied, although he admitted he had not travelled very far in Manitoba, having scarcely gone west of Portage la Prairie. When he challenged the statement I said: For heaven's sake do not try again to damage your own country, when there are gentlemen here who are trying to give evidence as to its prospects and probabilities of settlement. You should rather be glad to hear his statement instead of trying to throw doubt on them. I say it is these things that we have reason to find fault with, that the hon. gentleman should stand by or sit in the presence of anyone who will try to decry and injure the reputation of his own country. We have great reason to be proud of the progress that country is making, and, when we consider the difficulties that farmers have had everywhere to surmount, not only there but in all parts of Canada, the wonder is that they have succeeded so well. Hon. gentlemen have no right to stand up here and continually charge the Government with damaging that country by their policy. The land policy of the Government is the most liberal that the hon. gentleman can point to on this continent. There never was a more liberal policy. The whole object of the Government has been to make those people content and happy and prosperous, to give them railway accommodation at the earliest possible moment, and that has been accomplished to an amazing extent, beyond the most sanguine hopes of the friends of the North-West; but with all that, with a free grant of land and a most liberal policy for the improvement of that land, giving them the opportunity to go away for six months in the year and make a living, which they, perhaps, could not make on the new place, and helping them to put up their buildings and make their improvements and get their implements and put in their crops, gentlemen on the other side denounce the policy of the Government and say it is illiberal, and that it is the fault of that policy that the country is not being settled. I say it is shameful to make such statements.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. HESSON. I state it, and I am not out of order; and no gentleman who has the success of that country truly at heart would deliberately make such statements or say that we have not given a liberal policy to the people of the North-West. They ought to know better, and they do know better in their hearts, but, in order to make some attack upon the Government, to damage them, if possible, in the estimation of the public who may not have the advantage of knowing all the ins and outs of the Government policy in the treatment of the North-West, in the hope of damaging the Government somewhere where the public cannot hear all these things, they make the statements they do and give them to the press of their side to scatter through the country. The hon. gentlemen know perfectly well that the Government have done all they could to give those people not only liberal land laws, but every other advantage, and to enable them to have free homes and to be contented and happy and prosperous. It remains for hon. gentlemen opposite to talk about the early frosts in that country. I said I would give a few items from the report of the Hon. Mr. Hardy, Commissioner of Immigration in Ontario, and the reason is that the hon. gentleman said we were filling the country with paupers, that the Government were bringing out pauper immigration. I deny that, and will quote the words of Mr. Hardy and his agents, and I think we can prove that that is not the policy of the Government.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is all Hardy says correct?

Mr. MACKINTOSH. You think so.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do, a great part of it. I am glad the hon. gentleman accepts it.

Mr. HESSON. We have here the report of Peter Byrne, Esq., Ontario Immigration Agent, Liverpool, England, he says:

"I have the honor to report that the work of disseminating information regarding the Province of Ontario throughout the United Kingdom has been carried on by this agency during the past year by the same methods as heretofore, though on a more restricted scale, namely, by advertising in the public press, distribution of pamphlets, maps and other printed matter at agricultural shows, &c., by conferences with intending emigrants, correspondence, &c. These various means have not been called into requisition to the same extent as in previous years owing to the very decided falling off in the demand for information on the part of the emigrating parties. In fact the tide of emigration so far as concerns the British Isles has touched the lowest ebb during the past season that it has reached for several years."

Hon. gentlemen think that, in the face of a report like that, showing the difficulties which the agents have to encounter, this Government should have accomplished a great amount of work, and they would have all the agents withdrawn because we have not accomplished all we desired; but I think the Minister made it very clear that we brought out our immigrants at a much less cost——

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Only they did not stay.

Mr. HESSON. That was accomplished by the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not one in ten stayed.

Mr. HESSON. I thought I had pointed out that the Government did endeavor to give them employment when they came here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, they do not.

Mr. HESSON. Well, they do, to a very great extent. They have given every opportunity to these people to get employment by encouraging the industries of the country. The hon. gentlemen know that. I do not want to debate that part of it. The Government took that course in order to give employment to those who came so that they might have a good report to send back to their friends. So much for that. You see the tide of emigration was not large, to start with. Now, what further do they say? This is from another immigrant agent:

"The health of the immigrants during the past season has been remarkably good. In fact there has not been a single case requiring medical aid brought to my notice during the year, something that has not previously happened in all of my sixteen years' service. It has been impossible for me to supply the demand in my district for farm laborers and female servants, and I trust more of these classes will be sent to me next season.

"R. MACPHERSON,
"Government Immigration Agent."

Now we will hear what another gentleman says in his report:

"The numbers this year remaining in Ontario fall short of those of 1881 by some 2,063, but the class of immigrants was, however, superior to those of former years, and with very few exceptions were able to pay their way to their destination or to where work was to be obtained. The demand for farm laborers during the past year has not been quite so brisk as formerly, owing to the introduction of machinery, but we have always had applications in excess of the number arriving. The principal demand at present is for skilled farm hands and domestic servants."

Just the very people we are endeavoring to bring out. The Minister has repeated it in this House and elsewhere, but hon. gentlemen still endeavor to make it appear that the Government are bringing out all sorts of people, whether they are able to paddle their own canoe or not:

"The principal demand at present is for skilled farm hands and domestic servants, the applications for the latter class, especially in the country parts, being far in excess of the supply."

What do hon. gentlemen say to that? Then there is another very interesting item here. The hon. gentleman referred to the publication of pamphlets and their distribution in the old country. They happen to refer to that here:

"I have much pleasure in alluding to a pamphlet published during the course of the year by H. B. Small, Esq., of the Bureau of Agriculture, Ottawa, on the industries and manufactures of Canada, in which the fullest information is given in a condensed form which cannot help attracting the intending immigrant with capital to our shores. Time, patience, and a vast amount of labor has been expended in compiling this valuable work which cannot be too largely circulated throughout Europe and elsewhere. Of the rapid growth of our city, I can only repeat what appears in the columns of our newspapers from day to day, that it is simply marvellous. New houses and manufactories are going up in every direction. The value of buildings erected in the city during the past year has been estimated at over $3,000,000. This alone will show the rapid strides this city is taking. Its growth in the past has been without a parallel in Canadian history, and its position is such as to make it the distributing point for manufactured and other goods for the whole Province. The great inducement held out to farmers by the demand in England for Canadian cattle and sheep has been the means of introducing a far superior stock in the market, and farmers and breeders are now turning their attention more to the improvement both in their stock and lands."

Now that is from Donaldson, the Toronto agent. I suppose, if that report is unreliable, the Minister would not accept it. He has been there for many years.

"There is also a decrease of 2,449 passing through Manitoba and the North-West Territories from the United States owing to the late unsettled state of the Territories caused by the North-West rebellion, and the unfounded and injurious reports put into circulation by interested parties in Canada."

I would like the committee to observe that. I hope the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) will pay some attention to that instead of whispering to his friends round him.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Speak a little louder, please.

Mr. HESSON. Let the hon. gentleman wake up; then he can hear me.

"There is also a decrease of 2,449 passing through to Manitoba and the North-West Territories from the United States, owing to the late unsettled state of the Territories, caused by the North-West rebellion, and the unfounded and injurious reports put into circulation by interested parties in Canada, and by real estate agents, land companies and railway companies owning land in Dakota and other States and Territories of the American Union."

He states the reason exactly: There are parties in this country who are interested in reporting in favor of another land than ours.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Who wrote that?

Mr. HESSON. Mr. John Smith, Dominion Immigration Agent at Hamilton. He goes on to say:

"There is also a decrease of 35,929 immigrants reported as passing through this agency to the western States. The decrease may be attributed to the falling off of immigration to New York, and the cut rate of $1 fare made by the Pennsylvania Railway Company over their system from Philadelphia and New York to Chicago and intermediate points. The immigrants arriving at this agency and settling in the Dominion during the past season have been of a superior class, and with very few exceptions did not require any assistance.

"There has been an active demand for all kinds of agricultural and general laborers, which it was impossible to supply, and the demand for female domestic servants, both for the city and country, was largely in excess of the arrivals, and a large number of the applicants had to return without obtaining the desired help.

"Mechanics.—The demands still continue light, the number of arrivals being in proportion to the demand, the number as already stated only amounting to thirty-six hands, including the St. Lawrence and United States route.

"Mill Operatives.—The reported arrivals this year being less than any other previous season, have readily found employment, the demand being in excess of the supply. At present the mills are badly in want of weavers, some of the managers being compelled to advertise in the States for operatives to keep pace with the growing demands for fabrics, several of the mills being running entirely on orders."

Now we have something further. I told the hon. gentleman that I would prove by their own friends that there had been no immigration to Dakota, or, at least, it has been much less than they stated.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do you call John Smith one of our friends?

Mr. HESSON. He is reporting to one of your commissioners?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). He is a Dominion agent.

Mr. HESSON. If the report had not been correct they would not have received it:

"There has also been a large falling off in Canadians leaving for the north-west States, and the movement to Dakota may be said to have entirely ceased, the railway land companies and real estate agents having withdrawn their agent from Canada. Their field of operations is broken so far as relates to this Province, the advantages offered by the Dominion Government in Manitoba and the North-West Territories being of a more liberal character, the land and climate being better, and the country free from cyclones and floods."

Here is another item:

"Referring to the low price of coals, the American coal companies have deducted the whole of the Canadian duties on large contracts in addition to the regular discount allowed to the Canadian dealers."

Then, I find in the report of Mr. Smyth, of London, that he says:

"The demand for farm laborers was good during the whole of the spring and summer months; in fact, as usual, in excess of our supplies, and at fair wages.

"The demand for female servants during the whole season was large for cooks, housemaids, general servants, laundresses, &c., and at good wages, but they could not be supplied, as so few of that class can get so far west as London.

"The general health of the immigrants arriving this season was excellent; they were, also, of a very good class.

"We shall, to all appearance, have the usual demand for farm and ordinary laborers for country work the coming season."

So much for that report. I hope hon. gentlemen are satisfied that the Government have been endeavoring not only to spend money wisely, but to bring out a class of immigrants who would be useful to the country. There can be no desire on the part of the Government to bring out any other kind. I must say, however, that some of the most valuable and successful of our citizens came here, perhaps, on assisted passages, unable to pay their own way; so it is not well always to measure results by the amount of money an individual may have in his pocket; very often he may dissipate the money he brings over with him, and is left helpless and stranded. I have here a report of the Hon. Mr. Hardy, of the Province of Ontario, for the year 1885, printed by order of the Legislative Assembly, so I suppose hon. gentlemen opposite will accept it as reliable:

"From the beginnig of August to the end of October there was a steady demand for farm laborers, especially for single men. More than double the amount that arrived could have found employment by the year at fair wages. Of one large lot of practical and experienced farm hands, thirty reached Toronto at 5 a.m, their expected arrival having been published in the morning papers, and before noon all had been engaged at wages ranging from $144 to $150 per annum with maintenance. It must, however, be understood that only experienced men are wanted by the year."

Well, we say so. We don't say anything else.

"A single man who can plough well, and who has had some experience in taking care of stock, can readily obtain employment at $150 per annum with maintenance, with a prospect of considerable increase if he should be found to be a good trustworthy man. Should thirty or forty come together, and advise the Department on their arrival at Quebec, farmers would certainly be in waiting in Toronto to employ them. Farmers have so often been disappointed in coming for men that they do not now feel disposed to come to meet immigrants unless they have some assurance of success."

I hope the hon. gentleman is satisfied that there has not been an over immigration in that Department. I have felt called upon to make these remarks as a member of a committee working in the interest of immigration, and I hope that all the members of that committee desire with me that we may have a good class of immigrants and plenty of them, because we have abundant room, a fine climate, and the best of land, everything, in fact, that settlers could desire. If they have only muscle and energy, they ought to succeed. Hon. gentlemen opposite must know that the Government have been endeavoring to have the land laws of the North-West so satisfactory that no man would have a right to complain, or to leave his land on account of the conditions. The Minister of the Interior has pointed out what circumstances would compel them to leave our country and go to another where the conditions are worse. Hon. gentlemen will admit that south of the line they have frost, perhaps, more severe than we have, and cyclones, storms and floods, with damage to crops, life and property, to an extent that we never have in our own North-West. They have worse land laws. There, a man has to live five years on a place, and make more improvements than is required here, before he can get his patent. Then, if they go over the line, they go to the country that has a much heavier taxation than we have.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not at all.

Mr. HESSON. I venture to say there is not one single individual in Canada to-day who will make that statement but yourself.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will most assuredly.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Minister of the Interior made it during the Budget debate.

Mr. HESSON. Will the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) have patience. He occupies about half the time of the House, and to-night he was obliged to speak on the items for all the different agencies. There was no one from any of the Provinces that could take charge of the items specially affecting them, and that hon. gentleman had to wander from one end of the country to the other finding fault with the expenditure of the Government. I say the condition of things in our North-West is infinitely superior to that of the country where emigrants are going. Our railways are better and cheaper, our land laws are better, in fact our whole system is very much better than that in Dakota, and the chances of the settlers are better; and why then should people leave our country and go to the United States?

An hon. MEMBER. Why?

Mr. HESSON. It is only because hon. gentlemen here are not sufficiently resolute in placing the claims of our North-West before the people of Canada. Some are unwise enough to make statements in regard to the American North-West which are not true and which are not capable of being proved, and our people taking those gentlemen at their word believe those statements and go to the American North-West, where nine out of ten of them regret they are a few years afterwards.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I only rise for the purpose of replying to the hon. gentleman who attacked my figures and gave what I conceive to be a misstatement with respect to them. He has not attempted to answer them, but has simply chosen to make a statement which I do not understand to be correct. He said that when I have the figures I gave them incorrect and withheld something in regard to them. I give that an emphatic denial. I read from Hansard:

"Mr. CHARLTON asked, What was the estimated population of Keewatin, Manitoba and the North-West Territories at the close of the year 1885 and upon what data is the estimate given?

Mr. CARLING. The estimated population of Manitoba was 125,000, arrived at for the purpose of the recent financial arrangements with that Province."

Those are the figures I gave, and they apply to enlarged Manitoba.

Mr. HESSON. You were dealing with an estimate instead of the census.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I am dealing with the whole Province in regard to which the arrangement was made.

Mr. HESSON. An estimate, not a census.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is not the point on which the hon. gentleman attacked me. He said some territory of the North-West had been added to Manitoba and I left that out. I have given the hon. gentleman, in answer, the whole population of enlarged Manitoba up to the close of the year 1885. Will the hon. gentleman pretend to say that there was some new territory taken into Manitoba after the close of that year? That is virtually what he did.

Mr. HESSON. I did not say so. I said, you are dealing with an estimate in the one case and with figures taken from the departmental returns in the other case; and that was not fair. If you take the census returns for 1881 you will find a different statement.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I took the census returns for 1881 and I gave the figures of that census; the hon. gentleman has not examined them and does not know the difference. The hon. gentleman chose to say that I made a statement entirely without foundation. I have read from the official documents showing that the population of enlarged Manitoba at the close of 1885 was 125,000. The hon. gentleman knows, or if he did not know he ought to have known, that we had laid on the Table of the House a statement of the population of those Territories, which was 48,363 including Indians, half-breeds and whites. But the hon gentleman says I gave a wrong statement, because there was part of the North-West added to Manitoba and it had not been counted into Manitoba. So the whole argument of the hon. member is utterly without sense, because I have given the population for enlarged Manitoba up to 1885, and it was enlarged some years ago. Therefore the figures I gave were correct and I withheld nothing. If the Department of Agriculture has given us the correct figures the people who went in and were not there when the census was taken in 1881 number 103,410, and we want to know where they have gone. A few words with respect to the so-called liberal land policy of the Government. Is the hon. gentleman sure he is not confusing the Government's timber limit policy with their land policy? No doubt he thinks the timber policy a very liberal one, and it is a very liberal one to members on that side of the House. I am afraid the timber limit policy and the land policy have become confused in the hon. gentleman's mind. In like manner with the enlargement of the boundaries of Manitoba. Then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hesson) complained that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) spoke too much and did not give him an opportunity. The hon. gentleman takes an opportunity however. Scarcely an hon. member addresses the House but the hon. member for Perth is speaking at the same time. He is keeping up a running speech all the time, and I venture to say that the House generally derives about as much information from that speech, in which a sensible man is talking to a sensible man, as the hon. gentleman is talking to himself, as it does from the hon. gentleman's remarks to-night. What did the hon. gentleman mean by reading the report by Mr. Hardy? He also gave the House a report of John Smith. But I would as soon take the testimony of himself as that of John Smith, for he probably knows as much about the people of Dakota as does John Smith. Let me remind the hon. gentleman that we are dealing with figures and with figures furnished by the Department. I want to point out how utterly the Department has failed in this matter. From their own figures they have placed 51,000 extra souls in the North-West and Manitoba in five years, leaving out the natural increase. What did the western States do? When I use these figures which I am about to use, it must be remembered that they were given by the First Minister a few years ago, and therefore I shall be relieved from the charge of want of patriotism in quoting them. The right hon. gentleman told us at that time the population of the western States. He enumerated among others Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin, Illinois, Missouri and Kansas. The area of those combined States was about that of Manitoba and our North-West Territory, and the population that entered those States in ten years was 2,555,000, while we have in five years obtained 51,000 for a similar area of territory. Hon. gentlemen will say: You take the United States, but you must look at the facilities they possess, for it is an old settled country. The Finance Minister said go further back when the hon. member for Huron was speaking of Dakota. Now, this increase of 2,555,000 in those States took place between 1850 and 1860, thirty-five years ago. And who will say that there were greater facilities for settling that territory thirty-five years ago than we possess in Manitoba to-day? and that under circumstances such as they existed, as far back as 35 years and from that to 25 years, they were able in the same area of territory, to place 2,555,000 in ten years, while in five years we have placed barely 51,000. Look at the question any way you will, and the answer that is arrived at—and we arrive at it with feelings of the greatest regret—is that the immigrants alleged to have come into this country with a vast expenditure of money, if they are here, have displaced an equal number of our own sons. If it be true that there are places to be found on our own farms here, is not the answer to be found in the statement of another hon. gentleman when it was pointed out that the population was stationary, and the hon. gentleman claimed that they were not going to the States but were going to Manitoba and the North-West. That would leave a vacancy here; but if a number like that went to Manitoba and the North-West that would account for the 51,000 additional population, as being all members of the older Provinces, and therefore that your whole immigration expenditure is an utter waste, because you do not expend any of it in sending the sons of Ontario or Nova Scotia farmers to the North-West. Therefore if they have gone in such numbers to the North-West that would account very soon for 51,000; but we find from that, if that be the net result, that there have been no immigrants at all from the older countries of the world to the North-West, or we must adopt the other alternative that, having gone there, they have been forced to leave the country after settling in it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to call the attention of the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Hesson), to a fact which I think he will not dispute, being, I know, familiar with the details of our municipal affairs. He has just been quoting the returns of the Province of Ontario. These returns, of course, are entitled to all possible weight; I am not disposed to dispute them, although it is true that reports from joint officers are a very different thing from those of officers of the Ontario Government alone. But the hon. gentleman implied that the population did not increase as fast under the Mackenzie Government as under the present Government. Now, Sir, it is quite clear that from 1873 to 1879 the population of Ontario alone increased 225,000 souls. During the time when Mr. Mackenzie's policy was in force up to April, 1879, before the National Policy was introduced, there was an increase of 225,000, by the assessor's count, in the Province of Ontario. After 1879, and down to the present time, there has been an increase of just 80,000 souls. Those are the facts as stated by the assessors, who are not partisans of ours, but who are, probably in greater number, partisans of hon. gentlemen. Now I do not assert that the assessors' returns are verbatim et literatim accurate returns, but what I do assert is that, from 1871 to 1881, they showed a total increase of population in Ontario quite equal to that of the census returns, and that they are relatively accurate.

Mr. HESSON. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to point out to him that the report shows an excess of 300,000 in the addition, in the figures for 1878.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I corrected that error where a nine was placed in room of a six. As the hon. gentleman knows, those reports come on the average to April of 1879, which was a period before the National Policy came into effect. Now, I always maintained that when hon. gentlemen on that side were decrying the position of the country during Mr. Mackenzie's Administration, as they did decry it in every shape and form, that they were drawing the most unjust comparisons between the position of Canada and the United States. I said then, and I repeat it now, that during those five years the position of Canada was very much better than the position of the United States; that it was in almost every possible shape and way in a better position; that whole sections of the most important States were overrun by armies of tramps; that life and property over a large portion of these States was very insecure, and that there was greater distress altogether than there was in Canada. The point to which I wish to call attention is this, that the increase in that period in Ontario, which, as the hon. gentleman knows, is the Province which absorbs the greatest number of immigrants, is nearly triple what has taken place since; and I call his attention further to the fact that the recorded increase from 1879 to the present time is, by at least 120,000, less than the natural increase of Ontario should be, without a single immigrant; Ontario's natural increase should have shown 120,000 more than the assessors' return does. Those are the only statistics for Ontario we can get. I have pointed out again and again to hon. gentlemen opposite that, if they want to find out the truth as to the Province of Quebec, it is easy to obtain it by applying to the clerical authorities there, who keep very accurate records of the vast bulk of the population; and if hon. gentlemen do not choose to obtain that information, there can be but one inference, and that is that they do not want to obtain it, because it would prove conclusively that there also a very large movement of the population has been going on in the wrong direction, and that a great number of people have left this country. I stated that I paid no regard whatever to the statements made, even during the time of the late Administration, as to the immigration into this country. The reason I made that statement is that, since that time, we obtained the census of 1881 which showed beyond the possibility of a doubt—unless you dispute the census of 1871, which was made under hon. gentlemen, as well as the census of 1881 - that of the immigrants whom our returns alleged to have settled in this country, only a small proportion could have stayed there. It was not until that census appeared, and until we had the opportunity of examining and dissecting it, that I came reluctantly and unwillingly to the conclusion that our agricultural and immigration returns were in that respect, wholly untrustworthy and unreliable. It may have been—I do not say it was not the case—that these people did state to our authorities that they meant to settle here, but it is quite clear that they did not stay here, and that is the whole gist of the position I take.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. As the hon. gentleman places such confidence in the municipal returns, I may state to him that I find by the Sessional Papers, No. 55, of the Province of Ontario, for 1884, that the population given for 1881, according to the municipal return, was 1,691,070. I find by the official returns of the Federal census that the population of Ontario for 1881 was 1,920,460.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will explain. The hon. gentleman is perfectly correct in pointing out that the municipal assessors' returns are largely below, even at this moment, what I believe myself the population to be. But the point is this, that this reduction bears a fair proportion in each year. There was a similar diminution in 1871, when the assessors' returns bore precisely the same proportion to our census returns that they did in 1881, and what I say is that these returns are relatively accurate Between 1871 and 1881 the assessors' returns show an increase of population in Ontario of about 290,000. Now, if the hon. gentleman looks back to the census returns of 1871 and 1881, he will see that they show an increase of a little over 300,000. That is a very fair proof, I think that the assessors have fairly computed the annual increase; though they are a little under the mark, I think, in each case.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I fully comprehend the meaning of what the hon. gentleman wishes to convey. The population of the city of Ottawa in 1883, as given in the Ontario Government returns, was 25,583, while the Assessment Commissioner gives me the figures as 27,583, and he also gives me figures up to 1885 showing an increase of 3,000 a year. I find that the hon. gentleman bases his conclusion as to the shrinkage of the population of Canada on the fact that the school population had decreased.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not as returned by the assessors, but simply by the registered list of pupils.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. It would be, of course, registered with the Provincial Government?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. That is what I have used. Then, an increase in the school population, according to the hon. gentleman's argument, means an increase in the general population. By the report of the Ontario Industrial Bureau, the school population of 1861 is placed at 384,960, and that of 1871 at 495,756, an increase of 104,776; and yet the hon. gentleman, in speeches of his that I have read, has argued that there was a decrease in the school population of some 8,000 from 1879 to 1884, and that that proved conclusively that there was a decrease in the general population of the country. Now, I take the increase in the school population between 1861 and 1871, when the hon. gentleman said the great exodus took place in this country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, the great exodus took place after 1871.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I will quote the hon. gentleman's own words at Simcoe in 1877, according to the Globe's report. He said:

"The census returns of the United States as well as reports made to Sir John's own Government by their own officials show that during the ten years from 1861 to 1871—during which Sir John was absolute master of Canada—we lost 400,000 people emigrating from Canada to the United States."

Then, basing my argument upon the very returns used by him, to prove an exodus taking the figures he quotes to prove that Canada is becoming rapidly depopulated, I find that there was an increase in the school population between 1861 to 1871 of 104,776.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is in Ontario; we are speaking of the population of the whole Dominion.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. The rule applies to Ontario as an important portion of the Dominion; and Ontario and Quebec were important portions of the Dominion at that time. The hon. member for Brant said in this House, on the 24th of March, 1884:

"I suppose one child should represent about five inhabitants."

Consequently according to the arguments of the opposition statistics, Ontario, instead of decreasing between 1861 and 1871, increased her population by 523,880; and yet the hon. member for South Huron claimed that during that time there had been a startling exodus. I desire to show that the municipal returns to the Ontario Government are lamentably inaccurate in various particulars. I have looked through them, and I find that it is utterly impossible to place any reliance upon them. In giving the population of various cities, they omit 2,000 or 3,000; and yet hon. gentlemen use these figures, I think unfairly, to show that there is a great exodus fron Canada in progress. The hon. member for South Huron cannot forget that while he was in power he admitted that an exodus from this country was then going on. In his speech, in 1876, he stated:

"On the accession of this Ministry (that of the hon. member for East York) to power, a most extraordinary panic took place in the United States, and the result was widespread distress, affecting in the most serious manner emigration from Europe to this continent. For the first time in history, a steady stream of artisans, and even agricultural laborers, had been seen returning to the British Isles. In every steamship that had crossed the Atlantic during the past two years and a half numbers of these persons—of all classes and creeds—unable to find employment in the United States had forsaken the shores of this continent."

The hon. gentleman from his place in Parliament, and speaking with all the responsibility of a Minister of the Crown, proclaimed that thousands were leaving the American continent to return to Europe, and yet he would endeavor to prove that only since he went out of office have thousands left Canada to go to the United States. Now, I think I could show the hon. gentleman, if it were not so late, that the greater number of native Canadians went to the United States during the time he administered the financial affairs of this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I will take the case of the French Canadians of Massachusetts. The hon. gentleman will remember that the leader of the Opposition, in 1884, was arguing this very question, laying down the rule that because the French Canadians had asked for a committee to investigate and report as to their position in Massachusetts, and to be allowed to give evidence before that committee, therefore their statements showed that they had left Canada during the régime of the right hon. the leader of the Government. The hon. member for West Durham then said :

"It is proved, by a very thorough examination that took place in the year 1882, under the instruction of the Legislature of Massachusetts, into the question, that it has only been within the last ten or fifteen years that this immigration has assumed such large proportion in that part of the country. It is only within a much shorter period, five or six years before 1882, that it began to assume the character of a permanent settlement in the country to which these people went."

The following is the resolution which was passed by the French Canadians, at Lowell :—

"Whereas, since the French Canadian have come to this section, they have reached a population of 400,000 in New England ; whereas a large number have become proprietors, paying large taxes, and whereas, for the most part, the young men propose to make their homes here,—Resolved, that we protest against the portion of the report which says we are a horde of industrial invaders ; whereas we have to live five years in this country before we can become citizens of this glorious Republic, and the French Canadians have been here in large numbers only for five or six years."

This report was ordered by the Legislature of Massachusetts, in 1882. Six years had elapsed since the French Canadians had arrived in the States in large numbers ; and subtracting that six years from 1882, the hon. gentleman will find that those French Canadians must have gone to the States between 1876 and 1877. This is proof conclusive with regard to that fact. I wish also to call the hon. gentleman's attention to a statement dealing with the question of agency and information expenditure, in his treatment of which the hon. gentleman was unfair to this Government and to the hon gentleman who formerly administered the Department of Immigration and Agriculture. He called attention to the fact that in 1877 the Department of Agriculture only expended $4,180 for printing pamphlets.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In 1878.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. In 1878 it was $9,000, and in 1877 it was $4,180. I will give the figures every year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have them here, taken from the Public Accounts.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. The hon. gentleman will find I am correct. I will give the figures for the following years, being desirous of showing the House that the question of agency and information expense was not fairly treated by the hon. gentleman. In 1874, the policy of the gentlemen opposite was to expend a large amount for agency fees and less money for printing. The reverse has been the policy of the Department of Agriculture at present, taking into consideration the enlarged business and constantly developing resources of the country. The following is a statement of the expenditure :

To'al immigrants reported 626,161
Total cost for agency and information expenditure, 1874 to 1884 ..... $1,263,681

The hon. gentleman will remember that a large number of Delegates came to this country between 1879 and 1884, the total cost for agency and information expenditure, from 1874 to 1884, being $1,263,681 ; he will also find, by making the calculation, that the average paid for information and agency fees between 1874 and 1878 was $3.81 per head. From 1879 to 1884, average paid per head of the immigrants reported was $1.45 ; or, in fact, hon. gentlemen opposite paid more for printing and agency fees than the per head expenditure of this Government for the entire cost of the Department. In 1878, the hon. member for South Perth contended that if we paid $50 a head, as Australia did, we would not be paying too much to get people into the West. He said it was the best investment the Government could make. Hon. gentlemen opposite surely do not mean to say it was not their intention, if they had remained in power, to encourage immigration. They cannot, from the knowledge we have of their public utterances, assert that they did not intend, so soon as business revived, inviting immigration to the country. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) found fault with the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) because he did not held out sufficient inducement to immigrants of a class which came under the head of laborers to come into the country, and he must remember that the reply of the hon. gentleman was that he was not going to induce men to come into this country who would be in a position to compete with the labor of the country. Look at the illogical position in which hon. gentlemen opposite have placed themselves. They say : Keep out the artisan and laborer who competes with the laboring classes here, and, in the next breath, exclaim : Break down the wall of protection, and allow foreign industries to compete with our own industries to the detriment of the labor market of Canada They profess to be the friends of the working classes. They ask that we should have a low duty and make Canada a cheap country to live in, but as a working man in this city once said to the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), "it is a splendid idea to make Canada a cheap country to live in, but what is the use of giving us cheap goods, if we have no money to buy them with."

Mr. MILLS. And so you propose to make money out of the public Treasury.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. So far as the artisans are concerned, the hon. member for Bothwell must know that the hon. member for East York promised, before appealing to the country, that so soon as there was a revival of trade, he would do all in his power to open the gates into Canada for all classes of people. The first utterance made in public by the then hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Mackenzie) when Premier, in 1874, was that he would allow the Chinese to come in to compete with Canadian workingmen. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) found fault with the hon. member for Kingston (Sir John A. Macdonald) because in 1879, he asserted that he did not believe the Chinese could mix with our more civilised population to the benefit of such civilisation. Hon. gentlemen opposite profess to be friends of the artisan and the workingman. Take their whole record, which is the best proof. They know that at the very time Mr. Jenkins, commonly known as the Hash-of-all-the-Talents, was agent general, he wrote to this country in 1875, that he had advised artisans not to come to Canada; it afterwards transpired that in 1876 the Government of the Dominion was paying $120 and $150 per night for public halls in Birmingham and Manchester, where lectures were delivered by his officials, inviting the artisan population of those industrial cities to seek a home in Canada, thus competing with the very class who were suffering deprivation consequent upon the policy, or want of policy, of hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for South Huron must be aware that even when they got the immigrants here, his political friends then in power paid to send them back again. I find in the official Debates that Mr. Masson asked on the 27th February, 1877:

"Notwithstanding the continual reduction in the number of immigrants coming to the country, the expenses remained the same. This was more striking when it was considered that last summer an extraordinary event occurred. Those immigrants whom we had taken so much trouble and spent so much money to bring to Canada were sent back to the country from whence they came by the Government. * * * Under the circumstances, he would like to know how the Government had decided upon giving such a blow to our whole system of immigration as to pay the money to send 230 persons back to the country from whence the came?

"Mr. CARTWRIGHT. The French who had come from France, and over whom the difficulty occurred, were not as desirable a class as possible. A considerable number had to be sent back to Paris.

"Mr. POPE. How many were sent back?

"Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I believe 230 were sent back, the expense being $22 per head, or $5,000 in all. I entirely agree with the hon. member for Terrebonne in what he said, that it was not the business of the Government of Canada to pay for the people coming out here, and then to pay their expenses back if they did not like the country."

I maintain then, that hon. gentlemen opposite are not dealing fairly with the present Administration and are not acting in the interests of Canada by discussing this question in so prejudiced a manner. It is a question in which every Canadian is interested, a question fraught with grave import to the Canadian taxpayers and producers, and should be approached in a less partisan spirit. At this late hour of the morning, I do not desire to lengthen the debate, but, as my hon. friends opposite admit, it is a vital and national question, and one which must be debated not only here but in public; and I shall take the earliest opportunity to make some further statements with reference to it should the opportunity present itself.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman who spoke last, and who, I am sorry—because he treated the matter very fairly—did not speak earlier, makes this mistake with regard to the school population, and that is the only matter I am going to allude to. He says that the school population had increased very considerably between 1861 and 1871, but he must remember that, up to that time, a very large proportion of our people had not been able to avail themselves, particularly in Ontario, of the advantages of our school system. Between 1861 and 1871, as I have no doubt those who recollect the country at that time will bear me out in saying, an immense development of our school system took place, so that the nominal increase in the number of children bore no fair proportion to the increase in the population. That is why I pay and paid no attention to the increase between 1861 and 1871. After 1871, the number of schools throughout the country was very nearly as great in proportion to the population as it is now, and from that time out the school statistics, and particularly the registered school statistics, afford a very valuable check on the movement of population.

Mr. KING. The discussion up to the present time has been largely confined to hon. members from Ontario and the North-West, and, lest the hon. Minister should think this is a question in which the people outside of Ontario and the North-West were not concerned, I would claim the indulgence of the House for a few moments. It is not my intention to criticise the policy of the present Government specially with regard to this immigration business, but I desire to point out to you how in my opinion it affects the interests of the Maritime Provinces. It is true that we were not always members of this Confederacy, and it is equally true that prior to our coming into the Union we had, at all events in the Province of New Brunswick, an Immigration Department, and I think I may fairly claim that those who were entrusted with the business of promoting the settlement of the Province of New Brunswick at that time were eminently successful, because, on a reference to the journals of our Local Legislature, we find, in ten consecutive years prior to the Union, we succeeded in inducing 51,000 immigrants to settle in that Province. It is also true that at that period we had not—I believe I am safe in saying—a mile of railway in New Brunswick. Our position was very different from the position which the settler enjoys in the North-West to-day. We had no inducements to offer such as are offered to immigrants going to the North-West. But there is another feature of this business to which I desire to call attention, and that is the small cost as compared with the cost incurred at the present time. I find, on referring to the same journals of the Local Legistature of New Brunswick, that our Immigration Department in New Brunswick was run at a cost, in some years, of about $400 per annum, and further that the item which would be similar in every respect to the item which has been discussed so freely here to-night, that is, the amount expended in the getting up of literature to induce immigration to the country, such as pamphlets, maps, and so forth, is represented in the accounts of that day by the small sum of $30 for advertising, stationery and postage. I have not gone into the calculations very carefully, but I think I am safe in stating that during the past seven years a sum in round numbers approaching to $3,000,000 has been spent in promoting immigration to Canada. The Maritime Provinces contain about one-fifth of the population of Canada, if that be true, our proportion of that $3,000,000 would be about $600,000. I think it would be only fair to ask the question, whose lands are we to-day trying to settle in the North-West? Are we trying to settle the lands which belong to the whole people of Canada? To a certain extent I admit we are, but in a greater measure I believe I may fairly claim that from this time forward our efforts will be in the direction of settling the lands belonging to the railway companies, the colonisation companies, the Hudson's Bay lands, and the lands of speculators in the North-West.

Mr. SPROULE. Such as the member for Huron, with his 13,000 acres.

Mr. KING. I think I am not mistaken in saying that, in promoting lines of railway in that country, we have adopted a system of granting from 10 to 15 square miles of land for every mile of road we build. I do not believe that, in a country where railways are so absolutely essential as they are in the North-West, a mile of railway will do very much more than develop ten or fifteen square miles of land. I do not object to that. I hope we may succeed in developing that North-West country by giving lands to aid in the construction of railways, but I take it for granted that we will have very little land in the North-West to dispose of for cash. It is true that we propose to induce settlers in that country to settle upon the land of the North-West, but I think that largely the class of people we will induce to go into that country will settle upon the free grants. If that be the case, very little money will be returned to the Treasury of the Dominion for lands given to actual settlers. Then, unless we can dispose of land in the North-West for cash, I fail to see where any greater advantage accrues to the Dominion of Canada by settling an immigrant in the North-West than would accrue by settling the same immigrant in the Province of New Brunswick. We have spent over $100,000,000 already in developing that country, and we had it from the mouth of the hon. the First Minister yesterday in his place in the House that that was a charge against the old Provinces of Canada. Such being the case, I think the Maritime Provinces, containing about one-fifth the population of the Dominion, might fairly claim that they are chargeable with $20,000,000 of that $100,000,000. It is true that we have got some land in the North-West which we did not own until yesterday; we bought yesterday, I believe, 10,000,000 dollars worth of land in the North-West. Now, Sir, I think that is quite enough to expect from the people of the Maritime Provinces for all the direct interest they have in that country. They have contributed their share, something like $2,000,000 of the purchase money of that land which we took back from the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I think that is enough, without asking us to contribute our share of the $300,000 or $400,000 expended annually for the purpose of getting settlers into the North-West to settle upon lands belonging to the railway company, and on colonisation land and Hudson Bay lands. It has not been claimed, at all events this Session, that up to the present time the Dominion has received any considerable amount from the sale of lands in the North-West over and above the cost of surveys and management; if that be true, I think our chances for receiving much in the future are very doubtful. I was glad to hear the Minister of Marine and Fisheries speak on this question to-night, but I regretted that he could not speak as freely, perhaps, as he would have done had he not filled the honorable position he occupies. Of course I understand that in speaking on this question he would not come down to what might be termed parish politics; he speaks, of course, for the whole country. But I think he was unfair in a comparison which he made. He spoke of the Maritime Provinces and particularly New Brunswick, and he said that what was going on there was going on in the States of Maine and Vermont, that there was a large exodus from those States to the western States. Now, I deny that there is any similarity in the two cases.

Mr. FOSTER. I never said so.

Mr. KING. What did the hon. gentleman say?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for South Huron was talking about so few of the immigrants coming to New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and I said that if the hon. gentleman was a citizen of either of the New England States, and was talking in the same manner there, he might found a very good text upon which to preach a sermon about the exodus from those States. I made no statement as to whether the population was decreasing or not in the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. KING. I am dealing now with the immigration to the Maritime Provinces. I think the hon. member for South Huron pointed out that it would hardly be claimed that there was any considerable number of immigrants coming to the Maritime Provinces, and in answer to that statement I think the Minister made the statement I have just recited, and that it could not be expected that immigration would come into those Provinces any more than into the States of Maine and Vermont.

Mr. FOSTER. Even if I had said so, that is a very different thing from saying that the population was decreasing.

Mr. KING. I think I can prove that the population is decreasing. Now, Sir, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will not contend that there is any similarity between the Province of New Brunswick and the States of Vermont and Maine, because he must know that in those States to-day there is not one acre of public land; all the land has passed out of the ownership of the State into the hands of private individuals. In fact, there is but little land fit for agricultural purposes in those States, that is not occupied by settlers. But that state of affairs does not exist in New Brunswick; in that Province there is more good agricultural land waiting for settlers than has been already settled, and the hon. gentleman must know that. Therefore, I say the argument made use of by him will not apply to New Brunswick. As I already stated, at a time when we were able to induce 51,000 settlers to come into New Brunswick in ten years, at a small cost compared with the cost of immigration in Canada to-day, we had not one mile of railway, and to-day we have 1,000 miles of railway. The Province has contributed largely of its resources; in fact we have given away over a million acres of our best land to construct a railway in that Province, yet we have failed to secure immigrants there. There must be a cause for this. Our climate is just as good as it was before Confederation, the portion of our soil that remains unsettled is as good to-day as it was then. Why, then, do we not receive immigrants as we did formerly? I believe that one great cause is that the efforts of this Parliament have been wholly directed towards the settlement of the North-West instead of treating our Provinces fairly. Of course, I am free to admit that some efforts have been made since Confederation, and some assistance was given by this Parliament to the Province of New Brunswick to promote immigration. The effort was partially successful, and in one year we had a good number of immigrants, and many of those who came into that Province have succeeded in making themselves comfortable. But, Sir, it is lamentable to have to admit that the policy of the Government has been the means, even, of taking away a large number of the immigrants whom we induced to settle there. What else could be expected when over the whole Province of New Brunswick, the people are flooded with this very same literature which Canada is paying for to the extent of $100,000 a year? I do not think this country has much to gain by transferring the population from one Province to another. Now, Sir, I have a word to say with regard to this report, and if it be on the whole as incorrect as that part of it with reference to my own Province, I must conclude that it is not very reliable. I am not going to dispute the figures as to the number of immigrants that have arrived in New Brunswick this year. The report gives the number who have settled in each county, but I challenge any member from New Brunswick, outside of one or two counties, to give the names of anything like the number of persons, or to show where the immigrants are in that Province, which are said by this report to have settled there. Of course, I admit there are a few in one or two counties. But there is another feature in this report to which I would call attention. We are told by the immigration agent at St. John, a gentleman who receives $1,000 a year:

"All the manufacturing industries have been visited in the past year, and have done a greater amount of work than they had reason to expect in the beginning of the year. Some are working double time, especially the rope-making industries."

Again he says:

"As for the agricultural interest, the crops being very large, and the prices being maintained, they have reaped a glorious harvest indeed."

Proceeding he says:

"Owing to the continued dulness in the lumber business, as well as in almost all other trades in the Province, we have not done so large and profitable a year's business as in former years."

That is said in the face of other statements I have just read, about the prosperity of the manufacturing industries and the glorious harvest. If there is any sense in a report of that kind, or if anybody can understand it or know what is meant by it, I fail to be able to do so. It has been said on this side of the House, that there has been a large exodus during the last few years, and the declaration of this opinion has been declared to be unpatriotic and to be decrying the country. If I was to state anything else than the statement I now make, I would make a statement that would not be believed in the Province from which I come. It is well known that a large number of people are leaving our Provinces every year for other parts. It is true that notwithstanding the great efforts made, very few have gone to the North-West. According to the census reports, I find only 245 New Brunswickers there. I regret that, if they are to leave our Province and go out of New Brunswick, they do not go to our North-West, because they would contribute something to the revenue and would benefit the older Provinces in that way. But we are told in this report, that 147 Americans have settled in New Brunswick during the past year. I would like some one to tell me where they are to be found. I have never heard of any such immigration during 1885. In the interest of the Maritime Provinces at all events it is time that this immigration policy was abandoned and all the Provinces placed on a fair footing and allowed to do what they wish in their own way to attract immigrants within their own borders. Let the Canadian Pacific Railway look after their interests in the North-West; let New Brunswick look after its own interest. But do not tax the Maritime Provinces to the extent they have been taxed ever since Confederation to bring in immigrants which the Government have wholly failed to retain. I need not repeat what has been said to night, and yet I may fairly say that so far as regards the settlement of the North-West the Government's policy has been an utter failure. That has not been denied; in fact it has been admitted by hon. gentleman opposite that up to the present time the policy has failed to secure the settlement of that territory. If so, what have the Maritime Provinces to show for their proportion of the expenditure? Nothing. It has been said that 23,000 have settled in the North-West, outside of Manitoba. Hon. gentlemen are mistaken who attribute that meagre result wholly to the immigration policy of the Government, because the census shows that 50 per cent. of these people have been drawn from the older Provinces. In the interest of the Maritime Provinces this policy of taxing the people for immigration to the North-West should be abandoned.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think the reason why we are not receiving that fair share of immigrants to which we are entitled is due to the fact that hon. gentlemen opposite make statements in this House and outside of this House, and the press representing them give those statements publicity, which have been used to the detriment of the interests of Canada. I observe by the Brockville Recorder that the member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) made this statement in a speech delivered at Brockville on Monday night. He said:

"We got the National Policy and we challenge any man to point out one single industry in Canada that did not exist before the National Policy."

What inference can be drawn from such a statement? The American immigration agents will say: That is a statement made by a member of Parliament. The statement of that hon. gentleman is endorsed by no less a personage than the Hon. C. F. Fraser, who in winding up the meeting said he had listened to two of the most effective political speeches he had ever listened to. The American immigration agents would refer to the fact that the hon. member for Brant made that statement and was cheered in the statement, that we had had the National Policy for eight years and the industries of Canada are in just the same position as they were eight years ago; and the agent would say: What is the use of sending emigrants there, they had better go to the United States. That is the only deduction that can be drawn, and that is the principal reason why we are not receiving more immigrants into this country.

Mr. FAIRBANK. While not holding the Minister of Agriculture responsible for all the main errors of the past and wishing him success in the new department which has fallen into his hands, I have a suggestion or two to make. I will not for a moment either now or at any time deign to answer the constantly repeated allegations from the other side of the House by which they are claiming all the loyalty, all the interest in this country, all the patriotism and everything of that kind, claiming to be the owners of this country and the rest of us tenants at will. But there is one point to which I wish to call the attention of the Minister, and that is to this so-called immigration literature. I believe that not only is it not being beneficial but that it is painfully injurious to all the older Provinces at least. The hon. member for King's N.B. (Mr. King) has referred to the flooding of his Province with this literature. I will not just now trouble the Minister with the question as to what proportion is sent to foreign countries and what distributed at home, but the older Provinces have been and are being constantly flooded with this immigration literature, the effect of which is not to produce immigration but to some extent migration. I believe it works largely in this way: we all know that literature which does not speak highly of the western country will not be entertained by the Department. Every country has its advantages and its drawbacks, and when you have pictured only the bright side of a country the effect is to create a state of unrest. When this idea has taken hold of the people the first result is to decide to go. The next question is where to go. In too many instances the people do not go to our own Territory. I believe this literature being distributed throughout the older Provinces has been one of the most productive sources of sending Canadian people to the United States, and I hope the Minister will consider this matter of sufficient importance to investigate its effects in that direction, and if this literature is to be continued to any extent it should be sent to foreign countries instead of being distributed at home. I have myself seen cart loads, I think car-loads distributed in Ontario alone, and this distribution is not confined to party by any means. When you consider the number who were interested in colonisation schemes, when you consider the number who are interested in the colonisation companies, in railway schemes and the efforts they make, not to bring population not from the Old Country or from the United States, but from the older Provinces, we need not wonder that in many sections of Ontario the result of this has been to depreciate the value of real estate 25 per cent.

An hon. MEMBER. It is not true.

Mr. FAIRBANK. It certainly is. I grant hon. gentlemen that real estate is now recovering, but at the time it did depreciate to that extent, and some portions of the very garden of Ontario were retarded to a very great extent. Now, Sir, I am not speaking of anything that hon. gentlemen do not know. They know perfectly well the extent to which the exodus from Ontario prevailed some time ago. They know the nature and character of that exodus. I maintain that on the continent of America, or upon any other continent, you could not find a finer class of men, or even as fine a class of men, as those who were taken from Ontario, ostensibly to the North-West, although I believe the majority of them were lost to us. The wheel was set in motion largely by this literature, and it continued to roll, and it did not land in our own country but in another nation. I am glad to hear from the Minister that assisted immigration is almost discontinued, and that probably it will be discontinued altogether. It is of the highest importance what kind of seed you seed down a new country with, and we do not want the sweepings of other lands. Too much attention cannot be paid to the character of the immigrants who are induced to come to this new land. There is, however, a branch of assisted immigration which I think might be instituted with beneficial results. A gentleman connected with one of the churches in the west assured me some time ago that, in connection with that church alone, there were at least 3,000 wives wanted in the North-West. You will remember that in the early settlement of the old Dominion of Virginia there was felt that same want—the want of wives. So keenly was this felt that they offered inducements to supply this want. The current price for a wife at that time was, in the first place fifty pounds of tobacco; subsequently they were in such demand that the price rose to 100 pounds, and to-day many of those proud F.F.V's. can trace their origin to a wife purchased for from fifty to 100 pounds of tobacco. I think if we could introduce that kind of immigration we should assist it. As we are not raising tobacco, I would suggest that we should take wheat; say 100 bushels, for each immigrant of that kind. I think it would largely increase the production of wheat, as well as increase the population of the country.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have waited for some time for an opportunity to address the House. I am sorry the debate has taken so wide a range. We expected that we would have an opportunity of dealing with the money granted to the different printing and publishing companies for the last year through the Immigration Department. I believe myself that the statement furnished by the Immigration Department is largely overdrawn, in order, if possible, to cover up their sins in the way of dividing up printing which passed through that Department to the different printing journals and companies throughout the Dominion. Now when the Minister of the Interior arose to reply to some remarks from this side, he stated that the Government who were once in power, under the régime of Mr. Mackenzie, had given to a member of this House the sum of $1,400 of money belonging to this Dominion. Now, I am sorry that the gentleman to whom the Minister referred is not here, if he was the hon. gentleman would not have ventured to make that statement. I am sorry that the Minister should not guard his words more carefully than to make a statement of this kind, which, if he does not know it is untrue, he ought to know is untrue. The facts are these, that the money owed by the gentleman referred to was owed for dues upon timber which was cut. The hon. gentleman who spoke referred to the statement of the First Minister. Now if he will take the trouble to enquire of Mr. Vankoughnet, who is in charge of that Department, and is a political friend of his own, he would tell him that there is not a single farthing due that he was not paid.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am making an explanation with regard to what the Minister of Interior said.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The CHAIRMAN. You have no right whatever. Confine yourself to the question.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, if you so rule, I have no right to refer to it, but I will take another opportunity to do so.

An hon. MEMBER. Take a rest.

Mr. McMULLEN. Some three years ago I moved in this House for a return showing the amount which had been paid to the different printing and publishing companies of this Dominion through the Agricultural Department since 1880. The Minister of Public Works amended my motion by making it from 1874. And, though I have asked for it a dozen times, that report has not been brought down, and consequently that information has not been furnished. Now, I say that this system of dividing up amongst the different printing and publishing companies the money which is divided amongst them, is a gross wrong and a gross fraud on the people of this Dominion; and I say that Parliament has no right to consent to it, and that it is done for political purposes undoubtedly. When we had the question of timber limits before the House the other night, we found the Minister of the Interior getting up and defending the unprotected heads of hon. gentlemen opposite, and no doubt he is well paid for it, he having no doubt an interest in the Montreal Gazette, as he admitted in reply to the hon. gentleman in front of me. The hon. member for South Huron said that the Montreal Gazette got $19,000. The Minister of the Interior said that there was $5,000 included in that sum for some other work leaving $14,000 which he admits the Gazette got from the funds of this Dominion for which no tender was put in, and for simply supplying the ink and the men to set the type. He did not even supply the paper. In addition to that, he gets his allowance as a Minister of the Crown and sessional allowances, $8,000, make $22,000, which he draws of the money of this country. He can well afford to stand up and defend hon. gentlemen around him, and I admit that he is an able advocate. I admit that he is a desirable man for hon. gentlemen opposite to have in this House, because, when we find hon. gentlemen from the beginning to the end, from the top to bottom, from the First Minister down to the last joint in the tail of the whole party, are implicated in the same way in timber limits and political plunder, it is an advantage to have a man of his stamp to defend them. Now, I say it is a gross wrong on the people of this Dominion to take the money that is collected from them, and divide it up among the different printing companies composed of friends of hon. gentlemen opposite. This is an important question, and we have not had half enough of time to consider it. We simply wish to wake the country up to the way the people's money is being thrown away; we want to show them into whose pockets it is going; we want to show them that members on the other side of the House are largely responsible for the increase in the annual expenditure, and that the moneys levied on the working classes of this country, on the goods they consume, are divided amongst the followers of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. HESSON. As the hon. gentleman is in trade, I would ask him a fair question. Does he say that the people are paying more for their goods now than they were seven or eight years ago?

Mr. McMULLEN. The best evidence we have whether the people are paying more for their goods or not is that to-day all the smuggling that is done is done from the American side into Canada, whereas seven years ago the smuggling was out of Canada to the United States. It was stated to-night that the taxes per capita are not as great in Canada as they are in the United States. I was surprised to hear an hon. gentleman make that statement after the statement of the Minister of the Interior in the debate on the Budget, in which he admitted that the per capita tax of the people of this Dominion was a little in excess of the per capita tax of the people of the United States, and the per capita debt of Canada was a little in excess of the per capita debt of the United States. I am sorry we are so far advanced in the night, because I would like to have offered some lengthened remarks on this subject. I know that in a short time hon. gentlemen are going to the country, and we cannot do better than show them their corruption before they go, and how public money is being handed from pocket to pocket; but when a charge is made against a member of Parliament we find that every gentleman on that side of the House gets up to defend him. I want to prevent expenditures of this kind, because our people cannot afford them. Some remarks were made with regard to agricultural implements being cheaper in the North-West than they were during the time of the Mackenzie Administration. I am sorry to say there have been a large number of agricultural implements sent up there by different manufacturing companies, and they have been sacrificed. I know some who have sent up implements and suffered serious loss by doing so; implements which they have been compelled to sell for less than they were worth.

Mr. COCHRANE. How many bunches of pamphlets did you send to your constituency?

Mr. McMULLEN. I have tried to make the best use of anything I could get around. Anything I have found that would be of interest to them I have sent. I believe our whole immigration policy has been wrong. I believe we should cut down this item more than one-half.

Quarantine expenses..... $77,966 00

Mr. LANGELIER. I wish to call attention to a very important matter. I received a letter to-day of a very serious character as to something which took place a short time ago. A steamer was allowed to pass through Quebec to Montreal, which had had a case of small-pox on board, without disinfection having taken place. I do not know whether it was due to oversight or to a defect in the system adopted, but it is a very serious matter. After the experience we have had in Montreal, most severe precautions should be taken to prevent the re-introduction of small-pox.

Mr. CARLING. Every precaution is taken. A medical gentleman at Rimouski is ordered to inspect the ship before she goes to Quebec, and the medical officer at Quebec also inspects and reports. My attention has been called to the matter, and every precaution will be taken to prevent anything of the kind occurring again.

Mr. LANGELIER. Has any explanation been given of the fact that she was allowed to go to Montreal without being disinfected.

Mr. CARLING. Every precaution is taken, but naturally some oversight has taken place on the part of one of the Government officers, either through mistake as to the nature of the disease or from want of paying sufficient attention, but the matter is being looked into.

Mr. BAIN. Will the hon. gentleman specify what is to be done with the vote to meet expenses for precautionary measures for public health?

Mr. CARLING. It is to take precautionary measures whenever the Government thinks necessary. I cannot say anything more without going into particulars. They consist to a large extent in inspecting vessels at the different ports, and last year there was an expenditure in connection with the outbreak of disease in the Eastern Townships.

Mr. BAIN. There is a special vote afterwards of $12,000 for cattle disease.

Mr. CARLING. That is for cattle quarantine at Halifax, Quebec and Sarnia.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I notice an item for 5,000 copies of Couture's pamphlets, $2,500, on which $1,000 has been paid on account. What is that for?

Mr. CARLING. That was paid for a pamphlet on the diseases of animals.

Mr. WILSON. There are $400 paid Mr. Playter for pamphlets. What is done with these pamphlets?

Mr. CARLING. They are distributed to the medical profession all over the country, and to the sanitary officers.

Mr. WILSON. There are travelling expenses for Dr. Covernton, $122.25 and $104 for services. What were these?

Mr. CARLING. Dr. Covernton was sent to the United States to a health convention held at St. Louis. He was sent by the Government, as it was necessary Canada should be represented at the convention, and his visit will be productive of much benefit.

Mr. WILSON. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken in reference to that, because the wages and time occupied in attending the convention could hardly have anything to do with the matter he referred to. It was in 1884-85. That was not last summer.

Mr. CARLING. I am only referring to last summer. I am not in a position to explain just now what that was for in 1884.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). It appears as if there was a number of rather miscellaneous items congregated under this head. For instance there is J. Fletcher, Library of Parliament, on account of travelling expenses to British Columbia, $300.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How is that a precautionary measure for the public health?

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Then there is J. L. R. Archambault, aid to a French sanitary journal, $400. I understand that, as far as the Minister is personally concerned, these are items not within his personal knowledge, but I think it will strike him and every other member of the committee that these are peculiar items, to say the least, to be passed under the head of precautionary measures for public health. They require some explanation. I think there is a large field for improvement in adjusting our accounts. For instance, there is Dr. Coleman, for services in investigating cattle disease, when we have a separate vote for that purpose. I think this wants readjustment in some form.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). It will be apparent that the purpose for which this vote is given is comparatively a small amount of the entire sum. The statistical officers who are paid out of this vote, and for the organisation of whom the vote was originally placed in the Estimates, only received $2,366 out of the entire sum of $9,412 spent last year. The rest has been largely spent in travelling expenses and such other items as these. It does not appear to me how the public health has been served by many of the items which appear here, and, while the Department very justly pay a very fair amount of attention to this and benefit the public proportionately, yet these items do not disclose any satisfactory reason to account for the expenditure as it has been made. I would be glad to see the Department give every attention possible to health statistics. They are attaining an added value every year, but it is only a small proportion of the entire vote expended, and, while we may be very glad to see 400 copies of the Sanitary Journal bought, we may still think that a large sum to pay, and that, while we pay only $116 as twelve months' salary of a statistical officer, we pay another officer $228 for attending a health convention for eight days.

Mr. FISHER. A moment ago, in explaining the expenses of last year, the Minister spoke about an outbreak of some cattle disease in the Eastern Townships. What did he mean by that?

Mr. CARLING. I think the chief expense was caused by the breaking out of a swine disease in the county of Huntingdon.

Cattle quarantine, Province of Quebec..... $5,000 00

Mr. FISHER. I would call the Minister's attention to the hardship under which a large portion of the Province of Quebec labors in regard to this question of cattle quarantine. I dare say that the Minister is aware that we are frequently desirous of buying thoroughbred stock in the United States for the purpose of improving our own stock; and that such stock has to come through the port of Sarnia where the cattle undergo quarantine. Now, I know of cases where farmers in the Eastern Townships have desired to buy cattle, the owners of which lived within 30 miles of their homesteads, but on the other side of the line, and they were prevented from doing so because they would have had to send these cattle to Sarnia to be quarantined, and bring them back again. In consequence of this expense the people are either debarred from improving their stock by the importation of cattle, or they will smuggle these cattle in. Now, the result of smuggling cattle may be very serious. Our cattle quarantine here enables us to send our cattle to England under favorable conditions, but if there is any danger of diseased cattle being imported into our country it would seriously affect our cattle trade in England. In point of fact, there is a danger that large numbers of cattle may now be smuggled into the country, and consequently there is a danger of introducing diseased cattle. In the New England States there is a large number of thoroughbred cattle, and the interchange between those States and the Eastern Provinces would be of great advantage to the people on both sides of the line. Therefore, I draw the attention of the Minister to the desirability of making some arrangement by which cattle might be brought across from the New England States without having to go so far west to be quarantined. Last winter I was informed at the office of the medical inspector at Montreal, Dr. McEachran, that it was thought possible to make some arrangement by which cattle would be taken in bond to the station in Quebec, and there go through quarantine. I asked him to enquire if that could be accomplished, and I understood there was no means by which it could be done. I think some such arrangement could be made, and I have good grounds for saying that it would be easy and cheap to establish a small quarantine station on the New England border, by which cattle could be brought in at small expense. It could be entirely managed from the head office in Montreal, and would be a great advantage to the people of the Eastern Townships.

Mr. CARLING. The advantage we have in shipping cattle to England at the present time is very great, and if the present arrangement was interfered with, our trade would suffer. The arrangement with the Imperial Government is that all cattle brought into the country for breeding purposes shall be quarantined at Sarnia, giving us the privilege of sending our cattle to England without being slaughtered on their arrival. Of course, if any such arrangement could be made as suggested, I should be very glad to carry it out, if it did not interfere with the arrangement we have with the Imperial Government.

Mr. FISHER. Is there an arrangement between our Government and the Imperial Government that all cattle brought from the United States must be quarantined at Sarnia, and at no other place?

Mr. CARLING. Yes; so far as the older Provinces are concerned.

Mr. FISHER. I think it is an extraordinary thing that the Imperial Government should dictate to our Government where we shall place our quarantine stations. Do I understand the Minister that the Imperial Government has distinctly ordered that the Canadian Government shall have no quarantine stations between this country and the United States, except at Sarnia?

Mr. CARLING. Yes, in the older Provinces. They have prohibited us from importing from the United States unless quarantined at Sarnia.

Mr. FISHER. I must say I think that is a very unreasonable proposition on the part of the Imperial Government, and I think it is an undue interference with the internal economy of this country. What does it matter to the Imperial Government whether we have a quarantine station in one place or another, so long as our cattle are quarantined, and that no diseased cattle are allowed to come across the border? It does not matter one whit to the Imperial Government whether we string stations all along our border, provided that American cattle coming into this country are properly quarantined. I have been informed by Dr. McEachran's staff that cattle can now be brought in from the United States to the port of Quebec, and be quarantined there, only that would be a very inconvenient way to bring them in. I believe also that cattle are also brought into this country west of Sarnia. I think in Manitoba there is a quarantine station where cattle are brought in from the United States to this country, and I think there is a regulation by which cattle have been allowed to come in west of Emerson.

Mr. CARLING. Not for shipping purposes.

Mr. FISHER. At no time?

Mr. CARLING. Not since this arrangement was made with the Imperial Government.

Mr. FISHER. When was that arrangement made with the Imperial Government?

Mr. CARLING. Some five or six years ago.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to ask the Minister whether there was not an Order in Council issued a year or two ago by which cattle might be brought from the United States into the western ranching country?

Mr. CARLING. I think there was.

Mr. FISHER. Did not that interfere with the Imperial edict that no cattle should be brought in except at Sarnia?

Mr. CARLING. That was a special arrangement for ranching purposes.

Mr. FISHER. Was that arrangement made with the Imperial Government?

Mr. CARLING. No.

Mr. BOWELL. They are not allowed to come east.

Mr. FISHER. How can they be prevented from coming east? Is there any cordon drawn between the western ranching country and the east?

Mr. CARLING. The arrangement was that cattle should not be brought into the older Provinces. If we were willing to have our cattle scheduled, as the American cattle are, we could bring them in at any point.

Mr. FISHER. No one suggests that.

Mr. BOWELL. You are.

Mr. CARLING. The arrangement for the older Provinces was that they should only come in at that one point, and that for breeding purposes only, and should be quarantined at Sarnia. The regulations with regard to the North-West, made by an Order in Council, had special reference to ranching purposes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend's position is clear enough. He says there is danger to our cattle trade from cattle crossing in the Eastern Townships, where, as everyone knows, the boundary line is only an imaginary

one. It would be a very grave thing if any disease should be introduced into the country in that way, and, if that is the case, I think a report should be made to the Imperial Government representing that in their interests and our own, a quarantine station should be established there between Canada and the United States.

Mr. BOWELL. No cattle are allowed to come in there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend says you cannot prevent it.

Mr. BOWELL. No quarantining will stop that. If a man owns a farm on the border, with one-half in Canada and the other half in the United States, no regulations establishing quarantine stations would prevent the cattle from grazing across the line. Every precaution is taken that is possible, by every custom house officer along the eastern frontier, to prevent cattle coming from any portion of the United States and across the line. If they do cross, they are seized for smuggling; and, if they are imported and it is discovered, they are seized and the owners compelled to take them back, or have them slaughtered. The tendency of the arguments advanced by the hon. gentleman from Brome (Mr. Fisher) would be very much to alarm the Imperial authorities and the parties who are interested in England in preventing the spread of cattle disease. I do not say the hon. gentleman does it with that intention, but, when he reflects upon the sensitiveness with which this subject is treated in England, and reflects on the great difficulty which we had, and that it was only by the exertion and determination and push which have always characterised our High Commissioner, that Canadian cattle were prevented from being scheduled, by which we should have lost millions of dollars a year, I think he will come to the conclusion that we should deal with this subject as gingerly and as tenderly as possible; for those who have paid any attention to it know that the agriculturists of England are very sensitive on this point, that in every single instance, not only in their agricultural societies, in their boards of trade, but in the Imperial Parliament, the special representatives of that class of the community have not only taken every precaution, but have advocated the schedule of Canadian cattle and placing them in the same position as those of the United States, and those that are brought from the steppes of Russia, where the cattle disease exists to a very great extent. I do not take the same view, nor do I believe do those interested in this very important trade to Canada, as does the hon. member for Brome. If the Imperial Government say to us: If you adopt such and such regulations in Canada to prevent the spread of disease, which is supposed to exist and does exist in some parts of the United States, we will not place you in the same disadvantageous position as that in which we place the people of the United States and other countries in which the disease exists. I think the least we can do is to acquiesce in the request made by that Government, particularly when our pecuniary interests are so great as they are at present. I know the Minister of Agriculture, the predecessor of my hon. colleague who now occupies that important position, when urged to establish a quarantine station at Halifax for the Maritime Provinces, so that the people could import the same class of cattle as are imported by way of Quebec, that right was refused to those Provinces, and refused for no other reason than because to reverse what the Government had done would be to interfere with the advantages we now possess as an integral part of the British Empire. When we export large numbers of cattle it is with the belief and knowledge in England that disease does not exist in Canada. But so cautious must we be in acting upon their suggestion so as to prevent the introduction of cattle from countries where disease is supposed to exist, that every precaution is to be taken, and the people of the Maritime Provinces have been put to some disadvantage, as have the people of Ontario, by not being able to import American cattle without sending them to Sarnia or Quebec; and I am glad to know that when the reason was given to the people of the Maritime Provinces, that it was in consequence of the regulations entered into with the English Government, they not only gracefully but gladly acquiesced in the policy adopted and carried out by the Dominion Government.

Mr. FISHER. No one is more anxious than I am to see our cattle healthy and free from disease. No one understands the importance of this more than I do, and what I have said to-night has been entirely and wholly for the purpose of trying to perfect arrangements which will tend to prevent disease coming in from the United States. The reason I wish some such arrangements as I have suggested made is because, in consequence of the absence of some such arrangement, cattle may come from a country where there is danger of disease. The Minister of Customs has said that if such an arrangement were made, it would still not prevent cattle strolling across the line. I know people can go over the line and bring back cattle, and those individuals would be perfectly willing to quarantine them if it could be done within a reasonable distance and at a moderate expense, but it is too costly to send cattle round by Sarnia. The result of the absence of such an arrangement is that there is danger of our cattle becoming diseased. I am not aware that any disease has been introduced; but there is danger, and I desire to ascertain if the Government are taking steps to make arrangements by which our people will be able to bring in and quarantine cattle without going such a long distance. I do not believe the British Government is so unreasonable as to prevent cattle being brought in by any other station except the one station, provided they are properly quarantined. The English Government is right in providing that cattle shall not be brought in here without being quarantined and passing through a probationary period of three months; but it does not matter whether they are quarantined in Sarnia or Quebec or the Maritime Provinces or anywhere else. I am very much surprised to learn that it is in the agreement with the English Government that cattle coming into this country from the United States must be quarantined at Sarnia and nowhere else, and I hope the Minister will take steps to have some change made.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). In looking up last year's reports of the expenditure under this head it appears there is a quarantine station at Emerson, which I presume applies to Manitoba. In addition, we paid Dr. McEachran fifty-one days attendance inspecting cattle entered for the North-West Territories. So I presume there is some other process west of Emerson by which stock gets across the border. I am not finding fault with the arrangement, but it is patent such an arrangement exists.

Mr. WATSON. I understand the quarantine is principally for shippers by the Canadian Pacific Railway through Montana to Chicago.

Mr. CARLING. No.

Mr. WATSON. Are those cattle quarantined?

Mr. CARLING. They are inspected.

Mr. WATSON. Are they allowed to be unloaded off the cars before they cross the boundary line at Emerson?

Mr. CARLING. No, I believe not.

Mr. BOWELL. There is an arrangement with the cognisance of the Imperial Government by which western cattle are allowed to pass from Sarnia to Portland under certain regulations, and the same applies to the western States.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). With respect to the item of $10,000 to meet possible expenses for sheep-scab and cattle disease, perhaps the Minister will say if this is to be used in payment of some just claims that are presented for cattle slaughtered under the provisions of the Act. I mentioned the case of some hogs that were slaughtered, and I believe there was a considerable number in the county of Essex. Will this apply to such cases?

Mr. CARLING. It will apply to such cases, and the Department are now enquiring into them.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). This item for immigrant patients in Winnipeg and St. Boniface hospitals is new. We should have some explanation.

Mr. CARLING. It is the same as last year, only it was then down in the Supplementary Estimates. We thought it better to put it in the main Estimates.

Committee rose and reported.

RETURN ORDERED.

Correspondence and statement showing what is the sum claimed by each of the counsel employed by the Crown in the trials resulting from the North-West troubles in 1885, and the amount paid to each of them —(Mr. Langelier.)

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 3 o'clock, a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 20th May, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

TIMBER DUES OF MR. HERMAN H. COOK.

Mr. TAYLOR. In answer to a question which I asked yesterday, the right hon. the First Minister made a statement which I think reflects seriously against two hon. members of this House. One, the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), ex-Minister of the Interior, in his dealings with the revenues of this country; and the other, the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Cook), in his dealings with the Department of the Interior. The question I asked was as follows:—

"Was any sum, and if so, how much, due to the Government or the Indian Department by Mr. Herman Cook, as dues for timber cut on Indian lands in the Georgian Bay, during the years 1872-73? Did Mr. Cook pay such indebtedness? and if so, in what sums and at what dates? If Mr Cook has not paid these dues, why not? Whether the said claim still remains unpaid or unsettled, and if not, when, and under what circumstances was any settlement thereof made, and what were the terms and conditions of any such settlement?"

To which Sir John A. Macdonald replied:

"This is the answer furnished by the Department:

"Mr. H. H. Cook, in 1870, acquired a timber license to cut pine and oak trees on the following islands in Georgian Bay: Christian, Hope, Beckwith, Giant's Tomb and Beausoliel. In the season of 1872-73 he cut a quantity of pine on these islands, the dues on which amounted to $3,879.95; on October 1, 1873, he paid cash $2,079.95, and gave a bond for the balance, $1,800.00, bearing interest at 6 per cent. He was called upon several times to pay the bond and interest thereon, but failed to do so. In July, 1875, he wrote to the Superintendent General (Mr. Laird), asking for a renewal of the bond, owing to the dulness of the lumber trade. On the 7th July the order to renew the bond was given by Mr. Laird. On February 3rd, 1877, Mr. Cook wrote to the Department, enclosing a statement showing that the men employed by him to measure the pine timber in 1872-73, had made an over-return of 927,017 feet, the dues on which amounted to $1,486.24. Nothing appears to have been done in the matter until 1st October, 1878, when the remission was made by Mr. Mills of the above sum, $1,486.24, and interest thereon, from the date of the bond, 1st October, 1873, five years, in accordance with a declaration of William Telfer, Mr. Cook's bookkeeper at Toronto. On the 2nd October, Mr. Cook paid to Mr. Mills the sum of $313.76, and interest, which, together with the amount remitted, made up the amount of bond $1,800."

I may say that, in justice to these hon. gentlemen, I think the matter should be investigated, and as the Session is so near its close I ask the permission of the House to move the following resolution:—

That the matter of the indebtedness of Mr. Herman H. Cook as dues for timber cut on Indian Reserves on a certain island in Georgian Bay in 1872 and 1873, and the remission of $1,486.24, together with interest thereon, be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems to me, although there can be no objection, if the hon. gentleman has any charge to make against my hon. friend that it should be investigated in a proper shape, that we have never referred to the Committee on Public Accounts anything which does not appear in some volume or other of the Public Accounts. I do not understand that this item did appear in any item of the Public Accounts that I know of.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is an item in the Public Accounts referring to the matter, but I will ask to refer it to a special committee if the hon. gentleman wishes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know whether the matter appears in the Public Accounts or not. I did not speak when the motion was being put, as I thought the hon. gentleman to whom it refers might wish to say something, but it occurs to me that there is a statement of the facts as furnished to me by the Department when I sent the question for an answer. There is the whole thing, and I do not know that we have anything to enquire about. There are the facts. I think, on the point that has been taken, in the first place, that it does not appear in the Public Accounts, and, in the second place, that the whole facts are there, and there is really nothing for the committee to enquire about. My hon. friend should withdraw his motion.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). This is rather a nice way to get along I must say. When a charge was made against me, when I put money into the public treasury instead of taking it out, no person asked that it should be withdrawn. There is just that difference: that I put money into the public treasury and the hon. gentleman took money out of the public treasury. I brought money into the public treasury with the consent of the Minister, and this money has been taken out with the consent of the Minister. Is that not to be investigated? Let us have fair play on both sides. There is a matter of about $2,000, and while I have not an unkind word to say against the hon. gentleman, against whom the charge is made, I say we should have fair play on both sides. Why is it that day after day I should be racked before the people of this country in the newspapers of hon. gentlemen opposite, and especially by the editor of the Globe newspaper, if a matter such as this before us should not be investigated? Now, I say this is a matter which a committee should investigate. Let it go before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and let us have these matters all cleaned up. I hope the hon. gentleman will not withdraw this motion.

Motion agreed to.

LAND GRANTS TO MILITIA.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved for leave to introduce a Bill to make further provision respecting grants of land to members of the militia force on active service in the North-West. He said: I may say that the object of this Bill is to extend somewhat the privileges with respect to scrip and land warrants to persons who were engaged in the service in the suppression of the outbreak last year. It proposes to enlarge the class to whom grants of land are to be made, so as to include certain of the irregulars who were actually engaged—to scouts who were actually engaged, to men engaged on the Northcote or other steamers which were actually in action, to persons regularly appointed to the medical staff, to nurses in the hospitals, where they have been recommended by the Major General commanding the forces for special services. It also proposes to extend these privileges to members of the force who left home but were invalided before reaching Port Arthur, and were compelled to return. It also proposes to allow volunteers who are now homesteaded in the North-West to apply their land warrants on their homesteads. It also proposes, in the case of certain members of the permanent force, such as "A" and "B" batteries and the military schools, for themselves, but not for substitutes, to extend the time in which they may enter for their land to six months after their term of service expires.

Mr. GAULT. I should like to ask the Minister of the Interior if the telegraph operators are included. Many of them went up to the North-West at the risk of their lives, as well as the volunteers.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). They are not included.

Mr. BLAKE. It appears, from the explanation of the hon. gentleman, that provision is being made for the alienation of a large additional portion of the public domain; large numbers of persons are to receive grants who are not now entitled to receive them. Therefore, I would ask whether the Bill should not be preceded by a resolution in committee?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Perhaps the hon. gentleman will consent that I should now move that the House resolve itself into committee on the resolution to-morrow.

Motion for leave to introduce Bill withdrawn, and motion for the House to go into committee, to-morrow, agreed to.

SIXTH REPORT OF PRINTING COMMITTEE.

Mr. BERGIN moved:

That the sixth report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament be adopted.

He said: Mr. Mortimer, the contractor for the binding, asked the committee for an increase in consequence of the increased size of the volumes. At first each volume was about 600 pages, and last year it was over 1,000 pages. The committee, after investigating the matter, came to the conclusion that an addition of 5 cents per volume should be allowed to Mr. Mortimer, and it was understood that that should be in full of all claims for the past, and from this period until the expiration of the contract.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to refer to a matter which indirectly brings my own veracity into question. In the debate on the timber limit question on the 4th of the present month, the hon. member from Montreal West (Mr. Gault) denied having made any application. In the Hansard report I find the following:—

"Mr. GAULT. No, Sir, my name is found nowhere on the books.

"Mr. CHARLTON. This is taken from the Sessional Papers of 1883, Volume 16, No. 12, Return No. 84.

"Mr. GAULT. I never spent one cent, and had nothing to do with any territory in the North-West."

In addition to the application for colonisation lands referred to then, the hon. gentleman's general denial of having anything to do with applications, covered my statement that he had applied for friends for coal limits. I have looked over the returns, and I find the following:—

"OTTAWA, September 19th, 1882.

"SIR,—I have the honor, by direction of the Minister of the Interior, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 7th instant, the application of Mr. G. W. Smett for the west half of section 16, township 3, range 8; and beg to reply that it will be submitted to the Minister.

"I have, &c.,
"A. RUSSELL,
"For Surveyor General.

"M. H. GAULT, Esq., Montreal."

I also find the following:—

"MONTREAL, Sept., 1882.

"Right Hon. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD,
"Minister of the Interior, Ottawa.

"DEAR SIR,—Some friends of mine here, Messrs. Kane, Scott, Iles, have applied to the Department for leases of land in township 3, range 8, west of 2nd C. M., and the favorable consideration of their application would very much oblige,

"Yours faithfully,
"M. H. GAULT."

Mr. GAULT. I think I should reply that I myself personally never applied for any. I have lots of favors to ask for my constituents, but not one for myself. I never asked a favor from any man living for myself, and never will.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman was not charged in my statement with having made application for himself, but he denied having had anything to do with lands in the North-West, or having made any application.

NORTH-WEST CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask when we are likely to have laid on the Table the report of the board appointed to enquire into the North-West land claims?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). One return on that subject has gone down to the Senate to-day. The investigation is still going on. I believe to-day or to-morrow the commission leave Prince Albert, where they have been engaged in settling claims, and they are now going westward to Battleford and Edmonton to continue their investigation.

Mr. MULOCK. I desire to enquire when we will have the report of the War Claims Commission. The Minister of Militia last Friday promised it in a day or two. The question has been asked once or twice this week, and the last time the Minister of Militia was out of the House, but the Minister of Public Works promised to see that the Minister answered it or asked to have the question renewed, I am not sure which.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I understood from my colleague, the Minister of Militia, that he expected the report either last night or this morning. I have not seen him since.

FISHING BY FOREIGN VESSELS IN CANADIAN WATERS.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 136) further to amend the Act respecting fishing by foreign vessels. He said: I have no further explanations to offer than those I gave the other day. The Bill is to amend the third section of our present law. The present law provides, with reference to any ship, vessel or boat, within any harbor of Canada, or hovering, in British waters, within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks or harbors of Canada, that:

"If such ship, vessel or boat be foreign, or not navigated according to the laws of the United Kingdom or of Canada, and has been found fishing, or preparing to fish, or to have been fishing (in British waters), within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks or harbors of Canada not included within the above-mentioned limits, without a license, or after the expiration of the period named in the last license granted to such ship, vessel or boat under the first section of this Act, such ship, vessel or boat, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores and cargo thereof, shall be forfeited."

By the convention of 1818 United States fishermen were prevented entering our ports, harbors, creeks, &c., for any but the four purposes of shelter, repairs, obtaining wood, and obtaining water, and the Imperial Act of 1819 was based upon that treaty, as will be seen by section 3 of that Act, which provides that United States fishermen can enter only for these four purposes I have mentioned, and for none others. In the Dominion Fisheries Act the penalty of forfeiture is inflicted only in cases where vessels are found fishing, or preparing to fish, or having fished, and there is no penalty provided to cover other infractions of the treaty which would come under the term "and for no other purposes." It is proposed, therefore, after the word "Act" in the thirty-first line of the third section of this amending Bill, to add the following words:—

"Or has entered such waters for any purpose not permitted by the law of nations, or by treaty or convention, or by any law of the United Kingdom or Canada in force at the time being, or, having entered such waters, has failed to comply with any such law of the United Kingdom or Canada."

The penalty of forfeiture therefore will be provided in the case of United States fishing vessels which come into Canadian waters for any other purpose than for shelter, repairs, wood and water. It is thought necessary, to complete the protection of our fisheries and carry out the express terms of the convention of 1818, that this be added.

Mr. WELDON. The first portion of the section is simply the same provision as is contained in the Act of George III, and also in the Statutes of the different Provinces, which it is proposed to repeal, but a difficulty has been suggested, and which the hon. gentleman proposes to remedy by sub-section (b). My hon. friend wishes to obtain power to enforce, under penalties of forfeiture, the provisions of the treaty of 1818, and of the Act 9 George III and of the Customs Act; but there may be a difficulty as regards forfeiture in the latter case. That penalty might apply, under his amendment, to a vessel which had committed a breach of customs regulations, an offence which was not contemplated in the Act or the treaty. I would suggest to the Minister to leave that out entirely. In the Act regulating customs, ample provisions are made for breaches of the customs regulations, and it would not be advisable to provide, as the hon. gentleman would, for the forfeiture of a foreign vessel in case of a slight breach of a customs regulation. Under this proposed provision a very slight breach of customs regulations by a foreign vessel might involve her forfeiture, when our Act regulating customs would only subject her to a small penalty. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman would eliminate that clause.

Mr. FOSTER. I quite appreciate the objection raised by my hon. friend, and have no objection to eliminate that portion, when in committee.

Mr. DAVIES. I am glad the hon. gentleman has accepted the suggestion of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Weldon). It would raise unpleasant complications if we were to seize a vessel for some infringement of the customs law. I would like to have some information of the real object of the Bill and the policy which is sought to be enforced. The convention of 1818 provides distinctly that American fishermen shall not be allowed to enter our territorial waters except for the purpose of shelter, repair and procuring wood or water, and for no other purpose whatsoever. The Imperial Act of 1819, 59 George III, provided expressly for the forfeiture of American fishermen entering our waters who were found fishing, or preparing to fish, or who had been fishing. That Act went a little further, and provided that any American vessels might, pursuant to the privileges accorded to them by the convention, enter our waters for the special purposes I have named, subject to such restrictions as might be enacted by any Imperial Order in Council to prevent their abusing that privilege. I would like to ascertain in the first place whether any Orders in Council were passed pursuant to the powers contained in that section of the 59 George III; if those Orders in Council were passed, what they amounted to, what punishment was imposed upon a vessel which entered irregularly under the provision of that convention, ratified by the Imperial Act. Then we find that, following the course of legislation which the Imperial Parliament had set as a precedent, in 1870 we provided that American fishermen entering our waters should render themselves liable to forfeiture if they were caught in the act of fishing, or preparing to fish, or found to have been fishing. I should like to ascertain from the hon. gentleman whether he has come to the conclusion, or has been so advised, that the purchasing of bait is covered by the words "preparing to fish, or fishing, or having been fishing," or either of them; whether it is necessary to make further provisions in that respect, or whether he thinks the Act in that respect is sufficiently extensive; and, if he thinks so, I should like him to tell the House a little more fully and accurately what other acts on the part of the American fishermen he intends by this legislation to prohibit, or to render them liable to forfeiture in case they commit. Of course we find ourselves somewhat at a loss, in the absence of information which the Government refuses to give—and the loss is so great in my individual case that I do not pretend to attempt to overcome it—to discuss the policy of the Government in carrying that Act out. I first want to know what that policy is, what objects the hon. gentleman seeks to attain, whether he finds the Act deficient in the respect which I have mentioned, in regard to the punishment of vessels purchasing bait, and I suppose transhipping cargoes, whether it is intended to punish those acts or the shipping of crews, whether it is part of their policy to prevent American fishermen, as fishermen, from shipping crews in our harbors and along our shores, and whether this Act is for the purpose of enabling them to carry out that policy? The policy may or may not be a good one; it may or may not be one required; it may or may not be one which the Imperial Government, whose consent and assent and assistance is required, would give that assistance and co-operation to. The hon. gentleman, acting in the public interest, as he said the other day, thought it was not prudent to give the House the information in that regard which I thought the House should have, but whether he thinks it prudent to give himself greater latitude on this occasion or not, I certainly think he should define a little more clearly and accurately what his policy is, and what are the particular objects which he seeks to reach by these new provisions. I think it is desirable to have this general statement before we go into committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. I quite agree with everything the hon. gentleman from Queen's county (Mr. Davies) has said with regard to the desirability of information, but on this matter it is rather a delicate point, I take it, and I think my hon. friend will see that, under the circumstances, perhaps it would be just as well not to be too definite in the explanations in relation to this Bill. My hon. friend knows as well as I do what the point in the Bill is, and I think we ought to exercise some degree of patriotic spirit in this matter; and I am sure, when I appeal to my hon. friend, who knows well the point in the Bill, he will exercise that patriotic feeling, and allow the Government to pass the Bill. I think it is not a question upon which we ought to raise any discussion, and I am sure my hon. friend will see the propriety, from a national spirit, from a patriotic spirit, of not raising a discussion at this time on this Bill.

Mr. DAVIES. When my hon. friend imagines that I know the intention and policy of the Government in introducing this Bill, I may say that I am not thoroughly conversant with that policy, nor do I know what their intentions are. My patriotism is quite extensive enough, I think, to meet the requirements of the case, but I think, before we take a new departure upon this very important question, we should be informed whether this is in consonance with the views of the Imperial Government or not, and the exact extent to which the measure proposes to go.

Mr. MITCHELL. It was not the hon. gentleman's political knowledge, but his legal knowledge that I referred to, and I am sure he knows what the object of the Bill is, and I think it would be well to allow the Bill to pass.

Mr. BLAKE. At the earliest stage at which it was possible to do so this Session, I adverted to this very important subject in words which I wish to repeat, because they express my present views:

"I regard, I confess, with some degree of apprehension, the situation. I agree that some steps have to be taken, and I do not condemn what is announced rather guardedly in the Speech; but what our relations with our neighbors are to be in the new situation in which we are placed, what is to be the solution of the headland question, which was unhappily left unadjusted in the former negotiations, and what complications may occur, are questions which must press themselves on our minds, but which I do not now refer to further, not knowing the precise state of the situation, and in the absence of the papers, which I hope to be brought down, showing what the position of the Imperial authorities is."

I think it is absolutely impossible to enter into a profitable discussion of this question in the state of want of information in which we are to-day. I suppose that condition of things, in the view of the Government, continues which they stated existed the other day, as to the expediency of affording us that light. In the absence of that light, it is impossible for us to judge, I think, of the propriety of any precise measure which they may propose to us, and it is rather in furtherance of an executive policy which they declare to us we have to take upon trust, in truth which they do not disclose to us, that we are now asked to legislate than in any other way. On former occasions, we know —those of us who recollect the circumstances, or those who have refreshed their memory by reference to the documents —what the attitude of the several parties to this question was, the attitude of several of the Provinces of the Dominion which were not then part of the Dominion, the attitude of Newfoundland on a later occasion, the attitude of the Imperial authorities, and the attitude of the United States. Upon these questions, so far as they concern the separate Provinces, omitting the case of Newfoundland, we are at this time entirely in the dark, and therefore it is practically a step in the dark that we are asked to take.

Mr. THOMPSON. In answer to the hon. member for Queen's county (Mr. Davies), I may be allowed to say that at the present juncture it seems necessary to refer back to the Imperial Statute. The Imperial Statute, as he is aware, while clearly defining what is prohibited in respect of foreign fishing vessels, does not in precise terms, in such a way I may say as to avoid question, provide the penalty which is to attach to a violation of some of its terms. The Parliament of Canada has already legislated in reference to that defect, in relation to two or three specified instances. The hon. member has enquired whether my hon. colleague is advised that the legislation is necessary to meet the offence of purchasing bait in the bays and harbors of Canada. I think he will see the propriety of not pressing the question, inasmuch as the contention on both sides is now submitted to a Canadian court for adjudication. However, referring again to the question of the Imperial Statute, the hon. gentleman asked whether any regulation had been made by the Imperial Government under that Statute. I think I am correct in stating that no regulations have been made. The penalty which is prescribed in the last clause of the Imperial Statute, is a penalty of £200 upon any person offending, and that penalty is only pronounced in respect of those who, having come into the waters of Canada, fail to depart when they are ordered so to do, and against those who violate any of the regulations. The regulations not having been made, that class of offences is out of the question, and then we have simply that penalty pronounced in respect to those persons who, having come improperly into the bays and harbors of Canada, do not depart therefrom when ordered so to do. Now, it is obvious that the evils which the enactment was to prevent may be completed before the proper officer in our large ports on the Atlantic seaboard can give the order to the offending vessel. If the object of the vessel has been to prepare to fish, or to violate any of the provisions of the treaty, that object, to a large extent, may be accomplished before the order can be given, and therefore the penalty, although a very heavy one, is not effectual for the reason I have stated. I think it would not be at all expedient, as was stated by the hon. member for Northumberland, to undertake to state categorically now the offences in respect of which it is proposed to enforce this Act, if it should receive the sanction of Parliament. That, of course, must depend on a great many circumstances, as the hon. gentleman is aware, which it is impossible to forsee at the present moment. But we are asking for this legislation now simply on the ground that it is desirable to make effectual the clear provisions of the Imperial Statutes, and those of our own country, and to remove any controversy as to the penalty that should be attached to the violation of the law.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to amend by striking out the word "by," in the 32nd line, and insert the words "contrary to" in lieu thereof. Also to strike out the word "by," in the 33rd line, and substitute the word "to" in lieu thereof. Also to strike out all the words after the word "force," in the 34th line, and substitute these words: "or having entered such waters, has failed to comply with any such law of the United Kingdom or of Canada."

Mr. DAVIES. I beg to ask the hon. gentleman what he means by the expression in the Act "has entered such waters for any purposes not permitted by the law of nations." What law of nations does he refer to?

Mr. FOSTER. That is a general expression, and serves to introduce what follows.

Mr. DAVIES. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman would explain to us what the law of nations is.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are many offences against the law of nations that may be committed by ships.

Amendments concurred in.

Mr. DAVIES. Does the hon. gentleman desire to have the full penalty exacted necessarily in every case, where there has been even a slight breach of the law? As the Act is worded now, the slightest breach in the world on the part of any ship, would subject her necessarily to absolute forfeiture; the court would have no power to inflict any lesser penalty.

Mr. THOMPSON. Of course there is a discretion in the Crown. It is not desirable to invest that discretion in the court.

Mr. DAVIES. The law at present subjects a vessel to a penalty of £200 if she does not depart from the waters after having been notified to depart by the collector. The difficulty there was that after she had been notified there was such a length of time allowed her (twenty-four hours), that she might then commit a breach.

Mr. MITCHELL. As I understand the objection of the hon. gentleman, it is with regard to the extreme penalty. The Act 31 Victoria, chapter 61, gives the Governor in Council power to relieve from the penalty in case of seizure.

Mr. DAVIES. Not a forfeiture.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Act says:

"In cases of seizure under this Act the Governor in Council may by order direct a stay of proceedings; and in cases of condemnation may relieve from the penalty in whole or in part, and on such terms as may be deemed right."

That would cover the objection.

Mr. DAVIES. That relates to a penalty. I only suggested this point; I am not going to press it.

Mr. MITCHELL. This section covers any seizure under the Act.

Mr. DAVIES. What I suggested was that possibly some small breach might be committed which could be atoned for by payment of a penalty in the court in which the vessel is libelled. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to another point, that he may consider whether there is force in it or not. The new offence which is created by this Statute is entering the water for a wrongful purpose—the offence is "entering." The animus must exist at the time of the entry. The Act of buying bait, transhipping cargo, shipping men did not constitute an offence under this Act in itself. Such would be evidence, probably, that the party had committed a violation of the offence of "entering illegally;" it would be primâ facie evidence capable of being rebutted. Suppose a vessel came in without the captain having any intention of breaking the treaty; suppose, after the vessel is in harbor, he should ship his cargo, buy bait, or, his men having deserted, should ship men; the vessel would not be forfeited under the Statute, because she would not have been guilty of the offence of entering for a wrongful purpose. I call attention to this point, because the Act is confined to a specific offence, which is entering for an unlawful purpose. If a vessel enters lawfully she does not commit an illegal offence.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is probably so; but in order to remedy it we must go beyond the terms of the convention. I think we are safe only in going that far.

Mr. DAVIES. I call attention to it.

Committee rose and reported.

CARLETON CITY OF ST. JOHN BRANCH RAILWAY.

Mr. THOMPSON, moved the second reading of Bill (No. 137) respecting the Carleton City of St. John Branch Railway.

Mr. WELDON. This Bill gives power to the Government to expropriate the property, and an opportunity should be given to the shareholders to make known their views.

Mr. THOMPSON. The provision made last year with respect to the acquisition of this railway was simply an item in the Supply Bill authorising the Governor General to appropriate $85,000 for the acquisition of the railway, water front and other property. In carrying that out, a good deal of difficulty was experienced. No power of expropriation having been given, all that could be done was to seek to obtain the shares of the company. I understand the great majority, if not the whole, of the shareholders are willing, and in fact anxious, that this legislation should be passed. The greater proportion of the shares have been got in, largely from the fact that the city itself had $40,000 worth of them; but there was no absolute power possessed by the Minister to acquire the property. We now desire to take that power and expropriate the railway.

Mr. WELDON. I am well aware that the large proportion of the shares are held by very few persons, but they have a right to be heard.

Mr. BARKER. I have had a great deal of conversation with private shareholders interested in the Bill, and they are invariably desirous that the Government should acquire the property. The shares are not very many, and they are held by a very small number of persons. Some arrangement should be made by which those shareholders would be placed on the same footing as the city of St. John.

Mr. WELDON. If they were paid at the same rate as the city of St. John there would be no objection.

Mr. THOMPSON. This Bill provides that they shall be paid. One difficulty arose in regard to the matter. Some of the shareholders had not paid calls, and their own charter provides that under those circumstances they had no power to assign their shares.

Mr. WELDON. What amount has been paid to the city of St. John for the bonds? The city is not an ordinary stockholder, but has an interest in the railway, which enables them to appoint two directors. I see it is stated that 4,700 shares have been acquired by the Government. I would like the Minister to state what amount had been paid.

Mr. THOMPSON. All but about $2,000.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. WELDON. What is the amount of the bond?

Mr. THOMPSON. $18,250.

Mr. BLAKE. How much was the stock which has been secured?

Mr. THOMPSON. Altogether the expenditure in paying the bonds and securing the stock was about $83,000.

Mr. BLAKE. And $18,250 of that was in bonds. What was the par of the stock which was secured?

Mr. THOMPSON. $20 a share.

Mr. BLAKE. But what did it amount to?

Mr. THOMPSON. The city of St. John held 2,000 shares, that is $40,000; the St. John and Maine Railway 2,700 shares, $26,029.64; sundry persons, 228 shares, amounting to $2,198.96; various persons, on whose shares were paid sums amounting to $36.33. Then there were sixty shares unissued and still in the hands of the company. I omitted to say that the company had in hand the money which was handed over, $1,738.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the amount which is to be expended will be in excess of the vote of last year?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, by about $2,000. I understand that there was $2,000 remaining, but that may be composed in part of the $1,738.

Mr. BLAKE. I should say so. What has been done as to paying the bonds at par without the accrued interest? Is the stock to be paid at par without dividends or interest?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. WELDON. Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that par was paid for this stock?

Mr. BARKER. They were paid simply what they paid for it themselves.

Mr. WELDON. They were not the original stockholders; they purchased at a certain discount, and that sum they agreed to take and the Government agreed to give.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman, as I understood, gave at first $18,250 for bonds which, as I understood, represented the bonds without accrued interest; 2,000 shares of the city of St. John, for which he said $40,000 was paid. Then he gave 2,700 shares, which, I understood him to say, belonged to the St. John and Maine Railway, and for that he said $26,029 was paid.

Mr. THOMPSON. I may have misled the hon. gentleman. I was stating what the values were. The city of St. John held that number of shares, and I was stating the par value of the shares.

Mr. WELDON. That amount was paid to the city?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. This $27,029 is the amount paid to the railway company?

Mr. BARKER. Yes. The shares were originally bought by the contractor, who sold them to the St. John and Maine Railway Company two years ago, for the same amount they now claim from the Government.

Mr. WELDON. They were bought at a discount?

Mr. BARKER. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. It is equally extraordinary and gratifying to learn that this valuable property has been acquired at par, and that the holders of the securities did not demand a premium from the Government.

Mr. WELDON. With regard to the second section it seems to me that the stockholders, under these circumstances, should be paid the amount they paid out upon this stock, but this puts it in the hands of the railway company to pay what sum they please. The Government have paid the city and the railway the full amount they paid for it, and I think the other stockholders should be placed in the same position, and that the amount they paid should be re funded, of course, with the loss of the interest, as in the case of the city.

Mr. BARKER. The section requires that they shall be paid.

Mr. THOMPSON. The clause is framed in this way merely to provide that the Minister shall not be bound to pay that sum if they will take less.

Mr. BLAKE. I have no doubt, after the statement of the Minister, that it is not the intention to treat these individual holders on any different principle from that which applies to the others, this form of words "not exceeding" being used in all such similar transactions. Of course, I understand that the shareholders must be put on the same footing, the principle of the Government being to pay up the part of whatever the shareholder may have paid.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes. I understand there is no difficulty as to the shareholders, but that the principal difficulty is as to the transfer, as some of them have not fully paid up.

On section 3,

Mr. THOMPSON moved to strike out the words "300" in the second line.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BLAKE. Are there any claims or encumbrances of any description on the property? If there are we should try to remove them, and if not, I do not see why we should adopt this form.

Mr. THOMPSON. There are none except as I have stated. It is intended merely as a safeguard in case there should be any at present unknown.

Mr. BLAKE. But that is what I complain of, if there be any claim or incumbrance on the property of this company, and I do not think we should deprive the holder of that claim or encumbrance of it by a statutory provision.

Mr. THOMPSON. The fourth section provides for that.

Mr. BLAKE. No, that relates only to shareholders.

On section 4,

Mr. THOMPSON. I move to insert after the word "stock," in the third line, the words "or with the holder of any encumbrance for the discharge thereof."

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has just stated that there are no encumbrances.

Mr. THOMPSON. I understood that the hon. gentleman wished this added as a precautionary amendment. I do not desire it.

Mr. BLAKE. No; what I wished was to omit that portion of the clause which assumed to make provision to vest the property in Her Majesty free from all encumbrances. The hon. gentleman has not stated the financial scheme. We want to know what we are paying. For all I know there may be $100,000 of encumbrance on the property.

Mr. THOMPSON. These are the words always used in reference to the expropriation of property.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. WELDON. I would like the hon. gentleman to provide in the second clause that each shareholder shall be paid a sum equal to that paid by him for his stock, instead of providing that he shall be paid a sum not exceeding that paid by him. That would put all parties on an equality. As it stands, the clause places the ordinary stockholder in a different position from large stockholders or the city of St. John. I think the amount actually paid in each case should be refunded.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is the basis of the negotiation and agreement with all the shareholders; but if I assented to the hon. gentleman's amendment, it would prevent any shareholder giving his shares for less than he paid for them. After the assurance I have given that the negotiations have taken place on that basis, I think the hon. gentleman should be satisfied.

Mr. WELDON. That is satisfactory to me.

On section 6,

Mr. BLAKE. This is another clause which proposes to deal with an appropriation, and which I apprehend should be initiated in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will withdraw that clause.

Mr. WELDON. What amount will be required besides this?

Mr. THOMPSON. About $2,000, and authority will have to be taken for that at the same time.

Committee rose and reported.

SUPPLY—DUTY ON FLOUR AND COAL.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before we go into Committee of Supply, I propose to bring under the consideration of the House a subject which is of very considerable importance, not alone to the constituency I represent, but to the people of the whole Dominion. It is in the recollection of the House that about eight years ago—I think in 1878—the policy of the country was discussed and the verdict of the people was in favor of what is now called the National Policy. I am afraid that I am somewhat responsible with others for creating a feeling in favor of the National Policy. I have never regretted the action I took in that respect; I am still a believer in the National Policy, but, now as then, I do not believe in running the National Policy to the ground. There are some things, in the application of the National Policy to the tariff of the country, that I think it is time this House should revise. It will be recollected that one of the most serious objections—and I now particularly address my hon. friends from the Maritime Provinces—against the National Policy was the duty on flour and the duty on coal. To the people of Nova Scotia, of course, it was important to have a duty on coal. The people of New Brunswick felt comparatively no interest in that duty, except such interest as they might feel in the success of a great national source of wealth in a neighboring Province. With a very slight interest in coal mines, only one or two being in that Province, one a very large and another an unimportant one, that Province was but little agitated on this question. At the time, one of the greatest objections I had to meet, in endeavoring to impress the people of my county with the desirability of adopting the National Policy, a policy which would create industries in our Dominion, as we hoped it would, and as the results, I believe, have shown it has, was the duty upon the food of the people, particularly of the poor hard-worked classes. I found that objection met me on every platform, and while I was personally against the imposition of duty on the food of the poor people, and while, had I been elected, I would have endeavored to shape the policy of the Administration of that day so as to exclude the duty upon cereals and grains, which were necessary for the food of the people, and the duty on coal, which was necessary to warm the people while I would have done that, unfortunately or fortunately for myself, and perhaps my constituents, I was defeated, and therefore had but little to say in the framing of the National Policy. Had I been returned on that occasion I should have resisted at every stage the imposition of a duty on flour, meal, corn, wheat, and the imposition of a duty on coal. I was not returned, and therefore did not feel myself responsible, except in a secondary degree, for the duties imposed on these articles. It is unfortunate that the policy of the Government was so shaped that we could not have the National Policy without imposing a duty on the bread of the people and on their coal. No man regrets that more than I do. I suffered, I will not say I bled for it, but I felt on that occasion that I had lost my election largely in consequence of the fact that it was like putting a firebrand into the country to talk about taxing the food of the poor man, and very properly so. It was impossible almost to present any argument for the duty except the argument which was put forth on that occasion by its advocates, that after a year, or two years, or three at the furthest, the probability was the production of Canada itself would be sufficient for the food of Canada. When that event arose, and the probability was that, with our North-West peopled, we would raise more food than was required for our people, and it would then make little difference whether there was a duty or not, as the markets of Europe would regulate prices, not only in the States, but in Canada as well. It was a question on which arguments could be used on both sides. I used that argument, but as regards the theory of what might result and the practical fact of what did result—the practical fact that we were putting 50 cents a barrel on flour when, as the people said, they found difficulty in getting money enough to buy the flour, without duty, I felt the strength of the position in which the people were placed, and while I was in favor of the National Policy, as a whole, I was not in favor of that particular part of it. But I was aware, and everyone must be aware, that all legislation is more or less a matter of compromise, and, in order to get the necessary protection assented to by the farmers of the country in the west, more particularly in Ontario and the west, in order to get protection to encourage the industries, whether the principle was a right one or not—I am not going to open up that question now, but in order to get that encouragement to the industries which we hoped to create under the National Policy—it became a necessity, so the Government of the day thought, to impose a duty on the food of the people. And this was done against my protest but as I had lost my election I was powerless to avert the action of the Government. I think the time has arrived, with the magnificent North-West opened up, with means of communication as good as any in the world between the producers and the consumers there, when we may fairly ask that the question of taking off the duty from the bread of the people shall be considered by the Government. I may be answered that the duty does not increase the cost. That is a theoretical question which I do not think we should consider now, whether it increases the cost or not, it certainly does not make it any cheaper, and it is pretty hard to convince a poor man, who has the price of a barrel of flour, if he has to pull out of his pocket another half dollar to pay for the barrel of flour, that the half dollar tax is not costing him anything more for the food he is going to eat and to feed his family with. I am not going to take up much of the time of the House on this question, because it is too late in the Session, but I will read a few statistics which I have prepared on that point, and which I trust the House will give some consideration to. I have gone to the trouble of compiling the imports and exports of flour and wheat in two years, 1877, the year before this policy was adopted, and 1885, the last year. Perhaps the House will consider this statement read, and it will appear, in the Debates to-morrow.

Mr. MILLS. We want to hear the facts now.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then I will read it:

NUMBER of bushels of Wheat and barrels of Flour Imported into the different Provinces in the Dominion of Canada for the years 1877 and 1885, and the value of each:—

EXPORTS.

NUMBER of barrels of flour and bushels of wheat exported from the Dominion of Canada during the years 1877 and 1885, with their values:—

Year 1877.

Wheat	Bush. 2,893,155	$2,742,383
Flour of wheat	Brls. 268,605	1,485,438

Year 1885.

Wheat	Bush. 2,340,956	1,966,287
Flour of wheat	Brls. 123,777	556,530

Now, Sir, I have prepared these statistics to show the value of the wheat imported into the different Provinces prior to the adoption of the National Policy. Of course, people may have various views about the propriety or impropriety of that policy, but one thing is clear, that in certain Provinces of this Dominion it works extremely hard against those Provinces. Take the case of the Province from which I come, or of the adjoining Province of Nova Scotia, but I will particularly refer to New Brunswick. That Province is a Province which depends chiefly upon its lumber, and the fish caught on its shores, having but few industries established within its bounds, and to a lesser degree on agriculture. Now, Sir, it is extremely hard upon a Province such as New Brunswick to have to pay a duty of 50 cents a barrel upon every barrel of breadstuff consumed by the people. I have no hesitation in saying that almost the whole of the working class in our community have to buy flour, which, if not coming from Ontario or from the North-West, is liable to duty. I think it is about time that that policy was put an end to. We have opened up our great wheat fields in the North-West, we have gone to an enormous outlay in the way of establishing and building railways at the expense of the people of the whole Dominion, including those from my own Province. It is about time that these wheat fields of the west, to which we are tributary for the means of conveyance and approach to them, should be relieved of this protection, and that the people of the east should no longer be made to pay tribute in the shape of imposed duty. I know it will be said that it does not change the price of flour; that we have never had flour cheaper than it has been for the last twelve months. That may all be very true, but the question is, if we had not the duty upon it, whether we would not have flour cheaper still. It is said that the markets of Europe regulate the price of flour in this country. So they do, to a very large extent, but if the consumption of the people of Canada is only equal to the supply I hold that the imposition of the duty is a charge, and it does increase the cost of the flour that the people eat. If I am correct in that proposition, then, Sir, I think it is about time that we should have a change in relation to it. Sir, I am not going to elaborate this thing. The House understands very well what the position of it is. But I think that in a county such as mine, that has scarcely a manufacturing industry in it outside of lumber, where a large portion of the people have to labor and toil, who earn their living by the labor of their hands, and where the fishermen of our sea coast have to undergo such great hardship, this duty imposes a serious charge. I may say that the farmers in that part of the country do not raise much wheat; their operations are more confined to raising the coarse grains, such as oats, peas, &c., and wheat can be bought cheaper than it can be raised, in a climate and soil such as ours. Therefore, I think it is a hard case that the people of a county such as mine—and there are many other counties in the Province almost similarly situated—should be compelled to pay a duty on the bread they eat, on the food with which they must sustain their families. In mentioning this matter, I think I am only doing my duty to my constituents. After they had elected me on the last occasion I made a statement of what I proposed to do, and I said I should endeavor to impress upon this House on every occasion that presented itself, the necessity of abolishing the duty on flour and meal and coal. I also stated that, while I was a National Policy man then—and I am as firm a believer, in the National Policy still,—I believe there are limitations to the operation of the National Policy, and I do not believe that 35 per cent., as an average, to protect cottons manufactured in our country, is a duty which ought to exist. I believe it ought to be reduced 10 per cent., and should come down to 25. In the same way, I believe that the protection which is given to woollens should also be reduced to about the maximum given to cotton manufacturers; and I believe, also, that the enormous monopoly that exists in favor of the sugar refiners should be changed and the protection reduced. Sir, I believe there is a very large public sentiment growing in this country in favor of the changes which I have suggested, and I hope that before this Session rises the Government will consider the propriety of ameliorating these evils in some way. In reference to coal, I may say that I prepared a short statement of the imports and exports in these two years which I will read to the House:

Exported coal, 249,536 tons, value		$ 855,968
Imported coal, 933,980	do	3,499,561
1885.
Exported coal, 479,706 tons, value		$1,468,166
Imported coal, 1,989,657	do	7,297,985

Now, Sir, whatever may be said about whether the duty is paid upon wheat or not, one thing is clear, that the 50 cents per ton paid upon coal used in this country, and there is an enormous quantity of it used, is a direct charge upon the people who buy it. I think the time has arrived when this whole Dominion should not be taxed for the benefit of a few coal mines in any one Province, and the Government should seriously approach this question with a view to altering their policy in regard to coal, because we all know that it was a supposed compensation given to the Maritime Provinces in return for permission to tax their food. That might be very beneficial to some counties in Cape Breton and the county of Pictou, so ably represented in this House, but I think the whole Dominion should not be taxed from end to end for the sake of any set of colliery proprietors who may happen to make less profit, or have smaller outputs, if the duty is taken off. I know that this was an arrangement framed by the leader of the Government, one of the objects of which was to have something to throw off when he approached the Americans with a view to negotiating a reciprocity treaty. But it is time now that that argument was abandoned. We have suffered enough by listening to that argument. We have had during eight years the enormous duty imposed—because it is an enormous duty—and it has been maintained as long as is desirable, and it is time the First Minister revised his policy, if he wishes it to be sustained, if he wishes its advocates to feel they are justified in supporting it. Let not the hon. gentleman run the National Policy into the ground, as he is doing, by retaining the duties on the coal and food of the people.

Mr. MILLS. Did the hon. gentleman say what is the total amount of duty proposed to be remitted by the resolution on the whole of the articles which it covered?

Mr. MITCHELL. I have not the statements ready, but the sum could easily be ascertained by referring to the blue-books. I move in amendment:

To leave out all the words after the word "that," and substitute the following instead thereof:—in the opinion of this House it would conduce to the comfort and well-being of the people of Canada, and especially of the working classes, if all import duties were removed from flour, meal, corn for feed or milling purposes, wheat and coal.

Mr. BURPEE. I am happy that in this instance at least I am able to subscribe to the proposal made by the leader of the third party. If he continues his policy in the same direction I will be able to follow him still further. The fact is I always advocated the repeal of the duties on the articles covered by the amendment as much on principle as in the interest of my constituents. I believe, and I have always believed, that food and fuel, at all events, that flour, meal and coal, should be free. I believe so far as possible the prime necessaries of life should be free. I believe that next to that the necessary articles of life that enter into the common consumption of the middle and poorer classes should be made as free as possible, and the luxuries of life should in the main bear the burden of the taxes imposed on the people for the government of the Dominion. The first tariff that was proposed and carried in this House contained a very moderate duty on flour of 25 cents per barrel. That, however, remained on the Statute-book only for about a year, and an hon. member upon the Opposition side of the House moved that the duty be repealed - I refer to the late Mr. Holton—and that duty was taken off. Not only did the Opposition vote for the proposal, but very many members on the Government side of the House supported it, and it was not resisted by the Government. It was then considered contrary to the principles on which the Government was conducted. But it is not so now. I fear I cannot anticipate so favorable a result in regard to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). I fear that to-day party exigencies are so strong and party lines are so tightly drawn that the members following the Government will scarcely respond to the proposal made by the third party led by the hon. member for Northumberland. After a time the duty on wheat and corn meal was brought before the House in connection with the duty on coal. It was introduced by Sir Charles Tupper, at all events at his instance, and he called it a national policy. He stated that we would have a duty imposed on flour in the interests of the west, and a duty on coal in the interests of the east. That, in my opinion, was only making bad worse; it was only committing a greater violation of the principle, which should govern any country than the first proposal, because the first proposal only went to the extent of taxing food, while the latter taxed food and fuel. We find it now incorporated in what we term the National Policy, and so much is this the case that I presume the Government will resist this amendment, and their supporters will stand by them. There is an article which, I think, cannot claim to be put in that category, and that is the article of corn meal. Corn is not grown to any very large extent in the Dominion, and a tax on corn meal can only be levied for revenue purposes. We imported last year 122,442 barrels of corn meal, and of that quantity 114,877 barrels were imported into the Maritime Provinces. We paid on that quantity over $45,000 of duty, the amount for the whole Dominion being $48,000. This is a tax which we should not bear; it is a tax which is not necessary for the principle of protection. It is a tax which bears very heavily on the working classes of the Dominion, and especially of the Maritime Provinces. I think that upon this article, at all events, the Government should not insist on imposing this burden on the people, and that they should remit that tax. Of flour we imported last year 563,822 barrels, and the Maritime Provinces and Quebec together imported of that quantity, 432,457 barrels. Now, Sir, I do think that this is a vicious and sectional tax. It may be argued, as it has been argued, that this is a protective duty. I do not believe it. The fact is that while it adds very little to the profits of the farmer in the west it bears heavily on certain consumers, especially in the Maritime Provinces. As to a very large amount of the flour which is imported into the Maritime Provinces, they have to pay the whole duty. I will explain. They have certain products in those Provinces for which they have no other market than the United States. They are compelled to seek some market there for those products. The Upper Provinces have a surplus and they do not require them. No matter how our trade is crippled in that respect we have to seek a market in the United States. Now, it is well known that in order to carry on trade profitably, you must have a return freight; you must have the privilege of bartering in order to carry it on profitably. In sending our products to the United States we are prevented from getting return freights by being compelled to pay half a dollar duty on flour, so far as that article is concerned, and that rule applies to many other articles we require. Now you can get flour carried from Boston or New York to the city of Fredericton, which is eighty miles above the mouth of the river, very nearly as cheaply as you can from the city of St. John to Fredericton. In fact they require it for ballast to such an extent that they carry it almost for nothing. But under the existing tariff we have to take our products to the United States and buy our flour and other products there, pay the exorbitant duties imposed or bring back our money and send it to other Provinces to buy such articles as we require, while our vessels have to return in ballast. In this trade the tax on flour is a tax for revenue only, and, having to pay that duty, our trade is crippled to that extent, and that, I think, is a very strong argument why the duty on flour should be remitted. With regard to coal, as I said before, I do not think we should have a duty on food or fuel. I know we receive a large amount of duty on coal and that, as a matter of revenue, it is of some importance, but I think there are many ways in which we could reduce our expenditure to make up for the duty on coal, if we should remit it. I do think that in the necessaries of life, such as flour, and meal, and coal, that the Dominion Government, having their railway built now through the prairie country, having the Canadian Pacific Railway nearly completed, and expecting, as they do, a large amount of wheat and flour from that North-West country, which they expect to export to Great Britain, and as the market of Great Britain will then, if not now, control the price of flour, so that the duty in that respect cannot be a protection to western farmers —I say I think, under these circumstances, that the Government might remit the duty on flour, while as to the duty on coal, I contend that the tariff, as a matter of protection, has been a failure. I contend that it has not succeeded in forcing up our coal to Quebec or Ontario to any extent which would warrant the duty imposed upon that article. The statistics read by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) show that the importation, instead of decreasing, has been increasing, notwithstanding the duty which has been imposed on coal. I contend that no duty we can impose on coal will, to any large extent, have a favorable effect upon the production of that article. I have much pleasure in supporting the proposition put in your hands by the hon. member for Northumberland.

Mr. KIRK. I was not aware that this question was coming up for discussion this afternoon, or I should have been prepared to have said more upon it than I am prepared to say now. I am glad, however, that the hon. member for Northumberland has brought up this question, because it is one which chiefly affects the Province from which I come, and especially the county I have the honor to represent in this Parliament. The hon. member for Northumberland said that the Province from which he comes was not an agricultural Province. I think I may say the same with regard to the Province of Nova Scotia. It is not an agricultural Province. Its business is divided pretty equally among fishing, lumbering, agriculture and mining; and although we may have a large agricultural industry in Nova Scotia, we raise very little wheat and no Indian corn; therefore, a duty on either of these articles falls heavily on the people of that Province—on the agricultural industry itself as well as on the other industries. There are none, or very few, of the farmers of Nova Scotia who grow sufficient wheat to produce flour for their own families, much less for exportation. Nova Scotia does not export wheat or flour. The hon. member for Northumberland quoted from the trade returns to show that Nova Scotia exported no flour and no wheat in 1877, but exported a large quantity of flour and a large quantity of wheat in 1885. But the Province of Nova Scotia did not produce that wheat and flour. Nova Scotia does not export one bushel of wheat or one barrel of flour of her own produce. The wheat and flour exported from Nova Scotia came from Ontario. The people of Nova Scotia are obliged to import all, or nearly all, the flour and all the corn meal they consume; therefore any duty on wheat, flour or corn meal is a burden upon them. It is said that this Dominion raises more wheat or flour than is necessary to supply all the wants of the people in all the Provinces; but the trade returns do not show that to be exactly the fact. Last year we imported 3,128,443 bushels of wheat and exported 2,340,956 bushels; that is, we imported 787,487 bushels more than we exported. Last year we imported 565,562 barrels of flour, and exported 123,777 barrels, or imported 441,765 barrels more than we exported. Therefore, it is an actual fact, according to the trade returns, that Canada is an importing country in respect to these articles; and the people of Canada are obliged to pay a tax on the food they use, which falls more heavily on the poor than on the rich. The duty paid last year on the flour we imported was $270,054; on the wheat, $55,956; and on the corn meal, about $50,000. These are burdens on the Maritime Provinces, where neither wheat, flour nor cornmeal is produced, and the tax is imposed on these articles for the sole purpose of fostering their production in Ontario and the North-West. In order to offset the duty on those articles, this House has placed a heavy duty on coal, which is a product of the Maritime Provinces, especially Nova Scotia; and the people of Nova Scotia, who consume flour and meal, are expected to pay the duty on those articles in order that the coal industry may be fostered. It was said when duties were placed upon coal, wheat, and flour, that it was done for the purpose of keeping our markets for our own people. So far as flour and meal are concerned, I think the duty has succeeded pretty well in keeping the markets of this Dominion for the producers; but this is not the case with regard to coal. Although there is a duty of 50 cents a ton on coal, we know that coals from Nova Scotia are not taken to Ontario; they go very little farther west than the place where I stand. A short time ago I moved for a return which would show the quantity of coal consumed in the public buildings here, and where it was purchased, and I found that large quantities of the coal consumed in these buildings were brought from the United States and not from the Maritime Provinces. One would suppose that a Government so willing to foster home industry would not have required the duty to oblige them to buy their coal from our own people, but that they would buy it even though the price was higher than the price of United States coal. But the coal of Nova Scotia is not consumed generally in the Dominion, while the people of the Maritime Provinces are obliged to consume the flour raised in Ontario, or pay the duty, and we find it more convenient to pay the duty. The very much larger proportion of the duties paid on flour is credited in the trade returns to the Maritime Provinces, and not to the Provinces where the article is produced. Now, I submit that it is unjust to tax the food of the people in order to benefit any industry, and it is greatly injuring the people of the Maritime Provinces. I am very glad the hon. member for Northumberland has brought this question up; and it will give me the greatest possible pleasure to vote for his resolution. You may talk about the benefit the duty on coal is doing to the coal industry of Nova Scotia. I believe it is not doing half so much benefit as its friends imagine; but I believe the people of all the Provinces are paying very much more for their coal than they would pay if this duty was not imposed. It is as great a hardship on the people of this country to be subjected to a duty on coal as to a duty on flour and meal. If there is anything that ought to be cheap in this northern climate, it is the food the people eat, and the fuel they use to cook that food; and this Government instead of trying to make these articles cheap, have done their utmost to make them dear, and they have succeeded. It is no argument to say that flour is cheaper now than it ever was before. I maintain that it would be cheaper still if there was no duty upon it. We are paying just the amount of the duty more than it is worth. Last year we paid $370,000 for our flour more than it was worth, or more than would have been paid for it if the duty was not upon it. The coal has also cost the people of this Dominion the amount of the duty more than it would have cost if the duty was not imposed. Why, the people of this country are paying more into the Treasury, as duty on the coal they consume, than would buy and pay for every ton of coal that is raised in Nova Scotia from one end of the year to the other. We are actually paying, as tax on the coal we consume, more money than would pay for every bushel of coal in Nova Scotia that has arrived at the pit's head. Yet hon. gentlemen, say this is not a tax, and this is just to the people. Although I am a Maritime Province man, I am prepared, as readily to take the duty off coal as to take it off flour and corn meal.

Mr. LANGELIER. This is a question of the greatest interest to the Province to which I belong. I do not think there is a county in the Province of Quebec which grows all the wheat it can consume and we are obliged to purchase large quantities of coal. The question of the duty on coal is of no interest to the country portion of Quebec, but it is of the greatest interest to the city portion. I am glad the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has brought up that subject, and I will vote with much pleasure for his motion should he divide the House on it. Without entering into the subject, I may say that during my election in 1884, that question was brought up. It was contended by those who supported the policy of the Government, that the imposition of a duty had no effect on the price of flour, that it did not, as a matter of fact, increase the price of Canadian flour; but proof was brought during the election of the falsity of that reasoning. A merchant of my county imported two cargoes of flour from Chicago, which he retailed in the county at the price of Canadian flour, and he offered it to every one who wanted to purchase, at 50 cents less, if the purchaser would pay the duty. He offered to sell any number of cargoes of flour on the same terms. Leaving aside the question as to whether the duty on flour has or has not increased its price, the hon. member for Northumberland has given us statistics showing the large quantity of flour imported by the Province of Quebec, and almost every other Province. Whether that duty be of advantage to Ontario or not, it is a very serious tax on the consumers of the other Provinces which do not grow the quantity of flour they consume. It is very wrong to impose a duty on such necessities of life as flour and coal. Combustibles are just as necessary in a cold country like this as are flour and other necessaries, and there are not many members of the Province of Quebec who would receive the approval of their electors if they voted against the amendment of my hon. friend from Northumberland. I shall have much pleasure in voting for it, if the hon. member will divide the House on that question.

Mr. FISHER. I will detain the House but for a few minutes. I am entirely in sympathy with the motion before the House. I do not believe that in the Province of Quebec there is to-day any class of people who could possibly be injured by the passage of this motion. Duties upon food stuffs, upon flour and wheat, can, in no sense or way, benefit the farming community in Quebec, because there the farmers hardly raise enough of those products for their own use. Consequently the farming class of that Province would be certainly benefited by the removal of the duty. When the laboring classes and the consuming classes generally throughout the country have to pay higher prices for the absolute necessaries of life, I am in favor of removing those duties, independently altogether of the general principle. I have always advocated a general reduction of duties, and objected to the high protective tariff of which these duties were erroneously supposed to be an integral portion. The duty on coal cannot affect the people of Quebec in any sense except by raising the price to the consumer. In our cold country, where coal is essential as a necessary of life, it seems a great hardship that it should be taxed. I have only brought these few remarks before the House, so as to clearly show my sympathy with the motion of the hon. member for Northumberland. If this question is put to the vote, I will gladly support the motion.

Mr. VAIL. I am surprised that we do not hear something about this question from hon. gentlemen opposite. It is a matter of a great deal of importance to certain sections of the Dominion, if not to other sections. When this duty was placed on coal and flour, it was supposed it would have a very good effect upon the coal business in the interests of Nova Scotia. Now, I think it has been clearly proved since the duty was put on coal that it has not benefited Nova Scotia to any great extent, so far as protecting us against the importation of coal from the United States is concerned. If we had a duty on coal coming from England, it would have exactly the same effect as the duty has had, and the effect of this duty has been to make the people of Ontario pay a very large amount into the public Treasury, while it has not benefited Nova Scotia, at all events, to any appreciable extent. This was a sort of compromise arrangement, the duty being put on flour in the interests of Ontario, to offset the duty on coal which was intended to benefit Nova Scotia.

Mr. HESSON. On what would you put a duty to raise revenue ?

Mr. VAIL. At that time we were having surpluses, and there was no necessity to put on a duty at all. Whatever might be the answer now as regards the future, it is evident the duty then was put on to take money out of the pockets of the people, and did take money out of their pockets, when there was no necessity to raise money for expenditure on our public works. I have given my opinion before as to the duty on flour and corn meal, so that I need not repeat it, but as the western portion of Nova Scotia must pay a large proportion of this tax I cannot help occupying a few minutes in referring to this question. The business of the people of the western portion of Nova Scotia is largely with the United States. They export nearly all they have to export, with the exception of what is sent to the West Indies and a little to Great Britain, to the United States. It is therefore of the greatest importance they should purchase their flour in the United States, and bring it back in their vessels, as my hon. friend from Sunbury has said, for ballast. Some gentlemen seem to think that this duty has forced the people of the Maritime Provinces to buy flour from Ontario. That may be the case to a very small extent, but a large portion of the flour which is imported into the western part of Nova Scotia is American flour, and within the last year or two I know of my own knowledge that people have been able to import American flour into the western part of Nova Scotia and pay the duty on it at a less cost than they could import Canadian flour for. The flour dealers of Ontario, as a rule, in order to get the Maritime trade, have their prices every day from the principal towns of the United States. They know exactly what American flour can be laid down for in the Maritime Provinces, and they endeavor to put their flour a few cents lower, in order to hold the trade, if possible. The result of that is that, by putting it about 10 cents under the American flour, they may possibly force a trade to a small extent, but to a very limited extent. When they do that, the importer in the Maritime Provinces pays 40 cents a barrel more for his flour in consequence of this duty, if he does not have to pay the 50 cents, so that the difference is only 10 cents. Thus it is a direct tax to the extent of 40 cents on every barrel of flour he uses. I know poor men in the country who have large families who tell me they use fifteen or sixteen barrels of flour in the year. Their county, school and poor rates only amount to about $4 in the year, and they pay $7 or $8 on the flour and meal which they bring in. That is a very heavy tax on a poor man. Some hon. gentlemen may not know that our population is largely composed of lumbermen and fishermen, and these are the people who have to buy flour and meal, and have to pay this tax. The year before last, I asked for a return of the quantity of flour and meal imported into Nova Scotia for the six months ending the 31st December, 1884, and I found that the amount of duty paid in the six months on flour and corn meal in that Province was $56,175, making a tax of $112,350 on flour and meal alone in one year. Take that for the time this duty has been in force, and you will find that we have paid three-quarters of a million in duty on flour and corn meal. This is a very large tax when it comes from the very poorest classes of the people of Nova Scotia. Even if there were an excuse, as my friend behind me said, for putting a tax on flour, there is none whatever for putting it on meal. We cannot raise corn in this country and must import it from the United States, and must pay the duty, and it is an exorbitant duty to put 40 cents a barrel on corn meal which costs $2 or $2.50 a barrel. It is an extreme duty, and ought to be removed from the list. If the Government are determined to keep the duty on flour, I ask them, at all events, to remove it from corn meal, and let the poorer classes have the benefit of that. The richer classes must use flour, but meal is not used by them to the extent that it is used by the poorer classes. It is said that Nova Scotia has benefited by the duty on coal. It may be a benefit to one portion of Nova Scotia, but the western portion of Nova Scotia has to pay the duty without deriving any benefit. It is true that the coal owners, if any, benefit from that duty; but I contend there is not much benefit to be derived from it by the other inhabitants of Nova Scotia. I hope my hon. friend will insist on a vote being taken, and then we shall know who are the friends of this policy and who are opposed to it.

