The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Bill (No. 113) to consolidate the borrowing powers of the Freehold Loan and Savings Company, and to authorise the said company to issue debenture stock.—(Mr. Beaty.)

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 100) respecting the transfer of the Lighthouse at Cape Race, Newfoundland, and its appurtenances, to the Dominion of Canada.—(Mr. Foster.)

SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS BEFORE JUSTICES.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 84) to make further provisions respecting Summary Proceedings before Justices and other Magistrates (from the Senate).—(Mr. Thompson, Antigonish.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 6,

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). I explained to the committee that the object of this section was to provide by legislation of our own the same enactment as is contained in the Statute of 5 George II., which has been recognised in various decisions as in force in the Province of Ontario, and may, probably, be in force in some of the other Provinces, although its operation may not have been recognised in any other Province. The object is, as I have said, to embody that enactment in this Statute and then declare in section 8 that the English Statute would no longer be in force. It was considered desirable that an enactment of that kind should be declared to be in force all over Canada, and in force by our own statute, rather than to have any doubt as to the operation of the English Act in any part of the country. It was suggested in the committee that the passage of clause 6 as it is would probably have the effect of preventing any motion being made to quash a conviction until a general order in the terms of clause 6 was passed. If that is still the sense of the committee, I propose to amend the clause in such a way as to provide that the enactment which is contained in that section should have force of law when so ordered by the court having authority to entertain the motion and quash the conviction. The section then would read:

> The court having authority to quash any conviction, order or other proceeding by or before a justice or justices, may prescribe by general order that no motion to quash any other conviction, order or other proceeding by or before any justice, or brought before the court by certiorari, shall be entertained, unless the defendant is shown to have entered into recognizances, with one or more sufficient sureties, before a justice or justices of the county where such conviction or order has been made, or before a judge or other officer, as may be prescribed by any such general order.

The balance of the section being as printed.

Mr. MILLS. I thought when the committee rose that the fifth clause was under discussion.

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). We carried it, but with an amendment confining it to cases where the jurisdiction was in question.

Mr. MILLS. The same question, I think, applies to this—that is, in any proceeding of this kind the party criminally affected must certify that he will not proceed on any civil right of action he may have, before redress will be given.

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). That is not the present clause. The present clause is clause 6, which provides that security shall be given before a motion is granted to quash a conviction.

Mr. MILLS. But as the fifth clause now stands, as amended, is it not such that the party must waive his civil right before the order is granted?

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). Yes.

Mr. MILLS. Upon what ground can we insist upon a party waiving his civil right, which is a matter under the jurisdiction of another Legislature. How can he be bound by it?

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). Of course we could not take away—and should not attempt to take away—the civil right of the party, but the effect of the clause is to enable a judge, before making an order to set aside a conviction, to lay down, as a condition of that order, that the party shall waive his right, and I think it is clearly competent for us to do so, as the procedure relative to the setting aside of the conviction is criminal procedure.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I think the Minister should consider this matter again. We are doing indirectly what it is admitted we cannot do directly; we are taking away a civil right by giving the judge before whom the application is made power to compel the applicant to forego his civil right, in order that he may get redress for a wrong committed. I do not think Parliament has the right to do so; at all events, it is open to great question. With regard to the sixth clause, as I understand the amendment, I do not think it helps the matter very much. Instead of Parliament prescribing directly that the security for costs shall be given before an application for a certiorari is granted, the hon. gentleman proposes that it shall be a matter of discretion with the judge to require security for the costs.

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). Not quite so. There is no doubt a judge before whom an application is made for a writ to issue has the authority to prescribe security, and this enables the court having general authority over such matters, to make a general order, prescribing what amount of security shall be given as a preliminary to a motion to quash the conviction.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Does the hon. gentleman know that it is the law now that the court shall have authority to make the rules fixing the amount of security, as one of the conditions upon which the application shall be made? If this is not the law now with regard to cases of certiorari, I do not think it would impose any greater hardship upon applicants than is now imposed on them by the law. The effect of it will be that a poor man, however much wronged or injured he may be, cannot get redress unless he enters into security for the payment of costs, and that sometimes may be very difficult. In almost every case of litigation, every subject of Her Majesty has the right to invoke the power of the court for the redress of wrong, without giving security for the costs. Now, why should the man who believes himself to be laboring under an injustice be compelled to give security for the costs any more than the man who sues to recover a debt? It simply places the poor man at a disadvantage as compared with the rich man who is in a better position to get security than the poor man; it is practically discriminating in favor of the rich and against the poor. I do not recollect, though I am under the impression that you require to give security under the present law, in an application for certiorari, and if the law is such I do not think the hon. gentleman should impose that burden on the litigants seeking redress.

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). It is the law now. The hon. gentleman will find it in 5 George II., chap. 19, section 2, which in two cases has been decided to be in force in Ontario. I stated a few moments ago that it was considered to be more convenient to have that provision embodied in the face of the Act, instead of its having the force of law merely by the circumstance of its being in an English Statute. When we embody it in the Act, modified as I propose to modify it by having it subject to the order-making power of the court, the Act will show the whole law on the subject of certiorari and motions to quash convictions. It does not, however, make any radical change in the law.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Does that law apply to all classes of cases? The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), who is an authority in cases of that kind, intimated to the House the other day that security for the costs was not a condition to the obtaining of a writ of certiorari. My impression was the other way, but that hon. gentleman having so stated, I have some doubts on the subject, and especially as to whether it applies to all cases of application for certiorari. Take, for instance, the case of an application made under the Scott Act, where an application can be made.

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). I think it is of universal application as to convictions under the order of a justice of the peace. While the Act is in force in Ontario, however, under the English law, it has not been recognised as being in force in some, or perhaps any of the other Provinces. I think it is better to have it uniform, especially as we are not imposing any undue stringency, but are simply putting the law on the subject on the face of the Act, so that magistrates may be made aware of their right to take security in such cases. There is, no doubt, a good deal in the observation of the hon. gentleman, that it may seem hard on litigants to require them to give security for costs. Still, we know that a writ of certiorari is a writ easily obtained, and it will always be used as a means of defeating an order or conviction, unless we impose some restraint like this, which establishes the good faith, and requires a fair reason for litigating further, which, no doubt, the suitor would be sure to have before he would undertake to give security for costs.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The hon. gentleman provides that upon an application to quash a conviction by a writ of certiorari, the court shall have power to amend the conviction both in matters of form and substance. It is only in a case where there is a real wrong to be righted that there is much likelihood of an application being made for a writ of certiorari. As the law stood before, there was no power to amend; but under this Bill, power to amend is given, and convictions will not be quashed unless they are not sustained by the evidence. That being the case, I do not see the necessity of imposing additional hardship or restrictions upon appellants by compelling them to give security for costs.

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). That is quite true; but the argument only reaches this point, that applications to quash convictions under this Bill are much less likely to succeed, but not less likely to be taken; and the fact that we have made it more difficult for them to succeed, is all the more reason why we should require them to give security.

Mr. LISTER. The amount of the security is not fixed by this section. I think under the English Statute the amount of the security is put at £40 sterling. It is possible under this Act that the courts may make an order directing that security shall be given for a greater sum. I think this section should fix a limit of the amount of security required. With regard to the proceedings to quash a conviction by writ of certiorari, after a little experience I can say that they are somewhat more complicated, especially in the Province of Ontario, than the hon. gentleman gives us to understand. I think litigants should be protected to that extent, that the maximum amount of the security should be fixed by the Statute.

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). I would suggest that it be left to the judges to fix the amount by a general order. It would be difficult for us to fix an amount that would be proper for the different Provinces. There would probably be a difference as to the court in which the motion would be made. The costs incurred would probably be greater in the Province of Ontario than in the Maritime Provinces. My amendment gives power to the court which entertains the motion to quash a conviction, to make a general order prescribing the security, and how the motion shall be made.

Mr. LISTER. I understand that is the intention, but my suggestion is that the courts should not have power to make an order for a greater amount than the law now prescribes.

Mr. LANDERKIN. With regard to the principle of this provision, something may be said both for and against it; but in the practical application of the principle I think it will probably be found to be correct. A case came under my notice this winter of a magistrate having been harassed for having discharged his duty fairly and honestly. An action arose in a town by reason of some boys driving furiously and running against a woman. The husband of the woman brought an action against the boys for furious driving. The magistrate issued a warrant for their arrest. They were arrested and fined, and the father of one of the boys brought an action against the magistrate, as well as the man who had laid the information, and who did it without malice. He did not know the boys; he was only anxious to prevent a recurrence of the thing; but the jury gave a verdict against this unfortunate man, and he had to pay all the costs, amounting to about $200. Then the father of one of the boys brought an action against the magistrate. He harassed the magistrate for about a year; and when the case was tried he did not succeed, although the magistrate was subjected to costs of about $100, and was unable to recover them from the man because he was worthless. I think this clause will meet cases of that kind. It may be said that it will deter poor men from going to law; but I think there are a number of fair-minded people in any community who will be ready to enable a poor man to provide for the costs. I quite favor this clause.

On section 7,

Mr. LISTER. I do not see why the litigant should not be allowed to drop his appeal and take out a writ of certiorari, if he thinks proper, but why should he be debarred from carrying a conviction from the Court of Appeal to a higher court?

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). This is to prevent persons who have been convicted from availing themselves both of the writ of certiorari and of the appeal. They should make the option, either of appealing or taking a writ of certiorari. In certain Statutes it is so provided, and it is not unreasonable to make it uniform.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). A difficulty will arise sometimes from the fact that it is absolutely necessary to give notice of appeal to prevent goods being seized. A man, for instance, is convicted and ordered to pay a fine of $10, for which, if not paid at once, his goods will be seized. To prevent seizure, it may be necessary to give notice of appeal and the necessary recognisances, because, before he could get out a writ of certiorari, especially if the difficulty arose in an outer county, his goods would be seized and sold. A man ought, therefore, to have the option of withdrawing his notice of appeal and getting the judgment of a higher court. But under this clause, the moment he has given notice of appeal he is prohibited from invoking the decision of a higher court, and is bound to go to the Court of Quarter Sessions. It would be fair to prohibit the issue of the writ of certiorari after the conviction has been disposed of by the Court of Sessions, but prior to the meeting of the court the applicant should have the right to the writ of certiorari on abandoning his notice of appeal.

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). We should not at all countenance the practice of allowing appeals to be taken, merely to stay proceedings until the writ of certiorari can be used. That would rather be an abuse of the right of the right to appeal. The section will not have the effect of making fatal to the writ of certiorari the preliminary steps in appeal; but it would be unwise to provide that a writ of certiorari could be gone on with after the appeal was determined, because that would enable the defendants to have two remedies in different courts.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). He should not have the two remedies, but he should not be deprived of the writ of certiorari, simply because he has given notice of appeal to the Quarter Sessions, to prevent his goods being seized or himself being incarcerated. He ought to have the right to abandon proceedings and take his remedy a certiorari.

On section 8,

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). This is to prevent the English Statute being any longer in force.

On section 9,

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). The object of this is to prevent miscarriage of justice arising from want of proof of the proclamation.

Mr. WELDON. The court should take official notice of the proclamation, and there then need be no proof of a question of fact by affidavit.

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). I quite agree with the hon. gentleman, and we will let this clause stand for the present.

On section 10,

Mr. WELDON. I think a provision should be added requiring the registrar to make the return.

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). We will add: "And which shall forthwith be done."

On section 11,

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). The object of that section is merely to extend the time for appeal in certain cases in which it has been found too short in remote localities. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) suggested the other day that I should have these sections reprinted with the proposed alterations, and I would have had that done had it not been that these sections will take their place in the consolidation of the Statutes, so that no confusion can arise. The sections are very long, and I thought it was well to have them passed in their present form, as they will appear in full in the Bill for the consolidation of the Statutes.

On section 12,

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). This is the section which I have substituted for section 9:

No order, conviction or other proceeding shall be quashed or set aside, and no defendant shall be discharged, by reason of any objection that evidence has not been given of a proclamation or order of the Governor General in Council; but such proclamation or order of the Governor General in Council shall be judicially noticed.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General, as follows:—

LANSDOWNE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, for its information, copies of certain despatches from the Right Honorable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and of other papers, with reference to the Aspy Bay affair.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

OTTAWA, 20th April, 1886.

LETTERS PATENT FOR INDIAN LANDS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 102) to expedite the issue of letters patent for Indian lands.

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. gentleman give some explanation?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I stated the other day that this is, I think, word for word, the provisions that are contained in the Dominion Lands Act, and which are to apply to Indian lands.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would tell us what the present provisions are for which these are to be substituted.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not in a position just now to say what it is, but I think it is exactly as before that Lands Act was passed: the certificates are made, and the patent is prepared and then sent to the Minister of Justice, and the certificate being obtained, the patent is engrossed, and so on. But so far as I can recollect, the new mode as adopted for the Dominion Land Act is much shorter, and thus the patents have a better chance of being issued in a very short time. The hon. gentleman will see that by the first clause, the Governor General may appoint a deputy for the purpose of signing these papers, and that signature will have the same force as if the Governor General had signed it himself. For the Department of Indian Affairs, the Superintendent General, or his deputy, or some other person that may be especially appointed for that purpose by an Order in Council, may sign. Then, after that, in his office it goes to the Secretary of State, and the same provision takes place. The Under Secretary of State countersigns the patents after the Great Seal of Canada has been fixed. I think the mode is an improved one, and will expedite business. If the Governor General were absent, of course the patent would have to be delayed, but it is provided that in that case the Deputy Governor may sign them; and the same with the Secretary of State, if he is away, the Under Secretary may sign them, or an official especially appointed for that purpose.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it seems under this arrangement that no one of the officers who are supposed to sign, may sign a patent. It may be signed by a deputy, after having been prepared and signed as prepared by the deputy of the Superintendent, and transmitted under the signature of the Under Secretary of State. You may have no one of the responsible Ministers, nor the head of the Executive, signing the patent at all.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No. But it must have passed through the office of the Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs, and after that the existence of the patent is merely a consequence of the action taken by the Minister or by the Governor General in Council.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not understand that it must necessarily come under the supervision of the Superintendent-General.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If it is an ordinary case, no; but if it is a special case it would come before the Minister who presides over the Department.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The delay in issuing patents for public lands does not often lie in obtaining the final signature of the Governor General after the patent has passed through the routine to which it is subjected. The delay is in the routine proceedings, and especially in getting the document through the Department of Justice. Whether an officer who could perform the work done in the Department of Justice might be attached to the Department of the Superintendent-General, I am not able to say; but it is in connection with the legal branch of the routine proceedings that the delay takes place. I presume delay does not often occur in connection with obtaining the signature of the Governor General; but that there is great delay in issuing patents is manifest to any hon. member who has been commissioned with the duty, as I have been, of looking after patents passing through the Department.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Under the old system every draft patent had to be prepared in the Department of Justice, and when that Department had declared that the patent should be issued the draft was returned to the Department of the Superintendent-General, where it was prepared and engrossed. By this Bill the patent would be prepared in the Department of the Superintendent-General and go through as fast as possible, consistent with the requirements of the measure, which provides that certain officers shall sign patents. Under the present system much time is lost that will be saved by the new mode, which is the mode adopted in the Dominion Lands Act.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in supposing that the patent is prepared in the Department of Justice. It is prepared in the Department of the Secretary of State. The Department of Justice merely reports as to whether the party making application is entitled to the patent or not, and after the patent has been prepared in the Department of the Secretary of State the Minister of Justice or his deputy may sign the patent; but the Department of Justice certainly has nothing to do with the preparation of the patent under the present law.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The patent would always go to the Department of Justice for examination. This would be avoided by the present Bill. One form of patent would be adopted and followed.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. While I am quite willing that all unnecessary precautions and official delay should be got rid of, I view with some degree of apprehension the proposals of the Bill, of which the first clause is now before us. The Department of Justice is no longer to have any responsibility with regard to patents. There is no reason why the Department of Justice should delay in discharging its functions of supervising and approving legal documents; there is no reason why the business should not be promptly and efficiently performed by the Department of Justice. And, apart from that, under the provision of the first clause, coupled with the provisions of the other clauses, it is now proposed to abrogate the provision for the Department of Justice intervening and to make provision under which the patent may be signed by a deputy Secretary of State, by a deputy Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs, and in the end by a deputy Governor—all three deputies. No responsible Minister has to execute the document. I think there ought to be at least one signature of a responsible Minister to documents of this kind. It is only within a few months that very serious frauds or improprieties have been perpetrated in connection with the issue of patents for lands. We do not know how serious or to what extent those frauds have been, because we were told that a commission of enquiry had been appointed and the evidence would be brought before us at some future time, and in convenient phrase the public interests were said to be served by our not knowing anything about the frauds. In the face of the fact that existing precautions have not prevented certain improprieties in relation to the issue of patents, we are asked to relax the existing precautions, though we do not know in what particular they have failed. I do not want any unnecessary formal routine preserved, but I want precautions to be taken that patents shall be issued in proper form and that they shall not be issued to persons not entitled to them. The adoption of provisions whereby patents can be issued under the signatures of deputy heads are not such as are calculated to remove, but rather to increase, the apprehensions to be drawn from recent events.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If in this case we had only one signature affixed to a document of this kind, I would agree with the remarks of the member for West Durham, because, although we have full confidence in our officers, we should always guard against wrongdoing. It is no insult or injury to an officer to take necessary precautions, because they are not taken against the men individually, but they are taken to minimise the temptations to which any man may be subjected. In this case there is the guarantee of three signatures, the signatures of parties who are not in the same Department, and it can scarcely be supposed that three officers in three different Departments, all of high positions, will combine to issue false patents. The Dominion notes are not signed by the Finance Minister, but by two officers; nevertheless, we do not suppose there is danger, though there might be a combination formed. I repeat that if there was only one signature to a patent it should be that of a responsible Minister; but in this case there are the signatures of three officers—the deputy Governor, appointed by the Governor General, an officer who must occupy a high position, the Under Secretary of State or some other officer appointed by the Governor General in Council; then you have the signature of the Registrar General, or the officer acting as such, who is to register this document, which is another guarantee; then the Great Seal is to be affixed by the officer who has the keeping of that instrument. With these guarantees, I think we can safely allow this new machinery to go into play.

Mr. BLAKE. As to the signature of the Registrar General, that is nothing; it is merely to authenticate the fact that the document has been registered. As to the signature of the deputy Governor General, I have no doubt the hon. gentleman advises the Governor General to appoint respectable civil servants, and I have no doubt they will not advise His Excellency to recommend by a Message that an extra sum be paid for this duty. It will be an extra duty, and we know how extra duties are performed. It will be a purely formal matter; he will not investigate it at all, and, therefore, you may wipe out the signature of the deputy Governor General, so far as that is concerned. Now, since you are abandoning legal departmental supervision altogether, and at the same time making these other provisions, there should be one or other of the two official signatories below the Minister's—the Secretary of State or the Department of Indian Affairs; it should be signed by one responsible Minister. If the Under Secretary of State signs, then the Superintendent General ought to sign; if the deputy Superintendent General signs, then it ought to be the Secretary of State, so that we may have some one to whom to really look, politically, for the proper conduct of the office. The hon. gentleman says another provision takes place with reference to Dominion notes. Well, most of the Dominion notes are for comparatively insignificant amounts; the number of them is very large, and probably the difficulty of the responsible Minister making so many signatures would be very great. Balancing conveniences, it may have been thought wise that no greater precaution should be taken as to them than has been taken, though if the newspapers tell us truly, there are some counterfeit two's out at this moment. However that may be, I think it is a very different thing providing for the issue of patents to Dominion lands, which may be of very great value in one instrument, and of which, after all, not a great many will be signed by the Department of Indian Affairs, in the course of a year, and the issue of Dominion notes.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman knows that the number of patents issued by the Indian Department is small; very few are issued during the year. The area of land at the disposal of the Indian Department is very little, and there is no reason, so far as I can see, why the Superintendent General should not always sign the patent. I venture to say that at no period in the history of this country has there ever been one thousand patents issued from the Indian Department in one year, and that being the case, there is no reason why the signature of the Superintendent General should not be attached. With regard to the Department of Justice, there is certainly as much danger of irregularity in the issue of patents from the Indian Department, as in no other way could the patent come under the supervision of the Department of Justice, and the signature of some official of that Department be attached. I think we ought always to have the signature of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs to patents with reference to Indian lands, and there would be no delay if that provision was required.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY—EXTINGUISHMENT OF THE INDIAN TITLE.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. LAURIER. Before you leave the Chair, I desire to call the attention of the House to the neglect by the Government of the grievances of the half-breeds in the North-West Territories. The subject is a vast one; indeed it is so vast that I think it better not to bring under one single heading all the different grievances from which the half-breeds suffered, all the different derelictions of duty of which the Government, in my judgment, have been guilty, but to confine myself to a single one—the extinguishment of the Indian title, in so far as the half-breeds are concerned. And in bringing this matter to the attention of the House I could have wished that the Government had brought down the information which was to be laid before the House, according to promises often made and often repeated, but not yet fulfilled. The Government and their organs have told us time and again that the Government were in possession of information and evidence which, when it was placed before the House, would show them to be perfectly blameless. Yet, strange to say, by a strange contradiction, owing, I suppose, to the modesty or the sense of dignity of the Government, they have so far kept under a bushel the light which would have placed their conduct in a color so different from what it is now. The next time the Government should not stand on their dignity or their modesty to such an extent. If they have any evidence, it is time they brought it to the House; if they have any defence to make, it is time they should make it. But without anticipating at all the other subjects which may come up afterwards for discussion, without anticipating the other grievances from which the half-breeds have suffered, in so far as the grievance of which I now complain is concerned, I venture to say without fear of successful contradiction that the record will show the Government to be guilty, and to be guilty without a single extenuating circumstance, without a single shadow of excuse. It has always been the policy of England, ever since she has had establishments in North America, to compensate the Indians for the dispossession of their lands. England, and all other Christian nations who planted colonies on this continent, always felt that it was not contrary to moral law to take possession, and even forcible possession, of territories which were roamed over rather than possessed by savage nations — territories which in their hands must forever have remained barren and unproductive, but which under civilised rule would afford homes and happiness to teeming millions. It has always been held as a doctrine of international law that when such territories were discovered, the discovering nation had paramount authority therein; at the same time it is to the credit of England that she is the one of all civilised nations which gave the fullest development to the doctrine that the Indians were not to be ruthlessly thrown back before advancing civilisation without some fair and adequate compensation. That doctrine was based, not so much on principles of abstract justice as on motives of humanity and prudence. I hold in my hand the opinion of eminent counsel, some of whom have a name in English history, by whom this doctrine is compressed into a few short sentences. It is not dated, but the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) informs me that it is about the date of 1685. It is to the following effect:—

"By the law of nations, if any people make discovery of any country of barbarians, the Prince of the people who make the discovery hath the right of soil and government of the place, and no people can plant there without the consent of the Prince, or of such persons to whom his right is devolved and conveyed; the practice of all nations has been according to this, and no people have been suffered to take up land but by the consent and license of the Government or proprietors under the Prince's title, whose people made the first discovery, and upon their submission to the laws of the place, and contribution to the public charge of the place, and the payment of such rent and other value for the soil as the proprietors for the time being require; and though it hath been and still is the usual practice of all proprietors, to give their Indians some recompense for their land, and so seem to purchase it from them, yet it is not done for want of sufficient title from the King or Prince who hath the right of discovery, but out of prudence and Christian charity, lest otherwise the Indians might have destroyed the first planters, who are usually too few to defend themselves, or refuse all commerce and conversation with the planters."

This opinion is signed, amongst others, by William Williams, Joseph Holt and Henry Pollexfeu. The principles here recorded have hitherto been acknowledged and acted upon by all British Governments on this continent; and I may say that they became at an early date standard principles of our policy; and when the North-West Territories were acquired by this Government, these principles were part of the unwritten law of this country. It is not to my knowledge that at the date of that important transaction the future of Indians in the territory was debated at all between the purchaser and the vendor; but if it was not debated, it was not because the Indians were ignored. It was because the principle was admitted without being mentioned, that the Indians should be treated as all Indians under British rule had been treated. But if the Indians were not ignored, there was in the territory another population, the half-breeds, who were totally and completely ignored by the Government of the time. They were sprung from European hunters and the Indians, and their character partook of the character of both nations; but in point of education and experience, though vastly inferior to the whites in point of intelligence and adaptability to civilisation, they were far superior to the Indians. Amongst other advantages which they possessed over the Indians, they had a better conception of their own rights, and greater ability to proclaim and defend them. What their conception of their rights was, is well put by Mr. Tuttle in his history of Manitoba:

"The feeling of the French half-breeds may be briefly expressed as this: that they questioned the right of the Dominion Government to take possession of what they considered their country without their consent."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to set forth here, or to recall, all the different rights claimed at the time by the half-breeds. I confine myself simply to one point, that is to say, the extinguishment of the Indian title in so far as the half-breeds were concerned. They rebelled; they objected to the further progress of the Canadian Government into what they considered their country, until their rights were recognised and guaranteed; and, after the rebellion, the Government had to admit, and did admit, that the same prudent principles that applied to the Indians should apply to the Half-breeds. The Government admitted that as the original possessors of the soil they were entitled to the same compensation as the Indians, and that since they were to be deprived henceforth of the rights of the soil, they should be treated by the Government as the Indians had been treated. Though the principle was the same, its application in the two cases could not be identical, because of the difference in the state of civilisation of the two races. The rule universally applied to the Indians has been to put them upon reserves, and there to protect and defend them against white encroachments, and to assist them by money and otherwise during their advancement from savage to civilised life. In the case of the half-breeds this rule could not be applied, for the simple reason that they were too far advanced towards civilisation to require it. They were more ignorant and less civilised than the whites, but their minds were adapted to civilisation, and the decision arrived at by the Government was to give them a grant of land. This grant of land has been the object of two different Statutes; and it may be well here to recall the terms of those Statutes, in view of the further discussion of this subject. The first was the Act of 1870, which provided as follows:—

"And whereas it is expedient, towards the extinguishment of the Indian title to the lands in the Province, to appropriate a portion of such ungranted lands, to the extent of 1,400,000 acres thereof, for the benefit of the families of the half-breed residents, it is hereby enacted that, under regulations to be from time to time made by the Governor General in Council, the Lieutenant-Governor shall select such lots or tracts in such parts of the Province as he may deem expedient, to the extent aforesaid, and divide the same among the children of the half-breed heads of families residing in the Province at the time of the said transfer to Canada."

In 1874 a similar Statute was passed, extending to the heads of families those provisions which had been previously applied to minors alone. It has often been stated, and perhaps stated with truth, that this settlement had been in some respects injudicious—that it had proved to be of scarcely any benefit to the half-breed population, as they had been almost wholly deprived of the soil by the cunning and dishonesty of white speculators. These reports, as I have said, have not been without foundation; and experience has shown that it would be more conducive to the interest of the half-breeds if some restrictions were provided in our legislation which would secure to them the advantages which it was the intention of the law to give them. But however satisfactory the settlement may have been from the philanthropic point of view, it had this effect, that it gave protection to the half-breeds of Manitoba, and secured the peace of Manitoba, which has been observed since. It does not require argument to prove that the same treatment should be extended to the half-breeds of the North-West Territories as was extended to those of Manitoba—that the half-breeds of the North-West are entitled to the same rights as were acknowledged and granted to the half-breeds of Manitoba; and it is acknowledged as a consequence that long, long ago the claims of the half-breeds of the North-West Territories should have been settled in a manner similar to that in which the claims of the half-breeds of Manitoba were settled. It has been made a reproach against the Mackenzie Administration that during the time they were in power they had not settled that question. Sir, the Mackenzie Administration is not here on trial, and all the reproaches which can be made against them, if proved to be true, would rebound against the present Administration with tenfold increased force. If the Mackenzie Administration was at all deficient in its duty, which I do not admit, the present Government were ten times more guilty of negligence of not having, up to the year 1885, settled that question. But there was a paramount reason, it seems to me, one which must commend itself at once to the attention of the House, why this question was not settled during the Mackenzie Administration. As long as Mr. Laird was not appointed Governor, and up to the time he reached the Province, there was practically nothing in the territories to show the half-breeds there had been a change of régime at all; moreover, the question could not be settled unless there was in the country some administration of some kind, and until Mr. Laird had reached the territories, in the fall of 1877, there was practically nothing whatever to show there had been a change in the condition of the people, as the people were not interfeared with, and remained practically as they were before. But as soon as Mr. Laird reached the territories, in the fall of 1877, he was approached by bands of half breeds, who made to him the very natural prayer that they should be treated in the same manner absolutely as the half breeds of Manitoba. He was met by two different kinds of applications: First, the application of the half-breeds of the North-West Territories, who represented they had absolutely the same rights as the half-breeds of Manitoba, and should receive the same treatment; and second, the application of the half-breeds who had formerly belonged to Manitoba, but had been absent at the time of the enumeration, and had not therefore participated in the grant made to the half-breeds of Manitoba. Certainly, it was manifest that as to this last class they should participate in the grant which was made to the half-breeds of Manitoba, as it was only through an accident they had been prevented participating in it; and as to the others, though they had resided, at the time of the transfer, in the territories, the same justice should be applied to them as was applied to the half-breeds of Manitoba. This question occupied the attention of Mr. Laird and his Council in the session of the North-West Council, which took place in 1878. They passed a resolution to this effect which, though well known, can bear repetition:

"That in view, however, of the fact that grants of land or issues of scrip were made to the half-breeds of Manitoba towards the extinguishment of the Indian title to the lands of that Province, there will undoubtedly be general dissatisfaction among the half-breeds of the said territories unless they receive some like consideration."

In a further resolution the Council sets forth that it would be prepared, in any such grants, to couple them with the reservation, so as to put them out of the reach of white speculators. Those resolutions were passed in August, 1878, and were sent to the Government, but by the time they reached Ottawa there was a change of Government and the present Administration came into office, so that they came into office just as this question was ripe for settlement. In the Session of 1879 the question occupied the attention of this Parliament, and an Act was passed in which power was given the Government to satisfy any claims in connection with the extinguishment of the Indian title, preferred by half-breeds of the North-West Territories, outside the limits of Manitoba, on the 15th July, 1870, by granting land to such persons, to such extent, and terms, and conditions, as may be deemed expedient. These were the terms asked by the Government from this Parliament, and granted by this Parliament. They do not contain mention of any special mode of settlement, but the whole matter is left to the discretion of the Government. The only thing to which the attention of the Government was directed, was that they should take some means of extinguishing the Indian title in the North-West Territory, in so far as the half-breeds are concerned. Why do the terms of the Act differ so widely from those of the Act of Manitoba? Why are the terms of settlement left altogether to the discretion of the Government instead of their being made directory as they are in the Statute of Manitoba? The reason is that the Government, did not then contemplate to settle the half-breed question in the Territories in the same manner as in Manitoba, but contemplated disposing of it in some other way. By the papers which are brought down, we find that, as early as December, 1878, Colonel Dennis, who, at that time, was Deputy Minister of the Interior, had put before the Minister a memorandum in which the whole half-breed question was stated for his consideration. In the opening sentences of the memorandum, Colonel Dennis speaks as follows:—

"He respectfully submits to the Minister that it is expedient, with as little delay as possible, to deal with the claims to consideration preferred by the half-breeds of the North-West Territories."

He then states:

"Some uneasiness is felt by the half-breed element in the Territories in consequence of no steps having yet been taken towards the recognition of the demands put forward on their behalf. It must be freely admitted they have a claim to favorable consideration; and the question is—how is that claim to be satisfied, so as to benefit the half-breeds, and, at the same time, benefit the country? Certainly the experience gained in carrying out the policy adopted in regard to the half-breeds of Manitoba—that is, absolute grants of land to the parents and children, respectively—has not been such as would justify a simular policy with regard to the half-breeds of the North-West Territories. Indeed, it is anything but probable that a proposition of that nature could be again carried in Parliament. What, then, are we to do for them? They have, as natives, as good a right to protection of the Government as the Indians, and, unfortunately, they are very little better able than are the Indians to take care of themselves.

"It is therefore evident that one or other of three courses must be pursued with respect to them:—

"1. To treat them as wards of the Government, in effect make a treaty with them, as with the Indians, and look forward to their remaining for many years in their present semi-barbarous state.

"2. To give an absolute issue of scrip, to a reasonable extent, to each individual, and then let them take their chances of living or starving in the future; or

"3. To offer them certain inducements to settle on land and learn to farm—especially raising cattle."

Then he went on and made this statement, among other very significant statements:

"He is of opinion that further measures should be adopted to cultivate and maintain relation with our Indians and half-breed populations, calculated to attach them to us, and to convince them that the Government is desirous of fulfilling its obligations to them in the utmost good faith."

And he concluded with these pregnant words:

"The undersigned respectfully requests for the whole question discussed in this memorandum, the early consideration of the Minister of the Interior, in order, if thought desirable, that a measure may be prepared, embodying such policy as may be decided upon, in good time, for the ensuing session of Parliament."

That was said in December 1878. This memorandum was sent to different persons in the North-West who were conversant with the condition of affairs of the half-breeds, with the object of having their views on the question. It was sent, amongst others, to Archbishop Taché, and I may say that all the other persons to whom the memorandum was sent, were unanimous in saying that the half-breeds were entitled to some special favor at the hands of the Government. Archbishop Taché, amongst other things, said:

"It must be freely admitted that the half-breeds of the North-West have a claim to favorable consideration. Great uneasiness is felt by them in consequence of no steps having been taken in their behalf. A liberal policy on the part of the Government would attract to its side a moral and physical power, which the present critical relations of the various tribes of Indians towards each other, and towards the Government, would prove of the greatest value to the Dominion. On the other hand, the half-breed element, if dissatisfied, would turn a standing menace to the peace and prosperity of the Territories. There is no doubt that the state of affairs in the Territories in relation to the Indians and half-breeds is calling for the serious consideration of the Government, and measures should be adopted to cultivate and maintain relations with the half-breed population calculated to attach them to us. The result depends, in a great measure, on the way the half-breeds will be treated. Friendly disposed, they will mightily contribute to the maintenance of peace; dissatisfied, they would not only add to the difficulty, but render the establishment of the country the next thing to an impossibility. The half-breeds are a highly sensitive race; they keenly resent injury or insult, and daily complain on that point. In fact, they are daily humiliated with regard to their origin, by the way they are spoken of, not only in newspapers but also in official and semi-official documents. Everyone acknowledges the desirability for the half-breeds to settle definitely on lands to cultivate them. Here is a scheme I take the liberty to propose. I esteem the half-breed population actually in the North-West at about twelve hundred families. Let the Government make twelve reserves for them, in the very places the half-breeds will like to have them. Each reserve should be for one hundred families at least and contain an area of twelve square miles of available land—that is to say, the extent of four townships. All the half-breeds, men, women and children, residing in the North-West on the 1st January, 1879, ought to receive two non-negotiable scrips for eighty acres of land each, to be located by them in any one of the twelve above-mentioned reserves. Said lands could neither be sold, mortgaged nor taxed before they should have passed through the hands of, at least, the third generation of those who received them, or of their representatives. I say at least, because I am strongly inclined to believe that it is desirable that such lands be entirely unalienable; and such an idea cannot seem unreasonable to those who consider the advantages deriving from a similar policy with regard to real and unalienable estates of noblemen. Raise the half-breeds to the condition of landlords; you will thereby confer a real benefit on them, and we will not see a repetition of the regrettable occurrence which took place in Manitoba. The only traffic of land which I would like to see allowed would be the exchange of a full lot for another full lot between the half-breeds, even it should be in different reserves. That would be no encouragement to speculators, but great facility to the half-breeds, especially when they marry."

And he concluded in this manner, which should have commended itself at once to the consideration of the Government:

"It is desirable that the half-breed question should be settled without any further delay. The required legislation ought to be passed in the coming session of the Legislature. Immediately after, inspectors ought to be appointed, and I would particularly recommend Mr. Angus McKay as one of the inspectors."

Such were the views expressed by Archbishop Taché. It must be admitted that upon anything which affected the condition of the half-breeds no one could speak with greater authority. The plan he proposed was not adopted by the Government. Of this I make no complaint at this time. Upon this it is not my province at this moment to offer any comment. I neither praise nor blame the Government for that now; but the fact for which the Government are blameable and are to be arraigned before the people of the country is that, while their attention was called in 1879 to this matter, for six long years they remained idle and did nothing towards the solution of this question. They asked for the views of others. What in the world did they ask them for, when, having had those views, they put them in the pigeon-holes and did nothing to solve the question upon which they asked for them? The neglect of the Government upon this question is all the more unpardonable, in view of the fact that all the parties whose views they had asked for had told them that it was expedient and necessary to give immediate attention to this matter. Colonel Dennis had begged the early attention of the Minister of the Interior and the Government to that question. Bishop Taché had told them it was of paramount importance to give satisfaction to the half-breeds, to treat them with justice and fairness, to impress them with the view that the Government were to do all they should do; and yet, in the face of all that, the Government for six long years did not act at all. It is obvious, it does not require any argument to establish that it was of paramount necessity not only that the Government should act, but that they should act at once upon this matter; and the necessity was enforced, it was made still more apparent, by the earnestness with which the statement of that question and of all other questions affecting the half-breeds was pressed upon them, not only by the half-breeds themselves, but by the North-West Council, by the settlers, by the missionaries, by the officials, by everybody almost who took an interest at all in the North-West. In the month of May, 1880, Charles McKay and sixteen others petitioned the Government upon this matter. They represented that some of them belonged to Manitoba at the time the census was taken, but that they were absent at the time of the enumeration, and they asked to be placed upon the same footing as the others, and to have scrip issued to them; they pointed out that the North-West half-breeds were entitled to the same treatment as the Manitoba half-breeds, and they asked for the early issue of a commission; they also made some other demands. In the same month Octave Majeau and others from Edmonton petitioned the Government and made the same demands. In September, 1881, Antoine Lapierre, from the Qu'Appelle district, petitioned the Government and demanded the same treatment for the half-breeds of the North-West Territory as had been granted to the half-breeds of Manitoba. In August, 1882, John Simpson and forty-two others petitioned the Government, complaining of the treatment they had received from the Ontario and Qu'Appelle Land Company. On the 4th September, 1882, Gabriel Dumont and others from the Saskatchewan River petitioned the Government, representing that they were newly established on the lands, and asking for a survey and the issue of a commission. On the 9th November, 1883, William Bremner and thirty-two others, also from the Saskatchewan River, petitioned the Government, their chief complaint being about surveys. On the 13th January, 1882, Mr. Richardson, whose name is now well known in connection with the North-West, also gave his advice to the Government and in this manner:

"Dear Colonel DENNIS,—Having passed three years in the North-West, and during that period seen a good deal of the half-breed population, the following, induced by the remarks of the Right Hon. the Premier in my presence, last Saturday, may not be out of place, the subject of dealing with the half-breed element of the North West being, as I then gathered, intended for early discussion. These half-breeds claim and insist that as a distinct class they have a share in the Indian title to the lands outside of Manitoba, which has not been extinguished, and, as such distinct class, entitled equally with the half-breeds of Manitoba, to special consideration. That grounds exist for such contention appears by reference to the Statutes of Canada, 1870, chapter 3, section 31. Admitting these half-breeds might (as some few have, but now regret) joined in the Indian treaties, I am convinced that such a contingency is not probable, but that, if requested, they would reject the offer; besides, I do not think their joining in the Indian treaties would be in the public interest, but decidedly the opposite. How best to deal with the element, has, as you are aware, been considered, and you already hold my views on the subject. I may, however, be permitted to express the opinion, that opportunities now present themselves for removing the dissatisfaction existing among these people, and securing their goodwill towards the Government, because, 1st, their former occupation as hunters is gone; 2nd, they are, as a class, destitute. A further reason for urging, as I respectfully do, early action is that they are scattered among the Indians, and latterly subjected to the evil influences of leading spirits of the Manitoba troubles of 1870, who, during the past season, have been traversing the country, doing at least 'no good.'"

On the 6th June, 1881, Mr. Lawrence Clark, a member of the North-West Council, brought before the Council the question of the non-enumerated Manitoba half-breeds, and he did it in this language:

"The undersigned has the honor to represent, for the consideration of Your Honor, the Lieutenant Governor in Council:

"That there are resident within the North-West Territory, in various settlements, but more particularly, so far as the personal knowledge of the undersigned extends, about Edmondton, Carlton, Duck Lake, St. Laurent, Prince Albert and Qu'Appelle, a number of half-breeds who were residents in what is now a Province of Manitoba, at, and before the 15th day of July, 1870, but who, in the interval between this date and the distribution of scrip and lands especially provided in the terms of transfer, have removed from their residence, and are now living in the North-West Territory.

"That the undersigned, from such information as he has been able to collect, is quite convinced the total number of the above described class of half-breeds is not large, and that proof of their claims has long since, in the majority of cases, been taken by Mr. Ryan, before his commission lapsed, or since by the local land agent and that the proof for some time back has been in the possession of the Department of the Interior at Ottawa.

"That these half-breeds, in many instances were not aware of the sittings of the commissioners in Manitoba, being limited in point of time, and in nearly every instance, even had they been aware of such being the case, were not possessed of means to bear the expense consequent upon attendance thereat.

"That the general feeling of the community is that these half-breeds, possessing even rights with those who have already received scrip for lands in Manitoba, have not had the measure of justice meted out to them to which by the terms of surrender they were entitled.

"The undersigned considers the subject as one of considerable importance, very desirable for the peace, welfare and good government of that territory, and should be taken and adjusted by the Dominion Government with as little further delay as possible."

On the following day the same gentleman brought before the Council the question of the half-breeds resident in the territories, and he did it in this language:

"That the half-breeds have already been recognised as possessing rights in the same soil, subject to which the Dominion accepted the transfer of the territories, and while ample provision has been made for those resident in Manitoba on the 15th July, 1870, nothing, so far, has been done towards extinguishing that portion of the Indian title to lands in the territories outside of the Province of Manitoba, as originally formed by the Act of 1870.

"The undersigned further draws attention to the fact that, by law, the half-breeds are excluded from the benefits conferred upon Indians.

"The undersigned has been given to understand, several petitions from various quarters have been presented to the Government on the subject of the half-breeds, particularly referred to, but no notice was taken thereof.

"That the undersigned knows that a considerable portion of these half-breeds were and are still residents of the electoral district of Lorne, and feels, as the electoral representative of that district, his duty to bring under notice their grievance in the hope that some action may be taken at an early day towards removing what seems to me to be just cause of complaint.

"The undersigned recommends that, through your Honor in council, the attention of His Excellency be respectfully drawn to the subject and he be memorialised to direct the attention of his Ministers to the position of the half-breeds, who at the transfer of Canada were and still are residents of the North-West Territory, and have not become parties to Indian treaties, and the taking of such steps as may lead to a speedy adjustment of the grievances they labor under."

That petition was forwarded to the Government by Mr. Laird, then Lieutenant-Governor, and in an accompanying letter he specially drew attention to this subject in the following words:—

"These memorials were presented to the Council of the North-West Territories at its recent session, and as they relate to subjects exclusively within the control of the Dominion Government and Parliament, I was requested, by a resolution of Council passed on the 10th instant, to transmit copies thereof to be laid before His Excellency the Governor General, and to express the hope that His Excellency may be pleased to draw the attention of his Ministers to the grievances complained of."

Then, Sir, this subject also attracted the attention of the council. On the 8th October, 1881, there was a meeting of the settlers of Prince Albert in which this very subject was taken into consideration, and at which the following resolution was passed:—

"Whereas the Indian title in this territory has not become extinct, and the old settlers and the half-breed population of Manitoba were granted scrip in commutation of such title, and such allowance has not been made to those resident in the territory.—Resolved, that the Right Honorable the Minister of the Interior be requested to grant such scrip to those settlers, thus placing them on an equal footing with their confrères in Manitoba."

Ten days later there was another meeting at the same place, and a similar resolution was passed. Then, as the subject did not receive any consideration from the Government, though their attention had been so often called to it, the North-West Council again took up the matter, and at a session of Council held in the month of October, 1883, the following resolution was passed, addressed to the Government at Ottawa:

"Your memorialists further pray that those half-breeds in the Territories who have not participated in the arrangement to extinguish the half-breed claims in Manitoba, should enjoy the same rights as accorded half-breeds in that Province."

And, Sir, as late as the month of December, 1883, Mr. Jackson, whose name is well known now in this House, and who is a member of the North-West Council, addressed a communication to the Minister of the Interior (Sir David Macpherson), in which he said:

"You will pardon the liberty I now take in addressing you privately, when I tell you that it is at the special request of a large deputation of half-breeds that I do so. They, in common with the country, have heard of the generally satisfactory settlement of the 'mile belt' and reserve question, and urge, perhaps with reason, that if their own grievances, upon which the Government have been repeatedly petitioned and memorialised, were brought personally to your notice, some immediate action would be taken. Under any circumstances there would not be very many to deal with, and the settlement of their claims need not be a troublesome one. But there are half-breeds in the Territories who have never received anything from the Government, and who, it has been admitted, are entitled to some consideration."

Besides all these representations, Father Vegreville, Father André, and several other persons in the North-West, wrote letters of remonstrance to the Government. Besides all these, Father Leduc, Mr. Maloney, Bishop Grandin and several others had interviews with the Government upon this. Besides all these, my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Cameron), in 1884, brought this matter to the consideration of this House. Besides all these, and notwithstanding all these, the Government, though thus pressed, harassed, and besieged, never lifted a finger towards the solution of that question. During all these years, while the Department was thus filled up with letters, petitions, resolutions and representations, the Minister always remained silent, calm, majestic, but as immovable as an Egyptian sphinx while it is covered up by the sand of the desert. Furthermore, at last, in 1884, the half-breeds, despairing that they would ever get redress of their grievances by any petition that they could send to Ottawa, by any delegation which they could send to Ottawa, by any remonstrances and representations which they could make to Ottawa, finally sent for Louis Riel. Still the Government took no notice and took no action. The Government, if they were blamed at all, were blameable then. They knew that Riel had an uncontrollable character, they knew that his presence must prove dangerous to the public peace. They were warned of his doings; they were warned by their own officers of the agitation that was then taking place, but still they never lifted a finger towards solving that question. What is the reason, Sir, of that long persistent inaction? Was it simply apathy? No; if it had been merely apathy, the unceasing torrent of complaints and remonstrance which deluged the Department of the Interior, would at last have moved them to action. It was not apathy. I say that that inaction was wilful and designed; it was because the Government had come to the conclusion that they would not give to the half-breeds of the North-West the same treatment, the same favors, the same rights and privileges which had been granted to the half-breeds of Manitoba. Mr. Speaker, I arraign the Government for this, I charge this upon the Government, that though they asked advice as to the best manner of dealing with that question, though they had been told by all those whom they had consulted that these half-breeds must have the same privileges as the half-breeds of Manitoba, that such precautions should be taken as would place their grants beyond the reach of the white speculator, the Government had come to the conclusion that they would not follow the advice given to them, that they would not give the half-breeds of the North-West Territories the same privileges which had been given to the half-breeds of Manitoba. The Government had come to the conclusion that the half-breeds should not be treated as a special class, should not be treated as half-breeds, but that they would have to make their choice as to whether they should be treated like Indians or white men. On a former occasion, speaking on this subject, I quoted the language of the Prime Minister, which made that point perfectly clear, and it can bear repetition here. On 26th March, 1885, the Prime Minister, in speaking on this question, expressed his opinion in this way:

"As a whole the half-breeds have been told that if they desire to be considered as Indians, there are most liberal reserves, that they could go with the others; but that if they desired to be considered white men, they would get 160 acres of land, as homesteads. But they are not satisfied with that; they want to get land scrip of equal quantity—I think upwards of 200 acres—and then yet as a matter of course, this homestead as well."

Why they wanted to get as a matter of course their homesteads as well. The half-breeds of Manitoba had been given free grants of land in which they were in possession, and besides that a lot of land had been given to every head of a family amongst them, 160 acres, and the half-breeds of the North-West claimed absolutely the same privileges as had been given to the half-breeds of Manitoba. But on 26th March last the policy of the Dominion Government was that they should not be treated as had been the half-breeds of Manitoba. They should not be treated as half-breeds; they would have to make choice either one way or the other; they would have to be either Indians or whites. If Indians, let them go to their reserves; if white men let them take their homesteads. That was the policy of the Government, and it was acted upon. A commission was issued. What were the instructions given to the commission? Were they to treat those half-breeds as the half-breeds of Manitoba had been treated? No. The instructions to the commission were simply to give the half-breeds of the North-West a plot of land of 100 acres as a homestead and nothing more. The instructions to the commissioners were to give:

"To each half-breed head of a family resident in the North-West Territories, outside of the limits of Manitoba, previous to the 15th day of July, one thousand eight hundred and seventy, the lot or portion of land of which he is at the present time in bona fide and undisputed occupation, by virtue of residence upon and cultivation thereof, to the extent of 160 acres, and if the lot or portion of land of which he is in bona fide occupation as aforesaid should be less than 160 acres, the difference to be made up to him by an issue of scrip, redeemable in land, at the rate of one dollar per acre, and in the case of each half-breed head of a family residing in the North-West Territory previous to the 15th day of July, one thousand eight hundred and seventy, who is not at present in bona fide occupation of any land, scrip to be issued, redeemable in land, to the extent of one hundred and sixty dollars."

There was the policy of the Government; and, Sir, this policy was elucidated further by the First Minister himself in a speech delivered in this House on 6th July last. There he gave the motives for that policy. He not only gave the policy, but he gave the motives actuating the Government in adopting it. He said:

"Well, Sir, what was the Government to do? We had all our friends; we had the Archbishop; we had even Mr. Jackson, of whom the hon. gentleman has spoken, who now represents the half-breeds in the North-West Council—we had him stating that there should be no grant given to the half-breeds except on condition of five years of continuous occupation. There was a conflict of opinion. I will not trouble the House with showing that there was an infinity of opinions. An infinity of advice was offered to the Government, how best to deal with the half-breeds, and the Government had only one thing to think of—what was the best for the people, what was it best to do for them, to save them even against their own improvidence, and at the same time not to keep back the settlement of the country. This, Mr. Speaker, may account to any reasonable man for what the hon. gentleman talks of as delay. They were not suffering anything. The half-breed had his own lot. He was not cultivating the land that he had. Giving him his land and giving him more land was giving him nothing. The nomadic half-breed, who had been brought up to hunt, having had merely his shanty to repair to in the dead season, when there was no game—what advantage was it to him to give him 160 or 240 acres more? It was of no use to him whatever, but it would have been of great use to the speculators who were working on him and telling him that he was suffering. Oh! how awfully he was suffering—ruined, destroyed, starving, because he did not get 240 acres somewhere else, or the scrip for it, that he might sell it for $50. No, Sir, the whole thing is a farce."

So you see, Mr. Speaker, here is the whole policy and the motives for that policy. Because the half-breed of Manitoba had been injudicious, the half-breed of the North-West was to get nothing; because the half-breed of Manitoba had sold his scrip for $50, the half-breed of the North-West Territories was to get no scrip at all. That was the reason of the Government's policy—that was the cause of the policy. The Government came to this conclusion, that the half breed of the North-West should not get the same treatment as the half-breed of Manitoba, but they did not dare to announce their policy. They wanted to carry it out, but to carry it out on the sly—to carry it out, but not before the eyes of the people of the country. They knew very well that if they were to tell the half-breeds of the North-West Territories that they would not be treated as had been the half-breeds of Manitoba, and would not get as much land as the half-breeds of that Province, this would be objected to, not only by the half-breeds, but by the white settlers, the officials, the missionaries, by all those whose advice the Government had sought. Having come to that conclusion they came to adopt the fatal policy of to-morrow, to-morrow, to-morrow. They trusted that by resorting to that policy of to morrow, by carrying out that policy, but not announcing it, by-and-bye something would arise and the matter would be forgotten. But the matter was not forgotten. Those men rose in rebellion, and then immediately the Government came down on their knees. What they had refused hitherto they telegraphed in haste to their commissioner to grant at once. They telegraphed their commissioner to grant the half-breeds of the North-West Territories what had been claimed for them. Sir, the Prime Minister having spoken the language which I last quoted, went on to say:

"Now, Mr. Speaker, we, at the last moment, made concessions, and we did it for the sake of peace."

At the last moment? Not at the last moment. Not at the eleventh hour but at the fourteenth hour, when blood had been shed, when lives had been lost, when injury had been inflicted which no power under heaven could repair, then the Government yielded to the demands of those people, but not before then. And I call the attention of Parliament to the motives which were assigned by the Government for that fatal and mistaken policy. What were the motives given? The Government would not give the half-breeds of the North-West Territory the same privileges as had been given to the half-breeds of Manitoba. The half-breeds of Manitoba had been improvident in the management of their property, and therefore the Government would not give the half-breeds of the North-West any property at all. The half-breeds in Manitoba had sold their scrip for $50, and therefore the Government would not give the half-breeds of the North-West any scrip whatever. The half-breeds of Manitoba had sold their lands to speculators and had been despoiled by speculators, and therefore the Government would despoil the half-breeds of the North-West of the whole of their lands. Sir, because the half-breeds of Manitoba had been injudicious in the management of their affairs, it was monstrous that the half-breeds of the North-West should not be accorded any rights, and that the Government should break faith with them. If the half-breeds of Manitoba had been injudicious in the management of their property, there was a remedy. The remedy was the one suggested by Archbishop Taché and by all those conversant with the matter. The remedy was to couple with the legislation some safeguard, whereby the grants of land might be kept to the people, and might be put beyond the reach of white speculators. But who has ever heard of such a monstrous policy as the policy which was propounded and carried out by this Government, namely, that because the half-breeds of Manitoba had been injudicious in the management of their property, the half-breeds of the North-West should have no property whatever? It is again worth while to consider the motives of the Government. They say the half-breeds of Manitoba disposed of their lands, And that is the reason why they gave no land to the half-breeds. Sir, is land such a scarce article with us that the Government of a sudden have become so parsimonious? Is the land of such value that the Government should of a sudden be taken with such a fit of economy? Why Sir, did the Government in this matter of the land grant, consider like the French gentleman of whom Balzac says, that "the soil was his mistress"? It is true that the Government have without remorse or compunction given away millions of acres of land to their favorites, that they might indulge in speculation, but the grant to the half-breed is only 160 acres because he, too, forsooth, might speculate. It has been said several times that even if that grant was refused to the half-breeds even if they were entitled to it still it was a very small grievance at best, and was no reason for going into rebellion. Sir, that is not the question. I do not examine here whether this was a cause sufficient for going into rebellion or not, but I ask of this Parliament, was there any excuse for this Government acting as they acted? Was their course calculated to promote harmony and peace rather than to promote discontent and produce all the consequences of discontent? Sir, this was in effect the course of the Government; their course was not calculated to bring harmony and peace into the land, but was eminently calculated to create discontent and all those consequences which have actually taken place, and the consequences of that discontent was rebellion. It is said that this was a small grievance. Sir, this question is irrelevant. What may be of small value to you may be of great value to me; what may be of small value to the rich man in the east may be of great value to the poor man of the west, and moreover, whether it was of great value or small, did the half-breeds claim anything unfair, unjust, or unreasonable? What the half-breeds claimed was so just, so fair and so reasonable, that their claims had actually been guaranteed by a Statute of this Parliament. What the half-breeds claimed was nothing but what the Parliament of this country contemplated giving them. It is a thing of small value, they say. Sir, nothing is of small when it is granted by law. The half-breeds broke the law at last, but I charge against this Government that they themselves broke the law for six long years, when the Government failed to solve this question, when they failed to exercise the power which was vested in them by Parliament, I charge against them that it was an actual breach of the law. But as soon as the half-breeds broke the law the Government then complied with the law. What a sad commentary it is upon their conduct that after having for long years denied what had been claimed by constitutional prayers they should at last give to violence. But the Prime Minister said that at last he yielded for the sake of peace, that he made concessions. I say, on the contrary, that the Government made no concessions whatever. What the Government gave to the half-breeds was not a concession; it was simply the rights which had been guaranteed them by Parliament, and it is manifest—it must be manifest to every one—that any settlement of that question which would not have given to the half-breeds of the North-West the same privileges that had been given to the half-breeds of Manitoba would have been no settlement whatever. As my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Blake) said last Session, it was a matter of justice. He put it in a way which was forcible, and should be recalled to the House. He said:

"Justice is the same everywhere, justice is the same whether it be on the banks of the Saskatchewan, or on the banks of the Red River; justice demands that the same treatment which has been extended to the half-breeds on the banks of the Red River shall also be extended to the half-breeds on the banks of the Saskatchewan."

Certainly no one can take exception to that justice demanded that those people should receive the same treatment as the half-breeds of the Red River. Why was this not done? It was said that it would not be for the benefit of the half-breeds. The point may be well taken, but surely the only solution which could have reached the objection was to do as was suggested by Archbishop Taché—to enable them to legislate in such a way that the benefits given to the half-breeds should remain in their hands. It would have been quite easy to put in the law a small paragraph by which all sales of lands by half-breeds to white speculators should be null, and if that had been done it would have met the requirements of justice. I say that the Government were bound to act by the very letter of the law; and apart from any question of positive law they should have remembered those principles of humanity and prudence which are the basis of English law in this respect, as I have shown already. They should have acted in the spirit which is indicated by the 'expounders of the law; they should have acted in a conciliatory manner, for fear of the Indians—or, in this instance, let us say the half-breeds—should have destroyed the first planters, who are usually too few to defend themselves, or refuse all commerce and conversation with the planters. Those are the reasons which should have induced them to act. There is something more which must have been extremely galling to these people, and that is the contempt with which all their demands were met by the Government. They petitioned time after time, and all their petitions remained unanswered. Archbishop Taché had told the Government that the half-breeds are a highly sensitive race; that they keenly resent injury and insult, and that they make daily complaints on that point. When they had thus been warned by Archbishop Taché, was it not enough to drive them into the unfortunate course which was at last adopted when they were treated in such a manner. I say that there is no race of men under heaven which values its own dignity and suffered the indignities that those people suffered, without resenting them in some manner. Sir, the conduct of the Government is absolutely indefensible. So indefensible is it that the ministerial press, at the outset of the rebellion, more than once admitted that the half-breeds had serious grievances to complain of, and I need not say that the case must be desperate indeed if any organ of the Administration could admit the possibility of wrong on the part of the Government. But the attempt of the Government has been to minimise their own wrong, by saying that in the great majority of individual cases no just demands had been presented to the Government, but that those presenting such demands were not acting bond fide but were speculators who having once obtained their rights in Manitoba were attempting to obtain another grant in the North-West Territories. We find the Government presented papers or suppressed papers, accordingly as the presenting or suppressing would lead to the end in view. They refused to bring down papers which were asked for and they brought down papers which were not asked for. They refused to bring down the files of the Department which would have given a consecutive and complete history of the matter, but they bring down reports prepared after the event and prepared to suit the event. There is in connection with this matter a most important report which we should have had on the Table of the House long ago. I refer to the report of the commission appointed during the month of March last year to investigate the claims of the half-breeds of the North-West Territories. This report should have been on the Table of the House upon the very opening day of the Session; and I say this to the majority of this House, that if they had not abdicated their power and right of supervision over this Government, this report would have been upon our Table at that time. Why, Sir, here was a commission appointed to investigate a most important public matter. This commission has sat, and its report has been presented to the Government for more than six or seven months now; and yet the Government still retain the report and refuse to bring it down. At the opening of the Session I myself enquired of the Government whether it would be brought down, and the answer given to me was that I might move for it. I did move for it on the 4th of March; and now we are at the 20th April, in the eighth week of the Session, and that report has not yet been laid up on the Table. This delay is not the result of accident or of circumstances; but it is wilful and deliberate. No man in his senses will pretend that the Government have not had the time or the means, if they had so chosen, to obtain the information contained in that report. Sir, it is no wonder to me that the petitions of the half-breeds should have met with such contempt as they met with at the hands of the Government when the very mandates of this House are thus disregarded. The majority in this House can excuse and tolerate such abuses; but the majority in this House should not forget that such abuses against constitutional Government always rebound in some way or other against the people who are guilty of them. If such abuses are tolerated by an assembly of a free people, I speak my mind when I say that this assembly is not worthy of the great duties imposed upon it.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. LAURIER. I stated to the House this afternoon that on the 4th March I had moved for the Report of the Half-breed Commission, and that up to a recent date the Order of the House which was then issued had not been complied with. The motion which was then granted by the House ordered the Government to bring down all reports made by the commissioners appointed under the royal commission, all proceedings of the said commissioners, all instructions given to them, and all correspondence exchanged between them and the Government. So far this Order has not been complied with. It is true that in the report of the Minister of the Interior, subsequently laid before the House, there is a garbled report of the commission. This report upon its face is garbled; it shows that the most important and material parts have been omitted. Now, Mr. Speaker, upon a question of this importance, it will strike everybody that it is not sufficient to have truth, but we must have the whole truth. It was not sufficient for the Government to communicate to the House only such parts of the report as suited them. It was their duty to bring the whole of it, whether it was to their advantage or their disadvantage. But while the Government chose to bring only such parts as they deem fit, some hon. members of the House on the other side have been more fortunate than we on this side generally are. On the same day on which I moved for the report to which I have just referred, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross), moved for:

"Return showing the number of half-breeds of the North-West Territories who proved their claims before the commission at Fort Qu'Appelle, Touchwood Hills, Qu'Appelle Valley, Regina, Maple Creek, Calgary, Fort Macleod, Pincher Creek, Edmonton, St. Albert, Fort Saskatchewan, Victoria, Fort Pitt, Battleford, Prince Albert, Batoche, Duck Lake, Forks of Saskatchewan, Fort à la Corne, Cumberland House, Moose Jaw and Willow Branch, in North-West Territories; also at Grand Rapids in Keewatin, and Winnipeg and Griswold in Manitoba, giving in each case the number of heads of families and minors; also the number of males and females; also copies of all the petitions filed in the Department of the Interior praying that grievances be redressed, with the names of such petitioners, distinguishing those who had their claims already settled in Manitoba and those who had not; also the number of Manitoba half-breeds who proved their claims prior to the 20th of April last on the supplementary list, and those who have proved their claims since that date."

On the 24th of March, just twenty days after this Order had issued, the return asked for by the hon. member for Lisgar was brought down. It was not voluminous or bulky, but it showed that its preparation had entailed a great deal of labor. It selected ten different petitions, which had been presented by half-breeds at different periods; it went over the names of the petitioners, one by one, and classified them under three different headings—one, the half breeds who had participated in the Manitoba grant; second, the half-breeds who were to receive scrip from the commissioners; and third, the half-breeds who had not proved their claims. This return showed on its face not only that it had entailed a good deal of labor, but that it was manifestly prepared just to suit the event. It was not a copy of existing documents; it was a careful compilation, prepared with an object. What was the object of the compilation? The object was to show that the great majority of those who had signed those petitions had participated in the grant in Manitoba, and that the claims they were now preferring were fraudulent claims. Such was the object contemplated, and such was the result as set forth in the ministerial press. On the day after this return was brought down, the Mail newspaper contained the following article:—

"It appears from a return presented by the Minister of the Interior that of thirty-one half-breeds of the Lake Qu'Appelle district who petitioned the Government in 1874 for land, sixteen had received scrip or land in Manitoba, six did not prove their claims, and nine received scrip certificates from the commission appointed last year.

"Of 147 residents of the Prince Albert settlement, thirty-six had obtained their scrip in Manitoba, seventy-one did not prove their claims, and forty received scrip from the commission.

"There were 276 half-breeds living in the vicinity of the Cypress Hills who petitioned, and of these 101 had obtained their scrip in Manitoba, 161 did not prove their claims, and fourteen obtained scrip from the commission.

"Of seventeen settlers at Manitoba village who petitioned, five had obtained their scrip in Manitoba, four did not prove their claims, and eight received their scrip from the commission.

"Of 115 settlers at Fort Qu'Appelle who petitioned, fifty-seven had received scrip in Manitoba, fourteen did not prove their claims and forty-four obtained scrip from the commission.

"In September, 1882, Gabriel Dumont and 45 others, mostly French half-breeds, settled on the west bank of the Saskatchewan, in the Prince Albert district, petitioned the Government, and of those 36 had obtained scrip in Manitoba and 10 did not prove their claims.

"From St. Louis de Langevin a petition was presented, signed by 32 half-breeds, and of these 24 had obtained their scrip in Manitoba and eight did not prove their claims.

"Another petition from Fort Qu'Appelle bore 44 signatures, and of these persons 30 had obtained scrip in Manitoba, three did not prove their claims, and eleven obtained scrip from the commission.

"The rising, it will be remembered, was confined to the half-breeds of St. Laurent and St. Louis de Langevin, of whom 78 had petitioned the Government for scrip under the Act of 1879, and of these no less than 60 had obtained their scrip in Manitoba, and were entitled to nothing, and could legally receive no other treatment than that accorded other settlers in the North-West."