Mr. PAINT. The speech of the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail), and the speech of the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk), are nothing but election speeches.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY—ADJOURNMENT.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Before the debate continues, I wish to state that to-morrow I will move that when the House adjourns to-day it stand adjourned until Tuesday, at three o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. WELDON. I see no reason why we should not meet on Monday, and on Saturday too. As far as the members from the Maritime Provinces are concerned, they have had no opportunity this Session to attend to their business, and it is every day more important that we should get away to attend to it. I see no impropriety or disloyalty in meeting on Monday. Last year we sat on Dominion Day, and I am sure we did not intend any disloyalty to our Dominion, and further, we know that the 24th May is not the day which is celebrated in Great Britain. I think the day is the 29th, and I observe in the Revised Statutes that it is the Queen's birthday or such other day as the Governor General may appoint. Therefore, I hope, under the circumstances, and considering the late period of this Session, and that every day is valuable, hon. gentlemen will see their way clear to meet on Monday in order to get through the business as rapidly as possible.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am afraid we shall have to ask the House to adjourn over till Tuesday at three. Those Statutes or Bills have not yet been passed by the House, therefore we remain yet under the old state of things, and, Monday being the Queen's birthday, the intention of the Government is to ask the House to adjourn over till Tuesday. As to Saturday, the hon. gentleman must remember what was stated before, that the Government require the Saturday for the general business of the country. Of course we have a great deal of business here in the House, but we have the general business of the country as well, which cannot be attended to on any other day than Saturday. Therefore, we will have to ask the House to allow us to pass over Saturday and Monday and adjourn till Tuesday.

SUPPLY—COAL AND FLOUR DUTIES.

Mr. WELDON. This is a matter of very considerable importance to the Maritime Provinces. I supposed, when my hon. friend from Richmond (Mr. Paint) rose just before recess, that he was going to defend these impositions, and to show that they were in no way a burden to the Maritime Provinces, but my hon. friend simply stated that the hon. members for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk) and Digby (Mr. Vail) had merely made election speeches. I suppose my hon. friend did not propose to make an election speech in this line, and that he prefers actions to words, and perhaps we shall find substantial reasons why my hon. friend should keep silence on this question. In this matter, I think silence on his part may be considered golden. Since I have had the honor of a seat in this House, I have felt that no vote I have cast has been of more importance and more in the real interest of my constituents, as well as of the whole Maritime Provinces, than the votes I have cast on this question. The taxes are, there especially, a burden, and I say further, that I believe the discontent that exists in the Maritime Provinces with regard to Confederation, is owing to a large extent to these duties. Had it been known when the union was formed that these taxes would be imposed, those Provinces would not to-day be in the Confederation. In the Province of New Brunswick we are paying taxes on flour for the benefit of Ontario, while the duty on coal is alleged to be for the protection of Nova Scotia. Our special industries and our trade with the United States are handicapped by these special impositions. The hon. member for Perth says these taxes are put forward for revenue. If they are only for revenue then I think this House owes it to the Maritime Provinces to cut down the expenditure, and release us from the necessity of these impositions. If my recollection serves me aright, Sir Charles Tupper stated at Cobourg a few years ago that, to satisfy the people of Ontario, a duty was put on flour to balance the duty on coal, and that was wholly borne by the Maritime Provinces. With regard to coal, the figures given by the hon. member for Northumberland show that the import was more than doubled, and consequently the imposition of the coal duty for purposes of protection has proved useless, while at the same time imposing heavy taxes upon all the people of this country who use coal. These duties bear specially hard upon the western portion of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, because our natural trade is with the United States on account of our geographical position. It is a great advantage to us to be able to exchange commodities with the United States. We all know well that throughout the western portion of those Provinces there is a large coasting fleet. I think the city of St. John alone registers 700 vessels employed in the coasting trade with the maritime cities of New England and New York; and these vessels, carrying our commodities from our own coast to New England and New York, are obliged to come back without any cargoes, or, if they bring coal, it has to be brought at such a rate, in consequence of the duty, that dealers cannot afford to give a fair freight. In consequence of these vessels being obliged to return without any cargoes, they have to charge heavy rates for freight carried out. I saw by a paper that, last Wednesday, in the port of St. John, out of thirteen arrivals from the United States, of our coasting vessels, only one of them had a cargo, and the others were obliged to return in ballast. Therefore, not only does this tax increase the burden on our people, but it affects materially our coasting trade with the United States. It affects our lumber trade, which is handicapped by the duties imposed upon it, a trade which is now in a state which affords very little remuneration to those engaged in it. We find that when we desire to seek a market in the United States for our commodities, we are again hampered, not only by the imposition of this duty, but by the fact that higher freights are necessarily charged upon vessels in carrying commodities. I know it is urged in favor of this tax that one portion of this Dominion receives a benefit from it, and that other portions receive benefit from some other duties. But, Sir, I fail to find for the Province to which I belong, that we get any benefit or any compensation from any of these taxes. I consider this tax on flour, this tax on coal, as entirely sectional, as oppressive and impolitic, because I believe that there should be no duty unduly pressing upon one part of the Dominion in favor of another. The local tax is also a heavy burden upon our people, because in New Brunswick we are obliged to import anthracite coal which cannot be obtained elsewhere than in the United States. Therefore, so far as the western portion of New Brunswick is concerned, we find that the effect of this is simply to check and hamper our industry, both in regard to the lumber business and to the more important fishing trade in which so large a portion of our people are engaged. As I said before, this tax is sectional, it is impolitic; it is a tax which must bear harder upon the poor man than on the rich, because it affects the necessaries of life. Since I have been in this House, not only by my vote but by my voice, I have advocated a repeal of these taxes. I shall be glad to see them taken off; and I will support any effort to reduce the expenditure so that the revenue would not be injured by the duties being taken off from these necessaries of life. Feeling that this is a subject of vital importance to the Maritime Provinces, I heartily support the resolution of my hon. friend from Northumberland.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I do not propose to detain the House with any lengthy observation upon this subject, but as the hon. member who has just taken his seat, and the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail), referred to the fact that no hon. gentleman on this side had been heard on this subject, I propose to define my position in order that our silence may not be misinterpreted. I have listened to the argument brought forward by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) who moved the resolution, and by those who have since addressed the House, but I have failed as yet to find any arguments which have thrown any new light upon this question. I have heard no reason brought forward in this discussion which would lead me, or I feel, should lead any other hon. member, to take any different course, or take any different position with regard to this question, than they would have taken at any time since the National Policy was introduced. I quite agree with some observations that have been made with regard to the duty upon corn meal. So far as this duty is concerned, it is a direct tax upon the consumers of corn meal in this country; there can be no doubt about that. But, Sir, the hon. gentleman who last addressed the House referred to this as a special burden that bore upon the people of the Maritime Provinces. I feel, Sir, with regard to the Province from which I come, that although it may be, to some extent, a burden on that Province, we have a direct compensation under the National Policy by the abolition of the duty on tea, and in the reduction of the duty on molasses. I can tell the hon. gentleman that so far as my knowledge of that Province goes, the same class of people who use corn meal to which he refers, use, to a very large extent, imported molasses. It is an article of very general use among the poorer classes of the people of New Brunswick, and for the additional duties that they are obliged to pay under this tariff on corn meal in those other articles, they receive direct compensation. In addition to this, the Provinces, as a whole, receive an immense advantage from the duty which has been imposed upon coal. This duty has not only had the effect of largely developing the coal mine industry of that country, by the protection afforded against foreign coal, but also largely increased the consumption of coal throughout the Dominion by the establishment of numerous manufacturing industries; so that, both directly and indirectly, the people of the Maritime Provinces have been compensated for the additional burdens imposed upon them by this tax—compensated by the advantages which they have received in the ways I have indicated. With respect to the duty imposed upon flour I cannot endorse any of the arguments which have been used, based upon the assumption that this duty has increased the cost to the consumer.

An hon. MEMBER. Then why not put on $1.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). So far as the cost to the consumer in the Maritime Provinces is concerned it would not matter. At least that is my view of the case. The hon. member who last spoke referred to the fact that our coasting vessels could not bring American flour to our Maritime Provinces at the present time on account of the existing duty. That hon. gentlemen knows that Canadian flour could be brought through the United States in bond to Boston and New York and thence by schooner to St. John; but since the introduction of the Intercolonial and since the cheap freights at which flour is brought down from the western grain producing districts to ports in the Maritime Provinces, it is brought in that way instead of through the United States as formerly and by schooner to St. John. The hon. gentleman knows that that is the real cause why flour is not brought as formerly by coasting schooners from American ports to the port of St. John. I quite agree with the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) that this was accepted at the time the National Policy was adopted as one of the necessary parts of that National Policy. The hon. gentleman very correctly said that the National Policy was to a certain extent a policy of compromise; it was the policy best adopted to suit all the various interests and all the different classes of people in this Dominion, and while the people in the Maritime Provinces accepted the duties on corn meal and flour, on corn, wheat and other grain, in the interests of the farmers of Ontario, on the other hand the farmers of Ontario accepted the duty on coal in the interests of the people of the Maritime Provinces. And if this was a necessary part of the National Policy at that time, I can see no reason why it should not be a necessary part of the National Policy at the present time. I regret this motion should have been made by so prominent a member from the Province from which I come, as the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). We all know he occupies a very prominent position in this House as the leader of an important party. We all respect him for the energy and ability with which he discharges his duties in this House, and we all are accustomed to attach a great deal of weight to any opinion that he may express, from the fact that he has had such a long and intimate acquaintance with the public affairs of the country. I regret he should have moved this resolution, for the reason that I feel as one of the younger representatives from that Province, that I am not able to support him in this matter. I could not, under any circumstances, go the length of this resolution. So far as the single item of corn is concerned I should be glad if the time arrived when the duty on corn should be abolished; I would not go to the extent of abolishing the duty on corn meal. I believe that corn can be brought into Canada from the United States and can be manufactured with advantage here. It is done under the present tariff in the Maritime Provinces, but not to a large extent, but if the duty on corn were abolished and the duty on corn meal reduced to 25 cents a barrel, the industry would be largely increased, and it would be of great advantage to the Maritime Provinces, and the milling industries would be so largely developed in a few years that the cost to the consumer would not be increased by the duty imposed on corn meal. I should be glad if the time ever arrived when, without injury to any other important industry in the Dominion, that change in the tariff can be made, and if at any time it can be done I shall be prepared to give it my hearty support; but at the present time I am not able to support the motion introduced.

Mr. CASEY. I was rather astonished to hear from a representative of the Maritime Provinces, one generally supposed to be so well posted as the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, that he does not believe the present duties increase the price of flour in the Maritime Provinces, and that a duty of even $2 a barrel would not make the least difference to the consumer. If he will go to an importer of American flour in Nova Scotia, and ask him what he will take for his flour in bond, and what he will take for flour duty paid, he will find the difference between the two prices exactly corresponds with the duty on flour; and how, in the face of such undisputed facts, the hon. gentleman can make the statement he has made, I cannot comprehend. But the hon. gentleman goes a little further. He says that this flour duty was part of the National Policy, and accepted by the Maritime Provinces as a necessary part of it. Why there should be any hesitation on the part of the Maritime Provinces in accepting the proposition, unless it increased the price of flour; why the millers of Ontario should ask for this duty, unless to increase the price of flour, I cannot imagine. It was evidently intended that the breadstuffs duties should have a beneficial influence on the farmers of Ontario, who should make something out of the duties, while the Nova Scotians made something out of the coal duties. We have tried this system for several years. How has it worked? Let us take the coal duty first. Who has made anything out of the coal duty? Certainly no Province can have been benefited by the coal duty except Nova Scotia, because no other Province produces coal to any considerable extent—I believe some is produced in New Brunswick, but not sufficient to make any difference. How has it been beneficial to Nova Scotia? Has it, as was represented, induced the people of the western Provinces to use Nova Scotia coal? It is a question that needs only to be asked to be answered in the experience of everyone—that it has not. This policy has therefore not produced an interchange of Ontario grain for Nova Scotia coal. Coal does not come any further west than it did.

Mr. PAINT. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. I shall be glad if the hon. gentleman will show me some statistics to prove his statement.

An hon. MEMBER. He has spoken.

Mr. CASEY. Probably he can give some statistics to some friend, showing how much further west the Nova Scotia coal now comes than it did before. I know that it is virtually an unknown quantity in Ontario. We were told we would exchange Nova Scotia coal for Ontario grain. We do not get any chance to do so. Whether Nova Scotia coal is used in Quebec to any extent we do not know. There may have been an increased output of Nova Scotia coal, but it is not so large that it cannot be accounted for by the application of a little extra capital and enterprise, an increase which would have taken place even without the so-called protection to these coal mines. But what effect has the coal duty had in the west? We were told in the most glowing language that if we had a duty on coal and iron we would bring Nova Scotia coal up to Ontario; we would smelt our native ores and become a great iron producing country. How has that promise been carried out? Go across the Ottawa river to Hull and look at the deserted iron mines, mines producing the finest quality of magnetic ore, mines which were in operation and had smelting works attached to them years before the National Policy was talked about, mines which were turning out a first rate quality of Bessemer steel—for I have seen it—before the National Policy was heard of. These mines are idle to-day. Go up into the county of Hastings, a district which the Minister of Customs and my hon. friend for East Hastings know something about. We have magnificent mines there of first rate ore. Are we bringing up Nova Scotia coal and smelting that iron, and sending the product all over the world? No, we are shipping that ore to the United States in order that our American cousins may have the profits of smelting the iron. That is what the National Policy has done for the iron mines in that district. I am not surprised that the hon. member for East Hastings grows excited when this is mentioned.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Not a bit of it.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman shows his usual signs of excitement by standing up and interrupting, and I do not wonder at it, because I have no doubt he held out the prospect to his constituents interested in iron mining——

Mr. BOWELL. He has not a pound of iron ore in his constituency.

Mr. CASEY. I did not say he had, but that he had some people in his county interested in iron mining, and the hon. gentleman has too. And I have no doubt that they held out the prospect to them that the National Policy, by protecting iron and coal, would do a great deal for that industry, while the result is that the small amount of smelting which was going on in the Province of Ontario and the Province of Quebec has been entirely put an end to; the industry has been squelched, as many other industries have been, by these ill-considered attempts to foster it. Now, Sir, let us look at the other side of the question. Who has benefited by the tax on breadstuffs? Well, if we had any doubt as to which Province it might be, that doubt has been dispelled by my hon. friend from Northumberland. Evidently all the Provinces, except Ontario and Manitoba, are not wheat producing Provinces. Even Ontario imports largely; even Manitoba imports a little; and if any farmer is benefited by this tax, it must be the farmer of the Province of Ontario and the farmer of the Province of Manitoba. Quebec evidently does not profit by it; she is a large importer, an increasing importer. I think, according to the figures read to us by my hon. friend from Northumberland, she imported nearly twice as much last year as she did in 1877, and paid duty on it. Evidently Quebec is paying a very heavy tax in consequence of this duty on wheat. The Lower Provinces are in the same position. Ontario is evidently the principal Province to be benefited, if any one is benefited, by this tax. In fact, it was to benefit Ontario, or, at all events, to lead Ontario to think that she would get some benefit, that this tax was imposed. How does it affect the farmer there? Well, I read statistics last Session, with which I will not trouble the House again in detail, proving conclusively that the price of wheat is now, and has been for a year or two, not only lower than it was before the National Policy was introduced—which might have arisen from accidental circumstances, from a general lowering in the prices of wheat all over the world—not only lower than before the National Policy was introduced but has been constantly, ever since the National Policy was introduced, lower than the price of wheat on the other side of the line, at points correspondingly distant from the seaboard. In other words, wheat is and has been regularly lower in the principal wheat markets in Ontario than in the principal wheat markets of New York and Michigan, equally distant from the seaboard, and frequently lower than in the wheat market of Chicago, hundreds of miles further from the sea than we are. Under these circumstances, it is absurd to urge that the imposition of a duty on wheat has kept up the price of wheat in that Province. How could it do so? Only by excluding lower priced wheat from the United States; and since wheat in the United States is higher than it is with us, it is nonsensical and absurd to argue that the National Policy excluded any of that wheat. Wheat like any other article will seek the dearer market and not the cheaper. I do not charge this difference on the National Policy. I do not believe the duty on wheat has had any effect on the relative price. I simply urge that the duty on wheat in Ontario has not kept up the price of wheat in that Province.

Mr. BOWELL. If wheat is lower, flour is necessarily cheaper?

Mr. CASEY. We will come to the flour question presently; one thing at a time. The hon. gentleman laughs as if he had made a point, but we will see. I will give him the opinions of some people who know something about the question of flour. The price of wheat is lower than when the National Policy came into existence, and relatively lower than it is to-day across the border, and I tell hon. gentlemen that the farmer of Ontario is not such a fool as to persist in the delusion which overtook him for a few short months, when he was induced to support the National Policy because it included a duty on wheat, as well as on barley and other products of the farm. Let us go again to the county of Hastings and ask the people there if barley is as good a price now as it was before the National Policy, and whether it is as good a price as it is across the Lake at Oswego. They will tell you that they know better. They will tell you that they know it is lower, proportionally, than in the United States. I met scores of Liberal farmers in 1878 who hesitated to support me because they were going to have a duty on wheat, barley, walnut lumber and a host of things they produced. They have a duty on some of these things, and they know that they have been deceived as to them and as to others, and what is the consequence now? Why, Sir, I cannot get the most extreme Tory farmer in my own riding to talk to me about the duty on wheat and other farm products upon which a duty was imposed. They will not discuss it; you cannot raise it on a public platform; it falls as flat as possible. You cannot get a Conservative speaker to take up the gauntlet if you throw it down to him, and the same is true, I believe, all through Ontario. The farmer finds that he was deceived, that he has been induced to put up with an oppressive tax on articles which he has to buy, on a delusive promise that he would get a higher price for what he has to sell—a promise which has not been kept with regard to wheat and other products Let us take corn. Of course, in the extreme western part of Ontario, there is a small district where corn can be profitably raised for home consumption, though I do not believe it very profitable to raise for export. At all events, there never was much exported. But in the rest of Ontario, including the county in which I live—one of the most favored counties in the whole western peninsula of Ontario—corn is a subsidiary product, only raised for fattening hogs and cattle on the farm. For most years, I may say for nine years out of ten, we have to import from the United States the corn we use for fattening cattle. One of the principal industries of that country is fattening cattle for the English market. I need not tell this House what an enormous trade of this kind has grown up—how many millions of dollars of British capital it brings into the country annually. But when we import American corn to feed cattle for that market, we have to pay a duty on it; and that duty is as great a tax on the farmers of my county as it is on the farmers of Quebec and Nova Scotia. To carry the matter further, some starch manufacturers came down here a few years ago and obtained from the Minister of Customs a rebate of duty on corn they had imported to make starch; but when I asked in this House that the farmers should have a rebate of duty on corn imported to feed cattle for the English market, to add wealth to the country, what answer did I receive? It was a sneer in such language as I would not care to repeat in this House. It was intended as a joke, a very rough one; but it showed that the Minister of Customs and the Government of which he is a prominent member had not considered this matter seriously in the interest of the farmers. It is the old story: when a ring of manufacturers come here asking for favors, and threatening opposition if they are not granted them, they get them; but when the farmer asks for similar favors, he is met with a sneer. That is the experience of the Ontario farmers with regard to the corn duty. But we shall be told, perhaps, that the Ontario miller reaps a benefit from this wheat and flour duty. Upon that point, too, I am qualified to speak from conclusive information. Last Session I wrote to all the millers of my county, and to several millers outside of my county, but in the same part of the country, one in Chatham and one in St. Thomas, for example, and the unanimous report I had from those millers was: We do not want an increase in the flour duties; we do not care much about the flour duties at all; what we do care about is that we should be allowed to import one kind of American wheat free to mix with our own wheat; if we were allowed to do that, we could almost do without the present flour duty; but if you leave the duty on wheat, the present duty on flour is not sufficient to give us protection, and none would be sufficient short of $2 a barrel, a prohibitive duty in fact, so long as that kind of American wheat is excluded. Now, we have first, the fact that this duty causes an increased price in flour to the consumer in the Lower Provinces, and, second, that it does not increase the price to the producer in western Ontario. This looks like an anomaly, like an absurdity.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASEY. I have no doubt it appears so to the hon. gentlemen who are interrupting me, because they will not look into the matter. But the hon. member for Westmoreland admitted that the coasting schooners used to bring American flour from Boston and other American ports.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I did not say that. I said they sometimes brought Canadian flour from Boston.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman said they brought flour from Boston—I supposed it was American flour. At all events they could have brought American flour from Boston very cheaply, and now they cannot do so. My milling friends tell me that the American millers, those at Minneapolis, for instance, make several grades of flour; they are able to send the cheaper grades to Boston and sell them at a low rate for consumption in the Maritime Provinces because the higher grades sell at a very high price; so that by averaging their product in that way they get a pretty fair price for their flour. Now, Sir, that flour could be sold cheaply at ports in the eastern States, such as Portland and Boston; it is a cheaper grade, but still good, and the people of the Maritime Provinces were perfectly willing to use it; that flour could be brought to the Maritime Provinces in schooners, and exchanged for fish or coal or some other product. But this trade has been prevented by the duty of 50 cents a barrel, and the Canadian flour is sent down and held by dealers at a price above the actual price of the flour by the freight and this extra protection of 50 cents a barrel. The dealer in the Maritime Provinces may make money by it, but the miller in western Ontario does not get a materially increased price for his flour. He gets the market, you may say, secured to himself. We have proof that he does not get the market secured, because there is a great deal of American flour imported yet. But suppose he did get exclusive control of the market, does he need it? Some of my milling friends tell me that if they were allowed to bring American wheat in free and mix it with Canadian fall wheat they could compete in the open market with the American manufacturer, and they do not absolutely need this protection to enable them to compete. What they want is to avoid the unnecessary cost put upon them by the National Policy. The effect of the duty on wheat is that some of the mills in my county have stood idle for months together because they could not afford to import American wheat at the price charged plus the duty, and they cannot go on milling flour profitably out of our native fall wheat without the addition of this American wheat. Scores of men in my county are out of employment for months every year in consequence of that provision in the tariff. And yet hon. gentlemen say that this duty is imposed for the benefit of Ontario. Ontario is represented in the eastern Provinces as a selfish Province, making a tariff for itself. Why, this very provision, which was put in the tariff on the pretence of recompensing Ontario for what she sacrifices for the Maritime Provinces, is doing as much harm in Ontario as it is doing in the eastern Provinces. We are told that Confederation cannot long be satisfactory to the Maritime Provinces, because it involves high taxation—because Ontario will have high taxation. The people of those Provinces are mistaken. It is not the people of Ontario who want high taxation; it is the rings of Ontario who insist on the Government maintaining a high tariff, and who help that Government to remain in power against the wishes of the people of Ontario. If the people of the Maritime Provinces appeal to the people of Ontario to come out and show their strength against high taxation, to organise and work against it as earnestly as these interested monopolies and rings have worked to maintain high taxation, they will have their answer and their reward, because the people of Ontario will work and organise against this system. I may be told that I am setting class against class—the farming class against the manufacturing class. It is inevitable, Sir. The Government have inaugurated this war of classes; they have made a tariff which is nothing but an attempted balancing of classes against each other. They have made mistakes in it, no doubt, and have injured classes that they intended to benefit—the cotton manufacturing industry, for example; but they have tried to balance one class against another, and from one class to make up another's loss. It is a war between the consumers of Canada and the producers of Canada, between the producers of manufactured articles and the consumers, and we are to this extent, on behalf of the consumers of these articles, seeking merely to see fair play. We do not want to tax the producers of manufactured goods for our benefit, but we do not want to continue taxing ourselves to the extent to which we are, for their benefit. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has put the question fairly. He admits there must be comparatively high taxation for a time, under the present state of things; he admits we cannot go back at once to a revenue tariff. He says he does not desire a mere revenue tariff, but he declares that this tariff, called a protective tariff, is a failure. His position is a logical one. He takes the ground that duties are too high and that they must come down, and I believe he is right. If there be a strong case in respect to the wheat duty, it is in the Province of Manitoba. Manitoba is subjected to special and oppressive taxes from which the other Provinces are free; for instance the tax on agricultural implements; she appears to have a strong case for the wheat duty, and I would quarrel with no one from Manitoba who urged that, in her interest, this duty should be maintained. But as to the effect of the duty, I must give my opinion, and it is endorsed by prominent millers, that the wheat duty does not raise the price of wheat in Manitoba. I enquired of my milling friends, to whom I have already referred, whether they could get Manitoba wheat under this tariff, at such a price that they could use it, and they said they could not, and that if they could not get American wheat they would simply have to shut down their mills. On account of freight arrangements, they could not get Manitoba wheat at such a rate as would enable them to grind it; so that, instead of this duty of compelling our millers to use Manitoba wheat, its only effect, if it had any, would be to compel them to shut down their mills. They told me, however, that millers in Montreal and further east, who got more favorable freight rates, could afford to use Manitoba wheat, perhaps, altogether. They could get it almost as cheaply as American wheat, and in the case of large millers, who were doing a large export trade, it was possible they could use it at a profit. They do use it anyway, because the Manitoba wheat is better in quality than any American wheat; but as regards Ontario and the rest of Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, the duty does not compel the consumption of a single bushel of Manitoba wheat. The fact remains incontrovertible that the market, which actually affects the price of our wheat, is the Liverpool market; and any local arrangements we can make, cannot make any appreciable change in the rates fixed by that market. For these reasons, I shall be glad to support the motion of the hon. member for Northumberland, and shall be glad to have the opportunity of recording my name in its favor, if he sees fit to call for a division. These two taxes, which were imposed for the purpose of making a balance of profit and loss between Ontario and the Lower Provinces, have resulted in the mutual injury of both, and I am glad to see a motion coming from a resident of the Lower Provinces asking for the abolition of them.

Mr. McLELAN. I would not trouble the House on this occasion but for the remarks of the hon. gentleman who, in addition to contradicting the arguments of the mover of this resolution, has thought fit to deliberately insult the Province of Nova Scotia and her people. He has stated in his argument, or rather in his attempt at argument, that the Americans make several grades of flour, that they use the best grades themselves, and ship the inferior grades to the Maritime Provinces, because the poorer classes of flour are quite good enough for these Provinces.

Mr. CASEY. Well, the laboring classes of these Provinces do not, any more than these of the other Provinces, consume the best flour.

Mr. McLELAN. The people of Nova Scotia are as wealthy as any portion of the people of the Dominion, and it ill becomes the hon. gentleman to insult us by saying it is quite good enough for us to have the refuse flour of the United States. We consume as good flour as does any other portion of the Dominion, and we get that flour from Ontario, which is a better flour than what we formerly got from the United States.

Mr. CASEY. That is what I said.

Mr. McLELAN. I know the quality from the United States and the quality of the flour from Ontario, and I say the latter is the better and gives more satisfaction to the people than the American flour we formerly received. We receive a better quality of flour and at lower rates than we would if we imported from the United States. The hon. gentleman has undertaken to ride two horses, and he has fallen between the two. He says that the National Policy does not affect the price of wheat, that the price of wheat throughout Ontario is lower than it is in the United States.

Mr. CASEY. Hear, hear.

Mr. McLELAN. Why, then, have we not cheaper flour? The hon. gentleman takes the raw material, which is the basis, and if that be obtained at a lower price the produce must necessarily be lower, and the seller be able to sell at a cheaper rate.

Mr. CASEY. Not necessarily.

Mr. MILLS. Why do you give a drawback?

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman who introduced this resolution told us he was an advocate of the National Policy, that he went before the people in 1878 as an advocate of that policy—and I know that the hon. gentleman, from his great ability, must have used strong arguments in its behalf—but that the people of the county of Northumberland did not quite comprehend that policy as clearly as he, did not quite see its effects as clearly as he, and that therefore he was defeated on account of his advocacy of that policy. But that was before it was known to the people that any tax was going to be placed on breadstuffs, before it was known there was to be duty on flour and corn meal. Four years afterwards, however, when this duty was placed on flour and corn meal, and the people of Northumberland county had four years' experience of the National Policy, the hon. gentleman presented himself before them again, as a candidate and an advocate of the National Policy, and he was triumphantly elected by acclamation after the people had had four years' experience of the National Policy. The hon. gentleman has given us very voluminous statistics respecting the importations and exports of breadstuffs. I was not able to follow him sufficiently close to see whether he had given, under separate headings, that entered for consumption and that entered for export. On a previous occasion, I gave figures dealing with the whole imports and exports of breadstuffs for four years under the free trade policy of hon. gentlemen opposite; and I contrasted those figures with the imports and exports of American breadstuffs in the five years under the National Policy. What was the result? The House will bear with me if I repeat what I stated on a former occasion. I gave the whole imports of American breadstuffs for the four years from 1874 to 1878, and deducted the exports; and this left $26,707,126, as the net balance consumed by the people of the Dominion during the four years, or an average of $6,676,000 a year of American breadstuffs consumed by the people of the Dominion in those four years. Then I took six years under the National Policy, and I showed that there was only an import of $18,784,000 worth of American products for consumption, or an average of $3,130,500 a year against $6,676,000 worth under the free trade policy, so that, notwithstanding the increase of the population, the imports of American breadstuffs had fallen out one-half what they were under a free trade policy On the same occasion, I showed that our exports of home produce of breadstuffs had averaged $9,371,376 worth a year more than under the free trade policy. And I may state that, in the nine months of the present year, as compared with last year, the importation of American breadstuffs for consumption in the Dominion of Canada has fallen off $1,623,572, so that we are year by year increasing our own products and keeping out the American produce. And so with coal. The hon. gentleman says that because there has been a large importation of coal into the country, therefore the National Policy has produced no benefit to the coal mining industries of the country. The hon. gentleman knows that there has been a very large increase in the consumption of coal, and if he will turn to the returns he will find that, in 1877, the year which he has taken to make his calculations and comparisons upon, of slack coal, which was comparatively valueless before the National Policy was inaugurated and manufactures were started, there was only 109,155 tons sold, while in 1884 the sales had risen to 316,132 tons, and the total quantity of coal raised in 1884-85 had more than doubled since 1878. If the hon. gentleman will consult the coal owners of Nova Scotia and Cape Breton, they will tell him they would rather have the National Policy than have reciprocity in coal with the United States.

Mr. MILLS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes "hear, hear." The coal raisers, the coal mine owners of Nova Scotia and Cape Breton would prefer to have the trade of the St. Lawrence and of Canada under the National Policy, which it gives them, than have the duty on coal removed and reciprocity in coal with the United States. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) said that it was all very well to put on this duty on corn meal and corn and flour when you inaugurated the National Policy, but now, when you have communication with the great North-West, when you have your road opened, and when you are able to produce in the North-West an unlimited quantity of wheat at very low cost, and you have your communication with that country and can supply your whole Dominion at low rates, now is the time to throw off the duty. What advantage would it be to the Maritime Provinces, in dollars and cents, to throw off the duty at a time when you can get your supplies from the North-West more favorably than you have hitherto done from Ontario? But, even when they were got from Ontario, there was no increase of cost to the people of the Maritime Provinces for the flour they consumed. The hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) says that, at all events, the duty upon corn meal should be thrown off, and I think it was the member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) who complained most of the tax on breadstuffs because there was a duty upon corn meal, which was ruinous to his Province. I turned to the records to see what this enormous amount was that was grinding down the people of New Brunswick, and of which he complained as causing a stagnation in trade. Why, the whole amount paid in the Province of New Brunswick upon corn meal, as returned in the blue-books, is $11,000, about 3 or 4 cents a head of the population. My hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) made a comparison and said you are gaining more by being exempted from the tax which hon. gentlemen opposite had on tea and coffee in 1878. When you turn to the records and make the comparison, you find that, while the people of New Brunswick are paying from 3 to 4 cents a head on corn meal, they are exempt from a tax of 20 or 25 cents a head by the exemptions on tea and coffee. I think hon. gentlemen from New Brunswick ought not to complain very severely of a tariff which exempts them from so large a taxation on an article which every poor man in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and I think throughout the Dominion, consumes so largely and imposes so small a tax upon corn meal. I shall not trouble the House further. I think the hon. gentleman from West Elgin (Mr. Casey) completely answered all the arguments presented by the member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), because he took a different view. He tried to make out that there was no increase in the prices of breadstuffs in consequence of the National Policy, while the hon. gentleman from Northumberland, from a different Province, was trying to make out that there was a great increase, and the hon. gentleman from the city and county of St. John (Mr. Weldon) was trying to make the House believe that his county and his people were suffering extremely because they were taxed on corn meal to the extent of 3 or 4 cents a head.

Mr. MILLS. I understood the hon. Minister to contend that the people of the Maritime Provinces get their flour at as cheap a rate as if there was no duty at all.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes, I maintain that they get their flour as cheap over the Intercolonial Railway; and I know at present that, without the Intercolonial Railway, large quantities of Canadian flour are sent down to Boston in bond, and shipped up to the Bay of Fundy to different ports in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Even if we were without the Intercolonial Railway, that mode of supply would prevail, and would accommodate all the coast of Nova Scotia.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It certainly is very remarkable that the people of the Maritime Provinces, assuming the fact to be as stated by the Minister of Finance, should be so blind to their own interest as to go and buy American flour, and pay 50 cents duty per barrel. However, that is one of those things that "no fellow can understand;" and I will not presume, therefore, to attempt to unravel the mystery. In the meantime, I will say to the leader of the third party, that I have great pleasure in supporting his motion to abolish the two most barbarous taxes which are to be found, even in our present very barbarous fiscal system. I doubt, Sir, whether it is possible, in any community calling itself civilised, to find two more utterly odious and detestable taxes than those on coal and flour and corn meal. Sir, this tax on coal may be considered to be the tax which, of all others, sets most at defiance every sound principle of political economy, and every principle of common sense. What are the requisites which every statesman ought to look for in applying a tax? He ought to endeavor, as far as possible, to avoid taxing the necessaries of life; he ought to endeavor, as far as he can, to see that the tax is equal and just, that it falls with equal severity on all classes and sections of the population; that it does not discriminate against one particular section, or one particular part of the country; and, above all, he should have regard as much as possible to the interests of the poorest portion of the community, and take as little as possible out of the pockets of the poor. Now, Sir, judging by all these conditions, you can conceive of no tax which is more indefensible, which is more absurd, which is worse in its practical operation, than this same duty on coal. In the first place, this is a heavy tax on an article of the first necessity of life, particularly in a country like ours, where, in a large portion of it, the thermometer always averages a good many degrees below zero during certain portions of the year. In the next place, that tax, as the Minister of Finance must well know, falls almost exclusively on certain small portions of the population; an undue proportion of this tax is borne, as I shall presently show, by one single Province, and in that Province it falls with very great severity on certain small portions of the population. Vastly the greatest portion of this tax is borne by the people of the large cities, and it is a tax which, of all others, presses with most severity on the poorest portions of our population. The fuel of the poor man, in every city in Canada, and notably in every city in Ontario, is made a great deal more expensive to him by reason of this same tax.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there a man here who will get up and tell us that if you put a duty of 50 or 60 cents on coal, you do not increase the price?

Mr. FARROW. The Yankees pay it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Yankees pay it! The Yankees pay the coal tax! Well, Sir, if they pay the tax, why does not the hon. gentleman, when he wants more taxes, put $1, $2, or $3 a ton on coal? If the Americans are going to pay this tax, double the tax, treble the tax, quadruple the tax, and fill the Treasury at the expense of the Americans. Sir, there is another argument against this. It has always been laid down, and with great force, that we ought to avoid levying a tax at an inconvenient time. When is this tax practically levied from the poorer classes of the population in our large cities? Why, Sir, at the most inconvenient time of all, in the depth of winter, when these men's wages are smallest and hardest to get. This Government demands 20 or 30 per cent. on the value of the fuel from this section of the population alone. Moreover this is open to the other objection which I have mentioned, that it takes a great deal more money out of the pockets of the people of this country than it puts into the Treasury. Coal, in addition to being a necessary of life, is a prime motor in almost all important manufactures; and as everybody knows who studies this question, when you tax an article of prime necessity, a sort of raw material of manufacture, before the goods which are produced, by means of that raw material, reach the ultimate consumer, a very much larger sum will be taken out of the pockets of the people than will find its way into the Treasury. Sir, in respect to the duties on flour and wheat, not only do most of these objections apply as to the Maritime Provinces, but there is another argument. I believe, of all the shams, of all the deceits, that were ever palmed off on a country, the attempt to pretend to the people of Ontario, that by reason of a tax on wheat and flour you are going to add to the price they could obtain for those articles, was the most absurd. Why, Sir, within the last year or two, have not the organs of hon. gentlemen been ringing the changes, from day to day, on the plain and manifest fact that the price of these articles was regulated by the price in the great consuming centres of Europe? Have they not pointed to that as a proof that, as they urged, this present Government were not to blame, that it was out of the power of the Government to regulate the price of cereals, because that price was regulated by the price in Europe, with which the present Government had nothing to do? Now, Sir, if they are able to regulate the price of these articles, if it does depend upon their legislation, then how are they going to defend themselves, after promising to the farmers of Ontario that they would get good prices for all the cereals they had to bring into market? If they are not able to do that, they stand convicted out of their own mouths, of having made promises which they were utterly unable to fulfil. And if they are not able, if, as their organs have latterly contended, these things are regulated by causes entirely beyond their control, then I say this duty on wheat and flour is, as far as regards any effect that it may have on the price earned by the farmers of Ontario, an utter delusion. It may, and most probably does, add largely to the price in the Maritime Provinces, because Ontario is a longer distance off, and because there are heavy freight charges in bringing down flour and wheat there; and besides, on account of the trade that subsists between these Provinces and the adjacent cities of the United States, it is easier and cheaper to obtain that flour in the way of barter from the adjacent portions of the United States than to bring it down from Ontario. Sir, the truth is this, that the whole doctrine of duties to defend the products of the farmers of Ontario, was simply a piece of financial thimble-rigging. They knew, they cannot deny that they knew, that they were going to add enormously to the cost of living to the farmers of Ontario, that they were going to add very heavily to their taxes—not merely to the taxes that go into the Treasury, but to the taxes which do not go into the Treasury, and which are likewise very heavy. Hon. gentlemen now admit that after imposing these duties, they are utterly unable to keep up the price formerly paid, and they imposed those, knowing, I fear, the most of them, that they were not able to add one single farthing to the ultimate price which those cereals would fetch. More than that, I desire to point out how these duties affected particular Provinces. In the last Trade and Navigation Returns I find that the total duty paid into the Treasury for coal amounted to $1,071,000. Now, the duty ought to be evenly distributed over all the Provinces, it ought to bear some just proportion also to the wealth of the people. I find that Ontario paid $850,000 out of the $1,071,000 coal duties, a most enormous disproportion, a gross injustice to the people of Ontario, and a gross injustice, more than all, to the poorer classes of the population in the large towns and cities of Ontario. I turn to the duty on flour. There is a duty extracted from the people of $270,000, and I find that $230,000 of that sum are paid by Quebec and the Maritime Provinces. There is an injustice. Those two injustices do not make each other right. In the case of such a Province as New Brunswick, which pays both the coal tax and the flour tax, you have a double injustice, as the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) has pointed out. The hon. gentleman tells us that in the Province of New Brunswick they need not mind because they were relieved of a tax of 25 cents per head as respects the duty on tea. We will apply his argument. He says that the people have been relieved of a tax of 25 cents per head on tea. We tax Ontario, with its population numbering about 2,000,000, a sum equal to 44 cents or 45 cents per head as a duty on coal, and so the result of this policy in Ontario has been that an evenly distributed tax has been exchanged for an unjust and oppressive tax, by which the people of that Province in the matter of coal alone are obliged to pay twice as much as they had to pay for duty on tea. I do not attach very much weight to the argument myself, for the simple reason that the hon. gentleman was no doubt well aware that the duty paid does not by any means represent the cost to the consumer. If we impose a duty on American flour and meal and allege it adds only 3 or 4 cents per head to the cost in the Maritime Provinces, the hon. gentleman must recollect that the price of the other flour, of the remaining corn meal brought in, is regulated by this duty, and he increases the cost not merely of that brought in from the United States but that brought down by an expensive line of railway, and at considerable cost from Ontario, to be sold to the people of the Maritime Provinces. And a result may happen in regard to that article which has happened in a good many instances, that while hon. gentlemen opposite are apparently taking only 3 cents or 4 cents per head out of the pockets of the people of the Maritime Provinces to go into the Treasury, the duty may easily amount to 30 cents or 40 cents, taking into account the whole quantity of corn meal and flour consumed by them. There is no denying that position. But I am aware of the impatience of the House, and as my views on this question are pretty well known, I do not propose to detain hon. members longer. I merely say that I believe the good sense of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has led him aright. I believe hon. gentlemen opposite will find that such an atrocious tax as a tax on the food and fuel of the people, a tax which bears heaviest upon the poorest class, will not be much longer endured by the people of Canada, and in the hope that to-night's discussion and to-night's vote may open the eyes of a good many of those who were deceived and duped by the First Minister a few years ago, I shall have very great pleasure in recording my vote in support of the resolution moved by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). As I have the honor to represent a very important section of the Dominion which is interested to so very large an extent in the cheapness of flour and in a good market for coal, I deem it my duty to say a few words in answer to the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk), who made some very extraordinary statements which deserve correction. He endeavored to convince this House, if he did not convince himself, that we imported 778,000 bushels of wheat more from the United States than we exported; and he also endeavored to convince himself that we imported 441,000 barrels of flour more from the United States than we exported from the Dominion. This he convinced himself, if no one else, that we produced at least 500,000 barrels of flour less than we need for the consumption of the Dominion. That is the statement which has called me to my feet, and since the hon. gentleman has made it I have examined the Trade and Navigation Returns and I have convinced myself, and I will convince the House and the country, that the hon. gentleman is egregiously mistaken in his figures. I find the whole importation of the Dominion amounted to 3,102,422 bushels. There were entered for home consumption 373,101 bushels. Therefore 2,727,321 simply passed through Canada to a foreign market. The total exports of this Dominion were 5,423,805 bushels; the imports were 2,729,321 bushels, which passed through the Dominion from the United States to foreign markets; showing that we exported from the Dominion over and above what we imported, not less than 2,694,484 bushels of wheat. This manufactured into flour would amount to, in round numbers, 600,000 barrels, so that our export of wheat was equal to that quantity of flour. The hon. gentleman has shown that our imports of flour were 565,562 barrels, and our exports 161,054 barrels, and from wheat 598,754 barrels, or a total of 759,794 barrels. Besides this, the hon. gentleman did not show how much Canada produced last year, over and above what was necessary for home consumption. It is not impossible that 500,000 barrels, or even a million barrels were stored by our manufacturers for want of a market at home and abroad. That has not been taken into account by the member for Guysboro', and therefore his statement was misleading and unfair. But it was intended for the people of the Maritime Provinces. I invite attention to the fact that we can raise over and above what we require, at least, not less than 100,000 barrels a year. We are interested in having flour produced as cheaply as possible. I have no hesitation in saying that flour has been largely cheapened by the National Policy; and I go further and say that I have no hesitation in stating that coal has also been reduced in price owing to the effect of the National Policy. Against facts no arguments can prevail. My idea is this: That the price of a commodity is fixed by demand and supply. If the National Policy had the effect of increasing the supply beyond the demand in any part of the Dominion, the result is a decrease in values. I hold that the National Policy had the effect of largely increasing the production of flour in this Dominion, and largely increasing it beyond the demands of the Dominion, and therefore, that it had unquestionably the effect of largely reducing the price of flour in this Dominion. That is the reason why the people of the island which I have the honor to represent sent an unanimous representation from that island in favor of the National Policy. And I think I can prove boyond a doubt that it also had the effect of largely reducing the price of coal. My hon. friend from Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk) says he takes a very great interest in reducing the price of food and fuel. If I can prove that the price of food and fuel has been largely reduced by the effect of the National Policy, I think the island I have the honor to represent will sustain the policy in the future, as they have in the past. I have, I think, already proven, at least to my own satisfaction and to the satisfaction of the people I represent, that it had the effect of largely reducing the price of flour. I can show from statistics that the price of coal, since the inauguration of the National Policy, has been largely reduced throughout the whole Dominion. And why? Because the effect of the National Policy is to bring competition between the producers on the other side of the line and the producers of Canada. We meet in common ground in the markets of Quebec, and we have a very large market in the Province of Quebec, and while the producers of the United States are sharply competing with our producers in the Quebec market, the effect is that the supply in Quebec is greater under the National Policy than ever it was before Confederation, and the direct effect of supplying it in excess of the demand is that the price of coal is lower in the Province of Quebec now than it was before the introduction of the National Policy. My hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Casey), ridiculed the idea that the people of the Maritime Provinces pay for their flour with coal. I have no hesitation in assuring my hon. friend that the people of the Maritime Provinces do pay for their flour, if not directly with coal, at any rate indirectly. The effect of the National Policy was to increase largely the output of coal in Nova Scotia. It has afforded a market for our people, and also enables them to pay in cash for the flour which is produced in Canada and consumed by our people. The output of coal, since the inauguration of the National Policy, has been doubled in the Province of Nova Scotia; and this large output, coming in competition with the coal produced on the other side of the line, has the same effect on the price of coal in the Dominion of Canada as the competition which exists between Ontario and the United States, in the article of flour in the Dominion, had upon the price of flour. The unquestionable effect of the National Policy, therefore, is to largely reduce the price of food and fuel, not only for the poor but for the rich as well. Before resuming my seat, I desire to call attention to the fact that history repeats itself. It is repeating itself now. Sixteen years ago the National Policy was adopted in this Dominion. Some suppose it was adopted at a later period, but that idea only prevails among the juvenile politicians. Old stagers like myself distinctly recollect that in the year 1870 this Parliament adopted the National Policy. It had been adopted at that time under the guidance of my hon. and learned friend the member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby). I distinctly recollect the time, and the great pains he had taken to inculcate his own ideas into my head, and I am happy to say that he succeeded remarkably well, and that the lesson he taught me in 1869, 1870 and 1871 were valuable lessons to me since that time, and I believe to the people I have the honor to represent. I recollect that hon. gentleman sat somewhere in the centre benches. I sat at no great distance from him, and through his instrumentality with a few of our Ontario friends, who were Reformers or Grits then as they are now, we rather conspired to make a compromise amongst ourselves, and to give a slight protection to articles in which they were interested. It was compromise legislation as all legislation is—a compromise of one interest with another. We desired to compromise the interests of coal and the interests of agriculture; and to extend protection all over the Dominion we secured the passage of chapter 9 of 1870, "An Act to amend the Acts respecting Customs and Revenue." Among the articles enumerated in that Act, upon which certain duties were imposed, were the following:—Coal and coke, per ton, 50 cents; salt, except salt imported from the United Kingdom or any British possession, or imported for the use of the sea or gulf fisheries, which shall be free of duty, per bushel of 56 lbs, 5 cents; hops, per lb., 5 cents; vinegar and acetic acid, per gallon, 10 cents; rice per lb., 1 cent; wheat, per bushel, 54 cents; pease and beans and barley, rye, oats, Indian corn, buckwheat, and all other grain, except wheat, per bushel, 3 cents; flour of wheat and flour of rye, per barrel, 25 cents; Indian meal and oatmeal, and flour of meal of any other grain, except wheat and rye, per barrel, 15 cents. By that compromise we managed to place the agricultural produce of Canada under a protective tariff so-called. The National Policy, which was then very young and very feeble, the bantling of the few who occupied an independent position in this House, only lived a short time. It was strangled the following Session, as an attempt is being made to strangle it now. In that Session, by a singular coincidence, it was a resident of Montreal who represented another constituency who succeeded in strangling the National Policy. On page 131 of the journals of 1871, I find the following:—

"The Hon. Sir Francis Hincks moved, seconded by the Hon. Sir George E. Cartier, and the question being proposed, that the Bill be read the third time to-morrow "——

That Bill was relating to the Custom laws.—

"The hon. Mr. Holton moved, in amendment, seconded by Mr. Mills' that all the words after 'be' to the end of the question, be left out, and the words 'now recommitted to a Committee of the whole House, for the purpose of so amending the same as to repeal the duties on coal, coke, wheat and flour,' inserted instead thereof."

Now the coincidence is that the hon. gentleman who moved in this direction was a resident of Montreal, who represented a distant constituency, and on this occasion we have my hon. friend from Northumberland, who is a resident of Montreal representing another constituency, moving in a similar direction. And the singular fact is that he has moved to place on the free list articles in which Quebec is particularly interested. This would almost lead me to believe that he is going to abandon Northumberland and get some part of Quebec for himself. But at that time it was deemed advisable, by the friends of those who were earnestly in favor of the National Policy, to move an amendment:

"The Hon. Mr. Blanchet moved, seconded by Mr. Ryan of Montreal: That the words, 'and also salt, peas, and beans, barley, rye, oats, Indian corn, buckwheat, and all other grain, Indian meal, oat meal and flour, or meal of any other grain,' be added to the end thereof."

This was carried by a majority of the House with a view of reviving the National Policy at some future day. I am happy to say it was revived, and I am also happy to bear witness to the fact that the effect of that policy has been to reduce the price of food and fuel to the people of the eastern Provinces. It is admitted by hon. gentlemen opposite on all hands that it has largely reduced the price of wheat and flour in Ontario; and I think I can say that it has largely reduced the price of coal as well. It may be said, and it has been said, if the duty reduces the price, why not increase the duty and reduce the price more? The reason is this, that up to a certain point the duty reduces the price, but beyond that point one element which reduces the price would be taken away, that is, the competition between the Canadian and the foreign article, and we do not want to deprive the people of this country of competition which reduces the price of the commodity. Our idea is to encourage the production, and by increasing the supply beyond the demand, to reduce the cost of the article to the consumer. The following statement of a large sale of coal made to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, last year, conclusively proves that the price of coal was much below the price which existed previous to the adoption of the National Policy:

"On Saturday night Mr. Jos. Hickson awarded the contract for the supply of 375,000 tons of coal required by the Grand Trunk Railway Company. Of this amount, 250,000 is to be delivered at the Suspension and International bridges, 55,000 at Detroit, 20,000 at Sarnia, 20,000 at Brockville, and 30,000 at Portland, Me. The contracts for the supply at Niagara were awarded as follows: 80,000 tons to Messrs. Bell, Lewis & Yates, of Buffalo; 130,000 to the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railway, and 20,000 to the Rochester and Pittsburg Railway. The coal to be delivered at the International bridge was sold at the following rates: Lump, $2.25; lump and nut, $2.20; run of mine, $2.05. At the Suspension Bridge the same kinds of coal fetched $2.40, $2.35 and $2.20 respectively. The Detroit and Sarnia contract was awarded to the Cleveland, Loraine and Wheeling Railway. The prices were $2.05 at Detroit, and $2.20 at Sarnia. The coal for Brockville is to be furnished by Messrs. Bell, Lewis & Yates at $2.50, while the contract for Portland, Me., was secured by the Chesapeake and Ohio Coal Company, at $3.50."

Coal would not have been delivered at Brockville last year by the American producers at the very low figure of $3.50 a ton, except for the keen competition with the Canadian producers which they met at Montreal; and I defy hon. gentlemen opposite to show that coal was sold at so low a figure at Brockville at any period previous to the adoption of the National Policy. Now, I desire to sustain the position taken by the hon. Finance Minister, that the coal producers of Nova Scotia and Cape Breton would much prefer the continuance of the National Policy to the reciprocity with the United States, and when I make that assertion I know whereof I speak, because I am from a coal producing part of the Dominion. The American companies last summer delivered coal in Portland, Maine, at the very low figure of $3.50 a ton. I have no hesitation in admitting that the producer in any part of the Maritime Provinces would fail to place coal at that price at Portland or any other port of the eastern States. If the adoption of a reciprocity treaty would increase the price of coal in the United States it would be to the advantage of our coal producers to have that market; but instead of increasing the price it would have the opposite effect, because it would bring American coal into direct competition with Canadian coal at the seaport towns of the United States, and therefore would increase the supply beyond the demand more than it exists at the present time. Naturally, our friends opposite realise the fact that it is not the duty that regulates the price of any commodity, but it is demand and supply, coupled with the ability of the consumer to pay. Sometimes the consumers find themselves unable to pay; and when they are unable to purchase even the inferior flour spoken of by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), a great many of them must live on the flour produced from coarser grains. Let hon. gentlemen realise the fact, then, that demand and supply regulate the price of all commodities in the Dominion, and from that point of view in the future argue as to the effects of the National Policy. From that standpoint, it is clear that it will not have the effect of making food or fuel dearer to the consumers of the Dominion.

Mr. GILLMOR. It is unnecessary for me to speak on this resolution, so far as regards my views on this question, for they are well known in the House and in the country. I am very much pleased that the resolution has come from our old and honored friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), and I hope I shall have the pleasure of congratulating him on having the largest support to his party he ever had. No doubt he is going to have the largest vote he ever had; whether he has come to our side or whether we have gone to his side, is a matter of opinion. With regard to this resolution, I supposed the speaking was going to be all on our side before recess, as our friends opposite did not seem disposed to pay any particular attention to the question. I cannot understand how any representative, from the Maritime Provinces at least, can be convinced it would not be in the interest of the Maritime Provinces to have this resolution carried. I have listened with great pleasure to my hon. friend from South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright), who, when he has treated a subject, leaves very little to be said by anyone else. It is always a pleasure to hear him and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) speak on subjects of political economy, because they understand those subjects and make them clear and comprehensive. With regard to the argument that flour is not increased to the consumer by this duty, that contention is simply absurd. We paid into the Treasury for duty on flour and corn and meal some $431,000 last year. How then can any hon. member say that the price of flour and corn and meal was not increased by the duty? If there had been no duty, the people would have had these articles at $431,000 cheaper than they paid for them. With regard to my hon. friend, I was pleased the resolution came from him because I know he is an advocate of the National Policy, and has still a lingering desire for it and, strong free trader as I am, knowing we must have a revenue and a high revenue, I could almost adopt for a revenue tariff the one my hon. friend suggested. If I understood him rightly, he said he would have free flour, free corn and meal, and free coal, and he would re-adjust the tariff on cotton by reducting it 10 per cent., and the tariff on woollen goods by reducing it 10 per cent., and make a large reduction on the sugar duties in order to destroy this enormous monopoly which is carried on by the refiners. I do not know if the making of a tariff were left to the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright), that his would differ very much from that one, because it is well known, seeing our debt has so largely increased and so much of our income has to go as interest on our public debt, and for the support of certain institutions we must maintain, we must have a high tariff, and I think my hon. friend's tariff might very consistently be called a revenue tariff. I hope this resolution will be adopted, but I do not expect it will, because this monument, the National Policy, has been erected by compromise. It was necessary to begin by compromise. We talked about the duty on flour benefiting Ontario and the duty on coal benefiting Nova Scotia. There you find the basis of the whole thing, you have got to begin somewhere. The coal men could not expect to succeed alone, so the flour men come in and get a duty on flour. Then the cotton and woollen men come in, and so, by degrees, the Government built up this pyramid by compromise, until they had succeeded in bringing enough interest into it to secure a majority. Having secured a majority, they cannot afford to take all the rest in, because, if all hands got in all parties would be even and there would be no profit in the thing at all. The Government cannot afford to allow this resolution to pass, because the moment you begin to break in on the structure, it shows its weakness, and by-and-bye, after a few more inroads have been made upon it, it will fall. Only two or three more interests need be taken out to burst the whole thing. It is not my intention to discuss the National Policy, as that seems to be for the present a settled policy; the people so far have adopted it, but I do not despair that they will see the falsity of the system and in due time abandon it. The Finance Minister spoke about a free breakfast table. Well in this Canada of ours, as the hon. member for Northumberland is fond of calling it, we have vast wheat fields and vast coal fields, of which we are fond of boasting; but because Providence has showered upon us these blessings, we, by Acts of Parliament, make them as dear as we can. We have not got any tea and coffee, so we do not tax them, and it would be a great blessing to the people of Canada if we had not wheat and coal, because in that case they would not be taxed. The things we cannot produce are given to us cheap, but those we can produce we have to pay dear for. It would, therefore, be a great misfortune if somebody would chance to find a coffee mine or a tea mine in this country, for hon. gentlemen would make of it a plank in this National Policy. Some monopolists would get hold of this mine, just as they get hold of timber limits and coal limits, and they would demand protection. Everything that a kind Providence gives us in abundance is to be made dear under this National Policy. When the Dominion of Canada becomes so straitened in circumstances that we have to tax the food and fuel of the poorest portion of society and raise taxes on the necessaries of life, that shows a very low state of things. Then again they are trying, and honestly too, to encourage manufactures, but there is a most important article, this article of coal, which is the basis of all manufactures as well as the fuel of the poor and the rich alike, and they are now, by this tax, making that dear which we have in abundance. As my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Weldon), has pointed out, in this deal New Brunswick seems to have lost all. They had no interest in coal mines, they had not any great wheat fields. Our industries are the fishing and lumbering industries, and, of course, we have some manufactures which may benefit to some extent by this National Policy, but we are suffering more than any other part of the Dominion. I say this tax levied upon flour does not at all embrace all that the consumers of flour or those who import it in the Maritime Provinces have to pay. If the duty on flour does not help the producers of flour, the millers of Canada, what does it do? I contend that not only do we pay the duty upon the flour we import, but we pay an equal amount of additional cost upon the flour produced in the country, and that argument holds good throughout the whole system, and there is the worst feature of a protective policy, that only a small part of what the people contribute goes into the Treasury. My hon. friend from South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) says we pay as much more, but those who have looked into the subject and are capable of forming an opinion say we pay a great deal more into the hands of those who produce in the country than we pay on the goods we import into the country. I do not intend to weary the House because there is no real practical result to be gained from it. I am only surprised that those from the Maritime Provinces, who know, who must know, that we are suffering very much with regard to these articles at least, should take the position they have taken. I cannot understand why a duty should by kept at least upon corn. If you would let the corn come in free, you would encourage somebody to build a grist mill and make the meal in the country, and I do not see why this should be levied. With regard to this tea and coffee duty, that is a very different thing. I do not ask to have a duty put on tea; I am glad to have anything free; but, if a duty were put on tea, it would not bear hard on any particular part of the Dominion, it would be equalised over the Dominion, and every part would contribute to the revenue; and so with coffee. I cannot resist the impression that, if we are to raise a revenue, we ought, as far as possible, to raise it on articles which are not produced in the country. Then it will be all revenue; it will all go into the Treasury and not into the pockets of the manufacturer. I am satisfied that, the longer this National Policy is tried, and the people have time to reflect and to wipe away the fallacies that have been urged in its favor, the more they will come to their senses, as our friends across the water in England have come to their senses and abandoned this principle and confined themselves to a revenue tariff, which is the best for all the interests concerned. I am satisfied now, that, if the truth was known, this National Policy has been a failure. I am inclined to think it has been a failure as far as the manufacturers are concerned, but it is hard for them to give it up, it is hard for any protected industry, after years of protection, and after being flattered into the idea that they are going to have a chance to make money out of it, to give it up, and so they struggle on. I believe this system is the cause of a great deal of the discord among the laboring classes across the border. These laborers say that the capitalists are protected by law, that they have the ear of the Legislature and that they have the power and the influence, and that, while labor is free, capital is protected. That has led to discord and will lead to discord. We find now how it is looked upon. Here, in Canada, I do not know that there are very many pools or combinations of manufacturers, but there are some. I do not know that the men employed by the coal owners find very much fault, but I think last year there was a strike. These men are protected by law, and the laboring classes are not protected. Hence the discord. What is done by these manufacturers in their meetings, and in their combinations and pools, is looked upon as a good thing, it is going to do a great deal for the country, it is going to make prices dear and articles scarce, and, when you make articles dear, it is a good time; if prices are dear everyone thinks the times are good, everyone who is making money out of it, everyone that has the ear of the newspapers, everyone that has the capital and the influence. It is all very good for society. But let the workingmen who have no protection and have to live upon their scanty earnings meet together, and they are at once charged with disorderly gatherings, they are at once considered to be producing discord in society. This protective policy leads to all that, but still we have got to learn by experience, and I will conclude by saying that I have very great pleasure indeed in voting for the resolution of the hon member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), and I would rejoice greatly if I could see a majority of this Parliament adopt that resolution. I believe it is the correct one. I believe that, in the minds of the people of this country, those who look at it fairly, those who look at it disinterestedly, those who look at it judiciously, will believe that that resolution is, in every respect, a worthy one, and I am happy to support it.

Mr. GAULT. I am to-day the representative of one of the very largest coal consuming constituencies in this Dominion of Canada. There is more coal consumed by the manufacturers in my division than in any other town in this country. I have yet to learn that the First Minister has applied to me to have a reduction in the coal duty. Never yet have I had a person speak to me of a reduction of the coal duty. Our manufacturers are industrious and they are prosperous. I am proud to say that in the city of Montreal to-day any man of industrious habits can get employment. All our people are well employed, our city is growing rapidly in every direction, houses are being built, and I know it is the same in every city in Canada where manufactures are established. I will take Valleyfield, Cornwall, Chambly, every place in the Province of Quebec where there is a manufacture, and to-day every town and village is growing very rapidly. I want to say a very few words about our industries. The worthy representative for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has said he would like to see the cotton duties reduced. Never in the world were cottons so cheap as they are in Canada to-day. They are cheaper than they are in the United States of America. Cottons that in 1878 were 8 and 9 cents a yard are to-day 3 and 3½ cents a yard. Woollen goods that were sold in 1878 for 70 cents a yard are sold to-day for 37½ to 40 cents a yard, and I say it is all owing to the National Policy, to the very great competition among manufacturers, which will always exist in this country hereafter. We never have had any complaints whatever about the duties on coal in the city of Montreal, and I think, with the present prosperity and rapid growth of this country, we ought to rest satisfied with the National Policy which was established in 1878.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Representing a rural constituency in the Province of Nova Scotia, one would almost suppose that, with coal interests there to foster, and with no manufactures at all in the western part of the Province, if the arguments of the hon. gentlemen opposite were correct, we would not have been returned here—that the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulback); that the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Allison); that the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Kinney), would not have been elected as supporters of the National Policy. My hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), by his motion, proposes to affect the National Policy in a very material way. I regret that I was not in the House when he made his speech, but I understand that the hon. members who followed him have taken the same line that he took. I have to say this, that while these articles of corn meal, flour and coal, might possibly be taken off the list, and be allowed to come in free, yet if we did that we would violate the general policy of protection which was inaugurated by Parliament and sustained by an overwhelming majority in this House after full discussion, in the year 1879. I can have no better warrant for that statement than the able and eloquent speech of the hon. member for Northumberland, made in this House in 1878, when the National Policy was first promulgated by the present Prime Minister in a very wonderful, and exhaustive speech, on an amendment which he made on going into Supply. My hon. friend, in the most graphic language, showed why he was in favor of a duty upon coal. He stated that his county was not interested in having a duty placed upon coal, but he was more than a county representative, he was a Dominion representative; he looked to the whole of Canada, and he would be willing to put a tax upon coal, but if you took it as an isolated case, he was not willing to do so. A perfectly legitimate argument, and an argument that I intend to follow. He said:

"He was prepared to advocate such a duty if it was adopted as a general principle, and if it was proposed to consider the interests of Canada in this relation—our manufactures, the shoe and iron manufacturing interests, and a host of other industries which he need not mention. He was prepared to consider these interests as a whole, although his county was interested in having the least possible amount of taxation imposed, as it imported and did not manufacture. Nevertheless, he was prepared to consider, in a general system of protection, these interests as a whole, but he would not take them up as individual interests, but do as his hon. friend would do."

He concluded his very able speech by these remarks:

"These were the views which he entertained, and he took this early opportunity of putting them on record. While prepared to vote for a duty of 15 cents a ton on coal, if adopted in connection with the other interests of Canada, he was not prepared to do so as an isolated measure"

Now, Sir, the National Policy was then carried with my hon. friend's consent, he was an advocate of it. To-day we do not find a single petition upon the Table of this House against that policy. I do not know of one member of this House who has a petition from his constituents to violate the letter or the spirit of that policy, which was approved by the largest majority of the people that ever approved any public measure. If the words of my hon. friend were not sound doctrine at that time——

Mr. MITCHELL. You had better read the whole speech.

Mr. WOODWORTH. If I did, I would have to read somebody else's speech, and somebody else would reply to it, and we would never get through. I have read the hon. gentleman's whole speech at my desk, and his whole argument is exactly what is there. Surely, my hon. friend does not accuse me of garbling his speech by quoting those extracts. I would, by so doing, degrade myself in the estimation of this House, as I have never yet done in my life. I am not trying to make him inconsistent. I am saying that he delivered an able speech, an eloquent speech. I do not know what has come over his mind since, but, at that time, he made a very eloquent defence of the National Policy, and it was inaugurated with his consent. Now, I say that no petition has been presented against this policy. Why, if it bore so hardly on my Province, as hon. gentlemen opposite say it does, if I am misrepresenting my constituency, if my hon. friends are misrepresenting their constituencies, why don't we have petitions? I should suppose, for instance, that the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor), would have his desk filled with petitions against this policy. The hon. member for South Huron called it the most disgraceful thing that ever disgraced a Statute-book. Why, if that were true, would he not have 500 men here from his county on a delegation against it. In the case of the Franchise Bill, we had some petitions against it, but there is no petition against the National Policy. What is the reason? The reason is, that the people know more than we do; the people—the fountain of power, the fountain of laws—know quite as much, if not more, than their representatives do upon this question, and when their representatives do not carry out their wishes in Parliament, the latter soon hear from them. We had an election four years after this policy was introduced; we said to the people: What do you think about it? We all know what the result was, and by what a majority the National Policy was endorsed. Is it possible, then, that the people are in darkness because they send no petitions here, that they do not know what they want? To my mind, this is a most conclusive argument. It is true, my hon. friends opposite might go into the Library and take the speeches of the past and read them here, and some one on this side might read speeches in opposition, and we would be kept here as long as we were on the Franchise Bill. I am obliged to my hon. friends that they do not do that, but I do say that all the arguments of the ablest men in this House, all the learning they can bring to bear, are light as vanity and empty air, as compared with the solid sense of the yeomanry and artisans of this country. They know we would be recreant to our duty as their representatives if, after having sent us here on that issue, and when they have never sent a petition against it, we were now to turn round and reverse that policy. The hon. member for Bothwell and his friends, if they did that, would soon find staring them in the face a storm of disapprobation coming up from the people in defence of this policy or against it. They cannot get out of that. What has come over the spirit of the dream of the hon. member for Northumberland who has moved this motion? He may see further than I do, or further than a great many members of the House, for he is an old and experienced parliamentarian and a very able man. But I certainly would have thought, with that speech on record, which will stand as long as the Hansard and the English language endure, he would have waited until he had petitions from Northumberland, objecting to the tariff, declaring that it was a monstrous tariff; but his constituents have not taken that course. The member for Montreal West (Mr. Gault) has told the House that so far as regards coal, he represented the views of the people of Montreal, and there was no protest against the tax there. What is the fact? Half a million tons of Nova Scotia coal go to Quebec every year and most of it to Montreal.

Mr. VAIL. The Corn Exchange of Montreal petitioned this House in 1878, to remove the duty on breadstuffs.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Do not let us extend the range of the argument beyond its present confines, or we will never close the Session. An ounce of experience is worth a thousand speeches. There is not a petition, said the hon. member for Montreal West, against the coal tax. One would have thought they would have made an outcry in regard to it, if the statements of hon. gentlemen opposite are correct. The product of Nova Scotia coal mines that goes into the other Provinces is one million and a quarter tons. I will not enter into the arguments presented by the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron), who has given figures to show, as everybody knows, that coal has fallen in price, and that the price of coal on this side of the line is as low as it is on the other. Why the Americans do this we need not wait to discuss. The fact is that the coal ring have put the price down. Do not the people of Montreal know whether they are paying too much for their coal as well as any hon. member? A few words in regard to flour. Have we any petitions from the counties round Halifax where there is a large agricultural district in which there are no manufacturing or coal interests, and where the tax might be expected to bear very heavily—is there any man petitioning against the tax on flour? Not one. Flour is as cheap there as it was before the National Policy was introduced. I do not go into the argument, I state the fact; and I say the people have not been complaining. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) leader of the late Government came down to Halifax in the autum of 1878 and stated that a duty imposed upon an article of which a country produces a surplus would not raise the price one farthing. The hon. gentleman may ask me to explain that. I would have to enter into the other question of interprovincial trade and into a long argument; the reasons can be shown—there is no result that has not a cause—but we need not stay all night to ascertain causes, there is the fact. Nobody in Nova Scotia has complained by petition of the tax on flour. During my election campaign in 1882 I addressed farmers and brought up this question; and it was said that here was a gentleman advocating a tax on flour, and that the Conservative party advocated and imposed that tax. I asked: Are you paying more for your flour? Thousands of voices screamed out, "no." What, then, is the use of taking up an hour in talking on flour if there are no petitions asking that the tax should be removed. Would I not be recreant to my duty after my constituents have elected me, after I explained my position to them and without a petition being forwarded, I should vote in favor of the hon. gentleman's motion to remove the tax? And if we did remove the tax where would the policy be? The country would have no National Policy. The hon. member for Northumberland cannot get out of the fact that he is an advocate of the National Policy. He nailed his colors to the mast long ago; but he cannot have a piece of a National Policy, he must have a whole National Policy; he must have a whole blanket and not strips of a blanket. If such a motion as this is adopted, the blanket becomes too short. The hon. gentleman cannot continue his political course in that way. He is either a National Policy supporter or he is not. I merely rose to state my reasons, without going into statistics, which I could do very easily, but they have been entered into ad nauseam in the past why I will not turn my back on the professions I have made and against the wishes of my constituents vote for the hon. gentleman's amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I do not propose detaining the House more than a few minutes to state my views with respect to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Northumberland. I am rather surprised at the line of argument pursued by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth) who is usually very logical in discussion. The hon. gentleman says that the people in the Maritime Provinces, notwithstanding this tax on meal and wheat, are paying no more for their breadstuffs than they did before the tax was imposed; and if I rightly understood the Minister of Finance he informed the House that in fact the people did not pay any tax whatever, that the tax was paid by the producers of those products, and if the tax were doubled it would still be paid by the producers and not by the consumers of the necessaries of life. If the hon. member for King's is right in the view he enunciated, why does the hon. gentleman support a proposition to give a drawback to millers who manufacture American wheat when flour is shipped? Does not the hon. gentleman see that the tax is not paid by the buyer; it is paid by the man from whom the miller makes the purchase, and why should Government take money out of the public Treasury to give to a miller after he manufactures wheat into flour for exportation, if the miller has never paid the tax? The hon. gentleman should be consistent. If the hon. gentleman was disposed to maintain that this tax was not paid by the consummer they should at once abolish all those provisions for recouping those parties. While I will support this resolution I cannot say I am enthusiastically in favor of it, because it seems to me it has been made in some degree an inseparable part of a system which is vicious in every portion of it. The hon. gentleman who moved the resolution declared himself generally in favor of the National Policy. In that I differ with him. I was not in favor of it when it was introduced; I have no reason to think more favorably of it now after it has had seven or eight years' trial. I do not believe the experience of the past is in favor of the proposition. The hon. member for Montreal West (Mr. Gault) informed the House that people were buying their cotton goods, notwithstanding the tax of 40 per cent. cheaper now than they did a few years ago. If the hon. gentleman is satisfied that such has been the effect of the National Policy he ought to oppose it, because certainly if the manufacturers of cotton are obliged to sell their goods at much lower prices than they did before that national taxation was imposed, and that reduction in price is the result of that taxation—and unless it is a result there is no propriety in alluding to it—the hon. gentleman should seek its repeal in the interests of the manufacturers. If I am rightly informed the hon. gentleman had before him as a member of an important committee of the House not long since the proposition to protect the insurance companies of Canada, to legislate in their interests and against the insurance companies from abroad, did the hon. gentleman support that proposition? Did he come to the conclusion that, if that protection had been given, the insurance companies would be able to carry on business in Canada more cheaply than before; that insurances would fall, that insurances upon property and life would be secured upon more favorable terms after this protection was given than before? Well, Sir, if the hon. gentleman did not think so—and it is clear from his actions that he thought that the protection of the insurance companies would have the effect of increasing the cost of insurance—if, that was his conclusion in that matter, how comes he to arrive at a different conclusion with reference to this tax on other products? My hon. friend from Northumberland, when he moved this resolution came to the conclusion, which is the right conclusion, that taxation is a public burden. It may be a public benefit: that depends on the purpose to which the tax is applied. But hon. gentlemen on that side of the House who support this tax declare that the imposition of taxes is a benefit, wholly regardless of the purpose to which the money which is raised is applied. Now I do not take that view; and I say that these taxes are very objectionable taxes. They are taxes on the necessaries of life; they diffuse taxation unequally. They are taxes which do not fall on our population in proportion to their ability to pay. Those who have the smallest incomes are those who frequently pay the largest proportion of these taxes, and, upon this ground, taxes on the necessaries of life are always objectionable. Now, we have this point, however, to consider. These taxes are a portion of a general system. There are many other articles which are taxed more highly that they would be were it not for these duties on coal. The manufacturer under a system of protection would be equally protected at a lower rate of taxation—assuming that protection is a proper thing—if the duty upon coal were removed. So, while I was disposed to leave this National Policy experiment to continue to be tried as we have it with all its imperfections—for you know there are many cases in which the worse a matter may be the greater may be the chance of remedy—while I was willing to leave the system to operate with all its imperfections, still, when a proposition is made for the purpose of producing a better condition of things, although it is not all I could desire, I am ready to support it. But, let me say this on the subject of this tax. We are not in the position we were in 1878. I contended then, and I maintain now, that it is the duty of Parliament to maintain a sufficient tax to meet the public necessities, and provide all the revenue which is required for the maintenance of the Government and the meeting of existing obligations. I think it is our duty, in the imposition of that tax, to impose it in such a way as to take as little as possible from the people, beyond what is required for the State. The objection to many of these taxes, under our system, is that they take a great deal from the pockets of the people which never finds its way into the Treasury. The taxes upon cotton, and many of the ordinary manufactured articles of the country, may have the effect, as in the case of flour, of imposing a serious tax on the consumer, without putting a dollar into the Treasury. What is the object of putting on these taxes? Is it not for the purpose of increasing the price, and making it profitable to produce that which under other circumstances, would not be produced? When we put a tax on coal is it not for the purpose of increasing the cost of coal in the Maritime Provinces?

Mr. WOODWORTH. No.

Mr. MILLS. Compare the price of coal at Ogdensburg and Prescott, or at Windsor and Detroit. The last time this subject was under discussion, I telegraphed to these places and I found that the difference was exactly the same as the amount of duty; and so it is under other circumstances where there is less of the article produced than is required for consumption.

Mr. WOODWORTH. What I meant was that the hon. gentleman was incorrect in this way: It is not the object to increase the price of coal in Nova Scotia, but to increase the output, so that it will minimise the price.

Mr. MILLS. We know the effect of it. The percentage of Nova Scotia coal consumed to-day is no greater than it was in 1878. In fact, it is less.

Mr. WOODWORTH. No, no.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, yes.

Mr. MILLS. I say that the imported coal has more than doubled and to preserve the same proportion of consumption the output should have more than doubled, and it has not done so. The hon. gentleman has but to look at the facts to see that the increase in the consumption of the domestic article has not kept pace with the general increase of the consumption of coal in this country, and that being the case, it is perfectly obvious—it is too plain to require any serious argument—that the tariff has not accomplished the object which these hon. gentlemen professed to accomplish by it, at the time it was imposed. Now, the Minister of Finance told the House, in the discussion of this question in the early part of the evening, that the people of Nova Scotia would prefer protection to reciprocity.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. MILLS. Yes; that is what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Except in reference to coal.

Mr. MILLS. I am speaking of coal; that is the subject now under discussion, so far as the Nova Scotia people are concerned. And let me say this, that the hon. gentleman stated what is undoubtedly a fact, so far as the protected section of the people are concerned. It is true everywhere. One of the things I charge against hon. gentlemen who support the tariff as it now stands is that they have not dealt candidly with the country in the discussion of that question. When the question first came under discussion what did hon. gentlemen state? They said: We want a retaliatory tariff. They said: If the people of the United States will give us reciprocity we will accept it, but we have been on our knees for years, begging of the United States to remit their duties when we will remit ours. We have provided by Statute that we may, by Order in Council, at any time, do so, but they have spurned our proposition and we will retaliate. It was on that ground that they sought the support of the people of this country, and asked the people of this country to return them. They said: Look at the American population. They are making Canada a sacrifice market. They are using your market, driving your own industries out of your market, and making a close preserve for themselves. They did not say they were going to put a tax on every article which was imported here from England that came into competition with the domestic products of the country, notwithstanding that the people of England put no tax on their products. What they proposed was not protection; they did not mention protection, but the policy of retaliation, which would have meant, if honestly carried out, free trade with those countries ready to trade freely with us, and protection and retaliation against those imposing restrictive duties on us. That was the ground upon which they appealed. They appealed, not to the judgment of the people, but they appealed to their passions, and they said: Gentlemen, this is the way the Government and Congress of the United States have treated you; let us deal with them in the same way that they have dealt with us. And it was upon that ground —though it was a false pretence—that these hon. gentlemen sought the support of the country. But when the manufacturers of Canada accepted the policy of the Government, did they accept it on the ground that the Government said: We are ready at any time to enter into negotiations with the United States for the purpose of establishing reciprocal trade relations with them? Not at all. The hon. Minister of Finance expressed the true sentiments of those in favor of this so-called National Policy. He said the owners of the coal mines of Nova Scotia do not want reciprocity; they prefer the present tariff; they prefer that the people of Ontario should pay a tax of $1,000,000 a year on the coal they consume, which is brought in from the United States, so long as they can make a close preserve of their own market. That is what the hon. gentleman said; and what he said of the coal manufacturers may be said of the whole class of men who sustain the present tariff. When the hon. gentleman talks about reciprocity, he knows that if the Government had made an honest and earnest effort to secure reciprocity with the United States, they could have had it. They have not reciprocity to-day because they do not want it—because those who support them are not in favor of reciprocity, but are in favor of high taxation, in order to make a close preserve of the markets of Canada for themselves. That is why the hon. gentlemen have maintained their tariffs, and why they prefer a feeling of hostility to a feeling of friendliness and reciprocal trade with our neighbors to the south of us. I will support the proposition of the hon. gentleman for the repeal of these duties. I believe it is better than the state of things we now have. At the same time, I admit that it is far from satisfactory. Our whole tariff requires revision. It is true, we cannot for many years to come get back to a low tariff; our obligations are too great; and there is no manufacturer of this country who need be afraid that we are going to or can reduce the duties to so low a rate as to make Canada a free market. There is no possible danger of that; and that being the case, I shall support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Northumberland. But before sitting down, I would just say this to hon. gentlemen opposite. There is one hon. gentleman who makes it a point to interrupt others, and who has a very great deal to say in the discussion of public questions in this House. Let me tell the hon. gentlemen opposite that they did not make a great deal by their interruptions and disturbances last night, and they are not going to hasten the conclusion of this Session by any unparliamentary proceedings of that sort now, and they may just as well understand that first as last. They did not do anything to shorten the Session last year by unparliamentary conduct, and they are not going to succeed this Session.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the House will bear with me for a few minutes while I answer some of the statements made in this debate. I will first refer to the argument used by the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) that we accepted the duty on flour as a compensation for the duty on coal, and while he would like to see the duty reduced, he does not think the present the proper time now. I will state for the information of the House that so far as New Brunswick is concerned, we did not accept the duty on flour as a compensation for the duty on coal, because New Brunswick was in no way interested in the duty on coal—was not then and is not now a coal producing Province, and therefore could not be compensated in the sense the hon. gentleman states. The hon. Finance Minister speaking of myself, said that I advocated the National Policy, and that I stated that I was defeated because of the National Policy, and that I was re-elected after four years. Sir, all that is quite true; but if the hon. gentleman imagines that I was re-elected on the question of the National Policy—rather on the question of the duty on flour and the duty on coal than the question of the National Policy—he is very much mistaken. I was elected on quite a different basis and with a different object by the gentlemen who sent me here. They elected me because they felt that although, in their opinion, I had gone astray in permitting the duty to be placed on flour and on coal, and for which I was not responsible as I was not in the House when the policy was adopted, I was at all events sound in my desire not to have a duty placed on those articles; I never favored it, and never supported it. While the hon. member for King's quoted part of my speech, he did not do right in quoting only that part, and leaving the impression that I took a different position then from what I take to-day. The hon. Finance Minister referred to another point that requires a little attention. He said, consult the coal mine owners of Nova Scotia, and they will tell you that they would rather have the duty on coal than reciprocity. Consult anyone who is looking after his own interest rather than the interest of the general public, and he will tell you the same thing; but how many of the people of the Maritime Provinces will tell you that they would rather have a duty on coal than reciprocity? Why, Sir, the people who now support the duty on coal actually voted down the resolution of Mr. McKay, of Cape Breton, when he proposed a duty of 75 cents a ton. Then, the hon. Finance Minister asks, what is the advantage of throwing off the duty? The advantage is this, that the general public would not be under the necessity of having to pay 50 cents a ton of duty on the coal they burn, and the poor people of the cities would receive a great benefit. I am a little surprised at the statement of the hon. member for Montreal West (Mr. Gault) that the people of Montreal are satisfied to pay a duty on coal. I think that hon. gentleman, when he goes before his people for election, will hear this story repeated perhaps in a way that will be rather serious for him. I venture to say that if he polled the city of Montreal to-day, he would find that four-fifths of the people would vote to have the duty on coal taken off.

Mr. GAULT. Why do they not send petitions?

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman may find petitions, and votes too, to teach him differently from what he has stated. Then, the hon. Finance Minister says we, in New Brunswick, have received compensation for the coal and flour duties in having tea and coffee exempted from duty. I am amazed that a gentleman occupying the position of Finance Minister should put forward an argument like that before an intelligent assembly—that New Brunswick, which receives no benefit from the National Policy, because it has no manufactures to be protected, is compensated by the removal of the duty on tea and coffee. Do not Ontario and Quebec and the other Provinces, as well as the Province he comes from, get the advantage of the exemption of tea and coffee as well as New Brunswick? Why does he put that forward as compensation for a Province which does not derive any special advantage from it, or any benefit from either the flour or the coal duty. The hon. gentleman said I had tried to make out there was a great increase in the price of flour. I never made such a statement. Everybody knows that flour is to-day as cheap as we have known it to be almost in a generation. But the position I took is this, that if it were not for the duty, cheap as it is to-day, it would be still cheaper for the people of Canada. The hon. gentleman from Montreal West (Mr. Gault) says that no man ever spoke to him about a reduction in the coal duty. All I can say is that the hon. gentleman must be a very singular representative, for hundreds have spoken to me, and as a journalist, hearing public sentiment and having opportunities of learning what people think, I say the hon. gentleman has lived, not amongst the business men, not amongst the manufacturers, not amongst the workers or the people who suffer by the tax, when he puts forward the statement that the hundreds of manufacturers and thousands of workmen of that thriving city which he represents are satisfied with the coal duty. Why, almost every man of them wants to have it repealed, and it is only natural and reasonable that they should. As to cottons, he says they were never so cheap as they are now. True, but they are cheap because of the cheap price of the raw material and the excessive duty, amounting to 35 per cent., which has been put upon them. I have had the calculation made by gentlemen as much interested in the trade as the hon. member for Montreal West is, and they have told me the duty was equivalent to 35 per cent. Cotton is cheap because of its enormous production. The high duty led men foolishly to put their money into the manufacture of cotton; consequently a great deal more was manufactured than was necessary, and hundreds of people have felt the effect by the depreciation of their stocks, which went from par down to 15 and 10 per cent. True they have gone up again, but there has been, undoubtedly, great loss suffered. The manufacturers had to keep their machinery running, and consequently produced more than could be consumed. Not being able to export it, the result was loss of property to people who had, by the excessive protection which was given this business, been foolishly induced to go in far beyond what the wants of the country required. If the tariff had been only 25 per cent., people would have never invested their money to anything like the extent they did, and the investments which have been sunk in these cotton speculations would not have been lost. I am not going to say that the general public has not been benefited to a certain extent by this great competition and consequent great reduction in prices; I am not going to complain of that. Capitalists have lost their money, and the people, I admit, are getting the benefit. But I ask, is it good policy of the Government and the Parliament to give such unnatural encouragement to an industry, that production far beyond the requirements of the people and consequent disasters to the investors and others interested, are the results? Turning to the woollen factories, how many of them are idle?

Mr. GAULT. Not one of them is idle.

Mr. MITCHELL. How many of them have paid dividends? How many of them are raising money at from 10 to 12 per cent. to enable them to keep afloat? How many of them have become embarrassed? There is a pretty long tale to all this. Now I will just say a word or two to the hon. gentleman from King's, N.S. (Mr. Woodworth), who took the trouble to refer to a speech of mine on the question of the National Policy. One would suppose, from the extracts read by the hon. gentleman and the remarks he made, that my course now is in contradiction to the one I then took. The speech to which he refers was made by me in 1878, on a motion of Mr. McKay, member for Cape Breton, who moved this resolution:

"That all the words after 'that' to the end of the said motion be left out, and the following be inserted instead thereof:—'In the opinion of this House, it is advisable to impose a duty of 75 cents per ton, upon all coals imported into the Dominion, so as to help to meet the financial deficiency, and, at the same time, give a stimulus to a most important industry.'"

That was the resolution on which I spoke. I have stated ever since we got into the position that we could not get fair trade with the United States, that I had become a National Policy man. I will, with the permission of the House, read what I said on that occasion, to which the hon. member for King's refers as expressing an attitude different from that which I take to-day, and I will leave the House to judge whether the statements I made then would bear a different construction from those I make now. I am not adverse to the National Policy now. I stated then that I was in favor of the National Policy, but I was against the National Policy being run into the ground. I was against unnatural protection, as in the case of coal, flour, cottons, woollens and sugar; I was in favor of the total abolition of the duty in the cases of food and fuel. I assumed the position that the manufacturers of the country should be protected, but not unnaturally protected, as some are, and I will read the speech to which the hon. gentleman has referred, and of which he has read certain passages to sustain his position and to place me in the wrong, and let the House judge between that gentleman and myself:

"Mr. MITCHELL said that hon. gentlemen should express an opinion on this question, as initiating a principle upon which the interest of the country would in the future depend. He would vote against this amendment for this reason: He was not a Protectionist in the true sense of the word; but he was this much of a Protectionist. He thought that the interests of this country called for the consideration of readjustment of the tariff with regard to our position towards the United States. While he was prepared to take up the whole question of considering how they should readjust the tariff, which was necessary to maintain the expenditures required for the carrying on of the business of the country, he was not prepared to take up, piecemeal, items and individual interests and protect them against every other interest in Canada. He wished to be clearly understood in this matter. He came from a county which had every interest in securing free trade, manufacturing nothing save lumber, which was sold, not on this continent, but in Europe; and no system of protection that this House could devise would tend to promote the interests of the people he had the honor to represent. He considered the question from higher and nobler grounds than of interest. He was not going to deal with the interests of this country and he cared not how this might affect him in the coming contest next summer, for he was bound to look at what the interests of Canada were as a whole, and this was what he was going to do. He proclaimed his intention in order that there might be no misunderstanding regarding his views on the great issue which lay between the hon. gentlemen who advocated Protection on the one hand and those who advocated Free-trade at any cost on the other hand,—the gentlemen who occupied the Treasury Benches and who advocated Free-trade and the sacrifice of Canada's interests to any extent, and the hon. gentlemen, on the other side of the House, who advocated Protection. He was not answerable for the course taken by the regular Opposition. He was propounding the views which he himself entertained on the question, on which he was at all events going to appeal to his constituents, and while their interests lay in the direction of having as few taxes as possible on imports, being not manufacturers, yet looking to the necessities of the revenue, he prepared to represent their wishes and views, and say that, 'The interests of Canada called for a readjustment of the tariff, so that the 22 or 24 millions required were raised.' He was sure they would be willing to endorse the sentiments he uttered and to have their representative place upon record his opinion in respect of what might or might not be for the interest of Canada in the readjustment of those imposts which were necessary for the maintenance of the Government and the public works of the country. The views that he entertained on this matter were these: He was not a Protectionist, he was a Free-trader in the abstract, but they had to put on a certain amount of duties to raise the 22 or 24 millions required to maintain our public works, to meet the indebtedness created, and to provide for the necessary legislation and the other public service, requisite to carry on the business of Canada; and he was prepared to support—no matter from which side of the House it came—the principle of so readjusting the imposts and taxes necessary to raise this revenue as to encourage and promote, within our own borders, the manufactures which would keep within our own borders, our own people, and create a home market for the products of our farmers, and give employment to the sons and daughters of the people of this country. This was the doctrine which he laid down. Hon. gentlemen opposite might call him a Protectionist, or Free-trader, but he was in favor of adopting a policy which would secure the revenue required, while it aided our industries, and, at the same time, did not increase the burdens of the people. Such a policy would encourage our own manufactures, and keep within our borders our young men and our young women, who, for the last 15 years, had been going to the United States to find employment, and make homes for themselves there. He desired to see this system changed.

"Mr. YOUNG. That is the present system.

"Mr. MITCHELL said that this was not the present system. This was a system which the hon. gentleman repudiated, and did not recognise. It would keep our own people in our own borders, and give them employment. The Government which the hon. gentleman supported, and blindly followed and gave his adhesion to, did not adopt the system or policy which he (Mr. Mitchell) now indicated, and which he thought Canada ought to pursue. He was bound to vote against the motion of the hon. member for Cape Breton, because it was politically dishonest with regard to the people of this country. The hon. gentleman desired that he (Mr. Mitchell) should impose a tax of 25 or 50 cents a ton on coal consumed in this country.

It was 75 cents—

"And why? In order to build up the coal mines in Nova Scotia. Doubtless, the members for Nova Scotia would support this motion; but the people of New Brunswick would not do so, and why? They did not think that it was necessary to put 8 or 5 cents a ton on the coal of Nova Scotia, and do nothing more in this direction. He was prepared to advocate such a duty, if it was adopted as a general principle, and if it was proposed to consider every interest in Canada in this relation—our manufactures, the shoe and iron manufacturing interests, and a host of other industries which he need not mention, he was prepared to consider these interests as a whole, although his county was interested in having the least possible amount of taxation imposed, as it imported and did not manufacture. Nevertheless, he was prepared to consider, in a general system of Protection, these interests as a whole, but he would not take them up as individual interests, and do as his hon. friend would do. He would not ask for Protection on coal. When the question of general policy came up hon. gentlemen opposite might be placed in an awkward position, and come out and condemn the very principle which the hon. gentleman now asked them to support, because he was specially interested in it. He wished to place his views on this point on record. He desired the traffic to be so readjusted that, while no more revenue was raised than was now obtained, our manufacturing and agricultural interests should be encouraged, and the people across the line be prevented from sending over their surplus articles and destroying the manufactures of the people of our own country. These were the views which he entertained, and he took this early opportunity of putting them on record. While prepared to vote for a duty of 15c. a ton on coal, if adopted in connection with the interests of Canada, he was not prepared to do so as an isolated measure; consequently he would record his vote against the amendment.

Now, there was the speech which I delivered on that occasion and for which I have been arraigned to-day by the hon. gentleman from King's (Mr. Woodworth). I find no fault with his arraigning me on it, but, on reading certain paragraphs in the speech apart from the rest, an impression might be left on the House, and through the House on the country, that, while I was in favor of a duty on coal at that time, as he says, I had changed my opinion and was opposed to it now. I was not even then in favor of a duty on coal. It is clear that, when a motion was made to put 75 cents a ton on coal, I objected to it, but I said that, as a part of a system, I would consent to 8 cents or 5 cents or even 15 cents a ton duty on coal as part of a system of protection. Is that a variation from the attitude I take now? No; I was against the duty on coal then; I am against a duty on coal now. I was against a duty on flour then, and I am against a duty on flour now. The hon. gentleman, or any other hon. gentleman, cannot find that, in any of my utterances, I was ever in favor of a duty on the food or fuel of the poor people of the country. It is contrary to good policy and contrary to good government to impose such a duty. But, when I advocated in 1878 that a system of protection should be established, who dreamt at that day that the men who subsequently came into power and who are in power to-day would have imposed a duty of 50 cents a barrel upon the food of the people? I certainly did not, or I would not have consented to it, but I was drifted into it with others, and I consented to a National Policy, which is strictly a protection of the manufacturing industries of our country, and that was not to tax the food of the poor man but to protect the labor of the poor man, it was to encourage manufactures in the country, to build up our industries, to give employment to people in those industries, and to keep at home the people who were drifting out of the lines, and to create a home market and consumption for the production of our factories. The same reasons, the same motives and the same objects that I had at that day I still entertain. I am still a National Policy man in the sense which I have explained, but I am not a National Policy man run into the ground, I am not in favor of taxing the food of the people, and I think the time has arrived when we should remove from the Statute-book what never should have been placed upon it, the tax imposed upon the bread of the poor man. I think I have sufficiently explained the position I occupied at that time and the position I occupy to-day, and I am very much mistaken if we do not find that the country will shortly endorse those views. The hon. gentleman from King's says: Where are the petitions? We could get cartloads of petitions if they were wanted, but what is the use of bringing petitions here? This House has ceased to be a deliberative body.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is an institution for recording the decrees——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, it is still in name a deliberative body, and I hope its members will carefully deliberate upon what they have heard to-night, and will consider what the true interests of the people are, and that is, not to tax the poor man's bread.

Mr. EVERETT. At this late hour, I do not feel myself justified in occupying any large portion of the time of this body. I regret that I was not present during the greater part of the discussion upon this subject. I rise, however, for the purpose of expressing my opinion, as one of the representatives from the Province of New Brunswick, that it will be found at the coming election, whenever that election takes place, that the great proportion of the people of that Province will be in favor of the policy which has been governing this House for a number of years past. I am sorry to hear so much said in objection to the National Policy. I am sorry to hear so many things said which I believe are not correct in reference to it. What was the object of the National Policy? Was it not to give employment to our people? Was it not to keep our workmen in our own country instead of sending them abroad to find employment? That I believe was the object of the National Policy. The object was not to raise the price of goods in this country. It was not to raise the price of the food of this country. It was for the purpose of giving employment to our people. In the first instance, perhaps, the effect of the National Policy might have been to raise the price of certain articles of our manufactures because the number of people who were engaged in them may have been exceedingly limited, but, as time went on, and as it was well established in this country that this National Policy was to continue to exist, more of our people went into manufactures and we had that competition in the country which enabled us to keep our prices down as low as the circumstances would permit, as low as the profits necessary to support the families of the people engaged in them would permit, and as low, I believe, as they are in other countries similarly situated to ourselves. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) a moment or two ago said one of the effects of the National Policy was to induce persons to go into manufactures in this country and as a result ruined those who were engaged in them. Is that the fact with regard to Canada alone? Have we not found the same difficulty existing in the United States?

Mr. MITCHELL. And for the same cause.

Mr. EVERETT. And do we not find the same thing in Great Britain, where another cause exists? Do we not find distress existing there, and manufacturing suffering as well? I will not attempt to follow up all the arguments adduced, because I have not the figures before me. But we are told that the people of New Brunswick are obliged to pay an additional 50 cents per barrel on flour as a result of the duty. Is that a fact? I deny it. What is the price of flour in the city of Toronto as compared with the price of flour in New York? Is it 50 cents higher per barrel in Toronto than in New York? If so, perhaps these gentlemen are correct; but it is not so. So far as the city of St. John is concerned, we have the Intercolonial Railway, which brings flour down from Toronto, and the cost per barrel of that may be compared, having regard to the freight, with the cost per barrel which we would pay if it came from the city of New York. If it costs more to bring it from Toronto to St. John, then, to that extent, must we pay more for our flour than if we imported it from New York without duty. I have some figures—but unfortunately not with me now—that will show that the freight upon flour coming from Toronto, keeps the price as low as the price would be if we chose to buy flour from the city of New York. But it is not a necessity at all for us to buy flour at New York. I believe this House will agree with me that the same quality of flour can be found in the Dominion of Canada for the same price as we can get it in New York. Flour is produced in abundance in this country, as it is in the United States, meeting the necessities of the people of both countries. The surplus finds a foreign market, and that foreign market controls the price, therefore we pay for the flour just the same in any portion of this Dominion, excepting the cost for freight, and that is the only difference. Therefore, I believe that a very small proportion of additional expense is incurred by our people in consequence of the duty on flour from the United States. Now, a good deal has been said about the importation of flour from the United States. I find from the blue books that a large quantity of flour has been imported into Canada from the United States. What became of it? A large proportion of it was exported again, and but a small proportion was used by our people; so with reference to wheat. I find that we imported into this country during the year ending 1st July, 1885, 3,128,141 bushels of wheat, and we exported 5,423,805 bushels, being an excess of 2,295,000 bushels over and above what we imported. That shows that we produced a surplus of wheat in this country, that we were not able to use it all, and we sent the balance abroad.

Mr. MITCHELL. Where did this wheat grow?

Mr. EVERETT. 3,128,121 bushels of wheat were imported into the country. If the whole of that was sent out of the country, then 2,295,000 additional bushels were produced in this country and sent abroad. Here is where it came from. In reference to the articles manufactured in this country, I am convinced, from my knowledge of business and from what I hear, that many articles can be produced in this country, in spite of the duties imposed on similar articles coming from foreign countries, just as cheaply as articles of a similar character are sold in the United States. I know that is correct in reference to certain articles of cotton. The wholesale price of certain articles manufactured by Mr. Parks, in the city of St. John, are sold to the people of New Brunswick and the Dominion exactly at the same price as the same articles are sold at the factories in Rhode Island and Massachusetts. Sir, I merely rose to express my opinion that the people of New Brunswick to-day are satisfied with the operation of the National Policy, and I believe that when they are asked to pronounce upon it, they will say so. It is said we have no manufactures in the Province of New Brunswick. I am sorry to say we have too few of them, but they are growing, and the day is not far distant when, under the operation of this tariff, if it is continued — and I believe that it will be continued—we shall have industries, and good paying industries, in the Province of New Brunswick, occupying the time and the attention of our people, giving employment and making wealth for them instead of sending our people and their money into foreign countries.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Mitchell.

Subsidy, Canadian Pacific Railway..... $460,000 00

Mr. McLELAN. This is the balance of the subsidy which has not been voted. There has been voted and expended on the eastern section, up to 1st March, 1886, $10,207,529; on the central section, $14,191,483; making a total of $24,399,012. There remains in the vote unexpended items of $141,000 odd and $460,000 odd, making a total of $25,000,000 named in the contract as subsidy.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What steps have been taken to ascertain whether the work has been performed within the stipulations contained in the contract.

Mr. McLELAN. The steps taken have been an examination and report of the chief engineer over the whole line.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That has not been laid before the House.

Mr. McLELAN. The Minister of Railways has been ill for some time and not able to attend the House, and he is not likely to be able to attend for a few days.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In asking this vote the Minister in charge should be able to inform the committee how far the inspection has proceeded and whether any and what parts still remain to be inspected?

Mr. McLELAN. From the papers I have it appears that the inspector has gone generally over the whole line. From an estimate made of the work remaining to be done on the eastern section it will require to complete $25,000. There will be required, as I stated on another occasion, $284,000 to complete the central section. This is independent of a tunnel that it is intended to make where there is now a temporary line, which is estimated to cost from $750,000 to $1,000,000. The amount unexpended is $460,000 and $140,000, making a total of $600,000 and 600,000 acres of land.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What security have we that the tunnel will be completed?

Mr. McLELAN. We have $600,000 in cash and 600,000 acres of land, and there is $300,000 worth of work to do outside of the tunnel; and then there is the bonds of the company. The balance of the money and the land it is estimated will be sufficient to guarantee the completion of the work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I must say that there is still a very large amount of work that may remain to be done. We are aware that on the British Columbia section the grades are exceedingly high, and there will be a very considerable difficulty in bringing them within the stipulations of the contract, tunnel or no tunnel; and the hon. gentleman ought to be able to refer the House to some detailed statement of the engineer to whom we pay several thousands a year for inspecting this very work. I have not been able to examine all the papers laid on the Table, but I have not observed any formal report made as to portions of the work completed within the last year or so. I do not think there has been laid on the Table any formal report of the engineer as to the work north of Lake Superior, and we ought to have that report before we are asked to discuss this item. Has the hon. gentleman no information as to whether such a report has been made--I am speaking more particularly of the section north of Lake Superior.

Mr. McLELAN. I am not aware that it has been laid on the Table. In a memorandum, which I used on another occasion, it appears that the chief engineer reported that on the central section, between Winnipeg and Donald, at the east crossing of the Columbia, the track is laid throughout, and the work is far advanced and is fully up to the standard required by the contract. The eastern section is under traffic; it is not fully completed; it is up to the standard required by the contract, except in some instances where it is superior, especially in regard to masonry, culverts, massive masonry and abutments. The grades, with the exception of where the temporary line is made, the engineer reports, are fully equal to contract, coming east especially. On the western section the maximum is 53 feet, central section 111, prairie section and eastern division 53 feet. I understand that coming eastward the grades are specially favorable, 25 or 26 feet to the mile, that is from the mountains down to the end of the line very favorable for hauling.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was particularly desired to be known was, as to what was the actual position of things, as reported by the Government engineer, with respect to the British Columbia section, as to which a great deal has been said, both in the press and in this House and elsewhere, touching the extreme severity of the grades. In any case, the hon. gentleman should be prepared to assure us that a report of the engineer will be laid on the Table of the House before he asks concurrence in that item.

Mr. McLELAN. If it be not already in.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not prepared to say that some report may not have been laid on the Table; but I do not recollect any, and I think my attention would have been attracted to it.

Mr. McLELAN. I will call the attention of the Department to the matter, and see it is sent down.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is understood that if the item goes now, the Minister of Finance will have a report of that kind prepared before concurrence.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Expenditure in British Columbia, Canadian Pacific Railway..... $460,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that expected to close the account?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost?

Mr. McLELAN. I have not that here, but the following are some of the articles covered by that vote: Iron piles, Port Moody wharf, $28,000; driving piles and setting wharf, $30,000; engine house, $28,000; contractors' balance, $53,000; land damages, $25,000; North Point engine house, $6,000; general settling up of works along the line, $180,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The chief amount is terminal apparently. Now, what is our position? The company have not agreed to accept this work.

Mr. McLELAN. Not yet. The chief engineer reports that the western end is practically completed, but that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have not taken it over.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What demands are made by the contractors? Have not they made a large demand.

Mr. McLELAN. I do not think so. I think Mr. Pope said a few days ago that they had not.

Mr. DAVIES. Is that amount paid to the contractors paid to Mr. Onderdonk?

Mr. McLELAN. No; it says, contract balance, $53,000.

Mr. DAVIES. Has that balance been settled with Mr. Onderdonk, and if not, is there any unsettled claim pending against the Government?

Mr. McLELAN. I understood from what Mr. Pope said some days ago that Mr. Onderdonk had not presented any claim naming any amount. I think there is a balance due him under the original contract of $53,000, and that the other sums are in connection with the terminus.

Mr. DAVIES. The Minister is of course aware that according to common report Mr. Onderdonk has a large claim, founded or unfounded, which he is pressing against the Government, verbally or otherwise. I think it is very desirable that Parliament should have information as to the extent of his claim before passing this item.

Mr. McLELAN. There has been nothing brought to the notice of the Government, though it may have been to the Department. I have nothing more than the statement of Mr. Pope, and personally I know nothing of it.

Mr. DAVIES. I hope the Minister may be in a position before asking concurrence to obtain accurate information from the Department, so that the House may know exactly whether this $53,000 closes the account, or whether we have a large unsettled balance which may end in a lawsuit. Will the hon. Minister make a note of that point, and promise to obtain the information before concurrence?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And also what are the claims of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with respect to this particular line. The Minister of Finance is probably aware that it has been stated, on what authority I am not prepared to say, that the Canadian Pacific Railway consider that a large amount will have to be expended on this line, in order to put it in such a state that they can operate it. Has the hon. gentleman no information on that point? Has no correspondence passed between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Department with respect to that?

Mr. McLELAN. Nothing has come under the notice of the Government, nor is there anything in the papers that have been sent to me. I may say that the officers of the Department were here last evening to give information, expecting that this vote would come up, but they are not here this evening; I do not know for what reason.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, I would suggest that they should have been sent for.

Mr. McLELAN. I will get the information before concurrence.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And as a matter of course the Minister understands that in this case, as in all such cases, we reserve the right to discuss as in committee.

Mr. McLELAN. Certainly.

Port Arthur to Red River, Canadian Pacific Railway	$72,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this for?

Mr. McLELAN. This is the balance of the contract on that section which had never been paid to the contractors. There was an arbitration, I think, upon their claims for damages. The hon. gentleman is probably aware that when they took the contract there was an estimate made and a contract signed to do about $1,000,000 worth of work, and that that was reduced largely. The road was given over to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company before this work was completed, and they made a claim. The contract was $4,130,707, and the work was reduced to $2,934,308, a reduction of $1,195,000. The contractors made a claim for damages, and that claim was referred to arbitration, and a large sum was awarded them.

Mr. DAVIES. What section was that?

Mr. McLELAN. Manning, Macdonald & Co.

Mr. DAVIES. Section B?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes. On the work they performed there was a sum which the engineer reported due to them which did not go into arbitration, and did not form any part of it. It was the final certificate he made, and it has been left unpaid up to this time.

Mr. DAVIES. Has this amount been lying over, although certified, and although these matters were referred to arbitration?

Mr. McLELAN. I do not know whether it was certified before the reference to arbitration or not, but it was certified by the engineer as work which he recognised as performed exclusive of the work referred to the arbitrators.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who are to receive this amount?

Mr. McLELAN. The contractor on this section.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman mean that the sum is to be paid to the same firm to whom we paid the $359,000. Is it an extra?

Mr. McLELAN. Not an extra.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it extra to the amount which was awarded, which award our own arbitrator, Judge Clark, dissented from, and thought so dubious that he strongly recommended that it should be contested in the courts, although the hon. gentleman's colleague would not allow us to see Judge Clark's letter. They are the same parties.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; because this is certified as a balance due upon a work actually performed, and not upon any of the matters under arbitration. The award of the arbitrators deal with claims put forward by the contractors for extras on loose rock and other matters, that is to say that work which had been described as loose rock should be paid for as something else. There was an award made on the 8th of February, 1884, dealing with loose rock, outside of the prisms, and cross-logging. The second award, on the 5th of April, 1884, dealt with eleven items, all relating to damages, which were sustained to the amount of $395,600. The first award being for work performed, is embodied in the final certificate of the chief engineer. The certificate does not touch the matter decided in the second award, and the balance is simply money due for works executed, but so far not paid for. The contractors have agreed to accept the amount of this final certificate in full settlement.

Mr. CASEY. But all the matters between the Government and the contractors were included in those eleven items, and Sir Charles Tupper said last Session that this was the winding up of the whole affair. I am satisfied that all matters in dispute were referred to the arbitrators, and there was nothing left on which to make a further claim, unless some other ground was found for making a claim since the arbitration.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps this was for 'the boy?"

Mr. CASEY. It may be for the nigger in the fence.

Mr. DAVIES. I examined all the returns brought down with reference to the submission to arbitration. My own opinion was that the arbitrators were not justified in making the award they did. I remember giving a great deal of attention to the matter, and opposing very strongly the vote of $395,000 which Parliament was asked for to close up the whole transaction. My recollection is the same as that of the hon. member for West Elgin, that we pressed very strongly on the Government to know whether this was a final winding-up of all the claims of Manning, Macdonald & Co., and my impression is very strong that Sir Charles Tupper gave a positive assurance that this closed up the whole matter.

Mr. McLELAN. The first award of $45,000 was never paid.

Mr. DAVIES. Why, it was voted the year before last?

Mr. McLELAN. The first award of $45,000 forms part of the final certificate, which is covered by this vote of $72,000, and thus never paid.

Mr. DAVIES. The engineer refused to certify to that amount and that is the reason the matter was referred to the arbitrators, and the arbitrators awarded it in defiance of the engineer's opinion. If he has given a certificate for the amount between $45,000 and $72,000, I want to know what the items are.

Mr. McLELAN. The items making up this amount are: trestle work, $44,273.69; allowance for strengthening and improving trestles, $10,735; sidings estimated by chief engineer, $1,209; 15 per cent. on drain filling, $13,132.80; carriage works, $1,925; total, $71,336.21; less overpaid, $1,187.71, leaving $70,148.60; also due to them on account of their contract, $1,002.81.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman is misusing language when he says the award is included in the engineer's certificate, or else the engineer is acting contrary to all usage. The engineer cannot certify to the amount of an award; the arbitrators certify to the amount of an award; and to say that the engineer's certificate is included in this vote of $72,000 is simply absurd. It is clear that this whole amount is something outside of and beyond the award. We are perfectly well aware that the engineer refused in the first instance to certify to these items.

Mr. McLELAN. I am just stating what is on the paper given to me, that the $45,000 is embodied in the final certificate of the engineer, and forms part of it. I do not imagine for a moment that the Department would send me an incorrect statement. However, if the hon. gentleman has any evidence to the contrary, let the item stand or let it be understood full particulars will be given on concurrence.

Mr. DAVIES. Will the hon. gentleman let the matter stand, as far as the $395,000 item is concerned, which was paid immediately after the vote; so quickly that we complained of it.

Mr. McLELAN. There are two other matters we agreed would be fully discussed on concurrence as if not passed. Should not this stand in the same position?

Mr. CASEY. When the memorandum of the Department of Railways is in direct contradiction of our recollection of what has been done, we should not pass the item.

Item allowed to stand.

Salaries and Expenses of Staff..... ..... $30,000 00

Mr. McLELAN. Several of the engineers will be required in the Department here, commencing with Mr. Schreiber. All along the line, wherever there is work being done, there are engineers. We have dispensed with a number of junior officers, but have still to keep on a portion of the staff to inspect the work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As I understand it, to all intents and purposes, the road, except possibly with respect to its small section as to which disputes may arise, will be handed over within a month or two completely to the company, and $30,000 appears to be a large sum to spend in connection with a road with which we are going shortly to have nothing to do. I can understand that during construction it was necessary to employ a considerable number of engineers inspecting the work of the contract, but the hon. gentleman says the road is expected to be in running order from end to end and completely under the control of the company in another month, and I do not see why we should spend this $30,000 during next year, unless for the purpose of making a perfect survey of the road; and if that be the case, we should not have been in such a hurry to part with the control of the $5,000,000 we voted the other day.

Mr. McLELAN. Although trains may be running in a few months and the road be practically opened, still it will be necessary to have a supervision of the road so as to see that the whole work is completed. The hon. gentleman will see there is a reserve of $600,000 in cash and 600,000 acres of land, for about a million dollars of work to be done at the tunnel and at two other points.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But that would not require an expenditure of $30,000 on the staff.

Mr. McLELAN. Well, taking the whole extent of country, a number of engineers will be required to see that the work is finished up. This is only a rough estimate. It is difficult to say how long these people will be occupied. The staff is being reduced as quickly as possible, but we have still to keep a number on. We thought $30,000 would be sufficient to meet expenses, as only what is absolutely necessary will be spent.

Mr. TROW. What proportion of the road is in the hands of the Government and what proportion is in the hands of the syndicate?

Mr. McLELAN. None of the western section constructed under contract by the Government has as yet been taken off the hands of the Government by the Canadian Pacific Railway. That western section is still in the hands of the Government or Mr. Onderdonk.

Mr. DAVIES. I notice a saving of $20,000, is that in the head office or among the engineers along the line?

Mr. McLELAN. In both.

Mr. DAVIES. Does he intend there shall be a chief engineer when this road is completed. It is practically completed now. Will it be necessary to retain a chief engineer at a salary of $4,000 or $5,000—$4,500, I think it is—and chief clerks at $6,850, first class clerks at $2,750, and so on. This is an enormous staff, and I have no doubt was required during the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but now that it is all completed, is it intended to retain this enormous staff?

Mr. McLELAN. It is certainly not intended that the same staff shall be kept up at Ottawa or along the line that was kept up during the construction of the work. It will be reduced as rapidly as possible, and as the public interests will permit of its being done.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. I do not see why that question should be asked so many times. The Minister has made the statement three times that the number of officers will be reduced as the work ceases, and I do not know why the question is repeated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think we require to be instructed in our duties here by the hon. gentleman, nor are we disposed to be so. We shall put such questions to the Government as we think it right to put, and I have to tell the hon. gentleman that items of this sort have never been passed in this House before with so little information. Because the hon. gentleman's colleague is not here, we do not feel disposed to press them, but very far from the full explanation which should be given has been afforded.

Mr. PAINT. I trust the services of the staff will not be dispensed with until the extension of the railway into Cape Breton, to Louisburg.

Mr. DAVIES. The official explanation that anyone could give as well as the Minister, that the staff will be reduced as far as the public interests permit, is no doubt perfectly satisfactory to the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Shakespeare). He does not want any explanation at all. I have not heard him make any enquiries about the Public Accounts. He is willing to swallow them all, but I intend to ask for the information that I require, and I ask whether the chief engineer or any of the officials at the chief office have had their services dispensed with, or is it intended to dispense with their services, or is the saving only made because the services of the construction engineers along the line are to be dispensed with? Is the railway office itself to be maintained?

Mr. McLELAN. It is expected that the staff at the head office at Ottawa will be largely reduced during this year. Whether their work will entirely cease during this year or not, I am not prepared to say. I think it is improbable that everything connected with the construction of that great work can end before the close of 1886-87. It is not necessary to have a chief engineer with his time and services devoted to the Canadian Pacific Railway after it shall have been passed over and all matters closed with that company, because it is their own work and business, and they will have to provide their own engineer. All we want to do is to keep sufficient staff here, a chief engineer and staff, to see that our contract with the company is properly performed and finally closed. Certainly the hon. gentleman will not expect us to keep a chief engineer looking after the Canadian Pacific Railway after our connection with it has entirely ceased. We may require a chief engineer for our Government railways elsewhere, and of course we shall require a railway staff to look after them. It may be, if matters arise as to any work at any time, that the service of the chief engineer may be called in to settle them. In so large an undertaking, extending over so much and covering so many different works, it will perhaps be many months before this can all finally be closed, and the services of some one conversant with it may be necessary even after the general supervision shall have ceased.

Mr. DAVIES. That I can understand. I can understand that the services of the chief engineer will be required for some time, but the hon. gentleman still skilfully evades giving the information which I seek. I want to know what the reductions in the chief office are to be, whose services are to be dispensed with?

Mr. McLELAN. I cannot give you the names of the officers whose services will be dispensed with. I asked about this, and was told that the services of some officers had been dispensed with and that others would be. Some are still on the staff. Mr. Marcus Smith and Mr. Tomlinson are still in the employ of the Department here, their work is not finally concluded, but the services of all the men whose work has been solely connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway must be dispensed with shortly.

Mr. DAVIES. The Department must know, when they send in an estimate of $30,000, what they want it for and which officers they will dispense with.

Mr. McLELAN. They may consider that before a certain period a certain man's services may be dispensed with, but, with the amount of work yet to be done and the supervision required, they cannot say how many men will be dispensed with.

Mr. DAVIES. Then how do they make up their estimate?

Mr. McLELAN. They estimate that in so many months they will dispense with so many men and so reduce the amount to $30,000. I understand that already some of the juniors have been dispensed with.

Miscellaneous works, Intercolonial Railway..... $6,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not object to the amount, but I call the attention of the Finance Minister to what I think is an objectionable practice, the practice of carrying such an item as that to capital account, on the Intercolonial Railway in particular, which is supposed to have been completed with the exception of such things as the St. Charles branch, for which I see a separate vote is taken. To carry little matters involving so small a sum as $6,000 to capital account seems to be not at all in accordance with the usual practice. It ought to be charged to income.

Mr. McLELAN. I understand there are still a number of unsettled matters on the books of the Department which have been there for years. There are allowances for right of way that, in some cases, have not yet been called for, and it has been customary for two or three years to carry this amount forward to meet these cases should they arise. I understand that very little of this amount was called for last year, but it is thought safer, knowing that there are claims that may arise, to vote the amount. Some of these may never be called for; it is not likely now; but they may be. I suppose in a year or two this may be dropped altogether.

St. Charles Branch, Intercolonial Railway.....$57,000 00

Mr. LANGELIER. What is that intended for?

Mr. McLELAN. That is mainly for a terminal station at Point Lévis, the purchase of property to make a siding and yard for trains and engines.

Mr. LANGELIER. I do not see that anything is demanded for paying the expropriations that still remain to be paid. I understand there is still a large amount unpaid, and there are judgments against the Government for some of these expropriations. I know of my own knowledge that in one of them, the case of Murphy vs. The Queen, a judgment was rendered by the Supreme Court lately for $11,000 against the Government, and, unless that has been paid in the last three or four days, it is still outstanding.

Mr. McLELAN. There is money to pay that in last year's vote of $168,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does this close the St. Charles Branch?

Mr. McLELAN. I understand so.

Mr. VAIL. There are still a number of claims unpaid, are there not?

Mr. McLELAN. On the vote given last year we have a month and a half of this year yet to run. This $57,000 is intended to complete.

Mr. LANGELIER. Will that complete these permanent buildings and pay the expropriation already decided on?

Mr. McLELAN. That, with the money that is unexpended, is to complete the whole.

Mr. LANGELIER. There are some very large claims, I think one of them amounts to $250,000, although I do not suppose so much will be awarded. There are several other claims which must amount altogether to more than $300,000 and they will not be settled before the 1st July, so that they will have to be paid during the next fiscal year. I refer to the claims of George Taylor, Carrière and Beaulieu.

Mr. McLELAN. No provision is made for claims of that kind. I undertood that there was a number of smaller claims still pending, that would be covered by the $168,000 and this $57,000.

Mr. LANGELIER. No doubt these other claims are greatly exagerated, but if I am not misinformed, in one case the Government offered more than $50,000 to one of the claimants.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think the hon. gentleman is right about these claims, but the Government cannot even appear to admit them by asking money now to pay them. Therefore, we must wait until we have a judgment of the court, and then we will ask for what is needed. The hon. gentleman sees that we have $168,000. I am not in a position to say the exact amount that remains, but there must be a large amount of that still remaining in the hands of the Government, and that will be good for the remainder of the fiscal year. If there is a balance, it may be carried over to meet these other claims, should judgment go against the Government.

Mr. LANGELIER. I can well understand that the Government should not ask for a vote for each of these claims equal to the amount demanded; but the Government must be prepared to pay something, they must admit that they owe something. I should think that the Government would have asked an amount to pay to these parties, at least, the amount that the Government have offered to pay. In the case of Carrière, I think the Government were prepared to pay $20,000 or $25,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like the Minister to make a note as to the total cost of that branch; also what will be required to complete.

Expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway..... $60,000 00

Mr. WELDON. Has the amount been all expended for sleeping cars? This year the Minister brought down a return showing that three sleeping cars were re-built in Cobourg, Ont., this year.

Mr. McLELAN. I think there is an item in the Supplementary Estimates respecting sleeping cars.

Mr. VAIL. What is that Stellarton branch going to cost?

Mr. McLELAN. $310,000.

Lachine Canal..... $70,000 00

Mr. McLELAN. That sum is required to make the side wall, the raceway, drain ditches, stone fences, booms, new timber, basin, to build a guard-room on section 1, electric light, superintendence, &c.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Should not such an item as electric light rather go to ordinary expenditure for income than be made a capital charge?

Mr. McLELAN. I think not for so large an expenditure as that.

Cornwall Canal..... $75,000 00

Mr. McLELAN. That is required for the enlargement of the upper entrance, now under contract with Jobson & DeLorimer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does that complete the work?

Mr. McLELAN. That is given as completing the work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. While we are on this item, it would be convenient for the Minister to state whether the Government have come to any decision as to the proposition for deepening these canals?

Mr. McLELAN. No decision has been arrived at.

Williamsburg Canal—Construction of Entrance and Lock..... $100,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In building a work of this kind which involves a pretty large expenditure, the committee should know whether the Department is building it in such a fashion that it can be used in case it should be decided to deepen the canal.

Mr. McLELAN. The amount is to enlarge and deepen the upper entrance of the new locks for 14 feet draught.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be a judicious expenditure if the Government has come to a conclusion upon the point of deepening the canals. But there is no use in providing for 14 feet unless the Government have really made up their minds to deepen the canal system.

Mr. McLELAN. The plans are so drawn that the locks can be arranged for a depth of 14 feet.

Mr. SHANLY. The new locks are being constructed with a view to the future enlargement of the canals at no distant date, and they are being built about 50 feet longer than the present locks, and with an increased depth of two feet, 12 feet instead of 10 feet, and with a view to increasing the depth to 14 feet by raising the banks afterwards. The locks are being made with a view to the deepening of the whole canals. Of course, it would be of no use building and improving the locks unless it was the intention to deepen the canals.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is only reasonable that the Government should inform the committee at what conclusion they have arrived. I shall renew the question on concurrence.

Enlargement of Upper Entrance to Galops Canal. $100,000 00

Mr. McLELAN. This sum is required to complete Allan's contract, $50,000, and for the construction of a new lock, $50,000.

Murray Canal..... $180,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A good deal of doubt exists in the minds of those conversant with these works as to whether they will answer the purpose for which they were intended. The statements made to me are to the effect that there has been very considerable difficulty in constructing and maintaining this canal, and a good deal of work has had to be done sometimes twice and sometimes three times over, whether owing to the nature of the bottom or not, I am unable to say. What is the length of that work?

Mr. McLELAN. It is 4½ miles or 6⅓, between the extreme ends of the pier. It gives an expenditure up to the 30th June 1884, of $209,000; 1885, $148,000, and from July to December 31st, 1885, $136,000. Total, $495,000. The amount of the accepted tender was $1,140,675.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What time was it to be completed?

Mr. McLELAN. The date is not given.

Mr. BOWELL. I think it was to be completed in three years. When I made my remarks before I thought the enquiry was in reference to the Trent Valley. I have heard the statements made, to which the hon. gentleman referred, and have taken the trouble to enquire into their correctness, and I find they are not correct. It has been asserted, over and over again, that the canal was being constructed through a large bed of quicksand, which, as fast as it was dredged out, filled in from the sides. Not only the chief engineers but the contractor assured me that they have not struck on any bed of quicksand.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the reason for the delay?

Mr. BOWELL. I think the work is of much greater magnitude than they supposed when they took it in hand. I am also under the impression that it is not being pushed as rapidly as contemplated—why I cannot say.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would ask the Minister of Finance to be prepared to give us fuller information on concurrence as to the cause of delay, as I think it is not right that it should be delayed two or three years longer than the contract time.

Mr. BOWELL. I quite agree with you.

Welland Canal $235,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will this complete the work, apart from the next item?

Mr. McLELAN. I think a sum of about $112,000 will be required to complete.

Welland Canal, deepening to 14 feet; land and damages, Grand River..... $776,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When does the hon. gentleman expect that this 14 feet navigation will be ready for use.

Mr. McLELAN. In June, 1887. The permanent structures are already the proper depth.

Grenville Canal..... $25,000 00

Mr. CASEY. I wish to make some remarks on this vote, and I would ask the hon. Minister to allow us the same freedom of discussion on concurrence as in committee.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

For construction of works on Tay Canal $44,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman tell us what these works will cost, and what purpose they will serve when completed?

Mr. McLELAN. The works consist of the construction of a dam and locks 134 feet by 32 feet, the depth at the lowest place being 5 feet 6 inches, and deepening the channel of the river.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman know whether there has been any negotiation to hand over the Rideau Canal bodily to any parties?

Mr. McLELAN. I do not know that there has been any, but I understand that the Government would be ready to take an offer into consideration.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What bonus would you give? I happen to know that an offer was seriously contemplated.

Welland Canal, chargeable to Income..... ..... $34,700 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the waste weir at Dunnville a new construction, or the vote of $25,000 to repair damages.

Mr. McLELAN. The chief engineer states that the floods that have taken place at the Grand River render it necessary that provision should be made to stop the further discharge at Dunnville. When that was first built, the banks of the Grand River were for the most part covered with trees, and the drainage was not so rapid as it is now, and as the country got cleared up it became necessary to increase the means of discharge.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the pond near St. Catharines which $5,000 is wanted to fill up?

Mr. McLELAN. The chief engineer reports that the pond is a great nuisance. It has been formed by the waters of the canal, and he states that an expenditure of $5,000 would be sufficient to raise three or four acres fully one foot over ordinary water.

For works necessary to increase the supply of water to Rideau Canal and the Gananoque River $20,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How came this money not to be expended before?

Mr. TAYLOR. This is a revote from last year. Arrangements are being made to have it expended this year. It is for damning up a lake called Devil Lake.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend is sure that this will not hurt the Gananoque water supply?

Mr. TAYLOR The intention is that it shall restore a portion of the water works taken away from Gananoque.

Canals, chargeable to Capital—Miscellaneous....$30,000 00

Mr. KIRK. These are very large sums that have been voted away for canals—upwards of $1,800,000, chargeable to capital, and $123,000 chargeable to income. These large sums are voted to other Provinces than Nova Scotia. We have a small canal in that Province which requires some repairs. An application was made to the Government two years ago to repair that canal. The Government were good enough to send an engineer down to get a report upon it, and he reported that it would cost $6,500. That is a very small sum, but I do not see it in the Estimates. Perhaps the Government intend to repair this canal out of the miscellaneous items. If not, I hope the Minister will place the item in the Supplementary Estimates. I refer to the White Head Canal.

Mr. McLELAN. I will bring it to the notice of the Minister.

Collection of Revenues—Customs..... ..... $ 804,365 00

Mr. WELDON. You add to Ontario and take away from New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If this item goes through, it must be distinctly understood we are free to take up the discussion with respect to seizures at Montreal on concurrence, as if the item had not passed.

Mr. BOWELL. Certainly. I may mention to the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) that the increase in Ontario arises from the fact that there has been a very rapid growth of settlement in the district of Algoma, and it is absolutely necessary that sub-ports and ports should be established on the northern shores of Lakes Huron and Superior, and on many of the Manitoulin Islands. The islands of St. Joseph and Cockburn are now inhabited by hundreds of settlers. There are large fishing stations there, and as they are near the Sault they trade to a great extent with the United States, so that it is absolutely necessary to have officers at these ports.

Mr. KIRK How is the reduction of $2,915 in Halifax brought about?

Mr. BOWELL. By keeping the staff down as much as possible, and reducing it to what is absolutely necessary to carry on the work of the port. In many cases where I have made reductions, I have increased the salaries of those left who are willing to do more work when they get better pay.

Mr. KIRK. And they will not be so much in each other's way.

Mr. BOWELL. It has taken me some six years to get it down from which hon. gentlemen opposite brought it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. By reducing it from $717,000 to $804,000.

Mr. BOWELL. You are speaking for the whole service, and I am speaking for Halifax. I admire the astuteness of the hon. gentleman. I do not think it is necessary I should repeat what I have said with respect to the rapid growth of the Algoma district, or to the fact that nearly the whole North West Territories and Manitoba have been added since the Customs came under my control, or to the fact that the Customs service has been rapidly extended in a great many sections of British Columbia, so that it has been necessary to increase the item for various reasons which I could explain.

Mr. WELDON. Moncton shows an increase of $1,200, and St. John a reduction of $1,200.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In Quebec you have reduced it from $192,000 to $203,000.

Mr. BOWELL The increase in Moncton has been brought about by placing the outports of Shediac under Moncton, and by the appointment of an additional clerk. In St. John the decrease arises from the superannuation of one or two of the older men who received large salaries, and the appointment of others in their place at smaller salaries.

Mr. VAIL. The last item here, to meet expenditure in connection with the Board of Customs and outside detective service, including $800, salary of the Commissioner of Customs, as chairman of the board—is that $800 a new item?

Mr. BOWELL. No, it has been in ever since the Board of Customs was established.

Mr. KIRK.

Mr. VAIL. I call the attention of the Minister to the fact that, where seizures have been made of vessels, and they have been put in the hands of parties for safe keeping and put alongside of wharves where some expense has been incurred, it is the most difficult thing in the world to get a satisfactory settlement of these accounts. I think these small bills, which are very moderate, should be paid and should receive more attention from the Department than they do. I have sent two or three small accounts to the Department myself, accounts which have been sent to me, and I cannot get any satisfaction. On the 15th March, I wrote an official letter and enclosed an account. I heard nothing of it, and on the 4th of this month I wrote again, and received no reply. A few days ago, I sent a third letter, and the day before yesterday I received an acknowledgement of that, saying the matter would be enquired into. I think that is an unpardonable delay, and it strikes me that this Commissioner of Customs, who may have been a very good man in his day, has rather outgrown his work, and I am not sure that it would not be well to get a younger man to take his place, who would be a little more active in his duties, and a little more prompt in replying to communications. I call the attention of the Minister to this, because I am sure he cannot be aware of it. The amounts to which I have referred are owing to men who cannot afford to be out of their money. Some of them are officers of the Department, tide-waiters, getting $50 or $60 dollars a year; and, if they have accounts for $60 or $100, those are large amounts to them, and it is unfair to keep them out of their money for eight or twelve months.

Mr. KIRK. I notice there are several increases in the Customs in Nova Scotia as well as some decreases. There is an increase of $450 at Digby, $480 at Lunenburg, $500 at Pictou, and some smaller amounts from $100 down. What is the reason for these increases?

Mr. BOWELL. At Digby it was necessary to give the collector some assistance.

Mr. KIRK. Consequent on the building of the Short Line branch?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know that that would interfere with it. At Lunenburg, there is an increase of $50 to the salary of the collector, who receives $750. He has been in office for a good many years and the business is steadily increasing. Then I propose to give Mr. Reinhart an increase from $350 to $400. Mr. Moorash formerly received $200 and gave only a portion of his time to the work. I propose to give him $500 a year, with the understanding that he gives his whole time. Rudolph, at one of the outposts, will receive $100 instead of $60, and Mills, another of the preventive officers, will receive $100 instead of $60. That makes the amount of $480.

Mr. VAIL. I am glad to hear the Minister say he has given the collector at Digby some assistance. He has been applying for it year after year. He does his work very well, but it is impossible for him to do all the work connected with the port.

Mr. DAVIES. Who is the new officer in Charlottetown?

Mr. BOWELL. His name is Moran.

Mr. VAIL. Who is appointed at Digby?

Mr. BOWELL. There has been no appointment. I think it was paid to the collector's son who was attending to the business for the old gentleman in his office. The collector was instructed to secure some one who could assist him, and, with the consent of Mr. Hill, the inspector, young Mr. Veitch was selected.

Committee rose and reported.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON presented the report of the Department of Militia and Defence upon the suppression of the rebellion in the North-West Territory.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 1.40 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 21st May, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY—ADJOURNMENT.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved:

That when this House adjourns to-day, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, at three o'clock, p.m.

Mr. DAVIES. It is idle, I suppose, to offer any objection to the resolution of the Government; but I must say that at this period of the Session it is not fair to the gentlemen who come from the outlying sections of the Dominion. We have been here since February, and have not been able to get to our homes since that time. I am quite aware that the Government must consider the convenience of the majority, and that the minority have to bow to the majority; but we have to bow too often. I think our convenience should be considered a little more than it has been. I do not think it is fair to adjourn over both to-morrow and Monday. I understand that we are to have prorogation next week, and this motion will throw it over two or three days farther than it would otherwise be.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman considers the interests of himself and his friends, and I feel very much for them; but he must not find fault with this action of the Government, because he knows that according to the rules of the House we do not sit to-morrow, and he knows that Monday is the Queen's Birthday, and as a rule we adjourn over that day to rejoice with our Sovereign. As I stated yesterday, the Government require a certain day each week for the general business of the country, and if we could not take to-morrow, surely the hon. gentleman would not ask us to take Monday, and not have the advantage, with other members of the House, of a day's rest. Therefore, I think the hon. gentleman will see that the motion is reasonable, at all events, for a very large majority of the House.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY FROM STRAITS OF CANSO TO LOUISBURG OR SYDNEY.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (for Mr. POPE) moved that the House, on Tuesday next, resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that the Minister of Railways and Canals be authorised to construct a railway from a point on the Straits of Canso to Louisburg or Sydney, as a public work; that the Government Railways Act, 1881, shall apply to such work, and that the location and all other incidents of the said work shall be determined by the Governor in Council.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to know whether the hon. gentleman is prepared to lay on the Table any statement as to what this means, what the work would cost, and what preliminary examination has been made by the Government to ascertain the cost; I do not, of course, speak of a regular survey, because I suppose that has not been made.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. My intention is, when we take up this motion on Tuesday, to lay before the House all the data in possession of the Government, as I have no doubt we shall be able to show the House that this resolution should be adopted.

Motion agreed to.

BAIE DES CHALEURS RAILWAY COMPANY.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (for Mr. POPE) moved that the House, on Tuesday next, resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolutions:—

1. That whereas by an Act, 46 Victoria, chapter 25, the Governor in Council was authorised to grant to the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company, incorporated by Act of the Legislature of the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $320,000, for one hundred miles of their railway from Metapediac, on the Intercolonial Railway, to Paspebiac, in the Province of Quebec, and by the Act 47 Victoria, chapter 8, further authority was given to the Governor in Council to grant a subsidy, not exceeding in the whole $300,000, for a branch of the Intercolonial Railway from Metapediac eastward towards Paspebiac, twenty miles in the Province of Quebec, subject in both cases to certain conditions mentioned in the said Acts respectively; and the said company, by two separate instruments designated as articles of agreement, made in duplicate, between Her Majesty Queen Victoria and the said company, both bearing date the seventh day of November, 1885, have undertaken to construct, in the manner and subject to the conditions set forth in the said instruments respectively, as well the said twenty miles as the remaining eighty miles of the railway from Metapediac to Paspebiac, and it was further agreed that the Government should request Parliament, at the present Session, to authorise the arrangement hereinafter mentioned as to the application of the subsidies aforesaid to the several portions of the said 100 miles of railway; it is expedient to provide: (1) That the said subsidy of $300,000 shall apply to the first section of twenty miles eastward from Metapediac; (2) that the subsidy of $3,200 per mile authorised for the said first section shall, with the $3,200 which alone would have been applicable to the second section of twenty miles eastward from Metapediac, be also applicable to it, making $6,400 per mile applicable to the said second section; and (3) that to the remaining sixty miles of the said 100 miles the subsidy of $3,200 per mile shall apply.

2. That it is expedient to provide, that the two instruments of agreement mentioned in the next preceding resolution, which were made subject to the approval of Parliament, be approved and confirmed.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 136) further to amend the Act respecting fishing by foreign vessels.—(Mr. Foster.)

Bill (No. 137) respecting the Carleton City of Saint John Branch Railway.—(Mr. Thompson.)

LAND GRANTS TO MILITIA IRREGULAR FORCES.

House resolved itself into Committee to consider a certain proposed resolution making provision for grants of land to members of the irregular forces of the Militia of Canada.—(Mr. White, Cardwell).

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many grants will likely be made under this?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). So far as my information goes, I do not think it will include more than about a hundred altogether. It is chiefly to the Prince Albert volunteers, those who went out in the first instance and fought at Duck Lake, and the few who went from Edmonton and Battleford.

Mr. WELDON. Do you give them scrip, the same as the regulars who went out?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes.

Mr. WELDON. Has the hon. gentleman considered the propriety of extending the scrip to the regiments that were ordered out? The New Brunswick regiment was ordered out and made ready to march for the North-West, and a Montreal regiment was under the same instructions. The men were put to a very great expense, as much as if they had gone to Winnipeg or further. They, of course, are not entitled to the medal, because they were not engaged in actual warfare; but as this is compensation to the men for the expense they incurred in being engaged in the service, it should apply to the regiments who were under orders. The New Brunswick regiment were under orders drilling from the 3rd April, when called out, to the 12th May, and then were kept in camp a considerable time, at great personal sacrifice to many of them. Some of the men were most unfairly treated by employers who filled their positions with others and refused to take them back. The Government might extend to these the benefit of the land scrip.

Mr. HICKEY. I would like to call the attention of the Government to the claim of the volunteers of 1866-67 who drove back a foreign invasion, and have never received recognition from the Government of any kind. If scrip and land are to be given to volunteers, those men who exposed themselves more than many who went to the North-West deserve recognition.

Mr. CURRAN. With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), I have been advocating the claims of the Montreal regiment to which he referred. From my own personal knowledge, the Prince of Wales regiment, commanded by Colonel Bond, a gentleman who has made great personal sacrifices in the interests of the volunteers and is a deserving and popular officer, were called out and subjected to most severe drill for a length of time. They had to get themselves ready and undergo all the expenditure necessary in preparing themselves for a campaign. We all know that the great grievance of those men was that they had not the honor and privilege of going to the front, and really it is too bad that these men, who made all these sacrifices, after having been debarred from the privilege of going to the front in the service of their country, should now be debarred from the benefit extended to their brother regiments who were more fortunate than they. I have had a good deal of correspondence on this subject, and I hope the Government will see its way to meet the just demands of the Prince of Wales regiment. At the same time, I hope that the Minister of Militia will be able to attend to a small claim I brought under his attention last year, with reference to Widow Martin, of Point St. Charles, whose son lost his life in the North-West, and who has now lost her husband, to whom a pension was given for the loss of his son. She is in the 86th year of her age, and something ought to be done towards continuing the pension. I take this opportunity to again urge this matter upon the attention of the Government, and I am satisfied the Minister of Militia will take it up and give it his favorable consideration.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My hon. friend, true to the traditions of his profession, has always been the protector of the widow and orphan, and I must say he has brought before me more than once the case of Widow Martin, whose name is almost familiar to this House. The matter has been considered on more than one occasion, and it has been found extremely difficult, as I had an opportunity of explaining before, to take up the case of Widow Martin, however deserving she may be of recognition at the hands of the Government, without taking up all the other cases which come up every day almost before the Department. I fully concur in what the hon. gentleman has said about the regiment he has spoken of, and which displayed the greatest possible zeal in getting ready, at the smallest possible notice, to follow their comrades to the front if required. With the battalions composing our militia force, we stand as high as any other country, but my hon. friend must see it was a necessity for the Government to discriminate and draw the line somewhere. Almost the whole militia force was kept in readiness in case the circumstances would require the services of a larger number of men than the number we sent forward to the front, and it would be almost impossible for the Government to treat them all on a footing of equality. So far as the troops are concerned who had to bear all the hardships of the trip from older Canada to the North-West, more particularly going up north of Lake Superior, and having to pass several months away from their home and away from their business in the North-West in case their services should be required, they all deserve from us that recognition which I am sure we all feel so happy to give them. They were all ready at a moment's notice to go to the front and to fight the battles of the country. It has been the misfortune of some—I believe that as soldiers they will call it their misfortune—that they were not called to the front, and were not called upon to take part in the battles which some of their comrades took part in, but I feel that my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, who has charge of the lands of the Dominion, had to draw the line somewhere, and the line was drawn in favor of those regiments that saw active service west of Port Arthur. However much I am ready to acknowledge the services which those other regiments were prepared to render, I do not see how it would be possible to put them on the same footing as those who went west of Port Arthur.

Mr. WELDON. My hon. friend includes in that regiments which were not in active service.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Of course.

Mr. WELDON. There were regiments that never went west of Winnipeg, but they got the lands.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, those which went west of Port Arthur.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. Minister draws the line at those in actual service, but those who went west of Port Arthur and not beyond Winnipeg did not see actual service.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It was actual service.

Mr. WELDON. In one sense it was, but it was not service in the field. It was only a question of distance. These men were taken away from their business and from their homes and were put to very great expense. I can speak personally of some of them that I know were put to considerable expense and great inconvenience, and some of the men when they came back found their situations filled, and I am sorry to say their employers showed a want of patriotism and refused to take them back. I think, under the circumstances, the Government might be a little more generous and extend the provision to them. My hon. friend from Montreal and my hon. friend from Bruce can speak of this, as the three regiments were all called out at the same time and are in the same position.

Mr. MULOCK. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Militia to another class of cases which he has determined is not already provided for by any existing law, and which will not come within this measure, as it is now before the committee. I understand that under the Militia Act power was given to the Department to allow aid, to allow money in certain cases, where, for example, those serving had actually received bodily injury, but the Department has held that no provision in law, or, at all events, as a matter of finance, had been made whereby compensation can be given in the case of men who have served and, in consequence of the privation or the trials they had to undergo in the campaign, have had their intellect seriously impaired. I have had my attention called to the case of a man named Thomas Neely, who served, I am informed, during the campaign in Company C, Infantry School, from Toronto. It is stated that Neely underwent serious privations during the campaign, and that, as a result of them—I do not vouch for this bit of evidence, but it is asserted in the public press—his reason became weak, and ultimately he became a lunatic. On the return of the company to Toronto, it is stated that at last his infirmity became so decided that he had to be placed in confinement, where he is to-day; that application was made by his family to the commanding officer at Toronto, Colonel Otter, for relief; that his family consists of a wife and children who are solely dependent upon this man for support; that Colonel Otter communicated with the authorities here, and that General Middleton investigated the case, and finally sent a reply to Colonel Otter, which concludes, according to the newspaper report which I have, in these words:

"There are no funds available for such cases."

He gives that as the decision of the Department, that there are no funds available for the case of a family whose head is taken from them under the circumstance to which I have referred. We know that the law does provide for relief where a man only happens to lose a limb, to be wounded in his body, but General Middleton asserts that there are no funds provided and no provision whatever made for relief where a man practically loses his head, where he goes mad. I will read an extract from the Toronto News, of Tuesday last, referring to this case. If the facts are as stated, I have no doubt the Minister will see, before the Session closes, that provision is made for relief in such a matter, and I think he might well assume that such applications may be made, and it would be prudent to take power to deal with them in case they should come under his notice. The facts in this case may or may not sustain the statement in the press. I will read the article, which is as follows:—

"A case of extreme distress has come to my notice that should receive careful consideration. The facts are said to be these: Some three years ago one Thomas Neely, who had served in the Irish constabularly and in the police force here, joined C company, Infantry School. He went with that corps to the North-West and served throughout the campaign, but the hardships he endured unsettled his reason. This was discovered after the return of the force, but it was only about two months ago that he was finally pronounced unsafe and sent to gaol to await a vacancy in the asylum, which was obtained about a week ago. He has a wife and two children. Now, here is where the painful part of the story comes in. The wife and the two little ones are left totally unprovided for. Col. Otter, I have no doubt, did all that he could to obtain some relief or assistance for the family. He communicated with the authorities at Ottawa, and consulted with Gen. Middleton when that officer was in the city, but the answer, as he writes Mrs. Neely, was: 'There are no funds available for such cases.' Col Otter says in his letter: 'I thought Gen. Middleton might be able to do something, but he cannot, and I am afraid there now remains no hope.' Further on, duty compels him to say: 'I have received an order for the discharge of your husband from the company, which must take place in a few days. In the meantime, I wish you would send his plain clothes to him, as when he is discharged he will have to return his uniform.'"

I am sure the Minister of Militia will admit that should such a case arise in the service, this country is bound in honor to do something. Therefore, I hope, that before the Session closes, he will take all power necessary to deal with such a case.

Mr. McNEILL. I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Militia to the case of those regiments and battalions that were called out on duty but did not proceed to the North-West. I know that a great many of the 32nd were obliged to give up their employment, situations of emolument which they were filling, and when they came back they found their places taken by others, and were thrown for weeks and for months out of employment. I know, also, that some of the officers and men were put to expense in providing certain equipments which were not provided by the Department, and altogether very serious loss was involved upon members of that force. I think it would be a most unfortunate thing if the country, through the Department, should appear in any way to make little of the gallantry of our volunteer force, who were prepared to lay down their lives for their country, and who came up with such promptitude at the call of duty. There is no doubt at all that unless some kind of recognition is afforded to them for their services, there will be a feeling of soreness, there will be a feeling that their services have not been appreciated. It is not the value of the thing they look at so much as it is the fact that their services and sacrifices have not been sufficiently considered. I am sure the Minister of Militia, if he will consider their case, will feel bound to do something in the direction I have indicated.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In answer to the hon. member for York (Mr. Mulock), I can say that I am not aware of the facts as related in the extract from the News which he has just read. I shall take care that the case is investigated immediately. Of course, the matter will have to be reported upon by a medical commission appointed for that purpose. If the facts are found to be as related in the extract, and if any relief can be granted by the Department under the circumstances, of course it will be granted.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Militia says "if any relief can be granted." Of course, it would not be right that the hands of the Department should be tied by want of power. He is familiar, of course, with the Militia law, and knows whether the Department has to day sufficient statutory power to enable him to deal with such a case.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Of course it depends altogether upon the facts of the case. I am not in a position to say, until I investigate the matter, whether it comes under my Department or not. If it is a fact that Corporal Neely has, in consequence of going to the North-West, lost his mind and suffered as the hon. gentleman represents, the Department has jurisdiction over such a case.

Mr. GUNN. I think the Department should also consider the case of the 14th Battalion, who were ordered out to the North-West, and who were put to a good deal of expense and loss of time. They served in the fort at Kingston for several months, and I think their claim should be considered as well as the others.

Mr. GAULT. I regret very much to hear the Minister of Militia say that no grant can be made to the volunteers who turned out last year and who went under canvas, such as the Prince of Wales Rifles, of Montreal, under Lieutenant Colonel Bond, a man who has spent a good portion of his life in the militia service at Montreal. I hope that before this Bill becomes law, the Minister will take the case of those men into his favorable consideration. I have likewise always considered that the volunteers of 1866, who went out to repress the Fenian invasion, should have had their services recognised by the Government. I think it is a great shame that the important services they rendered on that occasion should thus far have been wholly ignored.

We know that the volunteers from Montreal, and the Queen's Own of Toronto, suffered very severely, and that some of them lost their lives on that occasion, and I trust that before this Bill passes, some recognition will be made of their services.

Resolutions concurred in.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) introduced Bill (No. 142) to make further provision respecting grants of land to members of the militia force on active service in the North-West.

Bill read the first time.

THE LAW RESPECTING THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 133) further to amend the law respecting the North-West Territories.—(Mr. Thompson).

(In the Committee.)

On section 7,

Mr. WELDON. It is a very grave question as to whether judges should be members of the North-West Council. It is a legislative body for the purpose of initiating and carrying out legislation in the North-West Territories. To adopt the principle that judges should be a portion of the North-West Council is to go back to a principle that has long since fallen into disfavor. The only exception in the Mother Country of a judge being in the Cabinet is in the case of the Lord Chancellor, and that is a special exception. The only instance in which a judge was taken into the Cabinet is that of Lord Ellenborough, who was subjected to severe comment and animadversion. So strong was public opinion against that action that no member of the judiciary has been a member of the Imperial Cabinet since that time. At one time the Master of the Rolls was allowed to have a seat in the House of Commons. When Sir John Romilly resigned his seat for Davenport and was made Master of the Rolls, he acquiesced in the general feeling that the House of Commons was not an arena in which the judge of a court should take part. Since that time no person holding a judicial function has been a member of the House of Commons. The House of Lords is in a different position. That body exercises judicial as well as legislative functions, and therefore the principle does not apply. In those two instances to which I have referred, both of them were innovations and were founded on a wrong principle. We know, with respect to the Provinces—I can speak with respect to New Brunswick, and it was the same in the other Provinces—that when the Legislative Council was first formed the judges were members of it. In New Brunswick we had only one Council, Executive and Legislative, and when it was separated the judges remained members of the Legislative Council, but only the old judges, and the feeling was so strong against that system that many years have elapsed since a judge has sat in the Legislative Council. The same thing also occurred in Nova Scotia, and there has been no judge in the Legislative Council of Nova Scotia for years. Chief Justice Haliburton was a member of the Legislative Council, but he resigned his seat while a judge in deference to the feeling that judges should not take part in legislative proceedings. Such was the feeling, in fact, long before the days of responsible government, and whatever the justification for that system might have been at the first formation of the colonies and the commencement of our system, when that necessity passed away the feeling arose that judges should not be members of a legislative body. Throughout the Dominion the system has long ago fallen into disfavor, and looking at the practice in the Mother Country and in the Provinces, it is evident that it would be a very bad principle to adopt if we were to allow judges to become members of the North-West Council.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. Minister ought to drop all that portion of the clause after the word "territory." By doing so it would be provided that no judge of any court should hold any other office of emolument under the Dominion or under any Province or Territory. That would express precisely what has been the general policy of Parliament in all the Provinces ever since the establishment of responsible government, and there is no reason why a different rule should be adopted in the North-West Territories. If this Bill were to come into operation, and judges were to become members of the North-West Council, as at present constituted, when the number of elected members is very considerable, it is clear they would be called upon to take part in political discussions and express opinions on questions coming before the Council. The judges might take opposite sides. It was hardly in the nature of things that they were going to be all on one side and with one party in the Council. They would possibly become leaders of opposite parties. They would be called upon to sit in caucus and decide upon a policy, and when they came to discharge their judicial functions they would be called upon to interpret and enforce laws which they might have opposed and about which they might have differed with respect to their construction. The position in which they would be placed is one altogether contrary to our conceptions of the duties of one holding a judicial position. If there is one portion of the Dominion where a judge ought to hold himself aloof from political discussions and from taking part in the settlement of questions of public policy and of party government, it is in a country like the North West. The law is likely to have less force. A judge ought not to be mixed up with questions of party expediency, as he certainly would be if he were to take part in the discussions as well as the deliberations of the Council of the North-West Territories. Those judges, as members of the North-West Council, as members who took an active part in the discussion of public questions, would be amenable to criticism, their conduct would be reviewed, their motives would be impunged. Feelings of personal hostility towards newspaper men and other parties would necessarily spring out of the discussions, and there was nothing they could do in the administration of the law as judges which would not be open to question, and they would be assumed to be more or less influenced by what was said in regard to them in the discharge of their duties as members of the Council. It would be impossible for the hon. Minister or for any hon. member, if he were to be a judge of one of the Superior Courts of the country, to administer the law without suspicion attaching to him after taking part in political discussions, and he would become the subject of criticism, that men are necessarily, and I think in most cases fairly, subjected to by the public press. I think it would be singularly unfortunate if we adopted this provision, which might not be very seriously objected to, as long as those who were entrusted with the administration of affairs were simply magistrates and nothing more, whose conduct in their judicial capacity was always liable to be reviewed by the judges of the Superior Court, as they have by the Court of Queen's Bench in Manitoba. But the hon. gentleman proposes to establish a Supreme Court in that country, and to give to the judges of that court the widest possible jurisdiction, to give them control over rules of procedure, to authorise them to deal with all important cases that may come before them in their judicial capacity; to make these men members of a legislative body in which political considerations must come into play, and where they will be obliged to take sides, would be in the last degree mischievous, and would seriously affect the opinions which the public might form with regard to the administration of justice. It is not alone sufficient that justice should be fairly administered. In most cases, I suppose, justice would be fairly administered if the judges were allowed to be members of this House. But what confidence would the public have in their administration of the law in such a case? And if you cannot afford in the public interest to allow the judges to become members of Parliament, you cannot any more afford to allow the judges in the North-West Territories to become members of the North-West Council. It is not sufficient that the men who are engaged in the administration of justice should act fairly. It is of the utmost importance that the public should believe they act fairly; that the public should have confidence in the administration of justice, and it is impossible that the public should have confidence that the administration of justice can be retained, so long as the judges are members of the Council. Let me suppose that there are contested election cases growing out of the elections to the North-West Council. Who are to sit in judgment on the respective candidates in such a case? Why, these very men. Here you have provision made for an election of members of the Council, and for the trial of controverted elections in the North-West Council, and who are to sit in judgment on those controversies? Why, the members of the Council. Are they going to decide fairly? If the hon. gentleman appoints his own friends—as the majority, and perhaps all of them, are political friends of the hon. gentleman—I should like to know what chance a member of the opposite party would have in contesting an election before the members of a court so constituted. It might be that a fair decision would be had. But I should like to know whether the public would believe that the decision was fair, when it was adverse to the opponent of the judge? Why, Sir, the judge is put in a totally false position. When you introduce the principle of the trial of controverted elections—and that is what you do and what is done by the North-West Council at this moment—I should like to know how you are going to have a fair trial, or one in which the public will have confidence, when the members of the court trying the case are to be members of the North-West Council? I say you must abandon one position or the other. You just go back to the position of things which existed when we had the trial by petition before a committee of this House, or we must restrain the North-West Council from resorting to those means of settling disputed contests that we ourselves believe are demanded in the public interest and in the interest of public justice. Yet the hon. gentleman proposes to adopt a system here utterly at variance with a fair trial in the cases of controverted elections. I trust the hon. gentleman will agree to repeal the latter part of this section, and will not insist upon a provision which is so totally at variance with what is right and just, a provision which will certainly go a long way to destroy public confidence in the integrity and fairness of those who are called upon to administer the law.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I trust the hon. gentleman will not press this clause of the Bill providing that the judges which the hon. gentleman proposes to create by this Bill should be members of the North-West Council. We have so much confidence at present in our judges, that they are treated as if it were never possible for them to destroy that confidence. Public confidence in them remains established. Nobody questions that public confidence. Now, there were not, I dare say, any very valid objections to the stipendiary magistrates being members of the North-West Council. The sparsity of the population and the difficulty of getting representative men into the North-West Council was, no doubt, very great, and no doubt there were some excuse for allowing these stipendiary magistrates to occupy seats in the Council. But that difficulty has long since disappeared, or, at all events, it does not now exist. Intelligent, qualified and able men can be got to represent the people in the North-West Council. Now, there is another reason why this provision is very objectionable. We know that in the earlier days of the administration of the North-West Council, politics did not, to any extent, prevail in that board. But anybody who has watched the proceedings of the Council during the last year, can come to but one conclusion, and that is, that political lines are about as clearly defined there as they are in the Parliament of Canada. The discussions which took place during the last meetings of the Council, the actions of the members of the Council, both the nominees of the Crown and the representatives of the people there, clearly indicate that. Now the effect of this proposition is that we are creating five Superior Court judges, and we are placing them in the political arena, to take part in political discussion; because, where party lines are drawn, as they are there, the judges will undoubtedly—they are but human; they have political sympathies, though they are judges—they will undoubtedly be ranged on one side of politics or the other. The result is, that you are going to place those judges in an unenviable and disagreeable position—a position in which public confidence, at no distant day, if not at the outset, will be completely shaken in the judgment of those judges. Now, I say it is hardly the thing that the men who make the laws should be the men to administer the laws. The hon. gentleman might just as well propose here that the judges of the Superior Court of the Province of Ontario, or the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, should be members of this House. Why dare not the hon. gentleman so propose? He dare not so propose, and why? Because public opinion is against it; because the faith and confidence which the people have in the administration of justice would be completely shaken, and, therefore, no person would think of proposing that the judges of the courts should occupy seats in the Parliament of Canada or the Local Legislatures. Now, if they should not occupy seats in the Parliament of Canada or the Local Legislatures, upon what principle can the hon. gentlemen justify their occupying seats in the North-West Council? They will have as much politics there as the rankest politician, Liberal or Conservative; and it is putting them in a position in which no judge should be placed. It is going to have the effect of shaking public confidence in those judges. Therefore, I hope the hon. gentleman will not press that clause of the Bill, but will leave the judges of the North-West, as they are now in the other Provinces—men who are supposed, at all events, to have no political bias or leaning, who are supposed to administer the law without any leaning to one side of politics or the other.

Mr. THOMPSON. With great respect for my friends on the other side of the House who have discussed this question this afternoon, I beg to say that I think there is a very marked distinction between the case of the North-West Council and that of this Parliament or a Local Legislature. As was intimated by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), in the organisation of the different colonies where Imperial Councils were established, judges were almost always placed upon the board, and they remained there in many cases until responsible government was conceded. The condition of affairs in the North-West Territories is very similar. We are still to a large extent, so far as local legislation is concerned, in the position of organising those territories, and giving them for the first time a code of laws; and I think it just as desirable that the experience and legal assistance the judges are able to give should be given in those Councils as it ever was in the organisation of a colony. But I wish particularly to call the attention of my hon. friends opposite to the principle underlying this part of the Bill, which will appear after I make this explanation. I do not propose in this, or any other respect, to make any change in the laws of the territories, except with reference to the establishment of the court itself. I do not desire to alter the substantive law relating to property, procedure, or the North-West Council itself. The only way in which clause 7 touches that question, is that it says that nothing herein contained shall make the judges ineligible to sit in the Council. Let me call the attention of the committee to what the law is in reference to judges sitting in the Council. At present it enables the Governor in Council to appoint six members of that Council; the others are, of course, elected in the North-West Territories themselves. It is also provided that stipendiary magistrates of the North-West Territories shall, ex officio, be members of that Council. Now, I propose to repeal that provision, and to strike out that provision of this Bill which increases the number of appointed members to eight, leaving the law just as it is, and saying nothing about the judges being either eligible or ineligible. Then, if at any time it should be considered unnecessary to continue the judges in the North-West Council, they will not be appointed. I think the interpretation of clause 7 will not be altered by striking out the words the hon. gentleman suggests, because the judges would still be eligible to sit at the Council board unless they were specifically excluded.

Mr. MULOCK. I hardly think the constitution of the North-West Council affords us a safe precedent for its future constitution. We must remember that the present law was framed when the territories were in a much less organised condition than they are to-day. In the beginning the Council was entirely nominative. At that time there were very few settlers in the North-West, and the necessity of the case perhaps justified a policy which, under the altered conditions of to-day, is an unsound policy. Suppose that to-day we were for the first time providing for the case of the North-West by establishing a Council, would we make eligible to sit in that Council men occupying judicial positions in the North-West? If we would not, then we must not make judges eligible under the legislation which is sought to-day. There is no practical necessity, in my opinion, for judges to be chosen to fill places in the North-West Council. Since the Act creating the Council was passed, a large population has gone into the North-West, and we are told that settlement is rapidly taking place, that people are now going in there by thousands. It is quite clear, therefore, that the territories will themselves supply the necessary material to fill that Council, without our having to fall back on the judges of the land. The duties of that Council are largely administrative. It has to deal with local questions, school questions, educational questions, municipal questions, and so on. Are the judges the fittest to deal with these questions? I submit that they are not. I believe the Government would be strengthened by not being free to make such appointments. The settlers themselves, I think, are better qualified to discharge the duties falling upon the members of the Council than the judges. Necessity, therefore, will not justify their appointment; and I do not think a member of the bar, at all events, would advocate the appointment of judges, who ought to occupy a neutral position, who ought to live rather in the serene atmosphere of the bench than be brought down to the discussion of municipal or other politics. In the last proceedings of the North-West Council we find the members arraying themselves on similar political lines to those of the people of the older Provinces. The committee will remember a discussion which came up in that Council touching the treatment of the Indians by this Government, in which a recently elected member, Mr. Jackson, made a very strong speech against the Lieutenant Governor of the Territories. He asserted that his politics had been Conservative, and that he was still a Conservative, but that justice to the Indians made it necessary for him to repudiate the action of the Lieutenant Governor with regard to the Indians of the North-West. Look at the division list. If I remember rightly, the elected members supported the attack on the Administration, and the nominated members defended the Administration. What happened then will happen to-morrow if the Government appoint judges to that Council. What will their action be when the time comes for them to pass upon the conduct of the Administration? They will be trammelled, however honest may be their motives, and being trammelled, public confidence in them as judges of the land will be weakened. You can strike no greater blow at our institutions than in the slightest degree to afford a foundation for the withdrawal or withholding of public confidence from the judiciary. Neither expediency nor necesity would justify at this day the appointment of a judge to the North-West Council, and we should go further by making judges ineligible for that office. They are not eligible to-day in the older Provinces to sit in any Legislative Assembly, or to cast a vote or choose a representative for a member of that Assembly. Were our legislators wrong when they adopted that policy, a policy which did not originate with us, but was borrowed from a country greater than ours? For these reasons, I trust that the Government will introduce such provisions in the Bill as will meet this view of the case.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I had occasion to look over the ordinances of the North-West Council, and I never saw such a crude lot of laws got together; I never saw laws passed in so complicated a way as these evidently were. In some of them there seemed to be no regard for logic, and hardly any regard for the English language, so that nobody could tell what they meant. It would puzzle a Philadelphia lawyer to understand them. I brought this to the attention of some of the attorneys of the North-West, and asked why some of them did not go into the Council, so that there would be a likelihood of the laws being passed in a more intelligible shape. But they replied that their practice took up their time, and that as they were the principal agents in the carrying on of lawsuits, they were not as popular with the people as others were outside the legal profession. The North-West Council is therefore principally filled by men who have no legal training, and the consequence is that the ordinances passed are often incomprehensible. If this North-West Council were a Parliament, in which politics took the lead, it would be improper to allow the appointment of judges to it, but when, as my hon. friend who spoke last has said, party lines are effaced and politics are not known in the Council, as is shown by the fact that at elections in the North-West. Nobody is asked what his politics are, but often Liberals from the older Provinces vote for the Conservative candidate, and vice versa, that objection disappears. The Council is, in fact, a deliberative body from which politics are excluded entirely, and if judges were appointed the laws would be properly framed and no question of incompatibility could arise. Let my legal friends opposite take up the ordinances of the North-West Council, and then say whether it is not necessary that a judge should have a seat in the Council, who would be both interested in and competent of seeing that the laws were properly drawn up. Of course, as the country grows older and politics are introduced, no Government would see fit to appoint a judge to the Council. But in the present condition of the North-West, when its society is not crystalised, when there is more or less chaos out of which order must be brought, it will be admitted that no person would be more competent as a member of that Council than a judge, and as there are no politics at stake, I do not see why a judge should be ineligible.

Mr. DAVIES. I think the hon. gentleman, on reflection, will see there is not much force in the argument he advances. The condition of affairs he depicts, which has resulted in the lamentable consequence that a large number of the ordinances are so framed that they cannot be understood, is a condition which exists, despite the fact that three stipendiary magistrates are ex officio members of the Council of which Lieutenant Governor Dewdney is the head.

Mr. WOODWORTH. He is not a lawyer.

Mr. DAVIES. But the three magistrates are.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Who are they?

Mr. DAVIES. Judge Richardson, Judge Rouleau and another judge. That shows simply what all our experience points to, that when you appoint men to a position of this kind, and do not attach any emolument to their services, their duties are performed in a very perfunctory manner. If the North-West Council want laws properly drawn they must appoint a proper law clerk, who will put the laws in proper shape. It would never do to allow the principle which has been discredited in every British colony to be introduced in a new country. I endorse every word which has fallen from hon. gentlemen on this side, as to the impropriety of admitting judges to be appointed members of the Council, whose duties will be partly administrative and partly executive. It does not seem to me that the Minister of Justice met at all the objections raised. He said formerly these officials were ex officio members of the council, but that in future they would have to be appointed by the Governor in Council. That is still more objectionable. Under the old system they do not owe their appointment to any political party. These judges, when they are members of the Council, will distinctly owe their position to political favor, and therefore their presence in the Council under the new mode of appointment will be, if possible, more objectionable than if they were made ex officio members; but I object to their being made either ex officio members of that Council or being made eligible for appointment by the Administration of the day. I think either mode of appointment is highly objectionable; it has been discredited and done away with in all the British colonies since the introduction of responsible government, and in many of them it was done away with before the introduction of responsible government. I can see no good reason for it, and some of the objections, notably the one raised by my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), in reference to the trial of election petitions, seem to me to be unanswerable. It is just as important that the people should believe they are getting justice done as that justice should be done, and if we constitute this Supreme Court, and constitute an administrative body composed partly of judges, as is intended by this Bill and, if, when they sit upon the bench, they have to discharge functions which are to some extent in conflict with their duties as members of the Council, you will throw an amount of suspicion upon their judicial duties which is highly undesirable. Now that we are establishing the institutions in the North-West is the time to place them on a just and firm basis, a basis which experience has shown to be productive of good and not of harm; and these old ideas of our forefathers many years ago—that it was desirable that the judges should sit in legislative assemblies, not being elected by the people—should no longer be entertained.

Mr. MULOCK. I am somewhat surprised at the attitude taken by my hon. friend from King's, N.S. (Mr. Woodworth), on this question. I venture to say that he has argued somewhat against his convictions, for I give him credit for having too much respect for popular institutions and popular rights to seriously press upon the Government the control of a popular body by Government appointees. He only justified the proposal, however, by the necessity of the case, and his evidence of that was that the legislation, so far, had been so crude as to indicate an entire absence of legal knowledge on the part of the framers, and the necessity, therefore, of introducing some legal acumen into the Council. Let us see how destitute that present organisation which he complains of is of legal attainments. I cannot profess to say who all the members of the North-West Council are, but some of them, at all events, are lawyers. How many lawyers will satisfy my hon. friend, so that there should be some legal knowledge there?

Mr. WOODWORTH. It is according to the quality.

Mr. MULOCK. Will he say that the present Government appoints unfit men to administer the law? Who appointed the following persons to office in the North-West? Mr. McLeod is an Ontario lawyer, a man who practised at the Ontario bar for many years, and at last went to the North-West. I believe he has been a stipendiary magistrate for some time. I do not know whether he is at present or not. He is a member of the Council. He is a good lawyer.

Mr. WOODWORTH. No, he never was articled.

Mr. MULOCK. Well, I know him personally, and, though I will not contradict my hon. friend, I assert that he is a good lawyer. He practised in the town of Bowmanville for many years.

Mr. WOODWORTH. That is not the one.

Mr. MULOCK. Yes, James McLeod; I am not mistaken.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). He is a lawyer. That is right.

Mr. MULOCK. What about Judge Rouleau? He acted as judge at Battleford. Who appointed him? I suppose he had a legal education, though I do not know anything about him. Then there is Judge Richardson. He was qualified to hang a man. I suppose he ought to be able to make a law or revise a little statute, anyway. Judge Travis—what are his qualifications? Why, Judge Travis is one of the finest lawyers the world ever knew; he is one of the ablest lawyers the Lord ever put breath in. Is there any other lawyer in Canada who has been able to accomplish as much as he has since he has been on the bench?

Mr. WOODWORTH. Not one.

Mr. MULOCK. Before he was appointed he was able to cast odium on the Privy Council. It was not up to his standard of what a judiciary ought to be. And then he badgered this Cabinet so much that at last, to get rid of him and to satisfy a then member of the Government, he was appointed a stipendiary magistrate.

Mr. MITCHELL. What member of the Government?

Mr. MULOCK. He is not in the Government now. I mean the member who appointed him, and very shortly after left the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. Who is he?

Mr. MULOCK. You know who he is.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. Has not Judge Travis the qualifications for a judge? Will you say he cannot make a statute or revise legislation? He was able first to imprison the mayor of Calgary, and then to imprison the whole council of Calgary, and then to imprison the whole editorial staff of Calgary, and then he threw the whole burgh of Calgary into the dungeon cell. Has any member of the bar proved his knowledge of the law so much as Judge Travis? And yet you tell us he cannot pass a little ordinance in the North-West. It is true that he has had a little check since he performed these great exploits, but he has only stepped back to take breath, and who knows, after this symposium he is now having, but that he will advance to new conquests—and he is a member of the Council.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). He is not a member of the Council.

Mr. MULOCK. Yes, he is a member of the Council, or he was one.

Mr. BOWELL. He never was a member of the Council.

Mr. MULOCK. Very well. You see in that case what great talent the Government has left unavailed of. They had the right to appoint him, and they have been so grossly negligent of their duties that they have not appointed this great man.

Mr. WOODWORTH. They are afraid he would imprison the Council.

Mr. MULOCK. Judge Travis, the embodiment of all the law west of Winnipeg, not a member of the Council! I enter my protest against his being passed over in favor of any new creatures of the Statute now proposed. But, joking aside, I think we have shown that, apart from Judge Travis, there is a sufficient legal element in the Council, whereby the Council's measures should not now be discredited on the ground taken by my hon. friend from King's; but, as was said by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), the necessity for having the Statutes correctly drafted, will not justify a departure from sound principles, so I am satisfied that my hon. friend from King's, N.S. (Mr. Woodworth), argued against his convictions when he asked to perpetuate a system which has been discredited already by the Council. What was the opinion of the North-West Council when they discussed the management of the Indian affairs? They said—and if you read their deliberations, you will find that they asserted—that the will of the people, the opinions of the people were stifled, were gagged, were over-ridden by the appointees of the Crown, and why? because these appointees were not free to express their views. They were in the service, in the pay, and under the control of the Crown, and therefore they did not enter fully into the consideration of the questions before them. Cannot it be said that, though a judge occupies a position from which he cannot be removed except by an Address from Parliament, he is not still under some governmental influence, some party influence? He must necessarily be. Every judge, however pure he is, however anxious to serve, still has an eye to the future, still has an eye to promotion, and likes to stand well with the authorities of the day; and apart from that, apart from the danger of his own actions being controlled or affected by other considerations, the one great consideration that ought, of all others, in my opinion, to which against the proposition to have them eligible is this, that he will be unable to enjoy the entire confidence of the community as a judge, if he is brought down to take part in the various conflicts that must necessarily arise in connection with the administration of local affairs in the North-West Council.

Mr. WOODWORTH. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) did not get up for the purpose of saying that he had been converted to my view of the case, but he has said so, in fact, in his argument. He stated that Judge McLeod was a member of the North-West Council; and had he not legal talent? The hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), also said that he had legal talent. The hon. gentleman says that Judge Rouleau has legal talent. I did not speak of Judge Travis, because my hon. friend was doing so well in his pleasantry that I did not wish to interrupt him. I say these men had talent enough to perform the duties for which they were appointed. But this Act supersedes them; they will no longer be members of the Council; they are ex officio; they are stipendiary magistrates; this Act supersedes them, and they are no longer stipendiary magistrates. They may be appointed judges, however. Rumor has said—I do not know with how much truth—that some of them, who are eligible and who are competent, are going to be appointed under this Act, but ceasing to be stipendiary magistrates. Then, if my hon. friend wishes to see Judge Rouleau made a judge, he is still a member of the North-West Council, so this Act has not done anything contrary to the views of my hon. friend for North York. He does not object to Judge McLeod, the present stipendiary magistrate; he does not object to Judge Rouleau; and I understood the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I., to say that they are members of the North-West Council ex officio. He does not object to that at all. If he does not object to it, and these men are appointed judges instead of stipendiary magistrates, under this Act, why should they not be appointed ex officio members of the North-West Council as they were before this Act was passed?

Mr. WELDON. The hon. member for King's, N.S. (Mr. Woodworth), took objection to what he called the crude legislation of the North-West Council, and the hon. member for Queen's pointed out that the judicial functionaries of the North-West were members of that very Council which made this crude legislation. Therefore, that is an answer that at the very time that these ordinances of the Council were being passed, of which the hon. member complained, the judges, with the exception of the later appointment, were ex officio members of the Council. It seems to me the Bill does away with the principle which we advocate: that persons who exercise judicial powers should not take part in the legislation of the country. The North-West Council is composed at present of six members, who are appointed by the Government, and, I think, fourteen or fifteen who are elective under the North-West Territories Act. Therefore we have got two classes. First, we have members who are appointed by the Government, of which three are ex officio and do not owe their appointment, as members of the North-West Council, to the Government, and they get the appointment by virtue of being stipendiary magistrates. That, of course, will cease, because the present stipendiary magistrates cease to exist when this Act is passed. Then we have the elective body. Now, this is totally different from the old Legislative Council which I referred to some time ago, where they were all appointees of the Crown. If the Minister of Justice wants to carry out the old principle, then he should, according to the practice in the old time, appoint not only the judges, but the bishops.

Mr. THOMPSON. Why not?

Mr. WELDON. Why should not Bishop McLean, the Bishop of Saskatchewan, be appointed as well as the judges, on the same principle? I am merely pointing out that on the hon. gentleman's own principle he should appoint the bishops as well as the judges.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is well worth thinking about.

Mr. WELDON. I should be very glad if the hon. gentleman, as a good churchman, would adopt my suggestion. But, Mr. Chairman, the difficulty is this, that the stipendiary magistrates are ex-officio, by virtue of their office, members of the Council, and you have here a proposition that the Crown, at its mere pleasure, shall appoint say three out of five judges. The difference between them naturally will create a feeling of jealousy on the part of the judges who are not appointed; then, what will be the result? The two who are not appointed will go into politics and stand for some of the electoral districts, and there is nothing to prevent them. If they are allowed to act as members of the Council, they can either act as members appointed by the Government, or they can stand for election. I think we do not want to see introduced in the Dominion the principle of a judge running an election. I think even in the United States where the judges are elected by the people, you will not find a single instance where a judge is eligible, either to the Senate or to the House of Representatives. The principle is condemned in England, it is condemned by the practice of the Provinces, it is condemned in the United States, and I think it is an unsound principle which ought not to be introduced into a body which must necessarily be, to a large extent, political. We find already between the Lieutenant Governor and the Council strong differences of opinion expressed as to the policy of the Dominion Government, and the conduct of the legislation, and I think that shows that the judges ought to be kept entirely out of that arena.

Mr. MILLS. My hon. friend has pointed out that under section 7 the judges may be appointed to the North-West Council, or that they may be elected to that Council. Now, let us suppose a judge is a candidate in an election. The Government is not obliged to appoint them all, they may appoint any one of them. A judge becomes a candidate, another party is opposed to him, and a contested election grows out of the contest between the judge and the ordinary civilian; who is to try the case? Why, his brother judges. Does any one suppose that the civilian will stand on a footing of equality when he is contesting an election, and the matter is being tried between him and a brother on the bench? Then let me suppose that there is a division among the members of the bench, whether that judge should or should not be returned to the Council. He is returned by a majority of the bench. They are divided upon the question; some of them decide that he was duly elected, and a minority holds he was not. Well, what will his relation be to the majority and the minority in the Council? He meets there in the Council with the judges who sat in the trial of his election, some of whom were in favor of him, and some who thought he was not entitled to the seat. What will his relations be? He may think that his trial has not been fair on the part of those who sought to exclude him, he may think that some of them showed a want of patience on the bench, and his relations will be anything but friendly when he meets them in Council. Now, I say that if the Government wished to devise a scheme to destroy the influence of the judges in the administration of justice, if they wished to destroy the confidence of the public in the fairness of the judges, they could not have devised a scheme better than this. A judge may be a candidate; he may be tried by his brother judges; he may be excluded by his brother judges, or he may be admitted by them. In fact, if anything in the world could create a state a chaos in the administration of justice, it is the clause we have now under consideration.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman will see that I was not so inconsistent as he was himself in his allusion to the bishops. I do not think it would be a very great calamity if the bishops in the North-West Territories were appointed to the Council.

Mr. MILLS. Let us know the policy?

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish to say to hon. gentlemen that at present the policy, whatever it is, is now the law, and that while they are opposing a change of the law with respect to judges, they have not yet uttered a word of complaint as to the eligibility of other persons. The hon. gentleman knows that bishops are eligible to-day, and he does not propose to make them ineligible, although holding up both hands in horror at the idea of judges being eligible. I leave the committee to say where the inconsistency lies. This is, however, a temporary provision. It is only for the present that this body exists at all. Section 21 of the North-West Territories Act, as embodied in the Revised Statutes, and the same section of the Act itself, provides that when the number of elected members reach twenty-one the Council shall cease and determine, and the members so elected shall be constituted as a Legislative Assembly for the Territories, and all the powers of this Act vested in the Council shall be vested and exercised by the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. WELDON. They can be elected still.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will come to that presently. The same Act provides that whenever the population of any electoral district reaches 2,000 people of adult age, and whenever a population shall be claimed to include 1,000 to 1,000 square miles, the Governor shall issue his writ for an election of a member for that district; so that, in the course of two or three years, we have every reason to believe the Council will reach twenty-one members, and it will be superseded by a Legislative Assembly. Under that clause, I am informed, at the last session of the Council five new members took their seats. But while the Territory remains, as at present, in the condition of a colony, it does not seem to be a very extravagant proposition to say that judges may be eligible to sit in that Council. That system has not been discredited, and hon. gentlemen opposite fail to name a colony in which it has been discredited or surperseded until the affairs of the colony have been managed by a Legislative Assembly. The Bill proposes no new provisions. I think the last proposition mentioned of the possibility of a judge running an election for the Council is rather an extravagant one; but I am quite willing to meet that objection by altering the words so as to read, "being eligible for appointment as a member of the North-West Council." A good deal has been said with respect to the qualifications of the judges in the North-West. The hon. gentleman also referred to alleged acts done by Justice Travis in regard to which he said the judge had achieved remarkable distinction. Whatever the judge's qualifications or disqualifications may be, the acts spoken of, that of having imprisoned the mayor, the town council and all the editors, are acts to which Judge Travis is an entire stranger, and which were never asserted in regard to him until the last half hour. As regards the position of those gentlemen referred to in this connection with the North-West Council we are making no new provisions except to say that they shall no longer be ex-officio members and I think that is a step in the direction in which the hon. gentleman is desiring us to go, notwithstanding the statement of the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), that the present provision will be more objectionable than that. If the objection to their having seats is because they might be, to a certain extent, under the control of the Government, the objection is really less strong when it applies to judges, who are appointed on good behavior and can only be removed by this Parliament.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister asks for a precedent showing that evils have resulted out of such a system as he proposes to adopt by this measure. I refer the hon. gentleman to the experience of the late Provinces of Upper Canada and Lower Canada. It is perfectly well known that the difficulties that occurred in olden times in those two Provinces arose largely from the legislative institution being controlled by appointees of the Crown, not all judges, but appointees, who were not independent. The Minister has questioned my remarks in regard to Judge Travis, and he has said that judge did not imprison the mayor or council, or any other distinguished persons. I have seen it stated in the press, and I have received communications from persons at Calgary stating that he issued edicts for those personages to go there; whether they finally went there or not I do not know. In regard to the mayor he issued an order that he should serve six months until he paid a fine. In regard to the council, he treated them in the same way; they were ordered to pay a fine or go to gaol. In the case of Mr. Cayley, a member of the press, he sent him to prison, and it was not until his father came here and interceded for him that he was liberated. Why, I do not know. He was sentenced to serve several months in gaol, but he was liberated after serving a few days. The hon. gentleman is surely not so unfamiliar with what his officers are doing as not to be familiar with the actions of Judge Travis.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken as to the nature of the judgments of which he has spoken.

Mr. MULOCK. I refer to the Calgary Herald and communications I have received from the people in question.

Mr. WATSON. In regard to the statement made by the hon. member for King's, N. S. (Mr. Woodworth), that the statement of the member for North York (Mr. Mulock) was wrong, that party politics enter into the North-West Council, and the reference to Mr. Jackson. Mr. Jackson was a Conservative and had pitched into Governor Dewdney about the maladministration of North-West affairs. Mr. Jackson represented a class of people there, he did not represent himself, but the people; and unless Mr. Jackson had seen that his people were in sympathy with the views he expressed in the Council, I do not think he would have given expression to them. This appointment of members of the North-West Council is very unpopular, and I hope, as the Minister of Justice says, that it will not be long before we may have a deliberative body there. That time cannot come too quickly in the interests of that country. As the Minister of the Interior who has been there knows, there are plenty of men in that country fully competent to become members of such a body and pass its ordinances.

On section 14,

Mr. THOMPSON. In reference to the views which were expressed the other day, I have drawn a section conferring jurisdiction on the court very much in the same words in which jurisdiction was conferred on the superior courts of Ontario. I thought there was some force in the reasoning that it was desirable to apply to this court the language which was used in conferring jurisdiction on the courts of Manitoba, for the reason that, as the Territories are divided into Provinces, it is desirable that their general system of law should correspond:

This court shall, within the Territories and for the administration of the laws for the time being within the Territories, possess all such powers and authorities as by the law of England are incident to a superior court of civil and criminal jurisdiction and shall have, use and exercise all the rights, incidents and privileges of a court of record and all other rights, incidents and privileges as fully to all intents and purposes as the same were on the 15th day of July, 1870, used, exercised and enjoyed by any of Her Majesty's superior courts of common law, or by the Court of Chancery, or by the Court of Probate in England, and may and shall hold pleas in all, and all manner of actions, causes and suits as well criminal as civil, real, personal and mixed, and may and shall proceed in such actions, causes and suits by such process and course as are provided by law, and as shall tend with justice and despatch to determine the same, and may and shall hear and determine all issues of law, and may and shall also hear and (with or without a jury as provided by law) determine all issues of fact that may be joined in any such action, cause or suit, and judgment thereon give and execution thereof award in as full and as ample a manner as might at the said date be done in Her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench, Common Bench or in matters which regard the Queen's revenue (including the condemnation of contraband or smuggled goods) by the Court of Exchequer or by the Court of Chancery or the Court of Probate in England.

On section 27,

Mr. THOMPSON. This section prescribes the scope of the authority of the Council at present, and the clause is only reinserted in order to make it clear that the same authority extends to this court, notwithstanding the provisions of the Bill.

Mr. MILLS. Then I understand that the intention of this clause is that the Council of the Territories may alter the constitution of this court.

Mr. THOMPSON. They could not depart in any way from the provisions of this Act.

Mr. WELDON. Does the Act of 1880 go quite as far as this, and allow them to establish a provincial court?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. WELDON. The only question is whether they would have power to create other courts while this court is in existence?

Mr. THOMPSON. I suppose, in practice, they could, but it could not possibly work without the concurrence of Parliament.

Mr. MILLS. I think my hon. friend has confounded the Act of 1880 and an Order in Council passed under the authority of that Act, conferring on the North-West Council just such jurisdiction as it is proposed to give them by this Bill, and it is under that Order in Council, I suppose, that up to this time they have exercised their power.

On section 28,

Mr. WELDON. Does not this conflict with the present Act? The hon. gentleman takes power to repeal the 76th section of the North-West Territories Act, which allows a jury of six in criminal cases, and the question might arise whether a jury of six or a jury of twelve should be taken.

Mr. THOMPSON. The clause makes the procedure subject to any Act of the Parliament of Canada, which, I think, cures the objection, but I will give full consideration to the hon. gentleman's suggestion before the third reading.

Bill reported.

LAW OF EVIDENCE.

Mr. THOMPSON moved the second reading of Bill (No. 141) further to amend the law of evidence in certain cases.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MILLS. Is this not a portion of the Bill which has already been passed through this House and sent to the Senate Chamber. Why should we be asked to deal with this subject when it is perhaps already embraced in a Bill which has gone to the Senate. We have no notice that the Senate have rejected our Bill, and it would be undesirable to legislate on a subject we have already legislated upon.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is not contrary to the rules of Parliament to legislate again on the same subject.

Mr. DAVIES. The history of the Bill is simply this. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) introduced a Bill last Session to amend the law of evidence and had it referred to a select committee, to which several Bills of a cognate nature were referred. I had the honor of being a member of the committee, and I moved this clause in the committee, and they adopted it, and it came in under what is known as the agnostic Bill. It was not necessarily part of that Bill, but was on the same subject. That Bill passed the House last Session and was rejected in the Senate. It passed this House again this Session, and I understand that portion of it which referred to the allowances of witnesses, who have conscientious objections to taking the oath, to make affirmation, was objected to by the Senate, very unadvisedly, I think; and this section, which we now have, was introduced as a subsequent Act of itself.

Mr. MILLS. I do not know whether the whole Bill is rejected or whether this is simply the Bill sent to the Senate coming back in an amended form.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is a new Bill.

Mr. DAVIES. This is what took place. They went into committee on the Bill, and one hon. gentleman moved that the committee rise, and that was carried, and so the Bill was lost.

Mr. MILLS. It is only suspended; it is simply a case of suspended animation.

Mr. DAVIES. It cannot be restored very well.

Mr. MILLS. It could be put on the next day.

Mr. DAVIES. It was not restored at all events. First, they agreed not to report at all, and subsequently they agreed to report the fact.

Mr. MILLS. I still raise my question for the decision of the Government. This is a part of a Bill which has already been carried through this House. It has passed three readings here; it has not been rejected by the Senate, and the Minister of Justice now proposes that we shall pass another Bill upon precisely the same subject upon which we have already legislated this Session. I submit that that cannot be done. If the Senate had rejected the Bill; if they had moved the three months' hoist, we might have introduced a Bill on part of the same subject, or might have re-introduced the whole Bill, but the Bill sent to the Senate has not been rejected. The committee has risen, and it may be restored to the Orders in the Senate to-morrow. I think it would be highly irregular to undertake to deal with it in this way until that measure is finally disposed of in the Senate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot agree with my hon. friend. In the first place, we cannot constitutionally know what happens in the Senate.

Mr. MILLS. Then we cannot legislate at all.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We cannot know what they do except by communication from themselves, or unless we ask them for leave to search their records, and they give their assent. All we know is that a Bill went up containing this clause with other clauses. That is there. It has not been reported to us. We do not know what they have done. We do not know whether they have done anything or not. That would not prevent them, on any principle that I know of, from sending down a Bill containing one of the clauses of the measure we have sent up, and we should not refuse it on that ground. I do not see that there is any ground whatever to prevent our discussing this Bill which they send down, merely because the same clause in principle, or the same clause verbatim et literatim, is included in the Bill we sent up there.

Mr. MILLS. Then the hon. gentleman contends that this House might to-day carry through a Bill upon a particular subject, and that it might to-morrow carry through another Bill upon precisely the same subject, in precisely the same terms or in contradiction or variation of those terms. That, practically, is laying down a law which is at variance with the well settled law of Parliament.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not see that. If we have passed a Bill, there is practically no necessity for the other Bill coming down in the same terms, and such an extreme case could never by any possibility arise, but, when a portion of a measure is sent down, I do not think we should refuse it.

Mr. WELDON. It is not sent down as a part of the old Bill, but as a new Bill altogether.

Mr. DAVIES. There is no evidence before us at all. This Bill may have been introduced in the Senate before the other Bill was introduced in this House. We have no official knowledge of it. It is here before us, and, deeply as I regret the action of the Senate in rejecting the portion of the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson)—we do not know in any constitutional manner what took place in the Senate, and I am only stating what I gather from the records and from conversing with some members of the Senate—I think this is a very desirable clause. I know in my own practice I have found the want of it, and, unless there is some rule which we are directly violating, I should be sorry to see it thrown out.

Mr. MILLS. I am not objecting to the principle of the Bill. That is not what I have submitted to the committee. We have already legislated upon this matter this Session by passing a measure containing the same clause. It was read three times in this House regularly, and it has gone to the Senate, and the First Minister says we do not know what the fate of that measure is. We have not searched the records of the Senate, we do not know that it has been rejected, and now the Government are asking us to adopt a measure containing one of the same sections. It may be exactly in the same words. I do not know, but I say that is a most irregular and unparliamentary proceeding. The Government are bound to know and to inform the House what has become of the Bill on this subject before they propose to introduce another Bill on the same subject. Supposing they passed the Bill which went from this House and sent it down here to-morrow, which is to become law?

Mr. THOMPSON. Would there be any harm done?

Mr. MILLS. Supposing they vary, does the hon. gentleman propose that Parliament should stultify itself? Does he assume that the rules of Parliament will allow anything so absurd to be done as that would be? If he is right, it would be within the parliamentary right and usage to pass a hundred measures on the same subject.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I should think that such an absurdity in practice would never arise, and therefore there is no use in fighting shadows. But supposing we send a Bill to the Upper House, and afterwards there came down a Bill initiated there, containing the same terms exactly. All that we would do in such a case would be to send a respectful message to the Senate informing them that before their message came to us, we had sent up a message of the same kind, and asking them to deal with that.

Mr. MILLS. That is exactly the case that has arisen, and you have not sent a message.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; it is not the same Bill.

Mr. MILLS. We have sent a Bill to the Senate, and we do not know what has become of it.

Mr. THOMPSON. Everybody does. We may shut our eyes to it and affect to act upon some exalted notion of consistency, which does not exist at all, but we do not know it.

Mr. MILLS. Suppose the Bill sent up is altered by the Senate, are we going to stultify ourselves?

Mr. THOMPSON. We will consider that when the amendments of the Senate are read.

Committee rose and reported, and it being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THE NORTHUMBERLAND STRAITS TUNNEL RAILWAY COMPANY.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 128) to incorporate the Northumberland Straits Tunnel Railway Company.—(Mr. Hackett).

(In the Committee.)

On the preamble,

Mr. DAVIES. Before passing that, I beg to ask whether the Government have considered the importance of this matter, with a view to assisting in the preliminary survey necessary to the construction of that undertaking. When the Bill came up in the Senate some time ago, Sir Alexander Campbell made a few remarks on the second reading, in which he entered a kind of protest in behalf of the Government, which seemed to me at the time somewhat unnecessary, to the effect that the Government must not be considered as in any way countenancing this matter, and that in assenting to the second reading it must not be understood that there was any implied promise on their part to assist in the construction of this tunnel. A remark or two fell from the Premier the other night, in the course of some general observations he was making in respect to the North-West, led me to believe that possibly the Government had modified their policy on this matter. Considering the very great importance of this measure, not only to Prince Edward Island, but to New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and the absolute necessity of having correct and proper surveys made to give data upon which the company, before they commence the construction of their work, can ask for stock to be taken, I am anxious to know whether the Government do not consider that there is an obligation on their part, at any rate, to provide a sufficient sum of money to make the necessary surveys. I am not going to enlarge upon the importance of the case now. The hon. gentleman who had charge of the Bill in the Senate, the Hon. Mr. Howland, did so at great length and with great ability, and the facts which he collected are before the House, and before the country, and have been before the Government. I am strongly in hope the Government do not intend to adhere to the statement made by Sir Alexander Campbell, because it fell like a cold water blanket upon the whole scheme. Of course, I am not here asking that the Government endorse the scheme in any sense further than that it is their duty to take it so far under their countenance and control as to see that proper surveys are made, and at the Government expense. I think that is the very least the Island has a right to expect, and that New Brunswick and Nova Scotia have a right to expect. I hope the Government will be able to give me some assurance on this point before the preamble is passed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman was shocked at the announcement made, it appears.

Mr. DAVIES. Not shocked, disappointed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Very well, I will use the word "disappointed" instead of the word "shocked." I do not know what difference the hon. gentleman makes between the two words. Of course he is an English scholar, and I am only a French scholar, and I cannot see much difference between the two words. But at all events, the hon. gentleman was not satisfied with the answer given by Sir Alexander Campbell in the other House. So far as I am concerned now, as representing the First Minister for the moment, I must say that I do not know what has passed in the other House. I think it would be as well for the hon. gentleman not to press me to answer him on this matter. This is a private Bill, and I think he should allow it to be passed. Whenever a great undertaking is to be accomplished and aided, the Government always consider the work, to see whether it is one that they can recommend to the support of Parliament. In this case the Bill has passed only one House. It has passed the Railway Committee of this House also. I think the hon. gentleman will do better to allow the Bill to become law; then, if application is made to the Government for aid, of course the Government will have to consider the matter. Beyond that I can give no other answer to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HACKETT. I am glad to see that the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) is not opposed to this Bill, and I hope he will assist us in carrying it through this House and making it as perfect as possible. The Bill is one of great importance, and if it can be carried out will be a great boon to the people of Prince Edward Island. I am sure the hon. gentleman and his colleague from that Province will be only too glad to see the Bill carried through. As regards surveys and matters of that kind I think the Government will deal fairly by the people of Prince Edward Island, and if they think it is in the interest of the people that surveys should be made, as I believe it is, I am quite confident the Government will undertake those surveys and see that justice is done, and thereby confer a great boon on the people of the Island and largely benefit the people of the whole Dominion.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman feels quite confident that the Government will, if they deem it necessary, undertake those surveys. I do not know on what ground the hon. gentleman bases his belief. I was in the hope that possibly the Government would do that. I must, however, call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the leader of the Government in the other House distinctly threw cold water upon this scheme, although a remark made by the leader of the Government the other night, led me to believe that possibly the Government might look with a favorable eye upon the undertaking. So far from offering any opposition to the Bill passing through the House, it will have my most cordial co-operation; but I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that the undertaking is not only a novel one, but will be necessarily an expensive one, and that when the company ask capitalists to take stock in the undertaking, they will be met by the question: how do you know that it is feasible? The carrying out of that work may or may not be a duty incumbent upon the Government—I am not going to raise a long discussion upon that question here; but I am going to raise this point: I say the question whether that work is feasible or not is one in regard to which the Government has the onus resting upon them, and I have a right to call on the Government on this occasion to say that this Bill and the scheme embodied in it have their sympathy, in so far that they are prepared to undertake the work of making the surveys. After the surveys are made and we are able to say what the cost will be, then will arise the question as to whether the Government should not subsidise the work largely or undertake it altogether. But in the meantime I am not throwing any obstruction in the way, but I am assisting the Bill in ascertaining exactly what the Government's policy is, whether the Bill has their sympathy and support or not. The practical way to express sympathy is for the leader of the Government to disavow the remarks made by Sir Alexander Campbell in the other House and give some assurance, which I am sure will be received with very great pleasure by all of my constituents, as in fact it will be by the whole Province, of their practical sympathy to the extent that they will assist in making the necessary surveys. I know the surveys cannot be made without a very large outlay for a private company; but in view of the compact made by the Dominion with the Island, in view of the fact that a controversy has been going on this year between the Dominion and the Island, which has been carried to the foot of the Throne, and in view of the despatch of Lord Granville to the Governor General expressing the hope that the Dominion Government would see their way clear to assist this tunnel undertaking, I would be lacking in my duty if I did not, at this fitting opportunity, ask the Government to distinctly announce their policy in the matter; and I shall be very much disappointed if the Bill passes through both Houses with no other declaration by the Government than that of Sir Alexander Campbell, which simply means that the Government do not intend to assist this scheme at all. I do not want to press anything unduly, or to ask the Government to commit themselves to an undertaking which may involve a larger expenditure than they are prepared to make at present; but I say, in view of all the facts, in view of the compact made and broken, in view of the language used by Earl Granville, urging on the Dominion Government as a means of remedying, to some extent, the neglect of the Government to carry out the compact made with the Island at the time of Union, that they should assist this tunnel enterprise—I think, in the face of these facts, I have a right to expect from the Government, on this occasion, some more clear and definite statement than I have obtained. I am not satisfied, as is the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Hackett), that the Government will, in the long run, do right.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to the hon. gentleman I must say this: I thought I hinted it in the answer I gave him in the first instance, but I will make it plainer this time, that I do not think it is in the interest of the work now under consideration that he should press me for an answer, and being so convinced, he must excuse me if I do not give any further answer than that I have given.

Mr. SHANLY. I am not sure whether the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) declared or not that his support of the Bill would be contingent on the answer given by the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. DAVIES. Certainly not. I shall support the Bill whether the Government give any assistance or not.

Mr. SHANLY. The Bill is an ordinary one and gives no extraordinary powers. The amendments proposed are simply those thought expedient in order to assimilate its general features to ordinary Bills of the same kind.

Mr. HACKETT. If we want to enter into a discussion of the merits of the Bill it will not pass this evening. But it is not necessary to enter into the merits. This is a private Bill, and it has passed through the Senate and the Railway Committee, and it is not necessary to enter into any controversy in respect to it.

Mr. MILLS. Have any soundings been taken as to the character of the bed of that arm of the sea, and is there any estimate as to the probable cost.

Mr. HACKETT. Soundings have been made and measurements have been taken at that place. The bed of the strait is very suitable for the laying of this mechanical structure. As regards the estimated cost, I have here a letter from a gentleman who is very competent to speak on this matter. It must be understood that thorough surveys and borings must be made before an accurate estimate of the cost can be obtained. I will read a letter written by Mr. Walter Shanly, an eminent civil engineer, in response to a letter written to him by the leader of the Government. Mr. Shanly says:

"Replying to the questions contained in your letter of yesterday touching the construction of a subway under the Straits of Northumberland between Prince Edward Island and the mainland—(1.) Whether the construction of such a subway is feasible; (2.) Within what time could it be constructed; (3.) Probable cost.

"1st, I consider the construction of a subway undertaken according to the very ingenious plan proposed by Mr. H. H. Hall, of New York, entirely practicable, and that the work might be completed in three years from the time of its actual commencement. As to the cost: I have not myself visited the locality, but I have carefully examined the plans and soundings furnished by Mr. Hall. They give a good deal of valuable information, but more will be required; that is to say, further surveys and borings are necessary before an accurate estimate of the cost of the work can be arrived at. My opinion is it will fall within $5,000,000."

Mr. SHANLY. I would say to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) that considerable examination and investigation of the place are still being made; but, of course, that comes within the purview of the Bill itself; the company do not ask any privileges before they carry out the work, and if the Government do not carry out the surveys the company must do so. The Bill does not ask for extraordinary powers or for any Government grant.

Mr. MILLS. I did not suppose it did involve anything of that kind, but I was interested in knowing how far information had been obtained, and whether the cost would be such as would stand in the way of its construction.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

SECOND READINGS—IN COMMITTEE.

Bill (No. 139) respecting tolls over the Dunnville Dam and Bridge connecting works constructed over the Grand River.—(Sir Hector Langevin.)

Bill (No. 140) respecting the improvement of the Harbor of Quebec.—(Mr. McLelan.)

ELECTORAL FRANCHISE.

Mr. THOMPSON moved the second reading of Bill (No. 138) respecting the Electoral Franchise and the Dominion Elections Act, 1874.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. THOMPSON moved to amend by substituting the following:—

The day to be fixed for the final revision of the voters lists under the Electoral Franchise Act shall be not less than five weeks after the publication by posting up of the lists, and the sitting for such final revision shall include, when practicable, at least three polling districts, and the place of the holding of the final revision shall be in one of the polling districts, the lists for which are to be so finally revised."

Mr. MILLS. I think it is desirable that we should know precisely what the hon. gentleman intends to accomplish by this section. If I rightly understand the amendment, it would enable the revising officer to hold the courts of different municipalities together. The original section provided that there should be a court of revision in each city, town, township, parish, incorporated village, or other known territorial division, except in the Province of Nova Scotia, where there are no such territorial divisions, and that in that Province there should be at least three polling divisions embraced in each electoral district for the purpose of holding the court. If I understand the hon. gentleman's provision rightly, its effect would be to put all the electoral districts in the Dominion in exactly the same position as the electoral districts in the Province of Nova Scotia. I think that will be extremely inconvenient. I know myself of newly settled townships which have only two polling divisions; and while it might be fairly convenient for the people of those two polling divisions to meet at one place for the purpose of the revision, it would be extremely inconvenient if one polling division had to be taken off an adjoining township for the purpose of the revision. In almost every municipality in Ontario there is a town hall, which is built at a convenient place of meeting, and I do not think it would be convenient to provide that where there are more than three polling divisions in a township, the revising officer should not hold more than one court.

Mr. THOMPSON. The present provision in the Act makes it compulsory in Nova Scotia to have at least three polling divisions in each district. The proposed amendment makes it merely directory; it says that each district shall include, when practicable, at least three polling divisions. It is not intended, where it is inconvenient or undesirable, that the revising officer shall include a polling division of another municipality. At the same time it does not seem to me reasonable that he should not do so if the polling division is in the near neighborhood. The clause, as worded, would apply to Nova Scotia and the other Provinces alike. I do not think the Act as it stands at present accomplishes the object the hon. gentleman thinks so desirable in Ontario. I do not think it confines each sitting of the court of revision to the polling divisions in the municipality. It only applies to cities, towns, townships, parishes or incorporated villages; and when you go outside of these——

Mr. DAVIES. Or other territorial divisions.

Mr. THOMPSON. What is that? It seems to me that it only requires the revising officer to sit in the municipality when revising the list of the municipality.

Mr. MILLS. He must sit within the limit of each municipality. Under the section which the hon. gentleman proposes to amend, it is impossible for the revising officer to hold less than one meeting of the court in each municipality. Every riding is composed of several of these municipalities, unless it be a portion of a city. So, there must be at least one sitting of the court of revision in each township, town or village. Under the amendment as proposed, the revising officer might put several municipalities together and hold a court for them, which would be far more inconvenient than the plan prescribed by the law as it stands.

Mr. DAVIES. The object the hon. gentleman has in view cannot surely be to alter the Act so that there will be one final revision held in each district.

Mr. THOMPSON. No.

Mr. DAVIES. I am afraid that is the effect of his amendment as it is drafted; and that would be absurd.

Mr. THOMPSON. The present Act makes no provision on that subject.

Mr. DAVIES. The Act says a court shall be held in each electoral district and in Prince Edward Island. There are five electoral districts. In the other Provinces, one must be held in each city, town, township, parish or other known territorial division.

Mr. SCRIVER. It would be unfortunate if there was not one court of revision held in each municipality. It would complicate matters if any combination was made of districts or different municipalities.

Mr. WELDON. Last year when the Bill was under discussion, it was understood the preliminary revision might be held in one court, to be held at the place the revising officer might fix, yet in the final revision the principle was set out that a court should be held in every municipality or parish, city, town, township, &c.

Mr. HACKETT. If we are to have only one revision of the lists in each provincial electoral district of Prince Edward Island, it would be very inconvenient for the people.

Mr. DAVIES. As the amendment now stands there will be only one final revision for each county. The whole list will be revised at the one place. This cannot be done, as people would have to travel fifty and sixty miles to get a hearing.

Mr. THOMPSON. The section, as printed in the Bill, is exactly the same as it is in the Statute-book, but if it is desirable there should be a provision to hold a court of revision in each city, town, township, parish, incorporated village or other territorial division, I have no objection to amend the Bill to that effect.

Mr. MILLS. Last year it was proposed at first there should be but one place for the final revision as for the preliminary revision of the lists, but after discussion it was decided there should be at least one place in each municipal division. There are townships in some parts of the Province which are very large, and where it would be very convenient to have more than one polling place. In my own county, in the township of Chatham, if there was but one court of revision, no matter where you would place it, people would have to travel twenty miles to reach it. It will be well, therefore, that the revising officer should have power to establish more than one place for holding a court in counties where there are over a certain number of polling divisions.

Mr. BOWELL. There is not more than one court for the final revision of the voters' lists in any one municipality of Ontario. The hon. gentleman advocates giving the power to the revising officer to hold one or two courts in the same municipality. I never heard of any hardship arising under the present system, and although in some of the townships there are six or seven polling sub-divisions.

Mr. LISTER. Under the Statute now, there is nothing compelling the revising officer to hold his final revision in more than one place in the constituency.

Mr. THOMPSON. What I said is that there is no obligation that he should sit in every municipality, town, township. The principal difficulty of the new section is the apparent necessity it would create for the sitting of a court of final revision in every polling district. I think that is very inconvenient and causes a great expense. In the case of a town or city, it is much more convenient for the electors as well as for the revising officer to sit in one place.

Mr. LISTER. That is perfectly reasonable. So far as the wording of the Act now is concerned, the revising officers have considered it their duty to hold a revision in every municipality. Of course some of the municipalities are large, and it would be more for the convenience of the electors if more than one court could be held, but I think the Act could be worked, in Ontario at any rate, by holding one court in each municipality. That has been the law hitherto, and there would be no greater hardship than there is in carrying out the provision of the provincial Statute.

Mr. HACKETT. With regard to the Province of Prince Edward Island, if we have only one court of revision for each district, it would by very inconvenient for the electors. I represent a county that has thirty townships, and five provincial districts. If you have only one court for each local district, the people will have to travel a great distance to attend the revision court, and I think it would be far better to have two courts of revision in each local division. Some years ago, we had a Registration Act in force in the Island containing a similar clause to this, and it was found most inconvenient. In fact, a great number of people were disfranchised, I may say, because they would not travel that great distance to attend the revision court.

Mr. DAVIES. All the members from Prince Edward Island are agreed upon this point. Last year, the Franchise Bill was hurried through a good deal.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. DAVIES. Well, notwithstanding the length of the discussions, it was hard for a little place like Prince Edward Island to get a hearing. My hon. friend (Mr. Hackett) is right in this, and I suggest to the Minister that he should substitute "at least two sittings in each provincial electoral division, except in the royalty of Charlottetown."

Mr. VAIL. You are bringing Nova Scotia now under the general clause, instead of leaving it as it was before?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes. Where there is a city, town or incorporated village there will be a sitting, but we continue the same provision as regards Nova Scotia, and extend it elsewhere, that there shall be at least three sub-divisions revised at each court.

Mr. KIRK. How about counties where there are no cities?

Mr. THOMPSON. There is a provision for them.

Mr. VAIL. The Minister of Justice will agree with me that our position in Nova Scotia is quite different from that of the other Provinces. Our counties are long and narrow, and in some cases the shire town with the court house is in one end of the county. The alteration was made at my suggestion last year, and I objected to the wording of the Act because it stated that not less than three polling districts should be revised at the same court. I thought then and I think still that it should not be more than three polling districts.

Mr. THOMPSON. In cities and towns such as Halifax and Windsor, it is much easier to revise at the court house than to sit all over the town.

Mr. VAIL. Some of the polling districts are sixty or seventy miles from Halifax, and, if those districts are long and narrow, the electors would have to go a long way. The hon. gentleman will understand the position of Digby county, which is almost two counties. Under this Act they may take five polling districts, but they shall not be less than three. I want them to feel bound not to take more than three districts.

Mr. KIRK. There is nothing binding the revising officer to hold more than one sitting in any county; it is entirely optional with him whether he holds more or not. At present, as far as Nova Scotia is concerned the Act provides that the sitting shall comprise not less than three polling districts, as the revising officer may think most convenient. Now, he may think it most convenient to hold but one sitting in each county. Take the county of Guysboro', for instance. If he holds but one, of course, he will hold it in the court house in the town of Guysboro', and to reach that town some of the electors would be bound to travel 80 miles. As the law now stands he may hold a sitting in a district comprising three polling districts, but he need not do that unless he likes. I think three is rather small to require in many counties; but I think it ought to be defined how many polling districts should be comprised. The revising officer should not have it it in his power to require electors to travel too far to the sittings.

Mr. THOMPSON. With regard to Nova Scotia the present Act is improved in two particulars. I agree with the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk), as regards the interpretation of the present law, that it is not imperative for the revising officer to sit in more places than one in the county. But the law is changed in that respect, and it is obligatory on the officer to include not less than three polling districts in every revision. It says now that he shall hold a revision in every city, village and township, so that it will be impossible for him, under this Act, to sit in the court house at Guysboro' and revise the lists for the whole country.

Mr. KIRK. I want to know what is a town or city, or village, under the law. We have no incorporated towns or villages in the county of Guysboro'. Then the question is, what is a township?

Mr. THOMPSON. In Guysboro' you have two polling districts, you have two municipalities.

Mr. KIRK. But it does not require the revising officer to sit in the municipalities at all.

Mr. THOMPSON. "And other territorial divisions," of course, it will be very inconvenient if he shall only hold two. But it is very difficult to frame a clause that will meet every case. We must trust to some extent to the will of the revising officer to consult the convenience of the electors.

Mr. VAIL. Would it not be well to say not more than three places? It is necessary to define it, to some extent. I think those words "not less than" should be changed. Take Digby Neck, in the county of Digby, there are five polling districts in a distance of 45 miles. Now, if the court is held in the central flat, some of the electors will have to travel 22 miles. Of course if it is in the centre of a thickly populated district there would be no difficulty. I think we might make it not more than five, to cover these very extensive rural districts.

Mr. TROW. I want to know from the Minister whether it is permissive or imperative on the part of the revising officer to hold his court in each municipality, in each town, city, township and incorporated village.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is imperative.

Mr TROW. Of course, I cannot speak for the other Provinces, but in Ontario there are large municipalities, on the average ten or twelve miles square. Usually the town hall is located about the centre of the municipality, and if it is imperative to hold the court there, I think it will answer the purpose in Ontario admirably.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am inclined to adopt the view of the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail). As far as my experience goes I think it would be more convenient if the number, so far as townships and villages are concerned, was put as the hon. member proposes, not more than three or not more than four. The revising officer in my riding has adopted that system; he is holding two courts of revision for each township, and it is certainly much more convenient for the electors to be able to attend close at home than all to assemble in the middle of a township, as suggested by the hon. member for South Perth. I think it is just a question of the balance of convenience. Is it not easier for the revising officer to hold sittings at either end of the township than to bring all the people together? There might be a number of contests and a number of questions raised which would prolong the court over one day. I am quite satisfied that it would be better in townships, although in towns, cities, and incorporated villages, one is quite enough. In townships in Ontario I think it would be better if it was put in such a way that he would be practically compelled to hold at least two sittings in each township. That is the course adopted by the judge in my riding, and I think it is a great convenience to the people.

Mr. MILLS. There are townships with not more than two or three polling divisions, and there are others with fifteen. The same rule should scarcely be applied to the two cases.

Mr. DAVIES. Nova Scotia was in a different position from the other Provinces when this law was passed. What I complain of is that we are placed in the same position as other Provinces, and what would be suitable for Ontario would not be suitable for the peculiar position of some of the Nova Scotia counties. I would prefer that the old clause remain. I am not complaining of the revising officer, because I believe in the final revision he intends to hold his court in districts comprising three divisions; but I am not sure we shall not always have the same revising officer and he may take a different view.

Mr. WALLACE (York). The clause proposed by the Minister of Justice is an admirable one. Many of our townships in Ontario have nine or ten polling sub-divisions or more. We have one county with nineteen polling sub-divisions, and this clause provides that the judge shall take three or four polling sub-divisions. That would be very convenient for the people. The old arrangement by which the lists for a large township were revised by the judge at one meeting was very inconvenient. In a township ten miles square the town is not always in the centre and persons had to travel a long distance there and back, and it must be remembered that the class desiring to be placed on the list will be largely those who do not own horses and waggons. The provision with respect to incorporated villages will also prove convenient.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. So far as my experience goes of townships in Ontario the Act will do very well as it stands. I do not live in one of the largest townships, but still it is large enough to have eleven polling sub-divisions. A court of revision has always been held in one place for the whole township and I never know any complaints made of inconvenience arising therefrom. If you break up the boundaries of municipalities confusion arises as to where the parties have to go in order to attend the court of revision.

Mr. WELDON. Does the hon. Minister propose to apply the Act to revision now going on?

Mr. THOMPSON. It will be convenient to have it apply where there is yet time.

Mr. VAIL. In looking at the advertisements of Judge Savary, who revises for our county, I see he has in one of the divisions included five polling sub-divisions. He agreed with me that he had a right to take in more.

On section 2,

Mr. McCARTHY. Perhaps it will be convenient to discuss the amendments of which I have given notice, in order that hon. gentlemen may have an opportunity of considering them. With regard to the first of these amendments, the first object which I have in view is to consolidate, as it were, the provisions which were separated in the Bill as to cities, towns and townships. That, of course, is merely a matter of form and not of substance. There are some other provisions, however, which, if the committee will bear with me, I will point out briefly, and that I think are matters of some importance. One is that the period of time which at present is a year prior to the first of last January, and after this year would be a year prior to any succeeding January, should be a year prior to the time the person makes application. For instance, if he is an occupant at present he must have been an occupant for at least the previous year, that is, he does not actually become entitled to vote until August of this year, so that practically he has been an occupant, or an income earner, or whatever other class it is as to which it applies, for 19 months before he becomes entitled to vote, and he remains entitled to vote, before another list is made out, for another year practically. Now I propose to change that, which I think is a hard feature of the law, by providing that this term of 12 months, which I do not alter, should be prior to the time of making the application to be placed on the list. Then with regard to the income voter, a good deal of difficulty has been found to arise in this way. According to the law as it stands a person is only entitled to vote if he has been a resident in a particular electoral division for the 12 months—whether it be before the 1st of January, or before the time of making application, as I propose. Now, that works very great hardship, I find, on experience. Take the case of a bank clerk, or a Methodist clergyman who are continually changing in the course of their duties. They may have lost their vote in one place and may not be a year resident in the particular electoral district. I propose to change that by saying that if any person is entitled by his earnings, if he has earned the income required, $300, during the preceding year, and has been resident in Canada one year he shall be entitled to be registered on the list. Those are the important clauses. The clauses have been put together and apparently made more simple, and if the committee is willing to deal with them at all, I think it would be well to take them up seriatim and see whether they are or are not in practical amendment to the law as it stands. The first, as to the age, is, of course, the same; the second is the same; the ownership clause is also the same; the tenancy clause is changed in the way I speak of, as to the period of residence required, but I think only in that respect. The occupation clause is changed in an important way, though the intent of it, I think, is not affected. I am told that in some parts of the country the language used in the occupation clause has led to considerable hardships. It has been contended, and I think with some reason, that it limits the kind of occupants to those holding under the particular title mentioned The owner is provided for, but if a man is not an owner, is not a tenant, but is still in occupation of real property and is enjoying its rents and profits, he should be entitled to vote. One of my hon. friends from British Columbia drew attention to the fact that there people holding under the Crown did not hold by occupation, under the words of the Statute, and that the revising officers would claim that they were not entitled to be registered as voters. This clause with regard to income allows in townships the earnings to be in money or money's worth, but in cities or towns that is not permitted, so that this ridiculous result has, to my certain knowledge occurred. A man is boarding say with his employer, and so boarding he may be getting $20 a month and his board. He is not entitled under that class to be registered. Another man is getting $26 a month and boarding himself and, although he is really getting less he is entitled to be put on the list. I do not see why this provision as to money's worth should not apply as well in cities and towns as in townships. Then with regard to the farmers' sons and the owners' sons' clause, this difficulty has occurred. Sometimes, although a man may be farming and his sons may be living with him, they may be living immediately off the farm, and in that way the sons are not entitled to vote. Now the object, I take it, is to give both the farmers' son and the owners' son a vote, provided they are living with the father and provided he is the owner or farmer, and I would suggest an amendment in that way. I would suggest, therefore, that the amendments should be dealt with one by one if they meet with the approval of the committee.

Mr. TROW. In clause 2 I would suggest that in the 21st line the word "shall" be inserted instead of the words "may if he thinks fit"—making it imperative.

Mr. WELDON. In the first line of the clause I should say that instead of the word "person" being used—allowing any person not on the list at all to make application, he should be a "voter."

Mr. THOMPSON moved that in the 21st line the words "may if he thinks fit" be struck out and the word "shall" inserted.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 3,

Mr. LISTER. No appeal would be necessary to correct, I suppose, under this clause.

Mr. RYKERT. This is the same as the provision in the local Act,

Mr. LISTER. There is an appeal for corrections in the local Act. Suppose that a person is on the list for the wrong property, and the revising officer is satisfied there ought to be a correction, should he not be empowered to make the correction without any appeal? I think that ought to be made clear.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I would like to submit another class of cases, that is, the case of those who may be possessed of different parcels of property, anyone of which would entitle them to vote. A voter may have parted with the particular piece of property on which he qualifies, and it might be held that he was therefore entitled to vote. Would this clause entitle him to have such an alteration made as to entitle him to vote? If persons in that position were deprived of their votes, there would be great injury done, especially in cities.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think the latter part of the clause makes that plain.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I would like to ask this further question, whether the change will require to be made before the list is finally revised? For instance, a man who is possessed of a number of pieces of property does not choose to qualify on all of them, because the description on the printed list would necessarily be long; but he parts with the particular piece of property mentioned on the list. Will this clause deprive him of the right to vote?

Mr. THOMPSON. No, I take it if he has any qualification at all under the Act up to the time of the final revision, he must go on the list, and having gone on the list, he is a voter.

Mr. LISTER. Without appeal? Assuming that his name is on the list, and it turns out on the final revision that the description is incorrect, then the revising officer should correct the description, so that the name should remain on the list?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

On section 4,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This clause leaves it altogether at the option of the revising officer to strike out the name of any person if he thinks that person is deceased. This is giving him a rather wide power. He is not obliged even to receive evidence as to the decease, but may strike the name off on a mere report.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). He might strike a score of names out of persons who were represented to him as dead and who are alive. This is giving the officer more power than we should give him. He might be acting in perfectly good faith, and yet wrongly strike off a name, and when the person comes up to vote he will be told his name is struck off the list.

Mr. WALLACE (York). We should be careful about striking off names. There may be several of the same name, and if the officer strikes off, say "John Smith" as deceased the voter whose name was on the list may be another John Smith altogether, and yet he will be deprived of his vote.

Mr. THOMPSON. We will drop that clause.

On section 5,

Mr. WELDON. We had considerable discussion last year on this point, and the First Minister consented to allow the price of 50 cents per list to stand. It was generally supposed that rate would cover the cost of printing.

Mr. THOMPSON. Last year's Act provides that the revising officer and the clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall supply copies of the voters' list at a price sufficient to defray the cost of printing, not to exceed 50 cents. This has been complained of because it is uncertain how many copies of the list must be prepared, and it is not reasonable, should the demand exceed the number printed, that the revising officer should have to copy these lists at 50 cents a piece.

Mr. MULOCK. We should provide, then, for a certain number of printed copies; and if the demand exceed that number, fix on some reasonable rate. If left in this way, the revising officer may charge almost any rate he may choose.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is not intended to print the lists, except for people who may require them in that way. This is the list spoken of in this section. It is the list at the final revision.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That will have to be printed?

Mr. McCARTHY. No; there is no object in printing that.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Oh, yes.

Mr. McCARTHY. What for? You print your first lists and distribute them. You must remember that after this year, there is no first and second court, there is only one court, which is practically the final court. It is very important for the committee to consider whether it is wise to have the expense of printing the list after all the work is done.

Mr. MILLS. Certainly, that is the time.

Mr. McCARTHY. The only object is to enable the candidate to obtain the lists at a cheap rate.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Is not that very important?

Mr. McCARTHY. No doubt it is for the candidates, but I do not think the country should be asked to pay for that.

Mr. MILLS. This was discussed last year. The Minister had a provision in the Bill very much like this. I proposed an amendment which the First Minister accepted, that the list should not cost more than 50 cents. There is no difficulty in getting a large number of lists printed, and it is very much easier to provide a sufficient number in the first instance than to impose upon the party the burden of employing the revising officer or his clerk to make a written list, and to make him pay these extraordinary charges for it. The hon. gentleman says there is no object in publishing the list as finally revised.

Mr. McCARTHY. There is no provision for publishing the list as finally revised.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. It is the duty of the revising officer to make provision for the publication of the list as finally revised.

Mr. McCARTHY. No.

Mr. MILLS. I say that is the provision, and the hon. gentleman is proposing that there shall be no necessity for this publication. That is practically the provision of the 11th clause. I do not agree with that. Scores of names may be added to or erased from the list, and how are we to know whether the copy handed to us is correct or not? After all the corrections are made, it is necessary in the public interest that the list should be published and should be in the hands of the candidates and their agents in the various polling divisions, and the lists printed should be sufficient for that purpose. If the expense is considerable, that is the misfortune of the system, but it is of far more consequence to the public that there should be no room for fraud connected with this matter than that the country should be put to the additional expense of publishing the list as finally revised and corrected. I think it is of great consequence that the whole provision of the law, as we settled it here last year after long discussion, should remain, and that any party should be entitled to obtain a copy of the list on payment of 50 cents.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I agree with what has been stated. This Act is expensive no doubt. Who is to blame for that we do not go into now. But it is important that people should know, and should have their rights. I do not know that there is any bounden duty on the part of certain individuals to be put to the expense of operating an Act passed by this Parliament. If it is in the public interest, as we suppose, to pass this, and if it is necessary in the public interest that information in reference to the lists should be given, clearly then it is the country upon which the expenses should come. I wish to point out to the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) that this clause not only applies to the final lists, but it applies to the preliminary lists; it applies to all lists.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think my hon. friends have both lost sight of this, that after this year there are no two lists, there are no two courts. Next year and in subsequent years, there is to be one publication and one court. If the hon. gentleman will look at section 29, and section 30 of the Bill as it stands, he will see that the list as finally revised is to be sent to the clerk of the Crown in Chancery. You do not publish it again, but section 31 enables any person to obtain a copy on payment of not more than 50 cents. The question is, if there is a very considerable change in the list at the sitting of the court by the elimination and addition of names, is it necessary to put the country to the expense of printing the list all over again because perhaps half a dozen copies will be required. That is not done in Ontario. The lists are printed after they come from the court of revision, but they are never printed after the appeal is made to the county judge. The corrections are written on, and are sent to the clerk of the peace, and we all know that, after the printed list is distributed, we have to send to the clerk of the peace and get the corrections that are made. That is not a very serious matter for any person, but to entail the expense of printing the whole list just because at the coming election the candidates may want it seems to me extraordinary.

Mr. LISTER. It is contemplated that the list shall not be printed at all?

Mr. McCARTHY. No, the Bill remains as it is in that respect. It will be the duty of the revising officer to make out and print his list and distribute it, as is done by the municipal councils under the local system, to hold one court and determine and settle, at that court the list finally. But the question now is whether, after that is all done, because there may be some few amendments made, there is to be the expense of going over all this and printing it again, and I do not think any of us, when we come to consider it, would contend for that, because all we want is to keep the original list and make the corrections on it.

Mr. LISTER. The list will be published by the revising officers, a court of revision will be held and alterations made. Suppose the revising officer says that, for copies of this list which he has had published, and on which the only writing will be the alterations, he will charge 10 cents a hundred names, names which have been printed and have not cost 2 cents a hundred. As to the local lists, every member gets a considerable number, I think a dozen, and they are furnished to the different officers throughout the county, so that, when the elections come on, there is no difficulty in getting an abundance of lists.

Mr. McCARTHY. This can be changed in that respect.

Mr. LISTER. Yes, so that we could have a greater number of the printed lists, and then we could get the information at the clerk's office.

Mr. McCARTHY. We can amend this so that any person could inspect the list and be at liberty to correct it himself, or to apply for it and pay for it.

Mr. WELDON. Does not the 24th section provide that it shall be printed?

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes, that is printed.

Mr. LISTER. It is of no consequence except for the returning officers whether the list is attested by the revising officer or not. Everyone can satisfy himself as to the correctness of his list. The only thing is to get enough at a reasonable cost.

Mr. WALLACE (York). The Act now provides that the list shall be printed.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understood from the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) that in years subsequent to this the list will be printed, and the exception he took to my statement was that it would necessitate the printing of a second list after it is corrected, that is not the point I raised.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is the point I raised.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says as to that. But, under the provision of the clause as I read it, the first list which he prints should be made available.

Mr. McCARTHY. So it is. This does not affect it at all.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). "The revising officer and the clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall supply copies of any list of voters prepared under any provision of this Act." What does that mean?

Mr. McCARTHY. This is substituted. You must read the whole section of the next page. "Section 30 of the said Act is hereby repealed, and section 36 is hereby repealed and the following is substituted therefor." If he will look at those two sections he will find that they apply merely to the list after the final revision.

Mr. LISTER. In the list we are going to have hereafter there will be a great many alterations, because the local lists are prepared on that year's assessment roll.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). It is quite evident that in making a comparison between the printed list that is provided to be furnished under this Act and the local list, they will not agree very closely, because the local list printed by the municipal authorities is based upon the assessment for the year for which the list is published, while in this instance the list is largely based upon the final list of the year preceding, and necessarily there must be a great many changes. If there is no provision for the printing of the final list, it will be a very slipshod list indeed, and will not possess much value. We can make the comparison this way: Suppose we take the list printed by the municipal authorities for the year preceding and compare it with the list put in our possession; the changes in the two will be no more numerous than ought to exist betwen the list that the revising officer will publish in the first place, and the list that will finally be established as the complete voters' list. That, I am aware in some rural constituencies of Ontario, will represent something like a thousand names. If that is the case, clearly one-fourth, or one-fifth, of the entire number of names on the list, will be put on after that list is printed each year. If there is any value in a printed list, it equally applies as much to one printed after it is finally adopted, as it would to the list as it passes from the hands of the revising officer primarily.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). We are here repealing a certain section and putting in another. Is the object of this change simply to provide against the power of any individual to demand a copy at the price of 50 cents, and to substitute the words: "A reasonable amount therefor?"

Mr. McCARTHY. There are two clauses which are repealed, and this is substituted.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is the object of the substitution to wipe out the rate which, under the Statute as it now stands, is provided for in section 16, and to substitute therefor the words "a reasonable sum," as in the amendment? Is that the only object?

Mr. McCARTHY. The only object. The revising officers say that they will be obliged to have a supply of printed lists on hand after their final revision for 50 cents, although they will not be demanded to any extent. If a person demands a copy of all these lists, they will have to write them all out for 50 cents, or else get them printed, consequently in order to meet an anticipated want, they will have to go to the expense of printing. I would say that the lists should be open to inspection to any person who might desire to see them.

Mr. MULOCK. It is to be borne in mind that in the final revision under this Act there are far more changes than in a revision under the existing law in Ontario, because the revising officer cannot make up the list with the same accuracy that the ordinary assessors do. I would suggest whether this should not be done after the changes are printed; so far as the striking out is concerned, it is not a great labor for the revising officer or his clerk to make the changes in the already printed list by striking out the names. I understand that to-day instructions have been given to the revising officers that, instead of reprinting the whole list, they shall simply print an allonge which shall contain the added names. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. They are added by the revising officer at present, and not written. Now, why not have the changes in writing, printed—I mean where there are additions, and have those changes distributed? That would not be any great expense. Supposing there are a couple of hundred names added in this way, the cost would be slight. The corrections consist in striking out and adding to, and the clerk can easily strike out of the stock on hand the names that have been struck out in the original list by the revising officer. Then let the added names be printed and let them be distributed, as under section 24 as an addenda.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would like to ask if it be the amount that is to be paid that is to be settled, and if this new clause is to refer entirely to the final list why does not section 38, that we propose to amend, read like the section we are repealing, which would be this:

> The revising officer and the clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall supply copies of such lists to any person or persons applying for the same, and paying a reasonable sum therefor.

But we depart from that language altogether. That has reference to the final list, but the section we are putting in does not confine itself to the final list, but it is entirely of different wording:

> The revising officer and the clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall supply copies of the list of voters prepared under any provision of this Act.

Now if it is only to do away with that 50 cents, why is not the language of the Statute followed?

Mr. THOMPSON. I would suggest that the clause be amended so as to read "shall send copies finally revised and shall at all reasonable times allow any person to inspect the list of voters."

Mr. MILLS. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will adopt the suggestion made by some hon. gentlemen on that side and empower the revising officer to publish an addenda giving a list of the names struck off and those added to the list. If he printed that as a supplement and provided the same means of distribution, it would in a great measure supersede the necessity for the reprinting of the list and get rid of the difficulty we have been discussing.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is something apart from this clause, however, and it can be settled afterwards.

Section 5 struck out.

On section 6,

Mr. THOMPSON. There are some lines in this section which are not necessary as they do not properly conform to the schedule. I would therefore move that all the words from "or" in line twenty-three to the word "provided" in line twenty-seven, inclusive, be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. McCARTHY. The assessors in the Province of Ontario—I do not know how it is in the other Provinces—do their work in the spring, so that it is pretty well done by the 1st June or perhaps a little earlier. I do not see why the revising officer, instead of commencing on the 1st of January, should not avail himself of the work of the assessor by beginning somewhat later in the year, say the 1st June or the 1st of July. If the assessment is made out and the assessor has collected his information, it will greatly facilitate the work of the revising officer and those interested in having the list made complete, as they have only to go up to the list and find out for themselves.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). You do not mean that this shall apply to this year.

Mr. McCARTHY. No, say beginning in 1887.

Mr. DAWSON. In the large district which I represent, it is very difficult to get ready at the dates mentioned in the Act. The 1st of June for the preliminary revision of the list of voters should be made, I think, the 1st of July, and the final revision, should be extended to the 1st of October this year, because it is impossible in a district of such immense extent to get through with the work in the time mentioned. To make a separate provision for Algoma is quite in keeping with previous legislation, as it was done in the Act of 1874, in several particulars. I make the suggestion to the hon. the Minister of Justice.

Mr. WELDON. I will suggest that, in addition to the particulars provided for here, farmers' sons shall be required to give the place of residence and the name of the parent, as I think that it is important for identification.

Mr. THOMPSON. It would make a good deal of complication, as you would have to insert both parents' names. We have now taken a good deal of pains to establish identification.

Mr. WELDON. Yes, generally speaking, I think it is quite an improvement on the old list, but it is just a question whether there is sufficient identification of the farmer's son.

Mr. THOMPSON. There is the age, the post office address, the nature of the qualification and the residence. He must, of course, reside with his father and on the farm, and when he gives those other particulars he virtually gives his father's name and his place of residence.

Mr. WELDON. The proviso in the 33rd section would necessarily disappear in its present form, because it says that the assessment rolls shall be evidence of value. I think there ought to be some provision that the assessment rolls of any year shall be primâ facie evidence of value. I do not know whether the interpretation clause is sufficient, or whether that provision could not be made in this section.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will look into that.

Mr. LISTER. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for North Simcoe is a most important one, so far as Ontario is concerned. It is quite impossible for the revising officer to get the information as to who ought to be on the voters' list unless he resorts to the assessment roll; and under the Act at present, it must be the assessment roll of the preceding year. If the suggestion made were adopted, namely, that the time for preparing the list should be postponed until the 1st of July, then the revising officer's first list would be almost absolutely perfect, because the assessors do their work with a good deal of care and accuracy. But if the list is prepared, not on the last assessment roll, but on that of the year before, the list will be necessarily inaccurate, and will involve a great many appeals. I do not see any valid reason why this suggestion should not be adopted.

Mr. THOMPSON. You would lose as much as you would gain. You would have a much more perfect list, but it would not be completed until the end of the year, and therefore would be no good for that year; and if it were used for an election in the following year it would be open to the same objection. If the list were prepared on the 1st of July, we should have to give until the end of December for its revision.

Mr. LISTER. When there is no preliminary list. The proceedings already taken on this present list will not recur, and I think the whole list might be finally revised in six weeks. Say you fix the 1st of June for the preparation of the list; by the 1st of August there ought to be no difficulty in having it completed. I know that with us it is all done in two months.

Mr. McCARTHY. That, I think meets the case. If the revising officer commenced on the 1st of June, he would have a month to get his list out, then five weeks for the publication of it, which would bring him to the month of August; give him the month of August for the work of revision, and on the 1st of September the list would be completed.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. What is the object of beginning on the 1st June?

Mr. McCARTHY. Beginning on the 1st of January the revising officer has to take the list of the previous years, which is stale, whereas if he commenced on the 1st of June, he would act on information obtained in the preceding month.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. But in the Province of Quebec the revision of the assessment roll ends, I think, in the month of September or October, so that we would be in the same difficulty.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that was the objection raised last year, and the time was changed, I think, from the 1st of October to the 1st of January for that reason.

Mr. MILLS. It would be a great advantage if the period for the preparation of the list were adjusted in each Province to the convenience of that Province. I am sure that in the Province of Ontario, June, July and August would be far the most convenient season of the year for the preparation of the list. It is after the assessment has been made, after the court of revision has sat, and when there are facilities for correcting the list by the assessment roll. In Quebec the assessment is made at a different season of the year. I do not suppose there is any special reason why one Province should adopt a particular time because it is convenient in another Province. That is a good reason for adopting a different period in each Province to suit its convenience. There is another reason for this. At the period when the members would be best able to assist their constituents in the preparation of the list they are kept here discharging their public duties; that is a very serious objection to the existing arrangement. The hon. gentleman proposes to dispense with the necessity of obtaining copies of the assessment roll. I do not know how it may be in the Maritime Provinces. But in the Province of Ontario change in the ownership of property is so frequent that unless the assessment roll is consulted every year, it would be impossible to have a correct voters' list. Perhaps five or six per cent. of the owners of property dispose of their property annually. I venture to say that in a list prepared two years ago ten per cent. of the persons do not qualify on the same property at the present time.

Mr. MULOCK. This section is rather a change in the law, than an adherance to the existing law. It is proposed to require the revision after the 1st of January. Such is not the law now. That provision was made merely for the commencement, when the revising officer had to make up an original list from nothing; and the preliminary list, which has been made up once for all, had to be published on or before the 1st of May, that is, the corrected preliminary list. That list is the one which corresponds with the list he will proceed to prepare next year. He could not hold his court until five weeks after the 1st of May. Now, if you are going to proceed according to the spirit of this Act, you should say that the preliminary lists, which he has now to prepare, shall be published on or before the 1st of May, and that he shall have five weeks, at least, after that to hold his court. The real question now is whether you require that preliminary list to be published on the 1st of May or the 1st of June.

Mr. McCARTHY. My hon. friend exaggerates the case a little. By section 24, it is the 1st of June.

Mr. MULOCK. The 1st of January here is not at all applicable.

Mr. McCARTHY. Not at all.

Mr. TEMPLE. What may suit one Province may not suit another. This may suit Ontario very well, but I do not think it will suit New Brunswick at all. The revising lists there are made in October; that is the assessment rolls are made and handed to the city clerk, and posted up through the different parishes on or about the 20th October. If you commenced in June, you would be no better off than if you commenced in January.

Mr. WELDON. Our assessments are made in March.

Mr. TEMPLE. Not the revised assessments.

Mr. WELDON. That has nothing to do with the assessments. The assessments are made in March, April or May, and we are relatively in the same position in January as the Secretary of State says the Quebec lists will be the 1st of June. What the hon. member for York (Mr. Temple) means is the revisers' lists, which are not the assessment rolls. The assessment is the basis of voters' lists, and the revising officers make up the register of voters from the assessment rolls. The revised list would only take, in New Brunswick, men of $400 income, because that is the provincial limit, and you have to go to the assessment rolls to find out the men who are worth $300 income. The 1st of July would suit us.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There may no doubt be a saving to the general public if we save getting a certified copy of the assessment roll, but will not that entail expenditure on individuals that otherwise would be defrayed by the Government? And should not the Government defray the expense if it is in the public interest we should have these lists? The revising officer is not instructed to take the assessmont roll, but simply instructed to get such information as he can obtain to proceed to revise the lists. He, therefore, will not incur the expense of getting the assessment roll, it being no part of his duty to get the assessment roll; he will not incur the expense of getting it, and, if he should be a salaried officer, what is there to lead him to make particular enquiries as to who ought and who ought not to go on. He will do nothing at all, and the prospective candidates or others interested will have to find all this information for him at a great expense themselves. The Statute as it stands requires that he shall take the assessment roll that is made every year, so that it is imperative on him to note the alterations and changes that have taken place; and after that is done, if there are parties who believe that some names are left out they should supply the information. If he is not obliged to take the assessment roll, private individuals will have to pay the expense of furnishing him with information.

Mr. McCARTHY. I cannot at all agree with the hon. gentleman in what he has just said. I believe the assessment rolls do not, year by year, vary more at all events than four or five per cent., as the hon. member for Bothwell has stated.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Oh, yes, they do in towns a great deal more.

Mr. McCARTHY. Perhaps in towns, but certainly not in the rural parts. Now you put a revising officer in the country to the expense of getting those enormous long lists for the few names, which, somebody is sure to take care, will be put on. Somebody is always willing to look after the revised lists. If you make it compulsory on the officer to get the lists, he must go to the clerk of the municipality, and the clerk who is not obliged to furnish them, will charge him a heavy rate, and all this for the sake of a few changes, perhaps 15 to 20 in a list of 500 or 600 names. He must also get copies of the voters' list. I think that the expense would be saved and I am satisfied that there is no loss in having the matter in this way. The assessment rolls are not by any means now the full and complete thing that they were formerly. For instance, in the city of Toronto where perhaps they have the most experienced assessors in the country, paid officials of long standing, they have income voters there under the Local Act as there are under this Act, and this spring, when these lists were published, there was not a single income voter's name recorded, not one that was not assessed or who had to pay a tax, as there are many who are entitled to vote under the Local Act. I am told that 3,000 names had to be added, and, but for the fact of the trouble taken to correct those voters' lists in that city, they would not have been added at all, but the county judges very fairly took the statements furnished for this list as evidence to enable them to put those names on the local list. So that the assessment lists do not exhaust the matter, and it is making the revising officer pay a considerable sum for comparatively little value. I would go with the hon. member if he would amend the clause so as to say that it shall be the duty of the revising officer—he could do it by his clerk—to examine that list and correct by that list.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That will answer the purpose. I do not want the expense to be incurred if it is not necessary, but it should be made imperative that the revising officer shall go to the assessment roll and make such changes as are necessary by comparison with that, by leaving off names that are on the voters' list and do not appear on the assessment roll and placing on the list such names as are not there which do appear on the assessment roll.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There is a presumption that the revising officers will obtain such information without his being absolutely required to get a certified copy at the immense cost which it involves. The law says that the revising officer must send a printed copy to each member of the council, to the treasurer of the council, and to the clerk of the council, and it is to be presumed that these persons will give the necessary information, otherwise there is no reason for their being supplied with the list, and the revising officer might go to the secretary's office to see the roll. It is to be supposed, however, that these persons will supply the information without the necessity of paying for a certified copy of the assessment roll.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). That supposition may be correct in a sense, but in another sense it is not. If the clerk and treasurer and councillors of a municipality are all Liberals or all Tories, they will supply the information on one side only, whereas, if the revising officer was compelled to examine the roll himself, he would be able to obtain the information impartially. I quite agree with my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson) that the assessment roll ought still to be the basis. I do not say that the country ought to go to the enormous expense of getting certified copies of the assessment roll each year, but it should be the duty of the revising officer to take off, in the best way he can from the assessment roll for the current year, the latest information on the subject. If the Bill is left as it is now, it will be a great hardship on candidates. The change proposed to be made is on account of the enormous expense, but it will simply shift the burden of the expense from the shoulders of the people to the shoulders of members of Parliament.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They always used to take that trouble before.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). They never had to take the trouble before, there was no necessity for it, the local authorities made out the list, and it cost us nothing.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I mean it was always necessary to compare the list given to candidates or canvassers with the list of the treasurer in order to see that names were not omitted. It is only the work of comparing one list with another. The hon. gentleman mistakes if he believes I think that the assessment roll may not be a source of information. It will always be that, and I say that, without compelling the revising officer to get a certified copy of the assessment roll, it will still, by the Act itself, be the ground or basis of the information on which the revising barrister will necessarily act.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). How will it, unless you compel him to make it the basis.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not object to that.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). That is all we want. We are not insisting that he shall year by year get a certified copy of it, because we admit that the expense is very great. One thing or the other should exist, either the revising officer should get a certified copy, or he should be compelled to examine the assessment roll and get his information therefrom. If the hon. gentleman agrees to that, I think on the whole that would be the best and least expensive way of doing it.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think it is shifting the expense. By requiring the assessment roll to be got every year, you make the revising officer get a lot of information he already has and pay for it, whereas the object is to get only the additional information. I would suggest the following amendment:—

On, or as soon as possible after, the 1st June in each year after the year 1887, the revising officer, being duly sworn as hereinbefore provided, shall cause the voters' list of the preceding year to be compared with the assessment roll, and shall, with such information as he can obtain, proceed.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Will that require him to accept the names on the assessment roll as he finds them? That roll should be made primâ facie evidence as it was before. Then the appeal lay with those who objected.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Perhaps the Minister will make it imperative on him to make the changes from the assessment roll.

Mr. MILLS. We had some discussion on this last year, and also on this point, how far you will erase names from the voters' list that has already been prepared where you find it varies from the assessment roll. For instance, John Brown is on the list as owner of a certain piece of property, and James Smith as tenant of another piece of property. The assessment roll shows John Brown has sold out his interest, and that another man is owner, and that James Smith is no longer a tenant, but somebody else is. Now, will it be the duty of the revising officer to strike out those names and to insert the others without any special application from any party?

Mr. THOMPSON. It strikes me, to be logical at all, he must make all changes of which the assessment roll gives information.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is what we want.

Mr. McCARTHY. You cannot reach that by words; you must leave that to the judge. We might make a separate clause about assessment rolls, and say to what extent assessment rolls are to be deemed primâ facie evidence, and instead of tacking that on to this clause as before, deal with it under the head of evidence, and say that the assessment roll should be primâ facie evidence, both as to value and qualification. Then it would be the duty of the judge, finding that on the assessment roll a property was assessed to A last year, and is this year assessed to B, to change the names.

Mr. AUGER. How is he to examine the assessment roll unless he gets a copy of it?

Mr. McCARTHY. He can send his clerk to the office.

Mr. AUGER. He will not examine it himself, then. I know it would be too costly to get a certified copy of the roll every year, but——

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Does the hon. gentleman know how much it has cost this year?

Mr. AUGER. I do not know how much it has cost this year, but I know it is very costly. But why not get a copy of the changes every year? Every year in each municipality the roll is revised. Sometimes there are many changes, and sometimes but few. Now, it would not cost much to get a certified copy of the changes from the secretary-treasurer. He would have the whole roll, and that extract of changes would be enough. It would cost less than for the judge to send his secretary or his clerk from municipality to municipality.

Mr. FAIRBANK. Will the Minister inform us what these copies of the assessment roll do cost? If it is considered cheaper to send the revising officer round to the various municipalities and let him copy them there, I fancy there can be no objection to it, but I think the law should be clear in making it his duty to correct the list by the assessment roll.

Mr. THOMPSON. I agree with the hon. member for Simcoe that it would be better to deal with this question in a separate section, and we will have one prepared before we leave that subject. I do not think that it is necessary that the revising officer should send his clerk to the different municipalities. I know in some of the other Provinces than Ontario, the assessment rolls in each county are filed with the clerk of the peace.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). In Ontario they are filed with the county clerk for the purpose of equalising the assessment; it is the finally revised assessment roll which does not reach him.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex).

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When does that go?

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). It goes before the 1st of June in the year succeeding. For instance, by the 1st of June next, he must have had finally completed the assessment of 1885.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think the Minister has accomplished all that is necessary in the amendment he proposed with the addition of one or two words, without making a new clause, simply adding "he shall compare with the assessment roll and make such changes."

Mr. THOMPSON. I move that the clause be amended as follows:—

The revising officer shall cause the voters' list of the preceding year to be compared with the last assessment roll, and shall, with the information he can obtain from that or any other source, proceed to revise the list of voters then in force under this Act.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move that the following be added at the end of the clause: "Such assessment rolls as are offered shall be primâ facie evidence."

Amendment agreed to.

On section 7,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It will be a mistake to insert 400 instead of 200.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move that 300 be inserted.

Mr. AUGER. If you adopt this schedule at the end of the Bill you cannot poll 300 votes a day at a polling place.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Why is this change proposed?

Mr. McCARTHY. One of the great difficulties is that names are added after the final revision, and if 200 are added, the whole system is upset. There must be some elasticity provided. I think it is a mistake to suppose that you cannot poll more than 200 votes. I saw a letter from the revising officer at Winnipeg, and he says that they are in the habit of polling 600 votes in one polling division, and there are so many votes that at 200 votes each they would have about fifty polling divisions in the city.

Mr. WELDON. It does not oblige them to divide again until it reaches 301.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes; the idea is to go under 200 as far as practicable when the polling sub-division is established; but we do not allow any margin at all if we say that as soon as it reaches 200 we shall divide it again. Now, we propose simply to allow a margin of 100, and when it reaches 300 it is to be cut down again. At present, if you reach 201 you divide again.

Mr. TEMPLE. I think it should remain at 300. I have been at polls frequently where 600 votes were put in by ballot in polling hours.

Mr. WELDON. That was a different system from this.

Mr. TEMPLE. I have taken 300 under this system.

Mr. SPROULE. It is very rare that 200 votes will be polled where there are only 200 on the list, because there are so many names duplicated, and so on.

Mr. DAWSON. I have known instances where it was impossible to poll 200, by a system of swearing every man who came up.

On section 8,

Mr. THOMPSON. This section was drawn to correspond with the 1st section as regards the number of polling districts in one division, but now it appears to me that we may repeal section 48. I, therefore, move that section 8 be struck out and the following inserted in lieu thereof:—"Section 48 of the said Act is hereby repealed."

Amendment agreed to.

On section 10,

Mr. THOMPSON. I have a paper here from the revising officer which will explain the difficulty in Algoma. He states that the other revising officer for Algoma requested him to take in addition Algoma West, but it appears that he would have to leave the district and travel a considerable distance in order to take the oath of office, and it was impossible that he could do it and return in time for his work. This is simply to remedy the difficulty which existed in one place of the territorial limits having been changed after the revising officer took the oath of office.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does this apply only to Algoma?

Mr. DAWSON. I am glad to notice that Algoma is getting some attention. I merely rise to suggest that the time for the final closing of the list should be extended; I think communications have already been sent to the Government about it. It is made the 1st of August; but I think for Algoma it ought to be the 1st of October, because the district is so extensive that it is really impossible to do it within the time prescribed.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. member for Brant asked me if this section applied only to Algoma. The provision about the oath is only required for Algoma.

On section 11,

Mr. HACKETT. I think the law is imperfect in this regard, that it gives power to nobody but the judge to adjourn the court of revision. I think a clause should be inserted providing that in case of the absence of the revising officer through illness or death or other cause, the clerk should have power to adjourn the court.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P. E. I.) I would call the attention of the Minister to the amendment that was made to the first clause, providing that two courts of revision should be held in each electoral district in Prince Edward Island except Charlottetown and Royalty. The same exception should apply to Georgetown and Royalty, which is a very small electoral district, and does not require more than one court of revision.

Mr. WELDON. This section 11 practically does away with the printing of the final list of this year, which is the basis of all the future lists.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Act provides that the final revision this year shall be printed, but it does not make that provision with respect to future years, and the object of this section is to make it unnecessary likewise for this year. If there is no objection, this clause may stand.

On schedule A,

Mr. THOMPSON. A question arises as to whether it is desirable to have the column for age. It was inserted with the view of facilitating identification, but it has been suggested to me that there is some difficulty in ascertaining the age.

Mr. McCARTHY. It will lead to trouble of all kinds.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move that it be struck out.

Mr. DAVIES. The age, surely, is a very good guide to identification. In my constituency there are 35 or 36 people on the list of the same name, and the age is a guide by which to distinguish them.

Mr. THOMPSON. It might be worth while to put the age in a poll book, but not on the list.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DAVIES. I would suggest that in the case of a farmer's son and an owner's son, the name of the farmer and the owner should be stated. In Ontario the country is divided into concessions, and the lot occupied by the voter is a means of identification, but it is not so in the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. THOMPSON. In the last column we have required in the case of a farmer's or owner's son that he shall state his place of residence and his post office address, but it would not do to give his father's name, because some times he may qualify in the name of his mother.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Then say in the name of the parent. In the case of landowner's sons this should be stated, because in many localities you will find twenty or thirty of the same name.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will add to the description of the son of an owner or farmer the words "the name of the owner or farmer."

On schedule B,

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Section 42 of the Election Act of 1874 provides that in the case of any elector entitled to vote and who has been appointed election officer or agent, he shall, on receipt of a certificate from the returning officer declaring he is entitled to vote at such a polling station where he is placed as officer or agent. Now, under Form B he can only vote, if asked to take the oath, on the list being shown to him. He must swear that he is the person named on the list of voters now shown to him; but if he is voting at a station where his name is not on the list, he cannot take the oath under this form, and will not therefore be allowed to record his vote.

Mr. THOMPSON. I see the force of the hon. gentleman's objections and will let that form stand.

Mr. DAVIES. I would make another suggestion with reference to that form. The last clause says that if the voter is registered as a farmer's son or an owner's son, he must swear that he is resident with his father or mother on the property. The intention is evidently that he must be a resident, not on the day he votes, but in the real sense of the word, and we ought to provide that he should swear he had not been absent for a longer period than three months at least.

Mr. FAIRBANK. In the 6th clause of form B, the oath requires that the son shall be resident on the farm or real property in respect of which he is registered on the voters' list. I believe that an owner who has parted with the identical piece of property but acquired another is still entitled to vote, but in this case, though the father would be entitled to vote, the son will be disfranchised.

Mr. THOMPSON. As that is to stand, I shall have an opportunity of considering that point.

Mr. MILLS. If the hon. gentleman would introduce a Bill for the purpose of repealing the law and giving us the law as we had it twelve months ago, or would give us manhood suffrage, we should be better pleased.

Mr. McCARTHY. These are the amendments which I propose. The first part is the same as the present Act, with the qualifications grouped together. There is one provision which is new:

And has been in possession thereof as such tenant for at least one year before his being placed upon the list of voters or the date of the application for the placing of his name on the list of voters.

That is instead of being a tenant for a year before the 1st January. The change is simply in regard to time. I move the adoption of these first four sub-sections:

Section three of The Electoral Franchise Act is hereby repealed, and the following substituted therefor :—

3. Every person shall be entitled to be registered in any year upon the list of voters for the proper polling district of any electoral district or portion of an electoral district, and when so registered to vote, if such person—

(1) Is of the full age of twenty-one years, and is not by this Act or by any law of the Dominion of Canada disqualified or prevented from voting; and

(2) Is a British subject by birth or naturalisation; and

(3) Is the owner of real property within any city or part of a city in the electoral district, of the actual value of at least three hundred dollars, or within any town or part of a town in the electoral district, of the actual value of at least two hundred dollars, or in any place in the electoral district, other than a city or town, of the actual value of at least one hundred and fifty dollars; or—

(4) Is the tenant of any real property within the electoral district, under a lease, at a monthly rental of at least two dollars, or at a quarterly rental of at least six dollars, or at a half-yearly rental of at least twelve dollars, or at an annual rental of at least twenty dollars, and has been in possession thereof as such tenant for at least one year before his being placed upon the list of voters, or the date of the application for the placing of his name on the list of voters and has really and bonâ fide paid one year's rent for such real property, at not less than the rate aforesaid; except when the rental is an annual one and for a larger sum than twenty dollars, in which case it shall be sufficient that at least twenty dollars of the last year's rent which accrued next before the time aforesaid shall have been paid: Provided always, that a change or changes of tenancy during the year shall not deprive such tenant of the right to be registered on a list of voters if such change or changes have been without any intermission of time between the tenancies, and if the several tenancies are such as would entitle the tenant to be registered on a list of voters had such tenant been in possession under any one of them, as such tenant for the year next before the time aforesaid: Provided also, that in any place except a city, town or incorporated village, the rental hereinbefore mentioned may be payable in money, in kind, or in money's worth of like value; and, provided, further, that if on any revised or final assessment roll the amount of the tenant's rent is not stated, the fact that the real property in respect of which his name is entered on such roll as the tenant thereof is assessed on such roll in cities at three hundred dollars or more, or in towns at two hundred dollars or more, or in any place other than a city or town at one hundred and fifty dollars or more, shall be primâ facie evidence of his right to be registered on the list of voters.