Now, you see the innuendo of this article. It is not set down in so many words, but the inference is that the majority of those who signed the petitions had already received scrip in Manitoba, and were again applying for scrip, and thus trying to obtain an unfair advantage over the Government. This is a most foul slander. I denounce it as a slander on the half-breeds, in trying to convey the impression that they were dishonest in petitioning for rights to which they were not entitled. Unfortunately they had more grievances than one. They had the grievance, not only that they were not fairly treated with regard to the extinguishment of the Indian title, but also the greater grievance in relation to the surveys. Not one of their petitions can bear the purport the Mail puts upon in. Take the first statement of the Mail. It said that of the thirty-one half-breeds of Qu'Appelle who petitioned, sixteen had received scrip for land in Manitoba, nine had received scrip from the commission, and six had not proved their claims. You would deduct from that statement that the thirty-one half-breeds of Lake Qu'Appelle who had petitioned the Government had been asking again for scrip for the extinguishment of the Indian title, when they had already received scrip for that purpose. Let the House refer to the petition which is to be found at page 7 of the blue book. What do they asked for? They asked to be allowed to keep the lands they were in possession of; they asked for certain rights for fishing and hunting; they asked for the participation of the Roman Catholic mission in all the rights of the half-breeds; they asked for regulations for the hunting of buffalo and for the establishment of some authority to administer the affairs of the country. There is no demand for the extinction of the Indian title, and therefore the impression the Mail seeks to convey is a slander on those people. Let us take the other petitions to which the Mail referred. There is the petition of George McKay and others, settlers and residents of Prince Albert, numbering 147. What do they ask? They ask first for surveys; next, that the surveys be made according to their present holdings, with narrow frontages; and third, that the half-breeds who have not participated in the Manitoba distributions should receive the same consideration as was granted the half-breeds in Manitoba. Let us take the fourth petition. Of these petitioners, the Mail says: Forty received scrip from the commission, thirty-six had received scrip in Manitoba, and seventy-one had not proved their claims. Let us take the fourth petition, that of half-breeds living in the vicinity of Cypress Mountain. The Mail says 101 had received scrip in Manitoba, 14 received scrip from the commission, and 161 had not proved their claims. Let us return to the petition. It is that of David Laverguere, and 277 others, from Cypress Hills; they ask for the privileges of hunting the buffalo at all seasons; they represent that the majority among them had not participated in the scrip distributed at Manitoba, and they make their demand accordingly, fairly and honestly. I turn to the next petition. The Mail says 17 petitioned from Manitoba village, of whom 5 had received scrip in Manitoba, 8 had received scrip from the commission, and 4 had not proved their claims. I turn to the petition. It is that of Charles McKay, and 16 others from Manitoba village; they represented that some of them, who belonged to Manitoba, were absent at the enumeration, and did not participate in the grant of scrip; they, therefore, asked that those be allowed to participate in the grant as if they had been present when the enumeration was taken; they represent also that the half-breeds, who do not belong to Manitoba, are entitled to the same treatment, and they ask the same treatment for them. Take the next petition. The Mail says, that of the 115 half-breeds at Qu'Appelle who petitioned, 57 had received scrip in Manitoba, 44 had received scrip from the commission, and 14 had not proved their claims. This is the petition of Peter Lapierre, and 114 others, from Fort Qu'Appelle. What do they ask? They ask for the North-West half-breeds the same participation in scrip as was given the half-breeds in Manitoba; they ask, as to the half-breeds of the North-West Territory, that the Government will be pleased to make a survey of their present holdings similar to old settlers' claims on the Red and Assiniboine Rivers. Then, as to the petition of Gabriel Dumont and forty-six others. The Mail says that thirty-six of them had received scrip in Manitoba and had not proved their claims. Here, again, you would suppose that Gabriel Dumont and the forty-four others settlers, who petitioned the Government in 1882 from the Prince Albert District, asked also for scrip on the ground that they were entitled to it, whereas the purport of that petition was not to ask for scrip, but to ask that the Government should be pleased to cause surveys to be made of their present holdings, and that they should have free grants of the land of which they were then in possession. The Mail says of another petition of half breed settlers near Qu'Appelle, numbering forty-four, that thirty had received scrip in Manitoba, eleven from the commission, and three had not proved their claims. But this is the petition of John Simpson, and others, whose names have become unfortunately too famous in the rebellion. Did they ask for scrip, and try to obtain an unfair advantage, as the Mail says? No, Sir, they did not even mention that in the petition. The only things they complain of are the surveys and the patents. They represent that their lands were invaded by the Ontario and Qu'Appelle Company, and prayed for justice. That was the only grievance they set forth. It is therefore manifest that this article in the Mail was a most malicious article, one calculated to convey the impression that the half-breeds had really no grievances, but that the most of those who had petitioned, had received from the hands of the Government whatever they were entitled to; and that, therefore, the rebellion was not the rebellion of people who were seeking the adjustment of grievances, but of men who were trying to take unfair advantage of the Government. I regret that the whole report of the North-West Commission has not been brought down. I have been told on good authority that Mr. Street, the president of the commission, had again and again expressed his admiration of the character of the half-breds, and again and again stated that he had never met with a more truthful people. That, in all these transactions, though some two thousand people had appeared before him, not one had endeavored to misrepresent facts or to try to say anything which was not the truth. Under such circumstances, the bringing down of such a report, with such an object, and commented on as it has been by the press supporting the Government, is another crime for which the Government are liable. Is it not a crime committed by the Government against those people? In the same spirit which called for the preparation of the return I have now discussed, was another report prepared which was recently placed upon the Table of this House. This report was prepared by Mr. Pearce, who is, if I recollect well, inspector of mines of the North-West Territories. This report, as he says himself, was prepared at the request of the Minister of the Interior, who sent him to the theatre of the late insurrection, for the very purpose of bringing down the information which the report contains. This report is dated the 15th December; it was placed on the Table of the House on the 15th April. It is true that certain ministerial newspapers were more favored in this respect than the House, because the report was communicated to certain ministerial newspapers, and perhaps, if we have had it all, it is due to the indiscretion of one of those newspapers, which discussed the report as if it had been already brought down to the House. This report was also prepared with an object, with the object of showing that, in the locality to which the insurrection was confined, the settlers, or the great majority of them, 92 per cent., as the report says, had really no grievances against the Government. The report goes on to say that 92 per cent. of the settlers in that locality had no grievances whatever against the Government, that 92 per cent., and perhaps more of them, had received scrip in Manitoba, that 92 per cent., at least, of them had no grievances against the Government in respect of surveys or of patents. I will not discuss this report to-day at length, the question it deals with is chiefly that of surveys, and, when we come to discuss that question, it will be time to enter into that matter and to show, as I believe, it will be possible to show, how fallacious this report is in that matter. But there is in this report a general purport which may well be discussed here. The general purport which this report tends to establish is that, since in the district to which the insurrection was confined, the majority of the people had no grievances against the Government, there could not be any grievances elsewhere, and that, therefore, the insurrection was absolutely causeless. The object the report has in view is to establish that the rebellion was causeless since in the very place where the people rebelled, they had no grievances whatever. The fact that the rebellion was confined to one particular section of the country is no evidence that there were no grievances in the other parts of the country, even if there had been no grievance in the part to which the insurrection was confined. Look at the insurrection in Lower Canada in 1837, no one will dispute to-day that the Lower Canadians suffered from grievances of a more serious nature. Those grievances were not particular to one section of the country; they affected the whole population of the Province; they extended through the breadth and length of the land; and the insurrection, when it took place, did not spread itself all over the Province, all over the district were these grievances were, for the insurrection was confined to two or three localities. Out of twenty or twenty-five counties which then existed, the insurrection was confined to two or three at most. And, moreover, the very fact that there was a rebellion in the North-West is the best possible evidence that there were grievances which affected the whole of that community. You never find a rebellion anywhere unless those who rebel receive the moral sympathy of their fellow-countrymen. If there is an outbreak anywhere—and this is a daily occurrence—and if those who rise have not the moral support of their fellow-countrymen, you may have a riot, but you will not have a rebellion. You will have a rebellion only when the community is deeply affected. If only one section of it is affected, you will not have a rebellion. The report goes on further, and tries to show that Gabriel Dumont, Philippe Garneau, Baptiste Boyer, and some sixteen others who are named, of the leaders of the rebellion, had personally no grievances whatever. What is the object of this statement? The object is to show that Gabriel Dumont, Boyer and the other leaders of the rebellion did not act from any noble motive, but simply from the malice of their heart. This is a most unfair statement to make against Gabriel Dumont and his fellow leaders in the rebellion. There is one particular for which I have always admired the British character, it is that British men have never been chary of expressing their admiration for a brave foe. At the ceremony of Her Majesty's coronation, the one person who received the most cheers of the assembled throng was not the young Sovereign herself, popular as she was, but the French Ambassador, old Marshal Soult. As history says, wherever the crowd could get a glimpse of his face, they cheered with increased vigor. And what was the reason? It was that the British public remembered that Marshal Soult had fought their armies with undoubted courage, and had proved himself a worthy foe even of the Duke of Wellington. I am proud to say that it has been admitted that Gabriel Dumont has proved that he has a brave heart in his bosom. His conduct in the field drew from the First Minister himself the statement that he was the hero of that rebellion. If he had no grievance of his own, it only proves not that his follow-countrymen had no grievances, but that he had a greater heart even than we gave him credit for. It would only show that, though he had no personal grievances of his own, he took up arms to defend the rights of others, though his own rights were not imperilled. Would it be the first time in history that men have rebelled though they had no grievances of their own, that men took arms not to remedy their own grievances, but the grievances of others who were suffering? When William of Orange, for instance, with his Dutch companions, placed themselves at the head of the English rebellion, surely he had no grievances against the English Government of that day, he had no personal grievances to avenge against the Government of James. Yet does the fact of his having no grievances alter the fact that at that time the English nation had been tyrannised over by the Government which was ousted on that occasion? And, when the Marquis de Lafayette and his companions forsook the splendor of the court of Versailles to court death on the battlefield in order to aid the American insurgents, it cannot be said that they had any grievances to avenge against the British Government. But does that alter the fact that the American colonies were fighting at that time to uphold the British principle that taxation is not to go without representation? I know the difference that separates these great men from the poor and uneducated half-breeds that live in the North-West, but though the difference is great, it only shows that reason may be found in the breast of all men, without distinction of class; and if these men had no grievance whatever, it is no evidence at all that the nation had no grievances. Have we not the fact that the commission has been dealing with a class of men who had grievances? Have we not the fact that that commission have issued scrip to something like 2,000 applicants? Thereby you have evidence that a great number of half-breeds in the North-West had serious grievances against the Government. Archbishop Taché had estimated the population at 1,200 families, which would probably give a population of 6,000 souls, out of which number one-third actually had their rights acknowledged by the commission. Will any one say, in face of that fact, the people of the North-West had no grievances? Will any one say that Gabriel Dumont and his fellow leaders in the rebellion, even if they had not personal grievances, were not fighting for men who, at that time, did have grievances against this Government? No doubt Gabriel Dumont and his fellow leaders were wrong in taking up arms. Though their complaints had been ignored during so many years, they should still have persisted in their agitation, rather than take the supreme course they adopted. But if they were wrong in taking up arms, still they were excusable. The contempt with which their demands had been received, the fact that their appeals to justice had always met with a refusal, made their action at last excusable. But what excuse can be made for this Government in denying the rights of these people? What excuse can they invoke to shield themselves from the indignation of the people of Canada? What excuse can they offer for having so long refused to act when they had been urged to do so? What excuse can they bring for having so long refused to do justice, when justice simply meant the granting of a few acres of land? What excuse can they offer for having allowed the hearts of these men to swell with bitterness, when a few simple words of right would have softened them into docility? What excuse can they offer for having so long refused legitimate and constitutional demands, which at last they yielded to violence? Sir, excuse there can be none. The Government have forfeited all claim to indulgence. Of all the rights, of all the duties devolving upon the Government, the prime duty is to maintain peace and harmony in the land; and when a section of the population becomes dissatisfied it is the duty of the Government to investigate the causes thereof, and to remedy the complaint as speedily and as fairly as possible, consistent with justice, and if they fail in this, they fail in their most sacred duty. But when the dissatisfaction proceeds from the fact that the Government have ignored their own obligations, then, Sir, I say that the people of the country would be remiss in their own duty if they were to condone such an offence, for by so doing they would strike at the very roots of their own liberty. I think these principles are true, I feel them deeply, and because I feel them deeply, I beg to move:

That all the words after the word "that" be left out, and the following inserted in lieu thereof:—It was the duty of the Government to proceed with diligence under the authority they obtained from Parliament in 1879, to settle the claims arising out of the Indian title of the half-breeds of the North-West Territories, and also to settle the claims of those of the Manitoba half-breeds who were temporarily absent during the enumeration, and that in this respect the Government has been guilty of neglect, delay and mismanagement, prejudicial to the peace, welfare and good government of Canada

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman, in the earlier part of his speech, before dinner, dealt almost exclusively with the fact, as he alleged, that the Government had resisted the petitions made to them for the extinguishment of the Indian title by the half-breeds of the North-West. He pressed upon the House that all these petitions had special reference to the fact that these half-breeds had the same claim as their brothers of Manitoba, and that the Government resisted the extinguishment of their Indian title by refusing to treat them as the half-breeds of Manitoba had been treated. And then, Sir, towards the close of his speech, he apparently, judging from the usual careful and logical manner in which the hon. gentleman deals with public questions, having received new information since he left the Chamber at six o'clock, came back and told us these petitions did not ask for the extinguishment of the Indian title at all, but that they were complaints of the grievances which they had, irrespective of that question altogether. Now, it seems to me that the hon. gentleman should take one ground or the other. If there were petitions coming from the half-breeds of the Saskatchewan district—and with these half-breeds especially we have to deal—which complained that their Indian title had not been extinguished, and that they were entitled to concessions similar to those which the Manitoba half-breeds have received, if he is prepared to take that ground, then, Sir, I hold that he has no right, as he did at the close of his speech, to claim that these petitions did not at all ask for the extinguishment of that title, but on the contrary, dealt with other grievances, grievances common to all parts of the North-West, so far as complaints are concerned, common, in fact, to new settlements in every country that I have ever heard of. Sir, the hon. gentleman was guilty of what I must regard as great unfairness to the Department over which I have the honor, unworthily, to preside, in saying that the Government had brought down improperly, certain returns which have been laid upon the Table. He referred to one return particularly, in which was stated the number of those whose names were attached to the several petitions who had received their half-breed scrip in Manitoba. Sir, that was the question asked in this House; that was the order given by this House. An hon. member on his own responsibility asked this House to order that the Government would analyse those several petitions and give the House the result of that analysis by stating how many of the petitioners had had their Indian title extinguished in Manitoba. Are we to be told here, especially at a time when so much is being said in relation to the alleged refusal of the Government to bring down returns and information to Parliament, that it was an offence on the part of the Department that it should have done precisely what was ordered to be done; that because the information coming to this House in response to the order does not meet the views of the hon. gentleman, therefore the Department is in the wrong in bringing that information down. Then, the hon. gentleman has referred to the report by Mr. Pearce, which I presented a few evenings ago. I regret very much that the report was not presented some time earlier, as it might have been but for delay in the printing of the schedules by the printers. I can tell the hon. gentleman, so far from the accident, as he calls it, or the indiscretion of a newspaper in publishing in advance certain information contained in that report being the cause of its being brought down, my expectation was that the report would have been brought down at least three days earlier but for the delays in the printing office in connection with the schedules attached to the report. But the hon. gentleman says that was a report prepared expressly, after the event, in order to influence the judgment of Parliament. Whether it was prepared before or after the event, all I have to say is this: It was prepared by the particular officer of the Department who has perhaps had more to do, both under the late Government and under the present Government, with matters in the Saskatchewan district than any other officer in the Department, and therefore the officer who was best qualified to obtain the information which I desired to obtain, and which, in view of all the demands made for information, this House ought to be glad to obtain as well. If that report does not suit the views of hon. gentlemen opposite, it is certainly not my fault; it is their misfortune. And perhaps the further they probe into the actual facts, however they may get them, whether by sending emissaries into the country to enquire, or in any other way, the less cause they will find for the outbreak of last spring arising out of any improper conduct or neglect on the part of the Government of the day. The hon. gentleman has confined himself in his speech largely to the one question of the half-breed claims, the one question of the extinguishment of the Indian title, and he did that notwithstanding the fact that he cited petition after petition in which he pointed out that the extinguishment of the Indian title was not a chief cause of complaint in those petitions. I propose to deal, if the House will permit me, with the whole question of the grievances of those people in the North-West Territories and to point out, as I think I shall be able to point out, that while in the very nature of things there may have been, and undoubtedly were, some grounds of complaint in the sense in which every settler who goes into a new country, and especially every half-breed, every old settler who finds himself deprived of his usual means of livelihood by the chase, will be almost certain to feel, that so far as the Department was concerned, and so far as regards the treatment of questions connected with the half-breeds, that treatment was one of which no reasonable people could possibly complain, and in relation to which I feel quite satisfied the people of the country will declare the Government are innocent of the charge which has been made against them by hon. gentlemen opposite. This question of the half-breed claims was not altogether a new question. Hon. gentlemen opposite when they sat on this side of the House had to deal with the question. And if I refer to some of their proceedings in connection with it, I desire to say at the very outset that I do not do it for the purpose of justifying or even palliating any neglect of which the Government of the day may have been guilty, but simply for the purpose of showing that the difficulties connected with the subject in the North-West Territories were such as to cause complaint when hon. gentlemen opposite were on this side of the House, and they were such, moreover, as met at their hands certainly not more prompt treatment than has been accorded to them by the hon. gentlemen who now occupy the Treasury benches. In the first place, we know well from what has occurred that the question of the recent troubles in the North-West, which have given rise to these questions in Parliament, was not after all a new question; that Louis Riel did not for the first time last year attempt to raise trouble in connection with the North-West. We know from the statement of Crowfoot given to the Mail correspondent, who went through that country during last spring, that long ago, some years ago, Riel attempted to raise the Indians in revolt because, as he declared, the Government had not been treating him properly. And we know after that from a statement made by Mr. Devoy, in an interview with a correspondent of the New York Sun, if I mistake not, Riel attempted not only to rouse the Indians into revolt, but also to raise a feeling among the Fenians of the United States with a view, if possible, of enlisting them in his efforts to reconquer the North-West Territories. In that interview Mr. Devoy states that Riel described the frauds and trickery of the land sharks. Recollect this description was given in 1878, certainly not at a time when this Government was in any way responsible for what was going on. The interview reads:

"He described the fraud and trickery of the land sharks, who were protected in their nefarious practices by high officials of the Dominion Government, who were in league with them and profited by their thefts of land belonging to the Metis. The whole administration and system of land management in the North-West he described as rotten to the core. The wrongs of the Metis were intensified by the bitter race hatred of the men who plundered them. Deep-rooted disaffection, he claimed, existed among the whole half-breed population, both in Manitoba and the North-West Territory, and was sustained by strong sympathy on the part of the whole French Canadian population."

And so on with a number of other statements made by Louis Riel at that time to Mr. Devoy, all pointing to the fact that then, in 1878, when this Government was in no way responsible for what had occurred, Riel complained, just as he complained afterwards, of the conduct of the Government in connection with the administration of affairs in the North-West Territories. Now, was there any ground for those complaints at that time? It is well known that petitions and letters were sent to the Government then praying for the settlement of the land claims and for the extinguishment of the Indian title. Mr. Ryan and Mr. Machar had been appointed to settle matters in Manitoba, which would have been settled long before but for the interference of hon. gentlemen opposite with the steps taken by their predecessors, before they went out of office, with a view to the settlement of those land claims. They had the opportunity of knowing when they came in that these matters were then exciting some interest in the North-West, because in the report of a public meeting, held in 1873, there appears a petition which was transmitted to the Government by Lieutenant-Governor Morris, and in that petition among the claims made was this:

"We also ask of you our Lieutenant-Governor, give us lands in compensation of our rights to the lands of the country as Metis."

That was in 1873, and yet until 1876 not one single step was taken by the hon. gentlemen for the removal of those difficulties and the granting of those claims to those people as half-breeds. It was on the 19th of June, 1876, that the Government took its first action, and at that time they asked Mr. Matthew Ryan, then a stipendiary magistrate, to deal with the question. On the 23rd of October, of the same year, four months afterwards, Mr. Donald Codd, Dominion lands agent, telegraphed to Ottawa as follows:—

"Ryan never received instructions referred to in your letter 12th July. Important that he should be authorised to act by telegram."

So that after, in June of that year, pretending to take that question up, it was not until they were urged to it by their agent in Winnipeg, four months afterwards, that they took the first serious step in connection with it. Two days afterwards Mr. Donald Codd sent a telegram to Ottawa as follows:—

"Ryan anxious to know on what authority he acts. He thinks old commission has expired. Is it intended to keep result of half-breed allotment strictly confidential?"

The answer to that statement was as follows:—

"To MATTHEW RYAN,

"The acting Minister requests you, if willing to take such additional duty, to continue to take evidence of claimants to half-breed lands or to scrip who may come before you in North-West Territories. On reply, forms will be sent."

Now, Sir, Mr. Ryan appears to have accepted the commission entrusted to him. He entered on his duties, but on the 3rd of March, 1877, being then engaged in the performance of his duties as stipendiary magistrate and those supplementary duties connected with the half-breed claims with which he was charged, he wrote rather a remarkable letter, the full text of which I shall read to the House:

"SWAN RIVER, 3rd March, 1877.

"DEAR SIR,—In the matter of my continuing the half-breed lands investigation, as the only official communication I hold on the subject is a telegram authorising me to take the evidence of claimants who may come before me in the North-West Territory, would you kindly inform me, as soon as possible, whether it was the intention of the Department that I should put myself in communication with half-breed claimants by visiting the localities in which they reside, or that I should act in their behalf as they might casually come before me in the course of the discharge of my magisterial duties? If the latter were the intention, I fear that no early practical good can be effected. The greater number of the half-breeds of the different settlements can only be met at certain periods, before their departure to hunt, and after their return, and I am not aware at present at what period or periods I am likely to be engaged as a magistrate at these respective places. My apprehension is, that to trust to the coincidence of our thus meeting would be to defer the investigations indefinitely, and ultimately to cause many of the half-breeds and others in the Territory the loss of the benefits intended for them by law. Would it not be well, therefore, for me to make special endeavors in their behalf during the coming seasons of spring and autumn? I can conveniently go to Lac Qu'Appelle in May, where, as I am advised by Mr. McLean, agent of the Hudson Bay Company, and by the Catholic curé, the bulk of the half-breeds can be met between the middle of that month and the 10th or 15th of the next. And later I may be able to visit the Scotch settlement of Prince Albert, and the French of St. Laurent, and so on. I am not informed, either, as to the matter of expenses, but presume they are to be paid under authority of the Department of the Interior. Would you please instruct me on this head, and generally on the subject of the latter, at your earliest convenience, and believe me to be.

"Very truly yours,
"MATTHEW RYAN.

"D. CODD, Esq., Winnipeg."

That letter was dated on the 3rd of March, 1877, and in a postscript he says:

"P.S —I would require no secretary or assistant, and would otherwise be careful of cost.—M. R."

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell).

Now, there was a pleading letter from the commissioner appointed to enquire into the half-breed claims; there was the deliberate statement on his part with a knowledge of the country, with a knowledge of the habits of the people, with a knowledge of the localities where they might be found most readily, that unless he was permitted to go to particular localities and meet them and give them notice of his being there, the work with which he was entrusted must result in no advantage to the half-breeds, and consequently must result disastrously. And yet, Sir, what was the answer given to that letter by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who at that time was Minister of the Interior. Here it is, written in his own handwriting across Mr. Codd's letter enclosing that of Mr. Ryan:

"It is not necessary to look up parties who have claims. If they care for their interests they will themselves come forward and establish their claims.—D. M."

That, Sir, was the spirit in which the hon. gentleman, who, with his friends, is so solicitous about those half-breeds, who complained that they had not been treated as they should have been treated—that was the spirit in which he dealt with the supplicating letter of his own commissioner, asking that he might be permitted to visit the half-breeds and deal with them as he there found them. But that is not all. Mr. Ryan appears to have been most solicitous in the matter, and he did, at his own expense as it turned out, go to Lake Qu'Appelle with a view of meeting some of the half-breeds there, and when he sent in his bill for $75 to pay his expenses the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), then Minister of the Interior, refused to pay these expenses, and they were only paid after the present Government came in and the present First Minister was Minister of the Interior. That is the way in which hon. gentlemen dealt with those questions. The letter, as I have told you, was submitted to the Minister. Very little appears to have been done in connection with the matter until the 24th of June, 1878, when Mr. David Laird, then Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Territories, a gentleman who was, I believe, not in the best relations possible with the then Minister of the Interior, telegraphed as follows:—

"Observe Mr. Ryan's authority, investigate half-breed claims under order 14th June, 1876, lapsed. Recommend time be extended one year. He is now here. Applicants waiting answer."

On the 28th June, 1878, Mr. Ryan himself telegraphed from Battleford:

"Half-breeds pressing me. Will time of investigation be extended?"

And the answer was as follows:—

"Minister has subject under consideration, and will probably authorise Mr. Duck, who has been appointed Dominion lands agent for Saskatchewan, to investigate such claims."

And that, Sir, was about the last thing the hon. gentleman did in connection with the half-breed claims of the North-West. He appointed a commissioner, and when the commissioner told him what was absolutely necessary to be done, he refused to permit that to be done, and when the commissioner, acting on his own sense of what was right, did it, and incurred a little expense in doing it, he refused to pay that expense; and then, when the Lieutenant-Governor tells him first, and then the commissioner, that the half-breeds were there waiting, but that the authority of the commissioner had lapsed, the answer sent was that the matter was under the consideration of the Government, and that probably Mr. Duck, the newly appointed agent at Prince Albert, would be appointed to investigate those claims. And yet, with that record, these hon. gentlemen move resolutions such as that which has been moved to-day, and ask the condemnation of the Government by Parliament and the country, on the ground that they did not deal fairly, fully, quickly with these half-breed claims in the North-West. During that time it is well known that the importance of this matter was pressed upon the Government by the Hon. Mr. Laird. In addition, there were several petitions from persons in the North-West; and Mr. Dennis, referring to those petitions, and dealing with the question, wrote as follows:—

"The question raised by His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor as to the manner in which the claims of settlers may be adjusted, who located upon lands in the North-West Territories previous to the transfer, involving, as it does, a question of policy, is for the Minister to consider."

So that it appears that up to that time, although a commissioner had been appointed, the Minister had arrived at no conclusion as to the manner in which he should deal with those claims:

"The undersigned would, however, in reference thereto, venture to express the opinion that land so settled on, without the same may possess exceptional value owing to its situation, and had been taken up with a view to speculation, if the claimant shall have been constantly residing upon and cultivating it to a reasonable extent, should be granted free to the occupant. To give effect to such a policy, however, legislation would be required."

Now, Mr. Speaker, that was in March, 1877, and it was a question of simply giving to those people the land upon which they were settled—doing for them, in fact, the very thing the offering to do which afterwards, by this Government, is denounced by the hon. member who has moved this resolution, as a failure of justice to those people—simply the granting of the lands on which they were located, and he is told that legislation will be necessary in order to enable him to do it. And yet, Sir, although another Session of Parliament came and passed afterwards, during which he had the opportunity of getting that legislation, the Session opened and closed without any legislation being attempted, the case of the half-breeds being left precisely as it was, in spite of the recommendation of Mr. Dennis, his own deputy. That, Sir, I think, may fairly illustrate the manner in which the hon. gentleman dealt with those claims. He had claims of a similar kind to deal with in Manitoba. He had to deal with what were usually called the stake claims; and I find that when a schedule was submitted to him of names for his decision as to whether they should have their land or not, nine-tenths of them were bracketed, and the words were written after them, "No —D. M.," to the effect that these people had no claims and should not receive any consideration whatever. What was the condition in which those people were at that time? I have here a letter which, I think, will show the spirit in which these hon. gentlemen dealt with affairs in the North-West. The letter is dated Winnipeg, 29th September, 1877. It is signed by the Rev. Father Lacombe, whose interest in matters in the North-West is well known. It is not addressed to the hon. gentleman for reasons which I suppose the postscript of the letter will sufficiently explain. It is addressed to a gentleman at that time a colleague of the hon. gentleman, the Hon. Mr. Pelletier, then Minister of Agriculture, who had a seat in the other House. The letter was to this effect:

"VERY DEAR SIR,—As you desired me, during your visit to Manitoba, to acquaint you privately with such information as might aid you in the administration of our Province, I now frankly and confidingly communicate the annexed newspaper articles.

"I take the liberty of drawing your attention to those articles, as well as to the remarks which I shall add.

"It must be understood that I am far from approving the violent and unseemly language of the English article. It appears to me that we may protest without being insulting.

"I regret to say that many of the sentiments expressed in those articles are participated in by a great many persons in our Province. Resolutions, coming from Ottawa, threaten to give a fatal blow to our immigration. The Government ask $5 per acre for land on the Red and Assiniboine Rivers. It is too much even for speculation, as speculators sell the same lands for $2 per acre. But above all it is a great deal too much when we consider that those lands are occupied by immigrants who have expended all they had to instal themselves on those lands. If the Government persevere in this determination they will ruin many who accepted the invitation they made them to settle in Manitoba.

"I understand, moreover, that the question of 'stake-claims (Stake-claims) is to be regulated in a manner still more unjust; they wish to draw lots in favor of the Metis children, for lands owned at Rat River and elsewhere anterior to the transfer. For more than seven years those lands, recognised among the population as the property of those who took them, were frequently sold and exchanged. And to-day, on account of these exchanges, there are at Rat River, in the parish of St. Pierre, more than fifty resident families. These families established themselves in good faith, and behold it is now thought to dispossess the greater part of them, of whom many are immigrants, who arrived in spring, bought the land and made outlay for the purpose of establishing themselves. The pretext invoked is, that on certain farms there is little or no cultivation—a pretext which to me seems ill-founded, because those lands were at any rate possessed by those who claim them, before the reserves for Metis children were localised in this place or vicinity. If the lands were possessed then, they are still the property of those who claim them, and consequently an injustice is done in dispossessing them of them. If, on the other hand, these lands were not owned at the time of the localisation of the reserves, how can it be pretended that their cultivation would have ensured their possession? The Government has not yet said anything officially, and secretly they direct the lottery of these lands, so that the odium of dispossessing the occupants may fall on the children of the Metis, to whom these lands shall thus come.

"Evidently the Government are ill-informed, otherwise they would not, for the sake of a few hundred acres of land, consent to draw upon themselves the odium these resolutions would create, to paralyse immigration, and to throw another brand of discord among the population.

"Such are the remarks, which in true friendship, I have thought it my duty to submit for your consideration.

"I remain with much respect, your very humble and obedient servant, (Signed). ALB. LACOMBE, Ptre., O.M.I."

Then here is a personal postcript:

"Permit me to avail myself of this opportunity to offer you, with all my heart, my best wishes for the New Year."

Here is a second postcript, which is an important one:

"I forgot to tell you that I advised Mgr. Taché to write to the Government. Although he regretted all these misunderstandings, he replied that he would not venture to write to Ottawa, inasmuch as he had never received anything but refusals, and he feared to compromise the case, rather than benefit it, by writing on the subject."

That, Sir, was the opinion of His Grace the Archbishop of the manner in which hon. gentlemen opposite treated questions concerning the North-West in which he felt a deep interest, when he ventured to send either petitions or letters to them with regard to those questions. Now, Sir, it is well known that when the change of Government took place, although hon. gentlemen opposite had done nothing to provide by legislation for the settlement of these half-breed claims, the Conservative Government, in its first Session, that of 1879, passed an Act in which they took power to settle these claims. That Act has been referred to by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) on two or three occasions. He has referred to it to-night, and intimated that the first thing done under it was the appointment of the commission last spring. I do not desire, for a single moment, to charge the hon. gentleman with misstating, because I believe him to be incapable of wilfully mis-stating; but I charge him with not having as carefully studied the question as its importance deserves, and as he certainly ought to have studied it. On the 1st June, 1883, an Order in Council was passed, based on a memorandum of the Minister of the Interior, of the 31st May, 1883, separating the offices of Surveyor General and Deputy Head of the Department, creating Mr. Lindsay Russell Surveyor General, with the rank of Deputy Head, and in this memorandum is the following clause:

"The duties of the Surveyor General will necessarily require that he shall spend a considerable part of each season in the North-West, so that he may have the opportunity of directing the operations of the staff in the field; in connection with and in addition to which the opportunity would be afforded him of investigating and finally settling upon the spot, a large class of long-standing and somewhat complicated claims to land, arising at various points in the Territories. Invested as he would be with the rank and authority of a Deputy Head, and bringing to bear on the cases submitted for his adjudication the experience he has acquired in the administration of Dominion lands, his decisions would naturally command the respect and acquiescence of those whom they most directly affect, as well as the confidence of the general public."

Then, by an Order in Council of 7th July, 1883, arrangements were made for dealing with the claims of actual settlers in the Prince Albert and Edmonton districts to obtain titles to the lands they occupied, and it was the intention of Mr. Lindsay Russell to have left at once for the North-West where he would have been able to deal with the claims question on the spot and settle them on terms reasonable both to the country and the half-breeds and the other settlers chiefly interested. But, as we all know, an accident befell Mr. Russell. He was detained in his room for a long time, and was unable to go to the North-West, as he had intended to do and as the Government desired. The case was not one of such urgency as to require that a substitute, that a less efficient man, should be sent in his place, and so long as there was any hope that Mr. Russell would be able to undertake the important work, the Government, having regard to his great experience and to his familiarity with the English, French and Cree languages, wisely deferred the appointment of any one else until they had to give up the hope of his being able to go at all. Now, there were several classes of claims presented to the Government in relation to the North-West. There were of course a number of other subjects referred to in the petitions. We have heard them read to-night. There was permission asked to hunt the buffalo, but I am not aware that anyone ever prevented a half-breed or Indian from hunting the buffalo; the misfortune was, there were no buffalo to hunt. There was also the question of fishing rights, but I am not aware —although, I am bound to say, I think it would have been wise if it were otherwise—that anyone ever prevented a half-breed, an Indian, or a settler from fishing as he pleased or where he pleased, at his own sweet will. I think the time, however, is rapidly coming when fishery regulations will have to be adopted in the North-West to protect our valuable fisheries there. But, so far as the principal claims are concerned, they may be reduced to two great classes: First, the extinguishment of the Indian title; and, second, the giving of patents for the lands on which the people were settled. As to the extinguishment of the Indian title, it is well to remember that the rebellion occurred on the Saskatchewan, that there was no rebellion anywhere else, and that, therefore, in so far as the rebellion may have been said to have been caused by the non-extinguishment of the Indian title, we have the right to enquire as to whether the persons who petitioned from the Saskatchewan districts were entitled to have any Indian title extinguished, or whether that particular grievance had not in their case been already removed. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Laurier) has declared that the suggestion that these people had had their Indian title extinguished in the North-West, is an insult to them. He has charged the Toronto Mail with having been guilty of the grossest insult towards the half-breeds, by implying that they went into the rebellion for causes which were in fact no causes at all, because the particular grievance in question in their case, had been settled. I have yet to learn that it is an insult to state facts with regard to any people. The particular facts in regard to this case are that the people of the South Saskatchewan, where the troubles arose, had, in the overwhelming majority of cases, their Indian title already extinguished before the rebellion; and that, as to the men engaged as councillors of Louis Riel, a large proportion of them had had their titles extinguished in Manitoba, and, therefore, so far as the extinguishment of the Indian title was concerned, there was no ground whatever for the rebellion which took place on the Saskatchewan, and it took place at that point alone. The place where, perhaps, there had been fewer half-breeds with the Indian title extinguished than in almost any other part of the North-West Territories, was in the Edmonton district at St. Albert; yet, we know that when the rebellion broke out at the Saskatchewan, the young half-breeds of St. Albert enlisted on the side of the Government, and were prepared to do battle for their Queen and their country like the other settlers and volunteers. They did not pretend, that although the Indian title had not been extinguished in their case, they had any ground to rebel, but, on the contrary, recognising that their best interest was to be found in the preservation of the peace and in the prosperity of the country, they enlisted on behalf of their Queen and their country, and aided in preventing the success of the rebellion. So far as the half-breeds in the Saskatchewan district were concerned, the Indian title had in fact been extinguished. Now, Sir, as to this question generally, what are the facts? There is no doubt whatever there were great differences of opinion in the North-West as to the best means of dealing with the Indian title. The hon. gentleman has read from the proceedings of the North-West Council, their proposed method of dealing with this matter. I will repeat the resolution of the council, but first let me look at the recommendation of Archbishop Taché than whom, as the hon. gentleman very properly said, no one is in a position to speak with more authority in relation to the North-West matters. Now, his Grace the Archbishop recommended this:

"I estimate the half-breed population actually in the North-West to number about 1,200 families."

The House will excuse my repeating the quotation made by the hon. gentleman:

"Well, let the Government make twelve reserves for them in the very places the half-breeds themselves would like to have them.

"Each reserve should be for 100 families at least, and contain an area of 12 square miles of available land—that is to say, the extent of four townships. All the half-breeds, men, women and children, residing in North-West on the 1st January, 1879, ought to receive two non-negotiable scrips for 80 acres of land each; to be located by them in anyone of the twelve above-mentioned reserves."

You will notice that the Archbishop's suggestion is that they should have 160 acres of land, precisely the quantity of land which the hon. gentleman says was inferior to that which was given in Manitoba, where the children of half-breeds had 240 acres, and for proposing which he condemned the Government—

"Said lands could neither be sold, mortgaged nor taxed before they should have passed through the hands of at least the third generation of these who received them, or of their representatives. I say, at least, because I am strongly inclined to believe that it is desirable that such land be entirely unalienable; and such idea cannot seem unreasonable to those who consider the advantages deriving from a similar policy with regard to real and inalienable estates of noblemen. Raise the half-breeds to the condition of landlords; you will thereby confer a real benefit on them and we will not see a repetition of the regrettable occurrence which took place in Manitoba."

That was the suggestion of His Grace the Archbishop. Looking at it as a practical man, and not pretending for a moment to have anything like the authority in dealing with the affairs of the half-breeds that His Grace has, I think the people of this country, as a whole, would not have favored the setting apart of twelve reserves, which were to be absolutely inalienable, and were not to be subject to taxation, and to establish, in fact, a system of landlordism in the North-West. But, leaving that aside, what had we from the North-West Council? This is a body representing the people of the North-West, a representative body which is supposed to speak for the people of the North-West, and the very first resolution they presented was a condemnation of the policy of His Grace. In their first resolution they declare:

"That it would be injudicious to set apart reserves of land for the half-breeds of the North-West Territory, or give them negotiable scrip."

So you will see that the first people to object to the policy suggested by His Grace were the representatives of the people of the North-West themselves, in council assembled, in the very petition for not obeying which, for not accepting which, for not dealing in accordance with which, this Government has been attacked both in Parliament and in the country. What did they propose? Here was their proposition:

"That in view, however, of the fact that grants of land or issues of scrip were made to the half-breeds of Manitoba towards the extinguishment of the Indian title to the lands of that Province, there will undoubtedly be general dissatisfaction among the half-breeds of the said Territories unless they receive some like consideration. That this consideration would most tend to the advantage of the half-breeds were it given in the form of a non-transferable location ticket for, say 160 acres to each half-breed head of a family and each half-breed child of parents resident in the said Territories at the time of the transfer thereof to Canada, the ticket to be issued immediately to any half-breed eighteen years of age or over, on furnishing evidence of claim, and to every child on arriving at that age, and furnishing the necessary evidence."

So you will see that the proposal there was again 160 acres, to be given to the head of a family, and to the child on arriving at the age of eighteen years:

"That each half-breed holding such a location ticket should be allowed to locate it upon any unoccupied Dominion lands, but the title of the land so entered should remain in the Crown for ten years; and if, at the expiration of three years after such entry, the half-breed locatee has made no improvement on the land, his claim thereto shall be subject to forfeiture."

That was the proposal of the North-West Council, a proposal which would have placed every half-breed in an inferior position to any ordinary settler going into the North-West. They were to have 160 acres each; any settler can go into the North-West and get 160 acres. They were to make improvements for three years or were to be deprived of the land; any settler can, on making improvements on his land for three years, get his patent; but they were not to get their patent; the land was to be inalienable for seven years longer, and they were to continue to reside upon it during that time. So that the proposal of the North-West Council was one that would place every half-breed in a position inferior to that of a white settler going in there, and would have left him without any claim, not even the right which is given under the law to any man who chooses to take up a homestead in the North-West. Would anyone pretend to say that the Government would have met the views of the half-breeds if they had accepted that proposition? When the time came to settle these claims with the half-breeds, when they had the opportunity of taking 240 acres for each child of a half-breed born in the Territories before 1870, how many of them took the land? Why, an infinitessimally small number took the land, the great majority taking scrip instead. The papers before the House tell us that a meeting was held at Fort Qu'Appelle at which were adopted resolutions in which the half-breeds declared that they would not take scrip, but would insist upon having land. That was telegraphed down to Ottawa by Mr. Street. Mr. Street was at once instructed to comply with the request of the half-breeds, and give them their settlement in the manner most conducive to their wishes. Yet, when the time came to settle the matter, when the opportunity was given them, I think I am right in saying that but two took land out of all those who put in claims, all the rest taking the half-breed scrip instead. So we have the recommendation of His Grace Archbishop Taché, we have the recommendation of the North-West Council, both of which recommended that land alone should be given, both of which recommended that the half-breeds should remain upon that land on penalty of forfeiture, both of which recommended that land should be inalienable for a certain period, the one for three generations, and the other for ten years; and yet, when the half-breeds came to deal with the matter in their own way, they all took simply scrip, which I am sorry to say most of them sold for a very small sum indeed. They took scrip and thus showed that they did not agree with the suggestion made by those who were perhaps best fitted to advise them, but they took the course which the Government permitted them to take as a last resort rather than allow them to continue to feel that they had any grievances at all. I made this statement in the west a short time ago, and Mr. Jackson, to whom reference has been made, who is a personal friend of my own, with whom I have friendly correspondence all the time, delivered a speech in Fort Qu'Appelle in which he undertook to answer this part of the statement which I made in a speech delivered in Ontario. He said:

"Now, gentlemen, with regard to the question of the issue of scrip or land, just let me say this—and my friend, Mr. Fisher, who was there, will bear me out in it—that, at the first sitting of the commission, I myself and other gentlemen who were presumed to have influence with the half-breeds, urged upon them the almost absolute necessity of taking land. On the first day, about 70 per cent. agreed to take land instead of scrip. In the meantime, and about this time, the fight at Duck Lake had taken place. The Indians felt there that they had whipped the troops. Riel despatched runners and agents all over the country. One was despatched to Fort Qu'Appelle to circulate reports of their success amongst the half-breeds. About this time the rumor reached here from half-breed sources that Riel was to prove victorious, that the half-breeds had better not take land; that they should take scrip, buy what they could, and the land would ultimately belong to them. That is what induced them to take land. (Mr. Fisher. That is so.) These are facts."

Now, Sir, what does that mean? It means that what these people were rebelling for was not the extinguishment of their Indian title but to obtain possession of the country; it was not the permission to hunt for buffalo, nor to fish, but it was simply for the purpose of getting possession of the whole country. As soon as ever, according to the testimony of Mr. Jackson their own friend, there was a prospect of getting the whole country, then they took the scrip. They said: We will take this from the Government in the meantime, it is Government money, and we will have the whole land in the North-West afterwards. Now I should be sorry, for one, to believe so ill of the half-breeds of the Qu'Appelle district, but the testimony comes from two of their friends, from Mr. Jackson, their representative in the North-West Council, and from Mr. Fisher, who was one of their most sincere admirers and trusted leaders, and we cannot do otherwise than to assume that these gentlemen knew what they were talking about when they made such a serious charge against the half-breeds as that they took the scrip because they thought they would get all the land afterwards, and not in any sense in extinguishment of their Indian titles. There were, let me say, other grievances, other complaints, made by the half-breeds. Reference has been made to the letter of Bishop Grandin, and to letters and interviews by father Leduc and Mr. Maloney. Well, Sir, so far as Bishop Grandin is concerned, I am inclined to think that the most important petition presented by him was presented to the late Government, and that as to the principal parts of it, it was dealt with by the late Government. Bishop Grandin said:

"1st. Before all, I ask some encouragement for the settlers. The Catholic missionaries have done almost impossible things in this direction. They have at different places three mills. For the third time we have tried to erect one in the colony of St. Albert—behold more than £900 stg. which we have sacrificed for it; and we are still uncertain whether we shall succeed. That the Government may, on their part, deign to do something to encourage agriculture.

"2nd. Aid for a hospital—at least to construct it, and put it in a condition to receive the sick.

"3rd. Aid for schools. The Government makes large outlay for education in all Canada Is our North-West to be alone withheld assistance? It cannot be said that we required help less than other parts of the country.

"4th. Aid for our orphan asylums, that we may increase these establishments, so as to be able to take in a greater number of little savages.

"5th. Concession of land for each orphan asylum or model farm.

"6th. Reserve of land for the children thus brought up, and aid to help them on to a little farm once they are married.

"7th. And lastly, that the reserves to be made over to the Indians be of arable land, and situated near fishing lakes."

Now, Sir, these claims were dealt with as far back as 1875, in a letter addressed by Lieutenant-Governor Laird to His Lordship, under instructions, of course, from the Government here. This is what he says:

"The Superintendent General cannot but congratulate Your Lordship upon the efforts made by the mission, especially by the establishment of mills to enable the settlers to utilise the grain raised in your diocese."

Well, Sir, there was some taffy in that, but there was not much substance.

"The Superintendent General wishes to remind you that this is a subject which will properly come within the province of the Local Government soon to be inaugurated in the North-West. He thinks, however, that it is obvious that the measures now being taken by the Dominion Government to carry a railroad and telegraph line through the Territories must have the effect of opening up the country and of facilitating transfer through it, and in this way cannot fail to give an impetus to the agricultural interest of the Territory."

Well, Sir, the hope held out to Bishop Grandin was that this Pacific Railway, built on the line which hon. gentlemen opposite say it should have been built on, gradually, as settlement went on, some day or other would reach them, and that they must keep their courage up until that event occurred, when probably they would have the advantage of the transportation that line could afford then. He goes on:

"The second, third and fourth heads referred to by you, are all matters which come especially within the province of the Local Legislature.

There was not much encouragement in that.

"With regard to the third head, I may remark that the Dominion Lands Act makes provision by a liberal land grant to aid general educational purposes in the Territories, and so far as the Indians are concerned, the Dominion Government will, no doubt, be prepared, when the Territory is surrendered, to make the same provisions there as elsewhere by treaty for Indian schools. In the meantime, I am directed by the Minister to transmit to Your Lordship an official cheque for the sum of $300 in aid of the school at St. Albert, authorised by Order in Council of the 22nd October, 1873. As is assumed from Your Lordship's report, that the average attendance of Indian children at this school is not less than the number required by the Order in Council, viz., twenty-five.

So that $300 seems to have been the whole extent of the answer given to these several propositions of Bishop Grandin:

"Any one of the other schools which Your Lordship may think proper to select will be entitled to a similar one for the current year, provided, of course, the average attendance of Indian children throughout the year is not less than twenty-five.

"As to the fifth head, namely, concessions of lands for orphan asylums and model farms, the Superintendent General is not prepared at present to make any definite pledge on behalf of the Government. On this point, the Superintendent General will be able to speak more definitely after a treaty has been made, and when the question of the extent of land asked for, for the purposes above mentioned, is more accurately known.

"The sixth head refers to large question of public policy, on what it would be manifestly too premature at present to pronounce an opinion. The settlers of the North-West have good grounds for believing that the Dominion Government will deal liberally with them. There is a sufficiency of land in the Territory for all of them and their children, and it is earnestly to be hoped that they will cultivate as much of it as possible, and secure for themselves comfortable homes in the country to which they belong.

"As regards the seventh head, namely, the reserves for the Indians. This matter has hitherto been fully provided for, and all treaties made with the Indians, by which assistance in money and agricultural implements has always been secured to them, and there can be no reason to doubt that these matters will be dealt with in a similar spirit of liberality in future treaties.

"The reservation secured to the Indians will, no doubt, have a fair proportion of arable land, and will include, when it is practicable, any fishing lakes which the Indians may desire to avail themselves of."

Now, Mr. Speaker, that was the answer to the petition of Bishop Grandin, and I will ask hon. gentlemen opposite whether it gave much encouragement to his Lordship to hope that his prayers would be acceded to. There was, in addition to this answer by the Lieutenant-Governor, an answer by the hon. Minister of the Interior himself to similar requests, which was dated on the 17th March, 1878, and in that we have this statement of his views of the position of the half-breeds of the North-West, and the manner in which they should be dealt with:

"The application of the petitioners to be aided by the Government with seeds and agricultural implements in their farming operations, I confess I am not disposed to view favorably. I do not see upon what grounds the half-breeds can claim to be treated in this particular differently from the white settlers of the Territories.

"The half-breeds, who have in some respects the advantage over new settlers in the Territories, should be impressed with the necessity of settling down in fixed localities, and direct their energies towards pastoral or agricultural pursuits, in which case lands would be no doubt assigned to them in the same way as the white settlers. But beyond this they must not look to the Government for any special assistance in their farming operations."

So that was the opinion of the late Minister of the Interior, the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). He took the ground that the half-breeds, if they consulted their own interests and the interests of the country, would settle down and become ordinary settlers, pointing out to them that in doing so they had large advantages over white settlers, they being old residents of the country and knowing a good deal about it. So much for that matter. Then there was the question of surveys, about which a good deal has been said. I think no one will pretend to say that so far as the question of surveys was concerned this Parliament is not omnipotent. The law was passed in 1871 which fixed the method of survey in the North-West. The law was continued by hon. gentlemen opposite, and the surveys were made on the same principle. As they began, so the present Government continued, and the instructions went to the surveyors that whenever they found settlers upon land, and those settlers desired survey on the river lot principle, the surveys were to be given to them on that principle, and they were as a matter of fact so given to them. The only place where those surveys were not given was in the famous parish of St. Louis de Langevin, and, as we know from the evidence already furnished to the public, at the time the surveys were made, there were but two settlers on the land, and, therefore, it was not a case in which survey by river lots could be adopted. Settlers went in afterwards and took up land, some of them according to the section or block system of survey, and some have made entry in accordance with that survey. They have asked since that the system be changed. They have been informed, and they have always been informed, that if they chose to take their lands in ten chains or twenty chains frontage, they would have the privilege of doing so; but that the principle cannot be recognised, that the Government having once surveyed territory unoccupied at the time of survey, persons going into that territory afterwards cannot demand that a different system of survey be adopted. I think there is nothing unreasonable and nothing improper in that, because, in so far as the surveys are concerned, it cannot be said that the half-breeds should have any more rights than any other class of settlers who might choose to go in, and a farmer from Ontario going into any part of the North-West and preferring the Ontario system of survey, might as well ask to have that plan followed—having gone in there after the surveys had been made—as that the half-breeds, who went in after survey could demand a change in the system. But, as I have said, they have been assured from the first, that if they desire to have the land in ten or twenty chain lots, they can have it on that principle, and that information has been given by the officer of the Government on the spot, so that they can get their lands in that way if they desire. Then there is the question of the lands themselves, of the patents. I venture to make this statement, and no one has hitherto at any rate, that I have heard, ventured to contradict it, that no single half-breed has ever been put off his land by any applicant, that no single half-breed has ever lost an acre of land by any action of the Government. They have, on the contrary, been pressed to make their entries, and, if, to-day, they have not their patents the fact is due, not to the system adopted, but entirely to the fact that they themselves had not taken reasonable steps to get their patents. Let me point out to the House what the Government have done in relation to patents for land; and after all I think it was of the greatest possible importance to them that they should procure the land on which they had settled, which they were tilling and on which they had made their homes. I have here a letter addressed to Mr. William Pearce, a member of the Land Board, by Mr. George Duck, who was agent at Prince Albert, and I will read that letter simply for the purpose of showing what pains the Government took in order that those people might be informed how they could get their patents, in order that they might be induced, if possible, to secure their patents, and in that way remove all possible doubt as to their legal possession of their property. The letter is as follows:—

"PRINCE ALBERT, 17th December, 1885.

"DEAR SIR,—It having been reported to the Minister of the Interior during his late visit here that there were a large number of claimants to lands within the parishes of St. Laurent, St. Louis de Langevin and in the vicinity of the South Saskatchewan River, more particularly among the French-speaking population, whose claims to the land had not yet been investigated and who therefore could not obtain entry, this statement is based on insufficient data, as the lists of those claimants which I have assisted you in preparing will show."

These lists are attached to the report of Mr. Pearce, which has been submitted to the House.

"Upon receiving your instructions in March, 1884,"—

That was some months before Riel came into the country.—

"to investigate these claims I consulted with the Reverend Père André, the superior of the district, as to the best time to carry out the investigation and obtain the information desired. He told me that as many of the claimants were then away from home engaged in freighting, I had better postpone my visit until after Easter, when they would all be at home putting in their crops. I did so and left here for Batoche early in May. On my way up I called in at Grandin, where I met Père André who told me that he had been waiting for me to tell me that the people had been holding a series of meetings throughout the settlement and they had decided among other things that they would make no applications for entry for their lands in the office here. After consultation with him I thought it advisable to secure his services to explain fully and clearly the nature of my mission and to show to the people the futility of any such resolution on their part. He went with me to Batoche, and at an interview held in the house of Emmanuel Champagne explained fully my object and advised them to fyle affidavits in support of their claims. The investigation was then proceeded with in as careful and thorough a manner as possible, and it will be seen upon reference to the list numbered 2 before referred to that of the 138 claimants 99 were included in the investigation held by me and whose claims were reported upon, 20 had settled upon lands and had not then or afterwards made entry in accordance with the section survey, 2 had settled in 1884 and made no application for entry or filed any evidence of occupation, leaving 17 claimants whose claims were not investigated, which number includes the names of Moïse Ouellette and others who refused to prefer any evidence in regard to their land matters. It was reported to me as long ago as 1882 that these people even those who had settled and claimed their lands in accordance with the existing survey, had been advised by certain interested parties not to make entry for their lands, for what reason I am unaware unless to coerce the Government into another system of survey on the banks of the river. From the schedule prepared you will see how few were then settlers, on the river, some 42 in all, of whom 22 could have obtained entry if they so desired at that time.

"With reference to the list numbered 1, which includes the names of 75 claimants, 55 have made entry, 1 (Cardinal) has settled on a school section subsequent to the plan of the township being received at the office here, leaving 19 who have never applied for entry but who could have made entry if they had so desired. In accordance with your instructions to Mr. Gauvreau, the assistant agent here, in August, 1883, that gentleman visited the different parts of the district in lists numbers 1, 2 and 3, and explained to them fully the Lands' Act as bearing upon their claims. Upon his return he informed me that the chief reply that he had received from the people he visited was that they were poor and had not the money to make entry. There were no other complaints of any nature.

"With reference to list number 3 of the schedule containing the names of 45 claimants, 7 have made homestead entry, 24 filed evidence of claim before me in July last, 9 were filed before you, this month, of whom the majority were absent at the time of my visit, while the remainder failed to represent their claims although requested by me to do so. Of the remainder, 5 have failed to make any application at all before anyone by reason of their absence either as refugees in the United States or as prisoners at Regina, on account of the recent outbreak, this number includes the claim of the Roman Catholic mission, and as so much has been said about this land I might say that no claim has ever been preferred by any of the Oblats for this land.

"I might state that in reference to the question of hay permits representation was made by me to the Department in June, 1884, to the effect that whereas the hay question was not of that character to warrant the imposition of dues for the protection of the small settler as against the stockman, instructions were sent me not to collect any such fees, and no permits have been issued in this district.

"I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedient servant,
"GEO. DUCK.

"WILLIAM PEARCE, Esq.,
"Superintendent, Land Board, Winnipeg."

That is the letter from Mr. George Duck, showing that in 1883 Mr. Gauvreau was sent there to impress on these people the necessity of procuring their patents and to instruct them as to the manner of obtaining them; that in 1884 Mr. Duck procured the assistance of Father André, and again attempted to explain to the people how they could get their lands, and that the difficulty in their obtaining their land was not due to any act of the Government, or anything over which they had control, but was due in the case of some of them to their poverty and in the case of others to their unwillingness to make entry at all. There is no doubt so far as the patents to the land are concerned, that if the half-breeds have not their patents to-day, to them and to them alone is due that fact. Then, Sir, we had the statement made—not to-night, it is true, but we have had it discussed all over the country, we have had it discussed in Parliament, and on the hustings, that the Government had actually driven the people to rebellion, by granting a portion of the lands upon which they were settled to a colonisation company, and that by doing that they had driven the people off the land or, at any rate, had attempted to frighten them off their land. Well, I have here the affidavits of every settler in the parish of St. Louis de Langevin, with one or two exceptions. I shall not trouble the House with reading them. But with these exceptions every one of the settlers on that tract of country, which was supposed to be given to the Prince Albert Colonisation Company, declared either that he did not know of the existence of such a company, and therefore could not know that the land had been awarded to the company, and in the case of one or two who did know it, they had been assured by the agent that they need not be in the slightest degree alarmed, because the company had no power to turn them off the land, being simply the agents of the Government for the settlement of the land, and they were guaranteed by the Government the possession of at least 320 acres like other settlers.

Mr. DAVIES. Will the hon. gentleman lay the affidavits on the Table.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I will put them in Hansard, which is better, and will save time.

Mr. DAVIES. Better put them on the Table first.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I am endeavoring to comply with the rule of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), whose resolution I entirely approved of, in relation to short speeches, and will therefore not detain the House by reading all the affidavits. With its permission I will hand them to the reporters. Here is one affidavit which was made by Mr. Norman McKenzie. You heard it read this morning, so I do not think it is worth while reading it again.

An hon. MEMBER. The House was not in Session this morning.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). True; so I will read it.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES: I, Norman McKenzie, of Sec. 12, Tp. 45,
To Wit: R. 27, W. 2nd M., make oath and say:—

1st. In the autumn of 1883 I purchased the claim of one Osborne to a portion of sections 12 and 13, in township 45, range 27, west of 2nd, and during the visit of Mr. Pearce to Prince Albert in January and February, 1884, when adjusting the claims of settlers in the Prince Albert district, I spoke to him about that claim, stating I understood that portion of township 45, R. 27, W. 2, lying south of the river, had been handed over to the Prince Albert Colonization Company, and asked if I would be safe in going on and improving the claim. His reply was that I was perfectly safe in going ahead, that so far as settlement in advance of their opening their agency, and even afterwards, when on even sections, was just the same as any other lands in the Prince Albert district. That, so far as the even sections were concerned, the Colonization Company was merely agent for the Minister of the Interior, to grant homestead and pre-emption entries thereon, and any settlers on odd sections, in advance of the Colonization Company establishing their agency, the Minister of the Interior reserving in the agreement with the Colonization Company the right to grant to each and every such settler, land to the extent of 320 acres, and in my case, if I was a bonâ fide settler, I would most certainly be protected.

2nd. I never was told by anyone that I would not obtain my entry as desired. In fact, it was always represented to me by the Department of the Interior land officials, that I would obtain my entry, and have been notified that I can make entry, and purpose doing so shortly.

Sworn before me, in Township 47, Range 26, west of 2nd M., this 11th day of December, 1885. (Signed) WM. PEARCE, Supt. } (Signed) NORMAN McKENZIE.

That is the affidavit of Mr. Norman McKenzie.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the date?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The date is the 11th of December, 1885. I suppose the date does not affect the veracity of the man who swears. I hope the hon. gentleman after his frightful attack upon the Government for having insulted the half-breeds, by bringing down a return, is not going to suggest that all the half-breeds swore falsely, in order to help the Government out of a difficulty.

Mr. LAURIER. My question did not imply that.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). If not that, it implies nothing. Here is another affidavit, from one of the two first settlers:

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES: To wit: } I, Solomon Boucher, of Section 11, Township 45, Range 27, W. 2nd, farmer, make oath and say:

1st. That I am 23 years of age, came with my father, Jean Baptiste Boucher, my sister, Marie Lavillie, a widow, and my brothers, Jean Baptiste Boucher, junior, and Charles Eugène Boucher. The latter attained the age of 18 years on the 1st December, 1882, together with several other younger brothers and sisters, in August, 1882; and have resided in my father's house on the N.W. ¼-sec. 11, in said township, continuously since, up to this date. Came from Baie St. Paul, and participated in the Manitoba half-breed grant.

2nd. That my sister, Marie Lavillie, and my brother, Chas. Eugène Boucher, have also been in my father's house, continuously, since August, 1882, except my sister, who has lived in Prince Albert since last March.

3rd. About 2 weeks after we came here, this township was surveyed. At that time we had about 2 acres of breaking; my brother Charles 2 furrows; my sister Marie had about 1 acre; my brother Jean Baptiste Boucher, junior, not certain whether he had any or not.

4th. My sister, Marie Lavillie, has 1 child, and has done no further improvements on the land.

5th. I have now at least 10 acres of breaking, set of house logs worth about $50, and fencing to the extent of 20 chains, worth $20.

6th. My brother Eugène has 2 acres breaking and a set of house logs which he sold, and also 20 chains of fencing.

7th. At the time of the survey we were told by the surveyor that we were on a school section; but he said he supposed it was all right, and that we would obtain entry. Since then have never been told that we could not obtain entry. Deferred urging to obtain entry, thinking this would be surveyed into river lots, or entry granted so as practically to give that. Heard this land was within a colonisation company's tract, but no official of that company ever said anything to me, nor do I believe, to any of the family, or I should have heard of it. The fact of this land being within a colonisation company's tract never gave my father, brother, sister, or myself any concern whatever, as we always believed we would eventually obtain entry as we desired.

Sworn before me, at Township 45, Range 24, W. 2nd Meridian, this 9th day of December, 1885, having been first read over and explained to him, and he seemed thoroughly to understand the same. (Signed) WM. PEARCE, Superintendent. } (Signed) SOLOMON BOUCHER.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES: To wit: } I, Jean Baptiste Boucher, junior, of Section 10, Township 45, Range 27, west of the 2nd meridian, farmer, make oath and say:

1st. That I have heard read over to me the foregoing affidavit of Solomon Boucher, my brother, concerning the lands mentioned by him and now claimed by myself, my brothers, a sister and mother (and by my mother on behalf of my father, Jean Baptiste Boucher, senior), and that the same is true and correct in every particular, with the exception that at the date of the survey by Hugh Wilson, D.L.S., in 1882, I had 1½ acres of breaking on the westerly 10 chains of section 11-45-27, W. 2, which land I now claim as a pre-emption, and that I particularly state I never heard, nor do I think my family ever heard that the Government had disposed of the land, and that I could not eventually obtain entry therefor, nor that any of the settlers in Township 45, R. 27, W. 2 M. could not obtain entry for their lands as claimed.

Sworn before me at Township 47, Range 26, West of 2nd Meridian, this 11th day of December, 1885. Having been first read over and explained, and he thoroughly seemed to understand the same. (Signed) WM. PEARCE, Superintendent. } (Signed) J. BAPTISTE BOUCHER.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell).

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES: To wit: } I, William Bremner, of Section 10-45-27, west 2nd M., farmer, make oath and say:

1st. That I came from the parish of St. Charles, in Manitoba, in August, 1882, with my sons Moïse Joseph and Alexander, and my son-in-law J. Baptiste Boucher, to township 45-27, W. 2, and have resided here ever since; lived in St. Charles about 40 years previously.

2nd. That about two weeks after I settled here the survey was made by Hugh Wilson, D.L.S. At the time of survey I had about two acres broken, and the foundation of a house laid. My son Moïse had no improvements and remained with me till the following spring. My son Alexander had the foundation of a house laid on the S.-W. ¼ 10, which he gave to my son William, who arrived the following year, and then began to have building mentioned on E ½ of W. ½ section 5, and completed the house and commenced to reside thereon in the autumn of 1884. My son Joseph had no improvements at time of survey. Commenced to prepare for building in the winter of 1882-83, and commenced residence in the autumn of 1885, but has been farming it for the past two years, living, however, with me. My son William, since the summer of 1883 has been living on the S.-W. ¼ section 10 till the summer of 1885.

3rd. That at the time of survey we had not made up our minds how we would take the land. I came up here on account of my family. They desired the land to be taken up as river lots, and we decided to try and obtain it that way. My son Alexander concluded he would be too much cramped so gave his claim to William Bremner and moved to section 5. We never applied for entry at D. L. office, Prince Albert, waiting to see whether entry would be granted in 10 chain river frontage or not.

4th. That I never was told, nor do I believe, my sons or son-in-law were, or I should have heard of it, that we could not obtain entry for the land as we desired it. Riel once told me, possibly we would not obtain it. Had we believed him we would then have abandoned it, nor continued to make further improvements as we have done.

Sworn before me at Prince Albert, this 9th day of December, 1885, after having been first read over and explained to him thoroughly which he seemed to understand fully. (Signed) WILLIAM PEARCE, Superintendent. } (Sgd.) WILLIAM his + mark BREMNER.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES: To Wit: } I, Moise Bremner, of Section 10, Tp. 45, Range 27, W. 2nd M., farmer, make oath and say:

1st. That I am the Moise Bremner mentioned in the foregoing affidavit of my father, Wm. Bremner, and that I have heard read over to me the foregoing affidavit of said Wm. Bremner, and that all the statements therein contained are true in substance and in fact, and I particularly declare that I, nor do I believe any of the settlers in Township 45, Range 27, W. 2nd M., were ever told by any one who could speak with any authority or who knew anything reliable about our land claims, that anyone would lose his or her claim.

Sworn before me at Section 10—45—27, W. 2nd, this 9th day of December, 1885, having first been read over and explained to him, who seemed to fully understand the same. (Signed) WM. PEARCE, Superintendent. } (Signed) MOISE BREMNER.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES: To Wit: } I, Joseph Bremner, of Section 10, Tp. 45, Range 27, W. 2nd M., farmer, make oath and say:

1st. That I am the Joseph Bremner mentioned in the affidavit of Wm. Bremner, my father, corroborated by my brothers Moise and Alexander in an affidavit dated the 9th December, 1885, respecting the land claims of the said William Bremner, Moise Bremner and Alexander Bremner, and my own claim, and those of settlers generally in Township 45, Range 27, West 2nd M., particularly those portions relating to not obtaining our claims, the land covered by them having been handed over or sold by the Government to other individuals, corporation or colonisation company, and declare that the statements contained in the declaration of Wm. Bremner, corroborated by the said Moise and Alexander Bremner, are true and correct in every particular, except regarding the statement of said Wm. Bremner as to date Alexander commenced residence on his claim, it being, as stated by Alexander, in April, 1884, not autumn, 1884, as stated by William Bremner.

Sworn before me at Township 48—27, W. 2nd, this 12th day of December, 1885, it having been first read over and explained thoroughly, and he fully understood what he was subscribing to. (Signed) WM. PEARCE, Superintendent. } (Signed) JOSEPH BREMNER.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES: To wit: } I, Alexander Bremner, of Section 5-45-27, West 2nd, farmer, make oath and say:

1st. That I am the Alexander Bremner spoken of in the foregoing affidavit of my father, William Bremner, and state that everything mentioned therein is true and correct in every particular, except that I began residence on Section 5 in April, 1884, not autumn of 1884, as he states.

2nd. I further state that the foregoing statements of my father, William Bremner, and my brother, Moise Bremner, referring to the land claims of settlers in township 45-27, W. of 2nd, being handed over to any corporation, individual or colonisation company, are true and correct. For my part I always believed I would have to treat with the Government and no one else, and, I believe, all the other settlers thought likewise. The only delay we anticipated being in obtaining entry as we desired in 10 chains, not in quarter sections as surveyed before I took it up.

Sworn before me at Sec. 5-45-27, West 2nd M., this 9th day of Dec, 1885. Having been first read over (3 affidavits) carefully, and seemed fully to understand the same.

1st. That I have lived in this neighborhood ever since the summer of 1882—the greater portion of the time in Township 45, Range 28, West of the 2nd Meridian.

2nd. That when I purchased Wm. Swain's claim, to which I now claim entry, that is, E. ½ of L. S. 4, 5, 12 and 13 of Sec. 3, and E. ½ of L. S. 4 and 5, of Section 10, Tp. 45, R. 27, W. 2nd, supposed I would acquire the right to make homestead entry for said claim; I asked Louis Schmidt, and he told me he thought I could. The neighbors and people generally who live in this vicinity informed me to the same effect. I never heard the Government had sold or given this land, or any land in this township, to any person or corporation. Never heard that any of the settlers in this vicinity had been told by anyone that they would not obtain their claims, and believed that eventually entry would be granted in 10-chain claims, fronting on the river.

Sworn before me at Township 45, Range 27, W. 2nd M., this 9th day of December, 1885, having been read over and interpreted in French to him by Louis Mariot, and he seemed to understand the same.

ST. LOUIS DE LANGEVIN, 9th December, 1885.

"At the time I settled upon this land, though it was surveyed, I did not know anything about quarter-sections. Found there was a piece fronting on the river which no one claimed; I took possession of it. Never applied for entry, nor was I told the land belonged to anyone except the Government. Never was told my claim had being sold by the Government to anyone, or corporation, or colonisation company Supposed I would obtain entry whenever I might apply. No one ever told me I would not obtain my land, nor did I ever hear it stated that any of the settlers in township 45, range 27, west of 2nd meridian, or in any other locality along the river, would not obtain their land."

Extracted from a statement made under oath by Elzevir Swain concerning his claim to part of sections 3 and 10, township 45, range 27, west of the second meridian, and sworn to before Mr. Superintendent Pearce, at township 45, range 27, was 2nd meridian, on the 10th day of December, 1885.

"I wished to move to Baie St. Paul, Manitoba, so as to have schooling for the children, and urged my husband to sell out. He offered the place and its improvements for $200 to one McLeod in June last. At the time we settled it was surveyed; desired to settle on the river on account of obtaining fish. We might possibly have obtained a quarter-section, but the settlers generally wished to have 10-chain lots fronting on the river, so we concluded to take it the same way. Never applied at the land office for entry, always thought we would obtain it as desired, but did not expect to obtain entry till we asked for it. Always supposed that the Government would give it us when we applied for it. Never was told by anyone we would not obtain it, nor that it had been sold by the Government to any individual, corporation or colonisation company."

Extracted from a statement made and sworn to by Elizabeth Richard, concerning her husband's, Antoine Richard, claim to portions of section 4 and 9, township 45, range 27, west of the second meridian, before Mr. Superintendent Pearce, at township 45, range 27, west 2nd meridian, on the 10th day of December, 1885, being her answers to questions No. 2, 40 and 42 of said statement.

Her statement is corroborated by an affidavit sworn to by her husband.

"Never was told, nor did I ever hear, that the Government had granted this land to anyone or corporation, nor did I ever believe we would not obtain entry. The only thing that I was afraid of was that entry would be granted by quarter-sections, but held on, hoping to obtain entry as I now apply for it."

The above is an extract from a statement made and sworn to by William Bruce, concerning his claim to portions of sections 4 and 9, township 45, range 27, west of 2nd meridian, being in answer to question No. 42 of said statement before Mr. Superintendent Pearce, at township 45, range 27, west 2nd meridian, on the 9th day of December, 1885.

"Never was told by any one that my husband could not obtain entry—or since his death—myself.

"It was inconvenient for me to go and fyle my application before Mr. Duck here last summer. I wanted my son, Magloire, to enter for it, but he refused, wishing me to have it myself.

"Always supposed we would get this land in 10 chains fronting on the river. If my husband or myself ever imagined we would lose this land we would have abandoned it long ago, and not gone on to make improvements."

The above is an extract from a statement made and sworn to by Marguerite Boyer, concerning her claim to portions of sections 4 and 9, township 45, range 27, W. of the second meridian (being her answer to question 42 of said statement) before Mr. Superintendent Pearce, at township 45, Range 27, W. 2nd meridian, on the 9th day of December, 1885, and corroborated by the following affidavit:

That I claim homestead entry to E ½ lots 2, 6, 11 and 14 of section 4, and east ½ of lots 3 and 6 (south of river) of section 9, 45—27, W. 2. Have lived in township 45 since 1883, and know whereof I state, and I most emphatically state I never was told by anyone that entry could not be obtained by the settlers in township 45—27, W. 2, for the lands claimed by them.

2nd. That I have lived during the past five years in the neighborhood of this land, living nearly the whole time in township 45—28 W. 2nd, and first laid claim to the above lands in 1882; first made improvements on said claim in 1883, have never lived on it.

3rd. Never was told that the Government had granted any portion of township 45-27, W. 2nd meridian, to any person or corporation, and that entry therefor could not be obtained; nor did I ever hear anyone state he or she had been told the same or anything to that effect, and always thought entry would be granted in 10-chain claims. The delay in making entry was to obtain it in such claims fronting on the river, one of which I desired as a homestead, and the other as pre-emption.

Never was told by Riel that I would not obtain entry for this land as claimed."

The above extract is from a statement made under oath by Modeste Laviolette concerning his claim to a portion of Section 5, Township 45, Range 27, West of the 2nd Meridian, being his reply to question No. 42, of this statement. 2nd. That I never was informed that any portion of this township belonged to a colonisation company, and have not been to this day notified to that effect, having always understood that the colonisation company's tract did not extend further north than the southerly limit of township 45, range 27, west of 2nd meridian.

I believe there were only two who ever heard there was a company, all the others swearing that they did not know there was such a thing. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I may fairly say that under these circumstances the hon. gentleman and those who join with him in attacking the Government can hardly claim that they have succeeded in making out any case against the Government. We have this important fact, that no half-breed has ever been removed from his land by any act of the Government, that no half-breed has ever been disturbed in the possession of his land; and I know of countries where the people would be happy if they could say the same thing. Why, Sir, in the adjoining county of Ottawa, when the hon. gentleman who sits opposite (Mr. Langelier) was Commissioner of Crown Lands for the Province of Quebec, settlers were attempted to be driven off their lands because they had not complied with all the conditions imposed by the Government. Then we have this further fact, in relation to their patents, that the Government, so far from refusing them patents, sent their officers in order that they might personally impress upon the half-breeds the manner in which patents could be obtained, and urge them, if possible, to make the entry necessary to obtain their lands. In the North-West it is absolutely necessary in the obtaining of lands, that there should be general rules which all persons must follow; and it was not too much for this Government, nor is it too much for any Government, to ask that those who have possession of lands in the North-West shall use the reasonable means and conform to the conditions required by the Government in order to get the entry of those lands, and to obtain their patents. The Government not only did this, but they adopted a principle by which the settlement duties performed in advance of survey, and in advance of the entry of lands, even where they were permitted to make their entries long after survey, should all count as if they had been performed after survey. The ordinary white settler going into the North-West and settling on surveyed lands is required at once to make entry. There is no such thing recognised by the law as a squatter upon surveyed lands. But we have dealt in an entirely different manner with those half-breeds. They have been protected against the cancellation which white settlers in similar circumstances are subject to; and they were given, and are still being given, time to make their entry, their own convenience alone being consulted, and their whole time being counted as if that time had been spent after the entry was made. Then, as to the surveys, the principle has been adopted that wherever a considerable number of settlers were on the land at the time the survey was made, that survey should be made according to the principle required by the settlers; but when the surveyor went into a district where there were no settlers, or where, as in the case of the parish of St. Louis de Langevin, there were but two settlers, the system adopted all over the North-West was followed; but even in such cases, these people were told that they could have their patents upon the principle of the river lot survey if they chose to take their land upon that principle, and to make the necessary sub-division. Then, as to the Indian title, we know that the Government as far back as 1883 passed an Order in Council that Mr. Russell should go to the North-West, and being on the spot, should enquire into and make a report upon all these claims. The difficulties that existed in dealing with that question were difficulties arising out of a conflict of opinion between those parties who were, from their position, supposed to be best able to judge of the necessities of the half-breeds in the North-West, and not from the Government refusing or ignoring their just rights. As to the general treatment of these people by the Government, it has been of the most kindly nature, and for the very best of all reasons, that being the original inhabitants of the country, having been there in advance of our occupation of the country, they were entitled to the greatest possible consideration; and that consideration has been given to them in every respect. I am perfectly satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that the attempt made by hon. gentlemen opposite to make out that the Government were in any way responsible for the outbreak of last spring, or that the refusal of these claims for the extinguishment of the Indian title had anything to do with it, will utterly fail. In fact, the hon. gentleman himself, in his closing remarks, practically admitted as much by pointing out that the people in the district in which the outbreak took place, in their petition did not ask for the extinguishment of the Indian title, but asked for other things, some of which are asked for by white settlers in the North-West as well—all matters of public policy relating to the interests of the whole country, and not to be dealt with exclusively for any one section. Sir, I leave the matter entirely in the hands of the House, and I am perfectly satisfied that the verdict of the House—sustained as I believe that verdict will be by the country—will be that the so-called grievances of the half-breeds of the North West had no basis to justify, or even to palliate the troubles that occurred last spring, still less, Sir, to justify or palliate the language which has been used in this House in relation to those supposed grievances, and in relation to those who took up arms ostensibly to redress them. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the House for the attention you have given me.