Mr. WELDON. I have very great doubts whether it is wise for us to adopt the amendments, although they may be very good in their way, as the franchise has been settled and the lists are made upon it, and are being made up every day, I think it would be unwise for us to make these amendments. Perhaps at a subsequent period it may be advisable. My hon. friend says this is simply changing the language for the most part; but there is this difficulty, we passed the Act last year, the language is changed in the Revised Statutes, and now my hon. friend has got an amendment changing it again.

Mr. McCARTHY. No.

Mr. WELDON. It is, practically. In the Revised Statutes the Act is very much altered indeed as to language. If we are going to open up the question of the franchise, we are opening up a very large field, which occupied some little time last year; and I think, under the circumstances, it is hardly worth while to press the amendments.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It would never do to adopt these amendments just now. At present every tenant is entitled to be placed on the voters' list who was such tenant for a year preceding the 1st January last. The hon. gentleman proposes now to make every tenant who has been a tenant for the year preceding his application, a voter if he wants to be. Now, in some municipalities, I believe the final revision has been completed, and in many other polling sub-divisions the revision will be completed before this Bill can possibly become law, and the tenants of that class will be cut out of the vote altogether. It would be unfair to place those in a different position to what they are, in cases where the voters' list would not be completed until this law could take effect.

Mr. McCARTHY.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not see the unfairness, because some tenants, under these circumstances, would not be entitled to get on the list, but I do not know that the hon. gentleman is right in saying that in many places the lists are already completed.

Mr. LISTER. They are in a good many counties in our own Province.

Mr. McCARTHY. Speaking of my own riding where, I think, the revising officers are as far advanced as in any others, it is only in two or three townships that the time for giving notice could have gone by before this day week. But the question is whether this is not a fair and proper change to make. It is now working great hardship. Take the case of the Methodist conference from whom the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) presented a petition. Take the case of bank clerks. I know one case where a bank clerk moved from Newmarket to Aurora, and he looses his vote, though there are only four miles between the two places.

Mr. MULOCK. Whose fault is that?

Mr. McCARTHY. It is not that man's fault, at all events. And school teachers who move about in the same way are in the same case.

Mr. HICKEY. It is much fairer to tenants that the suggestion made by the hon. member for North York should be adopted, because, being a transient resident, he is more apt to get his vote by being as near the final revision as possible. If you put it several months ahead of the final revision, he has more chance of losing his vote.

Mr. WELDON. There is no doubt a considerable hardship to some persons, but the difficulty in my mind is that this change will create great confusion in the lists. I suppose there is hardly an electoral district in which everything is not completed except the final revision.

Mr. FAIRBANK. Changing the qualification just on the eve of closing the list, I think would be wrong. There is no time before the revision to give information to the people as to the change in the qualification. If the final revision is not already closed, I know it is very nearly so in some cases. If it is desirable to change the qualification at some future time it might do. But if it changes the present working of the Act, this proposition is of doubtful propriety.

Mr. SPROULE. If it is so far gone that it cannot be changed, then there can be no hardship to those parties, while in places where it could be changed, it would do them a favor. Many hon. gentlemen opposite objected last year to the very same provision.

Mr. LISTER. The trouble is that it is too late. There is no time to give the notice. This Act cannot become law for same days yet, and it is impossible for the people to have information about it.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would not be unwilling, for my part, to give a special opportunity to these people to be put on after the Act came into force—I mean those who are now enfranchised by reason of this provision, should have an opportunity of applying. They are not numerous.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Make it apply to the future list?

Mr. LISTER. There are certain classes of people who ought to be on the list, such as ministers and school teachers. Those are the only two classes, as I understand, who suffer by the Act passed last year—and bank clerks.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I think it is always a hardship when, of two men in precisely the same circumstances, one has a vote and another is deprived of it, for that is what you do by this amendment. In a town in my county there are at least thirty men who are deprived of a vote under the old law, who would, if this were law last year, be entitled to vote.

Mr. McCARTHY. What are their politics?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I am not talking about politics at all. Is not this particular thing for a purpose? I ask the hon. gentleman if it is not to cover some cases that have occurred in the western section, where all these classes have been put upon the voters' list, and it is intended to legalise them by this provision. If the Minister of Justice will look at the notices, he will find that in many electoral districts in western Ontario the voters' list will be completed by the 15th of June. Therefore, it would be utterly impossible for those men who would be entitled to vote, if this provision was in force, to get on the list. In other counties where the final revision did not take place until the end of June, they could get on the list. The effect of this would be that men belonging to these particular classes, in some counties, would be able to vote, while in other counties men with precisely the same qualifications would not be entitled to vote. That is not right. I should have been glad had it been the law; but not being the law, it is not fair when the voters' list is practically completed to now change the law.

Mr. McCARTHY. If this amendment is adopted I shall propose a clause providing that if application be made at any time before the holding of the last court the name shall be put on.

Mr. WELDON. How will this be known throughout the Dominion?

Mr. McCARTHY. There will be no difficulty in making such a law known.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the committee rise, in order that we may have an opportunity of considering these proposals.

Mr. WALLACE (York). I think the amendment of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), will reach an important class, namely, tenant farmers who change their tenancies on 1st April in each year. They are on the voters' lists of 1885 which has been made the basis of the Dominion franchise list; but by the law as it stands at present those names can be struck off if the persons have not been resident in the county in 1885.

Mr. FAIRBANK. The only argument in favor of the Act was the plea of want of uniformity, and to change the qualification at this time does away with that argument. It is utterly impossible at this time to inform the country as to new qualification clauses. It took many months to give the country as a whole a general idea of what the qualifications were, and within a few days the final revision will take place, and to change the qualifications now would be to wipe out all pretence at uniformity.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The class of persons affected by this proposed amendment are just those people who would become acquainted with what had taken place in Parliament, especially the clergymen. They would see the changes made, and would at once take advantage of them. If the qualification affected the general run of voters the amendment might be objected to; but it affects two special classes, and I think they are people who would be informed from the newspapers what had transpired in this regard even supposing no copies of the Act ever reached them.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). A large portion of the classes affected are classes of men who do not read newspapers. They are small tenants who change from year to year, who never take a daily paper, and will not become informed of any change. No doubt clergymen would see it; but we are not legislating only for clergymen. This would apply to tenants, occupants and almost every class of that kind, and clergymen are not mentioned. It is not to apply to them alone. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) knows that this law cannot reach the public within the time necessary for them to appeal and be placed on the voters' list. Does the hon. gentleman mean to tell us that the people in the back districts of our counties will know anything about this change for weeks and weeks? Parliament is not likely to prorogue next week, and therefore the Governor General's sanction could not be obtained until the following week; and what time would those men have to take steps to have their names placed on the voters' list? This clause should not pass, and it is not fair to ask the House at this late stage of the Session and of the revision of the voters' list to adopt it. I am in favor of the amendment if it could have been done last year. The House would not assent to it last year. Let it apply to the following year if thought desirable, but do not do it now whenever a class of the community in every section cannot be placed on precisely the same footing.

Mr. MULOCK. I am in favor of the principle involved in the proposed amendment of the hon. member for North Simcoe, but I am not in favor of the passage of a law that cannot be worked. We should not adopt a measure when it does not afford a proper opportunity for the whole community to take advantage of it. Last year after a great deal of trouble the House came to the conclusion that a certain length of time was to elapse in order that the public might become acquainted with the law. If the hon. gentleman will offer the public the same opportunity to take advantage of the amendment that was given under the Franchise Bill, I am in favor of it. If a list is published on 1st June the final revision could not be made until five or six weeks after publication. The Act of last Session gives persons claiming the right to vote three weeks in which to present their claims. So the Act of last Session gives to every person who claims the right to vote at least three weeks' notice. If the hon. gentleman will say that at any time within three weeks after the Act comes into force a person not on the list shall have the same right of appeal no injustice will be done.

Mr. McCARTHY. I have no objection to do so. The hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Cameron) is so honest that he thinks every member on this side is dishonest and that every proposal made by them is actuated by sinister motives. I have heard complaint and I have proposed a remedy for some of the difficulty, and I cast back the hon. gentleman's insinuation that I am doing this with an object. There cannot be any object about the matter. I am willing to adopt any means and the simplest means by which the people can take advatage of this list. It is quite possible, as the new list will not come into force until 1st August, that upon this list the general election might take place. We ought to endeavor to make the present list as complete as possible. I will adopt any reasonable suggestion made. I suggest that application might be received within, say, the 15th July, which will give ample time. We must remember this, that the final list, according to the Act, is to be published on or before the 1st of June, and to be published five weeks, so that in many counties the revising officer is within the law, if he does not proceed to hold his final court, until the first week in July. In many cases they are holding the first courts in June, and it is not contemplated that they will be completed and certified before the 1st of August. That being so, the 15th of July or any time selected, would give ample opportunity to give notice to the country. Everybody in this House, and all the political organisations are interested in making this law known, so that I do not see the slightest trouble in applying the practice if the principle is acceptable; and nearly every hon. gentleman on that side who has spoken, adopts the principle, while he repudiates the practice.

Mr. DAVIES. No, that is hardly the position. I only repudiate the practice as to lists which are now in process of completion. I fear this provision will involve complications of a very grave character, in the outlying portions of the Dominion. They will become known, of course, to politicians and to communities where they receive daily papers, but how will the people in remote portions of the Maritime Provinces know anything about it?

Some hon. MEMBERS. It will be published.

Mr. DAVIES. Not in the outlying portions of the country.

Mr. MILLS. I think Sir, it would be a monstrous proposition, after we have dealt with the subject of the franchise, that at the end of the Session, when the voters' list is about being completed, we should propose to re-open the voters' list in perhaps one-fourth of the constituencies of the country. The other three-fourths of them cannot deal with the question at all. Why does the hon. gentleman propose to extend the franchise to large numbers of persons to whom be denied it last year? Why did not the hon. gentleman make his proposition three months ago, instead of now, when we have been sitting nearly three months? The hon. gentleman proposes to alter the franchise, and to re-open the whole controversy in 200 odd constituencies of this Dominion. If the hon. gentleman believes that the franchise ought to be extended, let him make his provision come into operation next year. Why is the hon. gentleman in such haste, when the preliminary revision has been made, when the preliminary list has been printed, when notice has been given for the final revision? Why should be propose a change in the elective franchise and propose that a large number of persons shall be enfranchised who are not enfranchised at this moment? Did the hon. gentleman consider this question last year? Was he not here when we were discussing the question as to whether the twelve months should count from the 1st of January——

Mr. McCARTHY. No.

Mr. MILLS,—or from the time the party made application. The Prime Minister objected, and although the question was again and again pressed from this side of the House he refused to agree to such a proposition, and, so far as I know, hon. gentlemen opposite did not object to it.

Mr. McCARTHY. Perhaps we had better fix the principle first, and then, in one clause, provide when it shall become applicable.

Mr. MILLS. I object to dealing with the subject in this way, at the heel of the Session. I am prepared, if the hon. gentleman will support me, and I certainly say now, when it is proposed to read this Bill the third time, I propose to move that we shall go back to committee to repeal the law, and to revive the state of things which existed before we legislated last year. If I fail in that, I am prepared to accept the principle of manhood suffrage, but I am not prepared to tinker with a Franchise Bill of this sort, when we have the preliminary revision already made, and when, in the majority of the constituencies, the date of the final revision has been fixed. Then the hon. gentleman has not provided here for the class who have asked for the electoral franchise.

Mr. McCARTHY. What class is that?

Mr. MILLS. Itinerary ministers.

Mr. McCARTHY. They are provided for. The hon. gentleman has not read the amendments.

Mr. MILLS. If the hon. gentleman has made that provision, all very well; and that is a reason why we might consider the amendment of the Act for future years but not when the work of revision has already, in a great measure, taken place, and when nineteen-twentieths of the people of this country can know nothing about the Bill in time to avail themselves of it, if it were made law to-morrow.

Mr. MULOCK. I am in favor of the principle of the amendments, because I am in favor of extending the franchise, and in favor of as few restrictions as possible being placed in the way of a citizen, who is entitled to vote, recording his vote. This shortens the time and minimises the obstacle and I consider that it and the principle running through all the amendements dealing with this subject are in that direction, and for that reason I think it would be a subject of regret if we should not have the list, on which the next general elections are held, as complete as possible. I do not think there is any difference of opinion among us in the abstract. The only difficulty seems to be as to the application of the principle; and I believe that by a little conference, outside the committee, we might arrange the whole matter. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he should allow the amendements to stand over to-night, and consult with a few members afterwards, and see if a solution cannot be arrived at.

Mr. McCARTHY. What we are doing now is consulting.

Mr. MULOCK. You said you had not contemplated this objection.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think we should settle the principle, and then by one clause decide when it shall come into effect.

Mr. MULOCK. Everybody is agreed as to the time running from the date of the application. I should be willing to cut in down to six months, though of course I am only speaking for myself.

Mr. MACMASTER. One hon. gentleman suggests that this proposition is brought in too late, and another suggests that while it is practically acceptable, it should stand over for some time for consideration. Now, it seems to me, if it is a good thing to extend the franchise to certain classes who are now disfranchised, the sooner it is done the better. Are the judges not occupied to-day in preparing the lists, so that those entitled to vote may be placed on them? And will they not be occupied in the same way for the next five or six weeks? If so, Parliament should make provision that those who, properly or improperly, are omitted, should have the opportunity of getting on the list. The only objection I see to the proposition is this: It is said that those who would be granted this right would not become aware of it in time. Is that probable? It seems to me that is entirely improbable. The classes of people affected are mainly clergymen and school masters. I will deal with the tenants in a moment. These are intelligent people, who read the papers and know what is going on in this House. The discussion on this subject will be telegraphed to-morrow, and in all the leading towns and villages the proposition will be well-known. If this proposition became law I venture to say that all the clergymen and schoolmasters in the country would know of it one week afterwards. With regard to the tenant farmers; the country is full of political organisations, whose business is to communicate information to the electors with reference to the franchise; and I venture to say that if there are hopes of the franchise being extended to parties who have not now the right to vote, it would not be thirty-six hours before the active political organisations would communicate with the people affected, and the tenant farmers would not suffer in the slightest degree for want of information. At all events, let the effort be made; let us pass such legislation as will give the right of the franchise to those who ought to exercise it. it may be that some will be left out; but is that any reason why those who should have the opportunity of taking advantage of the law should not be granted that opportunity? If it is right to be done, I think it is right to be done without any further delay.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. gentleman forgets that the revising officers have to receive this law; and they cannot get it by telegraph or action what they see in the newspapers. The difficulty is to work the thing out. In the county of Queen's, N.B., for instance, the 1st of June is the date for the final court, and all the persons affected by this amendment will have been struck off the list. Here we are in the midst of our revision, and, as Lincoln said: "It does not do to swap horses while crossing stream."

Mr. DAVIES. I think there is a great deal in what the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Macmaster) says with reference to clergymen and school masters. I am thoroughly in accord with him on the principle, and if it can be adopted without very great inconvenience I should like to see it done. As we have to consider some other clauses, I think this amendment might stand till Tuesday. We are in accord as to the principle.

Mr. McCARTHY. Why not let us adopt the clauses, leaving the question how they are to go into force until we go into committee again?

Mr. WELDON. Suppose we pass the clauses to-night and find no means of carrying them out. Before we change the law, we ought to see what means we are going to have to carry the change into effect. It is a very serious matter, and I think it should stand over.

Mr. McCARTHY. There are three propositions, as I understand, before the committee. One is to change the law, and leave the change to be applied wherever it can be applied; one is to extend the time to a certain fixed date, as suggested by the hon. member for North York; the third is to postpone the operation of these clauses until next year. Surely if we deal with the clauses, we can settle how they shall be applied.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If you accept the middle proposition, what date will you fix?

Mr. McCARTHY. My idea is the 15th July. I would not say that a court should be held everywhere, but one court in each electoral district, giving notice to enable persons to get their names on the list.

Mr. WELDON. You would have to draft a special clause for that.

Mr. McCARTHY. It would not take fifteen minutes to draft a special clause.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But it is very late, and I venture to say that, owing to the late hours at which we have been engaged during the last two or three days, the hon. gentleman's amendments have not been read by many of the members of the House. Until they were brought up here, I never had the opportunity of looking at them.

Mr. LISTER. I do not think there will be any danger from delay, because the principle of the amendment is accepted.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). When hon. gentlemen accept the principle of the amendments, why not pass them? Here are three classes, clergymen, school masters and tenant farmers, and it seems that they refuse to give these people a chance to get on the list.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). The trouble is exactly because, when the proposition to include these very classes was made last year, it was not adopted by the majority of this House. Had that been done, there would have been no necessity for hon. gentlemen to take the position they take now. We are to accept the assessment rolls for each year, and these include, in many cases, the names of tenants who were not residents of the riding on the 1st of January; but the trouble is that, in many cases, the notices have been sent to the revising officers already, and how are we going to do justice to those classes in such cases? It is largely a matter of fortune whether an individual living in a constituency where the revising officer has fixed his final revision, is going to get on the list or not. We want some means provided by which this provision will reach every man who has a right to be placed on the list.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is what we want.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). What is the hon. gentleman's proposition? It is baldly to say that the name of every man who at the time of his application establishes his right to be on the list shall be put on; but very many would have to make application within the next two or three weeks.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman is not fairly stating the proposition, I suggested the 15th of July.

Mr. DAVIES. Some of the courts of revision have been held.

Mr. McCARTHY. Suppose they have; make provision that one more shall be held for this purpose, and that it shall not be held earlier than the 15th of July.

Mr. MILLS. We are entitled to know what are the views of the Administration, who are responsible for the business of the House, upon this question. They know what the effect of the law as it stands will be. We know how far it will affect the existing voters' lists, and how far it will add to the expenditure incurred in the completion of the lists. If the Administration are prepared to say that they are ready to open all the voters' lists in the country again, so as to put this class of persons which the hon. gentleman proposes to enfranchise in a few constituencies on the same footing in all the constituencies in the Dominion, we would like to know it. If there is a special court to be held for the purpose of admitting people to the voters' list who are not on it now, and for whom the law does not make provision, if we are to have two revisions of the voters' lists this year, let the Government tell us what they propose, and we will be prepared to discuss the question.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think there is any division of opinion as to the change. As it is very desirable we should take a little time to consider it and consider what machinery is required to carry it out, I would let this clause stand.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not think the hon. member for Bothwell opposed Mr. Mowat when he had two revisions in one year. In 1882 and 1878, Mr. Mowat re-opened the lists and had a second revision six months after the first, for the purpose of putting the lists right. There is no objection to the principle of this Bill, and we are all agreed we should frame such a clause as will meet the views of the committee.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would suggest that the Bill be completed and printed before the third reading, with these alterations.

Committee rose and reported progress.

BAIE DES CHALEURS RAILWAY.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Does the Acting Minister of Railways propose to bring down the papers, contracts and correspondence with respect to the Baie des Chaleurs Railway before that matter is up for discussion.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I was under the impression that the contracts were before the House. I will take note of this and see that the papers are laid before the House before we take up this matter.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). One of the contracts is down and the other is not.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 1 o'clock a. m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 25th May, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 140) respecting the improvement of the Harbor of Quebec.—(Mr. McLelan.)

Bill (No. 139) respecting Tolls over the Dunnville Dam and Bridge connecting works constructed on and over the Grand River.—(Sir Hector Langevin.)

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I intended, before the Orders of the Day were called, to bring up a matter which is personal to myself, and in justice to myself. With the permission of the House, I do so now, after the third readings and before other matters are gone into. I see that the Opposition press—some of them—have made unfair use of language that I used in the discussion on the Bill relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is alleged that I charged the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) with blackmailing Parliament and the Government. That would have been very unjust to the hon. gentleman, and not only unjust but untrue. But I did not say so. The language that I used was with respect to the Northern Railway, and even with respect to that railway the language used, in the heat of debate, was, perhaps, too strong, because that railway, of course, like any other institution of the kind, had the right to press their particular interests in any way they pleased, and Parliament would deal with their application. True, the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is connected with the Northern road, but he took great care, both in his amendment and in his arguments, to sever himself from the Northern road. He stated, if I remember rightly, that he had received an amendment to be moved, an amendment coming, I suppose, from the executive of the Northern road, which he thought was going too far, being more in the direction of the interests of that railway than in the direction of the general interests of the country. He therefore declined to introduce that amendment, and laid before this House an amendment of his own, which was altogether based upon what he considered to be in the interests of the trade and commerce in Ontario, and his whole line of argument was based upon that principle. I may say also the hon. gentleman very fairly gave notice of the resolutions he introduced before he did introduce them, so that he took every care to sever his position as connected with the road from that as member of Parliament, he setting aside the amendment which suited that particular railway and proposing his amendment upon his idea that it was necessary for the protection of the commerce of Ontario. I differed from him in that regard, as I thought and still think, that the interests of Ontario and the railway interests of the country will be fully protected by the law as it is. I feel it necessary to make that statement, and I am exceedingly sorry any language used by me in the heat of debate should have caused misapprehension, which, I have no doubt, may have given my hon. friend great pain.

BAIE DES CHALEURS RAILWAY COMPANY.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions (page 1455) respecting the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Has the Minister brought down the papers which were referred to the other day? The two contracts have, I believe, been already submitted to Parliament, but there was an advertisement for tenders and some correspondence between the contractors and the Government. The hon. gentleman intimated on Friday that he would bring all these papers down.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I could not bring them down sooner, as that conversation was on Friday, and the House has not sat since. I have brought down the two contracts, and I will explain to the House how the matter stands.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). As the papers are only now brought down, the hon. gentleman could hardly ask us to dispose of the matter now. He might, at all events, let it stand till after dinner.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is a fair proposal. I have no objection to that. I will put the papers on the Table.

Motion allowed to stand.

THE FRANCHISE ACT.

Mr. CHAPLEAU presented copies of correspondence concerning the working of the Franchise Act.

Mr. MILLS. Does the hon. gentleman expect us to examine the correspondence before we further consider the Bill?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No; I thought it was useless to bring down all these papers, and I suppose it will be useless to look at it on the Table. I could not bring it down before. I suggested at the time when the address was proposed that, if the mover would ask only for the correspondence which was really necessary for the discussion, I would limit it to that, but I was answered that the motion was made and must be carried out.

Mr. MITCHELL. What is all this about?

Mr. SPEAKER. There is nothing before the Chair.

Mr. MITCHELL. I want to know what papers are submitted to this House, and I think I have a right to know. We ought to have the utterances of hon. gentlemen in a tone that we can understand.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend does it on purpose, because I always speak loud enough to be heard. This is correspondence concerning the working of the Franchise Act.

Mr. MITCHELL. My hon. friend is quite right; I did it on purpose, but it is because I could not catch what he said. He spoke loudly enough the second time, but he did not speak loudly enough in the first instance.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. THOMPSON moved the third reading of Bill (No. 133) further to amend the law respecting the North-West Territories.

Mr. WELDON moved in amendment:

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to a Committee of the Whole with instructions to amend the same by striking out from the seventh section the words, "but this provision shall not prevent the judges from acting as members of the North-West Council, without emolument," and instead thereof add the words "or act as members of the North-West Council."

He said: I think, since I have looked into this matter more carefully, that it is most important that the judges should not be members of the North-West Council, that they should be excluded from taking part in the deliberations of a Legislative Assembly. I move this resolution without going into the reasons which I gave before in committee. I see that in England, where one of the judges has given his opinion in letters to the Times on the Home Rule question, it has caused a considerable amount of criticism in the papers, showing that the whole principle and policy of the present system of Government is against judges taking any part in the deliberations of a Legislative Assembly, or being in any way drawn into the arena of politics.

Mr. THOMPSON. For the information of those members who were not present when this matter was fully discussed the other day in committee, I may offer a few explanations. We are not proposing in this Bill any new enactment on this subject. Ever since the establishment of the North-West Council, there has been a provision on the Statute-book that the stipendiary magistrates of the North-West Territories should ex officio be members of that Council. The number of appointments to that Council in the hands of the Government is six, and up to the present time three stipendiary magistrates have been sitting in that Council. It is proposed by this Bill, not as originally suggested, that the number of appointed members should be increased to correspond with the increased number of judges, but that nothing contained in the Act should render ineligible any of the judges who are to be appointed under this Act to take the places of the stipendiary magistrates at the North-West Council. So we are keeping matters precisely as they are; we are not increasing the number of appointees, and are simply saying that, notwithstanding the provisions of this Bill, which simply, as regards the judges themselves, changes the name of their office and, to some slight degree, their emoluments and the tenure of their office, such persons may be appointed to the Council. At the present time, three of these stipendiary magistrates sit there. The work of the Council, unlike the work of a Legislative Assembly, has very largely to be done by the members who meet and at the time when they meet. There is no Executive in the North-West, as there is in the Provinces, to prepare the legislation, and it is only a few days since I had placed in my hands a letter from one of the elected members of the Council, intimating that, in the present state of the organisation of the territories, that gives rise to considerable inconvenience; the legal measures which it is desirable for the Council to adopt, have not been prepared; members frame their suggestions after they have assembled; and he states that, if the judges are removed from the Council Board, great as the difficulties are at present, they would be enhanced. It is not proposed, either as a part of the policy of this measure, or as the policy of the Government, as I understand it, that appointments of persons holding positions of this character should be continued indefinitely in the North-West Territories. On the contrary, the present law relating to the North-West Territories provides that, when the number of members of the Council reaches twenty-one, the power of appointments, on the part of the Government, ceases entirely, and, therefore, the right to appoint any person shall vest solely in the people, and depend upon their election. So rapidly are the Territories being organised into districts entitled to elect members to that Council, that at the last session of that body five newly-elected members took their seats, and it is anticipated that in the course of two or three years the power of appointment on the part of the Crown will be entirely withdrawn. I propose that until that takes place we shall make no change, and neither withdraw the present stipendiary magistrates who are holding seats in the Council, nor increase their number. There are reasons, as I have stated, why the presence of these gentlemen is at present useful, and why I think it would be undesirable to declare, as the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) proposes, that they should no longer be eligible. I have already stated that we do not present this as a permanent measure, because the present law contains a provision that all appointments of every character shall cease at a time not far remote, in all probability now, when the whole power of electing members to that Council shall be vested in the people of the North-West Territories.

Mr. MILLS. I do not propose to detain the House more than a moment in the discussion of this question, as I stated my objections to the Bill on its second reading. The observations which have been made by the Minister of Justice, however, call for an observation or two. It seems to me that the hon. Minister altogether ignores the fact that the Government itself is taking a new departure in presenting this matter to the House. They propose to constitute something different from the stipendiary magistracy that has hitherto had jurisdiction in the North-West Territories, and to supersede those magistrates by the constitution of a Supreme Court. They recognise the fact that the condition of things in the North-West Territories is not now what it was a short time ago, and this altered condition of the inhabitants renders it necessary that the Government should make a different provision from that which has heretofore existed for the administration of justice. Now, in order to meet this altered condition, the hon. gentleman proposes that there shall be organised in the North-West Territories a body for the administration of justice on the same footing which exists in the various Provinces of the Dominiom. Would the hon. gentleman for a moment propose that the judges of the Supreme Court in any one of the Provinces should be eligible for seats in the Legislative Council, or for seats in Parliament? We all know that the hon. gentleman would not make such a proposal, but what the hon. gentleman now proposes is that the members of the court which he proposes to organise in the North-West Territories, shall be eligible for appointment or for election to the North-West Council. Now, I make serious objection to that. I say it is important that no such thing should be permitted. It is important that these men should be removed when the North-West Council ceases to have any appointed members, because, if the hon. gentleman were to alter the organisation of districts in the North-West, there would be no nominated members now. It is because those districts are constituted by the North-West Territories Bill that it is possible that there should be nominated members of the Council. Now, if the Government were to make a provision for the representation of all the people in the North-West Territories, there is a provision granting the half-breed population who are entitled to the franchise the right to elect twenty-three members instead of twenty-one; and, that being the case, the hon. gentleman has recognised, not only in the Bill which we have already passed through the House providing for representation in this House, but also by the proposition now before us to constitute a Supreme Court, that the condition of things in the North-West Territories is approaching the condition that exists in the ordinary Provinces of the Dominion, and, that being the case, the time has come when what may be allowed under the exceptional circumstances that may be found in a territory when settlement is first taking place, ought not to be permitted at the present moment. I called the attention of the hon. gentleman the other day to the fact that the trials of controverted election cases must come before these judges, involving questions of election, of eligibility to the Council, of the regularity of an election to that Council, and these same judges must sit on those cases. Are they fit to try such cases, when it would be highly probable that they would be found on opposite sides in that Council, and when they would be biassed more or less by the political considerations that would prevail, and would present themselves to their minds when they would be called upon to adjudicate upon these cases? Why, Sir, in the election of members to this House, I suppose the trials of controverted elections in those territories represented under the Act, would come before these judges. These men hold seats in that Council themselves, and they would be called upon to take sides in the controversies that would take place in that Council. That being the case, I say it is highly inexpedient that these judges should longer be eligible to that Council. The hon. gentleman had his attention called to the fact that by this section, as it now stands, they are not only eligible to seats in that Council by appointment, but eligible for election also. He proposes to change that; but, in listening to the amendment which he made, I think it was perfectly clear that he did not effect that object. So, at this moment, as the Bill stands before us, it is proposed that the judges in the North-West Territories shall be politicians, that they shall assist in legislation, that they shall take sides in the controversies that arise in the North-West Territories; and that while they are party men, while they are taking sides, they shall also adjudicate upon contested elections and the appointments that take place to that Council. When this Bill was before the House for its second reading I pointed out the extent to which these men would be placed in antagonism to each other, to the disagreeable position in which they would find themselves, if they were compelled to decide upon the validity of an election of a brother member to the Council, a man who, if he obtained his seat, would be inclined to act with those who supported him in his election and to oppose those members of the court and members of the Council, who took a different view of the law. I say, Sir, we ought not to permit this. I think we are going back to a mediæval condition of things, one which is not only contrary to the principle of parliamentary government, but one which was recognised as being so wholly incompatible with our notions of representative government, that it ceased to be a part of the constitution of any one of the Provinces, even before responsible government was established.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. gentleman is hypercritical in his remarks in respect to this measure. Now, in the first place, about the judges becoming political men and taking part in elections. By the Bill of the late Government the stipendiary magistrates—and these are stipendiary magistrates—had power to sit as nominated members and at the same time to try elections of elected members. There is no alteration of the law in that regard. They were made political men by the Bill of the hon. gentlemen opposite, and there is no alteration made by this Bill. But the reason why the late Government appointed them and asked them to form a portion of the Council, was, that they wanted men supposed to be acquainted with the law of the country, who had dealings judicially and administratively, as magistrates, all over the country, and who would be experts, in fact, to decide upon what was really for the good of the Territory. Supposing this measure had not been introduced at all, supposing the condition of things had remained as it is now until this law is passed, and these men remain stipendiary magistrates, I do not find that any hon. gentleman opposite ever made any motion to alter the constitution in that regard. It was not considered wrong that these stipendiary magistrates should remain as nominated members of the Council. No complaint was made from the North West about these gentlemen sitting as members of the present Council. The Opposition, who are bound to attack any laches on the part of the Government in administering the affairs, judicially or otherwise, of that country, did not ask that the stipendiary magistrates should be removed from the Council. If this Bill had not been introduced matters would have gone on and no one would have objected; and this Bill simply changes the name of the stipendiary magistrates to judges. Now, that can make no difference certainly. The other difference is this: the stipendiary magistrates are at present practically absolute and their decisions are without appeal, because an appeal in important cases to the Court of Queen's Bench of Manitoba was so expensive and caused so much inconvenience. That was the case, and this Bill proposes to deal, and it does deal effectually with that question. The stipendiary magistrates or judges, as they are now called, instead of being absolute will meet together and will sit as a court of appeal on the judgments of individual stipendiary magistrates, whose decisions were formerly, practically, for most intents if not for all intents, without appeal. That is the only alteration, and I am satisfied those gentlemen, who are not increased in numbers—the nominated members—do good service, from their long acquaintance with the country, with the Indians and the white men, such as Colonel McLeod, Judge Richardson, and latterly Judge Rouleau, the last-named of whom brought with him a knowledge of law, having been a judge. This is simply a measure to meet the present condition of the country. I have no doubt, as the Minister of Justice has stated, that very shortly there will be a Council of the elected members so large that it will retire in favor of an Assembly. It is to be hoped, however, that among the elected members professional and legal men will seek to enter the Council as much as possible, because without professional men present the Council or Assembly will be without such guidance as every Parliament should possess. The Local Legislatures have legal men who consider legal matters coming before the House. It is to be hoped that legal men will make it their ambition to go into the Council or Assembly as it will be I hope ere long. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) spoke of some alteration in the law so as to expedite the change from Council to Assembly.

Mr. MILLS. No. What I said was this: The hon. gentleman is aware that the elected members are to be elected by a population within a limited area. If it were not for that limitation, the population of the Territory is sufficient to give it 23 members.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The alteration of that limitation would be an alteration in the law. That is a matter that can be dealt with subsequently. The North-West will not suffer very much from waiting for that change until next Session, if such a recommendation be made by the elected members in the Council. No doubt this Parliament will be only too glad to expedite the matter and make the Council an Assembly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know what the late Government may have done; but I again object to the present Administration pointing to the acts of the previous Administration as justification for anything it may choose to bring forward. I remember about fifty five or sixty years ago, fifty-five years ago, that the Legislature in our country was composed partly of judges, and when I came to take some interest very early in life in public affairs, it was found very difficult to get rid of the judges from the Legislature of our own Province. I know it was looked upon as a great evil to have the judges sitting as members of the Legislature, making laws which they themselves would afterwards administer. In the Bill now under consideration it is reviving what existed fifty years ago, and I am decidedly opposed to giving the judges of the North-West Territories any right to deal with legislation or take any part in legislation of the territories. It is enough for them to administer the laws without assisting in making them; and, notwithstanding what the First Minister has said, the people of the North-West are just as intelligent and equally prepared to elect members to sit in that body as are the people of the constituencies we have the honor to represent. In regard to what the hon. gentleman has said about lawyers and legal gentlemen, and the great assistance they render, I am of the opinion that if we had fewer lawyers in this House and more men with common sense we would get along equally well. We would not have so much legislation—and it is well known that we have a great deal of unnecessary legislation. The argument that it is desirable to have lawyers in the North-West Council should not carry any great weight in passing a Bill of this kind. What we want is plain, practical common sense, less of the great legal ability, less legislation with a view to hair splitting, and more bringing to bear on legislation plain, practical common sense, with a view to meeting the wants of the people. That is what we should do. That is not being done in this Bill. I therefore support the amendment.

House divided on the amendment of Mr. Weldon.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 141) further to amend the law of evidence in certain cases (from the Senate).—(Mr. Thompson.)

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Bill (No. 127) to extend the boundaries of the district of Keewatin, and to amend the law respecting such district.—(Mr. Thompson.)

RAILWAY IN CAPE BRETON.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved:

That it is expedient to provide that the Minister of Railways and Canals be authorised to construct a railway from a point on the Straits of Canso to Louisburg or Sydney, as a public work; that the Government Railways Act, 1881, shall apply to such work, and that the location and all other incidents of the said work shall be determined by the Governor in Council.

Mr. MILLS. Explain.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The question of constructing a railway in Cape Breton has come several times before the House, and different measures have been passed and subsidies granted for the purpose of building such railway. The wish of Parliament, as well as of the Government, which proposed the matter to Parliament, was and is that the Island of Cape Breton should have the same advantages as other portions of the Dominion possess, that is to say, a railway across the island. Attempts have been made to obtain contractors who would undertake the building of the road. Those efforts have not succeeded, and after waiting thus far the Government have come to the conclusion that, under the circumstances, instead of delaying construction and waiting in vain for contractors to build the railway, they would ask Parliament to undertake it themselves through the Government in the same way as the Government have built other railways in the country. Under those circumstances the Minister of Railways has given notice of the resolution which I have moved. If this is assented to by Parliament, the intention of the Government is to afterwards come down with a resolution to ask Parliament for a sum of money with which to begin this important work. The Government have taken care, as they promised last Session, to have surveys made of different lines, of two lines across the island, in order to ascertain which would be the best line to be followed, should the Government undertake the work. Those surveys have been made, and, if I am not mistaken, the results have been laid before the House. The question may be asked, which of the two lines is to be selected? That information I am not in a position to give. Those surveys are now under the consideration of the Department of Railways, and the intention of course is to take the best line, the line that will be most feasible and most advantageous to the island and the country at large.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman ought to give the House further information. I have no recollection of seeing the plans and specifications which the hon. gentleman says have been laid before the House. It is most desirable that the House should be in possession of this information, and the hon. gentleman, in asking to commit the House to an important measure of this kind, on the merits of which I do not wish to express an opinion at this moment, should give the House further information as to the character of the work, grades, probable cost, kind of work to be undertaken, length of line, so that the House, before it commits itself to the proposition which the hon. gentleman submits, should know precisely what it is doing. It may be a right and proper thing to do, but as yet the hon. gentleman has altogether failed to give us information which it is important we should possess.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The surveys, plans and reports were laid before the House on the 19th of this month. They have been here about a week. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the grades and curvatures; they are contained in the report before the House, which speaks for itself, and which is laid on the Table for the purpose of affording information. I may state generally that the line is supposed to be about eighty-five miles in length. The cost of the line is expected to be about $20,000 a mile.

Mr. VAIL. I am very glad indeed that the Government have at last agreed to take hold of this work and build it as a Government work. It is a very important road, and I am sure will be of great advantage to the people of Cape Breton. I am only sorry that the Government have not at the same time made some appropriation for the completion of railways in the western part of the Province of Nova Scotia; but I am in hopes that will be done before the House prorogues. I am glad also to hear the Minister of Public Works say that this road will not likely cost more than $20,000 a mile. I have heard that the reason a company could not heretofore be induced to undertake it is that it is a very heavy and expensive railway to construct.

Mr. CHARLTON. Does this estimate include the cost of equipment?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The information given to me is that the road will cost about $20,000 a mile. I understood that that would cover equipment.

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly the Maritime Province people ought to be grateful to the Government for recognising the necessity that exists for this railway, and for the disposition they are showing to meet that necessity by this vote. I do not know any portion of the Dominion that has been more long suffering than Cape Breton, or that better deserves railway facilities. Therefore I heartily approve of the action of the Government, and I am not disposed to question them closely. As they are willing to vote a sum to build the road, I am disposed to give them every latitude in the matter.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MILLS. I think the position taken by the hon. Minister of Public Works is an extraordinary position. I am not expressing any opinion upon the merits of this undertaking; but Parliament is asked to vote $1,700,000, which may amount to twice that sum before this work is completed, and to do so without any information before it with regard to the undertaking—whether it be difficult or otherwise, what population is to be supplied by it, whether it is to be part of a great trunk line, or simply a tributary of the Intercolonial Railway—all the information which it is the bounden duty of the Government to give on an occasion of this sort is withheld. In fact the Government assume that the members of this House do not regard it as their duty as representatives of the people to give any attention to an expenditure of this kind. This work may be a very necessary work to the Island of Cape Breton; it may be that the circumstances of the people are such as to justify the Government in undertaking it; I do not know; but it is no answer to the enquiry for information for the hon. Minister to say that he has laid a report on this subject on the Table a few days ago. It may be that such a report was laid on the Table in manuscript; but no such report has been printed and distributed to the members of this House. The Government have assumed the responsibility of laying this proposition before the House; have they obtained all the information which they should obtain—which a company would seek before undertaking to invest money in the enterprise? If they have, then the hon. gentleman should give that information to the House. If they have not, the hon. gentleman is not in a position to submit this proposition to the House.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course I expected that the hon. gentleman would ask for more information. He is of an enquiring mind, and, of course, that is his duty; I do not find fault with him for it. If the hon. gentleman wants to know the direction of the two lines, it is very easy to tell him, because the reports and the surveys have been laid before the House.

Mr. MILLS. Have the Government made choice between those two lines?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have explained that the Government have not made choice. The Department, I said, was investigating as to which would afford the greatest facilities in construction, and be of the greatest benefit to the island and the whole country. Therefore all I could say was that one line would be about eighty five miles in length, more or less, and the other about eighty-three and a half miles. As to the population that will be benefitted by the railway, the hon. gentleman knows what the population of Cape Breton is, and this being the only railway across the Island, the population there will be greatly benefitted by it. As to how many will travel on the railway, I cannot say, but I hope a good many will. The hon. gentleman knows that the general system of railways of the country go as far as the Straits of Canso. The straits are not to be crossed, I suppose, by a bridge for some time; but the Government are informed that the straits may be crossed during the whole winter, and therefore there will be no difficulty in maintaining communication between the railway system of the remainder of Canada and Cape Breton. The maximum grade on either line will probably be about eighty feet to the mile.

Mr. CHARLTON. There can be no question that railway development in this country is a desirable object; but there is another question that should enter into our calculations: that is, what is our financial position, and our ability to embark in an enterprise of this kind? I think the House is entitled to more definite information as to the desirability of this line, as to the population of Cape Breton, as to the probable amount of business the line would do, and as to the probability of the line paying running expenses. The House are entitled also to have some data upon which to determine what route shall be selected for this road. Without giving this House the information we are entitled to, the Government ask us to vote $1,700,000 for the construction of the road; a further sum of a least $300,000 will be required for equipment, and further large sums will no doubt be required before the road is completed. We have made a good many railway investments in the East. We have expended millions on the Intercolonial Railway, which scarcely pays running expenses.

Mr. MITCHELL. Don't say anything against the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. CHARLTON. These roads are a great burden upon the taxpayers of the country. If our finances were in such a condition that we could spare large sums of money, we could afford to be much more liberal than we can be under the circumstances. But, on the contrary, a very heavy debt is pressing on the country; we have not a surplus, but a large deficit; we have squandered large sums in unproductive enterprises, and it behoves this Government to be cautious as to the obligations it shall incur in the future. If this road were an absolute necessity, if it would even pay expenses, to say nothing of its giving a return on the capital invested, we might embark on its construction. But if it is to be an investment such as the Intercolonial Railway is, if, after it is built, it will not pay running expenses, and we must supplement the deficiency, certainly this country is not in a condition to build it. We have a net public debt amounting, if all our liabilities are included, to $250,000,000; we have an interest charge almost three times greater per capita than that of the United States to meet, and yet we are recklessly plunging into more debt, and I see in the action of the Government for incurring expenses for railway subsidies and the construction of lines that will be a burden on the country, great danger. We have voted over $10,000,000 to railway subsidies in the last two years; we are continually adding to the debt of the country in a way we are not justified in doing. I would like to see the people of Cape Breton with a railway; it would be a very desirable thing for them, but the question is: is it advisable for the taxpayers of Canada that we should add $2,000,000 to our debt. In our present circumstances we ought to move slowly, and the Government, in this enterprise, is proposing to place upon the taxpayers an additional burden which they are not justified in placing on them. I speak, of course, from the standpoint of an Ontario member. Were I a Maritime member I do not know but that I would be prepared to object to making the taxpayers of Ontario contribute to enlarging the railway system of my Province. The Government ought to exercise care and prudence before embarking on such an enterprise. I do not say the road ought not to be built, but the House is entitled to more definite information as to the character of the enterprise before incurring additional obligation.

Mr. DAVIES. As far as I understood hon. gentlemen on this side, they do not intend to offer any objection to the construction of railways in Cape Breton, if the Government will give them the necessary data on which to come to a conclusion. We are entitled to know whether this railway is to be built to Louisburg or to Sydney. The Government must have come to some conclusion in their own minds, but they will not give it to the House. The people of Cape Breton have the right to know, when such a large amount of money is voted, and probably justifiably voted, and the people of the other Provinces have the right to know, whether the Government have come to a conclusion, and what that conclusion is. I am anxious to know whether the Government intend this to be a part of the Short Line route or not; whether they intend to build to Louisburg or not. The Minister of Railways, a year or two ago, said Louisburg would be one of the termini of the great transcontinental road. Have the Government come to that conclusion, or are they going to build to Sydney? Surely the House have the right to know something about this. We are very often called to vote in the dark, but I do not believe, with the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), that this House should entirely abdicate its functions. I do not believe it is a matter of indifference whether we should spend $2,000,000 or $5,000,000 in the construction of railways. If necessary to expend $1,000,000 or $2,000,000, so far from opposition this side will give cordial support, on getting proper information and being satisfied that the road will be built in the right way and on the right route. The Government could not come down and ask a vote without having come to a conclusion in their own mind. They would not insult the House by asking us to vote for a railway going they do not know where, and having come to a conclusion they should tell the House where they are going to build the road Is it to be part of the Short Line Railway, about the advantages of which we heard so much, two or three Sessions ago. I want to know how the Government are going to cross the Strait of Canso? Will they build a sub water tunnel? And they must have come to that conclusion, and have ascertained the probable cost of that tunnel. Either this road is to be part of the great Short Line or it is not. If it is, it must be connected by a sub-channel, or it will be perfectly useless in winter.

Mr. McLELAN. The straits are navigable in winter.

Mr. DAVIES. No, they are not.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes, they are.

Mr. DAVIES. Not during all the winter. But, whether or not, how does the Minister of Railways propose to carry the short line across. Will he make a break in the railway system and transfer the luggage and other articles to a small boat crossing the strait? Surely we are entitled to some information.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I am not astonished to hear the Opposition from Ontario offer rather a factious opposition to the building of a railway on Cape Breton, but I am really astonished to see the hon. member from Prince Edward Island moving in the same direction. That island is about a third larger in size than the county of Inverness alone, yet it enjoys 210 miles of railway.

Mr. DAVIES. We built it ourselves.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). You built it at the expense of the Dominion.

Mr. DAVIES. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not wish to misrepresent facts, and I wish to inform him and the rest of the House that the people of the Dominion do not build our railways. We, the Prince Edward Island people, build for themselves. These 210 miles of railway they have built and paid for out of their own pockets.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I am very glad to see that Prince Edward Island built a railway and paid for it out of their own pocket book. In the Public Accounts I find, unfortunately, that that road has not been paid for yet, and that the cost of the road is part of the public debt of Canada, and that the people of Cape Breton pay their proportion of interest on that road as well as the people of Prince Edward Island. Such statements may do very well to draw the wool over the eyes of the people of other parts of the Dominion, but we down by the sea would be very glad, indeed, that the Dominion of Canada should be charged a few millions of dollars for public expenditures on Cape Breton Island, and, if so, I doubt very much if we would claim that we built that road out of our own pockets. To revert to the question which called me to my feet, I beg to call the attention of this committee to the fact that this Parliament unanimously granted the Pictou branch as aid to the building of railways east of Pictou. With that subsidy and an additional subsidy granted by the Local Legislature of Nova Scotia, it secured the extension of a railway from New Glasgow to the Strait of Canso. Owing to a provision made by an Act of the Local Legislature in 1880, that road, from Truro to the Strait of Canso, was purchased by the Dominion Parliament at the cost of $1,2 0,000. I do not believe that there is an hon. gentleman in this House who will deny that Cape Breton has an equitable claim on the road from Truro to the Strait of Canso. The Pictou branch cost $2,400,000, and the Eastern Extension cost $1,200,000, besides $8,000 a mile granted by the Local Legislature of Nova Scotia. This is a valuable property. The Pictou branch is admittedly the best paying section of railroad in the Dominion of Canada, the Eastern Extension paying its working expenses, and while I admit that the line through Cape Breton cannot be expected to pay more than working expenses, I hold that, in connection with the Eastern Extension and the Pictou branch, it will pay handsomely not only the expense of running it, but interest upon the cost as well. The net public debt of this Dominion is said by my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) to amount to $250,000,000. I think it is not to the credit of this Dominion that on Cape Breton, populated by 100,000 people, it may be said that up to this time not a dollar of money has been expended on public account except on the St. Peter's Canal. While the population of Cape Breton is one-fiftieth of the population of the whole Dominion, we would be entitled to an expenditure on public account to the extent of $5,000,000. Subtracting the cost of the St. Peters Canal from the $5,000,000, it would leave $4,225,000 which should be represented on that island in public works. Public works for which the Dominion is responsible and for which the people of the Dominion of Canada pay interest were accomplished on Prince Edward Island and in other sections of the Dominion of Canada, and I do not conceive of any reasonable ground why the Opposition in Ontario should offer any obstruction to the passage of this resolution, and I am certainly astonished that my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island should offer any.

Mr. DAVIES. You are mistaken altogether. I did not offer any.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I hope he will withdraw his opposition to the passage of this resolution.

Mr. VAIL. I do not understand that there is any opposition to this vote from this side of the House. Even my hon. friend who spoke of the large expenditure on railways, did not really object to this expenditure, but he asked very properly for further information in regard to it, and yet the hon. member from Cape Breton (Mr. Cameron) has charged my hon. friend from Queen's, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), with objecting to this. I understood him to say that it was only fair, it was only doing justice to Cape Breton. The member from Cape Breton stated that the Dominion had built the railway in Prince Edward Island. As I understand it, the Province of Prince Edward Island built that road. It was part of their debt when they entered Confederation. They were entitled to enter with a certain debt, and this railway was taken over as a part of that debt, so it was really charged against the Prince Edward Island Government, and they, to all intents and purposes, built the road and paid for it. In regard to this expenditure, there is a matter which has not been referred to by anybody yet, whether it is not an interference with private rights, I should like to hear from the member for Richmond (Mr. Paint) on that question. It seems to me that a Bill was passed through this House some time ago incorporating a company to build this road. I should like to know if that company has been bought off, or what they propose to do in connection with this vote that is being asked for by the Government for the purpose of building the road. Will the hon. member for Richmond tell the House that he is quite satisfied that this expenditure should be made?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not feel disposed to agree with my friend from Cape Breton (Mr. Cameron) when he makes the assertion that the Opposition from Ontario are going to oppose this grant. So far as I am personally concerned, I have no wish to offer any factious opposition to it, and I do not think that any member from Ontario has any such intention; but I do submit that, when a grant of this kind is asked, the House has a right to demand the fullest information which can be given respecting it, and that, I submit, has not in the present instance been given to the House. A large subsidy has been voted by this House to assist in building this road. The hon. Minister has told the House to-day that the Government tried to form a company with the aid of that subsidy, and that they failed. I think the House is entitled to know why they failed. There must have been some reason for it, the subsidy was large. Could no company be found to build and operate that road with the aid of that subsidy? That is one of the facts that this House has certainly a right to know something about. If the Government have failed to do it with that assistance, there must be some reason for it. Is the reason that the road is going to be of so little value that it is not going to pay the running expenses or anything like it? If that is the case, this House ought to know it. It is no use for the Government to say they have the matter in their hands and they are responsible. The House cannot abdicate its functions. The House has the right, and it is its duty and privilege, to ask for and to have the fullest information that can be given on the subject. Speaking for myself individually, so far as Cape Breton is concerned, I am willing to stretch a point, even if there is not a reasonable prospect of the road paying anything, even if we are to be saddled with some expense to keep the road running; but I am not willing to go into it blindfold; I want to know what we are likely to assume. We are asked to-day to vote $1,700,000, but I submit that that does not represent anything like the obligation the Dominion is going to incur in the building of the road. I am very doubtful, from what little I know about the building of railways, from the experience of railways in the past, and from the nature of the country through which this road is to run, if the debt which we are likely to incur for building and equipping the road does not amount to $3,000,000; and before we assume such a liability, the House is entitled to the fullest information that can be given.

Mr. HACKETT. I am glad to observe there is no real opposition to this resolution. The people of Cape Breton, as is well known, have suffered a long time for the want of railway accommodation. Now that the matter has been brought up in a practical way by the Government, I am glad to see that there is no real opposition; and although there is some criticism by hon. gentlemen opposite, they all aver they do not mean to oppose these resolutions. The Island of Cape Breton is a very rich island in mineral wealth and in agricultural and fishery resources, and I am quite convinced that when this road is built, traversing that island from one end to the other, it will be found to be a paying speculation. I rise principally, however, to correct a remark of my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. Cameron), to whose great exertions and zeal, I make no doubt, the people of Cape Breton are largely indebted for having these resolutions brought before the House. The hon. gentleman has stated that the people of Prince Edward Island have a railway built by the Dominion of Canada. Now, that is quite incorrect. The people of Prince Edward Island were engaged in building that railway when the island entered the Union. It is well known that when a Province enters the Union she comes in with a certain amount of indebtedness per head of the population. There is an assumed debt and an actual debt, and the interest on the difference between the two goes a long way to make up the revenues of that Province. Now, when Prince Edward Island came in it was charged with three millions and a quarter dollars for the building of this railway. That was the actual indebtedness of the Province, and amounted to $45 per head of the population. The island came in with the same rate of indebtedness per head of the population as the other Provinces, this amount being deducted, and the island has paid interest at 5 per cent. on the difference, which makes a portion of the subsidy at the present time. Now if Prince Edward Island did not build that railway, if the three and a quarter million dollars were not charged to the island, the people of to day would be receiving $200,000 more of a subsidy than they do now. Consequently the people of the island will have 200 miles of railway while their debt has been assumed by the Dominion and interest has been paid upon it by the people of that Province ever since. I regret to see that a misapprehension prevails in the House to the effect that because the Dominion of Canada assumed the building of the island railway, it was not afterwards taken from the people of the island in another form.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I think the Government deserve the thanks of the people of this country for having at last grappled with this question in the only way possible to secure the construction of this road. It has been the play ground of parties for many a year. I can remember when I was a very small boy this question being urged of railway communication with the Island of Cape Breton. It has been the hobby horse of politicians pro and con, but to-day it assumes an aspect before the people that it never assumed before. It will be the highway between the old world and the new. It will affect Upper Canada as much as the Lower Provinces, it will be the shortest route of communication between the old world and the new.

Mr. MILLS. Which? There are two.

Mr. WOODWORTH. No, there is only one. My hon. friends always make a mistake the moment they come to discuss the geography of Cape Breton. They do not seem to know whether it is in Russia or where. I tell my hon. friend that I can take a horse and drive in an hour and a quarter between Louisburg and Cape Breton, and what is the good of talking about two lines Louisburg and Sydney are adjacent.

An hon. MEMBER. Twenty-five miles apart.

Mr. WOODWORTH. No, they are not. You may make them 50 miles apart if you like, but you can take your horse and drive in an hour and a quarter between the two places. I have been there and the hon. member for Bothwell has not. I want to say this about this proposed railway between Canso and Louisburg, or Sydney. To-day the steamer Umbria, if she coals at Liverpool, takes 2,500 tons of coal to last her to New York, but if she coals at Louisburg or Sydney she only requires to take 1,750 tons, and she can have the displacement of all these tons of coal in freight, she may supply that in freight, thereby making a great saving at so many pounds a ton; and any gentleman can reckon it up, and the same way going back to England. Besides that, you have only got two-thirds of the distance between Liverpool and New York by sea, and you can take the rest by railway and vary the journey. More than that, you are in New York one day earlier than you are to-day by steamship, or if you want to go to Chicago the distance will be very much shortened indeed. And as to the mails to the United States, I am not a prophet, but I believe that the mails to the United States will go by the way of Louisburg or Sydney, that they will be put on board of the train there and reach their destination many hours before they can reach it now. Any man taking his family across the Atlantic can leave New York one day after the time he needs to do it now, he can make part of the journey by railway and meet his steamship at Louisburg or Sydney, and this route between parts of the old world and the new will be conducted partly on land, while it is now altogether on sea. Canada is the spot where they land the mails, where the passengers take boat again, where they leave the boat and go over Canadian soil to go to the United States and to all parts of Canada. So that this question has a national importance. The Great Architect of the universe has placed Cape Breton out there in the sea, the nearest point to the old world, it is placed there for a purpose. Before we were confederated we did not feel the necessity of the question as much as we see it now. But now that the engineers of the world are competing against one another for the shortest distance between points, a few hours in time are of the utmost importance. I tell you that this railway connecting, as it does, all parts of America with the old world, in the shortest possible time, is of great national importance. But more than that, with the new line building there, with the shortest line you can get from Montreal to Louisburg, you will have but twenty-four hours, or four days from Montreal to the Pacific coast, making five days from the Pacific coast to Louisburg, and five days from Louisburg to Liverpool—only ten days from the Pacific away across to Liverpool. Why, it is a most wonderful stride and march in the affairs of men. I say now to my hon. friend from Bothwell, and to his friends, that not five years will go over their heads—not three years after this railway is built will go over their heads—before they will see the national importance of this work, that will give an impetus to the Upper Provinces, that will give to Canada a nationality and a solidarity that it never before possessed. This is not merely a Cape Breton question, but it has been elevated out of the class of local political questions and has become a national question, and I think the Government deserve the thanks of this country for at last coming to the rescue of that Province away down into the sea. But I want to say that there is a western part of the Province as well as an eastern part, and I trust that the eight counties lying to the west of Halifax will not be left out in the cold but that they will have a share of the public money. It is true that this road is more important from a national point of view. Although a western man myself, I concede freely and fully that this railway is of greater importance than perhaps any railways to be built in Nova Scotia to-day; but from a western standpoint, as a member of the western portion of that Province, I shall hold the Government to a strict account to give us a fair share of the public money in building roads that are necessary to be built, for instance, the missing link, and the Nictaux and the Atlantic Central Railway. I must congratulate the hon. members for Cape Breton on the fact that this is no longer a political issue, but that the dream of their lives is about to be realised. I know that the hon. member for Inverness and his colleagues have always been earnest advocates of this road, and I have to congratulate them that the Government of the country have at last seen their way no longer to "dicker" with a company in New York or anywhere else, but to come forward themselves and announce their intention to build the road forthwith, and to stand or fall on that question.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). This question has been before the country for over three years, and yet some hon. members are under the impression that this is the first time it has been before the House. In 1883 the Short Line Railway Company obtained a subsidy of $3,200 a mile. It was found that this was not sufficient to enable the company to build the road, and, in 1884, $150,000 per annum for fifteen years was granted for a line to Louisburg, being a total amount of $1,250,000. Therefore we have now a subsidy of $362,000 in cash and the Eastern Extension for the purpose of building a road from the Strait of Canso to Sydney or Louisburg. I have carefully examined the report of the chief Dominion engineer on this question, and I find the cost of the railway is estimated at $20,000 a mile, including equipment So the outside limit of the cost of a railway from Canso to Sydney or Louisburg, and the distance to each is about the same from the Strait of Canso, would be at the outside $1,700,000. We have already on the Statute-book a subsidy of $1,800,000, including the cash subsidy with the Eastern Extension Railway. We did hope, and I was one of those who did hope, that the Short Line Company, with the subsidies granted, would be enabled to build a road from the Strait of Canso to Sydney or Louisburg. I was disappointed. On 14th May, 1886, the company submitted a proposal to the Department of Railways asking:

"That in lieu of the forms of subsidy above enumerated a fixed and increased sum be authorised to be paid semi-annually. That it be authorised to be placed in the form of guarantee of interest on bonds. That the bonds so guaranteed in respect to interest for a term of years may be sold, provided the whole proceeds of the sale of such bonds shall be placed on deposit in the treasury of the Government at four per cent interest to be paid to the company having such contract pro rata on completed sections of railway. And we respectfully suggest that $150,000 per annum, payable semi-annually for fifteen years, would not be an unreasonable subsidy in addition to the section of railway already authorised to be given, to secure the construction of so long a line of railroad in a country where the railroad will improve the country, and must make its business before it can be expected to earn enough above working expenses to pay interest on a sufficient amount of securities."

Thus the House will observe that the subsidy asked by the Short Line Railway Company for the construction of a railway from Moncton to Sydney and Louisburg aggregates $2,225,000 besides the Eastern Extension; and from Oxford to Sydney and Louisburg it aggregates $1,800,000 besides the Eastern Extension. That company, through whom we did hope the Short Line would be built from Oxford to Sydney and Louisburg, desired to obtain in subsidies more than the cost of the road to the Government. When the road is finished I am satisfied no one will be disappointed as to the quantity of freight which will pass over it. The mining properties of the island will be developed, the fishing industry will also be benefited and the business on the road will be such as will be not only gratifying to the Government which undertakes its construction but also will commend itself to the members of this House.

Mr. PAINT. I thank the Government for the liberal provision that has been made for railway extension into Cape Breton Island. It would be my duty, Mr. Speaker, as a representative of Cape Breton in this House, to advocate and plead for any useful railway in that island. If these miles of track began and ended in Nova Scotia and were the outcome of local enterprise, subsidised by the Dominion Government, as a ready means of dividing the Dominion moneys among the seven partners, I would not consider it an unnatural proceeding if any hon. member should question the propriety of granting such a subsidy. But, Sir, this railway is a Dominion one, it is the first and most important link of our transcontinental system of railway communication. Mr. Richard Potter, the late manager of the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada writes thus to me:

"Ever since 1873, I have anticipated the inauguration of Louisburg as the chief Atlantic port of the American continent, and your scheme provides for this."

Such being the case, any member of the House of Commons of Canada voting against or not voting for the railway project now under consideration will, in my opinion, be guilty of a violation of his duty to this Canada of ours in thus sacrificing her interests. Hon. gentlemen will remember that, in 1883, a subsidy was voted by Parliament for a railway from Oxford, Nova Scotia, to Louisburg, in Cape Breton. That vote was supplemented by Parliament in 1884, but the road was not proceeded with and that vote is still unexpended. Last year, however, Parliament voted a further sum of money to make surveys in Cape Breton on Government account. Now that the Government have undertaken to make surveys for railways in Cape Breton, the expectations of the people have been raised, and they fully hope and expect that the Government will follow up that survey by voting a subvention sufficient to ensure its immediate construction, and placing the enterprise beyond a doubt. This would be in reality an extension of the Intercolonial Railway direct to Louisburg. They have been for a great many years contributing towards the construction of railways and other public works in different parts of the Dominion, yet no expenditure has been made, to this day, for a railway on the island, although it is one of the oldest settled portions of the Dominion. I may remind the Government that the discontent in Cape Breton is deep and universal, as it is impossible to remove from the minds of the people, in every portion of the island, that its five members exert no influence at Ottawa, and that the electors who send them here are, in this most important matter, treated with contempt. While rejoicing as a Cape Breton member, at substantial aid being afforded to any railway in that island, yet I cannot, as a member of the Dominion Parliament, allow the true interests of Canada to be injured by the possible selection of an unsuitable port as the terminus of the Cape Breton Railway. The option is given in the resolutions of making Louisburg or Sydney the terminus of this much-needed railway through the length of Cape Breton; but I hold that there is no choice, that there is but one port both in summer and winter as such terminus, and that is the port of Louisburg. Throughout the entire correspondence between the Dominion and Nova Scotian Governments, in 1874, on the question of subvention for this railway in Cape Breton, no mention is made whatever of any other eastern terminus but Louisburg. The following passage occurs in a letter addressed to the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, the then Premier of the Dominion, by the financial director of a wealthy English association:—

"It may not be out of place to state, also, allowing that the works now being executed on the canals of the St. Lawrence will permit, within three years, of vessels of 1,000 to 1,200 tons burthen proceeding from Chicago to the sea; that Louisburg, with its cheap and abundant coal and iron, an open harbor all the year round for steam navigation, and situated at the mouth of the St. Lawrence, cannot fail in becoming the true seaport of that river, and for the mighty trade which is yet to flow over it to England and the continent of Europe."

The same Mr. D. J. Kennelly, in November, 1874, writes:

"Moreover, I explained my firm conviction that Louisburg, with cheap coal and iron, must become the seaport of the St. Lawrence, for the enormous trade to come forward through the intended system of canals; and as passenger traffic gravitated to the place of shortest sea passage, so Louisburg eventually would form the trans-Atlantic port for mails and passengers."

The offer of this capitalist to build this road was based on calculations formed by Mr. W. H. Tremaine, C.E., after completing the field work of the survey for his employer, Mr. Kennelly. On the military principle that it is lawful to receive instruction from an enemy, and adopting the almost legal maxim that the best evidence is that extracted from the adversary's witness, I may be pardoned if I quote from a pamphlet written in support of the claims of Sydney Harbor to the terminus of such a railway as has just been provided by the Dominion Parliament. In February, 1851, at a public meeting in Sydney, C.B., a committee was appointed to prepare a report with reference to connecting that island by steam navigation with the Mother Country, and by railway with the United States and the neighboring colonies, and to enquire into the capabilities of the harbor of Sydney as one of the termini of the projected European and North American Railway. The following composed the committee: Hon. Mr. Justice E. M. Dodd, Messrs. R. Brown, T. D. Archibald, H. Davenport and P. Moore. The report states that:

"In the summer of 1850 a convention was held at Portland, in the United States, which was attended by persons of great influence in the Union, by delegates from the British Provinces representing their respective Governments, and others deputed to further particular local interests in the Provinces of Canada, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia proper. Cape Breton was not represented, but some of the delegates remarked on her important position on the map of North America.

"A series of resolutions were adopted declaratory of the unanimous opinion held in the United States and British Provinces that the spirit of the age demands a shorter way of interchange between Europe and America than even the present reduced passage affords, a determination to effect a junction by extending the lines of railway at present in operation in the United States to the eastern seaboard of Nova Scotia, and thence by bridging the Atlantic with powerful steamers to some place in Ireland.

"It appears to your committee that this object can only be accomplished by a route which, crossing the Atlantic at its narrowest part, obtains a footing on the most easterly point of America, and shortens the sea by adding to the extent of land travelling, since ocean steam vessels have not yet exceeded an average speed of twelve and a-half miles per hour, whilst the locomotive can easily accomplish forty miles."

I may remark that the ocean passage to Louisburg may be made in five days, and that the mails would be delivered about two days sooner in New Orleans and the Western States if landed at Louisburg, and not at New York. The committee continue:

"Cape Breton from its geographical position has been very generally designated in the United States the Long Wharf of America, a truthfulness of description peculiarly significant of the sagacity of its people; situated 59° 38' and 61° 40' west longitude, and 45° 27' and 47° 5' north latitude, its greatest length about one hundred and its greatest breadth eighty miles, comprising an area of about 2,000,000 acres, of which at least 1,000,000 are fit for cultivation, abounding with mineral wealth, the most important of which consists of extensive coal fields; with a climate singularly healthy, and a population estimated at, in 1886, 85,000, engaged principally in agriculture, mining and the fisheries; it is unquestionably one of the most valuable possessions of the British Empire. The island has several good harbors, including Sydney on its eastern and Louisburg on its southern seaboard * * * Louisburg is the nearest to Europe, being only 1,940 miles from Galway; Sydney is 1,950 miles from Galway * * * It is true the navigation of Sydney is impeded by ice, generally from two to four months in the winter whilst Louisburg, also an excellent harbor is open nearly all the year round * * * Sydney as has already been stated, is impeded by ice in the winter."

The practicability of constructing a line of railway from Sydney to New Brunswick, was then considered by the committee. They continue:

"No railway has yet been made in the Island of Cape Breton, but the concurrent testimony of travellers, land surveyors and others who know the country well, is conclusive that a most favorable line can be obtained—commencing at Sydney, thence up to and along the valley of the River Mira to Grand River Lake, thence through St. Peter's to the Gut of Canso—the distance of seventy miles."

Here I have conclusive evidence that the route of the railway should be through the county of Richmond, for after leaving Louisburg, I would follow the course given by the committee for the railway I desire to see constructed. The officially reported length of the present narrow gauge railway between Sydney and Louisburg is thirty-two miles, consequently a railway from Louisburg to the Gut of Canso would be many miles shorter, assuming the estimate given by the committee to be correct. It is very far from my desire to prevent communication with the port of Sydney from Nova Scotia proper. But I have naturally a determination to prevent if possible the sacrifice of the interests of Louisburg, and consequently those of the county of Richmond. A few miles from Louisburg, there is a convenient and suitable locality whence a branch line might deviate toward Sydney, utilising the present graded road-bed of the narrow gauge railway, now built between Louisburg and Sydney. In order completely to establish the vital point, that Louisburg, is open to navigators all the year round, which is not quite conceded by the Sydney committee, whose other arguments make so much in my favor, I may be permitted to quote from a pamphlet published in London by a gentleman having a perfect knowledge of what he asserts by personal investigation of Cape Breton in 1817, when General Ainslie was Governor. Writing about the climate he says:

"About the first of January navigation closes, and the harbors of the island, except Louisburg, Main-à-Dieu, and St. Peter's Bay, are frozen up so as to form a complete bridge of ice, &c."

In that accurate compilation known as Lovell's Gazetteer (Edition 1874) we find the statement that Louisburg has a fine harbor open the year round. The weight of business and trade tends to the south side of the island. If the road goes through Inverness, it will always be a mere local one with limited traffic. If the road should pass through Richmond county, its course will lie through the extensive and fertile district of Mira River, Loch Lomond, St. Peter', Black River, River Inhabitants to Hawkesbury. The vast cod banks off Louisburg and along the coast line of Richmond, where fishing can be carried on all winter, and the fisheries in the Bras d'Or Lake will furnish this railway with thousands of tons of freight, in the shape of fresh fish for the markets of Western Ontario and the United States. While Louisburg remained in the hands of the French, it exported 500,000 quintals of cod annually, amounting to 30,000 tons in weight; and 600 vessels frequented this harbor. This freight of fish would not be secured if the line takes the northerly route, for not a boat ventures out from the gulf ports to fish for five months in each year, the Gulf of the St. Lawrence being covered with ice.

Mr. KIRK. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is in order or not. But it does appear to me that it is unnecessary, at this time, to discuss which route shall be selected. The object of the Government in making this vote——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. KIRK. I think I am in order, and if I am out of order on one point, I shall not be out of order before I sit down.

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman can state the point of order.

Mr. KIRK. I wish you would allow me to do that. The point of order is that the hon. gentleman is reading his speech, and I doubt if we can be expected to sit here listening for an hour to a gentleman reading his speech on a subject which is not under discussion at all.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). You can never make a speech you do not read.

Mr PAINT. I am reading a report of a very important committee, and I am nearly through. Arichat, as capacious and safe a harbor as one could desire, freezes later and opens weeks earlier than Sydney. Cariboo harbor now called Port Malcom also in Richmond county, near the Strait of Canso, which could at any time contain in perfect safety 1,000 large ships, is open the year round. This would be the natural outlet of the county of Inverness. All these fine harbors in the county of Richmond, with others which I have not named would serve as feeders to a railroad through the county and should not be treated with indifference by this proposed line of railroad being deflected to the so-called central route. The choice should fall to the best harbour. We accept on this point the decision of the French engineers and naval commanders, who, in 1713, spent about $7,000,000 on its fortifications, convinced of its being the best naval station in Cape Breton. Sydney was founded in the year 1786, when the fortress, citadel, and town of Louisburg were abandoned. It was only selected as the seat of Government, because Louisburg was considered as not being well situated for the encouragement of settlers, and a constant temptation to France to seize it if it remained intact. The harbor of Louisburg is among the best in North America, and contains good anchorage. Its entrance, formed by two small islands, is four hundred yards wide; and by means of the high cape and lighthouse in its vicinity is discoverable by ships at a great distance. The location of the Cape Breton Railway is a question which concerns every person, and affects the interests of every citizen or resident of the Island of Cape Breton, the Dominion of Canada, and North America, and therefore should be calmly, deliberately and intelligently discussed in the spirit of justice and impartiality. If a false step is now taken in the final settlement of this question, the consequences would be most deplorable, for it would be most disastrous to the interests of our country. Every person cannot expect to have the railway pass through his district and by his door. It ought not to be for personal conveniences and individual advantages that millions of dollars are expended in the construction of railways, but for the opening up of the country and for the good of the public in general. Among the different lines proposed for the Cape Breton Railway, the one that would take the least money and would be of the greatest benefit to the island should certainly be considered. The question at issue, then, is where should the railway line be located, having Louisburg for its objective point, so that it would be of the greatest benefit to the whole island? This can only be ascertained by clear and thorough information as to the various proposed routes. Let me first commence with the central route. This line is to start from the Strait of Canso, following in a direct course to the lower part of the River Inhabitants, thence in the valley along the river by River Dennis to the head of Whycocomah Bay; thence winding its way through the Whycocomah village and by the north shore of said bay through the settlements of Middle River and Big Baddeck into Baddeck town; thence to a point opposite to Big Harbor, where it crosses Big Bras d'Or at a place called the Three Islands; from there through the Island of Boularderie to Little Bras d'Or to North Sydney and Sydney and Louisburg. This route would be about 100 miles long to Sydney. The great drawbacks and difficulties of this line would be the high grading of the road and its expensive bridges.

Mr. MULOCK. How many bridges would there be?

Mr. PAINT. About twenty. Some parts of the country through which it would have to pass are very hilly and mountainous. The second line is the Grand Narrows route. This also starts from the Strait of Canso, following the same course and going the same way as the central route, till it comes to the waters of the River Dennis Basin, where it turns to the east, following the windings of the land and the indentures of the shore to the Grand Narrows, where it crosses the Barra Strait to Grand Narrows, south side; thence to Benacadie, Escasoni, north side of East Bay into Sydney. This road is reported by the engineers to be ninety-two miles long with the possibility of shortening it five miles, which would leave it eighty-seven miles long; but it would not pass through any important town or village. Besides the difficulties of bridging the Grand Narrows is a matter which should claim most serious attention. The third, or East Bay route starts from the Strait of Canso, follows the course and direction of the southern route to the Lower River Inhabitants, continuing on to St. Peter's, thence it keeps by the south shore of the Bras d'Or Lake through Soldiers' Cove, Red Islands, Irish Cove, Big Pond, to East Bay, where it separates into two branches, one leading into Sydney town and the other into North Sydney. The distance is about 88 miles from Hawkesbury into North Sydney, and eighty-three miles into Sydney. The fourth line, or southern route, leaves Guernsey, Point Tupper, near Hawkesbury, Strait of Canso, county of Richmond, and follows in a direct line the southern shore to the north of Isle Madam, and River Bourgeois to St. Peter's; thence to the north of L'Ardoise by Grand River, and between Loch Lomond and Framboise and Fourchu to the head of Mira Bay, thence by Gabarous Bay and Eagle Head, where the only important rock cutting occurs, to Louisburg Harbor. It is eighty-two miles long, and has been twice surveyed, once by the Local Government, and last year by the Dominion Government. Let us now consider more particularly the respective merits of the routes most worthy of attention so far proposed for the railway extension into Cape Breton. If the so-called central or northern route were adopted the result would be to deprive the county of Richmond and its 18,000 inhabitants of all railway communication whatsoever. This line has just been surveyed and no serious difficulties encountered in the shape of deep cuttings or heavy bridges. I ask therefore can it be seriously contemplated to construct a railway about 115 miles to Louisburg by way of Sydney when eighty-two miles is ample to reach Louisburg direct, ten miles shorter than any line possible to Sydney by the miscalled central or northern route; the latter involving the construction of an immense drawbridge at the Grand Narrows some 2 000 or 5,000 feet long over a swift current, some seventy to eighty feet deep, costing one million dollars. Such a bridge would greatly interfere yearly with upwards of 1,000 vessels passing through St. Peter's Canal. Many captains would prefer going by sea to hauling through a bridge in a swift current and night detention. To my mind the first and most important point to be decided is, what railway is wanted? Do you want a railway to Cape North, then by all means have the railway through Inverness and Victoria counties. Do you want a railway to Christmas Island? Then by all means go vid Grand Narrows and get ferried over until we can afford to build a bridge the cost of which would astonish the Finance Minister of the Dominion. There are no less than twenty heavy bridges vid Grand Narrows route. Do you want a railway to Louisburg as a continuation of the railway system of Canada, to form a part of a main line from Europe on the east to China and India and Australia on the west? Then by all means go vid St. Peter's direct to Louisburg, where there are no serious engineering difficulties to be encountered, no ferries nor bridges of consequence. The idea of a crooked line of railway endeavoring to tap a number of counties is, to use a homely expression, played out. I contend that the commerce on the Bras d'Or Lake must, for all time to come, depend largely on steam and sailing craft for accommodation. Besides, a bridge at Grand Narrows would greatly obstruct steamers and sailing vessels, with a tendency to drive them off, if anything, leaving the towns and villages worse off than they now are. But with a railway from Louisburg, along the southern route, vid St. Peter's, connecting with the railway system of Canada, sufficient fish could be shipped to supply all Western Canada, including United States—that portion bordering on the great lakes—thereby developing trade relations between east and west, to the mutual advantage of both, and creating inter-provincial trade, and a better union than that began by the British North America Act. It might also induce our western relations to eventually understand that Western Canada is not the whole of the Dominion, and that the Maritime Provinces, with their fisheries, coal and shipping, are entitled to much more consideration from the Government of Canada than they have yet received. A letter, lately received from Cape Breton county, reads as follows:—

"I am glad they are getting weak on the Grand Narrows route and this East Bay route they will find wont do, either, as it will require ten or more miles to get from St Peter's to Sydney than from St. Peter's to Louisburg and will make the line from the Strait of Canso to Louisburg at least thirty miles longer. How hard it is to get those people to see the thing in its true light."

The idea of a road swinging round the southern shore of East Bay Mountains merely to satisfy a morbid spleen against Louisburg and destroy our claim as the shortest road to Europe. If they would only adopt my plan, i. e., St. Peter's to Louisburg, thence to Sydney, thence to Little Bras d'Or, tapping North Sydney, they would have the most profitable and accommodating road that can be possibly built for Cape Breton, then for Victoria and Inverness a road from Baddeck to Margaree, some thirty-six miles. By this plan you would have the whole thing arranged for a splendid steamboat system and will avoid the boats competing with the railway.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What Counties would the southern road go through?

Mr. PAINT. Through Richmond and Cape Breton counties. The port of Louisburg is in Cape Breton. As regards the relative distances, I will read the following letter from Cape Breton:—

From Sydney to Valentia Island	2,010 miles.
From Louisburg to Valentia Island	1,987 "
In favor of Louisburg	23 "

"Now this twenty-three miles will grow into forty-six if the proper view is taken of it, viz., a steamer coming from Europe steers directly to Louisburg passing about nine miles south of Scatterie. Now look at the map and see the actual distance from this line to Sydney. You will see that a ship bound to Sydney from Europe has to deviate from her direct course to get to Sydney after passing Newfoundland and will have to come back out of Sydney bight the same distance of the deviation, before she is on the direct route to Europe, or going west as the case may be, which in most all cases will make ninety to 120 miles sea voyage in favor of Louisburg over Sydney. So that it is essentially necessary to preserve and protect the great interest of Cape Breton in the shortest route that there should not be thirty miles lost on land as would be the case if the railway is built via those routes advocated (by the East Bay and Narrows to Sydney), and Louisburg being evidently nearer Europe and possessing a magnificent harbor and accessible all the year round. There should be no question respecting the routes. Only to adopt the shortest, and Sydney and North Sydney would find it to their advantage to be connected with Louisburg in the most direct way possible than to be the fag end of a railway shut up in the gulf ice for four and a half months of the year."

Again he says:

"I regret very much to see a scurrilous article in the Ottawa Free Press of the 24th inst. re yourself, in connection with the proposed southern railway route in Cape Breton from the Strait of Canso, viâ St. Peter's to Louisburg. I have no doubt but that this article has been inspired by the advocates of the so-called 'central route' on this island. 'People from Cape Breton' who have a practical knowledge of the country—its trade, latent mineral and commercial wealth—know well that the southern route is the one and only route that will advantageously and economically accommodate and develop the resources of the island; and to be brief, in regard to the silly remark of 'half a carload of blueberries as the only likely freight over this road' is simply the worst kind of ignorant spleen. Now I will give you my idea of what it would likely be. First, this road will accommodate fully ninety miles of a coast from the Strait of Canso to Scatterie, which is one of the finest fishing districts in the Dominion, and the port of Louisburg, being the most central in the great fisheries of North America, would naturally become—when connected with the great western cities by a railway—the great fish depot of Canada and largely that of the United States, and a thousand tons of fish daily, preserved in ice, would be only a reasonable estimate of what could or would be sent over this road to the great markets of the west. Now the next, and perhaps the greatest, would be the Atlantic European mail and passenger traffic. This is warranted by Louisburg being the nearest available port to Europe and being on the line of the most direct route from Montreal to Liverpool, which, without exaggeration, will make a saving of about 30 hours over any other route that can be adopted. Louisburg being already connected by rail with the principal coal mines of Cape Breton would become the great commercial centre of those mining districts, and being situated half-way between Liverpool and New Orleans, must eventually become the coaling port or halfway house for those steamers that ply between the two places. Now take those several great commercial feeders for the railway to Louisburg and the subsequent local traffic that would result, and you will find there is no section of a proposed railway in America that has such a promising future. As for the barrenness of the route from the Strait of Canso to Louisburg, as asserted in the Free Press item, it is not true. It is fairly an agricultural country and abounds in mineral wealth, such as iron, copper, gold, bismuth, cobalt, zinc, molybdenum, manganese, &c., &c. The southern railway route is the one that should be adopted as being the most essential to the prosperity of this much-neglected island of ours, notwithstanding the spleeny assertions of interested land lubbers whose ideas of a country's wealth is the agricultural products of the vicinity in which they themselves vegetated. To conclude, I may say here that the idea of a railway in Cape Breton viâ what is called the 'central route,' is the silliest scheme that men could possibly be guilty of under the circumstances, as it neither accommodates one side or the other of the island. I am sorry that any one from the island can be so stupid and sectional as to advocate it.

"Yours truly,

"A CAPE BRETON MARINER."

Now, as regards the port of Louisburg. This is from the special correspondent of the Halifax Herald:

"LOUISBURG, C. B., May 13.—During the past fortnight our harbor has been thronged with vessels of every size and rig, waiting for the ice to move off the coast. They are all bound for Sydney and outport mines to load coal for the States, the late strikes there having caused quite a scarcity of the black diamond. It is a great pity that the railway from here to the Reserve mines and Sydney was not in a fit condition to be travelled over. Coal was in great demand this spring, freights were high, our harbor open all the winter, and the coast from this west free from ice, so that quite a brisk and large trade might have been carried on. If ever, this winter and spring, I think, has shown the superiority of the harbor of Louisburg over that of Sydney and others in Cape Breton, as a winter-shipping port. It must prove to any unprejudiced mind, that is the only fit terminus for the railway extension into Cape Breton. I dare say many think otherwise, but I fear that in nine cases out of ten they have 'an axe to grind.' I have none, but I speak merely on account of the natural advantages which Louisburg possesses over other ports in Cape Breton, and which must tell sooner or later."

Here is a letter from a gentleman of standing and importance, a leading clergyman in the island, Donald Sutherland, an old country minister:

"GABARUS, C.B., 2nd April, 1886.

"In the Ottawa Daily Free Press of 24th March, under the heading of 'Sessional and other Notes', is an item on the Cape Breton line of railway which truly surprises me. The writer there says 'that Mr. Paint's scheme is generally considered impracticable.' This is not true, so far as people down here are concerned, and I am one of them. The writer says again: 'People from Cape Breton state that so barren is the country along this proposed route that as regards local traffic about one-half a carload of blueberries a year could be obtained and nothing else.' This is a lie, and the tongue that would make such a statement should be kept for a curiosity. The truth is, Sir, your scheme is the only practicable one, and although I do not make it my special business to interfere in these matters, I should say that the line should make Louisburg the terminus if for the sake of connection with the coal railway line ending there, but that the chief terminus should be in Gabarus, which affords one of the most magnificent harbors in the world, and that a branch might go from Gabarus to Sydney—the distance of about twenty miles. By this means, as the coal railway already connects Sydney with Louisburg, Sydney would have in reality two branches connecting with this great line instead of one, viz., with Gabarus and Louisburg. The coal railway to Louisburg should be operated and must be operated at any rate, and it might be subsidised by both the Local and the Dominion Governments to do the work now so irregularly and expensively done by so many indifferent harbors and breakwaters along the coast.

"With regard to amount of traffic, it would have the traffic of the whole Island of Cape Breton run over a road of seventy miles in length, from the Strait of Canso to Gabarus, or of eighty-two miles to Louisburg, fed by a productive country and an extraordinary wealthy ocean, minerals, grain, fish and forest, the very berries spoken of and many more kinds in cartloads. Even this spring we do not know what to do with our potatoes—so plenty are they, and withal so good. This country is thoroughly stocked with meat, more than the people require for home consumption, and if there was a railway line they could get it away; and they could consign their fish, fresh or salt, in like manner. And the most experienced fishermen we have say that all winter they could carry on the work of fishing and packing it in ice and consigning it all over America, and by the convenience of steamer to England as well. At Mr. Donkin's request I gave him in writing a statement of what minerals are to my knowledge to be found on this line of railway, and that statement should accompany his report to Government. But whether or not, it is proper here to say that copper, bismuth, gold, silver, iron, manganese, lead and coal exist on this line of railway. From the St. Peter's Canal to Louisburg is one continuous belt of valuable minerals.

"The line itself is easy, on good bottom, not through barren or soft yielding land, and not through rock, with the exception of a few yards at Eagle Head, perhaps, between Gabarus and Louisburg. I have travelled extensively on railways in Europe and America, and I have to say that it would be hard to find an easier line than this is. From my conversation with the engineers employed on it too, I think their report will carry me out in this. I conclude in my honest convictions that this line to Gabarus and Louisburg would pay a company better eventually, without one cent's subsidy, than any other line of equal extent that can possibly be selected even with a subsidy of $6,000 a mile, i.e., within the extent of the Island of Cape Breton. It will be the embouchure of all the American lines pointing in the direction of shortness to the old world, and it will command its own commerce—let adversaries to it say what they will. Might as well instruct a cannon ball, as soon as discharged, to deviate from its course, as overbear the natural lines of sea and land in point of directness in the channels chosen by commerce and trade.

"I have the honor to be, yours sincerely,

"DONALD SUTHERLAND."

For vessels engaged in the immense traffic between Europe and the United States of America, Louisburg is by far the most important station of any. It presents the following advantages:—1st. Its harbor is open and free from ice all the year round. Sydney is usually closed from December to May. This I can attest to from an official record kept for sixteen years in succession by myself. Even Boston and Halifax harbors, though several degrees more southerly, are not free from occasional inconvenience in severe winters from floating ice. Louisburg, with rare and brief exceptions, is kept open during the winter by the unceasing restlessness of the Atlantic waters which feed its harbor, while the St. Lawrence ice is deflected by its impact with Scatterie Island, which impels the ice, aided by the tide, in a south-east direction. 2nd. It is the nearest port on the American continent to England and Europe. Its distance from the nearest English port—Milford Haven—is 2,055 miles. It is nearer to Europe than Halifax, on the line of a great circle, by 196 miles, and than New York by 780 miles. 3rd. It offered, whilst the railway was in order, to coaling vessels, the best steam coal at the cheapest price, viz., $2 to $2.50 per ton, 2,240 lbs., free on board, and with the quickest possible despatch. 4th. It is about half-way between Europe and the shipping ports of the southern States. Therefore a steamer laden with cotton, &c., from New Orleans, or other southern ports, can carry a much larger cargo by taking half the necessary coal at port of departure, and replacing it by the other half obtained at Louisburg. Forty-eight steamers in one season were supplied in this manner. 5th. This economical process of replenishing with coal half way, is now partially carried on by filling the bunkers at Halifax; but as the cost of coal at Halifax is very much higher than it is at Louisburg, while the despatch is not so great, the superiority of Louisburg as a coaling station is manifest. It requires four hours to steam into Halifax and out of it, and less than one hour into and out of Louisburg. 6th. Louisburg is situated in latitude 45° 51′ and longitude 59° 57′. Its harbor, will be found to be safe, capacious, easy of access, and capable of accommodating the largest class of vessels afloat. Bayfield's chart shows a depth of water varying from 24 to 60 feet, with good anchorage. By calling at Louisburg the danger of running on Sable Island, which is 100 miles west of Louisburg would forever be avoided. 7th. From its position, as the most easterly port of the American continent, it is well fitted to become the recipient and warehousing depot of American and Canadian grain and other produce ulteriorly intended for European markets. For as its communications seaward are open all the year round, the shipments might be effected thence at any period, and to any point, as markets might offer inducements. 8th. The Cape Breton Railway, taking the southern route, will connect Louisburg with the vast arterial system of railway communication that traverses the continent of North America, and will make it the most eastern terminus of the great Canadian Pacific Railway of Canada. The missing link, less than eighty-two miles, once supplied, a passenger from Europe landing in four or five days at Louisburg, might step from the Atlantic steamer into a railway carriage which would convey him to any important town in North America. This will be accomplished before long, and then Louisburg will form an important point of contact between the new and the old world. Mr. Chairman, my desire to secure justice for my Province and for my county must stand as my apology for the length of this speech. The interests concerned are apparently local and provincial, but on examination will be found in reality national. Mr. Speaker, in concluding my remarks, I desire to ask the hon. French members of this House to give me their support in my endeavor to secure the building of this railway to the great harbor of Louisburg, in order to raise this ancient city from ashes and dust.

The Committee rose, and it being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

Mr. KIRK. It is not my intention to occupy the time of the committee at any great length in discussing this question. I do not think it is necessary to do so. All parties in this House are agreed that this resolution should pass; all parties in this House are agreed that a railway should be extended through Cape Breton Island. It is, therefore, not necessary to discuss the question as to whether this resolution should pass or not, and I am not going to occupy much time in discussing it. I do not know that I should have risen to speak on this question were it not that the hon. members for Cape Breton Island seemed to take credit altogether to the Government for the fact that this resolution has been laid before the House, and that it is the intention of the Government, seemingly at least, to extend the railway through Cape Breton. We cannot always tell what is the intention of this Government when they place motions of this kind upon the notice papers, for notwithstanding that they sometimes pass such resolutions as this, they do not always expend the money or build the road. I remember distinctly that, previous to the time Mr. Mackenzie came into power, a resolution of this kind was passed, and an amount appeared in the Estimates year after year, to extend the railway to a deep water terminus at Halifax; but the Government of the hon. gentleman never built the road. It was left to the Mackenzie Government to extend the railway into Halifax. It may be that this resolution may pass and a sum may be placed in the Estimates to extend the railway to Louisburg; but it may be left to the Liberal party when they come into power to build that road. The adoption of such a resolution by Parliament, at the instance of the Government of the day, is no evidence of the fact that this Government will extend the railway through Cape Breton. I believe it will rest with the Opposition when they come into power to carry out what seems to be the policy of this Government. I need hardly say that it was the policy of the Mackenzie Government when it was in power to extend the railway to Louisburg or Sydney. They gave evidence of that intention by the fact that when in power they enacted a law by which the Pictou and Truro Branch was voted for that purpose; and in connection with the Local Government they extended the railway from New Glasgow, eighty miles towards Cape Breton, until it touched that island. The Mackenzie Government was defeated in 1878, and up to this time eight years have passed and not one foot of railway has been built or any attempt made to construct the railway further into Cape Breton. I am glad therefore that this Government has at last after eight years of waiting by the people of Cape Breton been aroused to a sense of their duty by moving this resolution. I venture to say that if it had not been for the opposition brought by myself and other hon. members on this side of the House to another resolution which was passed in this House this Session, we should have heard nothing about the Government proposing such a resolution as this to extend the railway to Louisburg or Sydney. Whoever heard hon. members from Cape Breton Island pressing on the Government the building of that railway? None of those members ever did so unless it was in answer to something said by the Opposition. Then, in order to defend themselves those hon. gentlemen found fault with the Local Government for not expending money in extending the railway to those points, thus excusing this Government for their neglect or refusal. But the Government found that the people of Cape Breton had become incensed at the fact that they were building a railway to Pictou, where a railway is already in operation and where another railway is not much needed, and had called meetings and denounced the Government for not doing something towards extending the railway to Louisburg; and from the fact that the Opposition raised the question in the House when the extension of the railway to Pictou was before it,—the people of the island in support of the Opposition here called meetings, manifested their feelings through the medium of those meetings, and the Government felt they either had to carry out this work or Cape Breton would be lost to them at the next election. Therefore this Government has no right to think they are deserving of being so profusely praised as they were praised by the members for Cape Breton Island; I do not think they deserve the thanks of the House or of the people of Cape Breton for being forced, after occupying their seats for eight years, to do that which they should have done several years ago. I maintain that the Opposition in this House have a right to at least a share of the credit with the members from that island and from the people that such a resolution as the present is being discussed and is likely to pass. Three years ago when the Minister of Railways was expounding his policy in the House—his policy of taking over the Eastern Extension Railway—he pointed out the fact that the Local Government of Nova Scotia had not the means to extend railways in that Province, in Cape Breton or anywhere else in Nova Scotia. He pointed out that in Provinces more wealthy than Nova Scotia the Local Governments were unable to do much towards extending railways, and therefore he pointed out the reason why a bargain was made with Nova Scotia to retain the Truro and Pictou branch and take over for a certain sum the Eastern Extension Railway leading to Cape Breton, that this Government were by that act assuming the duty of extending the railway further into Nova Scotia; and I am glad that now, after the late Minister of Railways, Sir Charles Tupper, had announced on the floor of the House that the Government were anxiously desirous of securing this railway communication, the present Government should seek to carry out the policy enunciated by him. The hon. member for Richmond, N. S. (Mr. Paint) had a good deal to say about routes and different harbors. I do not know that it matters much to me, so far as I am concerned it matters but little, upon which route the Government builds the road. I do not, however, think this is the proper time to discuss the route, from the fact that we are not in possession of the necessary information to enable the House to decide upon the route which should be adopted. I believe there are three routes proposed. The hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) says there are only two. I always thought there were three—southern, northern and central routes. It matters not to me, at all events, which route may be selected; but I think with the hon. member for Richmond that the road should be built on that line which would be in the interests of the whole Island of Cape Breton, and in the interest, if possible, of the whole Dominion. The hon. member for King's, N.S. (Mr. Woodworth), said that this road through Cape Breton was of importance to other Provinces as well as to the Province of Nova Scotia and the Island of Cape Breton. Well, I agree with him that it might have been of interest to all the Provinces, but I question very much if now it will be of much interest to the other Provinces or to the Upper Provinces, at any rate. Sir, if this Government had built the Short Line Railway from Montreal to St. John or Halifax upon the shortest and most direct route then it would have been of vast interest to the people of Ontario and Quebec that this road should be built, for then they would have had a direct short through route to the most eastern seaport in the Dominion of Canada. But as the Government has adopted a different route for the Short Line, a route which carries the traffic to Bangor and other ports in the State of Maine, I do not think the argument of the hon. gentleman amounts to much. As I have said, hon. members of this House are all agreed that this road should be built, and I cannot understand, therefore, why it is that the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) should court opposition. I do not think he wants opposition, although in his speech he seemed to wish that somebody would really oppose it. For my own part I have always been in favor of extending a road through the Island of Cape Breton. It should have been done many years ago, and I am only too glad to congratulate the people of the Island of Cape Breton upon the fact that there does seem to be a prospect of the island receiving a railway at some day not in the very distant future. I shall have much pleasure in voting for the resolution.

Mr. KAULBACH. As I see the desire of this House is to shorten all debates, in order that the Session may close, and the representatives get to their respective homes as early as possible, I shall not prolong this discussion more than to offer a few words, especially as the subject has been so fully explained by the hon. members for King's and Richmond. I may say that I fully endorse the position the Government has assumed in complying with the wishes of the deserving people of Cape Breton for a railway from Canso to Louisburg or Sydney—a work most essential, but neglected, overlooked, or unfairly recognised, a request frequently made to other Governments but without anything being done. Now that it is about to assume some tangible shape, with the sure and certain hope of being carried to completion, we find hon. gentlemen opposite desirous as usual of offering obstructions. This road should not be characterised as a local work, when it really is not, but a part of our transcontinental road, an extension of that gigantic structure, the Canadian Pacific Railway, stretching from Burrard Inlet on the waters of the Pacific, in British Columbia—represented in part by our illustrious friends Homer and Shakespeare—to the waters of the Atlantic with Louisburg or Sydney as the extreme eastern terminus. This road, when completed—as was graphically described by the hon. member for King's—will materially shorten the route from the Old World to the United States, or across the continent by the Canadian Pacific Railway to China and Japan. Beside, the stowage capacity for coal, that would be used in a longer passage to New York or some other American port, can be occupied in freight, not only thereby affording a saving to the ship in the low price of coal at the pit's mouth, but a benefit to the miner or vendor of coal at the same time. As this paternal government is expending large grants of money, in the shape of subsidies, in the eastern part of the Province of Nova Scotia, I would remind them that not a dollar has been expended in the western part of that Province—none west of Halifax. Now there are roads in the west, already commenced, upon which large amounts of money have been expended, and passing over fine agricultural country, well timbered and abounding in minerals, both rich and abundant, but struggling for want of aid. There is, notably, the Nova Scotia Central Railway, formerly known as the Nova Scotia, Nictaux and Atlantic Central, which starts from Middleton, on the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, and terminates at Lunenburg, on the waters of the Atlantic. A memorial has been presented to the Government, this Session, strongly supported by my hon. friends from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, for aid to the Nova Scotia Central Railway, and I trust the Government will not be unmindful of our needs, but will give us the same privileges and benefits, in the shape of railway facilities and aid, as have been, and are now being, extended to the east. It is not only a privilege, but a right, to which we are equally entitled.

Mr. MILLS. I understood from the approval that the First Minister gave to the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Paint) that he, at all events, was of the opinion that there was but one route instead of two which could by any possibility occupy the attention of the Government. When the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Paint) declared that the eastern terminus of the road must be Louisburg and not Sydney, I understood that the First Minister approved of that opinion. He gave his assent to that opinion and, that being the case, I suppose we are to understand that in voting for this resolution we are to get a road upon one particular line. Surely the hon. gentleman is not going to be like the old hunter that bent his gun to shoot around a hill—surely he is not bending this railway route all around the Island of Cape Breton so as to catch votes in every constituency of that island. Surely the hon. gentleman has the courage of his convictions, and when he directs his colleague to come down and ask this House for an appropriation for a railway, he has first ascertained what are the merits of that road, its probable cost, the difficulties in the way and where he ntends to build it. Surely the First Minister does not come and ask the House for an appropriation to build a road which is declared to be of national importance without knowing what particular road he is going to build. He certainly is not in that position, and I think it would be only proper, before the House is asked to approve of this resolution, that the hon. gentleman should leave us in no doubt upon that question. From the hasty inspection I have been able to give to the plan of the route and the reports of the surveyors, I see that the line of the two routes is common for four or five miles. I suppose the Government will hardly undertake to build those four or five miles before the elections, and leave the remainder of the route to be determined after the elections are over. I suppose they have determined already, and that the hon. First Minister will put the House in possession of their determination. I think that would be only candid on the part of the Government. It may be that this House has fallen to the condition of simply being a registering body to register the decrees of the Government; but after all, it would not be undignified on the part of the Government, notwithstanding the humble position which Parliament has assumed of late, if they would communicate to Parliament what their intentions are in this particular, and also if they would tell us when they expect this work will be begun, and what length of time will be occupied in completing it. We know that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have constructed an immense stretch of railway in a very short time. Surely the Government can push forward this work with some expedition, if not with the same expedition; surely the hon. the First Minister will not do the country, and that particular portion of it, an injury by unnecessarily protracting the period over which this work is to extend. I think, before we declare that resolution carried, which, I suppose, under existing circumstances is only a matter of form, the hon. gentleman should also go through the form of informing the House what the intentions of the Government are.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman says that after the approval I showed of the speech of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Paint), I ought to make an explanation. I did not say a word that I am aware of, except when some gentlemen were interrupting a little, when I said in my humble way that he should have a hearing. I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by speaking of the approbation I gave. But the hon. gentleman says we ought to declare where the terminus of this road will be before we ask the House to adopt the resolution. Well, I can look back and say, if the hon. gentleman can tell me what decision the late Government came to, when they asked us to vote money for the Canadian Pacific Railway, as to where the terminus of the railway should be, whether at Bute Inlet, Burrard Inlet, or somewhere between the two, or at Fort Simpson, then I can tell him what our decision is.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman seems to forget that on that occasion Parliament had entered into a contract with British Columbia, and had agreed to build a road within ten years to terminate somewhere on the Pacific Ocean. I am not aware that there was any such agreement in this case; there is no particular contract made for the construction of this road, and no arrangement with any Province that it shall be built as a condition of union. The hon. gentleman proposes to build this railway as a great commercial undertaking, with the view especially of promoting the interest of the people of Cape Breton, and also for the general advantage of Canada, as the terminus of a great international highway; because we are told it is to be a railway, not only for the people of Canada, but for the continent. Now, the hon. gentleman, having resolved to build a work of such importance, surely he knows where it is going to be built to. The Island of Cape Breton is not an unknown land as was the country extending from the Mattawan to the Pacific Ocean. There is no analogy between the case of this road and the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and the hon. gentleman will find that that is after all a very poor excuse for not giving the House the information it is entitled to with regard to this railway. The hon. gentleman says he did not approve of what the hon. member for Richmond said. The hon. gentleman was perhaps not aware of the extent to which he expressed his approbation; the approval he gave was quite marked; and I thought it was only fair to the House that that approval, which he expressed consciously or unconsciously, should be expressed publicly in the House; and, especially, would it be fair to the hon. members who are here from Cape Breton.

Resolution concurred in, and Committee rose and reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the report be received now.

Mr. BLAKE. To-morrow. It is about $1,700,000, is it not?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is no money in it.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry there is no money in the railway, but we have to vote it for all that.

BAIE DES CHALEURS RAILWAY COMPANY.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider certain proposed resolutions (page 1445) respecting the subsidy to the Baie des Chaleurs Railway.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. Explain.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. By this resolution the Government is not asking more money than was voted by Parliament during past Sessions, but ask power to distribute or adjust it in a different way. The intention of Parliament was, in previous legislation, that the Government should have a branch line of twenty miles built from Metapediac towards Paspebiac. The Government tried to have that executed in accordance with the vote of Parliament, and called for tenders, receiving three. The first was from a person named A. Picard, St. Roch, Quebec, for $295,000; the second was from McCarron & Cameron, $428,000; and the next was from R. P. Cook, Brockville, $450,000. The amount of money voted by Parliament was $300,000, so that the first tender was the only one that came within this tender. We made efforts to find Mr. Picard, but no such person was to be found, and as the other two tenderers were, one $128,000 over and above the amount voted, and the second $150,000 over the amount voted, neither of the tenders was accepted. The Baie des Chaleurs Company offered to the Government to undertake the construction of these twenty miles for the amount of the subsidy, $300,000, and with the understanding and agreement that they would, at the same time, undertake to build the balance of the eighty miles further, or 100 miles altogether. They would build the first twenty miles, receiving $300,000 voted by Parliament; and the $3,200 that had been voted previously by Parliament for the whole distance of 100 miles, to be applied to the eighty miles remaining, that is to say, that the $3,200 per mile which had been voted for the first twenty miles, were to be applied to the second twenty miles, with the $3,200 already applicable to them, making $6,400 per mile; and that the balance of sixty miles remaining would receive the vote of $3,200 per mile as fixed by the Act of Parliament.

The $300,000 for the twenty miles to be paid to the company as the work progressed, or every four or five miles as the work would be completed. Thus the Government, by those two agreements with the company, believe that they will secure, first, the construction of the first twenty miles for the amount voted by Parliament, $300,000, and at the same time the building of the eighty miles following. That is the object of this resolution.

Mr. BLAKE. When it was proposed to us on a former occasion to vote $15,000 a mile for the twenty miles of railway, that was voted upon the statement of the Minister that we should become proprietors of the road. With that $300,000, the cost of construction, we would own the road; it was to be a valuable feeder to the Intercolonial Railway, and the Minister stated, upon my enquiry, he was satisfied it could be built for the money. The hon. gentleman says he does not propose now to alter the condition of things by asking for any more money, but he proposes to give away the railway which we were to have for the money we voted. I presume the hon. gentleman will explain why.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first reason is we called for tenders and could not obtain tenderers who would build the road for the amount of money voted. On the contrary, the tenderers, McCarron & Cameron, asked $128,000 more or nearly 50 per cent., and the second tenderer asked exactly 50 per cent. or $150,000 more, while the Baie des Chaleurs Company are disposed to build it for the sum voted by Parliament, but they say the road must belong to them. The Government will, therefore, be relieved of keeping up the road and working it and of the expenses connected with it, and it will not deprive the country benefiting by that road to the extent that it will be a feeder of the Intercolonial Railway. Thus the Government will have the road built without the expense of keeping it in order, and have an additional 100 miles of railway as a feeder to the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. BLAKE. The arguments vary according to the circumstances. When we were asked a little while ago to vote $15,000, we were told it was a very good thing we should own the railway. Now the Minister says: I cannot do that; I told you we could build the road at $15,000 per mile—I speak not of him personally, because it was the Minister of Railways who made the statements on behalf of the Government at that time—we told you it could be built for this money and it would be a good thing to hold it; but he says now: I was mistaken, I will give you a good reason—it cannot be built for this money; the only tender which was within the limit we have been so unfortunate as not to find, and the only tenders that could be found were beyond the parliamentary limit. He says there will be a great advantage in this because we will be relieved from the expense of running the road, so it appears that the railway we are assisting is not going to pay its running expenses, because he says it would cost us something to run it. The net result is that $6,200 a mile is to be given for the 100 miles.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $6,400 for the twenty miles, and then $3,200.

Mr. BLAKE. The aggregate is 100 miles—$300,000 plus $320,000, that is $620,000, and the road is 100 miles long, so I say that the net result is that we are to pay $6,200 a mile for that railway which is to be owned by the company. That is about double the subsidy according to the general rate which is given. Will the hon. gentleman explain the circumstances now differing, the Government being no longer the happy proprietors of this twenty miles of railway. The hon. gentleman smiles as if it was a most desirable thing to get rid of the railway. From what we have heard, I should almost have expected to see a respectable tear trickling down each side of his nose; but I forgot—his friends are going to have it after all; it will be all in the family, I mean the political family; the hon. gentleman—not as a Government, but the happy family opposite—will be the proprietors. They are to have $6,200 a mile, nearly twice as much as the other happy proprietors of other fortunate enterprises of this kind aided by the Government are to have. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain why double the normal subsidy of $3,200 is to be given to this road, and also who are the component parts of this railway company.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman should not have appeared so much astonished to-day about the amount of money for this railway, because I think he might remember that, when we proposed to give $300,000 for this branch road from Metapediac towards Paspebiac for twenty miles, he said: What is the use of asking $300,000 for these twenty miles? Why do you not at once apply them to the whole road, the 100 miles, because really that is the object; it cannot be anything else; it must be for the object of not only building twenty miles but extending it 100 miles, and thus giving a large feeder to the Intercolonial Railway. There was good reason in that. The hon. gentleman saw that by building twenty miles of this road we might secure 100 miles, and, though he did not tell us he approved of our policy—of course he would not—nevertheless there was something in his argument which showed we were right in asking $300,000 from Parliament for this branch, and to-day he should rejoice that really we are coming to what he thought in the beginning, that by this means we would secure 100 miles of a railway, not only twenty miles of a branch but a feeder of 100 miles to the Intercolonial Railway, and thus obtain the opening up of a large section of the country, benefiting not only that part of the country but the country at large, because it will be benefiting the Intercolonial Railway by that large feeder, without expending a dollar more than the money that was in the first instance voted for the road and in the second instance voted for the branch. Thus, we are not misapplying the money; we are not asking a dollar more; but, by remodelling the grants made by Parliament, we will secure the building of the 100 miles, and we hope the House will sanction the proposal we are making now to Parliament. The hon. gentleman asked me what are the component parts of the company. It is the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company. It is a company that is incorporated, that is chartered, and that is ready to go on with the building of the railway. I have no doubt that, if these resolutions are sanctioned by Parliament, the road will be built for the money and will be worked, and we shall have that company to work the road. A branch of twenty miles would not pay the Intercolonial Railway to work, but a railway of 100 miles may be worth the while of a company to work, and I think it is the best bargain, the best arrangement we could make. I have no doubt that, if these resolutions are adopted, we shall see the road built within two years.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman any account of who the stockholders are in the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, I have not the statement here.

Mr. BLAKE. But he has it, I suppose; there is such a statement?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think I could have it for the hon. gentleman before concurrence, or on the second reading.

Mr. BLAKE. As to what their subscriptions are and how much they have paid up?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, I will be able to say that.

Mr. BLAKE. I understood also that it was suggested to the hon. gentleman that the tenders and correspondence about the tenders were to be seen in this matter.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, if there is any correspondence, certainly I will bring it down.

Mr. BLAKE. I was written to to say there was some correspondence, and there are the tenders themselves. Of course, we have the company's tender.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, the tenders. I put the other documents before the House to-day.

Committee rose and reported.

THE FRANCHISE ACT.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 138) respecting the Electoral Franchise and the Dominion Elections Act, 1874.—(Mr. Thompson.)

(In the Committee.)

On the amendments.—(Mr. McCarthy.)

Mr. WELDON. It seems to me that while, perhaps, there is no objection to the principle of this amendment, it should not be applied to the present revision. Some of these lists are nearly or quite completed, and we would require entirely new machinery for the purpose of carrying this out. I think it would be far better to let it remain as it is this year on the present qualification, and then adopt the principle of this amendment for future revisions. If we adopt it now it will create endless confusion and produce want of uniformity. In some of the electoral districts, the revision is almost completed.

Mr. McCARTHY. How is it in your county?.

Mr. WELDON. The judge has fixed the 28th June for the final revision.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is the earliest court?

Mr. WELDON. No; it is the last, I think. If persons are to come in under these new sections we have got to have a new preliminary list, because surely you are not going to deprive a voter of the right to reject, he must have a certain time to give notice of rejection. We are now in the midst of the courts being held throughout the Dominion. My hon. friend from Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Irvine), says that in his county the final revision commenced on the 18th May, and will finish on the 1st June. Now, in these counties, parties will be deprived of the right of rejecting unless you re-open and revise, and extend the time for making the lists. I might suggest that with regard to certain classes who have been spoken of as the persons who would be deprived of their votes, such as ministers, bank clerks and schoolmasters, a very simple mode could be adopted by which these parties should not be deprived of their votes, that is by transferring them, by simple machinery, from the registry of the electoral district in which they are registered to the electoral district to which they may remove, by a certificate or a statutory declaration on their part that their residence has been changed. By these resolutions we are opening up entirely new classes of voters, and while it may be very proper to extend the franchise to these classes, the extension should not interfere with the present list, because, as I said before, not only will it create great confusion, but unless we substitute new machinery and open up the lists, it will require a new preliminary list to be published, or it will prevent parties from objecting and from saying that parties who are not entitled to vote should not go on the list. The result will be that persons who have not the requisite qualifications may, in many instances, get upon the list, and there is no way of getting their names removed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Mr. MITCHELL. I must confess that I am not surprised to find the Government coming back with an amendment to their Bill of last year. It will be recollected that I suggested at that time that we should simplify the whole Bill, simplify the working of it and reduce the expense and the trouble generally to a minimum, by adopting the simple rule of manhood suffrage. That, however, was not done, and I presume it would not be quite in order for me to make a proposition of that kind just now. At any rate it would be useless, after the opinions the Government have expressed, and after the staunch support they have received from the gentlemen behind them, who support them so faithfully and dutifully. But I think it will be in order for me to ask for some information from the Administration. I received to-day this interesting lot of documents concerning my own county. What I am to do with them I do not know.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read them.

Mr. MITCHELL. There are about 11 volumes of them, and I think it would take about two years to read them, so if the House will excuse me I will dispense with reading them just now. I simply brought them here to ask the Government what I shall do with them, for I do not know. It is utterly impossible for any man to go through them and do anything with them; it would take a man two years to study them up. I have simply brought them here as a practical illustration of the complete folly of that whole Electoral Franchise Bill.

Mr. EDGAR. I see the hon member for East Toronto (Mr. Small) is sitting beside the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), who is introducing these clauses, and I see that he takes an active interest in carrying these amendments. Well, I am not surprised at that, if what I heard about two months ago is correct. I was informed in Toronto, about two months ago, that in the constituency of East Toronto a large number of tenants' names had been put on the preliminary list who had not been in possession a year before the 1st of last January, and when the revising officer's clerk was asked how it came that these names were left on, he said they were not qualified now, but that an Act was going to be introduced this Session which would qualify these men. Well, I do not know whether that is the case or not. I was told it two months ago, and if it were not the fact the person who told it had an extraordinarily good idea of what was going to be done this Session. If that be not the case I am sure the hon. member for East Toronto will be able to explain, and, if it is the case, I can understand his interest in the matter. But whether it be the case or not in that particular constituency, it is an exceedingly unfair thing to bring before the House a new qualification in the middle of the trials of those lists. The preliminary courts have all been held, and it is quite possible that a great many representations made to the hon. gentleman have been made by people who felt that they would prepare themselves at least for such an amendment, if it were introduced; but certainly no notice has been given to this side of the House before the amendments were put on the paper the other day, that any intention of doing this was in the hon. gentleman's mind. However proper it might be to apply these changes to the Franchise Act it should only be done when each party has the same opportunity as the other of taking advantage of the law. I quite agree that it is important that it should be done, if it is only done without having an ex post facto effect, but in the advanced position of the work of revision I am sure the hon. gentleman will see that it is exceedingly unfair to make these changes in the law as applied to 1886.

Mr. SMALL. The hon. gentleman has just made a statement which is entirely new to me. I knew nothing at all about the matter as to which he has spoken. He seems to have a peculiar faculty of finding out things which nobody else knew anything about.

Mr. EDGAR. And proving them too.

Mr. BLAKE. I have heard of three different constituencies in which certain classes of voters were added, and allowed on preliminary revision, upon the statement that at this Session of Parliament these classes would be made legal voters, although they were not legal voters now. One of these constituencies was the constituency of East Toronto, where, as I have seen it stated, an officer connected with the association of the political party to which I belong, on enquiring how it came that a large number of persons had been added, who were not qualified under the law, and were allowed by the judge, was told by the judge's clerk that they would be made legal voters this Session, and were added accordingly. The practical result is, that they have been added on the side of that political party which controls the legislation of this country, because they were to be made legal, while the other party, which does not control the legislation, and has not access to the information which the hon. member for East Toronto thinks is the peculiar property of my hon. friend from West Ontario, not having proposed to put on persons who are not qualified under the existing law, are to be placed at a disadvantage under the proposed legislation. Even if there is time, as there is not in many cases, even if the final revision were postponed, even if a second revision was had, the process of having them put on at the final revision will be made more expensive and costly to them, while, as I have said, the other party have them put on at the preliminary revision, because they were to be put on by the legislation which is now before the House.

Mr. SMALL. Does the hon. gentleman think that the member for East Toronto is responsible for the revising officer?

Mr. BLAKE. I did not say so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. At any rate the party to which the hon. gentleman belongs is responsible for just such acts of infamous fraud.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not see why the hon. gentleman should use such language.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Because it is so.

Mr. McCARTHY. If the facts were so, I do not think mere rumor justifies a member in his place in characterising the conduct of a gentleman as fraudulent, or characterising him as guilty of infamous fraud, because one or two members have heard such a rumor. So far as this is concerned, I think it is impossible that any such rumor can be true. I think it is quite impossible, in so far, at all events, as I am concerned—or in so far as I heard of any intention to make those changes at the date spoken of—that the revising officer was called on to decide whether these names should be put on the list. Therefore, I think the hon. gentleman should withdraw a statement which is certainly not calculated to do him credit, bearing in mind the position that these revising officers occupy. Now, I propose that we shall deal with this question irrespective of when it is to come into force; but my own notion about it is that it should go into force for the purpose of the present list, but without any advantage to one party more than another, and in such a way that all parties should have a fair and full opportunity of placing on the list, without opening up the whole of the lists, those who by this amendment will obtain the franchise. Now, I think that could be done in a very simple way. My proposition is that, if the amendments are adopted, some day, say at the middle or end of July, a court shall be held for the purpose of putting such persons upon the list—one court i each electoral division, where these persons, consisting mostly, as we have heard, of ministers of certain denominations, school teachers and others should be added to the final list. Now, if one such court is held and sufficient notice is given of the holding of that court no great injury will be done—no injury can be done to any political party or to any individual.

Mr. WELDON. How will you obtain the names?

Mr. McCARTHY. The same as now.

Mr. WELDON. There is no preliminary list.

Mr. McCARTHY. Not after this year, but any person taking an interest can easily find out the names.

Mr. WELDON. How can you find them out?

Mr. McCARTHY. How do you find them out now?

Mr. WELDON. By the preliminary list.

Mr. McCARTHY. Notice is given and is lodged with the revising officer.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). And he will not show it.

Mr. McCARTHY. He is bound to show it.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I know cases where he does not show it.

Mr. McCARTHY. Do you mean to say that the notice given of the final list is not public property?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I know it has been refused.

Mr. McCARTHY. If this is the case there are means by which the revising officer's clerk can be compelled to show it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What clause of the Bill compels him to show it?

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not think it requires a clause. The very object of the notice is to afford information. That notice is undoubtedly public property and any person can go to the clerk and demand to see the notice and ascertain who requires to make application to be placed on the list. Now in a great majority of cases these courts have not yet been held. I had a notice to-day of one riding where the court is not to be held until the month of July, and where the preliminary list is not yet published; and I venture to say that is the case in many electoral divisions, though in some no doubt they are announced. In all those cases where there is yet time to give two weeks notice they can apply, but in others let there be one court held in each electoral division where application can be made.

Mr. WELDON. In some cases in our Province a man would have to go fifty miles to find out.

Mr. McCARTHY. It does not follow that a man would have to travel that distance to find out, and I do not think the hon. gentleman would recommend him to do so. He can write to some person interested at the chief office of the revising officer and ascertain in that way.

Mr. WELDON. He may live fifty miles away.

Mr. McCARTHY. That does not prevent his writing and enquiring. Of course if hon. gentlemen desire to prevent these classes, such as Methodist ministers and school teachers——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. McCARTHY. If they desire to prevent these classes from being put on the list they can oppose it, but they must take the responsibility of doing so.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman knows very well that when the matter was discussed the other evening, the Opposition as a unit agreed that the principle was a good one. The only discussion was about the application of the principle and the impossibility of doing fair, even-handed justice to both parties and to the public themselves, if this principle should be applied at the present revision. I speak of the present revision, because, although in the hon. gentleman's Province that revision may not have taken place, in the outlying Provinces those final revisions are now taking place. The hon. gentleman imagines that this whole Dominion consists of one or two Provinces of Ontario.

Mr. McCARTHY. No, only one.

Mr. DAVIES. He argued the whole question the other night from that standpoint. He imagines that if his proposition could be carried out in Ontario, it must, therefore, be acceptable to the whole Dominion. As to the Maritime Provinces, as I said before, while accepting the principle of his amendment, as we accepted it last year and urged that it should then be introduced into the Bill at the proper time, it would be unfair to attempt to enforce it now upon the county court judges when some of those revisions are in actual process of completion, and, as some of my hon. friends behind me say, are in some places actually completed. I have notices at the present moment from some of the ridings in the Maritime Provinces for these courts, and if the hon. gentleman looks at the newspapers of those Provinces he will find that the final revisions are being held now. Yet the hon. gentleman thinks it right to enfranchise a particular class at one end of the country and deny that right to the same class at the other end of the country. We would like to know what view the Government take of this measure. Are they prepared to disfranchise certain classes in the Maritime Provinces, while enfranchising them in Ontario to suit the hon. member for North Simcoe? While the principle is a fair one and while I hope to see it adopted, I trust it may not be carried out quoad the present revision, because, as I have said, in some cases, the revisions have taken place while in others they are now taking place or will take place in a few days. I think we should have a very clear and distinct statement from the Government on this point before the debate goes any further.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It will not do for the hon. member for North Simcoe and his friends to attempt to saddle upon the Opposition the responsibility of trying to exclude clergymen and school teachers from the franchise. We attempted to have those classes admitted to the franchise during the discussion last year, and if we did not succeed it was entirely owing to the hon. member for North Simcoe and his friends. The hon. gentleman cannot shirk that responsibility or shift it upon the shoulders of the Opposition. We always were and we still are in favor of Methodist ministers and other clergymen entitled to vote having the vote. We are in favor of farmers' sons and owners' sons and income voters having the franchise, and if any of them are excluded from the right to vote the responsibility must rest on the right shoulders and they are not ours. The hon. gentleman appears to think it is the simplest matter in the world to interfere with the electoral franchise just in the middle of the completion of the voters' list. In some counties they are completed, in others they will be completed long before the Bill becomes law, and in nearly all of them before the end of June. I always notice that when there is a purpose to be served, the hon. member for North Simcoe is ready to suggest the simplest remedy in the world. His suggestion is now that there should be another court of revision, mark you, held one in each electoral district, at which those who will be admitted to the franchise by this Bill shall be entered on the list. And the hon. gentleman thinks there is no difficulty, or work, or annoyance, or expense about that. We know that there are electoral districts over a hundred miles long. Will there be no trouble and expense if there is only one court held in such electoral districts—if men have to come, perhaps from the extreme end of a county to the revising officer to have their names put on the list? The hon. gentleman knows that the chances are ten to one that men living in outlying districts will not know anything of this law until the 15th of July is past. How are they to know that they are entitled to have their names entered on the list? We know now what this Franchise Act means. We predicted last Session that it would involve an enormous expense, not simply to the country, but to individual candidates, and to those who take an active part in elections. Our predictions have been verified. The Secretary of State was afraid the other might to tell us what the expense of printing was. Those of us who take part in politics know to our sorrow what labor, trouble, annoyance and expense to the candidates, or to the political organisations in the different districts, are caused by this measure. We know that every electoral district where the voters' list has been properly revised, is to be scanned, from farm to farm, from lot to lot, from concession to concession, before the information can be obtained on which to apply to have the names put on the preliminary list, or to have an appeal carried to the court of review. I appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite if they have not felt the burden, though perhaps not to the same extent as members on this side; and yet, with that experience before us, the hon. member for North Simcoe asks us to undergo the same labor and expense again. His amendment is not confined to clergymen and school teachers; if it were, the expense would be very small, because we could locate them pretty easily. But it applies also to the tenant, the income voter, the farmer's son, and owner's son; and it will be necessary for political parties to do all the work over again which they thought they had completed some time ago. Having undergone all that labor and expense, I at all events do not feel disposed to undergo it again or to ask my friends to undergo it again. It may be said that this labor and expense are not necessary. I say they are necessary. Under this proposition, if you want to get a tenant, a farmer's son, or an owner's son on the voters' list, you will have to undergo all the labor again. I know that in my own county there is not a single municipality, town or village in which the work already done will not require to be done again, unless the matter is to be left entirely to one political party. There is no scheme the hon. gentleman can devise that will make his amendment perfectly satisfactory in that respect. The odium and the responsibility of depriving some ministers and school teachers of the franchise must rest on the shoulders of hon. gentlemen opposite, and the hon. member for North Simcoe cannot shift that responsibility to members sitting on this side of the House. Now, I did suspect the other night that there was a political object in this proposition. My hon. friend from West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) has indicated what the object is. The hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Small), simple, childlike, and bland, never heard of it. Such a thing could take place right under his eyes, and he never heard of it. Is that the only electoral district in which this has been done? By no means. Some hon. members opposite can afford to have this Bill passed because they know that they have most of the labor done. The revising officers have put those names on the list in the hope that this Parliament would so far forget what its duty is in a free country that it would legalise their act. If the motive was a proper and a good motive—I do not intend to impute any motives; but if the principle of this Bill is a sound principle, I would like to know how the hon. member for North Simcoe, who is always so alive to the public interest and so thoroughly patriotic, came to rest on his oars for three months without introducing it. I do not know any Session in which the hon. gentleman has been so regular in his attendance as he has been during this Session; and yet for three months, while he has been thoroughly alive to the importance of giving clergymen and school teachers the right to vote, he did not move in the matter until the Minister of Justice introduced his Bill; and then the hon. member, pure patriot as he is, was actually impelled, in the interest of the ministers and the school teachers, to introduce this resolution in committee. But the hon. gentleman took care not to confine it to ministers and school teachers. He extended it to embrace large classes who ought to have the right to vote, and who ought to have it at the proper time, not at a time when large numbers must necessarily be deprived of it. It is the most one-sided legislation which the hon. member has ever introduced into this Parliament. I do trust that the Minister of Justice will do in this matter what is right and fair, irrespective of political parties, and that he will not lend the sanction of his authority to any proposition of this kind. It is desirable that these classes should have the vote. I go heart and soul with the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) in saying that the only measure that is fair to both parties is one based on manhood suffrage, and I am satisfied we shall not live many years before we shall have that enactment on our Statute-book. If it is proper that these men should have the franchise, let them have it, not in the middle of the revision of the lists, when three-fourths of them have been completed, and before the great mass of the people can have any notice of this provision, but let the law be passed to take effect after this year. But unless you can convince Parliament that no political party or section will be at any disadvantage as compared with another, I say this proposition should not become law.