Mr. DAVIES. I very much fear, Sir, that the hon. Minister of the Interior has delivered the wrong speech. The hon. gentleman has the reputation of being somewhat of a skilled debater, and no one knew better than he did that the issue that was tendered for the consideration of the House by my hon. friend from East Quebec was a single issue, clear, definite, and distinct. The hon. gentleman has not attempted to grapple with that issue at all, except in a very limited degree, to which I will refer directly. In fact, in his opening remarks he told the House that it was not his intention to do so, that he intended to deal with the whole question of the North-West grievances. Well, Sir, I for one regret very much that the hon. gentleman took that course. I regret it because the question is so large and intricate that the discussion of one point at a time, such as that tendered by my hon. friend, will vastly facilitate the arrival at just conclusions on the part of members of the House and the country. Hon. members will remember well that last year, when the leader of the Opposition presented a resolution to this House on the general topic of the North-West grievances, and when he delivered a luminous, lengthy and able speech, in which he massed all the evidence together, and submitted a resolution based on his conclusions, he was reprimanded by the leader of the Government, who complained bitterly that all these matters had been mixed together, so that it was impossible to answer them in detail. Why, he asked, does the hon. gentleman mix up the question of civil rights with those of colonisation companies, surveys of land, the Indian title and others? It is impossible for anyone to answer him on all these points in one speech, and the result will be the public mind will be so perplexed as to be unable to draw any fair conclusions from the debate. My hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Cameron) initiated the other night a new policy. He tendered a distinct issue to the House as to the manner in which the Government dealt with the Indians, and that question was discussed separately from other questions. The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) has tendered a distinct issue to-night, namely:

"That it was the duty of the Government to proceed with diligence, under the authority they obtained from Parliament in 1879, to settle the claims arising out of the Indian title of the half-breed claims of the North-West Territories, and also to settle the claims of those of the Manitoba half-breeds who were temporarily absent during the enumeration."

And concluding that the Government has been guilty of neglect, delay and mismanagement in that regard. Here was a clear, definite issue presented to the House. How has that been met? My hon. friend (Mr. White), in his speech an hour and a half long, treated the House to a dissertation on the claims of the settlers, and the action of colonisation companies, and claims he has proofs that no settlers were dispossessed of their lands,—questions altogether alien to that before the House. But those who have watched the hon. gentleman for some time will understand why he took this course. He did so, evidently, because he was not able to answer the indictment presented upon this issue. The evidence introduced by my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Laurier), in support of his resolution, was overwhelming, and the hon. Minister knew that the only course open to him in his defence, was to distract the minds of the members, if possible, from that issue by mixing it up with others. The hon. gentleman brought down a number of affidavits to which I will not refer now. We made a short time ago serious complaints that we were not furnished with proper information, and the hon. gentleman then contended that we had all the information necessary on which to base an opinion; yet we see him here, day after day, as the political exigencies of the case require, bringing down to this House just such papers as suit him. I ask if this is a fair way of dealing with the House? The hon. gentleman referred to the report of Mr. Pierce, a report, I understand, prepared at his instigation, and the instructions for the preparation of which have been withheld, but that report does not deal, directly or indirectly, with the proposition now before the House, nor, if every word of it were true, and if the inferences to be fairly derived from all the facts it states were massed together, would they enable us to form a conclusion bearing on the resolution my hon. friend has submitted. It has nothing to do with the extinction of the Indian title: it has nothing to do with this great grievance which the hon. gentleman knows tended to bring about very largely the insurrection. The hon. gentleman has referred to the Order in Council made in 1883, and the report directing that the office of which he is now the head should be sub-divided in a certain way, so that Mr. Lindsay Russell might be appointed Surveyor-General and proceed to the North-West. Why did the hon. gentleman make that statement? Did he wish us to conclude from it that the Government or Mr. Russell had done anything? Does he state that in that Order in Council the Government showed any evidence of a disposition to settle the Indian title question? Did Mr. Russell proceed to the west to make an enumeration of the half-breeds? or did he act on the power which, in 1879, the Government took from the House? No; when the hon. gentleman drags this into the debate, he does it for the purpose of inducing those who have not carefully studied the question, to believe that the Government really took some steps to mitigate this great grievance. Why, their action had nothing more to do with the matter than have the affidavits the hon. gentleman referred to. The hon. gentleman stated further that, as regards the point where the rebellion rose, the major part of those who took part in it had their Indian title already extinguished, and that therefore that grievance was not the cause of the rebellion. The hon. gentleman must surely have listened to the argument, he did not attempt to controvert it, presented by the mover of the resolution, in which the latter showed that if it was only the local girevance existing in the minds of the leaders of the rebellion, that they were the main spring of the revolt, it would have been a mere riot and not a rebellion. No; it was the moral effect those insurgents derived from the existence of great grievances throughout the country that gave force to the rebellion, and no man knows better than the hon. gentleman that if it had not been for the existence of those grievances, for the removal of which the half-breeds had petitioned year after year, and to facilitate the removal of which the hon. gentleman and his friends never, until the last moment, raised a finger, the rebellion never would have assumed greater proportions than those of an unlawful assembly or riot. The hon. gentleman went to the North-West last year, as the Minister of the Interior. I think he did right. I think it is a matter for regret that his predecessors had not taken the same course years ago. It was their duty to have informed themselves, personally, with reference to the facts of the grievances stated in the petitions which, year after year, poured into the Department, and which were pigeonholed with that masterly inactivity that characterised the Department in the past five or six years. But when the hon. gentleman returned, after having saturated his mind with the facts, did he arrive at the conclusion that it was because of the settlers' grievances alone the rebellion assumed the important proportions it did? He knows well that the conclusion he formed in his mind was, that had the grievances of the North-West half-breeds, relative to the extinguishment of the Indian title, been removed years ago, there never would have been a rebellion at all. He stated when he returned from his trip, in a speech he delivered on 16th December, at Weston, that the very action taken by the Government, the tardy incomplete action in January, 1885, when the rebellion was almost under way, precipitated the rebellion itself. What action? The action taken to settle the North-West half-breed grievances in relation to the extinguishment of the Indian title alone. That the hon. gentleman said was the backbone of the rebellion, and it was, he said, their efforts to settle that, their tardy efforts to extend the right hand of fellowship to the half-breeds, that precipitated the rebellion; because the leader of the rebellion knew that if we settled that question, we would have removed many grievances and taken from him the support of a large number of his followers. What did the hon. gentleman say?

"Now then, gentlemen, it will be asked, how then did the rebellion occur? How was it that, if these things were settled, this rebellion broke out? I believe it broke out because of the action of the Government, and not because of its inaction. It broke out, as Mr. Astley has stated in his letter, and which information he got from Riel himself, because Riel, seeing that the Government had taken action and that the half-breed claims, such as they were, were about to be settled, believed that his little game will be spoiled."

The hon. gentleman, remark you, had come back from the North-West, he had acquired personal knowledge of the facts, he knew that these grievances had rankled in the breasts of these unfortunate people for years and years, and he knew, when he stated that, that if they had taken time by the forelock, if they had moved a year, or even six months earlier than they did, the cause of the rebellion would have been removed, and we never would have had a rebellion at all. I think I am justified in making the charge, and basing it upon the hon. gentleman's own evidence, that, if it had not been for the delay and inaction of the Government, and for their subsequent ill-advised action at the wrong time, the rebellion would never have taken place. So much for that point. Then the hon. gentleman went on to show that certain Qu'Appelle half-breeds were not influenced by any grievances of their own as to the extinguishment of the Indian title, but that their object was to get possession of the whole of the lands of the North-West. But did the hon. gentleman state when that mind took possession of the half-breeds? Was that their mind before Riel rose and before the Duck Lake tragedy? No, but it was their mind after the success of Riel had induced those unfortunate people to believe that he was going to be successful all around, and so their heads were turned. That was their state of mind after the rebellion broke out, but it was not their state of mind when the rebellion broke out, and it was not that which induced the rebellion. Let us look for a few moments—I promise the House not to be very lengthy upon the subject—at one or two prominent facts in connection with this particular question now before the House, in order that we may judge whether or not this question entered largely into those motives which induced the North-West half-breeds to rebel. How many half-breeds do we find there are in the North-West? I think I am speaking correctly when I say something about 4,800. If I am incorrect, I will thank the hon. gentleman to correct me. Of those 4,800, it appears by the evidence produced by the Government themselves that their own commissioner has reported that 2,000 had just claims which were unredressed. The hon. gentleman shakes his head. I think I am not far astray. I am speaking, of course, with reference to the whole question of the half-breeds of Manitoba and the North-West.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Dead and alive.

Mr. DAVIES. I think Mr. Street reports that he has settled nearly 2,000 claims.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). He settled 1,710 claims, and that includes the dead whose heirs were settled with.

Mr. DAVIES. Does the hon. gentleman say that these were all that were settled? There were 300 settled besides, making about 2,000. I may be a few astray, but I am approximately near the truth, so near it that I may say there were nearly 2,000 settled with. So that out of 4,800 half-breeds, nearly 2,000 were shown to have real grievances which were acknowledged by the Government commissioner and reported upon. That was an enormous proportion, and I think I shall be able to show that these were not grievances of a day, but, as shown by my hon. friend who moved this resolution, were of long-standing, and had been presented to the Government not once or twice but scores of times, not by the half-breeds alone, but by all those who had knowledge of the matter and who lived in that country, by their priests, by their bishops, by their magistrates, by the only body they had to represent them, the North-West Council, by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West, by the members of the North-West Council individually and by the council collectively, and by all those whose duty it was to bring this matter to the notice of the Government. Let me for a moment go back to the inception of this matter, and I will rapidly run over the historical points. I wish to call attention to the real ques tion at issue and to eliminate those side issues which the hon. gentleman (Mr. White), for a purpose of his own, has introduced into this discussion. I wish to do this in order that we may come to a clear and intelligent conclusion upon the clear issue which is presented to us. We know that in 1870, 1,400,000 acres were set apart to settle the Manitoba half breed claims under the Administration of the present leader of the Government. Only the children of the half-breeds of Manitoba were to participate in that grant. From 1870 to 1873, when the hon. gentleman went out of power, nothing whatever was done to carry out the law. We find that, when the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) came into power in 1874, he introduced a Bill extending to the heads of families as well as their children the right to participate in these grants; and in April, 1875, the Dominion lands agent at Winnipeg, and Messrs. Ryan & Machar, the commissioners, were appointed to take the census of the unenumerated half breeds. We find that, in 1876, they reported, and reported that their work was still incomplete, and Mr. Ryan was ordered to take evidence anywhere in the Territories within two years. I understand the hon. gentleman to complain that there was inaction on the part of the Government of the hon. member for East York. There may have been inaction; I am not sufficiently well acquainted with the facts to undertake to reply on that point; but, from reading the papers which have been brought down, it appears to me that all that was ever done in the matter was done by those gentlemen before they went out of power. They appointed these commissioners to take evidence in order to carry out the law; they directed them to take the evidence wherever they went, and they did more than that, and that is what the hon. gentleman complains of. At that time remember that the half-breeds had not settled in settlements as they did later. The buffalo were not all gone from the plains then. Many of the half-breeds were engaged in buffalo hunting; and the only complaint the hon. gentleman makes is that the Government did not order these commissioners to follow the buffalo and to follow the half-breeds with the buffalo, and to take their evidence as they roamed about the plains. But they did order them, and it seems to me reasonable, wherever they were, in the discharge of their duties, when a half-breed offered his evidence to take it. And they did take it. In 1877 Newcome and Mills, at Emerson and Portage la Prairie, were ordered to take evidence, and in June, 1878, the then Minister of the Interior announced that he had appointed Duck to make an investigation, and I believe in February, 1878, he reported that he had made that investigation. Hon. gentlemen may ask was this matter of the half-breeds' grievance in relation to the extinguishment of the Indian title brought to the notice of the Government? Was there not neglect on their part in lying by? Did they not, by allowing it to lay in abeyance, almost waive their claim? If you look at this mass of papers, which I say, after a thorough examination of it, is a disgrace to the Department which brought it down——

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Why?

Mr. DAVIES. Because the papers are so inextricably mixed up that it is impossible to find what you require.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). After they had been handled by your leader, and tossed about.

Mr. BLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I must not allow that observation to go without an immediate challenge. I answered it before, and I say it is indecent for the hon. gentleman to repeat it. I got those papers as they were sent to me by the directions of the Clerk of this House, and they reached the printers in the precise form and order in which they were brought down to the House. I state that now, Sir, upon my responsibility as a member.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). How does the hon. gentleman know that they reached the printers as he carried them away?

Mr. BLAKE. I know how they were when I handed them back to the Clerk.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). They were handled by him and others, and I know, as former chairman of the Printing Committee, that we used to have the greatest difficulty in getting papers that went into his hands, because they used to be handled by him in such a way and kept back until we had to send for them.

Mr. DAVIES. This insinuation of the hon. member only makes the matter worse, in my opinion. The hon. gentleman knows that these papers are arranged with no order. I looked through them myself. When he was in a calmer mood the other day he distinctly acknowledged in this House that the arrangement of the papers was disgraceful.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I say so now.

Mr. DAVIES. Notwithstanding this disgraceful arrangement, notwithstanding the almost—I was going to say—design apparent on their face, by which they are so arranged that nobody could understand them, I have taken a good deal of trouble in going through them, and I have no hesitation in saying that from 1878 down to 1885, not a year went by without petitions being forwarded from those half-breeds, and those who represent them, to the Department of the Interior, praying that they would take up this question and settle it. We find in June, 1878, a petition from Prince Albert, forwarded through Captain Moore, and signed by 151 of these half-breeds, as I find it upon page 29 of these precious papers. These petitioners represent:

"Your petitioners would humbly represent that their rights in the participation in the issue of half-breed or settlers' scrip are as valid and binding as those of the half-breeds and old settlers of Manitoba, and are expected from them to be regarded by the Canadian Government as scrupulously as in that Province, and with a view to the adjustment of the same, your petitioners would humbly request that a census of said half-breeds and old settlers be taken, at as early a date as may conveniently be determined upon, with a view of apportioning to those of them who have not already been included in the census of Manitoba, their just allotment of land and scrip."

In February, 1878, Gabriel Dumont and John Fisher, chairman and secretary respectively of a public meeting of half-breeds held at St. Laurent, presented another petition to the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West, praying for similar treatment as that accorded to the Manitoba half-breeds. This is found on page 28, and reads as follows:—

"That there be granted to each half-breed head of family, and to their children, who have not participated in the distribution of scrip and lands in the Province of Manitoba, a like amount of scrip and like land grants as in Manitoba."

Then in April, 1878, Lieutenant-Governor Laird forwards a petition of the half-breeds of Prince Albert, praying for similar treatment; to be found on page 25, wherein they pray:

"That all the heads of families of half-breeds and their children who have not participated in the distribution of scrip and lands in the Province of Manitoba, to allow such like scrip and grants of lands to those allowed in the said province, at least that bush land be granted to them."

Then we find in August, 1878, the North-West Council passing a resolution, praying that the half-breed claims be granted—to be found on page 36. I will read that resolution, because I deem it of more than ordinary importance. It is a resolution of the only representative body that these poor people possess; it is a resolution of intelligent, educated men, men who felt their responsibility in making their statements; and we may assume that the North-West Council would not put upon record statements of that kind unless they personally knew them to be true. They say:

"That it would be injudicious to set apart reserves of land for the half-breeds of the North-West Territories, to give them negotiable scrip.

"That in view, however, of the fact that grants of land or issue of scrip were made to the half-breeds of Manitoba towards the extinguishment of the Indian titles to the lands of that Province, there will undoubtedly be general dissatisfaction amongst the half-breeds of said territories, unless they receive some little consideration."

The Government here are informed, on the responsibility and the authority of the only representative body in that country, that there will be general dissatisfaction until they take this matter up and grant some relief to the half breeds. Then they go on to suggest a form in which that grant should be given; but I need not trouble the House with it because the Government were bound to act under the authority they took from Parliament in 1879. They did not suggest a particular plan for settling these grievances; they only asked Parliament to give them power to deal with them. They were then bound, after taking that power, to take proper evidence and to find a proper way to act upon the evidence so as to remove the grievances, but they did not do it. Going on with the record, we find that in August, 1878, a petition from the Cypress Mountain half-breeds was forwarded to the Government, to be found at page 32, in which they also set forth their grievances, and state:

"That the majority of us, upon the cession of the Province to the Canadian Government, were temporarily absent, and were thereby deprived of the benefits of the scrips given to those half-breeds who were at that time present in the Province."

Then we have Mr. Laird's despatch, in which he urges the Government to take action upon it. We have that despatch acknowledged, and on the 28th December, 1878, we have Col. Dennis submitting that celebrated memorandum to the Minister, and asking his immediate attention to it. That memorandum was read by the mover of the resolution, and I need not read it again. The Deputy-Head of the Department was fully apprised of the importance of this question and of the necessity of dealing with it immediately. He was informed, that if they did not deal with it immediately, it would be a cause of general dissatisfaction, natural dissatisfaction, which we would feel ourselves, had we been some of those unfortunate half-breeds. Well, Sir, what was done with that memorandum of the Deputy-Head? It was very properly, I think, submitted to Archbishop Taché, to the Bishop of the Saskatchewan, to Lieut.-Governor Laird and to Mr. Richardson, the magistrate, to obtain their opinions upon it. They made each of them their reports, and the Government are in possession of the suggestions they made with respect to that memorandum. I charge, Mr. Speaker, that although they were in possession of these, although they had got, ostensibly, all the information they asked for, and although they were in a position to deal exhaustively with the question, they followed that policy of masterly inactivity for which they are so much renowned—they did nothing. Now, let us look for a moment at the powers this Government took from Parliament. Section 125 of the Dominion Lands Act, 1879, enacts:

"The following powers are hereby delegated to the Governor in Council:— * * *

"(e) To satisfy any claim existing in connection with the extinguishment of the Indian title, preferred by half-breed residents in the North-West Territories outside of the limits of Manitoba, on the 15th day of July, 1870, by granting lands to such persons, to such extent and on such terms and conditions as may be deemed expedient."

Now, Sir, the Minister of the Interior has criticised at some length the reports made to the Deputy Minister, to whom those suggestions were sent. He has shown that in some particulars the suggestions made by Archbishop Taché and some others were not prudent suggestions. But are we here to discuss at this late day whether the suggestions were prudent or not? Why the Government should have determined in 1879 what portions of these suggestions were prudent, and they should have acted upon them. The petitions should have been taken out of the pigeon-holes, and the Minister instead of hieing away to England and other parts should have hied himself away personally to the North-West and should have enquired into the facts connected with the grievances, and have put forward his hand and dealt with them, remedied them and removed them. But he did not do it, and we have sad results in 1885. But the matter did not end there. In the spring of 1880 the half-breeds in Manitoba village, in the North-West Territory, petitioned Sir John A. Macdonald again. That petition is to be found on page 41. They are getting restless; they are wondering that the petitions forwarded by them and endorsed by their priests, bishops and magistrates, by the North-West Council and all the legally constituted authorities of the country, should have been treated with contempt, and they are forwarding other petitions in which they set forth at still greater length their grievances in this regard. They state:

"And whereas the continued delay in ascertaining and investigating said claims is creating great and general dissatisfaction throughout the Territories, we your petitioners do humbly pray that you will cause a commission to be issued at an early day to enquire into and confirm the said claims, not only with regard to scrip and allotments of land as provided for in Manitoba, but, moreover, to confirm the titles of land occupied by or purchased by parties from occupants of claims taken previously to the transfer of the Territories to the Dominion of Canada."

The Government were not only aware of the existence of those grievances, the fact had been pressed on them time and again, month after month, but there was the further and important fact, which had been pressed on them, that the existence of those grievances and the delay in their removal were causing great and general dissatisfaction from one end of the Territory to the other. What, then, is the use of the hon. gentleman urging to-day, in the face of facts so plain and palpable, that those grievances had nothing to do with the outbreak in 1885. Following in the same string we have the petition of a large number of residents near Edmonton. I am afraid to say how many; I did not count them, but their names covered two columns of a whole page and must number 100. I will not trouble the House by reading them. They repeat the statements in a previous petition respecting delay. I will read some of their own words:

"And whereas the continued delay in ascertaining and investigating said claims is creating great and general dissatisfaction throughout the Territories."

I will not weary the House by reading further from the petition. So the record goes on; month after month, year after year, these poor people petitioning the authorities at Ottawa, praying and begging for some relief in this regard, and receiving in return the stereotyped reply that the Government will take the matter into consideration, or that it will be submitted to the Minister for his consideration. But nothing is done. I say, therefore, the mover of the resolution was right in arraigning the Government and in charging them with neglect, grievous and criminal neglect, towards those poor people, and with having waited, before entertaining their grievances, until those people rose in rebellion when it was too late. The Government thus adopted the vicious system followed by all tyrants throughout the world—refusing to concede what is right at the proper time, and yielding to force when it is too late, and that in the wrong manner. I will not weary the House by going through the events of 1883-84.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES. I do not wonder at hon. gentlemen cheering. It is a record of shame and disgrace to hon. gentlemen opposite. But we come down to the action which hon. gentlemen opposite did take. The hon. Minister has said they moved. When was the first record of their motion? In January, 1885, the Minister of the Interior came down with a recommendation of what? That a commission issue to settle those grievances and entertain the claims of the half-breeds? No. But a recommendation that a commission issue to take evidence of the unenumerated half-breeds of Manitoba and confining it to them alone, repudiating by inference the claims and rejecting by inference the claim of all the half-breeds of the North-West outside of Manitoba to be treated in the same manner as the Manitoba half-breeds were. When hon. gentlemen opposite say they moved before the rebellion, let us understand clearly what they did do. I refer to the report of the Minister, to be found on page 17. I want to place it on record, because I have heard it stated more than once by leading members of the Government that they did not wait till after the rebellion took place to meet the grievances, but they had taken steps months before the rebellion broke out; and I say that statement is not in accordance with the record. The report of the Minister is as follows:—

"Certified copy of a report of a Committee of the honorable the Privy Council, appoved by His Excellency the Governor General in Council on 28th January, 1885.

"On a memorandum, dated 26th January, 1885, from the Minister of the Interior, submitting that it is desirable, with a view to settling equitably the claims of half-breeds in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, who would have been entitled to land had they resided in Manitoba at the time of the transfer and filed their claims in due course under the Manitoba Act, and also of those who, though not residing in Manitoba and equitably entitled to participate in the grant, but did not do so, to ascertain the number of such half-breeds; and recommending that he be authorised to obtain an enumeration of them, and to employ three persons to make such enumeration.

"The committee concur in the foregoing recommendations, and they advise that the requisite authority be granted."

So this recommendation, meagre as it was, short as it was, did not go further than the Manitoba half-breeds. It did not touch the half-breeds of the plains; and it did not say what the policy of the Government was. It held out no promise; it did not point out to what extent the Government would yield, whether it would grant certain parts of the petitions or the whole. It is merely a recommendation of one part of the claim and one part only. Then we find nothing more is done. We find events moving very rapidly, reports tumbling in on the Government that their inaction, their criminal inaction, is bearing its legitimate fruit. We find the Government being told that the half breeds, despairing of redressing by petitions and by legitimate means their grievances, are unfortunately rising in arms. We find a telegram coming in on 11th March, from Superintendent Crozier, stating that the half-breeds are excited, that they are moving about more than usual and are preparing arms. On 11th March there was another despatch from Superintendent Crozier, stating:

"Half-breeds greatly excited; reported they threaten on Carleton before 16th. Half-breeds refuse to take freight or employment for Government; will stop all freight coming into country after 16th of this month; getting arms ready; leader will not allow people to leave home as they may be required."

On 14th March, Lieut.-Colonel Irvine telegraphed:

"Lieutenant-Governor received telegram, dated Carleton, to-day, from Crozier, saying half-breed rebellion may break out any moment, and joined by Indians, and asking that his division be largely increased. Would recommend that at least 100 men be sent at once, before roads break up. Please instruct."

We find a telegram to Colonel Irvine, dated Ottawa, 15th March:

"Start for the north, quickly as possible, with all available men up to 100. Telegraph marching out; state and report when passing telegraph stations."

On 19th March there is a telegram from Superintendent Deane, dated Regina:—

"The following received from Superintendent Crozier: 'Rumor to-night Indians being tampered with; large force should be sent without delay that arrests may be made if necessary to prevent further and continuous trouble from Riel and followers.'"

In a word, we find that the Government policy of masterly inactivity had borne its legitimate fruit, that their policy of criminal inaction had borne the only legitimate fruit that could be expected from it. We find that these people took up arms, and then only action was taken by the Government. On 30th March, after the rebellion had broken out, we find a report of the Committee of the Privy Council acknowledging that their previous report of January, to which I have referred, was altogether incomplete, and reciting that it was necessary to go much further.

"The Minister of Interior, on representations made that it was desirable to have made an enumeration of the half-breeds in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, who would have been entitled to land had they resided in Manitoba at the time of the transfer, was authorised by Your Excellency in Council, under date the 28th of January last, to appoint commissioners and the following gentlemen were accordingly appointed to carry into effect the said order of Your Excellency in Council, namely: William Purvis Rochford Street, of the city of London, in the Province of Ontario, one of Her Majesty counsel learned in the law, who is to be chairman of the commission; Roger Goulet of the town of St. Boniface, in the Province of Manitoba, dominion lands surveyor; and Amedée Edmond Forget, of the town of Regina, in the Provisional District of Assinaboia, clerk of the North-West Council and barrister-at-law.

"The Minister of Interior is of opinion that the scope of the enquiry to be made by the commissioners appointed under the authority of the order of Your Excellency in Council above mentioned should be enlarged."

The rebellion had changed their position. It had enabled them to grasp things which they should have grasped months and years before; it enabled them to see that the policy of inaction and delay would not do any longer, because we find the Minister recommending the enlargement of the scope of the commission, so as to include the half-breeds of the plains outside of Manitoba, as well as the others. That is what we have, on the 30th day of March, after the rebellion is in full force, and, therefore, when the Government claim that they took action which ought to have prevented the rising, we appeal to the record and let it show that their action was taken long after the rebellion broke out. Even on the 4th of April, 1885, the authority which they gave was not complete; they had not fully mastered the subject yet, and the commissioner appointed to take evidence, telegraphed them on the 4th of April, to the following effect:—

"South Centre, Manitoba, 4th April, 1885.

"If desired by half-breeds, would it not be advisable to grant scrip one sixty or two forty dollars, permitting them to acquire title to lands in occupation through possession? Otherwise Government really gives nothing for Indian title."

That telegram is explained by a letter forwarded by the commissioner next day. The Minister and his Deputy evidently did not understand the question. It is true that some years previously, when a petition came from the half-breeds setting forth their grievances, the Deputy Minister said that he could not understand the petition and Mr. Lawrence Clarke came to his rescue, and pointed out what the Minister and his Deputy evidently did not know that an Act of Parliament had provided the means whereby this claim of the half-breeds to the Indian title should be extinguished—pointed out that it was the duty of the Government to act in that way, and if they were ignorant of their own Acts they were to blame and not the half-breeds. There appears to have been a repetition of this state of things in 1885. They did not seem to know then, and Mr. Street follows up the telegram I have already read with the following:

"Commission agree in recommending that power be granted them to deal with occupying half-breeds in the manner summarised in my message of yesterday; also, if possible, to enable commission to settle claims of supplementary Manitoba half-breeds by allowing them the same terms as North-West half-breeds."

That was followed the next day by this letter to the Minister:

"Winnipeg, 5th April, 1885.

"My Dear Sir David,—We arrived here early this morning. I met my fellow-commissioners at the Dominion Land Office at ten o'clock. They introduced the subject as to which I telegraphed you yesterday, and spoke very strongly as to its being one which was likely to be a serious stumbling-block in our dealings with the half-breeds. Lest you should not fully have understood my telegram, I will shortly state the point. Suppose we find that a half-breed has been, upon and since 5th July, 1870, in occupation of a parcel of, say 160 acres, under circumstances which, if he were a white settler, would entitle him to a grant of the land under the homestead clauses of the Dominion Lands Act: under the authority we now possess we could, if he were the head of a family, allow him nothing more than 160 acres; we could allow him nothing for his claim as a half-breed; and, inasmuch as the Government has all along been purporting to deal with the half-breeds as if they had some general rights beyond those of ordinary incoming settlers, my fellow-commissioners say that great dissatisfaction and disappointment will be created if we give to these occupying half-breeds only that which any ordinary settler can claim, and nothing for the extinguishment of his Indian title."

This shows to me that this matter had never received from the Government of the day and from the Minister in charge, that consideration and examination which it ought to have had, or else we must accept the other proposition which is probably the correct one, that the Government did not desire and never intended to give to these half-breeds any of the concessions which they were authorised and directed to give by Statute, and had taken power to give as far back as 1879. They led these poor people to believe, by passing a Statute enabling them to confer on these half-breeds the same rights as had been conferred on the half-breeds of Manitoba—they led them to believe that these same rights would be granted them; they kept that hope dangling before them for five or six years; they worked them up to a state of dissatisfaction and discontent, and as the mover of the resolution said to-day, even when the rebellion was on the verge of breaking out the real meaning and intention of the Government can be gathered from the speech made by the leader of the Government in this House, on, I think, the 26th day of March, wherein he stated that the half-breeds must make their choice between the rights which the Indians could get and the rights which white men could get, but that they had no other rights. Well, Sir, it is known that they had other rights. Those rights had been conceded to the Manitoba half-breeds; those rights had been ratified by Parliament in 1879, and recognised by the authorities time and again, and on the 26th of March, he comes in and gives you the key to the meaning of the Order in Council of the 26th of January in the following words:—

"As a whole the half-breeds have been told that if they desired to be considered as Indians there are most liberal reserves that they could go with the others; but that if they desired to be considered as white men they would get 160 acres of land as homesteads. But they are not satisfied with that; they want to get land scrip of equal quantity—I think upwards of 200 acres—and then get, as a matter of course, their homesteads as well."

That is the conclusion of the whole matter. After five or six long weary years, after money has been spent by the half-breeds in their efforts to get their rights, after petitions and delegations had been sent to Ottawa in their efforts to get their rights, after memorials from the North-West Council, and from individual members of that Council had been forwarded begging that those rights should be given, when the whole country is in a state of turmoil, and the half-breeds are on the verge of rising to get by force that which is denied to them by peaceable measures, the hon. gentleman rises, and practically he says: You have no rights except as Indians or as white men, and those rights, which as half-breeds, the Parliament of Canada has guaranteed to you time and again, I for one do not recognise. That then is the conclusion of the whole matter, and if it did not bring about the rebellion, it contributed largely to bringing it about, and I say that hon. gentlemen can fairly be arraigned, and I charge them before this Parliament, and before this country, of having, by their inaction, by their cold, cruel and callous neglect, by what they are pleased to term their masterly inactivity, with having contributed to drive those people into a state of desperation, when the only conclusion to their ignorant minds was that redress which they could not get by peaceable measures they could get by a resort to arms. Unfortunately they resorted to arms, and that unfortunate termination resulted, it is true, in their getting their rights; but it resulted, also, in the expenditure of vast millions of money by the taxpayers of this country, and the shedding of the blood of many of our fellow countrymen. I say the Minister of the Interior has evaded the charge made by my hon. friend; that he has not dared to come forward and state that anyone of those petitions were not forwarded; that any one of the facts on which he based his charge were not true, but he evades it, and he talks about settlers' rights and colonisation companies, and affidavits, and other subjects altogether foreign to the one before the House, in the attempt to lead the House and the country to believe that there is nothing in this motion. Believing as I do, that the statements made in that motion are not over-charged, and believing that the Government are directly and criminally responsible for the rebellion—responsible for their neglect, for their indifference, and for the contempt with which they treated all the petitions of these men, I will cordially second the motion and give my vote in favor of it.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend who has just sat down has given a good illustration of how natural it is to magnify the particular topic on which for the time being one chooses to enlarge. I have often remarked, in listening to preachers, that one will take, for instances, in the morning, a particular text; and after reading his text, he will preface his remarks by saying that this is the most important portion of Scripture that there is between the two lids of the Bible. In the afternoon, I have heard the same preacher take another text, and forgetting what he said in the morning, preface his remarks by saying, "there is no more important portion of Scripture in the whole Bible than this of which I am to speak this afternoon." Now, my hon. friend illustrates this. We have found to-night a new emphasised cause for the rebellion. We have heard a great many reasons given why the rebellion took place We have heard that the rebellion took place because of certain colonisation companies' schemes; and for quite a long period, the country resounded from one end to the other, with the allegation that it was these terrible colonisation companies, and the very bad policy of the Government in reference to them, to which was due, and entirely due, this unfortunate and lamentable rebellion that took place in the North-West. That was when they were preaching from the colonisation text. Then, Sir, the papers and the speeches would take a different turn, and it would be: "Oh, this favoritism in the North-West; men are sent from the Eastern Provinces—carpet-baggers with their carpet bags—and it is from the peculations and the favoritism, and the wrong actions of these office-seekers and carpet-baggers that all the troubles have arisen, and that the country was driven to rebellion in order to purify itself from them." And so, text after text, on which for the time being hon. gentlemen were preaching, was stated, to furnish the sole cause of the rebellion. To-night a new cause has sprung up. It is now because the half-breeds, forsooth, did not get—in addition to the 160 acres of land that each one of them could have, more than they ever cultivated, more than they could cultivate, more than they are cultivating to-day—another 160 acres to tack on to that; or, forsooth, a small quantity of scrip which they could sell for ready cash and speedily dissipate. It is because they did not get that that the rebellion sprang up, and that these people ran to arms for their rights. Now, it rests with us to find out whether or not this was the potent cause of the rebellion. My hon. friend said that the issue had been presented to night in a single form, but that the Minister of the Interior had tried to distract the attention of the House by taking up other and different subjects. I will leave the House to judge whether or not my hon. friend from Quebec East did not, before he finished his speech on the single issue, bring in other issues, to which my hon. friend, the Minister of the Interior, in his speech replied, as well as to the specific issue which was brought. Two or three hon. gentlemen have spoken of Mr. Pearce's report. Mr. Pearce's report seems to bother some hon. gentlemen and the only way that they can get round it is to say that it was instigated, that is to say, that the Minister of the Interior directed Mr. Pearce to get up a certain report for a certain purpose; and thereby they endeavor to discredit the report of Mr. Pearce, which pricks a good many bubbles which have been floating around in sight of the country during the past few months. Now, I prefer to believe that Mr. Pearce made an honest report; and if the report is not honest, it will produce a better effect before the House and the country to take Mr. Pearce's report and show its inaccuracy rather than to throw doubts upon its honesty. My hon. friend said that nothing had been done by this Government from 1879, till after the rebellion broke out, and he stated in the same breath that the extinguishment of the Indian title for the half-breeds was a most important thing, and that because it was not carried out, the Government were thereby guilty of neglect and criminal action. I want to say to hon. gentlemen if, in the now historic language of the leader of the Opposition, "justice is justice, upon the banks of the Red River as well as upon the banks of the Saskatchewan," I want to enlarge that just a little, and ask hon. gentlemen whether justice is not justice between 1873 and 1879 just as much as it is between 1879 and 1885; and if it was criminal, cruel, callous neglect in this Government to keep the half-breeds out of that extinguishment of the Indian title from 1879 to 1885, was it not just as cruel and callous and criminal a neglect on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, who, with that intuitive sense of justice which they possesses in so strong a degree, allowed the years to pass from 1873 to 1879, and had nothing better to say in reference to the extinguishment of the title than to append the cabalistic marks, "No.—D. M." upon their petitions? I say that justice is just as much justice in one year as in another. If hon. gentlemen were so anxious to have justice crowned and elevated, and not simply used as a whip to be used for party purposes, I think they would say that they were guilty when, with their intuitive and strong sense of justice, they allowed all those years to pass by without making a single provision in order that these poor men might have the right which they claimed so strongly ought to have been granted to them. My hon. friend involved himself in a complete circle in his reasoning. He started out to show, and showed to his own satisfaction if not to ours, that the rebellion was caused—and the leader of the Opposition cheered in his most vigorous and trenchant way when that statement was made—by the action of the Government, because the Government took action with the view of having these very claims rectified, and the moment they took that action the flames of rebellion burst forth. Yet about fifteen minutes afterwards, in equally as strong terms, he declared that the Government took no action at all until after the rebellion had been some weeks in progress. I leave my hon. friend to reconcile these two things for himself, and to chase his own argument around the circle and see how long it will take him to catch it. He said nothing was done by this Government from 1879 to 1885. I think that is not quite correct. In the first place, something was done which was not done by hon. gentlemen opposite. Legal enunciation was given to the fact that the half-breeds had rights in the lands of the country. That was given in 1879, and it was more than hon. gentlemen opposite had given. They state in the same breath that it was not the intention of the Government to give these half-breeds any rights with reference to the extinguishment of the Indian claim, and yet that the express intention to extinguish the claim was enunciated in legislation and that the Government are to blame because it did not carry out that intention. Now, I think something was done, and my hon. friend has shown, by the very facts he has adduced, that there were difficulties surrounding the question which could not be settled in an off-hand way. When Archbishop Taché and the North-West Council, which was so good an exponent of the circumstances and wishes of the time, were quoted as far apart as the poles almost with reference to their plans for settlement, I think my hon. friend has shown conclusively that the question is one difficult of solution and not to be settled off-hand. He has stated that the North-West Council knew better than any other body of men what should be done, and they came to the front with a proposition in which they started out by combating the theory and plan of the archbishop, and it is not likely that, if the plan of the council had been carried out, the half-breeds would have been satisfied, because what the half-breed wanted was that they should be able to turn their lands or the worth of their lands into scrip, for which they could get a ready sale and ready cash. That is where the difficulty lay, and where Archbishop Taché saw the difficulty. We had not simply the allaying of bad feelings to take into account, but the difficulty that by giving scrip to the half-breeds which they could sell, we were helping them to their own injury. What we wanted first was to see that the half-breeds retained their heritage and were not put in a position to dissipate it in a moment. The difficulty found in carrying out the Act of 1879 was how to satisfy the half-breeds, as far as sentimental grievances were concerned, and at the same time how to do the best for them in the long run by keeping for them some portion of the heritage which was so justly theirs. It is said that nothing was done. Well, I am not going minutely into this question, but intend merely touching another point before I resume my seat. To hear my hon. friend, in his earnest but very good-natured way, applying his strong, epithets, on the one hand, to the half-breeds, in the way of pity, and on the other hand to the Government, in the way of denunciation, one would suppose that no people under the sun had such terrible grievances to complain of as had the half-breeds with reference to the extinguishment of the Indian title. I may state that their grievances, conceding them the right to complain, because their claims were not immediately settled, were trivial in comparison with the grievances which people in various ages of the world have to struggle against; and when you talk about heroism and justifiable rebellion, you will find no rebellion in the whole course of history which stands upon the elevated plane of heroism and struggle for liberty, which does not appeal to a principle deeper far than the mere sentimental grievance arising out of the non-possession of land, which those who claim it have no intention of cultivating. Has the hon. gentleman proved that one single half-breed was ever dispossessed of the lot of land on which he settled, or the hut in which he lived, or the house that sheltered himself and family? Has he proven that the thongs were ever put about his limbs, that his liberty was ever curtailed, his social freedom interfered with, his religious equality and freedom of worship in any way restricted? If one or all of these things could be shown to have existed, there would be a foundation for grievances which might well have found expression in rising against the authority that exercised the tyranny, but because the half-breed, although he has in his lot more than he ever intends to cultivate, does not get at once 160 acres to tack on that, which he never intends to cultivate, he must, forsooth, rise in bloody rebellion, and imperil the peace and constitution of our country. The pretension is absurd on its face; and what is more absurd still is that eloquent hon. gentlemen should rise in this House to justify the rebellion, and seek to elevate to the plane of heroism, which such men as George Washington and others all the way back through a line of heroes occupy, such men as Louis Riel, of evil example, and Gabriel Dumont, a man brave but brave in a bad cause, where bravery is but reckless rashness. Though it were proved that the half-breeds had an indefeasible right to the extinguishment of the Indian title, you must prove that the keeping from them of this right infringed upon their essential liberty, that they were maltreated in person, robbed of their liberty, interfered with in their homes. All this was recklessly stated at the outset of the agitation, but these statements have simmered down, until to-night we have got to the bed rock of what hon. gentlemen opposite will rest their case on in future, namely, that the right to the extinguishment of the Indian title of the half-breeds was not granted immediately. I have nothing more to say, except that I have been saddened more than I can express to find in this country, free as it is, with its constitutional methods, men who will take up the time of the country in trying to glorify into a just and laudable rebellion the paltry, miserable rising which has taken place in the North-West, and to dignify into a hero one who lacks all the essential qualities of heroism.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat seems to think that the motion which is placed in your hands is a motion of commendation of the half-breeds of the North-West for having taken up arms. The hon. gentleman surely could not have read the motion. He must be aware that it is quite possible to condemn the rebellion, and, at the same time, not to approve of the course the Government has taken. That motion relates to the conduct of the Government in reference to the extinguishment of the half-breed title in the lands of the North-West. We have before us, so far as that resolution is concerned, no other proposition than that one, but the hon. gentleman who is at the present time the Minister of the Interior has seen proper to go beside that question and refer to the conduct of the Administration which was in office some ten years ago. Supposing the Administration of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) had been all that the hon. gentleman who is now Minister of the Interior represents it, supposing they were derelict in their duty, supposing their conduct had been such as to have justified the country in expelling them from office, what, I would like to know, would that have to do with the merits of the present Administration, with the efficiency of their conduct, or with their energy in dealing with the important questions that have arisen in the North-West Territories? I think the House will pardon me if I depart from the questions involved in that resolution, and give some little attention to the charges that have been made by the hon. the Minister of the Interior now, and by his leader last year, against the Government which preceded them in office. The hon. gentleman forgets that this half-breed question arose in 1870, that the Government of the Minister who is now at the head of affairs was then in office, and that the rebellion then in a large degree arose from the claims put forward by the half-breeds and the failure of the Government to recognise those claims. The hon. gentleman knows that there were certain parties who were delegated from the people of the North-West Territories to represent their views, and that they entered into an arrangement with the Government, which was given effect to by the Manitoba Act of 1870, one of the provisions of which was the setting apart of 1,400,000 acres in the Province of Manitoba for the purpose of extinguishing the Indian title of the half-breed population. The hon. gentleman also knows that a census was taken in 1870 under the direction of the Lieutenant-Governer of Manitoba, Mr. Archibald; that census included not only the half-breed children who were entitled to share in the 1,400,000 acres, but also the half-breed heads of families and the old settlers of the Province of Manitoba. The hon. gentleman, too, is aware that the people who were enumerated embraced nearly double the population of the Province of Manitoba who were entitled to share in the 1,400,000 acres under the Manitoba Act After that census was taken, the opinion of the law officers of the Crown was had upon the construction of this 31st section of the Manitoba Act. The Prime Minister was at that time Minister of Justice, and he and the Deputy Minister advised that the half-breed heads of families were not entitled to share in this 1,400,000, that it was to be distributed amongst the children of the half-breeds alone. Hon. gentleman no doubt are conversant with the fact that a very considerable number of the half-breeds has been dealt with as Indians. The Indians or the so-called Indians, on the St. Peters' reserves are, or a majority of them are, half-breeds; and these were included in the enumeration made by Mr. Archibald in 1870. It will be seen that the census which was taken by Mr. Archibald did not afford any basis for the distribution of the 1,400,000 acres. I may mention, among other things that were done in regard to the Province of Manitoba at that time, that an Act was introduced by the Government, I think in 1873, providing that 140 acres should be given to each of the original white settlers and the descendants white of settlers, who had come into the Territory between 1813 and 1835. There was no further legislation by the Government of that day either with reference to the half-breeds or with reference to the white settlers of the Territories. There was a law introduced providing for the half-breeds heads of families, but that was introduced in May, 1874, by the Government of the hon. member for East York. I wish to call the attention of the House to this fact—and I am stating these facts with as much briefness as I can—that, during the three years that the Government was in power from 1870 to 1873, no step was taken for the purpose of distributing the 1,400,000 acres among the half-breed children who were entitled to it under the Manitoba Act. Before I proceed further, let me make a quotation from the speech of the First Minister here last year, referring to the census taken by Mr. Archibald. The Prime Minister said:

"If this census had been adhered to there would have been no difficulty. It was accurate, as accurate as a census can be taken in a new country without municipal institutions and means for enumerating the people one by one. But it was a correct census, and for it 1,400,000 acres had been assigned to meet the half-breed claims; and if that census had been adhered to, there never would have been any trouble. But the truth of the matter is, that the moment we went out of power it was necessary that everything we had done should be reversed, and the Government of the day chose to say that there were not 10,000 half-breeds in the Province of Manitoba, and they appointed Mr. Matthew Ryan and Mr. Machar, the latter a gentleman whom the hon. member for South Huron knows something about, for the purpose of undoing—I will not say for the purpose of undoing but of disregarding the census previously taken. That is the fact. If the census that had been taken and returned by Governor Archibald had been accepted there would have been land enough in the appropriation to have settled all trouble as well for the half-breeds who happened to be away on the plains at the time the final adjudication was made. But it did not suit the Government of the day to accept that. Oh, no. The claims of the half-breeds of Manitoba were bought up by speculators. It was an unfortunate thing for those poor people; but it is true that this grant of scrip and land to these poor people was a curse and not a blessing. The scrip was bought up; the lands were bought up by white speculators and the consequences are apparent. I am told that even at this moment, in the vicinity of Winnipeg instead of the surrounding country comprising smiling farms, settled with industrious people, the land is unsettled in consequence of the scrip having been bought up for a song by speculators."

Now, it will be remembered that the Government of the present Prime Minister was in office from 1870, when the enumeration was made by Mr. Archibald, until November, 1873, for a period of three years, and yet no distribution was made, no action was taken, not the first step was made towards the settlement of this half-breed question. The truth was that the census was of no use. No distribution could be had upon it. As I have already stated, a very considerable number of the half-breeds were dealt with as Indians, and a large population were embraced that were not entitled to any portion of the 1,400,000 acres. There was a report made as late as 1874 by Mr. Provencher, who was at that time Indian Superintendent in Manitoba. He says in reference to these half-breeds:

"Many hundreds were put on the list of Indians, and have been there since 1871. These half-breeds live with the Indians, they have the very same habits, and naturally form part of the tribe in accordance to the Act above mentioned. Their position would be quite regular if they had not afterwards shared in the land specially set apart for half-breeds, and if they did not exact constantly increased payments in a proportion which it is impossible to determine before hand."

Now the report of the Indian Superintendent of Manitoba at that time shows that a very considerable number of those who were embraced in Mr. Archibald's census, had been dealt with as an Indian population, and were not entitled to share in the 1,400,000 acres, although they were enumerated. We find a delay occurred in the distribution of the lands for another reason. In the lands that were reserved for the half-breeds, was embraced what was called the outer two miles, in which the original white settlers along the banks of the Assiniboine and the Red Rivers claimed a hay privilege, which they said they derived from the Hudson Bay Company, and so it was found necessary, when commissioners were appointed by the Government of hon. gentlemen opposite to enquire into the claims of those parties, to alter the limits of the half-breed reservations, and to embrace a considerable portion of the territory that had been reserved for them in the lands that were to be granted to the original settlers along those rivers. I find that at this time Mr. Codd sent a telegram to the Minister of the Interior, then Mr. Campbell, in which he pointed out that the difficulty had been complicated by the Hudson Bay Company claiming one-twentieth of this outer two miles, and he called Mr. Campbell's attention to the fact that the Hudson Bay Company had themselves created the rights of the original settlers, and he did not think were entitled to share in those lands. Mr. Campbell informed him that the two miles were to be taken from the half-breed grant, and were to be given to the original settlers, and the Hudson Bay Company were to be otherwise satisfied. Now this was on the 1st November, 1873, or nearly three years after the census had been taken; so the House will see that if Mr. Archibald's census had been acted upon the right hon. gentleman had three years to make this distribution amongst the half-breeds before he retired, in November, 1873.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Do I understand the hon. gentleman that nothing was done between the enumeration and this particular action in November, 1873?

Mr. MILLS. I say there was no distribution made. There was not a single half-breed who received any allotment. There was no allotment made to any portion of the half-breed population until 1877.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is not quite correct.

Mr. MILLS. I have already pointed out that the Government, in 1874, finding that no provision had been made for the half-breed heads of families, provided that they should receive each 160 acres. In fact they were put in exactly the same position as they had been placed by an amendment to the Act of their predecessors in office.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Is that the Act of 1874?

Mr. MILLS. Yes. There were a considerable number of claims made by white settlers, and in some instances by the half-breeds themselves; there were what was called the stake claims, and there were other claims besides, and until these claims were disposed of in each particular district that had been reserved, no distribution of lands could take place. Well, in May, 1875, the Government of Mr. Mackenzie appointed Mr. Ryan and Mr. Machar as commissioners to enquire into all these claims, and to ascertain the number of the half-breed children, who were entitled to share in the 1,400,000 acres. I find that Mr. Machar, during the following year, reported on 3,180 claims that he had investigated; Mr. Ryan had reported on 4,988, or something over 9,000 claims altogether, in which is included the claims of all parties who were entitled to share under anyone of the particular Statutes to which I have referred. The hon. gentleman referred to a memorandum which I had written across the face of a communication made to me by Mr. Codd:

"It is unnecessary to look up the parties who have claims if they care for their interests they will themselves come forward and established their claims."

Now, was it necessary to look after these claims? I may say, Mr. Speaker, that it had come to my personal knowledge that in many cases, when the commissioners were in the Territories, engaged in investigating the half-breed claims, speculators put in their appearance to whom the half-breeds had disposed of their claims almost immediately for a few dollars, and sometimes for even a less sum of money. If the hon. gentleman will look at Mr. Ryan's letter which has been referred to, he will see that Mr. Ryan puts the two questions; whether it was the intention of the Department that he should put himself in communication with the half-breed claimants by visiting the locality in which they reside, or whether he should act on their behalf as they might casually come before him in the course of the discharge of his magisterial duties. That communication of Mr. Ryan was forwarded to the land agent at Winnipeg, and by Mr. Codd was forwarded to the Department. Mr. Codd accompanied Mr. Ryan's communication with his own opinion upon the subject, which opinion was based upon the experience he had acquired during the twelve months that had already elapsed. We found that the only effect of continuing to keep open the enquiry would be simply to delay the distribution. We felt that it was necessary, as soon as we could, to ascertain approximately the number of half-breed children who were entitled to share in the distribution, we thought it was desirable the distribution should be made, and that if the half-breeds themselves valued the interests which had been created by the Manitoba Act, they would not hesitate to come forward and make their claims. In fact, one of the difficulties that presented itself to the Government was how to make this distribution as valuable to the half-breed population as possible. I may notice here that the correspondence, which the hon. gentleman brought down last year and which is here embraced, is very incomplete. I find that more than one communication is missing. The memorandum to which the hon. gentleman has referred, which was written by me across the face of Mr. Codd's letter, was simply an instruction to the Surveyor General, in order that he might communicate the answer of the Department to Mr. Codd. And yet the answer of the Surveyor General is not included here. I find in the next page a telegram by Mr. Codd, referring to a letter of the 12th of July; and yet the letter of 12th of July is not here. And so we find the hon. gentleman in this correspondence has brought down just what it was thought convenient, and what would suit him, and what is calculated to give the House a very inadequate and, in some instances, a misleading notion as to what was actually done. The memorandum to which the hon. gentleman refers, and which was written by me across the face of Mr. Codd's letter, is a memorandum signed "D. M.", and the reason was that those happen to be my initials; and I know it is the usual practice of Ministers, when making a note approving or disapproving of a recommendation or suggestion, or making a suggestion, to attach their initials thereto. I believe it was done by my predecessor in office, and I suppose it is done by the present Minister; and I subscribed those initials precisely for the same reason that the Dutchman called his son John. He said he did so because that was his name, and I subscribed "D. M." simply because they happen to be my initials. The First Minister last year, and the hon. the Minister of the Interior has to-night repeated it here, as he has repeated it elsewhere, the statement as to the appointment of Messrs. Ryan and Machar. He said that the enumeration made by them was very incomplete. They reported 5,888 half-breeds entitled to share in the grant made by the Manitoba Act, and 226 others were reported by the land agent at different places. Five hundred others were estimated as being entitled, whose names had not been ascertained and who were not reported to the Department at the time the distribution was made. The First Minister said last year that there were 5,000 others on the plains who were under the Manitoba Act entitled to share in this distribution who were not provided for, as it was intended by Parliament they should be in fact. The hon. gentleman has more than once stated that if we had only taken the census provided by Governor Archibald's enumeration, in 1870, none of the difficulties would have occurred; that the distribution would have taken place very much earlier and the half-breed population would have been satisfied. We have a census of the entire half breed population of the North-West. That census embraces something like 4,800, and we find from what was done by the commissioners appointed by the hon gentlemen that upwards of 1,700 of those were in the North-West Territories at all events before 1870. So that if we take those 1,700 from the 4,800 in the Territories, and if we take also those who shared in the half-breed grants in Manitoba, hon. members will see how very far the Minister was from being accurate in the statement he made. In fact, it seemed to me at the time very much more important that we should be prompt in making a distribution among those people than that we should ascertain the precise number that were entitled to it. Certainly, we are not restricted in the extent of the area of lands at our disposal, and whether they received 240 or 200 acres was a matter of far less consequence to the country than that they should be satisfied with the condition of things that existed. The First Minister stated last year in the same speech that nine-tenths of the half-breeds in the North-West Territories had already shared in the grant; in fact, that enquiry had been made, and in one case fourteen out of seventeen had already received their allotments; and so it was with respect to others whose names he mentioned. The hon. gentleman in making that statement, gave a sufficient answer to the statement made by the Minister of the Interior to-night, and by himself earlier in the debate. If those people had so largely shared in the allotment of 1,400,000 acres to Manitoba, it shows very clearly that the whole population entitled under the Manitoba Act, had been included in the enumeration, and that the Government actually went on distributing the land among the people at as early a period as they could possibly have done. The hon. gentleman has said that we did nothing with respect to the half-breeds in the outlying territories. Well, Sir, the time had not come for dealing with the half-breed population lying beyond the boundaries of Manitoba. We had, first, to extinguish the Indian title; it was not possible to deal with the half-breeds until the Indian population had been dealt with. And it was with a great deal of difficulty, that the Indians were, in some instances, induced to treat with the Government for the surrender of their claims to the North-West. We know that many who were intended to be embraced in Treaty No. 6, did not come in till 1878, and that the whole of the Indians of the south-western country, embracing the Assiniboines, the Blackfeet, the Bloods, and other Indians in that region, were not treated with until 1877; and until those Indians were treated with, it was impossible to undertake to deal with the half-breed population, either by way of allowing them land in any particular district, or by way of extinguishing their title. In 1878 the Government did take steps with a view to ascertaining the wishes of the half-breeds. We withdrew temporarily Major Walsh from the force; we gave him verbal instructions; we asked him to visit the Indians in that section with a view to inducing them to choose their places of settlement, in order that the Government might allot them reservations, and also visit the half-breeds and ascertain what their wishes were, and advise them to choose localities in which to settle, as soon as it was ascertained that they were desirous to have reservations. The hon. gentleman has referred to the Act of 1879 as indicating the intention of the Government to deal with the half-breed population. Now, I might say with regard to that Act of 1879, that it was suggested before the preceding Government had retired from office. If hon. gentlemen will look at the despatch which was addressed by the then Minister of the Interior to the Lieutenant-Government of the North-West Territories, on the 18th of March, 1878, he will see this clause:

"The propriety of passing an Act to secure for the half-breeds some more speedy means of securing a title for Homestead purposes than under the provision of the present homestead and Dominion Lands Act has for some time past engaged my attention."

The fact is that we did propose to deal with the half-breed population and it might not be altogether out of place for me to state what I contemplated submitting to my colleagues for their approval if we had succeeded in the elections of 1878. The hon. gentleman has refered to our neglect to make surveys. Well, that is hardly relevant to the motion.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I did not say anything about surveys.

Mr. MILLS. We sought to satisfy the half-breed population, and to give them the assurance that they would not be disturbed. We informed them that they should have their lands alloted to them at the earliest possible moment. It is true we did not propose to comply with all the requests they made to us. They had asked us for seed grain, for agricultural implements, although some of them had not any particular fixed abode. I might say this, however, with regard to that, that it was a policy which it did not seem unreasonable to me to adopt in the event of a certain place of settlement. The hon. gentleman knows that by the Act of 1870 the children of the half-breeds of Manitoba were to receive 1,400,000 acres of land. He knows that before the distribution took place the majority of those were entitled to have a part of their interest in those lands. He knows that this grant, while it had satisfied them, had conferred on them no permanent advantage. It did seem to me that if we could succeed in securing the settlement and location of the grant to the population, then we might propose to deal with them in some other way than by making immediate grants to their children; and by the Act of 1879 hon. gentlemen took power to deal with the half-breeds of the North-West Territory, to satisfy any clamors in connection with the extinguishment of the Indian title, in reference to the half-breeds of the North-West Territory outside of the limits of Manitoba. Now, hon. gentlemen took that power. It was not necessary that they should adopt precisely the same lines which were adopted in Manitoba. They could have dealt with the half-breeds in another way. They could have dealt with them in a way more advantageous to the half-breed population than that which was adopted; but having taken that power and having in the end dealt with the half-breeds precisely in the same way, there was no reason why that should not have been done at a much earlier period than that at which the distribution ultimately took place. The half-breeds asked that they should not be disturbed in their holdings. We assured them that they would not be disturbed. They asked one of their race should be appointed to the North-West Council; we complied with their wishes and in so far as it was in the power of the Government to deal with the half-breed population, prior to our retirement from office, it was done. Now, if hon. gentlemen will look at the petitions from those half-breeds, which the Government have brought down to the House, they will get some idea of the maturity of the half-breeds question for settlement outside of Manitoba, by the date of these petitions. The first petition sent in is that from Blackfoot Crossing, 19th September, 1877. It is a petition, not asking for a distribution of lands similar to that in Manitoba, but asking for aid in the way of seed grain and agricultural implements. Then there is a petition from the people of St. Albert, on the 10th of April, 1878. There was a petition of the half-breeds of St. Laurent on the 1st of February, 1878. These petitions were acknowledged immediately after the close of Parliament, on the 17th of May, 1878. Then there was the petition of the half-breeds at Cypress Hills on the 13th of September, 1878, and there was the resolution of the North-West Council of the 2nd of August, 1878. There was a petition of the half-breeds at Edmonton, on the 19th of May, 1880; of the half-breeds of Qu'Appelle, on the 20th of September, 1881; of the half-breeds of St. Antoine de Padoue, on the 4th of September, 1882; and of St. Louis de Langevin, of the 18th of September, 1883. So that hon. gentlemen will see that these people became interested in the question of the distribution of land amongst their children and the security of their homesteads just about the time that the Government of Mr. Mackenzie was retiring from office. The first of these petitions reached us, it will be seen, during the Session of 1878. It was not possible for us to propose legislation at that time. We had not the necessary information. If we had been prepared to deal with the half-breed population upon precisely the same line that they had been dealt with in the Province of Manitoba, we might have done so; but I did not think that the results of the distribution of the land amongst the half-breeds of Manitoba had been so satisfactory that it was desirable to follow exactly the same lines. In my opinion a better course might have been adopted. In my opinion the Government had ample time to adopt that better course, and the fact remains that they adopted no course, that they neither pursued the system which had been followed in Manitoba, nor did they seek a more satisfactory conclusion of the half-breed claims during their Administration. It was not until the rebellion took place that hon. gentlemen took any serious steps to settle this half-breed question. The Minister of the Interior has undertaken to show that the half-breeds and the friends of the half-breeds were dissatisfied with the Government of Mr. Mackenzie, and the hon. gentleman read here a private communication—I do not know how it came into his possession—from Rev. Father Lacombe to the Hon. Mr. Pelletier. Now, I will say with regard to that communication, that I have no recollection of ever having seen it. It may have been sent to the Department, to my secretary, for the purpose of being read by me. It may not have been, by some negligence on my part, returned to Mr. Pelletier. The hon. gentleman did not say how it came into his possession.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Do you deny its existence?

Mr. MILLS. I do not deny its existence. The hon. gentleman may have purloined it for all I know. But I will say this, that I never had any communication with Archbishop Taché, by letter at all events, except one communication that I caused to be addressed to him in regard to the purchase of the rights of the half-breeds to those 1,400,000 acres, shortly after I came into office. I will say further, that I think Father Lacombe was appointed by me one of the commissioners in 1877, for the purpose of dealing with the Indians under Treaty No. 7, and if that reverend gentleman was at all dissatisfied with the course the Government pursued, certainly I did not know it, unless it might be from that communication, if the communication ever came under my notice, unless indeed in the matter of the stake claims, upon which the advice of the law officers of the Crown was altogether against their validity. Now, I think I have shown that the Government of Mr. Mackenzie did deal with the half-breed population of Manitoba. We did make the distribution of the lands of that half-breed population. There are a few parishes in which the lands were not distributed until after we retired from office; but it was because of certain disputes that rendered that impossible. But all that was done was done from 1877 to September or October, 1878, by that Government; and I have pointed out that we were taking the necessary steps for the settlement of the half-breed claims in the North-West Territories. But, Sir, supposing we had been negligent in our duty in dealing with the half-breed population of the North-West Territories, and supposing the question was ripe for settlement in 1878, would not that be all the greater evidence of negligence on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite in not having dealt with the question immediately after their entrance upon office? These hon. gentlemen succeeded us on the Treasury benches, because the public were disposed to trust them rather than us with the administration of public affairs; and if we were negligent in not settling this question between 1874 and 1878, what is to be said of those hon. gentleman, who have been in office for seven years since, and until a rebellion broke out, did not take the first steps for the purpose of securing a settlement of the half-breed question?

Mr. DAWSON. A general impression seems to prevail throughout the country that the half-breeds of the North-West in the locality where the rebellion occurred were the natives of that locality. Now, it has been very clearly explained by the Minister of the Interior that they were not natives of that locality, but that they were mere immigrants who had gone to that section from another part of the country. The number of settlers who were natives there was exceedingly limited, and the great majority of the half-breeds on the South Saskatchewan at the time of the rebellion were immigrants from other sections. Some of them were 800 miles westward from the place of their birth, they were seeking new lands, and there they settled; they were almost as far west of their native place as the country they originally came from is west from this place. This fact is not kept prominently enough in view. Sir, a great many causes have been assigned for the rebellion; but there is one which I think has been very little dwelt upon, and which would have caused trouble under any circumstances; that is, that two different races of people, utterly unacquainted with each other's habits of living, were brought into contact. When the white settlers went into that country first they were not acquainted with the habits of the Indians of the plains or the half-breeds; neither were the Mounted Police when they first went into the country. These half-breeds had been for many generations accustomed to hunt over the plains wherever they chose; they were frequently at war with their neighbors, the Sioux Indians, and they led an unrestrained life which generated a spirit of freedom among them; so that, when the white men came there, after this country acquired possession of the North-West, they felt that a certain restraint was to be put upon them. They saw that they could not spread out their herds of cattle wherever they chose, and hunt the buffalo at will over the plains as they formerly did, and a spirit of discontent naturally arose among them, which under the most careful administration might have resulted in trouble. This view of the matter has been very little taken into account. One side of this House throwing blame on the other, and neither party placing sufficient importance on the elements which had to be dealt with and the difficulty of dealing with those elements with any material which any Government could have at its disposal. When the first Riel rebellion broke out, I had the honor of being consulted in every step that was taken. The troops were carried through without the loss of a single man, and the rebellion was put down without a shot being fired. Success on that occasion was due to the extreme good management of the Government under the same distinguished gentleman who is at the head of the Government to-day. I had the honor of recommending at the time, when it was proposed to send an armed force into the North-West Territories to maintain order among the Indians, that the true Mounted Police to send among those Indians were these very half-breeds of whom we are talking to-night. These men had been accustomed to lead the life of soldiers. They were accustomed to ride on horseback over the plains, and they were inured to hardship and fighting. I believe if a police force had been organised out of these half-breeds, there would have been no outbreak. It may be asked: Why trust the maintenance of peace to the men who had been in arms against the Government? I say, if you had shown confidence in those men, if the Mackenzie Government at the outset had shown confidence in them and enrolled such of them as were fit for the duty as policemen, we would never have had a rebellion in the North-West. They would have been proud of the confidence reposed in them, and their knowledge of the Indian character would have enabled them to maintain peace among the Indians. When speaking of those rebellions which have occurred among the Indians, we must not think they are the very quiet innocent people they are represented to be, and that the faults are all on the side of the white man, for the first Riel rebellion and this last Riel rebellion were by no means the only ones that occurred among the Indians They had often been at war with the fur traders, and on two occasions troops were sent out by the Imperial Government to keep order. We must not suppose, therefore, that we were dealing with people living quietly in their native land, and that the fault of inciting them lay entirely with the whites, for these half-breeds were a people who had been constantly at war and were very jealous of their position and independence in the new land to which they had gone. Perhaps there is one thing not to be regretted in this trouble, and that is it has taught the white men a little respect for the Indian. Formerly these people were spoken of with the utmost contempt, looked upon as spiritless and cowardly, but the white man has found that they are not naturally cowards. The half-breeds fought bravely though in a mistaken cause, but we found at least that they were not to be despised. The Indian Poundmaker and his band, when attacked unexpectedly on their reserve and while imperfectly armed, did not run away, and Poundmaker, when the retreat of a troop of volunteers commenced, showed a great deal of magnanimity in preventing his people from following them. The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier), in his very eloquent speech, remarked, very truly, that the Indians are a highly sensitive people. The half-breeds specially are sensitive, and I may add they are exceedingly vain, which quality no doubt they derive from their ancestry—I speak of their Indian and not of their French ancestry, for of course they derive no bad quality from the French—and they are apt to take offence sometimes without sufficient cause. But whence comes this new-born admiration of the Indians? Last year, during the franchise debate, we heard them described as the most degraded people on the face of the earth. We were asked, are you going to give the franchise to people so degraded as Strike-him-on-the-Back and others, but to-night nothing can be found too good to describe their high qualities. Their heroes are equal to Soult and Wellington. How circumstances alter cases. I have always been a friend to the Indians, and am very glad to see this change coming over hon. gentlemen opposite, but I find it rather extraordinary that they should limit their sympathy to this small body of Indians in the North-West, who were up in arms against the Government. Why should they not have a little feeling for the Indians in other parts of the Dominion? In Algoma, we have 12,000 Indians, who, at times, suffer a great deal. I have brought their grievances before the House; I have told the House that the white people were going in and destroying the fish on which the Indians relied for subsistance. But there was no sympathy shown for them. It appears it was all reserved to the small band in the North-West who took up arms against the Government. No doubt they may have grievances, and a great deal has been said with the view of making the Government responsible, but there is no doubt that the Government have done a great deal for the Indians. The Government have been extremely anxious to find out what they had to complain of. Of course, if there were agents sent among the Indians who were not reliable, one side of the House has as much to account for in that respect as the other side. Whose fault was it if incompetent agents were sent out? It certainly was not wholly the fault of the Government. I heard a very true remark made here the other night by an hon. member, who said: Hon. members have themselves to blame a good deal for this. It is generally thought that a man who can do nothing at home need only to be sent abroad to prove himself a very good fellow, and it very often happens that individuals not very well qualified for the duty are forced by members on the Government, I think this is a case in which many excuses may be made for the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not going to inflict a speech upon the House at this late hour of the evening, but I am simply going to give my reasons for voting as I intend to vote on the amendment which is now under consideration. I have listened with considerable attention to the statements made by the mover of the resolution and by the gentlemen who have sustained him, and I have listened to the replies on this side. If we were to believe the statements from the other side of the House, there has been utter neglect on the part of the Government in relation to the treatment of the half breeds. If we believe the statements from this side of the House, and more particularly from the hon. the Minister of the Interior, the complaints should not be confined to the Government of the day, but his answer is: You're another, you did likewise. Now, I am not going to enter into the discussion of the question whether the half-breeds have been or have not been properly used in regard to the particular subject which has been referred to; but, from the conviction that I have had in relation to the general treatment of the North-West on the part of the Government of the day through the two previous Ministers who occupied the position of Minister of the Interior, I have long since come to the conclusion that their administration of the affairs of the North-West was not such as to be for the good of that country or the welfare of Canada, and therefore I am going to vote in favor of the amendment.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Laurier (p. 819).

Contingencies, Post Office and Finance Departments.....$2,800

Mr. MULOCK. I made an enquiry a short time ago from the Minister of Finance as to the deposits in the Finance Department and Savings Banks exceeding $1,000. The Minister stated that it would involve so much trouble that he could not furnish the information immediately, but he intimated that, if the question had referred to the end of the financial year instead of the year ending on the 31st December, the information could be furnished. If I put a question in that form, could I get the information desired?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes. I will get the information.

Mr. MULOCK. Will it be necessary for me to put the question on the paper?

Mr. McLELAN. No, I will make a note of it.

Civil Service Board of Examiners, &c.....$7,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is an increase here of about $1,500. What is that for?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Last year we increased the salary of the commissioners $300 a piece, making $900. As to the rest, we have taken the average of the increase of previous years, amounting to about $600 or $700, making the $1,500. However, I think we might reduce the item, as I think $1,000 increase will be sufficient to meet the requirements.

Salaries for Board of Examiners, &c., under the Civil Service Act.....$7,000

Mr. MULOCK. Last year when the House was asked to vote the sum of $6,000, I understood the Secretary of State to assure the House that the item would not require to be increased; and now we are asked to increase it by $1,000. It was pointed out in committee last year that an increase would inevitably follow by adopting what was called on this side of the House a very vicious system. Now, just what was anticipated has happened, and I presume this vote will need to be increased each year. I would ask the Secretary of State what is the cause of this increase? Is it because the work has increased?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. One of the great reasons is this: At the next examination we shall have over 700 candidates instead of the 350 we had last, and it takes, for the stationery alone, the increased sum we have asked for. If we can reduce it we will do so, but I do not think we can. I may add that we expect that this increased sum will be more than half compensated by the fees that will be paid by the candidates. We do not take the fees into the account, because they go into the Consolidated Revenue Fund. I may say that this $1,000 is only the larger number calculated for the next examination.

Mr. MULOCK. It increases the salary of each examiner to the extent of $300.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We cannot help that.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand it is expected that there will be 700 candidates examined for this money.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes, in the month of May next.

Mr. MULOCK. And if there is the same number in the fall, there will be 1,400 papers to be read by each examiner.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes, perhaps so. After the next examination I expect there will have been over 1,500 persons who will have passed the qualifying examination. But I think we may reduce the examinations to one each year, which will reduce the number of applicants.

Mr. BLAKE. The woods are full of them.

Mr. MULOCK. I am glad that the Secretary of State has become a convert to that view. Last year he took the opposite ground. Last year there were in all four examinations, two fixed examinations and some supplementary ones for the lame fellows.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have been speaking of promotion examinations.

Mr. MULOCK. There were examinations, too, for persons who failed in the original examinations. It is just what was anticipated. We told the Secretary of State last year that he would be asking for more money this year. I told him he was inducing young men to go into this vicious system of applying for public situations, and he now admits it, but if he is going to reduce the number of examinations to one each year, he will find that the number of candidates will be less; and if we adopt that system it is not necessary to increase the salaries.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We thought we would provide for 350 on the average, but we shall have 700 at the next examination. It is a necessary expense, and I repeat that it will be more than covered by the fees of $2 that each man will pay. The salaries of the examiners were $300 last year, and now they will be $600.

Office of the Que n's Privy Council for Canada.. $20,677 50

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The other evening I explained to the committee the increases, except one. There was $750 for a clerk named Foley, that had been transferred from another Department, to whom we gave an increase of $50. The other increases are all $50, except for the door-keeper, McNaughton, who has been there such a long time that we gave him $100.

Resolutions to be reported, Committee to sit again.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 1:10 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 21st April, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

RULES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. DAWSON moved:

That the 51st rule of the House be amended so as to provide for the publication of notices in the Territories of Canada, pursuant to the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Mr. BLAKE. We cannot amend a rule of the House without notice. The hon. gentleman had better give notice.

Mr. DAWSON. The chairman of the committee will probably explain.