Mr. CHARLTON. In reference to the statement made by the hon. member for North Simcoe, that the public could have no intimation of the intention of the friends of the Government in introducing this provision, I may say that in the riding of North Norfolk a large number of names were placed upon the list of persons not entitled to be there for the want of a year's residence prior to the 1st January last. There are, I think, from 150 to 200 names on the list of such persons. Whether it was understood that steps would be taken here for the purpose of giving these people votes or not I am not in a position to say, but should this Administration pass the proposed resolutions, all the work that would require to be performed under it by the Conservative candidates has been performed while the Liberal candidates will be at a disadvantage of having to go through the lists and beginning practically all his work over again. We had placed on the lists none but those entitled to votes, and were prepared to appeal against the others; that appeal will be unnecessary and instead we will have to put ourselves to the trouble and incur the expense of going through all the lists again. The practical effect will be to give the Conservative party the advantage of having done all at once the work we will be required to do on two occasions. While I agree that the proposals in the amendment would have been quite proper if brought at the right time, as for instance last Session, yet I must oppose them now because this is not the time to bring them into operation. The lists are practically closed, the work is practically completed, and it will be a hardship and create confusion if the lists must be reopened and all the work done over again. The hon. gentleman says this will apply only to teachers and ministers. I deny it. It will apply to farmers' sons, tenants, income voters and others, who may have acquired a title within the six months, and the number added to the list will be very great. The practical operation of the amendment will entail a serious hardship and will be most unjust. I would be willing to make an exception in the case of ministers and teachers, but among the other classes a great number will be added to the lists, a great amount of labor will have to be undergone and confusion worse confounded will be the result. I hope the hon. gentleman will consent to the adoption of the measure to come into effect on or after the 1st of January next.

Mr. FAIRBANK. The proposition made under these resolutions, if submitted to any municipal meeting throughout the Dominion, would receive an emphatic answer in opposition. The work of revising the lists has been spoken of as being only in the middle, being only half done. It is not in the middle, it is far beyond the middle. It is just on the eve of being concluded. I find that the final revision in my riding commenced on the 28th June, and any appeals affecting that must be made in two weeks. Hence the work entailed under this amendment would have to be done within a few days, before this Bill could become law. This measure has been referred to as one affecting the school masters and clergymen, but neither is spoken of; neither is referred to by name; and the number of those who would go upon the lists would not be 10 per cent. Evidently these school masters and clergymen are simply referred to as a blind. Clergymen, as a class, do not take part in elections, and the number of school teachers who would be disfranchised under the existing law would be very small. The amendment will affect the entire position of the electors under the new franchise with the exception of land owners. Further, when you change the time of tenancy, you change the basis of the right to vote, so that this amendment if passed will disfranchise many who to day are good voters. It not only adds to the list, but strikes off many voters from the list who are now entitled to vote. As to the possibility of reaching the general electorate within the time, that is absurd. The people have become familiar with the law as it is, the work of filling the lists having been begun five months ago, and it is utterly impossible to make them familiar with the law, if changed, in the time proposed. I do not propose imputing motives, but we shall form our own opinions. But I say that this proposal to change the qualifications, after so much labor has been put upon the lists, is simply absurd.

Mr. McNEILL. It seems to me that really the question we have to decide is whether these people ought to be on the list or not?

Mr. MILLS. That is not the point.

Mr. McNEILL. It is very nearly the point at all events.

Mr. DAVIES. How would you deal with Carleton where the lists have already been revised.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. member for North Simcoe has said he would deal with that case by giving them the opportunity of having another court. Now, the question really is just this, I think. It seems to me, as far as I can gather from listening to what has passed on both sides of the House, that we are all agreed that these people should get the benefit of the franchise, and the question just now is whether it can be fairly and equitably arranged between both parties as to whether or not they can be put on the list this year. I think, if there be any way of arriving at a conclusion on that point, which would be so satisfactory to every member of this House, and so satisfactory to these people themselves, we ought to endeavor to arrive at it. The hon. member from Huron has talked about the odium which rests upon this side of the House, or upon that side of the House, in regard to excluding these people. I think that is a matter which we might leave out of consideration altogether.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The hon. member for Simcoe started it.

Mr. McNEILL. I think we might drop that now. If we were to blame last Session, I think hon. gentlemen opposite are to blame this Session. We might come to the question in a business-like and fair manner as between one side of the House and the other. We are all agreed that these people ought to be on the list, and it seems to me, if there be an opportunity given till the 15th July, to get them put upon the list, we ought in some way to be able to arrive at that result satisfactorily. I do not see why, with the political organisations which exist in every riding in this country, it should not be quite easy to give due notice to everyone. Hon. gentlemen opposite have talked about the trouble it would entail. Really, after all, the trouble would only amount to this—supposing each hon. member of this House writes to a few people in his constituency, the whole matter will be known in a few days, and it is only comparatively few, after all, of these men who ought to be electors who have been left off the list, whether you take it so far as the clergy and the school teachers are concerned, or in regard to the other classes, and they will be watching what we are doing here and will be ready to apply at once as soon as they know they have the opportunity of voting. I cannot for the life of me see why we could not arrange this perfectly satisfactorily. The hon. gentleman from Norfolk has spoken about so many names being put on in his constituency, and the hon. member for Huron has spoken about its being a plan, some deep-laid scheme, by which the Conservative party are to obtain some unfair advantage. So far as my own constituency is concerned, there has not been a whisper of anything of the kind. I can state that most conscientiously, and upon my word as a member of this House, and I am quite satisfied that nothing of the kind has ever been intended. We know there has been a petition sent down from some of those whom we wish to have put upon the list, begging that they should have an opportunity of voting, and I do not see why we should not fairly endeavor to meet their views if we can. I cannot see why by the 15th July this matter might not be arranged satisfactorily to all parties. I am satisfied that that is all my hon. friend wishes for, and all that we, on both sides of the House, wish for, and it is all that we ought to wish for. I do not see at all what the difficulty is. Here we are now on the 25th May, and, supposing we are to have till the 15th July to have this matter arranged, surely it can be arranged satisfactorily to all parties. I sincerely hope that hon. gentlemen opposite will try, if they can, to meet the views of my hon. friend with regard to this.

Mr. MILLS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McNEILL. I simply say so. If the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is incapable of receiving the suggestions in the spirit in which it is offered, I cannot help that.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) says—and of course we accept his statement—that nothing has been done in the matter in his constituency. I have no doubt that is true, because he says so, and I should have had no doubt that it was true if he had not said so, because we all know that his constituency was arranged by an Act of Parliament beforehand. It was quite unnecessary to adopt any further manœuvre in North Bruce than was adopted in the Gerrymander Act under the hon. gentleman's inspiration and advice before he became a member of this House.

Mr. McNEILL. I am glad the hon. gentleman withdraws a previous statement he made in regard to that.

Mr. BLAKE. I have no statement to withdraw whatever. The hon. gentleman says it was not done there, and he cannot see that there is any difficulty elsewhere. I have already stated that I have received information positively and peremptorily and decidedly, in reference to one constituency, and in reference to two other constituencies, that the political party with which the hon. gentleman is allied have taken the course of placing large bodies of these persons who are not now entitled to vote upon the lists, that they are there now, and that the political party with which I am associated, acting under the law as it stood has not placed the names of those persons on the list. The two parties are in this position—the names are on the list for the one and they are not on the list for the other, and it would certainly be a matter of great difficulty and hardship for that political party that was not inspired, that was not so happily inspired, to place those names on the list when it was unlawful to put them there, to have now to set to work to put them on the list. It seems to me, however, that we are engaged in a most desultory and unsatisfactory discussion. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) moved his clause, and said he was proposing to introduce some provision which has been the subject of oral discussion for an hour or so, as to a court to be held on some notice at some point in the division. We can never get to a satisfactory decision by considering the matter in that way. The proper course is, if the hon. gentleman is prepared, now in committee, when it is the proper time to consider the details, to give us the details in writing, to move his amendment, and to say what his plan is, we can consider it, and can see how it will answer. Then we will get nearer to the first basis upon which an agreement may be possible—that is, to know what the proposition really is, but to hope in this way, without that proposition before us, to accomplish that justice which the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) is so anxious to have accomplished, that even-handed justice between parties is really out of the question. Let us see what the plan is; let us see what the date which the hon. member fixes is; let us see how it applies to some constituencies in which the final revision will have taken place, perhaps, entirely before that; and to others where the final revision will have taken place in half the districts before that date, leaving the other half still to be dealt with; let us understand the proposal by having it put in black and white, and moved and read at the Table, and then we shall know how to deal with it. That is one thing necessary to arriving at a basis. The next thing is this: This is a Government Bill which is now before us, and this is an amendment on a very important subject. Early in the Session, I enquired of the Government, and that enquiry, which I put on the paper in the usual way, was based on this very information which I had received, because I had received a letter categorically stating the result of an interview with the clerk of the revising officer, and the answer given by the clerk that a large mass of names had been placed on the list not because the judge thought they were those of lawful voters at that time, but because it was intended to make them lawful voters during this Session. For that reason I asked the question, and the answer I received was, as far as I recollect the words of the Minister of Justice, that amendments were under consideration but that it was not at present in contemplation to alter the qualification of voters. The amendment of the Franchise Act comes down in these last days of the Session, and does not contain any proposition to alter the qualification of voters. But as soon as we get to this stage of the Bill, the hon. member for North Simcoe brings forward a proposal to alter the qualification of the voters, which, by an extraordinary coincidence, admits the very class of men who, by this happy inspiration, have been put on in advance on the Conservative side.

Mr. McCALLUM. I would say to the hon. gentleman for North Simcoe, that I hope he has done his duty by bringing this amendment forward. For myself I do not want another court. I know they commence to-morrow the final revision in my county. I would say to him now that if this amendment is passed, I wish he would make it applicable to next year and not to this. That would be my idea; then throw the onus of disqualifying these classes on the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think that gentlemen on this side of the House are prepared to accept all the onus there is in the matter, because it is well known how they strove in favor of these classes last year—successfully on some points—and the country understands that very well. So far as I am concerned, whatever change might take place in the law, I would try to protect my interests and the interests of my county as well as I could. The hon. member who introduced these resolutions says he is not aware that some persons have surmised that local Conservative leaders have been informed that effect would be given to legislation such as this, and have taken advantage of it. If he did not know it before he knows it now. I think it might be a fair appeal to his sense of justice whether, having received that statement from a gentleman whose word he cannot doubt, it is now his duty to press the matter. It seems to me the Minister of Justice, who will attempt, I should judge, to maintain the attributes of justice in the House, at any rate, should not allow the amendments to pass in their present shape.

Mr. WALLACE (York). What class of voters does the hon. gentleman refer to?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The classes that have been spoken of so far have been clergymen and school teachers. Gentlemen on this side of the House could not certainly object to those classes, because the probability is that the large proportion of them vote for the Liberal candidates, as they are a highly intelligent and educated class. It, therefore, cannot be on any grounds of that kind that we object to these amendments. But there need not be any particular onus in this matter at all. All the member for North Simcoe has to do, in my judgment, is to move for a reconsideration of the amendments that were made in section 33 of the new Act of the Minister of Justice, where the word "January" was struck out and the word "June" was placed instead. All we need to do would be to reconsider that clause and strike out the word "June," leaving the Statute as it stood originally "the first day of January." By doing that the gentlemen that he proposes to enfranchise would have the right to vote at the next general election. That makes the Act applicable for the next year after the first January next. But don't let us make any mistake on that. If they cannot vote at the next general election it will be because the Ministry determine that they shall not do it. If the elections do not come on until the time that it is necessary that they should be on the list, there will be another revision of the list; it will be completed, and all these gentlemen's names will be on the printed list. Therefore the whole solution is to be found in making it applicable after the first day of Januany next, and all that is desired to be accomplished will be accomplished, and these gentlemen, whom we are all agreed ought to have the right to vote, can vote at the next election, provided it comes on at the time when it is contemplated in the constitution that, as a rule, a general election should come on. The hon. member for Carleton informs me that the final revision of the list in his county takes place next week, and in some other counties next month. If we adopt these amendments as they stand, no good can be accomplished, and harm might possibly arise.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. member for West Durham desires to know exactly what I proposed. He was not present on Friday night, when this matter was discussed at length, and when we had on both sides almost reached a conclusion, or he would have known more about it. Certainly the hon. member who last spoke has seen new light since Friday night. He was then inclined to adopt the suggestion which was then made, that if provision was made, and ample opportunity afforded to enable these classes of voters to be placed upon the list, both the hon. member for Brant and the hon. member for North Norfolk, who spoke very decidedly, seemed quite willing to accept the amendments.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not think I said that.

Mr. McCARTHY. Certainly he was not so strongly opposed to it as he is to-night. However, I do not desire to press this against the will of the committee. At this late stage of the Session, if that is the opinion of the committee—and my hon. friend from Monck (Mr. McCallum), has expressed the opinion that it is not desirable to open up the list—why, I certainly cannot press it, and I will leave the responsibility upon those who are opposed to it. But, Sir, it is rather hard to find the organ of hon. gentlemen opposite using, in its issue of Saturday last, language of this kind in reference to these proposals:

"The Government show no disposition to remedy the Act's unfair discrimination against school teachers and Methodist ministers, and there may be a reason for the disfranchisement of these people which is not generally perceived by the public. The Methodist ministry and very many of the school teachers of the country are known to be strong supporters of the Scott Act, incensed by the Senate's schemes of mutilation, and disposed to resent the Government's persistent refusal to strengthen the law and undo the mischief wrought by the passage of the defunct Dominion License Act. Here, probably, is the secret of the attempt to deprive the ministers and school teachers of their legitimate weight in the councils of the country."

When the proposition seemed to include these gentlemen, then we have our hon. friends opposite, one and all, getting up and opposing it, on some imaginary theory that a wrong would be done. No person knows better than the hon. member for West Durham, that if time is allowed to enable these people—not very numerous, but still of considerable importance in the community, and who ought not to be disfranchised—to get upon the list, no injustice can be done to either party in any constituency. But, forsooth, my hon. friend who last addressed us—and I am not doubting any hon. member's word—says that because the hon. member for West Durham and one or two others, say they have heard so and so, therefore we ought to accept the rumors they have heard as actual proof of the fact. I know that, so far as I am concerned, I have a good deal to do about the Franchise Act, about the way it is working, and I have had a great deal of correspondence on the subject, and it is because of that correspondence I move in the matter. I am quite certain no idea was formed in my mind, nor so far as I know, in the mind of any other hon. member, to make any other change till long after the time had passed when the preliminary list for East Toronto was revised or, at all events, published. However, what I did propose before, and what I suggest now, is this: Let us deal with these amendments, and when we have dealt with them, let us then determine the time when they will be applicable. If the sense of the House is, as it appears to be, against making the amendments applicable to the present revision, I am not going to prolong the Session or prolong the discussion after the strong opinions expressed, and if hon. gentlemen are still of that view, let the matter stand over and let the responsibility rest on the proper shoulders. In the meantime I cannot very well place the resolution in the hands of the Chairman, because already there is a resolution before the committee. For my part I have not the slightest desire to press these provisions for the present. I think it is a pity that certain tenants will be excluded under the present Act, because we must all remember that tenants have to be in occupation before the 1st of last January or else they cannot vote; and the same provision applies to occupants and to income voters. The difference is this: The tenants who will be in occupation before, say 1st July, will be entitled to be enfranchised under the proposed amendment; occupants will be in the same position and also income voters. Those are the parties who will be excluded if these amendments are not made applicable to the present revision; but it is better they should be made applicable to future revisions, as was said by the hon. member for South Brant.

Mr. VAIL. I am very glad to hear from the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), that he is not disposed to press the amendments. We had a rather extensive debate on the Franchise Bill last year, and it was thought we had obtained a perfect Act, from a Government point of view. It seems that the Act is not quite perfect after all. If I understood rightly, the Government in introducing the Bill last year gave as the reason for their action that they desired uniformity, that a person who had a qualification in Ontario and another person had the same qualification in the Maritime Provinces, they should both be entitled to vote for Dominion representatives. It has been said that in some of the ridings the final revision has already taken place; in some others it will take place in a week or ten days. So far as the riding I represent is concerned, the final revision will be completed by the 25th or 27th of June at the latest. In that district there are six places for holding the court. Now, if the hon. gentleman's amendment is adopted it is provided that one court shall be held in that riding, while the law already provides that six courts shall be held for the final revision in order to correct the present lists. It is quite impossible for our people to attend one court without travelling fifty or seventy-five miles to attend it. It is quite impossible, since the revising court is advertised for certain dates, to give the necessary notices that the amendments would require in order to enable the people to take advantage of the present revision, and it would be quite unjust and unfair to enact a new law that would permit the revising officer to hold but one court in that district. I know in Nova Scotia in a great many districts the final revision will take place before this Bill could be brought into force and acted upon, and I hope the Minister of Justice will consider this matter and not place us, in Nova Scotia, at a disadvantage by allowing this amendment to be carried.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) referred to two weeks; but the hon. gentleman forgets that the notice will be altogether insufficient. Take the mode in which the Act of last year provided.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am not going to press it at present, so it is no use to discuss it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. This is going to destroy the uniformity contained in the Act. In some districts we have courts already held; in other divisions they have not been held.

Mr. McCARTHY. I said I was going to make this applicable to next year, not to the present revision.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I want to speak as to the expense attending it. I think I can induce the member for West Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), and the member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) to sympathise with the efforts I am making. If under this Bill hon. gentlemen opposite would allow every person residing in the country and whose names are upon the assessment roll to vote, it would have done away with the great expenditure now entailed on the country. The county of Simcoe has given nearly $1,000,000 to aid railways; Grey and Bruce have done about the same respectively. Here, however, we are increasing the debt and the expenditure of the people for no purpose whatever except that of perpetuating a party in power. If this sum were applied in reduction of the railway debt in Simcoe, Bruce or Grey there would be some tangible benefit. What benefit are we to derive from this Franchise Act? Hon. gentlemen opposite said we were to have uniformity. The operations of the Act are in no respect uniform; the conditions of the voters are different in different localities, as also has been the decisions of the courts. Uniformity has not been attained. A vast outlay will arise from its operations. In this year, what with printing, holding courts, revising officers, clerks and bailiffs, the cost will not be less than a $1,000,000. In the county of Simcoe it will cost something in the neighborhood of perhaps ——

An hon. MEMBER. Make it $10,000.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Yes, $10,000. Would it not be much better and more to the credit of the hon. member for Simcoe were he to urge that this outrageous expenditure should be applied to the reduction of the debts of the people who have contributed to the railway? Would it not be much better if the hon. member for Bruce were to come down and state to the Government and the people of this country that the money would be much better applied in reducing the burdens of the people in North Bruce than in enforcing a Franchise Act of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. All this expenditure is unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN. Order. The hon. gentleman is going outside of the question before the Chair.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Well, if it is out of order to reduce the burdens of the people, then, of course, I am out of order. If by standing up here to advocate the reduction of the burdens of the people——

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I claim that I am in order.

Mr. THOMPSON. A word of explanation with regard to what was said as to certain things which it was said were being done by the revising officers, in view of some confirmatory legislation. It is true that the hon. member for West Durham, on the 7th of April, asked this question —or rather, the member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) asked this question for him:

"Whether it is the intention of the Government to propose any amendment to the Franchise Act affecting the qualification of any class of voters, during the present Session of Parliament?"

The answer I made was that the Government were considering the matter of amendments to the Act, but that I was not able to say whether the amendments proposed would be of the kind to which the hon. gentleman referred in his question. It is due, however, to those who have brought forward this measure, and probably to the revising officers themselves, to say that not only was no intimation ever given of any change ratifying any act of theirs, by which persons who were not entitled to the franchise should be put on the list, but that no suggestion was made to the Government, as long ago as the time he states they were put on the list, that it was desirable that the Act should be altered in that particular.

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. gentleman add to his statement what the view of the Government is as to the proposal now before the Chair?

Mr. THOMPSON. I did not add anything on that subject, because I thought it was disposed of. My own impression was, as I stated the other evening, that it was desirable that this should be adopted as a matter of principle, but that, as there were serious difficulties in bringing it into operation this year, I desired that the committee should then rise and the matter stand for further consideration. I am still of opinion that it would be attended with great inconvenience to bring it into operation this year, and I am glad the hon. gentleman has withdrawn his proposal, in so far as this year is concerned.

Mr. BLAKE. I am glad to hear that statement, and I think if the Government had spoken earlier we would have saved an hour.

Mr. McNEILL. I wish to say a word with reference to what the hon. member for West Durham was kind enough to remark as to my own constituency. The hon. gentleman did me the grace to say that these names had not been added to the list in North Bruce because it was unnecessary, thereby implying that we would have so added them if we had not thought we were strong enough without them. I think it was a somewhat gratuitous statement for the hon. gentleman to make. I do not think the spirit of the observations I addressed to the House was such as to call for a remark of that kind from him. I think I addressed the committee in a spirit which would have called for the manifestation of a different kind of spirit from the hon. gentleman. However, I suppose it only showed his nature. I do not suppose he meant anything by it. I suppose it was one of those little things, he cannot help, and that being the case, I am perfectly satisfied to pardon any little eccentricities of that kind on his part. I just wish to say with regard to his observations as to the constituency I have the honor to represent, that, when he talks of that constituency having been re-arranged by Act of Parliament, I suppose it was arranged by Act of Parliament just as all other constituencies in the country have been arranged by some Act of Parliament. I say here that the arrangement which was then made, leaving out political considerations altogether, so far as the geographical distribution of the ridings in the county are concerned, and so far as the population is concerned—if you take those two tests—was as good, if not the best, that could be made of the county. When it was to be divided into three ridings, it was the best possible to make, with one exception, and for that exception my hon. friend from Brant is responsible.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, question.

Mr. McNEILL. I am perfectly justified when an obser vation of this kind has been made with reference to the constituency I have the honor to represent——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. McNEILL. I have a perfect right to put myself right in the matter though I leave the matter with the Chairman. I may just say in conclusion that there has been another division of that county made since——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. McNEILL—by an hon. gentleman who, we are sometimes told, is to be the leader of that side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. I would ask the hon. gentleman not to enter into that question.

Mr. McNEILL. I just wish to say that I challenge the hon. gentleman to compare these two divisions.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. As it has been intimated that the hon. gentleman is going to accept the common sense suggestion of the hon. member for Monck not to have his Bill apply to the present list, I do not intend to say a word on the merits of the case. I simply wish to reply to the taunt or the insinuation thrown out by the hon. member for North Simcoe that we on this side of the House were opposed to granting the franchise to those classes. I know the hon. member for North Simcoe was not present very much when the franchise debate was going on last summer. If he had been, or had read the debates and resolutions he must have known—and I think we may take it for granted that he does know—that gentlemen on this side talked for days and nights, and even for weeks, not only to extend the franchise to those parties, but to extend it much further. It comes with a very bad grace from him or from any gentleman on that side to taunt us with restricting the franchise. I notice that the hon. member for North Bruce is also a convert to the same view. I can only say it is a pity that he had not been converted a year sooner, for he might have been invaluable, with his great talents, in helping hon. gentlemen on this side just to secure those very rights he wishes to secure to-day. No, Sir, it is not the case that we are opposed to granting the franchise to those parties, because our action in the past has proved how anxious we were to have the franchise granted to them, but it is from another cause altogether. We read that once on a time, thousands of years ago, certain denizens of a brighter clime came to present themselves one day, and that an individual of another latitude came amongst them disguised, no doubt, as an angel of light. But the cloven hoof was there all the time, and it is because of this newborn zeal on the part of those hon. gentlemen that we fear something of the same kind and that we oppose this measure now. It is because we fear history is going to repeat itself. It is because we know the confusion it will cause and the impossibility, at the present stage of the Act, of accomplishing that which is the desire of all parties to have—a fair voters' list—that we have opposed this particular principle of the amendment.

Mr. EDGAR. Would it not be well for the hon. member for North Simcoe to state in what way he proposes to limit this provision to the future, because as it stands it applies to the Act to-day. Does the hon. member propose to say that it shall not apply to the voters' list of 1886?

Mr. McCARTHY. Something of that kind.

Mr. EDGAR. Would it not be well to state that in the section?

Mr. McCARTHY. No, it had better be put at the end of the Bill, where it can be stated that these clauses shall not come into force until a certain time.

On section 3, sub-section 5,

Mr. McCARTHY. This alters the Act only as to time; instead of saying for a year before the 1st of January, it says for a year before the application.

On section 3, sub section 6,

Mr. McCARTHY. There are two changes here. One change is as to money and money's worth, which provision has heretofore been applicable only to rural districts; it is proposed to make it applicable to cities and towns as well. The other change is, that the residence need not be in the particular electoral district; so long as it is anywhere in Canada, that is sufficient.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman considered the difficulty one revising officer has found in this clause, who points out that money or money's worth does not mean partly money and partly money's worth, and that therefore when the earnings are partly in money and partly in money's worth, there is no franchise? When the hon. gentleman is making the Act perfect, perhaps he had better remove that difficulty.

Mr. McCARTHY. I have not heard of that difficulty before.

Mr. BLAKE. It has been stated in public.

Mr. McCARTHY. This might meet the case:

Earnings in money or partly in money or money's worth.

Mr. BLAKE. I am afraid that would not satisfy Judge Hughes, because if they were all in money's worth, he would decide there was no vote.

An hon. MEMBER. It is all right as it is.

Mr. BLAKE. Judge Hughes says it is all wrong, and unfortunately there is no appeal from him.

Mr. MILLS. We have cases rejected in the handwriting of the judge, in which the party was proved to have the proper income partly in money and partly in money's worth. The words of the section were alternative; and he decided that it must be all of one or all of the other, not part of one and part of the other.

Mr. BLAKE. When you have perhaps 200 persons to construe the law, it is necessary to make it very plain, because, to adopt a phrase of the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), eccentricity is not confined to members of Parliament, but sometimes extends to the judicial bench.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would propose to insert after the words "money's worth," the words "or partly in money or partly in money's worth."

Mr. BÉCHARD. It seems to me that this law will disfranchise some people who, under the old law, had a right to vote. In the Province of Quebec, in the rural districts, there is a class of farmers who, after some time, give up their property to one of their sons, receiving in return an income which is paid out of the products of the farm. The income, as a rule, runs from $100 to $200 a year, the latter being considered a large income. Under this law, these men will be disfranchised, although under our Quebec law they have a vote. I would appeal to the Secretary of State, who knows the circumstance, whether such is not the case.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The greatest number of them are occupants which would give them the right to vote under another clause.

Mr. BÉCHARD. Under the title of occupant, they must receive the benefit of the property they occupy. Suppose they live with their sons and are paid by the sons, they cannot be placed on the list under the title of occupants. Because they do not receive the profits of the farm.

Mr. McMULLEN. Supposing a school teacher lives on the borders of two ridings, and the revision is held at each riding at a different time, the Bill provides that the person should be a resident at the time of revision, so that the school teacher could move to either side of the line where the revision is being held, be registered on the list as a voter, and then when the revision is held on the other side move back again, and be again registered as voter on the other list.

Mr. McCARTHY. That intelligent school teacher ought to get two votes. Residents, the hon. member will understand, does not mean a man merely going across an imaginary line separating two ridings. It means bond fide residence and I don't think we should make a change on that account.

On section 7,

Mr. McCARTHY. This may be open to question and I would like to draw the attention of the committee to it. I have information from different parts of the country that farmers do not always live upon their farms, yet he and his sons are not entitled to be put upon the lists, although the farmer may live only upon the opposite side of the road. On the other side, it is held that too much laxity in this respect would permit a man, who is a farm owner and lives in the city and his sons live with him, to be entitled to be placed on the list.

Mr. MILLS. We discussed this subject last year and we provided for the sons of farmers and the sons of property owners. It seems to me that a clause might be framed providing for the sons of property owners generally without making an unnecessary distinction between farmers' sons and the sons of other owners of real estate. I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to another provision of the law. He here provides that the party shall have a certain qualification in order to go upon the voters' list, but how about his qualification after he has been put on the voters' list? Supposing a farmer's son has been residing on the farm twelve months before he is put on the list, but not twelve months before he seeks to record his vote?

Mr. McCARTHY. That is provided for.

Mr. MILLS. Does the hon. gentleman intend to provide that it shall be continuous qualification?

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. Then that would not be sufficient as the clause stands.

Mr. McCARTHY. But there is another clause.

Mr. MILLS. It would be necessary to provide for it in the law, so that the oath might conform to the provisions of the law.

Mr. McCARTHY. So the oath does. The oath does provide for that. There is no change in that respect. The farmer's son and the owner's son must be living on the property at the time of the election.

Mr. WALLACE (York). I think the clause as it stood before was much better than that proposed. If a man resided in the city of Ottawa and had a farm in the county of Carleton, he would have a vote there himself, but, by this clause, the sons would also have a vote in the county, though owning no property. I think that would be unfair. The clause had better remain as it was.

Mr. FAIRBANK. I see no reason for confining the right of the farmer's son to vote to his living on the farm. The ownership of the property is what gives the right to vote, and I do not see why he should be deprived of the right because he is not living on the farm. I see also that there is no provision in this amendment for the temporary absence of sons.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I agree with my hon. friend on that point. Take a farmer who is living, perhaps, in a small village which is not incorporated, and his sons live with him, but work the farm a mile away from the place, to all intents and purposes they have the use of it, and, although they are not strictly living on the place, as the farmer can vote there is no reason why the sons should not vote.

Mr. WALLACE (York). They would have votes at home as owner's sons.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). They may not. They may live on a small place. The property may not be of sufficient value to qualify them, but they are cultivating the farm. Why should the farmer's son be deprived of the right to vote because for the time being he is not living on the place? There is no reason why he should be deprived of the franchise. I know of one or two cases of that kind, which came under my notice in preparation for the preliminary revision in my constituency. I was of opinion that they were not entitled to vote, and they were not put on the roll, though I could see the hardship of it. There were two or three cases where the farmer lived across the division line between the counties of Huron and Bruce in a comfortable house, but not enough to give all the sons a vote in the one county, but they worked the farm across the road in the other county. Still they were deprived of the vote, though the farmer voted on his house in my county. I think they should be entitled to vote as farmers' sons if they are actually working the farm, though not living on it.

Mr. WALLACE (York). I think in almost every case the house they live in will qualify the farmer and his sons too. It only requires a house and lot worth $450 to qualify the farmer and two sons, and I cannot understand a man owning a valuable farm living in a house not worth $450.

Mr. AUGER. Could not the hon. gentleman make a proviso to give the right to vote to that class that heretofore in the Province of Quebec were voters, the rentiers, spoken of by my hon. friend from Iberville (Mr. Béchard). By this Bill you are disfranchising several thousands of men who have opened this country, who have always lived here, and who, to encourage their sons to stay in the country and do their share in improving it, have given their farms to their sons on condition that the sons should pay them so much a year. Under this law they have no right to vote. An amendment could be put in saying that, if the son has a right to vote if he lives with his father, the father should have the right to vote if he lives with his son, and receives a certain amount of money or provisions during the year. In the Province of Quebec there are thousands of those persons who by this Bill will not have a right to vote who heretofore have possessed that right.

Mr. FAIRBANK. There is an addition in this clause:

"Is a farmer's son not otherwise qualified to vote in the electoral district in which his father's farm is situated."

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes. Before, if the farmer's son had property in another riding, he could not vote as a farmer's son. The object is to allow him to vote as a farmer's son if his property is in another riding.

Mr. EDGAR. I think it extends the franchise to a class that ought to have it.

On section 8,

Mr. MILLS. In the Act as it now stands, step-son or son-in-law may be accounted as a farmer's son, and supposing the step-son or son-in-law is older than the farmer's son, as only one son can qualify, then the step-son or son-in-law will take precedence of the farmer's son. Is that the intention?

Mr. McCARTHY. That would be a hard case.

Mr. McMULLEN. This question was taken up last year and the First Minister promised to bring in a clause to provide for it, but unfortunately it was overlooked. I would suggest that you add a clause to this section that sons shall qualify in the following order. First, the son, second, the step-son, and third the son-in-law.

Mr. McCARTHY. You make no provision for the mother-in-law.

Mr. McMULLEN. I know a case in my own riding where a step-son actually cut the son out because he is the oldest, and under the law he may claim a vote.

Mr. EDGAR. I think there is a little change here. In the original Act the father was qualified to vote, and it is amended by saying the father must be qualified and be registered as a voter.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is the same thing. A man has to be registered as a voter before he votes.

Mr. EDGAR. He may be qualified to be registered, and may not be registered. Under the Act as it now stands, the father need not be a registered voter; under the old Act he had to be a registered voter, because he could not vote unless he were registered. Now you say he must be qualified to be registered.

On sub-section b,

Mr. EDGAR. Does not the hon. gentleman intend to put in a proviso as was in the Act before, about six months' absence?

Mr. McCARTHY. I will put that in a separate clause.

Mr. EDGAR. But it is for all owners or farmer's sons. It is in reference to that.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thought of putting it in as a separate clause, as providing for residence.

On section 9,

Mr. DAWSON. With regard to this clause about fishermen, I do not see why they should require a greater qualification than other people. Now it says: "Is a fisherman, and is the owner of real property and boats, nets, fishing gear and tackle." Why should it not be, if he is owner of boats, nets, fishing gear and tackle, of an amount sufficient to qualify him? Why should he be compelled to be also an owner of real property along with this other property? I would suggest to the hon. member for South Simcoe that the words "real property, &c.," should be left out.

Mr. MILLS. If we are on the 9th clause, then we have passed through the provisions about a son having been continuously resident with his father after his father is dead?

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. That is not in the law as it now stands. As it is now you say living on the property, it does not provide, as this does, to live with his dead father after he is dead. I do not see how the hon. gentleman is going to carry this law out, if his father is dead and he has been resident continuously with his father, and he has that twice in this Bill.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think that is plain enough.

Mr. MILLS. I do not know whether he is like the Chinese of California, who sleep with their dead friends until they get an opportunity of sending them back to China.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not think the hon. gentleman's criticism is warranted. It is intended to apply to a case in which the father has been alive during a portion of the year.

On section 9,

Mr. SPROULE. Is it understood that the proposal of the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) changing "and" for "all" is to be adopted? It is important that that change should be made.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think it would reduce the qualification too low. It would entitle a party to vote on $150 worth of personal property.

Mr. DAVIES. What change is made in this clause in relation to fishermen?

Mr. THOMPSON. A fisherman is allowed to compute shares in a ship.

Mr. DAVIES. I call attention to the absurdity of this clause. A man owning one dollar's worth of real property and $149 worth of boats and nets can qualify. But if he owns $5,000 worth of boats, nets and fishing gear he cannot qualify, for he is required to own one dollar's worth or fifty cents worth of real property. It will be better to strike out the property qualification altogether. It is absurd to have any provision in regard to owning real property unless a specific amount of real property is named.

Mr. MILLS. He may own a lot in a graveyard.

Mr. DAWSON. I have had several communications on this subject from fishermen in my district. They think it hard that they should be compelled to be owners of real property. If the word "occupant" were used instead of "owner" it might, perhaps, meet the case. Why should the Act be more stringent with regard to fishermen than other people?

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not want to go over the ground traversed last Session. I understood in the case of fishermen it was agreed that there should be a smaller qualification as to real property than was applied to other owners of real property, but the principle was clearly established that a fisherman should not be allowed to qualify simply on $150 worth of personal property. I think if we establish any property qualification we are going a great deal too far in saying that a fisherman should qualify on $150 worth of personal property. To say that a man might own one dollar's worth of real property is an amusing illustration, but it is not a practical one, because no real estate is simply worth one dollar, although I have known real estate to be not worth a dollar. If a person is an owner or occupant of property coming within other sections he does not need to qualify under this clause.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The theory is that the means of the fishermen are invested, not in real estate, but in his boats, nets and tackle. Coupling with that a property qualification, without any limit as to the qualification, is a pure delusion. We know well, and it was pointed out last Session, that in many cases along the sea shore, a property qualification of $1 or 50 cents could be obtained. It would be more logical if we put the qualification on the ground that a fisherman's money is invested in boats, nets and tackle, and gave him a vote upon those. If a fisherman could not obtain a qualification without real property, it would be an easy thing to buy a barren piece of land and divide it between a number, and thus obtain a qualification. This part of the qualification would serve no good purpose, and therefore should not be retained in the law.

Mr. MULOCK. Supposing this fisherman should lose his boats or tackle, will he lose his vote? In fact, this applies to all these qualifications. Supposing a farmer's son ceases to live with his father, does he lose his vote?

Mr. THOMPSON. I think if his name is on the list he is entitled to vote.

Mr. McCARTHY. Except in the case of a farmer's son or an owner's son.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). If a man has got the property qualification at the completion of the voters' list, and disposes of it the very next day, and an election takes place a month afterwards, he is still entitled to vote?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, under the Act as it stands at present.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not think that is the meaning or spirit of the Act. The voters' list simply establishes that at the time it was settled the persons whose names are upon it possessed the qualification. That has been the general principle of our Election Acts. It has been a general principle in all our Election Acts that a man tendering his vote must have at that time the proper qualifications constituting him an elector, and unless you so provide the lists may be very defective. There is no great object in a man having his name registered; the object is that he should have the right to vote. Therefore, it seems to me that without interfering with the finality of the lists we should go a step further and carry on the qualification from the time of registration to the time of tendering the vote.

Mr. THOMPSON. At all events that does not touch the matter before us now, but if the hon. gentleman will look at sections 31 and 39 he will find I think that persons who are on the list as finally revised are the persons who are entitled to vote, without any question as to qualification. Before taking up the next section I wish to move a proviso as to sub-sections seven and eight as follows:—

Persons qualified under sub-sections 7 and 8 shall only be qualified to be registered in the electoral district in which they reside respectively.

Mr. THOMPSON.

Mr. McCARTHY. I had proposed to move the repeal of sub-sections 7 and 8, and the substitution of another clause, and perhaps the proviso which the Minister has just moved might be attached to it.

Mr. MILLS. I certainly think it would have been more convenient to have framed one section in place of sub-sections 7 and 8, for I do not see any reason for a distinction between farmers' sons and the sons of other owners. This is a distinction which we pointed out last year as being unnecessary, but it was continued, because no one in charge of the Bill seemed to have sufficient interest to frame a clause. I would ask the special attention of the Minister of Justice and the hon. gentleman in charge of these amendments to the uselessness of making a distinction between these classes. It would be far more convenient and would simplify matters much if they were all dealt with by one clause.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am inclined to agree with the hon. member. At the moment it strikes me that there is no object in keeping them separate. That might stand.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Suppose the father resides in one electoral district, and the son is a tenant in another, where must the son be registered?

Mr. THOMPSON. He must vote in the electoral district where he resides. The object of course is to have voters registered in one district only, and it appears to me that the place where they reside is the proper place for them to be registered. It is the place where they are known, and where they have to swear they reside.

Mr. EDGAR. Does the Minister of Justice mean that a son who is a tenant in one electoral district, and who resides with his father in another electoral district, cannot have a vote at all?

Mr. THOMPSON. No, I mean that he has a vote in one place only.

Mr. EDGAR. Then it must mean that the son must vote in an electoral district where he resides, and must vote on property which does not exist in that electoral district.

Mr. THOMPSON. Suppose you say he shall be registered in the district where the property is, then you enable him to be registered in every district where his father has property.

Mr. EDGAR. Unless you say he shall only vote in one.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is better to say that he shall vote where he resides, because there he is known, and he has to swear where he resides.

Mr. MILLS. The Minister will see that he is introducing a new principle. The rule we have already adopted in the law is that a party must be the owner of property before his son has a right to vote. You give the son a right to vote because he has a prospective interest in property which is for the time being the property of his father, and you have provided heretofore that the son must reside with the father on that property. Suppose the father is residing in one county and the property is in another, upon what property are you giving him a vote—upon property situated in a county where he has not a vote? You cannot give the son a vote unless you introduce a new principle and provide that the sons of tenants shall have votes.

Mr. WALLACE (York). The clause proposed by the Minister of Justice will bring the law back to where it was, that is, that a son shall have no right to vote in a constituency where he does not reside, and where his father has no property, or where he has no income.

Mr. MILLS. Suppose a man has property in the county of Russell and he lives in the city of London, where are you going to put him on the list? In the city of London? If so, how is the revising officer to know whether he should be placed on the list or not? Is he to send to the county of Russell to make enquiry? Serious difficulties arise if you undertake to give the son a vote elsewhere than where the property is.

Mr. THOMPSON. We have already adopted that principle, and I am seeking to introduce some check. While it is open to some of the objections the hon. member for Bothwell has stated, it is open to less difficulty and abuse than any other check I can devise. A voter may be resident with his father in the city of Ottawa, and his father may have property qualification in five electoral districts, but he only votes where he resides.

Mr. McCARTHY. I propose to unite clause 8 with the proviso that the son must be at the time he votes resident in the electoral district.

Mr. THOMPSON. Then I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the meaning of the words "or portion of an electoral district?"

Mr. McCARTHY. The object of that is to meet cases like that of Algoma district, which is divided between two revising officers; it does not hurt the clause in any way.

On section 4,

Mr. EDGAR. This is a fancy clause, I think. It appears to be taken from the clause relating to tenancy.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is an extension of that.

Mr. EDGAR. Does it mean that if a man is a farmer's son part of the year, a tenant part of the year, and receives an income part of the year, he can run all these qualifications together?

Mr. McCARTHY. It is cumulative in that way. It cannot hurt.

Mr. DAVIES. It can hurt very much, because it will prevent any proper investigation of the vote. Suppose a man passed four or five different stages, would he have to set out: I was a farmer's son for the first four months; I then became a fisherman; I then got some income; I was afterwards the owner of an estate, and now I am a tenant? He then became a fisherman; he afterwards became the possessor of a certain income, and then a real estate owner. This would give rise to a heterogeneous qualification.

Mr. MILLS. There is always a certain number of persons who are entitled to go on the list and who are not on it. The lists will be completed in a few weeks, and it will be thirteen months before another list will be prepared. I do not see, therefore, that these parties, whom it is desired should be put upon the list, will be worse off than the large number who are not on the list as it is. Why undertake to deal with the very small percentage only of those who are entitled to go on the list and are not on it.

Mr. SPROULE. The clause will only lead to ambiguity and misunderstanding. There are a good many things in the Act which people cannot understand and this clause will only create additional difference of opinion.

Mr. McCARTHY. Well I will withdraw that clause and alter clause 4 to suit.

On section 7,

Mr. FAIRBANK. There seems to be an entire diversity of principle in this. In all other causes the evidence is taken where the party resides, here it is taken where an income is served, and it is not restricted to the point of registration, so that a party may be registered in any portion of the riding, and in some ridings the distances between the points of registration are very long. In Algoma the distance is 1,000 miles and in other counties it is 100 miles. There is no provision whatever for registration as far as income is concerned.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes, where he earns his income. It is following out the provisions we have had heretofore in our Province. There the income has always been assessed against the person where he earns it, and there he has been entitled to vote. By the law as it stands he would lose that vote. The object is to put it in the same way as the Ontario law puts it.

Mr. WALLACE (York). I think we should leave that clause as it was in the Act of last year, and that the voter should vote on income where he resides. Take the case of railway conductors and mail clerks on a train. They earn their income in a dozen electoral districts, and it would be impossible to tell where they should be registered. There is another point in this which I think is of very considerable importance. The clause says that "a person qualified otherwise than in respect of income shall only be entitled to be registered as a voter in the polling district in which the real property in respect of which he is qualified is situate." In some polling districts where they are cutting out new streets, it is sometimes difficult to know exactly in what polling sub-division to place the voter, and, if the revising officer should make a mistake, the person would be deprived of his vote. I think, if the revising officer makes an unintentional mistake of that kind and places the voter in the wrong polling sub-division, it would be very wrong to deprive him of his right to vote.

Mr. MULOCK. My hon friend will see that in such a case the voter can elect which polling sub-division he desires to be registered in.

Mr. WALLACE (York). How can he do that if he is only put in one, and that not the polling division in which he is entitled to vote?

Mr. SPROULE. This clause would apply to a property owner's son as well, and the question has been settled that he should vote where his father resides.

Mr. McCARTHY. That only means the electoral district; it does not mean the particular polling division.

Mr. MILLS. I suppose the hon. gentleman intended that, where a party lives in a suburb outside of the corporation and earns his money in the city, he should be entitled to register in the city on his income and to vote on the property he may hold outside?

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. How does he reconcile that with the provision that the party is a resident within the electoral district? There he provides that the party shall vote upon his income in the place where he resides. That is inconsistent with what he now proposes to provide for in this section.

Mr. WELDON. The old Act said persons qualified should only be registered as voters and vote where they resided at the time of the registration.

Mr. EDGAR. That is far safer.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think the point taken by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is well taken. The object is what the hon. member supposed, and of course it only applies to cities. People live in suburbs and are entitled to vote on their property, but heretofore they have also had a vote on their income, and they are assessed where they earn their income. The object is not to disfranchise them or deprive them of what they now possess.

Mr. WELDON. Would a person who had his income in the city be assessed in the city if he resided outside?

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. WELDON. We have the same provision whereby persons having an income in the city are considered inhabitants and vote on income in the city though they reside outside. I suppose the hon. gentleman desires to provide that?

Mr. McCARTHY. That is what I was seeking to do, but, as the hon. member for Bothwell has said, it is inconsistent with the other clause.

Mr. FAIRBANK. Then if a man pays two dollars a month rent, he will have a vote on income also. I understood he was to have a vote on income only if he had not a vote otherwise.

Mr. EDGAR. There is an important change here from polling district to electoral district, so that an income voter at one end of the county might go the other end to vote.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would draw the attention of the House to a point in connection with occasional absence. It is provided that a young man attending college is entitled to vote though he is away the entire year. In my constituency a farmer has his younger son attending college, and his eldest son learning to be a blacksmith, the eldest son will be deprived of a vote because he is learning a trade, while the second son who is going to college will be entitled to vote. I think there should be some provision made that a young man learning a trade, although not continuously absent through the year from his father's home, should be entitled to be registered as a voter just as well as a young man attending school for the purpose of becoming a doctor or a lawyer.

Mr. MULOCK. I beg to move a further addition to this section as follows:—

No person shall be entitled to vote in an election unless, at the time of tendering his vote, he is possessed of such qualification as is required as aforesaid, in order to entitle him to be registered upon the voters' list.

I do not think that amendment can be objected to on principle. We have already agreed that the qualification must be possessed by the farmer's son or the owner's son at the time he tenders his vote, and I fail to see on what principle you can refuse to extend that provision to the case of every other father.

Mr. THOMPSON. I hope that will not be pressed, because it establishes another final revision, and that is to be held by the polling officer. I do not know how many votes can be got in if every voter's qualification is to be tried by the polling officer, I think it would be impossible to hold an election. If the hon. gentleman intends to contest a constituency in the next election he will not be able to know who the voters are until their votes are polled. The revising officer's list will afford him no information whatever.

Mr. MILLS. I think the Minister is mistaken in that view. The only effect of the amendment will be that if you have any doubts as to the right of any party to vote, you will simply swear him. His name is on the list, and no one except those whose names are on the list, can vote. But if he has lost his qualifications since his name was put on, and he takes the oath, he can vote.

Mr. THOMPSON. That test of the oath is not provided for here.

Mr. MILLS. Do you propose to insert in that oath something that you have not inserted in the Act.

Mr. McCARTHY. No.

Mr. MILLS. The point is this: How are you to prevent parties who have lost their qualification, from voting? Take for instance, a farmer's son. He gets his name on the list, but the next day he may leave his father and go elsewhere, and there are no means of excluding him, if he has lost the qualification to go upon the voters' list, from voting at the poll except by an amendment such as this.

Mr. McCARTHY. I trust the committee will not adopt this amendment. I think it is most important that we should make this list final, not merely for the purpose of the election, but for the purpose of a contest after the election. There is no greater ordeal that a member can undergo than a scrutiny. An election trial is bad enough, but a scrutiny is almost fatal. Only the other day I read in the London Times of an unfortunate man who had to pay £1,500 pounds in a contest, because a question arose as to the right of people to vote, whether they were or were not aliens. I think we ought to settle the list, and then the people on that list are entitled to vote, and we know who they are. There can be no contest in the way of a scrutiny, and none of that trouble and cost that are entailed by a scrutiny.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not inclined to withdraw this amendment for any reasons that have been advanced. The hon. member for North Simcoe mentions a case in England which cost a party a large sum of money. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how many such cases there were in the last Dominion elections. Does he know of more than one? For my part I cannot think of more than one, and even that case did not involve a scrutiny, so that it is idle to say that in the past the non-finality of the list in Dominion elections has led to any such troubles as the hon. member refers to. I cannot see why the principle of the amendment should not be adopted. Is it right that a man should be entitled to vote who has not the qualification which the law says he shall have in order to be placed upon the register? Being placed on the register is not the only object, it is merely a means to an end, and if you admit the principle that a proper qualification is necessary you must admit that it should be possessed at the time the right is to be exercised. If we want any more argument in favor of this amendment, look at the principle that has been adopted in the manufacture of the voters' list in this Dominion. This is not a case of lists under a different system. Take the Ontario system, for example. I am not citing it as a perfect system, but it is made up by different classes of people, for a different purpose, and rests on a different foundation, and it is therefore not open to the suspicion to which the lists made up under this Act is open. In spite of all that can be said to the contrary there is no doubt that the revising officers have not taken that judicial view of their duties that they should have taken; but even if we do not impugn their motives there is this circumstance in connection with the work of the revising officer that convinces me that the lists to-day are absolutely unreliable. Some of the revising officers have placed upon the lists a vast number of names on no evidence whatever. They brought no personal knowledge to bear, they simply used hearsay evidence, evidence on information and belief, which amounted to nothing, and thus it is possible, and I believe it is the fact, that the lists to-day contain a vast number of names of persons as registered voters which are not in possession of any qualification under this Act. Was the object of this Act that men not possessed of any qualification should be registered? This Act says that men must be possessed of certain qualifications to be registered. If you admit there are names on the list not possessed of any qualification, should there not be a test of their qualifications before they come to the polls? The Minister of Justice declares that the lists should be final, otherwise it would be impossible to carry on an election. Does the hon. gentleman not know that ever since elections in Canada, at all events in Ontario, such was the law? Have not the elections there been held under the law we ask to have now?

Mr. WALLACE (York). No.

Mr. MULOCK. Then the hon. gentleman does not know what he is saying.

Mr. WALLACE (York). It is the hon. member for North York who does not know what he is saying.

Mr. MULOCK. What does the hon. gentleman say?

Mr. WALLACE (York). I say, that under the last election law of Ontario, a man having property and qualified to vote at the time of the final revision, selling that property afterwards, was entitled to vote.

Mr. MULOCK. I am aware of that. That is, however, only recent legislation. But the Dominion elections held in 1882 were not held under that law.

Mr. WALLACE (York). They were.

Mr. MULOCK. That was the first election held under them.

Mr. WALLACE (York). No; the election of 1878 was held under them.

Mr. MULOCK. I doubt that. At all events, we have had elections held in which the right to vote depended on the right of the person possessing the qualifications at the time he came with his vote. We never heard of elections being interfered with by an unnecessary amount of swearing. It is very unpopular to swear persons when they come to vote, and it is a privilege very rarely resorted to.

An hon. MEMBER. Often.

Mr. MULOCK. It may be with the hon. gentleman. I have had some opportunity of judging, and I have very seldom seen an oath administered to a person at the polls. I have never heard of electors being unable to get in their votes because of swearing being resorted to to any extent. There is no evidence sufficient to justify the committee in refusing to accept the amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman insists on one principle and loses sight of another. We adopt this principle, that the right of a voter should be ascertained at a certain day, and being then ascertained should be fixed and determined until another opportunity occurs for ascertaining and determining what the list of qualified voters should be. The amendment does away, to a very great extent, with this principle, and deprives us of all certainty as to who the persons entitled to vote are. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in his opinion that elections were ever run in Canada under any such law—at all events, since the system of registration was adopted. It may have been where manhood suffrage was used. Under the system of registration, which we had in existence for some time, the list of voters having been revised and established, there was the right to make the voters swear as to the qualifications they possessed. I admit that existed in many places, and for a long time. This section goes much further. Who is to determine as to the qualification of the voter? The Act says that a certain person shall have a right to vote if his name is on the list, and he takes a certain oath. But the amendment declares that a man shall loose his right to vote; and as no tribunal is provided, presumably the polling officer will try the question without there being any provision for witnesses, and afterwards the case will come up in the courts. There will be a very serious inconvenience, and one that never existed in any part of the country. In all parts where we have a system of registration, the lists are made final, as they are under the sections of this Act, subject only to the test of administering the oath to the voter.

Mr. CURRAN. There is another objection to the amendment. The qualification mentioned in the list might have ceased, and another qualification might exist in its place. That will occur more particularly in cities. Take Montreal East, my own constituency, or the constituency of the hon. member for Hochelaga. Perhaps one-third of our constituents remove on 1st May. They are on the lists as occupants for property on certain streets. These individuals no longer possess the qualification on which their votes were based. If the principle invoked by the hon. member who moved the amendment is put into force, a man removing from one tenancy to another would find himself deprived of his vote on coming to the polls, and this would be a most serious inconvenience.

Mr. FAIRBANK. I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that the fall of the year is the time at which it is not uncommon to hold elections, and that this is the very time when farmers' sons are most likely to be temporarily absent, and thereby they will be deprived of their vote. This conflicts clearly with the principle the hon. gentleman has laid down, and I think conflicts with justice as well.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. LANGELIER. I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to a great blunder which has taken place in the French translation and which I hope he will take steps to have rectified. I notice that the words "occasional absence" in this clause are translated "l'absence accidentelle."

Mr. THOMPSON. I shall have it corrected.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I called the attention of the hon. gentleman before to the fact that some revising officers refused to give the opposite party any information or any notice of appeals which had been made. Now I think the revising officer should be compelled to give, at all reasonable times, to parties desiring to see it, copies of these appeals, or to allow them to make copies, or that he should, at all events, exhibit a notice of these appeals sent to him. I would therefore move:

The revising officer shall exhibit, to any person requiring an examination of the same, all notices of additions or objections deposited with or mailed to him under sections 19 and 26, or permit copies thereof to be made.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON. When the Bill was up the other evening we changed the 1st of January to the 1st of June for the beginning of the revision in future years. Now the dates provided under the existing Act are those based upon the former date, and now that we make the revision begin on the 1st of June, we must alter the dates of posting up and of finally returning the lists of voters. I propose to change those dates to the 1st day of September and the 1st day of November, respectively, after the year 1886.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have one or two other clauses to move. One is to make provision that in case of the illness or necessary absence of the revising officer, the clerk may adjourn the sitting from day to day.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Why should he adjourn from day to day?

Mr. THOMPSON. We propose to allow him to adjourn the court from day to day in order that the revising officer may be enabled to appoint a deputy.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON. I also propose the following:—

Any revising officer appointed under the Act hereby amended may, in case of the illness or necessary absence, after leave granted thereof by the Governor in Council, appoint a deputy revising officer to act for him during such illness or absence; such officer shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and shall have all the powers and be possessed of all the qualifications possessed by the revising officer by whom he is appointed, and if he be not a judge of any court in his division, shall be subject to appeal as provided in the Act hereby amended.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON. Some hon. members on both sides have requested me to consider the position of farmer's sons, being the sons of tenant farmers at long leases. They asked that the clause might be modified to read as follows:—

Farmer's son means and includes any male not otherwise qualified to vote, and being the son of the owner and actual occupant of a farm, or tenant and actual occupant thereof, under a lease for a term not less than ten years.

Mr. MILLS. Make it five years.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have no objection to making it five years.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. McCARTHY. I propose to amend the other parts of the interpretation clause, so as to provide for the husband voting on his wife's property.

Mr. EDGAR. Is that re Howland ?

Mr. McCARTHY. It has been specially brought up in that case. When we dealt with the assessment rolls, where a woman's property was rated in her husband's name, he was entitled to vote, but now that the assessment rolls are not adhered to, the law does not permit a man to be placed on the list, no matter how well off his wife is, if he has no property of his own. Then I propose that the word "mother" should include grandmother, which it did not before, strange to say, though it included step-mother and mother-in-law.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I do not think we ought to be called upon to consider these amendments now, sprung as they are upon the House, without sufficient time for reflection.

Mr. MILLS. The last amendment which was adopted will require the recasting of several other clauses. I am satisfied we should make greater progress if the Minister of Justice, having heard the discussion and the suggestions that have been made, were to cast a new Bill and put it through committee again.

Mr. THOMPSON. I should like to reconsider the section about the tenant farmers' sons, and reserve it until the third reading of the Bill to see what other changes it requires.

Mr. MILLS. Some further consideration will be required of the 7th proposed section, which is inconsistent with clause 6, where parties are qualified upon income who reside immediately outside of cities. It is a question how far it is desirable to give more than one vote. This Legislature has adopted the principle of one man one vote. I think it will be possible to make a provision for voting in cities, as the hon. gentleman proposed, by a slight alteration in this section.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think it will not be practicable to amalgamate the qualification clauses just now. It will take a good deal of time, and hon. gentlemen will see that they are only applied to future revisions. I would have had the sections revised to correspond with the amendments that we have adopted about tenant farmers, but it was only suggested this evening. However, we will leave the clause in, without asking the committee to reconsider it, and before the third reading of the Bill I will see what other changes have to be made. We allowed section 11 of the Bill to stand, and I think that it will be desirable to adopt that section. Perhaps I can add a few words of explanation, and I propose to add a few words to it which I think will improve its efficiency. It is true that in most of the electoral districts the sub-divisions have been made, in many of them it has not been made, and I think it will be convenient to apply to them the principle which the Bill has already adopted, of keeping the polling sub-divisions unchanged until the number reaches 300. The last part of section 11 was read the other evening as referring to the final revision of this year; I propose to say that it shall only refer to the preliminary list of this year, by adding these words:

In every case in which the revising officer has heretofore divided the electoral districts into polling districts, he may alter or amend his order making such division from time to time.

As already explained the other evening, a good deal of inconvenience was experienced by the revising officers being called on to make their sub-divisions before the final revision, the effect of which was that they were obliged in many cases to sub-divide where there were even less than 200. The object of this is to enable them to go back to the former sub-divisions and to keep them permanent, if they think it desirable to do so—at any rate to give them power to revise the sub-divisions, the business of sub-dividing which they have already done. They seemed to think they would not have that power unless it was expressly conferred.

Mr. MILLS. Does the hon. gentleman provide for the publication of an addenda giving the names erased from the list and the names added ?

Mr. THOMPSON. No, this clause is only for this year. It is only to revise what has been done.

Mr. EDGAR. Does not this clause dispense with the printing of the preliminary list altogether this year where it has not been done? In the present year whenever the preliminary list of voters does not contain more than 300 names, then they need not be printed. That applies to nearly all the cases. Section 24 directs the printing and distribution of the preliminary list. Where that has not been done this year this clause dispenses with it being done at all.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think it only dispenses with the sub-division.

Mr. EDGAR. The very section which makes all the elaborate provisions for printing the preliminary list and distributing it, &c., you here dispense with altogether.

On schedule B,

Mr. McCARTHY. My experience in elections has been that men not particularly scrupulous take the oath without any difficulty, whether they are qualified or not. On the other hand, men who are old, infirm, or nervous, become alarmed at being called upon to take the oath, decline to do so and loose their votes. All the guarantee we should have is that the man is on the list. That is the proper time to fight the qualification, and not at the polls. I move to strike out the words, "and that I am entitled to vote at this election." When the man comes and swears that he is the person whose name is on the list, and makes an affidavit against bribing and so on, I do not see what more we want. The simpler the oath the better.

Mr. EDGAR. In Ontario the oath, as the hon. gentleman knows, has been a very detailed and elaborate one, setting out the particular property, the lot, the concession, the township and everything about it, and whether he is a tenant, occupant or owner, and very often there is some technical question about the description, and that frightens people away. But I really think that we should have some guarantee that the person is really entitled to vote, and he should be required to pledge his oath to it.

Mr. WALLACE (York). The oath would require him to say that he is entitled to vote in this election, and so on. The voter may not have read the Act, he may not be familiar with a single clause of it, he takes some other person's word that it is all right, and then you make him swear to something of which he has really no knowledge.

Mr. WELDON. The revising officer may have put the name on improperly.

Mr. CHARLTON. The fact that a man's name is on the list is not an absolute guarantee that he should be there. The revising officer may make mistakes, and I think we should impose some safeguard on the voter himself, as to whether his name is on properly or not. While I think the oath should not be embarrassing in its character, still it should involve some guarantee of the person being entitled to vote, and to the fact that there is nothing wrong in his being placed on the list.

Mr. McCARTHY. What does the oath mean when it says: "I am entitled to vote in this election?" Does it mean that he has the property qualification or not? Some polling agent says to a man: "Are you sure you are entitled to vote," and he replies: "All I know about it is that I am on the voters' list," and still he is asked to swear positively to what is really a question of both fact and law. I think the oath should be as simple as possible. I have known men with perfectly good votes go away from the poll without voting, and on being questioned say they did not know anything about it, while others who were not entitled to vote, but had more assurance, voted.

Mr. EDGAR. Surely a man's title to vote is a thing to which he should be able to pledge his oath, at one time or another. My hon. friend has been assuming that because there is a judge, a preliminary revision and a final revision, the voter has taken the oath as to his qualifications. But not in one case out of twenty will that be the case. Surely when a man comes to exercise his franchise the public is entitled to the guarantee that he shall pledge his oath in a general way as to the validity of his vote. A man may be nervous or a little uncomfortable, but we cannot have a doctor present to examine him in that respect.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the main object of an oath should be to prevent parties from voting who have not a right to vote, and to provide a punishment for those who violate that condition, in the shape of a prosecution for perjury. I think it is better that even a few should be deterred from voting, who are not satisfied that they are entitled to vote, than that unscrupulous persons who have no title to vote should be permitted to do so. Better leave the oath as it is than to remove that safeguard.

Mr. McCARTHY. I go this far, so far as to say that this list is a finality, and that every man on the list, if he is not bribed, ought to vote, and that there should not be any scrutiny afterwards.

Mr. EDGAR. The list is final in Ontario. You cannot go behind it by a scrutiny.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. I have gone behind it.

Mr. EDGAR. Not in Ontario.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes, the ballots can be turned up.

Mr. EDGAR. That is for identity.

Mr. McCARTHY. On any ground, and that is why I object to it. If the hon. gentleman will refer to a case in England, where the law is the same as ours with regard to that, he will find that a question of the alienage of the voter came up, and this man wrote in the London Times stating that he had been ruined although he had retained his seat.

Mr. McNEILL. It seems to me rather strange to ask a man to swear that the revising officer has done his duty.

Mr. EDGAR. But the case may not be tried at all.

Mr. McNEILL. Many of them are tried. I think if the oath is to be of any value it would be more logical to ask a man whether his name was upon the list.

Mr. MILLS. He does not swear that his legal qualification is absolute, and I do not see any objection at all in that particular. But it prevents personation. That was my reason for including it.

Mr. McCARTHY. If that is all what is wanted, when he swears that he is the person named, that prevents personation.

Mr. MILLS. A man may say, I am John Smith, and this name is John Smith, and he might be satisfied with that; but if he were personating someone else, he would not be willing to take the remainder of the oath.

Mr. EDGAR. If a man comes to vote, he knows perfectly well that he is improperly on the list, that he never had the property in his life, and there is nothing to prevent him taking the oath.

Mr. McCARTHY. I quite agree; but I am afraid a man who is guilty of that fraud will take the oath.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). You could follow him.

Mr. McCARTHY. Who ever did follow such a man?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I did.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman is singular, but I venture to say that the experience of every one of us is that in every election we have had frauds of that kind have occurred. For every fraudulent man stopped there are two honest men stopped.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The hon. gentleman wants to leave the door wider open for fraud than it is now.

Amendment agreed to (yeas, 23; nays, 11).

Mr. McCARTHY. I wish to move an amendment, the purport of which is that where voters are objected to, or seek to be put on the list, they should be compelled to attend, on getting notice, without being paid. I do not know any way in which voters are to be struck off if put on improperly, unless they are brought to the court to explain how they purport to have a qualification, and I do not think these voters ought to be paid in order to attend; but, of course, they ought to be paid if they are improperly brought there. I have copied it from the Ontario Statute.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does the amendment mean that if a man does not attend, the judge may strike him off?

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes, if he does not attend after receiving proper notice.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There is a question as to whether you must issue an original subpœna in every case. There ought to be no necessity for that; you ought to be able to put in any number of names in one subpœna.

Mr. McCARTHY. There ought to be no doubt about that.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There is room for doubt, and I know one revising officer who takes that view. Under our old Statute you require an original subpœna on every appeal.

Mr. WELDON. Provided the voter does not attend, the judge may strike his name off the list. If he gets a notice, why do you want a subpœna besides?

Mr. McCARTHY. There may be difficulty about proving a notice or he may not get it. The notice may be sent in a registered letter and he may not receive it. A subpœna is better than a notice.

Mr. McCARTHY moved that the qualification sections should not come into force until 1st January, 1887.

Mr. WALLACE (York). I think the Act as it now stands should pass into law and go in force at once. Tenants who went into occupation on the 1st April, 1885, are required by the Act of last year to reside the whole year in the electoral district. These names are now on the voters' lists, because they were copied from the Ontario lists, but many of them will be struck off if the operation of this Act is postponed till the 1st January next. It is the intention that these persons shall have the right to vote, but this clause will enable their names to be struck off. A large number of tenant farmers can be struck off in this way, and I cannot see any good to be accomplished by passing this clause.

Committee rose and reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

REPRESENTATION OF THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. EDGAR. I notice that a Bill in which Canada is interested has passed the English House of Lords, that is, the Bill authorising us to give representation to the North-West Territories. I see by a cable in yesterday's Globe that the Bill is going to be introduced into the English House of Commons. I do not know whether the Government think it necessary to keep this House here until that Bill has passed the English House of Commons, perhaps they can tell us.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think there is any such intention.

Mr. EDGAR. Because that Bill is to authorise this legislation.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That was foreseen when this Bill was before the House here. The First Minister explained that power would be obtained from the Imperial Government to that effect, and that our legislation here would be sanctioned.

Mr. EDGAR. The First Minister did not explain that. But it may have been his intention.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 2.10 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 26th May, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ST. PETER'S HARBOR, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. McINTYRE asked, Is it the intention of the Government to proceed with the construction of the breakwater at the mouth of St. Peter's Harbour, King's County, Prince Edward Island, which was abandoned by the contractor some time ago? If so, when do they propose doing so?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Under date of the 10th February, 1883, John D. Sinnott entered into a contract for the construction of a breakwater, 1,900 feet in length, on the eastern side of the entrance to St. Peter's Bay, King's County, Prince Edward Island, and agreed to complete the work on or before the 30th September, 1883, for the sum of $3,930. In September, 1883, the contractor wrote that he could not finish the works, and practically abandoned them, and the amount appropriated lapsed on the 30th September, 1883. In February, 1885, a revote of the lapsed balance for this work was asked, but was not granted. About 1,500 feet of the work was nearly completed by the contractor, but he left it in an unfinished state. It has received some damage during the two winters which have passed. I am not in a position to say now when we propose to ask Parliament for more money to finish this work.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that a number of proposed grants of land and money to different railway companies have been placed upon the Notice Paper. I presume that, before he moves the House into Committee on these grants, he will see that the petitions and correspondence in connection with them are laid on the Table.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will speak to the Minister of Railways, and of course we will have to do what we did last year. What is there besides the petitions?

Mr. BLAKE. The correspondence and other papers; the data and materials. Those have been furnished on former occasions.

APPOINTMENT OF MR. GRAHAM.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to ask, whether the First Minister has received from the Conservative members of the Bar of Halifax, through Mr. Daly, a protest against the appointment of Mr. Wallace Graham as legal agent of the Government at Halifax, on the ground that he was the partner of C. H. Tupper, M.P. for Pictou, and a participator in the profits, and suggesting that the Premier had not been well advised in making the appointment?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The First Minister is not here, and I would ask the hon. gentleman to be kind enough to give notice of this, so that the Minister may be in a position to answer it.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I desire to call the attention of the Government—I see the Minister of Finance is not in his place, but of the hon. gentleman who is leading the Government—to this. I had understood that the Committee of Public Accounts had adjourned to to day for the purpose of hearing certain evidence on a matter referred to it, and on going there I found no committee was sitting. It is a matter of consequence to some members of this House, and some parties who are here, that that committee should be summoned at once, and if any accident prevented its being summoned to-day it should be summoned to-morrow without fail.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I understood that the committee will be summoned to-morrow.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was adjourned till to-day.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Most likely members went home so late that they could not come back in time for the committee.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to refer to a matter which I presume is a misunderstanding, but which, as it stands now, amounts to a denial of a statement made by myself. In the course of a speech on the timber limit question on May 4th, timber limits, coal leases and so forth, I gave the name of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) as an applicant for a coal lease. That gentleman answered: "No." I went on to say:

"The policy of the Government with regard to the coal lands of the North-West was not one in the interest of the settler. It was not to the interest of the settler that a coal-mining monopoly should be granted, and that the Government should second efforts to take the coal lands of the North-West and put them in a few hands who might monopolise the business of mining and compel the people to pay so much more for their fuel, which is so necessary in a cold climate like that.

"Mr. McCARTHY. Does the hon. gentleman say these were granted?

"Mr. CHARLTON. I did not. I say they were applications.

"Mr. BOWELL. How could they be monopolies?

"Mr. CHARLTON. No return has been brought down in reference to coal leases subsequent to 1883, and what number of these applications were favorably acted upon I am unable to say, but I give the applications.

"Mr. HAGGART. There is no application from me, anyway.

"Mr. McCARTHY. Nor from me."

I had, previous to this, made statements in regard to applications, and stated that some members had made a number of applications; and I had not stated that members in these cases had made applications in their own behalf, but was treating of applications in general. The hon. member for North Simcoe has denied that he was an applicant for a coal lease. I feel it incumbent on me, therefore, to present the following correspondence:—

"HOUSE OF COMMONS,
"OTTAWA, 13th May, 1882.

"SIR,—May I draw your attention to the application made by Mr. Sanders for a coal license. I should very much like to know if this application has been entertained, and that the lease is to issue therefor.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
"DALTON McCARTHY."

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
"OTTAWA, May 23rd, 1882.

"SIR,—I have the honor, by the direction of the Minister of the Interior, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 13th instant, re the application of Mr. Sanders, and to reply that up to the present time none of the coal applications have been entertained.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
"L. A. HAMILTON."

Another application:

"TORONTO, November 11th, 1882.

"SIR,—I beg to enclose you herewith Mr Robert Cassidy's application for a coal-mining limit, to be composed of the east half of section 36, township 20, range 21, North-West Territory, as shown on the accompanying map, and I shall be very glad to hear that his application has been favorably entertained.

"Yours truly,
"DALTON McCARTHY."

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
"OTTAWA, 21st November, 1882.

"SIR,—I have the honor, by direction of the Minister of the Interior, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th instant, recommending the application of Mr. Robert Cassidy for a coal-mining limit, to be composed of the east half of section 36, township 20, range 21, North-West Territory, and in reply beg leave to inform you that the ground in question is covered by a prior application.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
"A. RUSSELL."

I have also, in reference to a statement made by the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Dickinson), in which I understand he claims that the license granted to him was granted before his election as a member of this House, to present the official record here.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I have no desire to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I would like to have your ruling, Mr. Speaker, on this point: Whether it is competent for any hon. member, having made a speech in Parliament and the debate being closed, afterwards, at any time he may think proper, when the Orders of the Day are called, to supplement his first speech by giving what he may consider evidence of the statements he then made, at a time when debate on those statements is impossible. No further debate can take place, and it seems to me to be a most irregular proceeding.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not see very clearly how this can be a personal explanation. The hon. gentleman made a contradiction at the time the question was before the House, and now that the hon. gentleman from North Simcoe is not in his place, seems to me another reason why we should not go into a matter which may lead to a debate. The hon. gentleman ought to take some other opportunity, as when going into Supply, of supplementing his statement, or when there is a motion before the Chair. I do not know that the hon. gentleman's statement has been impugned in any way which calls upon him to make a personal explanation. I think the practice is irregular to make a speech on such an occasion.

Mr. CHARLTON. I may be allowed, in justification of the course I took, to say that the statement was denied, and upon that occasion I promised I would procure the proofs which I had not then. It was impossible for me to present them then, and I do so now, as it seemed to be a convenient opportunity of presenting to the House the evidence upon which the statement was made—not to make a speech upon the matter, by any means.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will see that that may call for a contradiction and lead to a debate.

Mr. BLAKE. On going into Committee of Supply, then.

LIGHTHOUSE AT PENETANGUISHENE.

Mr. COOK asked, Is the Government aware that the lighthouse on wharf at the entrance of the harbor of Penetanguishene is in a precarious condition by the foundation having given way, and the building likely to collapse at any time? Has the Government received any communication from the lighthouse-keeper on this subject? If so, do they intend to place a sum in the Supplementary Estimates to repair this damage at an early date?

Mr. FOSTER. The Government is aware that the pier at the entrance of Penetanguishene Harbor, on which a small lighthouse stands, is in a state of decay, and the Department of Marine has been in communication with the light-keeper on the subject. As the wharf in question is not Government property, and as the general interests of navigation are now served by a light lately erected on Whiskey Island, within half a mile of the light on Reformatory Pier, the Department does not propose to take any steps to put the pier in a state of repair, and if from the failure of the foundation the light building, which is a small and inexpensive structure, should be destroyed, it would be more economical to replace it by a pole light than to build a new and expensive foundation to carry the present building.

RAILWAY FROM CANSO TO LOUISBURG.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the resolution from Committee of the Whole, respecting the construction of a railway from a point on the Straits of Canso to Louisburg or Sydney, be read the second time.

Resolution concurred in.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN introduced Bill (No. 143) to authorise the construction of a railway to the Straits of Canso as a public work.

Bill read the first time.

BAIE DES CHALEURS RAILWAY COMPANY.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved, that the resolution from Committee of the Whole, respecting the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company, be read the second time.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman was to let us have some papers in connection with this, the specifications respecting the original plan of the Government.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I understood that the hon. gentleman wanted the contracts and specifications which were laid upon the Table. He also asked for the names of the shareholders, the amount subscribed and the amount paid. Those I have here, and I will send them across to the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman also asked for the tenders that were received for this work. The tenders are A, B and C; the first tender was from A. Picard, and, as I stated before, that man could not be found. On the 10th December, 1884, the following letter was sent to Mr. A. Picard:—

"I am directed by the Acting Minister of Railways and Canals to return you the enclosed cheque which accompanied your tender for the construction of the Metapediac branch."

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
"A. P. BRADLEY,
"Secretary."

This was returned after awhile by the Dead Letter Office to the Department; the party could not be found. The Department then sent to the Merchants' Bank of Canada, at Quebec, the cheque of A. Picard for $14,800, which was supposed to be accepted by the bank, as marked here on the cheque. The manager of the bank returned the cheque with this letter:

"QUEBEC, 30th April, 1885.

"The Hon. the Minister of Railways, Ottawa.

"SIR,—I have the honor to acknowledge your letter, No. 23,080, of 28th inst., enquiring if we knew the address of one Mr. A. Picard, whose cheque for $14,800 drawn on this branch of the bank, had been deposited as security for a contract for which he tendered. In reply, we cannot ascertain who he is or where he lives; he never had any funds at his credit with this branch, that I am aware of. I notice the following persons of the name in our directory:"

He gives the names of four persons of the same name.

"I have made several enquiries without avail. This is the second time recently that my attention has been called to the fact of persons drawing cheques upon banks where they had no funds to deposit as security. It is requisite to know that they represent money. It would be well in all cases to refer to the bank upon which they are drawn.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant."

Signed by the name of the manager. This is a cheque for $14,800 which was sent to the Department, and it is evident that the mark on the cheque as the acceptance of the bank must have been a forgery. Of course, we could not find who the party was, and the Department of Railways had to put that tender aside. The two other tenders were those of R. P. Cooke and C. McCarron and J. D. Cameron. The tender of McCarron & Cameron was for $428,000, or $128,000 more than the amount voted by Parliament. The tender of R. P. Cooke was for $450,000, or $150,000 more than the amount voted by Parliament.

Mr. BLAKE. Do the specifications accompany the tenders; because, of course, the tenders are useless without the specifications?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The specifications were deposited at the different places where the plans were to be seen, and tenders were sent without the specifications but with a schedule of prices. That schedule is the basis on which the extension took place by the officers of the Department.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will bring down the conditions and specifications on which the tenders are based.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. I observe the hon. gentleman, in reply to my request to bring down a statement of the shareholders and the amount paid on their stock, has partially complied with my request, and the names of the principal shareholders are as follows:—Hon. Theodore Robitaille, 500 shares, $25,000; Hon. Thos. McGreevy, 1,000 shares, $50,000; Hon. Louis Robitaille, 1,000 shares, $50,000; Robt. H. McGreevy, 500 shares, $25,000; L. J. Riopel, 1,000 shares, $50,000; L. A. Robitaille, 980 shares, $49,000; and a few others. The hon. gentleman's statement, however, does not comprise the other important part of my question, which was a statement as to how much was paid on the stock.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The capital was $3,000,000; the amount subscribed, $300,000, that is, 10 per cent., and 10 per cent. is paid up.

Resolution concurred in.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN introduced Bill (No. 144) respecting certain subsidies to a railway from Metapediac, on the Intercolonial, to Paspebiac.

Bill read the first time.

REAL PROPERTY IN THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 10) respecting real property in the North-West Territories.—(Mr. Thompson.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 13,

Mr. WELDON. Though this Bill—and particularly this clause—makes some very radical changes in the principles upon which we have heretofore proceeded with regard to transfers of real property, I do not intend to oppose its passage, or to discuss it at this stage of the Session. Having been a member of the special committee to whom the Bill was referred, and knowing that a majority of the committee were in favor of its principles, I do not propose to move an amendment. It is only fair for me to say that, in the course of discussion, the Minister of Justice stated the fact that out of a large number of cases brought under the operation of the Torrens system in Australia, there had been only one or two cases in which any difficulty had arisen, which is certainly a very cogent reason in favor of the efficacy of the system.

Mr. THOMPSON. I quite appreciate the difficulty the hon. gentleman has on some of the features of this measure, and I also appreciate his disposition to allow the Bill to pass, notwithstanding his views with regard to it, because of the full consideration which was given to the matter in committee. I may explain that since we investigated this matter in committee, upon looking at the North-West Lands Act I find that this section is precisely the same as one in the existing law, so that, although the principle seems somewhat novel, we are not introducing it afresh.

On section 93,

Mr. MILLS. There is no provision in the law as to how an estate shall be distributed. You have in general terms the provision in the common law in force in the North-West Territories, as to how property shall be distributed, but there is no provision showing what steps are to be taken, and how each party's share is to be registered. For instance, a man dies and leaves a wife and three children. The property passes, not into the hands of the heirs, but into the hands of the realty representative. He undertakes to carry out the law and give it effect. What is he to do? There is no provision. There is a provision for carrying out the old law, but that does not apply to the steps necessary to be taken under this Bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. The realty representative will be in the position of a trustee; that is, as a trustee is to be under this Act. He becomes, as far as the right of disposing of the property is concerned, the absolute owner, and the trusts with which he is vested by virtue of the will are enforceable only in the ordinary courts.

Mr. MILLS. Supposing he were to make a disposition of the property and issue a certificate of title, I suppose that, being the legal holder of the property and capable of making that distribution, his act could not be called in question.

Mr. THOMPSON. No, the validity of the act could not.

Mr. MILLS. Suppose he were to make a wholly different distribution, the validity of the Act could not be called in question.

Mr. THOMPSON. No.

Mr. MILLS. He might under some law be liable to punishment for violation of trust, but not under the provisions of this Bill. There is no provision in this Bill showing what steps he is to take to carry into effect his legal duties.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not quite understand the hon. gentleman's objection yet, but I understand the statement of the case as he puts it. The executor appointed under the law is vested with the absolute ownership of the property. He has the power, under this Act, to commit a breach of trust by conveying it otherwise than as the law directs, but notwithstanding that the title passes effectually, and he is liable for a breach of trust in the same way as a trustee of shares in a ship would be. That follows as the logical consequence of our abolition of the notices of trust of every kind, and our conversion of real estate into personalty.

Mr. MILLS. That rule applies just as well to the case of a mortgagee or an ordinary transferee as to that of any other party. The operation of the law is absolute, and does not depend on the steps taken by those parties undertaking to mortgage or transfer. But the hon. gentleman has made directory provisions as to how the property may be mortgaged and how the transfer may be made, without making any corresponding directory provisions for the purpose of giving effect to the distribution of the estate in case the realty representative, as it must be presumed, is undertaking honestly to carry out the law. The law does not cover the whole ground for the purpose of giving effect to its provisions.

Mr. THOMPSON. I see the hon. gentleman is turning his attention to the apparent want of a provision to enable the executor to execute trusts. That is provided for in the Bill passed in relation to the North-West Territories because probate jurisdiction is given to the judges appointed under that Act. It strikes me that, if a will is made devising the real estate to three children, under this Bill and under the North West Judiciary Bill, taken together, the judge could direct the executor to make a partition of the property and a transfer in accordance with the will.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman will see that the probate jurisdiction would not apply to real estate, and besides, that the provisions of the Imperial law, as they stood in 1870, which are brought into operation in the North West Territories, are provisions for dealing with real estate altogether different from what the hon. gentleman has undertaken to bring into operation in the North-West Territories. It would be necessary, from my point of view, at all events, and as I understand the effect of the hon. gentleman's Bill, to go further and to legislate in accordance with the spirit and policy of this Act with reference to that matter, and not leave it as a mere matter of procedure with the court in giving effect to its jurisdiction under the Supreme Court Act, which we carried through the House yesterday.

Mr. THOMPSON. It strikes me that the probate jurisdiction would operate on the matter, inasmuch as we have abolished the distinction between real and personal estate by this Act, and furthermore, if not, it would come under the general jurisdiction given to these judges. The executor would, in point of fact, be turned into a trustee under this Bill, a trustee with the power of sale, and it would be competent for the judges under the Judiciary Act to order that he should execute his trusts.

Mr. DAVIES. I think there is something in my hon. friend's contention deserving the consideration of the Minister of Justice. Suppose a man dies leaving property and having five children. His property goes to his children under the will. The real estate is vested in an executor. Some of the children may be willing to have a division of the real estate, and some may not be willing, and the executor has no means of carrying out the division, the court cannot enforce it, and the executor is compelled to sell and divide the proceeds. Suppose four of the children were willing to have a division without sale in accordance with the will; there is no means by which those four, by applying to the court, could compel the fifth to acquiesce in a fair division or in carrying out the directions of the will.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will look at the point carefully, but I am strongly of the opinion that the clause giving jurisdiction to the courts does give that power to the judges. I move that the committee rise and report progress, and, unless there is some objection, I will move the money clauses after dinner.

Mr. BLAKE. The resolutions respecting salaries?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Committee rose and reported progress.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND STATIONERY.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved the second reading of Bill (No. 132) respecting the Department of Public Printing and Stationery. He said: Mr. Speaker, although the principle of this measure must be known to every member of this House, although it is not a novel idea, yet as the measure, as a practical measure, comes now for the first time before Parliament, I think it is necessary for me to make a few observations on the object, the purpose and the practical results of this measure. The object in view is not to establish the Government either as a manufacturer or as a trader. It is a well-known principle that a Government should not be a trader, should not be a producer, and it is a principle of English legislation that the initiation of such measures should be left to private enterprise. But I think there is here a question of opportunity, a question of economy. It would not be right that the Government should have a manufactory of its own. This principle is applicable even to railways. Railways have been built and administered by Governments, but it is now a well-settled point that unless it is a necessity, except in the case of some great highways necessary for the development of the resources of the country, the working of a railway by a Government is not a policy that should be encouraged. But the Government require stationery and printing every day. The Government, in that respect, is essentially a consumer; and the rule of action in this case, the Government being the consumer, should be to get the best article at the least possible price. This is the object of the Bill, and to this there are objections raised which I will state and answer. I cannot but admit that, as a general rule, a private individual can work a printing office at less expense than a Government. But we must not forget that this economy of the private individual constitutes his profit; the more economical the greater the profit. We are giving him the profit obtained by his economy, and of everything that enters into the work he is doing, besides his economy. The question, therefore, presents itself for our consideration, shall we continue the present system, knowing, as we do, that a private individual can work at less expense than a Government; or shall we not take upon ourselves the task of securing that economy for ourselves, by diminishing the prices we would have to pay; or, if we want to go further, shall we not, taking the economy as if not realised, undertake to do our own printing, so as to secure what is required—uniformity, quality, superiority of work, better security for the efficiency of the work, and secrecy, which is one of the necessities of Government printing? I think I can say, without being exposed to an action for damages for slander, that the Government printing is not what it should be. I am sure I am not slandering anybody in saying that if our blue-books were exhibited at an international exposition of public documents, we would not compare favorably either with our neighbors or with England, not even with most of the British colonies. There is a great lack in that respect. What is the cause of it? We shall see in a moment. Those whom we employ would answer promptly: We cannot give you better work for the price we receive. If this is a good reason for the contractors who undertake to do that work, it is not a good reason why we should not take advantage of the position of the printers who, with their pretended small profits and comparatively indifferent work, succeed in realising profits averaging from 20 to 80 per cent. This average of profits has been established, I must say, to our loss, in a case which was decided not many months ago against the Government for printing done outside of the Government contracts between the years 1874-75 and 1878-79. I refer to the judgment obtained before the Exchequer Court and confirmed by the Supreme Court. In that case some of the profits alleged and proved to have been realised reached the figure of 79 per cent. It will be said that we pay low prices for our work, and that it will be impossible for the Government to do the work at those prices. I do not admit that; on the contrary, I deny it. I think a Government printing office should do the work at no higher cost, and I say that, knowing what I am saying, because a fact is worth more than an argument, and it is a fact that Government contractors do not impoverish themselves by the contracts they accept from Parliament. It is true that the prices are apparently low. Are they low in fact? People who have studied the question carefully, will answer, no. Numerous are the devices of skilful printers, of good tradespeople, to make as much profit as possible, and although their contracts are taken at apparently low prices, they prove good paying bargains. A change in the quality of paper might be an ingredient in the indirect profits, overcharge for extra hours, overcharge for work hurried beyond the time implied by the terms of the contract; the type remaining standing for days and days, each day counting as an impression for which the matter remains standing. Last year, for instance, during our long sitting and during a period of about, I think, two months, when we were discussing a single measure in this Parliament, the same matter in the pages of our Orders remained standing for weeks and months, and still it was paid for every day as if the print had been re-set every day. That is something which cannot be avoided; it cannot be provided against in a contract, as the printer might be obliged, in performing the work of the House, to renew the matter every day. It is true that contractors have realised, and are realising advantages which accrue every time new contracts are awarded. But there are difficulties with contracts. A short contract would necessarily imply a higher price, and naturally so. On the other hand, contracts for long periods will necessarily imply a loss to the Government by the fluctuations of the market in the price of labor and other circumstances of that kind. It is true that opponents of this measure may say that there may be corresponding gains owing to fluctuations in the other direction. Well, I do not say that the case has presented itself lately, but we know that while on the one hand the Government may lose by the falling off of the price of labor, if these changes should be against the employers of labor and should result either in the failure of the contractor or great loss to him, the contractor always finds that the public are indulgent with him in such cases. I speak of the public generally, and I make no difference as between parties or Governments. In all such cases the public would be indulgent to the contractor who suffers loss in the performance of work for the public. Another difficulty we meet with in contracts is this, that a large contract must necessarily be awarded to a first-class office. If it is not, you are exposed either to see your work very badly done, to see it subject to interruption and delay, and it will result in having the work performed by others, outside of the contract price, and consequently at a heavy loss. And who is to tell which is a first-class printing office and which is a second-class one? Who will tell us that a second or third-class printing office should not have the advantage of a low tender if, for instance, the proper security is given as a guarantee of the contract? Nobody can tell; and the result is that recriminations will be made, as they have been made. I have already stated that delays in the execution of such work constitute an evil which it would be well to cure, and which can be cured by the establishment of a Government printing office. Changes are frequently made in departmental work, or in work for the House, and these changes always give rise to extra charges, which are not, and which cannot be, covered by the stipulations of a contract. I cannot do better, to illustrate this point, than to quote a short extract from the evidence of a practical man, who was examined at an investigation, held in 1885, at Wellington, New Zealand, into this very question of a Government printing office. The witness was one who had himself been in a Government printing office, and at the time of his examination he was at the head of a large firm of printers, and therefore one who was eminently qualified to speak on the question of the desirability of having a Government printing office, and whether the maintenance of such an institution would be profitable to the country. The witness is asked:

"Q. The one definite point which this committee is appointed to enquire into is, as to the advisability or otherwise of executing by private contract any part of the Government printing. Will you give the committee your opinion upon that point?—A. Speaking candidly, I do not think that the private printer could successfully compete with the Government printing office; for the private printer would naturally expect to make a profit upon his work, and it appears to me that that profit is now made or saved by the Government printer for the Government.

"Q. Then you think the colony gets the benefit?—A. Yes, I feel quite sure that it does."

"Q. Is it necessary that there should be a Government printing office?—A. I think so. I think that the Government printing office is a great safeguard to the Government on matters of expenditure on printing, because all printing done outside the Government printing office for the Government is, I understand, checked by the Government printer, who is able to say whether the work has been properly performed or not. He is likewise able to report as to the charge for it, whether it be moderate or otherwise."

"Q. Can you illustrate, by any experience of your own, the practical effect of the two systems—that is, printing in the Government office, as contrasted with printing in private offices?—A. In the matter of uniformity, I consider the Government gain largely by having the work done in their own office. The printing done in the Government office possesses uniformity. The work is classified, and one uniform style adhered to. If given to different offices the style would vary very much. There is another important matter in connection with the Government office. Everything is very much condensed, and brought into the smallest compass possible with due regard to utility; but in a private office the natural disposition is to make what the printers call 'fat'—that is, to make everything as white and open as possible. I remember having seen, some years ago, a number of Bills and Estimates which had been printed for one of the Provincial Governments. The sight of that work astounded me. I noticed that what are termed 'pica whites' had been run between the lines of the Bills. That simply meant that the work would cost the Government double the contract price, because the matter which should honestly form but one page had been, by the introduction of blank spaces between the lines, made into two pages. That is, what the Government printer would put into one page the private printers would make two pages of."

The witness goes on to give a full explanation of his reasons for believing such an establishment could be worked profitably for the Government, and why such a plan was better than that of having the printing of the Government done at private offices. But there are some other reason which should militate in favor of a Government printing office. There are things which should be done which are not done, because of their cost. We have not thought yet of collecting and printing our national archives. I must say a good deal has been done lately in that direction; but we have to go far back in our history for that work. With so remarkable a past as ours, we have, in our history, events which may compare with those in the history of other nations—not only souvenirs, but facts which are instructive in the study of the history of the country, and which are all, if not lost, at least scattered in such a way that they are useful only to a very few, whereas the public should benefit by the collection of those historical monuments. Our archives have been collected, but I think we should not leave them exposed to the danger of a conflagration. It has already happened in our country that important and most precious documents have been so sacrificed. That cannot be helped, because everything cannot be printed and scattered all over the world, but I think a portion of our archives should be compiled, classified and put in order, and printed. Other countries, smaller countries than ours, are doing this. New Zealand last year or the year before decided to have a compilation of all their debates from 1854 to 1866. While the political history of Canada is most astonishing and most useful to study, we have not a résume or record of the deliberations of the most important periods of our political history. We have had the Hansard for only a few years. We have had in some of the Provinces a collection of the debates; but for the most interesting period of our history, we have not anything but the reports which are scattered in the different newspapers that existed at the time. I think it would not be a bad idea if, acting with prudence, and with discernement, the beginning of a compilation of those debates as we find them in the different newspapers, were entrusted to somebody, to form the basis of national political archives. This could be done at a moderate cost if the Government had a printing office. Everybody knows that work done at leisure, in "slack" times, as they are termed, can be done at a great deal less than the usual cost. In the compilation of those archives, we could employ during the slack times of the year the staff which must necessarily be kept in an establishment of the character of a Government printing office. Then there are the statistics, the need of which is very much felt. Though we have a number of departmental returns and reports, these are not sufficiently classified. The information is there, it is true, but the business man cannot easily find in those documents the statistics which are so necessary for the commercial community, and which are so desirable in the work of immigration. It would be easy, with a Government printing office, during the course of the year, by keeping standing the type which is used for those reports, to collect parts of the different returns and publish them, as is done in the United States, as a quarterly compendium of statistics. Such a compendium of statistics, I do not hesitate so say, would be as useful, and perhaps more useful for the general instruction of the public, and for those interested in such statistics, than the dozen or more of bulky volumes which we publish every year as Sessional Papers. At all events, those compendiums could be published easily and cheaply. As those papers are prepared by the different Departments, those collections could easily be made. The type would not be kept idle, and would serve ultimately for the publication of the official documents of the House. I have stated, en passant, that another consideration is the necessity for having the confidential work done in an establishment belonging to, and under the direct and absolute control of the Government. It is one of the characteristics of the constitution that all documents remain as the private and confidential property of the Government until their official promulgation. This has been felt in other countries to be one of the great reasons for the establishment and maintenance of a Government printing office. I think that England, that hot-bed of traditional conservatism—England, where good things are to be found, but when once obtained are with great difficulty reformed and changed—is the only large country where a Government printing office is not now in existence; and still, even with the contract system they have in England, one might consider the Government contractors for printing as constituting, in a certain sense, a Government printing office in another form, with the bad feature preserved of high prices for the work. Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode, Mr. Hansard and other Government printing contractors form portions of the Government printing establishment, but at a cost which is certainly not to be commended to this Parliament. In Europe, we see that Paris, St. Petersburg and Berlin have their national printing offices. In those countries, not less than here, people are apt to look carefully into matters of expense, to examine with the scrutiny of experience the working of such a system, and in no case has a change been proposed, in spite of all the efforts which have been made by contending contractors or private individuals, to have the system changed. In fact, since the time when the great Minister, Pitt, took into his hands to reform the system in England of giving out contracts for stationery, and on every occasion in England when an effort has been made to put into the hands of the Government the control of the supplying of stationery and printing, the same opposition arose of private interest against public interest, prejudice against progress, routine against reform. In France committees have sat on several occasions to examine into the system, and change the method followed by that country, and the last committee's report in 1886 shows that, although it had been stated that the Imprimerie Nationale was the most costly, the facts proved the contrary. During the Geneva arbitration, when important and bulky documents had to be printed in the greatest haste and in the best possible style, they were sent to the Imprimerie Nationale, and the work was most admirably executed. It has been proved in France, as reported by the committee, that the establishment of a national printing office was in the interest of the community at large. In the United States, where also it was for a long time contended that the public would not gain by a change of system, it has been proved by different committees of investigation that the profits realised from the estate, under the Government system, averaged 40 per cent., being that much saved on the old plan of giving out contracts. In the annual report of the Public Printer, who is the officer we would call Queen's Printer, I find the following figures, showing the difference of cost in publishing the Debates of Congress by contract and under the Government system:—From 1871 to 1873, when the publishing of the Debates was done by contract, the number of pages printed was 1,283, the number of ems 12,830,000, and the cost of printing, reporting and binding $554,731. Then from 1877 to 1879, when the work was done by the Government printing office, the number of pages was increased to 1,907, the number of ems to 19,075,000, yet still the whole cost is reduced to $348,745. In the same report we find the comparison made between the cost of Government printing from 1853 to 1860 under the private contract system, and its cost from 1871 to 1878 under the official system. For the seven years, from 1853 to 1860, the cost of printing was $5,201,459, the number of pages printed 301,633, and the cost per page $1.76, the average price of labor being at that time $2.75 per day; yet under the official system, in the seven years, from 1871 to 1878, when the average price of labor was $3.75 per day, and when the number of pages was 617,097, the cost was but $1,370,309, the cost per page being reduced to 75 cents, making a difference in cost of printing in favor of the official system of $831,149, when the average price of labor was 40 per cent. higher and the number of pages double. A similar result is shown in the other statistics found in the same report. In 1866 the United States Government paid $1,519 per week for 21 copies each of 201 patents. Everyone knows that the printing of patents is a large item in public expenditure with our neighbors. Under the Government printing system, in 1878, only $905 per week were paid for 150 copies of 252 patents, an increase of 143 pages or 39,000 words more than in 1866. Not only have the Governments of Europe and the Government of the United States, but now the Australian group of British colonies have established official printing offices. Wellington, Melbourne, Sydney, Brisbane, Adelaide and Hobart, capitals of the several colonies, have adopted the system of Government printing offices. After long investigation and careful research, they concluded it was in the interests of the public that Government printing should be done by Government printing offices. The New Zealand Commission, in 1885, reported as follows:—

"First, that they have examined seven witnesses, all of whom, by reason of their experience and standing in the trade, are entitled to speak with authority on the points submitted to the committee for investigation. All agree that for the purpose of executing the printing required by the Government there must be a Government printing office. To the question whether any part of the Government printing could be done cheaper by private contract than at the Government printing office, five witnesses answered positively 'no.' Two were of opinion that 'some of it might.' Questioned further as to the particular class of work which, in their opinion, might with advantage to the colony be submitted to tender, these two witnesses, both newspaper proprietors, selected certain 'stock' work which it would pay them to take at low prices in slack times when their machines were idle? To this position there appeared to the committee to be the irrefutable answer that, if it be advantageous to private offices to be provided with 'stock' work in slack times, which, in the case of the private offices, come at more or less uncertain periods, it must be of some considerably more importance to provide 'stock' work for the Government printing office which has a definite and annually recurring slack time, during which the large and expensive plant of the office would lie idle and unproductive if its 'stock' work were taken from it to be given to private offices."

Mr. MILLS. Has the hon. gentleman the figures showing the cost of the Queen's printing office in Canada, year by year, when it existed here under Desbarats and Derbishire?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have not. I have endeavored to get the figures; but when Mr. Geo. Desbarats conducted the Government printing work here, as the hon. gentlemen knows, the system was a mixed one. It was exceedingly costly during the time of Mr. Desbarats, particularly after his establishment was burnt. It was a mixed system, part being done as Government work and part as contract work. At all events, these statistics would show, if hon. gentlemen had taken the trouble to get them, that the prices paid will compare with disadvantage with the contract prices we pay at the present moment. The contract prices at present are the lowest we can find in looking in the statistics of the past, and I must say, if it were not for the reasons I have already given and intend giving in the course of my remarks, that the prices of the contractors at present, the prices primâ facie charged in the contract, are certainly low. For departmental work they are what all other printers would call starving prices, but, for the reasons and considerations I have given, in spite of those starving prices, easy work and large profits are accruing to the Government printers. In Jamaica, where the question was studied with care and with a great deal of opposition, also, in the way, we find this, and I submit here the statistics of the cost of printing in Jamaica. The comparison is between the cost of printing by the Government printing office and the cost of the same work at the actual market prices. This statement is to be found in the Jamaica hand-book of 1885. In 1880 the cost of printing for the Government was £7,689. That was the first year of their experience. The same work at market prices would have cost £6,805, a slight fraction under what it cost the Government. In 1881 the cost to the Government was £8,341; the same at the market price calculated in the investigation would have been £10,414. In 1882, £7,141 was the price paid by the Government, as against £10,375, which was the market value of the same work. In 1883 the difference was in the comparison as to £5,887 against £8,852; in 1884, £5,898, which it cost the Government, and £8,814, which it would have cost, taking the market value of the same work performed. I was stating a moment ago that even in France, where the work is done, I might say, without sparing cost, for the perfection of the work, I find in the report of 1886 the following extract:—

(Translation.)

"It follows from the above that the appropriations which are necessary to the working of the national printing office does not constitute a charge to be added to those of the other governmental services. On the contrary, this vote amounts to a profit which is entered among the various receipts of the Budget; and besides, it furnishes the various Departments with the means of lightening their charges, by diminishing the amount of their printing expenditure. In fact, the national printing office, owing to the plant at is disposal and to the forms which it is enabled to keep, can do the printing of the State at rates which would be particularly onerous if the work was to be done outside of this establishment."

I saw in a newspaper called L'Imprimerie, of the month of December, 1885, a report coming to the same conclusion, in which it is said:

(Translation.)

"If we take the average of the results for the fiscal years of 1882, 1883 and 1884, we find that besides the profit of 80,000 francs for the Departments and the Administrations, from the lowering of the rates agreed to in 1882, the Treasury has found in the operations of the national printing office a bonus of 374,010 francs 63 for each of these three fiscal years and the State has found an increase of its capital (plant and collections) of 269,511 francs 94. To these results it is proper to add the work done gratis, such as the Bulletin des Lois, le Bulletin des Arrêts de la Cour de Cassation, and various other gratuitous printing authorised by the Select Committee.

"It follows from these facts, Mr. President of the Council, that the working of the national printing office is in a normal state of progress. The new reduction of rates, which you were pleased to sanction for 1885, in favor of State Administrations, and which will give them a benefit of about 115,000 francs on the previous tariff, is thus justified."

It will be said, all this is very well, but the great objection is this, how can a Government secure those savings? That answer, I think, is to be found in the precedents. The answer is that what other Governments have done I do not see why we should not do, and the precedents are so numerous and varied that I think we can say there is no danger for us in making the experiment. The great necessity is a head to preside over that new Department. I do not see why we should say that it is impossible for the Government to get a good officer, and if a good officer is found the economy is realised. I can cite you a precedent. Those who have read the reports submitted to this House from year to year must have observed that in the stationery department, although it has been limited, and although I must say not enough control has been given to the chief clerk of the stationery, still, an important economy has been realised. The best test is to ask the opinion of the stationers who have supplied the stationery office, and the answer will be that the officer presiding over that Department has shown himself, perhaps, too anxious to save the public money and not sufficiently alive to the public convenience, or, at all events, what those in the trade would call the public interest. The position of Queen's Printer and controller of stationery will be a very important one. It will take a man of great ability and great integrity for this position, but such a man can be found here, as has been found elsewhere. The question is to find a man whose interest it will be to watch the interest of the public, and I think he can easily be found. We have recently passed a law, known as the Franchise Act, and I may say that the printing of the lists of the electors could be done with an immense saving by a Government printing office. I know that in saying this I shall not have the sympathy of the printers generally. The delay which is given between the beginning of the revision of the lists and the final revision, with the facilities of communication we now have, would allow us to print the revised lists and send them back to the revising officers for the final revision. With the new process of stereotyping, the forms would be kept from year to year without any heavy cost. At the time of revision, these lists would be sent to every one of the revisers and they would make the amendments on the lists sent, and those new lists, containing the addition of each year, would be sent to the central office, and would be printed there. In this way we would have uniformity in the printing of those lists, a uniformity which it is so desirable to obtain. In the future those lists would constitute a valuable directory of the Dominion, a work which is so much required by the commercial community.

Mr. MILLS. What has it cost, so far, to print the electoral lists?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When the Estimates are before the House we will discuss that point. I may say, however, that they have cost an immense amount of money, and the saving of another year over this cannot yet be calculated. I know it has cost an enormous sum, a frightful sum, I may say, but it could not be helped. A new system must be both laborious and costly. But I will not discuss that question now.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman mentioned the electoral lists, and I thought perhaps he would have no objection to give us the figures.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The fact is we do not know yet. I have enquired from the Auditor General, whose testimony my hon. friend will not doubt, and he has been unable to tell me, although an average has been given, which it is not a part of my duty at the present moment to give to the House. At all events, it will be brought before the House. I was saying that the item of printing the electoral lists alone would justify the establishment of a Government printing office. I have mentioned the defects of printing by contract. If we consider only the cost of composition of all these blue books and all these reports, I would say that in the cost of composition alone a great saving could be effected. Let us consider the enormous quantity of paper which is used in the printing of public documents. For instance, in publishing a little pamphlet, say, of 40 pages, the cost of composition would be only between $12 and $16, but if 20,000 copies of that document is published, the paper alone would cost very near $400. Every space that is lost, everything upon which the contractor tries to make a profit from the Government printing, in running between the lines of his contract, and in trying to show that more has been done than has actually been done—all that is a loss to the Government, and when you multiply it by hundreds of thousands of copies, the number of pages averages over a million each year, the House can realise the immense amount of money that is wasted in this way. It is evident that an immense saving might be made to the public Treasury if this work was condensed, and it would be to the interest of the Government printing officer to condense it. In addition to the printing provided for in this Bill, we provide for the concentration in the hands of a single head of all the stationery which is supplied to the different Departments and to both Houses of Parliament. I may here mention the fact that both Houses of Parliament are very jealous of their control over the stationery that is supplied to the members and officials of Parliament. I understand that now the stationery of the Commons is supplied from the Government stationery office; but in the other House, for one reason or other which I do not know, the good reform has been abandoned after one year's experience. In England efforts have been made year after year, and success has crowned those efforts, to have the whole control of the stationery for both Houses of Parliament and for all the Departments and for the outside service, the army, navy and different offices in colonies concentrated in one hand. The object of this Bill is to assimilate our system here to the English system that has worked admirably of late years. When we think that we, with our comparatively small Government, expend on stationery to supply the different departments and Parliament over $200,000 a year, it is obvious how important it is to concentrate the responsibility and endeavor to secure as great economy as possible. One of the reforms contemplated is that the distribution and sale of the public documents, papers and Statutes should be brought under one control, so as to curtail the waste which prevails to-day. In England where much liberality is shown, and where the spirit of the constitution is that the laws shall be made as public as possible, and spread among the whole reading population, hon. members will be surprised to learn that in that country, with over 30,000,000 of people, there are fewer public documents distributed gratis than there are in this Dominion with something over 4,000,000. We distribute over 26,500 copies of the Statutes; not more than 340 are sold every year and those reserved do not exceed 400, leaving about 26,000 thrown broadcast over the country with other public documents which are not distributed in a very judicious manner. It is also proposed that the sale of public documents shall be entrusted to one head, to the same officer, to the comptroller of stationery. This will not prevent or interfere with the power that this House possesses to decide as to what number of documents shall be distributed. Neither will it prevent the House from ordering by its committees the printing of documents of special importance in larger quantities when the wants of the people and the wishes of their representatives require them. So there will be no interference with the ordinary powers of Parliament. Moreover, all public documents should be offered for sale at a price attractive to everyone, as is the case in England, where some of the documents are sold at the bare cost of paper and others at the actual cost of composition and press work. I need not enter into details as to what might be done in the way of reform in this matter. The progress towards economy which has gone on during last year is the best evidence I can give of the working of the system, and at the same time the best evidence of the activity and zeal of the officer who presides over the stationery department, an officer to whom I must on this occasion pay that tribute of praise which he deserves, I mean the chief of the Government stationery office, Mr. Young. But with all those good reasons, with the experience of others in favor of the system which will be carried out if the measure presented to the House is accepted, the question arises: What are the ways and means? How much will it cost? What is the calculation that the Government have made, and what will be the practical result taking the most favorable aspect of it, or taking, if you like, the pessimist aspect of the question? I think this can be answered very easily, and that I can convince this House, without entering into very minute details, that economy must necessarily accrue to the State if the system proposed by this measure is carried into effect. It will be asked at the outset what will be the cost of that Government establishment? Let us see what the cost of the administration of such an establishment would be. If I am told that the Government generally pay pretty high salaries to officers, I answer this: We will secure economy in this way. We have the staff of the Queen's Printer, and we have the staff of the stationery office. We pay, in the Queen's Printer's office, salaries to the amount of $8,997.50; the staff comprises the Queen's Printer, seven officers and some messengers. In connection with the stationery office we pay, as salaries to officers, according to the civil government list, $9,341. Mr. Young is chief clerk; Mr. Robertson, assistant clerk; and there are eight different clerks and four messengers. Then there are the officers of Parliament employed in the stationery in both Houses. It would not be proper to take as profits the whole of those salaries so paid, because a certain portion of the work will still be left to them in connection with orders to be given, in the control of what is delivered to them, and in the distribution of those papers. But I was deducting from the different salaries paid in the Senate and House of Commons for those services, $1,000 from the Senate and $2,300 in the House of Commons, and you arrive, by adding the salaries for the Queen's Printer's office, the stationery office and the distribution of public documents, to a total of $22,739. I give these figures to show that, with a staff attached to such an office such as is attached to a regular commercial establishment of the same kind, it will be easy for a man who understands his work to have the service properly performed within the amount which we already pay for those services, without having any profits from them. Those are expenditures which we already pay, and which will not be increased by the establishment of a Government printing and stationery office; so that we can take it for granted that the cost of the staff of the new office will not exceed what we are paying at the present moment for the different officers of the Government and Parliament for a similar service. Then what would be the next expenditure? There will be the expenditure for erecting a proper building for a printing office and stationery department. What will be the cost of that building? We all know that for such an establishment a costly, magnificent, fine looking building, a monument of architecture, is not what is necessary. We have the example of other countries, we have the example of the United States, and we know that what is necessary for a good printing office is a large, well ventilated, well lighted, plain, brick building with a solid foundation on account of the heavy machinery and plant which is to be put there, and with just that neatness and simplicity which, while avoiding a large expenditure, will meet the requirements of such an establishment. I have taken the trouble of ascertaining what was the cost of the establishment of one of the largest firms in Ontario, the firm of Hunter, Rose & Co., which is doing the work for the Ontario Government. There they have a large, plain building in the shape of an oblong square, I believe, 160 by 40 feet and four stories high. In so far as I could ascertain—though I do not vouch for the absolute accuracy of the figures—the cost of that building was in the neighborhood of $22,000. Now it is not within the purpose of my observations here to minimise the cost of what such a building should be, and although the ground upon which it may be erected might be selected on some Government property here, I take its value into consideration, and I put the cost at say $50,000, which may be more than is necessary for a building which would be sufficient for its purpose, and creditable alike to the establishment and to the Government. As to the cost of plant and material which it would be necessary to put in that establishment for printing and binding, it has been calculated at the largest possible margin, so that we may not be afterwards obliged to add to the approximate estimate. I have taken the trouble of asking people who certainly were not interested in putting down the cost, but, if interested at all, in showing that the cost would be large, but who, I am sure, have given an honest estimate. The cost of the plant required for such a printing office would be sub-divided as follows: Press room, $44,150, made up of eight double royal Hoe presses, $28,800; six single royal presses, $7,200; three medium Gordon presses, and the other requisite printing and cutting machinery, making an aggregate of $44,150. The plant of the parliamentary composing room would cost, according to that estimate, $33,825. The job room plant will cost $9,444, or in case we included what is called a Web press we would add $20,000, making the cost of the whole of the printing establishment, so far as plant is concerned, $107,419. The plant for the Government bindery, taking also the liberal estimate which I have been following in these other figures, would cost $20,347.

Mr. MILLS. I do not see any provision in the Bill to restrain the Government from getting their printing done outside, so I suppose that practice would still continue?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. At the proper time, I shall explain that system, which is not a new one, which existed when my hon. friend introduced the system of contracts; or else I will give another expression of opinion, which would perhaps be more satisfactory to the hon. gentleman.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When the sitting was suspended I was stating to the House what the cost of establishing a Government printing office would be. I stated that the estimate I had procured was about 20 or 25 per cent. over what I really believed would be the actual cost. I stated that that exaggerated figure would be about $127,000. The expenditure for the staff would be about the same as now; but under the management of a first-class man with good experience it might be reduced. I come now to the question of economy realised. To arrive at a safe conclusion let us see what amount of work will be done. I have here statements made up from the public documents of the last two years, the details of which, with the permission of the House, I will put in the hands of the reporter:—

We may safely say that expenditure for printing, binding and stationery will average yearly an expenditure of about $400,000, a little more than half of which is for paper, and the balance for printing; in round figures, let us say about $200,000 for each. Now, let us estimate what economy will be realised. I can say unhesitatingly that the profits, according to the best calculation, would not be less than 20 per cent. I do not mean that this is what is made by the printer; his profits are larger; but it is the economy which we can realise with a proper administration of the printing branch. Putting the printing at $200,000, and reducing the estimated economy to 15 per cent., or putting it at $150,000 and estimating the economy at 20 per cent., the result will be the same; we would have an average saving of $30,000 a year. I have estimated the saving in the stationery at only 5 per cent.; the economy already realised does not justify me in placing it at a higher figure. On $200,000 we would have $10,000 saving, making a total average economy, which I am sure we could realise, of $40,000 a year. The estimate that I have given of the cost of the building and the cost of the plant is about $175,000, or, let us say, in round figures, $200,000. The interest on that, I will not say at 4 per cent., but at 5 per cent., would represent an annual expenditure on the total cost of establishing a Government printing office, of $10,000. Deduct that from the $40,000 estimated profit, and you have a net saving of $30,000 a year. I have stated that the experience of the American Government—and I do not think that Government has a better reputation than ours, I do not think there exists there less temptation in the way of what is commonly called jobs than here—has proved that the economy realised, through the printing being done by the Government office, is between 30 and 40 per cent. of the trade rates which were paid before the establishment of that office. In my estimate, I do not count the cost of heating and lighting the building, for the simple reason that these expenses are at present included in the estimates that the printer makes when tendering for a contract, and they do not prevent his making the profit I have mentioned. When a tenderer sends in his tender for Government work, he is obliged in his calculation to count the interest on the cost of the purchase of new plant, for nobody can undertake such a large work as a contract for Government printing without having to expend a large sum of money in securing the necessary plant. Thus in the profits the cost of the plant is counted, as I count it now. Therefore, taking into consideration all expenses, the new system I estimate would leave a margin of $30,000, which can be safely reckoned upon, perhaps not the first year, but surely after the new system is well in operation. I cannot resist giving the statistics of prices paid during the last ten years, and I find they have ranged according to the following scale:—In 1869, the departmental prices for composition were 12½ cents per 1,000 ems; in 1874, they were 16 cents; and 1879, when the new contract under the present Government was entered into, they were reduced to 10 cents. The present contract for Statute work 30 cents per page; in 1869 it was 30 cents; in 1874 it was 50 cents. The present contract for the Gazette is 18 cents per 1,000 ems; in 1869 it was 0 cents; and in 1874 it was 20 cents. The other prices vary according to the different dates in the same proportion. I am not quoting these figures for the purpose of finding fault with my hon. friends opposite, and I must charitably presume that the higher rates paid during their Administration are attributable to the current market value of labor at the time. I simply state the facts as they are before me. I was forgetting to mention one item among others, which shows the enormous economies that might be realised under the new system. We are obliged to print all public documents in French and in English. The highest rates for work are for tabular work, those rates being two or three times greater than the rates for ordinary composition. For that tabular work we cannot make a difference in the contracts between what is done in French and what is done in English, although a large portion of the work is simply a transfer from one sheet to the other. All the names, for instance, are the same, and the figures are the same, and the tabular mechanical work is the same, but still you cannot, in a contract, make a difference, and the same prices must go for both. There are other instances where profits can be made. The Canada Gazette, for instance, is printed both in English and in French in every number. Four-fifths of those numbers are addressed to people to whom it is not only indifferent, but useless to have the matter printed in French. Why could we not ascertain the number of subscribers, and have only one composition and one expenditure of paper in printing what is destined for the English readers in English, and the other part in French. I could enlarge a great deal on the remarks I have made, but I do not wish to detain the House any longer. I may refer hon. members to very interesting documents which they might consult on the subject. There is the report of the joint committee of both Houses of England, 1st of July, 1881, the recommendations of which apply with full force to the present case. I wish also to refer to the Treasury minute of the British Government of the 19th March, 1855, in which most valuable information is given and suggestions are made, with regard to economy in the working of a portion of the system I now propose. I now come to the exposé of the measure itself which hon. members must have read. The Bill is very simple. The constitution of the Department is mentioned in a simple and comprehensive manner. The Queen's Printer will be a deputy head of the Department at the head of the printing establishment and the stationery branch, and his title will be "Queen's Printer and Comptroller of Stationery." Three sub-chiefs will be appointed, namely, a superintendent of printing, a superintendent of stationery, and an accountant. The three branches controlling one another and the first two being controlled by the accountant. Those officers must be skilled men, completely au fait in their work. The balance of the Bill is the reproduction of clauses of the former Acts, adapted to the new system. I now come to the clause, which did not escape the attention of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), clause 6, which says:

6. The Governor in Council may, from time to time, for special seasons to be stated in the Orders in Council, authorise printing and binding for the public service to be done elsewhere than at the Government printing establishment; and such Orders in Council and the expenditure under them shall be laid before Parliament at its then next Session.

This is word for word the clause which exists at the present moment, which is in the Act for the Canada Gazette printing establishment, and the giving of printing by contract. It is obvious why this clause should exist. Because certain emergencies might arise, accidents might arise, a sudden pressure of business might arise, which would force the Government to have some work done, and, with a stringent rule and a stringent application of the audit of the accounts, it would be found very difficult to obtain the payment for such work. In the American Statute the same clause exists. At the same time, it cannot be the intention of the Government to have that clause interpreted as allowing the giving of work outside, unless in cases of pressing urgency. I might state here that that clause would not be operative now, and could not be operative, at least for all departmental work, before the 1st December, 1887. I do not mention it to satisfy my hon. friends on the other side, who predict every day that between now and the end of each year, the administration of the country will not be in the unworthy hands in which it is now, in which case the application of that clause will be left entirely at the discretion of my hon. friends. Up to that time the Government is bound by a strict contract for the departmental work. I can announce to the House that a few days ago the extension of the contract was signed by the present contractors, at the actual current prices and that we have escaped what unfortunately was not escaped after my hon. friends left the administration in 1878. We know that we shall be obliged to vote in the Estimates of this year, a sum of over $4,500 for interest on the $70,000 awarded the contractors for damages for work that was done outside of the contract during the period between 1874 and 1879. I am glad to announce to the House that the contract, without any indemnity whatever, has been signed, and all claims for damages of whatsoever kind have been waived by the contractors; that is to say, that the Government have insisted and have obtained that no indemnity, no claim for damages would be preferred against them or against their successors so that no such legacy would be left, if we had to leave office, to be settled by our friends as we have been obliged to settle theirs. I trust that the House will forgive me for having kept hon. members so long listening to my observations. I have tried to obtain all the information possible to lay before the House. I trust the House will take this measure in good part, and will see that in presenting it the Government have nothing in view but the economy that can be realised and, besides economy, the uniformity of the service, the efficiency of the service, and the perfection, if it is possible to obtain it, in the printing, binding and other working connected with the public documents and Statutes. This is the measure, and I leave it to the favorable consideration of the members of this House.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). There is no doubt whatever in my mind that this is an important Bill which is brought before the House by the Secretary of State, but I think it would have been much better in the public interest had a measure of this importance been brought down to Parliament before the last few days of the Session. It is a measure that will require very considerable discussion; it is one that is very important in very many respects, and I fancy that the hon. the Secretary of State would have done better, would have done more justice to himself, more justice to this House, and more justice to the country, had he not followed the usual practice which has been followed in former Sessions since this Government came into power, and brought this important measure down at this late stage of the Session. We are informed by the hon. gentleman that the proposed expenditure for the Printing Bureau will amount in the aggregate to $177,766, and he says that he thinks this is a high estimate. I do not know what experience he may have had in the establishment of printing bureaus under governments, but I fancy that his estimate, instead of being found to be above the mark, will, when the expenditure takes place, be found to be very much beneath the mark. He calculates that on this expenditure, and by assuming the establishment of this bureau, the Government is going to save to this country the enormous sum of $30,000 annually. If this Government is anxious to save this country $30,000 of the expenditure yearly on printing, they can do so without establishing a printing bureau. They can do so by administering the affairs of this country with regard to printing in an honest and straightforward manner, by giving all the work to the contractor, who has contracted for all the printing that is required for this Government, instead of farming it out to favorite newspaper men all through the country. They can save more than $30,000 a year by doing this without establishing their bureau at all. The Secretary of State admits that private enterprise can perform work of this kind cheaper than governments. I think he was correct in making this statement, and I question whether it is the duty of a government to interfere with the legitimate business of private individuals of the country in this way. We all know that a great deal has been said, not only in this House but in the Local Legislatures, with regard to money being expended for the establishment of prisons where industries are started which compete with the legitimate tradesmen of the country. We know that fault has been found in this House with the establishment of such branches of industry in prisons, and why should not the printers of this country be protected from the Government taking up their trade in the way that is proposed by the hon. the Secretary of State? If the Government is desirous of saving money in this printing line, why do they not go into other branches of the service in the same way? I understand, and believe it is a fact, that the heating of the buildings here at Ottawa costs some $30,000 a year. Why do they not go into the establishment of themselves as coal and wood merchants? Why do they not import the coal themselves, and save the duty by bringing it in for the Government, and why do they not buy the wood, and thereby save the profits of the wood merchant? If it is legitimate work for the Government to undertake the printing of the country, it is legitimate work for them to undertake the supply of the fuel for the Government buildings at Ottawa. Then if they are going to economise in all directions, they might, as was suggested by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), in a discussion on the Estimates—they might start a livery stable. They have been paying exorbitant sums for cab-hire for the accommodation of Ministers and their deputies, and why not establish a livery stable, with a head and a deputy head, and a man as administrator, who understands horses and buggies, and a veterinary surgeon? Then if they are going to economise in this way, they might also establish a laundry and do their own washing, as was suggested by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. McCraney). There are various other industries in connection with the administration of Government in this country that might just as well be taken under the paternal care of the Government as the printing of the country. Moreover, if they are going to undertake the printing, why not start a paper mill and make their own paper? There are excellent facilities in the vicinity of Ottawa, with unlimited water power, for the establishment of a paper mill, and as wood is largely used in the manufacture of paper, that also may be found in abundance not far away. I have no doubt that in this large city they could also afford to use a very large supply of rags, which is one of the best ingredients of which to make paper. The Secretary of State claims that the Government has lost by the fluctuation in prices. Now I think he is altogether wrong. I know from my experience as a printer of nearly forty years' standing, that the tendency during that time has always been in the direction of an increase of wages, and they are much larger to-day than they have been in years gone by. The tendency has, and always will be, to increase; and why should it not be, Mr. Speaker, if this Government is determined to make this a dear country to live in, if this Government is determined to protect everything to the highest point, and thus prevent the workingman getting good value for his money. Therefore, I think it is very much out of place for this Government to assume that they have lost anything by the fluctuation of wages since they came into power, when we consider that wages have always been on the increase. With regard to printers' plant, there is no fluctuation with regard to the price of that either, for this Government have made printers' plant more expensive since they came into office than it ever was before. They have laid a duty of 25 per cent. on type, and there is a heavy duty on printing presses and consequently it is more expensive for printers to get the material they require in their work than it ever was before. I, for one, must say that I think it was very ill-advised of this Government to put a heavy duty on printers' material and presses because knowledge——

Mr. BOWELL. How much on presses?

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). As the Minister of Customs knows, they ought not to be taxed. Newspapers and books ought to be free to the people so that they may become educated.

Mr. BOWELL. What is the duty on presses?

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I know it is a large duty; perhaps you will tell me.

Mr. BOWELL. I wanted to see if you knew as much about them as about the duty on type.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Will you tell me the duty on presses?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, by-and-bye.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I know there is a heavy duty on presses, and there ought not to be any, for the simple reason that there are no presses manufactured in the country. With regard to the fluctuation in the price of paper, if the Government has lost some in that respect within the last few years, it is because paper has been cheaper in consequence of the material of which it is made costing less to the manufacturer than formerly. Now, I could understand how this printing bureau would be a benefit to the country if I were satisfied in my mind, and if the Secretary of State could satisfy the country as I fear he will not be able to do, that the business of this bureau will be conducted on business principles. I think the Bill itself shows that the Government has no intention of carrying on this printing bureau on strictly business principles, as I shall show later on. He claims that the Government would save the profits of the contractors. Well, that is just possible, if the Government managed their business as well as the contractors manage theirs. But the Secretary of Satate admits that the Government will not do so, because he says that the Government cannot manage a business of this kind as well as private individuals. I will admit that better work might possibly be done by a Government bureau than the work we are getting now. But there is a reason why the work we are getting now is not as good as it should be, and I think that reason can be overcome if the Government will take the advice of every practical man with regard to letting the contract. The reason the Government does not get extra good work now is because the contract is for too short a term of years. If the contract was let, say for ten years, the contractor would have some guarantee that he would be reimbursed for his outlay in buying such plant as would enable him to do the work in first-class style. That could be done if the contract was let for ten years instead of five, as was formerly done.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The experience of 1879 does not show that if the contract of 1874 had been prolonged for ten years, we would have paid over 30 per cent. more than we paid after changing it at the end of five years.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I understand the contract has been renewed ever since I have been a member of this House, at the same prices.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. In 1874 the contract was for five years, and according to the theory of my hon. friend, if it had been for ten years, we would have lost over 33 per cent. of the contract price, because the contract price of 1879 was more than 33 per cent. under the contract price of 1874.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Well, I have not got the figures and cannot verify the statement, but I have figures which show that the composition, in 1869, was 12½ cents; in 1874, 16 cents; in 1879, 10 cents, and it is 10 cents now. There is not such a great difference between 10 cents and 12½. I agree with the Secretary of State in saying there would be some economy in the management of a printing bureau in cutting away what printers call the "fat" which is put in all the blue-books, and that can be accomplished if a clause is put in the tender forbidding the contractor to make too much fat matter in the pamphlets or books he prints. Furthermore, I will state, with regard to the quality of the work, that it has a good deal to do with the quality of the paper, and if the Government would furnish the present contractor with first-class paper, he would do nearer first-class work than he does now. Now the Secretary of State said that the profits of the contractors ran all the way from 20 to 79 per cent. He said their contract prices were low in appearance, but not in fact. Well, Mr. Speaker, if the Government were anxious to administer the public printing in an honest and judicious way, they would not have followed the practice they have adopted for the last few years. I find that in 1883-84 they gave outside work, including printing and paper, to the amount of $150,500, and of this amount $109,000 was paid for agricultural pamphlets alone. In 1884-85 they paid for outside printing, $97,286, and of this amount the Agricultural Department paid over $80,000; and this is altogether outside of the patronage which has been given in the shape of advertising to newspapers which support the Government, amounting to $54,000 in 1883-84 and $51,800 in 1884-85. I do not intend to weary the House with details as to the exorbitant prices paid for this outside printing, because I entered fully into that matter last year and clearly established the statements I made beyond contradiction, notwithstanding it has been said in this House, when I happened to be absent, that:

"A price is fixed by the Queen's Printer for all this kind of printing—a fair, commercial price, which is considered so low that some of the printers, who desire to obtain work, refused to accept those prices. I am told by persons of experience that offices could not take printing at those prices, were it not for the purpose of keeping their offices open and employed."