Mr. SPEAKER. Notice must be given.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 111) respecting Insurance (from the Senate).—(Mr. Thompson.)

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BLAKE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to refer to a personal matter. On 5th April, in the course of a debate with respect to the North-West Territories, the Minister of the Interior, referring to a statement made by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), as to the condition of the order of the papers which are printed, and which have been under reference several times, said, in answer to a remark I made, that "they are printed the way they are brought down."

"They were in the hon. gentleman's hands for weeks."

To which I replied:

"They were not; I got them copied."

The hon. member for Queen's said:

"Does the hon. gentleman say my hon. friend altered the date of the papers or the position in which they were? Was it his duty to arrange them?

"Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Not at all.

"Mr. DAVIES. Anybody who takes up that book has to spend hours and hours to get an accurate or clear idea of the papers contained and their relation to each other.

"Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). What I mean is this. When a Department brings down papers to the House, the papers go to the Journals office, and after they pass into the hands of the Journal clerks, who detach them and count them, they go to the printers and appear in the form in which they went to the printers, and the Department cannot be held responsible for that, because the papers have, since they left the Department, passed through a number of hands.

"Mr. BLAKE. As the hon. gentleman has referred to me as having some share in disarranging the papers, I beg to tell him he is not aware of the practice. The first thing done with the returns is to send them to the Clerk's office in order that they may be paged in red, just in the order in which the Government brings them down, and it is under these pages they are arranged and printed.

"Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is not so."

I would not have referred to that matter, having made the statement I have mentioned, except that in the course of the debate last night the Minister of the Interior, in reference to an observation made by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) on the same subject, said: "After they had been handled by your leader;" and upon my repeating the same denial of the statement the hon. gentleman declined once again to accept that denial. Under those circumstances I have thought it proper, in vindication of myself, of my statement and of the Orders of the House and the practice of the House, to procure the papers, which are here before me. The papers are numbered in the Sessional Papers 116, 116*a*, 116*e*, 116*f*. They are consecutively printed in the order in which they are brought down. Paper 116 comprises 139 manuscript pages, which are numbered from 1 to 139 consecutively, and they comprise from page 1 to page 18 of print. Paper 116*a* comprises pages 1 to 11 manuscript, and 18 to 20 print; paper 116*e* comprises 1 to 38 MS, 1 to 67 print; paper 116*f* comprises 1 to 119 MS, and 68 to 113 print. I have not, of course, examined every page of these papers since the occasion arose. I was cognisant of the fact that they were numbered, from having looked at them; I have verified that statement, and have looked generally at the papers and compared them in a general sense with the print, and I find by my comparison that they are printed in the order in which they are here numbered. I repeat the statement that the first thing done with the papers, when they come to the House, before they go into the hands of members, is, that the Clerk sends them to an officer of his who is detailed to discharge the duty of affixing the numbers to these pages, with a view that there may be no mistake as to the order of the documents, and that they may be printed in that order. I repeat the statement that I did not disarrange these papers in any shape or way. What I did was this: I found, when they were brought down, that they were so inextricably arranged that it would be difficult in print, and was impossible in MS, to have any clear apprehension of their bearing and effect. I invited the Clerk of the House to be good enough to give directions that the papers should be copied, and they were copied by an officer of the House. Having found that they were in such a condition, if copied in this way—one paper appearing partly on the same page with another—that I could not use them, I asked that another copy might be made and that each of the copied papers might be kept a separate document. I received them in that shape, and I chronologically arranged those copies, having nothing to do then with the originals, and it was from that chronological arrangement that I was able to make the statement I did last Session. This has been done with the copies furnished and not with the originals, which were, however, as I have said in the first instance, and before I saw them, until numbered by the officer of the House, in the number and order in which they are printed in the Department. So far from the insinuation and statement of the Minister of the Interior, repeated, as I said last night and say again—repeated offensively, after my denial the other day—so far from that statement being true, I called the attention of the clerk of the Printing Committee to the fact that those papers would be unintelligible and useless in that order, and I requested him to see if it would be possible to have them printed in chronological order, and that officer, having made enquiry, informed me that it was deemed impossible to depart from the order in which the papers had been brought down to Parliament, that they must be printed in that order, although he agreed with me as to the results of that order when printed.

SUGAR IN BONDED WAREHOUSE, MONTREAL.

Mr. TROW (for Mr. ROBERTSON, Shelburne) asked, What quantity of sugar was there in bonded warehouse, Montreal, on the 31st March, 1886?

Mr. BOWELL. The quantities of sugar of all kinds and descriptions in warehouse in Montreal, on the 31st March last, was 2,642,467 lbs.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY, FROM STRAIT OF CANSO TO SYDNEY OR LOUISBURG.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness) asked, Is it the intention of the Government, during the present Session of Parliament, to provide for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway from the Strait of Canso to Sydney or Louisburg?

Mr. POPE. Negotiations are now going on, and I hope we will be able to make provision for that work.

POST OFFICE AT CORINTH.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Is it the intention of the Government at an early day to carry out the promise made by the late Postmaster-General, to open a post office at Corinth, in the township of Bentinck?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Postmaster-General, upon enquiry into this matter, has found that there was a doubt as to the expediency of proceeding with the establishment of this post office. Nevertheless, the matter will be looked into more fully.

TRENT VALLEY CANAL—FEES TO POISETTE & ROGER.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, What amount of fees did the Government pay Poisette & Roger in connection with Trent Valley Canal?

Mr. THOMPSON. The Government paid nothing to that firm.

TRENT VALLEY CANAL—RIGHT OF WAY.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, What amount of money was paid for right of way for Trent Valley Canal through the township of Galway? How much for same through the township of Harvey; also, Burleigh, Smith, Douro and the village of Lakefield?

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman will have to put this in the shape of a notice of motion, because the answer would be long, and I have not the information.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT PETERBORO'.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Why did the Government buy with the Phelan lot, on the corner of George and Charlotte streets, the Sawer's lot, on the corner of Hunter and Water streets, for the post office site in Peterboro'?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government have purchased the Sawer lot in order to build thereon the post office, which will thus be used by the town of Peterboro' and the people of Ashburnham village, the two places being united by a bridge, to which the street on which the Sawer lot is leads. The Phelan lot has been also purchased, so that the Custom house and Inland Revenue office may be erected thereon, that lot being better situated for this purpose. The post office building will be a smaller building than it would have been if the Custom house and Inland Revenue offices had been under the same roof. The two buildings will be equal to the one, had it contained all the offices.

MILITIA ORGANISATION IN NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. WATSON asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to extend the Militia organisation to the North-West Territories? If so, to what strength; and the proportion of cavalry and infantry; and whether a Deputy Adjutant-General and Brigade Major, with headquarters in the territories, will be appointed?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I beg to state that it is the intention of the Government to extend the militia organisation, existing in the other Provinces, to the North-West Territories. The proposed strength and character of the new force, and the staff that will be required, have not been decided upon, and will depend to a great extent upon the population which goes into those territories.

DRAINAGE AND WATER SUPPLY OF QUEBEC CITADEL.

Mr. LANGELIER asked, 1st. Whether the work of extending to the citadel of Quebec the aqueduct and drainage system of that city, is being done by day's work, or under contract? 2nd. If by the day, who is the superintendent, what are the names of the foremen employed, and what is their pay and that of the workmen? 3rd. If the work is under contract, what are the names of the contractors, the dates of the contracts, the parts of the work undertaken by each, and what amount has been paid to each; were tenders called for the work, and in what manner? 4th. What is the total estimated cost of carrying out the said work?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In answer to the hon. gentleman I beg to state that the works are being done under contract. The first section of 1,300 feet pipe trench is being done at $1.65 per foot; Mr. J. Power, contractor, Quebec. The second section is composed of 900 feet pipe trench, at $2.00 per foot; Mr. J. Juneau, contractor, Quebec. The third section of 1,500 feet pipe trench was let at $2.00 per foot, and the contractor is Mr. J. Bigaouette, Quebec. The supply of six-inch and four-inch water pipe was made at $29.50 per ton; Mr. J. Robertson, of Montreal, contractor. The date of the acceptance of tender was January 12, 1886, for Mr. John Power; January 16, 1886, for Mr. Joseph Juneau; the same date for Mr. Joseph Bigaouette, and the 15th of February, 1886, for Mr. J. Robertson. The tenders were called for by letter. We estimated the cost of the whole works, when completed, at about $20,750. The supply of valves and hydrants was furnished by the Chapman Valve Company, Indian Orchard, Massachusetts, United States.

WATER SUPPLY TO GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS AT QUEBEC.

Mr. LANGELIER asked, 1st. Whether it is true that in order to avoid paying the water rates demanded by the Corporation of Quebec for supplying, from the aqueduct of the said city, the old Custom house and the Queen's store, the Government have caused apparatus to be set up in order to supply the said buildings with water from the St. Lawrence? 2nd. If so, what is the cost of fitting up the said apparatus and the yearly expense of working the same; what was the price asked by the Corporation for the said service; what is the estimated value of the said properties, and the price paid by private individuals for water rates on property of the same value? 3rd. Whether, before setting up the said apparatus, the Government enquired as to the hygienic quality of the said water of the St. Lawrence at the said place?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think I must object to the former part of the first question. I do not think the hon. gentleman should have put in the words, "in order to avoid paying the water rates demanded by the Corporation of Quebec." I think that is no portion of the question; it is an argument. The question should be a simple one—whether it is true that the Government have caused apparatus to be set up in order to supply those buildings with water from the St. Lawrence. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether this question should be put in that way.

Mr. SPEAKER. If it is not done in order to avoid paying the water rates, it is not true.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is a reflection to ask whether this was done in order to avoid paying the water rates. I will answer the question in this way: Whether it is true that the Government have caused apparatus to be set up in order to supply the old Custom house and Queen's store with water from the St. Lawrence; to that I say no. I understand that the corporation asked $500 a year to supply the Custom house with water, and I would not consent to pay that, as I considered it excessive. The estimated value of the properties I do not know; the hon. gentleman as Mayor of Quebec will find that out from his books. The price paid by private individuals for water rates on property of the same value I think will also be found in the books of the corporation. In answer to the third question, as we did not put up the apparatus, I would answer that we did not enquire.

NEGOTIATION OF COMMERCIAL TREATIES.

Mr. EDGAR asked, 1st. What papers has the Government relating to the negotiation of commercial treaties, conventions or arrangements in which Canada is interested, and which are covered by the terms of the Address passed by this House on 28th January, 1884? and when will they be brought down? 2nd. Has the British Government agreed to the proposal made to Lord Kimberley by Sir A. T. Galt on the 11th June, 1880, and sanctioned by the Governor General in Council on 26th March, 1881, to the effect that it was the wish of the Canadian Government to be relieved, as soon as it could conveniently be done, of the obligations connected with any treaties affecting trade and commerce entered into between Great Britain and other nations; and the further proposal, similarly made and sanctioned, that it was the desire of the Canadian Government to be informed of the inception of any new treaty, and that in future no stipulation binding upon the commerce of Canada should be introduced into any treaty without reserving to the Canadian Government the option of acceptance or refusal? If the British Government has agreed to such proposal, when was it done, and will all papers connected therewith be laid before the House at an early day? 3rd. Has the Government of Canada, since 26th March, 1881, been relieved of the obligations connected with any treaties affecting trade and commerce previously entered into between Great Britain and other nations? 4th. Has the British Government, since 26th March, 1881, reserved to the Canadian Government the option of acceptance or refusal of all treaties that would bind the commerce of Canada? And if so, with what nations were such treaties made, and what was the action of the Canadian Government as to such acceptance or refusal?

Mr. McLELAN. A return was presented to the House of Commons in reply to an address of the House dated 23rd February, 1883, giving the correspondence connected with the negotiations for commercial arrangements with Servia and other countries. At the same time a communication from the Colonial Office was submitted, stating that as correspondence is never furnished which has reference to negotiations still under discussion without the consent of the foreign power with whom the treaty is being made, it would be necessary to obtain from the Governments of France and Spain their consent to the publication of any correspondence which had taken place on the subject of treaties, and Lord Derby suggested that the placing of such papers on the Table of the Dominion House of Commons should be delayed until the matters under discussion were brought to a final conclusion. It would, therefore, be necessary to obtain the consent of the Imperial Government before the papers referred to in the Address of the 28th January, 1884, could be submitted to the House. Correspondence on the subject has been had with the Imperial Government, but as yet the consent has not been received, and as the negotiations are not yet concluded, it cannot be stated definitely when the Government will be able to bring down the papers now in their possession. With reference to the Order in Council of the 26th March, 1881, the British Government has, in all cases of treaties negotiated since that date, ascertained and acted upon the wish of the Canadian Government to be included in or exempted from the operation of commercial treaties entered into with other nations. This has been done in the cases of Roumania, Equador, Morocco, Egypt and Montenegro, as will be seen by the correspondence in the return before referred to. In the case of Servia, prior to the 26th March, 1881, the request of the Dominion Government to be exempted from the operation of the treaty with that country was attended to, and representations made to the Servian Government of that wish. The High Comm ssioner has also been in constant communication with the Imperial Government, and has been kept informed as to the progress of all commercial negotiations in which Canada is interested.

THE MINING LAW.

Mr. FAIRBANK (for Mr. KAULBACH), asked: Whether it is the intention of the Government to amend the Mining Law during this Session, and if so, if the sum now required to be expended upon a location will be reduced, or the time for such expenditure increased; and if such reduction of sum or extension of time will apply to claims now filed?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There is no intention of bringing down any legislation on the subject of the mining laws this Session. The whole subject is being considered by the Department in the light of investigations being made on the ground.

THE CASE OF LOUIS RIEL.

Mr. LANDRY (Montmagny) moved for:

Copies of correspondence, whether by telegraph or otherwise, between the Government and Drs. Jukes, Valade and Lavell, or any of them, officers of the Government appointed to enquire into the mental condition of Louis Riel.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is no objection to the motion. All the papers at our disposal will be brought down.

Mr. BLAKE. I hope, after the statements made by the Minister of Justice, some effort will be made to re-obtain possession of these papers which are not just now, but ought to be, at the disposal of the Government. The Minister has stated that the important, vital telegrams had been returned to the physicians, and I trust, therefore, they will be got back again and be included in this return.

THE NORTHERN LIGHT.

Mr. JENKINS moved for:

Copies of all correspondence between the Marine Department and the captain of the Northern Light, relating to the discontinuance of her trips during the month of February.

He said: It will be remembered that Prince Edward Island did not join the Confederation of Provinces which took place in 1867. For six years attempts had been made to induce her to throw in her lot with the Dominion, but those attempts were unsuccessful, until the Dominion Government agreed to provide such efficient steam service as would give Prince Edward Island continual communication with the mainland. Now, thirteen years have elapsed since this promise was made, and we still have not efficient communication. The Northern Light, for thirty-two days, in January and February, did not make a trip, although during that time the weather was extremely mild, so much so that there was very little ice in the straits. The people of Prince Edward Island were induced to join Confederation on this ground alone, or chiefly on this ground. They were aware of the advantages which would accrue to them from having continuous commercial intercourse with the mainland, and the promise given them to that effect was sufficient to induce them to join the Confederation. In a recent debate in another place, the leader of the Government, speaking of winter navigation, said: "We believe faith has already been kept with Prince Edward Island, so far as faith could be kept; we have done our utmost in every way to accomplish that object." Now, I maintain that the Government have not done their utmost to give us efficient steam service; I contend that they have never taken up this matter in serious earnest. It is true we have a small steamer that was put on by the late Government, built for the purpose of navigating the river St. Lawrence, a steamer which has no capacity for carrying freight, and is utterly incapable of meeting the difficulties of ice service, even in thin field ice, and therefore altogether inefficient for heavy ice. She is built in a manner that I believe is just the opposite of the model which should have been adopted, and even if able to run constantly is too small to carry any freight worth speaking of. Now, the steamer Alert, which has performed several Arctic voyages, and which is lying idle in Halifax, could have been put on by the Government. In October last I made application to the Department that this steamer should be put on to assist the Northern Light, and came, at great inconvenience, to Ottawa to lay this matter before the Minister of Marine, but I was unsuccessful. The Alert was built originally as a sealer, and purchased by the British Government, who greatly strengthened her and fitted her out for ice service, and I believe she is a very capable boat. If the Alert were put on, it would then be seen, by comparison, whether the Northern Light was an efficient boat, or whether a boat of a different model would not have been more efficient. The Government refused to put on the Alert, and I had to return home unsuccessful. In November, during the shipping season, unfortunately, small pox ravaged the island, and prevented produce being shipped until the winter season. I therefore, telegraphed, it was of great importance to the people of the island that the Alert should be put on, but I was told the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had been instructed that the Alert would not be safe in the straits, and that the lives of its crew should not be risked by the Government. The refusal of the Minister was, I think, unjustifiable, and can only be excused by the fact that he had only just been appointed, and had many matters of importance to look after, so that I suppose he was not able to look into this question. I hope, however, next year the Alert will be put on, and I would suggest that more powerful engines be put into her, in which case I believe she would accomplish almost all we want, if she were put on to run between the island and the mainland at such points as may be considered most advantageous. I believe also that by putting her on we would see what sort of a steamer is really required to overcome the difficulties of this winter service. By putting a capable mechanic in her, so that he might see what modifications are required to overcome the difficulty of ice navigation, a boat could be built which would run nearly every day in the year. The voyage is a short one, and there ought to be no difficulty in providing a steamer with abundant fuel for that short passage. It is evident, in the case of a steamer making a long passage, such as a sealing vessel has to make, or a vessel going to the Arctic regions, the engines must be small, as it is impossible to carry enough coal to work large engines, but our voyage is short and coal abundant, and a steamer of that sort, with powerful engines, will be able to overcome all the difficulties.

Mr. McINTYRE. I am not at all surprised that there is a good deal of indignation existing in Prince Edward Island in reference to the manner in which communition has been carried on between the island and the mainland during the season just closed. The winter has been the finest within the recollection of the oldest people living on the island. The frost which we had last winter was late compared with that of former years. I have a distinct recollection of the day the Northern Light came into Souris for the purpose of being laid up. There was not a particle of ice to be seen, even by the aid of a powerful glass. There was a quantity of ice in the gulf, as I was informed, but nothing to prevent the trips being made regularly. In connection with this, I might read an extract from a letter addressed to the Halifax Chronicle, from Pictou, dated the 17th February last:

"The ice on the harbor, which was not very strong at any time this winter, has been weakened by the recent mild weather so as to be entirely unsafe for horses. Even foot passengers are not to be seen on it to-day. The steamer Mayflower, which was frozen up on the 5th, has commenced running again, and makes regular trips without difficulty. The gulf is as clear of ice as in the dog days, and has been so all winter, with the exception of three or four days, and yet there is no steam communication between here and Prince Edward Island, the Northern Light having been laid up at Souris by order of the Government at Ottawa. Captain Cheverie, who did such good service last spring with his schooner Josephine, will probably commence to run again this week, or the Steam Navigation Company of Prince Edward Island may get the Princess of Wales out of Charlottetown and put her on the route. With the exception of two or three days this winter, regular steam communication with Prince Edward Island is a thing which might have been, but which was not."

This, I think, is quite confirmatory of what I have said in regard to the condition of the weather during the months of January and February in the Maritime Provinces. If report be true, I believe the boilers of the Northern Light are very unsafe. It has been stated that her boilers were worn out and leaky last fall, and that it was owing to this that the ship was nearly lost in the storm she encountered in a trip from Georgetown to Pictou in the month of November or December, I forget which. She had to go under a shortened rate of speed, and could not make the harbor of Pictou before the snow storm came on, so she had to put back. She was out all night, and she came very near being lost. I am not at all surprised that the captain of the Northern Light should lay up his ship year after year, seeing what the instructions are which are issued to him by the Department of Marine and Fisheries. These instructions were brought down to the Senate last winter, and I will read them for the information of the House. The first is dated January 16th, 1883:

"Capt FINLAYSON, steamer Northern Light, Georgetown, P.E.I.

"Telegram received urging Department order you run; responsibility is with you; expect you to run no undue risks.

"A. W. McLELAN."

The next is this:

"OTTAWA, 18th January, 1883.

"Capt. FINLAYSON, steamer Northern Light, Georgetown, P.E.I.

"With knowledge of ice you must be judge, and held responsible for safety of boat. Incur no undue risks.

"WM. SMITH."

The third is a letter, dated Ottawa, 12th January, 1884:

"SIR,—Referring to my letter to you of the 14th December, 1882, I have again to instruct you to use your own judgment as to when the Northern Light should run, and not to be governed by directions from any persons, as the Department will hold you responsible for the safety of the vessel, and you are to incur no risk whereby the safety of the vessel may be endangered by being caught in the ice. No risk, also, is to be incurred for the purpose of carrying over any particular passenger or passengers, and the Department expects that you will use your judgment in all matters affecting the running of the boat, and will hold you responsible for her safety.

"I am, Sir,

"Your most obedient servant,

"WILLIAM SMITH,

"Deputy Minister of Marine."

It is not at all surprising that, under such instructions as these, the captain of the Northern Light should, on the appearance of ice in the gulf, take his ship into port and lay her up. In fact, these instructions were tantamount to a command. I do not find fault with Captain Finlayson for obeying his orders. I believe any sensible man would do what he has done. Last year, as we know, the Northern Light did not make any trip at all. She was laid up in the harbor of Georgetown in the month of January, and she was unable to get out, and so she did not make a trip at all. A small schooner, about the 15th April, left Port Souris and safely landed her passengers the same day at Pictou, and she continued to make her trips for the rest of the season. The Northern Light was specially constructed for winter navigation, and I believe that, if certain improvements were made in her, she would do all that could be required in that way. It is useless for us to get the Alert or any other boat if she is not kept going in winter. It is quite as easy to pilot the Alert to a wharf as the Northern Light. The trouble is not with the boat at all, but with the Department, who have absolutely refused to keep the boat on her berth during the winter months. I think it is about time for the Government to take serious steps to carry out our terms of Union. Year after year we are bringing this subject before the House, and it appears to me that we are as far from having these terms carried out as we were years ago.

Mr. DAVIES. Although the subject matter of this motion may not be of very great importance to some hon. gentlemen who live in the upper Provinces of the Dominion, there is a phase of the subject which I think is important to every hon. member of this House. The question has now reached a new stage. For years, the representatives of Prince Edward Island have been complaining that the solemn terms of union have not been kept. Nay, we have gone further, and I think on both sides those representing both political parties have contended that there has not been an honest attempt made to carry out these terms. Public opinion in Prince Edward Island endorses that sentiment. The Legislature of Prince Edward Island, by a unanimous vote, embodied that sentiment in a memorial which they addressed to the present Government some few years ago, and at great length, which I do not intend to repeat here now, pointed out the steps that should be taken, pointed out the promises that the present Government had made, pointed out that they had broken those promises, and pointed out the fact that to-day and for years back the terms of union with Prince Edward Island had not been kept. Now, what is the stage in which the case now is, which I say demands the serious attention of the members of this Parliament. It is that, by unanimous vote, the Legislature of Prince Edward Island have determined that, if they cannot obtain the carrying out of these terms in a fair spirit and a proper manner, they will appeal to Her Majesty the Queen to dissolve the terms of union between Prince Edward Island and this Dominion. They forwarded that memorial to this Government, and they got very little satisfaction from the Government. They notified the Government that if they did not receive satisfaction, they would appeal in person to Her Majesty the Queen; but when the troubles broke out in the North-West last year, they informed this Government that, owing to those troubles, they would not press the matter for immediate attention. But the moment the troubles were over they insisted that the Government should give their attention to this matter. The Government did not give their attention to the matter, the Government did nothing, and, as I will show directly, the solemn promise made by the leader of the Government in the Upper House, in the other branch of this Legislature, was deliberately broken. The delegates went to England. I am not, myself, of the opinion that the Local Government was well advised. Notwithstanding the delay, notwithstanding the inaction, and the persistent determination of the Marine Department of this Dominion, that justice should not be done to Prince Edward Island, I believe there is enough of manly fair play in this House that, when the facts are thoroughly understood, to insist that the Government shall do its duty.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not object to a discussion upon the whole question, if it is proper upon the motion before you. But I think there is another motion on the Order paper which will properly bring up this discussion, whereas this one, I submit, does not do it.

Mr. DAVIES. I am surprised that the Minister of Marine should object to the discussion of this matter. What is the motion? My hon. colleague has asked for all correspondence between the Marine Department and the captain of the Northern Light, relating to the discontinuance of her trips during the month of February. Why, that is the very kernel of the complaint we make. The terms of union between the island and the Dominion provided that the Dominion should keep up an efficient steam communication between that Province and the mainland, so as to put the island into continuous communication with the railway system of the mainland. The point of the motion is that that contract has been broken during the past year, and that during the month of February communication was not kept up as it should have been. The Minister must have heard the statement which fell from the lips of my colleague a moment ago, that he applied last autumn, and since the present incumbent took possession of the office, to have the Alert put on to assist the Northern Light, and this application was refused, and, strong a supporter of th Government as he is, he did not hesitate to say that th refusal to put on the Alert was utterly unjustifiable. Why Sir, does the hon. gentleman mean to tell me that I am not' to discuss this question at all? Am I to sit silent and listen to these utterances, when all my constituents are so much interested, and when a delegation from the Government of the island is just returning from laying a memorial at the foot of the Imperial Throne, praying that justice may be done? I tell the hon. gentleman that unless I am put down by the authority of the Speaker, I will not remain silent. It is nonsense to talk that way, and the hon. gentleman knows it well. Now, Sir, I was proceeding to say, when I was interrupted, that this delegation went home to England and they presented to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, to be laid at the foot of the Throne, a lengthy memorial reciting all the facts in connection with this contract made between the island and the Dominion, and reciting the alleged breaches of faith on the part of the Dominion. I was repeating that I am not satisfied myself that the Local Legislature took the proper course. I think, myself, and I repeat it again, that there is enough fair play in this House, when the facts are thoroughly understood, to bring such a pressure upon the Government as will induce them to do justice. I believe the representatives from the island are prepared at all times to press this matter upon the attention of the Government, and the only person to blame is the gentleman who has charge of the Marine and Fisheries Department, and the Government of which he is a member. Why, Sir, I remember a few years ago, before this Government came into power, that not a Session passed in this House but the supporters of the present Government took every occasion to denounce the manner in which that service was then being carried out, to decry and to denounce the Northern Light, the boat employed by the Mackenzie Government to perform the service, and promised that if they came into power they would remedy these grievances and put on a better and a stronger boat. Sir, they came into power in the year 1878, and that boat that they then denounced has remained in the service from that day to this. Hon. members will understand that beating, as she has, against icebergs and cakes of ice, year in and year out, she is not improved at the end of eight years; and those gentlemen, after all the promises they made before coming into power, stand to-day convicted of the fact that the state of things which they denounced and decried in 1876-77-78 has been getting every year worse and worse, and still they have taken no steps to better it, so far as the Northern Light is concerned. But, Sir, those gentlemen from Prince Edward Island went to England, and they laid this matter at the foot of the Throne, and we had a return brought down yesterday, in answer to an Address moved for by the hon. member for King's. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the fact that this return contained a despatch from Lord Granville to His Excellency the Governor General, and it contains a memorial submitted by the delegates who went to England to see Lord Granville in support to the petition of the Prince Edward Island Legislature. It is a very lengthy document, and the return contains a rejoinder from Sir Charles Tupper to that memorial, but it does not contain the document which was referred to throughout the return, and that is, the minute of Council presented by this Government in answer to the petition of the Prince Edward Island Legislature. I call the attention of my hon. friend to that, and I ask him, without a formal notice being given—because it would be impossible to reach it for some time—that he bring down that memorial, and I hope he will see his way clear to do it. Well, Sir, what does Lord Granville say in reply to their appplication:

"I duly received your Lordship'sdespatch of the 19th November last, enclosing an approved report of a committee of the Privy Council for Canada, forwarding, with other papers, a joint address to the Queen from the Legislative Council and House of Assembly of Prince Edward Island. This address prays that Her Majesty will require that justice be done by the Government of Canada to Her Majesty's loyal subjects of that Province, by the immediate establishment and maintenance of efficient steam service for the conveyance of mails and passengers between this island and the mainland of the Dominion, both winter and summer, so as to place the island in continuous communication with the Intercolonial Railway and the railway system of the Dominion; and further, that Her Majesty would be pleased to require that the Government of Canada should compensate the island for the loss whichit is alleged has resulted to its inhabitants by reason of the non-fulfilment of the terms of Confederation in the particulars complained of in the address. I also received your despatch of the 30th of January with the further report of a committee of the Privy Council on the subject of the delegation appointed to support the prayer of the address."

That is the document that I hope the hon. gentleman will bring down; it is not among these papers.

"Since the receipt of these papers I have had the pleasure of receiving Mr. Sullivan, the Premier and Attorney-General, and Mr. Ferguson, the Provincial Secretary of Prince Edward Island, who had been appointed as delegates to Her Majesty's Government, and on the 24th of last month they attended her by appointment, and favored me with a general statement of the circumstances under which the Legislature of Prince Edward Island had addressed the Queen. I explained to them that the Queen had no power either by Statute or otherwise, under the constitution of Canada, to give any directions in this matter, and that, therefore, I should not be able to advise Her Majesty (who had been pleased to receive the address very graciously) to take any action upon it, but that it would give me much satisfaction if, by the exercise of any friendly offices which I could tender, I should be able to contribute to the settlement of a question in which the Provincial Government were so much interested. I added that I had confidence in the kindly spirit in which the matter at issue would be dealt with on both sides, and this led me to hope that some acceptable arrangement might be come to."

Then he goes on to say:

"I then gave the delegates a copy of the report of the Privy Council of Canada, dated the 7th of November last, which they had not previously received."

Now, from that, it appears that the Prince Edward Island Government need not expect to have much assistance from Her Majesty's Government, because it is stated very clearly by Lord Granville that it does not come within his province to compel the Dominion to carry out the terms of the union. This is the proper place to bring up the grievance. This Government have the power to remedy it, and they have not done so. Now, in the year 1883 a commission was appointed by this House to take evidence upon this matter and make a report. Well, that commission made a report, and among other things they reported in favor of improving the service at the Capes by building better boats, stations for observation, a signal service, and boathouses on both sides. Notwithstanding that, and notwithstanding the carrying out of those recommendations, would cost only a few thousand dollars, and notwithstanding the promise made by the Ministry of the day that those recommendations would be carried, 1883, 1884 and 1885 went by, and it was not until members of Parliament were on their way to Ottawa in the middle of winter, with the thermometer nearly 25 degrees below zero, that we found men digging through the ice, trying to make foundations for the boathouses. It was ridiculous, and it was an insult to members that the foundation should be attempted to be laid in the middle of winter and that men should be digging through ice three or four feet deep. The boat-houses are, however, done at last, and some small measure of justice has at length been done to our people. So far as regards that recommendation in regard to boat-houses it is now complied with, and I may say personally that I think they are very nice houses. I crossed this winter much better than for years in this respect; the boats were clean and nice, and so far as I was concerned I had nothing of which to complain in the arrangement. I am aware that some of the members and passengers contend that the charges are too high. I think they are too high. It is well known that some members of Parliament have to carry a large quantity of baggage, for which they are called upon to pay. But that is a small matter, and it can, no doubt, be rectified by the Department without bringing it before the House. Another and the most important recommendation made was that in regard to the steam service to be performed. The House is aware, from the repeated statements made here, that during three or four weeks of every year it is found impossible to carry on steam service. For those three or four weeks we must always, until we build the tunnel or subway, be obliged to cross by open boat service. I am not complaining of the existing service; I am complaining of the improper delay, the inexcusable delay, which has taken place in putting the service in anything like proper order. What has been done in regard to the steam service? Our harbors freeze up some time before Christmas, and just at the very time when our people are anxious to export their produce and take advantage, perhaps, of a rise in the market, the steamboats are stopped, and our people cannot export anything. My colleague has called attention to the condition of the Northern Light—it was not intended for a freight boat—and we hoped, and we had a right to indulge in the hope, from the expressions of Ministers, that the Government would put an improved boat on that service. What did the committee recommend? It recommended:

"That the service between Georgetown and Pictou, at present performed by the Northern Light, be continued, and as the evidence before your committee goes to show that the Northern Light is fast becoming unfit for service, we therefore recommend that another suitable steamer be provided to take her place."

Such was the recommendation of the committee,a majority of whom were supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite, and it was made after hearing witnesses give their testimony. What have the Government done? They have done nothing. They were aware that the terms of union between Prince Edward Island and Canada have not been kept; that serious grievances were suffered by the people of Prince Edward Island because of the Government's inaction and broken faith; they were aware that public meetings were being held condemning that inaction on the part of the Government; they were aware that the Legislature had petitioned the Queen for redress, that delegates were going home; and still the Government did nothing. When I say they have done nothing, I mean they have done nothing except make promises which they have afterwards broken. When I allege they have made promises which they have afterwards broken, I wish to prove that charge by reference to the records. In 1884 this matter was brought to the attention of the Senate by Hon. Mr. Haythorne in a lengthy and able speech, in which he pressed upon the Government the expediency of making preparations to replace the steamship Northern Light. I will not trouble the House with the hon. Senator's remarks, but I will give a quotation from the reply of the leader of the Government in the Senate—the official reply, the reply that was at once telegraphed to Prince Edward Island and published in all the newspapers, the reply that was quoted everywhere as evidence of the Government's intention to do something like justice at last to the island. This is what Hon. Sir Alexander Campbell said:

"The notice that the hon. gentleman from Charlottetown has given is that he will 'call the attention of the Government to the expediency of making timely preparation for replacing the steamship Northern Light by a new vessel combining such improvements in design and construction as modern experience dictates.' In reply to the enquiry I may say that the Marine Department has entered into a contract for the building of a wooden screw steamer for lighthouse service in the Maritime Provinces, and it is intended to build this vessel with extra strong timbers, sheath her with green heart, and plate her bows with steel or iron, so as to fit her for ice navigation and assist the Northern Light when necessary. She will be ready for service in October next. It is also intended to repair the Northern Light thoroughly next season, replacing all defective timbers and plank, and otherwise strengthening the vessel and fitting her thoroughly for winter navigation. There would then be, therefore, for the service of the Government in or near these straits the Northern Light, thoroughly restored and strengthened, and this new vessel which is now being constructed, and which is to be finished in October, so that the valuable suggestion of my hon. friend would be acted upon and there would be another vessel there in the event of an accident happening to one of them."

There was the acknowledgment on the part of the leader of the Government in the Upper House that those grievances were well founded, and a solemn promise on his part that they would be removed, for the statement was made by him that a vessel was then in course of building which would be sheathed and prepared in such a way as to be able to assist the Northern Light in this winter work, and the expression of the Minister's opinion that the vessel would be ready for service on the following October. We have never heard of this vessel in Prince Edward Island; she has never made or attempted to make a trip in winter; she has never attempted to assist the Northern Light. If the Minister of Marine, listened to the telegrams which the hon. member for King's read, he would have found that the necessity of such a vessel being sent to navigate the Straits of Northumberland was acknowledged by the Department of Marine. The Department was telegraphed in January, 1884, that the Northern Light was incapable of doing the work, that she was almost worn out; and the fact of the matter was that in the opinion of many skilful men the vessel was so unfit as to be dangerous for the work. What did the Government do? They simply telegraphed to the captain that they would hold him responsible for the safety of the vessel, and they warned him not to run any risk in the matter. The construction put upon that telegram by the captain—and he was correct in drawing that conclusion—was that he must lay up the vessel and not attempt to perform the service. And he did so. On 16th January a telegram was received by the captain as follows:—

"Telegram received urging Department order you run; responsibility is with you; expect you to run no undue risk."

This was from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. What construction could the captain of the Northern Light put upon it? He could not avoid running risks when he took his vessel out into the Straits of Northumberland, and forced her through the ice. On 18th January Captain Finlayson received a telegram from the Department of Marine as follows:—

"With knowledge of ice you must be judge, and held responsible for safety of boat; incur no undue risk."

In a letter dated Ottawa, 12th January, 1884, the Deputy Minister of Marine writes Captain Finlayson:

"Referring to my letter to you of the 14th December, 1883, I have again to instruct you to use your own judgment as to when the Northern Light should run,and not to be governed by directions from any persons, as the Department will hold you responsible for the safety of the vessel, and you are to incur no risk whereby the safety of the vessel may be endangered by being caught in the ice."

If the captain is to run no risks of having his vessel caught in the ice, he must not go out at all. For what reason was the boat built except to be caught in the ice? Yet this letter is sent by the Department.

Mr. FOSTER. No such instruction was given. The hon. gentleman says the captain was instructed to run no risk. He will find no such instruction there.

Mr. DAVIES. I was reading the official letter itself containing the instructions. It says:

"The Department will hold you responsible for the safety of the vessel, and you are to incur no risk whereby the safety of the vessel may be endangered by being caught in the ice."

Those are not my words, they are the words of the Department. It continues:

"No risk also is to be incurred for the purpose of carrying over any particular passenger or passengers."

What is he there for? How can she go out in the ice in winter, without running some risk? He says you are not to run any risk by going out into the ice, and his construction of the order was that he was not to go out at all, and those conversant with the matter knew why the instructions were sent from the Department; they were aware that at that time the Northern Light was not fit to go out, and they left the people of the Island for that season with hardly any means of access. They suffered all the inconvenience and loss arising from the want of a proper boat. And then we have the promise of Sir Alexander Campbell, that a new boat is to be built and is to be ready in October to take the place of the Northern Light. I charge that that solemn promise has been broken and violated, that no attempt has been made to keep it; that the Lansdowne was not sent there to assist the Northern Light,and that the people of the island have been grossly deceived in the matter. I find that Sir Alexander Campbell apologized because his promise was not kept, and said he had done all he could in the matter. Last Session when the promise which I have just read and the fact that his promise had not been carried out, was brought to his notice, he said:

"My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island, who introduced this subject to the notice of the House, has, I think, just ground for complaint—ground for complaint,I am sorry to think perhaps against myself, although really, as he has almost admitted, I am not responsible for the non-execution of the measures which, from time to time, I have been authorised by the Government to promise in this House."

The leader of the Government in the Senate was not responsible, and why? He says:

"I made that promise with the authority of the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and, as is my constant practice, the very day the promise was made, I wrote to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that, pursuant to what he had told me, I made the promise, and that I hoped he would keep it in mind. I afterwards called attention to it, and there were reasons which were more or less sound—I can hardly say sound—which made the delay more or less excusable."

That is the answer—the official answer that at this day is given to the people of the island who have been for so many years complaining, and justly complaining, of the bitter injustice they were suffering under, in the want of attention and care which they were led to expect from this Government in carrying out the terms of union. He had made the promise, the promise was not kept, and he excused himself by saying that he had communicated to the head of the Department, who said there were reasons more or less sound—he would not say they were sound—why the promise was not kept. For my own part I expect in future a repetition of the same state of things; I expect no improvement unless the hon. gentleman is brought to a sense of his duty by language a little stronger than that which has been used to-day by my colleague from Queen's. My colleague to some extent palliated his want of diligence by saying that he was engaged in other matters. Sir, what have we to do with that? Surely his Department, which was subdivided only a year or two ago, which is swarming with employees, could find time enough to attend to a matter of this kind—to attend to the solemn promise made with one of the Provinces of the Dominion, that efficient steam communication would be kept up. That excuse will not be accepted as an excuse by me, and I am sure it will not be accepted by the constituency I represent. I complain that in this matter the present Government are doubly responsible—responsible in the sense that before they came into power they acknowledged that this service was inefficient, and in fact they denounced the Northern Light, which was almost a new boat, as being unfit for the service, and promised to put on a better boat. They were aware of the complaints of the manner in which that service was carried out; they promised to do better; they were aware of all the facts; they came in and instead of doing better they did worse. They have kept on the same boat year after year, when it was battered and unfit to do the work, and then they notified the captain of the boat that he was not to incur any risks at all. They have deliberately broken the contract with the island, and although I did not approve of the delegates going at the present stage of the case to lay their complaints before the Queen, still I think the people of Prince Edward Island have good cause for resorting to extreme measures in this regard, when at the end of seven or eight years since the Northern Light was there, we find that the promise of the leader of the Government that another boat would be sent there, is broken and no attempt is made to carry it out. My colleague from Queen's asks that the Alert should be put on. I say it is time another and a better boat should be built for that service. The other boat has done pretty good work, so far as she was able, but the hon. gentleman must see that a boat carrying out the arduous service in which she is engaged, of ramming against heavy masses of ice for seven or eight seasons, must become unfit for the service. I say that from beginning to end of the time this Government have been in power, they have bungled this service badly, and that there is hardly a gleam of light in the whole story from beginning to end. We have year after year made my complaint in this House; the Senators representing the island have done the same thing in the Senate; we have official answers time and again that the matter will be taken into consideration, and it all comes to nothing, and I suppose our debates here will have no effect until and unless an election comes off, and then any number of promises will be made, and official notices sent, and all kinds of inducements held out to the people of the island to lead them to believe that this work will be done. Well, Sir, we must judge the future by the past, and I say the record of the past has been a record of inaction and delay—inexcusable inaction and delay—from beginning to end since this Government came into power.

Mr. HACKETT. I had not intended—as the motion of the hon. member for Queens had reference simply to the orders sent to the captain of the Northern Light—to make any remarks on this subject, but as the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat has gone into the whole question of the terms of union between Prince Edward Island and the Dominion of Canada, I feel it to be my duty to make a few observations. This question is one of great importance to the people of Prince Edward Island. It is a question with regard to which all party feeling and all party considerations have been sunk by the people of the island. As the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Jenkins) said in his opening remarks, the principal inducement held out to the people of Prince Edward Island at the time of Confederation, was that the Dominion of Canada would keep up continuous steam communication, winter and summer, between the island and the mainland. I will read once more that paragraph of the contract:

"Efficient steam service for the conveyance of mails and passengers to be established and maintained between the island and the Dominion winter and summer, thus placing the island in continuous communication with the Intercolonial Railway and the railway system of the Dominion."

You will see by that clause of the agreement that the Dominion Government were to place the Island Railway on, at any rate, the same basis as the Intercolonial Railway and other railways of the Dominion, thus providing continuous communication, winter and summer, between the island and the mainland. This offer was made at the time of the Confederation of the original four Provinces. Prince Edward Island was invited to co-operate, and did participate to a certain extent in the discussion at that time. Delegates from the island attended the convention at Quebec, and laid the claims of the island before that convention. Certain offers were made to those delegates; those offers were laid before the people of the island by the delegates, and rejected. The people of the island were at that time in a very prosperous condition. They had the control of their own revenue, they had no deficit, they were carrying on the affairs of the colony with a very small taxation, and they argued in this way: If we throw in our lot with the Dominion of Canada we shall lose our autonomy, and, being part of the Dominion, we shall not be able to have the same voice in the affairs of our country that we have now, and shall not be able to manage our affairs with the same economy that we do now. They therefore rejected the terms offered in 1867. The Dominion afterwards made an offer of very liberal terms. This very agreement that the Dominion would keep up communication, winter and summer, between the island and the mainland was embraced in those terms. The people of the island, although they considered that this offer was very much more favorable to them than the previous one, still rejected it, and although a number of influential gentlemen on the island were at that time advocating union, still the people rejected the offer. However, the seed had been sown, and those gentlemen in favor of union held up to the people of the Province this inducement: They said, We are isolated from the mainland during six months of the year, and we are offered, in these terms, continuous communication, if we become part of the Dominion. That great country will have the means to carry out this part of the contract, which will render great benefit to the people of this Province. After some years the people of the island came to look at the matter in that light, and in 1873 they accepted the terms in good faith and became part of this Confederation. From that time until 1876 nothing of any great importance was done to carry out the terms of the Union. Of course, during 1874 not much could be expected, as it was the first year the island was in the Union. But in 1875, the Government of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) placed a boat between Pictou and Georgetown for the purpose of carrying out the terms to some extent. That boat was known as the Alert. But she was not built for that service, and she proved a complete failure. The people of the island did not expect much at that time, but they were clamoring; and the Government, no doubt urged by the representatives of the Province, purchased the Northern Light, which was then on the stocks at Quebec. This boat was not built for navigating the ice in the gulf, but for navigating the lower St. Lawrence. The builder of the vessel, Mr. Sewell, thought he could keep up the navigation, and the boat was purchased for that purpose. That boat has proved, to a certain extent, a failure. She has done the work, to some extent, as the hon. member for Queen's has said, and as the mover of this motion has admitted; but as for completely fulfilling the terms of union, she has not done so, as she was not intended for that service. Mr. Sewell was here in 1879 or 1880, and I had the pleasure of an interview with him. He said that the boat was too light for that service, and he advocated cutting her in two and adding twenty or thirty feet to her. However, his suggestion was not acted upon, and she was sent down to the island, and I cannot say that there was any jobbery or corruption in connection with that boat. She made the attempt to go into the harbor of Charlottetown and she failed, and was laid up for that year. The next year Mr. Sewell went down, and managed to keep up some communication. Now, the mover of this resolution says the boat is not adapted to that service. I can quote very good authority on that subject—Captain Archibald Finlayson, who had been on that boat, and who was examined before the committee referred to by the hon. member for Queen's, as follows:—

"What is your occupation?—I am a master mariner and pilot on the Northern Light.
"How long have you been pilot on the Northern Light?—Six winters.
"And are you still?—Yes.
"And pilot on the summer boats, too?—Yes.
"How many years have you been pilot?—Sixteen years.
"Sixteen consecutive years?—Yes."

You will agree with me that this is a gentleman whose opinion upon these matters ought to carry great weight. He was asked what was the best model for establishing communication, and he said a Newfoundland steamer.

"Do you think they could be hurried through the ice the same as the Northern Light; do you think they would do better than the Northern Light, if in a hurry and on the same route?—Yes, if they had power enough; but these Newfoundland boats have not nearly the same power that we have.
"But you think their model is superior to that of the Northern Light?—Yes."

Then he was asked if the boat would not do better if managed in the way Captain Sewell expected her to be managed, that is, when she got on the ice, she was to be rolled, so as to break the ice ahead of her. He was asked:

"When we had an interview with Captain Sewell he spoke of (when the vessel got into the ice) of rolling her; were you on board of her when he was there?—No, I was not on her the first winter.
"He tried that, did he not?—Yes, but it would be impossible to keep rolling her.
"That was the idea he had when he got up the model?—I do not know where the poor man got the model."

This pilot of the Northern Light had such a poor opinion of her that he did not know where Capt. Sewell got the model. Now, the mover of this motion made reference to the steamer Alert. She is a Newfoundland steamer, and she is no doubt a good model for cutting through the ice, but I understand that she has not sufficient power. She has only an engine of 40 or 50 horse-power, which is not sufficient to keep up navigation between the island and the mainland. If the engine and boiler of the Northern Light were in the Alert she would be able to keep up the service better than the Northern Light, but I do not at all advocate the placing of an old vessel like the Alert on the service. The Northern Light is very much the worse of wear, and in a year or two more will become a complete wreck. Therefore, I think, it becomes the duty of the Government to construct a boat specially for that service, from the experience they now have of the Northern Light. We will know what is required, and make such improvements as are necessary in the building of a good boat for the purpose of keeping up communication between the island and the mainland. The committee to which the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) referred, and which sat here, in 1883, for the purpose of investigating this matter, made a report containing certain recommendations. The hon. gentleman said no honest attempts had been made to carry out the terms of Confederation with the island. Well, I do not know what he would call an honest attempt, but I think the expenditure of money by the present Government has been in the direction of making an honest attempt to keep up the communication. Let the hon. gentleman look at the report of the committee, and he will find that, after careful examination of all the evidence that could be obtained from men experienced in steam navigation and as captains of ice boats crossing the Straits, the committee reported:

"The evidence of the officers examined is also to the effect that the steamer is not sufficient to overcome the difficulties of the winter navigation, and although they suggest slight improvements on her model which would better fit her for the purposes for which she was intended, still are unanimously of opinion that no steamship can be built capable of keeping up continuous communication in midwinter between the island and the mainland."

Thus, it was the opinion of that committee that no steamer could be constructed which would continuously keep up communication; and this opinion was reached after mature consideration and the examination of witnesses of great experience in these matters. Now, I say the expenditure of this Government has been in the direction of honestly and faithfully carrying out the terms of the union. The hon. gentleman knows that, in 1883, a sum was voted by this Parliament for the purpose of constructing a branch railway connecting the Island Railway with Cape Traverse; he knows that a subsidy was granted to a company for the construction of a railway on the mainland, between Sackville and Cape Tormentine, thus bringing the railways down to the water's edge, and leaving only the straits, a distance of eight miles, to be overcome, and to overcome which an hon. gentleman in another place has matured a scheme, known as the subway or tunnel scheme, which has for object the laying down of a submarine tunnel between the island and the mainland. That tunnel can all the more readily be constructed, now that the railways are down to the water's edge. It will require, of course, an expenditure of a large amount of money, but the people of Prince Edward Island consider, if the building of the tunnel be feasible and practicable—and we have the authority of an engineer of such high standing as the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly) that it is, and will not cost the sum of $5,000,000,—the Government should offer subsidies to a company to build the tunnel, or build the tunnel themselves. I say, therefore, that the building of the railways to the water's edge, leaving only the straits to be crossed, has been an expenditure in the right direction, and has shown an honest attempt on the part of the Government to keep faith with the island. But further expenditure has also taken place. The hon. gentleman is so extremely partisan, that, even in discussing a question of so vast importance to the island as this, he cannot divest himself of his partisanship. If there is any question on which we ought to get rid of our party feelings it is this, for we cannot expect, while we are divided in this way, to accomplish anything of importance. The hon. gentleman said nothing has been done. Why, $130,000 or $140,000 have been expended in building the Cape Traverse Railway. Boathouses have also been built, of which he admitted the great convenience and accommodation afforded by them. He knows further that this last year the Government, acting on the recommendation of the committee in 1883, took that service over. Instead of letting it by contract as formerly, they organised it as a Government service, at the cost of a large addition of public money, but enhancing the value of the service to the people by securing them their mails with much greater readiness. I am astonished that the hon. gentleman will not give credit to the Government for doing that much. The other recommendations made by the committee have been acted upon. In fact, it was only in 1883, after this committee had reported, that any practical results could be accomplished. Before that the people of the island themselves were divided in their opinion. One section desired communication between Georgetown and Pictou, others desired it to start from the Cape, and others from Charlottetown; and in 1882 the hon. gentleman himself declared he had not made up his mind as to which scheme should be adopted. But after the committee of 1883 had reported, the Government acted upon some of their recommendations; as I have already shown. They took over the service, and made a Government service of it; they increased the number of boats and the number of men employed; they built five new boats and placed them on the route; they built boathouses; they provided also rowboats, but these boats did not come up to the expectation of hon. gentlemen who recommended them. The committee, however, arrived at the conclusion that it was impossible to construct any steamer which could keep up continuous communication, so that the Government cannot literally fulfil the terms of the union unless they adopt the scheme so ably advocated by Senator Howland. I may here refer to a matter, which, though only a local one, is considered of great importance to the island, and is at present the subject of correspondence in the newspapers. The gentleman there, who kept up the service between the island and the mainland for the last 30 years, expected he would be placed in charge of the Government service when the Government took it over. He had carried on the service very efficiently. Of course he was a contractor under the Government, and received a certain amount for each trip, but he kept the service up under great difficulties and danger, to the satisfaction of the people, and he thought, being still in the prime of life, active and having experience which no other man in the country could have, he would be placed in charge of that service. But the Government, acting, no doubt, as they thought, wisely, sent down an officer of their own. Last year, a very serious accident occurred at a crossing there, which became the subject of enquiry by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The Department sent down one of their own officers, Captain McElhinney, to enquire closely into the causes of the accident. He examined the parties and reported to the Minister. I do not know whether his reports were confidential or not, but he made certain recommendations, and the Department considered that, as he was down there enquiring into these charges, he was best qualified to organise a Government service. I do not think it was the intention of the Government that he should remain longer than necessary to organise the service. I fully agree with the hon. Minister that it was a proper and businesslike course to adopt to entrust the captain with the organisation of the service, but after the service had been organised and his recommendations carried into effect, it was only right that the gentleman, who for so many years had kept up communication, should be placed in charge of the service. Owing, however, to some lack of discretion on his part, I understand the Minister could not appoint him, and the matter is at present engaging the attention of the people of the island. This service requires great judgment and great experience. It is not an ordinary service; it is an extraordinary service; and no man can undertake to faithfully and efficiently carry it out without great experience in this matter; and although the service has been very efficiently performed this year, and the mails have been carried with greater regularity, still the season has been a very favorable one, and, if any obstacle had been thrown in the way, the service might not have been so efficiently performed, and if any accident had taken place it would have been felt that the gentleman who kept up the service so many years should have been still in charge of it. I trust Mr. Irvine, to whom I allude, will be placed in charge of the service in a short time. There is not a man in the country, from one end to the other, who is better qualified to carry on that service, and he is one of our own people. The man who was there last season is, no doubt, a very good official and a very good man, and he has enforced very good rules there, and the service has been very faithfully carried out, but he is a permanent official here, and I think he is required in the Department, and that he should be kept here, and should allow the service on the island to be taken charge of by gentlemen of greater experience. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) said the island Legislature had passed a resolution stating that, unless the terms of Union were fulfilled, they would dissolve the Union. That is not the fact. The Legislature passed no such resolution. The people of the island and the Legislature are determined to have the terms of Union fulfilled, but they have no desire to dissolve the Union. They are a loyal people. They entered the Union in good faith, and they intend to remain in the Union if they can get fair play, and no man in the island has yet been bold enough to propose to dissolve the Union. They carried their grievance to the foot of the Throne, and they are anxiously waiting to ascertain the results of the delegation to England. The hon. gentleman says it was an ill-advised move. I say it was not an ill-advised move. I do not see that the Legislature could do anything else. They have memorialised the Dominion Government, they have sent their addresses to the Queen, and they felt it to be their duty to proceed to England and lay their grievance at the foot of the Throne; and our only hope is that the intervention of the Imperial Government will be such that their influence with the present Dominion Government, who, as I said before, have been expending money, to some extent, in the right direction there, will cause the terms of Union to be fulfilled between the island and the mainland. The hon. gentleman has referred to a speech made in another place by the leader of the House there. I do not know that the hon. the leader of that House fully considered his statement on that occasion. When he said that the Government had already, as far as they could, kept faith with the island, he made a great mistake. The Government have not fulfilled the terms as far as they possibly could. A great deal more could be done, and I hope that opinion is not entertained by the majority of the members of the Government; because, if it is, and if they believe that faith has been kept with the island, the people of the island know that faith has not been kept with them, and they are agitating for their rights and privileges guaranteed to them at the time of Confederation. Although the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) speaks very lightly of the present Government, I have the fullest confidence that there is no man in the country who has a better intention or desire to carry out the terms of Union with Prince Edward Island than the right hon. the leader of the present Government. If we are ever to have the terms carried out and the compact kept, we will have to get it from that high statesman who has shown such progressive ideas and wishes to cement this great Confederation from the Pacific to the Atlantic Ocean.

Mr. FOSTER. I congratulate the hon. member who has just taken his seat on the temperate and reasonable way in which he has discussed this question, which is one of great moment to the people of Prince Edward Island, and to the people of the Dominion as well. I do not think anything is gained, in questions of this kind, by attempting to place them immediately upon a partisan basis. I think, where a Province is interested, as the Province of Prince Edward Island is, in getting a better and an increasingly better communication between it and the mainland, it is one of the questions which may appeal to all the sections of the people of that island and may be discussed and settled on non-partisan basis. It is in that spirit, I think, that my hon. friend who has just sat down (Mr. Hackett) and my hon. friend from Queen's by his side (Mr. Jenkins) have approached this subject, and I am sure that what they have said will not prejudice their cause with the Government or the House or the people of the island who look to them to further their interest in this matter. I want to disclaim the idea that my hon friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) wished to make prominent, that I desired to prevent him from discussing this question. I did not. I do not think it would be in keeping to restrain this discussion in its breadth, but my impression was that there was a motion on the Order paper which would have brought up the whole question. I find, on looking over the paper, that it is not there, and I suppose it was swept off with other undebated motions a day or two ago. It was in connection with that that I said it would be better to discuss this question by itself, and to take the other discussion when the main motion came up. It was not that I did not wish to have a full and free discussion of the matter. My hon. friend, in the first place, committed himself to a rather untenable position. He condemned this Government for not keeping faith with Prince Edward Island, in not keeping up a continuous communication between the mainland and the island; and a few moments afterwards he said that, in his opinion, it was impossible to keep up that continuous communication, that there must be a period of a number of weeks in the winter season when it would be altogether impossible to keep up an efficient steam communication between the island and the mainland, so that this acknowledged impossibility precludes complaint on the part of the hon. member. I commend that opinion of his to the people of Prince Edward Island, as stating at the outset of this discussion that he believes that the demand the people of the island have sent up that there should be continuous steam communication, is an impossibility. I think he is not quite right in saying that this Government have done nothing, that they have practically, from 1878 to 1886, taken no honest step, made no honest endeavor to bring the people of the island closer to the people of the mainland by greater facility of communication. I do not think the hon. gentleman would say that in private conversation, or in a reasonable discussion between man and man, because it is not true. I ask whether this grievance did not exist from 1873 to 1878, when the hon. gentleman's party was in power, and I ask what steps were taken to mitigate the difficulty of communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland between 1873 and 1878?

Mr. DAVIES. Do you wish me to answer?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not say that no steps were taken, I say, on the contrary, that some steps were taken, but I say that the whole drift of the hon. gentleman's speeches goes to show that no sufficient steps were taken by that Government from 1873 to 1878, for up to to-day he declares that the communication is not at all satisfactory, that faith has not been kept, that promises have been broken, and that the condition of things is not at all what it should be, when it is 50 per cent. better now than it was at any time during the period from 1873 to 1878. It is impossible to forget the geographical difficulties, and with all deference to the opinion of the hon. member for Queen's, in my eye, I believe that the vast majority of those who, in the committee moved by himself, gave their testimony stated that it was impossible to carry on continuous and efficient steam communication for mails, passengers and freight, between the mainland and the island, during the whole of every winter season. I think the committee's report goes to show that, and I think that opinion is based fairly well upon the evidence taken. So that if between 1873 and 1878 so little has been done, and between 1878 and 1886 much more, although as contended not yet enough, has been done to bring this communication to a proper basis, it shows, not that there has been a lack of energy or of honesty on the part of either Government, but it shows that the difficulties to be overcome were very serious, that they called for a great deal of observation, that they called for tentative steps to be taken, which could not be unduly hastened and completed at once, and which, in the very nature of things, could only be gradually accomplished. This gradual accomplishment, I think, this Government has been, and is to-day, performing, and is honestly endeavoring to solve the problem of communication between the island and the mainland. Sir, in the extension of the Prince Edward Island Railway which was built by this Government, and for which a large sum of money was spent to accommodate the Prince Edward Island side, in the subsidy which was given for a railway from the main line of the Intercolonial Railway up to Cape Tormentine, for which a large sum of money was voted, in all these expenditures what has been accomplished? This has been done, that the several and necessary steps to as complete a fulfilment as can be had of satisfactory communication between the island and the mainland, have been accomplished, so that only the final steps remain to be taken towards getting as good a communication in that line as we can possibly have. For when you have a railway running through Prince Edward Island and bringing you down to Cape Tormentine, when you have boathouses built there, when you have the narrowest line of winter communication between that and the mainland, when there you are able immediately to take train on a railway subsidised and built by the Dominion Government, and which puts you into communication with the railway system of the whole continent, I say a great deal has been done to bring affairs to a state and condition where the final step, whatever it may be, can more easily and more satisfactorily be taken. Now, one word with reference to the ice-boat accommodation. The committee, which was formed, I think, in 1883, reported in that year, and said that certain things could be done and certain things could not be done. One thing that could not be done was to keep up efficient and continuous steam communication between the mainland and the island by the way of Pictou and Georgetown or Charlottetown and Souris. That was the conclusion, I think, the committee came to, and it was based upon good evidence. Necessarily, therefore, there must be an interregnum of a greater or lesser extent in the communication on that line in the winter season. The committee also came to the conclusion upon the evidence that a good deal might be done to make better winter communication between the capes, and they recommended that certain things be done, that lighthouses be built, that better boats be made, that this service be taken under charge of the Government. Athough they took time to do it, yet it has been done, and now my hon.

friend grumbles after it is done, while he ought to have done all his grumbling before that was done; but he grumbles every year. He is a most unreasonable man in that respect, because after the thing has been done, and done to his satisfaction, and he pays a tribute to the good way in which it has been done, he still gets up and delivers himself of the chronic grumbling that is pent up in his bosom, and which he seems unhappy not to get rid of.

Mr. DAVIES. There are 100,000 people grumbling.

Mr. FOSTER. But he should now make a very graceful acknowledgment that at last a good thing had been done, and that he was happy to compliment the Government upon it. Now, some of the evidence given in that report goes to show that something more may be done to make communication between the capes more satisfactory and more safe, by putting a steam vessel, of a certain size and power, on the route between the capes. However, that is a debatable point. My hon. friend immediately shakes his head. He does not believe that it can be improved. My hon. friend in another section of this House would say that he thought it could be done, and that this communication might be much improved in that way. When doctors disagree; when men who are nearly interested in the matter disagree; when men coming from the very Province where this is of vital interest disagree, it shows that there is difficulty, and that this difficulty is not, as my hon. friend said, altogether the fault of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and of the Government, as he stated a little while ago. Now, with reference to the Northern Light and the Alert my hon. friend condemned me for not having listened to the junior member for Queen's and put on the Alert, and yet I think the hon. member said that he did not believe the Alert was a vessel that could do the work of going through the ice. If he did not, certainly other gentlemen from Prince Edward Island did.

Mr. DAVIES. I did not make a statement on the subject, because I have not a sufficient knowledge of the Alert to form an opinion.

Mr. FOSTER. Some other hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island did, which goes again to show there is a difference of opinion about the matter. Now, I did not put on the Alert, nor did my predecessor in this office put on the Alert, simply because he came to the conclusion that she did not possess the power necessary to make her way through the hard ice during the winter between these two points. The junior member for Queen's has made a suggestion that during this summer the Government should take this whole matter into consideration to see whether the Alert, if provided with larger engines and made more powerful, would be able to carry out what he believes is feasible, or, at least, make the attempt to ascertain whether a vessel on her model, but with greater power, could keep up continuous communication between these two points. That suggestion is worthy of consideration, and I shall have great pleasure in giving to it all the consideration it deserves, and if anything can be done to make that communication between Georgetown, Charlottetown and Souris on that side, and Pictou on the mainland, better, and shorten the period of the interregnum, I shall gladly do my best to have that thing done. Whatever is best to be done, and can be done with fair and reasonable cost, in order to put the people of the island more nearly on a footing with the people on the mainland, it is the object of this Government to do, and it is the object of the Department over which I now preside, to try to accomplish. Now, I do not think my hon. friend (Mr Davies) was quite wise in bringing up that old threat of a dissolution, in case such and such a thing were not done. I do not believe that the common sense and honest hearts of the people of Prince Edward Island have ever yet made such a manifesto, or will ever so raise the question of a dissolution.

Mr. DAVIES. I rise to a point of order. I think the hon. gentleman is under a misapprehension as to what I said. I never intimated as my opinion that the people of Prince Edward Island should seek a dissolution of the Union. On the contrary, I said that the Conservative Government had passed a memorial through the Legislature asking that unless the terms of Union were carried out the Union should be dissolved, and they had sent some delegates to England to further the prayer of the memorial, but I thought they had taken an improper course.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman's argument, if it had any point, was intended to raise the threat of dissolving the Union in order to bring greater attention of the Government to this question of better communication between the mainland and the island. I say that I do not think the people of Prince Edward Island believe in that method. I believe they have a fair sense of the difficulties of the position in which, geographically, they are placed, and if they see this Government doing in the future as it has done in the past, its best, within any reasonable expense, to solve that question, the people will remain loyal to the Confederation and will be satisfied with any earnest and honest attempt to solve this important question. I have nothing more to say upon this subject except with regard to the reading by the hon. member for King's of certain paragraphs from newspapers. I did not quite hear what they were; but I think they were criticisms upon the delays which occurred during this winter. Of course, newspapers do much criticism: sometimes they are right and once in a while it does happen they are wrong, and I think it is better to judge by the reports of responsible officers, who are competent to judge of the facts, than by newspaper criticisms. The delay this winter was not due to a defective boiler, it was not due to defective machinery, it was simply due to the geographical position of the island and to the ice which forms there whether we make laws for it or against it. The vessel did the best she could. The hon. gentleman made a point of the instructions which were sent by the Department to the captain of the Northern Light. Those instructions were wired; and I call attention to this, that the captain was not instructed to incur no risk, but he was instructed to incur no undue risk, and I hold the Department would not have been justified in ordering an experienced captain, with an experienced engineer, who were on the spot, and who knew the state of the ice and the danger of navigating through it, to make trips one day or the other, or at any time. If a captain is placed in charge of a vessel he is a competent man. If he is a competent man and upon the spot he knows well what the circumstances are, and when he receives orders to make trips on every possible occasion without running undue risk he receives as stringent an order as I think any Department is justified in giving to a captain. I believe the captain and his engineer have this year, as in previous years, taken the same course, made their trips when it was possible to do so with anything like safety, and avoided running risks which would only have made the problem of communication more difficult and not have benefited the people of the island. It must always be borne in mind that the terms of Confederation between the older part of the Dominion and Prince Edward Island did not take in the question of freight. What was covered was simply the question of mail and passenger communication. The hon. gentleman complained that the boat is not sufficiently large for freight. That complaint is one that is made, I know; but when the hon. gentleman rests his case upon the terms of Union that complaint is not admissible, for the terms of Union do not touch the question of freight. I hope this matter will be settled so that more efficient communication, not only for mails and passengers but freight may be secured to the people of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. BLAKE. This discussion is somewhat amusing to hon. members who like myself recollect the denunciations which were poured upon the hon. gentleman with whom I was intimately associated when sitting on the other side of the House, the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) and the late member for Westmoreland, formerly Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as to the Northern Light. I remember very well the forcible manner in which the late Mr. J. C. Pope, then sitting for one of the island constituencies, inveighed against the Government for their conduct in regard to the construction and working of that vessel. And when I saw him very shortly afterwards, a Session afterwards, accede to the position of Minister of Marine in a powerful Government with ample resources and a great majority, I certainly supposed that before now some steps would have been taken to remove the defects which he declared existed in that vessel. The language which he used was, as we all recollect, strong. He declared in the spring of 1878:

"She was a boat which from her model was never suited at all for such a purpose; he said so last winter and he repeated it now, and the experience they had, he thought, had proved it."

He, however, was frank enough to say that he did not blame the Government because the boat was not a success; but a little afterwards he said:

"While he did not find fault with the Government for the description of boat that was built, there was a great deal of fault to be found with them for accepting a boat in such a condition. She had powerful engines, but so far as the boat herself went, he never saw in all his experience—and he had been shipbuilding for twenty-five or thirty years—so great a fraud imposed upon any people."

She was then, I think, in her second season. That was in 1878. Hon. gentlemen opposite came into power in the fall of 1878. The winter of 1878-79 passed, and that of 1879-80, and so on until now, and it is the same boat with which the Government have been attempting to perform the service. There is one thing very clear, which is, that a boat performing a service so arduous as that the Northern Light is called upon to perform was not at all likely to improve by time, and if she was a fraud upon the people when first constructed she was now little likely to be a very satisfactory boat. But somehow or other the groans and maledictions poured out from these benches upon the late Government with respect to the Northern Light died out altogether when the utterers of those groans and maledictions, just before the elections of 1878, had succeeded, I daresay by the utterance of those groans and maledictions in part, in obtaining their accession to office and that power which a confiding people supposed they would use in order to remove the causes of those groans and maledictions. We find that, instead of improved steam service, there is the same old boat to-day. I do not think I could have a better proof of one of two propositions: either that the hon. gentlemen who did so villify the late Government, villified it undeservedly; or, if they villified it deservedly, they have themselves been neglectful of their duty. One thing or the other, either this villification was deserved or it was not, either the denunciation of the Northern Light was deserved or not. If it was undeserved, it was an unworthy act to so represent the Northern Light. If it was deserved, an unworthy course of conduct has been pursued in the Government not having removed the cause during the years they have been in power. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries commenced his observations by paying a high compliment to the hon. gentlemen who think and vote with him, for the mode in which they have conducted the discussion on this question. He said he thought it was a question which ought to be discussed on a non-partisan basis, that all sections of the community were interested in this work. I should like to know whether all sections of the community are not interested in all questions that are discussed here. All sections of the island are interested in all island questions that are discussed here, so far as I can judge. It is seldom you have a question in which only one section of the community is interested, in the sense referred to by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He said it should be discussed in the non-partisan spirit in which the hon. gentlemen have discussed it—in that temperate spirit, that spirit of conciliation, in that spirit which he was kind and condescending enough to assure them, from his long official experience in his present exalted position, would not injure their cause. I am sure they must have been glad to know that they spoke humbly enough, spoke with bated breath enough, not to incur the anger of the hon. gentleman, and thereby injure the cause of the island and the cause of their constituents. I am sure they will be encouraged to pursue the same humble, deferential, and moderate tone in future and will take care to say nothing which will arouse the mighty wrath of the hon. Minister of Marine and thus induce him to say: I refuse justice to your people, because, forsooth, you offend the dignity of a Minister. But while hon. gentlemen had these tones for the hon. gentleman who announced that the Government of the island had done its full duty and taken its proper course in appealing to the Imperial Government for redress in this matter, in giving up the hope that hon. gentlemen on the other side would render justice to the island, in declaring that the time had come when appeals could no longer usefully and profitably be made to them, after the declaration that they could no longer hope to settle within the limits of Canada itself, this contention between one of the Provinces and the Dominion, as to the fulfilment of the fundamental terms upon which that Province became incorporated with the Dominion, after declaring that the hour and the day of petition, of memorial, of remonstrance, of exhortation, had ended at last, and that, sympathisers though they were in politics with hon. gentlemen opposite, supporting and sustaining them, they no longer ought to have delayed to carry across the water the question of the grievance, and it was their duty to do that which they did do—to go abroad. In fact the hon. gentlemen said their only hope was the intervention of the Imperial Government; he—even he, devoted follower as he is of hon. gentlemen opposite—even he, with that unbounded confidence which he to-day declared he had in hon. gentlemen opposite, said—I took down his words—that the only hope they had was the intervention of the Imperial Government, the paramount authority. I say while we see the hon. Minister of Marine had for such language as that, delivered by his follower, nothing but words of commendation, he came down upon my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) with language of severe denunciation because my hon. friend, he said, had talked in a spirit of the dissolution of the Union; my hon. friend from Queen's, who declared that it was premature to have gone to the Imperial Government at all; my hon. friend from Queen's, who declared that the Conservative Government of the island ought not to have taken the step which the hon. gentleman believes is the only hope of redress; my hon. friend from Queen's who did not despair as yet, although he has no confidence in gentlemen opposite, of justice being done within the walls of this Parliament, and even under their auspices, to the island—my hon. friend from Queen's is denounced as proposing a dissolution of the Union, while the hon. gentleman is commended because he said it was the right thing to appeal to England and it was the only hope for them. This is a specimen of the language addressed, a specimen of the equal and even justice which the hon. gentleman, who sometimes appears rather to assume the rôle of an expounder of the high moralities, exhibits in his treatment of this question.

Mr. MITCHELL. There has been a good deal of politics imported into this discussion, and as the leader of the Independent party in this House, I feel it to be a duty I owe to myself and to the country to make a few observations from a dispassionate standpoint.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh! Oh!

Mr. MITCHELL. Hon. gentlemen say "oh," but I am serious about that. There is now great difficulty about this question of winter navigation; everybody who has had anything to do with it—and perhaps I have had as much practical experience, in my own person, of winter navigation as most men here—everybody admits that it is one of the very greatest difficulties that we have not yet been able to solve, in connection with winter communication with the island. Now, Sir, I am not going to attempt to condemn either the past or the present Government for what they have tried to do in connection with carrying out the spirit of the agreement which was made with Prince Edward Island. But, Sir, there is one thing I want to put my hon. friend (Mr. Hackett) right about. When he was recapitulating the circumstances in connection with the admission of Prince Edward Island into the Union, he spoke of the first efforts to bring in the island and he said, mentioning a later period, that again Canada came to woo Prince Edward Island. I wish to tell my hon. friend that Canada did not then come to woo Prince Edward Island, but on that occasion Prince Edward Island came to woo Canada. After the Quebec conference, Prince Edward Island went back and refused to come into the Union; she went her own way. Canada united in the Confederation; she went on and prospered, developing the railways and developing the commerce of that Union, notwithstanding her enormous debts, and notwithstanding the stress of affairs which she experienced, Canada developed her resources, and an amount of prosperity and success after Confederation was carried out, which is a credit to the men who carried it out. Prince Edward Island came and wooed Canada on that occasion; when she became involved in debt, resulting from the construction of the railway, when she saw embarrassment ahead, then she came and wooed Canada for the purpose of getting into the Union. I refer to this matter for the purpose of putting my hon. friend right in relation to an historical fact. That, however, has nothing to do with the matter before us. We agreed and entered into a solemn engagement to place upon that line of communication a steam service, and that has not been done. The first effort that was made to do it was putting on the Northern Light. The Northern Light was built by a man of one idea, who imagined he could keep open winter communication for commercial purposes down the St. Lawrence. Sir, the thing was practically impossible; it was a commercial impossibility—just as utterly impossible, in my opinion, as the navigation of the Hudson Bay is, which we hear so much talk about. It is impossible to keep up continuous communication with the mainland. We entered into an agreement—and I am thus far in accord with the Minister of Marine—an agreement which it is practically almost impossible to carry out; but, Sir, if we cannot keep to the letter of that agreement, we ought to keep to the spirit of it. Have we done that? Canada has failed in carrying out what she undertook; she has failed in endeavoring to carry it out; she has not made the effort. The Northern Light was put on, and she was a failure—she was a make-shift from the start. Every person who had experience in nautical affairs knew that the vessel must prove a failure. If the first year did not satisfy them, the second ought to have convinced them that she was a failure. Did the Government of the hon. member for East York make any further efforts? No, Sir, they were satisfied with what they had done. But some eight years have passed away since that time, and what has this Government done towards remedying the difficulty? I am not going to assert that the Government have done nothing at all. The hon. Minister of Marine says they have done a great deal. He says they have established railway communication with Cape Tormentine. What did they do that for? To give the county of Westmoreland her share in railway expenditure, in order to develop that rich and fertile county. They simply did what they had a right to do, even if no engagement to keep up communication between the island and the mainland had been made. The hon. Minister said the Government had built railways in Prince Edward Island; and I believe they did build a connection from the main line to this point, or at least a vote was taken for it. But is that carrying out the spirit of the agreement? The question is, what was done to carry out the spirit, and if possible, the letter of the engagement made between Canada and Prince Edward Island? I will not say that the Government have done nothing. But I will say they have done next to nothing. They have taken no steps to establish steam communication, except by means of a useless vessel like the Northern Light, which has proved a failure from the start. I speak from a non-party standpoint, and I say that Prince Edward Island has claims on the Government of Canada which we are bound to recognise. We entered into an agreement which it is impossible literally to carry out, but I believe partially it is possible to carry it out; and if, during one month of the year, it is impossible to have communication, though it can be had during the other eleven months, it is the duty of the Government of the day, no matter what party is in power, to make an effort to keep up that communication. But we have seen no effort made by the Government in power to carry out the spirit, much less the letter, of the agreement. There are no better means of communication to-day between the island and the mainland than there were 40 years ago; there is a little better accommodation in the boat-houses, perhaps, but Prince Edward Island has a right to expect something more than that. That is not what we agreed to do when they entered into the Union. Something has been said of the Alert. I have not seen her, and I do not know whether she is fitted for the special duty there required of her or not; but hon. gentlemen are quite right in saying that with the small steam power she possesses, it would be utterly useless to put on a vessel of that class for the performance of a duty in which she must prove to be a failure. What ought to be done is this: There is a solemn agreement; let the Government take the matter into consideration and get the best opinion they can, not the opinion of a deputy, but the opinion of a scientific man on the subject; let them secure the best advice they can obtain, and make a legitimate effort to carry out the arrangement; let them put a sum of money in the Estimates of this year with the view of carrying it out at once. It is not Prince Edward Island alone that is concerned in this transaction, the honor of Canada is concerned in it. It is a disgrace to Canada, that one Province of this Dominion should be approaching the Throne in order to lay such a paltry matter before it; and the sooner the Government of Canada makes arrangements to carry out its solemn engagment the better. That is all I have to say on that matter. I pass from that to say this. As far as I can judge, the moment any question comes up which has any relation to past years, and it is found that the Government or a Department has neglected some duty, the answer is: Look what you did five or six years ago, and we have not done much worse. If that is to be considered a sufficient answer when any Minister or Department is charged with having neglected public duty, if that is to be considered a logical reason to be presented in Parliament and to be accepted by an intelligent body like this, then all I have to say is that parliamentary represention has deteriorated and is likely to prove a failure. Sir, this brings it home to me that the condition of things in this Parliament is not sound. I cannot but feel that representative institutions in this country are not proving to be the success they ought to be.

We have not in this Parliament that independence on the part of the members that we ought to have—that freedom from party thralls—that determination to vote on questions irrespective of what suits the interests of the particular party that is in or the leaders of the party who are out; and unless we adopt a different course, and hon. gentlemen on either side vote according to their convictions on questions that arise, then I say that Parliamentary Government in a great country like ours will prove in the end a failure, and result as it is to-day in being the Government of one man. I regret to say this, and the only remedy I can see for it is that hon. gentlemen should consider this matter. It is not long before we shall have a general election; some say it will be this year; I do not believe it myself, but it is not an improbable event; and it is time for this House to consider—the followers of the Government on the one hand, and the hon. gentlemen in Opposition on the other—whether, when they go to their constituents, they will come back again hide-bound to vote for the conclusions that their leaders may adopt irrespective of their own convictions. I take this opportunity of stating my views on this point, and I hope they will be considered by the hon. members of this House, as they certainly will be by the country.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman says there has been no improvement made in the means of communication within the last forty years. I admit that looking back fifty years, there was no improvement in crossing from Prince Edward Island to the mainland in winter up to 1873. There was nothing but the boat service. There was no improvement nor hardly any attempt at improvement of that communication for forty or fifty years as I am informed by the records which I have examined. After the union with Prince Edward Island, the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), then leading the Government, entered into a contract with a Mr. King for the winter service, in order to carry out the terms of the Union. That lasted for two years, but the means employed by Mr. King proved insufficient, and the hon. member for East York took other steps. He contracted with a Mr. Sewell, of Quebec, for the construction of a winter boat. Mr. Sewell had given a great deal of study to the navigation of the St. Lawrence in winter, and had prepared a model and plan of a winter steamer. He came to the Premier with his model and plan; they were submitted to scientific men acquainted with the service, who approved them, and a contract was entered into with Mr. Sewell for the construction of the Northern Light. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), says that great complaints were made by the press of the island when that boat entered on the service, as being a fraud on the Government. If the hon. gentleman will look at the account for repairs and additions to the Northern Light, he will see that she was very imperfectly constructed, and cost the late Government, in the first year or two, very large sums to supply what should have been furnished by the contractor. From $5,000 to $7,000 were expended in completing the engines, and very large expenditure was made to render her at all efficient. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) says that a year or two ago she was inefficient and unseaworthy, but since then she has been taken out, examined and repaired, at an expense from $20,000 to $30,000, and the inspector declared she was then better than when she first entered the service, having been greatly strengthened in all respects. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), asked what is the difference between the present year and the past forty years. I say that before Confederation the island was shut off for five or six months in the year from all communication with the mainland. The committee in 1883 reported that the average term in which there had not been steam communication had been reduced to forty-eight days. That is, we have brought down the period of interruption from five or six months to fifty days, and the same committee reported, after examining men who had lived all their lives on the shores of the gulf, and had been engaged in crossing in the boat service every year, that the construction of a boat to navigate uninterruptedly the straits the season through was an impossibility, and the hon. member for Northumberland is of the same opinion. Then the attention of the Government was turned to other methods of communication. One of the great complaints of the people of the island was that they had to travel in open sleighs to and from the capes, and that was considered worse than crossing the ice. The Government, on the report of the committee, and from the experience of the Northern Light, considering it as impossible to construct a ship to cross the straits at all seasons, turned their attention to improvements in other respects. They expended large sums in constructing a branch line of railway from the mainland to Cape Traverse and in constructing a wharf at Cape Traverse, and asked Parliament last year to appropriate $130,000 to construct a pier at Cape Tormentine, and voted $3,200 per mile to subsidise a railway from the Intercolonial Railway to Cape Tormentine, so that the Government has not been neglectful in improving the means of communication for the people of Prince Edward Island. When all these plans will be carried out, there will be no reasonable ground for complaint on the part of the people.

Motion agreed to.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 68) to incorporate the Brockville and New York Bridge Company.—(Mr. Wood, Brockville.)

Bill (No. 2) to amend the Criminal Law, and to declare it a misdemeanor to leave unguarded and exposed holes cut in the ice on any navigable or frequented waters.—(Mr. Robertson, Hamilton.)

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 112) to consolidate the borrowing powers of the Western Canada Loan and Savings Company, and to authorise the said company to issue debenture stock.—(Mr. Beaty.)

Bill (No. 113) to consolidate the borrowing powers of the Freehold Loan and Savings Company, and to authorise the said company to issue debenture stock.—(Mr. Beaty.)

THE MONTREAL BOARD OF TRADE.

Mr. CURRAN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 90) to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the Montreal Board of Trade.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I made a remark to the hon. gentleman about this Bill, and particularly section 15 of it, which, I think, ought to be discussed in committee.

Mr. CURRAN. This Bill is merely a consolidation of the powers now possessed by two different bodies, that is, the Board of Trade and the Corn Exchange of Montreal. They desire to be incorporated together, so far as possible. The clause to which the Minister of Public Works refers, clause 15 of this present Bill, is a verbatim transcript of a similar clause to be found in the charter of the Montreal

Corn Exchange. No new powers are asked for by this Bill. I am satisfied that this Parliament will not be disposed to take away powers they have already granted.

Mr. BOWELL. I fancy that the best time to discuss that will be when the Bill comes before the committee. The clause to which the hon. gentleman refers is certainly a most extraordinary one. It gives the Corn Exchange as they exist to-day, full power to control the Customs officials and collectors of some half a dozen different places, not only in Montreal but along the frontier, powers which I think should not be given to anyone outside the Government. I must confess I was surprised in reading that clause. I could not believe that this power was given in any existing law. If it is, it is time, either that the law should be modified, or the power taken away from the Corn Exchange.

Mr. CURRAN. I would refer the Minister of Customs to 26 Victoria, chapter 21, section 8.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not doubt what you say.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

CONSOLIDATED RAILWAY ACT, 1879.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 8) to to amend the Consolidated Railway Act, 1879.—(Mr. McCarthy.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 4,

Mr. MULOCK. I would move that the following clause be inserted:—

The Minister of Railways, as regards any Government railway and every railway company subject to the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada, or to which "The Consolidated Railway Act, 1879," applies, shall repay to any ticket-holder the cost of his ticket, if unused, in whole or in part, less the ordinary and regular fare for the distance for which such ticket has been used; and such re-payment shall be made at any station or office of the railway or company, between and including the points covered by the ticket; and the sale by any person of the unused portion of any ticket otherwise than by the presentation of the same for redemption as provided for in this section, shall be deemed to be a violation of the provisions of this Act, and shall be punished as hereinbefore provided: Provided always, that the claim for such redemption be made within thirty days from the expiration of the time for which the ticket was issued, in accordance with the conditions thereon.

So far the proposed amendment is simply the section which was adopted in the Act of 1882, and the only change is the following addition:—

And provided further, that any railway company liable to redeem any such ticket and which shall refuse to redeem the same when so presented, shall forfeit to the holder thereof a sum equal to ten times the amount payable for its redemption, and the same shall be recoverable at the suit of the holder against such company in any court of competent jurisdiction.

The committee will remember that the House, I think it was in 1882, but I was not present at the time—had under consideration the question of dealing with what was called ticket-scalping, and there was an arrangement come to here by common consent, I believe, between the railway companies on the one hand and the public on the other, providing for the redemption of unused tickets for through trips or return trips, and that provision was in the words set forth in the section I have read, but it did not provide for any way of compelling the company to repay the money except by the ordinary course of law. Now, the railway companies have not honestly lived up to that section, and instead of redeeming unused tickets they have embarrassed the holders of these tickets in so many ways that that portion of the section which was intended to be a benefit to the public has become a dead letter. You can easily see, Mr. Chairman, that if a small amount only is owing to the passenger, say a dollar, and that dollar is not paid to him in the form and manner required by this section, the party so entitled practically loses that claim. The House in 1882 required the company to repay that amount at any station, either at the beginning or the end of the journey, or any station between those points. Now, the companies evade that law by refusing to redeem the tickets when presented, and in every way endeavor to embarrass the holders of such tickets. I have had personal knowledge of the fact, so I speak of something of which I know. I have also received communications, since I introduced this Bill, from parties referring to the practices on several of the leading railways of Canada, which show the necessity for some provision of this kind. If the railway company is simply liable to pay a few shillings or dollars, as the case may be, which it should pay to redeem the ticket, only after an action at law, you can easily see that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the public would abandon their claim to the unearned money rather than enter into an action with the railway company, and therefore I submit that this section ought to be made part of the railway law.

Mr. POPE. I hope my hon. friend will not push this amendment. My hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), had two Bills before the House, and he consented to those Bills being withdrawn, for the reason that we promised on the part of the Government that a commission should be appointed to enquire into this whole matter. I would ask my hon. friend to allow this Bill also to go before that commission, and when the whole matter of the Consolidated Railway Act is considered, this amendment will be considered with the others.

Mr. MULOCK. I feel that a request coming from the Minister of Railways is to me, in most cases, a command, and whilst I wish therefore to recognise his authority and display a proper spirit of—shall I say—humility towards him, yet, in this case, I must express my opinion that there is nothing in this little innocent clause to refer to a commission. I admit, with regard to some of the provisions of the Bill I have introduced, that it would be a very proper matter to refer them to the commission he refers to; but if he is prepared to meet me in the same spirit in which I am prepared to meet him, I would suggest that the remaining nine clauses of my Bill be referred to the commission, if he will only allow this one clause to be added to the Bill now before the committee. I think that is a fair offer. I am sure the Minister will see that the assistance of a commission is not required to enable the House to decide how to carry out the law which it enacted in 1882. It is not necessary to refer to a commission to decide what the House should do in regard to the redemption of unearned tickets. The House appointed a committee to sit on this matter, and that committee arrived at a conclusion which became the law of the land. That law is now being defeated every day by the action of the railway companies, and this clause simply provides machinery for carrying out that law. I am willing that the rest of the Bill should go to the commission the hon. gentleman refers to.

Mr. POPE. I do not think my hon. friend is meeting me half way. My hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) withdrew two Bills with the view of their being sent to the commission, which will consider the whole question. One very objectionable feature of this amendment is this:

And such repayment shall be made at any station or office of the railway or company, between and including the points covered by the ticket.

You would have no means of knowing whether the party got the money or not, or whether the company had paid it or not.

Mr. MULOCK. That is the present law. I am not changing the present law. The clause only says that in case the company does not comply with the law of 1882, it shall forfeit more than the mere unearned money.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think the hon. Minister of Railways has misunderstood the object of my hon. friend's clause. It is a repetition of a clause in our present law, with this addition, which I think we all accede to, that if the railway companies do not redeem the ticket there will be a penalty imposed on them, which will make it in the interest of the railway company to obey the law. There is no object in postponing the enactment of this amendment, therefore, I hope the Minister of Railways will consent to its being made a part of the Bill I have introduced.

Mr. POPE. If I saw that there was any necessity for it I would consent; but I think the provisions of the present Act are all that are necessary. I would ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw it.

Mr. MULOCK. I will not withdraw that clause, because I submit, with all respect, that no reason has been assigned why I should do so. The Minister of Railways says he does not know of any reason for this amendment. I do know of such reasons. I have a letter in my desk at the present moment from a prominent gentleman, stating what his experience has been on one of the largest lines of Canada; and if the hon. gentleman was accustomed occasionally to buy tickets and not use them, he would recognise the necessity of such pressure as this being put on the railway companies to compel them to carry out the spirit of the law.

Amendment negatived; Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

THE LAW OF EVIDENCE.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 3) for the further amendment of the Law of Evidence in Criminal Cases.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I think it is hardly worth while for me to take up the time of the House in explaining the nature of this Bill, which has been before the House this Session. This Bill has been printed since the third or fourth day of the Session, and I am sure every member who takes any interest in the business of the House has made himself perfectly familiar with it. In general, the object of the Bill is to enable persons who have doubts to affirm instead of taking the oath when called on to give evidence. We have in Ontario a law exactly similar to this with respect to civil cases. And in England the law embodied in this Bill has been in force in criminal cases for a number of years, and has been found to work well; and according to the doctorine which was laid down in the House a few evenings ago, that when laws have been adopted in England and have been found to work successfully there, we cannot do better than act on the example of the Mother Country, I cannot understand why there should be any objection to this Bill. I believe that if a man goes into the witness box for the purpose of giving evidence, he will tell the truth; at all events, unless evidence can be brought to show that his reputation for veracity is such that he is not to be believed, his evidence should be taken.

House divided.

Bill read the second time.

CONSOLIDATED RAILWAY ACT, 1879.

On the order for second reading of Bill (No. 4) to amend the Consolidated Railway Act, 1879, and the amendments thereto (Mr. Mulock).

Mr. POPE. I would ask my hon. friend to allow these amendments to be referred to the commission and to withdraw the Bill.

Mr. MULOCK. I agree to the request of the hon. gentleman.

Order discharged, and Bill withdrawn.

THE ANIMAL CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACT.

Mr. MULOCK moved second reading of Bill (No. 19) to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. He said: The House will remember that last Session an Act was passed, intituled: The Animal Contagious Diseases Act. That Act was passed rather hastily, after very little discussion, and it is not, therefore, unreasonable to find it is wanting in some respects. Turn to section 13, and you will find there evidences of hasty legislation. It is the only section which provides for compensating the owners of cattle for animals slaughtered in the public interest. This section provides a scheme of compensation, subject to some very onerous conditions, which, if not complied with, may prevent the owners of cattle destroyed under the Act from recovering any compensation whatever. In the interests of cattle owners and of the country generally it is advisable that this class of property should be better protected than it is. It is extremely discouraging to the farming community that we should allow to remain on the Statute-book a moment longer than is necessary, a clause which endangers the right of this kind of property. This section does endanger those rights. My Bill does not in the slightest degree, by word or inference, seek to vary the Act of 1885 in any respect, except in regard to the system of compensation. It does not seek to limit the powers of the Government to stamp out and destroy disease by the most severe measures when they deem it advisable to do so, but it simply provides for a just scheme of compensation, in case the Government see fit to exercise the powers vested in them by that Act. The section which my Bill seeks to repeal and for which it seeks to substitute another, purports, under certain conditions, to offer compensation to the owners of cattle slaughtered under the direction of the Government, but the rights of those owners are entirely in the hands of the Minister of Agriculture or his servants, and are dependent also upon many matters which should not affect them. Section 13 reads as follows:—"The Governor in Council may, when the owners of cattle are reported by the Minister of Agriculture, not guilty of any negligence or offence against the provisions of the preceding sections of the Act, order compensation"; and then it goes on to give the scale of compensation. It does not appear to me just that the owners of cattle so slaughtered should not have their right to compensation, if they have not been guilty of any offence in respect of the animals slaughtered; and therefore my Bill seeks to place those owners in that regard, in the position I have indicated. In so doing, I have simply followed the language of the Imperial Act on this question. In regard to the scale of compensation, I may say, if we look to the Imperial Act, and it is the custom in this House to look to Imperial Acts for precedents, we find that the Act 41-42 Victoria, chapter 74, being "The Contagious Diseases' Act," which has been in force in England for many years, deals with this question and provides a scheme of compensation. It is the custom in this House to deny legislation at times, unless an English precedent can be found, and I ask hon. gentlemen, therefore, to apply that principle to my Bill, and, if I can show precedents in the English Statutes for this Bill, I ask that it should receive the favorable consideration of the House. In the English Act, to which I have referred, it is provided that the Government may destroy cattle that are suffering from rinderpest, and in that case the owner is entitled to receive one-half of the value of the slaughtered beast before it was affected, provided that the total compensation does not exceed £20. In case the animal was affected with pleuro-pneumonia, the owner is entitled to three-fourths of its value before it was so affected, so that the compensation does not exceed £30. In all other cases where animals have been slaughtered under the Act I have cited, the owners are entitled to compensation to the extent of not more than £40 sterling for each head. Thus you will see that in England the amount of compensation is made to depend upon the nature of the disease which the animal has, whilst, under the Canadian Act which I am seeking to amend, the nature of the disease is not taken into consideration at all, and it is sufficient to justify the Government in slaughtering an animal if it has any kind of infectious or contagious disease, whether of a severe nature, a dangerous character, or otherwise. We all know that there are animal diseases which are both contagious and infectious, and are yet not dangerous. Still, if an animal so affected should be destroyed under the Act of 1885, the owner is only entitled to one-third of the value, not exceeding in the whole $20. The Canadian Act further provides in its 13th section, for which I am seeking to substitute the sections which I propose, that, in all other cases —that means in every case where one of our domestic animals is slaughtered which is not at the time diseased, but which may be in a perfect state of health, but still is destroyed by the Government, purporting to so destroy it under the provisions of the Act in question—the total amount of compensation the owner can recover is two-thirds of the value of the animal, but not exceeding in all $40. I submit that, whatever may be the position of an owner of an animal which is diseased when it is slaughtered, there can be no justification or excuse for the Government to destroy animals which are in a state of health without affording the fullest compensation to the owners of those animals. Perhaps it may be argued that $40 is a full compensation for all possible damage that could occur under this Act. I submit that it is not. It is only necessary for me to point out some of the directions in which our agriculturists are moving now in order to show that $40 is not a reasonable compensation to the owner of these animals. Throughout the whole of Ontario, and I hope in the other Provinces, a large number of farmers are devoting year by year more attention to the breeding of cattle. It has been recognised of late years that it is necessary to go more into the breeding of cattle, and we find farmers every year going more into the business of fattening cattle, apart from breeding thoroughbreds; and, if one could make a visit to the barnyards of the ordinary farmer of Ontario to-day—and I trust it is the same in other Provinces—I am sure thousands of animals would be found tied up that have been stall-fed through the winter, and that are now worth on an average $70 or $80 a head. It is nothing exceptional for an ordinary grade animal to weigh 1,500 lbs. or thereabouts, and we know that, even under the depreciated value of live stock to-day, such an animal would be worth from $75 to $80. The Minister of Agriculture could now, under the existing law, sweep away that property, and the total amount of compensation allowed to the owner would be at the outside $40 a head for the mistake which might be made. There has been presented to the House in support of this Bill a petition from the Agricultural and Arts Association of Ontario, which, as far as I know, was the unanimous petition of the board. There has also been a petition from the Shorthorn Breeders Association of Ontario; and I will read to the House a letter I have received from a firm of shippers dealing with this matter:

"TORONTO, 16th March, 1886.

"DEAR SIR,—We take the liberty of writing you in regard to your Bill to amend the Animal Contagious Disease Act passed last Session, and beg to express our earnest wish that your Bill may become law, as the Bill of last Session is quite inadequate to cover anything like a reasonable compensation to those whose animals might be slaughtered under the said Act, as disease may get into any man's herd of cattle without it being any fault of his, therefore it would be really too bad that his stock would have to be slaughtered for the benefit of the public in general without fairly compensating him for the same. As a man may have all that he is worth invested in cattle and other stock, and by misfortune they may become diseased, and only getting one-third of the value, therefore it would simply mean ruin to him financially.

"Yours, etc.,
"THOMPSON, FLANAGAN, BLONG & AIKINS,
"Live Stock Exporters and Cattle Feeders."

"P.S.—We are feeding at present 2,064 cattle in one place, and shipped last year over $1,000,000 worth of stock to Great Britain.
"T., F., B. & A."

I submit that, if the figures mentioned in my Bill do not meet with the approval of the House, I will at all events be excused for having followed the English precedent in that regard. I intended to follow exactly the scale of compensation set forth in the English Act, leaving it to the House, when in committee, to alter the Bill; but, by some mistake, I find that, in sub section a, $50 has been substituted for the Canadian equivalent for £20 sterling. With that exception, and the further exception that I have inserted a compensation clause for thoroughbreds, the scale of compensation is the same as in the Imperial Act. I do not expect, nor will I urge when in committee, if we get that far, the adoption of these figures, but will be quite satisfied to have a committee to consider what would be a reasonable compensation, and I am sure in that case we will have no difficulty in amending the section in the public interests.

Mr. ORTON. I am quite in sympathy with the member for North York (Mr. Mulock) in bringing this question before the House, though I believe that, as an actual fact, the Government have not found it necessary to slaughter any animals yet. But the day may come at any time when contagious diseases may prevail to such an extent in Canada as to render it absolutely necessary for the Government to kill and destroy a large number of animals, many of whom, perhaps, may not be diseased at all. According to the law as it now stands, I think if any farmer or any owner of animals neglects to report even the most trifling contagious disease among them, he could not recover anything, even ten years afterwards, and he would have no claim against the Government for the loss of any animals they might have to destroy. There are to-day in Canada animals of very great value. In my county of Wellington the farmers have paid a great deal of attention to raising first-class stock, which is very valuable indeed, and it certainly would be a great hardship, in case a contagious disease broke out amongst them, and it became necessary to destroy a number of animals, if the Government did not remunerate those farmers who had sustained the loss, where there had been no neglect according to the the spirit of the law, though there might be according to the letter. I think there is no doubt that the law in that case requires amendment, and I trust the House will back up the efforts of the hon. member.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). In connection with this Bill I wish to bring a point to the notice of the Minister of Agriculture, so that if the present Act is defective in granting adequate compensation for the destruction of valuable animals, it may be remedied. I may illustrate by stating that in my own county, though not in my own riding, there was a severe outbreak of hog cholera. It came to my notice, and I at once reminded the gentleman that we had passed a very stringent Act requiring that as soon as any infectious disease broke out among animals, the owner should notify the Minister of Agriculture. I asked this gentleman to do so, and he did at once inform the Government. The disease spread very fast among his own herd of hogs, and there was danger of its spreading elsewhere. He took all the steps required under the Act to prevent the spreading of the disease. A local veterinary surgeon was called in—I do not know whether he was a Government official or not—and the disease was clearly manifested. It was known to be contagious and fatal, and seemed to require the slaughter of the hogs. Well, the hogs were slaughtered; I think, speaking from memory, that something like sixty hogs were slaughtered, a very valuable lot; yet this was done without the officer of the Department having ordered the killing of the hogs. If I remember rightly the officer did not reach the scene of the inspection until some weeks, perhaps, certainly some days, after notice had been sent to the Department of Agriculture. But it was clearly evident that it would not do to keep the hogs in that state, and they were slaughtered in the public interest. Now, I want the Minister to consider this fact. I am not blaming the Minister. The question is under adjudication now, and I believe the Minister is desirous of doing what is just in the matter and I trust that, under the Act, even as it stands, he may see his way clear, within the spirit of the Act to grant compensation in that case. But if the Act is deficient in that respect, it seems to me that a person acting in good faith, taking all the steps that are required, giving instant notice, and who is willing to sacrifice his property in that way, as he must do, even under the law of compensation that is provided in the Act, there should be no difficulty about his recovering the compensation that the Act intended he should have. When Parliament agreed to this Act it was considered a very stringent measure, but the House, I think, were unanimously of opinion that it was a wise step on the part of the Minister of Agriculture to introduce a Bill of this kind, because, as he pointed out, and as the House very rightly recognised, our cattle industry is such an important one that anything that would endanger it in the slightest decree would almost be a national calamity. But if we are to have an Act in which the Minister himself will not be able to allow compensation, except in very rare cases, then it seems to me we have frustrated our first intention. I believe the intention of this Act was in good faith, that if a person found a disease breaking out amongst his hogs or cattle, and if he immediately communicated the fact to the Government, not trying to hide it, and if these hogs and cattle were slaughtered for the benefit of the community, then compensation should be given to him, and that should be done without waiting for an order from the Government officer to slaughter them, except he should come upon the scene within a very short time after notice had been given. If the notice is given to the Department, and the officer does not put in an appearance for two or three weeks, then there must be action taken, and if the action is taken in the interests of the community, it seems to me there ought to be power given to the Minister, upon being satisfied that the cattle were not slaughtered by the direct order of the inspector, he not having arrived in time, to give some compensation for the loss of the animals. That is a point I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister. The mover of the Bill does not seem to have recognised that difficulty—perhaps no case has arisen in his own part of the county. His Bill deals more particularly with what he deems fairer and larger compensation for the animals. But I am pointing out a practical difficulty that exists in many cases where animals are slaughtered in the public interests. If it be true that in such a case as I have pointed out there is no power to grant compensation, I think the law should be remedied. I feared from some remarks I heard, that there was a difficulty in that respect, and the Bill being before us now I have taken this opportunity of making these remarks that I would have preferred to defer until the Minister had decided whether he had power in the matter.

Mr. SPROULE. While I think the Bill introduced by the Minister of Agriculture last year hardly went far enough, I think this one goes a little too far, while one did not allow compensation enough for animals killed, I think this allows too much compensation. In this amendment there appears to be only provision made for two classes of disease, rinderpest and pleuro-pneumonia. It provides a specific amount for animals affected by those diseases that are killed. Then it includes all other kinds of diseases in one class, and goes on to say that in every other case compensation shall be made on the value of the animal immediately before it was slaughtered, but the compensation shall not in any case exceed $200. If those were the only prevailing diseases to which animals were liable, then I could understand why they were classed together and the balance of the diseases were put in one class. But there are other diseases equally contagious and infectious and as common and as dangerous and injurious and as likely to spread. In what class would the hon. gentleman put glanders, one of the most dangerous diseases in the country?

Mr. MULOCK. That is not a cattle disease, and this amendment only deals with cattle.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know what the interpretation of the word cattle in this Bill is.

Mr. MULOCK. The amendment is limited to cattle.

Mr. SPROULE. If that is so why should the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) introduce hogs.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Because they come under this class.

Mr. SPROULE. There are many other diseases to which cattle are liable. I believe when animals are killed they are killed for the safety of the community, and in no case should the allowance be made specific in this Bill, notwithstanding the fact that we are following a precedent established in the Mother Country. If an animal is affected it cannot be worth its original value, because even if it should be likely to recover, there are uncertainties about that matter, and there is danger not only in regard to the spreading of the disease but in regard to the death of the animal itself. It is, therefore, unreasonable either to ask or expect that the value of the animals should be paid in the event in question. If the Bill is allowed to pass it should be very much amended and a great reduction in compensation made, because we have not so many valuable animals here as in England. Therefore the argument does not apply with such force as it does in England. Another reason why it is much more important for us to see that diseased cattle are slaughtered, is from the cattle trade we have with the Mother Country. It is the more necessary because England can schedule our cattle, whereas the same principle would not apply in England. Again, in regard to the price of cattle, the price being lower in this country, the average price paid should likewise be lower. For the general good of the community a reasonable sum should be paid, but no more than half the value of the animal, and in special cases where the animals are held at high figures some specific sum should be settled, much lower than what is proposed, which the Department should be compelled to pay.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The interest affected by this Bill is so very large that it becomes a matter of vast interest to all those who represent agricultural constituencies. We have in this country a very large and flourishing interest, a very large number of cattle, sheep and pigs, and since farming has not been paying as well of late years as it formerly did the attention of the farming community has been directed to the improvement of stock and to increasing the number of the animals raised. The idea contained in this Bill is that the public interest is paramount, that when it becomes necessary in the public interest to slaughter cattle to prevent the spread of a contagious disease, compensation should be awarded. We see this principle carried out in various ways. When it became necessary in the public interest to construct railways the right of way is purchased and fair compensation is awarded to the owners of the line through which the road will run. That is the principle which is obvious and admitted. When animals are affected by disease their recovery is not always doubtful, they may recover and be of their full value. But I do not see why only one-third of the value of those animals should be paid by the country. If it is in the public interest that the disease should be stamped out and animals be slaughtered which might probably recover, then there should be full compensation. The Bill of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) provides that the compensation shall be larger. It is but an extension of the principle admitted in the construction of railways, where the people who sell their land to the railway company are entitled to its full value. When we have admitted that principle I do not see how you can apply an opposite principle to the farming community. It is not fair, when a farmer is obliged to slaughter an animal affected with the diseases mentioned in the Bill, that only one-third of the value of such animal should be paid, and that it should not exceed $20. There are many farmers who have cattle worth $50 or $60. If they become affected by any disease mentioned in the Bill they will have to be slaughtered under its provisions, and yet they would only receive $20, and this slaughtering has been done in the public interest. In the other cases two-thirds of the value will be allowed, but in no case shall it exceed $40. The present Bill proposes its extension to the neighborhood of $150. There are many of our farmers who have thoroughbred cattle which they have imported for the purpose of improving the breed, and which had been purchased at very high prices, and if they became affected with pleuro-pneumonia, and it became necessary, in the public interest, that they should be slaughtered, it would be pretty hard towards any of those farmers to inform him that the amount of compensation obtainable was $40. Why should the public be asked to pay less than the value of the animal, if it is slaughtered in the general interest? Why should they be asked to pay less than any individual would be obliged to pay in a like case? The probabilities are that if the animal is diseased it will recover, and the only reason why it is slaughtered, is for the purpose of preventing the extension of the disease. Now, this Bill is evidently a step in the right direction, and conceiving it to be such, I heartily support it. I believe it is but doing justice to the farming community of this country, who are largely interested in stock raising, that they should receive a fairer compensation in such cases than they have under the present law. I think the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), is deserving of the thanks of the farming community in this country, and the thanks of this House, for having brought the matter so prominently before the House, and I hope the Bill will receive favorable consideration at the hands of the House.

Mr. McCARTHY. There are two points in which it seems to me this Bill differs from the law as it stands. One is certainly a most important matter and well deserving of the consideration of the House. As the law stands if any person has the misfortune to have his cattle slaughtered under the provisions of the law, and if at any time he has been an offender against the provisions of the Act, although not in reference to the particular animal slaughtered, he is not entitled to compensation. I certainly quite agree with the principle of this Bill, which applies that restriction to their right to get compensation to the particular transaction in which it arises. The other matter in which I think this proposed measure is an improvement upon the existing law, is this: Where the animal is diseased and on account of that the animal is slaughtered, it is proper to say, I think, that the owners should not get full compensation. But if the animal is not diseased, and if the animal is slaughtered merely by reason of the other provisions of the Act, which entitles the Government to destroy it because it might possibly have been in contact with an animal which is diseased, the destruction of the animal being considered to be in the public interest, the owner should receive compensation. These are two matters in which I shink this Bill differs from the existing law. The other matters are matters of detail which can be dealt with, as I understand the mover asks they should be dealt with, in committee. I have much pleasure in saying that I shall vote for the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). I do not profess to have any practical knowledge of the subject with which the Bill professes to deal, but I think it is worthy the attention of the House to consider, at this stage, whether a change like this should be made in such an Act, involving very considerable additions to the expenditure in carrying out the law, if the Act is to receive any extensive operation at all. I understand that up to the present time, with the exception of some cattle which were killed in the Province of Nova Scotia, no case has occurred in which the Act has had to be put in force. Not a single case has occurred of an animal having been slaughtered under its provisions, and, therefore, I think it is somewhat premature to undertake to amend the provisions of the Act. If, however, the hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill, being, of course, a great deal better informed practically on the subject than I am, anticipates that the Act is likely to receive an extensive operation, then it becomes a matter of considerable importance how we shall increase the expenditure which the Act involves. Now, there is an Act somewhat in the same line in the Province of Ontario—to prevent the spread of contagious diseases amongst animals, and providing for the destruction of diseased animals—and animals suspected of disease. That Statute makes no provision, I understand, for compensation.

Mr. MULOCK. Do you refer to the Act respecting glanders?

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). I refer to the Act of 1884.

Mr. MULOCK. Dealing with glanders, an incurable disease, which is a different matter.

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). I would also point out that the English Act does not go as far as this. The hon. gentleman proposes with respect to one class of cattle to allow the compensation to go as high as $300, whilst the highest compensation allowed in England is $200.

Mr. McCARTHY. He says that may be altered in committee, and he does not adhere to that amount.

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). I think there is some misapprehension as to another point which has been mentioned by the member for Wellington (Mr. Orton) and the member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), and that is the apprehension that the right to compensation is forfeited if there has been at any time, and in relation to any other matter, an offence against the provisions of the Act. I do not think that is a reasonable construction of the Act. The provisions with respect to compensation are contained under the heading "Slaughtering diseased cattle." The 12th section makes provision to the effect that the Governor in Council may from time to time cause to be slaughtered animals suffering from infectious or contagious diseases, or animals which have been in contact with, or in close proximity to, a diseased or suspected animal, and the next section, which is the one that the hon. gentleman proposes to amend, is that which provides for compensation for the loss caused by the operation of the 12th section, and makes the compensation, it is true, dependent on the owner not having been guilty of an offence against the preceding sections. I should suppose that a reasonable construction would be that the offence was only to deprive the owner of compensation provided it were in connection with the subject matter with which those two sections are dealing. The hon. gentleman proposes another change which seems to me to involve a principle likewise. Instead of providing "that the Governor in Council may, &c.," when the owners are reported by the Minister of Agriculture not guilty of any negligence or offence, he proposes to reverse that provision by making this proviso:

> Provided always that such compensation may be withheld in whole or in part where the owner or the person having charge of the animal has, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, been guilty.

In other words, instead of requiring that in the first instance, the Minister shall report that the owner has not been guilty, he proposes to constitute the Government in Counil, in point of fact, a court for the purpose of trying the case and deciding that the owner has been guilty before compensation is to be withheld. It is perhaps not a very important distinction, but it is one involving some inconvenience in putting the burden of proof on the other party.

Mr. MULOCK. Where should the burden of proof be?

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). I think it should be on the claimant, for the purpose of satisfying the Minister, if I am right in my idea that the offence is intended to be one in connection with the same transaction out of which the loss arises. It would then be for the owner to convince the Minister or his officer that the offence had not been committed, though that would not be the case it it referred to a previous transaction. It does strike me that so extensive an alteration should be made unless some urgent necessity exists for it, and that necessity does not exist, if I am correctly informed, that the Act is not likely to be used.

Mr. BLAKE. I cannot at all agree with the views of the Minister. It is possible that his observations may properly apply to some of the details. For example: There may be a question as to what the precise amount of the compensation should be. But the hon. Minister takes two grounds. He says, first of all, that he thinks the Bill is premature, because no cattle have been slaughtered yet, except in one instance, and that we ought to wait until the injustice is done, and an inadequate compensation is paid, before we pass the Act; and when the grievance is established, this House will legislate for the future, and provide the just compensation. Then, he says, if the law is going to be broken, we must consider a good deal about this, because it will be extremely expensive. It would be premature to act before the Statute comes into operation; and after it does come into operation we had better not act, because it will cost us some money.

Mr. THOMPSON (Antigonish). I did not say that.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman said it was going to be extensively used, and if it is, it is going to be used just where it will be required. The hon. gentleman must remember that this is not an old Statute. It was introduced, I think, last Session or the Session before. We had it under debate last Session, and a great many of us thought the hon. gentleman's provisions for compensation were inadequate. I thought so then, and I think so still. If it is intended to remedy an injustice which is likely to arise, it is better to provide against it than to wait until an injustice has resulted from neglect. If it is going to be an expensive thing in the public interest to give this protection to the cattle owners, we had better know it; but we must not allow an injustice to be done simply because it is going to be expensive to prevent it, which is practically the second argument of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken about this being a new Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. I know there is the old law.

Mr. POPE. It is the same law except in one or two particulars. Last year $150 was allowed as compensation for thoroughbred cattle. We raised the amount I think at the suggestion of the hon. member for Huron. I think I remember something of the case mentioned by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson). I do not remember what action was taken; but in my opinion it is clearly the intention of the Act that, when a man acts in good faith and does everything he can, and notifies the Department, he ought to come under the law. But with respect to the argument of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), I think it has something to do with this matter whether we have ever been called on to put the law into practice. So far as Ontario is concerned, this law, with very few exceptions, has been on the Statute-book for eight or ten years, and never during that time have we been called on to slaughter one animal. There never has been a complaint made to the Department since that law was enacted that the price paid by the Department was not sufficient. Where we did put the law into operation, and where there was a necessity to do so, was in the Province of Nova Scotia, in Pictou, where we purchased, I think, 300 or 400 head of cattle. There the law was carried out exactly, and no complaint was made by the people affected by it.

In fact, they looked upon it as a God send that we should send there and attempt to mitigate the disease. The Bill in one section provides that where the animal was affected with rinderpest, the compensation shall be $50, and in the very next section we find that in the case of an animal afflicted with pleuro-pneumonia, the compensation shall be $150. Now, I would like to know the reason for this difference.

Mr. MULOCK. I must refer the hon. gentleman to the Imperial House for the information; but I presume the reason is that rinderpest is a more dangerous and incurable disease than pleuro-pneumonia. At all events, the animal is not considered to have the same commercial value in one case as in the other. In the Imperial Statute a similar distinction is made. It is suggested that probably the chances of recovery from rinderpest are less than from pleuro-pneumonia.

Mr. POPE. There is no disease more destructive or supposed to be more incurable in the United States or England than pleuro-pneumonia, and I am sure my hon. friend will find that he has made a mistake in that.

Mr. MULOCK. It is in the English Statute.

Mr. POPE. It may be, but is an animal that dies with one disease worth more than an animal that dies with another? As a general rule, animals are more valuable in England than they are here, and in fixing the amount of compensation last year I took into consideration the difference between the value of an animal in this country and its value in England, and made the price about equal relatively to that in England; and the reason I objected to this Bill was that last year we consolidated and amended the Act. We put this $150 for thoroughbred cattle where it was only $40 or $50 before, and with respect to the other payments they are exactly the same. My object was to bring it all under one Act, because the penalties were not included in that Act in such a way that they could be easily collected. When I found horses should be put very high, I had them struck out of the Act altogether, excepting those brought into the country, that might be quarantined or where disease broke out among them while quarantined; otherwise horses do not come in at all. I have always had a little doubt, and that is the reason why I have been careful in the working of the Act, whether this Act properly belonged to this or the Local Legislature. There is only one reason why it can be introduced here, and that is because it relates to public health. When I found that Ontario and Manitoba had made provisions for cattle disease in their parts of the country, I hoped, and still hope that all the Provinces would do likewise; because an Act can be worked so much easier by the Provinces, except in the case of the importation of animals. Any law affecting that must be passed by this Legislature, or any law affecting the carrying of animals from one Province to another. I believe the provisions under this Act are quite sufficient to meet the exigencies of the case.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When the Bill was before the Houee a year ago, there was a very lengthy debate on the subject, as many of us felt that it did not deal in a fair and proper manner with certain classes of the community. In looking over the Bill before the House, I must say that, so far as subsections a and b are concerned, I would not mind if they were struck out altogether. As regards the cases affected by these clauses, the Bill of last year is amply sufficient. When an animal is taken with a contagious disease, which, in the end, must prove fatal, that is one of those contingencies which the owners of animals, in common with other classes of the community, are subject to, and it seems to me arbitrary to make the public bear the whole or a large part of the loss. It would be almost as reasonable that the country should be taxed to pay the loss of the farmer from storms and floods, &c. I have no objections to the Act of 1885, so far as that is concerned. It is provided in that Act that the Governor in Council may, from time to time, cause to be slaughtered animals suffering from infectious or contagious diseases, and then it provides compensation, if the owner of the animal was not guilty of any negligence or offence against the provisions of the preceding sections of the Act, to the extent of one-third the value of the animal before it became so affected, but not to exceed $20. That is amply sufficient, unless it should be a contagious disease that in the end is not death—a disease from which the animal would recover without any great loss. Section 12 further provides that the Governor in Council may order the slaughter of any animal that has been in contact with a diseased animal, and not only in contact but in close proximity thereto, or that is suspected of having been in proximity to any animal affected by contagious disease. That is an intolerable hardship. Take the case where one man has a spite against another, and we know very often strong feeling exists between men known as cattle-breeders. If one choose to say: "I know that animal has been in proximity to a suspected animal," he can take steps to have it slaughtered. Again, it is provided that in every other case the compensation shall be two-thirds the value of the animal, but shall not in any case for grade cattle exceed $40, and that as regards highly bred cattle it shall be two-thirds of the value, but not to exceed $150. There is where the hardship comes in. We know that the cattle raising industry of the country is large and is every year growing; we know that the animals exported from this country to Great Britain bring an enormous revenue to the country, and everything that can be done reasonably should be done to foster that industry. I need not tell hon. gentlemen acquainted with the subject that it has been found by experience that the only way in which you can keep up the standard of these animals for exportation, is by using first class thoroughbred male sires. It seems also that to keep up the breed frequent importations are necessary. I think, if you allow the Bill to go before the committee, and amend it, there is no need for throwing it out. Sub-section c should be retained.

"In every other case the compensation shall be the value of the animal immediately before it is slaughtered, but so that the compensation shall not, in any case, exceed two hundred dollars, except in the case of thoroughbred pedigree animals, in which case it shall not exceed three hundred dollars."

I think that is reasonable. We have many men in the west who have gone into the business of raising thoroughbred stock, and it is too bad that, because a man may suspect that an animal has been in proximity to a diseased animal, that animal should be slaughtered without adequate compensation, and the sum of $300 is not at all an excessive compensation.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Whatever may be the individual view of members of the House respecting the amount of compensation to be awarded to parties whose stock may be troubled with these infectious diseases, I think it is patent on the face of that, whether this is a matter that belongs to health regulations or not, and whether it should be relegated to the Provinces or not, when we look at the shipping trade of the Dominion, it will strike every member as being one of those questions respecting which it is exceedingly desirable that the Dominion Government should have some regulations. The farmers of Ontario, and in the near future the farmers of our great western prairies, will be very largely interested in the regulations affecting the shipping of cattle at the various points along the seaboard which are in other Provinces and entirely beyond the reach of those Provinces where the greatest values are invested in stock. I think there would be danger if this matter were relegated to the Provinces, that, where the stock business was not of such importance as in those Provinces to which I refer, but through which the stock finds its way to the ocean, the duty might be neglected of keeping a clear access to the British stock market without the embargoes which have been placed on other countries. For that reason, if for no other, I think it is extremely desirable that legislation of this class should exist on the Dominion Statute-book. If it were considered desirable that the Provinces should take the administration of this matter in their own hands, there should at least be a general supervision on the part of the Minister of Agriculture, to see that these provisions are not neglected at points through which our stock reaches the ocean in order to connect with Great Britain. I think the Minister of Railways said that, under the operation of this Act, the farmers of Ontario had not been called upon to pay anything. That is a fact upon which the Ontario farmers may congratulate themselves, but we are not absolutely free from the risk of these contagious diseases among farm stock, and it will be in the recollection of very many of the western members that last fall we had a very severe attack of hog cholera in two or three townships of the county of Essex, which in some places decimated the hog stock of the farmers to a serious extent. I do not know whether the aid of the Dominion Government was invoked in this matter, but I know, as far as the Provincial Government was concerned, that an expert was sent out to those municipalities to look into the difficulty, and as far as possible restrict it. On that occasion, there was a heavy loss to the farmers throughout those townships, and what was their difficulty last season may before very long apply generally to other farmers in the matter of cattle and other stock. I think it is desirable that our regulations should not in any way be relaxed in reference to the protection of the general farmer from the spread of these diseases. I cannot quite agree with the opinion of the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), when he says that the farmer is not entitled to be paid an appreciable proportion of the value, where an animal is diseased and suffers. I would remind hon. gentlemen that, if you place the compensation too low, there is a tendency on the part of the farmer who may be first visited with the disease to conceal the difficulty, and his neighbors may suffer before they are aware that there is such a disease in the neighborhood. Where hog cholera and pleuro-pneumonia and similar diseases break out, the passage of the animals along the public highway may leave such traces of the disease behind them, that other healthy stock, perhaps drinking from the same water or travelling over the same road, make take the disease, and those innocent farmers in the vicinity are thus led into difficulty and loss through the carelessness of perhaps one farmer who does not appreciate the difficulty he is causing to his neighbors. Farmers in that respect are no better than the rest of the community. There are found among them, I am sorry to say, men who are intensely selfish as far as the public interest is concerned. Though I have no desire to see the compensation fixed so high as to make it an inducement for a man to apply for compensation for the loss of his stock, because I believe a farmer ought to run risks such as merchants and others take in their business, yet when you take into account the danger of spreading the disease in that neighborhood, I think the compensation should not be placed at too low a figure. While we have not had the difficulty in Ontario yet, and while I hope it will be far in the future, and indeed that we may never have to apply to the Dominion Treasury for any compensation for the loss of cattle from contagious diseases, yet it must not be forgotten that there is a fair medium in this as in other things, and, when we are placing a Statute on the Statute-book, it is desirable to get it as just and equitable as possible. I am therefore disposed to support some modifications of the Bill of last Session, especially when they are guarded as they are here by leaving a large discretionary power with the Governor in Council or the Minister of Agriculture, if that is thought more desirable, to refuse compensation where it is clearly traceable to a man's own negligence in this matter. I think it is wise for the House to consider whether the compensation may not be fairly somewhat increased.

Mr. THOMPSON. After consultation with the introducer of the Bill, and finding that he has consented to some modifications of it, I have no objection to the second reading.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think the House should understand whether the Government are going over to the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), or the member for North York is going over to the Government, for we have had two occasions on which these two gentlemen have arrived at this sort of agreement.

Mr. BLAKE. A little of both.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. the mover of the Bill will explain in committee what the amendments are.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would like to ask the Minister of Justice, or some other legal gentleman, to point out whether the Act, as it stands, is lame in the particular that I have mentioned. If so, it seems to me that it will not be remedied here. I would like to have that point understood.

Mr. THOMPSON. It seems to me that the Act, as it stands, gives ample power to the Governor in Council to provide for the inspection of cattle, and to cover cases like the one the hon. gentleman mentioned.

The CHAIRMAN. It is proposed to amend section 1 by making it read as follows: –

Section 13 of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, passed in the Session held in the 48th and 49th years of Her Majesty's reign, is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

The Governor in Council may order a compensation to be paid to the owners of animals slaughtered under the provision of this Act; and whenever the animal slaughtered was affected by infectious or contagious diseases, the compensation shall be one-third of the value of the animal before it became so affected, but shall not in any such case exceed twenty dollars; in every other case the compensation shall be three fourths of the value of the animal, but shall not in any case of grade animals exceed fifty dollars; and in any case of thoroughbred pedigree animals two-thirds of the value of the animal, not to exceed one hundred and fifty dollars; and in all such cases the value of the animal shall be determined by the Minister of Agriculture or by some person appointed by him: Provided always, that such compensation may be withheld, in whole or in part, where the owner or the person having charge of the animal has, in the opinion of the Minister of Agriculture, been guilty, in relation of the animal, of an offence against this Act, or where the animal, being a foreign one, was, in his judgment, diseased at the time of entering Canada.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In the event of the animal slaughtered having been infected with a contagious disease that was probably curable, would the owner then only be entitled to $20 it it was slaughtered in order to prevent the spread of the disease, and done at the outbreak of the epidemic? I think that is not right.

Mr. MULOCK. It is not likely the officer would slaughter an animal unless the disease was incurable, in which case, perhaps, $20 might be all, or more than, it was worth.

Mr. McNEILL. In case of an animal slaughtered because it has, for instance, the mange, the owner ought to receive more compensation than the owner of an animal that is slaughtered because it is infected with rinderpest, which is incurable. I think the Act which was introduced a few minutes ago was very rightly framed in that respect, drawing a distinction between different kinds of infectious diseases, some of which are much more likely to be cured than others. It seems clear that an animal infected with a curable disease is more valuable than an animal infected with an incurable disease; and if an animal infected with a curable disease is slaughtered, I think the owner ought to have more compensation than the owner of an animal which is infected with an incurable disease.

Mr. POPE. This Act is not supposed to apply to animals except those that are suffering from what are considered incurable diseases.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). An animal may have what is known an incurable disease and yet that disease may be cured; but the animal will transmit that disease to other animals. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) has stated that the officers will be careful not to slaughter animals except those suffering from incurable diseases; but an animal may have what is called an incurable disease and may be cured, and yet transmit it to other animals.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I desire to ask the Minister of Railways if the regulations provided in section 27 of the Act have been made?

Mr. POPE. Regulations have been made, but I cannot state whether they apply to this particular case or not. If they do not I will call the attention of the Minister to it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then the Minister thinks it was intended that that case should be covered.

Mr. POPE. Yes; I think the Act was intended to cover any case where the party acted in good faith. It would be a very great hardship if it did not. In this very extensive country, before you could get the authority of the Minister of Agriculture, your animals might die. I see a difficulty on that point. My impression is that it ought to be covered by the present Act. It was not, however, supposed that we were providing for past cases. I will call the Minister's attention to the matter, and if the regulations do not cover such a case as has been mentioned, the Minister's attention will be called to the matter.

Mr. McCARTHY. That point could not be covered by the regulations. I give it as my opinion, for what it is worth, that as the law now stands there is no power by the regulations to fix a matter such as the Minister of Railways seems to think has been or may be fixed. The compensation which the Statute empowering the Governor in Council to pay, is merely for animals slaughtered by order of the Government, and not animals slaughtered by the owner before any authority has been obtained, or direction given by the authorities. I think the Minister should promise to deal with this matter on the third reading.

Mr. POPE. The Minister of Justice says he will deal with it on the third reading.

Bill reported.

THE EASTER ADJOURNMENT.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved:

That when the Speaker leaves the Chair to-morrow at 6 o'clock, the House stands adjourned until the following Tuesday at 8 o'clock, p.m.

He said: It has been represented that by adjourning to 8 o'clock on Tuesday, it would give time to members to arrive that day in time for the meeting of the House; and by adjouring to-morrow at 6 o'clock, it will allow members to be at their homes for Good Friday.

Motion agreed to.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 22nd April, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 114) to amend the Act incorporating the British Canadian Bank.—(Mr. Dawson.)

OVERFLOWING OF THE ST. LAWRENCE RIVER.

Mr. CURRAN asked, Is it the intention of the Government, in view of the great suffering and loss of property in the city of Montreal and the neighboring districts, from the overflowing of the St. Lawrence River, to cause an investigation to be made by competent engineers, with a view to suggesting such measures as may prevent the recurrence of such disasters?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The intention of the Government is to cause an investigation to be made; but, of course, the Government will expect the co-operation of the city of Montreal, and most likely also of the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal.

PRINTING OF PAMPHLETS.

Mr. AUGER asked, Has the Government, since the 1st December last, entrusted the printing of pamphlets or other matter to any printing offices at Quebec? If so, to what offices? What is the nature and the number of pages of such pamphlets, the number of copies of each, the price paid for composition, for printing and for binding, and what sums have already been paid on account?

Mr. CARLING. As the hon. gentleman asks for information involving a good many details, I would suggest that he put a notice on the paper, and I will endeavor to have it brought down in time.

EXPLORATION OF HUDSON BAY.

Mr. DAWSON asked, Whether, in the event of the exploration of Hudson Bay and Straits being continued during the coming summer, it is the intention of the Government to order an examination of the channel represented on the early French and English maps as existing to the south of the straits and extending from Ungava Bay to Mosquito Inlet?

Mr. FOSTER. This matter is now engaging the attention of the Government.

COUNTERFEIT DOMINION NOTES.

Mr. TASSÉ asked, Whether the Government are aware that a large number of Dominion notes of the denomination of $2 have been counterfeited and are now in circulation? If so, is it their intention to order a new issue and to take other steps to protect the public against this fraud?

Mr. McLELAN. The Government are aware that counterfeit Dominion $2 notes are in circulation, and steps are being taken to protect the public against fraud.

APPOINTMENT OF A JUDGE.

Mr. LANGELIER asked, Whether Hon. J. S. Wurtele, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Quebec, has been appointed a Judge of the Superior Court for the Province of Quebec? If so, what is the date of the Order in Council appointing him? If not, has the position been offered to him, and has he declared his intention to accept or to refuse it?

Mr. THOMPSON. An Order in Council was passed appointing this gentleman a judge. He has not yet signified his acceptance of the office.

RELIEF OF THE TOWN OF COBOURG.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, on Tuesday next, to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to relieve the corporation of the town of Cobourg by releasing an amount of their debt to the Government, equal to the sum contributed by the corporation towards defraying the cost of constructing the harbour of refuge at Cobourg.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose this was part of the assets the hon. gentleman brought down the other day in reduction of our gross debt?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Motion agreed to.

THE CLAIMS OF MANITOBA.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, on Tuesday next, to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to remove doubts under section 6 of the Act 48-49 Victoria, chapter 50, for the final settlement of the claims of Manitoba on the Dominion, by declaring in what manner the rate per capita therein mentioned shall be calculated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In what way do you propose to calculate it?

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman will remember that on the formation of Manitoba into a Province, a certain amount per head was given to that Province, based on an estimated population of 17,000. In 1873 a further sum of about $70,000 was added. The terms of the agreement between the Manitoba delegates and the Government should have embraced both of these sums, and it is doubtful whether the Act refers to both or only to the allowance that was made originally. This measure is to remove that doubt.

Motion agreed to.

EXPERIMENTAL FARM STATIONS.

Mr. CARLING moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, on Tuesday next, to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to empower the Governor in Council to establish an experimental farm station, or experimental farm stations, and to acquire a limited extent of land, and set apart a limited extent of the public lands of Canada for that purpose, and for the purpose of tree planting and timber growing; and also to fix the rate of remuneration of persons employed to carry such provisions into effect, such remuneration to be paid out of monies voted by Parliament for that purpose; and further to provide that such reports, samples, plants, and other products as are designated by the Minister of Agriculture, shall be transmitted by mail free of charge, subject to regulations made by the Postmaster-General.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would suggest to my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture that it would be expedient to give us a little general explanation as to what he proposes to do. Then we shall be in a better position to discuss the matter when we return after the recess.

Mr. CARLING. I should be very glad indeed to give any explanation; but I am suffering from a very severe cold to-day, and hardly feel able to go into it. If the hon. gentleman will allow the matter to stand till Tuesday, I will give the explanation then.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. LANGELIER.

REPRESENTATION OF THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES IN PARLIAMENT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 115) respecting the representation of the North-West Territories in the Parliament of Canada. He said: The Bill provides that on a day to be fixed by proclamation, the North-West Territories shall be represented. The Territory of Assiniboia will have two members; the Territories of Alberta and Saskatchewan will each have one member. The Territory of Athabasca has no population to speak of, and therefore is not included in the Bill. The Bill provides that for the present the franchise shall be the same as that which now obtains for election to the Territorial Council of the North-West, and the provisions of the Bill are, in fact, taken from the measures which are now law in the Territories respecting representation in the North-West Council.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved:

That a humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, representing that for the good government of the several Territories forming part of the Dominion of Canada, and not included within any Province thereof, it is expedient that provision should be made for their representation in the Parliament of Canada, and praying that she may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Imperial Parliament to empower the Parliament of Canada from time to time to make provision for such representation.

He said: In 1871, the Imperial Parliament passed an Act to enable the Dominion Parliament to form Provinces out of the Territories which had been acquired by arrangement with the Hudson Bay Company, and when Territories were formed into Provinces to give Parliament the power of giving them the right of representation. The Act was passed in 1871, to remove doubt as to our power to create Manitoba a Province, and our action in that regard was confirmed by Imperial Statute. The first clause says:

"The Parliament of Canada may, from time to time, establish new Provinces in any of the Territories forming, for the time being, part of the Dominion of Canada, but not included in any Province thereof, and may at the time of such establishment (this was the establishment of a Territory as a Province) make provision for the constitution and administration of any such Province, and for the passing of laws for the peace, order and good government of such Province, and for its representation in the said Parliament."

Thus, it conferred upon the Administration the power of declaring a Territory to be a Province, and, when so declared, to give the new Province representation in the Dominion Parliament, but it does not provide that a Territory not declared a Province may have representation here. Therefore, to remove any doubt—and I think it is more than a doubt; it is a certainty that we have not the power—it is proposed we should ask the Imperial Parliament to grant that power. No doubt, it will be granted. Hon. gentlemen who were in Parliament in 1871 may remember that the Act of 1871 was passed on the representation of the Government of that day, of which I was a member, and the Opposition took exception to our having, although the Act was right in itself, asked the Imperial Parliament to make any alteration or addition in the charter of our Constitution, without the previous assent of the Dominion Parliament. There was a great deal in that argument, and therefore I have brought down this resolution, to obtain the consent of Parliament to apply to Her Majesty to lay before the Imperial Parliament a measure giving us the power required.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose, as a matter of fact, the hon. gentleman will himself prepare this Bill, or cause it to be prepared here, and then transmit it to England. I suppose also, in conformity with the spirit of his present remarks, he will, at any rate, allow us the opportunity of seeing what he proposes to do.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no objection, and have had the Bill printed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I had no doubt the hon. gentleman would have no objection. Of course, I have no objection whatever to the propositions he has made, which have been enforced on this side, as to the extreme desirability of giving representation to these Territories. The only point that strikes me is this: Whether, in adopting a Bill which is not merely operative for the present occasion, but which gives us the power from time to time in all future cases, if I understand the proposal aright,——

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—some reasonable provisions should now be introduced into it to prevent an undue representation being given to the very small population in outlying Territories. The basis of our Constitution is that each Province shall be represented according to its population. Although there were good reasons for departing from that in the case of fast-growing Provinces, still care should be taken to prevent any abuse creeping in by giving a great number of representatives to very thinly settled territories. That might be pressed so far as to interfere to some extent with the principle of representation by population, as it exists in the other Provinces.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That will be completely in the power of the Dominion Parliament, from time to time. When the Province of Manitoba was formed, although the population was very small indeed, we gave them four members to the House of Commons. Objection was taken then that we were giving them representation far exceeding their rights according to population, but Parliament held that one member—perhaps all it had a right to have, and perhaps all the whole North West has a right to have, taking population as the basis—was practically of no use, while by giving them four they would be enabled, as a delegation from the Province, to confer together, and press with some energy and hope of success the views of their locality. Parliament took that view of the case, but the objection was taken strongly by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). The hon. gentleman who has just spoken also said it was in excess of the population, but that a generous view should be taken of the case. Parliament here will have the power to give such representation as they think proper.

Mr. EDGAR. Is it the intention of the Government to give full power to representatives from the Territories, or in any way to limit their power, as is done in the United States with territorial representatives?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government, in giving a Territory power to send one delegate only, did it limit his right to that of making speeches only, would be giving it representation of no value whatever, and it is proposed the representative shall have the same power and status in Parliament here as any one of us. I desire to pass this resolution to-day, because it is of some importance that the Address should go home and that the Government in England should take it up immediately after their Easter recess.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not rise for the purpose of opposing the resolution in its true spirit, namely, that steps should be taken with a view of obtaining representation of the North-West Territory. I think that it is a most desirable thing to seek to accomplish; but, looking at the wording of this resolution and considering the use that might be made of such a resolution as a dangerous precedent in the future, it seems to me that we should proceed with very great caution in this matter. The Government ask by this resolution that they may be permitted, without the sanction of Parliament, without further conference with Parliament, to submit a Bill to the Imperial Parliament for the purpose of altering the Imperial Act which binds these various Provinces together. It may be quite right that that Act should be modified from time to time, but the manner in which the opinions of the people of Canada are to be submitted to the Imperial Parliament is the point to which I beg to direct the attention of the House. My own opinion is that whatever request is submitted to the Imperial Parliament as the wish of the people of Canada should first of all be settled in every particular by this House. If it is proposed to submit a Bill to the Imperial Parliament to alter the Confederation Act, I submit that we cannot be too careful in proceeding, and that that Bill should be submitted to this House and discussed as carefully as any matter which is within our jurisdiction, and that, when finally we have approved of every word in that document, then and not till then does it represent the wishes of the people of Canada, and then and not till then should any communication be directed to the Imperial Parliament to give their sanction to that set of words and convert them into law. For that reason, while desiring that representation shall be given to the North-West, and desiring that the object aimed at, according to the words of the First Minister, shall be accomplished at an early date, I think prudence and caution should suggest, and I hope it will suggest to the First Minister, the propriety of putting in some words in this resolution showing that the humble Address which is referred to cannot be forwarded as representing the opinions of the people of Canada until this Parliament has done something further, and that is, to express its opinion upon the provisions of the Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD I think the hon. gentleman is a little too late; I think the resolution has been passed.

Mr. SPEAKER. No, it is not. I simply put the question.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The resolution is:

That a humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, representing that for the good government of the several Territories forming part of the Dominion of Canada, and not included within any Province thereof, it is expedient that provision should be made for their representation in the Parliament of Canada, and praying that she may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Imperial Parliament to empower the Parliament of Canada from time to time to make provision for such representation.

The only thing we ask is to have power to pass an Act, that whenever we think it necessary to make a Territory a Province we should have power to give it representation in the Dominion Parliament. That is the whole, and any Bill which would go further than this is not in accordance with the resolution.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MULOCK. Did I understand the First Minister to say that the Bill he proposes will be submitted to this Parliament before it is sent to the Imperial Parliament?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I mean to say that when I move for the Bill to give representation to the North-West Territory, it will be brought down here, and if it is not satisfactory it will not be passed.

Mr. MULOCK. That is not my question. My question is, whether the First Minister proposes to submit to the Parliament of Canada the Bill which he intends to ask the Imperial Parliament to pass in accordance with this resolution?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It would be rather an act of presumption for us to pass an Act here, and send it to England and ask them to pass that Act. That would be rather absurd. We ask that they shall pass an Act containing certain provisions, and they will do it in such apt phrase as the parliamentary draftsmen will settle. The draft we send is merely a suggestive one, and I shall lay it before the House, and I have no doubt it will receive the sanction of the House.

Mr. MULOCK. I might ask——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman had better wait until the next motion. There is nothing before the Chair.

Mr. MULOCK. I think we might as well finish this point. I did not ask that this House should pass an Act or assume to legislate for the Imperial Parliament, but simply if the full text of the measure to be submitted to the Imperial Parliament would receive the sanction of this House?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It will be submitted, but not to wait for the sanction. I moved:

That the said resolution be referred to a Select Committee composed of Sir Hector Langevin, Sir Richard Cartwright, Mr. McLelan, Mr. Laurier, Mr. Bowell, and the mover, to draft an Address embodying the same.

Mr. MITCHELL. I feel some little interest in the question put by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), and I did not quite catch, from the lowness of tone in which the Premier spoke, all his argument or his statements. But, if I understood the question aright, it was to know whether the legislation which it was proposed to ask the Imperial Parliament to carry out, would first be submitted to this Parliament before it was transmitted. If I understood the right hon. gentleman that it was proposed to do so, nothing more is wanted. If that is not the effect of his statement, I should dissent from such a conclusion. I think the House has a right, in a matter affecting the constitution or representation, or anything so vital, to be taken into the counsels of the Government at least, and I think it is the duty of the Government to lay before the House what they propose. We do not propose to the Imperial Parliament the ipsissima verba of the Act that they shall pass, but we have a right to know what the Government ask the Imperial Government to lay before the Imperial Parliament which will bind this House; and I think we have a right to an answer on that point.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did give an answer to that question. I said the resolution itself contains the Bill that is to be presented to the Imperial Parliament in England. I said further that we will suggest a Bill, a draft of which I will lay before the House when I bring up the second reading of the Bill granting representation to the North-West. Then the House will have full charge of it, and if they do not approve of that draft, they will say so. The Bill cannot become law unless by the consent of Parliament, and if Parliament disapproves of the Bill, which is merely word for word what is in the resolution, neither more nor less, they will say so, and throw out the Bill itself. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that it is proposed to be a joint Address, for the Senate have a right to be consulted, and with the consent of hon. gentlemen opposite, I will move that the following Address be read the first time:—

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty.

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects the Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty for the purpose of representing that for the good government of the several territories forming part of the Dominion of Canada, and not included within any Province thereof, it is expedient that provision should be made for their representation in the Parliament of Canada, and of praying that Your Majesty may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the Imperial Parliament to empower the Parliament of Canada from time to time to make provision for such representation.

All which we humbly pray Your Majesty to take into your favorable and gracious consideration.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move that the Address be read the second time.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move that the said Address be engrossed.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move that a Message be sent to the Senate informing their Honors that this House has passed the Address, and requesting their concurrence in the same.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 102) to expedite the issue of Letters Patent for Indian Lands.—(Sir Hector Langevin.)

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

To defray Departmental contingencies $191,750

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For convenience sake, Mr. Chairman, you had better read aloud each separate office and that will save time in the committee, instead of rambling from top to bottom, as we otherwise will do.

Governor General's Secretary's office.... ..... $15,000

Mr. DAVIES. There is an increase of two or three thousand dollars, which wants a short explanation. In 1884-85 this office expended only $13,185.

Mr. McLELAN. Last year it was estimated that the expenses would amount to $16,000, but it seems only $13,185 were expended. A thousand dollars less has been asked for this year than was asked for last. It is possible that the whole sum may be required this year, or that it may not. It is not intended that all should be expended, unless it is required by the office.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman does not quite understand me. The estimate for 1885-86 was $16,000. What proportion of that has been expended we do not know.

Mr. BOWELL. It was found by the amount expended that as large an amount as was estimated last year would not be required. It is necessary always to have a little margin. That is the only explanation that can be given.

Mr. McLELAN. In 1884-85 it was estimated that $16,000 would be required, and only $13,185 was expended. From the expenditure made in the office so far it is estimated that the sum needed for 1886-87 will be $1,000 less.

Mr. WILSON. I understood the Minister of Public Works to state the other night that the allowance for travelling expenses for the Governor General was $5,000. I observe that item has been increased during the year 1884-85.

Mr. McLELAN. $5,000 was, by Order in Council, allowed to the Governor General for himself and suite. The other items are for the travelling expenses of the officers of his Department who are sent on public service, amounting to $929.

Mr. WILSON. Then the $5,000 is not the only amount allowed for the Governor General's travelling expenses?

Mr. McLELAN. $5,000 are allowed for the Governor General himself, and——

Mr. DAVIES. Is the Order in Council of 1879, which appropriated $5,000 for the Governor General's travelling expenses, supposed to cover the expenses of the Governor General and his suite?