I suppose I am hardly in order in quoting, from a former debate, the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture; but I refer to it, in order to show the inaccuracy of the statement made on that occasion. I did not happen to be in the House that night on account of sickness, and I could not therefore, at that time, contradict the statement then made. It will be in the recollection of the House that, last year, I called attention to this matter, and I then proved, beyond doubt, that the prices for this outside Government printing work, were, in all cases, from three and a half to fourteen times more than the contractors' prices for the same work. I am glad to say that the Government have not erred so greatly in this regard, in 1885-86. They have not given the same work to an office half a dozen times, so that it could charge half a dozen times for the same composition. I suppose the lesson learned last year checked the Government and led them to draw in their reins and not give out work so unjustly as they did previously. This year, in every case, when the expenditure was over $80,000 for agricultural printing, there was paid three and a-half times the price for composition more than the work would have been obliged to have been done by the contractors; that is to say, that the Government paid 35 cents per 1,000 ems for composition, whereas the parliamentary contractors cannot charge more than 10 cents. Furthermore, they have paid for press work six times the price which the contractors would have charged in every case where they have given out this class of work; and not only have they paid six times the price but they have allowed the parties who did the work to charge double the quantity of work in every case. The result has been to double the amount of press work done in every case by any of the persons who have been favored with pamphlet work; and so the price for the press work has been increased sixfold above the contractors' regular price. In order to give the House and the country an idea of the injustice which was done by the Minister of Agriculture, in explaining this matter to the House the other evening, when he said that printers would not take the work because it would not pay them, I will state some further facts, and I will excuse the hon. Minister, for I think the words he said must have been put in his mouth and he was unaware of their inaccuracy. If the hon. gentleman had consulted some of his colleagues who know something about the question he would have learned that the statement was altogether inaccurate. I can prove the inaccuracy by referring to an expenditure made in 1883-84, as an illustration. The amount of $6,871.65 was paid to the Prescott Messenger for work done which could have been performed for $1,800, as I proved on the authority of German printers in Berlin, who would be willing to do that work for the price I have named. The Government thus paid this man in Prescott $5,071.65 more than they should have paid on a job which amounted only to $6,871.65, and yet we are told by a Minister of the Crown, and he is backed up by other Ministers of the Crown, that this work is not given out at extravagant prices. I appeal to every hon. member if the statement which I made last year with respect to this one single job, which is an illustration of all the other work given out by the Government in connection with the Agricultural Department, has ever been contradicted. I defy any man in this House or out of it to contradict it, because it is the truth and nothing but the truth. I say that statement has gone uncontradicted either by a Minister or by any member outside of the Government, or by any newspaper; they have never attacked the figures which I gave during last Session. My statement having been proved to be correct, the Minister of Agriculture should have thought twice before he rose in his place and stated that this work was given out at reasonable and fair rates. If the Government can afford to give over $6,800 for work which is only worth $1,800, and can give this enormous bonus outside of the legitimate profits, enough to buy a steam engine and presses and all the necessary furnishings for a printing office—if the Government can afford to give that profit on a single job, it is not right for any hon. member to rise in his place and try to make the country believe that this work is given out at reasonable prices. I say this is a fair illustration of the immense and enormous profits being made daily by the newspapers which support the Government all through Ontario in doing outside printing for the Government. If this is the case, and I say it is the case, and I have proved it to be the case, I say the printer who publishes a newspaper, and is doing this Government printing, is in a much better position than a member of Parliament who gets timber limits, coal land leases or railway subsidies. I would rather have a steady printing contract for outside work given to me by the Government at the enormous rates which have been paid on those printing contracts during the last two years, than even have the railway contract which has been talked about so much, and with which the member for West Toronto, the "boy," has had so much to do. This printing job would be a dead sure thing, and a man would make a large profit continuously; whereas, in the other case, the holder may have to divide up the swag among the other directors, who, I understand, are all members of this House. But in the case of outside printing, the profits would go on continuously day after day, week after week, and year after year, piling up at the rate of $5,000 every two or three weeks. I say, therefore, that rather than have a coal land lease or a timber limit, if I were in that line of business—but you know the Opposition members of this House are not in that line; they did not do that kind of thing even when they sat on the Government benches; they did not indulge in that kind of jobbery—but I say that if I were in that line of business, I would rather have a contract for the outside printing than any of these favors which have been so liberally dispensed by this Government to their favorites inside this House. Now the hon. the Secretary of State talks about the necessity of having a certain clause in this Bill, in order that confidential work may be done. Well, I suppose it is necessary occasionally for the Government to have confidential printing executed, but although I have been a member of this House for four years I have never seen any printing done which might not have been done in the contractors' office, and a good deal has been done since I have been a member of this House. Take, for instance, the report of the Canadian Pacific Railway Commission, which was given to the Messrs. Stephenson, of Chatham, who never touched the work at all, but who farmed it out to the Government contractors at Ottawa. They never set a type of the work, they never printed a page of it, but they were favorites of the Government, and they had to get a slice of the pap which was going, so they were favored with this confidential printing, and they were enabled, as I told the House on a former occasion, and as was proved before the Public Accounts Committee, to pocket no less than $3,000 for this confidential job, given to them by the Government and which they never so much as touched. Then the Secretary of State says he has had some experience in the printing business. Well, I do not know whether he is a stockholder or a shareholder in the Minerve, but I have been told that he is interested in that paper, which receives a good deal of patronage from this Government. They have printed two editions of the Chinese report, and they printed it at the same exorbitant, confidential rates. Well now, what was confidential about the Chinese report?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I suppose he intends saying something, but he leads the House into error, inasmuch as that volume was not done at confidential rates. There was only the report, and there were reasons for that, as my hon. friend must know.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Well, if not at confidential rates it was done at much higher prices than they ought to have received—so much so that the Auditor General refused to pay the account, and brought it under the attention of the Treasury Board. The fact that the Auditor General, who is not a printer, discovered that the prices were much larger than they ought to have been is, I think, satisfactory evidence that the prices, if not confidential, were at least an enormous advance on those which the Government would have had to pay to the contractor if they had got the work here, and there was no reason why they should not have got it here. Then the Secretary of State has other favorites. You will remember the printing of the civil service list which he gave to the St. Hyacinthe Courier. He not only gave that work outside of the contractor, but he actually paid out for type over $5,000 to enable his friend down in St. Hyacinthe to do the work. This same practice was followed by the Minister of Militia with regard to the printing of the militia list.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If this remark of the hon. gentleman is not intended to be political but personal, I must tell him that his insinuation against me is totally unfounded. I had nothing to do personally with the giving of that work, and did not even know that the work was given, as it was at a time when I was ill and was absent from Ottawa. If his remark is intended to be political, I, of course, have to take my share of the responsibility. If it is personal, I tell him again that he is saying that which is not warranted by the facts and that which is not true.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I understand that the Secretary of State is a member of this Government; I understand that, being a member of the Government, he is responsible for the acts of the Government. I have nothing against him personally as Secretary of State. I am not in the secrets of the Government; I do not know whether the Secretary of State ordered this work or not. But I do know that the Government ordered it; I know that the Government is responsible, and that the Secretary of State is responsible as a member of the Government, and consequently he cannot shirk that responsibility. If he is ashamed of the job now, I am glad of it, and I am glad to hear him repudiating the acts of his own Government. I am glad to know that he is getting his eyes opened, and is beginning to see that he cannot endorse everything that his Government authorises to be done in the way of giving outside printing. I hope also to hear the Minister of Militia—if he were in his place—endorsing the Secretary of State and saying that he was not personally responsible——

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend is not honest with regard to my personal explanation.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Well, I will use another expression, and say that he is not fair. The hon. gentleman said the Secretary of State had another paper. He mentioned a paper in which he said I had a personal, pecuniary interest. He said I had another paper and had given a job to this other paper. I got up and said frankly, as was my duty, and I asked him to follow me in that same fair way of exposing the facts—I said I was politically responsible for that contract—I do not call it a job; I do not know the details; but if he insinuated anything against me personally, he was wrong in telling a thing which was not true.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Well, Sir, I cannot fathom such very close reasoning on the part of the hon. gentleman. He does not deny that he has a personal interest in the other matter.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I explained it, and if the hon. gentleman does not understand, I cannot supply that which is necessary to understand anything.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I understand that he is personally interested in the Minerve newspaper. I am glad, however, to know that he did not personally send this contract to the Minerve newspaper, but I say that I hold him responsible, as I hold the Government responsible, for his share in perpetrating that job. I think he is to blame for that. He wisely—if he was personally interested in the newspaper—refused to be the medium of sending it to his own newspaper. I think that was an act of wisdom on his part, and I think he is entitled to credit for his discretion in that regard. I was going on to say that the Minister of Militia also had favorites, and that he, like the Government—I will not say like the Secretary of State—purchased the type for his friend in Quebec, Mr. Foote, to print the militia list, and afterwards he had it reprinted by the Government contractors here at extra expense, so that there could be no excuse whatever for the expenditure of that money. The amount paid for the purchase of the type and the work executed was thrown away, because he afterwards got the same work executed in the contractors' office at Ottawa. Now I can understand why all the Conservative newspapers of the country are not cordially endorsing the action of the Secretary of State in bringing in this Bill. But I fancy if the Secretary of State had forwarded to each newspaper office a copy of it, so that the proprietors would have been able to read the 6th clause, they would have had no difficulty in endorsing the whole Bill. I will read that clause for the benefit of the House:

"The Governor in Council may, from time to time, for special reasons to be stated in the Orders in Council, authorise printing and binding for the public service to be done elsewhere than at the Government printing establishment; and such Orders in Council and the expenditure under them shall be laid before Parliament at its then next Session."

If this clause is retained in the Bill, this House ought not to entertain the proposition to pass it for a single moment. I have no doubt many members of this House on both sides have been thoroughly scandalised with the manner in which the Government have been paying exorbitant prices to their newspaper supporters all over the country for outside printing; and I fancy there are many honest men on both sides who would be glad to see a stop put to this system of patronage. But with this clause in the Bill there is no chance of amendment in that respect on the part of the Government. There would always be special reasons if the Government wanted to favor the Montreal Gazette, the Hamilton Spectator, the Toronto Mail, the London Free Press or the Prescott Messenger. I have no doubt even the hon. Minister of the Interior will have no compunction about supporting this Bill. The Montreal Gazette, during the past two years, has drawn large sums of money from the public chest for printing—over $19,000 in one year, and $23,000 in the other, including the Royal Society's report, which I think it is proper to include. The Hamilton Spectator receives from $10,000 to $18,000, the London Free Press from $10,000 to $12,000 a year, and the Ottawa Citizen gets, I suppose, just about as much as it likes to ask, because whenever it becomes hard up, it comes to the Government and gets a check in advance for work that is under way or that has not been done. If the hon. Secretary of State would expunge this clause from the Bill, I would not have so much difficulty in supporting it, because I think in some respects it would be an improvement to have the printing done in this way. Now, the Secretary of State says that fewer public documents are distributed in England than in Canada. That leads me to the consideration of a subject to which I called the attention of the House last Session; but the statement I then made does not seem to have had any effect. Any member of this House can verify the statement I make, that from the commencement of the Session to the close large numbers of the members of this House are busily engaged day after day and week after week in sending immigration pamphlets to their constituents. If this printing, which this country pays such an enormous amount for annually, is intended to be of service to the public, in inducing immigrants to come and settle in the country, it ought not to be distributed in the way it is done by the members of this House to their constituents. Everybody knows that tons upon tons of these pamphlets are sent out from this House every Session. Now, I would like to know what good it is to send these immigration pamphlets into Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Quebec, Ontario, and even into Manitoba, where I have known a great deal of this literature to go. I say this ought to be put a stop to; it is a wilful waste of public money, and a misappropriation of the funds which Parliament votes every year to the Minister of Agriculture for the purpose of promoting immigration. If this enormous waste were stopped, the bills which are sent in for the printing of these pamphlets by the organs of the Government would be very much smaller than they are. I fancy very little of this literature ever reaches intending immigrants in England, Ireland, Scotland, or any other part of Europe. One idea was expressed by the hon. Secretary of State which was the most amusing of all, and he did say some very amusing things. He said that if he got this printing bureau established, he would undertake to print all the voters' lists in the Dominion. I do not wish to offend the Secretary of State, but I never heard such downright twaddle and nonsense talked in this House during the four years that I have been here, as he talked when he made that statement. Any man who knows anything at all about publishing the voters' lists knows that it would be utterly impossible for the Government to print them in the city of Ottawa, if they had a bureau established to-morrow. It cannot be done. If it were undertaken, the voters' lists would not be got out in two years. How would the proofs be read? As my hon. friend from South Brant suggests, they could give it out under section 6 of the Bill, and that probably was the idea in inserting that clause. A great many Conservative newspapers throughout the country have felt considerable annoyance during the last six months because some of the revising officers had the audacity to disobey the orders of the Government, that this work should be given to their special favorites. I know one county at least, where the revising officer was instructed by the Government to give the work to the Conservative newspaper, and to no other. The revising officer had the backbone to say that he was the revising officer there, and he would not be dictated to. So he took tenders for the work, and allowed the Reform newspaper in the place to have a show, contrary to the expressed orders of the Government. I have no doubt this clause 6 would apply very well to the voters' lists, and that the printing of those lists would be added to the profits which are made by the newspapers supporting the Government all over the country. In that way no doubt it might be practicable, but it could not be done at a bureau in the city of Ottawa. Now, I do not intend to detain the House with any further remarks on this measure, but I trust that the Government will see fit to induce the Secretary of State to withdraw it. It is a very important measure, and this House ought to have ample opportunity to discuss its various provisions; and at this late stage of the Session it is utterly impossible for the House to do justice to the Bill. Therefore I think the Secretary of State would be acting in the interest of the country, and I was going to say in the interest of the Government, if he withdrew the Bill. If he is bound to have a printing bureau established in the city of Ottawa to do the Government printing, I think he ought to bring the measure down early next Session when the members will have an ample opportunity to discuss it in all its details, as its importance requires.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I trust the Government will consider this matter a little. It is very inconvenient that a measure should be brought down at this time which requires a speech of two hours by the Secretary of State to explain its details. The measure is a complicated one; in practice, there is not the slightest doubt it will involve large expenditure at a very inconvenient time. The Minister of Finance has declared there will be a heavy deficit this year, and there is too much reason to fear that, under present circumstances, there will be a heavy deficit next year. In any case, it is a measure which ought most undoubtedly to be carefully considered by us. All our experience goes to show it is very difficult for a Government, no matter how excellent may be their intentions, to conduct manufacturing operations of this kind as profitably and as well as private individuals can; and, no doubt, the hon. gentleman will find, when he goes into the matter, that it will create a great deal more difficulty and involve a great deal more expense and trouble than he at first contemplated. In any case, the contract has been extended to December, 1887, so that there is a year and a half, at any rate, before it will be necessary or possible for this printing bureau to commence operations, and I must say that, as the Government has told us we may expect to close in a few days, I fail to understand how they can deem it conducive to the public interest to introduce this measure for serious discussion now. If, as has often been done heretofore, their desire is to lay it before the country and give the House an opportunity of reflecting upon it, that object will be very well attained, after the exhaustive statements made by the Secretary of State. I therefore trust, in view of the enormous mass of business yet to be transacted, and the desire of members on both sides, at this advanced period, not to be detained unnecessarily, that the Government will not insist upon taking more than the second reading.

Mr. INNES. I think the Secretary of State would do well to follow the advice given by the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright). I do not wish to take up the time of the House, but I would just refer to one or two points that the hon. member for North Brant has not referred to in connection with this subject. Before doing so, I might say that the Government seem to have taken a long time before making up their mind as to the policy they would pursue on this subject. It is now three years since the first intimation was given to the Printing Committee that the Government intended to bring in a measure for the establishment of a printing bureau. We heard no more of it that Session. The next Session the subject seemed to have been dropped, for instructions were given, I suppose to those who had the management of business in connection with the Printing Committee, to give out tenders, and a sub-committee was appointed to examine carefully into the tenders. In consequence, tenders were asked for, and sent in this Session. However, since they were brought in, we were informed that the Government had now settled on a policy with regard to this subject, and would bring down a measure this Session, which measure we have now before us. The Bill is one of great importance, involving a very large expenditure; and cannot at this late hour be properly considered, as it ought to be, in all its provisions. The Secretary of State, in his long and exhaustive speech on the subject, referred to some of the defects in the present contract, but my hon. friend from North Brant (Mr. Somerville) explained how many of these defects arose. He said they were in a great measure due to the short date the contract had to run. Now the sub-committee last year recommended that if a further contract was made it should be for ten years, as if that time were allowed there would be some inducement for the contractors to put in proper plant, and do the work as it ought to be done. The hon. gentleman also referred to the inferior quality of the paper, which has much to do with the character of the work produced, but, of course, the Government printers have no control of that, the paper being furnished by the Government, and consequently we can find no fault with them on that score. I think that, on the whole, at least during the time the present contract has been in force, the work has been fairly and satisfactorily done, and there has been very little, indeed, scarcely any, complaint about delays in having the work properly and expeditiously executed. I was rather surprised that the Secretary of State, in his speech, did not refer to the report that was printed some two years ago, I think, and which was then circulated through the House, a report made by two gentlemen, Messrs. Chamberlin and Blackburn, who were appointed to proceed to the United States and make all necessary enquiries there with the view of establishing a printing bureau here. They also extended their enquiries as to the nature, the expense and the character of the work done in other countries, and, I think, when I read some extracts from that report the House will see the reason why the Secretary of State refrained from saying anything about it. With respect to the Bill itself, there may be something said in favor of the establishment of a printing bureau, but there is also a great deal to be said against it. In order to show the opinions of these gentlemen who were sent to enquire into this subject, I will read a few extracts from their report. Mr. Chamberlin, in speaking of the establishment of a bureau, refers to the one point of economy, and he draws his comparison from the working of the establishment at Washington. Of course hat establishment is on a much larger scale than would be required here, still the same rule would govern in both cases. He speaks in a very qualified manner on the score of economy:

"At Washington all parties seem to be satisfied that, if not for economy alone, yet for all purposes, the present arrangement is satisfactory, and should be maintained. The claim is made, indeed, that as much as 40 per cent. has been saved in the cost of printing, but I have not been able to procure the figures on which the comparison is based. I can understand that, as against four or five separate offices turning out larger or smaller portions of the work, an office well organised, with everything concentrated under one efficient management, would certainly effect a large saving. Yet, so far as I have been able to make a comparison, the prices paid are higher than (under the contract system) at any of the State capitals or in Canada. But besides this, I learn that rent and taxes are not allowed as part of the cost at Washington; no interest on capital account is brought into the calculation, and the cost of renewal or improvement of plant, or wear and tear, not estimated."

This is the deliberate opinion of Mr. Chamberlin after having gone to the United States, where he got all the information he could on the subject, and after having weighed the matter thoroughly; and this opinion was before the Government before they brought in this Bill. Mr. Chamberlin goes on to argue this matter out, and he gives us statistics with respect to the cost of the several establishments. Of course these are large estimates compared to what we would require here, but I am sure, if the Bill is passed and if the bureau goes into practical operation, the figures given by the Secretary of State will be far below the actual cost. Mr. Chamberlin goes on to say that the plant in Washington cost $600,000, and that over $3,000,000 is each year expended in keeping up that plant and producing the required work. In Paris the cost of the printing establishment is $800,000, and in Berlin it is over $500,000. The calculation made by the Secretary of State was that a printing bureau here would cost, at the outside figure, about $200,000, and that the value of the work to be produced would be about $200,000, confining it to the printing branch. Mr. Chamberlin goes on to refer to the cost and to the comparative amount of the work produced, and he shows here—it is too long to give the whole quotation—that, though our establishment will be necessarily much smaller than the one in Washington or in any of the large capitals of the older countries, the expenses of our establishment would be proportionately higher, that we would require to keep a large quantity of material on hand, and a large staff of hands employed, so as to get out work in a hurry during an emergency, and consequently the saving that the Secretary of State calculated on would be much smaller than what he gave just on that account, because, in a place like Ottawa, where there are no large printing offices, where we would depend entirely upon the Government printing office to do the Government printing, we would require to keep a larger staff of men and a larger plant to do that work, and the profits would be proportionately less. Now, I would refer to the sixth clause, which has been already referred to by the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville), who has also spoken of the evils that would flow from the operation of this clause. We have already seen, as has been detailed to us to night, how much abuse and corruption have gone into the system of giving out a large portion of the public printing at much larger prices than the Government printers were bound to do that work for. If this clause is passed, and the Bill goes into operation, then the Government can give out as much as they like. They may have a large staff in the Government office, they may have a very large plant, they may have a very large building, but they can give out half the work, for that matter, and keep all the papers supporting the Government employed at large prices and large profits. I wish to call the attention of the House to the remarks of Mr. Chamberlin on this point, and he speaks rather emphatically on it. He says:

"The danger from political partonage is again not altogether imaginary. It may either lead to the employment of indifferent workmen, or, as in Paris, to the giving work away from the Government office to outside printers."

You see he hits the nail on the head.—

"This latter course has not been without its effect here in the past."

He knows very well the little inner history of the giving out of a great deal of the printing that ought to have been given to the Government printers:

"Is there no cause to apprehend that the tendency towards it will be increased, not diminished, by the Government becoming its own printer? Nothing could be more damaging to the experiment. To secure a speedy execution of the work both machinery and workmen must be kept up a little above rather than under the absolute daily routine requirements. To make the working pay, staff and machinery must not be idle; and every job of work taken away from the establishment tends to lessen the chance of economy. And hitherto here (contrary to the claim of the partisan department) such work has been done at increased, not lower prices, thus adding to the cost of the printing as a whole.

Surely the hon. Secretary of State never saw this paragraph, or at least entirely forgot it when he introduced the sixth section in this Bill; for here we find the Government officer, the gentleman who was sent down specially to report upon the possibility and advantages of establishing a bureau of this character, speaks directly and emphatically against a clause of this kind. Mr. Chamberlin, after continuing pretty much in the same fashion—I will not quote him in full—winds up as follows:—

"In view of all these grounds for doubt"——

He mentions a great many doubts and fears with respect to one abuse and another that are liable to creep in.—

"In view of all these grounds for doubt, I cannot see my way clear to recommend the establishment of a Government printing office on the ground of economy, as likely in fact to secure the production of the work for less money than is now paid."

Here is a distinct disapproval of the principle of the Bill and of the Bill as a whole. Mr. Blackburn, perhaps, is not so emphatic, but his testimony is rather against the Bill than in favor of it. He says in winding up:

"If properly"——

There are a great many "ifs" and "buts" about these reports, I must tell the House.—

"If properly built and equipped and furnished, there is little doubt that a printing office conducted as a department of Government might be made of great service. But very much would naturally rest upon the administration of it."

Here is the whole secret.—

"If it is to be feebly or inefficiently administered, it might not result in all that could be hoped for, though it is difficult to conceive how it would be possible to produce printing of so inferior quality as that now had. Under the prevailing system, it is only natural that the contractors, whether for paper or for printing, should seek to make as much profit as possible out of their transactions, while if a departmental officer were to be employed, his endeavor undoubtedly would be to turn out the work as creditably and as cheaply as possible. No doubt each method of procedure has its drawbacks, but it may be said of the plan of a public printing office that it would be the want of due supervision which would alone make it inefficient or needlessly expensive"

There is very little comfort, I think, in either of these reports. There is no encouragement whatever for us to go on with the Bill, and, if we establish this printing bureau, of course there will be a large staff of men employed; and there is another danger that we have good reason for suspecting, considering the past and present policy of the Government, with respect to their political patronage—there is great reason to fear that, if the Bill becomes law, the bureau will be a sort of political hospital and refuge for political favorites, printers, officers, and other employees who will get positions by favor and patronage; and the establishment would be run, I believe, at a greater expense than under the present system, and I fear with no greater efficiency, as far as the character of the work is concerned.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have been pleased to hear the moderate, practical remarks of my hon. friend who has just sat down, which must have struck the House as a marked contrast to those of the hon. gentleman who pretended to speak for the other side of the House on this question. Before the House is called to read the Bill a second time, I must say a word in answer to the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Somerville). He concluded his remarks by stating that the Secretary of State, among other very amusing ideas expressed in his long speech, had one idea which the hon. gentleman has qualified with a number of exceedingly choice expressions with which his manual de bon ton may supply him, but which my plain language does not possess. The hon. gentleman made the exceedingly charitable supposition that the idea I had expressed, and which he characterised as absurd and ridiculous, was mine. Well, I am not a practical man in these matters, but the idea is one of a man who stands, I am sure, a good deal above the hon. gentleman as a practical printer, a man who has, in the working of the Electoral Act, saved the country this year, in the estimation of the Auditor General, over $100,000, and this is the man who has given me that most absurd and ridiculous idea of printing the electoral lists at a Government bureau.

Mr. MILLS. Name.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Mr. Romaine. But there is more than that. The hon. gentleman has been violent in denouncing the jobs, as he calls them, given to friendly printers. I suppose that my hon. friend, by the severe criticism he has made of this plan, is a printer himself—I gathered as much from the great disappointment he has expressed, the great spite he betrayed, à propos of those favors which he supposes the Government are giving to some of their friends. My hon. friend, perhaps, forgets that during the Administration of his friends, exactly the same, if not worse—if it is bad—was done. He has quoted the quantity of work that has been given to other than the regular contractors. Well, according to the judgment of the court, the quantity of work given in violation of the contract, from 1874 to 1879, during the Administration of hon. gentlemen opposite, must have been at least to the amount of $280,000, since the profits, calculated at an average of 25 per cent., amounted to $71,000.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). One year of that was under this Government, and the greater portion of the work was done that year.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend will see by the judgment of the court that his statement is not more correct than the other statements made by him.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Last year I obtained a transcript of the judgment, and that stated that one year was under this Government.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There was not one year, and besides, that year does not represent the proportion which the hon. member has stated. But to come to the printing of the electoral lists by the Government printing office, my hon. friend probably does not know that in the Australian colonies the electoral lists are printed by a Government bureau. I am sure that when the suggestion is put into practice, it will effect a great saving by having these lists printed at a central bureau. The hon. gentleman spoke against my plan, but he found nothing to say against the practical sense of the American plan, he could not speak against the good sense, the great economy, of the French nation, he could not speak against the operation of the system pursued at Berlin, where the saving in printing has been reduced to an art, and the Government system of printing has worked to the satisfaction of all. My hon. friend did not speak of that, but he attempted to ventilate some political grievances. He was kind enough to refer to me personally, saying that he was glad to see that I was repudiating the act of the Government. I never said anything of the kind. I am not in the habit of shirking any responsibility that devolves upon me, and I am not in the habit of doing what the hon. gentleman accused me of doing. He has said something which is worse than a slander, he made an insinuation, though not in actual words, but it has got to be understood in a different sense, and in that sense it is an insinuation worse than a slander. He stated that the Secretary of State had certain interests in a newspaper, and that I had given work to that paper at outrageously low rates, which he mentioned. The hon. gentleman mentioned thirteen times the rate of the contract. I challenge him to prove what he says, and I tell him plainly that his statement was incorrect. It was an insinuation which was worse than incorrect when he said that the report of the Chinese Commission, that large volume which we have seen, and which hon. gentlemen opposite stated was creditable enough to have been issued from a first-class Government printing office—the hon. gentleman gave the House to understand that the printing of that volume had been done at confidential rates, whereas not one eighth part of it had been so done. The only part which was paid as confidential work, was the report of the commissioners, which constitutes the first part of the volume. The secretary and the two commissioners who were doing the work of that report, sent in not less than three, four, or five different corrections, and the work was done in such a manner that it was impossible for any printer not to make the charges that were made. I tell the hon. gentleman that three-fourths of the book were printed at the contract prices paid by the Government of Ontario for similar work. My hon. friend added that the Secretary of State had another paper in which he was interested, that he had sent a job of work to that paper. Well, Sir, I am not ashamed of taking the political responsibility which devolves upon me for the acts of my colleagues, but as a personal insinuation against myself was made by the hon. gentleman, I must state that I was absent from the country, on account of illness, on the 23rd of May, 1883. All this work had been ordered and done during my illness and absence from the country, and personally I had absolutely nothing to do with it; so the insinuation of the hon. gentleman was not only incorrect but unfair. I desire to mention in answer to the appeal made to me by the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) who said that the best evidence that this measure was one that the House did not expect to pass was that I occupied an hour and a half or two hours in explaining its details, that this statement is not exactly correct. I have taken a great deal of time in quoting precedents for this measure from the experience of other countries. The provisions of the Bill are as simple as they can be; there is no need for discussing them for any length of time. The Government can have this work economically done, using the most ordinary prudence—I do not say the very special prudence which a private individual would use in his own private affairs, but with ordinary prudence and with the greatest liberality in regard to the management—and the Government could actually realise the advantages desired, perfection of work, regularity of system, uniformity of work and the desired secrecy Such results will be worth a great deal of money by themselves. The hon. gentleman who last spoke mentioned a report that had been presented three years ago. It is very true that three years ago a recommendation was made to this effect, and every one has since then been looking round to see what has been done elsewhere. It was only in 1885 that the House of Commons in England, on a joint recommendation of the House of Commons and House of Lords, agreed that if a Government printing office were established in the same manner and on a similar basis as the stationery office, good results would follow. It is in the Public Printer's report of 1885 that I found that the American Government ascertained that the profits from the Government printing office were between 30 and 40 per cent., and they have as much jobbery there as here, I presume, without wishing to be disparaging against our neighbors. It is only last year that in New Zealand a special investigation was made into the subject. We have all these precedents to guide us, and it was in referring to that information and those experiences, that I occupied the time of the House. There are no long details in this measure, none whatever. A report, signed by Mr. Chamberlin, the Queen's Printer, a year or two ago, has been quoted. I must admit that the opinion of the Queen's Printer last year, was somewhat different from his opinion this year. The Queen's Printer has done like others; he has obtained the necessary information, and I must say it in credit to him, that the information I have given to the House, is in a large measure the work of that officer.

Mr. INNES. We have no report from Mr. Chamberlin this year.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have one. Moreover, we have had last year the report of Mr. Blackburn. In Mr. Chamberlin's report it was stated that if there was a good superintendence the position would be different, and that both economy and efficiency would be realised. That was the sense of the conclusion at which Mr. Chamberlin arrived, though he said that his impression was, and his conviction was, that a Government printing office might not result in economy. Mr. Blackburn's conclusions were that such establishments result in both increased efficiency and economy. We had also another report last year, the report of Mr. Romaine, the active, intelligent and practical gentleman connected with the stationery office of this House, and that report was contradicted in a certain degree by Mr. Chamberlin; but Mr. Romaine's report was conclusively in favor of the establishment of a Government printing office, and his opinions have not changed. It has been said that the printing contract having been extended to December, 1887, there is no need for this measure this Session. But a Government printing office cannot be established in one week or one month. It is necessary for the Government to have at least one year for preparation, and, if we do not agree to this measure, we shall not be more advanced next year than we are this year; and I may say that the contract has been extended to December, 1887, in order to give the Government time to establish a Government printing office on conditions that will be advantageous to the country. We will be obliged to see that the building is a suitable structure; that it is made of the best possible material; that the plant is the best, and that the whole of the work is done properly, economically, and with due regard to all the conditions necessary for such an establishment; and in order to secure this, at least fifteen months will be occupied. But this House will reflect upon this, that after the expiration of the contract, which has been extended to December, 1887, the House will have to give another extension or have a new contract for five or ten years. It is said that long contracts are more economical, and I think the Government printing office being established forever is a good reason why its existence will prove economical. There is nothing so very extraordinary in this measure as to consider it as being outside the range of the ordinary knowledge of members. Next year their knowledge would not be much increased in this respect; and instead of postponing the measure for another year we should now deal with it, and in establishing a Government printing office we should endeavor to be as cautious, economical and prudent as other Governments have been.

Mr. MILLS. The two speeches which the hon. gentleman has delivered to the House are rather of an extraordinary character. The hon. gentleman tells us that the Government is really considering the extraordinary expenditure connected with printing the voters' list, and if the House will incur an expenditure of something like $200,000 in the first instance, and a very large expenditure every year, the Government will be able to undertake the printing of the voters' list, and a very considerable expense that has been incurred by the unnecessary legislation of last year will be charged to another measure, which will be a part of the very unnecessary legislation of this year. The policy of the hon. gentleman reminds me of a story I heard an American gentleman tell. A dog thrust its head into a pitcher, and he cut the dog's head off, because the animal could not get it out; and he then broke the pitcher for the purpose of taking it out after it was cut off. The hon. gentleman proposes to get rid of the extraordinary expense connected with printing the voters' list by charging that extraordinary expenditure to a printing establishment under Government management and conducted at the Government's expense. The hon. gentleman also made another very extraordinary assertion. He told us that those gentlemen who were sent by the Government as a commission, a year or two ago, for the purpose of enquiring into the management of those printing establishments which were under Government control, had reported against the propriety of establishing such an institution here. The Queen's Printer, after he had made enquiry, having gone out to Washington and visited the different States in the American Union, enquiring into the mode of doing this business on behalf of their respective Governments, came back and told the Government that the system was not a good one; that they had better rely on having the printing done by public tender. The hon. gentleman now tells us that at the time the Queen's Printer made that report he had not sufficient information; that he has more light since; that he has now changed his mind, and that a superior and more reliable guide has been afforded to us by the speech which the hon. gentleman has just made. Now, it seems to me that we may correct the mistakes that have been made; we may improve the condition of things; we may increase the efficiency of this branch of the public service by making some alteration in the policy heretofore adopted by the Government. The hon. gentleman tells us that a large portion of that printing has been done outside of the public contracts. My hon. friend read a statement and showed that the outside printing amounted to as much as $150,000 a year. Now, I venture to say that nineteen-twentieths of this printing, over which this expenditure has been incurred, ought to have been done by the public printers; that it is wholly unnecessary that it should have been done elsewhere; that it was done for the purpose of conferring favors on particular supporters of the Government, and that in this undertaking the Government had incurred an expenditure four or five fold greater than would have been incurred had this printing been done under the public contracts. The hon. gentleman failed to inform the House of one thing which is not without significance, and that is that when these hon. gentlemen entered into a contract with the public printers, they stipulated with those gentlemen that they should not have any action against the Government if the Government chose to divert a portion of that printing, which ought to be done by the public printers, into the hands of their friends throughout the country. And what has been the effect of that provision? Why, Sir, that those men tendering on an uncertain quantity, not knowing how far the generosity or the necessities of the Government might compel it to withdraw printing which ought to go to the public printers and bestow it on their friends, are obliged to ask more, when they tender for the performance of this work than they would do if they were absolutely certain that all the public printing that requires to be done would be done by them under the terms of the contract. Now the hon. gentleman can do the public very much greater service by putting an end to that system of jobbery, and allowing the public printers to do the work that they are better qualified to do, and have better facilities for doing, than any other class of the community, rather than proposing to create an additional Department here for the purpose of doing work which he himself admits is done in England by public contract and not in a Department of this sort—a system which is more suited to the genius of our system of government and our institutions than the one he proposes to establish. The hon. gentleman knows that he cannot do what Prince Bismark does; he knows that he cannot control his supporters in exactly the same way that he does, and that he is obliged to have recourse to other measures. Why, the printing done at the Gazette office, at the office of the London Free Press, and the Toronto Mail, shows that the hon. gentleman is obliged to have recourse to other measures outside of the moral and material influences without which it could not long subsist. He is obliged to have recourse to other measures than those which are necessary on the part of the Prime Minister of Prussia. So that the hon. gentleman need not have travelled so far away from the country for the purpose of finding precedents for the policy which he proposes to adopt. There are simpler means of cheapening the cost of this branch of the public service, and increasing its efficiency, without the experiment of this costly and cumbrous institution which the hon. gentleman proposes to establish. The hon. gentleman has spoken about the printing of the voters' lists. How are those lists to be revised and corrected if the printing is done here? Let me suppose that the revising officer in the district of Cariboo, nearly 4,000 miles away from here, is obliged to send his voters' list to the capital for the purpose of being printed, to be returned there to be corrected, and then to be returned here to be printed after correction. I apprehend the whole period of a Parliament would expire and a new list would be necessary before the hon. gentleman could place his list in the hands of the revising officer as finally corrected. The hon. gentleman has introduced this Bill for our consideration—when? Why, at the beginning of the fourth month of the Session. In England, where they have sessions of seven months, there has not been, for the past fifty years, an important measure introduced and carried through Parliament that was not introduced in the first month of the seven months of the Session. Still the hon. gentleman proposes here, in the fourth month of the Session, while he is trying to convince his supporters that the Session is to come to an end in a few days, an important measure, which, if the House were to do its duty, would involve a fortnight's discussion. I am not in favor of running away from my post—anxious as I am to leave here—I am not in favor of permitting this Bill to go through this House, and the committees of this House, without careful consideration. When I feel that I cannot give to any measure, no matter at what period it is introduced, that public attention which it requires, I shall resign my seat and give some other person, who has more leisure, an opportunity of taking my place. I protest against the hon. gentleman wasting the time of the members of this House by the introduction of measures of this sort at this late period. Why did the hon. gentleman wait until the fourth month of the Session before bringing this Bill up for a second reading? Is it because hon. gentlemen are not prepared to go on with the necessary public business? How is it that this House has scarcely been in Committee of Supply for the past three weeks? How is it that the hon. gentleman has wasted the whole of this day when he knows that those sitting behind him are anxious to get through with the public business and bring the Session to a close? How is it that he has wasted the whole of to-day in the consideration of a measure which he knows he cannot get through this House, if it received a fair consideration, at this period of the Session? What is happening? Are not the Government agreed about the subsidies they have proposed? Are their friends disputing the fairness of the distribution of the public funds which have been proposed to be made to some railways? Have they been further considered and further revised? What is the reason? Let the hon. gentleman be frank with the House and tell us why we have spent the whole day in the discussion of this measure, which the organ of the Minister of the Interior announced was not to be pressed this Session. The Government must have some reason for this course, and I think it is in the public interest that they should on this occasion take the House into their confidence, and tell us why a measure which was reported against by their own commission last year is brought forward in the fourth month of the Session.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

REAL PROPERTY IN NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. THOMPSON moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolutions:—

1. Resolved,—That the salaries of registrars, deputy registrars and other necessary officers, and such incidental expenses of carrying the Act respecting real property in the North-West Territories into effect, as are sanctioned by the Governor in Council, shall be paid out of moneys to be provided by Parliament for the purpose.

2. Resolved,—That a proper building may, under orders of the Governor in Council, be provided and maintained at the public expense in each registration district for the deposit and safe-keeping of documents connected with the registration of titles under the Act.

3. Resolved,—That the Governor in Council may, from time to time, provide the necessary books and forms, provide any additional forms he deems necessary, and make such rules and regulations as are necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the said Act, and make such rules and regulations as to him appear necessary for giving effect to the Act, in cases unprovided for, according to its true intent and purpose.

4. Resolved,—That all fees payable under the said Act or in connection therewith shall be such as are settled by tariff made by the Governor in Council, together with one-fifth of one per cent. on the value of the real property registered, if such value amounts to or is less than $5,000, and one-tenth of one per cent. on the additional value when the value exceeds that sum; and twenty per cent. of such gross fees shall be applied to the formation of a land assurance fund for the purposes in the said Bill set forth. The value shall be ascertained by the oath or solemn affirmation of the applicant, owner or person acquiring such land. If the registrar be not satisfied as to the correctness of the value so affirmed or sworn to, it shall be lawful for him to require such applicant, owner or person acquiring such land to produce a certificate of such value under the hand of a sworn valuator appointed by a judge, which certificate shall be received as conclusive evidence of such value for the purpose aforesaid.

5. Resolved,—That the registrar may demand and receive the fees so settled, and perform the duties for which they are made payable, on payment thereof, and shall keep a correct account of all moneys received by him under the said Act and pay over the same to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General, as shall be directed by the Governor in Council.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman give us some explanation of the amount of public charge which he expects to be involved.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not know that I can make any very full explanation as to the amount of charge that this will involve. We propose to have four registrars; the present registrars are to continue in office, and it is almost impossible to state definitely what the allowance to these officers should be, because I take it that the work which they are to perform will be on the increase as settlement advances. Up to about a year ago, I think the fees averaged about $400 or $500 for each registrar. It is proposed to continue the present salaries of the registrars, who, I think, are paid $500 each, with the exception of one, who receives $1,200.

Mr. BLAKE. Is the general scheme to be that the fees shall pay the expenses of the offices?

Mr. THOMPSON. The fees, I think, will be more than sufficient to pay all the expenses, but they will not be at all sufficient to form a guarantee fund. It is proposed that the assurance fund shall be formed not only by the fees, but by a tax of one-fifth of one per cent. of the value of the real property registered, if such value is less than $5,000, and one-tenth of one per cent. upon the additional value when the value exceeds that sum, and 20 per cent. of such gross fees shall be applied to the formation of a land assurance fund. We propose to make the same provision that exists in Ontario, as to ascertaining the value when there is any doubt. That is, that there shall be an oath or affirmation of the applicant, and if the registrar is not satisfied, there shall be a valuation by a sworn appraiser appointed by a judge.

Committee rose and reported.

SUPPLY—INCH ARRAN HOTEL.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DAVIES. I desire to take advantage of the present motion to make a short statement with respect to the Inch Arran Hotel, and the highly undesirable relations which have existed and still continue to exist between a number of Government officials and that hotel. I think it is desirable that the facts, as proved before the Committee of Public Accounts, should be given in such form that the House and the country may understand them. I propose to summarise the facts, and I think that when I have finished I will have satisfied hon. members on both sides that the examination of witnesses before the Public Accounts Committee resulted in bringing to light facts which it would be beneficial to the public to know. The newspapers in the Maritime Provinces, last autumn and in the beginning of the present year, made charges to the effect that the Inch Arran Hotel, although ostensibly belonging to private individuals, was really a Government hotel. They charged that, if not owned by the Government as a Government, it was standing in the names or name of one or more Government officials; they charged that the Chief Engineer of Government railways, that the Chief Superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway and other officials, high in office, were directly interested in the hotel; they charged that concessions, advantages and privileges were granted to that hotel which were not granted to other private institutions; they charged that tickets were given to tourists and servants going to that hotel for nothing.

Mr. FARROW. It is proved to be false.

Mr. DAVIES. When I read the evidence or certain portions of it, I will undertake to say that the hon. gentleman dare not rise in his seat and take the responsibility of the statement he has made.

Mr. FARROW. Yes, I dare.

Mr. DAVIES. They charged, further, that the materials which entered into the construction of that hotel were carried to the hotel for nothing; they charged that the public and the country were defrauded in the amount of freight which ought to have been charged on those materials; they charged further that when the owner, the person who owned the hotel originally, sold his or her interests to the Government, or rather to the Chief Engineer of the Government Railways, it was made a part of the consideration which she received for her interest in the hotel that her husband should be employed at the public expense; and I now propose very shortly to see whether or not these allegations have been proved by the evidence. The building of that hotel was begun in 1883 by Mrs. Grant. She stated that she had reason to expect she would receive Government aid in the construction of the hotel; she stated she had been promised by Sir Charles Tupper that she would get such aid, but that he met with difficulties in obtaining the consent of the Council, and therefore she did not get it directly. Mrs. Grant proceeded during the summer of 1883 with the construction of that hotel. In the spring of 1884, the Government officials appeared upon the scene, and Mr. Sherwood Tupper Hillson, the inspector of Government buildings upon the Intercolonial Railway, proceeded to Dalhousie, saw Mrs. Grant and spoke to her about the completion of the hotel. Mr. Hillson, in his capacity of inspector of buildings on the Intercolonial Railway, took Mrs. Grant to the firm of Rhodes, Currie & Co., Amherst, and introduced her to that firm. They stated to him they would not contract with Mrs. Grant for the completion of the hotel unless the amount of their contract was guaranteed by some responsible person, and Mr. Hillson gave them the guarantee of Mr. Schreiber, Engineer in Chief of Government Railways. I will trouble you for one moment while I read Mr. Hillson's statement upon that point:

Q. Had you received any instructions from any of your superior officers to attend to the construction of that hotel? A.—After Mrs. Grant had commenced the house—she commenced it in 1883—in 1884, she made a contract with Rhodes & Currie. At least I introduced her at Amherst to Rhodes & Currie, myself, and she made a contract with them to complete the house, and Mr. Schreiber, as I understood from her at the time, was advancing her some $4,000 or $5,000 to complete the house. Rhodes & Currie would not take her for the amount, and Mr. Schreiber paid the amount to Rhodes & Currie."

So we find that, in the beginning of the year 1884, Mr. Schreiber, the Chief Engineer of Railways, undertakes to pay Rhodes & Currie the full amount of a contract they were about to enter into for the construction of this private hotel. Who are Rhodes & Currie? Rhodes, Currie & Co. may not be known generally to the members of this House, but they are well known in the Maritime Provinces. They are gentlemen who have large contracts with the Intercolonial Railway; they are gentlemen who supplied all the wooden materials which entered into the construction of the station at St. John; they are gentlemen who supply to the Intercolonial Railway all the materials which enter into the repairs and construction of the buildings along the line of railway, they are very convenient gentlemen at many times, and to these gentlemen the inspector of buildings takes Mrs. Grant, and Mr. Schreiber, the Chief Engineer, guarantees the payment, and subsequently pays the $4,500, being the amount of the contract which they entered into for the construction of that hotel. Now, I am anxious that the House should recollect the position which Rhodes & Currie hold towards the Intercolonial Railway, because it will explain the gross irregularities which subsequently occurred, by which the Government of the country was defrauded of the freight upon the carriage of these materials to Dalhousie. Rhodes & Currie, as I have stated, supply the materials which enter into the construction and repairs of the Government buildings on the Intercolonial Railway. Those materials are sent along the railway to the care of Mr. Chas. Tupper Hillson, the inspector of buildings, and, of course, when they are for the construction of Government buildings, they do not pay any freight, and when Messrs. Rhodes, Currie & Co., entered into this private contract with Mrs. Grant for the completion of this private hotel, they seem to have adopted the same rule for the carriage of the materials which entered into the construction of that hotel as they adopt with reference to the carriage of the materials which enter into the construction of ordinary Government buildings, namely, that no freight should be paid. I find Mr. Hillson says on that point:

"Rhodes & Currie consigned a good deal of stuff for repairs along the road which, when the consigned it, if I had ordered the stuff, was consigned to me for the repairs on the different stations."

That, of course, would be all right. In the case of Government buildings, no freight would be paid upon those materials, but, when Rhodes & Currie were sending forward the materials to construct the Inch Arran Hotel, they sent those materials consigned to the Intercolonial Railway and to the care of Charles Tupper Hillson, inspector of buildings, and thus evaded the payment of the freight. Now, it may be said, and it has been said, that it is a very small amount. I do not know, I have not been able to ascertain from the evidence given before the Public Accounts Committee, what that freight would amount to. Nobody can tell. The facts were proved as I have stated them, and as I will show by referring to the evidence a little further on; and Mr. Bruce, the auditor of the Intercolonial Railway was brought here and asked to give evidence with respect to this matter. He produced a number of way-bills —memo. bills he called them—which he said were copies of the original bills forwarded by Rhodes & Currie to Hillson's care. The originals, he told us, were lost. They had been destroyed in the fire at Dalhousie, so he told us, and I have no reason to doubt the gentleman's statement at all; I do not wish to throw the slightest doubt on that part of it. How he got the copies I do not know. I was about one half through the gentleman's examination; he promised to remain till the next meeting; when the next meeting came, the gentleman had gone home; I was not able to pursue my examination, and the other witnesses could not tell me anything about it. But, from those copies which he did produce, I find the following to be the facts, which I will just read to the House. I had better read Mr. Bruce's statement upon that point.

"Q. What I want to ask you is whether you have any returns with reference to lumber sent from Amherst?—A. Yes; I have them. Here are copies of the bills. Of course, the originals are filed away.

"Q. Where are the originals?—A. They were filed at Dalhousie station, but the station was burned down and they were destroyed.

"Q. Well, take one in your hand—that is a way-bill?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Who is the consignor?—A. James Caird, senior.

"Q. Who is the person to whom it is consigned?—A. Chas. T. Hillson.

"Q. Who is Charles T. Hillson?—A. He is the inspector of buildings on the Intercolonial Railway.

"Q. This lumber was consigned to Chas. T. Hillson, the inspector of buildings?—A. Yes, Sir.

"Q. What had he to do with the building of Inch Arran Hotel?—A. I cannot answer that question.

"Q. Will you look at the next one?—A. That is the same consignee. I think they are pretty much all the same.

"Q. So that all the way-bills you produce of supplies for this hotel, were consigned to Hillson, at Dalhousie?—A. There may be an exceptional bill consigned to proprietor.

"Q. There is one, I see, Intercolonial Railway care of McLellan?—A. That was consigned to the trackmaster and was material for the hotel which was charged for.

"Q. So that where it is not consigned to Hillson, it is to another official of the road?—A. Well, there are two Hillsons, and this one is the trackmaster.

"Q. Where did this lumber come from?—A. The lumber was sent to the inspector of buildings.

"Q. From whom?—A. Well, the bills themselves should give the shipper, but I believe, to the best of my knowledge, that the most of the lumber was shipped by Rhodes, Currie & Co.

"Q. But as a matter of fact the name of the sender is left blank?—A. There is no design in that.

"Q. I don't say there was any design, but as matter of fact it was consigned from Rhodes, Currie & Co., was it?—A. I know nothing more than that, except that they carry on a general manufacturing business at Amherst.

"Q. You know that they have a contract with the Government for supplying material for St. John Station?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. So that the contractor for supplying the material for the St. John Station forwarded the lumber for the construction of this hotel, and forwarded it to Chas. T Hillson, inspector of buildings of the Intercolonial Railway. Will you tell me what Hillson had to do with the construction of that building if it was a private enterprise?—A. I cannot answer that.

"Q. As far as the freight is concerned, I understand you to say that it was paid?—A. It is all paid for.

"Q. Was it all paid for at the time?—A. It was not all paid for at the time.

"Q. Why was it not all paid for at the time?—A. Because they had a running account.

"Q. Who had the running account, Charles T. Hillson, or the inspector, or Inch Arran House?—A. Inch Arran House.

"Q But the consignee was Hillson, one of the employees of the road?—A. Yes.

"Q. Who was liable for it?—A. Inch Arran House.

"Q. That is not a corporation?—A. Well, I never troubled myself much about it."

So the gentleman left just when I was in the middle of his examination, and I never had the pleasure of continuing my examination of him and bringing out from his own lips the facts I myself was informed of and hoped to prove. Now let me read to the House an abstract of those way bills:

"On the 14th May, 1885, consignor, Rhodes, Currie & Co., consignee, Intercolonial Railway, care C. T. Hillson, 1 car lumber freight $26."

That was the first way-bill. Attached to that there is a slip in which that freight of $26 is marked, "To pay, $5." Now I want that to be noticed by the House, because Mr. Pottinger, when he gave his evidence and read letters he had submitted to his chief about this railway, stated that there were three concessions which the Government had made to the road, and which they were accustomed to make to hotels situated similarly to Inch Arran. The first concession was that all materials used in the construction and equipment would be charged at half rate; second, the free transfer for all the workmen engaged in the construction; and third, half rates for all servants. Now, some members of the committee took up considerable time to show that this system was in vogue on other railways, and I wish it to be understood that I am not attacking that at all. It may or may not be right, but that is not the question before the country. It may be right, and I dare say it is, to give inducements to those who construct these summer hotels along the railway, but the question is not whether it is prudent or right to give these concessions, but whether those who are concerned in the construction of that hotel attempted to pay one-half rates, or whether they attempted to defraud the Government by not paying one-tenth rate, and whether the principle of allowing officials to be concerned in this way, does not open wide the door to frauds. Now, the following is the whole number of bills, arranged in tabular form:—

Date.	Consignor.	Consignee.	Material.	Freight.
1885.		I. C. R.
May 14.	Rhodes, Currie & Co.,	Care C. T. Hillson,	1 car lumber,	$26.00

" 13.	Rhodes, Currie & Co.,	Care C. T. Hillson,	3 bdls. boards, 1 door, 1 frame, 2 bowling alleys	} Free.
" 19.	Blank	C. T. Hillson	1 bdl. pine,	None.

Now, Mr. Speaker, from the way-bills produced by this gentleman himself, it appears that nearly all these materials were carried free of freight contrary to the concession which Mr. Pottinger said was made to the road, in violation of the law of the land, and depriving the country of the freight which should have been paid into the coffers of the Intercolonial Railway. But, says Mr. Bruce, that freight is paid? I charge that the statement was a disingenuous one. It is paid, but when? The Moncton Transcript made charges similar to those that I am repeating here, to the effect that the Intercolonial Railway had been made use of to carry the material of this private hotel for nothing. But in the month of March, after this House was in Session, and when it was known that these charges were to be made and an examination to be had, then we find that an investigation was gone through, and the sum of $67 is paid into the coffers of the railway which should have been paid the previous year, on the second day of March, months after the charges had been made, and when it was known they were to come up in this House. In September, 1884, the general superintendent, Mr. Pottinger, writes to the station agent at Dalhousie respecting the freight. The letter is dated on the 14th September:

"J. & J. McLeod, Dalhousie.

"Do Rhodes & Curry owe you anything? Were the materials they brought up this year for improvements at Inch Arran consigned to them, or to whom, and were they way-billed, prepaid or to pay.

"D. POTTINGER."

He follows that up with another letter:

"Dear Sir,—I presume that all the freight that came to Inch Arran House for use there, was properly way-billed and charged, if not let me know, so that it may be properly charged. See that no materials have come consigned to C. T. Hillson free of charge.

"I have telegraphed you to-day asking if Rhodes, Curry & Co. owe any bill for freight, and if their freight came properly way-billed and whether prepaid or to pay.

"Answer this to-morrow, as I leave for the west Tuesday night.

"Yours truly,

"D. POTTINGER."

This is Mr. McLeod's answer:

"Rhodes & Curry do not owe me anything, most of material came on memo. bills to C. T. Hillson. There is a small balance due me by Wm. Watson, who put water pipes in at Inch Arran House, and C. T. Hillson owes me a small balance on goods, &c., that came to him for Inch Arran House.

"J. J. McLEOD."

Then follows some further correspondence enlarging upon this matter, but as a matter of fact, not a dollar was paid, nor was the amount settled until the second day of March, and these goods were carried in the month of May and the beginning of June, 1885. I call the attention of the House to the evidence which Mr. Pottinger gave upon this matter, and the House will think it is very remarkable that although Mr. Pottinger admitted the existence of those gross irregularities, yet when I had asked him if he had taken means to ascertain whom the culprits were, so as to punish them by dismissal, he said he had taken no means. There was a rather remarkable episode during the examining of the witnesses to which I wish to call the attention of the House, and it is this: That the man who, above all others, would know about the transaction, was J. J. McLeod, station master at Dalhousie. The station had been burnt down, and the written evidence had been lost; but McLeod was there, and I was about to summon him. I did not mention his name at first for very obvious reasons. After examining the first two witnesses I was about sending for McLeod, when I received a telegram saying he had skipped to the United States.

Mr. McCALLUM. Why did he go?

Mr. DAVIES. Is the hon. gentleman very anxious to know? He went, I believe, as Mr. Pottinger says, because there were irregularities in his accounts.

Mr. FARROW. Had he written a letter saying so?

An hon. MEMBER. Read it.

Mr. DAVIES. I will if the hon. member wishes it. I want to read the evidence of Mr. Pottinger on that question of that freight for the hotel. It will be found on page 9 of the manuscript report in Mr. Pottinger's evidence:

"Q. Your statement leads me to ask a good many questions. You say the materials for building the house were to be carried at half rate, and that the ordinary supplies were not so to be carried?—A. Yes, certainly.

"Q. And that any official who were privy or party to the carrying of them free were guilty of breaches of their duty?—A. Decidedly.

"Q. Well, now in reference to this particular item to which you referred, you seem to have had some idea or suspicion when you wrote to the station master at Dalhousie, about it. Was he also instructed that a deposit had been made with the treasurer, at Moncton, to cover the amount?—A. He may have been, and I have no doubt he was, because I paid the balance out of money belonging to Mr. Schreiber that I had in my hands.

"Q. Then you have no doubt at all from the fact that you paid the balance, that there was gross irregularity. Who was the man that was guilty of that?—A. I do not know.

"Q. Did you ever take steps to ascertain who it was, and punish him?—A. I have not yet.

Q. Was it not a serious breach of the regulations for any official to carry stuff over the road and smuggle it free, when it should have been paid for?—A. Yes, but still there is no doubt about getting it back because I had the matter in my hands.

Q. But if you had not discovered it the public would have been defrauded?—A. Certainly, they might have been

Q. Certainly they would have been, it was owing to you finding it out that the public did not lose the money; who is the station master at Dalhousie?—A. Mr. J. J. McLeod.

"Q. What has happened to him since this investigation was opened?—A. I think he has gone to the United States.

"Q. He was not in the United States when this investigation opened?—A. When I left he was not.

"Q. But since you left he has gone?—A. Yes.

"Q. He is the man who would know a good deal about it?—A. He may know something.

"Q. Being the station master he must know. I take it that the station master at Dalhousie would know what freight came there improperly?—A. He tells me in that letter what freight came improperly "Q. That is not my question. I want to know as a matter of fact whether or not he would know?—A. Certainly.

"Q. But he is not to be had?—A. No, but I can account for his absence. I do not want to do the man any injury, but I can account for his absence outside of the hotel altogether."

Here is a gross irregularity, as the result of which the Government lost quite a respectable sum of money; and Mr. Pottinger is aware of that fact, and yet he takes no steps to discover who the official is, in order that he may be dismissed; but a poor unfortunate fellow, Cormier, takes a glass of grog and he is hoisted out and dismissed at once. He produced the letter which Mr. McLeod wrote to one of the officials, stating that he found his money short and he had skipped out on that account. I think I have proved to the satisfaction of the House, despite the contradictions with which my opening remarks were met by hon. gentlemen opposite, that there were gross irregularities which should not have been countenanced, and which resulted in the loss of quite a respectable sum of money, all owing to the fact that the officials connected with the Intercolonial Railway were allowed to have connection privately with this private hotel, and to the fact that Mr. Charles Tupper Hillson, the inspector of buildings, was allowed to have material which entered into the construction of the hotel consigned to him; and it was because, as I have proved, Messrs. Rhodes, Currie & Co. were in the habit of having Government material sent to him on which no freight was paid, and they sent material to the hotel in the same way, and thus avoided payment. That was not all. Mr. C. T. Hillson is in the Government employ, and it was proved during the investigation that part of the time he was supposed to superintend the construction of Government buildings was spent by him in superintending the construction of this private hotel. Was that fair or right? It was unjust and unfair. Mr. Pottinger, in his evidence on that point, says on page 17:

"Q. Who was the inspector of Government buildings on your road?—A. Mr. C. T. Hillson.
"Q. He is inspector of what?—A. Inspector of buildings, of the repairs of buildings chiefly.
"Q. When was he appointed?—A I cannot remember that.
"Q. About when?—A. Several years ago.
"Q. Four or five years ago?—A. I should think so.
"Q. Well, did Mr. Hillson spend any of his time inspecting the Inch Arran House?—A. He did spend some time there in 1884.
"Q. How much of it?—A. I do not know how much.
"Q. Two months?—A. Well, he was travelling about over the line. It would be difficult to state where his work lies.
"Q. It may have been about two months?—A. I cannot state that "Q. Have you no reasonable idea that you can state?—A. I know he spent some time there by my orders.
"Q. Inspecting the hotel?—A. Yes; inspecting the hotel and hastening the completion."

It is too bad that an official, who is paid out of the public Treasury for inspecting public buildings should be employed by Mr. Pottinger in inspecting a private building owned by the Chief Engineer of the Government Railways in his private capacity. If the Government officials are taken from their work and sent to superintend private buildings belonging to the Superintendent of the Railway, it is a gross wrong. Now, Mr. Hillson was examined himself with respect to the time he spent there, and I will just trouble the House with a short statement from him, corroborating—if need for corroboration existed—Mr. Pottinger's evidence upon that point:

"Q. I want you to speak with reference to the Dalhousie investigation. When did you go there? You know the Inch Arran Hotel?—A. I do.
"Q. When did you first go to inspect the construction of that building?—A. I cannot say that ever I went there particularly at any time to inspect the Inch Arran Hotel. I was at Dalhousie at the time of the construction of the branch, and the buildings, and the wharf, almost every week, and at different times I went down to this hotel.
"Q. Had you received any instructions from any of your superior officers to attend to the construction of that hotel?—A. After Mrs. Grant had commenced the house—she commenced the house, I think, in 1883—in 1884, after she had commenced the house she made a contract with Rhodes & Currie—at least I introduced her at Amherst to Rhodes & Currie and she made a contract with them to complete the house, and Mr. Schreiber, as I understood from her at the time, was advancing her some $4,000 or $5,000 to complete the house. Rhodes & Currie would not take her for the amount, and Mr. Schreiber paid the amount to Rhodes & Currie.
"Q. What amount to Rhodes & Currie?—A. The amount of their contract, $4,000 or $5,000—$4,500 I think it was. Mr. Pottinger asked me when I was there to take a run down to the house and see if the work was being carried out right, and I did.
"Q. Then it was under Mr. Pottinger's instructions that you saw the work was carried out right?—A. Yes.

So we have here, from the mouth of Mr. Pottinger, corroborative of the evidence of Mr. Hillson, the fact that this man, whose time should have been devoted to the public service, was devoting his time to the construction of a private hotel owned by Mr. Schreiber. Not only so but he was employed in disposing of the accounts and bills of the hotel. We find him saying at page 11 of his evidence:

"Q. You can give no idea of the length of time you were inspecting that hotel, as it was at different intervals? You kept no memorandum of it?—A. No; I kept no memorandum of it.
"Q. Did you pay any of the bills?—A. Yes.
"Q. How many of the bills did you pay?—A. I cannot tell you exactly, now, but it was quite a large amount.
"Q. Quite a large amount means anything or nothing?—A. Well, it means, say, $1,000; that is quite a large amount."

Then we come to another point; when the hotel was finally purchased from Mrs. Grant, what considerations were paid to her for her interest? Let us turn to the evidence on that point.

Mr. McLELAN. Up to that time was it Mrs. Grant's; or when did it become Mr. Schreiber's? I think it was subsequent to that period.

Mr. DAVIES.

Mr. DAVIES. In June, 1884, I think, it become Mr. Schreiber's. Mr. Schreiber paid $4,500 to Rhodes & Currie for the construction, and when the hotel was constructed he bought it up.

Mr. McLELAN. He advanced her that amount on mortgage, and she directed Rhodes & Currie I suppose. But during all that time it was Mrs. Grant's private property?

Mr. DAVIES. It was not running at all at that time. By the evidence of Mr. Pottinger, on page 21, we will see how this hotel passed from Mrs. Grant's hands into the hands of Mr. Schreiber:

"Q. What I meant to ask is this: When Mr. Schreiber took this hotel off the hands of Mrs. Grant, were you party or privy to the arrangement?—A. I knew something about the arrangement, but I did not make the arrangement
"Q. Were you there?—A. No, I was not there.
"Q. You did not see Mrs. Grant personally?—A. No, I did not at that time.
"Q. At what time did you see her?—A. I was in the hotel some weeks before.
"Q. With reference to her leaving, and Mr. Schrieber taking possession of it?—A. Yes, I spoke to her.
"Q. You went there for that purpose?—A. No, I did not. I went there and found everything in confusion. The people talked of leaving the house. I talked to Mrs. Grant, and asked her if she would not sell out to Mr. Schreiber.
"Q. Without having consulted Mr. Schreiber?—A. Yes.
"Q. That seems singular to me?—A. She demurred strongly to it. We had only five minutes conversation, or perhaps less
"Q. You suggested that she should give up the hotel to Mr. Schreiber and she demurred?—A. Yes, she demurred."

So that Mrs. Grant did not want to sell, and Mr. Pottinger wanted her to sell. Then we have Mr. Hillson's testimony on that point, who says he was present at the arrangement. He says, at page 13 of his evidence:

"Q. You were not present when Mrs. Grant and Mr. Harrison made the agreement together?—A. I was there mostly all the time when the arrangement was made between Harrison and Mrs. Grant.
"Q. Do I understand you to deny or affirm that Mrs. Grant did insist upon her husband getting employment as a consideration for giving up the hotel?—A. I heard nothing of the kind, with the exception of what I told you, that Harrison said Mrs. Grant wanted employment for her husband if she signed the agreement."

The agreement was an agreement surrendering her interest in the hotel to Mr. Schreiber. Now we have here an hotel alleged to be owned by Mrs. Grant; we have Mr. Pottinger telling her that he wanted her to sell the hotel to Mr. Schreiber; we have Mr. Schreiber and Mr. Pottinger sending to the law agent of the Dominion Government for New Brunswick, who goes to Dalhousie and negotiates for the purchase of the hotel, and, as a consideration for her giving up her interest, the law agent of the Government signs a document that her husband shall get employment in the public service. Mrs. Grant was called and gave evidence, some of which was amusing and some instructive. I shall read those parts which refer to this point:

"Q. Had you been running the hotel up to the time you sold out?—A. Yes.
"Q. Had you sole control of it up to that time; had you any assistance in running it?—A. What do you mean by that?
"Q. Any assistance from any of the Government officials?—A. Not any assistance from Government officials. There was a clerk in the house.
"Q. Who was that?—A. George Sangster.
"Q. Who was he?—A. He keeps the restaurant at Moncton. He was sent over to help me to open the books, and in keeping the house."

So Mr. Charles Tupper Hillson introduces a gentleman to Mrs. Grant who goes there and works for nothing, and this House is asked to believe that he was not paid by the Government of this country.

Mr. BOWELL. Was he in the employ of the Government?

Mr. DAVIES. I do not know by whom he was employed, but a Government employee put him there.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman must know, because it is in the evidence.

Mr. DAVIES. Who paid him?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know, but the fact was brought out that he was not in the employ of the Government and never had been, and that the Government had nothing to do with the selection. Why did you not tell the House that?

Mr. DAVIES. I am remarking on the extraordinary fact that at the time the Government alleged that neither they nor their officials owned this hotel at all. Their inspector of buildings goes to Moncton and takes a gentleman from Moncton and puts him there to keep the accounts and run the hotel for no salary at all. I am asking who paid him? The hon. gentleman must give the answer, for I cannot.

Mr. McLELAN. Did you ask Mrs. Grant?

Mr. DAVIES. I have read what I asked her. The testimony goes on:

"Q. Who sent him?—A. Mr. Hillson brought him there and introduced him to me. He was paid no salary as the man to open the books and assist me in keeping the house.

"Q. He was paid no salary by you?—A. No, sir; it was a distinct understanding that he was to be paid no salary."

A distinct understanding with whom? With the Government inspector of buildings? I will go on and read the agreement she made with Mr. Schreiber, which she at first refused to produce, but which she produced subsequently. It was signed simultaneously with the signing by her of a conveyance to Mr. Schreiber, and it was drawn by the Government law agent in New Brunswick, the gentleman sent by Mr. Pottinger to carry this agreement out:

"DALHOUSIE, 28th July, 1884.

"MRS. ELLEN G. GRANT.

"DEAR MADAM,—It is the intention of the Railway Department to employ Mr. Grant at once temporarily, to be followed as soon as practicable with permanent employment at a suitable remuneration.

(Signed) "L. R. HARRISON."

I suppose the Government had something to do with that.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no evidence that they had.

Mr. DAVIES. There is evidence that Mr. Pottinger, the Government Superintendent of Railways, sent this law agent to draw the agreement conveying Mrs. Grant's interest to Mr. Schreiber, and that gentleman gave this undertaking saying that it was the intention of the Department to appoint Mr. Grant, and he has been in the service of the Government ever since.

Mr. BOWELL. My hon. friend is laying down the principle that because a lawyer is a Government agent in a certain city, if he is employed by anybody else, he must be employed by the Government.

Mr. DAVIES. It is not by anybody else; here is where the hon. gentleman is astray. Mr. Harrison was employed by Mr. Pottinger, the General Superintendent of the Government Railway.

Mr. BOWELL. Has he no right to have business with anyone else but with the Government?

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman should not defend this transaction. He should condemn it.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not trying to defend anything. I am trying to set you right, so that you will not mislead the House.

Mr. DAVIES. Not only did he pledge to Mrs. Grant that the Department would employ her husband. Mrs. Grant was asked this question:

"Q. This was given to you at the time you passed the hotel over to Mr. Schreiber?—A. It was. It was the result of three years' lobbying in the House of Commons.

"Q. It is dated 28th July, 1884?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. That is the time you sold the hotel to Mr. Schreiber?—A. Yes.

"Q. Did you insist upon getting this document before giving up possession?—A. It was given to me by Mr. Harrison. I do not know how much my insisting would have had any effect.

"Q. Did you insist?—A. I did not say that I insisted, but my husband was ill at the time, and it was part and parcel—Mr. Schreiber knew very well that the hotel was all I had to support my family at the time, and it was done as a personal thing for me.

"Q. It was part and parcel of what?—A. Nothing; you asked me if I got the document.

"Q. Was it part and parcel of your agreement?—A. The only objection I had to giving up the hotel, was that I would be thrown out on the world with my children, who were too young to labor."

She was asked further:

"Q. Do I understand you to say that you would not give up the hotel unless you got employment for your husband?—A. I got that when I sold the hotel.

"Q. Was that a condition of your giving up the hotel?—A. Did not you tell me that it was, yourself?

"Q. Was it a condition of your giving up the hotel that you should have this agreement?—A. It was talked of at the time, but there is no legal document. If they chose to dispute it it is not worth that

"Q. Was it a condition of your giving up the hotel?—A. I am not going to answer any more questions. You have the document and what more can you have.

"Q. You must answer that question?—A. Well, I won't."

And she did not answer it. But I think any man of common sense and practical experience must know why she would not answer; he knows the only answer she could give. Now, just one word in conclusion. There was a further charge that certain tickets had been issued improperly. Mr. Pottinger explained that it was the custom to grant tickets at half fares. The evidence shows that the custom was violated in this case—that in 1884 no fare was charged at all.

Mr. FARROW. How many tickets?

Mr. DAVIES. We have knowledge of five which were proved to have been issued in 1884, for which nothing was paid at all until the day after the charge was made in the Moncton Transcript on 3rd March, 1886. Then, I want to call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact that after the conclusion of the season of 1884, the superintendent of passengers and freight, Mr. Busby, wrote to Mr. Pottinger a letter, stating that that letter would be his authority for sending a report of all the free tickets he had issued to the Inch Arran Hotel that year. In the face of that letter, it is beyond dispute that it never was the intention, until these charges were made in the public press that one dollar of the money should be refunded; but when the charges were openly made in the public press, these men, for shame's sake, were driven to refund the money they should have paid two years before. In 1885, twenty to twenty-five tickets were issued free, and Mr. Cormier, clerk in the Department, who checked Mr. Robinson's account, found in the return sent to the Department that he had marked in the column for payments the word nil.

An hon. MEMBER. What does that mean?

Mr. DAVIES. Ordinary people understood it to mean nothing, but we were astonished to hear Mr. Robinson explain it was meant to be accounted for hereafter. On the 27th October, 1885, Mr. Cormier was dismissed, and on the 23rd November Mr. Busby wrote to Mr. Robinson, the agent at Montreal, who issued tickets, that the chief superintendent decided on charging half fares; on the 28th the accounts for tickets was sent in, and on the 22nd September they were paid for, so that I do not think, in the face of that evidence, it would be proper for me to have kept back from the country the facts proved by the railway officials themselves. These men were not adverse to the interests of the railway, they were railway employees, and the facts they proved show a degree of irregularity and impropriety to have existed between the officials of the railway and the hotel, which deserves severe condemnation, and I hope the investigation will be a warning to other officials not to mix up their duties with their private business. It is to be deplored that any official should attempt to use his position to further his own private interests, and it is deeply to be deplored that when the matter is exposed, instead of meeting the condemnation of both sides, it meets with the approval of a good many hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not say all of them by any means. The charge I made has been substantially proved. With regard to the tickets issued in 1885, the charge made was proved conclusively, but we have Mr. Robinson's statement that the word nil meant that the tickets were to be accounted for, and we must take the statement for what it is worth; but as regards the tickets issued in 1884, they were not accounted for and were not expected to be accounted for.

Mr. McLELAN. I want to know if this evidence, from which the hon. gentleman has read such extracts as suited himself, is in a position to be made public.

Mr. DAVIES. The document is the evidence reported to this House by the committee, and I hope it will be published in full.

Mr. SPEAKER. It will be published.

Mr. McLELAN. I will not detain the House with observations. I am satisfied, when the evidence is published, the public will be satisfied these gentlemen did nothing more than what it was in their right to do to promote traffic.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As the hon. gentleman assumes the responsibility we are content.

SETTLERS IN SAUGEEN PENINSULA.

Mr. ALLEN. There is a matter I would like to bring before the House, in reference to the settlers in the Indian Saugeen Peninsula. They have been called upon by the Department to pay up the money due with interest to the 1st November on their lands, or else the lands will be resold. The state of these settlers is not very comfortable, and a great deal of dissatisfaction exists among them at present. The lands were originally sold in 1857, at a time when produce was very high, and the country was excited over land. These lands were sold by auction, and people foolishly purchased them at a great deal more than their actual value. In the course of a few years, the farmers who secured good lots were able to pay for them and got their deeds. A large number of these settlers purchased farms at from $2 to $10 per acre. Some of those farmers found when they cleared the land that it was nothing but solid rock, perhaps seventy-five acres of rock out of 100. It was worthless for farming purposes. A great many of the settlers have been trying to eke out a subsistence for the past twenty years on these farms, and have not been able to pay for them. Some of them have from $300 to $1,200 against them, and I do not think a purchaser could be found for some of the land at $50 per 100 acres. I hope the Department will not carry out their threats of making these men pay for the land by the 1st of November.

Mr. McNEILL. I did not quite catch what the hon. gentleman has said. What are the settlers called upon to do?

Mr. ALLEN. I understand some of them have been notified to pay for their lands before the 1st of November —the amount of purchase money and the interest due to that date.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman is mistaken with regard to that. There was such an order last year but none this year.

Mr. ALLEN. I know what I am talking about. Gentlemen living in that section have told me and have written to me that the Government have ordered them to pay up, and I believe the gentlemen. If they do sell, the Indian Department will lose by the transaction. If the land is taken and put up by auction they will not sell for one-half what is due, or for one-tenth in some cases. I know land in that neighborhood which was sold for $50 an acre, and there is over $50 an acre due to the Government on these lots on the west side of Brook, and I do not know anyone who would give over $20 or $25 an acre for that land. If those lands are sold, the Indian Department will lose by them, and the settlers will be forced to move from these lands and to go to the free grant lands on the other side of the Georgian Bay or to the North-West, where they can get lands for nothing. They will be put to these hardships, and the Indian Department will not receive the benefit. Then is it fair to insist on these settlers paying at the present time, with wheat selling at Owen Sound for 70 cents a bushel, and wool selling yesterday for 17 cents and 18 cents a pound. Cattle and horses are almost unsaleable in that part of the country at the present time. I am afraid they are not much better here. These men's crops last year were very poor. I do not believe the crops of wheat in our county last year averaged more than eight or ten bushels to the acre, and at 70 cents a bushel, that did not average over one-half the expense of raising the crop. I hope, under these circumstances, the Government will not press this year the payment for these lands. In the township of Keppel and other parts of the peninsula, saw mills have been put up, and I know there has been a great deal of trouble this winter. Mill men have been accustomed to purchase lands in the township of Keppel for fifteen years past, and these men have been allowed, when they purchased and paid for the lands, to take the timber off the lands and use it for lumber purposes, but lately, when in other townships they have cut out these logs for the mills, the Government agent was sent up there and the logs were seized, although the lumbermen made application to the Department and asked the Department to name any price for the lands they thought fair and they would pay it, and would pay any amount of dues that was fair and right for the logs. The Indians were anxious to get the mill-owners to take these logs away, because they said if they remained there much longer, fires would pass through the country and burn them up, as they had in other parts of the country; but agents were sent up and notice was given that these men would be arrested. One of them came here and told me he was under arrest, and he was afraid that other actions would be taken. His logs are under seizure and work stopped, while he had offered to pay any amount demanded, although he had purchased the lands. This is not treating the settlers fairly, and I hope the Government will make some arrangements by which those mill-owners can get those locations and get the timber, and will settle the matter satisfactorily and will also extend the time they want to enable them to pay for the lands. In doing that, I believe the country will be better off, the Indian Department will receive more money, the settlers will feel more satisfied, and the country generally in that part will feel relieved. You may depend that, if the threat is carried out of making them pay, it will cause a disturbance in that part of the country which will not be easily quelled.

Mr. McNEILL. I hope my hon. friend did not misunderstand me when I interrupted him a moment ago. I am in perfect sympathy with his views in reference to this matter, but I thought he was uninformed with regard to an alteration which had been made with reference to these regulations, and I simply wished to inform him what the state of affairs really was. There was an intention to compel the settlers to pay up in full in the Saugeen Peninsula by the 1st November last, but that intention on the part of the Deputy Minister was thwarted by the action of the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government, who, as soon as he learnt what the intention was, interfered and prevented its being carried out. I am now speaking as to the arrangements which have been made in my own constituency, and perhaps it may not be so in the constituency which my hon. friend represents. However, that proposal was, as I have said, interfered with by the Prime Minister, who stepped in on behalf of the settlers, and made an arrangement that they should be called upon to pay only by instalments, and he went so far as to say that those who were specially poor, those who were reported by the local agent to be unable to do so, should not be called upon even to pay one instalment by the 1st November, but should get time until their circumstances improved. That was the arrangement made so far as the settlers were concerned in the north riding of Bruce. I must say that I agree with the hon. gentleman in what he says, that to call upon these men to pay up in full at that time was a harsh and an unwise proceeding.

Mr. ALLEN. Was the same arrangement made for the county of Grey as for the county of Bruce?

Mr. McNEILL. I do not know, I am only speaking in regard to my own constituency. I do not know what has been done for the north riding of Grey, but this has been done in the north riding of Bruce. I can only say that, if the settlers in the north riding of Grey are being in any degree oppressed in this matter, I shall be only too glad to co-operate with my hon friend in any way possible to obtain for them the same advantages that the people in North Bruce have got. With regard to the millmen: I must admit that what the hon. gentleman has said is correct, and that they have been subjected, in my opinion, by the Deputy Minister of Indian Affairs, to the very greatest hardship and injustice. However, so far as they also are concerned, the right hon. gentleman has entered into an arrangement, and has given instructions to his deputy within the last few days which I hope will be satisfactory to all parties concerned. While I say I think these men have been treated with harshness and injustice, it is only right that I should also say that I believe this has been done, so far as the millmen are concerned, by the Indian Department for the benefit of the Indians. I believe that the action taken by the Department has been taken because the Deputy Minister believed that these men were injuriously lumbering, were injuriously affecting the property of the Indians. He believed that these men were robbing the Indians of their timber, and he thought it was necessary to take certain strong measures to prevent this timber stealing going on. I think that he overstepped his duty and acted harshly and unwisely for the Indians themselves, because I think he not only injured the millmen, but the settlers to whom the Indians must look for the purchase money of their lands. But I am quit satisfied that he acted in good faith, and in the belief that it was his duty, as a guardian of the Indians, to take steps to protect their property. There can be no doubt that timber stealing was going on, and that something had to be done to stop it. The action taken so far as these millmen are concerned, has, I believe, been dealt with by the Prime Minister in such a way as is likely to give satisfaction to all parties concerned; I hope, at all events, that will be the result. I believe that the hon. gentleman has only done his duty in bringing this matter before the House, because there is no doubt that these men have suffered grievously from the action that has been taken in the past.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am sure that the House must feel infinitely obliged to my hon. friend who has just sat down, for the amount of light he has thrown on the internal working of the Department of Indian Affairs. We knew tolerably well the sort of supervision which the First Minister exercises over any department which is unfortunate enough to be confided to his care. Now, I have always held that it is a serious mistake for the Prime Minister of this Dominion to charge himself with the care of an important Department, but the candid statement which my hon. friend has just made, and which shows how that Department is run by his subordinates, and the amount of attention that is bestowed upon it by its nominal head, cannot fail to satisfy the House that not merely as regards the unfortunate settlers in the county of Grey, but as regards a great many other persons who are under the control of the Indian Department, and of whom we have heard a great deal too much, and for whom this country has been called on to pay a great deal too much in blood and treasure, for that we are indebted a great deal to the fact that the head of the Indian Department is a purely nominal head, and exercises no effective supervision over his officials, either here or in the North-West.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is quite wrong about the First Minister's administration of that Department. The First Minister has applied himself and has succeeded in mastering the affairs connected with that Department, I must say that he has saved repeatedly large sums of money that were due to the Indians. Of course, we know perfectly well that everyone except the Minister, and probably the officers of the Department, is against the Indians, and do not want them to get their due, but always postpone the amount that becomes due to the Indians, thus depriving them of their means of support. I know by experience, that in relation to some of these lands the settlers have refused, year after year, to pay the Indians. As the hon. gentleman who brought this matter up has stated, there are some of these settlers who owe eight, nine, ten or twelve hundred dollars on their land. The hon. gentleman says the lands are very bad, and he would not give $5 an acre for them. Well, if they are so bad, why did they remain there after doing so much as they did on the lands?

Mr. ALLEN. Because they could not raise enough money to leave?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. But the hon. gentleman knows that when these men first went there they saw the quality of the land, that it was only rock, as he said, and why did they choose to remain? Because they found their living there, because they could cut timber, which they had no right to cut, and which did not belong to them. The hon. gentleman says that a number of these settlers have cut timber, and that it was seized by the officers of this Department. Why? Because that timber did not belong to these settlers; and why should the Indians, for whom the Government are merely trustees, be deprived of what belongs to them? Because they are Indians, and because they cannot defend themselves? I think that is not fair. Of course I am in favor of the settlers as much as any man in this House, but on the other hand we ought to look after the interests of the Indians. We are here for that purpose, and we should not allow them to be robbed. The hon. gentleman says they were called upon to pay, and unless they paid by the 1st November they were to be sold out. I wonder how many of these settlers were ever sold out. The hon. gentleman could not give a single instance of an eviction. The Department have been obliged to call upon these settlers to pay within a certain time in order to bring them to a sense of justice. Now, all we claim against these settlers has been settled by the regulation the hon. gentleman spoke of, and they are to pay by instalments. If they had taken that course from the beginning, nobody would have called upon them to pay everything on the 1st November. But I am sure that if these settlers only applied to the Department and said: "We are ready to pay by instalments, they would be allowed to do so. It is only because they refuse to pay what is due to the Indians. These Indians are starving. Why should they starve while the money is there, while the timber is there? This timber is cut by men who have no license to cut, and they wish to deprive the Indians of the stumpage, and the money they pay on that timber. I think we are not here for that purpose. We must protect the settler, but we have to protect the Indian as well. I think it is unfair to say that the First Minister does not give his attention to this Department. I know personally how careful he has been to have justice done to these Indians, I know that he has looked after that Department at the expense of his health and he would not be in the condition he is to-day if he had not given so much time to the Department under his control.

Mr. ALLEN. I rise to an explanation. The timber is burned off the land that is sold to the settlers. The mill men purchased the logs and are willing to pay for them any price the Government may ask. I would recommend that the matter be left to a revaluation. Let the Government send up some person to revalue the property and then charge the settlers that value.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I have received several communications in reference to the grievance of the settlers on the peninsula, and as this matter is now before the House I think it is my duty to present these communications so that some action may be taken by the Government in order to remove the grievances that press so heavily on many classes of the community on the Indian Peninsula. I have heard that the regulations which the Department have in force have had the result of closing up some of the mills, and have had the result of preventing the municipalities, in one or two instances, being able to collect the taxes, owing to the Government cancelling the sales of land. I have received a letter from one who has lived there for some time, and as it sets forth the case very clearly, I will read it to the House. He says:

"I may say that there are two mills in the immediate neighborhood of Wiarton shut down, one owned by Mr. James Sills, of this place, and situated in Wiarton, the other owned by Mr. David Porter, and situated at Colpoy's Bay, a distance of three miles from this village—the latter being purchased by Mr. Porter at a sheriff's sale, the former owners evidently failed for want of proper timber supply. In the case of James Sills, he bought and paid for a block of timber lands on the peninsula, in the township of St. Edmund's; he built his mill in Wiarton, with the expectation of using his timber, but the Dominion Government cancelled the sale, and as a natural consequence his mill is standing idle. I might also quote cases in the different parts of the peninsula where, owing to the unfair and oppressive policy of the Indian Department, mill-owners have either failed completely and become bankrupt, or were forced to leave this section and take their money and interest with them. John Inkestter, of Barrow Bay, failed, and his mill stood idle for more than a year. Thomas Currie, of Golden Valley, brother of Mr. Nathaniel Currie, of Glencoe, ex-M.P.P., failed completely; his mill was afterwards burned, but that did not account for his failure, as he failed before the fire, and in addition to that the mill loss was covered with insurance. One of the grievances of the settlers is that in the townships of Albermarle and Eastnor, lots which were taken up by settlers and others, and assessed and taxed, were cancelled by the Indian Department, and the loss to the two townships was, Albermarle about $700, and Eastnor $800—money they would have received, but when they were cancelled by the Department the townships had no claim, and of course the parties who had taken the said lots out of the Government land office could not be forced to pay taxes on property the Government had sold, and afterwards—say two years or so—cancelled the said sale. Another grievance the settlers have to complain of is that they are not allowed to cut the timber on the farms they have taken up from the Government, as it seems the Government prefer the fire to consume the timber rather than allow the settlers to derive any advantage from the timber. This, as you are aware, is a very rough section (of our noble Dominion), it takes about on an average of four or five hundred acres to secure one hundred of arable land. This will, therefore, never make a good agricultural section and as the settlers depend on timber more than agriculture, the policy pursued by the Department for the past two years has been one of constant bother and trouble, and a policy if pursued in the future as in the past will undoubtedly drive a great many of the settlers from this section. A sale was advertised by the Department, signed by Vankoughnet, for the 16th January, 1886, but was adjourned indefinitely offering for sale the timber on the farms of settlers who had a clearance of from 15 to 20 acres on their respective farms, so that you can see that the pioneers have great difficulties to contend with a tyrannical Government who are always harassing by cancellation, and then if they restore it to its proper owner of course political obligation to the crowd in power is supposed to follow. To sum the whole matter up what the settlers on the Indian Peninsula require is the timber and the use of it as well as the lands."

I think this letter will give the Government an idea of the condition in which the settlers are placed by reason of the regulations and of the management of the Indian Department in that portion of the peninsula. I have also a letter from a reverend gentlemen who has been residing in that section for a number of years and is intimately acquainted with the wants and privations of the settlers. He understands the difficulties they have had to contend with by reason of those regulations. And he intimates that unless a different policy is pursued in that section it will effectually close all the mills and drive out many of the settlers who now depend on the lumber business. I have here a letter from one engaged in the business for some time up there, and he says:

"It is really hard that we must not use even any of the dead timber that is yet left here, except where the land is cleared or clearing. As there is so little land here worth clearing, that the law as it now stands is likely to drive out all local millmen, the only enterprise on the peninsula of any benefit to the settlers here, as it is the only means they have to help themselves by putting in and selling their sawlogs to the mills, and if the millowners cannot get a sufficient supply to keep their mills going, they must leave here. It is a strange way, indeed, of encouraging home manufactures or settling the land here, so far from markets, without roads. As it is the roads are nearly impassable and the Government can do nothing for us in making roads. It seems to me that now the Government is going to protect the timber when all the valuable timber is gone. They say they have nothing to do with us, only to take all the money they can get from the poor settlers and give it to the Indians. It seems poor policy."

It really does seem poor policy, and the people in the peninsula are being badly treated. I hope the Government will look into the causes of the grievances, and I think means could be devised, if the wants and requirements of the people were understood, whereby the difficulties under which they labor might be removed. I hope this will be done so that the settlers will not be driven out of the country by being kept from using the resources of the country which they might utilise to the public advantage.

Mr. SPROULE. I have had a number of letters in the same direction as those read by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, but I think the trouble is not of recent date. Under the late Government timber lands there were leased to H. H. Cook & Co., and at that time the settlers were not allowed to cut any timber except on the three or five acres of land they cleared, although the terms of sale were such that after having that land for three years and clearing up a reasonable quantity they became possessed of the timber, but when the lumberers found that the time was nearly up, when the settler became possessed of the timber, they cut it down and drew it off the farm lest the settlers should get it. At that time petitions were sent to the Department asking that the lease be cancelled, and subsequently it was cancelled; but troubles were increasing and were transferred from this firm of outsiders to the local men of the district. Those men who went there and built mills found it convenient to purchase the right of the settlers to the land. A great quantity of the land was bought for about 50 cents an acre, on account of it being of inferior quality, it being only valuable for the timber. The Department found that the Indians were losing what of right belonged to them, by these millowners cutting and using timber on Indian lands not bought, and they stopped that being done, and parties cutting timber were compelled to pay double stumpage dues. This was continued for some time and then a claim was set up that through some misunderstanding of the agent he had sold a large amount of the land there—ostensibly for timber and not for settlement. The Department held that the regulations were such that a person purchasing a farm was compelled to settle on it and do settlement duties within a specified time, and the millowner contended, on the other hand, that it was purchased only for timber. A conflict arose between the Department and the timber men, and, I believe, it has been going on ever since. Last year, I believe, the Government thought it advisable to send an inspector to that part of the country to ascertain what portion of the land was unfit for settlement, and to sell the timber so as to realise as much as possible for the Indians. But, unfortunately, there happened to be included in the land set apart for sale a number of lots of land claimed to be owned by parties said to be homesteaders there, but through the action of gentlemen who interested themselves on behalf of the settlers, that was stopped for a time. I may say that the experience of those who have lived in the district seems to be generally in one line, and that is to the effect that the timber men and the millowners were really pirating the country taking timber which belonged to the Indians for their mills and nothing was given in return. It was taken from the settlers as well as from the Indians, and while it resulted in some good by keeping the mills running and, perhaps, giving employment to some men in the district, there was not that amount of money realised for the Indians that there should have been, and the Government had to go in and stop it. It was a matter of there being some authority or no authority in the district, and if the Department did, perhaps, deal with rather a severe hand at the time, they were, I think, in a measure justified. There were, however, isolated cases where the result was a hardship to the settlers. I am glad, however, to know that the Department is taking steps to remedy the grievance, and for that reason I believe that no bonâ fide settler will be disturbed who shows himself desirous of paying up his arrears. Another source of trouble was that land belonging to the Indians lay alongside of that sold by the Government under the Crown land regulations. Those regulations were somewhat similar to the regulations in the Indian Department, that is, on a basis of actual settlement, and the payment, under stipulated terms, within a certain number of years. Still the Crown Lands Department never exacted those conditions; and those settling on the Indian lands, who were asked to pay up, looked upon it as a hardship that they should have to do so while their neighbors alongside of them on the Crown lands were not asked. I think the regulations of the Department, allowing these amounts to be paid up in several instalments, is in the right direction. I do not see anything wrong in the settlers being asked to pay for their lands, but I think it would be in the interests of the Indians that the land should be divided—those portions fit for settlement being kept for settlement, while as to those which are valuable for timber, the timber should be sold, and the proceeds of that sale kept for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. DAWSON. I am not particularly familiar with the position of matters in the Saugeen Peninsula as regards the Indians, but there are a great many Indians in my own district, and I merely speak on this subject with reference to some remarks which fell from an hon. gentleman in regard to the management of the Indian Department. I can say that there is no Department of the Government with which I am brought so much in contact as the Indian Department, from having so many Indians in my constituency, and that there is no Department of the Government where more care and attention is paid to everything which is brought before it. The officers of that Department are careful. All cases which I have brought up they have investigated most thoroughly, and I must say they generally come to a just and reasonable decision upon cases arising between white men and Indians. There are not many such disputes in my district. But the Indians have a great many matters to bring forward themselves, and I must say that the head of that Department is exceedingly careful to do what is right and proper with regard to the Indians. I must also say for his deputy that he is an exceedingly careful and industrious officer.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Before going into committee, I wish to make a short personal explanation in behalf of a clergyman resident in Inverness, whose name has been mentioned in a notice of motion given some time ago by the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk). It is impossible to reach that motion now. It is dated the 20th April and is as follows:——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot anticipate a notice of motion on the paper.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). What I would ask is——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, chair.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). What I would ask is that the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk) should be allowed to make his motion. I think it is very easy for me to put myself in order if hon. gentleman will insist on my doing so. I do not think a person should be prevented from making a personal explanation with regard to a person who is not here to do it for himself.

Mr. MILLS. That is not a personal explanation. He must get elected to Parliament first.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). But there is a person elected to Parliament for him who can put himself in order. It is only a reference to a personal matter, and as the name of the clergyman has been mentioned I think it is due to the hon. member for Guysboro', to myself, and to the clergyman, that some explanation should be made, with the consent of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is hardly a personal explanation, but I am sure that if it is only a word or two the House will hear the hon. gentleman. But he cannot go into discussion of a notice of motion.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I have no intention of going into a discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER. Are you going to say something which will cause a reply by the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk)?

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). It is simply to enable the hon. member for Guysboro' to make an explanation.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is anticipating a notice on the paper.

Mr. BOWELL. Perhaps the hon. gentleman had better defer this matter until some motion is made to adjourn the House, and then he can make an explanation, though I do not think it is at all necessary. I have carefully read the letter to whom the hon. gentleman refers, and I can say on behalf of the clergyman who wrote it that there is nothing in it of which he need be ashamed. It is simply a plea by a clergyman on behalf of his parishioner that the Customs Department should not fine him too severely.

Mr. KIRK. I may say the fact that I have asked for that letter is not intended to cast any reflections on the reverend gentleman who wrote it.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Fishery expenses..... $215,500.00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the cause of the increase of $2,000 for Ontario?

Mr. FOSTER. Two inspectors and fishery overseers have been appointed, chiefly for the northern and north-western districts of Ontario. That section having been opened up by the Canadian Pacific Railway, overseers are necessary. The increase is chiefly due to that, and also to ordinary increases in the salaries of efficient officers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that the Department spent more than the Minister asked for in 1885. Does he expect to confine himself to the $16,000 ?

Mr. FOSTER. I think so.

Mr. McMULLEN. Have any inspectors been appointed in the northern parts of the counties of Grey and Wellington ?

Mr. FOSTER. No. Some of the inspectors in these northern districts have had very large areas, and it has been impossible for them to overtake the work, so that the services formerly performed by one have had to be divided between two and sometimes among three.

Mr. LANGELIER. What is the reason for the decrease of $1,000 in Quebec ?

Mr. FOSTER. That is due to dispensing with the services of some overseers by the salmon angling having been taken over by the Local Government. The increase of $1,000 in the vote for Nova Scotia is due largely to the extension of the close season in smelts.

Mr. WELDON What breeding establishment have we in New Brunswick, and what rivers is it proposed to put salmon fry in this year ?

Mr. FOSTER. The same fish-breeding establishments that have been in existence for the last three years in New Brunswick are to be kept up; there is no increase.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What quantity of spawn do you propose to put in ?

Mr. FOSTER. It is estimated at 112,000,000. Last year the quantity was 86,000,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know from the Minister in what way this $100,000 for maintenance and repairs of fishery protection steamers and vessels is intended to be expended; how many vessels he expects to employ; how those vessels are armed; where they are likely to be stationed, and what the general policy of the Government is with respect to this vote.

Mr. FOSTER. The committee will see that $50,000 was voted for 1885-86, and $100,000 is asked for 1886-87. The fishery policy will be carried on after much the same plan as it was carried on in 1869, 1870 and 1871. We have La Canadienne, which will be engaged almost wholly in the protection of the fisheries along the coasts of Quebec, the Magdalen Islands and Labrador. We have the steamer Lansdowne, which will be employed for nearly all the season in waters contiguous to New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Then, we have chartered six schooners, one of which is now being fitted out, and which will be employed around Gaspé and along the Bay of Chaleurs and the northern shores of New Brunswick. One is being fitted out in Prince Edward Island, and will be employed about the coast of that island. There are four being fitted out or already at sea in Nova Scotia. Two have already gone to sea, one yesterday and one to-day; one from Halifax and one from St. John. The two others are being equipped as rapidly as possible and will probably be on the coast this week.

Mr. WELDON. What vessel is at St. John ?

Mr. FOSTER. The General Middleton has left St. John and is cruising around Grand Manan, Campo Bello and the southern coast of Charlotte county. The Terror is being fitted out, and will be ready for sailing the latter part of the week.

Mr. WELDON. Who are the masters ?

Mr. FOSTER. General Middleton, Captain James McLean; and the Terror will be commanded by Captain Quigley.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the hon. Minister prepared to give further information as to the instructions given to these officers.

Mr. FOSTER. Only generally, for reasons my hon. friend knows well. They are to cruise around the coasts of which I have spoken, to protect our inshore fisheries from the encroachements of foreign vessels, especially those of the United States which frequent those coasts more than any others. They are to do their work with as great caution, as much courtesy, and as much firmness as possible.

Mr. KIRK. How many schooners ?

Mr. FOSTER. Six and two steamers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think no harm would accrue to the public interest if the hon. gentleman would give us some further information on this very important question, and in particular as to whether due conference has been had with the Imperial authorities as to the means to be adopted.

Mr. FOSTER. In the beginning of our proceedings, negotiations were immediately opened with the home Government, and have been continued since and are now being continued.

Mr. KIRK. What vessels are to be employed besides the two named.

Mr. FOSTER. The General Middleton and the Terror have been or are being fitted out in St. John. The Owlet and the Conrad have been or are being fitted out in Halifax. The Prince Edward Island and the Maggie Lindsay are being fitted out in Quebec.

Mr. KIRK. Who are the parties employed in connection with the distribution of the fishing bounty and collection of statistics, to pay whom $5,000 is asked ?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not a memorandum of the persons employed just at present. On page 394 of the Auditor General's report, my hon. friend will find the names of the extra clerks employed last year; a portion of these are employed still, but the number employed is not so large as the number in 1884-85, whose names are found in the report.

Mr. LANGELIER. What is the proceeding followed for obtaining payment of those fishing bounties.

Mr. FOSTER. The parties have first to make application, getting their blanks from the fishery inspectors and collectors of Customs. These applications are certified to by these officers and sent to the Department. In the Department, they are checked off. If the claims are satisfactory, they are accepted; if not, they are sent back for further enquiry. The cheques are issued and sent for distribution to the collector of Customs, who charges a small fee for the trouble of certifying the claims and distributing the cheques. The number of claims filed last year was 12,562, of which 915 were for vessels, and the checks issued were 36,280, which will account for the number of clerks we require really to get through this work. The amount allowed for the past two years was twenty-five cents for each vessel claim and fifteen cents for each boat claim made through the officers. In New Brunswick and Nova Scotia the claims are paid by cheque on the Bank of Montreal.

Mr. WELDON. How much in each Province ?

Mr. FOSTER. I am sorry to say our report has been delayed, not through any fault of the Department, but for other reasons, and I have only some of the advanced sheets here. I have not the schedules of the different Provinces.

Mr. KIRK. It is a pity that the report of the Fisheries Department should not be brought down before the Estimates are discussed. I do not think we have ever had the report until Parliament prorogued.

Mr. McLELAN. Some years you have had.

Mr. KIRK. Very seldom. I do not see why we should not have the report, as well as other reports, earlier in the Session. I notice that Albert Ogden drew a large sum from the Treasury on account of this item, $1,993, of which $833.31 were paid for ten months' salary from 1st April, 1885. Is he still in the employ of the Government?

Mr. FOSTER. I am as sorry as the hon. gentleman that the report is not down in time. It is recollected this report goes up to 31st December, and is therefore in a different position from the generality of reports.

Mr. KIRK. I thought there must be some reason, as it is always late.

Mr. FOSTER. It is in a different position from the ordinary reports, and, after the Session has commenced, when we require it, our printing arrangements are not the most rapid in the world, and that accounts for it. We will try to have that remedied another year. As to the fishing bounties, I have the statement of the amount paid in 1884, but I suppose that is not what the hon. gentleman wanted?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No.

Mr. FOSTER. It was 1885?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Alfred Ogden is not now in the employ of the Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With reference to this fishery protection, it is not possible for us, certainly, without information as to the instructions given, to discuss the wisdom of the Government's policy, but I gathered one thing from the statement made by the hon. gentleman, and that was that apparently these instructions has been issued before a definite agreement had been come to with the Imperial authorities, and, if I am correct in that, I think it is seriously to be regretted in a matter of so grave importance that instructions should have been issued until we clearly understood how we were with the Imperial authorities. That is what I gathered from the hon. gentleman's statement. He mentioned that negotiations were still going on with the Imperial Government, but apparently that a conclusion had not been reached with them.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman drew that from the remarks I made, he must be responsible for drawing that. My remarks were not, I think, couched in a way from which that could fairly be drawn. Of course, negotiations are going on because new phases of the question are brought up as each week goes by. They are kept fully informed of everything that takes place here and despatches pass to and fro with reference to the points as they are brought up. Of course, our way, as my hon. friend will see, is a little clearer now than it was in 1870 and 1871, for the negotiation which took place, the instructions which were promulgated then and which were sanctioned by the British Government, and the different discussions of the questions which arose then, questions almost entirely similar to those which arise now, have made the way far clearer than it was in 1869 and 1870.

Geological Survey..... $41,600 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How does this decrease come about? What are the services you expect to perform for the $41,600?

Mr. McLELAN. It was intended, when this estimate was made, that the field work should not be so expensive and extensive this year as last, but it has been subsequently found that there are arrears of account, and that the whole sum should have been asked for, or nearly so, and it will have to be supplemented in the Supplementary Estimates, so that, although there is an appearance of decrease here in the expense of the year, in the payment of old arrears, there will not be actually that decrease.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What work is intended to be done in the ensuing year? That must be pretty well mapped out by this time.

Mr. McLELAN. The Minister of Interior is not here now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then you had better let the item stand.

Collection of Revenues—Excise..... $324,432.50

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here is a large increase in the item of $245,432.50, for salaries of officers and inspectors.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There is an increase due to importance of position. Our divisions are classified all over the country, and, by our regulations, according to the increase of business, the divisions are graded.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many officers are affected by this, and which?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The inspectors, collectors and deputy collectors are the only ones. All the excisemen are affected by their class and not by the classification of the divisions at all, but the salaries of the collectors and deputy collectors are regulated by the division in which they serve. Then there are increases as the result of examinations, $1,880.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is provided for in a separate item. There is a vote of $2,000 for increases dependent on the result of excise examinations. That, I suppose, is the $1,800 the hon. gentleman alludes to.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the hon. gentleman will take the $2,000 and the first item together, it will give $236,125 as the expenditure for last year. These are the examinations which take place during the current year from time to time. The regular increases are due to the percentage, they are not affected by examinations at all. One class of officers get $50, and the excisemen gets $30 of an annual increase. While it might appear to have a tendency to a rapid increase of salaries, the third class of excisemen goes in at $500 on probation, and serves six months before he gets $600, which is regarded as the minimum of that class. After that, he must serve three years before he can get this $30 increase, and then he is entitled to $30 a year afterwards. The new appointments amount to $6,000, less salaries of those whom they replace, $2,600. In the travelling expenses there is a reduction of $10,000. In the preventive service there is an increase of $2,000, which is necessary to make the service more efficient. So that for the Excise service there is an increase of only $2,307.

To provide for the cost of obtaining stamps..... $60,000 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to this reduction of $10,000 I observe that in the Public Works Department there are made new charges to the extent of $33,000 for various expenditures heretofore defrayed by the Departments. I supposed that this $10,000 of nominal reduction here really represents a proportion of the $40,000 or thereabouts, charged in Public Works?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not all together, because we expect to make a portion of that reduction by a saving in the matter of stamps. We get the stamps cheaper, and for a number of years we have been improving in that direction, both as to the cost of the stamps, and the cost of handling them.

Preventive service..... $7,000 00

Mr. COSTIGAN. This increase of $2,000 is absolutely necessary. The actual expenditure last year was about $5,000, but we propose to put the service on a different footing this year. The intention is to take experienced excisemen, men who have a thorough knowledge of the law, and who are acquainted with the Excise duty. There are some good men among them whom we propose to utilise as preventive officers, and bring in new men to serve in the Excise department.

To pay Cullers..... $13,000 00

Mr. COSTIGAN. This decrease arises out of the legislation of last Session. By an amendment to the Culler's Act, a reduction of the staff was provided for, and I am bringing that Act into operation now.

Mr. LANGELIER. I have received a letter from Quebec stating that it is rumored that four cullers have been taken off, three from the deal list, and one from the square timber list. It seems that every one of these men taken off is a Liberal. Last year the Minister promised to the member for Portneuf (Mr. De St. Georges) that if any superannuations took place they would be made without regard to the political proclivities of the parties. Up to this moment, from the information I have, and which I believe is correct, as it comes from a reliable person, not one man taken off the list is a Conservative. I would like to know whether the information sent me is correct.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is a very serious charge, but I am happy to state for the information of the hon. gentleman that however reliable the gentleman may be who has given him the information, he is laboring under a misapprehension. I stated last year when the Bill was passing through the House, that I would endeavor, in making this reduction, to do it as fairly as possible. I gave assurance privately to some gentlemen who made enquiry, that I would not put any man off on account of his politics. That has to be done by Order in Council, and the change has not taken effect yet. I know, however, that as to nationality, the number will be evenly divided. Take the number of cullers for staves, deal, and timber altogether, as they existed last year, and the hon. gentleman will find—I stand subject to his correction—that when the permanent list is made, comparing that with the number put on last year, he will find a larger number of Conservatives gone off than of Liberals. Some years ago another Bill was passed to reduce the number of timber cullers, and a reduction did take place when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and at that time they made a clean sweep of all the Conservative cullers.

Mr. LANGELIER. According to the Bill of last Session, fourteen cullers must come out. There are only two square timber cullers; will more than one be removed?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not know. I tell the hon. gentleman that no one has been taken off yet.

Mr. LANGELIER. I asked will there be more than one taken off?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Bill speaks for itself, and authorises me to reduce the staff to a certain number. Pursuant to that power, I submitted a proposition, which I cannot at present particularise, but respecting which the hon. gentleman will know in a few days; and I give him the assurance that as to nationality, they will be equally divided; as to politics, he will find that the Liberal party is being very fairly dealt with, and will have no reason to complain.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe that the total revenue is about $33,000, which is much less than it was formerly, and I am afraid we will be out of pocket in spite of the reduction. There is a large balance remaining uncollected, $43,800.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am going to try and meet that, by cutting down the number of cullers.

Mr. LANGELIER. I think the hon. gentleman received a petition from a certain number of cullers three or four months ago, asking an increase of the amount granted to retired cullers. I think the present annuity is only $200, and they complain that they cannot live on that sum. Has any action been taken in regard to the matter?

Mr. COSTIGAN. When I introduced the Bill providing for a reduction of the number of cullers and the retiring of those who would have to be taken off the list, I thought $200 was a small annuity. There had already been some put on the retired list at $200 by hon. gentlemen opposite. I could not, therefore, propose to give those whom I was about to retire $300 while those already retired received $200. I did intend to ask the House to place the retiring allowances at $300, but I found there was strong feeling in the House against it. The argument used was that it would take a large sum of money to meet that expenditure, and I could not recommend an increased amount beyond that already granted to those already retired. If we have increased receipts and the saving arising from the reduction, the House will be better disposed next year to increase the amount.

Mr. LANGELIER. The expenditure would not appear large if the revenue was collected.

Mr. GILLMOR. I should like to know the necessity for the Government appointing cullers and paying them in order to inspect timber that is being exported from the country. We do a large lumber business in New Brunswick. The authorities appoint qualified surveyors, but they have nothing to do with paying them. It is true the Dominion Government obtain a return of a certain amount of the money expended, but where is the necessity for dealing with the matter at all?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I could not undertake to answer that question, because the hon. gentleman and myself come from the same Province. We found on entering Confederation this state of things existing, and we had to carry it out. We should lose nothing by it, and the revenue should be collected. If that were done, the service would cost but little to the Government.

Mr. GILLMOR. So there is no good reason for maintaining this service except that we found it in force when we entered Confederation.

Mr. KIRK. Where is the necessity of superannuating those occupants? Are they old or young men?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is not a question of age but of precedence. The Cullers' Act provides for the superannuation of officers that are retired.

Mr. McLELAN. Do they contribute anything to the superannuation fund?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No.

Weights and Measures and Gas $83,750 00

Mr. LANDERKIN. What are the salaries of the assistant inspectors of gas?

Mr. COSTIGAN. When the law was first passed the salaries of the inspectors were fixed at about $1,000 and the assistants at a minimum of about $500. That has been pretty strictly adhered to since the law was brought into operation. With regard to the inspectors I think there are only three or four places where larger salaries have been allowed, these places being, I believe, Toronto, Hamilton, Montreal, Ottawa and Halifax, where they have

$1,200. As this is a law in which there is a deficit, the inspectors in some of the larger places, where large amounts are collected and they do a great deal of work, complain that they are underpaid, and I think myself that they are not paid in the same proportion as other officers. With regard to the assistants, my endeavor has been to put them on the same footing as third class excisemen and to bring them up to about $600. When I came in I found a good many of them at $800, but, as I say, I have tried to bring them to $600, where the divisions are large enough to justify it. Of course there are some divisions where $500 is ample for the work they perform.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Are they obliged to pass an examination?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How often are they obliged to make an inspection?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Once or twice a year.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Have the fees they collect been modified?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not lately; but they were a few years ago.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Do you think it is judicious to continue those fees upon the parties who use the scales, seeing that the Act is supposed to be in the public interest?

Mr. COSTIGAN. People differ on that point, as on others, but the intention is that the trade shall pay a certain proportion and the public the balance. If we made the fees self-sustaining, the amount would be much higher than it is now.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Are the fees sufficient in large counties to meet the outlay?

Mr. COSTIGAN. In some—but very few.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think there should be a complete change in this system. In my own section of the country, when it is known that the inspector is coming round, many who are expecting to be called upon to pay the fees put their scales aside and hide them. Besides that, there are many scales which never reach the inspector's eye, as he will not go off the roads into sideways to try and inspect them. Now it is just as much in the interest of the buyer that the scales should be correct as the seller, and, for the reasons I have stated, I believe the present system is objectionable. Another reason is that I believe, in many cases, fees are collected which never reach the Dominion Treasury. The inspector gives a receipt for so much money, and that is all you know about it. I would like to know what check the Department keep upon these officers.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Just as in many other cases, it is impossible to keep a thorough check upon them. My own recollection of the Act is, that for some time it remained a dead letter. It then became unpopular in the country, and the loss upon its administration was about double what it is now. The people were very much dissatisfied with the administration of the law, but now I think there is a great difference. It may be that the officers are better acquainted with their work, and that the people are becoming accustomed to them and to the work.

Mr. FISHER. I am sorry I cannot quite agree with the Minister with regard to the working of this law. I am fully aware of the difficulties of carrying out such a law, where the inspectors have to go round the country, and the Department has to depend entirely on their honesty. At present I think there is a good deal of complaint with regard to the system. I know one instance where a large grain dealer in my district informed me that the inspector came to his store, but had not weights sufficient to test his large platform scales. After a good deal of trouble he eventually went away and would not give the certificate, but the dealer said that the scales were there to be tested, and he insisted on having a certificate. The result was that the inspector gave him one without testing the scales at all. On the other hand I know that a good many people use scales without a test. I do not mean such merchants as people who sell throughout the country largely by weight. I understand that the inspector is obliged to give notice when he will be in a certain place, so that people will bring in their scales there to have them inspected and tested. In my neighborhood, and so far as I have been able to gather in the townships generally, I do not think anybody does bring in the scales he uses around the country. The merchants are visited by the inspector, but being notified beforehand when he comes, it is very easy for them, if they use false scales or weights, to have them corrected, or to substitute correct ones for them. In fact, I think this system is no protection for the public at large. It seems to me the only excuse for this expenditure, amounting to between $30,000 and $35,000 a year, is to have a real safeguard for the public against the use of false weights and measures; but I do not think this is attained, while at the same time I do not know that honest merchants who wish to have their scales tested, and wish to use just weights and measures, are vexed by the Act, and have to pay a tax for the inspection. I do not know what can be done to remedy this state of affairs. I do not wish to blame the Department for what has been done in the past, but if these things are pointed out, perhaps the Department can inaugurate a system by which the public shall be guarded against false weights and measures, or the trading community shall not be vexed by a useless tax.

Mr. HESSON. I have heard no complaint of the Act in the county I represent. I think the work is very satisfactorily done indeed, and I cannot agree with the hon. member for North Wellington when he says that business men are in the habit of hiding their weights and measures, in order that they may not be inspected. I think that is very uncomplimentary to the class to which the hon. gentleman himself belongs, and which is above suspicion in that regard. They want it known that they are doing business according to the law, and want to give satisfaction to their customers; and as an old business man I must disagree with him.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am quite certain of the statement I made. Perhaps the hon. gentleman has not been accustomed to deal so largely in goods requiring scales as other people. He has not made very extensive enquiries, or he would have found out the facts as I have stated them. I most decidely object to the present system; I believe it is a great injustice to dealers generally. If it is to be continued, I would suggest that there ought to be a schedule of charges printed on the back of the certificate, which the deputy inspector would be obliged to show the merchant, when he goes to inspect his scales. Then the merchant would see whether the deputy inspector was collecting the proper amount or not. At present, the merchant has to depend entirely on the honesty of the deputy inspector. It is because, in many cases, it is considered objectionable that people have evaded the inspection to which all scales should be subjected. I hold that it is as much to the interest of the buyer as to the seller that scales should be inspected, and that being the case, the inspection should be made free.

Mr. SPROULE. I have no doubt the hon. member for North Wellington is speaking from experience, because he is a business man himself. But I can assure him it is not the experience in my section of the country. In some instances, when one of the parties thought he was not getting fair play, the inspector was notified; sometimes it was the dealer, and sometimes the buyer; and the result has been to establish confidence between the buyer and the seller. It has also done away with a class of scales that were usually kept, and could be made use of by the merchant to the disadvantage of the buyer. There was a moving weight on a beam that could be shifted without the buyer knowing it. I think it is the duty of the inspector to go anywhere where scales are used, and I do not think he has refused to go anywhere where he has received notice that there is any suspicion of unfair weights. As to the question of cost, there is a great difference in favor of the present system over the old. I know that at the first inspection made in our village, the inspector brought a man with him to fix the scales, and he charged from $5 to $8 for fixing them in addition to the inspection.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Did that go into the Government revenue?

Mr. SPROULE. No, it did not; the inspector kept it for the purpose of paying the mechanic.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Do the Government pay for that work now?

Mr. SPROULE. No, that was amended when the present Government came into power. In the village where I live there was collected for the inspection of scales in a few shops, $140. They can be inspected in the same place now for $10. So that eventually there cannot be a very heavy expense for that purpose, and I must say, generally, the present system is giving a great deal of satisfaction. No doubt if some amendment were made in the direction mentioned by the hon. member for North Wellington, as to putting on a scale of prices that would be a good amendment, but I think there is an indication on the certificate as to what the charges are already. If any man looks up the schedule of prices he can tell what the prices are.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). If I may be allowed to speak for the locality I am best acquainted with, the experience is that the Act works well, if it can be said it acts at all, simply because we never see the inspector. He lives in an adjoining county, and if I exclude the city of London I am safe in saying not one inspector lives in the county of Middlesex. Under the old Act there was an inspector for each riding, it may have been that was more expensive but my impression is it was not. We have one inspector now at $1,000 a year, and sub-inspectors who each receive as much as the inspector for ridings did. If the Act is to be of any service at all, it is in the direction mentioned by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), and the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) admits that under it an honest dealer must be placed at a disadvantage, when he says from his own knowledge, that there were improper weights being used under circumstances such as he cited. I am quite prepared to admit that the Act is just to a fair dealer, and if properly administered, I believe a fair dealer will give it countenance. But if the inspector is seen as seldom as he is in the county of Middlesex, there is no advantage in the Act. We only know of it by the expense it entails.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It should be possible to devise a system of bookkeeping whereby a check could be kept of the inspector quite as well as it is kept in the Post Office Department. When the inspector, instead of returning fees into the public revenue, appropriates them to his own interest, there ought to be a check of some kind.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There is one now.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I understood you to say there was no way of keeping check.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman was stating that a man might overcharge on the fees, and I said it was very hard to deal with that in any Department, but the checks issued and the certificates he grants and the moneys he collects, he is accountable for just as the postmaster is for postage stamps.

Mr. LANDERKIN. A postmaster cannot charge more for postage than is marked on the face of the stamp. If the fees were made known on the stamps there could be no question of overcharge. Is it in the interest of the public to have the scales inspected? The Act will not make men honest or prevent them from defrauding their customers. Is this Act a benefit to the public? If so, the whole public should defray the cost, and the cost should not be thrown entirely on the dealers. It looks like class legislation, and the time is arrived when we should consider whether the public should not entirely bear the burden.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). There is one thing peculiar in this discussion, and that is that the only people who find fault with the Act are the dishonest traders. In my district, and I have had an inspector living there three or four years, there are three or four villages with from 1,500 to 2,500 people in each, so that there is a considerable amount of business done in each place, and every proprietor is anxious to have his scales inspected and so publicly and openly stamped that their customers will know they have not been cheated. As far as collecting fees is concerned, the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is under a misapprehension. The inspectors are charged with the stamps, and certain prices are fixed for inspection, and when an inspector gives a certificate he places the stamps on and cancels them. The dealer, if he chooses, can get the inspector to make some mechanical arrangement, for which the inspector will make an extra charge, but that is a matter of private arrangement.

Mr. McMULLEN. He may inspect the scales and not use the certificate at all. In my section, the inspector inspected the scales first and afterwards made up the certificates.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). If he did, there was something wrong about the procedure.

Mr. McMULLEN. On the face of the certificate you cannot make any calculation as to whether the inspector charged too much or too little. If you would make a schedule of prices on the back of the certificates, that would be a tariff satisfactory to those who have to submit to the operation of the Act.

Mr. FISHER. I have not yet seen it proved that this weights and measure inspection is a safeguard to the public.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We are only discussing the salaries and not the Act itself.

Mr. FISHER. The question whether salaries will be paid to the men is entirely dependent on the utility of their work. If the public service is not to the benefit of the public, it is in our right to discuss the question as to whether we should vote this or not. It is an important argument whether the public service is benefited by this service or not. With all deference to your ruling, I think it is a very important question to see whether this vote is of use in the public service, and I do not think it has been shown that the inspection itself is a benefit to the public interest. If it was a safeguard against dishonest traders, it would be, and I should be in favor of it, but, until it is shown that it is a safeguard against dishonesty, I do not see the utility of it. The complaints I have had addressed to me have been on the part of honest traders who felt they were obliged to pay a tax for the inspection of their scales, while anyone who is dishonest might pay the same tax but would escape the result by afterwards falsifying his scales in such a way that the public were not protected at all. Although the nominal cost to the country is $30,000 or $35,000, the community really have to pay the fees too. Whether the traders pay them or make their customers pay them, does not matter, and this might fairly be said to cost the country about $65,000. I do not believe that the results to the community are at all commensurate with that expenditure.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). The hon. gentleman is asking too much of the Act. The Act was intended to make the scale honest; he must trust to the Sunday school to make the trader honest.

Mr. HICKEY. The hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) proceeds on the assumption that every man who tries to defraud the public is in trade, and that each dishonest trader will have two sets of weights, that he will parade the good ones when the inspector is around and will use the short ones when he is not. He must assume that, because, if the trader is intending to defraud the revenue, he must supply himself with the articles to do it with. Unless he does that, he must have but the one set, and in that case it will be inspected. I believe this is a protection against fraud.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman cannot know much about scales or he would know that anyone with a mechanical turn can very quickly change a platform scale by the twist of a screw or any balanced scale by taking out the leaden plummet at the bottom and paring it and putting it back again.

Mr. HICKEY. A rascal can do anything.

Mr. FISHER. Precisely. I have been informed by manufacturers of scales that there is no check whatever upon the scales after they go out of their hands.

Adulteration of Food..... $21,500 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this increase of $1,500 required by increased operations, or what?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Last year's legislation added to that branch of the service the subject of the fertilisers of the country, and that is taking up perhaps more of the time of the office here than the former work under the Adulteration of Food Act, so that we would require an additional officer here. We propose to have eight analysts altogether. They have a retaining fee of $200, an allowance for rent of $100, and an allowance for laboratory of $100. The chief analyst receives $2,000, and we find it necessary to employ an assistant analyst. It is really a very small increase in proportion to the additional labor.

Collection of Slides and Boom dues..... $21,650 00

Mr. DAVIES. Why are you increasing the salary of the Crown timber agent?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The present incumbent was appointed at $2,400 and we give him $200 more to bring himself to the salary of his predecessor.

Batteries, and Cavalry and Infantry Schools.... $435,700 00

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That item was left over the other night.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I think the Minister ought to allow this to stand over, for the reason that the report in connection with the operations in the North-West, has not yet been distributed. I enquired yesterday at the distribution office, and was told that the report had not yet reached that office.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think that is a very bad reason for delay. This item has nothing to do with the report of the North-West troubles. The operations in the North-West are altogether distinct from this vote. I wish the item to be passed now, but on concurrence, if there is any question which any hon. gentleman wishes to discuss, I shall be glad to discuss it as fully as it would have been on the present occasion. This vote is the ordinary vote which has been granted for several years past. I would ask, however, in this item, to strike out the word "London" after "Toronto," from the fact that in consequence of the barracks not being ready for the school of infantry in London, which has been sanctioned by a vote of Parliament, I have not estimated this year for the organisation of that school. But outside that one item, the vote is absolutely the same as that which has been agreed to by Parliament for several years past. If any question can arise out of that vote, certainly it cannot arise from the non-production of the North-West report, which will be distributed to-morrow, I hope, or the day after. The copy which I placed upon the Table was an advance copy, and was full of errors which had to be corrected. Therefore, I hope the hon. gentleman will make no objection to this vote.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). This vote is asked for our permanent military service; a portion of the force were out in the North-West, and we ought to be possessed of all the information that the Minister has in reference to the operations of that force, before this vote is asked for. When the militia estimates were up before, I enquired whether any portion of a similar expense to this had been included under the head of the North-West expenditure, and I was told that the cost of the permanent force in the North-West was not charged against the North-West expenditure, but the pay and maintenance of these forces were paid out of the appropriation made last year. I have not been able to make that tally with such facts as I have been able to gather from the Auditor General's report. There are some who think that the expenditure that is made towards the formation of a permanent force, is not in the highest interest of the volunteer force in this country, and there are those who think that the militia vote which is appropriated to the 500 or 600 men who are permanently organised, is not the most judicious expenditure that could be made of the million or so dollars that are appropriated yearly for militia. I know that decided exception is taken to the disposition shown by the Department to squeeze out, as it were, the volunteer force, the ordinary enrolled force, and benefit the permanent force at the expense of the volunteer force.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think my hon. friend's point is well taken, and that we ought to have that report in our hands before discussing this item. But I would like to call the Minister's attention to an item on which he can give information at concurrence, with respect to the military college. I have been informed that a sum of $100 was exacted from some of the cadets who received commissions in the royal service. Was that the case? Or was it uniformly exacted?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It was, and all have paid. There was no exception whatever.

Post Office..... $2,841,946 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. These increases are enormous. We are almost up to three millions for this service, and there must be a deficit of a million dollars a year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The increase for Ontario is $111,000. Of that sum $54,000 is for the Canadian Pacific Railway. This is to pay for one daily service each way, Ottawa to Rat Portage, and a second daily service each way to Pembroke.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are you paying $54,000 for that service? It seems an enormous sum.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is according to law. There is a tariff of charges established.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not understand that the post office is obliged whenever a railway runs to pay for service of mails by it. The population served is quite insignificant. It is an enormous additional charge for such a service.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The mails that now go by the Canadian Pacific Railway formerly went through the United States.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What did you then pay?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Our mails were carried there, and this is an increase on account of the service on the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Americans carried our mails and we carried theirs, therefore nothing was charged on either side. But we now have to pay the Canadian Pacific Railway for carrying our mails, as we pay the Grand Trunk Railway.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do we get any compensation now for carrying the Americans mails? If not, we are at a dead loss of $54,000 a year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Now that we have a railway through our own territory we cannot carry our mails through the United States but through our own territory.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me that $54,000 for this service, taking into consideration the number of people served and the whole circumstances, is a very extravagant charge.

Mr. CARLING. It is not for people along the line only but to carry the through mails.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The people's money is being thrown away for such a service. It is a gross abuse that $110,000 are to be paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway for the service they can do. Can they serve 150,000 people? The other great railways serve about 3,000,000. And we paid them only about $155,000. It appears to be an entirely extravagant charge, and if the law requires us to pay it, I think the law should be altered.