Mr. McLELAN—there are many times when the Governor General is not travelling himself, and when it is necessary for public business that someone of the officers should go to distant points.

Mr. McMULLEN. Under whose directions are these sums paid? Suppose we commence by considering the sum of $806 paid for newspapers to the Governor General's office. Is that sum increasing or decreasing? Are we to go on increasing that amount? Under whose direction are the papers ordered, and under whose order are the amounts paid? It is right that we should criticise those items. A very large amount is paid out under the head of contingencies. Last year the Government exceeded by $22,000 the amount appropriated for contingencies. We should carefully criticise the different items, and see if we can devise some means to cut them down. In what way are the papers subscribed for? Who orders them, and under whose order is the money paid?

Mr McLELAN. They are ordered by the Governor-General's secretary, and in the other Departments by the Deputy Minister. The order is under the control of the Minister.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are we supposed to pay for everything those officers choose to order?

Mr. McLELAN. Every Department and every Minister, and the Governor General as well, must be kept informed as to what is passing in the world, and subscriptions are therefore made to newspapers. The control of the expenditure is first in the appropriations that are voted by Parliament for certain amounts to be paid for newspapers; and next, in the Public Accounts Committee, where all the details and vouchers can be called for at any time. There is that general supervision held by Parliament over this or any other expenditure.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). The total expenditure for newspapers in the different Departments was $10,389. While I am disposed to allow every facility to employees of the public Departments to secure all information desirable, yet I think the committee will admit that this is a particularly large sum. If we allow to the Departments an equal amount to that expended for newspapers for the reading-room of the House I am sure everyone will be satisfied that we have been exceedingly liberal. The report of the Auditor General shows that the amount spent for newspapers for the reading room was only $1,498, while that for the Departments was over $10,000. It strikes me that the newspapers taken largely belong to a particular political section of the community. If the Government will allow both sides to be heard inside of the Department, as they are obliged to allow both sides to be heard outside; if the newspapers of both sides secured a share of the assistance which is employed, in the expenditure of some $10,000 for subscriptions alone, the community might think that there was less of an element of unfairness in the matter. I think it is worthy of the attention of the committee that such a large sum is being devoted to that particular purpose, and the committee must recollect that that is exclusively for subscriptions to newspapers in the Departments at the Capital, and that, besides these, there are subscriptions to the different Government offices outside, that might run the total up to a considerably higher sum.

Mr. McCRANEY. In looking over the amount expended for newspapers in the various Departments, I find they will average about $700 for each Department. Now, Sir, that would furnish say fifty dailies and one hundred or 150 weeklies, magazines, and all papers of that character. I think certainly that is a most extraordinary sum of money to be spent for that purpose. The expenditures in some of the Departments, I find, run as high as, in one case $943 and in another $862, which seems to be an enormous sum. I did not look at the amount expended for our reading-room, but I think these sums must be almost equal to the amount we expend for that purpose. I would like to ask why—as there is a sum of $5,000 appropriated for the travelling expenses for the Governor General—the travelling expenses of his staff are not taken out of that vote?

Mr. McLELAN. I explained to the hon. gentleman, a short time ago, that some years ago $5,000 was set apart by Order in Council as the sum to be allowed to the Governor General for the travelling expenses of himself and his suite. It is found occasionally to be in the public interest, and for the public service, that an officer from the Governor General's office should go out to different parts of the Dominion, and that expense is in addition to the $5,000—the latter being exclusively for the Governor General and his suite when he himself is travelling.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think, as regards what, perhaps, appears a somewhat large amount for subscription to newspapers for His Excellency, that no objection can be taken. It is of importance that the Governor General should acquaint himself very fully with the various phases of public opinion, and I believe I am correct in saying that His Excellency, whatever the Departments may do, does look at all sides, and that the Reform newspapers are very fully represented on His Excellency's files. They used to be, and I think they are still. The large amount for subscriptions in the other Departments is quite another thing, and there is a great deal to be said for the view my hon. friend from Middlesex (Mr. Cameron) expressed, as to the large sum collectively paid for newspapers. That can be discussed, however, as we get on. I would ask if it is necessary to have an additional clerk in His Excellency's Department, because I perceive that a gentleman of the name of Stuart has been apparently permanently appointed. He is put down as an extra clerk, but he is paid for the whole 365 days. If a clerk is necessary, I think it would be better to put the amount in the regular Estimates, than as part of the contingencies. I see that the sum of $2 per day has been paid Mr. Stuart each day for the whole year.

Mr. McLELAN. I think there was a vacancy in the staff, and Mr. Stuart was expected to fill the vacancy. He continued as an extra clerk for some time, but he finally declined, or for some reason did not go up for examination. He has therefore left, and a permanent clerk has been appointed at a less salary than was paid Mr. Stuart as an extra clerk.

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot fully endorse the remarks of my hon. friend from West Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright). I daresay in times past he may have had something to do with these contingencies, and though it may be the duty of the Dominion to supply the Governor General with those papers, still I think it is the duty of the people's representatives here to cut down these items as far as possible. I think they have gone altogether beyond what the people of the Dominion can bear to pay. I think it is quite time, when we notice how our expenditure has run up, to take up every item of this kind and carefully examine it, with a view to cutting it down. We have the right to express our views to the Government of the day, and point out to them what we conceive to be the items they should operate upon in the way of restriction. I think this item of $806 for newspapers alone is utterly absurd. I admit that it is the duty of the Governor General to take the various journals, for the purpose of posting himself on the questions of the day. But is that sum necessary to keep his files full of the different periodicals of the country? I venture to say that there are plenty of papers there which are not published here. No doubt there are London papers; no doubt he takes a lively interest in the politics of Great Britain; and are we to supply them as well as the Canadian papers? What is this amount for? Is it really for Canadian papers, or for papers from the other side of the water? Do we pay for the London papers and all those kind of things? I do not think it is fair. I do not want to be parsimonious with the Governor General, but when he gets $50,000 a year, and gets in addition every single item of expenditure almost, in and around his Department—his Secretary paid, every little item there paid from top to bottom, at the public expense—I think that the least we can ask is that he should supply himself with those periodicals he requires from the Old Country, and that we should not be asked to pay for them. I see, in addition, that the sum of $5,000 is allowed by Statute for travelling expenses. I am not disposed to quarrel with that just now, as the wisdom of Parliament fixed that sum, but I think the expenses of those who accompany him in his different tours should be deducted from that. I do not think we should be called upon to pay whatever expenses his footmen are disposed to incur, and all charged up to this country, so that the sum is exceeded something like $1,000. The probability is that, if we go on in this way, we will have to provide $7,000 instead of $5,000. I see we even go so far as to pay the cab hire, and the cab hire of his attendants and footmen. I am entirely opposed to this scale of expenditure; I do not think our people can bear it. I notice also that we paid $197 for advertising for the Governor General. I would like to know what that advertising is for, and what is it that requires that expenditure? He does not advertise for wood, because we supply that, or for coal, because we supply that, and we supply his attendants and everything of that kind. I would like to know what the advertisements are for? I think we are entitled to full explanations with regard to these items.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The contingencies for the Privy Council is an item in which, undoubtedly, the increase has been enormous. In 1878 the total for this office amounted to $2,848, and these gentlemen themselves in their first year only required $3,723, while $8,000 is demanded now. Now, I am really not aware of any remarkable additional expense that should be incurred in connection with the Privy Council to warrant it requiring three times as much now as it did in 1878, and considerably more than double what it required in 1879. It seems to me that the Privy Council, which is not a Department having a very great deal of work attached to it, is really spending a great deal more money than it ought to do.

Mr. McLELAN. The work in that Department has, I know, very largely increased since I have had the honor of being a member of the Government. The presidency of the Council was the first position I had, and from my knowledge of what that Department is doing, I know that its work has very largely increased since 1881. The hon. gentleman will see that during the last year there has been a very large amount for telegrams. Of course, the leader of the Government, who now holds the position of President of the Council, is called upon to communicate by telegraph in all directions, and the expense for telegrams has amounted to over $2,000. There have been in the last two or three years a number of extra clerks employed, which caused an increase last year of about $3,000, and I am told by the Clerk of the Privy Council that that is about as low as the work can be managed for at present, without appointing, upon the permanent staff, the four men now employed as extra clerks. It is not proposed at present to do that, but to continue them as extra clerks, and charge their salaries to contingencies.

Mr. DAVIES. I thought when the other item was under discussion that there was a good deal in the argument as to the necessity of His Excellency being provided with the periodicals and papers of the country. But it does appear to me that to supply every Department with newspapers to the extent that is being done, is rather too much. I find that the expenditure for newspaper subscriptions has gone up in every Department except the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The expenditure of the Privy Council for this purpose has gone up from $585, in 1878, to $756. In the Secretary of State's Department it has gone up from $459, in 1878, to $861. Now, it may be absolutely necessary that something like $1,000 should be spent by each of these Departments in subscriptions for newspapers; but this is a large sum, and I think the Ministers should explain it. The expenditure in the Department of the Interior for subscriptions to newspapers was increased from $441, in 1878, to $619. In the Department of Justice there is a reduction from $545 to $518. In the Militia Department it has gone up from $511 to $753. In the Department of Finance it was $771 in 1878, and it has gone up to $942. In the Public Works Department it has gone up from $419, in 1878, to $778. It appears to me that these increases are more than the increased work of these Departments will justify. There is another item with regard to which, I think, the hon. Minister of Customs should give us some explanation, because I remember that in 1878 the whole country was placarded with his denunciations of the previous Government for its expenditure on cab hire. Now, I find that the Government's expenditure for cab hire is becoming very large.

Mr. BOWELL. Do you say I placarded the country?

Mr. DAVIES. I say the statements of the hon. gentleman in this House were placarded throughout the country as an evidence of the extravagance of the Administration, and I find, so far from the Administration remedying the evil, that outside of his own Department the expenditure for cab hire has very largely increased. The expenditure of the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government, for this purpose, was $694, in connection with the Privy Council. That may be all right, considering his age and other circumstances; but the expenditure for sundry persons besides Sir John Macdonald amounted to $519. That does seem to be a large amount for sundry persons in the Privy Council for cab hire.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Who is sundry persons?

Mr. DAVIES. I do not know who he is, and it is because I do not know that I am asking the hon. Minister of Customs to explain. I am glad to see that the hon. gentleman is not so extravagant in his own Department, but he has been a party to the extravagance of all his colleagues.

Mr. BOWELL. How do you know?

Mr. DAVIES. Because he has not protested against it, and he comes down with them and asks for this vote. In the next Department I find that Sir Alexander Campbell is credited with a very small sum for cab hire, only $55; G. W. Burbidge, $7.50, and sundry persons, $30. That is not extravagant. But in the other Departments I do not find the same moderation. Coming to the Department of Militia and Defence, we find the item: "Hon. A. P. Caron, cab hire at Ottawa, $214."

Mr. MITCHELL. We had a war you know.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman did not go to war in a cab. He stayed at home and directed the matter from here. Then, in the next Department you find the Secretary of State, the Hon. J. A. Chapleau, put down for $376, and the amount expended by him and his officials in his Department on cab hire was no less than $460. In the Department of the Interior, we find no less than $451 for cab hire, paid at Ottawa, from the head of the Department down through a large number of officials. Every one of them appears to have the right to employ cabs as he pleases and charge the expense to the Department, as fifteen different subordinates have employed cabs.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is easily seen you are not a Cabinet Minister or you would not object.

Mr. DAVIES. I am not complaining that cabs should be employed, but I do not think that all the clerks of a Department should have the right to employ them. In the Auditor General's Department, the cab hire is $38. In the Finance Department, $171, which is not very extravagant. In the Inland Revenue Department, $291; and in the Customs Department, which my hon friend, the great denouncer of cab hire, manages,——

Mr. BOWELL. There is not much there.

Mr. DAVIES. No, the hon. gentleman only spent $2 himself.

Mr. BOWELL. No, I did not.

Mr. DAVIES. Well, he is charged with spending it.

Mr. BOWELL. It has no business there.

Mr. DAVIES. Then the Public Accounts are wrong.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; and I made special enquiry as to how it appears there.

Mr. MULOCK. The thing was not covered up.

Mr. BOWELL. No; I am not in the habit of doing what you do—covering up your iniquities.

Mr. DAVIES. This fact stands out in bold relief, that the Minister of Customs is either an anchorite in his tastes in regard to cabs, or the other gentlemen are very luxurious and extravagant. If the Minister of Customs can get along with only $16 for cab hire and look so hale and hearty, I think the thousands of dollars spent in other Departments might be cut down a little.

Mr. McMULLEN. We not only pay the cab hire and travelling expenses of hon. gentlemen, but I see that we lunch them also. There is an item, J. H. Spencer, $83.63 for lunching the Cabinet. I cannot understand this. If hon. gentlemen will ride in cabs and railways at the public expense, they ought, when they want an extra lunch, to foot the bill themselves. It is absurd to go on this way increasing the annual amount expended under the head of contingencies. I must give the Minister of Customs credit for his handling of the contingencies in his Department, where he has shown a great deal of care in keeping down cab hire and other things; but as to his colleagues, we have the right to find fault with them for their expenditure. I notice here that Sir John Macdonald's cab hire cost very nearly $700, and sundry other persons—it does not say who, or where they went to, or who ordered them, or under what circumstances—it appears engaged cabs to the extent of $519. This also is an absurd item. In my humble opinion, a Minister of the Crown who draws his salary and his sessional allowance ought to pay his own cab hire. Last year the salary of the First Minister was $8,000 and his sessional allowance $1,500, a total of $9,500; and I contend that a man who is paid that amount of money, and who claims to be so absolutely devoted to the best interests of the country as he does, should show a little liberality for the poor struggling people who have to pay $30,000,000 annually, by paying his own cab hire; and if the hon. gentleman were present I would say the same. I care not who the First Minister be, whether Grit or Tory, he has no right to charge the public account with the incidental expenses made for his own personal comfort. I notice also that in each Department they are in the habit, not only of paying telegrams, but of giving the boys who carry them gifts, and in each Department they are careful to charge the same amount as gifts and donations to the boys, namely, $3.75. That also is wrong. Another man who delivers the night mail gets $60. I think he gets nearly $600 a year for delivering the night mail. I do not know under whose order these things are done, but it appears absurd that things of this kind should go on. Street car hire, $25. Extra clerks—J. Belford gets $1.50 a day for 192 days; J. Foley, engaged at $2 a day in 1885, and so on. We should have some explanation with regard to those items. Then we find washing towels——

Mr. MULOCK. Dirty linen.

Mr. McMULLEN. They paid $68 for washing towels.

Mr. BOWELL. This is something you never use.

Mr. McMULLEN. How many do they use a day? Surely the Privy Council would not use more than half a dozen towels a day.

Mr. MITCHELL. They must have clean hands.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not believe all the water in the Ottawa and all the soap in the county could wash away their political sins. $68 for washing towels. Then there is the item of goods, $65.43. What were the goods? We have no account of them. In some of the contingencies there is put down $1,500 or $1,600 for goods. I have a matter of this kind to refer to, when we come to the Agricultural Department. In that there is a large item for goods. We want some explanation of these things. Then there is the ice, $80.60. No doubt, they want ice, but I think they should supply their own ice. I cannot understand how hon. gentlemen can face the people's representatives, and ask them to pass such items as these.

Mr. AUGER. I have compared the expenses of cab hire of this Government with those of the late Government. In the year ending 30th June, 1878, it amounted to $466.55; two years later, in 1880, it amounted to $1,685.16. This last year it amounts to $3,758.29. Now let us take one Department in 1878. In the Department of Agriculture it cost in that year $32.75, as follows: P. Buckley, $16; J. Coursolles, $1.50; L. E. Goulin, $15.25. In the year 1880, in the same Department it cost $115.45. Last year the cab hire for the same Department amounted to $185.40, as follows: Hon. J. H. Pope, $126.75; Mrs. Lyster, $23.

An hon. MEMBER. Who is that?

Mr. AUGER. Well, the Minister will be able to tell us. A. J. Cambie, $11.15; J. E. W. Currier, $9.50; J. Lowe, $5.50; J. F. Dionne, $2.50; W. F. Boardman, $2; J. A. Lyster—I suppose the husband of Mrs. Lyster—$2; L. J. Beland, 75 cents; J. Marmette, 75 cents; Messenger, $1.50. This is a great difference from the expenditure under the Mackenzie Administration. I hope the Minister will be able to explain this.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not propose to enter into particulars, as invited to do by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies); but when he makes the comparison between the expenditure for contingencies in the Customs Department in 1878-79, and the expenditure at present, I think he would omit the reference if he looked at the facts. My predecessor spent on that service $15,767.38, and, by the Auditor General's report of this year, including the $2 for cab hire, he will find that the expenditure is only $6,779.51.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What the hon. gentleman says I have no doubt is true, as regards his own Department. I think the hon. gentleman has been a creditable exception, and that his Department, as regards contingencies, has been carefully managed, but I would call his attention to this fact. In his Department, when it was presided over by my lamented friend, Mr. Burpee, out of the $15,000 which were spent in 1878, $7,269 was expended for advertising and subscriptions in newspapers, which I think the hon. gentleman now charges in a different place, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. BOWELL. You are mistaken; I do not charge them in the manner suggested.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know that it was necessary at that time to make very numerous advertisements; and I think the hon. gentleman, in some other branch connected with his Department, finds it necessary to spend a great deal more than the $5,000 or $6,000 which is put down in last year's account.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is in error. There is no place in the Public Accounts where he will find such an expenditure, nor has any such expenditure been made.

Mr. DAVIES. Does the hon. gentleman say that he has discontinued the subscription to newspapers?

Mr. BOWELL. No; I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. MITCHELL. He does not take the Herald?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, I do, and two copies of the Globe, and I read them, too.

Mr. MULOCK. I think no answer has been given to the statement of my hon. friend from Shefford (Mr. Auger), who has stated that nearly $4,000 was spent for cab hire last year in this city. It appears to me that that is a most unreasonably large sum. The departmental buildings here are all together, and I think that item is one that cannot be fully justified. I understand that not only the heads of Departments, but the deputy heads and others are allowed a great deal of latitude in that regard, and, if that is the case, if any number of persons are drawing on the petty cash of the Dominion in this way, the grand total will be something very undesirable. I find in the Auditor-General's report, page 35, part 2, an item of Montreal Minerve—I do not know whether there is any person in this Chamber, or in the Government, particularly interested in that newspaper, but we find that the Minerve is doing printing that could be done in Ottawa, and perhaps ought to be done in Ottawa—Montreal Minerve, printing 25 copies Manitoba terms, $47.62; printing 3,120 copies report on Printing Bureau, $112.85; total, $160.47. How does it come to pass that that bit of patronage is given away from the city of Ottawa, and is given to a paper in Montreal which is generally credited with being an organ of a member of the Government, who may be more intimately connected with it than even as a friend, as far as I know. I make no statement on that point, because I do not know; but this system of the Departments giving out printing in this way to papers which are directly or indirectly under the control of members of the Government, is a vicious system. We have a further illustration of it which is germane to the subject—I refer to the printing of the Geological Survey Report, which I believe is printed at the Montreal Gazette office, at a cost of several thousand dollars a year. I understand that that job was placed with that newspaper at a time when the Survey was stationed at Montreal, and the reason assigned was that it was convenient to have the printing done there. Subsequently, the Department was transferred to Ottawa, but the work was left there still. That work, I am told, is given to that paper without competition, without tender. Some imaginary, or some alleged, measurement of work is undergone, but I am told that that work could be done at a far less cost to this country if it were honestly open to competition. We know that printers can say: Here are our fixed rates; and it can be offered as an excuse that the payment is not in excess of the ordinary fixed rates. The work is in excess of the ordinary fixed rates. That is a very good statement to make, of course, but fixed rates mean just such rates as you can get when there is competition. It has been argued, but without any real justification, that that paper was especially qualified to do the work. But is this matter to go on forever? Are we to give that paper patronage for several thousands a year forever, without competition and at great inconvenience to the Department, when it could be done, and ought to be done, by the Queen's Printer under the regular contract we give out for printing? I find an item on the same page of the Auditor General's report: "J. J. McGee, travelling expenses, $122.81; Hon. J. A. Chapleau, $16.40." In every form we find moneys being disbursed in the public service, in various ways connected with individual members of the House and members of the Government. With regard to these items for travelling expenses, they may be all right; but with regard to the total amount incurred from year to year for travelling expenses, both in Canada and in Europe, trips made to the Old Country, jaunts through the Empire, I think there has developed a system of extravagance and a feeling that Ministers are not expected to be economical of the people's money in regard to their own personal habits, when they are discharging public duties. I am not disposed to be over particular with regard to the personal expenses of members of the Government engaged in the public service, but no one of them can look through the Public Accounts for the last four or five years without being struck with a vast sum that is being charged annually for travelling expenses by various members of the Government.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend has already referred to the item of Mr. McGee, for travelling expenses, and I see charged immediately afterwards: "Joseph Pope, travelling expenses, $329.42." Now, I notice in the Auditor General's report that he finds fault in several cases with parties not furnishing a detailed statement of these travelling expenses, by railway or otherwise. He draws attention to the fact in his report that in many of those cases there is no statement given, and only a lump sum is handed in as travelling expenses. I notice in the Secretary of State's Department, there is one person, whose name was mentioned a moment ago, who had received $100 for travelling expenses, which sum has never been properly accounted for, and the Auditor General said so in his report last year. It appears to me that this is a very loose way of doing things. Men are permitted to go on a journey, they are sent to perform certain duties, I presume in connection with their office, they are furnished with the means, and when they return they say, our expenses are so many dollars and so many cents, and that is the end of it. There does not appear to be any detailed statement. Now I hold, with the Auditor General, that such a statement should be given. We have no right to pay out money in lump sums in this way, because, if we continue it, these items will continue to increase. If you take a man who is in the habit of going upon a journey, and when he returns his master treats him generously, not asking any account from him of how he has spent the money that he was given for expenses, but simply takes his word that he has so many dollars left out of so much given to him when he went away, and you will find that he will increase the amount from time to time, and the probabilities are that after a while the sum will run up to double the amount it would be if a careful account was exacted from him on the day that he returns. Now, I hold that it is wrong to put down items in this way, as we find they are put down. For travelling expenses I notice "F. White, $30." He does not appear to have spent more or less than that amount. B. Chilton has got $25, and so on. $681.26 has been paid out for travelling expenses. Now, upon this question of cab hire, I believe it is time that an alteration should be made. If hon.

gentlemen who occupy the Treasury benches are not sufficiently remunerated by the respectable sum they draw as their allowance as Ministers of the Crown, and as their sessional allowance and otherwise, then, I say, let us add a sum to that; let us alter the Act at once, and have a distinct understanding that they pay their own cab hire out of the amount that is paid them. That will be the proper way, and I fancy, if that course were adopted, we would find that, if we could have an insight afterwards into the amount actually paid for cab hire, that there would be a considerable falling off. I do not say but that these amounts may have been paid for cab hire. Possibly the Ministers themselves do not look very closely after it. In all probability many of these cabmen are engaged from time to time, and when they come and present their accounts they are paid, and the Ministers, perhaps, do not keep accurate account of the services they perform; so the bill is presented at the end of the year, and the sum is paid and charged to the account of cab hire. I think this thing should be stopped. The idea of spending $4,000 for coaching Ministers around town, I think, is absurd. I am glad that I am able to give the Minister of Customs credit for economy in that particular. I have also looked at the account of the Postmaster General for the last year, and I am glad to say that his account in that respect is very economical. But the other Ministers have spent a great deal, and the First Minister himself a large amount. I cannot extend any credit to the Minister of Public Works for economy in that particular, for I find that he has spent a considerable sum. Now I say we should urge that a change be made in this whole system. We had better do like the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific Railway: we had better buy a dozen of cabs, or a half dozen. I do not believe that it would cost us as much money to get up a cab establishment of our own, and whenever Ministers want a cab, to take one that is owned by the Government themselves. Why, you will be able to keep a livery, we had better start a livery at once. I honestly think that we would save money by starting such an establishment; the idea of spending $4,000 for cab hire alone. Why, it would pay a very respectable return on a respectable number of horses, carriages and men. We might possibly buy each Minister a horse and buggy to drive around with. Perhaps he would not be satisfied with that. I suppose he would want a pair; and if we were to do that it would not cost us any more than it is costing us now. I hope that hon. gentlemen will consider that we are not jesting with this question—we are in earnest. We have got to give an account to our constituents for the way we allow their money to be spent, and it is our duty, when these items are before the House, to point out to the Government the absurdity, and the recklessness of spending such a large amount of money from year to year. If a Reform Government came to occupy the Treasury benches, I should be just as ready as any man in this House to criticise and condemn them if they exhibited as much recklessness in squandering the public money. I believe in the matter of contingencies we have been running mad for years. We have been going on until we have spent $186,000 in contingencies alone, and I suppose the hon. gentlemen will now ask an increased amount this year. These items go to make up the $34,000,000 or $35,000,000 required for the public service; we will get up to $40,000,000 after a while, and then to $50,000,000. Now is the time to cry halt. The people cannot afford it; they are trammeled with difficulties of their own; they are suffering from financial embarrassment, particularly the farming class. We should begin with these small matters and cut them down, so as to make it as easy as possible for the people to live in this country. I am bound to tender my advice in this direction, and to urge on hon. gentlemen opposite and to hon. members on this side of the House the necessity and expediency of taking that course and begin to wipe out cab hire and such items. Hon gentlemen opposite should remember that all our remarks are made because we feel it necessary to make them. I am anxious that expenditures such as cab hire should be cut down, and that there should be an end of the abominable system such as is carried on here. I do not know who inaugurated the system of cab hire; I wish there had never been a cab in Ottawa. If it is necessary for the country to pay for cab hire, let us have a cab establishment for the use of members of the Government, by which means cabs could be supplied at a cheaper rate, and we could make money out of the transaction. I have been told that there is a cabman who waits on a Minister of the Crown, and drives him to-and-fro, and receives $5 a day when the House is in Session. What rate do Ministers pay when they hire a cab? They do not pay the ordinary rate, which would be about 25 cents. No; Ministers must pay $1 or $2. They should endeavor to organise a tariff of rates. I do not know whether hon. gentlemen drive tandem during the recess or not. They appear to act very quietly and becomingly when we are here, and do not keep cabs running round; but when we go away there must be a cab fever, and, perhaps, some of them, like Lords, have 30 or 40 cabs waiting on them.

Mr. WOODWORTH. There is a sanitary element in all this which has not been touched upon. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) was evidently under the impression that Ministers ride a good deal. He asked in a very pertinent way, but he did not push his enquiry in the way he did during the Franchise Bill debate, where the riding was done. But it was driving. I wish it were riding. He wanted to know whether the riding was done round these buildings. The riding could not have been done here. The Ministers were not riding but driving; the hon. gentleman was entirely wrong about it. There is a great deal in what the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has been saying about the sanitary view—he spoke of it only incidentally. I am not going to make an amendment similar to that which was proposed, when it was suggested to vote that five gondoliers be placed in Central Park, which was that instead of five, two gondoliers, a male and a female, should be obtained. I am not going to move such an amendment; but in regard to this cab establishment we might, out of fourteen Ministers, have one as Minister of cabs and horses, with a salary attached. Instead of moving that a female gondolier and a male gondolier be obtained, I suggest that ten horses be bought at $100 a piece—nice saddle horses can be obtained for that sum—and it would cost $200 apiece to keep them a year; that would be $4,000. What shall we have as a result? A lease of life for fourteen Ministers. What a beautiful sight it would be to see the fourteen Ministers capering round the Parliament square between six and seven o'clock in the morning. What a beautiful sight it would be for the Central, the Model and the rest of the Public School children to see fourteen Ministers capering round these grounds on their "Rosinantes." In a franchise debate those fourteen Ministers would outlast any Parliament that ever assembled in Canada as regards physical endurance. Instead of sitting up indolently and effiminately in cabs they would be riding round on their steeds. There is thus a sanitary element which should not be lost sight of. $4,000 would be a mere bagatelle. The Ministers would have health, which they have not got now. The suggestion of the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) could, therefore, be improved upon, and to have horses should, of course, be made obligatory on the Ministers. Hon. gentlemen opposite would never come into power, for the Ministers would be rejuvenated and would keep control of the country forever. That would be a bad thing for the Reformers, but for the Ministers themselves and their families and the country the expenditure of $4,000 would be a good investment; let us make it $8,000 for ten horses and let them go capering round. We might expend, I think, even $10,000 for the first year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Would those horses be political hacks?

Mr. WOODWORTH. I do not know; but almost all the members of Parliament would likely try and have some of them. This is the first report of the Auditor General in which items have been given as we have them here. Those expenses have no doubt grown. We have not the items when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. We know, however, that the expenditure then was very large, and it is very large to-day, and perhaps a reduction could be made. Many of the items I do not understand. Two telephone resonanters—or something like that, I think—$6, appears here, and all that kind of thing. Those items have not been dwelt on because hon. gentlemen opposite feel ashamed to dwell on them all. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) held up some of the items to public execration. Other items might be suggested. While both parties have indulged in large expenditures in this direction, the next Parliament that sits here will, no doubt, see that those expenditures shall no longer be made. I do not think they swell up to $35,000,000 as the hon. member for Wellington feared; but every little helps. There is $1.25 for a porter and $3.25 gratuities to messengers, and all these items go to make a muckle. There is no doubt about it. I do not think it gets into the millions, but I think that the Government should not complain if we on this side criticise the allowance. I do not think it should be the duty of the Opposition only to act the part of critics, and that we on this side should say nothing if the accounts are wrong—I do not say the accounts are wrong, but they seem to be very large, and it is no argument to say: Yours were large when you were in. But I believe all this will be swept away in the sweet by-and-bye, when the new party comes in—the angels—when the electorate will send new men here; for I believe that many of us who are here to-day will perhaps not be here next time, and perhaps there will be a better set of men, though I do not know as there could be—but, at any rate, a set of men who will be horrified at these amounts, and will not allow them. But these matters have grown stale with these old parties here. The moment you touch the Governor General's suite, the gallant knight for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) rushes to the front, and like the knight in Ivanhoe, he stops you with his spear. Then the Ministers, the men who have grown grey in the public service, will not allow you to say a word. With the ex-members of the Government on that side and the Ministry on this contending for one another, we, the common members, are like those ancient warriors who had the sea in front of them and the sea drove them back on the barbarians.

Mr. DAVIES. I do not think that it was exactly what we might have expected from the Minister of Customs, to make the comparison he did between the expenditure of his Department for contingencies and that made by his hon. predecessor in 1878, and to have left the House under the impression that, whereas he only spends $6,779, the expenditure in 1878 was $16,372.

Mr. BOWELL. No, I said $15,000.

Mr. DAVIES. Very well; the Public Accounts for the year 1878 put it at $16,000. The inference to be drawn from the hon. gentleman's statement is that he was saving about $10,000 a year. Now, is that a fair statement and inference? Did it put the whole truth before the House? What are the facts? The hon. gentleman has come down here asking for two votes for contingencies. He asks for a vote for contingencies in addition to the sum of $7,000 he asks to-day; he asks for an additional sum of $15,000.

Mr. WOODWORTH.

Mr. BOWELL. Where?

Mr. DAVIES. On page 71, to meet the contingencies of the head office, covering printing and stationery, advertising, telegraphing and other items which are contained in the $16,000 expenditure he speaks of in 1878. He shakes his head, but I have them here before me, showing that of that $15,000 in 1878, $7,269 was for advertising in and subscriptions to papers; $592 for stationery, and $1,698 for the Queen's Printer. Now, to make the matter doubly clear I turn back to the items of expenditure in the last completed year in the hon. gentleman's Department, and I find that in that year he spent the sum of $16,216 for contingencies at the head office, in addition to this little vote of $6,000 for contingencies in connection with salaries. I find that amongst that expenditure was $3,870 for the Stationery office, and in the year 1878 the then incumbent of the Department brought down one item covering the whole, so far as I can understand. The hon. gentleman divides the vote, and as a matter of fact, as far as I can see, the total contingencies at the head office was nearly $5,000 more, instead of $7,000 less, than they were in 1878. That was very neatly done, as an aside, but it just drew the committee's attention away from the question of the extravagant expenditure in connection with cabs, which was very fiercely condemned by the Minister of Customs in 1878, though he now asks the committee to endorse it. I said that the expenditure for cab hire was prima facie indefensible, and now, as the hon. gentleman has given no defence, I say it is absolutely indefensible; and the only conclusion the country can come to will be that that expenditure is indefensible, and that the money was spent for purposes which the Ministry cannot and dare not defend.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman on this occasion, as upon others waxes very warm. It matters not whether it be the important question of international trade between the United States and Canada or the spending one or two hundred dollars for cab hire, he waxes equally warm. The hon. gentleman is altogether in error with reference to the Department which he has taken the trouble to criticise. The Estimates are made out to-day precisely as they were made out in 1878 and 1879. The contingencies to which I referred, were the expenditures of the office for the inside service. The expenditure for 1877-78 for that service was $13,000, and the estimate for contingencies for the last year and the present year is $7,000. That does not include the printing to which I referred, which is paid through the Stationery Department and which include the blanks and all other forms that are printed and sent all over the Dominion. These items are charged—though I cannot put my hand upon the figures just now—precisely as they were charged in 1878. The additional $15,000 for inside service was to cover the expenditure for the establishment of what is termed a Board of Customs—an item altogether new, one which did not exist in 1877-78. The amount expended during last year for newspapers is about $700 or $800, as will be shown by the Auditor General's report. The item which has been referred to by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) and the hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) was $5,471.12 for subscriptions to and advertisements in newspapers. That was the expenditure to which the hon. gentleman was referring and which called his attention to the matter, and which covered the ordinary advertising through the Dominion, and the payment for newspapers and other periodicals which are taken in the Department; that is the item to which I referred, and had no reference whatever to the item of the Queen's Printer and other matters to which the hon. gentleman called attention. If he will take the trouble to look at the Estimates of 1877-78, he will find that they are made out to-day precisely as they were then, except that they are made out a little more in detail now. I should not have referred to this matter at all, had not the comparison been made by others who spoke before I rose.

Mr. DAVIES. I compared the expenditures of the two years.

Mr. BOWELL. You took the ordinary expenditures in this book and compared them with the expenditures as they appear in the Auditor General's report for the two years, the Auditor-General's report being much more full in detail than anything we have had before.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The actual point is this. If the hon. gentleman looks at Mr. Burpee's expenditure for 1878, he will see that this large item of nearly $8,000 for advertising in and subscriptions to newspapers was in no respect parallel to any of the items of the hon. gentleman. I recollect, and I remarked to the hon. gentleman, that this matter had been under discussion before between himself and my late lamented friend, Mr. Burpee, and Mr. Burpee pointed out that this large item comprised a considerable number of charges which were afterwards put in a different shape. Now, in 1878 Mr. Burpee's total expenditure for his Department was $714,000, the rest being refunds. The hon. gentleman now asks for $804,000. I dare say they can be reasonably accounted for by the additional increases in business, and so on. According to the Public Accounts, the miscellaneous items of stationery, printing, etc., for which Mr. Burpee, in 1878, spent $9,676.49. The hon. gentleman now requires $16,17[illegible]. I do not say the hon. gentleman requires too much; that is not the matter in question; all I say is that it is perfectly evident that the charge for advertising, printing and stationery, as entered in the Public Accounts for 1885, amounting to $750, is for quite a different service from that for which Mr. Burpee required $7,600 in 1878; so that there is no possible comparison between the hon. gentleman's expenditure and Mr. Burpee's.

Mr. BOWELL. I am exceedingly obliged to the hon gentleman for turning to the Public Accounts and finding the very items referred to. The items making up the $9,600 to which he refers are not included in this contingencies account at all. They are for the service I pointed out, and in addition to the $15,000. The $16,000 that I ask for covers the very expenditure he has referred to; and when he reflects that the extent of the Customs service through the North-West Territories and the whole Dominion is so much greater now than it was then, he will find that the increase has been marvellously small. What I desire to thank the hon. gentleman for is for answering the hon. gentleman on his right. The $16,000 I am asking for is for the outside service, and the items referred to by the ex-Minister of Finance were for the inside service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman will see that that does not help him, but it helps my hon. friend. If he chooses to add the $7,000 and the $16,000 together, the result is $23,000 odd, while the same items in his case amount to $24,000

Mr. BOWELL. Is it right for the hon. gentleman to take the actual expenditure of one year against the Estimates of the other?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am comparing the expenditure of 1885 with the expenditure of 1878. But the real point is that there cannot be a comparison between the two accounts, because the very sum Mr. Burpee charged shows conclusively that it was not for the same items that appear in the hon. gentleman's account for the current year.

Mr. BOWELL. That is the dispute; I think they are.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman knows that Mr. Burpee did not charge $7,500 for the particular service for which he charges that sum.

Mr. BOWELL. No, that is covered by the $9,000 to which the hon. gentleman has referred.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman has altered the custom of the Department. He may be quite right in having done that, but it is absurd to say that the charges for newspapers and advertising, which previously amounted to $9,000, are the same items as are now included in advertising and subscriptions for newspapers, amounting to $726. The hon. gentleman is not going to tell the House that the same services for which he charges $726 required $7,500 in Mr. Burpee's time.

Mr. BOWELL. No; but the $750 to which the hon. gentleman has referred covers the expenditure made in 1877-78 for subscriptions to and advertising in newspapers, amounting to $5,471.12.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I understand the contention to be that the general contingencies of the Department of Customs, amounting in 1878 to something like $9,000, were larger than they are at the present time. Now, I have looked through the accounts of 1878, and they show that the contingencies in the Department of Customs amounted to $16,272; and the vote the Government are now asking is something like $7,000. I understood the Minister of Customs to say that the same items precisely were included in the two votes. Now, I find included in the expenditure for 1878, printing, $7,269; stationery supplies, $59[illegible]; and the Queen's Printer, for printing, paper and binding, $1,688, showing to my mind conclusively that the general supplies for the outside service were charged against departmental contingencies at that time, while in the Auditor General's report for 1884-85, I find, in the contingencies at Ottawa for outside service, that there was paid for stationery $3,870, and to the Queen's Printer $9,728, and other items.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is all wrong.

Mr. CAMERON. Does the hon. gentleman say that these contingencies are entirely in connection with the Board of Examiners?

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the Estimates of 1878-79, he will find on page 16, that the Government of that day asked $16,000 for contingencies under the head of Civil Government; that is for the inside service. On page 77 he will find this item: Contingencies of head office, covering printing, stationery, telegraphing, etc., for the several ports of entry, $15,000. If he looks at the Estimates of to-day, he will find that the estimate for the inside service, for which $16,000 was asked then, $7,000 is asked now. If he will turn to page 71, he will also find $15,000 asked for the same service—for the outside service—for which $15,000 was asked in 1878-79.

Mr. DAVIES. But the advertising mentioned in the account of 1878 was not advertising in the city of Ottawa alone.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no advertising at the outside ports now. I have done away altogether with that extravagance.

Mr. DAVIES. The simple difference is that the hon. gentleman pays the Queen's Printer here the $9,000.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman will excuse me for saying that he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon gentleman has the blanks sent to the outside ports, and the expenditure for them for the year 1884-85 was $9,728, in addition to $3,070 for the Stationery Office and $130 for stamps; and the hon. gentleman will find these very items included in the $16,000 for the year 1878.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman does not seem to draw the distinction between the outside service and the inside service. The $16,000 which covers the items he refers to is for the outside service. The $7,000 is simply to cover the contingencies that are incurred here in Ottawa. The $15,000 which I ask, exactly the sum voted and expended by the late Government, is for the outside service. The difference is this: that I spent last year less than $7,000 for the inside service; whereas my predecessor in his last year expended $13,457.46 at headquarters.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That does not alter the fact that the expenditure of Mr. Burpee on these items was within a fraction of the hon. gentleman's expenditure. Mr. Burpee asked $15,000 for these expenditures in 1878, but only spent $9,000, thus saving a large sum. The fact is, that the charges are different. The $750 the hon. gentleman expended for different purposes. He says he has altered the system and abolished the advertising at the outside ports. Mr. Burpee appears to have included that in his headquarters expenditure, and for that reason there is no fair comparison. The hon. gentleman will understand that we are not charging him with any error of judgment or extravagance in his Department. We are simply pointing out that Mr. Burpee's estimates embraced a variety of items which do not occur in the hon. gentleman's, and for that reason the comparison is not quite fair.

Mr. BOWELL. Well, I think I shall be able to convince the hon. gentleman, when the question comes under discussion again, that he is wrong.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I wish to call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to the fact that the leader of the Opposition made an arrangement with us that the House should adjourn at six o'clock to-day and meet again at eight o'clock on Tuesday, and it was understood that hon. gentlemen opposite would help us to make substantial progress in the Estimates to-day and on Tuesday. Therefore, I would hope that hon. gentlemen would allow this resolution to be carried now, so that we might say we had made some progress, and we will begin again on Tuesday at 8 o'clock. I hope when we do resume that we will be able to make more progress than we have made to-day.

Mr. WILSON. It will be a very unreasonable thing that the whole resolution should be carried. We are as anxious as hon. gentlemen opposite are to expedite business, but a number of questions have been asked, and hon. gentlemen have not given us the information asked for. I think they should explain those items, and account in some way for the expenditure of this money, and until they do so we are certainly not justified in passing an item of this kind. We have the right to have information, and we are not supposed to sit here without getting it, while the Ministers sit in their places and do not give the explanations for which we ask.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course hon. gentlemen have the power to prevent the item passing, as they will have the power on Tuesday to prevent any other motion passing. I only state that an arrangement was so made between the leader of the Opposition and myself, for an adjournment at six o'clock to-day and the reassembling of the House on Tuesday at eight o'clock, and as the hon. leader of the Opposition is not present, I can only state the fact, which I know if he were here he would corroborate. He would say that I am perfectly right in stating that it was understood that hon. gentlemen would help us this evening to make substantial progress in the Estimates. I repeat, those hon. gentlemen may prevent that being done, but I have simply stated the facts to the House.

Mr. DAVIES.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would be very sorry indeed that there should be any misunderstanding about the arrangement. I was not present, but I know generally what passed, and what I understood was that my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition agreed with the hon. gentleman that no motion would be made to defer, and no discussion would take place on going into committee. But the Minister of Public Works must see that my hon. friend could not positively dictate to the gentlemen behind him that they should not discuss these items; and I am quite sure the hon. gentleman will hardly say that we have been desirous of causing any unnecessary delay. I must recall his attention to this fact, that whenever these particular items were under discussion when we were occupying the Treasury benches, considerable time was always consumed in discussing them. It was one of those points which, for reasons that are rather obvious, gentlemen on both sides took pretty considerably into their own hands. Gentlemen who have been in office, or who are in office, do not usually discuss these very much. That is quite true I admit, but other gentlemen always do discuss them. Now, if hon. gentlemen beside me have had all the information they require——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If not, I do not see what can be done. We might, perhaps, suspend this item, and take the next item or two.

Mr. McCRANEY. I think this is a matter which should be looked into, and we should not proceed without further information.

Committee rose and reported progress, and asked leave to sit again.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 6:05 p.m. until Tuesday, the 27th inst., at 8 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 27th April, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eight o'clock, p.m.

PRAYERS.

FIRST AND SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 116) to incorporate the St. Gabriel and Levee Railway Company.—(Mr. Curran.)

LAND SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 117) to amend an Act to authorise the granting of subsidies in land to certain Railway Companies. He said: The object of this Bill is simply to enable the Government to grant, in a different way from which they have been granted in the past, the land subsidies already granted by Parliament to certain railway companies. We have hitherto been granting them in odd sections. The proposal is to obtain permission to grant them in alternate townships or blocks instead of sections. That has been already done by Order in Council, subject to the approval of Parliament, in the case of the Galt Railway and the Hudson Bay Railway, and the only object of the Bill is to legalise what has been done and to authorise the Government to do that in the future.

Mr. BLAKE. Under these circumstances, I hope the hon. gentleman will at once lay on the Table the Orders in Coun-oil, and the applications on which they were based in reference to these companies.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT, 1874.

On the notice, introduction of Bill to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1874, as respects elections in the Province of Manitoba, Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have ascertained, since notice was given of this Bill, that the Committee of last year on the codification of the Statutes has made a suggestion to the same effect, and therefore I will not pursue this Bill.

Motion dropped.

SALARY OF A JUDGE.

Mr. THOMPSON moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Thursday next to consider the following resolution :—

That it is expedient to provide that the salary of the additional Judge of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice for Ontario, appointed under the Act of the Legislature of that Province, 48 Victoria, chapter 13, shall be $5,000 per annum, to be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, and that section 1 of the Dominion Act, 46 Victoria, chapter 9, be repealed.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Departmental Contingencies..... $191,750

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice the contingencies in the Department of Justice is put at $5,000, an increase of $1,500. How is that?

Mr. THOMPSON. The amount asked for is that which was actually expended in 1885. For two or three years past the amount has grown, principally in consequence of the increased service required in connection with the administration of justice in the North-West. In 1883 the amount actually paid was $5,177; in 1884, $5,486.24; in 1885, $4,998.52. We therefore propose to ask $5,000 this year.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice in the contingencies of Militia and Defence the amount charged for newspapers last year is $765.65, and that for travelling expenses, $569.58. There is a charge of $100 for travelling expenses of Lieut. Colonel Panet, for which the Auditor General in his report says there is no account.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I was not aware that the Auditor General had made any such statement. I am perfectly certain whatever amount has been expended in the Department can be accounted for. As to the newspapers being increased, from time to time new newspapers have been published, which, to a certain extent, will account for the increased expense; but the hon. gentleman will see that the contingencies, as a whole, are the same as last year. Of course, as regards travelling expenses, last year was an exceptional year.

Mr. McMULLEN. At the same time, I contend those incidental expenses have been too large for years, and it is about time we should try to reduce them. Undoubtedly, last year there was cause for an increase, but the hon. gentleman does not expect another war next year, and will not therefore require the same amount. With regard to newspapers, is it absolutely necessary that the hon. gentleman should have in his Department $762.65 worth of periodicals hanging around the walls. Are they there to give a means to those waiting on him to pass the time, or to allow the clerks an opportunity of amusing themselves when they are tired of working, by enjoying the privilege and advantage of reading the public news at the public expense?

Mr. WILSON. There is a charge for 483 days, at $2 a day, paid to a Mr. Davidson in 1884-85. How comes it that he should have this number of days credited to him?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That gentleman was transferred from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Militia. He was paid out of contingencies, because he was not a permanent clerk. Since then he has been made permanent, and there was an Order in Council passed and a vote was taken last Session to pay him as an ordinary permanent clerk. The number of days being put in merely shows that he was transferred, and that, although he was employed from the beginning of the year to the end, he could not be paid out of the ordinary vote for clerks because the vote had not been taken in Parliament, and he had to be paid out of contingencies.

Mr. WILSON. Am I to understand that, in order to make the accounts tally correctly, he is credited with a certain number of days in the Militia Department that he really did not serve? He certainly could not have been employed 418 days in the one year. What I desire to know is how the extra number of days is to be accounted for?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman must see that he was not paid except as a clerk. There were a number of days before the year commenced which he was paid for, a number of days which belonged to the year before, and which we had to pay out of contingencies.

Mr. WILSON. Perhaps that is very plain to the hon. Minister, but I must confess that I cannot understand it. Was this gentleman paid, or was he not, for what he performed in 1883-84? I want to know how he is paid for an extra number of days in 1884-85 on which he could not have served. If he was employed in the other Department, that Department would have paid him, but he comes into this Department, and for one year he is credited with 418 days, at $2 a day, whereas he could not have been employed that number of days unless, as some members suggest, he was allowed double pay on the Sundays.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This clerk will be paid out of the ordinary vote from the 1st July next.

Mr. WILSON. That does not concern it at all. That is not what I am trying to find out.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The number of days the hon. member refers to comprises a portion of the time before the beginning of the year, and we had to pay out of contingencies previous to the time when the year began, and that makes the difference. He had no extra work and no extra pay. He was paid for the number of days he was employed in my Department after he was transferred.

Mr. WILSON. Perhaps the Minister will tell me how many days he was employed in the other Department. Then we will be able to see whether it will make 418 or 365.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I cannot exactly tell the hon. gentleman. I did not expect that the hon. gentleman would reduce it to such mathematical exactitude. I tell him the clerk was paid for a certain number of days that he was employed in my Department. He was not paid by any other Department, and he was paid for the number of days he was employed out of the vote for contingencies, and no other vote, because we had not any other vote to take it from. Since then he has been added to the permanent staff of the Department, and he will be paid out of the ordinary vote which has been taken for that purpose.

Mr. VAIL. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that this clerk was paid by the Militia Department for working in the Agricultural Department?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No; I never said he was.

Mr. VAIL. It could only be in that way.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I stated—and the hon. gentleman must have understood it—that he was transferred from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Militia; that from the day he was transferred to Militia he was paid out of the contingency vote for the Department of Militia, and was not paid out of any other amount voted to any other Department.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman has not touched the point raised by my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Wilson). He did not reduce it to mathematical accuracy; it was the Auditor General who did that. He is paid for 418 days for 1884-85 from the Department of Militia. There are only 313 working days in the financial year. The hon. gentleman says he did not work extra. If he worked in the previous year in the Department of Agriculture he must have been paid in that year. So the hon. gentleman will see that there are 53 days which are clearly unaccounted for.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken when he says they are unaccounted for. I think the Auditor General groups the days during which the clerks have been employed, and there may be a certain number of days taken off the year previous which were paid out of this amount. However, the number of days he was employed he was paid for.

Mr. DAVIES. Does the hon. gentleman wish us to understand that he may have worked in the Agricultural Department when he was paid for the Militia Department?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I should be sorry if the hon. gentleman understood that.

Mr. DAVIES. How did you get it in then?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I explained that he was not paid by the Department of Agriculture from the time he was transferred to my Department, but by Militia, out of that vote for contingencies, and I cannot explain anything more. I never contended that he was paid out of Agriculture.

Mr. DAVIES. Was he more than 365 days in the Minister's Department?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I explained that he must have been more, if he was paid for 400.

Mr. DAVIES. Not in the year?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not suppose in the year.

Mr. VAIL. The contingency account in this Department foots up last year to $10,507, while only $8,000 was granted. That is a large sum to overrun.

Mr. McCRANEY. I find, in comparing the cab hire of this Department in 1877-78 with that in 1884-85, that in the former year it was $95.50, and in the latter, $1,244.88. This appears to be a very large increase. Then I find a considerable increase in the subscriptions to newspapers, which amounted to $575 in 1884-85; and I find in almost every other item there is a very large increase. This last year the amount for cab hire for the whole of the Departments was about $4,000; for 1877-78 it was $535, being about eight times less than for last year. Then I find that the whole sum for contingencies in 1877-78 was $170,000, and in 1884-85, $191,000. For travelling expenses in 1877-78 there were paid $4,736, and in 1884-85 about $12,000, or three times as much. The same increase is observable in every Department. I find the subscriptions to newspapers in 1884-85 was $10,300. Then there is a sum paid for goods of $3,000 for the different Departments, of which no details are given. In the Department of Militia and Defence the amount is $15.35; in Public Works, $584; Railways and Canals, $594. It appears to me that these are very large sums to be given without any details. For washing towels there were paid last year $1,030.77; this item does not appear at all in 1877-78. I think, Sir, there might be some way adopted to keep these contingencies in check. Indeed I do not see why they should exist at all. If the salaries of the Ministers are not large enough, by all means let us increase them. I do not see, for instance, as was remarked by an hon. gentleman on a previous day, why the Government should not keep a horse for each of the Ministers, for I do not think that system would cost the country any more than we are paying now. We might just as well pay for their food and clothing as to pay for their cab hire. These expenses are growing larger every year, and something should be done to keep them down.

Mr. MILLS. I think the Minister of Militia must be under some misapprehension with regard to the payment to this clerk, Davidson, last year, for 418 days. If I understand the Minister's explanation, a portion of his time was for service rendered in his Department in the previous year. Now, I do not think that the hon. gentleman could pay out of the appropriation for one year any liability that was incurred at an earlier date. The hon. gentleman must know that he could not make a payment of that sort regularly without calling the attention of the House to it. The hon. gentleman has no power to take out of a sum appropriated as contingencies for a particular year, to pay a liability of a prior year. I assume that was an irregular proceeding, and could not have taken place; that there must be some other explanation than the one the hon. gentleman has given us. It is clear that there could not be 418 days' work performed in the year for which the appropriation was taken. The hon. gentleman says that this man was in the Department the previous year and had performed 53 days' work for which he had not been paid, and for which he was paid out of the appropriation for this year. Certainly it would be most irregular and contrary to law for the hon. gentleman to make a payment in that way.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Mr. Davidson was paid $2 per day, and I am certain the payments made were for the time during which he was employed in the Department of Militia. He was transferred from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Militia, and from that day he ceased to be paid by the Department of Agriculture and began to be paid out of the vote for contingencies. I am perfectly certain that the explanation I gave is correct, but I will be able to ascertain if there is any further information that will convince the hon. gentleman that the Department of Militia did not pay anything which should not have been paid, and that we have not gone beyond the law in so doing.

Mr. MILLS. If the hon. gentleman's explanation is correct, he has gone beyond what the law allows, because, if this Davidson was transferred from some other Department to the Department of Militia before the beginning of this year, then the expenditure that would be incurred for the portion of the prior year should be paid out of the contingencies of that year. It is impossible that he could have performed 418 days' service in one year; therefore 53 days' service were paid out of the appropriation for this year. If the hon. gentleman had done as was done in some other cases, by some other Ministers, and I think by himself in former years—allow this party to do two or three days' work in one, then the matter would be perfectly intelligible, although it would be contrary to the provisions of the law relating to the Civil Service. But the hon. gentleman gives an explanation which is equally contrary to law. If the payment was, as he says it is, a payment not allowed by law, I do not see myself how the Auditor General passed the account, unless the statement he makes to us is a mis taken one.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am certain that if the Auditor General passed that item it was quite legal, otherwise he would not have allowed the payment to be made. Suppose this clerk had been employed fifty days before the commencement of the fiscal year, and there may not have been an appropriation to pay him therefor. It could have been added to the contingencies, to the vote which appears now as contingencies for the fiscal year, beginning on the 1st July. There is no other way of doing it. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will wait until I can refer to it again, and in the meantime rely upon the Auditor General as not having allowed an illegal payment to be made.

Mr. WILSON. We are anxious to have a statement brought down to explain how it is that money has been paid contrary to the rules of Parliament, and contrary to all former usages, and also an explanation furnished as to the number of days certain officers were employed.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I will bring it down.

Mr. McMULLEN. We have had no explanation as to the travelling expenses which amount to $1,244.83, in which is included cab hire in Ottawa, $214.25. From observing the hon. Minister, who wears spurs, I imagine he generally rides and does not largely employ cabs. I see, however, no charge entered for spurs. Is there any explanation with respect to this amount of $1,244 for cab hire and travelling expenses?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman has devoted a great deal of his time, and I think properly so from the great interest he seems to take in cabs and cab hire, to this very important question. When the House last met the hon. gentleman took up very nearly a whole evening discussing that matter and repeating time after time that the enormous sum of $4,000 had been expended on cab hire. The hon. gentleman took such a deep interest in the question he suggested that instead of the various Departments expending so much money under this head, there should be a cab stand for Government purposes. I thought probably the hon. gentleman was seeking a position for himself, that there might be a superintendent required to look after that cab stand, and from the knowledge which the hon. gentleman displayed on such matters, possibly he was desiring that position. I can tell the hon. gentleman that there is no sum of $1,200 for cab hire in the Militia Department for last year. The hon. gentleman must know that the vote taken covers all the expenditure required for the travelling expenses of the various officers and heads of the various branches in the Department of Militia. I can tell the hon. gentleman, although he has given so much attention to cabs, that every account sent to the Department of Militia is examined by the Deputy Minister and by myself. Although the other day the hon. gentleman expressed the opinion that the cabmen who drove members of the Government were paid fancy prices, I can inform him that, so far as my Department is concerned, the prices paid are those paid by the public. I can only repeat that all the accounts are looked into and examined by the officers of the Department and by myself, and if the details were examined by the hon. gentleman, the sum would not seem enormous. The hon. gentleman should not consider we would forget our duty to the country for a paltry sum of $100, $150 or $200 paid as expenses in the various Departments. The hon. gentleman will find, in looking into the cab hire, that the expenditure is not frightfully extravagant. As to the statement of the hon. gentleman, that he did not see any entry for spurs, I have to say that his statement is correct. It may be considered in very good taste, and very witty and clever for the hon. gentleman to indulge in a remark of that kind; but the hon. gentleman might possibly find it very inconvenient, even if he were given the cash to pay for the spurs, to make use of them. In justice to the Department of Militia, I must say that what is expended in that way is not paid for out of the public funds.

Mr. McMULLEN. I did not intend to stir up the anger of the hon. gentleman. We have a right to criticise these expenditures, and it is our duty to do so. They are increasing year after year. We have drawn attention to the cab hire. The hon. gentleman states that I have devoted considerable time to this question. Yes, I have, as well as to other matters in connection with my duties here. The hon. gentleman says I am probably seeking an office. I will not look to hon. gentlemen opposite for any office. I do not believe, if they established a livery, they would ever think of giving an office of that kind to anyone on this side of politics; and the hon. gentleman, from his personal appearance, is far better fitted to discharge such duties than I am, and they would more become him than me. The hon. Minister says I am probably not capable of using spurs. I do not know that I ever had spurs on, and I never had anything about my house that had spurs, except fighting cocks, and I do not want anything else wearing spurs. The hon. gentleman should not have got out of temper because we have considered it our duty to consider these items. When hon. gentlemen opposite were in Opposition they criticised very severely the expenditure of the then Government both as regards cab hire and other purposes. I intend, when items come up in committee which deserve criticism, to give them criticism, and I caution my friends that if they go upon the Treasury benches and are not content with a smaller amount for incidental expenses, I shall consider it my duty to criticise their expenditure also. On this matter of contingencies we are running wild. Year after year the amount is increasing, until this year it has ran up to $20,000 or $22,000. You take every item and you find the same thing going on. I notice even in the item of ice that they spent last year something like $634.30 for ice. I would like to know what is done in the Departments with so much ice? Do hon. gentlemen regulate the temperature of their offices by keeping ice lying around, or do they use it for drinking? That would pay for, I think, about 327 tons of ice, and I would like to know what is done with all that? It seems to me that some of these items must be for charges which would not look very well in print, and so they are brought down annually as incidental expenses and paid for in that way. I fully endorse the remarks of my hon. friend who said that if Ministers are not paid salary enough to allow them to pay ordinary expenses of this kind, I say let us add to their salaries at once, and let us be done with it, instead of having these constantly increasing incidental expenses. Here is an item of $3,000 last year for goods, and no account is given of what goods they were. Now, any man in business who would present a statement of that kind to his creditors—and the country are the creditors of hon. gentlemen—without telling what those goods were, would be refused an assignment; and if hon. gentlemen cannot bring their accounts down in a better shape than that, then they should allow men who can run their accounts better, to take their places. Here is another large item for telegraphing last year. Hon. gentlemen must have done a tremendous amount of telegraphing, and I would like to know what this item is composed of, where these telegrams went, and what they were. It seems to me that many items which are charged to telegraphing must have been something else. I do not think there was any necessity for the Minister of Militia losing his temper, as I had no intention of stirring him up; but we are entitled to the information. I asked him about these newspapers and he would not condescend to explain them—why they were kept hanging around the walls of the waiting room. I asked whether they were for his own convenience, for his servants, or for visitors, but he would not condescend to say anything, but began to gibe me about spurs. Well, I do not know very much about spurs, but I think he should not have referred to this matter, because I see no man in the House except himself who wears spurs.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken if he supposes I lost my temper; my temper certainly would not carry me very far if it gave way to what the hon. gentleman said. The hon. gentleman has again come back to the question of spurs, but I notice that on a certain night, when the hon gentleman was called upon to vote, he did not require spurs to carry him away. As to the item for newspapers, I can tell the hon. gentleman that these newspapers are kept there for the purpose of reading; there may be too many newspapers in the country, but, at any rate, they are used for that purpose. I do not know who reads them in the waiting room; I have not the pleasure of seeing the hon. gentleman in my own room very often, but from the information which he seems to be conveying to the House, it may be that he frequents the waiting room. I do not think that this is a very extravagant amount of money to contribute towards the press of the country, who convey the information which is to be found in the columns of these various newspapers that are read by those who come into the waiting room, and sometimes by myself. The hon. gentleman will hardly expect me to read all those papers myself, and he must be liberal enough to allow the papers that are distributed to be utilised by those who come into the waiting room and have to wait there for an opportunity of seeing the Minister.

Mr. McMULLEN. I simply rise to say that I do not think the hon. gentleman should have made any reference to my running away. I do not run away—I never run away from an opponent, anyhow. I never left any place in a hurry, and I do not want a pair of spurs either. Perhaps if we recall the hon. gentleman's visit to the North-West it may be that he left Winnipeg in a hurry, and perhaps he did not need spurs on that occasion. Perhaps I may be able to refer to worse things with regard to him than he has referred to in my case.

Mr. WILSON. I find here another item of a clerk who put in 395 days, at $2 a day. I would like to know whether he is an extra clerk, and also how he managed to get in 395 days when there are only 365 days in a year?

An hon. MEMBER. That has been settled.

Mr. WILSON. Perhaps if hon. gentlemen would pay a little more attention to what is going on they would find that this is another item, and it is one of which I think we should have some explanation.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I can only repeat the explanation which I gave with reference to the other clerk; but I can tell the hon. gentleman that I will be glad to get all the information before concurrence, so as to be able to satisfy him that the amount paid was proper.

Mr. WILSON. That is all I want.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I find that only $7,000 was demanded for 1886 by the Secretary of State last year, and that the vote now asked is $10,000, an increase of nearly 50 per cent. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will inform us why the increase is demanded.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I may tell the hon. gentleman that I am asking a little less than my last appropriation, with the intention of reducing the expenditure. I may say that $13,000 was spent last year, and this year I ask for $10,000, believing that will cover the expenditure, and that it is better that we should have the amount really required rather than that we should exceed the vote. I stated the other day that we certainly will require $2,000 for the extra work rendered necessary in the Department by carrying out the provisions of the Franchise Act. $1,000 has been added on account of the increased work of the Department, and one can understand that the Department of the Secretary of State, which has to deal with every other Department, will have its business increased in a corresponding ratio, and the amount asked for contingencies is the amount which I think will be required, and will be sufficient for the coming year. It is based on an estimate I have made, with the assistance of the officers of my Department, and the other Department which controls our expenditure. To anticipate any remarks that might be made by my hon. friends, I might say that the expenditure might be reduced, and will be reduced. The subscriptions to newspapers might be reduced, and it is our intention to reduce them, as well as the amount expended for cab hire. It has been a pretty large expenditure for last year; but I hope the state of my health next year will enable me to take the healthier exercise of walking instead of driving.

Mr. DAVIES. I see that the hon. gentleman's expenditure last year for extra clerks was $14,000. He is now asking $10,000; although there is an increase of work, owing to the election law. The amount expended for cab hire was only $460, and for newspapers $851; so that if he cuts the newspaper expenditure down one-half, there will be still $3,000 or $4,000 to account for of his contemplated reduction. I would like to have some idea of the items he intends to reduce. Does he intend to do away with the extra clerks altogether, and if only partially, to what extent?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have been asking in the ordinary estimate for two or three extra clerks, and these I want to deduct from our estimates for contingencies. I have here a list of the extra clerks in the Department. In order to fill vacancies that have occurred during the year, some will be taken from the list of extra clerks, and put on the list of regular clerks.

Mr. WILSON. I see an item, advertising in Morgan's Annual Register. I would like to ask if it is the intention to continue advertising in this pamphlet?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I admit that fault might be found there, and it has been discontinued.

Mr. MULOCK. I wish to ask how it comes that there was so large an amount expended for extra clerks during the year 1885? I see that $4,000 was paid for extra services.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The theoretical organisation of the Department allows only a certain number of regular clerks, and the work of the Department has been such that extra clerks were required. I have tried to reduce the expense, however, and I am not known in the Department for my extravagance. Part of the expenditure for supernumerary clerks was due to the Scott Act. Mr. Harrison is now filling a vacancy among the regular clerks. Mr. Villemure and Mr. Labelle are also on the regular staff. Mr. Wurtele, Mr. Keays, and Mr. Steele are no more in the Department. Mr. Girard is dead. I cannot say more than that the services of these extra clerks were required, and as soon as they were not required they were dismissed; and we will try to reduce the expenditure this year by $3,000 in spite of the increasing work of the Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the hon. gentleman suppose will be the contingencies of this Department for the current year, 1885-86? The hon. gentleman asked $7,000, and I take it, from his explanations, that a very much larger sum will be required for the present year.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. For the year ending the 31st of December, 1885, the expenditure was $10,988, and I think that the estimate for the year ending the 30th June, 1886, will not be much more than $10,000.

Mr. WILSON. Perhaps the Minister in charge of the Department of the Interior will point out in what respect he intends to reduce the expenditure.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There was a vote of $20,000 taken for 1884-85; the actual amount expended was $17,960. Last year again a vote of $20,000 was taken, and down to the 31st of March last, nine months, the amount expended was $13,919. We assume that we shall get on with within $18,000 for the year, and therefore that is the amount of the vote for the next year, instead of $20,000, as during the past two years.

Mr. MULOCK. The sum of $1,027 was expended last year for petty cash. That seems a large sum to be put under that head, and I would like to ask if it is possible to get further information upon it?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I cannot give the explanation of it; but I will get the particular explanation for concurrence.

Mr. DAVIES. I see that the vicious system of expending money for cab hire, which is confined, in the other Departments, to the heads and the deputy heads, extends, in this Department, to fifteen or sixteen employees. Vicious as it is when confined to the heads of Departments, it is ten times as bad when it extends to all the subordinates.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I quite agree with the hon. gentleman, and every effort will be made to stop it.

Mr. DAVIES. How does the Finance Minister expect to save the difference between the actual expenditure and the estimates of contingencies of his Department?

Mr. McLELAN. It is estimated the expenses of telegraphing will be less and one or two of the extra clerks will be taken on the regular staff. After careful examination, we have put the item at $11,000.

Mr. DAVIES. You reduce contingencies and increase the ordinary expenses of the regular staff.

Mr. McLELAN: There is a decrease proposed in the regular staff as well as in this. Some changes have been made in the staff by which some of the extra clerks will be employed on it.

Mr. McMULLEN. How is it the telegraphing should cost over $3,500? When we have a Minister in London, I do not see how it is the charge should be so heavy. What does he do in London, if we require to do all this cabling?

Mr. McLELAN. Having a Minister in London is one reason for the expense. When called on to do business, it has to be done by cable. During last year we had to negotiate loans on the other side, which involved a great deal of cabling.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that in the contingencies of the Inland Revenue Department there is an apparent reduction of $2,000. Will the Minister explain how that is effected?

Mr. COSTIGAN. In 1884-85, $8,000 were voted for contingencies and $6,651 expended. In 1885-86, $9,000 were voted. For the nine months ending 31st March, contingency account amounted to $5,857, and, counting at the same rate for the remaining three months, the total would be $7,782 for 1885-86. On that ground I ask for a vote of $7,000, believing it will be sufficient.

Mr. DAVIES. I notice that in the travelling expenses, amounting to $763, there is an item of $100 charged against Mr. M. F. Walsh, the details of which the Auditor said have never yet been given.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I was under the impression the Auditor had received the information required, and will enquire into it.

Mr. DAVIES. Is the hon. gentleman going to adopt the plan that the Secretary of State said he would adopt, of discontinuing advertising in Morgan's Register?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. McCRANEY. I am glad the Minister of Inland Revenue has reduced his contingencies by $3,000. Has he reduced the number of extra clerks? It is said that last year some of his extra clerks were employed on a certain pamphlet issued by his deputy, Mr. Miall. Mr. Miall handed me a copy and said he was the author. $2,000 would go a long way towards preparing a large number of those pamphlets.

Mr. COSTIGAN. A question was put on the notice paper asking if Mr. Miall was authorised to issue pamphlets on the question of prohibition, and I replied he was not. I had no knowledge of extra clerks being employed on these pamphlets, and if Mr. Miall gave this information to the hon. gentleman he did not give it to me.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. McCraney) is in error in thinking the expenses have been decreased. The actual expenditure of the Department for the last year was $6,583, and the Minister asks now a larger amount. We have not even the promise of a decrease.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a curious little pamphlet. I would commend it to the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carling) who sits beside the hon. Minister, and to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Foster), behind him. Do they think the argument against the Scott Act is a good one? On the whole, I think it would be better for the officers of the Inland Revenue to confine their attention to their own business, instead of discussing in this way the propriety of voting for the Scott Act.

Mr. BLAKE. No doubt the deputy Minister was endeavoring to benefit the Department, since its revenues would be diminished by the operation of the Scott Act.

Mr. McCRANEY. I did not wish to state that the funds of the Government were used in the production of this pamphlet, but the Minister's deputy told me he was the author of it, and I understood that a number of the clerks had stated that they assisted to prepare it. I understand that tens of thousands of these pamphlets have been scattered around the country, and I have seen several in my own place. It is not probable, in my mind, that this was simply a generous act on the part of these parties. I do not wish to insinuate, however, that the Government paid for this pamphlet, but there ought to be some explanation about it.

Mr. DAVIES. I would call the attention of the Minister of Public Works, in connection with the amount of $8,000 for the contingencies of his Department, to the item which has been so much discussed, and in which the Minister of Customs is so much interested, cab hire. I observe that the system has crept into his Department also, and that a gentleman named "Sundry Persons" has been spending $152 on cab hire. I think that gentleman had better be checked. In another place, under the head of Privy Council, he appears to have spent $519. I think it is time that Master "Sundry Persons" was called to a stricter account.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I suppose that means the messengers and others who are sent on errands at a distance, going to the railway stations and carrying messages at a distance. Of course, there is a saving in sending them in a cab and not having them three or four hours away. In a large Department, you cannot avoid these things, and the hon. gentleman must see that the amount is very moderate.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would suggest to the Minister that he would save money if he were to buy half-a-dozen velocipedes.

Mr. DAVIES. I see a Mr. Roy has some travelling expenses charged here. I presume that was for the business of the Department, but the public are called upon to pay for his travelling bag. I find "F. E. Roy, travelling bag, $30." If all the public servants are to have these luxuries provided for them, it is as well that the public should know it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Mr. Roy is my private secretary, and had to go with me to the North-West last year, and of course I had to provide him with a bag.

Mr. DAVIES. Was that to carry the petitions?

Mr. McMULLEN. I see there is an amount of $584.27 for "goods." Will the hon. gentleman explain what the "goods" are?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That item is in every account before. I have no doubt the Auditor General has received all the information about this; it is in the ordinary accounts of the Department. You require certain things—linen for maps, or anything of that kind—and it is all charged to "goods."

Mr. DAVIES. I do not wish to be at all captious, but I think for a clerk in a Department, even if he be a private secretary, to buy his travelling bag and charge the public $30 for it, is an outrage. We might as well buy his clothes. It is perfectly preposterous that a clerk is to have this sort of thing provided for him out of the public treasury. I wonder where we will draw the line.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. When the secretary travels with the Minister, he has all the papers of the Minister to put in safety, and of course these cannot be put in paper and carried in the hand; they must be safe and in a proper bag. The bag or the satchel in which the papers are to be must be a good one. It is a proper expenditure.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was it burglar proof?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will enquire about that.

Mr. DAVIES. If that is a proper expenditure, of course every other clerk who goes with his Minister will do the same next year, if Parliament endorses it, and the leader of the House for the time being says it is perfectly proper. We shall have every other clerk going anywhere with a Minister buying a travelling bag at the public expense.

Mr. MULOCK. I suppose the Minister knows that the bag was bought for that purpose and was used for that purpose, and of course it is on hand now among the assets of the country.

Mr. WILSON. I think the reduction shown here by the Minister is not sufficient, taking into account the great number of public works which are being done away with or not being carried on so extensively as before. The $500 apparent reduction is not what we might have expected from the Minister if he is in accord with the other members of the Government whose intention is to reduce expenses. I see photographs and frames for pictures charged here. I suppose the Minister will perfectly justify that expenditure. No doubt, he has a right to have photographs taken and framed, and hung in the Department. It is an easy and convenient way of admitting all sorts of wrong-doings in the Department which ought not to be committed. Perhaps my friend will say these are photographs of public buildings. That may be; perhaps the public buildings in St. Thomas are among the number; but the principle is wrong, whether the amount be large or small, and I think we ought to cry a halt here.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The photographs I explained last year. I stated that, when a work is in progress, photographs are taken and sent to the Chief Engineer or the Chief Architect, in order that he may see what progress has been made. Sometimes there is a difficulty about the work, and a photograph is sent, and the Chief Engineer, instead of moving about and going to the place, can see, by the photograph and the explanations which are given, in what state the work is, and can give his decision.

Mr. WILSON. Does the hon. Minister put these photographs in frames?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Sometimes they are framed. If the hon. gentleman will come and see me I will show him the frames.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see that $1,074.40 were expended for travelling expenses in the Department of Public Works in 1884-85.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In this sum are comprised the expenses of my trip to the North-West with my private secretary—$300. I think the House will consider that a small sum.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I wish to draw attention to the item paid for books for the different Departments. I find that there is paid annually a large amount in this respect. I assume the books are technical works that are of advantage to the different Departments, but the amount that has been expended in each is so large that I cannot account for it except on the hypothesis that there is a library in every Department. Some of these books, I perceive, from the prices paid, cannot be technical ones.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A number of books are purchased for the Departments that are wanted for use. In other cases, as hon. gentlemen who were in office before us know, books may be purchased in certain Departments under pressure from canvassers. At one time there was an abuse going on, and an Order in Council was passed limiting to four the number of copies that could be taken in each Department, so that no subscriptions beyond that could be given. The hon. gentleman will see that instead of increasing, that item has diminished. In my Department only about $50 altogether were paid.

Mr. DAVIES. $335.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; that was for maps.

Mr. DAVIES. No; maps are put down separately. On page 47 maps are charged $49, and books of reference come to some $335 for the hon. gentleman's Department alone. In nearly all the Departments the expenditure for books of reference has been high.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. However that may be, these books were required in the Department.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Some of these books cannot be of a technical character, I know, because they are purchased from firms who do not publish technical works. I have no doubt that all the Departments are pressed to subscribe for works that are not of a technical character, but at the same time I am decidedly of the opinion that the Departments should purchase no works that are not strictly useful to them. I would like to ask the Minister if these books are detained in the Department for its use, or do they pass out of it surreptitiously, no one knowing what becomes of them eventually?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They must remain in the Department. These are books of reference of course. Sometimes one or more copies are taken of historical books, or books published in the country, and as hon. gentlemen opposite know, there is a good deal of pressure brought to bear to get subscriptions, but the Government have now limited the number of copies to four. I assure the hon. gentleman that we all would be very much pleased if no pressure was brought to bear upon us to take any books except those that are absolutely required. But this has been done from time immemorial, and we try to limit the number as much as possible.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will take the opportunity of enquiring of the Minister of Public Works on what principle he has of late, in the report of his Department, included a rather lengthy treatise on a purely scientific subject. It is published in his report, occupying, if I remember aright, nearly 100 pages, and from the nature of the case, it can only be of use to a very small number of persons. I also call the attention of whoever overlooks the preparation of these Sessional Papers, to the fact that it appears to me that other and much more important papers are excluded by reason of the large space assigned to these. The hon. gentleman will recollect that a very large part of his report is taken up with this somewhat abstract scientific treatise—I forget exactly what it is about, I did not take the trouble to read it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps I am in the same position as the hon. gentleman.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But then you are responsible and I am not.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This was a hobby, if I may so call it, of a scientific gentleman in my Department, and I consented to have it put in my report, but with the understanding that there should be no such scientific treatise or appendix in future, in the report of the Department. So the hon. gentleman may depend on this, that we shall not have any others of this kind.

Mr. DAVIES. With respect to the item $30,000 for Post Office, I observe an item of $517 for books of reference. This is the banner Department for newspapers, the amount being $1,000 for newspapers supplied.

Mr. MULOCK. There is a large amount taken for extra clerks, nearly $2,000. Is it necessary to have that number of extra clerks continuously? If so, they should be placed on the permament list.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. For obvious reasons, I cannot be expected to be as much au fait in this Department as in my own Department. The number of clerks has been increasing, and must necessarily increase, as the work of the Department is growing larger each year, and I suppose that when work has become pressing clerks have been taken on for a short time and then discharged. However, I will endeavor to have fuller explanations laid before the committee later on.

Mr. McLELAN. It has been the practice, for eight or ten years past, to keep a very large number of clerks in the Post Office Department, and the contingencies have always ran from $30,000 to $33,000 or $34,000. In 1877 there were two or three dozen extra clerks, and the contingencies amounted to $33,858; in 1878 the extra clerks were about the same number, and the contingencies were $30,700. So it has been the practice to keep a very large number of extra clerks in that Department, and a large sum has always been voted for contingencies.

Mr. MULOCK. That may be. There is a general impression that the Post Office Department is rather overmanned—that there are a great many extra clerks always there. It is stated, I believe, with some truth, that in some of the large cities the expenses of maintaining the post offices are assuming unnecessarily large proportions. It is not only said by the general public, but it is a fact that is admitted by postmasters in charge. It is true we cannot expect the Minister of Public Works to give the explanations, but there is a gentleman in the House who was Postmaster-General, and filled that office when these expenditures were incurred.

Mr. CARLING. I think the hon. gentleman is in error with respect to a large number of extra clerks being employed beyond what are actually required. From my experience as Postmaster General for three or four years, I am aware that very strong pressure has been brought by the postmasters in the different cities for additional help. The extra work has been very great for the last few years. Additional mails have been given: in many cases where there were two a week the accommodation has been increased to three times a week; from three times a week to a daily service; from daily to twice a day, and additional letter carriers have been appointed in Toronto, Montreal and all the larger cities of the Dominion. I can speak from personal knowledge that additional help was not given until heavy pressure was brought by the different postmasters. With respect to the business in the Post Office Department here, I can say that the number of clerks is not more than is actually required. The volume of business has increased very largely, especially in connection with opening up new postal routes in the North-West, new post offices, large increases in the Savings Bank Deposit Department, and from the fact that Post Office Savings Banks are being established in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, also in the North-West and British Columbia. I am quite sure there are no more extra clerks employed than are actually needed. Then I think it is sometimes more economical to have extra clerks than to place them on the permanent list. When there is a rush of business you can hire a clerk for $1 or $1.25 a day and retain him for one, two or three years and then dispense with him when necessary, whereas if you place him on the permanent list he receives a salary of $400 and an increase of $50 a year. From my personal knowledge of the Department I am able to say that there is no Department doing a considerable volume of business, which is worked so carefully and economically as is the Post Office Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be true, and the explanation given may explain a considerable amount of the increase. But when hon. members come to recollect that only ninety-two clerks were employed in 1879 and that 188 clerks, an increase of nearly 100, are added to the permanent staff for the year we are discussing, the hon. gentleman will see that the increase must have been enormous to require an increase from ninety-two to 188.

Mr. CARLING. So it has been.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And I hardly think that either the growth of the business or the growth of the country warrants the whole of that increase, though a considerable part of it may fairly be accounted for. Now, if I understand aright, the estimate submitted by the hon. gentleman's successor, there will be a deficit of nearly $1,000,000 between the expenditure and the receipts of the Post Office Department at present, and that seems to me to be a very undue deficit. I think, in a good many cases, it will be found that accommodation has been granted with very little regard to the increased cost to the country. An expenditure of nearly $2,900,000 is now incurred, and our total receipts will probably be about $1,850,000. That is too much, it appears to me. It may be true that the number of extra clerks was nearly as great in 1877-78 as now, but the hon. gentleman will observe that there is an increase of nearly 100 on the permanent staff at headquarters.

Mr. CARLING. I think the hon. gentleman will admit that the people at Edmonton and Prince Albert and Battleford and Fort Macleod are certainly entitled to mail accommodation. Some three or four years ago the people of those places had a mail once a month; later, once in three weeks; then once in two weeks, and now they are receiving their mails once a week at all those points. In fact almost every portion of the North-West Territories is now receiving a weekly mail where a few years ago it only received a mail once a month. Of course, that adds considerably to the expense of the Department, involving, as it does, the opening of many miles of new postal routes and new post offices in that portion of the country. In such cases you cannot consider simply whether the expenditure is going to pay for the time being, but if there is a settlement of fifteen, or twenty, or thirty families and they ask for mail accommodation and the settlement is likely to increase, I think that if the hon. gentleman himself were at the head of the Department he would be only too glad to give them that accommodation. As the hon. gentleman has referred to the large increase, I would point out to him that in 1885 the number of post offices throughout the Dominion was 4,518, while last year there were 7,114, or an addition of some 2,600 post offices, and when you consider the enormously increased mileage over which mails have to be carried, it will easily be seen that the expenses must increase to a considerable extent. I have already referred to the vast increase which has taken place in the Post Office Savings Bank business, not merely in the older Provinces, but in the newer Provinces of the west and in the eastern Provinces as well. I am satisfied that the more the expenditure of the Post Office Department is enquired into, the more will it be justified by members of both sides of the House. It is a Department which I believe has been very economically managed, considering the enormons stretch of country over which the mails have to be carried, and the vast amount of business that is done. I think that not only for the last two years, but for a great many years back, the business of that Department has been done in the most satisfactory way.

Mr. GILLMOR. I think in some cases the Department have carried their economy to an extreme. In one community in my own county I find that there is absolutely no post office accommodation at all. For a long time the mail matter has been left in the shire town of St. Andrews and not carried to the Island of Campo Bello at all, because no one could be found who would perform the duties of the office for the amount allowed by the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The hon gentleman had better confine himself to the item under discussion—the contingencies of the Department.

Mr. GILLMOR. I understood that the Minister referred to the general conduct of the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. He was replying to a remark on the other side, but I do not think we should enter into a general discussion on the subject.

Mr. GILLMOR. I was going to compliment the Department on their economy in this particular case, but I think they have carried their economy to an extreme, as there is a large community there who are not getting mail matter at all. The sum of $40 was all that was allowed for keeping the office. Some years ago it was given to the collector of Customs, but he would not do the work for that sum and nobody else will. I think in such a case they should be a little more considerate of the wants of the community, and increase the pay so that somebody can be found to keep the post office in that place. The communication there is such that a great many of the letters sent go from the community in boats to Eastport more conveniently, so that the letters sent are not numerous, but the letters received are very numerous.

Mr. DAVIES. I think the Postmaster General takes rather an optimistic view of the situation, as I do not think the Post Office Department is as efficient in some respects as it should be. There is one item here which I think requires explanation. We have already called attention to the fact, that in some items of contingencies it is the most extravagant Department of any in the Government, and that is saying a good deal. I would enquire why it is that while some of the Departments spend only $200 and $500 for newspapers, the Post Office Department, in 1884-85, when the hon. gentleman had charge of it, spent some $900, and for books of reference alone, $577. I notice also, that while the expenditure under the item of goods in the other Departments generally amounts to $20, $30 or $40, the expenditure of this Department was $439 in that year. It may be that the item can be explained satisfactorily, but so far no explanation has been given, and I think it requires explanation.

Mr. CARLING. I can hardly explain that particular item at the moment, but I may say that, as the hon. gentleman will understand, the Post Office Department is the largest Department in the service; I believe there is a larger number of clerks employed in it than in any other Department. What the items are I cannot explain, but I should be very glad indeed to give the explanation to the hon. gentleman on concurrence.

Mr. DAVIES. Very well; I shall be satisfied. I wish at the same time he would inform the House whether it is proposed to expend $1,000 this year again on newspapers.

Mr. CARLING. I cannot speak for that Department this year, because I am not in charge of it.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman can tell me whether his official experience enables him to say that it is absolutely essential in the public interest to expend $1,000 for subscriptions to newspapers in that Department.

Mr. CARLING. I do not think the expenditure is a loss to the country. The Department is a very large one, and I think the officers of and visitors to the Department should have an opportunity of reading the newspapers as well as the chiefs.

Mr. DAVIES. Plenty of time, eh?

Mr. CARLING. I do not know about plenty of time, but I do not think an expenditure of $800 or $900 for newspapers for a large Department like that is very great.

Mr. McCRANEY. It does seem to me that this is about the most gay and festive Department we have. For travelling expenses and cab hire it spent $1,966.05. I think we ought to have some explanation of this enormous expenditure. One of two things is true—either the salaries we pay these gentlemen are not large enough, or else they are too penurious to pay their own cab hire. They should either pay their own cab hire, or we should pay them more salary. There were great complaints made of the number of civil servants employed in these Departments under the régime of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie); but I find that the number has more than doubled since that time. It does seem to me it is time to call a halt. I see that for washing towels $180 was expended in the Post Office Department. For newspaper subscriptions $916 was expended. It does seem to me this would more than pay for all the newspapers published in the Dominion.

Mr. BOWELL. What was it in the year you referred to a moment ago?

Mr. McCRANEY. I did not look.

Mr. BOWELL. You will find that it was $921.14.

Mr. McCRANEY. All I have to say is that two wrongs do not make a right. I consider it an enormous sum, and it is certainly time such an expenditure should be put a stop to.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman seems to think the charge for washing towels is enormous. I do not think it is, considering that there are nearly 200 officials in that Department. The towels are paid for at the rate of half a dollar a dozen, and there are vouchers for every one washed.

Mr. McLELAN. The sum paid for subscriptions for newspapers in 1877-78 was $921.14, $16 less than was paid last year; and the expense of washing towels, I suppose, was covered by the item of contingent expenses, $869.40. Under the supervision of the Auditor General all the little items included in this charge, now appear in detail; so that hon. gentlemen will find, if they make the comparison, that the contingencies of this Department have not increased.

Mr. MULOCK. I am surprised at the defence the Minister of Finance offers. His Government promised to do better, and he is now citing the practice of the former Government as a justification for the present Government.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman forgets that we have twice as large a staff, and that we are managing with the same contingencies.

Mr. MULOCK. I ask the hon. Minister if he will assert from actual knowledge whether some of the items under the head of contingent expenses, have not been, under his régime, transferred to other accounts.

Mr. McLELAN. I think not.

Mr. BOWELL. I say no, so far as they affect my Department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The total expenditure for civil government and contingencies was about $823,000 half a dozen years ago, and it is now $1,222,000, so that I do not think we may fear a comparison, particularly when you remember that our superannuation account, which was grievously condemned, only amounted to $100,000, while the hon. gentlemen's is over $200,000. So that where we spent $900,000, the hon. gentlemen will spend $1,400,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see an item, "A. L. Jarvis, travelling expenses, $637.25." I am glad to notice the Postmaster General has been modest in regard to travelling expenses, but this sum should be accounted for.

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Jarvis is my private secretary, and he went with me on business in connection with the Post Office Department. I considered I was working in the interests of the country when I attended to all correspondence while absent, the same as when at the office. If the public business was attended efficiently, as it was, I do not think there should be any objection to the charge of the travelling expenses of Mr. Jarvis.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then there is W. D. LeSueur down for $90.60 for travelling expenses, and the Auditor General reports that the details are not given.

Mr. CARLING. Mr. LeSueur is an excellent officer, assistant secretary to the Department, and has often been sent to transact business at Montreal and Quebec and other places. I am quite sure he has returned every item of expenditure, and if not is quite willing to do so.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not challenge the efficiency of the officer, but I complain that a detailed account has not been furnished.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Referring to a little matter in which the honor of the Crown was pledged by letter to establish an office at a place called Corinth, I hope the promise given by the late Postmaster General will be carried out. There is another office required in the township of Egremont; they have none there south of Yeoville. I hope the Postmaster General will not delay establishing offices at those places.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice in the Auditor General's account, there is an item of $222.79 for calculating interest on savings bank accounts. W. J. Barrett, who has $1,700 salary, gets $43 for calculating the interest on these accounts; E. B. Bell, with a salary of $1,000, gets $38.29; another, with a salary of $1,400, gets $60. Those men are paid these salaries for doing their work, and calculating interest on savings bank accounts should be part of that work.

Mr. CARLING. These gentlemen are experts at calculating interest, and they make up the accounts of the savings banks, and also the statements for the fiscal year, and are obliged to work in many cases until one o'clock or two o'clock in the morning. They are therefore paid extra. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. McCraney) was in error in saying the travelling expenses and cab hire amounted to $1,900. That item is only $1,169. I wish also to refer to the statement the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) made the other evening. He called attention to the item of $70 for seventy hours work. I wish to explain this: The Secretary of the Department of Agriculture wrote to the Auditor General the following letter:—

"On page 137 of the report of your appropriation accounts for 1885, there occurs the following item, M. C. Wood, 70 hours, at $1 per hour. In the House of Commons on Wednesday last, the Minister of Agriculture was asked to furnish an explanation of this item, which request he has referred to the Department. It follows, of course, to say that the statement in your report, which I have quoted, is an error, and that no such payment of 70 hours work, at $1 per hour, has been made. It is plain that the word 'hours' has been substituted for days.

"As you will find by reference to the vouchers furnished by the Department.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
"Your obedient servant,
"JOHN LOWE,
"Sec. Dept of Agr."

This is the reply:

"OTTAWA, 16th April, 1886.

"SIR,—Replying to your letter of yesterday's date, I beg to state that the item 'M. C. Wood, 70 hours at $1 per hour,' should read 'M. C. Wood, 70 days at $1 per day.' The error occurred in the course of transcription.

"I am, Sir, etc.,
"J. L. McDOUGALL,
"Auditor General."

So hon. gentlemen will see that errors of this kind creep into the Auditor General's report. Probably others have crept in in the same way.

Mr. VAIL. I am very glad to hear the explanation, and I have no doubt my hon. friend is very much obliged to me for having given him the opportunity to make it.

Mr. CARLING. Certainly; I am very much obliged indeed.

Mr. VAIL. I was quite sure some such explanation would be made, but I thought it proper to call attention to it.

Mr. DAVIES. I want some little explanation of the sum of $952 for cleaning offices. It seems to be a very large sum of money and no such charge appears in any other Department.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman will understand that it is a pretty large Department, and it is necessary to have the models in the patent branch cleaned. A very large number of persons are coming and going. Visitors from all parts of the country come to see the models in the model room, and it is necessary to employ persons to keep all the different articles clean, and the glass cases in the room are washed, I believe, every day, so that the models can be seen. I think it can be shown that every item has been expended properly and could not be avoided.

Mr. DAVIES. I see that, in that Department, there was an expenditure of $18,236 in the last completed year, and now the Minister is asking for only $15,000. Where does he expect to make the saving?

Mr. CARLING. I believe there is a provision that any over-expenditure is charged to "Departments generally." With regard to the $18,000 for extra service, as I explained in regard to the Post Office Department, so in the Patent Office Branch, we have a large number of extra clerks, and it has been thought by my predecessors, of both parties, that it is more economical to hire clerks at $300, $350 or $400 a year than to put on permanent clerks at $400, increasing every year. That policy was adopted by my predecessor, and I believe by his predecessor, the Hon. Mr. Letellier. The Patent Branch has been increasing in work very rapidly, and the amount of receipts from that branch was nearly $70,000 last year. It may gradually fall off, and it may not be necessary to keep as many clerks as we have now, and under the present system their services can be dispensed with without any injury to them, because they are only employed by the month.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman misunderstands my enquiry. I find that over $18,000 was spent last year, and now only $15,000 is asked. I imagine that is not done in a haphazard way, or that $3,000 less is proposed without the Minister knowing where he is going to make the saving. The House must vote intelligently and sensibly, and it is doing neither now. The hon. gentleman ought to say where he expects to get the saving. It is no use to vote $15,000 in round figures in a haphazard way.

Mr. CARLING. I understand that we expect we can do with less this year than we did last year.

Mr. DAVIES. You are going to be more economical.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What amount will be required this year for books of reference in that Department?

Mr. CARLING. It is impossible for me to say at present.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Cannot those books of reference be found in the Library?

Mr. CARLING. A number of the works referred to are works on patents, which I believe are not in the Library.

Mr. DAVIES. What is the cause of the increase in the Marine Department?

Mr. FOSTER. That is a sensible estimate. The expenditure for 1884-85 was $7,944, and for 1885-86, to 1st April, there has been spent some $6,000. Arguing from the past, it is supposed that $8,000 will be required for this year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister says this is a sensible estimate. Does he mean that the $6,000 provided by his hon. predecessor was not a sensible estimate?

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all, but I understood my friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) to say that, if an increase or a decrease were proposed, it should be based on the actual expenditures for past years. This is based upon the actual expenditure for the past year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then his predecessor's estimate was not based on the expenditures of past years.

Mr. VAIL. There is an increase in the amount for fisheries.

Mr. FOSTER. The expenditure last year was $2,399, and the sum estimated for the next year is $3,000, which is a slight increase rendered necessary by the extra work of the Department. This year we have the fisheries protection, which will, no doubt, cause a great deal more work, and an added sum is put in for contingencies. It is a very moderate one.

Mr. DAVIES. How is it that you have in each of the Departments specially charged the item of "goods," sometimes a very large item and sometimes a moderately small one, and yet under the head of "Departments generally" you have $594 for that also. If each Department charges its special expenditure under its own head, how is it that you have another lump sum that you ask the House to vote generally?

Mr. McLELAN. The clerk of contingencies, Mr. Ross, who had charge of this, has not entered this amount to show what the $494 cover. I suppose they are goods purchased, and the invoices are audited by the Auditor General, and distributed among the Departments generally. But if the hon. gentleman desires further information, we can get it on concurrence. Perhaps it would be better to leave it to the Public Accounts Committee, where the vouchers can be examined.

Mr. BOWELL. You will find the whole of these items on page 85 of the Public Accounts.

Mr. DAVIES. What I am asking for is the amount for each Department separately?

Mr. BOWELL. I understand this covers the expenditure by the officer of contingencies, for his own branch of the service and for the Departments generally. For instance, the sum paid for charwomen, I presume, is for all the Departments.

Mr. DAVIES. Take the item of ice. Every Department has a sum voted for that—whatever the Minister asks for. Now you have it here as a general item. What Department is that for? And so with reference to the $594 for goods. What Department is that intended for?

Mr. BOWELL. The $88.70 for ice may be for the corridors over all the buildings.

Mr. DAVIES. We want the explanation at any rate on concurrence. There is $315 for wages to charwomen. Is that in connection with the buildings themselves?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. All the Departments.

Administration of Justice..... ....$48,770

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the cause of the great decrease in miscellaneous justice?

Mr. THOMPSON. The larger sum was provided last year in consequence of the additional expenses in connection with the administration of justice in the North-Territories, caused by the rebellion.

Mr. WELDON. There is $1,000 for travelling expenses of the stipendiary magistrates.

Mr. THOMPSON. An additional magistrate, Mr. Travis, was appointed after the estimates of last year were made up. This is for travelling expenses. His salary is provided for in another page.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no doubt that the intention of the Minister was called to the unfortunate altercations that have taken place with respect to that officer's conduct at Calgary. Now, I do not want to prejudice the conduct of any man, particularly of a man in such a position as that; but, perhaps, the hon. gentleman can make some statement as to what is being done. If we are to judge from the reports, the controversy between Mr. Travis and the people of Calgary has assumed very serious dimensions indeed, and I need not say that it is of very great importance to the interests of justice in that country that the officers appointed should not embroil themselves unnecessarily with the people of those distant stations. I am aware that Mr. Travis was not appointed by the hon. gentleman himself—I think by his predecessor; but so much has been said about it that I think it would be as well, if the Minister is in a position to make any explanations as to the position of Mr. Travis, that it should be done now.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is a fact that every step of the controversy has been brought to our knowledge. The litigants on both sides, Mr. Travis for his own vindication, and the persons who had grievances against him, have kept the Department thoroughly posted as to the progress of the conflict from time to time. It was impossible, however, for us to interfere, especially with a person in the position of Mr. Travis, until complaints were formulated. These were formulated two or three months ago by a petition numerously signed, and that petition was answered by another petition almost as numerously signed, and it was claimed representing in its signatories the more respectable and the more responsible part of the community in which he discharges his duties. However, intimation was conveyed to the petitioners against the judge, that an investigation might be ordered if their charges were made in a more specific manner; and two gentlemen who had complaints of their own to urge, and who represented some of the petitioners, attended at Ottawa and made the complaints in detail, and a person in a judicial position in Manitoba has been commissioned by the Government to investigate the charges made against Mr. Travis. The investigation cannot be commenced for a short time yet, but probably in the course of next month, or the following month at the latest, the investigation will be entered upon.

An hon. MEMBER. Who is the commissioner?

Mr. THOMPSON. Judge Taylor. I understand the selection was satisfactory to both parties; in fact, both parties desired the investigation to take place eventually.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand the Minister intimates that some delay will take place before this investigation can be entered upon or completed. I have received some communications from residents of Calgary, and they all assure me that the administration of justice there is at a standstill. In criminal matters the public decline to have persons brought before the judge to be tried and punished, on account of the unwise exercise of discretion which they say he makes, unduly punishing some and exercising undue clemency in other cases. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice how it came that a Mr. Cayley who, I understand, had been found guilty of contempt of court and sent to gaol for a period of time and also fined, was set at liberty a few days after he had entered upon the period of imprisonment?

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman does not possess accurate information, if his information is that justice is suspended there. Justice Travis had proceeded to a distant portion of his district, within the past few weeks, to hold a court, before the information reached him that an investigation was to be proceeded with. But provision has been made to have the duties discharged, pending the result of the investigation. Justice Richardson will take one district and Justice Rouleau the other. With respect to the case of Mr. Cayley, the relief came not within a few days, but after he had been imprisoned two or three weeks. The release was made by order of Justice Travis himself. I trust the hon. gentleman will excuse me from stating why the release was recommended, because civil proceedings are pending against Justice Travis for the exercise of his authority in that case, and it might to some extent prejudice his case if I entered into further explanations. But the act of release of Mr. Cayley was that of Justice Travis himself.

Mr. MULOCK. I will not press the hon. gentleman on that point. I stated at the time that the Government in sending up Judge Travis to the North-West had made a great mistake. I do not refer to his fitness or want of fitness, but for the Government to appoint to administer affairs in the North-West a gentleman from the Maritime Provinces who had never set foot in the North-West, who was wholly unacquainted with the people there, with their nature, their habits and mode of living, was a mistake, and though I will not refer to what was in my mind—I was going to refer to the personnel of the appointment—I will say that all the trouble resulting from this appointment is, in my judgement, clearly attributable to the Government of the day. It was an appointment that under no circumstance should be made. That is the opinion of almost every member of the House, because hon. members have more or less opportunity of judging as to whether he was suitable to the Province or not. He may come out of the investigation well, and he may technically escape condemnation; but if anyone reads the public press of that part of the country he must come to the conclusion that the administration of justice has been degraded, and that, practically, there is no respect for the bench in Calgary to-day.

Mr. WATSON. I desire to say, in endorsing the remarks of the last speaker, that the Government should exercise the greatest possible care in appointing men to administer justice in the North-West. The people are a peculiar people and they have to get accustomed to the laws. It is, no doubt, possible that Judge Travis may escape the sentence that the people would have passed on him, and the fault may not lie with the law he has administered, but with the way in which he has seen fit to administer it. It was pointed out last year that Judge Travis was not a suitable man to hold the position of a judge, that he was looked on by the people of the North-West as a crank, that he was known to the members here as a crank. He came down from the North-West and announced that he had been annoyed because the Government had not appointed him to the bench of Manitoba, and when interviewed by a reporter here, he said he had been up in Manitoba supervising the legislation of the House, as he was going to be appointed a judge there and wished the legislation to be perfect. The Government, knowing he had expressed such views, made a great mistake in appointing him to the bench in the North-West Territories. I hope in the future that the Government will not see proper to send men from the far east to the far west, men who know nothing about the people and are unacquainted with the country and the ways of the people. Due care would cause the laws to be better administered, and I hope in future more suitable men will be appointed.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I have no desire to prejudice the position of Judge Travis; but I desire to enter my most earnest protest against the idea conveyed that the people of the North-West are from their character such that special people have to be sent there, because they, the people of the North-West, are not familiar with the ordinary administration of justice in the older Provinces. I had an opportunity of seeing a good deal of the North-West and of meeting the people of Calgary, and I can only say this: in no part of the Dominion are more intelligent people to be met; they are people from the older Provinces accustomed to the administration of justice in those Provinces. And the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman that special care must be taken in the selection of judges, because they are a peculiar people not used to the method of administering justice in the older Provinces, is simply an insult to the people of the North-West.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of the Interior is very quick to endeavor to put a false construction upon the words that fall from members on this side of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. If I am out of order I withdraw that remark. The hon. gentleman has placed a construction on the remarks of an hon. gentleman that is not applicable. I say the Government of the day were, in my opinion, guilty of a mistake in judgment in selecting, as they did, Judge Travis, and they made a mistake for which they are not altogether pardonable. They have had experience before in this matter, and I assert there is no excuse whatever for the Government using the North-West as a preserve whereto to send those having political claims on them, and not in other respects qualified for the discharge of those duties. We have seen the Government of the day so act—I do not know whether the Minister of the Interior is given to it—but if the hon. gentleman is going to continue the policy of his predecessor and send Wilkinson and such men there, what wonder is it that the people become disaffected.

While we are to-day one Confederation, and in some sense one people, there is a public opinion that localities desire, as far as possible, to supply themselves with their own officers. Where the Government can make appointments to commend themselves to public opinion, so that the public are satisfied with the personnel of the appointment, there is greater harmony between the people and the Administration. The Minister of Interior says: Just come to the North-West and find out the class of people there. We did not require such information from the Minister of the Interior. They are our own brethren, almost the flower of the people, who have gone to the North-West, but having gone there they lead as in Calgary a somewhat different life from that here, and at all events the people have to be dealt with in a somewhat different way from the people of the older settled communities. There are collected the most active and energetic people of the Dominion, and from the accounts which I have heard from Calgary and vicinity, I again assert that the personnel with regard to the appointment of Mr. Travis was a grave mistake, apart altogether from the question of importing a man from the Maritime Provinces to go almost to the Pacific coast to govern the people. The people resented that one circumstance alone, and I hope the Minister of the Interior may not think that he is at liberty to play ducks and drakes with the people, because he is clothed with power, or imagine because he has the power of being able to transfer people from one section of the country to another, that he may experience too great pleasure in exercising that power, like the person of old who fiddled while Rome was burning. He may enjoy that experience of triumph in his temporary power but the country will not flourish while——

Mr. BOWELL. While he is dancing?

Mr. MULOCK. Yes, while he is dancing. I hope the Government will make such arrangements as will be welcomed by the people and will be acceptable to them.

Mr. WATSON. I thank the Minister of the Interior for having complimented the good sense and loyalty of the people of the North-West. I am glad that he for one has paid them that compliment. I believe that the class of people who are in the far west are probably as good a class as you will get anywhere; I know it, and I am glad that he knows it. I only wish that a number of his colleagues would visit that country and see for themselves the class of people that are to be found there. But we have hon. gentlemen on that side of the House claiming that some of those people, whom he is complimenting as law-abiding citizens, are rebels. We have heard them called rebels; but they will not give us the names; they say that the names are held secret by the Government, and yet we find these hon. gentlemen getting up and attempting to make this House believe that these men are not law-abiding people. I believe that they are a law-abiding people, and that they know too much to have the law administered to them by a crank. It is well known that Mr. Travis is a crank, that he has proved himself to be a crank, that he is not acceptable to the people, and the sooner he is removed from Calgary the better for the people there and the better for the people as a whole. I am of opinion that there are men in the North-West Territories who are well fitted to fill all the positions in that country, and yet the Government saw fit to dismiss a man who administered justice to the satisfaction of the people in that country. I refer to ex-Judge Ryan who was wiped out simply because he was a Grit and did not suit them.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). He was sent from the east.

Mr. WATSON. He was a good man, and he gave entire satisfaction, and I believe the Government have not shown reasons for dismissing him, or rather for re-arranging the districts so as to leave him out, and appointing one of their own particular friends. That kind of thing has been going on in the North-West; it has been made a dumping ground for political hacks and canvass-baggers from the east, and the quicker the Government stop that kind of thing the better for them, and the better for the people in the west.

Mr. GILLMOR. I feel it to be my duty as one who has been acquainted with Judge Travis for thirty years, to dissent from the character which my hon. friend has thought fit to give that gentleman. I do not know exactly what constitutes a crank, but I have known Judge Travis for a long time, and I believe him to be a man of ability and honor. There is another sentiment which I do not agree with, and that is that nobody from the east should receive these appointments in the west. A man goes there to administer the law as a lawyer, and in order to do that is it necessary that he should be born and brought up in the North-West? I dissent from that sentiment altogether, as I dissent from some of the opinions which have been expressed about Judge Travis. I have read the papers from Calgary, and I find that there are two sides to that question. The Minister of Justice will see that petitions as numerously and as respectably signed have come from one side of that question as from the other, and if there is a fair investigation, as I believe there will be, it will be found that he administered the law correctly. I suppose he got his appointment because he wanted it, and because the Government chose to give it to him. He has had some experience in the North-West; he had practiced his profession in Manitoba, and, professionally, I believe, he was quite as well qualified as many other men who have been appointed to similar positions in that country. As a lawyer, I believe he stands fully up to the average, and his career shows that such is his standing. You may choose to call him a crank, because he is of a nervous temperament, or because he has had the courage to deal with men of high positions on their knowledge of the law; but, so far as I know, Mr. Travis is a man who has taken a high place in his profession; he has taken hold of the most difficult cases successfully; he has had the courage of his convictions, and he is what I call a bold and honorable man. I know nothing against his character, and I believe he is able to take his part anywhere. It may be that he may have shown a little more zeal than was always discreet, but to say that you must not send a man there to administer the law who does not know the habits of the people, seems to me to be absurd. Who are those people there? Some of them are from Mr. Travis' own county. Some of them from the eastern Provinces, and some are from Ontario; and is it to be said that lawyers from Ontario know better how to administer the law of the land in the North-West Territories than lawyers from the eastern Provinces? How are they any better acquainted with the customs of the people than Judge Travis? How is a man from Toronto or from anywhere else in Ontario, who has not been in the North-West, any better fitted to administer the law than a man from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or any other part of the Dominion? I have had some correspondence from the North-West; I have read the papers, and I have seen the correspondence which has appeared in those papers, and I believe if Judge Travis gets a fair trial, as I believe he will, he will come out all right. He has characteristics about him which perhaps might be improved, but who has not? I think that the men who will go there and allow things to run riot, who will allow the people to be lawless and will not enforce the law, are not half as fit for their positions as those who will enforce it fearlessly and firmly, though judiciously.

Mr. IRVINE. This is the first time that I was aware that there was one way of interpreting Statutes and administering laws in the east and another way in the west. I always understood that the Statutes were interpreted by the judges according to their English interpretation. Allow me to say that I do not believe that there is a judge in the Dominion of Canada to-day who, if he set himself to enforce the law against the liquor traffic as Judge Travis did, but will be put down by a certain class as a crank and be visited with the same odium that has fallen on Judge Travis. If the liquor party are allowed to make such attacks on Judge Travis, then on their shoulders must rest the responsibility, and not on his. Let me say also that I hope he will have a fair trial, for if he is a crank now they have been a long time in discovering it, and he should have a fair trial and not be made a martyr of.

Mr. MILLS. I certainly would not agree to the doctrine that a party residing in Ontario has any better claim to be appointed to a position in the North-West Territories than a party residing in British Columbia or in Halifax. I do not understand that any hon. gentleman has put forward any such ground of objection to Judge Travis. No one has complained that he was appointed because he was a citizen of one of the eastern Provinces; the point was, that he was not a resident of the North-West Territories at the time he was appointed.

Mr. PAINT. He had been.

Mr. MILLS. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken. I believe he was a resident of Manitoba, but not of the North-West Territories. One observation made by the hon. Minister of the Interior was, that the people of the North-West Territories are a law-abiding people—that they are from Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, and in no way differ from the people of the other Provinces. I believe that is true; but the hon. gentleman, last Session, supported a measure to put those people on a different footing, for some reason or other, from the people of the other portions of the Dominion. He supported a measure proposing that they should not be allowed to carry or possess arms of a certain kind without a license from the Lieutenant Governor. I am not aware that there was any restriction of that sort placed on the people of the other Provinces. I do not wonder at all that the people of the North-West Territories exhibit a certain amount of sensibility with regard to the action of the Government towards them; and I think that sensibility is something the Government are bound to pay some regard to in their administration of affairs in those Territories, more especially as they are wholly unrepresented in this Parliament. The hon. Minister of the Interior observed that Mr. Mathew Ryan, who was at one time a stipendiary magistrate in the Territories, was a resident of one of the eastern Provinces. Well, he was a resident of the Province of Quebec, and I believe he was at the time he was appointed; but what was the condition of the Territories at that time? There was no population except Indians and half-breeds; but so far were the Government at that time anxious not to offend the sensibilities of the people that when the members of the North-West Council came to be appointed we appointed among them a half-breed. We took from the Territories, as far as possible, the material by which they were to be governed. We also provided in the law, which is on the Statute-book still, that as soon as there was a certain population there they should have the privileges of electing members of the Council, and that at a certain period they should supersede the appointed members altogether. Now, the point of the case is this: I objected to Mr. Travis being appointed a member of that Council last year when the subject was under discussion, not because I had any personal objection to him, or because I thought he was less competent than some others, but because I believed the material existed within the Territories, and that so long as it did the people there would feel towards any person appointed from without, no matter how competent he might be, just the same sensibility as would be felt by the people of New Brunswick if a lawyer from Ontario should be appointed on the bench of the former Province. It is not at all surprising that there should be exhibited by the people of the North-West Territories a certain amount of antagonism towards Mr. Travis, because he was an outside man. The Government themselves are responsible for the condition of things that has arisen. Mr. Travis may or may not be a competent man; I shall not undertake to judge his case; but it is not sufficient that a man should be a good lawyer or have fair ability; he must have a knowledge of human nature, as he is put among a people whose circumstances and conditions are wholly different from those of older populations, and they require more sagacity and more natural ability to govern them and to administer justice successfully among them than the people of older districts, where the restraints are of a wholly different character. The Government not merely appointed Mr. Travis stipendiary magistrate, but increased his difficulties by making him a member of the Council.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). He is not a member of the Council.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. He was made a member of the North-West Council ex officio as magistrate.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). All I can say is that Judge Travis complained to me bitterly in Calgary that he had not been made a member of the North-West Council.

Mr. MILLS. The Government last year proposed to appoint two additional nominative members for the Council, and Mr. Travis was one of the two who were to be appointed.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). He was not appointed, and did not sit in the Council last session.

Mr. THOMPSON. The enactment was not passed. Mr. Travis is not a member of the Council. The number of magistrates was increased, but the amendment, fixing the number of councillors, was not passed.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I may say further that so far from Mr. Travis' unpopularity arising from the fact that he had been from the east, when I was at Calgary he had been there for some time. I had the pleasure of driving around with a number of the citizens of Calgary, Judge Travis being among them, and being in the same carriage as the mayor of Calgary, who was afterwards fined by him, and he was exceedingly popular. It was after that that his unpopularity arose.

Mr. MULOCK. I suppose the people were a just people, and did not withdraw their confidence from him until they had occasion to do so. He was popular until they found him out.

Mr. HACKETT. And he was a just man until he gave judgment against the person who was popular.

Mr. THOMPSON. I hope that the House will not interfere with the case of Judge Travis, as it is in the hands of a commissioner from whom we can expect nothing but justice. From what I know of his case, there have been no complaints to justify the strong observations that have been made. The complaints have not been so much as regards incompetence or want of appreciation of justice, as want of discretion and prudence in the statements of his opinions on the bench. I make these explanations, because it may be assumed from what has been said that the complaints are of a very serious nature. As to what the hon. member for Marquette said, it certainly suggested that one great grievance with regard to the appointment was that Mr. Travis came from an eastern Province, but I do not suppose that was intended, though it fell so on the ears of most of us. As the Minister of the Interior has stated, the cause of the agitation against Judge Travis, in the first instance, was not at all because he was not a resident of the Territories. In point of fact, the ex-mayor of Calgary, who has been the principal complainant against the judge, is himself from the city of St. John, where Judge Travis came from. While it may be correct to urge on the House the propriety of making appointments in the North-West from the residents there, that position is not a strong one, as regards the selection of judges, because the gentlemen practising in the Territories have been until recently practising law simply on their status as barristers from the older Provinces; and unless we appoint gentlemen belonging to the bars of the Provinces, we could not have appointed professional men out there at all. In the selection of gentlemen to fill the position of judges, it would be undesirable to be confined to the members of the profession in the Territories themselves. Most of them are of the junior bar, and it is important that we should select gentlemen of matured experience. Until recently, there has been no bar of the Territories at all, and those who have practised there have practised simply on their standing as practitioners in the other Provinces, so residents would have no additional standing from the fact of residence.

Mr. WELDON. So far as the eastern Provinces are concerned, I see no reason why judges should not be selected from them, if qualified. With reference to Judge Travis, I have received a letter from the mayor of Calgary complaining bitterly of his conduct, but, under the circumstances, knowing the case was under investigation, I thought proper to allow the commissioners to investigate the case before expressing any opinion. Speaking of the appointment of judges, I find in the Auditor General's report that Mr. Hugh Richardson received $300 or $400 for coming to Ottawa under the Torrens Act. As judge in the North-West Territories he receives $1,000 a year with an additional $1,000 for travelling expenses, and then he is employed on this additional work which takes him away from his duties. In a discussion with regard to a recent trial, great objection was made that Mr. Richardson acted as judge, under the control of the Government, since he was employed by them to do work outside of his judicial duties. We find also a judge from British Columbia taken away from his judicial duties and put upon the Chinese Commission, and also that one of the county judges of Ontario has been engaged for several years in matters outside of his judicial district. It is wrong that judges should be taken away from their duties to do other work for which they are paid extra; it has the effect of making judges look forward to remuneration for services outside of their judicial functions.

Mr. WATSON. I had no intention of giving the House to understand that I thought no appointment should be made from the eastern Provinces. We have judges from the eastern Provinces who have given entire satisfaction, and I am glad to see people come to the North-West Territories from all the Provinces. With reference to some remarks of the hon. member for Charlotte in defending Mr. Travis, I have no objection to them at all, they are simply his individual opinions as opposed to mine. I do not think Mr. Travis is a suitable person, and the Government, in this particular case, dispensed with the services of men competent to give entire satisfaction, without any cause except that they differed from hon. gentlemen in their politics. Men who have rendered services to the Government in this House, should not be rewarded by getting appointments in the west which they are not fitted to fill in the east. Judge Travis was not appointed judge in Manitoba because he was not good enough, yet afterwards he was appointed to the Territories, although the Territories people have to come too far to make any appeal, and consequently require careful administration of justice. I do not wish the House to understand that I am opposed to people from the east coming to the Territories.

Mr. THOMPSON.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not know whether the Minister desires it to be understood that he still maintains that appointments to the judiciary in the North-West must be made from persons residing without the Territories. He says that they could not make an appointment from one of the local practitioners, because they had not constituted themselves a local bar. That does not appear to me to be a valid reason for a person properly qualified to practice law, but who happens, for the time being, to be residing in the Territories, being passed over. If a member of the profession, resident in one of the older Provinces, is eligible to be appointed stipendiary magistrate in the North-West, he does not cease to be eligible because he chooses to leave his native Province and go to the North-West. He carries his qualification with him. His eligibility does not depend upon where he is residing, but upon whether he was originally qualified to receive such an appointment. Now the Minister of Justice says that the Government, in making the appointment of Mr. Travis, followed the practice which has prevailed in the Lower Provinces, and did not choose from the junior bar in the Territories. To-day, and at the time Mr. Travis was appointed, there were members of the bar of Ontario resident there who were the seniors of men occupying places on the Ontario bench to-day, so that the Territories possessed at that time the necessary material from which to have made this appointment. I do not know what the Minister's future policy in this regard may be, but I have no hesitation in expressing it as my opinion that the good of the people would be better secured in all cases, where, if possible, appointments to local offices are made from the community in which those offices are to be administered.

Mr. THOMPSON. The principle with which my hon. friend concluded his remarks was one that I admitted at the outset of this discussion. My allusion to the local bar was in answer to one of my hon. friends on the other side who suggested that the case of Judge Travis' appointment was as bad as would be the appointment of a judge from Ontario for Nova Scotia, a thing my hon. friend knows is an impossibility, because the law of each Province regulates the appointment of the judges in such a way that they must be taken from the different bars themselves. That was the way in which I made the allusion to the local bar standing in an entirely different position from the bars of the different Provinces. Now my hon. friend asks me to state whether I am of opinion that we must go outside of the local bar to make these appointments. All I can say upon that subject is that I think still we ought not to be confined to the local bar. I agree that it is desirable to make the appointments from the local bar if the attainments present themselves and other qualifications exist, but I think that, for the present at least, we should not be confined to the local bar in making the appointments. As to what my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Weldon) said in reference to Mr. Richardson, I agree with him as to the principle he enunciates as to matters of patronage being conferred upon a judge. That was not exactly the case here, however. It was necessary, in matters connected with the transfer of the land in the North-West, to have for a time, in the Department of Justice, some one who was conversant with legal procedure there, and it was thought desirable to have Mr. Richardson sent for. He was paid nothing for his services, but simply his travelling and living expenses while absent from home. He was given no remuneration whatever, and his withdrawal was detrimental in no way to the discharge of the duties of his office.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The appointment of an assistant reporter of the Supreme Court and Exchequer Court at a salary of $1,000 appears to be an entirely new appointment.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is a new appointment. I suppose most of the members of the House connected with my profession know that complaints existed for a considerable time that the reporting was very much in arrear. Steps were taken early in November last to remove the cause of complaint by providing the services of an assistant reporter. There were at that time a great number of decisions unreported, and, as nearly all of us know, the business of the court was then and has since been growing constantly. Representations were made to my predecessor to the effect that to keep up with the current work would be impossible, and much more to overtake the arrears; and, in accordance with strong representations then made to him, both by members of the profession and by members of the judiciary, the services of a very efficient assistant reporter were procured. Up to this time, the expense has been defrayed from another source, and we propose now to estimate permanently for the assistant reporter. The increase in busines and the progress made in overtaking arrears has been such that it will be necessary, for some time to come, at all events, and probably permanently, to publish three volumes a year of the reports, and it is absolutely impossible to do this and keep up with the current work without the services of an assistant reporter. I have here a statement of the progress made since the 1st November in bringing up the arrears, which anyone who chooses may examine; and from which it will be seen that nearly all the arrears, or all that can be overtaken by the reporters—that is all in which the decisions have been given to the reporters—are either in the printer's hands or in such an advanced state of preparation that they will be almost immediately in the printer's hands, and I think the result will be to remove entirely the grievance of which complaint has been made of the reports of the court being in arrear.

Mr. DAVIES. If the appointment of this additional reporter will have the effect which the Minister of Justice anticipates, I do not think anyone will object to it, but I am not quite satisfied that it will have that effect. The grievance of which he speaks was felt all over the Dominion of Canada. The reports of the Supreme Court were very much behind, and everyone complained of the delay. I made it the subject of enquiry a year or two ago, and I found that it was not because the reporter was unable to discharge his duties as reporter. I understood it was from different reasons, and I understood those reasons to be that the work of the Supreme Court had very largely increased and the judges of the court thought they were entitled to have a clerk who would copy their judgments and give them to the reporter. If the additional reporter is supposed to do that work, I daresay his appointment will be found to be very beneficial; but, if he is merely to do the work the present reporter does, or to assist in that, I do not think the publication of the Supreme Court reports will be very much facilitated. I think every hon. gentleman knows that the reporting of the Supreme Court is meagre in one respect. The arguments of counsel are not reported at any length, and in many cases are not reported at all. I am not submitting this so much as a matter of complaint, although as a lawyer I think it is very desirable in many cases that the arguments as well as the judgments should be reported, but in many cases now we find the names of counsel given and then the judgments of the different judges, not taken in shorthand, but as written out and revised by the judges themselves. I understood the difficulty was that the judges thought they were entitled, and I myself agree with them, to the copy of the judgments they had from time to time prepared. If this additional reporter is to do that work I fancy the difficulty will be overcome. If he is not to do that work, but is simply to assist in the work which is now done by the present reporter, I do not think the difficulty will be overcome.

Mr. WELDON. It is very important to have judgments published as soon as possible, and if this appointment will facilitate that, it will be a boon to the public. I would remind the Minister that in the published reports there are a number of cases of past years that have not been included, some of which are very important? I know in one instance a very important judgment was given relating to the powers of the city which I have the honor to represent, but it has never been reported, and we have had some difficulty in knowing exactly what the decision of the court was. My hon. friend from the city of St. John has a notice on the paper to bring up this question and try to get the judgments printed, as well those of past years as more recent ones.

Mr. THOMPSON. The cause of the reports getting into arrears was to some extent that, as suggested by the hon. member from Prince Edward Island, the judges needed assistance, and when their reporter acted as their secretary the reports went into arrears. The reporter could not have prevented the arrears from accumulating. The assistance he now has will enable him, to some extent, to be independent of the written judgments of the judges, and he will be expected to report the decisions that are given from time to time, and to bring the reports up as rapidly as possible; and if the judgments are not furnished to him, owing to the occupations of the judges, he will be expected to report them from his notes. With regard to the earlier decisions which, as the hon. member says, were not reported at all, I can state that the fault will, to some extent, be remedied shortly. Mr. Cassels, the registrar of the court, intends publishing a digest of the reports, and that digest will include, not only the cases that have been reported, but likewise, I think, speaking from memory, about 200 cases which have not been reported at all; and I have his promise, as well as that of the reporter, that after the report is furnished by notes in that digest, an effort will be made to get them published in extenso as much as possible, and as soon as possible.

Mr. DAVIES. I hope the Minister will see, when this is being carried out that, as far as possible, all the reports upon points of practice will be published also. Numerous very important points have been determined by the court from time to time, and we never hear of them at all. I may ask the Minister if $2,000 covers the entire cost of printing, binding and distributing the Supreme Court reports?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. How is it, then, that the profession have to pay $4 a volume for the reports? Does that become part of the revenue?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. MILLS. Where is that accounted for?

Mr. THOMPSON. I cannot tell what page, but it is in the Auditor General's report. It is in the consolidated fund.

Kingston Penitentiary..... .....$107,935 38

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the increases?

Mr. THOMPSON. The principal increases are: chief keeper, $50; hospital overseer, $50, and $3,000 for guards. The increases are considerable, it is true. The recommendation is under these circumstances: in the time of the late warden, Mr. Creighton, who was not only a very efficient officer, as I believe the present warden is, but an unusually active warden, an attempt was made, especially in the latter part of his term, to conduct the affairs of the prison with a much smaller staff than, in the opinion of everybody connected with the management of penitentiaries, he had a right to expect. His activity was such that he discharged the duties of several officers himself. On his decease a reconstruction of the staff took place, and it was suggested not only by his successor, but also, I believe, by the inspector, that the staff should be increased in order to bring it up to a state of thorough efficiency by the increase recommended here. At the request of my predecessor the warden was induced to make the attempt for another year to get along with the present staff, and the result of the experiment has not been entirely satisfactory. It has been felt that the staff was not sufficiently large for the prison. But we have this disadvantage to face in the ensuing year, namely, that the contract with the lock company, which furnished employment for about 90 of the male prisoners, is about to be terminated, and it will be necessary to find other employment for those convicts. Hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House know the difficulty there is in finding labor for convicts which will not come into competition with free larbor, and in this instance it is considered that work can be furnished in the prison grounds. Considerable improvements are expected to be carried on next year, on the prison buildings and surroundings, and most of the prisoners discharged from lock making will have to be employed out of doors. It is quite apparent that an additional number of guards will be required, because the staff of guards must be much larger if convicts are employed out of doors. Considering the whole matter, although I was reluctant to ask for so large an increase in one year, I felt compelled by the statements made by my officers to ask the House to sanction the increased staff, a chief keeper and six additional guards. I may state, however, as one circumstance which will be satisfactory to the committee, that, notwithstanding this large increase, the per capita cost of the staff will be less at Kingston than in any other of the penitentiaries. The per capita cost of the staff of the several penitentiaries is as follows:—Kingston, $84.57; St. Vincent de Paul, $141.73; Dorchester, $171.03; Manitoba, $107.05; British Columbia, $147.14. The number of inmates at Kingston on 31st December, 1885, was 567; the proportion of officers would give seven prisoners to each officer; while at St. Vincent de Paul the proportion would be $4\frac{59}{100}$; Dorchester, $3\frac{72}{100}$; Manitoba, $6\frac{95}{100}$; British Columbia, $4\frac{2}{4}$. So that in view of the strong statements of the officials, endorsed by the experience of the past year in endeavoring to get along with a small staff, and the very obvious necessity of an increased staff arising from the change in the occupation of the prisoners, and the fact that the per capita cost will be still so small—all these facts combined made me agree to the recommendation, and I ask the House to sanction the proposed increase.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How does the hon. gentleman propose to employ the prisoners when the lock company's contract terminates.

Mr. THOMPSON. There are some buildings going on this year on which it is intended to employ the prisoners.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Independent of that, what does the hon. gentleman propose to do with them. We have had a great deal of trouble about this matter in past times, and when we discussed the question last year it was then suggested, and partially acquiesced in, that an effort should be made to do as much as possible of the Government work proper. I am not aware that anything has been done in the way of carrying out that understanding. If the Minister has been able to consider that question I should be glad to know at what decision he has arrived in regard to it. Throughout the Dominion there is room for employing a very considerable number of convicts in this way, and whatever may be said about entering into competition with the labor of the general market there can be no objection, I think, to the employment of convicts on Government works in the proper sense of the term.

Mr. THOMPSON. The difficulty of avoiding competition with outside labor is one that has to be faced continually, and changes are made from time to time. Some works have been undertaken in addition to those I have mentioned. One of those which has been suggested as suitable employment for some of the laborers was in connection with smelting iron. With respect to labor up to 7th April, the statistics were these: There were in the penitentiary, males, 533; females, forty-one. The lock contract employs eighty-seven men. The tailor's and shoe shops employ seventy, they making and repairing clothing for the establishment. At that time they were engaged in filling an order for the Indian Department in the North-West. Coopers, paint and tin shops employ twenty-eight men. They were engaged in work required by the institution itself. The blacksmith and machine shops employ twenty-two men. That was for work in connection with the establishment itself. In stone-cutting, thirty-nine men were employed in dressing stone for prison use, and the improvements which are being made at present will increase that number considerably. There are fifteen men employed as masons, and it was intended that as soon as the weather permitted that number would be largely increased in the extension of the building, and pointing the walls. Eleven men are employed on the outside at carpentering and jobing work, and attending to other works and repairs. Fifteen men are engaged in the general jobbing gang; seven men in the wash-house, and twenty-four men in the drying and mending room. In the dining hall and kitchen eighteen men are employed; in the wing-gang seventeen men; in the bakery six men; in the quarry twenty-nine men; in the farm and garden twenty-six men; engineering work and mill fourteen men; and then besides there are, of course, various workmen around the grounds engaged on the wharf frontage, excavation, stable, &c. In the hospital and insane wards there are thirty-eight men, thirty-three of whom are insane. In the female prison there are forty-one women, some of whom are feeble or aged, and scarcely able to work. The women are generally employed in sewing, knitting, and domestic work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice that the farm receipts are put down at only $4; a larger amount must be realised than that.

Mr. THOMPSON. That refers merely to the sales; the rest is consumed in the institution.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Roughly speaking, how much is produced?

Mr. THOMPSON. About $5,400 worth.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the meaning of this item of capital account, $775?

Mr. THOMPSON. That is put in to cover articles which are not ordinarily chargeable to working expenses.

Mr. DAVIES. I should suppose that the working expenses would be decreased if the hon gentleman proposes to close the lock factory.

Mr. THOMPSON. That depends on the population, and we estimate for an increase.

Mr. WILSON. I see that last year a vote was taken for four teamsters while only three were employed. This year the estimate is for four; will that number be employed?

Mr. THOMPSON. As I stated already, a number of men who have hitherto been employed indoors are to be employed on the grounds, quarrying, &c., and the four teamsters will probably be required.

Mr. DAVIES. I see that the working expenses are $17,166, while those for 1884-86 were $15,300—or an increase of $2,000. I do not see how that increase comes.

Mr. THOMPSON. The maintenance of the building will be increased by $220.24; maintenance of machinery, caused by the fact that an additional amount of machinery is being put in, for instance, in the gas works, $383.60; kitchen, $32.95, making a total of $636.89, the principal part is in connection with new machinery.

Dorchester Penitentiary $46,993 50

Mr. THOMPSON. For this penitentiary we ask a vote for a baker. The bread hitherto has not been baked in the institution, and it is considered economical and desirable in every way that it should be. We ask also a vote for the salary of a tailor instructor. These are the only increases in salaries. There is an increase of $1,161 for officers' uniforms, which arises from the fact that at certain periods the officers have to be re-uniformed, and this is the period when it is expected this will be required. As a general rule it is required once in two years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The receipts in the Kingston penitentiary amount to $10,000. Here they amount to only $570. The number of convicts, of course, is smaller in Dorchester, but still the discrepancy between the two is very great.

Mr. THOMPSON. The difference, I think, arises principally from the lock contract at Kingston, supplying labor to a considerable number of men, which, of course, we have not at Dorchester.

Mr. DAVIES. I see there is a large increase in the working expenses proposed for the coming year. $4,850 is proposed while the actual expenditure was $3,350. Working expenses consist of such items as coal, light, oil, stationery, &c. There must be some special cause for this great increase.

Mr. THOMPSON. The amount is just the same as was estimated last year, and it is based on the expenditure for the proportion of the year that has expired. I am not able to state exactly what those figures are; but we also estimate for a larger number of convicts.

Mr. DAVIES. These items would not necessarily be increased by an additional number of convicts.

Mr. THOMPSON. There will also be some increase caused by the fact that we are fitting up two new establishments, the bakery and the tailoring department.

Mr. DAVIES. Of course I understand that the amount voted need not necessarily be expended. But we ought to be careful not to vote a sum largely disproportionate to what is required for the service.

Mr. THOMPSON. In the $4,800 is included $2,000 for heating. The heating apparatus was found to be entirely insufficient, and another boiler was added. There is also $450 for light, $200 for repairs, $250 for maintenance of machinery, $250 for the armory, $300 for the farms, $250 for stationery, &c.

Manitoba Penitentiary $52,654 64

Mr. THOMPSON. There are twenty-five more convicts estimated for. A master tailor is required, and two guards at $600 each, in consequence of the large increase of prisoners and the unprotected state of the penitentiary through the want of a wall.

Mr. DAVIES. The officers receiving gratuities are increased $250.

Mr. THOMPSON. This is for no particular officer, but is to make allowance for gratuities to officers who may be retired during the year.

Mr. DAVIES. The expenses last year were $12,378; now they are $14,709. This seems an extravagant increase.

Mr. THOMPSON. The prison has been in a peculiar position as it has no walls, and a large increase has taken place in the number of prisoners. The prison has consequently to be enlarged.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Is the warden of the penitentiary the same individual who had charge of the transport in the North-West?

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Bedson is the warden.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). Was he allowed any salary while in charge of the transport service?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No doubt he was allowed his pay like all other officers. Several officers joined the force in Ottawa and received their pay as members of the force, and I believe also their salaries as members of the Civil Service.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). It is a decided injustice to the active volunteer force that anyone should be taken out of a position like Mr. Bedson, and given a position on the staff over many experienced officers. Posts of this kind should not be given to civilians, but to men who take an active interest in the volunteer service. Is Mr. Secretan employed in the penitentiary of Manitoba.

Mr. THOMPSON. No, I think not.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). It is quite apparent that the management of this penitentiary is not of that economical character which would justify the employment of Mr. Bedson. Looking at the details, I find the cost per convict in the Kingston Penitentiary is 53 cents, while in Manitoba it is $1.31, or two and a-half times that of Kingston. Local differences might justify to some extent this large expenditure, but we find that in British Columbia Penitentiary, where one would expect the expenditure to be at least on a par with that of Manitoba, it is much smaller.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not see what our camps of instruction have to do with the transport which had to be organised in the North-West during the troubles. Mr. Bedson rendered most invaluable services. He was appointed transport officer by the Major General in command. His great knowledge of the country, and his great knowledge of the resources of the country, were brought into play, and contributed possibly more than anything else to the success of the transport service, which was organised at a moment when it was very difficult indeed to find, outside of that country, any man who could have possessed the intimate knowledge which he possessed of the country and its resources. He was employed and paid as a member of the force, and I take this opportunity of saying that the services rendered by Mr. Bedson were considered by the Major General and the other officers in command as being most valuable. The hon. gentleman seems to consider it was overlooking other members of the force in not appointing them to that position which was held by Mr. Bedson. It is quite a different thing from giving a military command or anything in that way to a man who is not a member of the force. It was considered indispensable to have in that country men suitable—and other men were appointed who belonged to the North-West—for that purpose of making use of all the available resources of the country; and none but those who lived there could have possessed that knowledge.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). The question I raised was primarily the propriety of engaging a man whose whole time was being paid for by the public in one particular service, to perform the duties of another and a different one for which he was also paid. There will be another opportunity upon which the other question may be more deliberately debated, and we may take issue on that. My own view is that, wherever an opportunity offers, the active militia should have all the positions which they can fill, because their experience so gained will add to their knowledge and will be valuable in the future. But here we find a man whose entire service has been paid for by the public, according to the last year's Public Accounts, drawing also possibly a material sum—I am not prepared at the moment to say how much, but I was given to understand it was in the neighborhood of $10 a day—in another service altogether. If we had his services as warden, he was not entitled to get anything extra for the other service, because, according to the Minister of Militia, it was impossible to perform both at the same time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Under the head of miscellaneous, I see the Minister demands nearly a double sum, as he raises it from $1,065 to $2,000. Now, looking at the various items under the head of miscellaneous, I find there are some things which seem to deserve explanation, for instance, I see, livery and feed, C. W. Graham, $490; surgeon's livery, 21 trips, at $6, $126. How come such large items as these, amounting to over $600, for livery and feed, to appear under the head of miscellaneous?

Mr. THOMPSON. I am not able to state at the moment the explanation of the item to which the hon. gentleman refers, because I did not anticipate that we would be called upon for an explanation of the expenditure for the year before last, but I shall be glad to get the information for him. All I can say at present is that a service of that kind is more expensive there and more necessary from the fact that the prison is eighteen miles from Winnipeg; and that likewise accounts for the large cost of maintenance which the member for Middlesex referred to, in addition to other reasons having reference to the price of food.

Mr. WILSON. There is another item which requires explanation. Looking at the hospital department, I find there were 100 convicts in this penitentiary last year, and there were the following items charged:—Drugs, $1,071; doctor's fees, $35; provisions, $99; provisions for lunatics, $100; port wine, 8½ gallons, $45; brandy, 6¾ gallons, $39; whiskey, 4½ gallons, $12; and express, $7; in all amounting to $1,402 for the maintenance or doctoring of 100 prisoners. If we turn to the Dorchester Penitentiary, we find under the same heading, hospital, drugs, $326; instruments, $2; provisions, $10; brandy, 1 bottle, $1.25; whiskey, 5 bottles, $5; amounting in all to $346; with a larger number of inmates than the Manitoba hospital. I cannot understand why it should be so expensive in Manitoba as compared with Dorchester. In Kingston also we find a reduction. I should like the Minister to explain to me why the drugs are so expensive, and why so much liquor is required in this penitentiary and not in the others.

Mr. THOMPSON. The proportion of persons in ill-health is much greater in Manitoba than in the other penitentiaries, for the reason that, in the Manitoba penitentiary, we have to take care of the insane of that Province and of the North-West Territories.

Mr. MILLS. A good deal of that medicine is taken for the warden.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think so.

Mr. MILLS. I do.

Mr WILSON. The best physicians now use very little medicine in the treatment of the insane, and I think they do not use spirits or wine at all. At the insane asylum in Toronto they use comparatively little, if any, drugs, and, with three times the number of insane people in the asylums in Ontario, there is not the fourth part of the amount charged for drugs or for liquors in their maintenance, so I think the explanation of the Minister is hardly a satisfactory one in regard to the large expenditure in the Manitoba Penitentiary for drugs and liquors. Perhaps, as was suggested here, several of the officials of the institution may take the drugs in the shape of ale, wine or beer, or something of that kind. I would recommend the Minister to enquire and see whether the sick people get the drugs or those who are well.

Mr. THOMPSON. There can be no continuance of any abuse, because the care of these unfortunate people has been removed from us altogether within the last year.

Mr. DAVIES. The discrepancy is so extraordinary that it really requires some investigation. We find that in Manitoba the drugs alone cost $14 a head, while at St. Vincent de Paul they cost $2 a head, in Kingston $2.50, and in Dorchester $2.20. It is absurd to say that in Manitoba we can expend $14 a head for drugs; the thing is outrageous. The patients could never have been given that amount of medicine.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think the hon. gentleman should ask me to give an explanation now, when I am not asking any estimate for that. But apart from that, it is a mistake to calculate the per capita allowance of the sum charged for drugs. It is necessary occasionally to lay in a stock. I take it for granted the stock charged for in that year was not entirely consumed. Besides that, the fact is that it was necessary during that year to furnish the surgery with instruments, and the cost of these, I understand, is included in the item the hon. gentleman mentioned.

Mr. DAVIES. The charge is for drugs $1,071. The hon. gentleman is also asking for an estimate.

Mr. THOMPSON. I say in connection with this.

Mr. DAVIES. Yes, in connection with this very one. I am confining myself to the Manitoba Penitentiary. In 1884-85 the expenditure for the maintenance of the convicts amounted to $15,877, and of that sum $1,402 was for this item of drugs, which my hon. friend complains of. Now, instead of decreasing the expenditure in the matter of working expenses, the hon. gentleman has increased it from $13,402 to $14,709. Therefore he ought to be satisfied that that explanation is a reasonable and bonâ fide one. I must say that, comparing it with the expenditure of some other penitentiaries, it seems to be an outrage.

Mr. THOMPSON. In stating I was not asking for an estimate, I meant for the insane patients who have now been removed from our care. Of course, the supply of drugs that is asked for must be for hospital purposes. I will make enquiry about the item he refers to, and I think he will be satisfied, after having the explanation that it is not an outrage at all. Besides, we are not asking to have that estimate made the basis of annual expenditure.

Mr. DAVIES. I used the word "outrage," after comparing that particular item with the expenditure for the same articles in other hospitals. The hon. gentleman will justify me in using strong language, when he finds that $14 per head is paid in Manitoba for drugs, to $2.50 and $2.20 in the other penitentiaries. How many patients have been removed from the Manitoba Penitentiary?

Mr. THOMPSON. Twenty-five insane were removed. Notwithstanding that, we anticipate an increase to 125 inmates. These estimates are not made at random, as to the number of convicts expected. The warden generally makes them up at the beginning of the year, from information as to the number of prisoners held for trial.

Mr. WILSON. The explanation is not satisfactory. The item says for drugs alone, not instruments. In 1884-85, we find the expenditure for drugs alone was $1,071; for provisions, $199, and it only cost $100 to furnish the lunatics with all the food they required during the time they were in the hospital. At the same time, they drank $45 worth of port, $39.50 worth of brandy and $12 worth of whiskey, while the food, all told, only cost $199. In view of these facts, we may justly call on the Minister to examine into the matter and ascertain why we have presented to us a bill of that kind for the maintenance of the hospital at Winnipeg.

Mr. THOMPSON. On what page does the hon. gentleman find that item of $100 for food?

Mr. WILSON. On page 77.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is special food. That does not include all the food.

Mr. WATSON. From this report it might be supposed that the convicts in the Manitoba Penitentiary were more liable to sickness and disease than those in other penitentiaries. I think that is not the case. The medical officer of the penitentiary at Stoney Mountain, reports:

"I have nothing special to report concerning the sanitary condition of the prison. The watchful care in the prevention of disease has been well repaid by the fact that we have had no epidemic disease during the year, and that the admissions to hospital have been below the average."

While that is the case, the bill for drugs has increased. Now, I might inform some of the hon. gentlemen who are not probably aware of the fact, that in Manitoba we have public officers, and we have also public men coming to that country who have to be entertained. Our Lieutenant Governor in that Province is a strictly temperance man, and it may be necessary for gentlemen visiting that Province to go to Stoney Mountain to be entertained.

Mr. BOWELL. Does he entertain them on drugs?

Mr. WATSON. That may account for so great an expenditure for liquors. There is an item of $1,144 paid to one Whitehead, at Winnipeg, for drugs alone in one year.

Mr. THOMPSON. I considered that the hon. member, in making the statement, would have more respect for the House and for the members sitting on his side of the House, than to have made it in earnest. I have no experience in connection with Stoney Mountain Penitentiary; but I have to say this, that no officer can possibly remain in the employment of the Government if guilty of any such abuse as the hon. gentleman has supposed.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I have called attention to the difference in the cost of maintenance between Manitoba and the other penitentiaries, and some correspondence between the Auditor General and the Deputy Minister of Justice gives an insight into the causes of the difference. At page 80 of the Auditor General's report there is a letter dated 2nd March, 1885, in which attention is called to the matter and the following differences are shown:—

Article.	Contract Price.	Price paid.
50 lbs. pepper	$ 0 30	$ 0 35
41½ gallons syrup	0 90	1 00
20 lbs. coffee	0 40	0 45
12 lbs. lard	0 15	0 20
40 do	0 15	0 17
15 lbs. coffee	0 40	0 45
271 lbs. sugar	0 08½	0 09¾
21 lbs. tea	0 40	0 55
16¾ lbs. bacon	0 15	0 20
20 lbs. tea	0 40	0 60
22 do	0 40	0 60

This I think will account for more of the difference than has been explained by the Minister of Justice. There are other items showing there have been extravagant charges, and hon. members who have drawn attention to these matters are fully justified.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not wish to be understood to charge that the action of hon. members was not quite proper and right in drawing attention to this matter. On the contrary, I said that the per capita charge was much in excess of that of other penitentiaries, and I said I could give no other reasons except the local reasons of high prices and distance from market. But the hon. gentleman will see that in coming to my assistance for the purpose of affording an explanation as to why the cost has been so much, he has not done me much service after all, for the whole difference he has pointed out is only $25.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I am prepared to admit that that is all that is shown by this particular statement. But the same discrepancy may arise in regard to other items more under the control of the warden of the penitentiary.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Auditor General would have called our attention to other items if excessive payments had been made. There are no payments made by Mr. Bedson or his officers which do not pass under the scrutiny of the Auditor General. No account whatever has been passed for liquors except for hospital purposes, and that was paid on the responsibility of the surgeon. If the imputation suggested was at all justified, it would simply show that he had failed in his duty and had deceived us in the matter. But I have no reason to suppose that such is the case. The report to which an hon. gentleman briefly alluded called attention to the necessity of surgical instruments being supplied, and the accounts for some of those might explain to some extent the increase in the item.