Mr. CARLING. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have to run their mail cars whether the mails go by them or not, and I think the people are anxious that their mails should be carried through their own territory, instead of by Chicago. If heavier mails should be carried, no further charge would be made.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is important that the post office should be well served, but the people's money should not be wasted. I am of the opinion that the service of the post office is disgracefully extravagant. We reduced our rates from five cents to three, and for a time we sustained a loss, and then we gradually made it up, and this extravagance has been particularly remarked since the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carling) was in charge of the post office, since which time the expenditure has gone by leaps and bounds from $1,700,000, at which it stood only some five or six years ago, to $2,846,000, and this very year the Government are asking an increase of $188,000. This appears to be the most extravagant department of a most extravagant general service.

Mr. CARLING. I can only say to the hon. gentleman that it is anything but an extravagant department, and that no department is managed so economically. We have an immense stretch of country in the North-West, and people settling in these various distant points demand mails, and I think it is the desire of the people that they should be supplied with mails.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). It may be the fact that the Minister, coming from a Department where there is some little endeavor made to make the revenue meet the expenditure, and coming to a Department where it is all revenue and no expenditure, may have some ground for assuming that the one is very cheaply run as compared with the other. It is a fact, however, that the cost of the Post Office Department has increased very largely. I saw a statement in a Montreal paper the other day that the cost of running a train from Montreal to Winnipeg was $1,000, and if that is the case, we are really paying one-third of that cost for the carriage of the mails alone, a charge which the country scarcely expected when they assumed the responsibility of building that road.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman spoke of economy, but I notice that London is a remarkable instance of economy, because I find that no less than 26 letter carriers are employed there. London is an interesting and thriving point, but if six are enough to do the business in Kingston I cannot see that twenty-six are required in London.

Mr. CARLING. Kingston is small in area compared with London.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know the population of the two places.

Mr. CARLING. What are they?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The population of London was reported to me a few weeks ago by citizens of that place as being rather less than it was a few years ago—not exceeding 30,000.

Mr. CARLING. I think the total population served by the Post Office Department is about 30,000. But London East and London South have been added for post office purposes, and these make a very large district.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In Kingston we have between 16,000 and 17,000, and if six carriers are enough there London should not require twenty-six. I find that the same rule prevails elsewhere. Hamilton, which is considerable larger, has only one more. Ottawa is about as large; it used to have nineteen and now it is raised to twenty-one. London has a proud pre-eminence in this matter. The hon. gentleman will hardly say that Quebec is a smaller city than London, and still twenty-one did the work for the ancient capital. Montreal, which is a little larger than London, had sixty-six employed, and seventy-three are asked for. Now, surely in proportion Montreal with its 140,000 or 150,000—and I think it has suburbs besides—would require more than seventy-three if twenty-six are required in London.

Mr. CARLING. In Montreal, in addition to the Canadian Pacific Railway, additional mails are delivered in it and other large cities, so an additional number is required.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But you ask for a greater number in proportion in London than in Montreal which, as the hon. gentleman says, has a great many mails to distribute. I see that in St. John fifteen are held to be enough and St. John used to contain as large a population as London. Halifax has sixteen and the Minister of Finance can tell us whether or not Halifax is as large as London.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Can the hon. gentleman tell me the intention of the Department with regard to providing letter carriers for Brantford ?

Mr. CARLING. It was provided for, but I suppose nothing has been done owing to the illness of the Post master General.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this increase in Quebec necessary? I find that in the ordinary land conveyances $10,000 additional are asked for which seems a large increase, the railroad remaining the same.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The reasons for this addition are precisely the same as those given for the increase in the Province of Ontario.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Was it to balance accounts ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; this is to meet the cost of mail service of new post offices, increase of service upon existing mail routes, and increased cost in reletting mail contracts, of which there are in the Province 1,752, ranging from $20 to $2,000 per annum.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The relative increase is twice as great in Quebec as in Ontario, and I do not think there have been a large number of additional offices opened in Quebec.

Mr. CARLING. I suppose it is caused by new colonisation roads being opened, and three mails a week being now sent where there was formerly only one.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But that does not appear from the report to have been the case. There is also a considerable increase in New Brunswick, particularly in steamboat and sailing crafts, in which the amount has increased from $8,000 to $14,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The extension of the mail service from the railway at Fredericton to Woodstock, and other extensions in the counties of Carleton, Victoria and Charlotte, have rendered it necessary to add $5,000. To the vote for railway mail service, and the improved service established between the mainland and the Island of Grand Manan and Campo Bello, has added to the cost some $6,000 annually.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not quite understand how that can be the case, because we vote special sums for this service under the head of mail subsidies.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am informed that the mail subsidy only covers a portion of this service, and that this covers the balance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the hon. gentleman should inform us on concurrence how this increase occurs. If this is in the nature of a subsidy, as I understand from his explanation, it appears to me that it would be better put under the heading of mail subsidies and steamship subventions.

Mr. DAVIES. I understood the hon. member for Charlotte, the other day, to say that he was desirous of having an increase of only $1,000 for that service.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. About that increase. I was not able to speak to the Postmaster General before he left for England. But as to this $6,000 I shall have the information on concurrence.

Mr. DAVIES. I am aware that $10,000 of the decrease of $13,450 for Prince Edward Island is a mere cross entry; but it is very curious that while there are increases in every other part of the Dominion, there should be a decrease there.

Mr. McLELAN. That is all for summer and winter communication, which is now transferred to the Fishery Department.

Mr. DAVIES. Last year on ordinary land conveyance there is a reduction of $1,000.

Mr. McLELAN. The ice-boat service, which is transferred to the Marine Department, includes the land conveyance; so that there is an increase.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What causes the increase in British Columbia ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A portion of that is to provide for the future opening of the Canadian Pacific Railway which we will use for the conveyance of mails.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But there is a very large increase in salaries also.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We will require railway mail clerks and other officers in connection with the new service, of course.

Mr. WATSON. Is it the intention to change the main route for carrying mails from Prince Albert to Battleford. I understood the Government intended doing so. The mails are now carried from Qu'Appelle to Battleford and from Swift Current to Battleford, and it is said the route is to be changed by making it from Regina to Saskatoon and from Saskatoon to Battleford and Prince Albert.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The report is not yet in, so the Department have come to no decision.

Mr. WATSON. If a change is made, will new tenders be asked for ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No doubt; the law requires that, unless the amount be a small one, under $200.

Mr. WATSON. I understood the mails can be carried $5,000 or $6,000 less by the new route. The new route is from Regina to Saskatoon, there branching to Prince Albert and Battleford, instead of from Swift Current to Battleford and Qu'Appelle to Battleford. If such change be made new tenders will be asked ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Certainly.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would like to ask a question with reference to the savings banks deposits in the post office. The head of a friendly society has written to me that that society wanted to make a deposit in the post office savings bank of $5,000 or $10,000, I cannot remember which, and could not succeed in doing so. He called my attention to the fact that $10,000 was received from a similar society in 1884, and complains of the unfairness of denying to one society a privilege which was given to another. There is no doubt that in the first case the privilege was given. It was given to the Independent Order of Foresters, and I have the journal here which states the fact and gives a letter from the secretary of the society acknowledging that the deposit had been accepted. The letter is dated 16th October, 1884. The society to which I refer and which had been refused permission to make a deposit of $5,000 or $10,000 is the Canadian Order of Foresters, and I would like to have some satisfactory explanation to give to the gentleman who wrote me on the subject.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have taken a note of the hon. gentleman's statement, and on concurrence, if he will renew the question I will be able to answer him. No doubt everything will be satisfactory, but if there is an error, of course it will be rectified.

Dominion Lands—Chargeable to Collection of Revenue..... $161,633 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many colonisation companies remain to be inspected?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). They are all being inspected with the view of closing up some of them. None of them have been closed yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many companies remain of those that were created and which the inspector inspects.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). From memory, I think eighteen companies are on the list.

Mr. WATSON. How many will remain after the inspector has got through?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I am inclined to think very few, half a dozen at the most.

Mr. DAVIES. Is it intended to continue the inspector for those at $3,000 a year.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not know whether we will, or inspect them through our ordinary homestead inspectors, but the inspector will be required the greater part of this year at any rate.

Mr. WATSON. What time will the lands be thrown open for settlement?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The lands in the colonisation tracts are open for settlement now through the North-West. They never have been closed. The even numbered sections are in the same position as they are everywhere else. The odd numbers are reserved.

Mr. WATSON. What time will the colonisation companies be wiped out with the exception of three or four?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). This season.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is it the intention to continue on the six homestead inspectors?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes, they are the most valuable officers we have in the North-West.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). In the report of 1885, it is said that "the land guides' service, at least in its present state, is becoming less apparent." Is it still intended to continue that?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes, I think so. My own experience is, from the enquiries I have made, that it is rather an advantageous service. As immigrants go in, it is of decided advantage to have guides.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this item of $5,000 for special services supposed to represent?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). A part of that has been for expenses in connection with immigration matters, so far as the Department of the Interior deals with them. It is connected to some extent with the land guide system, and sometimes temporary clerks are required for special service for a short time. The amount is reduced from what it was last year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is the Crown timber agent at Winnipeg?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Mr. E. J. Stephenson.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Any relation of our old friend?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). He is a son of Mr. Rufus Stephenson. He is an officer that I am afraid we are going to lose. I am doing all I can possibly to retain him.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman is going the right way to work, by increasing his salary $400.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). If the hon. gentleman knew him, and knew his work as well as I do, he would think exactly as I do in regard to him.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Is it intended to continue the forest rangers at the same strength as before?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I am not quite sure about that. It is just a question whether we may not, in some cases, be able to attach the forest rangers' work to the Crown timber agents' work, but I am taking the vote with a view to make further enquiries in regard to it.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Is the full number for which a vote was taken last year still employed?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Were there any changes?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes, there was a Mr. Moore, removed from southern Manitoba. He is no longer in the service and has been replaced. Mr. Montgomery was moved from Prince Albert to Battleford, and Mr. O'Connor from Battleford to Prince Albert. They made an exchange. I think those were all the changes.

Committee rose and reported.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Mr. McLELAN presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending the 30th June, 1886, and, in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

LANSDOWNE.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

OTTAWA, 26th May, 1886.

Mr. McLELAN moved that His Excellency's Message with the Estimates be referred to Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman no estimates for 1887?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is a pleasure to come.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 2:50 a. m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 27th May, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:—

1. That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant the subsidies hereinafter mentioned to the railway companies, and towards the construction of the railways also hereinafter mentioned, that is to say:

To the Moncton and Buctouche Railway Company, for thirty miles of their railway, from a point at or near Moncton, to Buctouche, in the Province of New Brunswick, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $96,000.

For a railway from Ingersoll via London to Chatham, in the Province of Ontario, eighty miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $256,000.

To the Northern and Western Railway Company, for ten miles of their railway, intervening between the termini of the portions of their railway for which subsidies are already granted, the one from Fredericton and the other from Indiantown, and an extension of two miles down to deep waters at Chatham, in the Province of New Brunswick, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $32,000.

To the Caraquet Railway Company, for ten miles of their railway from the end of the present subsidised portion at Lower Caraquet to Shippegan, in the Province of New Brunswick, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $32,000.

To the Lake Erie, Essex and Detroit River Railway Company, for thirty-seven miles of their railway from Windsor to Leamington, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $118,400.

To the Thunder Bay Colonisation Railway Company, for fifty-six miles of their railway, from the end of the present subsidised section to a point near Crooked Lake, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $179,200.

To the Parry Sound Colonisation Railway Company, for forty miles of their railway, from the village of Parry Sound to the village of Sandridge, on the line of the Northern Pacific Junction Railway, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $128,000.

For a railway from New Glasgow to Montcalm, in the Province of Quebec, eighteen miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $57,600.

For a railway from Hereford to the International Railway, in the Township of Eaton, in the Province of Quebec, thirty-four miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $108,800.

For a railway from St. Felix to Lake Maskinongé, Parish of St. Gabriel, in the Province of Quebec, ten miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $32,000.

For a railway from Glenannan to Wingham, in the Province of Ontario, five miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $16,000.

For a railway from a point at or near the McCann Station on the Intercolonial Railway, to the Joggins, on Cumberland Basin, in the Province of Nova Scotia, twelve miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $38,400.

For a railway from L'Assomption to L'Epiphanie, in the Province of Quebec, three miles and a half, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $11,200.

To the Montreal and Western Railway Company, for seventy miles of their railway from St. Jérôme, north-westerly towards Desert, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy of $5,161 per mile in lieu of the subsidies granted by 46 Victoria, chapter 25, and 47 Victoria, chapter 8, a subsidy of $361,270.

For a railway from St. Andrews to the Canadian Pacific Railway at, or at any point east of the Town of Lachute, in the County of Argenteuil, in the Province of Quebec, seven miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 47 Victoria, chapter 8, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $22,400.

To the Canada Atlantic Railway Company, for twelve miles of their railway from Clark's Island to Valleyfield and from Lacolle, in the Province of Quebec, to the International Boundary, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $38,400.

For a railway from Truro to Newport, in the Province of Nova Scotia, forty-nine miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $156,800.

To the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, for ninety-five miles of their railway from a point 50 miles north of St. Raymond to Lake St. John, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $1,961 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole (in addition to the subsidy granted by 45 Victoria, chapter 14, and 46 Victoria, chapter 25, of $3,200 per mile), $186,295.

To the Cap Rouge and St. Lawrence Railway Company, for twelve miles of their railway from Lorette viâ Cap Rouge to Quebec, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $38,400.

For the construction of wharves and landing stages on the line on the railway from Long Sault to the foot of Lake Temiscamingue, a subsidy of $6,000.

To the Gananoque, Perth and James Bay Railway Company, seventeen miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $54,400.

For a railway from St. Eustache to St. Placide, County of Two Mountains, eighteen miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $57,600.

For a railway from a point on the Intercolonial Railway through the Stewiacke Valley, on a line which will afford facilities of communication with the Iron Mines, Spring Side, Upper Stewiacke, and Musquodoboit settlements, twenty-five miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $80,000.

For a railway from Yamaska to the River St Francis, in the Province of Quebec, ten miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $32,000.

For a railway from Perth Centre Station on the New Brunswick Railway, to a point near Plaister Rock Island, in the Province of New Brunswick, twenty-eight miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $89,600.

For a railway from Fredericton to the Village of Prince William, in the Province of New Brunswick, twenty-two miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $70,400.

For a railway from a point on the Intercolonial Railway near Newcastle to Douglastown, in the Province of New Brunswick, six miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $19,200.

For a railway from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway to Eganville, in the Province of Ontario, twenty-two miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $70,400.

To the Belleville and North Hastings Railway Company, for seven miles of their railway from the Village of Madoc to the Junction with the Central Ontario Railway at Eldorado, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy (in addition to the subsidy of $1,500 per mile granted by 48-49 Victoria, chapter 59) not exceeding $1,700 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $11,900.

To the Napanee, Tamworth and Quebec Railway Company, for sixteen miles of their railway from Tamworth towards Tweed, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 48-49 Victoria, chapter 59, a subsidy of $70,000.

To the Albert Railway Company, for their railway from Salisbury to Hopewell, in the Province of New Brunswick, which is a feeder to the Intercolonial Railway, in the form of a loan, repayable at such time and secured in such manner as the Governor in Council determines, a subsidy of $15,000.

2. The subsidies hereinbefore mentioned as to be granted to companies named for that purpose, shall be granted to such companies, respectively. The other subsidies shall be granted to such companies as shall be approved by the Governor in Council as having established to his satisfaction their ability to construct and complete the said railways respectively. All the lines for the construction of which subsidies are granted shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August next and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years, to be fixed by Order in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions and specifications and upon conditions to be approved by the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in an agreement to be made in each case by the company with the Government, and which the Government is hereby empowered to make; the location, also, of every such line of railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and all the said subsidies, respectively, shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, by instalments on the completion of each section of the railway of not less than ten miles, proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with that of the whole work undertaken, to be established by the report of the said Minister:

Provided always, that the granting of such subsidies to the companies mentioned, respectively, shall be subject to such conditions for securing such running powers or traffic arrangements and other rights, as will afford all reasonable facilities and equal mileage rates to all railways connected with those so subsidized, as the Governor in Council may determine.

Motion agreed to.

LAND SUBSIDIES TO MANITOBA RAILWAYS.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:—

1. That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to grant to the Manitoba and North-Western Railway Company Dominion lands to the extent not exceeding six thousand four hundred acres for each mile of the company's branch railway, from a point on the main line of that railway at or near Todburn to the Assiniboine River, near the town of Shellmouth, about twenty-six miles.

2. That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant to the North West Central Railway Company, or to such other company as may be incorporated for the construction of the railway, Dominion lands to an extent not exceeding six thousand four hundred acres for each mile of the company's railway from its commencement at Brandon station, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, to Battleford, about 450 miles.

3. That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant to the Wood Mountain and Qu'Appelle Railway Company, Dominion lands to an extent not exceeding six thousand four hundred acres for each mile of the company's railway from its commencement at or near a point in township number four, in range number thirty, west of the second principal meridian, to the point where it will join the Manitoba and North-Western Railway, about 240 miles.

Motion agreed to.

SALARIES OF REGISTRARS IN THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. THOMPSON moved that the report of the Committee of the Whole on certain resolutions respecting the salaries of registrars and other officers in the North-West Territories, be now read the second time. He said: Before that question is put, I wish to correct a statement I made yesterday evening when I was asked to state the expenditure in connection with the system of registration. I thought I had the information in my hands, but I had not, and was obliged to state them from memory, and I find I did not do so correctly. There are at present five registrars in the North-West Territories; the Bill only provides for the services of four under the Torrens system, and there will still be a registrar in respect of the Territories not included in the Torrens system. I will state the salaries that are now paid to those officers: Three of them receive $1,200 each, one of them receives $1,000, and one receives $2,000. The officer who receives $2,000 is the registrar for all that portion of the Territories which is not included in one or other of the Provincial registration districts which have been so far erected, and his salary is larger than the others on account of his having held the office of Registrar-General of the North-West Territories.

Motion agreed to, and resolutions concurred in.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 10) respecting real property in the North-West Territories.—(Mr. Thompson.)

PUBLIC PRINTING AND STATIONERY.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 132) respecting the Department of Public Printing and Stationery.—(Mr. Chapleau.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 3,

Mr. MILLS. What officers does the hon. gentleman propose to employ in connection with this branch of the public service? Are all the printers to be counted as officers of Parliament and permanently included in the Department?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The officers, as I stated before, will be a superintendent of printing, a superintendent of stationery, and an accountant. The head of the branch will be the Queen's Printer and controller of stationery. Those officers will be officers in the civil service without examination, because they are technical or special officers, and will have the rank of chief clerks of the Department.

Mr. BLAKE. I notice that there occurs several times in the Bill provisions for audit. I do not, of course, object to a provision, particularly in a matter of this kind, for a departmental audit, but I wish to understand whether it is intended to be implied that there shall not be the same audit by the Auditor General which takes place with reference to other expenditures and accounts. Are his powers to be as wide as to this Department as to other branches of the service?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is intended that they shall be as wide, and he shall have additional powers as to ascertaining the amount of stock on hand at his discretion. His powers will not be limited in any way.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the hon. gentleman would find it better to amplify the clause with regard to the Auditor General, so as to make it clear that this other audit is merely a departmental audit.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have no objection, when we come to the clause.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like to make a few observations with reference to the course to be taken in the future with reference to Government advertising. I see this clause gives the Secretary of State power to deal with all the advertising that is required.

The CHAIRMAN. That does not come in now.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, it is included in this clause.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, I have not got a copy of the Bill, but I thought I heard you read something with regard to advertising.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; I find the hon. gentleman is right.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, Sir, I am glad that under your ruling I am right for once.

The CHAIRMAN. I am always sorry when the hon. gentleman is wrong.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think, then, this is a proper time to raise the question as to how the advertising of the Government shall be distributed. I believe it has been the custom, not only with this Government, but with Governments generally, to confine the advertising to the papers that support them—to the thick-and-thin fellows—to the chaps who always find them right and never find them wrong, and who never criticise them. But an independent paper such as I have the honor to be connected with——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL—a paper that speaks its mind, a paper that does not hesitate to find fault with the Government or the Opposition when it finds them wrong—that paper has got to be ignored, and it has been practically ignored. Now, it does appear to me that it is unfair to the public, unfair to the independent press of this country, that the Government of the day should take power from this House to distribute their patronage simply to the papers which support them. It is unfair to the public for this reason, that everybody knows that people take very little interest in the papers that support the Administration or the Opposition, as the case may be, for purely party purposes. An independent paper which speaks out its mind, which deals with questions on their merits, and does not fear to point out the faults of either side, must, forsooth, according to the practice which prevails, be ignored. I do not know whether there are other independent papers or not in that position, but the one of which I know something is practically ignored in this respect, and I suppose my hon. friends opposite, when they come in, as they say they expect to come in after the elections, will pursue the same course, and will ignore the independent organ with which I am supposed to be connected.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, I think it is time to ascertain the sentiments of this House on this question. What seems to me to be right and fair is that they should select certain of the leading papers. Take, for instance, a city like Montreal. We know that a certain class of people there do not read the party papers; they want an independent paper, and yet papers of that class are deprived of the opportunity of giving their readers the information which such advertisements are the means of distributing to the public; and I think it is high time, in the interests of fair play to the public, in the interests of the cultivation of an independent sentiment throughout the community, that that should be put a stop to. I call attention to the matter for the purpose of ascertaining from the hon. gentleman in charge of this Bill, whether he intends to pursue the same course and ostracise that portion of the press which has the courage to speak out its sentiments, or whether he intends to pursue a different course. There have been some notable exceptions to the usual course which has been pursued by this Government. When Sir Charles Tupper was at the head of the Department of Railways and Canals, I recollect seeing some of the advertisements of the Government, in relation to the Intercolonial Railway and other Government railways, published in some of the Halifax papers, and notably in the Morning Chronicle, a paper which is violently opposed to him, and I was proud to hear that gentleman state—when I mentioned the matter to him on one occasion, and told him that he was pursuing a course different from that which is generally pursued,—he said, Yes, I think it is only fair to the public that the means of communication between the Government and the public should not be confined to the party papers. This is a sentiment which ought to receive the support of this House, and it is a course which, if pursued by the Government, would be justified by the people of this country. I would like to know whether the Secretary of State intends to adhere strictly to the course which has been followed in the past, or whether he intends to depart from it.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. As to the policy of the Government, I do not suppose my hon. friend would like the Government to change their policy and try to disturb that quietude which results from his complete independence of the Government, for if the patronage were dispensed in the manner he proposes, it might perhaps alter his independence. I suppose that the little patronage under the control of the Government will be given in the future in the manner in which it has always been given by whatever Government has held the reins of administration.

Mr. BLAKE. I think all Governments ought to do this with their advertising, at any rate, that is, take care that their advertisements are published, not where they will do the most good in a party sense, but where they will secure the greatest amount of publication. There is a large amount of advertising which is, for all the purposes of advertising, pure waste. It is not given in the expectation that a single individual who wants to know will learn, but it is given just as an additional party subsidy. That, I say, is wholly indefensible. We ought to advertise so that the public who are interested will be reached, and, therefore, I think the whole constituency of the country ought to be consulted. That is the only business way. I have no doubt preference will be given, as it must in the nature of things be given, to party newspapers; but there ought to be some decent observance of what the object of advertising is. I have a complaint to make of the conduct of my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). He has declared that his is an independent newspaper which always criticises both sides of this House, and finds fault wherever fault is to be found; but my hon. friend forgot for a moment that there are three sides to this House, and I have never observed any criticism of the third side in that paper.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is quite unnecessary for an independent paper to criticise the third party, the Independent party, in this House, because it has pursued such a course that I think my hon. friend, at any rate, ought not particularly to object to it, unless it is an occasional article that appears against himself now and then.

Mr. BLAKE. I am not objecting to that.

Mr. MITCHELL. On the other hand, there is no need; for the servile Government organs do not hesitate to criticise the leader of the Independent party, and often in a very unfair manner. Now, the hon. Secretary of State has replied that it might interfere with the independence of a paper to get Government advertisements. The hon. gentleman knows that that is not the case—that there is no amount of patronage which the Government can give, no amount of influence which they can bring to bear in any way, that can in the slightest degree affect the independent expression of the Herald. I can assure him that he need not at all fear on that score to do what he ought to do, and to get out of the narrow rut which he has himself described. It is beneath a Government to say that they will put their advertisements where they will do the greatest party good, ignoring the purpose for which advertising is done. If, as the hon. gentleman has announced, they intend to pursue the same narrow course that they have pursued in the past, all I can say is that it will not meet with the approval of the country.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I admit that there is perhaps some room for reform in some manner in the expensive mode of advertising. But people must not conclude that all the Government advertisements in newspapers are official and paid advertisements. The Queen's Printer in my Department every week receives accounts by dozens which are not paid, because advertisements can be inserted only on a written order previously given; so that numbers of public notices which appear in the papers as Government advertisements, are not, and have not been paid.

Mr. BLAKE. I was not alluding to those advertisements which are inserted without authority. I was alluding to the damning record which is found in the Public Accounts.

Mr. VAIL. The hon. member for Northumberland referred to the Halifax Chronicle, in which he said he had often noticed Government advertisements. By the Auditor General's report I find that the Halifax Chronicle received last year $176.94, while the Halifax Herald, which, as my hon. friend knows, supports the present Government, received over $1,000. While on this subject, I would say to the hon. Secretary of State that very often papers that are of very little importance indeed, receive large amounts for public advertising, and not only print the advertisement once, but print them twice. I saw in an eastern paper the other day a notice of this mode of doing business, and I cut out the paragraph, which I will read to the House:—

"Our readers, with very few exceptions, are probably unaware that the Yarmouth Times publishes, as an adjunct to that paper, a ridiculous little sheet yclept the News. The Government advertisements published in the Times are transferred to the adjunct, with enough other matter transferred from the same paper to fill its columns. The history of the origin of the News was given in the Telegram something less than a year ago. The inducement for the continuance of the News to this time with so little circulation will, we presume, be disclosed when the Dominion Public Accounts for the current year are published. The amount of Government pap, lavish as it is, bestowed on the Tory papers, does not satisfy the Times; it wants more; hence the adjunct, which reproduces the Government advertisements, including that for 'Tenders for the Welland Canal Enlargement,' and other official advertisements equally important to the citizens of Yarmouth. After being a few weeks in operation, new light broke upon the Times, and it then reduced the sise of the adjunct, which would save trouble and cost of paper, and enable it to publish the Government advertisements all the same. We have not time to enlarge on this matter to-day. How it may strike members of Parliament, when the facts, with samples of the adjunct, are laid before them—as probably they will be—will be of some interest. If this kind of thing is sustained there will inevitably be a great boom in the Tory newspaper adjunct business throughout the Dominion—while the present Government remains in power.'

I think the House will see that this is carrying the joke a little too far. It is quite enough for the Yarmouth Times to get the Government advertisements, without printing a separate little sheet for the purpose of printing them and charging for them a second time.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I certainly think there might be a great improvement in the mode of dispensing the patronage of the Government in the way of advertising. I do not know what the rule is in the Departments with regard to giving out advertisements to the various papers throughout the country. I am satisfied, however, that one rule is rigidly enforced, and that is that no Government advertisements shall be put in any papers which do not support the Government. You may search through all the papers published in the Dominion, and I venture to say you will not find one Government advertisement in any Opposition paper. My idea with regard to the conduct of public business may be somewhat crude and different from the ideas of the hon. gentlemen who occupy the Treasury benches, but if this branch of the public service is to be honestly administered, it must be administered in a different way. Last year we expended $51,800 in advertising alone, and the previous year $54,000. I am satisfied that all the objects of this advertising could have been attained by the expenditure of not more than one-fifth the amount spent in each year, if the advertising had been done judiciously, as business men would do it. I do not see what object there can be in the Government advertising for tenders for improvements on the Welland Canal, away down in Nova Scotia, and for improvements in British Columbia, all through the Province of Ontario. I cannot see what is to be gained by advertising for the construction of lighthouses in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, in the papers of Ontario, British Columbia and Manitoba, as is done continually. It requires closer supervision on the part of the Secretary of State, if he is going to undertake the management of this department, than has been given to it in the past, so that public moneys may not be wasted. If any business man wished to transact business in this direction, he would seek out the newspapers likely to reach the public he wished to reach. I do not care what Government is in office, I will always maintain that its business should be conducted on business principles. It is sheer dishonesty for the Government to spend public money in subsidising newspapers by giving them advertising in a way that does not benefit the public service, and is of service only to hon. gentlemen occupying the Treasury benches by securing to them, through their dispensing this patronage, the support of a large number of Conservative papers all through the Dominion.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman has made a sweeping charge against the Government, and I must say that charge must be specially directed against my Department and the Department of Railways, as those Departments, with the Department of Interior, have the largest amount of advertisements to publish. But I must say this, that in so far—and I am pretty sure it is the same thing for the other Departments—as my Department is concerned, the notices put in the papers are always put with a view of obtaining the largest circulation amongst the people who can give us tenders. The hon. gentleman asks why, if you have a work to be done in Nova Scotia, you advertise in Ontario and Quebec. The answer is that when it is a small work I do not advertise at a very long distance, but when it is a large work I advertise largely, and I can give many proofs to support that position. The other day, for instance, we had what is called the Tormentine breakwater or pier to construct, at an estimated cost of between $125,000 and $175,000. I did not confine the advertising to the Province of New Brunswick or Nova Scotia, but also advertised in the papers of Ontario and Quebec, and I may say to the hon. gentleman that not only the lowest tender but several of the lowest tenders were from the Province of Ontario. The contract was given to an Ontario contractor, so that the advertising, though it may have cost us $200 or $300 more, has benefited us largely, because the tender we accepted was much lower than any from New Brunswick or Nova Scotia. I will give you another example. Last week we advertised for tenders for work at the London custom house. That advertisement was put in a large portion of the papers of Ontario, and in this region and in Montreal. The result was that the lowest tender by far was by a man from Ottawa; so that, though we may have paid $100 or $200 more in advertising than we would have if we had limited it to the small region where London is situated, we have saved probably twenty times the cost of the advertisement. The hon. gentleman is therefore mistaken. The advertisements are limited when the work is small. When it is large we advertise largely, because it is the interests of the country to have a larger number of tenderers. I may say to the hon. gentleman that it is surprising, after all, how small the number of tenderers you will find for Government work. They are not numerous even for large works. For the work at Tormentine we had twenty-five or twenty-six tenders, and if we had limited our advertising to Nova Scotia we would have paid probably $30,000 or $40,000 more than we do. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken in his view of advertising.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I judge, from the remarks of the Minister of Public Works and the Secretary of State, that the Government must imagine the contractors in the Dominion are confined exclusively to their supporters. There are contractors who do not profess to hold allegiance to the present Government, who are not supporters of the present Government; and why should they not have an opportunity, with the supporters of the Government, to tender for public works? I agree with the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), that these advertisements, in the interests of the public service, should be inserted, not only in the leading papers of the Conservative party, but also in the leading papers of the Reform party and the Independent press. If the Government exercised a little more judiciousness in inserting their advertisements in papers which have large circulations, and which would be likely to be read by the class of people interested in tendering for public works, it would be of great service to the public at large, and no doubt the Minister of Public Works, if he would only allow the abominable Grits all through the country to have an opportunity of tendering for public works, would save a large sum of money to the country.

Mr. MITCHELL. And perhaps convert some of them.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Perhaps so. At all events, I think in the interest of the public the advertisements ought not to be confined to strictly ministerial papers. I think the public service would be best served by advertising in the papers having the largest circulation, which would reach the class of people intended to be reached by the insertion of advertisements of this description. I do not think the Government are serving the public interest by the way in which they are dealing with this patronage.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. the Minister of Public Works is laboring under some delusion in imagining that these advertisements are only inserted in papers having a considerable circulation. There is a paper published occasionally, by fits and starts, in this city called the Orange Lily. I have seen a large number of advertisements from the Department of the hon. gentleman in that paper. It does not often appear, but it appears, I suppose, as often as necessary in order to secure payment for the insertion of those advertisements. I remember looking at a few numbers of that paper, extending over a period of several months, though I think not very many papers appeared during the time, and I saw no advertisements other than those in relation to the Department of the hon. gentleman. There is another little paper which I have noticed, a paper that is smaller than the sheet we have before us as the Orders of the Day. It is called the North-West Star, published at Rat Portage, not now, but it was published there a few years ago when Rat Portage was a less important place than it is to-day, and I noticed a large number of advertisements, considering the size of the paper, published in the North-West Star, from the Department of the hon. the Minister of Public Works. I remember that some of those advertisements had reference to improvements which were being made on the Welland Canal. Whether there were any parties amongst the hunters and half-breeds who were then settled in that particular locality who wished to tender for public works on the Welland Canal, I do not know, but, at all events, I found the advertisements of the hon. the Minister of Public Works in the North-West Star. The hon. gentleman shakes his head, but I read the paper, I had a copy of it sent to me.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will observe that canals are under the control of my colleague the Minister of Railways.

Mr. MILLS. At all events, it was in the Government. It may not have been the Department of the hon. gentleman, but, at all events, it was done by the Government. I remember in the last Parliament bringing before the House a list of papers and the amounts paid to them for advertising for tenders for supplies to the Indian Department, and there were 144 newspapers in which that advertisement appeared. The amount of supplies, I think, was about $62,000 or $63,000, and the amount of the advertising bills was over $14,800. It seemed to me that that was a very profuse expenditure by way of precaution to see that the public were generally informed that supplies of this sort would be required, and to take care that the Government did not pay too much for them. For the purpose of purchasing less than $70,000 of supplies for the Indian Department, nearly $15,000 was spent on Government organs by way of advertising, in order to see that the Department was not overcharged and the public interests were protected.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is somewhat poetic in his prose. He states that a very large sum of money has been paid for advertisements, for a particular advertisement on a particular occasion. I should like to get the dates and to know all about that, and I fancy the hon. gentleman will find he is rather mistaken.

Mr. MILLS. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, he has been mistaken before, and he may be mistaken again. I know very well—I have every day proof of it—the anxiety of papers, without reference to political proclivities, to get advertisements, and great numbers of them put in the advertisements on chance. It does not at all follow because you see an advertisement in a newspaper that that advertisement is paid for. Sometimes it is; sometimes it is not. I should like very much to get the date of the particular advertisement for supplies which amounted to $70,000, while the cost of advertising amounted to $15,000. That is the hon. gentleman's statement, and we will hold him to it.

Mr. MILLS. I had the list of the papers here. I took it from the Public Accounts. I told the hon. gentleman that I would read the list to the House. I commenced to read it, and when I had read the names of twenty-five or thirty papers he told the House that he would accept my statement with regard to the list, and I need not read it. I will send and get the report.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If you please.

Mr. MILLS. I shall be happy to furnish the hon. gentleman with the information.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As to the advertisement in the Orange Lily, I suppose we may take that as proof of the perfectly Catholic benevolence of the hon. gentleman.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no doubt about my benevolence, or about my Catholicity.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not yours—your colleagues.

Mr. DAWSON. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) referred to the North-West Star as a very small paper, and one that it was not proper to insert Government advertisements in. Are the merits of newspapers to be judged by their size? I can tell the hon. gentleman that the Rat Portage Star, published in those days, was just as good a paper as some papers which are published in the vicinity which the hon. gentleman hails from. It was a very able paper and a very nice paper, and I think it was a very good paper to give an advertisement to. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has said that independent papers should get advertisements, and he seemed very indignant that they were not supplied with advertisements. Here is a case in point. The Rat Portage Star was an independent paper. Like some papers which are very much larger, it was sometimes on one side and sometimes on another, and surely that was being independent.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then it must have been very unlike the paper to which the hon. gentleman refers as being one with which I am connected. No one will say that it is sometimes on one side and sometimes on the other. It pursues the straight course, criticising freely both the great parties and dealing with them fairly on their merits.

Mr. CURRAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman from Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) says "ha, ha," and laughs. He may laugh on the other side of his mouth at the criticisms of the Herald. It has not paid very much attention to him so far, but it may pay more attention to him before many months are over, and then he may laugh the other way.

Mr. McMULLEN. I ask the Minister of Public Works to notice that advertisements for tenders are given for the purpose of securing tenders from parties who are likely to undertake the construction of work or provide material. I have a paper here which is printed in my own town, which contains an advertisement for the supply of pine timber and oak timber to the Welland Canal for some improvements to locks. In that locality there is not a pine tree or an oak tree within twenty miles that could be possibly made to suit for any such work, but, in order to strengthen the backbone of this Conservative organ which has been lately started in my town this advertisement is given to it, and I have noticed, in every issue since, advertisements for certain materials, some of them in the North West. In one case, they have advertised for supplies to the Indians in the North-West, as well as timber in connection with the Welland Canal. Of course the hon. gentleman repudiates being responsible for advertisements for canal purposes, but I presume the Minister over that particular Department will not take the ground that that advertisement was put in that sheet for the purpose of getting tenders from that particular section.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It does not matter whether there is timber where the hon. gentleman lives or not. The object is to attract the attention of the men who can furnish the timber, or can do the work, that is all. That man may be found exactly at the place where the hon. gentleman lives, although he may not have timber there. I have no doubt the place where the hon. gentleman lives is a very pretty place. The hon. gentleman may, nevertheless, have in his place a man who has large forests elsewhere, or who may be able to furnish the timber from another place. Therefore that is not a reason why we should not advertise in that paper. There may be some enterprising man there who would undertake to furnish the supplies for the Indians, also. The hon. gentleman would be the first to complain if the Indian Department did not advertise in Ontario to obtain supplies for the North-West; he would say that the Government were not giving a chance to the Ontario people, and when we do give them a chance the hon. gentleman complains. Well, he may convince us that we should give fewer advertisements in his region.

Mr. McMULLEN. I was not aware that there were any in the past.

Mr. WALLACE (York). I think the statement made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) bears the impress of exaggeration on the face of it. He stated that 144 newspapers received for publishing one advertisement the sum of $14,800. Now, that would be $102.75 for each newspaper for one advertisement. Newspapers cannot get beyond certain advertising rates, and cannot charge the Government any more, and their rates are criticised by the Auditor General very carefully. So that sum could not have been paid to each paper for one advertisement, because the Auditor would not have passed the item.

Mr. WELDON. The Auditor General's account shows that the St. John's Sun gets $1,800 for publishing advertisements, while the Telegraph, which has as large a circulation, only gets $900. The Intercolonial Railway timetable is something that should be published in papers, irrespective of politics, because the whole public has a direct interest in seeing it. I find, also, that the St. John's Trade Reporter received $97, and I don't think there is any hon. gentleman here from New Brunswick who knows anything about that paper.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to say, in reference to the statement of the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Mc Mullen), that he must know very little about the country where he lives, because he ought to remember that only a few years ago there was a considerable quantity of pine timber taken out of that country. I have spoken to men working in the township of Bentinck and in the town of Durham in reference to timber in that section of the country, and I am told that it supplies very fine timber, both pine and rock elm. I do not know whether there is any oak or not, but there is a good deal of pine throughout that country, although it may be scattered.

Mr. McMULLEN. I still insist upon the statement I made, that there is no timber in my section suitable for the purpose mentioned in this advertisement. With regard to the statement of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), I was not aware of the intention of the Government in these advertisings until he spoke. It is quite evident that they intended to reach the ears of those who had timber limits, so that, if the hon. gentleman has a timber limit, he might supply the Government himself. There is no person near my section who has a timber limit, unless it is the hon. member for Grey himself.

Mr. SPROULE. I have no timber limits whatever, but I think I have a better acquaintance with the locality in which I live than the hon. gentleman has, or I would not have dared to make such a statement.

Mr. LANDERKIN. We have a number of local papers in my riding with a very large circulation. The difficulty is that the Minister of Public Works has not seen fit to make known the requirements of this country in those papers, and the consequence is that many enterprising men in that locality have not been able to tender for the supplies required in the North-West and elsewhere. Now that I have drawn the attention of the Minister to these papers, I hope he will see fit to make a judicious expenditure of the public money by giving them some of the Government advertisements.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I notice in the Auditor General's report some interesting facts in connection with Government advertisements. I do not propose to take up the time of the committee in reading the list through; it covers three pages, showing a total of $51,822.75 spent in advertising. But there are some curiosities worth referring to. One hon. gentleman referred to the Orange Lily, of Ottawa. Well, in regard to these small papers published semi-occasionally in Ottawa, there is another illustrious journal in Ottawa which we see once or twice every Session, called the Investigator.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I happened to see one copy last Session, and I happened to see another copy this Session. I do not think that paper is published more than once a year. I never see it, at all events, more that once a year. It is impossible to find it anywhere in the city. You cannot find it in the news depots, you cannot buy it from the boys on the street, nor is it filed in the reading room. But occasionally a stray copy will find its way to a member of Parliament just about the time the House opens. Now this little Investigator received last year no less than $208.45 for advertising, nearly as much as my hon. friend's paper in Montreal, the Herald, which received $226.06. Perhaps he was not aware that it received anything, but the Public Accounts show that it did.

Mr. MITCHELL. O yes, it received something when it was tolerably quiet and civil, but as soon as it showed its horns a little, the advertisements were stopped.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Then I understand from the hon. gentleman that the Montreal Herald is not receiving any Government patronage now; if so, I must congratulate him on the fact, because during the last four or five months the Montreal Herald has worked its way forward amongst the newspapers of the Dominion more rapidly, probably, than any other newspaper in the country.

Mr. MITCHELL. Hear, hear.

The CHAIRMAN. Question, question.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). This is the question. I was going to say——

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the House is not whether the Montreal Herald is receiving Government patronage.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Chairman don't like you to compliment the Herald.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). The question is about Government advertising, and I was going to say that it has been a great advantage to the Montreal Herald not to have Government advertising, and I fancy it would add, probably, to the independence of some Government organs very materially if they were not fed so much on Government pap. Now, there is the Montreal Gazette, in contrast with the Herald. I do not know about the circulation of these papers, but I fancy the Herald holds its own with the Gazette.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think so.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). The Gazette got $900.47 Then there is another paper in Montreal called the Share holder. I have an indistinct idea that that paper has some thing to do with the Montreal Gazette also, but I speak subject to correction.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is on the same side of politics, that is all.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). The Shareholder got $799.70. Well, the Ottawa Citizen got $763.86. Now, everybody knows that the Ottawa Free Press has a much larger circulation than the Citizen, and the Free Press only got $58.40.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It ought not to have got that.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). If the Government intended that the money should be placed where it would do the most good to the country, they would advertise in the papers that have the largest circulation. I notice in the city of Hamilton, with which I am somewhat acquainted, the Hamilton Spectator is selected for Government favors, not only with regard to advertising, but with regard to job printing. Last year that journal got $581.01. But I fail to find the Hamilton Times mentioned in the statement at all, although everybody acquainted with that portion of the country knows perfectly well that the Hamilton Times has a much larger circulation than the Hamilton Spectator.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hard Times.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). It has a very much larger number of readers. The Government certainly ought to exercise a little more care in distributing their patronage if they want to do good service to the public in that regard. I might go over those papers by the hundred mentioned in the Auditor General's report, and point out where the Government had thrown away public money, not for the benefit of the public service, but for the sole and only reason that they desire to subsidise the organs which support them in place and power. There can be no doubt that the advertising patronage is dispensed by the Government with that object, and that object alone.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the hon. gentleman did not properly appreciate the merits of the Investigator. I also have seen that paper occasionally. It seems it comes out once or twice a year, and I myself have noticed its merits. It is a small sheet. It does not appear to have any circulation, so far as one can judge, but then we have to look at the quality of the papers, as the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) pointed out. For instance, the issue I saw amply justified the course of the Government in subsidising it. There were two things; one was a fulsome laudation of the First Minister, and the other was a violent vituperation of the leader of the Opposition; and all the rest was Government advertisements. Post hoc et propter hoc. As the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has said, it is quite true the Herald did get some advertising when it was, to quote the hon. gentleman's words, "tolerably quiet and civil," but it has not done so since it became intolerably noisy and abusive.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Since the matter has been referred to, a copy of the Investigator has been placed on my desk. I see its motto is "Our country's welfare paramount." I do not think it contains as many Government advertisements as usual. Here is a notice to contractors with reference to the Custom house at London. Here is an advertisement announcing that the Queen's Printer has for sale the Statutes of Canada. I suppose everyone knows that without advertising it. It is, no doubt, a standing advertisement. Here is another one, a notice to contractors from the Department of Public Works. That is the Department which exercises so much discretion in publishing advertisements and placing them where they will do the most good. This advertisement has reference to receiving tenders for the construction of a wharf at Cape Tormentine, Westmoreland County, New Brunswick. It announces that the time for receiving tenders will expire on 8th May.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the date of the paper?

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). 15th May, a week after the expiration of the time. We have Intercolonial Railway advertisements here. There is one from Mr. Pottinger, who has added to his notoriety so much this Session by the evidence he gave in the Public Accounts Committee with respect to the Intercolonial Railway and its management. It is an extensive advertisement from the Intercolonial. Then we have another advertisement from the Department of Public Works—tenders for the completion of additions to the Custom house at London. We have an advertisement signed by the Deputy Minister of the Interior, asking for tenders for the right to cut timber in the District of Alberta, N.W.T. Then we have an advertisement from the Ottawa coffee house. It might be a good thing for the Government to advertise the restaurant and bar in this building, so that the public might be aware that there is an unlicensed bar—I mean a bar carried on in the House of Commons under the particular direction of a Minister of the Crown who has been famous in times past for his advocacy of total abstinence. I congratulate the Minister of Marine on the fact that he is now running a saloon of his own in the House of Commons.

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman is out of order.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I may be out of order, but it is a fact, nevertheless.

Mr. WALLACE (York). The hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville) has told us that the sole and only reason why printing and advertisements are given to Conservative papers is to subsidise and support party organs. If that is the case with regard to the Dominion Government, I suppose he will acknowledge that the same rule will apply to the Ontario Government. What do we find there?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is the hon. gentleman in order?

The CHAIRMAN. I could not hear what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. WALLACE (York). To a Brantford paper the Ontario Government paid, in 1883, $2,005.

Mr. MULOCK. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman, I believe, is proposing to discuss the practice of another Government as to how it distributed its printing patronage. Is it in order to discuss that?

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman has not yet gone sufficiently far to enable me to judge as to what his argument will be.

Mr. WALLACE (York). I am making a comparison and endeavoring to ascertain if the same rule will apply to the Ontario Government which hon. gentlemen opposite are anxious to apply to the Dominion Government. I said that a Brantford paper received, in 1883, $2,005 for printing from the Ontario Government. The London Advertiser, in which the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has an interest, received last year $206. The Hamilton Times, $652; Brantford Expositor, $1,047; Guelph Mercury, owned by Innes & Davidson——

Mr. MULOCK. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. WALLACE (York). You rose to that point of order before and were put down.

Mr. MULOCK. When I took that point of order before you, Mr. Chairman, intimated that the hon. member had not gone sufficiently far in his remarks. Now you have the evidence on which I took the point of order. I need not repeat the point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. MULOCK. Chair! I am addressing the Chair. I ask for your protection, Mr. Chairman, and I will have it. I will allow no man to put me down when I am in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Order, order.

Mr. MULOCK. I wish to be in order. There is no man in this House who has more respect for the Chair than I have, but I say——

The CHAIRMAN. Order, order.

Mr. MULOCK. I shall not allow any man to interfere with me in the exercise of my rights.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Order. The hon. gentleman is referring to transactions which bear upon the practice of Governments in advertising. If the discussion is to continue, as it has been allowed heretofore, on the practice of Governments in their systems of advertising, I think he has liberty to show how it is done elsewhere. I think he is entitled to go that far.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I agree with your ruling, Sir, but I wish to say——

The CHAIRMAN. Order. The hon. member for York has the floor.

Mr. WALLACE (York). I am sorry the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), and the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin), do not conduct themselves with more propriety.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The CHAIRMAN. Order. The hon. gentleman will please keep to the point.

Mr. WALLACE (York). I was referring to the fact that the firm of Innes & Davidson, proprietors of the Guelph Mercury, one of the firm, I believe, being a member of the Dominion Parliament, have received for advertising in the Mercury during the past year $844 from the Ontario Government, and, if it was a corrupt act on the part of the Dominion Government to give advertising to certain newspapers, it must have been still more corrupt for the Ontario Government to give it to a private firm, and to men who are members of Parliament. With regard to the member for North Brant, who is so anxious to air his eloquence in this matter, we find that the Ontario Government is now without a Government printer, and it is understood that the paper which abuses this Government to the greatest extent shall have the largest share of the public patronage to this printing.

Mr. INNES. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down alluded to the paper with which I am connected, and stated that that paper had received the sum of over $800 in one year for advertising. I wish to say that the statement he has made is not correct. The money was not paid for advertising, but nine-tenths of it and more was paid for printing, covering nearly two years.

Mr. WALLACE (York). Did you get the money?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. INNES. Nine-tenths of it was paid for necessary printing.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. INNES. The hon. gentlemen will please wait till I am through. It was paid for necessary printing in connection with the agricultural college, and more than that, it was done at regular business prices—the same prices that we charge for printing to merchants and other business men. The Ontario Government are not in the habit of paying the prices that this Government pay either for printing or advertising. So far as my experience goes they criticise every item and they cut down every item if it is an over-charge. We know perfectly well——

Mr. WALLACE (York). Will the hon gentleman permit me to ask a question?

Some hon MEMBERS. Order; sit down.

Mr. INNES. The account was an honest one, and not like many sent into this Government for printing and advertising, and was paid in full.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Did you (Mr. Wallace) get a timber limit?

The CHAIRMAN. I ask hon. gentlemen not to call across the House in this way. It is very irregular and likely to lead to confusion.

Mr. INNES. I cannot, of course, answer for the other papers which the hon. gentleman mentioned, but I am perfectly satisfied that there was good value given for the money, or else the Ontario Government would not have paid the accounts. On the subject which has given rise to this discussion, I believe, notwithstanding what the leader of the Government has said with respect to the payment of only such advertisements as are ordered—I believe that whether ordered or not, they are paid for in nearly all cases. Any person who has given any attention to the matter will bear out what has been said by the leader of the Opposition, by the hon. member for North Brant and others, with reference to this matter, notwithstanding what the Minister of Public Works said as to the judicious manner in which he has given out advertising. Some time ago, out of curiosity, I had occasion to look through some of these Government advertisements inserted in different papers, and I found that, contrary to what the Minister of Public Works has said, those advertisements were not given only to influential papers with a fair circulation, but were given to many of the most obscure sheets in the country. For instance, the advertisement for tenders for the graving docks in British Columbia was given to many papers of not more than 400 or 500 circulation. They could answer no earthly purpose whatever, but they were simply subsidies to those papers to keep them in existence, and the same remark applies with regard to advertisements in connection with the Welland Canal and the public works of the Lower Provinces. Not only so, but we have many instances, as have been mentioned by several hon. members, in regard to some papers which seem to be the special pets of the Government, such as the Regina Leader and others, which are almost entirely kept up by the money they receive for these Government advertisements. I notice, too, that some papers nearer home had advertisements of the Intercolonial Railway and other Government advertising. I have here a copy of Le Canada in which I find an advertisement of the Intercolonial Railway. Now there is a reprint of that paper published under the name of La Vallée de L'Ottawa, and I find that the same advertisements are repeated in that paper and no doubt separately charged for, although the two are virtually but one paper.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We all know that it has been the habit of Governments to favor the press that usually support them. Hon. gentlemen opposite did so when they were in power, and I have no doubt they will do so when they are in again when that time comes, or otherwise they will change the practice which was followed when they were in possession of these benches before. The only question really is, whether there has been an excessive patronage by one party or the other. I think, Sir, on looking back, from my recollection of similar discussions on this subject when we were on the other side, that it was substantially proved that the hon. gentlemen opposite were very generous in their patronage, and that they helped their friends. Well, we will make a new start if they like. It will be understood that under no circumstances shall these advertisements be sent to the papers that support either Government. We will make that bargain. Well, I do not know that that would be a fair bargain, because they are not in now and we intend to remain in, and hon. gentlemen may make the promise and be perfectly safe in making such an arrangement. One hon. gentleman opposite objected very much to an advertisement about timber being put in a newspaper because there was no timber in its locality; and he read the Investigator, and quoted an advertisement which actually appeared in that Ottawa paper for tenders for constructing a wharf at Cape Tormentine. Now, I think the hon. gentleman will withdraw all he said when I tell him that in all probability that newspaper was the cause of the party who got the contract getting it. It was an Ottawa firm that got the contract, and I have no doubt the Investigator called the attention of that Ottawa firm to the advertisement.

Mr. BLAKE. But it was the Investigator of the 15th of May which announced to this intending contractor that the time had been extended to the 8th of May.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman will see that that advertisement was in there before the 8th of May.

Mr. BLAKE. No, I do not see it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman takes the paper?

Mr. BLAKE. No, I do not take it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, the hon. member who produced it said nobody saw it but himself, and it appears that the leader of the party saw it, and he valued it. So ably was that paper conducted that the hon. gentleman read it from beginning to end, and he said there was a glowing account in it both of himself and myself.

Mr. BLAKE. But glowing with different fires.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, I am too modest to admit that I read it if I did.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). If the hon. leader of the Government will explain when the number previous to this number was published, we shall be able to decide whether the advertisement in that paper had any effect in securing the contract for an Ottawa man. I do not think the Investigator appeared, previous to this issue, short of a year ago, so that I cannot understand how this paper could have influenced the letting of the contract.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman himself is of a very enquiring mind, and I think he would make a better investigator than myself. He considers it a hardy annual, and it should be encouraged.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Since I have referred to this Investigator, I have investigated a little, and I find that it is printed at the Ottawa Citizen office, and no doubt the hon. member for Ottawa will be able to explain what little share he has in the profits on the Government advertisements in that paper.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). As you have opened up the whole question of the Ontario printing, and that is now under discussion——

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Oh, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think the hon. gentleman is in order when he says I opened up the discussion. I did not open it up. That is not the way to address the Chair.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I take that back. I meant to say, and supposed I had said, that you had permitted the discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, I permit on one side just what I permit on the other.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Of course, we can expect nothing else. It will then be proper in the present discussion to refer to the statement made by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) in reference to the Ontario Government contract. We know that hon. gentleman is such a guileless soul that he was imposed upon on one occasion when he took bogus telegrams to be genuine, which other people knew to be bogus; because we cannot suppose he used them in the House knowing that they were genuine. Therefore, being such a guileless soul, we have a right to view with some suspicion any statement he makes, and we do not know whether his present statement is genuine or bogus. Therefore it would be as well for some hon. gentleman on the other side to satisfy himself that it is correct. I suppose it is correct. He has instituted a parallel between the extravagant rates paid for advertisements by this Government and a payment which he says was made by the Ontario Government, whether for printing and advertising I do not know. If his statement relates to printing, it is totally irrevelant to this discussion, because we are not talking about printing, but about sums paid for Government advertising. He instanced the Brantford Expositor, and stated that some large amounts had been paid by the Ontario Government to that paper. Are we to understand that the Brantford Expositor got that amount for advertising?

Mr. WALLACE (York). I will tell you all about it presently.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think it would have been as well had he told us before. Does he state that the rate which was paid for that printing was beyond a proper rate? He brings forward a statement about printing that had to be done at some office, without bringing forward any shadow of proof that it was done at any more than ordinary rates. He says he will give us further information. Can he then tell us whether the amount was paid for Government advertisements or for other work?

Mr. WALLACE (York). The hon. member for South Brant, on every occasion when he alludes to me, has to refer to certain telegrams which he characterises as bogus telegrams.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Yes, until you take it back.

Mr. WALLACE (York). Well, I do not propose to take it back; so the hon. gentleman can keep on with it. I will just inform the hon. gentleman that I read those statements openly in this House.

The CHAIRMAN. Keep to the question.

Mr. WALLACE (York). He has alluded to them twice; surely I have a right to reply. On both occasions he attempted to run down my character, because I read certain telegrams in this House. I read them before the gentlemen interested as being quoted from newspapers. I said they were said to have passed; I never read them as actual telegrams that had passed, but as the substance of the correspondence that had passed between those gentlemen.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Say that they are bogus, and we will not refer to them again.

Mr. WALLACE (York). The hon. member for South Brant has resorted to this because to-day he is without a policy. He hesitated this Session to get up in this House and denounce the Government on account of the sugar duties; that charge has failed this year. He is also afraid to attack the National Policy. So he has adopted the policy of the party—personal abuse. Now, the hon. member asks whether it was printing or advertising for which this money was paid to the Brantford Expositor. Well, I presume it was advertising, for this reason. The contract between the Ontario Government and their Government printers has this specification in it:

"This specification is meant and understood to cover the whole of the public printing, binding, &c., of the Government and Legislature of the Province of Ontario, as well as all the Departments thereof."

Well, I presume that the Ontario Government and the Government printers have carried out in good faith that provision of their agreement. And consequently that this printing we have here is for advertising and not job printing.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do you say that?

Mr. WALLACE (York). I presume they have carried out the letter of the contract.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understand.

Mr. WALLACE (York). I do not get up and characterise them as dishonest and evading their contract, but I say that they have carried out the spirit of their contract in good faith, and if they have then these are charges for advertisements in the newspaper; if not, then it is for job printing, and I should say there was a job connected with it. The hon. gentleman says the Government of Ontario get good value for their printing. Have they charged that the Government of the Dominion have not received good value for their printing?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Of course. Prove it.

Mr. WALLACE (York). It never has been proven that they have not. More than that, we have in the Dominion an auditor who examines every account sent in, and sees that it is correct and that value has been received, and he refuses to pay many of them when they are wrong; while the Ontario Government have no auditor, but the accounts are sent in and paid, whether there is a job or not, as a matter of course. Did the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Innes) get paid the whole of his account he sent in?

Mr. INNES. Would you like to know?

Mr. WALLACE (York). Yes, I would. The hon. gentleman is afraid to answer.

Mr. INNES. Our accounts, unlike a good many of the accounts sent into this Government, are honest.

Mr. WALLACE (York). We must presume from that he got paid the whole amount of his account, and that there was no Auditor General there to criticise. The whole amount was $844.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) has referred to the fact that the Auditor General is a useful officer who discharges his duties faithfully. No doubt he does, and more faithfully than some of the printers who receive jobs from this Government would desire he should. Because we find, not only in this year's report of the Auditor General, but in last year's and ever since his attention has been drawn to the fact that exorbitant prices have been paid for outside work, that he has tried his best to put a stop to it, by reporting against paying those accounts. He deducted over $2,000 from one account, which, in the aggregate, amounted to $6,000. He urged the position he took, and refused to certify to these accounts, until the Treasury Board, composed of five members of the Government, met together and decided they would overrule his audit and compel the people's money to be wasted in this way.

Mr. BOWELL. Is that for advertising?

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). They compelled the Auditor General to allow the accounts to be paid, when he knew and certified that thousands of dollars were being spent for this work which ought not to have been spent by the Government. Every member of the Government knows that to be a fact; the hon. member for West York knows it to be a fact; every member of the House knows it to be a fact, and I do not see what the hon. gentleman expected to make out of quoting the Auditor General as an officer who checked the accounts, when his rulings are overruled by the Treasury Board whenever it suits the Government to pay exorbitant prices to their organs for printing.

Mr. MULOCK. It is to some extent in the public interest there should be some control different from what exists to-day over printing given out. Some hon. members have referred to grievances and abuses, let me refer to another abuse. It appears by the Public Accounts that a considerable amount of printing is given annually to a newspaper in which a member of the Government is interested. I refer to the Montreal Gazette. When you look to the particular class of printing at present given to that newspaper, you will find it is especially objectionable that that system should be continued. I understand that for some years the Geological Survey report has been given to the Montreal Gazette to be printed. The Geological Survey is under the control of the Department of the Interior, and the printing of its report therefore under the control of the Minister of the Interior. When the Bill for printing is presented to the Government, to whom is it presented for audit? It is presented to the Minister of the Interior, who, as the head of that Department, is bound to investigate the account and see that the country is not overcharged. How can he well do the duty when he has an interest adverse to his duty as a Minister of the Crown. I do not care whether his interest in what comes out of that contract be great or small, if he has however small an interest in the profit he is not in a proper position to investigate the account. Fancy a bill being presented to the Minister of the Interior, and the person representing the claimant being the individual, Thomas White, one of the joint proprietors of the Montreal Gazette. It is true that the individual does not appear because the account is in the name of a corporation of which he is only a silent partner, but if we strip the transaction of the shield thrown over it by the Act of incorporation, what appears? The proprietors of the Gazette, including Thomas White, present an account to Thomas White, Minister of the Interior, and ask for payment out of the public moneys. I am not going to say he would pass an account that was improper, but he cannot fill two such inconsistent positions at the same time and do justice to both. In my opinion it is an absolutely false position for any hon. gentlemen to put himself in, to have an interest adverse to that he is bound to protect. If I chose, I could point out organs in which men controlling the public purse have an interest, it is said. I will not speak with a great deal of confidence of it, but it is said generally that there are members of the Cabinet who are interested as proprietors of organs that are creditors of the Government. If that is to be done away with by the new system, well and good. If there is no other escape than this, let us adopt the proposed remedy, but under any circumstances I submit that the interests of the country are not being properly served when a creditor, as has been shown, is the one who audits the payment to himself.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to know from the Secretary of State what the meaning of the phrase, which has given rise to this interesting discussion, is:

"The proper officer of the Department shall also superintend and execute the purchase and distribution, &c., the procuring of all advertising required for the public service."

This officer is to be, I suppose, from what the hon. gentleman explained, the superintendent of printing?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I was going to remark that, but unfortunately I was prevented by the interesting discussion we have had on public advertising, which has nothing to do with this measure. I think that the clause does not read well, because the procuring of advertisements cannot be put into the hands of the State Department. Instead of procuring all advertising, it should read "the auditing of all accounts for the advertising required for the public service."

Mr. BLAKE. Then it is not intended that this single Department or any officer of it shall have any control over the discretion of the different Ministers, as now existing, to order advertisements where they deem it necessary in respect to the matters appertaining to their own Departments?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not think it could be worked. It is not the intention. Each Department gives a written order. This order has to go to the Department of the Queen's Printer where every account has to be audited and paid, and no account is accepted unless the written order of the Department which issued the advertisement is given with the account, and it is not intended to change that.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Would the Minister kindly give us a little more information as to the method adopted at the present time with regard to the dispensing of the advertising patronage.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Each Minister may give a written order if he wishes to send an advertisement to a newspaper. He must give the order in writing. No newspaper has a right, as used to be done in times past, it appears, to take an advertisement and then send the account to be paid at the discretion of the Department. For instance, the Department of the Interior sends an advertisement, the accounts are audited and paid by the Department of the Queen's Printer, and no account is paid without a written order for the advertisement.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Then I understand that the patronage now is not dispensed by the Queen's Printer? Each head of a Department orders the advertisement to be sent to certain papers each time?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes.

Mr. INNES. How is a check kept with regard to the newspapers which insert the advertisement on an order and those who insert it without an order? How is the Department or the Auditor General to know?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The auditor does not certify an account unless it is accompanied by the written order of the Department.

Mr. BLAKE. I would also like to understand what the precise meaning of another part of this section is:

"The proper officer of the Department shall also superintend and execute the purchase and distribution of all paper, books and all other articles of stationery of whatsoever kind, and the distribution and sale of all books or publications issued by order of either or both Houses of Parliament or any Department of the Government of Canada."

Referring to the first two lines which I have just read—

"The proper officer of the Department shall also superintend and execute the purchase and distribution of all paper, books and all other articles of stationery of whatsoever kind—"

Does that mean books and stationery which are required for the Departments?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. For the Departments and for Parliament.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, but it includes that required for the Departments?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. For the Departments.

Mr. BLAKE. Then, if a book was wanted, if a particular Department wanted a book of reference, the course would be to issue a requisition upon or an order to this Department, and this Department would execute the purchase?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes, as it is done in England.

Mr. INNES. What relation would the present Stationery Department of the House hold to the bureau if it was established?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. This Department is almost completed, and I must say very well organised, and it is intended that the present chief clerk of stationery shall be the superintendent of stationery. There is no need of a new officer for that Department, which will be continued.

Mr. INNES. Then this Department would be in a sense subsidiary to the bureau?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes, it would be a part of it.

On section 4,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I desire to call the attention of the House to this clause. I perceive that apparently there is an intention of creating an officer with the rank and title of deputy head. It appears to me that we have created a great many more deputy heads than the service calls for. Hon. gentlemen may think it matters very little whether you call an officer a deputy head or not, but in practice it will be found to amount to a good deal, and in practice it will be found that this Department will be worked a good deal more expensively than it need be. What, after all, has this Department to do? It will have to supervise the expenditure of some $200,000 or $300,000 of the public money. It appears to me that to create a deputy head for the purpose of supervising an expenditure of that amount is making altogether too much of it, and is creating an office very unnecessarily expensive. We have created two or three distinct deputy heads in two or three Departments of late, and I think there is not sufficient ground for making an officer with the rank of deputy head, which ought to represent a very much more important service than this, it appears to me, can be.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. In that Department, there are practically now two deputy heads, the Under Secretary of State and the Deputy Registrar General. I am not one of those who desire to multiply offices, and I have already in my Department done my fair share in that respect. There is no great change, because the Queen's Printer is now a special officer with a special commission. The increase of salary will be of no consequence, and it is the intention of the Government that there shall be only the Under Secretary and one other deputy head, who will be the Queen's Printer, the registry branch of the Department may be merged, in the interval before the coming into force of this Act, into one of the other branches of this Department.

Mr. BLAKE. But that would require an alteration of the Statute, I presume? Is not the deputy registrar now a deputy by Statute?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. He is the Deputy Registrar General by Statute.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it would require an Act of Parliament to effect the reform.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It would require an Act of Parliament, but this is not practically going to take effect before the 1st December, 1887, and we hope in the meantime it will be possible to make the change so that there will be only two deputy heads.

Mr. BLAKE. It is intended, however, that the Queen's Printer will be a deputy head, and we are in fact by this clause creating a new deputy headship?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We are.

Mr. BLAKE. Which the hon. gentleman intends shall not in the end increase the gross number of deputy heads, because he takes one away from somewhere else. I suppose the Queen's Printer will have the usual emoluments of a deputy head under the law?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. He will.

Mr. BLAKE. What are the present emoluments, and what will be the increase?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The present salary of the Queen's printer is $2,400, and his salary will be increased by $400.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then he will be paid very much under the other deputy heads, who receive on an average $3,200, and to a certainty this inequality will so press upon his mind that we shall be called upon to pay him $3,200 in a very short time. Now I do not understand that there are two deputy heads in the Department of the Secretary of State, because in the estimates submitted to us a few days ago, I see the chief clerk and the deputy registrar who is the nearest approach I can make out to a deputy head, are to receive $2,400 for 1887, similarly to the Queen's Printer.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The second deputy head does not receive the salary of a deputy head.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is nobody put down as a deputy head except the Under Secretary, so that there are not at the present moment, two deputy heads, though there are chief clerks.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I mean that the Deputy Registrar General, like the Under Secretary, is Deputy Minister in his branch, but the deputy head who is called the Deputy Registrar General does not receive the salary of a deputy head.

Mr. BLAKE. For the reason that he is not a deputy head.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I admit my expression was not in conformity with the word of the Statute. He is Deputy Minister, but he is not a deputy head.

Mr. BLAKE. Under the Civil Service Act there is a salary assigned, I think, within certain limits, to the deputy head.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes, $3,200.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the effect of this clause is to create a new deputy headship, and, under the general Act of Parliament, creating a new deputy headship involves an increase of public charges, as the Minister has explained, of $400, and it seems to me that this ought to be initiated in committee.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I think we might say that the salary of that deputy head shall not exceed the present salary of the Queen's Printer. I have no intention to increase the salary beyond the present salary of the Queen's Printer.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the hon. gentleman said a little while ago there would be an increase of $400.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have no objection to leave him with his present salary. We will add and make it read as follows: —"Shall be the deputy head of the Department with the present salary of the Queen's Printer."

Mr. BLAKE. The clause, in so far as it gives power to the officer, appears to be too wide, in the 17th and part of 18th lines. It not merely requires him to perform such duties but provides that he shall have such powers as are assigned to him by any Order in Council, or the Minister. That would give the Minister, practically, entirely indefinite powers.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Well, we will strike out the words "or by the Minister," in the 18th line.

Mr. BLAKE. Sub-section 2 covers the case of the present officer, I suppose.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It does.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I would like the Minister to explain this a little more fully. That may mean a great deal. A man may be employed in a publishing house, and still not be acquainted with the details of printing.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We have put it as an additional guarantee. We are not supposed to take, as Queen's Printer, a man who has not a knowledge of the business. I have copied the terms of the American Act.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It should read a printing establishment in place of a publishing establishment. I do not know what the legal signification might be, but I should suppose service in a publishing establishment might be construed to mean service in a mere bookseller's establishment.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Let us say "printing."

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). For instance Dawson Bros., Montreal, are publishers, but they are not printers. It is well known they receive orders for printing, but they have nothing to do with the printing, which they get done at the Gazette office, or some other place, so that a man might be employed in the publishing house of Dawson Bros. for years and know nothing about printing.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We will strike out the word "publishing" and insert the word "printing" in lieu thereof.

Mr. BLAKE. The next sub-section ought to have been initiated in committee. It provides that these officers shall have the rank and emoluments of a chief clerk.

Mr. BOWELL. Is it absolutely necessary that it should be originated in committee when it declares that an officer, when appointed, shall hold that rank? I think if you look at the Civil Service Act you will find that the Government is empowered, for certain reasons therein stated, to make appointments. The power is already vested in the Government to appoint clerks of any grade under certain circumstances, and I take it that a grant in the Estimates would always cover any appointment made in this way.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know whether the clause should be inserted—I suppose it is necessary, because we find it here. We have to deal with it as it is here, and being here, it ought to have been initiated in committee.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me. I said nothing about whether the clause ought to be here or not. What I said was that I did not think it necessary that this clause should originate in committee, for the reasons I stated. I gave no opinion as to whether the clause should be in the Bill or not.

Mr. BLAKE. My position is that a clause which prescribes that public officers shall have certain emoluments, which emoluments are, we know, fixed by the general law, is, in effect, providing for a salary, and should be initiated in committee.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We provide that the superintendent of stationery, the superintendent of printing and the accountant shall be the chief clerks, and not subject to examination. I do not think it is necessary to change the wording of the section.

Mr. BLAKE. If the words are not necessary, we should omit "emolument." If they are necessary, they should be introduced in Committee of the Whole. Either it is necessary to take this power to pay those particular emoluments or it is not. We presume it to be necessary as the words appear in the Bill. If they are not necessary, let the words be struck out.

Section amended by striking out the word "emolument."

Mr. BLAKE. Is it thought necessary to have a superintendent of printing, a superintendent of stationery and an accountant.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes. In a large printing establishment of this kind there must be a superintendent of printing, who will be the practical head of the establishment; there must also be a controller of stationery and a special accountant.

Mr. INNES. We have already a superintendent of stationery. Is it intended to appoint two new officers.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No. There will be three heads in that Department, one controlling the other, the controller of stationery will have something to do with the printing. The auditor will be a kind of controller, and it was thought desirable to give the same rank in the service to each of them. It will add something to the present salaries, and this has been calculated so that the addition will not in the bulk increase the whole amount of the salaries of the Department, as it now stands.

Mr. VAIL. Why is it necessary that an accountant should have had five years' experience in the measurement and auditing of printing accounts. He will be a mere accountant.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The work could not be done by an ordinary accountant, no matter how clever he might be. He must have a special knowledge with respect to auditing accounts of a printing or publishing department.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I entirely agree that it would be utterly impossible for an ordinary accountant to discharge the duties required of that officer. I see that in section 5 provision is made for lithographing, but in the statement made by the Secretary of State as to the cost of this department he made no provision for the purchase of lithographic plant.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is not intended at present to have lithographing done, but it is put in in case it may be found necessary in future.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Are we to understand from the second sub-section that every apprentice or journeyman who secures work in this establishment has to be approved by the Secretary of State?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. That provision was certainly not put in for my pleasure, and if there is any objection to it I will strike it out. While, of course, some one has to be responsible for the Department, it is understood that the establishment shall be carried on so that these men shall be engaged and be under the control of the officer who is practically acquainted with the work. I, therefore, move that that portion of the sub-section be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BLAKE. I think you will find that the efficiency of a department of this kind in the employment of hands will largely depend on its being expressly recognised that the absolute responsibility for the choice of those hands is with the superintendent, and that the hands may feel that they are dependent on him and his good will alone, and not upon political or outside influence of any kind, as to whether they remain there or not. I saw the advantage of this system in what was a somewhat analogous instance, when I had the misfortune to be Minister of Justice. I think you will find that many of the difficulties which have occurred in one of our penitentiaries has been largely due to a disregard of that principle. The law is good enough, for it expressly provides, as to a number of minor officers of the penitentiaries, that they shall be appointed by the warden, and shall be dismissed or removable by the permanent officer. I found when I took charge of the office that the warden was in the habit of referring to the Minister with reference to these appointments. I declined to give any advice or suggestion in the matter, and I pointed out to him that the responsibility properly lay with him, that I should hold him responsible for appointing good men, and in order that that responsibility might be effective he must have absolute freedom of choice. Now, if you want this Department to work well, you will draw a clause based upon that principle, to show that the superintendent of printing has real freedom of choice, and that the men may feel they look to him, and to him alone, and that according to the favor and good opinion they deserve and receive from him, they will get in and stay in.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman, and if I would speak for myself personally, if enquiries were made at the Department over which I preside, it would be found that that system has been practised. In all practical matters requiring special knowledge, of which the Minister has no technical knowledge, such work is left to the control of the officer. I have no objection to have a provision of that kind inserted.

Mr. BLAKE. I would submit whether the 3rd and 4th sub-sections are not money clauses, which would originate in committee.

On section, 6.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There has been an expression of opinion on the other side of the House, and I may say on this side also, giving to this clause a different interpretation from that which I gave in my explanations of the Bill, when I said it was not intended to give the Government the right to undo the work proposed to be done by this Act, but practically to leave the law as it is now in that respect. The present Statute states that no printing shall be done except by contract, and yet another clause states that the Government may for special reasons order work to be done elsewhere than at the Government printing office. But owing to the misunderstanding which this clause might create, I move that it be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

Committee rose, and, it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

On section 7,

Mr. BLAKE. Are the moneys referred to in this clause moneys received from the Treasury for the purpose of making payments, or moneys which are to be received as the price of documents and books which are to be sold ?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They are moneys received from the public by the sale of documents and books.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I observe that this clause provides that the superintendent of stationery shall, under the direction of the Minister, have charge of the purchase of supplies. Are we to understend from that that the system heretofore practised of asking for tenders is to be done away with ?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No, it is to be continued. The same clause is in the old Act.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). But I see that it is at the option of the Minister to ask for tenders or not, as he pleases. I think in so important a matter as stationery it would be well to provide that it shall be bought by public competition.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. All stationery is not bought by public tender. We obtain tenders from the principal houses in the country for a part of it, and the same rule will be followed in the future.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Formerly it was the practice to ask for tenders for the supply of printing paper. I understand that the contract has been held by Mr. Barber, of Georgetown, for a number of years.

Mr. BOWELL. That is for parliamentary printing paper.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We have discontinued the system of having public tenders for a number of years. It was found not to work to the advantage of the Government and the public, because we cannot by that way follow the prices of the market. and it is most desirable to buy for a year or six months to supply the amount necessary for the service.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I understand that, and approve of that change in the method of applying for tenders, but, at the same time, the Government still ask for tenders for the supply of paper. In this Bill, it might be provided that all printing paper for the use, either of the House or the Departments, should be purchased in this way by tender, and not leave it to the option of the Minister to purchase it as he pleases.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Mr. Young, at the head of the Department, has found that, for some paper, it is better to purchase direct, but for printing paper it has always been the rule to ask for tenders. The system has worked well for all interests concerned.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). That is the reason I want it continued.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is continued.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It would be well to make provision that tenders should invariably be asked for, for printing paper. You would have the competition of all the paper makers in the country, and you would get better paper.

M. INNES. If the supply is given by private tenders now, I can see no objection to introducing the clause suggested by my hon. friend.

Mr. BLAKE. The difficulty about the proposal here is that we are now going to insert a principle or rather an option expressly by Act of Parliament to do that which the Minister says he does not intend to do with regard to the printing paper. The provision is that all purchases shall be made on requisition or in accordance with contracts after tenders have been called for, so that we are expressly giving the option to adopt either plan. My opinion is that, except under exceptional circumstances, the principle of tender should be applied. I do not understand how there may be cases, but it is possible there may be some, in which it is better not to ask for tenders, and I should suppose in a class of goods we use very largely and which can be supplied by numerous houses, it would be easy to make out a schedule and call for tenders. That would be better for the Government and the country.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have no objection, so as to continue the practice followed, to say that in the case of printing paper for the use of Parliament and for the printing of all public documents, purchases should be made in accordance with contracts entered into after tenders have been asked.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). That includes departmental work.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is for Statutes and for the printing of documents for the House; for other work the paper might be required in small quantities.

Mr. BLAKE. The suggestion of the hon. gentleman is good as far as it goes, but it seems to recognise the principle that hereafter, in all other cases, the principle of tendering is inapplicable. I do not see why tenders should not be called for in all cases.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When the power is left in the hands of the head of the stationery department, he will necessarily follow the commercial rule and ask for tenders when the necessity or opportunity presents itself. I have no objection to say that the rule now followed should be applied, and that in the case of printing paper for parliamentary printing it should be purchased by tender. If we say paper for printing, that would include all kinds, and there is printing done on different sorts of paper. "Printing paper" means what is employed in Statutes and reports.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I do not see why foolscap should not be included in the tender. The tender recently accepted by the Printing Committee was for double royal and foolscap also. In fact I cannot see why all the paper and stationery required by the Government should not be bought by tender. It is only right that all the parties who deal in stationery and printing paper should have the opportunity of getting the Government contract. It amounts to a large sum in the year, and we have in this country men who deal largely in stationery as well as men who are large manufacturers of printing paper. I do not see what difficulty there would be in the Government making provision that not only printing paper but all kinds of paper required should be purchased by tender. It would be in the interest of the public, and would do justice to the various manufacturers and dealers. The variety of stationery we get for our use is not very extensive; year after year it is the same. Why not ask for tenders for stationery, as well as for printing paper ? I do not want to cast reflections upon any officer of the Government, because the stationery department is managed as well as it is possible for any branch of the public service to be managed, but we might, by adopting the principle of tender, save money and possibly save jobbery. And, at the same time, I think it is just as well to put it out of the reach, out of the possibility of any officer of the Government to do wrong in the purchase of goods for the use of this House and of the Departments. Therefore I think the tender system is the right one to have enforced with regard to the purchase not only of printing paper, but of all stationery required for the use of this House and of the Departments, and I cannot see why there can be any difficulty at all in following this practice.

Mr. HESSON. What is the meaning of sub-section 4 of section 7? It says:

"All purchases made under the authority of this section shall be so made upon requisition approved by the Minister or the Queen's Printer, or in accordance with contracts entered into with the like approval after tenders have been called for."

It appears that tenders are absolutely required, if I understand the sub-section.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). That is at the option.

Mr. HESSON. No, it does not leave it optional, I may be wrong, but that is my understanding of it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I think if the member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) will read the section and take the meaning along with him, he will easily understand that it is at the option of the Minister whether he shall ask for tenders or purchase from whom he pleases without tenders. The section reads:

"All purchases made under the authority of this section shall be so made upon requisition approved by the Minister or the Queen's Printer"——

That is one proposition—— or in accordance with contracts entered into with the like approval after tenders have been called for."

That is that the Minister is to have the option of asking for tenders or purchasing as he pleases without tenders.

Mr. TROW. I approve of the suggestions made by the member for Brant (Mr. Somerville). I think it is unquestionably the most desirable plan to adopt the principle of tender, for various reasons. In the first place there are seven established firms in this country manufacturing paper, and consequently there is great competition. I noticed that, in the tenders that were opened here a few days ago—I happened to be a member of the committee—for 6,000 reams of paper, quite a small quantity, there was a difference in the tenders of $3,600, showing conclusively that it is the most desirable plan, where there are such establishments, to offer it to competition.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I can go, I think, as far as the hon. gentleman wants, though not the whole length, because I have no objection at all to continuing the present system. I propose to amend this clause by saying:

"And in the case of printing papers for the printing of the laws of Parliament, departmental reports, and the Canada Gazette."

These are the bulk of what is bought, and for these we always ask for tenders. I do not at all want to change the rule; on the contrary, I want to make it more strict than before.

Mr. BLAKE. So far, that is well. I do not object to that change; but I would point out that the effect of that is still more expressly than before to leave it entirely optional with the Minister to adopt or not to adopt the tender principle as to all other purchases which are made under the authority of this section. And what my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Somerville) and my hon. friend from Perth (Mr. Trow) are pointing out, and I think with justice, is that no reason has been given to us why the system of tender should not be applied generally, unless, if you please, you can point out that there are some cases in which it is impossible to apply it. In those cases, perhaps, some dispensing power might be given to the Minister or to the Government by Order in Council, if it is impossible to apply the tender principle to them. I do not know why the tender principle should not be applied to all. The hon. gentleman said he was desirous to carry out in this Bill the principle of the English rule, where he finds the object has been to leave the control in the hands of the permanent official charged with it, and not to meddle with him in his business management of the Department. Does he suppose that one of the Cabinet Ministers of the Imperial Government would allow himself to be approached by a manufacturer of stationery, and talked to on the subject of whether he should get the order for the public printing or someone else? The state of things is quite different there from what it is here. We must have regard to the difference of conditions, and it is just in order to secure that same business method of conducting business in this country which obtains at home that we are obliged to put some restrictions here, which is not necessary to put in the Mother Country.

Mr. BOWELL. There are cases, as a moment's reflection will show, where you cannot well apply the tender principle. Take, for instance, the paper used in the printing of the Geological Report. That is of a much superior quality to that which is used in any other report, and to ask for tenders for a sufficient quantity to print that one book alone would scarcely be applicable. The Post Office Guide is another case. These are the only exceptions that suggest themselves to my mind. There should be some little latitude left, I do not say with the Minister, but with the head of the stationery branch, so that, when paper is necessary to print, for instance, the Geological Report, he should have the power to procure it without asking for tenders. My hon. friend the Secretary of State is prepared to go the full length to which the principle of tender is carried at present in regard to paper for parliamentary and departmental printing. These Orders of the Day might not come under the head of parliamentary paper for reports. This paper is advertised for by the printing committee, and is called foolscap. The tendering principle might be extended to all classes of paper of this character.

Mr. BLAKE. As I understand, from what one hon. gentleman has said, there are seven or eight firms concerned in the production of paper. We know what we want from year to year for the Geological Report, and I fail to see the very great difficulty in sending out a circular to these firms with a sample page of the paper required, and asking tenders, and so with regard to the Postal Guide. I do not see that it will cause any expense or any inconvenience. The postage is nothing, and a sheet of note paper with a caligraph will give you the letter in fifteen minutes.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I think the suggestion of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) meets all the objections which have been offered in regard to the Geological Report and the Postal Guide, and, as far as I can judge of the quality of paper we accepted the other day for the contract for the next year, I think the Geological Report, if printed on that paper, would be quite good enough. The sample that was sent in this year with the tender which has been accepted, is much superior to the paper we have been in the habit of getting. At all events, I think the suggestion made by the member for West Durham does away with any objection in this regard, because it is simply carrying out the plan now adopted to get tenders for the ordinary printing paper. As I understand it, the clerk sends a circular letter to the different manufacturing firms in the country, and he receives tenders without advertising for them at all, and this can be done for a small quantity as well as for a large quantity. I would, at the same time, urge upon the Minister the justice of not only including all the classes of printing paper required, but also the stationery required for the Departments and for the use of the members of this House. We have large wholesale houses in Toronto, Montreal, Hamilton, London, and other cities of the Dominion, which are perfectly competent to furnish all the stationery required, and I do think it is nothing but right that the purchasing of the stationery should be taken out of the hands of an individual and should be subjected to competition. I think that all the men engaged in this line of business in the country should have an opportunity of tendering for this class of paper, and I am satisfied that, if tenders were solicited, we would get a much better class of stationery, and at a much cheaper rate than is now paid for it. I would, therefore, urge upon the Minister the adoption of the plan of asking for tenders, as they are now asked for printing paper, for all the stationery required by the Government.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman will remember that much of the ordinary stationery required is not manufactured in this country at all. It has been bought from Scotch firms down to this time, almost exclusively. The only effect, therefore, of insisting upon tenders for that class of stationery would be to induce wholesale merchants in Canada to tender for the supply of material which they would get from the same persons from whom we have been getting it in the past. There is a large part of our stationery that cannot be got in the country, but must be imported by wholesale firms. The hon. gentleman says, what we all know, that there has never been a difficulty, so far as the stationery department is concerned, in the supplies furnished to the Departments and to Parliament. That stationery department is exceedingly free from any hint of wrong-doing or favoritism. The paper is obtained from these English manufacturers direct. I agree with what has been said by the member for West Durham that, as regards any special printing paper required, such for instance, as for the Geological Reports or the Postal Guide, which is manufactured in the country, the rewould be no difficulty in sending a circular to the chief manufacturers in Canada—there are only seven or eight of them—and obtaining from them an offer, with samples for the necessary quantity of paper. If we simply declare that all paper required for parliamentary and departmental printing shall be obtained by tender, and leave the officers in charge of the stationery department to do what they have been doing in the past, I think we will have accomplished everything that can be done, otherwise we might so hamper them that, instead of getting things more cheaply, they may cost more. I believe that such things as job lots have been often obtained very cheap, when there was no tender. A merchant has a lot of paper that he is willing to sell, and there have been cases where it has been obtained at a very reasonable price. I know that in an ordinary business establishment they never would think it was desirable to have tenders in all cases; they think it better to be open to obtain job lots, and I think we should leave a similar discretion in the hands of the officers of the stationery department.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I am aware that the seat of Government is often visited by gentlemen engaged in the sale of foolscap and other papers in the wholesale line in this country. From as far west as Hamilton, travellers have come to sell foolscap, and post, and other papers to the Government. There is scarcely a Session passes that I do not see a traveller from a wholesale stationery establishment in Hamilton down here, after orders from the Government for caps, and post, and papers of that class, and he invariably gets an order, at least he has told me so. Well, why not place all the dealers in Canada on the same footing? Why not allow merchants in Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa to compete with each other, and let the quality be specified by the officer of the Government so that the supply may be kept up to the standard, and let the man who will furnish the paper at the cheapest rate get the contract.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I think the hon. gentleman's information is not very recent. If this commercial traveller whom he speaks of has obtained orders here, he obtained it from some other quarter than the stationery office proper. What I want to do is to avoid what has been found an inconvenience in France and other places where a stationery office has been established, that is, canvassing for small orders from department to department, and trying to get an order for some small lots. I am sure that for the three or four years that I have been in the Department, these canvassers have had no success in the stationery office proper, not on account of my presence there, but on account of the vigilance of the head of that department. My object is, by the establishment of this Department, to secure that all the stationery will be bought by the superintendent, and this officer will act according to commercial principles, and buy on commercial principles. My hon. friend, the Minister of the Interior, says that a good deal of the stationery we require is not made in this country. A good deal of the note paper, the hand-made paper could not be got here, it is only manufactured on the other side, and in Holyoke, in the States. But very soon such paper will be manufactured in this country. I understand that a firm has applied for a contract at the same prices we pay for paper imported from Scotland from the controller of the stationery, the material to be manufactured in this country. After a couple of firms are able to manufacture that kind of paper, then it would be proper to ask for tenders for such paper. But we must not make the rules too stringent in the Statute, because you would hamper the useful action of the stationery controller. I think the amendment I have put in your hands covers what my hon. friend asked in the beginning. He asks for some more, it is true; his appetite has grown by eating. After I had conceded one thing, he asked for another, and I conceded that. He still asks for another, but I can go no further.

Mr, SOMERVILLE (Brant). Would the Minister inform me what he means by the stationery officer proper? Is that the department over which Mr. Young presides?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Well, it is within my knowledge that travellers have sold lots of paper to Mr. Young within the last two or three years, I think the last year.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If they have sold lots, which I doubt very much, they must have sold them, I am sure, at better terms than they could have been procured by tender. My hon. friend is certainly mistaken if he thinks that officer has shown any favoritism.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I did not mean to say that any favors were shown to parties who sold this paper; I was merely reaffirming my statement as to sales being made there of paper. There is one other matter I wish to refer to. I think good work will be acomplished by this Bill in one way; not only in regard to keeping the printing in the hands of the Government, if they will do so, but it will prevent a good deal of jobbery in connection with the purchase of paper. I have been informed by paper makers who have sold paper to those who have been favored with the printing of immigration pamphlets, that the printers actually were not satisfied with the enormous profits they were receiving over and above the contract prices, but were getting 25 per cent. profit on the paper which they supplied to the Government, and for which the Government had to pay. I hope we are going to have a different state of things, that the printing of the Government is going to be honestly done for the benefit of the country, and in such a manner as will be a credit to the Minister who presides over the Department. At the same time, I cannot see why all the stationery should not be purchased by tender.

Mr. TROW. I was informed within the last ten days, by two of the managers of leading firms in Ontario, that the paper manufacture had not come to such a state of perfection as yet in this country that makers are able to supply such paper as is required in this House. I am persuaded that the paper could be bought to better advantage in the old country in the meantime; but our manufacturers will be prepared, no doubt, in a year or two, to make paper such as is required for all purposes.

Mr. INNES. Even now there is a class of ordinary foolscap made in this country, and I do not see why that should not be included in the tenders as well as ordinary printing paper.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Let us do one good thing first.

Mr. MILLS. I do not consider any reason has been given by the Minister as to why all the printing paper should not be included. Why should the hon. gentleman specify certain printing paper? What reason is there for mentioning the paper used in the printing of the official Gazette or used in this House; that does not apply to all the printing done by the Government. The hon. gentleman told us that we were going to print various documents now in manuscript in the archives, so as to keep the staff employed, that otherwise would have nothing to do for a considerable portion of the year. As the hon. gentleman's motion now stands, the paper used for that purpose would not be obtained by tender. Why does the hon. gentleman undertake to except a large portion of the printing paper?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not do so; I have included all that will be required in large quantities. I have specified them, because those are the objects for which large quantities of printing paper must be bought, and at the same time not restrict or bind the hands of the superintendent of stationery when it is necessary to buy a small lot.

Mr. MILLS. This would not prevent the Government from purchasing small lots. There is nothing to prevent the paper for the Geological Report or for the Postal Guide or for any other special class of printing being purchased after application has been made to the various parties from whom such purchases can be made.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved that the words "Governor in Council or Minister" in the latter part of the clause be struck out, and the following words be inserted: "and shall form part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada."

Amendment agreed to.

On section 8,

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Some explanation is required with respect to this section which applies to the stationery furnished to both Houses of Parliament. At the present time the system is not a good one for the reason that there is great discrimination used between the two Houses. The senators, whom I suppose are a body of superior men, are supplied with a much better quality of stationery than that furnished the members of the House of Commons.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I doubt it. They have tried one year the control of the chief of the stationery branch, but this year they have discontinued that system; of course it was their privilege; they are lords in their House as we are in this, and they adopted another system. They have supplied themselves since, but I think they will find in the end that the present system is not, to say the least of it, so good as the one they had before. I think they will find they have paid a little more for what is not quite so good. The main features of the report of the Joint Committee in England was to leave entirely under the controller of stationery, not only the quantity but the quality of paper supplied, so that it should be uniform in all the Departments and in the House of Commons and Senate, and so that there should be no undue pressure to procure a fancy article, which is sometimes not so good, although it costs a great deal more.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I am glad to hear the explanation of the Minister, and I may now be allowed to say something with regard to the ancient usage of the House of Commons of supplying members with two trunks every year, one filled with stationery, and the other with I do not know what. I think it is an unnecessary expense and might be lopped off altogether. While we are here we are liberally supplied with stationery, and I feel quite certain that there are not half a dozen members of this House who, when they return to their homes, use one fourth of the stationery they are presented with. We get a new knife every year, and a pair of scissors, and every imaginable kind of article, which are of course useful and necessary in their places; we get a lot of note paper and letter paper and we get some envelopes, some of which cannot be used at all, because when they pass through the Post Office they fall to pieces under the postmaster's stamp. I do not wish to say very much against this ancient usage of the House but I only want to say that I am opposed to it, that I think it is unnecessary, that I do not think members or the country are benefited by it, and that it is so much money thrown away.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am afraid the only answer I can give the hon. gentleman is the one which was used by a witty writer, who said he had always a good deal of sympathy with an abuse which was to be reformed, because abuses were generally so well taken care of, they were nursed with such an amount of tenderness in order to establish them permanently, that it was too bad to destroy them. I fear this is the only justification I can give for this old usage. It was begun a long time ago, it has been well taken care of and nursed with a great deal of tenderness; would it not be too bad to remove it all at once?

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I fear I cannot induce the Minister to do away with it.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I will do my part.

On the preamble,

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There is one clause I should like to add to this Bill, and I hope in another Session we shall be able to do it. It is to adopt the American system of having all paper used by Government or Parliament stamped, and to provide that if any person not authorised uses that paper, he shall be liable to a penalty of several hundred dollars. But that may remain for another day.

Committee rose and reported.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read the third time this day six months. I think, when the Government of which the hon. mover of this Bill is a member, have the opportunity of having the public printing done by tender, and yet so seriously interfere with that business that $150,000 worth of printing is jobbed out in a single year, we cannot expect that a very great improvement will be made by the establishment of a Department of this kind. The hon. gentleman admits that, if such a Department were established, a very large number of people would be required as printers and in other ways during the Session of Parliament, and during the rest of the year a smaller number would be required, and that, if there is to be anything like permanence in the service, employment must be furnished to these persons by engaging in printing enterprises that are not necessary for the public service and may be of no material advantage to the country. Believing that this measure will largely add to the public expense, and will at the same time diminish the efficiency of the public printing as performed by contract under proper supervision, I move this amendment.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have only to answer the hon. gentleman that I think it is really not right that an impediment should be put in the way of a step in the way of progress and economy, if not in the way of the perfection of a system for obtaining good printing at cheap prices. My hon. friend has stated that during one year $150,000 has been expended in printing outside of the contract. This is not correct; it was for a longer period than one year. There can be no danger of any departmental printing being given out by favoritism until December, 1887, and the parliamentary printing is under the charge of a committee of this House, and it will be for the committee to look after that. With these remarks, I hope the House will not adopt the views of my hon. friend.

Amendment negatived on division, motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

THE DOMINION'S LAND ACT, 1883.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 94) further to amend "The Dominion Lands Act, 1883." He said: I desire to explain that the amendment made by the Senate is one of which I gave notice to this House, and which I supposed had been put in the Bill in committee. I moved it in substitution of clause 9 of the Bill as printed, shortly before you left the Chair, Sir, at six o'clock, and some little discussion occurred in reference to it between the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and myself. Clause 9 is left out of the Bill, but this was not inserted. I should have looked at the Bill before moving the third reading, but did not, and the Bill was read the third time without this clause being in it which, I supposed, had been carried in committee. In the Senate this clause has been inserted, and its provisions will be found in the Votes and Proceedings of 3rd May. They relate to the question of advances to settlers going into the North-West by persons desiring to promote immigration to that country, and provide a means by which a lien can be obtained as security for the advances. I explained the clause when it was before the House, and do not think it is now necessary to repeat the explanation.

Amendments concurred in.

GRANTS OF LAND TO MILITIA FORCE.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved second reading of Bill (No. 142) to make further provision respecting grants of land to members of the Militia Force on active service in the North-West.

Mr. BLAKE. There is some information in reference to this Act which I think the hon. gentleman might fittingly give on this occasion. I am of opinion that, considering the distance at which we are from the place where those are concerned who are principally interested in this legislation, the time has not arrived when we ought to proceed to close the account. Time enough has not really been given to enable us to receive that information which would be necessary in order to present cases; but I shall lay before the hon. gentleman one case which came to me a few days ago, before there was any idea of this Act being brought forward, and which seems to me not irrelevant. Apart from that, I would like the hon. gentleman to say how many persons were entitled, under the existing law, to scrip or grants of land, and then, as to the operation of the existing law, what proportion of persons have taken up land as compared with the proportion of persons who have elected to take the scrip, and how much scrip he estimates will really issue under the existing law with respect to persons who are entitled to it under that law. What is the hon. gentleman's calculation as to the number of persons who will be entitled to benefit under the proposed amendment, in the different classes he gives here from A to F, and what is the amount of scrip which, assuming the same proportions, will be issuable? I would also like to understand whether any account has been kept of these issues, and whether any account is being made of the ultimate charge to the public Treasury, involved in their being taken up for the public lands, with the view of charging them to the sum total of the expenditure occasioned by the suppression of the outbreak. It seems quite clear this is part of the cost of the rebellion, and it seems to me, if the existing law does not suffice for the purpose of a proper account being kept, in order that we may distinguish these scrip issues from the old scrip issues of various characters, such a provision might be well added to the Bill. Inasmuch as he says he has received many representations with reference to the measure itself, no doubt he also received representations from various quarters for relief of this description before he introduced his proposal. Inasmuch as the measure is being put through very rapidly, I would like him to give information as to the classes of persons who have applied to be included in the provisions of the last Session for benefit, whose cases he has not thought fit to recognise. My attention was called some months ago—and I have been unable unfortunately to recover the letter to which I am about to refer—to the cases of certain persons who where engaged in a portion of the transport service on some of the rivers, but were not engaged in action, and who thought they should be included. The particular case to which I refer, which came under my attention the other day, is that of a person by the name of Thomas Healy, of Moose Jaw, who writes me he was a homesteader from 6th January, 1882, that on the 24th June he was in the service of the Government, being engaged in the transport of provisions for the troops to Clarke's Crossing, and unfortunately broke his thigh while engaged on that service. He made application for some relief in respect to this homestead and pre-emption, which he was informed was not capable of being dealt with under the existing regulations, and in respect of which I intended submitting his case to the deputy head for consideration, but it seemed appropriate, under the present proposal, to lay cases of that class before the hon. gentleman now, with the view of ascertaining whether they are to be embraced in the measure now before the House.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I believe that, so far, under the existing law, about 6,000 will be entitled to receive scrip or land warrants, as they may elect. As the hon. gentleman knows, it is for the volunteers to determine if they will take the one or the other. All the volunteers who were engaged in active service, west of Port Arthur, number about 6,000 altogether. The exact proportion who will take land warrants and the exact proportion who will take scrip, it is impossible yet to determine, for the simple reason that we have not received applications from a large number; but so far as we have received them, a very large proportion take scrip. Latterly there has been a greater disposition to take the land warrants, which, I am afraid, has arisen from the popular impression that these land warrants are a negotiable security, just as the scrip is, and I think that a good many people who engaged in the purchasing of scrip have encouraged the volunteers to apply for land warrants, with the idea that they are more valuable and will sell more rapidly. Of course the impression is entirely erroneous, and I have taken every means possible, short of advertising in the papers, of informing people who bought land warrants in that way that they will really be valueless in their hands, inasmuch as they are only valuable to the volunteer himself or a duly appointed substitute, who must go on the land. I account for the fact that a larger number latterly have been electing to take land warrants from this circumstance, that the warrant or scrip brokers have been impressing on the volunteers the importance of taking land warrants and selling them. They give them a larger sum for the land warrant. I have heard of land warrants, which entitled a man to 320 acres of land, being sold as high as $75. They are really not worth $75, excepting to the volunteer himself or the substitute who may take them. The next question the hon. gentleman asked was as to the number of persons who, under these clauses would probably come in. It is not very easy to state the precise number, but from the information I have, under the first clause, that is the irregular forces other than home guards, I do not think more than about 100 persons will come under that clause. Those for whom this is chiefly intended, and whose case chiefly prompted it were the volunteers of Prince Albert, who were, as hon. gentlemen know, the first to go out and meet the enemy at Duck Lake, and who met so disastrous a reception at the hands of the Crees and half-breeds. There were scouts, I believe, attached to every column, and there will be probably from forty to fifty of those entitled to the advantages of this law. The master and crew of the vessel Northcote I do not think will number more than ten or twelve, and I do not think there was any other vessel engaged in action. Then there will possibly be about thirty of the medical staff. I can give no exact information as to the nurses and dressers, because they are to be recommended for specially meritorious conduct by the Major General. They cannot amount to many. These are all who are included in this list.

Mr. BLAKE. No; there is another lot.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes, there were those in the regular forces, such as the military schools and the artillery. The reason for putting these in arose from a communication which I had from a member of one of the batteries, who said he was very anxious to go there and become a farmer as soon as his term of service was up, but he could not comply with the law requiring him to make an entry before the 1st August because his term of service would not be up at that time, and therefore we have given to these persons, for themselves but not for the purpose of naming substitutes, the power to enter upon lands within six months, I think after the term of service in these regular corps has expired.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has omitted sub-division f under section one.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think there are only two or three of those who were injured on their way or were invalided and had to return before action took place. There is one very remarkable case of a young man who was accidentally shot. As to the others to whom I was alluding, it is difficult to say how many, but I do not think there will be more than a dozen of those men who will take advantage of it, though it is to be hoped, for their own sakes, that more of them will take advantage of it and go into the North-West and become homesteaders. The last clause does not increase the number at all. The homesteaders included in the last clause are already volunteers entitled under the present law to their scrip, and this allows them to apply it on the farms where they were settled at the time of the outbreak. I think that answers the questions the hon. gentleman has asked. Then, as to the others who may have applied. The hon. gentleman has referred to a Mr. Healy who wrote to him from Moose Jaw, and who was a teamster and was injured as such. I have had one or two letters I think, but I had several applications made verbally from teamsters who thought they should be included in the advantages of this scrip. My own impression was that they should not be so included. They were persons who hired themselves and their teams, who were exceedingly well paid, and who, while they performed good service undoubtedly as teamsters, did not perform that kind of service which should entitle them to these special advantages. I have, however, done this for them. I have recognised the time they have been employed in connection with the service of the country as teamsters as if it had been spent upon their homesteads. As hon. gentlemen know, the volunteers who are homesteaders in the North-West are entitled to six months' consideration in view of the fact that they were off at the front. I have given practically the same consideration to the teamsters, those who went off early in the spring when they were about putting in their crops. I have assumed, for the purposes of their homestead duties, that that time was spent upon their land. To that extent a concession has been given to them as recognition of their services. As to the point the hon. gentleman raises, and it is a very important one, as to what account is being kept of the applications for this scrip, I may say that the Department takes this scrip as payment for any debt due for lands which any person may owe to the Crown. In the returns I receive each month of the financial operations of the Department, the payments made in scrip are all given. I cannot say at the moment whether a distinction is made between this military scrip which was issued in consequence of the outbreak, and the half-breed scrip, a very large quantity of which is out now, but the suggestion is one which, I can assure the hon. gentleman, I will take care to have arranged so as to be able to state to Parliament exactly, when the returns are brought down, what has been the amount received by the Department from this military scrip, and therefore what extra charge upon the country is the result of the rebellion from the issue of this scrip. That may be stated next Session.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I believe the House and the country will concur in the proposition to recognise the services of those who were members of the North-West field forces, and will besides sanction the proposition of the Minister to extend still further than was done last Session the desire to reward those who then served by grants of lands. And, as to the general proposition involved in the measure, I do not think there will be any exception taken. But I find that, while the Minister has made an exception against those who were teamsters during that rebellion, he has embraced another class and brought within the operations of the Act a class that, from circumstances that have been recently submitted to the House, do not appear to me to be entitled to the same consideration as those whose cases he has refused to consider. The Minister has just dealt with the case of the teamsters, and has told us what was perfectly true, that there were those who were very well paid for the services they rendered, but there were many cases in which those teamsters did more than render ordinary transport service, that they really subjected themselves to all the perils that were incident to a state of war, and that in one particular instance they were captured by the Indians who were in armed rebellion at the time, and that their capture under those circumstances was largely due to the fact that the transport service was not accompanied by that military force that is usual under such circumstances. Consequently the teamsters, in the majority of cases, were taking a considerable amount of risk in the journeys they were making as escorts, and subjected themselves to some of the perils incident to a state of war. In the case of those captured by Poundmaker, they certainly underwent privations much the same as those of the military forces, and it seems to me are equally deserving as those mentioned in sub-section c of the Bill. Now, in referring to a recent report submitted to this House by acting Major Smith, commanding C Company of the Infantry School corps, I find this language used with reference to those who are embraced in this section :

"As we passed Batoche the fire was specially heavy and I heard a crash as if a portion of the upper deck had been carried away. About two miles below that place the rebel fire slackened, and I ordered the 'cease fire' and shortly afterwards we came to anchor. I then learned that the smoke stacks and the steam whistle had been swept down by the ferry cable, and were lying on the deck ; that the master and the pilot, who had both been in the wheel house, were in a state of great trepidation ; and that Mr. Pringle of the medical staff, and Vimen, a transport officer's assistant, had been wounded. Finding that we were so far down the river, I asked the master why he had not followed his instructions. When he explained that owing to the heavy fire, he could not manage the boat, and got on the cable before he was aware of it. I then directed him to go up stream again, but he objected that that was impossible, as the smoke stack being gone, there was danger of setting fire to the vessel and, besides, that it was unsafe for him to go into the pilot house. Steps were at once taken to repair the damage and two short stacks, made from one, were got into place. That being done, the next difficulty was the pilot house. The steersman positively refused to go into it. We then persuaded him to set his carpenter at it—material was carried up and the carpenter was on the house at work, when several shots came from the west shore, one of which hit him in the ankle and embedded itself in the foot, and we found that some of the enemy had crept along the west side of the river, and, got under cover of the bank, fired on every man who showed himself on board. This put an end to the work, for, as the master told me, it was impossible again to induce his crew to come on deck * * * Our weakness lay in the fact that the master, pilot and engineer were alien, and that the crew were civil employees, and not enlisted men."

Now here is a proposition to grant concessions, as the result of the operations in the North-West, to men who were thus spoken of by the officer commanding the forces on board the Northcote at Batoche, while others engaged in the suppression of the rebellion, and who did their work more satisfactorily, certainly undergoing equal or greater privations and danger, are entirely forgotten. I think if the line has been drawn anywhere it ought to embrace such I have mentioned, particularly those who were captured by Poundmaker, rather than those who were spoken of so depreciatingly in the report of the military commandant on that occasion. I think, besides, that these exceptional circumstances—and the fact that such large convoys of provisions were forwarded over such a length of country, where war existed, and without any military escort—offers a reason for considering the case of those who underwent exceptional hardships on that occasion.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I cannot agree with the view expressed by the hon. gentleman. The teamsters certainly rendered very good service, but it must be remembered that they undertook to carry out a certain contract and were remarkably well paid for the services they rendered. The hon. gentleman, I think, is somewhat mistaken in stating that the teamsters were exposed to greater danger than they would have been exposed from the fact that they belonged to the escort. In almost every case where the military commandant considered it necessary to send out a military escort, the teamsters were sufficiently armed to protect themselves against any attack which might be made upon them. In the case of the capture of the teamsters by Poundmaker, most of these teamsters were armed, and they were not subject to any greater hardship than most of the men who were engaged in that campaign had to encounter. Now in reference to the crew of the Northcote, the hon. gentleman will see that this Act is really an empowering Act for the purpose of giving land grants to men who were engaged upon that special service. During the whole of the campaign it will be remembered that the Northcote had to encounter one of the most dangerous experiences of the campaign, when it was attacked while transporting troops from one point to another, and was exposed to severe fire.

Every man composing that crew may not be entitled to equal consideration, but there were men on that vessel who certainly distinguished themselves by their pluck and the manner in which they performed their duty. Under this Act it will be permissible for the Government to recognise the services which have been rendered by these men. If there are men in that crew who did not do their duty, as the hon. gentleman seems to say—

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). It is the report made to the Department that says so.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Well, the hon. gentleman has taken up that side of the question. He states that some of these men are not deserving of the consideration which, under this Act, they might be expected to receive at the hands of the Government. That may be, but in any case the Government will exercise discretion in these individual cases. In other cases the hon gentleman will admit that many members of the crew of the Northcote showed an amount of courage and pluck which certainly deserves recognition at the hands of the Government.

Mr. WATSON. I heartily approve of the proposed grants to the parties specified in this Bill, but I would like to have seen the Minister go a little further. I believe the teamsters are entitled to more consideration than they have received. In a great many instances those teamsters rendered valuable services on the field of battle, services which, I think, ought to be recognised. Of course, I suppose, as a rule, they were paid for the services they undertook to render. But, in some instances, they were at the front during battle, and exposed to danger, and in many instances they rendered assistance to the wounded volunteers and carried them to the hospitals. In cases like that, where they exposed themselves, they ought to be rewarded in some substantial manner. I believe, in some instances, they were in danger of being cut off altogether. Ten teams went together and those ten men were supposed to defend themselves and the supplies. In some instances they were exposed to great danger and some of them were spoken of as showing great bravery in bringing forward ammunition while fighting was going on. In special cases where the teamsters rendered such service they should be dealt with liberally. Of course, they received their pay, but they did work not covered by it. While the Minister is dealing with the nurses, teamsters who assisted wounded volunteers and rendered other valuable service should be rewarded. I am also glad to see provision made on behalf of the volunteers of Manitoba, volunteers who at the time they went into active service were entitled to pre-emptions. While the Bill was under discussion last year I recommended to the Government the advisability of granting to the volunteers who resided in Manitoba the right to locate their warrant on their pre-emption. I regret that was not done at that time, as the First Minister stated in the most positive terms it could not be done. But the Government have changed their minds on this question, and I regret that they refused to take action last year, inasmuch as some of the volunteers who went to the front and had homesteads and pre-emption selected scrip for $80 instead of waiting to take advantage of locating their land grant warrant on their pre-emption. I suppose about half the persons who would have been benefited by this provision if it had been put in force last year, will not receive benefits. I am glad however that this policy has been adopted, for a number will be benefited, although as I have said a great many of those who would have been benefited, if my suggestion had been adopted last year, will not receive benefits.

Mr. WELDON. When the resolutions were before the House I ventured to call attention to the case of the volunteers who were called out and who did not go west of Port Arthur. I do not think a very large number were in that position; but they were called out for active service and they deserve as much consideration as those who were actually engaged at the front. The principle of the Bill last year did not entirely apply to those who were engaged in action but also to those who went to Port Arthur, and they were entitled to the grant. I cannot see on what principle men engaged on active service but who had not the good fortune to take an active part in the campaign should be excluded, because I take the principle of the Bill to be to reward those men who left their homes and gave up their occupations in order to defend the country. The particular battalion to which I have reference is the battalion from New Brunswick. Immediately after the hostilities commenced a general order was issued, in April 1885, granting a field allowance for thirty-one, sixty-one and ninety-one days to those volunteers to enable them to fit themselves out for a campaign. In regard to the New Brunswick battalion, they were allowed only fifteen days' allowance while the Bruce battalion, the 32nd, and the 1st Prince of Wales got thirty-one days' allowance. I hope the hon. gentleman will see to it that those forming the provisional battalion will receive the same allowance as those battalions which were called out in the same general order. The New Brunswick volunteers willingly responded to the call and came out at very great inconvenience and sacrifice, and the principle which applies to battalions west of Port Arthur should be applied to those battalions that went under canvas, to be ready at a moment's notice to march to any part of the Dominion. With respect to the New Brunswick battalion, I may say that there were companies from St. John, Fredericton, Woodstock, Sussex and other points, and I am not sure but there was a company from Prince Edward Island. Those men suffered very great inconvenience. The officers spent a large amount of money for the purpose of getting nice kits for the campaign. They expended as much as if they had been going west of Port Arthur or west of Winnipeg. But there was another inconvenience. They were obliged to make great sacrifices with respect to leaving their employment, which arrangement extended over a long period of time, because it was to be supposed that they were called out for some months. So a great sacrifice was made by them for which they have received no compensation. Many of the young men had life insurance policies, and they were obliged to pay an extra premium for the purpose of continuing the policies for the benefit of their families or those dependent on them. All those expenses were incurred to as large an extent as if the battalion had been called to proceed to Callander or Port Arthur. Therefore the principle we are adopting should apply to those battalions, and I hope the Minister of Militia will see that this is done, and there cannot be a very large number of them. It will be simply recouping them a large expenditure incurred by them as volunteers for the benefit of the country. They have not the honor, in consequence of not having been in action, of wearing medals on their breasts. I consider that the men who came forward and showed their readiness to go to the front at the call of the Minister and the Government, and take part in suppressing the rebellion, are entitled to as much credit for the spirit of patriotism by which they were actuated. I know that some were at a great deal of extra expense for their kits, their life insurance, and also because in many cases when they left their employment they found their places filled when they returned. Considering the sacrifices they made and the remuneration allowed them, I think they are fairly entitled to this consideration and that the country generally would heartily approve of the Government extending the same consideration to them as to those who went west of Port Arthur.

Mr. McNEILL. I entirely concur in the remarks made by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon). Speaking of the battalion in my own county, I know that many of the members of that battalion lost very seriously by reason of their being obliged to give up their occupations. When they went back to their homes they found in many cases that their places were filled, and they were thrown out of employment for weeks and months. I do not wish to elaborate the subject, as I took occasion to make some remarks upon it a few days ago, but I would earnestly impress on the Minister of Militia to reconsider this matter if he possibly can, and to consider that those men have endured all the losses which were sustained by those who went west of Port Arthur.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I certainly agree with the remarks of the hon. member for St. John and the hon. member for North Bruce. Everyone knows that when a battalion is called out, the officers and men are put to a great deal of loss when they are called out from their homes; and, while it may be perfectly proper that a distinction is drawn between those who went out on actual service, and those who remained at home, yet I think that every officer and man who left his home for actual service, is entitled to some consideration. In the case of a regiment which is placed under canvas for eight or ten days, the men and officers are put to precisely the same loss—in fact to a greater loss proportionately—than if they were for three or four months on active service; because, in the latter case, they got their pay, which goes for something in the case of the men, and still more so with regard to the officers. For that reason, I think that men who are called out for active service, and compelled to make the necessary arrangements, shall receive the same consideration pro rata as those who went to Port Arthur, and I think their case is deserving of consideration at the hands of the Minister of Militia.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The Department followed exactly the rule that the hon. gentleman recognised should be followed in cases such as occurred during the disturbances in the North-West. We did give consideration pro rata to the men who were called out, and who were under canvas for a certain number of days, as in the case of the battalion from New Brunswick who received fifteen days field allowance, because they were that time under canvas. The Bruce battalion, and others which were called out, were treated in the same way. Of course, from the standpoint of a soldier, it was the misfortune of those battalions that they did not go to the front. But the hon. gentleman must remember that under the responsibility of the Department a number of battalions were called out and put under orders to keep themselves in readiness in case of their services being required in the North-West. All those battalions displayed that zeal which the hon. gentleman has spoken of, and which I am so ready to acknowledge on every possible occasion. They set aside their business and gave up their ordinary avocations for the purpose of preparing themselves, in case they should be called out, to fight the battles of the country, and I believe that they feel as soldiers that if they had been sent to the front with their comrades they would have fought the battles as others did, and would have received the same reward as those who went to the front. The same thing occurs in every country. In case of a war being declared a certain number of regiments are sent to the front. Others are kept in readiness, and if the war terminates before the reserve can be called out to support those who are sent to the front, the medals are given to those who fought the battles, and those who would have been as willing as others to go, not having gone to the front, do not receive that reward which the others receive. I believe the volunteers will recognise that in every case when they were called out they were treated with that consideration that should be afforded to them. But the line had to be drawn somewhere, and the line was drawn at the regiments who went west of Port Arthur, and most of those whose opinions I have consulted upon matters of this kind were ready to admit that it was impossible to treat battalions which were called out early to be in readiness the same as those who went through the hardships of the trip north of Lake Superior and the subsequent campaign. The St. John battalion, which was mentioned by my hon. friend from that city, received fifteen days of field allowance simply because they were fifteen days under canvas. They could not expect more, and they cannot ask more than what as soldiers they were entitled to.

Mr. GAULT. I know that every regiment in Montreal was prepared to turn out, and they made great sacrifices to prepare themselves for the campaign. The Prince of Wales' regiment particularly were called out and were under canvas for several days, and I know that some of the men lost their situations and that the officers made great sacrifices. If the Minister wants a precedent, I might mention the fact that the 39th regiment left England for the Crimea, and on the way stopped at Malta, and still they received the medals the same as those who went to the Crimea. I think the men who were called out are fairly entitled to consideration.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. WELDON. These men of the New Brunswick battalion, whom the hon. gentleman mentions as having received fifteen days' field allowance, would receive, I suppose, about $15 in some cases and a less sum in others. Volunteers stand in a very different position from soldiers. We all know that they have to make great sacrifices on occasions of this kind, and it seems to me that when we are recouping those men who have given their services in the defence of the country, we should include all. Though some of the earlier battalions who went around Lake Superior early suffered some hardships, to the later battalions it was more like a pleasure trip. Some of the regiments along the line, who never heard a shot fired, are to get this scrip, while their most unfortunate fellow-soldiers who were not to the west of Port Arthur, and who are perhaps less able to recoup themselves, are to be deprived of it. I think the number of men interested is not very large, and I should like to add a section including them.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I desire again to urge upon the Minister the claims of the particular class to whom I alluded before. While there may be some ground for refusing to deal in a general way with the teamsters engaged in the transport service, there are exceptional reasons why those who were captured by Poundmaker should receive some consideration. The Minister says that the teamsters were well paid, and that they took those risks. I do not understand that they took the war risks. When there is danger of those engaged in the transport service being captured, it is the duty of the military authorities to send a military escort with them for protection. In this case there was no escort at all. The men in charge of the supplies were furnished with arms by the military authorities in the North-West, and that gave them a quasi military postion, and implied that they were entitled to some such consideration as was given to others who were no more a part of the enrolled force than they were—for example, the hospital attendants.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. They were enrolled.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I can find no trace of their enrolment in the documents. But the Bill includes some forces who were not enrolled, and who did not occupy a military position. It is true, as the Minister says, that somebody got well paid for the transport service, but it has been alleged that the money did not in every instance reach the men who performed the service. It is a circumstance that ought to be considered in this case, that the men who really performed the transport service—those who were captured by Poundmaker—were not those who received $10 a day; they were employed at from $5 to $8 a day, and the men who had the contract with the Government secured the difference. These men did undertake a hazardous service, and they are entitled to equal consideration with some who are embraced in this Bill. I sympathise with the remarks made by the hon. member for Muskoka. Under all the circumstances, it ought to be the effort of the Department to encourage in every possible way the active militia force, and anyone who has had any connection with that force knows that the pay provided is very inadequate for the service performed. I would have been very glad if the Department had seen its way to embrace in the Bill the members of the force who were called out for active service but who were not sent west of Port Arthur. I realise that this would largely increase the burdens of the country; but if we have to depend on these men in the future, we must reward them liberally for the services they have rendered in the past. Now, those in command of the forces in the North-West asked the men in whose interest I am speaking to assume the responsibility of protecting themselves while conveying the supplies through a country where there were hostile and armed forces. In this case they were unfortunately unable to protect themselves, and were captured and subjected to great privations. Under these circumstances, I think they are as much entitled to consideration as those who had no recognised enrolment in the militia force of the country.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Would the hon. Minister of Militia object to this amendment? I move that sub-section f be amended by adding after the words "west of Port Arthur" the words "or was actually called out and placed under canvas."

The CHAIRMAN. That is out of order.

Mr. WELDON. I would move that the words after "west of Port Arthur" be struck out.

The CHAIRMAN. Out of order. Because it would increase the cost to the public.

Mr. WELDON. I regret the Government have not shown more generosity. The Montreal battalion lost thirty days' field allowance, and the Bruce and Southampton battalions received full field allowance. The Montreal battalion never left Montreal at all. The New Brunswick battalion were under canvas and some of the men had to drive 100 or 150 miles to join it, and they did not get the allowance the others got.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Every battalion will be placed on a footing of equality. I am not prepared to say exactly whether there is any difference or not, but every battalion will be placed on equal footing. Those who were merely called out to hold themselves in readiness will be all treated the same.

Mr. WATSON. There was a company organised and got ready for action at Shoal Lake, who have not yet received even their pay for the time they were in camp drilling. They were in the same position as the company ordered out at Birtle, but unfortunately they were not gazetted as the Birtle company was, and the men have not been paid even their time. The company was composed of a very fine body of men comprising a number of discharged mounted policemen. I hope the Minister will look into the matter and see this company gets paid.

Mr. INNES. I presume the first sub-section includes those who volunteered into the mounted police and were engaged in the fight at Duck Lake.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes.

On section 2,

Mr. WATSON. I understand this entitles volunteers who went to the front, the time they enlisted, and who hold pre-emption and homestead to receive pre-emption free.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is the intention. But I can hardly think the hon. gentleman is accurate in saying that a large number of the volunteers have not been able to take advantage of this clause. Early in October last, I announced in Winnipeg that this Bill was going to be brought down, and at Birtle I made the same statement as I did all through the North-West, and that was before any of the volunteers had their certificates at all, so that every one must have known of this.

Mr. WATSON. I might just say that the Government informed the House very decidedly a year ago, when the subject was under discussion, that they would not take the policy they have now adopted. A great number of the volunteers paid more attention to that statement than they did to the statement of the Minister of the Interior in the North-West, because they were then interested in looking to see what the Government would give them. I know a number of instances where the volunteers, who hold homesteads and pre-emption, selected $80 scrip instead of the right to take land, who would have rather accepted the privilege now granted them. I suggested last year the following amendment:—

"Any member of the said enrolled militia who has located a homestead and pre-emption shall, in lieu of the grant hereinbefore mentioned, be entitled to get his pre-emption free."

To which the First Minister replied:

"This provision is impossible. It would be a cause of discontent among all the volunteers, except a few corps in Manitoba The hon. gentleman says it is only 160 acres, but it is more than that, because the pre-emptions are $2 an acre, and the Manitoba volunteers would get $320 instead of $80, as the others get."

All through the First Minister stated it was impossible this privilege could be granted; but now the Minister of the Interior practically brings down a measure granting it. I regret that when a practical suggestion is made, it is not weighed and given due consideration, even when made by the members of the Opposition.

Committee reported, and Bill read the third time and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE TARIFF.

Mr. McLELAN. In moving that you leave the Chair and the House again resolve itself into Committee of Ways and Means, I desire to explain some of the amendments which I propose to submit to the committee. It has been found by the Customs that in some respects the present tariff does not work easily, and some alterations are desirable in the general interest of the trade and of the country. I propose to submit to the committee a resolution changing the duty upon oil cloth in the piece, cut or shaped, oiled, enamelled, stamped, painted or printed, India rubbered, to five cents per square yard and 10 per cent. ad valorem. This is making it in part specific to prevent under valuations, of which the Customs complain. Floor oil cloth remains the same as at present, 30 per cent. There are several manufacturers of strawboard in the country, taking the farmers' straw and converting it into board, and great variations and differences have been shown in the prices at which that has been valued by importers. It is proposed to place a specific duty upon that of 40 cents per 100 lbs. The duty has been 20 per cent., and this is about the same as the average value at which it is imported, and what we consider the proper value of the article, not increasing the duty in any way. A good deal of difficulty has arisen in the Customs in regard to earthenware and stoneware by the invoicing of seconds and thirds, and we propose that demijohns or jugs, churns and crocks shall pay a specific duty of 2 cents per gallon of holding capacity. Rubber belting, hose, packing, mats and matting, 5 cents per lb., and 15 per cent. ad valorem. In carriage hardware, differences of opinion have arisen between the importers and the Customs house respecting the mode of invoicing. Parts of carriages are charged 35 per cent., and we propose to put carriage hardware at the same price. In perfumed and toilet soap, a good deal of friction has arisen between the Customs and the importers, and we propose to change the duty to 10 cents a lb., and 10 per cent. ad valorem. Union collar cloth paper, in rolls or sheets, not glossed or finished, 5 per cent. Union collar cloth paper, glossed or finished, in rolls or sheets, 20 per cent. Paper hangings or wall paper, in rolls, costing 8 cents or under per roll of eight yards, 2 cents per roll. In felt we have three or four different rates charged, to the glove manufacturers, the shoe manufacturers, the musical instrument manufacturer, all different prices, ranging from 10 per cent. to 22½ per cent., and it is proposed to make one uniform rate of 17½ per cent. Stereotypes and electrotypes and bases for the same, made wholly or in part of type metal, 5 cents a pound. In scythes it is found there is a very wide difference in the invoice value, ranging from $5 to $10, and it is believed that a good deal of undervaluation has taken place. It is proposed that there shall be a specific duty of $2.40 per dozen. Wire, covered with cotton, linen, silk or other material, 25 per cent. Stove bolts and nuts, and all bolts and rivets of one-quarter inch diameter and less, 35 per cent., the same as wood screws. They are a very similar manufacture to wood screws, with the addition of nuts. Difficulties have arisen in the importation of handkerchiefs. Handkerchiefs of cotton or linen have been charged at different rates. Some, on account of being printed, have been charged 27½ and others 20 per cent. It is proposed to name them and put them all at 25 per cent. Then, it is proposed that the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine, butterine and all such substitutes for butter, be prohibited under a penalty of not less than $200, nor more than $400 for each offence, and the forfeiture of such goods, and of all packages in which they may be contained, and of all articles, implements, machinery and appliances used in and about the manufacture or preparation of such articles. Then we propose to repeal item 353, in respect to colors, except in regard to ultramarine blue, and we want to change the item in relation to jute cloth, which is now named at a width of 42 inches, and to make the width 40 inches, as being more convenient for bag makers. Nail plate, iron or steel, is now imported at different rates of duty, one at $3 a ton and 10 per cent., and the other at 12½ per cent. We propose to make all of 16 gauge and thicker, uniform at 25 per cent. ad valorem Then we propose that items 37, 38 and 39 be referred back to Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of striking out the words "or fraction of a degree" in item 37, and the word "13" in items 37, 38 and 39, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "14"; also to strike out the proviso next after item 40, and substitute the following:—

Provided that when any cargo of sugar imported for refining purposes is found to grade in part above No. 14 Dutch standard in color, such part, to the extent of not exceeding 15 per cent. of the whole cargo, may be admitted to entry by polariscopic test."

Then, we propose to amend the schedule of export duties by increasing the duties on the following articles: Shingle bolts, $1.50 per cord of 128 cubic feet; spruce logs, $2 per thousand feet, board measure; pine logs, $3 per thousand feet, board measure; and we propose to provide that the powers vested in the Governor in Council to repeal certain export duties and certain import duties shall be extended to the repeal of these export duties on sawlogs if it should be found advisable and necessary. This is mainly what we propose to submit to the committee, as well as to make certain alterations and additions to the items that have been referred back, which I need not detain the House to refer to until we get into committee.

TIMBER LIMITS IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. CAMERON (West Huron). Before you leave the Chair, I desire to call attention to some charges that have been made by me against the Government. At this late period of the Session, I shall not unnecessarily trespass upon the time of the House, but as the correctness of those charges has been challenged, I do not intend that this House shall prorogue without submitting to the House and country the evidence upon which I base my charges. I shall deal briefly with the few cases, where the correctness of my allegations has been challenged and if, when the proof is submitted, the judgment of the people of this country will not sustain me, I shall cheerfully bow to their decision. I charged that the Government had parcelled out, among their political friends a large portion of the public resources of this Dominion, in some four or five different instances, and in only four or five different instances these charges have been contradicted. The member for West Hastings (Mr. Robertson) on the 11th March of the present year, in introducing a Bill with respect to burglars, and while referring to some burglars that had been tried in his own town, and the punishment they ought to receive, made use of the following language :—

"I suppose they did not aspire any higher. They were taken to the police station, and their names were placed upon the list; not the list which has given so much anxiety to the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron). I was going to say—but I do not see him in his place—that I do not know what sort of constituency sent him to the House, but as these were young men and of a style unknown to us, they did not come from the fifty square miles of timber limits which he has referred to in his flaming declamations in the west as received by me from the Government, and perhaps they might have come from his constituency"

Now, Mr. Speaker, I did not deal with the recipients of the Government's favors as burglars; I did not propose to treat them as burglars, I did not propose to punish them as burglars, I did not propose, as the hon. gentleman did, that they should be whipped, so the hon. gentleman need not be alarmed upon that score. The charge I made was against the Administration, with respect to the disposal of the timber limits and other public resources of the country among their followers, and as regards himself the hon. gentleman has seen fit to question the statements I made. But on reference to the Sessional Papers of 1884, No. 5[illegible], page 11, I find the following:—

"A. Robertson, Belleville, Ont., 15th August, 1884, Columbia River, B. C., fifty square miles."

Now, so far as this paper speaks at all, it tells but one story, and that is that the hon. member for West Hastings applied for a timber limit of fifty square miles upon the Columbia River. If the Sessional Papers do not speak the truth, the fault is not mine. Now I have a word or two to say to the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor). That hon. member, in discussing what took place out of Parliament, made use of the following language:—

"I have no desire to prolong this debate, but in justice to myself, in justice to the hon. members who sit on this side, with whom I associate, and in justice to my constituents, I feel it to be my duty to repudiate the slander made against me at a place called Wingham, in Ontario, by a person named M. C. Cameron, in a speech which he delivered there, and which was reported in the Globe of 12th January last. It reads as follows:—

'George Taylor represents in the Conservative interest South Leeds. He, too, cast longing eyes on the vast coal and timber lands of the North-West. He accordingly applied to this Government, who distributed with no sparing hand the public estate among their followers, for both coal lands and timber limits. This did not exactly gratify the ambitious views of Mr. Taylor. He lives in Gananoque, a small town and with a limited population. In the Conservative interest he persuaded the Government to build, at the public expense, costly public buildings in this country village. This is not all. Last Session Parliament voted a sum of $20,000 to dam the Rideau Canal in order to supply water to the mills and factories in Gananoque in which Mr. Taylor and his constituents are deeply interested. George Taylor is the bond slave of Sir John, and dare not vote against the Government."

George Taylor, commenting on the foregoing, said:

"In answer to which I can only say that I have no interest in any timber limits or coal lands or grazing lands in either Manitoba or the North-West Territories, that I never applied for either coal lands or timber limits or grazing lands in the North-West Territory or Manitoba, and that I have no interest, individually, or has associated with any other party who has any interest in said lands or limits. This fellow Cameron, who made that statement, knew when he made it that it was a malicious falsehood I say that that statement was manufactured out of the whole cloth I say that there was no foundation for it, and I expect this fellow Cameron is the paid agent of the Grit party to go round the country abusing—what he cannot call himself—a gentleman.

Now, I say at once that neither the tone in which the denial was made, nor the language in which it was couched, merited at my hands the courtesy of a reply, but as I am now dealing with other members whose denials were equally explicit, although more parliamentary, I have a word or two to say to Mr. George Taylor. Now, bear in mind, I did not charge Mr. Taylor with having obtained either timber limits, coal mines, or grazing leases. My charge was against the Government for having parcelled out among their followers, in and out of Parliament, a large portion of the public domain. The following correspondence between Mr. Taylor and the Government, will show how far my charges were based upon fact :—

"GANANOQUE, 3rd October, 1882.

"To the Hon. the Minister of the Interior,
"Ottawa.

"DEAR SIR,—A friend of mine wishes me to enquire on what terms the Department will grant a timber limit in the North-West Territories, in townships supposed to be 39, 40 and 41, in ranges 18, 19 and 20 west, at a place called Passenger Hill. He is anxious to secure a limit. Your early reply will much oblige.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
(Signed) "GEO. TAYLOR."

The answer of the Department was as follows:—

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
"OTTAWA, 10th October, 1882.

"SIR,—I have the honor, by direction of the Minister, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 3rd inst., enquiring on what terms the Government will grant you a timber limit in the North-West Territories, in townships 39, 40 and 41, in ranges 18, 19 and 20 west, of the second meridian; and in reply herewith enclose a copy of the timber regulation.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
(Signed). "A. RUSSELL,
"For Surveyor General.

"GEORGE TAYLOR, Esq.,
"Gananoque, Ont."

Now, Sir, the application in this case covered timber in nine townships, it purports to be made for a friend whose name is not given, whether the friend was Mr. Taylor or somebody else, I do not know, but the reply is peculiar in its way. The reply is not that "your friend" can get a limit, but the terms are that the Government will grant you, George Taylor, to whom the letter is addressed a timber limit. Now, Sir, I say that is ample justification for the statement I made. I have a word or two to say to another hon. member, who denied the charges I made. In a speech delivered by me at Wingham, I think in the month of January last, I charged that Mr. Peter White, of North Renfrew, was a director of the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway, and while such director this road was bonused by this Administration to the extext of $272,000. The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) repeated that charge on the floor of Parliament, and stated further that the hon. member for North Renfrew was also a stockholder in the Ontario Pacific Railway and in the Ottawa, Waddington and New York Railway. On the 6th May, 1886, the hon. member for North Renfrew made use of the following language in the House, in replying to what my hon. friend from the west riding stated:—

"Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to say a word with reference to a statement made by the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) in the discussion of the motion of the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). That hon. gentleman (Mr. Lister) is reported in Hansard to have said:

"'I find, Sir, that the Ontario and Pacific Railway, running through Cornwall to Perth, has been bonused to the extent of $262,400, and that the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) and the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White) are stockholders in that company.'"

Then the hon. gentleman said again:

"I find, Sir, that in 1885 this Parliament granted to the Ottawa, Waddington and Northern Transportation Railway $166,000, and that the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr White), the hon. members for Ottawa (Mr. Tassé and Mr. Mackintosh) are stockholders in the company."

In reply to this charge, Mr. White said:—

"I simply wish to say, in reference to those statements, that I am not now, and never have been, a stockholder in either of those companise. I regret I was temporarily absent when these statements were made, and was consequently unable to deny them then, but I take this, the first opportunity which presents itself, to make the denial."

The words "Northern Transportation" is a misprint for the New York road. The hon. gentleman denied that he was a stockholder in the Ontario Pacific Railway. I do not know what he meant by a stockholder in the railway. But I find the Ontario Pacific Railway was incorporated on 17th May, 1882, and among the incorporators is the name of Peter White, member for North Renfrew. The hon. gentleman also denied that he ever was a shareholder in the Ottawa, Waddington and New York Railway. According to the Statutes that company was incorporated on 17th May, 1882, and among the charter members of the company stands the name of Peter White, M.P., North Renfrew. I apprehend that is the same gentleman. I find also in a return submitted to Parliament the following letter from the President of the Pontiac Railway, which I will read to the House:—

"PONTIAC PACIFIC JUNCTION RAILWAY,
"MONTREAL, 18th March, 1885.

"A. P. BRADLEY, Esq.,
"Secretary Department of Railways and Canals, Ottawa.

"SIR,—In reply to your letter of the 14th instant I have to say that the name of the president of the Pontiac Junction Railway is Louis Ruggles Church, the vice-president is William B. McAllister. The other members of the directorate are: Richard White, Peter White, M.P.; W. J. Cook, George C. Boulton, Hector W. McLean, and Hon. J. A. Chapleau. The only other shareholders apart from the directors above named is F. A. Peterson, Q.E. The total amount of the stock held by the individuals is $300,000, $6,000 of which is held by George C. Boulton above named, and the balance is divided as nearly as possible equally among the other eight persons.

"Yours very truly,
(Signed) "L. RUGGLES CHURCH,
"President P. P. J. R. Co."

This letter from the president of the railway, addressed to the Railway Department here, shows that the stock of the company was $300,000, every dollar of which was held by those eight men, except $6,000 held by F. A. Patterson—the balance of stock is held in about equal shares by the other eight stockholders—thus giving each a sum of $36,750. The Secretary of State was a director, and his law partner was president of the company, and Richard White, manager of the Montreal Gazette, and brother of the Minister of Interior, was another director. I find that the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Dickinson) called in question the correctness of my statement also. On 10th May the hon. gentleman made use of the following language in explanation of the charge I made against the Government, not in, but out of Parliament—although I am quite prepared to make them in Parliament, as I have made most of them—but in a speech at Wingham, in which the following language was used:—

"Moss Kent Dickinson is the Tory member for Russell. He was first elected in 1884. I find the first thing a Tory representative does is to look out for 'Number One,' and just here I must do Moss Kent the justice of saying that with marvellous success and in a wonderfully short space of time he learned the first and prime duty of a Tory member of Parliament. On the 13th October, 1882, less than four months after his election, he applied for fifty square miles of valuable timber limits, and his son applied for two other limits. Now, gentlemen, you can hardly expect that Moss Kent can vote against the Government who have so generously provided for him and his out of the public domain."

I am prepared to apologise to the member for Russell, because either I or the reporter made a slight error with respect to the dates of the application for limits made by the member for Russell. The dates of the application, instead of the dates of the grants, are given. But the substantial charge is all the same true. The grants were made after the hon. gentleman was elected to Parliament. In reply to that charge the hon. gentleman said:

"It is to be noted that the gravamen of the charge appears to be that I received that limit from the Government after I was a member of this House."

So say I. The gravamen of the charge was that he received part of the public domain while a member of Parliament. That was not the first time he discussed the question. At Duncanville he drew the attention of his constituents to the matter, and in a report of the hon. gentleman's speech, which appeared in the Citizen, and which I suppose was correct, he made use of the following language:—

"Then the grant was made before he was even nominated as a candidate for parliamentary honors, and it was granted just as any other limit would be, to any other person who applied for it and exactly on the same terms."

Hon. members will observe that he admits that the gravamen of the charge was that he got limits after he was elected. In his speech at Duncanville he declared that the grant was made before he was even nominated. In his speech in the House, he declared that he got no limits after he became a member of Parliament. I take issue with him upon both those points; I say both are incorrect, and I am prepared to prove it. The hon. gentleman was nominated on the 1st June, 1882. In the return submitted to Parliament for 1884, the following entry occurs:—

That was five days after his nomination. In the same return the following entry is made:—

"File No. 2758. George L. Dickinson, Manotic, Ont., 16th May, 1882, fifty square miles."

In the same return the following entry appears:—

File No. 2052. M. K. Dickinson, Ottawa, Ont., 13th May, 1882. Forty-eight square miles.

In return for 1883, No. 36, the following entry appears:

File No. 4359. John K. Dickinson, 4th November, 1882. Section 25, township 24, range 2, west, 5th principal meridian. 640 acres of coal lands

I do not say that this latter is a son of the hon. gentleman, although I am informed he is. There is another application from W. B. Dickinson for fifty square miles. The member for Russell got those limits after he won the election. Applications were made before, but not one single grant was made until after the seat was won. The fact of the matter is, as I stated before and as I state now, that those timber limits were held up dangling before the eyes of candidates and supporters of the Government until after the contest of 1882 was fought and won, and then those people appear to have got their reward. Let us see when the limits were granted, because I observe again that the gravamen of the charge is the granting of those limits after election. The hon. gentleman declared they were given before he was nominated, and I say they were given after his election. The Order in Council made in favor of Mr. Dickinson himself is dated 24th July, 1882, one month after the election took place. Another Order in Council is dated 12th July, 1882, and there is a third Order in Council on 24th December, 1883, one year and a half after his election. As to whether there were other Orders in Council or not, I do not know, but every single Order in Council granting these limits to him and his sons, was passed after the elections were over. In a speech delivered by me at Wingham I mentioned the name of the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) as one of those who had received favors at the hands of the Government and who had been trafficking in the public domain. In the House on 4th May, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) repeated the charge in so far as the coal lands were concerned, and during the discussion the following passage at arms took place between those gentlemen with reference to the coal lands:—

"Mr. HAGGART. An application that I made? For what?

"Mr. CHARLTON. A coal lease.

"Mr. HAGGART. No, I did not.

"Mr. CHARLTON. I found your name in the returns.

"Mr. HAGGART. No, you did not.

"Mr. CHARLTON. Well, we will hunt it up."

The hon. member for North Norfolk did hunt it up, and on the 6th of May he read the following correspondence which took place between the Department and Mr. Haggart: —

"OTTAWA, 9th December, 1882.

"SIR,—I have the honor to apply for a mining location, being west half of Section 16, Township 3, Range 9, west of second meridian, and I will comply with all the requirements of the Statute and the regulations of the Department.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"JOHN HAGGART.

"The Hon. the Minister of Interior,
"Ottawa."

"OTTAWA, 15th December, 1882.

"SIR,—I have the honor, by the direction of the Minister of Interior, to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 9th inst., applying for a coal mine location, being the west half of Section 16, Township 3, Range 9, west of the second principal meridian, North-West Territory.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
"A. RUSSELL,
"For the Minister of Interior.

"JOHN HAGGART, Esq., M.P.,
"Perth, Ontario."

Now, on the 4th of May, while the question of the disposal of timber limits by the Government and the parcelling out of the resources of the country among their followers was being discussed, the hon. member for South Lanark made use of this language:

"He (that is the member for South Huron) made a charge against me, and I have been waiting a long time, for an opportunity to meet that hon. gentleman and see if he would dare repeat it in the House, or hear what his reason was for making the charge, that I might give it a flat contradiction. He stated in reference to me:

"John Haggart, the Tory member for South Lanark, has managed to capture out of the 'loot' 320 acres of coal lands, a timber limit on the Shell River, at $5 a square mile, an interest with Peter McLaren, of 'Rivers and Streams Bill' notoriety, and in other portions of the public property, and is believed to have had an interest in more than one of the contracts on the Canadian Pacific Railway. Those who know John Haggart best say that there are many and peculiar reasons why he must stand firm by the Government.'"

And then he went on to say:

"I simply state that is a cowardly, lying statement, framed out of the whole cloth, by a party who had not a particle of evidence to justify him in making the statement."

Now, these are bold, brave words for the hon member for South Lanark to make use of. But the hon. gentleman should recollect that strong language is not argument, and that emphatic denials are not always conclusive. The hon. member for South Lanark denied emphatically the charge made by myself and repeated by the hon. member for North Norfolk, but two days afterwards the correspondence was produced and the hon. gentleman had to admit its correctness. Now, I say that if the hon. member for South Lanark did nothing more than write that letter and make that application, I would not have mentioned his name. But I charge that he did something more and that he got something more, as I shall prove by the blue-books before I am done. On the 20th May, 1884, Mr. Peter McLaren, the friend of the hon. gentleman, obtained a limit on the Turtle Mountains, on the application, as I understand, of the hon. member for South Lanark. But that is not all. What he got for his friend is not what I charge but what he got for himself in the names of third parties. If you turn to the Sessional Papers of 1882, No. 30, page 9, you will find the following Order in Council passed by this Administration:—

"On a memorandum, dated 15th June, 1880, from the honorable the Minister of the Interior, reporting that certain application for timber limits were received severally on the 20th September, 31st December and 3rd January last, from Messrs. John Shields, John Haggart, Peter McLaren and Thomas Nichol, and recommending that fifty square miles on the Shell River, between Duck Mountain and the Assiniboine River, described in the said memorandum as parcel No. 1, be granted to the applicants, the license therefor to issue in the name of Peter McLaren, of the town of Perth, in the Province of Ontario.

"Also, that fifty miles on the Fairford or Little Saskatchewan River, being the outlet of Lake Manitoba, at some point between the said Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipeg, described in said memorandum as parcel No. 2, be granted to the applicants, the license to issue in the name of Thomas Nichol, of the said town of Perth.

"The several applicants to have one year within which to furnish the Department of the Interior with a survey by metes and bounds, plan, description and field notes made by a Dominion land surveyor, of the several tracts, which, it is understood, shall each be in one block intact of fifty square miles. The bonus to be paid on the approval of the survey and the issue of the lease, in the meantime the applicants to be permitted to erect their saw mill at a point within either of the said limits as they may decide, and to proceed with the manufacture of lumber from such limit, paying thereon the duties fixed by section 52 of the Dominion Lands Act, 1879, and also on the issue of the license and payment of the bonus, a sum of $2 per square mile ground rent for one year for the limit on which they may have erected the mill and entered upon the manufacture of lumber.

"The committee submit the above recommendation for Your Excellency's approval, such licenses being from year to year.

"Certified.
"J. O. COTÉ,
Clerk Privy Council."

That is not all, Sir. I find on the same page, of the same blue-book, another Order in Council, dated the 7th February, 1881:

"On a memorandum, dated 2nd February, 1881, from the hon. the Minister of the Interior, stating with reference to the grant of a timber limit of fifty square miles on the Fairford River in favor of Messrs. Shields, Haggart, McLaren and Nicol, by the Order in Council of 23rd June last, that the gentlemen above named now apply to be permitted to exchange the above limit for a limit of equal extent on the Shell River, a tributary of the Assiniboine, on which they have at present a limit of fifty square miles, which was granted by the Order in Council mentioned.

"The Minister observes that the gentlemen named propose to surrender the limit on the Fairford River to Mr. W. J. M. Pratt, who has mills at Totogon, but is unable to supply them elsewhere than from the above fifty square miles."

That the Minister goes on:—

"The Minister reports that Messrs. McLaren & Co. also ask to have granted to them in the vicinity of the said river (Shell River) an additional limit of 100 square miles, they to bind themselves to have a good grist mill in operation before the 1st day of January, 1882; that as the proposed exchange would give the applicants in all 100 square miles on the river mentioned, he, the Minister, feels that he can consistently recommend the additional limit asked for.

"The Minister suggests that as the limits in question will be held by annual license and not under a twenty-one years' lease, the bonus exacted be put in a form of an annual ground rent at $5 per square mile.

"The committee submit the foregoing recommendation for Your Excellency's approval.

"Certified.
"J. O. COTÉ,
Clerk Privy Council.

Now, Sir, in the face of the facts I have stated, I think I treated the hon. member for South Lanark with extreme moderation in my Wingham speech. That moderation does not seem to be appreciated, but that is not my fault. Now, if the hon. gentleman has a quarrel, that quarrel is not with me but with the blue-books submitted to Parliament and with the Orders in Council. I say in reference to this matter that it is not to be wondered at that members of Parliament and supporters of members of Parliament think that the public domain and the public resources of this country are their legitimate spoils when we find Ministers of the Crown and sons of Ministers of the Crown using their influence with the Administration in which their fathers hold important positions to capture large portions of the public domain. It is bad enough, in all conscience, when we find members of Parliament and friends of members of Parliament trading in the resources of this country, but when we find members of the Government, Ministers of the Crown, the trustees of the people, the men who are supposed to look carefully into and guard the interests of the people, when we find them using their influence to advantage their own selves, then I say, Sir, that the thing becomes a public outrage which should not be tolerated in this country for an hour. And I am satisfied that when the people of this country throughly understand it, and know how the public resources have been dealt with for the last four or five years they will not tolerate it much longer. I find, for instance, that the Minister of Militia was an applicant to the Government of which he is now a member for fifty square miles on the 17th November 1882. I find by the records of Parliament that the Minister of Militia is a stockholder in a railway bonused by this Government to the extent of $96,000 two years ago. I find by the Votes and Proceedings of Parliament of two or three days ago, that this same railway, in which the Minister of Militia has a direct personal interest, is proposed to be bonused by an additional sum of $186,295 of the people's money. I find that the Secretary of State is one of the directors of the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway, which was bonused in 1884 by this Administration, while the hon. gentleman was a member of that Administration, to the extent of $272,000 of the people's money. Not only is he a director of that railway, but I believe he is the head and the middle and the tail of it. I find that this same Secretary of State, when a shareholder to the extent of $12,000 in the Montreal and Western Railway, voted a bonus, or secured from the Government of which he is a member a bonus to that railway of $160,000; and I find by the Votes and Proceedings of Parliament of two or three days ago that this same railway is to be further bonused to the extent of $361,270. We all know that the Minister of Railways secured, from the Administration of which he was a member, an enormous bonus for the International Railway, which was owned and controlled by him while he was a member of Parliament and a member of that Administration. I find that the Minister of Inland Revenue is a lessee, from this Administration of which he is now a member, of 59,000 acres of grazing lands on Mountain Creek, in the North-West Territories, at 1 cent an acre, on which he never put one head of cattle, but which he got for purely speculative purposes, and holds for purely speculative purposes. I find that on the 16th of February, 1882, before he was a Minister, but while he was a member of Parliament, he applied for the north half of section 14, township 6, range 16, 320 acres of coal lands. I find that his son was a stockholder in the St. Catharines Milling Company, whose law costs this Government is paying to the extent of $11,000, a law suit prosecuted solely to deprive the Province of Ontario of its rights. I find that this company obtained a license from this Government to cut timber on 32,000 acres of land in the disputed territory. I find that H. A. Costigan, described as of Ingersoll, on the 10th of November, 1882, applied for fifty square miles of timber limits. I find that this same H. A. Costigan, described as of Winnipeg, on the 14th of October, 1883, applied for another fifty square miles of timber limits. I find that an H. Costigan, described as of Ottawa, on the 23rd of September, 1882, applied for another fifty square miles, and on the same day he applied for still another fifty square miles. I find that John Costigan, the Minister of Inland Revenue himself, on the 3rd of April, 1882, applied for fifty square miles.

Mr. McMULLEN. To himself.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). And to himself. Yet the hon. Minister of the Interior declared that John Costigan had ever applied for fifty square miles. If he turns to his own report of 1884, No. 50, page 11, he will find that he and his partner, Mr. Short, obtained no less than six permits to cut timber in the disputed territory.

Mr. LISTER. In the Province of Ontario.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). In the Province of Ontario, as my hon. friend says. When you find Ministers of the Crown acting in this way, it is high time that the people of this country should know it. I find that the Minister of the Interior, before he became Minister of the Interior, and while connected with a newspaper, obtained $18,000 or $20,000 of Government printing, which was said to have been charged at four to fourteen times its worth; and I find that a brother of this Minister is a director of the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway, which has been bonused by this Government to the extent of $273,000. I find that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been fluttering, only just fluttering, on the border line between a patriot and a plunderer. The hon. gentleman cast longing eyes on the timber limits for himself and for a friend—of course, only for a friend. But the hon. gentleman and his colleagues, the hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. Minister of Justice are too fresh; they are new hands at the bellows; they have not yet from their more experienced colleagues, learned the ways that are curious and the tricks that are vain. Let them not be discouraged; let them not be disheartened. Under the able and experienced leadership of their older colleagues they will live and learn; and I am very much mistaken, from the little I have seen of them during the present Session of Parliament, if, when the opportunity presents itself, each of them will not prove equal to any emergency that may arise Let me pursue the enquiry a little further. I do not see my good-natured friend from London here, and therefore I shall say nothing about him. Now, Sir, I find that the son of the First Minister of this Dominion, and the son of Sir Charles Tupper have for years been using their all-powerful influence with this Administration, in order to secure large slices of the public domain and the public resources of this country. For years they have been trading on and speculating in that influence and in the resources of the Dominion secured thereby. I say the startling disclosures that have been so far made in the equity side of the Court of Queen's Bench in the Province of Manitoba are enough to arouse the indignation of any people in any country. In the case before that court, Hugh J. Macdonald and J. Stewart Tupper were the plaintiffs, and their former law partners were the defendants. The history of that litigation and the disclosures so far made—and they are not all made yet - are of the most scandalous kind. From the evidence, so far as it has been submitted—and it has only been partially submitted—these two young men appear to have secured a timber limit on the Swan River in the name of one John McMahon. Several partners were interested in that limit, and these two young men had a ninth blind share in it. But that was not sufficient to compensate these two young men for the valuable services they had rendered in securing the limit, and so the Order in Council granting it was cancelled. A new deal was effected; a new Order in Council was issued, granting the timber limit to T. P. Walsh, for T. P. Walsh, John McMahon, the Hon. Edgar Dewdney, and Macdonald and Tupper, and in that timber limit Macdonald and Tupper held a three-fifths interest; and the Hon. Edgar Dewdney, pet and friend of this Administratian, offered to sell it for $50,000. I have always been amazed and astounded, considering the charges that have been made against Edgar Dewdney by the press supporting hon. gentlemen opposite in and out of Parliament, who have denounced this man as utterly unfit for the position he occupies—I say I have been surprised that a man so described by the Government's own friends, should have been retained in his place until a rebellion broke out, to some extent through his instrumentality. The mystery is no longer a mystery, this litigation has unravelled it. Edgar Dewney helped Macdonald and Tupper to capture the public domain. Edgar Dewney divided with Macdonald and Tupper the resources of the country so captured. Macdonald and Tupper also applied for, and, I believe, secured in the name of John Apted a timber limit on the Rolling River, in which they held a fourth blind share, and for which a firm of manufacturers offered $25,000, although it cost these young men I suppose but $250, if they paid for it. These same young men, in the name of Alexander Moffatt, secured the passage of an Order in Council on the 20th August, 1883, granting them a timber limit of fifty square miles in the disputed territory, in which they held one-fifth blind share. They also obtained a limit on Swan River in the name of some one to me unknown, in which they had one-fifth blind share. These young men appear further to have applied for and, I believe, secured section 32, township 21, range 20, and section 36, township 21, range 21, west of the fourth principal meridian, 1,280 acres of coal lands at the Blackfoot Crossing, where, it is alleged, the best coal lands in the country are, and these worthy representatives of worthy sires had one-half blind share in that little deal. Bedson, the warden of the provincial penitentiary, was also a partner in this little transaction, and the name of Frederick White is also mentioned in connection with some of these scaly transactions. I would like to know from the Minister of the Interior, or the Superintendent of Indian Affairs, if this Mr. Frederick White is the comptroller of the mounted police. His name is mentioned in connection with these young men as a co-sharer in the public plunder. Section 6, township 22, range 20, west fourth principal meridian, south ½ of section 18 in same township, all coal lands at Blackfoot Crossing, appear to have been offered to those young men at $10 an acre, and in that little deal they had one-third blind share. These young and enterprising speculators, by wholesale in the public resources of the Dominion, appear also to have applied for if not secured sections 22 and 28, township 12, range 24, west 2nd principal meridian, valuable coal lands, at $10 an acre, in which they had one-half interest. Those worthy sons of worthy sires do not appear to have limited their operations to coal and timber lands. They were willing to turn a penny in any way out of the public resources of the country, over which their fathers then had full control, and so they applied for the Salt Springs flowing into Lake Winnipegoosis, and Mr. Hall of the Department of the Interior wrote them that those Salt Springs could be had at $5 an acre. These young men appear to have had a blind share in that little deal also. When the late Minister of Railways fixed the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Port Moody, the son of the Premier and the son of the Minister of Railways applied to this Government over which their fathers wielded unbounded sway for 400 acres of the foreshore at Port Moody. Whether they got it or not I do not know, but it is very likely they did not complete the purchase because the Canadian Pacific Railway changed the terminus of the road, and these 400 acres of foreshore would have been only a burden on their hands. They appear also to have applied for 160 acres of coal lands near the Cascade Mine in the Rocky Mountains, and I believe they must have secured it because it is said they sold their interest to McLeod Stewart of this city for $1,000. They captured one-half of this "boodle." Macdonald and Tupper were not content with dealing in coal limits, timber berths, salt springs and foreshore lands. Their range appears to have been as unlimited as their influence with the Administration, which their fathers controlled, was unbounded, and so they dabbled in half-breed claims; they purchased from Joseph Ebbyn and Isabel Gladee three half-breed claims of 240 acres each, for $60 each. But that is not all. Nothing came amiss to these enterprising and influential young gentlemen. Hugh J. Macdonald, not of course because he was Hugh J. Macdonald, secured the solicitorship to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's land department at a salary of $5,000 a year, payable at Winnipeg. J. Stewart Tupper, his partner in law, was appointed—not of course because he was J. Stewart Tupper—joint solicitor with Hugh J. Macdonald to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's land department, at $5,000 a year payable at Montreal. One was appointed while the present First Minister was First Minister, and the other was appointed while Sir Charles Tupper was Minister of Railways. But that is not all. The oldest and perhaps the best known legal firm in Manitoba, had been for many years solicitor to the Hudson's Bay Company, they were dismissed, and these two young men were appointed in their stead, to the intense disgust of every lawyer in Winnipeg. They were appointed of course, not because one was a son of the First Minister and the other the son of Sir Charles Tupper. Sir Charles Tupper's presence at the headquarters of the Hudson's Bay Company in England of course, had nothing to do with the capture of this fat piece of professional picking. All these transactions are of so shady a character that attempts are being made to prevent the facts reaching the people. Copies of the papers disclosing these facts were applied for to the court at Winnipeg, but while the papers were being copied, Macdonald and Tupper made an application to the court and obtained an order from the court to stop the copying. The startling facts I have mentioned are all capable of proof, and I now challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to appoint a commission to investigate these matters, a commission in which the public will have confidence; let them name any one of the Judges of the Superior Court of Ontario or any one of the Supreme Court here to sit on that commission, and I venture to say that the statements I have made will be established before that commission. In fact it looks as if Ministers of the Crown and their friends considered the public resources of the country as a "loot" to which they were fairly entitled. This position is well illustrated by a case tried a few days ago at Regina, in which a Mrs. Doig was plaintiff and Sheriff Chapleau defendant. This Mr. Chapleau is the same man who figured here some years ago in connection with some scandals in the public Departments. It was charged against him that while he was a servant of the Crown he had hired himself to a firm of American contractors at so much a month to reveal the secrets of the Department. It was charged against him that he obtained $4,000 from another firm of contractors in connection with a contract on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and for those offences he was dismissed the service here, and on his dismissal the Minister of Railways said the Government could not afford to retain him in the service with those charges against him. His dismissal was of a peculiar kind. He was dismissed from an inferior and promoted to a superior office, for gross misconduct.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman is not correct.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). He was promoted. He was what we may call "kicked up stairs."

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman is not correct.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. That is not correct.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). He was removed and promoted—is that correct? He was kicked up stairs. He was made sheriff and inspector of public works in the North-West Territories, and he officiated, of course, at the late execution at Regina. During the progress of this trial, it was found that it was very troublesome and expensive that the Crown witnesses should get their meals in Regina, it being two miles from the court room, and it was arranged by the sheriff that meals should be supplied at the court house, by a Mrs. Doig at 50 cents a meal, Mrs. Doig says, though the sheriff says at 40 cents a meal. Under this arrangement, 397 meals were supplied. The account was made out by Mrs. Doig to the sheriff at 50 cents a meal, and it was sent by the sheriff to the Government at Ottawa, and was paid, as I understand it, by the Government at 50 cents a meal. The sheriff and his deputy then undertook to pay the woman at 40 cents a meal. The woman objected, she insisted on 50 cents. They would not pay it, and the woman brought an action against the sheriff for the account, it was tried before the stipendiary magistrate. Mr. Nicholas Flood Davin was counsel for the plaintiff. The following evidence was elicited. Mr. Chapleau, the sheriff, was sworn, and examined by Mr. Davin. He says:

"His books showed 397 meals served, and he told Mr. Gibson to make out the bill for 397 meals against the Department of Justice and at the rate of 50 cents a meal in order to recompense him for his trouble in sending messages, &c."

I am quoting now from the report of the trial in the Regina Leader:

"Cross-examined by Mr. Davin:

"Such things have been done before. The Government are not going to discuss it. He told Mr. Gibson to pay Mrs. Doig, and that the Department would not pay more than 40 cents per meal. The difference was credited to Mr. Gibson.

"Did it ever get into Mr. Gibson's hands? It was credited to him.

"Did Mr. Gibson ever receive a cent of it? It was credited to him.

"Mr. Davin said he had proved that certain meals ordered had been supplied, that the original arrangement with Mr. Gibson was 50 cents a meal, that subsequently 40 cents was the amount offered by him, that Mrs. Doig had sworn to a conversation with Mr. Chapleau, who, as the duration of the trial was shorter than expected, told her to charge 50 cents. She considered Mr. Chapleau as sheriff, and it was with his office she had to deal. She was therefore justified in putting in her bill at the rate of 50 cents. The extra expenses incurred establish her right to do so. The number of meals is sworn to, and the court will notice that $198 50 is a proper charge, and that $158.80 only was paid. The amount paid by the Department for the meals ought, at the very least, to be paid to Mrs. Doig."

Recollect that the Department paid the sheriff $198.50, and he wanted to pay this poor woman with $158.80.

"Mr. Chapleau in reply said it was customary for the deputy sheriff to charge more than he paid; for instance on the railway, the deputy sheriff paid so much but he charges more, and so in this case.

"Judge.—The law says positively just such fees as the Order in Council directs.

"Mr. Chapleau.—But I have nothing to do with criminal matters.

"Judge.—I say you have. You are the first criminal officer in the country.

"Mr. Chapleau.—I claim that the bargain was made with Mr. Gibson."

Then the judge gives judgment as follows:—

"I suppose I ought to say what I know about the matter. The matter arose out of the following state of things. It was found that the time wasted in taking recess was attended with a good deal of delay, and gentlemen who represented the Government authorised the sheriff to do what was necessary in order to facilitate and to advance the trials. The result was that meals were supplied here to jurors, and witnesses and others. The bill for $198.50 was brought me to certify whether it was a proper sum to pay to the person who furnished these meals To my mind the number of meals charged for is the proper number. I may at once say this, and unless there is some direct Order in Council governing such a case as this, the deputy sheriff is most undoubtedly not entitled to take commission on such transactions. My judgment is for the plaintiff for the difference between the cheque given here and the amount charged the Department."

Now, here you have in this trial an illustration of what I have been saying, you have the bold and brazen statement that the charge of 50 cents a meal was made by the woman and paid by the Government, and that the sheriff tried to get rid of the woman by paying her 40 cents; you have the bold and brazen statement that it is customary to charge the Government more than the officials pay; and you have the further bold and brazen statement made that not only is it customary to do it, but that the Government will not even enquire into or discuss it. Thus the Government are parties to this fraudulent custom. Here was a clear attempt to cheat this poor woman out of $40 of her Bill. The sheriff had the money in his pocket, the Government paid it, and yet the sheriff tried to get his deputy to pay off this woman with $40 less than her bill, the money being in his pocket all the time. I should like to know is this really the case? Is it customary for officials to charge, and for the Government to pay, more than the officials pay out of their own pockets? Is it customary for the Government, as Mr. Chapleau says, never to enquire into or discuss these questions at all? Is it a fact that the Government will not enquire into these things, that they will not discuss these things? All I can say is that, if such is the case, it is high time the people of this country understood thoroughly the kind of Government they have and the kind of officials they employ, not only in the North-West Territories, but all over Canada.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I desire to occupy the attention of the House for a very short time in bringing under the notice of the members of this House a matter of vital importance, a matter affecting the independence of Parliament and the honest representation of the people in this House. Every member of this House is aware that certain revelations have been made during this Session of Parliament, not only on the floor of this House, but in the Public Accounts Committee, with reference to trafficking in railway charters by members of this House. We have all heard what has been said with regard to the conduct of the member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty), in endeavoring to secure for himself and other members of this House, co-directors with him in the management of the North-West Central Railway, a sum amounting to $670,000. We have all heard these revelations, and I fancy that the country, as well as the members of this House, has been startled and shocked to think that such practices are in vogue in this House, which is supposed to represent the free and independent electors of the Dominion of Canada. This is not the only instance which has been pointed out during this Session of Parliament, which indicates that members of this House who support the Government are indulging, from time to time, in practices which do not reflect credit upon them or upon the Administration which they support—practices which are corrupt in every respect and which will eventually lead to the thorough demoralisation not only of this Legislature but of the people throughout the length and breadth of this Dominion. I would just call attention, when speaking of railway grants, to the fact that the Government at this Session propose to vote a sum amounting to nearly $5,000,000 in bonusing local railways in certain parts of the Dominion of Canada. Now, I think, and a great many of the members of this House, and I believe a vast majority of the people of this Dominion think, if they had an opportunity of expressing their opinion, that this system of bonusing local railways by the Dominion Government is one of the most corrupt systems that has ever been introduced in this or any other Parliament. It has a tendency to demoralise not only the people's representatives in this House but the constituencies that are represented, and the Provinces of which they form part, and, if this Government determines to demoralise not only the members who represent the people in this House but the constituencies and the Provinces that are represented by those members, by the system of log-rolling, which they have established in granting bonuses to local railways all over the Dominion, I think it is time some action should be taken by the people to put a stop to this system of government. I say that the practice is vicious, and calculated to demoralise the House and the people at large. It is the duty of every honest man in this House to endeavor to put a stop to these practices, and to purge this Parliament of the presence of men who bring discredit upon the House and upon our responsible form of Government. Now, Mr. Speaker, it has long been a fond idea of the people of Canada that we enjoy the blessings of responsible government. We know that many years ago we had to strive against those who were trying to oppress the people in certain portions of this country, under the old family compact. We all know the struggle that the people of Ontario had to go through to secure for themselves the blessings of responsible government. The people of this Dominion have reason to feel proud of the form of government we possess, but at the same time, when they review the acts of this Government which have been placed upon our Statute-books during the last seven years, and which are found recorded in the official reports of this House, they have reason to fear that their rights have been trampled upon in many ways, and that they do not now, in reality, enjoy that responsible government which was guaranteed to them. Sir, the revelations which have been made here to-night by the hon. member who preceded me, and which have been proven by the documentary evidence he submitted, go to show that for corrupt practices some of the members of the Government and their supporters in this House stand out more prominently than the representatives of the people of any other country I ever read of, possessing responsible government. But, Mr. Speaker, I will confine myself to making a specific charge against a member of this House. I regret to say that I feel it to be my duty, as a member of this House, to try to expose some of the practices which have been indulged in by members of this House, which are calculated to subvert the true principles of responsible government, to demoralise our whole system, and render nugatory the will of the people in sending their representatives here. The charge I am about to make is one of a very serious character. I regret that it is my duty to make it, but still, I consider that it is the duty of the people's representatives in this House to expose all corruption, and in this case, although the duty is a very disagreeable one, I shall not flinch from it. I make the charge with the full conviction that I can prove the statements I am about to make. The charge I make is this: That the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron), in the year 1884, used his influence to procure from the Government and Parliament a subsidy for the Erie and Huron Railway Company, of $3,200 a mile, for thirty miles, amounting to $96,000; and that while so engaged he wrote, in effect, to an officer of the company stipulating that a commission or bonus of 10 per cent. on the amount of such subsidy should be paid to him for himself and two other persons, whose co-operation he had secured, one-half of such commission to be paid on the subsidy being voted, and the other half on the money being paid over. This, Mr. Speaker, is the charge that I prefer against the hon. member for North Victoria. I may say that I did not wish to take any undue advantage of that gentlemen, and after being satisfied of the truth of the charge, and being satisfied that I would be able to establish the truth of the charge if afforded an opportunity, I wrote to the hon. member for North Victoria, yesterday, stating that I intended to make this charge in the House to-day. I now do so, and I believe that if I am afforded an opportunity I can establish the truth of the charge.

Mr. CAMERON (North Victoria). I understood from the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, that his charge would take a specific form, and that it would be in that shape in which it could be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that he meant to make a charge that I had in some way violated the Independence of Parliament Act and that it could be referrred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The shape in which he has just expressed it is not that in which I expected it would have been made, from the communication he sent to me. I asked him if he was prepared, on his responsibility as a member of this House, to make a statement which necessarily would be referred to that committee. He has not done so. He has simply adopted the policy of slander.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant).

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CAMERON (North Victoria). I am in order. I repeat my statement, that he has adopted the policy of slander.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. Is that language parliamentary?

Mr. SPEAKER. Stronger language than that, I am sorry to say, has been used in the course of debate here.

Mr. CASEY. The question is, is it parliamentary?

Mr. SPEAKER. It is not parliamentary to use any personal expression, or any language that is offensive to any hon. member of the House.

Mr. CASEY. Then the language must be taken back and apologised for. As you have ruled that language that is offensive to any member is unparliamentary, I require that the hon. member should apologise for and retract the language before he proceeds. I ask for your ruling on that point.

Mr. SPEAKER. Language that is offensive is contrary to the rules of Parliament. I am sure the hon. gentleman will not use any language that is offensive to any hon. member, no matter under what provocation he may labor.

Mr. CASEY. The rules of Parliament require a retraction.

Mr. SPEAKER. Give the hon. member an opportunity.

Mr. CASEY. I ask you to rule as to the necessity of an apology and a retraction of the language.

Mr. SPEAKER. If any language that is not parliamentary has been used the hon. member should withdraw it. We have never gone the length of asking hon. members to apologise; they simply withdraw the expression.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). If I have used unparliamentary language, I withdraw it. I am not aware that I had done so.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Speaker has ruled you have done so.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). My complaint against the hon. member who has made this statement in reference to me was that instead of bringing the charge forward on his responsibility as a member of this House, in such a shape that the matter could have been referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which could have investigated it, he has thought fit to make it in an unauthentic shape. He has made a statement mentioning me personally, and he has not done it on his responsibility as a member of this House. There is a well known rule and practice in this House by which any hon. member who seeks to charge any other hon. member with any act done in violation of the rules of Parliament, or that he has in any way placed himself in a position that the Committee on Privileges and Elections could investigate the matter and decide whether he had acted in such a manner that his seat in this House was forfeited—it required that a member of this House should on his own responsibility as such member stand up and make the charge. The hon. gentleman has not thought fit to do so. In the course of a debate he raised certain questions and made a certain statement in regard to me. In reply to that statement I say this—and I make that statement on my responsibility as a member of this House—I never made any agreement in any way or shape whereby I became interested in any way whatever in any bonus or subsidy that was voted by this House to the Erie and Huron Railway or any other railway. The hon. gentleman who last spoke, the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) has on other occasions referred to me, and I take this opportunity of saying, that I never applied for one acre or one inch of Government land from the Government in my own interest. I never had any interest in any application ever made or any grant ever made for any timber lands, colonisation lands, grazing lands, coal lands, or any other land from the Government. I never was interested in one single inch of any land applied for to the Government. I never applied for any in which I had the slightest personal interest, and I never received any such land. I have never asked the Government, of which I have been a faithful supporter ever since the present Government was in power, for any favor for myself or in which I had any personal interest; and I defy any hon. gentleman to prove I have ever done so. In regard to the specific statements which the hon. member for Brant has just made, I beg to make this statement: I was requested by a client, who has been a client of mine as is well known for a great many years, when he was about leaving this country and going to the southern States and the West Indies, to act as his solicitor in making an application for aid to the Erie and Huron Railway. I was asked by him to procure the co-operation of other gentlemen, not members of this House, who could work the matter up, find and furnish the necessary statistics and information and details in order that the Government could see that it was a proper grant to be made. When the request was made to me this gentleman stated that he was prepared to pay a commission, not only on any Government bonus or subsidy that might be given but also on any municipal bonus, and he mentioned the name of one gentleman in particular who would be of assistance to him in obtaining municipal bonuses more particularly; and he said, I wish you to procure the co-operation of gentlemen who will aid in this matter; I wish you to act as my solicitor in it, as I cannot be here to attend to the matter myself, and I am willing to pay those parties whom you think necessary to employ in my absence a commission or percentage on the amount of any bonus they may obtain. On that request on his part I procured the co-operation of several parties, whose names I need not mention now; but I will say that none of them are members of this House. Subsequently a bonus was granted by the Government, and after that bonus was granted a question arose as to the amount of commission and whether it was payable or not. A certain letter which I had written to that gentleman, and which I believe was marked private and confidential——

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I say it was marked private and confidential, and which I presume is the letter to which the hon. member for Brant has referred—and I have no objection to that letter being produced and shown, and read to this House—was never received by that gentleman for whom it was intended, owing to his moving about from one place to another. That letter was returned to me months afterwards from the dead letter office at Washington, it never having reached his hands. No agreement was ever made by me, no arrangement was ever made by me; and if any arrangement has been made, that arrangement did not in any way provide for a percentage, commission or interest on my part in any bonus or subsidy to be granted by Parliament to that road; it was an arrangement made by me as this gentleman's solicitor, intending to provide for the commission to be paid to the other parties, not to myself. I had no interest in it; and I say, and it is borne out by the fact, that he never received that letter, that no agreement or arrangement of any kind was ever made; and in answer to the statement, and in the presence of this House, on my responsibility as a member of it, I say that I never had any agreement or arrangement of any kind whatever for receiving any commission, any percentage or any interest in any subsidy to be granted or which was granted afterwards by this House to that railway; that I acted in the matter simply as the solicitor of that gentleman who was largely interested, if not entirely interested, in the road; that in my correspondence with him I wrote to him confidentially as his solicitor, stating the arrangement I had made with other parties whose aid and assistance he wished me to procure in his absence when he could not be personally present, and that gentleman not having received that letter no arrangement or agreement could have been made. I state, moreover, that I never have received, never expected to receive, and I have no right to receive, one single cent of commission or percentage of any shape or kind on that bonus or any other bonuses ever granted by the Government to any railway company. Not only that, but I can say that I have never had any interest in any grants from the Government in any way, shape or form in land or in any other way, and so far as I have been able to maintain the independence of my personal interests in my negotiations with the Government, I have done so. I have sent in applications on behalf of my constituents for timber limits, for coal limits and perhaps for other things. In that matter I felt I was doing my duty to my constituents and nothing more. I have not asked any personal favors; I have never had any personal interest in any applications I have made to the Government, and if the hon. gentleman will formulate his charge in such a way that it can go before the Committee on Privileges and Elections; if he thinks he has discovered a mare's nest by which he can bring forward a personal charge against me—in pursuance of a policy which I will not characterise for fear of transgressing the bounds of parliamentary decorum—I defy him to do so; I defy any hon. gentleman on that side to do so, or to prove that I have asked any favor from the Government for myself, directly or indirectly; that I have ever sought to gain any personal advantage from the fact that I support the Government or sought any favor from them other than my duty to my constituents required.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). With the permission of the House, I will comply with the request made by the hon. member for North Victoria. He desires that this matter should be investigated. I desire that it should be investigated, or I would not have brought it to the attention of the House. I believe that the charge that I make can be substantiated. He says it cannot: and in order to give me an opportunity of substantiating my charge, and in order to give him an opportunity of showing, as he says he can show, that the charge is not correct, with the permission of the House I will now move for the appointment of a committee to investigate this matter. I may say that this matter would have been undertaken sooner in the Session had it not been for the fact that the principal witness I desire to call was not in the country and could not be had. I may state for the information of the hon. gentleman that the letter he talks about is not the letter I speak about at all. I wish to say that if I move this resolution I do not want it to be understood that it is an amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply—if I may be permitted to move it on going into Supply—for I do not wish to move it as a motion of non-confidence.

Mr. SPEAKER. Then it ought not to be moved now, but after the House comes out of committee.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I suppose it may by permission of the House.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). As this is a personal matter I crave the permission of the House to ask that the hon. gentleman instead of moving this matter by way of amendment to go into Committee of Supply, should formulate his charge in a tangible shape, as the rules of Parliament require, and that then I should have the opportunity of meeting it; and if the House thinks fit, have it referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It is not right that a member of this House, on a motion to go into Committee of Supply, should rise up and make an informal charge against another member of the House. If the hon. gentleman wants to take the responsibility of moving a motion which affects the seat of another hon. member—because if his motion has any foundation it would affect my seat—he should take the responsibility of doing it in a way in which, if he fails to prove his charge, he should have the responsibility of having it reported that he has not proved it, and that the charge was malicious and unfounded. I claim that it is not proper to bring it forward in this way; I told him so this afternoon, and that the proper way was for him to rise in his place, before the Orders of the Day were called, and to make a specific charge, if he had one to make, and then give the House an opportunity of referring it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, if they thought fit to do so after hearing my answer to the charge.

Mr. MILLS. I do not understand the rule of Parliament to be what the hon. gentleman has stated it to be. It is open to any hon gentleman, who believes that another member has violated the Independence of Parliament Act, to state upon what ground he thinks that violation has taken place. He can state anything he may know affecting the position or the seat of an hon. member. He may say, as the hon. gentleman has said, that if a committee is appointed he will be able to establish his charge. But he is not bound to move for a committee. It is as open for the hon. gentleman, against whom the charge is made, to ask that this charge should be referred; and it is the bounden duty of the Administration who lead the House, to see—if there is any charge affecting the seat of a member—that action is taken. It is not any necessary part of the duty of the hon. gentleman, who has made the statement, to make such a motion as the hon. gentleman calls for. He is just as free to ask that this matter shall be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or to a special committee, as the hon. gentleman is who has made the charge.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I again crave the permission of the House to answer what has been said by the hon. member for Bothwell, either this matter is a charge affecting my right to sit in this House or it is a matter of personal scandal—a personal charge against myself. If it be simply a personal charge against myself for having done something which I ought not, as a member of Parliament, to have done, then I say it is a matter which ought not to have been brought before the House. If it is a matter affecting my seat, it should be brought before the House on the responsibility of the member making that charge. As the hon. gentleman has brought it up, it is simply in the shape of a motion of non-confidence in the Government. The Government move that the House go into Committee of Supply, and he moves in amendment that they do not, but that a committee be appointed to investigate whether I wrote a certain letter or whether I did not; whether that letter was an improper or a proper letter for me to write. Now, is that a matter which can properly be referred to a committee or not? Is every letter which any hon. gentleman has written a subject which can be referred to a committee to enquire into? Is there any foundation for the charge, or for a committee, unless it be a matter affecting a seat of a member? If it is a matter affecting my seat, let him take the proper constitutional way of bringing it up. If it is not, what right has he to enquire into what letters I have written or not. I may say that the letter he refers to was a letter marked private and confidential, and that any man who read that letter, with that superscription upon it, disgraced himself as a man of honor; because I say that that letter is marked private and confidential and was addressed to a particular person; and if that person goes and shows that letter to another person, be he the leader of the Opposition or a member of the Opposition, the man who reads that letter is a dishonorable man.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria).

An hon. MEMBER. Order.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). What does the hon. member for Brant propose to do. He proposes to ask for the appointment of a committee to enquire whether I wrote a certain letter which proposed or suggested—what? If it suggested or proposed anything or made any arrangement or agreement on my part which in any way violated the Independence of Parliament Act, then his proper course is to move that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. If he did not do that, he has no right to bring it up here; and I repeat, if I dare to do so, that it is just this policy of slander ——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Well, I withdraw the expression slander, and say it is the policy of attacking members on this side of the House because members on the other side have been pretty sorely hit in matters of this kind.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think this is not a matter of privilege or of urgency. A debate may be interrupted by a matter of privilege, but it must be a matter arising from something occurring in the middle of the debate; it must be a matter of urgency and of recent occurrence. This does not seem to be a case of that kind, for which it is proper that a debate should be interrupted. The time for bringing it up is before the Orders of the Day are called, when there is nothing before the House. May says:

"The latter part of this statement is limited to breaches of privilege committed during a discussion, or so immediately before it, that no earlier opportunity of making a complaint had arisen; as, for example, an insult or assault upon a member or any sudden act of disorder. In such cases, debates have been interrupted by complaints of breaches of privilege."

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Then I understand that I shall be in order in moving this motion to-morrow before the Orders of the Day are called.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think so. I think it is a question of privilege affecting an hon. member, and a motion affecting the conduct of any member will then be in order.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Then I will reserve moving the motion until to-morrow.

Mr. McCALLUM. I wish to make a few remarks on the course of hon. gentlemen opposite and their policy of throwing mud in the hope that some of it will stick. The hon. member for West Huron appears to regard it as a terrible crime in a member of Parliament to make application for a timber limit for his constituents. Is it more serious than to buy lands from the Government as the hon. member has done? I do not say there is anything wrong in that; but is it a more heinous crime for a man to get a timber limit from the Government or to make application for others. I stand here and say that I made application for others. In one case in which I sent in an application for some persons in my county they were told that they must apply by tender. They did apply, and paid the Government a bonus, and they were told that they would have to survey the timber limit. They never surveyed it, and the Government got the bonus money. There are many cases of the same kind. Now, I would not give 25 cents to-day for any timber limit west of Winnipeg and be obliged to carry out the regulations imposed by the Government. Does any man say that a member of this House is to be condemned for writing to the Government on behalf of his constituents if he wants anything for them The hon. gentleman dare not say that members doing that are violating the Independence of Parliament Act, because, under the law, they have the same privilege as others. He tells us that the hon. member for Russell has got a timber limit from the Government. Does any man in this House says that that makes any difference with the member for Russell in supporting the Government? Does any man in this House say that anything I get from the Government would induce me to give them any more support than I give them now? Hon. members opposite must have short memories. When they get up here and accuse members of this side of the House of wrong-doing, they ought to think of their attitude when they were on this side—when they were getting contracts themselves, and giving them to the Speaker in the Chair. What is my great sin? My great sin is that the Government of this country paid me for a vessel I lost in the Welland Canal; and there were eighteen representative Grits in the Dominion of Canada who voted against that payment; the rest did not vote against it; they know it was correct. Hon. gentlemen said that Mr. Lash, the Deputy Minister of Justice, was opposed to paying the money; but the question was referred to one of the Dominion arbitrators, and when the first report came in, Mr. Lash said that the verdict was not according to the evidence, and that I should have a new trial. It was referred back to the board and no more evidence was taken, because I was satisfied to have the same evidence. Well, the Government paid me, why? Because they would have had to pay me through the courts if they had not paid me in that way. They kept me eight years out of my money and paid me no interest. I do not see that the vote of the hon. member for West Huron was recorded against me. Did he run too? But he goes through the country and slanders me by saying that the Government paid me money that induced me to support them. Why, Sir, I support the Government because I believe it is my duty to support an honest and progressive government. The hon. gentleman speaks of Macdonald and Tupper. He says they got appointed solicitors of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. He says they were appointed solicitors of the Canadian Pacific Railway because they are the sons of their fathers. Well, it is convenient to have fathers, and if they got it through their fathers, I do not see that there is any harm in that. I had not a rich father to help me on in the world, but, at the same time, if I had one, I would have been very glad to have had his help, and if I could benefit by his good name nothing could be said against me on that ground. There is a great deal said here about the member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty). Hon. gentlemen opposite fancy he has a lot of money to build the railway. What has he got? He has got $380,000 of stock and 10 per cent. paid thereon, and he has given two years of valuable time and some money to the work. That is his great crime. Of course he had a disagreement with another hon. member of this House, and because supporters of the Government were willing to give the hon. member for West Toronto a month's extension of time to secure a company to build the railway, hon. gentlemen opposite are very indignant. I say that the people in that part of the country are suffering from want of railway communication, but in order to damage a political opponent hon. gentlemen opposite would retard the obtaining of this railway communication by cutting off the hon. member's head. I did not get up at this late day of the Session to make any lengthy remarks, but I thought it was due to the people I represent that I should hurl back in the teeth of hon. gentlemen any charge, if any one of them dare say that I got any favors from the Government in an undue manner. If I ever got any, and I assume I would get as much as any other member, and I would not expect to get but what is right and reasonable; and I never did get but what was right and reasonable. If hon. gentlemen opposite think that mud throwing is going to benefit them, they are very much mistaken. I would not do justice to the people I represent if I did not get up and repudiate the slanders uttered by hon. gentlemen opposite. With reference to the speech delivered at Wingham, I would say that when an hon. member slanders his brother members in that way, he ought to be ashamed to hold up his head. I would go out of the House before I would slander my brother members as he has done, and the hon. member owes an apology to every member he has insulted.

Mr. TAYLOR. On the 4th of May, when I attempted to review the slanders made by Mr. M. C. Cameron, of South Huron, at a place called Wingham, I made this statement:

"If the party who made this statement is the party who represents West Huron, I must express my regret that a gentleman aspiring to the position of a statesman should stoop so low as to go round the country slandering those who honestly differ from him on political questions."

I have heard to-night out of the mouth of the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) that he is the gentleman who made the speech at Wingham. This is the first time I have been made aware of that fact, because the hon. gentleman, when he last made a speech in the House on the subject of slander, left immediately afterwards and did not return. The hon. gentleman in his speech said, referring to myself:

"He accordingly applied to this Government, who distribute with no sparing hand the public estate among their followers, for both coal lands and timber limits."

To-night he read a letter I wrote to the Department on behalf of Mr. Henry Ruttle, who had gone to Prince Albert and intended erecting a flour and saw mill in that section, and wished to secure a timber limit in the section in which the Cascade Hills are situated. I wrote the Department at his request transmitting his application, and I charge the hon. member for Huron with having manufactured his statement out of the whole cloth when he says I applied for a coal limit. I never did so. He cannot prove that I did, and he had not the manliness to-night to take back the statement he made or reiterate that it was true. I wrote the letter to the Department, and I say there was no harm in that. If the hon. gentleman has the manliness of a gentleman he will get up and say that, in so far as regards the statement made about my applying for coal limits, it was not correct. In the speech at Wingham he went further and said:

"This is not all. Last Session Parliament voted the sum of $20,000 to dam the Rideau Canal, in order to supply water to the mills and factories in Gananoque, in which Mr. Taylor and his constituents are deeply interested."

I can only say that I have no interest now, and that I never had any interest in any factory that is benefited in any way by the water power at Gananoque, but, on the contrary, my opponent at the last election, Mr. Britten, his brother, his father and his two brothers-in-law, each own shares in the Gananoque water-power. I never did and have no interest in the property, so that the statement that I was interested in the water-power in Gananoque, is another slander. It is hardly worth while to review, at this hour, all the slanders the hon. gentleman has made.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose the hon. gentleman proposes to allow some little time to elapse so that those changes which are entirely new may reach the public and be laid before the parties chiefly interested. It is all but impossible for us to discuss them on the mere statement made by the hon. gentleman. Those ones we had before are easily enough comprehended, but all the others, although not of any great importance individually, yet appear to affect a very considerable number of industries, and I can hardly see how, bringing them up at this late time, the hon. gentleman is going to avail himself of the hints he ought to receive from those most interested. It is very rare to bring up so many changes at so late a period.

Mr. McLELAN. They are changes which do not affect very materially any industries or any particular class of goods. I should think that, if you let them stand over for concurrence, the House will then be in a position to learn what any party or trade in the country has to say about them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would be reasonable enough. I make the remark to the hon. gentleman for reasons which he and the House will easily understand. It is utterly impossible, at a moment's notice, for any man not thoroughly cognisant of these matters to know what the effect of some of these changes might be. There are others which I caught when the hon. gentleman was reading a statement, that are, I dare say, rather modifications of the existing tariff not very materially affecting the interests of the trade, but there are some in regard to which I think it is desirable that we should hear from the parties immediately concerned.

Baking powder, 6 cents per pound.

Mr. McLELAN. We propose to include the weight of the package. That is the simplest way.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will not that add materially to the duty?

Mr. BOWELL. No. It is a small package and sometimes very light, made out of very thin tin. In calculating the duty, you have to calculate the amount of powder in the package and the duty upon that, and then the duty upon the manufacture of tin. I am told by the appraisers that it will not make any material difference.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will it be equivalent to 7 cents a pound?

Mr. BOWELL. On the actual contents of the tin perhaps it would. The principle has been adopted in many other cases in the tariff in order to avoid trouble and difficulty.

Bolts, nuts, &c., not elsewhere specified, 1 cent per pound and 15 per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This amounts, as far as I can make out, to a duty of nearly per 40 cent. That is a very high rate of duty for an article of general use.

Mr. McLELAN. It is claimed that it is not as high as formerly on the average sizes of bolts and nuts.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not easy, when the hon. gentleman introduces the words "not elsewhere specified" to say exactly how far that may affect the original clause, but I have been informed that, owing to the very considerable fall in the value of these articles which has taken place of late years, this specific duty of 1 cent a pound on many of the articles would represent 25 per cent. I apprehend from what the hon. gentleman says that that is correct as to part of them, and that this duty would range in many cases as high as 40 per cent., which is a higher duty than he has hitherto imposed.

Mr. McLELAN. There has been a complaint from the manufacturers that it is making the duty less than before.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be, and that is the danger in introducing this double form of duty. In the higher values it might be a smaller duty, but in the case of the cheaper articles it would be very high indeed, possibly even higher than I have stated.

Dessicated cocoanut, 6 cents per pound.

Mr. McLELAN. That is to be 8 cents instead of 6 cents.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that for confectioners' use, or what?

Mr. McLELAN. It is for confectioners' use.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it part of the National Policy to protect cocoanuts, or is it for revenue?

Mr. McLELAN. For revenue.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is all right.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What might the revenue be expected to be?

Mr. McLELAN. I think I stated that last time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not in regard to dessiccated cocoanut. Would the importation amount to 50,000 pounds?

Mr. BOWELL. I think I can find it for the hon. gentleman.

Cordage, manilla and sisal cordage of all kinds, 1½ cents per pound and 10 per cent.

Mr. McLELAN. I want to strike out "manilla and sisal cordage of all kinds."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will not this have the effect of making the duty on the inferior kind of cordage exceedingly high? There is a sort of cordage brought into this country on which a duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem and 1½ cents per pound would run very high, and I should imagine that particularly as affecting the fishermen in the hon. gentleman's own Province, as respects the manufacture of their nets and some of the cordage they use, that would be found rather oppressive.

Mr McLELAN. For fishing it is free, I think, but the cordage duty will be rather less on the hemp cordage than the old duty, and upon good manilla it would be about the same. I do not think it is very desirable to encourage the importation of an inferior article. In the rope works here, there is always a certain percentage of the material imported that is worked up into the lower grades of rope, which are sold at a low price.

Mr. WELDON. In the Maritime Provinces the merchants especially complain that this is very inconvenient, and they have made a communication to the Minister.

Mr. McLELAN. There is just that objection, that it would strike harder the lower qualities.

Mr. VAIL. What percentage does the Minister calculate the duty will be under this tariff?

Mr. McLELAN. It will average about as before. The value of manilla rope ranges from 11 to 14 cents.

Mr. VAIL. That is just why it is excessive. Everyone knows at the present time that the fishing industry is in a very depressed condition, and the fishermen's interests will be largely affected by this duty. During the Mackenzie Administration, the duty on cordage was only 5 per cent., in 1878 it was increased, when the National Policy was introduced, to 10 per cent. on certain kinds for ships, and 20 per cent. for all other purposes. In 1884 it was further increased to 20 per cent. for all cordage. Now, not satisfied with that, the Minister proposes to put 10 per cent. ad valorem and 1½ cents per pound. I know that cordage has been purchased in the United States in the last year, of the best quality, for 8 cents per lb., but the Customs officials require that the importer shall enter the cordage at 11 cents, which is 3 cents in excess of what it has cost free on board in the United States. When it is brought to this country they are obliged to pay, under this tariff, 10 per cent. on the cost of 11 cents., and 1½ cents per lb., and if the Minister will calculate he will find that it is about equal to 29⅓ per cent. on the actual cost of 8 cents in the United States. I think that is too much of a tax, and ought not to be put upon an industry in the depressed condition in which the fishing industry is. I do not see why this increase should be made. The Minister stated the other day, when this matter was before the House, that he had consulted with some ropemakers. Now, I do not think that the manufacturers of cordage in this country are the men whom the Finance Minister or the Minister of Customs should consult in a matter of this kind. The duty has been raised in their interest, raised for the purpose of shutting out American cordage and obliging our shipowners and fishermen to purchase the cordage made in this country. It is all right enough, to a certain extent, that the manufacturer of cordage in this country should have sufficient protection afforded him to make cordage that he can sell with a little advantage over the imported cordage, but when you attempt to make the duty prohibitory it is very unfair to the shipowners and fishermen in this country, who are obliged to purchase a great deal of their cordage in the United States. Then there is another point. I am told that it is the custom of the Department, if a vessel is in the United States and gets a new sail, when she comes into the Dominion to load, notwithstanding that the sail has been used in crossing to the Dominion, she is often called upon to pay the duty on that sail. Now, this is another restriction that our shipowners have never been subjected to before. I am told that even in the case of warps for warping ships, small cordage and spun yarn that are used for ships, although these articles may have been broken and worn, the Customs Department sometimes claim a duty on them. Now, it has always been understood that articles on board ship that were for the ship's use, both cordage and provisions, if they were landed at all, the master or owner of the vessel was allowed to enter them in bond and take them on board again when he went away without paying duty. Now, however, the Department is calling on these people in many cases to pay a duty on the broken coils of rope, and spun yarn. I should like to know whether that is done by instruction from the Department or whether it is a mere whim of the collectors of some of the ports?

Mr. GAULT. I think if an American vessel comes into our ports for repairs, no matter what the repairs may be, when she goes home again duty is charged on those repairs. If she has been damaged and has to be repaired, she has to pay duty on those repairs.

Mr. WELDON. The effect of that practice has been to prevent American shipowners from making repairs in our ports; that has entirely ceased. With regard to the mode in which the duty is collected, I know that importers complain of it very much, as being cumbersome and troublesome. They were willing for the duty to be lowered, but to have a specific duty entirely, instead of a mixed duty, is found very objectionable.

Mr. McLELAN. There is a very considerable difference in the value of cordage, and I had the duty made specific for that reason. The price the hon. gentleman has given as that for manilla cordage is lower than it can be obtained.

Mr. VAIL. No; I can assure the hon. gentleman that that was the ruling price all last year.

Mr. McLELAN. I know that cordage costing 8 cents per pound is largely mixed with sisal. I was interested in the purchase of a large quantity of manilla rope and paid 33⅓ per cent. more than that price.

Mr. VAIL. I have a letter from one of the largest shipowning firms in Yarmouth, and they state that they have purchased quantities this year in Boston at 8 cents, and been required to enter it at 11 cents. The firm is that of Wm. Birrell & Co., who own seven or eight vessels, some of them 1,400 tons, and I am quite satisfied they always obtain the best materials.

Mr. McLELAN. Perhaps rope of manilla and sisal mixed would not be bought intentionally. I know that one of my captains declined to purchase from the firm named by me, and got rope elsewhere. He made a voyage, and after three or four months he wrote to the other firm apologising for having withdrawn the trade from it, saying that the rope which was supposed to be good was a mixture of sisal, and he did not detect it until after three months. From my own experience of good manilla rope, I say it cannot be purchased for 8 cents a pound. Reference has been made to ships being repaired abroad. The hon. member for St. John, (Mr. Weldon) has said that American vessels which were formerly repaired at St. John do not get repaired there now. Having lost the American trade we ought surely to encourage the repairing of our own ships as much as possible.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems very hard that ship-owners, in case of an industry which is not so very prosperous, should be subject to very heavy duties for the purpose of encouraging some particular friends of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. VAIL. I will read a portion of the letter to which I have referred. It runs:

"Your esteemed favor to hand. In reply to Mr. Kaulbach's statement"——

It will be remembered that Mr. Kaulbach made the statement that this duty would not increase the price of cordage.

"that the price of cordage would not be increased by the extra duty, we have been asking Boston manufacturers and also rope works for quotations for cordage for a large ship. The makers in Boston, whose make we prefer to all others, quotes 8 cents per lb., Dartmouth quotes 10½ cents. We are informed by Killam Bros., who are agents for the New Bedford Cordage Co., that they have to pay a duty at the Customs on 11 cents per lb., which is 3 cents more than it was offered to us free on board in Boston. It seems a very high-handed thing, on showing the collector an invoice at 8 cents and filling up the oath on the back of the entry, for the Customs officer to refuse the oath and charge us with committing perjury in reference to such entry."

That seems to be a strange proceeding, and is hardly fair on the importing public.

Mr. McLELAN. What do you recommend?

Mr. VAIL. I would prefer that there should be a fixed rate of so much per pound on cordage, which would be very much better than this percentage rate. These duties are having a very serious effect upon our shipping interests and are placing us in a very unfair position. I referred some time ago to the trade between Spain and Great Britain, wherein the United States has the advantage in the Spanish West Indies over us, and I am informed by shippers to the West Indies that they will be obliged to haul their vessels up in the western part of Nova Scotia, owing to the heavy expense of outfit. Those are matters which the Government should take into consideration, and if they are determined to protect some industries, the shipping interest is one which deserves attention, and it is affecting the fishing interest, which likewise needs consideration. I should like to know from the Minister of Customs if cordage or rope on vessels, which has been purchased in the United States, and which is intended only for the ship's use, is liable to duty.

Mr. EVERETT. I have had a good deal of correspondence with both manufacturers and importers of cordage in St. John, and the universal feeling so far as I know it is in favor of a specific duty rather than a mixed duty, ad valorem and specific. I should prefer to see some suitable amount, whatever may be thought proper in the case, levied in the shape of a specific duty.

Mr. VAIL. The Minister states that this is about equal to 20 per cent.

Mr. McLELAN. I move then that it be amended by striking out the words "manilla" and "sisal."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will not that be very heavy?

Mr. McLELAN. Not so heavy as 20 per cent. the hon. gentleman says.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps so. I do not suppose it makes a great difference but certainly it is a very heavy duty on the inferior articles.

Mr. EVERETT. Some of the importers wanted 2¼ cents per pound.

Mr. MITCHELL. Where is the necessity for this increased duty? Is the Government short of funds or is it for protection?

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). It is to pay for advertising in the Montreal Herald.

Mr. MITCHELL. They do not require any duty for that; they are either too niggardly or too unfair for that. It appears to me that industries which are so severely taxed as the shipping and fishing industries should not have any addition made to their taxation, unless the purpose is specifically stated. If the purpose is for protection, I object to it. They have a large protection; we have protection and the National Policy run into the ground. If the purpose is revenue, we should take it from some other source than the shipping or the fishing industries, both of which are now suffering from excessive taxation.

Mr. WATSON. There is another industry which it bears very heavily upon and that is the farming industry. In the North-West, nearly all the binding is done with twine on the self-binding machines. This makes a duty of about 2½ cents a pound on binding twine, and although it is proposed to reduce it to 2 cents, I think it should be still further reduced. There were about 200 tons used in the North-West last year for binding purposes, making a duty of about $2,000 for the support of three large ropeworks in the Dominion, one in St. John, another in Halifax and another in Montreal. The principal factory I believe is the one which is owned by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stairs).

Mr. MITCHELL. He supports the Government and they should provide for him.

Mr. WATSON. It is a great hardship on the farmers of the North-West who formerly used American twine, but find that it is closed now by the duty, and they find they have to use the Halifax twine which is improving though it is inferior in quality. It requires about 2½ pounds of twine for every acre of grain, which amounts to a considerable tax.

Mr. McLELAN. I understand that the Halifax firm exported a considerable quantity of twine to the United States; at least they did so about two years ago. So, I do not think the hon. gentleman's constituents are suffering very much by having to get their supply from Halifax. I would say to the hon. member for Northumberland that the proposition is not to increase the duty on the fishing or shipping industries. The fishermen get almost everything they require in the way of lines or twines free of duty, and as for the shipping outfit, the ships get a drawback which more than compensates for the duty.

Mr. VAIL. That is for ship-building.

Mr. WELDON. It often happens, from what I see in the papers, that small trading vessels which may meet with a disaster on a voyage, or on which the lines become worn out, have to replace them in the United States, and then when they come back they are met by the duty. I think this is a great hardship and it bears especially upon the smaller vessels.

Mr. MITCHELL. The argument of the Minister of Finance is certainly not a very good one, considering all that has been said about the National Policy and the slaughter markets of Canada. The hon. gentleman says that the Halifax Cordage Factory has been shipping cordage abroad. What has been said about the manufacturers of the United States making use of Canada as a slaughter market, it seems that after they supply the markets of Canada they have a surplus which they must send somewhere, and they are making a slaughter market of foreign countries, which is certainly not an argument for increasing the duty on cordage.

Mr. BOWELL. This is not increasing the duty.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then, why change it. My own experience is that every change which is made by the Customs or the Finance Department, in connection with the revenue, is something in the way of increasing the taxation of the people, and I must say that there is a growing feeling in this country in regard to the way the Customs Department is administered, the tyranny which is exercised. The course pursued by the officers of that Department is anything but satisfactory to the traders and merchants of this country.

Mr. WATSON. I cannot understand how the Halifax firm shipped twine into the United States two years ago, unless it was of a poorer quality, because two years ago there was a good deal of American twine used in Manitoba. It was sold there for two or three cents a pound more than the Canadian twine because it was of better quality, finer spun and would go further. I have no doubt that some of that article might be shipped into the United States for people who did not know its quality or weight. Where it would take about two pounds to the acre of American twine it requires about 2½ of Halifax twine.

Mr. McLELAN. From the opinions expressed on all sides, I think I had better leave it as it is, at 1¼ cents and 10 per cent. There is a great difference in the values.

Mr. WELDON. I think manilla is used for ships. They require the best kind of cordage. Sisal is not needed for ships. I think 2 cents is enough.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman knows that from 20 to 40 per cent. of sisal may be put in a rope, and no man can tell whether it is all sisal or all manilla.

Mr. VAIL. The hon. Minister of Customs has not yet given me an answer.

Mr. BOWELL. In reference to the question of duty on cordage to which the hon. gentleman has referred, he, like many others who talk on questions of this kind, just half treats it. The statement by the gentleman who wrote the letter is quite correct, but he forgot to state that there is a drawback of from 1¼ to 2 cents a pound given by the United States Customs authorities to those who export the article, and consequently, under the law they are obliged to add whatever amount is paid to the party exporting, to the value of the article when it is exported to this country. It was only the other day that a gentleman imported two or three car loads of cordage from the United States for tying up lath; he is a large lumber and mill owner, and he supplies mills, principally in my own county. He imported the goods in the very best faith, and when he presented his invoice it was pointed out to him what the law was. Although he had been importing for a number of years, he said he had not been aware of that provision in the law. He said he had been given a drawback in the market here. He purchased the goods, and he at once paid the duty. The duty of 1¼ cents and 10 per cent. is considered as low if not lower than 20 per cent., and much lower on the more expensive quality of cordage imported for ship purposes. The duty will hit the low and inferior grades of cordage which are adulterated with a large admixture of sisal; and from what the manufacturers tell me it cannot be detected, except by experts. In reference to repairs to ships and ships' supplies: If a new sail is obtained to replace an old one, I suppose that might pass as repairs to the rigging. No change has been made in the rule of the Department in this respect ever since I have been connected with it. If a vessel by stress of weather is driven into port, and finds it necessary to get anything to enable her to continue on her journey, the duty on that is never exacted. If, however, a vessel goes to the United States and is there repaired and comes back to our ports, she is charged duty on the repairs. If an American vessel is repaired in this country, no matter what is done to her, when she returns to her own port, she has to report, and a duty is charged upon every penny spent upon her in this country. The hon. member for St. John has told us that on that account we have lost the repairing of American vessels. If that be correct, there is no reason why we should allow our vessels to be repaired free in the United States, except when it is absolutely necessary to enable them to continue on their voyage, or why should we not treat them in precisely the same way as the American authorities treat their own vessels repaired in this country. It may be that, like many other provisions of the Customs Act, this has been allowed to fall into disuse; but my object has been to enforce the law as I have found it on the Statute-book. With regard to the statement of the hon. member that the administration of the Customs was getting into disrepute owing to arbitrary action on the part of the officers, I have simply to say that the action of the officers, in the seizures which have been made, particularly in Montreal, has been of a character that has met with the approval of every honest importer with whom I have had any communication. Only to-night, since I have come to the House, I have received a letter from the Montreal Board of Trade, urging the fullest investigation into all cases which have not been settled.

Mr. VAIL. The hon. gentleman says the same rule which applies now has always been applied to purchases for vessels. I never knew of a case nor do I believe a case can be found in the Province of Nova Scotia where a vessel has been obliged to buy a new sail or sails in the United States, or cordage, hawsers, coils of rope, or small things of that kind, where a duty was ever exacted. It is only in the last year or two since this outside service has been established and working under a system where they are getting a certain percentage for every seizure they make. Whenever they find one of our coasters trading with the United States, they go to the Customs house to seek information there as to whether anything has been purchased so that they can get hold of the vessel in some way when she comes back to port. They say to the captain you purchased such an article; if you have not entered that, I will seize your vessel. The master sometimes will drive a bargain to keep his vessels out of the hands of these men, and the system is killing our coasting trade. It does not affect large ships, and the Custom house officers never think of going on board those vessels; it is the coasters that suffer by this stringent law.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is in error. I had brought before me yesterday by the hon. member for Annapolis, a case where they had seized a large vessel.

Mr. VAIL. It was a small vessel.

Mr. BOWELL. It was a large vessel.

Mr. VAIL. It was a coasting vessel, and they had to purchase lines to haul her through the bridges, and when they came back to Nova Scotia they were called upon to pay duty on the articles purchased. It is very unfair, and if that is the course to be pursued by the Department, they will kill out the whole of our coasting trade and oblige owners of vessels to sell them, and the whole trade of the country will be thrown into the hands of American coasters.

On resolution 2,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What effect does the hon. gentleman intend to produce by the amendments to 37, 38, 39, in sugars?

Mr. McLELAN. The effect of 13 to 14 is to put it back to the old standard and the old tariff, owing to the closing of one of the refineries at Halifax and to the suspension of operations at Montreal occasioned by the flood. The grocers of the country, especially in the west, made complaints that they were unable to get lower grades of sugar suitable to their trade, and they stated that by confining it to No. 13 Dutch standard for importation for grocery purposes, kept them out of the quality sought after by some of their customers, and it was advisable to raise the grade and admit No. 14 at the same rate we had fixed for 13. We make the change so as to admit more Muscovados and Porto Ricos that are sold by the grocers without being refined. With regard to the next change, allowing 15 per cent. of the whole cargo to be admitted on the polariscopic test, the amendment explains that 15 per cent. may go to the refiner and the rest may go to the grocer, when there is 1 or 2 per cent. more than the 15.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On what date is it proposed to ask concurrence on these?

Mr. McLELAN. As late as we can suit the business of the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Say Monday.

Mr. McLELAN. With regard to the change in oil cloths to 30 per cent. ad valorem, the duty is now 35 per cent. The difficulty arises from calling it Nos. 1, 2 and 3. Any factory that may be near our borders will send in all the No. 3 and refuse generally, and it is desirable to make a specific duty.

Paper hangings or wall paper of 8 cents or under per roll, 2 cents per roll.

Mr. WELDON. What does that amount to?

Mr. BOWELL. It is less on the 7 cents and 8 cents paper than it would be at 30 per cent, but on the 4 cents paper it will be higher. The 30 per cent. is left on all paper over 8 cents.

Export duties—Spruce logs, $2 per thousand feet; pine logs, $3 per thousand feet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it would be well that the Minister should state why the Government propose to do this. This is a question which will affect different sections of the country very differently, and, while some may be for it in one quarter, I fancy it will be found to inflict considerable hardship in other quarters. What does the hon. gentleman propose to do? The duty he now proposes will be considerably in excess of the duties the Americans impose on lumber coming into the States. I think they charge $2 per thousand, and he proposes to impose $3 per thousand.

Mr. McLELAN. The proposition is to impose $3 on pine. The duty is the same on both spruce and pine going into the United States, $2 per thousand.

Mr. VAIL. What size logs are these to be? It is important that they should not be below a certain size. I presume the hon. gentleman does not intend to charge an export duty on all the spiling which is carried away to the States from Nova Scotia. Some of it is not more than three or four inches at the top end.

Mr. McLELAN. Those are hardly logs.

Mr. VAIL. It will be difficult for the collectors to distinguish unless it is named.

Mr. McLELAN. Under the old duty of $1 per thousand, such scantling as the hon. gentleman refers to went out free, and it is not proposed to make any change except to increase the duty on what are really logs intended for the manufacture of lumber.

Mr. IVES. It strikes me that the increase from $1 to $2 a thousand on spruce logs will, unless the Government take power to remit it in certain exceptional cases, work a very great hardship. In 1884, I made a motion in the House which was defeated at the instance of the then Finance Minister, asking to have the duty increased to $2 a thousand upon spruce sawlogs. I have not changed my opinion as to the advisability of my course. I know that, with the import duty charged by the United States of $2 a thousand upon rough sawn spruce lumber, it is only fair to our mill owners and manufacturers that a duty of $2 a thousand should be charged on the export of our sawlogs. I have seen American mill owners building mills on the frontier, depending entirely for their stock of logs on the Canadian side, and taking the logs over at a nominal rate upon railways, and sawing them there. What I have to say against this proposition I trust will not be misunderstood. Now there are certain cases in which this proposed increase, and, in fact, in which the duty as it stands of $1, is an extreme hardship. As you are aware, the international boundary between us and our neighbors to the south, where it passes through the Eastern Townships, attempts to follow a water-shed but it does not do so. In some cases, the head water of the streams are in Canada and run south; several miles probably of the head water of these streams are in Canada. In other cases, the stream's head is in the United States, and flow north into Canada. Now, there is in the counties of Stanstead and Compton—particularly in Compton, in Barford and Orford—a very considerable country, where the streams flow south, where there is not a sufficient amount of lumber to justify the erection of mills, but where there is a considerable quantity of lumber, and that lumber, so far as it has been taken out, has been floated down the river and manufactured in the United States. The only way in which that lumber can be utilised, is by permitting these logs to be floated down their natural course into the United States, to be manufactured there. They cannot be brought over the divide, which forms the international boundary, to the mills on the Canadian side. There are no waters by which they can be driven to mills on the Canadian side, and no railways by which they can be brought out, and they have either to remain standing trees—and I am sorry to say that lately those standing spruce trees are dying very rapidly, and it is necessary they should be cut, or be taken to the United States. Well, now, the mill owners come to the farmers on our side of the line and buy these logs, and they have to give them just $1 per thousand less for these logs under the existing duty than they would if the export duty did not exist, and if you put on an additional dollar you entirely deprive that lumber—and it amounts to a good amount of money—of any value whatever, and you prevent the possibility of its being taken out. I presented a petition to the House early in the present Session, from a large number of people asking the Government to take power to remit the export duty in their case, and I think that if the Government make this increase of $1 per thousand they should take power to remit or rebate the duty in certain exceptional cases like those I have mentioned, otherwise I can assure the Government that they are doing a great injustice to a considerable section of the Eastern Townships, and that they are in fact destroying property of the value of many thousands.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not see how the proposition of the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), can very well be acted upon. The objection that he raised to the imposition of an import duty in exceptional cases, will apply in almost all cases. It has the effect of lowering the price of standing timber, and that is a tax upon the owners of timber. The object of the duty is to foster the manufacture of lumber in the country, but it is not in the interest of the owner of timber that the duty should be imposed. The imposition of the duty undoubtedly is faulty in principle; an export duty is the most obnoxious form of duty. But we must bear in mind that the American Government admit saw logs free of duty, while they impose a duty upon lumber; and that, no doubt, is the reason the Government has for imposing an export duty upon saw logs. If the American Government did not admit logs free of duty, then there would not be the reason that exists now for the imposition of a duty. I fear, however, that the Government makes a mistake in making the amount of duty imposed upon the pine saw logs 50 per cent. greater than the amount of duty imposed by the American Government upon lumber, while no exception could be taken, I think, to the imposition of a duty of $2 per thousand upon saw logs, as an offset to the American duty of $2 upon lumber. Now if our duty is made $3 per thousand upon logs, I fear the fact may be taken advantage of by designing men, and those interested in higher duties upon lumber, and a cry raised about discrimination, and possibly those interested in the imposition of a duty upon lumber may make a successful effort to increase the American duty to $3. For this reason I doubt the advisability of making the duty greater than the American import duty. Then there is the question of the towing of logs, although that has not commenced yet. No short pine logs have been towed upon the Georgian Bay itself, although a fair business is likely to spring up. The total amount of export duties last year was $12,300, and in the previous year $8,500, showing that the trade, even under a duty of $1, is insignificant. It is not at all likely that trade would increase if the duty were doubled, so I do not think we need fear any large amount of business being transacted under an export duty of $2 per thousand. We must bear in mind that the towing of saw logs is attended with certain disadvantage to the man engaged in it, the only point where there is any danger of a business springing up is in towing logs from the north shore of the Georgian Bay to the Michigan mills at Saginaw, some of them now being out of a supply of timber. Now, when they are delivered at the mouth of the Spanish River, or Blind River, or any stream upon the north shore of Lake Huron, the extra cost of putting these logs into rafts will be, at least, 30 cents per thousand, as compared with the cost of putting into a mill boom at that point, and the cost of towing these logs to Saginaw will be at least $1 per thousand. Besides, the risk of towing is very great, and I apprehend that parties going into the business of towing short logs across the widest parts of Lake Huron, will have reason to repent it. The risk in towing these logs cannot be estimated at less than from 5 to 10 per cent., to which must be added the cost of chains, &c., which places the person at a disadvantage of at least $2 per thousand upon his logs delivered in Saginaw, as compared with the cost of those logs delivered in a mill at the starting point. Some small advantages, as an offset to this disadvantage, will be secured if the lumber goes east. In the matter of freight, if he is sending the lumber from Saginaw to Buffalo, he can do it, perhaps, 50 cents per thousand cheaper than he could from Georgian Bay. If the lumber is going west of Chicago, the freight will be no greater from Georgian Bay than from Saginaw, so that the net disadvantage to the person towing the logs of the lumberer's going east is at least $1.50 per thousand, while, if the lumber goes west, the disadvantages arising from towing and risk is $2 per thousand. Now, I do not apprehend that under an export duty of $2 there is any probability that the trade will attain to any considerable proportion. I have no objection to a high duty upon sawlogs designed for lumber, as far as I am concerned, except I fear, as I said before, that if we make our export duty larger than the American import duty, the fact will be taken advantage of, that a great cry will be raised, especially at a time like this when the relations between the two countries are likely to be somewhat strained; so I imagine there is a danger of our own interests being prejudiced by the step we are taking here to-day. Now, I am somewhat familiar with the feeling in this matter among the lumber merchants on the other side. I have heard them argue that a duty of $2 per thousand was too low. A duty of $2 per thousand on lumber worth $12 per thousand, is equal to 16½ per cent.; a duty of $2 per thousand on lumber, worth $10 per thousand is equal to 20 per cent.; while a duty of $2 per thousand on lumber worth $8, is a duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem. Now, Sir, an export duty of $3 per thousand on logs worth $8 per thousand amounts to an ad valorem duty of 38 per cent., which is nearly double that of the American duty. It is this circumstance which leads me to fear that we make a mistake in making this duty higher than the American duty.

Mr. BOWELL. What quantity of lumber do you make out of a log?

Mr. CHARLTON. From two and half logs to fourteen logs per thousand.

Mr. BOWELL. There is a regular standard?

Mr. CHARLTON. Not in the United States. Everything is computed by board measure. I am making my calculations on the value of sawn lumber per thousand and the duty and the export duty on saw logs based upon measurement in feet. There is one other view of the case I wish to present in regard to the matter referred to by the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) and that is as to the definition of a log. Under the tariff as it has existed on the lakes I know spiling and lumber of that class has been classed as saw logs. Under the interpretation of the laws there the duty would be exacted upon masts, spars, yards and spiling. Certainly none of those articles can properly be denominated as logs. There is another class of lumber that is being got out—the business has not been done to any extent in Canada yet, but it has been done to some extent in Michigan—and that is long timber. This is a class of stock that is being used for the same purposes as our square timber. It is got out in the rough without being hewn. It does not interfere with the lumber trade; in fact it is carried on side by side with the lumber trade in Michigan, and some of the lumbermen engaged in cutting lumber are taking down timber of this class to be sold in the markets below. For many purposes very rough timber is found to answer well for long bill stuff. They also send the red pine down, which is almost valueless if converted into lumber. This does not interfere with the lumber trade, because this long timber when it reaches Tonawanda, Buffalo or Toledo is sold at a higher rate than it would bring if it were manufactured into lumber. It is used in small lines on the Erie Canal for manufacturing into small bills and special timber which is required promptly and in less than cargo lots, and which cannot be obtained from distant points except at great inconvenience and expense. Where large bills in cargo lots are required they are procured from the Michigan mills. This is a trade that amounts to from forty million to sixty million feet a year, about the amount that one of our first-class mills at the Chaudière would consume in a season. It is probable that this trade will enable our pine to be used with better results than if it were sawn into lumber. It would be well in designating what are saw-logs to exempt from duty timber, say forty-six feet and upwards in length. If this were done the law would not be avoided, because the cost of handling it and getting it to market would be more than the difference in duty. There are only a few streams on the Georgian Bay where this timber can be got out. It costs over $2 more to handle it than ordinary timber. I have placed these facts before the Finance Minister, because I know from my own experience as to the matters I have referred to. While I do not object to an export duty on logs, I am only anxious that the rate of duty should not be placed so high as to exceed the American duty, which might result in their raising the duty from $2 to $3. The long timber trade ought not be interfered with. That class of stock should be exempt from export duty, and certainly the duty ought not to be increased above $1.

Mr. HESSON. I have occasion to say a word or two on this subject because I have been corresponding with parties on the north shore in regard to the exportation of logs from Canada. Although the lumberers may not have already accomplished much, they are making very extraordinary preparations for this trade. In some cases they are prepared to abandon their mills and all their plant that has been put up at a very great expense, and they are building boats for the purpose of taking saw logs over in the rough to Saginaw. This is being done on the north shore of Lake Huron. While the hon. member from Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) is very much afraid lest we should hurt the feelings of the Americans, for which we give him credit, it is much more important that we should look after our own interests. The employment should be given to our own people. The hon. gentleman correctly states that the duty on lumber is $2 per thousand and on saw logs $1 per thousand. The export duty has not been sufficient to prevent timber being carried over in very large quantities, and I am told they can take 1,000,000 feet in booms to the American side in a few hours and at very trifling cost, and they will thus save $1 per thousand by taking logs over in the rough. We are having our forests depleted of the most valuable part of our exports, and this timber should be manufactured in our own country. In regard to the measurement; the difficulty of measuring logs is very great, especially in water, when they are afloat, and the careless way in which it is done, as compared with the careful and precise manner in which lumber is measured, is of itself a very great advantage to the individual who is importing largely in the rough state to the American side. So the Government would get, perhaps, upon 1,000,000 feet by that kind of measurement, by the careless way in which the measurement is conducted, very much less duty than they were entitled to. I am assured, that owing to the difficulty of measurement, there would be a loss equal to $1 per thousand. They have also refuse, which is worked into lath, and there is no duty placed on that. That is another inducement for lumbermen to take over logs in the rough. Besides the manufacture gives them employment, and that is a matter peculiarly within the province of Parliament. I for one, as a Canadian, must protest against any policy of that description, even if it should offend our American friends. I do not do it to offend them, but in order to give our people the benefit of the advantages which should be derived by Canadians from working upon Canadian capital. I believe that if these other parties, Wood & Co., who are living in Alpena, succeed in making these arrangements it is intended that Cook Bros. will follow suit; and if they try, I have no doubt they will succeed, and if the logs are measured in a careless manner in that regard they will have a considerable advantage with regard to the rough products of the mills—the slabs which are being cut, and the lath upon which they pay no duty will prove a great advantage. So that on the whole we will have a very little difference in the way of protection in $3 upon pine logs against $2 upon pine lumber. I am glad that the Government are taking this step, and I am satisfied if they carry it out it will be to the advantage of our people. I do not think that the hon. gentleman, having had experience in the lumber business, would have any difficulty in determining what a saw log would be, or other measurements of that kind. There are certain sizes and dimensions of logs which are always known to those in the habit of dealing in those articles, and I am sure that those who will have the control of them, as the exportation of that sort of material goes on under Government supervision, will have very little difficulty in deciding what amount of saw logs and what amount of shingle bolts will be returned.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman says that as a practical lumberman I would have no difficulty in telling the difference in different kinds of timber. That is true, I would have no difficulty, but the difficulty is that the Government inspectors class these masts, spars, &c., together as sawlogs in the upper lakes. The hon. gentleman says that Cook Bros. are making preparations to move their mills to the other side.

Mr. HESSON. I did not say that. I said it was suggested that if these other parties, who are making arrangements were successful, Cook Bros. would follow suit.

Mr. CHARLTON. I may say that I have no interest in the matter out of any regard to the feelings of the Americans in raising the duty, except as it may incense them to legislate against us. It is merely a matter of prudence, and in that view I do not think we should exceed the amount of the import duty charged by the United States. The difficulty of measuring logs in water, to which the hon. gentleman refers, is purely a supposition on his part. If he were a practical lumberman he would know that the measurement of logs can be carried on rapidly and with almost as much certainty as the measurement of lumber. The trade of which he speaks as having grown up in the upper lakes does not exist at all. The amount of duty paid shows that it is but a very small proportion of the trade. One firm, Emery Bros., have put in a stock of logs on Georgian Bay, but it is a matter still to be determined by experiment as to whether they can tow the logs successfully over Lake Huron in its widest part. I do not oppose the export duty on short logs, but, as I said before, it is merely a matter of prudence as to what the duty shall be in our own interest.

Mr. HESSON. In reply to the hon. gentleman I would read a letter addressed to me from Gore Bay:

"Yours of 31st December, 1885, duly to hand, and in reply about lumber, timber or saw logs upon the North Shore. At Spanish River Mills I would say that the company manufacture their saw logs in lumber at their own mills and ship by boat mostly to American ports. Cook Bros. do the same, but I understand that there are two companies on the north shore that have got large limits of pine, and that intend to ship the logs in the round and manufacture them at their mills in the States. They are building boats for that purpose. I was told the other day that the Spanish River Mills Company may do the same if the other company succeeds all right."

Mr. GILLMOR. I am afraid this will operate injuriously to some parties in my own county on the Ste. Croix River between the State of Maine and New Brunswick. I cannot speak definitely with regard to their timber lands, but I know that some Canadians living in St. Stephen's own mills in the State of Maine just across the channel. I know that they have large quantities of timber lands in New Brunswick and that they have been in the habit for many years of cutting those logs and sawing them in their mills in the State of Maine. It certainly would astonish them to find that they have to pay $2 export duty a thousand on the logs cut on their own lands in New Brunswick and floated to their own mills across the channel in the State of Maine, just on the other side of the river and vice versa. Those logs would always be subject to an export of $2 a thousand—logs cut by Canadians on their own lands, and cut in their own mills just across the channel in the State of Maine. The firm I speak of own very large tracts of timber in Canada, which they have been cutting and sawing in these mills for the last twenty years.

Mr. BOWELL. Has the tariff operated in the past?

Mr. GILLMOR. There has been no export duty on saw logs, or if there has been, it has never been enforced on that river, to my knowledge. It will do no harm, of course, if the Government do not enforce it; but under the present law you certainly can collect $1 a thousand on all the logs sawed in those mills, and it is now proposed to collect $2. I thought that the National Policy would be about exhausted when everything that came into the country was taxed. The Government seem to have gone as far as they could in that direction, and now they are going to impose taxes on goods going out of the country. I have no sympathy with the absurd system of taxation adopted in the United States, and would not object to retaliate if that retaliation did not injure us more than it would them.

Mr. KING. The hon. member for North Norfolk has told us that something like 12,000,000 of logs are annually exported from Canada to the United States, and manufactured in mills there. I suppose the Government are aware that for every million of logs exported from Canada and manufactured in the United States, there are nearly 10,000,000 of logs brought into Canada and cut here; and I think I am correct in saying that the logs cut in the State of Maine and manufactured in St. John, amount to from fifty to 100,000,000. One hon. gentleman has said that one result of this change in the duty will be to increase the duty on lumber going into the American market. If there is danger in that direction, there is still greater danger in another direction. If the people of the United States were disposed to retaliate at the present time, when the relations between the two countries are somewhat strained, if they should impose a duty on spruce and pine logs cut in the State of Maine and floated down the St. John River and cut in the mills of St. John, it would be a great injury. Therefore, I think the time is inopportune for making this change. In New Brunswick we know nothing of an export duty on logs. We have a large trade in other descriptions of lumber besides saw logs—in spiling, in wood, in ship timber; and if a large import duty were placed on those articles by the Americans by way of retaliation, we in New Brunswick would suffer keenly.

Mr. FISHER. The circumstances and conditions which are familiar to me are somewhat similar to those the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) has described as existing on his border. We know that where the New England States border on the Province of Quebec the boundary line is an imaginary line, with no natural divisions between the two countries, and the roads and streams pass indifferently across the line, from one side to the other. The result is that the natural outlet for the logs cut in one country is mainly in the other. So that there is a considerable passage of logs across the boundary line there. In my own county, I am personally acquainted with many men who have for sometime back suffered considerably from the export duty of $1 a thousand on spruce logs. The Eastern Townships produce principally spruce and hard wood; I do not think the quantity of pine lumber is sufficient to make any practical difference. In looking at the Trade and Navigation Returns, I find that last year practically all the spruce exported from Canada was from the Province of Quebec. Therefore, I think I am correct in saying that this increased duty on spruce logs will affect the Province of Quebec only, and I think it is going to be a serious damage to us. As a matter of fact, the people who cut these logs, and sell them to the millers on the other side of the line have to pay the duty; and our people will only pay the lumbermen less by the amount of the duty than the Americans have to pay.

Mr. BOWELL. In that case the consumer does not pay the duty.

Mr. FISHER. A solution of the apparent anomaly is easily found; but I am not discussing that question now. I do not see myself what possible good this increase in the export duty can accomplish on spruce logs. I can quite understand that in some instances in our western Provinces, especially in Ontario, the pine lumber industry is so great that some good may arise from it; but when I find that from no Province except Quebec are spruce logs exported, I do not understand why the Government have undertaken to impose this increased duty. The only possible excuse I can see for it is the preservation of our forests. Although I am thoroughly interested in the preservation and replanting of our forests, I do not think this is a legitimate mode in which that object can be attained. As a matter of fact, the people who sell these logs in the Eastern Townships and along the border are, as a rule, poor farmers who commence frequently with nothing but their axes, and have to depend for years entirely on the product of the forests, as years must elapse before they can so cultivate the land cleared that they may make a living out of it. It will seriously interfere with these people in their struggle to have this new tax imposed on them, and I cannot see what possible good can result from its imposition. Could the hon. gentleman inform me what amount of duties has been collected in past years on the export of spruce logs at $1 a thousand feet, and also what representations came to him in consequence of which he has imposed this duty.

Mr. McLELAN. Representations have come mainly from those interested in the lumber business, that preparations are being made to take over logs in very large quantities and manufacture them in the United States, so that they may avoid the duty there, and the consequence will be, our mills will be left idle. These preparations have been referred to by the hon. member for Perth as being made mainly in the west, and this additional tax is not imposed for the purpose of retaliation, but mainly to preserve our own forests and keep employment for our own people. Many men have invested large amounts in establishing mills, and it is very undesirable we should allow the logs to be floated to American mills and cut up there, thus obliging our own mills to shut down. The amount of duty is $2 a thousand feet on lumber in the United States, and it is supposed an average log will make 100 feet of lumber. With the log, of course, a great deal goes too, that can be manufactured into various articles. Therefore, the duty was fixed at $3 per thousand feet for pine lumber. The return does not give the value of the export duty at all, and I cannot give the hon. gentleman any information other than that contained in the Trade and Navigation Returns.

Mr. McCRANEY. I was going to remark when the hon. gentleman got up, that I think one of the strongest arguments for the duty the Government propose is the preservation of our forests. It is well known to our lumbermen that at the rate our forests are being denuded, probably twenty or twenty-five years will use them up to a large extent; that is those which are accessible. Consequently I approve of the course the Government are taking in imposing this duty on logs. I am well aware that there are special cases of hardship, such as have been referred by the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe, and the hon. member for Charlotte, but these are only special cases; and while the hon. member for North Norfolk has referred to the extra cost of getting out timber and floating it out to the United States, I still think the rates are altogether in favor of the parties who get out the timber in that way. Timber can be floated much cheaper than it can be shipped as lumber, and certainly the offal is worth considerable money. Long timber is worth as much in the log as short timber is cut up into lumber. I find in a late number of the Lumberman's Gazette of Bay City, Michigan, Col. M. Jeffers, of East Saginaw, says:

"'I have bought from parties in Canada 500,000 acres, or twenty townships, of standing white pine on the Serpent, Spanish and Mississagua Rivers, Georgian Bay. That this tract contains '2,000,000,000 feet of pine timber with a saw mill at the mouth of Serpent River that cuts 40,000,000 feet a year, with an iron steamer with a tow of barges. The whole plant costing $100,000.' And after stating that Governor Alger, Michigan, and Col. Bliss, of Saginaw, are interested in the same region, he says: 'We purpose to bring the logs over and saw them in Michigan. We are Michigan men and hope to make our purchases inure to our people here. Notwithstanding our investments in Canada, we will stand by protection for Michigan lumber.'"

In another part of the same paper the Hon. Isaac M. Weston, when criticising the Morrison Tariff Bill, says:

"We now admit Canadian logs free of duty. On the north shore of Lake Erie the Canadian saw mills are in ruins, but the mills at Tonawanda, N.Y., are employing thousands of American workmen, manufacturing Canadian logs towed from Erie north shore. The Saginaw mills are running out of American stock, and already they are looking to Georgian Bay for Canadian logs to cross the Huron Lake and keep their mills and men at work."

I think that in order to keep our own mills employed, without calling it protection at all, this increase of duty would just about meet the difference between the $2 per thousand feet on lumber and the $3 per thousand feet on logs, because they will have it in the shipping and besides they will have the refuse and the other advantage of getting these logs in long lengths. I am free to say that the duty is in the right direction.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) seems to think this duty will only affect the Eastern Townships and Quebec, or Quebec proper. It is quite evident he does not know anything about Ontario or he would understand the difference. It is going to be a serious matter with us as to how long our timber supply will last. Lumber is running up in price rapidly, and most of our pine lumber we get from the north shore of Georgian Bay. I think I can corroborate the remarks of the hon. member for Halton and the hon. member for Perth as to what is going on at present. The timber of Manitoulin Island and the North Shore of the Georgian Bay is being taken across in large quantities, and in a few years will be entirely destroyed if something is not done to prevent it. While I think this will partly prevent it, it does not go far enough, and the time is not far distant when we will have to adopt some other means to prevent the denuding of our forests in that country, or we shall be left to get lumber from a great distance, and, perhaps, from the other side.

Mr. DAWSON. There is no doubt that a high duty on logs would work very well on the Georgian Bay and Lake Huron, but on Lake Superior they import a large quantity of rough sawn American lumber and dress it in the mills there. What they would like would be a specific instead of an ad valorem duty on this rough lumber which they bring in, because there would be a great advantage then in the dressing of it. I do not know whether the Government has considered that or not.

Mr. FISHER. In answer to the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule), I may say that my only information about Ontario was taken from the Trade and Navigation Returns, and, as I found from them that Ontario does not export any spruce at all, I took it for granted that was the case.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. gentleman was speaking of pine as well as spruce.

Mr. FISHER. I made no allusion to the duty on pine.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have one suggestion to make. The Morrison Bill is pending in the United States Congress. It has not been decided yet. If it passes, it removes the duty on lumber. There are very few logs got out for exportation this year, and they will catch very few by this duty. I am unable to see why it is not premature to move in this matter now. It may prejudice our chances with regard to the Morrison Bill, and I think it is premature until we see the fate of that measure. The duty might be imposed to catch stock got out in another winter, and I make that suggestion to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. McLELAN. We have made provision to repeal the duty if necessary.

The following resolutions were reported:—

1. Resolved,—That it is expedient further to amend the tariff of Customs duties and the schedule of free goods, in addition to the alterations per resolution passed on 31st March last, as follows;—

The undermentioned articles to be charged with the rates of duty specified as follows, and all former rates thereon to be repealed:

1. Oilcloth in the piece, cut or shaped, oiled, enamelled, stamped, painted or printed, India rubbered, flocked or coated, not otherwise provided for, a specific duty of 5 cents per square yard and 10 per cent. ad valorem.
2. Floor oilcloth, 30 per cent. ad valorem.
3. Straw board in sheets or rolls, plain or tarred, a specific duty of 40 cents per 100 pounds.
4. Earthenware and stoneware, viz.:—Demijohns or jugs, churns and crocks, a specific duty of 2 cents per gallon of holding capacity.
5. Rubber belting, hose, packing, mats and matting, a specific duty of 5 cents per pound and 15 per cent. ad valorem.
6. Carriage hardware, 35 per cent. ad valorem.
7. Soap, perfumed and toilet, a specific duty of 10 cents per pound, the weight of the inside packages and wrappers to be included in the weight for duty, and 10 per cent. ad valorem.
8. Union collar cloth paper, in rolls or sheets, not glossed or finished, 5 per cent. ad valorem.
9. Union collar cloth paper, glossed or finished, in rolls or sheets, 20 per cent. ad valorem.
10. Paper hangings or wall paper, in rolls, costing 8 cents or under per roll of eight yards, a specific duty of 2 cents per roll of said length.
11. Felt, pressed, of all kinds, not filled or covered by or with any woven fabric, 17½ per cent. ad valorem.
12. Stereotypes and electrotypes and bases for same, made wholly or in part of type metal, a specific duty of 5 cents per pound.
13. Scythes, a specific duty of $2.40 per dozen.
14. Wire covered with cotton, linen, silk or other material, 25 per cent. ad valorem.
15. Stove bolts and nuts, and all bolts and rivets of one-quarter inch diameter and less, 35 per cent. ad valorem.
16. Handkerchiefs, cotton or linen, plain or printed, in the piece or otherwise, 25 per cent. ad valorem.
17. That the importation and manufacture of oleomargarine, butterine, and all such substitutes for butter, be prohibited, under a penalty of not less than $200 nor more than $400 for each offence, and the forfeiture of such goods, and of all packages in which they may be contained, and of all articles, implements, machinery and appliances used in and about the manufacture or preparation of such articles.
18. Nail plate, iron or steel, sixteen gauge and thicker, 25 per cent. ad valorem.
19. Repeal item 353. Revised Statutes of Canada except so far as it relates to "Ultra-marine blue."
20. Repeal also item 428, and substitute the following:—Jute cloth as taken from the loom, neither pressed, mangled, calendered, nor in any way finished, and not less than forty inches wide when imported by manufacturers of jute bags for use in their own factories.

The following items to be added to the list of goods which are entitled to entry free of duty:—

Jute yarn, plain, dyed or colored, when imported by manufacturers of carpets, rugs and mats, for use in their own factories.

Such philosophical instruments and apparatus as are not manufactured in the Dominion, when imported by and for use in universities, colleges, schools and sientific societies.

2. Resolved,—That it is expedient to amend Resolution No. 1, adopted on the 31st March last.

Item No. 3. After the word "pound" add the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty.

Item No. 5. After the word "steel" add not elsewhere specified.

Item No. 7. Change as follows:—

Cider, not clarified or refined, a specific duty of 5 cents per Imperial gallon.

Cider, clarified or refined, a specified duty of 10 cents per Imperial gallon.

Item No. 8. Cordage of all kinds a specified duty of 1½ cents per pound and 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Item No. 9. Make rate 8 cents per pounds instead of 6 cents.

3. Resolved,—That it is expedient to amend Resolution No. 2, of 31st March last.

Item No. 4.—After the word "re-manufactured," add and bloom ends, and crop ends of steel rails for re-melting.

4. Resolved,—That items 37, 38 and 39 be amended by striking out the words "or fraction of a degree" in item 37, and the word "thirteen" in items 37, 38 and 39, and inserting in lieu thereof the word fourteen.

And also to strike out the proviso next after item No. 40, and substituting the following therefor:—

Provided that when any cargo of sugar imported for refining purposes is found to grade in part above No. 14 Dutch standard in color, such part to the extent of not exceeding 15 per cent. of the whole cargo, may be admitted to entry by polariscopic test.

5. Resolved,—That it is expedient to amend the schedule of export duties by increasing the duties on the following articles, viz.:—In lieu of present duties there shall be levied and collected on—

Shingle bolts, a specific export duty of $1.50 per cord of 128 cubic feet.

Spruce logs, a specific export duty of $2 per 1,000 feet, board measure.

Pine logs, a specific export duty of $3 per 1,000 feet, board measure.

Provided that the powers vested in the Governor in Council by the Act 42 Victoria, chapter 15, section 6, being section 9, chapter 31 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, shall be extended to and apply in all respects to the above named articles.

INSOLVENT BANKS BILL.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the order for the consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 15) further to amend the Act respecting insolvent banks, insurance companies, loan companies, building societies and trading corporations (Mr. Edgar) be transferred to Government Orders.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Would it not be a good idea to incorporate Bill 121 in that motion?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If the hon. gentleman moves that, I will withdraw the other.

Motion agreed to.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 2.45 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 28th May, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SATURDAY SITTING.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved:

That when the House adjourns to-day it stands adjourned until Saturday, at three o'clock, p. m., and that the Government measures have that day and on Monday next precedence immediately after routine and questions to be put by members.

Motion agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). I desire to call the attention of the House for a moment while I make a statement, not so much because it affects me personally as because it refers to a gentleman occupying a public position. It will be remembered that in the debate on Indian affairs which took place in this House on a resolution of the hon. member for South Huron, that I felt called upon to make some remarks in reply. During the address the hon. member for South Huron and the hon. member for Brant, who supplemented his statement and the references he made——

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. member say the hon. member for South Huron?

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). I mean the hon. member for West Huron. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, because I do not wish to attribute to him that speech. I felt called upon to make some references in reply to the attack made upon the administration of that Department in the North-West by the Government and by its officers. Reference had been made by both those gentlemen to the Rev. Mr. Robertson and to statements he had made in a sermon or address somewhere in Ontario, which had been quoted largely in the Mail. His references and quotations were largely quoted by those gentlemen to buttress and strengthen the positions taken by them in attacking the administration of the Indian Department. I, in referring to that gentleman's statements and to the value which I attached to his statements, made use—I am reported to have made use of certain words which are reported in the Hansard, and although it has been the rule almost universally to accept the statements as they appear in Hansard, I have not the slightest hesitation in declaring from my place that I feel and believe I was not correctly reported on that occasion. I say that for this reason, that I had no consciousness or intention in any way of expressing myself so as to lead the House or the country to believe that I insinuated, or intended to insinuate, anything against the character of the rev. gentleman—anything such as has been attempted to be attached to the meaning of my expression by the Liberal press outside of this House. The hon. gentleman having made reference to the statements of the Rev. Mr. Robertson, I am reported to have said:

"I happen to know something about Rev. Mr. Robertson, which I do not care to disclose or discuss here, and which, to my mind, does not add much to the weight of his statement. I am not going any further on that subject."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). Now, that was not my expression. I feel quite conscious of that, and that I was liable to be misrepresented there as well as in some sentences which precede that. In rising to my feet I mentioned the Minister of Public Works and said that I would deal with some specific charges, and leave the public to judge; but in the report the mention of the Minister of Public Works is not inserted at all. Now, when I was misreported in that expression, I feel undoubtedly certain, and I have reason to believe, seeing that I had no consciousness or intention of any insinuation against Mr. Robertson, that I did not express myself as written down here. What I meant to say, and what I believe I did say, was this: I was then dealing with the charges against the administration in the North-West, and I said that from what I know from my own personal knowledge, and from what I learned of the Rev. Mr. Robertson, I learned from the newspapers, and especially from a letter which appeared in the Globe of the 3rd of April, written by the Rev. Alfred Anderson, which in every detail, as far as my observation went, coincided with my view. I read Mr. Robertson's statements in the Globe and the comments upon them, and I heard the statements quoted here. I also read the one by the Rev. Mr. Anderson, and I may say that when I made that statement I did not know to what church they belonged. Both gentlemen stood exactly in the same position towards me. One I have learned since is Superintendent of Presbyterian Missions there, and the other is Superintendent of Methodist Missions. There were two statements made, the one by the Rev. Mr. Robertson, and the other by the Rev. Mr. Anderson.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The Rev. Mr. Andrews.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). The Rev. Mr. Andrews—both supported by the title of Reverend. Now, as a matter of fair play after the two statements, I naturally accepted the statements in the Mail as true, when they agreed with what I personally observed, and holding that view when, so far as I observed, the statements made by the Rev. Mr. Andrews were directly contradictory of the statements made by the Rev. Mr. Robertson, I concluded—and I think it was a legitimate conclusion—that I would not be influenced by his whole statement, and for that reason I stated that I would not permit, and did not permit, his statement to influence my judgment of the administration of affairs in the North-West. In saying that I said I did not care to mention or discuss the matter. The reason I did not care was that when I read his letter, when the statement was made here, I did not know what political party he had any sympathy with, but I had a strong impression amounting almost to a conviction, from the manner in which he was treated by the Globe and from the use which hon. gentlemen made of his statement, that he had a strong sympathy with the Liberal party. I concluded, and I think I reasonably concluded, when his statements were not in accord with what I myself observed, that he was somewhat partisan. I did not like to attribute political partisanship to a clergyman, and for that reason I did not like to mention the reason why I hesitated to discuss the reason in this House. That was the reason. So you can clearly understand—the House and the country can understand—that I had no such intention; I state that without reservation; I stated it in the presence of the hon. member for North Norfolk, because he has spoken to me on the subject. Unfortunately, when the Globe newspaper and the Canada Presbyterian said that, when promptly called upon in the House to explain it, I refused to do so.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). I was not in the House. I was not asked for an explanation when I sat down, and after the statement was made. I regret very much now that I was not present, because if I had been, I would then have made the explanation which I now make. In justice to the hon. member for North Norfolk I may say that I understood from him, that when he was about to ask the question, he sent for me, but by accident I did not receive his message, and that was the reason why I did not return and immediately give my explanation. The reason I have not referred to the matter before was that I looked upon the whole thing as a mere matter of political clap-trap, merely to affect political feeling outside. I only refer to it now because it has come to my knowledge from direct sources that Mr. Robertson attaches some importance to it. I do so now in order that as far as any insinuations that I was said constructively to have made against his character should be completely removed, so far as I am concerned. So far as the political aspect attaching to the matter outside of the House, and in the riding which I have the honor to represent, the people who are dealing in that sort of thing are quite at liberty to go on, because I do not hesitate to say that, while I fully appreciate the honor of the seat in this House which my constituents have conferred on me, to myself personally my being here is a matter of indifference. I do not conceive that the papers or hon. members wish to attack me personally, and therefore I infer it is only political, and even if they pursue it so far as to displace me in the riding, the only good they would accomplish would be to send to this House perhaps a more staunch supporter of the Administration, and perhaps one less charitably disposed towards them than I am.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to say that I am very glad the hon. member for Leeds has made an explanation with regard to the statement made about the Rev. Mr. Robertson.

Mr. SPEAKER. The matter cannot be debated, as it is only a personal explanation.

Mr. CHARLTON. I simply wish to make an explanation personal to myself, but I presume it is not necessary.

CUSTOMS SEIZURES IN MONTREAL.

Mr. GAULT. I would ask if the hon. Minister of Customs is able to give us any additional information with regard to seizures made in Montreal. I have had many private letters on the subject, and I have received one to-day from the Board of Trade, which urges that the Minister shall make a statement of the whole matter, and not compromise it in any shape.

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman means a statement of all the seizures that have been made in Montreal, it would take some little time to make it. If he desires to have information which would have been given to the House in reply to the question placed on the paper by the hon. member for Missisquoi (Mr. Baker), in reference to the case of Patterson, Kissock & Co., I have it here. The question is:

"Is it true that Messrs. Patterson and Kissock, of Montreal, have made 'an amicable settlement' of the difficulties arising out of the seizure of their stock-in-trade by the customs authorities? By whom, on behalf of the Government, was such settlement made? What sum of money did the firm pay? Will the money be distributed, and in what proportion, among the seizing officers? Did the Government, or any of its officers, undertake to secure immunity from prosecution to the members of said firm, or either of them? And is it the intention of the Government to push to trial and judgment the prosecution for perjury, already instituted by one of its officers, against a member of said firm?"

The answer I intended to give is as follows:—No amicable settlement has been made, nor has any final settlement been arrived at, that case being still in the hands of the legal advisers of the Crown in Montreal. The firm has deposited the sum of $2,000, which covers the value of the goods so far found to have been improperly entered, and the fines imposed by sections 94 and 215 of the Customs Act. The Government has no knowledge of any of its officers undertaking to secure immunity from prosecution of the members of the firm, or either of them. The question of further proceedings, in the case of perjury, will depend upon the advice of the Crown advisers. Instructions have been given to the effect that if the prosecution for perjury can be successfully pushed to trial and judgment, to push it. Whatever sum is realised from the seizure, after deducting whatever duties are due, will be disposed of as provided by law, namely, one-third placed to the credit of the Receiver General, and two-thirds distributed among the seizing officers, and informers if there be any.

CHARGE AGAINST A MEMBER.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). At yesterday's session of the House, I undertook to prefer certain serious charges against the member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron) in connection with obtaining a bonus of $96,000 for the Erie and Huron Railway. When I made the charges, I believed that if I were afforded an opportunity, I would be able to substantiate them. I still believe that if afforded that opportunity, I shall be able to substantiate those charges. Therefore I move:

That Mr. Somerville, the member representing the electoral district of the North Riding of the county of Brant in this House, having stated from his place that he is credibly informed and believes that he can establish by satisfactory evidence that Hector Cameron, then and now a member of this House, was in the year 1884 using his influence and exertions to procure through the Government and Parliament a subsidy for the Erie and Huron Railway Company of $3,200 a mile for thirty miles, amounting to $96,000; and while so engaged he wrote to an officer of the company, in effect stipulating that a commission or bonus of ten per cent. on the amount of such subsidy should be paid to him for himself, or for himself and two other persons whose co-operation in the business he had secured—one-half of such commission to be paid on the subsidy being voted, and the other half on the money being paid over; a select committee be appointed to enquire into the said allegations, with power to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses upon oath or affirmation, with instructions to report the evidence and all proceedings of the said committee, and that the said committee be composed of Messrs. McCarthy, Langelier, Macmaster, Fleming, Desjardins, Colby and Lister.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). After the full statement I made on this subject last night, it is perhaps scarcely necessary I should say anything to-day, and I had better, therefore, leave the matter in the discretion of the House, to dispose of it, of course, as they think best. I can only repeat my statement of last night, that I never made any agreement of any kind for any commission or interest in any way in the bonus referred to, or that I was or expected to have any personal interest in it. My action was entirely as solicitor for the gentleman interested in the matter; no agreement was made with him of any kind, and the letter which has been referred to was never received by him until long after the matter was over. In whatever was proposed in that letter—if it be produced or whether it was produced—I had no personal interest, and it was never intended I should have any, but I wrote the letter simply as his solicitor. I took no action with the Government whatever beyond sending in, in my capacity as solicitor, an application for aid. I never approached or asked any member of the Government, or used influence of any kind with any member of the Government, or ever made any application to Sir Charles Tupper, then Minister of Railways, but simply handed him the application; and in doing so I told him I was acting as solicitor for the railway. I had no communication of any kind with any member of the Government; I had no interest, and never intended to have any interest in the bonus; any proposal that was made was made, not for myself, but for other parties, and was made on the suggestion of my client, who advised me in the matter, as he himself was leaving the country. I was away, in fact, at the very time the application was put in.

An hon. MEMBER. Who are the other parties.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). The other parties are not members of this House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it will be satisfactory to the House and to my hon. friend, that the mover of this resolution should state, for the information of this House, the nature of his information, from whom he got it, and when he got it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I have already stated to this House the nature of the charges I bring against the hon. member for North Victoria. I believe I am pursuing the usual course adopted when such charges are made against any hon. member. I do not propose to map out for myself any different course from that usually pursued. I make the charges in good faith. I believe they are true. I believe I can prove them, and I ask this House to appoint a committee, so that I can have an opportunity of substantiating them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I must say that, in my opinion, the hon. gentleman is trifling with this House.

He ought to have stated when he was informed of the matter charged, and he ought, when he was informed of it, to have moved his resolution. It is trifling with this House to make, at the very last days of the Session, I may say at the very last hours of the Session, a charge which he knows cannot be satisfactorily looked into, and which is to hang over my hon. friend's head the whole summer. It is not fair to my hon. friend, it is not parliamentary, it is what no fair-minded man should do, it is eminently unfair, and it looks—I cannot impugn his motive, but the outside world will not be so charitable as parliamentary courtesy compels us to be—as if he had brought this matter up at the last moment, so as to prevent the possibility of its being enquired into, and in order that the semblance of a charge should hang over my hon. friend unnecessarily. He will not say whether he knew these circumstances weeks ago, and why he did not bring the charge up earlier, in order that a satisfactory investigation might be had into it, in order that he might have an opportunity of bringing forward his proof, and my hon. friend of bringing forward his rebuttal.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). I would simply say, in answer to the statement made by the First Minister, that if he had been in his place in the House last night, he would have known the reason I did not prefer the charge sooner. I said that the reason was that the principal witness I wished to subpœna before the committee was not in the country. Had this witness—an important witness, a witness upon whose evidence I expect to substantiate largely this charge—been in the country before, I would have preferred the charges at an earlier period of the Session. I do not think I am open to the charge which was made by the First Minister in regard to my conduct in this matter, in delaying it until almost the last moment of the Session, as the reasons I have given for delaying the enquiry are substantial reasons, and reasons which will have weight with men who are desirous of viewing this matter, not from a political standpoint, but from a desire to look after the independence of this House and to purify this House from the presence of men who have been guilty of trafficking in their position as members of Parliament, for the purpose of procuring percentages on bonuses which have been granted by this House for the construction of railways. I am prepared to abide by the verdict of the outside public in regard to my conduct in this matter. I feel satisfied that the outside public will stand by me in this matter, and that they will say that I am discharging a duty which is due to them, a duty which is due to this House, and a duty which is due to every member of this House, in asking now for this enquiry into the conduct of the member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron).

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I regretted last night, when the hon. gentleman made his charge, that he had not, as the First Minister said just now, brought it much sooner. He stated then that he had given notice to the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron), two days ago, that he would bring this charge. That is all very good so far as this notice or charge is concerned now, but the hon. gentleman admits that he had knowledge of the facts that he now brings here against the hon. member for Victoria some time ago, probably long ago by what he says. I really believe that the hon. gentleman should, immediately when these facts came to his knowledge, though he might not have had the proof then, have given notice to the hon. gentleman, because I do not suppose he wanted to convict my hon. friend here of this, I do not suppose that he wanted to persecute him, but, that, as he says, he wanted to fulfil a duty as a member of this House. Well, he should have been very glad to have given notice to the hon. gentleman and to have given him a very early orportunity of clearing himself of any such charge, even if he had postponed his charge until he had that witness whom he says he had not then in the country, but who has come back since. At all events, I think, if this matter is to be investigated, it should not be referred to a special committee, but to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as we referred the other day another charge against two hon. members of this House. Therefore, I move in amendment, that the charge and allegations be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think that either the First Minister or the Minister of Public Works was justified in casting any blame on my hon. friend behind me for the course he has taken. The House may recollect that the hon. member whose conduct is assailed was absent from this House for a very considerable portion of this Session. If I recollect aright, it was not until the end of the second month that he returned here, and I fail to see how it would have been possible for my hon. friend to proceed in the matter until his witnesses were available. It is a very unpleasant and disagreeable task for any member on either side to assail in this fashion hon. gentlemen whose conduct may be called in question, but it is a duty we owe to the public, and I do not think, after the explanation my hon. friend made last night, that his conduct is in any way open to the censure attempted to be cast upon him.

Amendment of Sir Hector Langevin agreed to on a division.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAY COMPANIES.