Mr. DAVIES. It is much to be regretted if the remarks of the Minister of Justice are to be taken as in any way justifying the offence of an officer who is responsible for charges. I hope the Minister did not desire his remarks to be so understood. It is true the sum is only $25, but it is a most serious matter, for the officer is charged by the Auditor General with charging in some cases 50 per cent. higher prices than the contract permitted.

Mr. THOMPSON. Not with having charged them, but with having paid them.

Mr. DAVIES. Then they are charged. When such an over-charge is discovered and exposed, the inference is that there are other items charged in excess, which are not so readily available to the Auditor General.

Mr. THOMPSON. There is not a dollar expended which the Auditor General cannot compare with such charges in other parts of the Dominion. I did not say that the warden was justified in paying excessive prices, but that this amount did not account for the large per capita sum for the maintenance of the penitentiary in Manitoba. I am not able to state what excuse the warden gave for the excess in these items, which amount to $25.56.

Mr. MULOCK. Why did the warden purchase outside of the contract? Is it customary to allow officers in the Department to make contracts and agreements with outside parties without the consent of the head of the Department? This is, perhaps, a small item, but it is, perhaps, the commencement of the introduction of a vicious principle. It looks as if there were great laxity in the public service.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think that should be inferred from the fact that I cannot explain an item which is not in the estimates at all, and in connection with which this is not the time when hon. gentleman should expect me to be prepared with an explanation. Nobody in connection with the penitentiaries has any right to ignore the contract at all, and unless there is some good reason for giving the higher prices, the officer would undoubtedly be charged with the difference himself.

Mr. MULOCK. I can understand the Minister of Justice not being prepared to explain the item at the moment, but it is to be borne in mind that as far back as March, 1885, the warden placed his information on this matter in writing, and no doubt since this volume was prepared with the statement of the Auditor General, the matter has been before the members of the Government, including the Minister of Justice, and it shows on the face of it such an entire departure from all sound principles that although the matter is a trifling thing in itself, I am surprised that the Minister of Justice did not at once observe what a door was being opened to lax administration, and ascertain, at the earliest possible moment, how this transaction occurred.

Mr. LANGELIER. I see that there were 100 convicts in the penitentiary last year, and that 800 pounds of tobacco was consumed, or 8 pounds for each convict, or nearly $4 apiece. If all the other expenditure is on the same footing, I think it is not surprising the expenditure in that place is very high.

Mr. DAVIES. Is tobacco allowed the convicts?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In all the penitentiaries?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES. Then according to these figures the country is paying for 50 per cent. more than the amount allowed.

Mr. THOMPSON. No; 800 pounds is the quantity purchased. It does not say used.

Mr. DAVIES. I think the criticisms in the committee are sufficient to justify the Minister of Justice in paying special attention to the expenditure in this Manitoba Penitentiary, because there is an impression among a good many people that the expenditure on this institution is extremely large.

Mr. THOMPSON. The large cost in the penitentiary has not been brought to my attention for the first time this evening.

Mr. WILSON. That may be; but the irregularities existing must have been brought to the hon. gentleman's attention.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have not seen the irregularities, but I know that certain suspicions have been thrown out by hon. gentlemen with regard to certain officers and certain Ministers, and certain public men generally. I am not aware, however, that those suspicions were uttered seriously or on a proper foundation.

Mr. DAVIES. Surely the hon. gentleman takes the letter of the Auditor General as a serious charge by a responsible official.

Mr. THOMPSON. There is no serious charge involved in the matter.

Mr. DAVIES. The serious charge is the charging of 50 per cent. more than the contract price justified.

Mr. THOMPSON. Nothing of the kind. The statement of the Auditor General is that the warden buys at a higher price than the contract price, and what the hon. gentleman said was that the warden charged it himself. The bills came in from the traders and were passed, and it may be that those were simply overcharged by the traders, while the suggestion of the hon. gentleman would imply corruption on the part of the warden himself.

Mr. DAVIES. Certain articles for the penitentiary were to be furnished at a contract price, and an officer of the prison went outside and purchased them at a higher figure, sometimes at an advance of 50 per cent. That fact involves a very serious charge, especially when it is backed up by the charge made by my hon. friend that that same officer charges $14 a head for drugs, whereas in the other prisons the charge varies from $1.50 to $2.50. It appears to me these things are sufficient to justify an examination by the Minister of Justice.

British Columbia Penitentiary $46,971 25

Mr. THOMPSON. The increases consist of $600 for a blacksmith, $600 for a keeper, and $600 each for four guards. The warden states the guards are required in consequence of an increased prison population which he anticipates; and the inspector has made a report in which he states that the trade instructors, the keeper and the guards are necessary.

Mr. DAVIES. There are a large number of increases in this penitentiary about which there ought to be some explanations. I trust the Minister will not force us to go into the subject at this late hour.

Mr. MULOCK. I submit it is unreasonable to ask us to carry this item to-night. The expenditure for this service last year was $34,000; for the next year an increase of $12,000 is asked. That means an increase for all time to come; in other words, it means adding to our annual expenditure a sum which represents the interest on a quarter of a million capital. I submit we are not doing our duty to the country in hastily deciding this important matter.

Mr. McLELAN. I think we should finish it, we have gone so far. It was agreed that we might finish the whole of the items for penitentiaries, except St. Vincent de Paul.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not know of any such agreement.

Mr. WELDON. The expenditure was only $27,000 last year.

Mr. THOMPSON. During the year the hon. gentleman refers to, the population of the prison was only seventy-five. At the time these estimates were made up there were 115 in the prison, and the warden estimated that he would have to provide for thirty-five more, in consequence of the number of prisoners then held for trial, and likely to be convicted.

Mr. MILLS. If these expenses go on increasing, these convicts will become more formidable to the public, even in the penitentiary than outside.

Mr. DAVIES. What means the increase to capital account of $1,400?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is simply to cover purchases, such as for the blacksmith shop and trade rooms, which are not chargeable to ordinary maintenance, but of a permanent character.

Mr. DAVIES. What are the special purchases to be made?

Mr. THOMPSON. Purchases for implements, such as anvils for the blacksmith's shop, and outfits of that kind.

Mr. MULOCK. We have not sufficient explanation to dispose of this item. On page 30, we find the item of officers' uniforms, 1885-86, $400; this year there is an increase of $600. Are there twice as many guards as last year?

Mr. THOMPSON. There will be five new officers, and the clothes of the old ones wear out sometimes.

Mr. MULOCK. The information the Minister has furnished does not strike one as altogether new.

Mr. McLELAN. They do not get a new outfit each year.

Mr. MULOCK. The $600, in my opinion, is not required merely to supply the uniforms for the new guards.

Mr. DAVIES. The item of industries in 1884-85 was $425; this year it is $3,000.

Mr. THOMPSON. The expenditure for industries is in the material for the convicts to work up. When we have a greater number of convicts learning trades and a new trade instructor, a larger amount is required to buy material.

Mr. MULOCK. I protest against the Minister of Finance forcing this through at this late hour. I find on page 81 an item for convicts' travelling allowances; I would not be surprised to find cab hire included in that.

Mr. BOWELL. Well, they have to travel in vans.

Mr. MULOCK. I move that the committee rise and report progress. The Minister of Finance is endeavoring to force amounts through the House in an unreasonable way.

Mr. THOMPSON. The travelling expenses of convicts is in pursuance of the law which requires us to pay the expenses of convicts going home after their discharge.

Mr. WILSON. The proposition of the hon. member for North York is a reasonable one, as the Minister has not given satisfactory replies. If we fully comprehended what we were voting, we could go on with this item. Why not let the House rise, and give the Minister an opportunity to examine into the items, and then bring down the information to the House so that we may be able to vote on it intelligently.

Mr. BOWELL. That would have very much force if there had not been given explanations to every question asked.

Mr. DAVIES. No, there was not.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is in the habit of answering that way, and I do not expect from him anything else. The hon. member for York (Mr. Mulock) asked about travelling expenses. What more explanation could be given than the Minister gave? Hon. gentlemen opposite have no right to say we are endeavoring to push these estimates through with haste. The whole of last Thursday was occupied and not a single estimate passed, and I may say I have never, during the seventeen years I have been in Parliament, heard more lucid or plainer explanations given than the Minister of Justice has given to-night on every question put to him. He has not elaborated but stated the facts, and where he had not the facts he would make a note and give a statement at a future stage. If we go on at this rate we will be here until January next.

Mr. DAVIES. Hon. gentlemen are seeking to pass through estimates containing large increases over last year's votes, without giving sufficient explanation. The least hon. gentlemen could do would be to accede to our request and not force this through, but give us time to compare the expenditures. The hon. gentleman has said that explanations were given, and when I rather deprecated that he used language which he should not have used——

Mr. BOWELL. I will in future leave that language to be used by you.

Mr. DAVIES. I was not addressing the hon. gentleman at the time, but when the hon. gentleman says that the Minister of Justice gave all the explanations required, I tell him that the Minister himself reserved explanations until a later stage.

Mr. BOWELL. That is precisely what I said, and I do not desire that the hon. gentleman should leave any false impression on this House. What I said was that my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, had answered promptly the questions put, except in some instances, when he had not possession of the facts, and when he said he would give his explanations later. The hon. gentleman is trying to misrepresent me.

Mr. WILSON. The hon. the Minister of Customs said he had been sitting in the House for the last seventeen years and never heard more complete, lucid and satisfactory explanations than those given by the hon. gentleman. Yet, at the same time, he says distinctly that the information had not been supplied us, and we were to wait until concurrence.

Resolutions ordered to be reported, Committee to sit again.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 1:40 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 28th April, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PRIVATE BILLS—EXTENSION OF TIME.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that as the time for receiving reports from Committee on Private Bills will expire to-morrow, the same be extended for a further period of fifteen days from that date, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, as contained in their seventh report.

Motion agreed to.

BILLS WITHDRAWN.

Bill (No. 49) to incorporate the Ontario, Minnesota and Manitoba Railway Company.—(Mr. Royal.)

Bill (No. 39) to incorporate the Emerson and North-Western Railway Company.—(Mr. Pruyn.)

RAILWAY WHARF AT ST. JOHN'S, QUEBEC.

Mr. BECHARD asked, Has the Canadian Government ever given to the Stanstead, Shefford and Chambly Railway Company powers to construct the wharf which the said company have built alongside their bridge across the Richelieu River, near the town of St. John?

Mr. POPE. I am not aware, nor can I find any trace, of their ever having given such power.

OIL FOR THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. WELDON asked, Is the oil required for the Intercolonial Railway supplied by contract? If so, were tenders asked for such contract? What is the price paid per gallon for oil supplied?

Mr. POPE. They have all been let by contract. The price is all the way from 7½ cents to 65 cents per gallon.

Mr. BLAKE. Were tenders asked for?

Mr. POPE. Yes, they were all let by contract.

Mr. BLAKE. But they might be let by contract without tender.

Mr. POPE. Yes, tenders were asked.

IMPORTED POWDER FOR CARTRIDGES.

Mr. MULOCK asked, Has the Government within the last six months imported, or does it intend to import from Woolwich, powder to be made into cartridges for use by rifle associations in Canada? If so, in what, if in any way, has such powder been tested for proof, so that it may be relied upon to give satisfaction, or whether it is intended to submit the same to any tests to ascertain that it is of the proper quality and more suitable than the Canadian-made powder?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. 7,000 lbs. of rifle fine grain powder, Waltham Abbey, specially manufactured for Snider-Enfield ammunition, have been imported lately from England. This powder has been tested at the cartridge factory with satisfactory results. This course was taken in consequence of objections found to the quality of the powder furnished by the Hamilton Powder Company. Cartridges are now being manufactured with this imported powder for the use of our rifle associations. It is thought that the quality of the powder contracted for this year by the Hamilton Powder Company will give ample satisfaction.

SUGAR DUTIES PAID AT HALIFAX AND MONTREAL.

Mr. DALY (for Mr. STAIRS) asked, What amount of duty was paid on sugar by refiners at the ports of Halifax and Montreal, respectively, from the 1st to the 30th of March, inclusive?

Mr. BOWELL. The amount paid at Halifax was $118,332, and that at Montreal $470,681.80.

VACANCY IN THE ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. BLAKE asked, Is it the intention of the Government to propose legislation with reference to the salary of the vacant judgeship in the High Court of Justice of Ontario? Is the Government aware that the late judge was disabled by illness for a long time before his death, and that great inconvenience has been caused by the practical vacancy for over two years in the office? Is it the intention of the Government to make an appointment without delay to the office?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is the intention of the Government to propose legislation with reference to the salary of the vacant judgeship in the High Court of Justice of Ontario. The Government is aware that the late judge was disabled by illness for some time before his death. We have no information that great inconvenience was caused by the practical vacancy in the office. It is not the intention of the Government to make any undue delay in the appointment.

TIMBER SALES ON GEORGIAN BAY ISLANDS.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Did the Government sell any of the timber on the following islands in the Georgian Bay, viz.:—Griffith, White Cloud, Hay, Bear's Rump, Flower Pot, and Isle of Coves? If so, when, and to whom, and at what price? Was the said timber sold by private sale or put up at public competition? If sold to a company, who were the members of said company?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government have disposed of the timber on Griffith, White Cloud, Hay, Bear's Rump, Flower Pot and Isle of Coves. A license was issued on the 18th July, 1882, to Mr. Charles Anderson, of Owen Sound, merchant, and Madame Josephine C. Farijana, of Montreal, for the same. The licensees paid a bonus of $1,000, and they also paid dues according to tariff on all timber cut as well as a ground rent of $52 per annum. The timber was sold by private sale.

TRENT VALLEY CANAL.

Mr. COOK moved for:

Copies of all Orders in Council, departmental orders, engineers' reports, route adopted for the Trent Valley Canal, the estimated cost of construction, amounts already expended on account of the same by contractors or the Government, the names of contractors, the amount paid to officials of the Government, with names and duties of each individual, and all other information bearing on this undertaking.

He said: Sir, this Trent Valley Canal is no new work. It was started a great many years ago before the union of Upper and Lower Canada. Considerable money was expended upon it at that time for the purpose, largely, of bringing timber down the Trent River. That part of the country was covered with timber of large growth, and lumbering operations have been carried on there to a great extent for a great number of years. But this branch of industry has almost wholly disappeared for some years back. The work was discontinued until the present Administration came into power, and it was revived. The object of its revival, I suppose, was to facilitate the getting of grain from the Georgian Bay to the frontier as expeditiously and as cheaply as possible. That was the idea, at all events, of some parties who were interested. There were other motives which, I have no doubt, were known to a good number of members who are sitting on that side of the House, and representing constituencies on this line. This has been a cry for election purposes from the time the first grant was made in 1881 by this Government; but before we come to that part of the subject, I would like to refer to a report, which I do not think a fair one, that was made by William Kingsmill, civil engineer, of Ottawa, I think, at the present time. This report was made some years ago, in which he said:

"Before the union, when Sir John Colborne was Lieut.-Governor, a large amount of money was expended on the River Trent that amounted to, I think, $481,123.61.

"Lock 135 feet long, thirty-three feet wide, and five feet deep, with the accompanying dams, to obtain reaches of navigation, were built between Rice Lake and the Bay of Quinté; also at Peterboro', Bobcaygeon and Lindsay. Until the introduction of railways, small steamers plied between Gore's Landing, on Rice Lake, and Peterboro'. The steamer 'Ogemah' still continues tri-weekly trips between Chemung Lake and Fenelon Falls, connecting with the Port Hope and Lindsay Railway at Lindsay, and by stage a distance of six miles, with Peterboro'.

"Further expenditure on this route was stopped in 1841, on the ground that the line of communication from the Bay of Quinté to Nottawasaga Bay required 820 feet of lockage, and that the depth of five feet of water through a series of lakes and currents, in a route extremely circuitous was unsuited as a line by which the produce of the Western States could be sent down to tidewater. The River Trent, below Peterboro', is now used as the means of conveying rafts of timber from the lakes in the rear of Peterboro' to the Bay of Quinté; and the Board of Works, excepting the locks at Bobcaygeon, maintained only some timber slides and dams on the river for that purpose. In 1863 the member for Peterboro' succeeded in obtaining a select committee to enquire into the advantages of this route, as a means of communication between Lakes Huron and Ontario. The committee did not report during that Session; but, although in 1864 the enquiry was renewed, the result has not been made public. There cannot be any doubt, however, that the decision of 1841 will be affirmed.

"The same objection exists now which were ably urged by Mr. Killaly at that time, and we owe it to him that no more money has been wasted on this ill-advised scheme. There is a schedule in the Public Works report, which, in any other publication, might be ranked among the facetiæ of the hour, but grave documents are not appropriate for the exhibition of humor. It is, however, difficult to consider, in a serious light, a schedule setting forth: 'Public works incomplete and as yet unproductive, but on which tolls are to be levied as soon as they are available.' Under this head the Scugog inland navigation is included at a cost of $481,123.61. It may even be regarded as a matter of good fortune that this sum is not twenty times what it is. It was estimated that in order to complete the works to the extent originally proposed, two millions and a half dollars would be necessary, but it was considered that the amount was understated, and that at least a million dollars more would be required. It is impossible to explain how such works were originally authorised, for after proceeding upwards of eighty miles through this tortuous and insufficient navigation, the vessel would have been in Rice Lake, just ten miles from Lake Ontario. But the principle on which improvement should be conducted is so little known, and the rapacity of constituencies and politicians so great, that the absurdity of a project is not the least bar to its being entertained."

That was the opinion of that eminent engineer. When they were at Rice Lake they were within ten miles of Lake Ontario, and still they contemplated building the canal through to the mouth of the Trent, which would be something in the neighborhood of 190 miles. Then we heard nothing more of this until the present Government came into power, and in 1881 we find they voted $6,000, I suppose for the purposes of an investigation or survey. In 1882, just before the general election, $5,836.51 of this sum was expended. I know that was a live issue in those constituencies that I have mentioned along this line. At that time it had not reached as far as Simcoe, but I believe, owing to the exertions of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) it has got as far north as even Georgian Bay, and now I am very happy to be able to give it a lift in that direction. Well, I find that North Hastings, East Hastings and West Hastings were very much interested in this subject just about 1882. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that was just before the election, and it was rather doubtful if those constituencies would elect supporters of the present Government. East Northumberland was another one, West Northumberland, East Peterboro', West Peterboro', North Victoria and South Victoria—nine—a pretty good haul, or 18 on a division, if they could have got them all on the other side. In 1882 they succeeded in getting a vote from this House of $290,000. Immediately after that the election took place, and how did we find this money expended? In the very next year after the election was over we find that the Government only expended $40,767.16, leaving $249,.32 84 unexpended. That has a very fishy complexion, and, Sir, from the temper of the delegates that were here a short time ago, they appeared to appreciate pretty well the extent to which they were fooled at that particular time. Well, Sir, in 1884 we had another vote of $185,000, and in that year there were expended $121,382.84, so we have had $481,000 voted by this House and only $288,630 expended. Before a large sum of money is expended in such a manner, it is the duty of the Government to ascertain the utility of the work. The Government should have surveys made, a route adopted, and they should know the cost of the work to the country before expending the money. They should know whether it is practicable, which they do not know even to-day. I have no doubt that if the work is practicable the expenditure is in a good direction; but if the work is so important as it is said to be at election times, then the amount required for its construction should be at once voted by Parliament, and contracts given out for its completion. We had a report in 1884, which, however, only went a short distance and dealt with part of the work; but we cannot make head or tail of it. It does not give the full estimate of the amount required, or what should be done towards the construction of the work. In 1884 a large deputation waited upon the Government; it was said to number something in the neighborhood of 150 of the most influential gentlemen on the line of the Trent Valley Canal. I was invited to attend that gathering, which I did cheerfully, from the fact that I am very much interested in the construction of the work, provided it can be carried to a successful issue. It was stated there by, I think, the member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron), that the work could be completed for $3,000,000 and that men could be found who would take the contract for that sum. Sir Charles Tupper, in his reply, stated that if the deputation could point to respectable and competent men who would take the contract, and complete the work for $3,000,000, he would at once invite his colleagues to consider the matter. But at that very time, I am credibly informed from a high authority, the estimate was far more than $3,000,000, was in fact something in the neighborhood of $9,000,000, and when Sir Charles Tupper made that statement to the deputation he knew quite well he was talking nonsense and buncombe to deceive those gentlemen who were present as delegates. If that is the fact, if it is true that the estimated cost was $9,000,000 at that time, I think a Minister of the Crown should not have attempted to trifle with so important a delegation by stating that he would be prepared to give a contract for $3,000,000 when he knew that the estimate for the work was $9,000,000. We heard nothing more about the matter till last year, when we had a report presented, which failed, however, to give us very much more information than we formerly possessed. It gave information with respect to some local works that had been executed since the previous report; but it did not give the cost of the work throughout, and whether, in the opinion of engineers, it was thought to be practicable. One very important change was made, and from my knowledge of that part of the country I am able to state that it was a judicious one. Mr. Rubidge, in his report, stated:

"From Lake Simcoe to Lake Huron the descent is found to be 132 feet, instead of 124 feet, as formerly estimated.

"The circuitous route by the River Severn, which also lies along the southern border of the Laurentian formation, was surveyed, but owing to the rocky nature of its banks and at certain points contracted channel, together with its unfavorable direction, it was ultimately deemed advisable to explore inland for a more feasible route.

"These explorations resulted successfully. A favorable line was discovered between Lake Couchiching and Matchedash Bay, commencing at a point about two miles east of the village of Orillia, and opposite the Narrows of Lake Simcoe; thence it crosses the dividing ridge at what may here be considered the low elevation, in a distance of less than two miles, where, falling into the valley of a branch of the North River, or rather creek, it descends by an easy route, lying in the general direction and east of the Midland Railway to Matchedash Bay, a distance of about sixteen miles.

"By Lake Couchiching and the channel of the River Severn, to its mouth at Port Severn, the distance is forty-four miles. The difference in distance is therefore over twenty-eight miles in favor of the inland route."

This Session another large deputation waited on the Government, and the different delegates expressed their opinion in regard to the work, and urged the Government to place a large sum in the Estimates for its construction. I see by a circular which has been sent to me, and which is, no doubt, in the hands of several other members who reside in the neighborhood of the undertaking, that the executive of the Trent Valley organisation urge upon members to see the Government, and ask them to carry out their pledge by placing $350,000 in the Supplementary Estimates for the work. I observe in the present Estimates a sum of $103,000. I do not think the Government are justified in placing so small a sum in the Supplementary Estimates. If the work is going to cost millions, why not at once face the music? We have been constructing very large works, as was said by members of the Government who replied to the delegation. The Minister of Railways was present, and in his inimitable manner he replied, that when they gave him the money he would build the canal. He said that of course it could not be built without money; that the Government had no money, and when he got the money he would do the work. I thought that was a humiliating statement to be made by the present Administration, which were in the habit of boasting of yearly surpluses, and now that their money has been wasted and thrown away into the four corners of the earth, they say they have nothing with which to build the Trent Valley Canal. The delegation also heard from the Minister of Finance. He said that he received the money in one hand and gave it out with the other, that it came from the people to his Department and that it was expended as the Government saw fit—that was his duty. The Minister of Customs assured the deputation that he was watching carefully their interests; that it was his duty to watch their interests, as the work would pass through his constituency, and they might rest confident that he would see the work carried out, from the fact that he had married the waters of Lake Ontario with those of the Bay of Quinté by the building of the Murray canal. He rose to the dignity of a poet on the occasion. Then we had the Minister of Interior. He had great respect for that part of the country; he had lived in that section for a long time, and he looked back on his past life in Peterboro' where he was so unsuccessful in obtaining a seat in Parliament, and finally he had to go to Montreal, but still he had a warm corner in his heart for that part of the country and he was bound to stand by it. As long as he was in the Administration he would give it all the assistance he could. These gentlemen led that deputation to believe that the canal would be built out of the revenues of the country. How could it be built out of our revenues if we are going to have a deficit each year? We had a large deficit last year, we will have another this year, and as certain as the sun rises and sets if this Government remain in power for the next five or ten years we will have deficits, and large deficits every year. These hon. gentlemen were dealing in buncombe when they stated that they would build this canal out of revenue; and if they had been honest they would have said: When we find that this work can be constructed then we will construct it, and we will ask for a loan of a million of dollars, or whatever may be necessary for the purpose. That is the only way in which they could properly, fairly and honestly have met this delegation; but here we see the paltry sum of $103,000 in the Estimates for this great undertaking, which is going to do so much good to the carrying trade of the North-West. I would like to know if the Government fear that this canal will come in competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway, which the Minister of Railways has so much at heart. I say that the people of our North-West country, and even of the Western States, should have an opportunity of making this the highway for their grain to the seaboard, so that it may reach the European market, and I believe that this is one of the routes which should be opened up and adopted for that purpose. I, therefore, move this resolution, and have given my opinions on the subject. I am entirely in favor of the construction of this canal, provided it is found to be practicable.

Mr. BURNHAM. When the hon. gentleman put his motion on the paper I had expected that he would have declared himself in favor of this project, but after listening to his remarks I am unable to say whether he is in favor of it or not. He says if it is a practicable scheme the Government should go on with it. Now, as he represents a constituency in this House which is interested in the matter, I should have thought that he would have made himself better acquainted with the merits of the undertaking and its feasibility. If he had followed the matter as closely as other hon. members whose constituencies are interested in the matter, he would have known that the Government have made very full enquiry into the matter, and that it is not now a question of doubt whether the scheme is practicable or impracticable. In the year 1878 the Government of Mr. Mackenzie, by one of their latest acts, transferred the control of this work to the Local Legislature of Ontario. When this Government came into power the matter was brought to the attention of the House, a committee of the House was appointed, and on the report of that committee the Order in Council transferring the work to the Local Government was cancelled, and the work became again the property of the Dominion. The project is one which has its origin as far back as 1833. The reason the scheme was dropped at the time of the Union of the Provinces was that some doubts existed whether there was a water supply at the height of land sufficient for the purpose of supplying the canal. When Sir Charles Tupper was in the Government he sent an engineer (Mr. Stark) over the route of the canal, and he made an investigation and reported to the Government as to the feasibility of the scheme. The question of water supply was the point to which Mr. Stark's investigation more particularly referred, and he ascertained that such a supply of water existed. Sir Charles Tupper was so much interested in the matter that he went over almost the whole length of the route, including that portion lying within the hon. gentleman's constituency, for the purpose of endeavoring to ascertain its feasibility. Although it is called the Trent Valley Canal, it is not, strictly speaking, a canal, but is rather the adoption of some means of utilising, for the purposes of navigation, the large lakes and other bodies of water already existing, and connecting by locks and short stretches of canal those bodies of water which are already navigable. The length from Georgian Bay to Bay of Quinté is about 206 miles, of which fifty-nine miles will require canalisation. When this route was taken up by the Government some fifty years ago, it was thought to be the natural route for a canal from the waters of Lake Huron to those of Lake Ontario, and the hon. gentleman's own knowledge will inform him that it is the natural water route between those two bodies of water. The hon. gentleman states that the expenditure made by the Government was made for political purposes; that we heard about it in 1882, that a large expenditure was voted, and that the matter is being revived again at the present time for political purposes. Well, Sir, the money that has been expended by the Government has been expended for the purpose of opening up some of these minor stretches of navigation, and the hon. gentleman knows that when the portions for which the money is voted are constructed, there will be a continuous stretch of navigation of about seventy-five miles. The hon. gentleman read the report of Mr. Kingsmill stating the difficulties which existed at that time, and referred to the difficulty of finding employment for one or two single boats on these waters; but I would like to inform the hon. gentleman that there are some fifty or sixty vessels on those waters at the present time, some of them of considerable capacity, and as the hon. gentleman lives in the neighborhood of Lake Simcoe, he should know that there are a number of vessels there of large capacity. So far as the whole scheme is concerned, I do not believe that the members of this House who have been supporting it, have done so for political purposes, but because they believed it to be a project which would be for the benefit of the localities through which it passes and to benefit the country at large. It will not be in competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway, because the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, so far as they have enquired into the work, are in favor of it. The advantage this canal route has over the system of navigation by way of the great lakes and the Welland Canal, is, that it is land-locked all the way from Midland, through Bay of Quinté and the St. Lawrence, to Montreal, saving a distance in navigation between Chicago and Montreal of 400 miles. I am perfectly satisfied that the hon. gentleman, if he is not in favor of this scheme, will wish he had been before the next general election comes round. His constituents have in large numbers waited on the Government to urge this scheme; deputation after deputation has visited Ottawa; the last time I think there were 150 people, a large number of whom were constituents of the hon. gentleman, and I am sure, when they read his remarks, in which he casts doubts on the scheme, on the good faith of the people who are supporting it, and on the good faith of the Government, they will conclude that he is not the proper person to represent them in this House, having the great interest they have in this scheme. He speaks of the amount placed in the Estimates for the present year for this work, and the statements made to the deputations this year, or in former years, by Sir Charles Tupper and other members of the Government. I am sorry myself there is not a larger amount in the Estimates, and I hope the Minister will be able to explain satisfactorily how there happens to be the difference in the Estimates brought down from the statements which have been made by him to the deputation. I believe the Government, when they have full information before them as to the merits of this scheme and its cost, will feel justified in expending the money necessary to carry it out. If the reports of their own engineers satisfy them that the work is one not only in the interest of the Province of Ontario, but of the Dominion at large, as we believe it is, they should go forward with it. The deputations which have waited on them for several years past have been very large—I think the largest that have waited on the Government on any matter, representing twelve constituencies. I trust the Government will bring down the papers asked for by the hon. member, and will induce their engineers to take active steps to obtain full information as to the nature and cost of the work.

Mr. HILLIARD. I regret that the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Cook) should throw any doubts on the Trent Valley scheme. He should certainly have expressed himself on the subject before this late day. He should be prepared to-day to show the advantages of the scheme—to show that though it may accommodate only small vessels, it is a land-locked system of navigation, through which freight can be carried more cheaply from the waters of Lake Superior and Lake Huron to Montreal than it can be by the Welland Canal route. We have in this route almost a perfect canal, and one that is perfectly practicable. There are no great excavations to be made; it runs through a country which is almost a plain from end to end, and the distance is navigable with the exception of about sixty miles, which can be cut through at a nominal cost. I did not understand whether the hon. gentleman said that the work would cost $9,000,000, or whether that was the estimate of the engineer he quoted. But we have the report of Mr. Stark, one of the most practical engineers of the country, based on careful surveys, that the work will cost probably less than $3,500,000, which is a mere nominal sum for such a work. I presume that Mr. Stark did not include the cost of damage to property along the route, which would probably swell the amount to $5,000,000; but if we could get that canal constructed for $5,000,000, or even for $9,000,000, it would be an exceedingly cheap work. I am afraid a large portion of the people of this Dominion do not appreciate the advantages of this inland route of water communication. Take a common point in the west, as Sault Ste. Marie or the Straits of Mackinaw, and another common point in the east, as Kingston, and a saving of 400 or 500 miles of travel will be secured by this canal; and at the western terminus of the canal when it is built, as I hope it will be before many years, we can by means of elevators handle the grain coming from the west and place it on board of vessels which will carry it to the harbor of Montreal at a very nominal cost. I venture to say, on a very careful estimate, that grain can be brought from Duluth or Port Arthur to Montreal at a cost of not more than 5 or 6 cents a bushel. If that can be done, we can bid defiance to the competition of the railways. One of the mistaken ideas of the present day is that the days of water communication have passed by, and that railways are sure in the future to do the forwarding business of the country. But if it can be shown that grain can be brought from Duluth to Montreal at 6 cents a bushel, as I think it can be, that is a good proof that the days of water communication have not passed by. There are people who believe also that freight can be carried cheaply only in large vessels. I admit that the larger the vessel the cheaper the freight can be carried; but when we take into consideration the shortness of this route, its perfect safety, and the absence of risk from storm or tempest, I think its advantages, as compared with the Welland Canal route, will be apparent. The saving of life and of vessels is in itself an object. As I stated on a former occasion, freight is carried on the river Hudson from Albany to New York at the rate of 12½ cents per ton a distance of 160 miles, which is another evidence that water ways have not passed their usefulness; for I do not think it is possible to carry freight by rail 160 miles at 12½ or 15 or 20 cents a ton. This is further evidence that a route of this kind would be decidedly practicable and useful. It has been stated that we lacked water, but people conversant with the country will not dispute the fact that we have abundance of water for the proposed canal. We have sufficient water tributary to this route to supply all the canals not only in the Dominion but on the continent, as we drain the water shed from four large counties. I think it would we wise for hon. gentlemen to post themselves on the practicability and advantages of a scheme of this kind, and if they did I am satisfied we would have much less opposition to the scheme than it meets with to-day. I trust the Minister of Railways will take pains to inform himself thoroughly on this subject. As to the appropriation, a sum of $103,000 has been placed in the Estimates for this work previous to the deputation coming here, but I have every hope that when the Supplementary Estimates come down, we shall find a vote in them equal to the amount promised by the Minister of Railways and Canals. I have every confidence that the hon. Minister will see this work carried through.

Mr. COCKBURN. I think the motion of the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Cook) very opportune, and I may say that the promise that an additional vote will appear in the Supplementary Estimates is one that will be hailed with satisfaction by the people of a large section of the country, comprising some 400,000 inhabitants. It is true that railways are looked upon as the modern highways, and that the days of canals are waning; but I have been informed on good authority that canals can not only carry grain cheaper, but even more expeditiously than railways, because they carry a larger quantity. Representing a portion of the country largely interested in the construction of the Trent Valley Canal, I deem it my duty to give my views on this question. I have been over the whole waterway in its present unfinished state, and as to the question of feasibility, I have no doubt whatever that the canal is perfectly feasible, and its construction is only a matter of money. The Government, on meeting the large and influential deputation which waited on it in the Railway Committee room, promised that $350,000 would be expended the coming year on this canal. I had no opportunity of saying a word then, because I was not one of those chosen to make any remarks, but even $350,000 is totally inadequate. The Government ought to spend a million dollars every year on this work, and that would be a very small sum. A few years ago the present Administration committed themselves to the policy of building the canal, but since then they have been very parsimonious in their annual appropriations for the scheme, and in this respect the appropriations are in strong contrast with those for railways, for instance, for the Canadian Pacific Railway. I admit the canal is not so important a matter as the Canadian Pacific Railway, but still it is of great importance along a line of about twenty constituencies interested in its construction. As to the question of the western terminus, some remarks have been made, and although it is not for gentlemen here to state what particular outlet on the Georgian Bay should be selected, I wish to mention a route not yet surveyed, but which is recommended by practical people. A little south of Washago, on the west shore of Lake Couchiching is a flat running down towards Grass Lake into the Severn River, which would be well worth inspection. I recollect that, on the occasion to which the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Cook) alluded, the Minister of Finance spoke of the want of money and the necessity for going slowly, but since then the Canadian Pacific Railway have declared they are going to pay back $20,000,000 of the amount borrowed from the Government, and, as this will furnish means in abundance, I hope that the Minister of Finance will add $750,000 to his proposed $250,000, and make the expenditure this year on the canal $1,000,000. At the present rate of progress the canal will not be finished in this century or in this generation. It will cost, no doubt, a great deal more money than has been estimated by the engineers in the past, as engineers are wont to make estimates as small as possible. The hon. member for Peterboro' (Mr. Hilliard) has spoken of $3,500,000 or $5,000,000 as the cost, but I am sure that amount will be totally inadequate; at any rate, we should have $1,000,000 appropriated this year, at which rate it will still take from five to ten years to complete the work. The present Administration have pledged their faith to the people of those districts that they will build this route, the feasibility and practicability of which are beyond doubt, and as to its utility there can be no question. I was in Peterboro' last night for a short time, and while there I met a Conservative gentleman, who shrugged his shoulders and said he was of opinion that the people of the district were being trifled with, but I told him their representatives were sound on the canal question, and that they would have all the assistance I could give. I hope the several members from that district, who have great influence with the Government, will exert their influence in endeavoring to compel the Government to carry out their promise, and it would not be any great stretch on the part of the Government to give an appropriation of $1,000,000 instead of the amount they appear to have decided on. I think the hon. member for West Peterboro' (Mr. Hilliard) has given valuable information as to what canals are doing. The Erie Canal, for instance, has carried a larger amount of grain than all the railways combined, and as the Dominion of Canada has expended so much on large public works, and is being repaid $20,000,000 of the money advanced the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Government might well spare $1,000,000 of that amount in the appropriation this year for the Trent Valley Canal. I hope and believe that the Government will see it to be their duty, and if they are at all alive to their obligations and to the promises they have made to these different counties, they cannot do otherwise than expend a considerable amount of money there. They appropriated nothing last year, so they should now make up for it by voting this year from $700,000 to $1,000,000.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I desire to say a few words, not so much perhaps in reference to this question as in reference to another canal which I think might be substituted, and to which the Government might direct their attention a little more earnestly than they seem to have devoted it to this particular scheme. From the discussion which has taken place here to-day among the members who represent constituencies which are interested in this scheme, there appears to be a considerable difference of opinion, both as to the feasibility of the scheme itself and the amount of money required to complete it. I do not pretend to offer any opinion either as to the feasibility of the scheme or as to the amount which is required to bring it to a successful completion; but, from all the information we are able to obtain from the reports of engineers, and otherwise, in relation to the navigation of the Trent waters, it appears to me that, as an outlet, or means of communication between the great North-West and the eastern seaboard, the navigation that would be attainable through those waters would be entirely inadequate. I think that, without an enormous expenditure of money, it would be impossible to obtain, by the means of that system of waters in the Trent district, a navigation that would exceed five feet, and it seems to me that such a depth of water as that would be wholly inadequate to divert the traffic from the Erie Canal or to cheapen the cost of transportation of the products of the great North-West to the seaboard. I think the best course for the Minister of Railways to adopt is to expend whatever he may think in the interests of the public it demands, for the purpose of improving the navigation as a local work, and as a local work entirely, and to devote the money which my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. Cockburn) alludes to as coming into the exchequer of the country during the present year from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to a scheme of very much greater importance—I speak now of the Ottawa Canal—a scheme which, if the Government would take it up, would enable them to obtain a navigation by means of the Ottawa and Mattawa Rivers which would be infinitely more beneficial for the transportation of grain from the North West to the seaboard than can possibly be obtained by means of the system of navigation which is under discussion to-day. I suggest to the Minister of Railways that he should, at all events, adopt some means of ascertaining what the cost of improving the navigation of the Ottawa would be, because I believe that the future of the great North-West depends upon affording to the people of that section of country a means of communication with the seaboard that would cheapen the cost of transportation. Allusion has been made to the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway in connection with this matter, but in the discussion which took place last year I think it was abundantly proven that, if the development of agriculture in our North-West is at all commensurate with its development in the North-Western States of the Union, under circumstances almost exactly similar to those which exist in the North-West Territory of Canada, the Canadian Pacific Railway will, in a few years, be wholly inadequate to move the surplus products of that country. I believe, and I cannot repeat it too forcibly, that it would be in the interests of the country if the Government would adopt the suggestion to improve the navigation of the Ottawa, and thereby afford what I believe to be the shortest and best means of carrying the products of the great North-West to the seaboard. I do not desire, in offering this suggestion to the Government, to prevent or delay in any way the improvement of the navigation in the Trent Valley, but I am firmly of the opinion that that navigation will not be adequate for the purpose of transporting the grains from the North-West, and I would suggest to the Minister of Railways the propriety of considering the question of adopting some means of carrying out the more important scheme to which I have alluded.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hastings). I look upon the scheme which is under discussion as second in importance only to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The reasons for its construction have already been very clearly laid before the House by the members for Peterboro', and, while I am pleased to know that the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Cook) has brought this matter before the House so as to give members an opportunity of giving it their consideration, as well as of urging upon the Government the importance of considering it, yet I believe that the Government are in earnest and are sincere in regard to the construction and ultimate completion of the Trent Valley Canal, and I do not believe, as has been insinuated by that hon. gentleman, that these grants are only given for the purpose of carrying the constituencies through which the canal is to pass, and more particularly those in the county of Hastings. I think that, without the necessity for any grant in that direction, these ridings can be carried in the interest of the Government. I am glad the matter has been brought before the House, and I hope the Government will see their way clear to supplement the amount which has been placed in the Estimates by putting a larger sum in the Supplementary Estimates, so that the section of the canal may be proceeded with in the riding which I represent, where no money has yet been expended.

Mr. POPE. I am not a little disappointed at the remarks that fell from my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Cook), because I thought we had satisfied the gentlemen who were here on the delegation that we were really in earnest; but we explained then to him, and the gentlemen who were with him, that we had had very heavy works on hand, that we were just completing those heavy works, and that we did not feel at this time that we were in a position to appropriate very large sums of money until we had taken a rest. Such was the style in which I talked to the deputation, without attempting to give them further encouragement than that I stated that we should put a considerable appropriation in the Estimates this year to complete the lock we had begun and to continue the work. I think it came with a very ill grace from the hon. gentleman to say that we were not in earnest in this work. What was the position of this work in 1878, when the present Government came into power? A good deal of it had been handed over to the Provincial Government, a good deal had been already abandoned, and, of course, we had to commence anew, we had to procure some of the works which had been disposed of, and to make a fresh beginning. And, while we have been doing that, everybody in this House and in the country knows very well that we have had to appropriate very large sums of money to carry out public works, to carry out the Pacific Railway and the Welland Canal, and that we could not be expected during this time to go much faster than we have gone. I am very glad to hear hon. gentlemen from the neighborhood of Peterboro' speak as they do, and I believe the country will listen to what they have said, and will believe with them that we are earnestly endeavoring to do what we consistently can to forward this work, as we do with respect to every other work we undertake. With respect to my hon. friend from Renfrew (Mr. White), I am sure he will wait, I shall be very glad to listen to him, to see everything he can show us, and to do everything we can do. But I will ask him to have patience; I will ask him to wait a little until we have made some progress in these great works that we now have on hand, although we have completed that work for which we have expended so much money. I am sure he will not be disappointed in the interest that we shall take in his work, as well as those that have gone before. I have no objection to the motion the hon. gentleman has made, and I will bring down all the papers that I can, that are not confidential reports to the engineer in chief; but all the papers that I can bring down I will bring down.

Mr. BLAKE. May I ask the hon. gentleman whether he has any estimates of the cost of this work?

Mr. POPE. I have two or three estimates. I do not think that I have a complete estimate at present. If it is very recent I will let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman bring down such estimates as he has?

Mr. POPE. I will bring down such estimates.

Motion agreed to.

THE TRAFFIC IN INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Mr. BEATY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to bring in a Bill amending the Act respecting the traffic in intoxicating liquor.

He said: In making this motion I will briefly explain the objects of this Bill. It is not for the purpose of interfering in any way with the Scott Act wherever it is adopted at present. The object is to give an option to any municipality which has not already adopted the Temperance Act called the Scott Act to adopt an Act prohibiting only spirits as a beverage. The clause making that provision reads as follows:—

99*a*. From the day on which this section of this part of this Act comes into force and takes effect in any county or city, and for so long thereafter as the same continues in force therein, no person, unless it be for exclusively medicinal purposes or for bonâ fide use in some art, trade or manufacture, under the regulations contained in the 3rd subsection of this section, shall, within such county or city, by himself, his clerk, servant or agent, manufacture, import or bring into such county or city, or expose, or keep for sale, or sell, or barter, or exchange, to or with any other person, or give to any person, or purchase, keep or use, directly or indirectly, on any pretence, or upon any device, any gin, rum, brandy or whiskey, or other distilled liquor, or any porter, beer, ale, wine, or any liquors, or liquids mixed therewith, capable of being used as a beverage: Provided always, that in any county or city where this section comes into and is in force, porter, beer, ale, wine, cider or other vinous or fermented liquor, of the standard acoholic strength required in the Customs or Inland Revenue Department, and not in any instance exceeding such standard, imported or manufactured in such county or city, or elsewhere, may be sold, kept and used as a beverage, as at the time of the passing of this section, but under, and subject to such licenses, restrictions and regulations, as may then or thereafter be enforced in respect thereto, under any Act of Parliament of Canada, or any provincial or other law or regulation.

Now it will be seen that the main point is that counties may have the alternative option of petitioning for this section, which will, if adopted, prohibit the sale of spirits as a beverage in that municipality. It is expressly provided that the Act shall not extend to any community which has already adopted the Scott Act, as it at present exists. The framework of the Act provides a section which is to be called 99*a*, having the language, as far as is practicable, of the present Act, so as to prohibit the sale of spirits in those counties which may adopt this Act. Then there is section 100*a*, providing for penalties for violating this Act. In the first instance the penalty shall be $100, for any infraction of this provision; in the second instance $300; and in the third $500. I do not go as far in this Act as I did in the Act of last Session, and say that property should be confiscated, but I simply provide for a fine, and in case of non-payment of these fines, the offender shall be imprisoned for a certain limited period. We find from the numerous petitions which have been presented to this House during this Session, that there is a great interest taken in a provision of this kind. It may be observed, however, that the petitioners go a little further than I propose in this section. They ask that in Scott Act counties the inhabitants may petition for, and have, a new vote on the exclusion of spirits only, or the adoption of beer and wine. I do not go that far. I think it would be unreasonable, from my standpoint; from my point of view I think it would not be advisable to interfere with those counties which have gone to the trouble and expense of adopting the Scott Act in its present form. They should be allowed to work it out as best they can. Of course, we all know that on the one hand it is said that the Act is a demonstrated failure, and on the other hand it is called a great success. That is, of course, a question of personal judgment on the evidence which is placed before each member. My opinion has never been that the Scott Act was a success, but I am willing that it should be tried to the greatest possible extent so as to ascertain whether it can be made a success. I am willing to adopt any reasonable measure that can be presented, and allow it to operate fully so as to determine whether it can be made a success. Therefore I do not feel disposed to interfere by any legislation I might propose, or any that this House might adopt, with the operation of the Scott Act as it is at present, but simply to give counties an alternative option of petitioning for this Act, or that Act, as the case may be, and in case there are two petitions presented, the petition having the larger number of signatures shall prevail. Then when the Act comes into force, the provisions of the Temperance Act shall apply to it, with the necessary changes in forms and procedure, and as that Act is fairly well understood now in its provisions and procedure, certainly in its forms for petitions, proclamations and proceedings of that character, I let them stand, to be applied to the present Act, if it should pass. The great evil in connection with liquor drinking arises from the use of spirits, and not from the use of beer and wine—at all events in this country, whatever may be said of other countries. We know that in countries where there is no legislation of this character, but where the people are in the habit of using only the milder drinks, there is not such a large amount of drunkenness as in countries where spirits are readily accessible. The object of this measure will be to prevent the ready access of persons to alcoholic drinks of a strong character, but, of course, enabling them to procure such liquors for medicinal purposes, or for use in the arts, as is provided in the present Scott Act. My view has always been that if the people generally were not permitted to obtain the stronger drinks, drunkenness, with its violence and evil consequences, would be, to a large extent, diminished if not wholly eradicated. It is not possible, probably, to wholly eradicate an evil of this kind. It is not only in the drink itself, but there may be something in human nature which develops results of this character. At all events the object sought to be obtained is to abolish the use of the stronger drinks, and allow, at least, some milder kinds of alcoholic drinks, such as beer and wine, which many persons seem to think are necessary for them. The Canada Temperance Act, as it now stands, is evidently under trial. It has not yet been fully shown to be what its advocates claim for it, a proved success. It is proper, however, to leave it as it is, to leave it on its trial; it is an experiment, and let the experiment be worked out with a view to ascertaining whether it will be a success or not. No doubt a large number of people in all the Provinces are intensely interested in that Act, and I think it would be a most unwise policy for Parliament to interfere with that Act and with the legitimate action of the people in voting for its adoption. I do not in any sense or way propose to interfere with the action or purpose of the measure or detract from it or impair its provisions. The one great point which I have had presented to me—and I have had some representations made to me—is that this Act should not apply to those counties which have already adopted the Canada Temperance Act. I have explained and clearly shown that it will not do so; but where the Canada Temperance Act ceases to have operation after it has been once adopted, then this Act applies to that county as well as to any other. The people may again for the second time apply by petition for the purpose of adopting the Scott Act as it is at the present day, or they may apply to adopt this Act, and in that case it will be a single vote and a distinct vote. I do not design that there should be two votes at the same time, a vote for the Canada Temperance Act as it at present stands and a vote for this Act; but, on the contrary, that the Canada Temperance Act, if petitioned for and if allowed to be voted on, shall be voted on independently and distinctly on its own merits, and so also upon this Act being voted on, if it should come into force. The two votes will be distinct and clear, and votes will not be taken in the same county on both Acts except at considerable intervals. Those are the general ideas pertaining to the Act. I think they are sufficient to commend themselves to this House and country. I have received strong representations from various quarters that some moderate measure of this kind would be acceptable to a great number of people. We find to-day a petition presented for the repeal of the Canada Temperance Act, and we find in some towns where the Scott Act has been adopted, and in some counties also, action has been taken by the councils and other bodies towards repealing the Scott Act, or towards the enactment of an Act allowing the sale of beer and wine. In Halton, which is said to be the banner county in regard to the Canada Temperance Act, the town council of Milton, which is the county town, have, by a vote of seven members against three, asked for the repeal of the Temperance Act, or for the enactment of a law under which wine and beer can be sold in that town at all events, if not in the county. So we find in regard to Collingwood, in regard to Nottawasaga and other places. Petitions are coming in from various quarters with that view. It would therefore, be reasonable to allow another experiment or trial, if you care to call it so, with respect to this liquor question, by allowing the mass of the people to drink alcoholic liquors of moderate strength which would not result in the evils at present attending the liquor traffic, and at the same time would not greatly damage the country in its material and trade interest, and allow those rights and interests at present established to be practically maintained.

Mr. JAMIESON. I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the principle of the resolution submitted by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty). I think it would be unfair at this stage to offer opposition to the measure proposed by the hon. gentleman, as it must be obvious to the House that it is impossible to discuss the principle of a measure intelligently until it is printed, and for my part I feel disposed to postpone the discussion of it until such is done. The hon. gentleman proposed a similar measure last year, and I, from the exigency of the occasion, found it necessary to defeat the measure, for the purpose of bringing forward the measure I had in charge. From the explanation given by the hon. gentleman I am glad to observe that he does not propose to interfere with the Canada Temperance Act, but to make his measure an independent measure. I think in pursuing that course he is acting wisely. Without committing myself—and I only speak for myself in this matter—to the principle of the resolution submitted by the hon. member, I wish to say that when the Bill about to be introduced reaches a subsequent stage I will take the opportunity, as I think other hon. members will take the opportunity, of discussing the measure fairly on the principles which are embodied in it.

Motion agreed to; and resolution considered in Committee and concurred in.

Mr. BEATY introduced Bill (No. 118) to amend the Acts respecting the traffic in intoxicating liquors.

Bill read the first time.

STEAM TUG SULTAN.

Mr. MITCHELL moved for:

Copy of the report or award of the Dominion arbitrators, with the evidence and papers connected therewith, in the matter of the claim of the owners of the steam tug Sultan.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government have no objection to bring down these papers, but they cannot be brought down immediately. The matter is now in the hands of the Department of Justice, and as soon as the advice which I have asked from that Department is put in my hands, I will be in a position to submit my report to my colleagues. Until that is done, we will not be able to bring down the papers, but I hope to be able to bring them down in a very short time.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad indeed that the hon. gentleman has made the statement he has made, because I have a good deal of confidence in him, in his integrity and honesty of purpose, and all that. I cannot say the same for all the members of this Government, but I hope I will be able to have the papers at as early a day as possible.

Motion agreed to.

CLAIMS, SECTION 16, INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. MITCHELL moved for:

Copies of the award or report of the Dominion arbitrators, with the evidence and papers connected therewith, in the matter of claims in connection with Section 16 of the Intercolonial Railway, on the part of the estate of the late John Bannon, Esq.; the late William Muirhead, Esq.; William Wilkinson, Esq., and other claims investigated at the same time as those named above, and connected with said report or award.

He said: I shall reserve any remaks I may require to make on this matter until the papers come down. I have faith, however, that in accordance with the pledge of Sir Charles Tupper, then Minister of Railways and Canals, two years ago, this matter will be considered, and as I know the claims to be honest and just, that they will be paid. In the meantime I shall be glad to have the papers at as early a date as possible.

Motion agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATIONS.

Mr. McMULLEN moved for:

Return showing the names and post-office address of each person on the superannuated list of retired civil servants on the 1st day of January, A.D. 1886.

He said: On previous occasions I have offered some remarks to the House on the question of superannuations. It is a very important question, and I think we should carefully criticise the operation of the Act from year to year. I notice that the number superannuated under the Act, in 1884, was 53, of whom 46 were granted annuities, and 7 gratuities. The number superannuated in the year 1885 was 49. The number on the list on the 30th of June, 1884, was 433, and the number on the list on the 30th of June, 1885, was 446. The average annual amount paid to those on the list in 1884, was $470, and the average annual amount paid to those on the list in 1885, was $434.77. The amount paid in during the year 1883-84, by those on the list, was $51,882.21. The entire Civil Service, during the year 1884, paid in a sum sufficient to pay the 433 on the retired list $120 each, and the Dominion paid them $350 each. The entire sum paid out during the year 1884, was $192,692.70, of which the Civil Service paid $51,882.21, and the net loss to the country, under the operation of the Act in that year, was $140,810.49. The number on the list on the 1st of January, 1886, according to a return presented to the House, was 423. Twelve were granted annuities, which in all amounted to $4,792.47, or an average of $399.37 each. The sum paid in by the Civil Service during the year 1884-85, was $52,701.83, and the sum paid out was $203,636.21; so that the net loss to the country, under the operation of the Act during the year 1884-85, was $150,934.88. The average amount drawn by each person on the superannuated list during the last year was $469. The Civil Service paid in during the year a sum sufficient to pay those on the retired list $121 each, and the country paid them $348. The net loss to the country under the operation of the Act, for 1884-85, was $10,124.39 more than for the year 1883-84. Now, the system of granting a gratuity to those who are retired under the Act before serving ten years has been in my opinion abused, as well as the system of granting annuities. In most cases the sum paid is greatly in excess of the amount the parties have paid into the fund. For instance, R. A. Adair served four and one-quarter years, paid into the fund $25.50, and got a gratuity of $170. R. Biggs served two and three-quarter years, paid in $17.19, and drew $114.58. W. Villeneuve served two and one-sixth years, paid in $6.18, and drew $60. S. Simard served six and one-half years, paid in $41.60, and drew out $276.25. D. R. Bruce served nine and one-half years, paid in $66.97, and drew out as gratuity $446.50. F. Revely served six years, paid in $216, and got a gratuity of $900. J. W. Ryan served eight and seven-twelfths years, paid in $75.10, and drew out $500.70. D. S. Lowry served three years, paid in $15, and when he retired got $100. Now, I wish to draw the attention of the House to the results of the Act for the year 1885. The hon. Minister of Finance, in his Budget speech, stated that during the last year the country had actually made money under the operation of the Act, by the superannuation of some servants and the employment of others in their places, at smaller salaries. Well, let us see what the result to the country of the operation of the Act during the last year has been. There were forty-nine retired, forty-one by annuities and eight by gratuities. The salaries paid to those forty-nine amounted to $42,384.09; salaries paid to the twenty-five new appointees amount to $15,763.75. The places yet vacant the Government intend undoubtedly to fill, because the returns laid before Parliament always, if an office is abolished, state so. Consequently when not abolished, no doubt it is the intention of the Government to fill the office. They have therefore twenty-four offices to fill, the cost of which will be $16,195, but, allowing that they will make a reduction in the matter of salaries for those twenty-four offices, when they will be filled, proportionate with the reduction in the case of the twenty-five officials who have been appointed, and which was 25 per cent. less than those who occupied the offices before—deducting, from the $16,195, 25 per cent., or $4,048.75, those yet to be appointed will draw $12,146.75, making in all $27,910. The yearly allowance to those placed on the superannuation list last year is $18,362.62, the gratuities to those retired by gratuity is $2,568.03 which makes in all $48,838.65. The net loss to the country for the last year is $6,454.56; but hon. gentlemen will perhaps say that the gratuity should not be counted for every year, and I quite admit that, but deducting the gratuity you have a net loss for all time to come, while these men live, of $3,968.54, or nearly $4,000 a year. I notice also that in all the appointments made to fill vacancies out of the twenty-five, only three were filled by officers who had already been in the Department; the remainder were all new appointments. Hon. gentlemen will say, perhaps, that these twenty-four are not now in the employ of the Government and not drawing a salary, so that so much money will be saved. I will refer to some facts connected with the service in 1884. We find, on looking over the returns, that in 1884 there were 140 clerks in or around Ottawa, receiving an average salary of $1,349.66. The amount paid to those clerks for extra work during the year—work, I presume, done after hours, owing to the increased duties devolving upon them, possibly through the fact that some were superannuated—amounted to $57,792, or $412.80 each. This makes the salary of each $1,762.42, averaging $6 a day; and their salaries at the end of ten years, with the statutory increase of $50 per annum, would be $1,850 each, exclusive of payments for extra work. If then superannuated, those clerks, counting they are now ten years in the service, will be entitled to an annuity of $750. Coming down to the present year, we find there have been eighty clerks in the Departments who have drawn $59,233.85 for extra service, or $731 each, and their ordinary salaries amounted to $1,698.83 each; so that they got $137,605.61 of salary altogether. This makes the amount drawn during the last year, for salary and extra services by those eighty-one clerks, $2,429.83 each. The total sum paid into the superannuation fund, during the time they were in service, by those who were superannuated in 1884, was $10,048.86, or $240 each; just about enough to pay one-half a year's allowance. The total number in the service eligible to be superannuated in 1884, and in a position to claim superannuation, was 1,753, and the total number now eligible to superannuation is about 2,000. The system of adding years to the time of service of those who have been in the service has been followed persistently by hon. gentlemen in a number of cases. I hold it is a most pernicious system, because I believe that the officials in the service, from the salaries they receive, should be able to lay aside something for themselves, instead of depending absolutely upon the country in the case of their becoming sick or retiring. I notice last year, J. B. Cherriman has been superannuated after serving 12 years. He got a salary of $4,000, and under the Act was entitled to a retiring allowance of $960; but instead of that, hon. gentleman added ten years to his time of service, which enables him to draw $800 more, or $1,760 a year. In this case the Minister of Finance certainly cannot show that money has been made. The new appointee to fill the position gets $2,800; so that his salary and the allowance to the one superannuated amount to $4,560 a year. I notice, too, that in 1884, Mr. Russell, Surveyor General, was superannuated, after serving fifteen years. They added ten years to his time, and he is now drawing $1,550 a year, though in all the time he was in office he only paid into the fund $632 33, or not enough to pay one-half year's allowance. Mr. Russell, chief clerk, served twenty years, and had a salary of $2,250; ten years were added to the time when he was superannuated in 1884, and his retiring allowance is $1,671.24, though he paid in nothing to the fund. Mr. J. B. Spencer, who filled the position of collector of Customs, Winnipeg, was superannuated in 1882. His salary was $2,600, and he had paid into the fund in all $388.48, and he now draws an annuity of $1,663.92. I understand he is now engaged in other business, while drawing this handsome allowance from the resources of the Dominion. E. W. Chesnut was also superannuated in 1884. He was drawing $1,100 salary, and was forty-seven years of age at the time of retirement, having served fifteen years. He is now getting an annuity of $330. Mr. N. N. Ross was in the Customs Department getting a salary of $1,600. He has been retired; he was superannuated in 1884. He is now drawing an allowance of $1,120, his successor gets $1,400, so that this office now costs the country $2,520, while before the superanuation of the man who occupied the position it only cost $1,600, so that the increase in that one case is $920 a year as long as that man lives. N. W. McLean, clerk of Private Bills, was superannuated last year. His salary was $1,400. He has a retiring allowance of $616, the new appointee gets the same salary of $1,400, so that this office now costs the country $2,016. We have one man stepping around doing nothing, living comfortably and easily, while another man does the work. Then there was also Mr. Whitcher, the Deputy Minister of Fisheries, he was superannuated with an allowance of $1,008. It is not supposed that he was superannuated because he was inefficient or incapable of doing the work, but I believe there was another gentleman in the office who was anxious to fill the position, and I believe he has got the office. Mr. Whitcher is now receiving his annual allowance of $1,008, and the other man is drawing a salary of $3,200, so that the Deputy Minister of Fisheries is costing the country $4,208 a year. Another case is that of Mr. Macmicken,

Assistant Receiver-General at Winnipeg. He was superannuated and gets $1,579.80 as his superannuation allowance. I understand that the hon. gentleman ran for a constituency in Manitoba and was elected. He was also appointed Speaker of the Manitoba Legislature. He drew his retiring allowance of $1,579.80 from the Dominion Government, he drew his sessional allowance as a member in the Province of Manitoba, and he got his allowance as Speaker, so that he was pretty well remunerated for his services. I believe he is now busily engaged in following other callings, and is still drawing his allowance.

Mr. McLELAN. When was he superannuated?

Mr. McMULLEN. I am unable to give the date of the superannuation.

Mr. McLELAN. You have it before you in the list in your hand.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, I have it here; I think it was in 1878. I daresay he was superannuated then, but I am not certain. I have no doubt the Minister of Finance will say that a good many of these were superannuated in 1878, and the previous year, under the Mackenzie Government. I admit that both parties have superannuated. I am not prepared to say that the Reform Government did not superannuate as well as the others, but, after all, to show gentlemen opposite that they have been the best hands at the business, I will give them a statement showing the amount of increase under the superannuations by the Mackenzie Government, as well as the amount of increase under the superannuations by hon. gentlemen opposite. Under the Mackenzie Government, in 1873-74, the receipts for superannuation were $31,620.18, and the expenditure was $64,442.84. In 1878-79, the year they left office, the receipts were $41,856, and the expenditure, $106,588. So that the increase, in five years, under the Mackenzie Government, was $42,135.16, or an average annual increase of $8,429.03. Now, take the case of the present Government. When they came into power, as I stated, the receipts were $41,856, and the expenditure was $106,588. In 1883-84, at the end of the first five years of their term of office, the receipts were $51,882.21, and the expenditure was $192,692.70, an increase in five years of $86,104.70, or an average annual increase of $17,220.94. The present Government increased the annual expenditure in the first five years of their term $43,969.54 more than the previous Government did in the same time. Now, to give an idea of the operations of the Act, and to bring it fully before the mind of hon. gentlemen opposite and members of this House, we will take the case of the clerk of the House. The clerk's salary is $3,400. We have a superannuated clerk drawing an allowance of $2,379.96. Then for the position of clerk in this House we are paying $5,779.96. We have a deputy clerk whose salary is $2,400. We have a superannuated deputy—yes, we have two of them—one drawing an allowance of $1,543.92, and another drawing $400, so that these three deputies, one doing the work and two stepping round doing nothing, and costing the country $4,343.92. Then for the clerk and deputy clerk of this House, under the operations of this pernicious system, the country is now paying $10,123.88 a year, and every one of those gentlemen was superannuated by hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, it will be said that the Bill is ours, that it was introduced by the Reform party, and that consequently we have got to bear the responsibility of its bad effects. I would remind hon. gentlemen opposite that in 1882, when we drew the attention of the House to the operations of this system before, an hon. gentleman who then held a seat in this House moved a resolution, which I will read:

"Mr. Ross (Middlesex) moved, in amendment thereto, that the Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, to amend the same so to provide (with due regard to the rights of those who have been already admitted to the superannuation list) for the abolition of the present system, and the substitution of a plan whereby a percentage of the salary of each civil servant shall be retained, and placed to his credit; and shall be payable to him, with interest, on his quitting the service, or to his family in case of his death in the service."

Every single gentleman on this side of the House voted for that measure, and everyone on the other side of the House voted against it. Consequently, the Bill, from the proposal of that resolution to the present time, becomes the act of hon. gentlemen opposite. We have declared our willingness and desire that it should be abolished.

Mr. BLAKE. It was passed by the old Government.

Mr. McMULLEN. I believe it was introduced by them, but it was amended afterwards. Now, I contend that there is no class of people in the Dominion which are better paid for the services they perform than the civil servants, and I believe this Act has been grossly abused. Hon. gentlemen opposite have taken advantage of a clause in the Act, whereby they found it convenient to superannuate a number of civil servants who were capable of performing the duties, because there were a number of others who were anxious to get the positions, and, as they could not very well put two in the same place, those who held the positions were superannuated and others were put in their places. I am glad to find that, since we have commenced the criticism of this Act, they have not made the same number of superannuations. They have been gradually dropping down. In 1881 there were eighty-five retired, in 1882 there were seventy-nine, in 1883 the number dropped down to sixty-five, in 1884 to fifty-three, and in 1885 to forty-nine. I have no doubt that they find that the country is becoming aware of the fact that gross abuses have taken place under the Act, and that the people are not prepared to countenance and support hon. gentlemen in its continuation. I believe, when the country people are once made aware of the operations of this system, they will undoubtedly pronounce most pointedly and determinedly in opposition to its continuance. Now, this Act has been abused simply because it provided that after a man had been in the service for ten years, and if, through ill-health, or other reason, he sought to be superannuated, he could be placed on a retiring allowance. In many cases, no doubt, hon. gentlemen have intimated to public servants that they had better apply for superannuation, and in some cases, perhaps, they were removed without knowing anything at all of the cause. I know cases myself where men received notice of the intention of the Government to put them on the superannuation list. They had no bodily ailment, but they were led to understand they had better apply for a superanuation, and so they were placed on the list. We are now paying, as the results of that Act, 433 men a sum of over $203,000. They are going about doing nothing, and we are paying other men salaries for doing the work. I say the country cannot afford it. I hold that at this period of our history, particularly when our annual expenditure is growing so large, it is desirable that we should cut off all items of this kind, and only pay what is absolutely necessary. Why, Sir, this Act has been abused in the same way that the Confederation Act has been abused. The hon. gentleman found that by a clause in that Act they were permitted to re-adjust the constituencies, and in consequence, we have had the pernicious Gerrymander Act perpetrated in 1882, and this Superannuation Act has been abused in the same way. Now, I hold in my hand a return, brought down this Session, showing the number of civil servants on the superannuation list on the 1st January, 1886. It gives the names in full, the dates they were superannuated, the amounts they have paid in, and the amounts they have drawn. I think it will be enough to draw attention to the more glaring cases that we may see how this Act operates. I will read from the list a few names:

	Date of Superannuation.	Amount paid in during the time in Service.	Total Amount drawn out up to Jan. 1, 1886.

Kimber, R., age 59	May 1, 1875	275 71	11,187 20

In reference to Mr. Kimber, I understand that he performed the duties of Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod for a number of years. It appears that the air of Ottawa did not agree very well with his health. I understand that he is now in Paris. He draws the money from Canada and spends it over there. Then I find:

Kingston, G. J	Feb. 1, 1880	$ 140 00	$10,990 80
Langton, John	Aug. 1, 1878	847 00	20,146 93

Tasse, F. L	do 15, 1875	136 35	10,018 13

The whole amount drawn out reaches $1,059,093.65, or an average of $2,503.76 for 423 servants, towards which each had paid in on the average only $163.14, or not sufficient to pay a half-year's allowance on the amount drawn. I think this is a very serious matter deserving the attention of the House.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 24) to incorporate the Kingston and Pembroke Mutual Aid and Insurance Company (Limited).—(Mr. White, Renfrew.)

Bill (No. 114) to amend the Acts respecting the British Canadian Bank.—(Mr. Dawson.)

INSOLVENT BANKS AND OTHER CORPORATIONS.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 15) respecting insolvent banks, insurance companies, loan companies, building societies and trading corporations.—(Mr. Edgar.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. McLELAN. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman should explain to the House the alterations which have been made in the Bill.

Mr. EDGAR. The Bill, as it came before the Committee on Banking and Commerce, contained a clause taken from the Insolvent Act of 1875, and made to apply to insolvent companies. But the provision in the latter part of the Bill which provided that the employees of a company should not only be entitled to three months' arrears of wages, but should also be entitled to a salary for two months in the future subject to being employed by the company, was struck out by the committee, and it was made clear, by the addition of one or two words, that clerks or other persons in or having been in the employ of an insolvent company, should be entitled to the privilege. The committee restricted the provisions of the Bill instead of enlarging them.

Mr. IVES. I should like to ask the mover of this Bill whether the words, "by special privilege over other creditors," is intended to be applied to hypothecary creditors.

Mr. EDGAR. I think, when read in connection with the meaning of the word "creditor" in the Act, the clause will not be so construed. It is the same as in the Insolvent Act of 1875.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Was not the matter part of this section, which was struck out, considered a repetition of the first portion of the clause, so far as the two months are concerned?

Mr. EDGAR. No. The latter part of the clause, which was struck out, provided for future salary, after the winding-up order was made, to the extent of two months. The committee thought that was too much as it might be embarrassing to a large concern to have to keep on its employees for two months under the original bill also, the employees could get three months arrears, even if discharged some months before the winding up order was made, and the clause has been amended in committee so as to make three months wages the maximum they can get in any case. Suppose, for instance, a winding-up order was made to-day, and the employee had been discharged two months ago, he would have one month's arrears, while under the Bill as originally drawn he would be entitled to the full three months.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. By the Bill as it was originally, it could not have been less than three months; by the Bill as altered, it will not exceed three months, but it may be less.

Mr. IVES. This is a matter of very great importance, not only to the laboring men whose interests have been considerably affected by the report of the committee, but also to the employers of labor. I find it impossible to understand the provisions of the Bill as reported. The report has not been printed, and it does seem to me the changes it makes are sufficiently important to justify the House ordering it to be printed.

Mr. EDGAR. Unless the Bill goes through the committee to-night it will have no earthly chance of getting through this Session. Let it get through the committee and be reprinted as amended, so that we may have it in shape for the third reading. It is an important Bill, as it gives the working man a chance to get a reasonable privilege out of the material in which he has put his labor. If he has increased the value of the assets of the company by his labor, it is not unreasonable that he should have some privilege over the ordinary creditors. It was so considered in all the Insolvent Acts, the Acts of 1864, 1869 and 1875. In 1869 the workmen were given four months' special privilege. In 1875 they were given exactly what this clause, as introduced, gave them. I do not see why the workmen and employees of companies should not stand in the same position as the workmen and employees of private individuals.

Mr. BEATY. In the first line of the section, it was said "the clerk in the employ of the company," and in the committee this was amended by adding the words "or having been in the employ of the company," so that any person not yet paid might receive three months' wages; but the question arose whether clerks, who had been in the employ at the time of the issue of the winding-up order, should continue in it three months after the date of the winding-up order, and it was considered this was too long a term, and therefore the clause compelling the employment of clerks was struck out.

Mr. BOWELL. There is also this point. The section precludes the possibility of paying workmen for any work unless it was done within three months prior to the winding-up order. If this order should not be issued for a month or two or more after the failure, the workmen or clerks would be cut out from that which this Bill is intended to secure to them, unless there be something in the law which compels the issue of the order at once after the failure.

Mr. IVES. In practice the issue of the order is certain to be delayed, as certain proceedings must be taken before it can be issued. I trust the mover of the Bill will not misunderstand what I say. It is because I approve of the principle of the Bill that I wish to see it in such a shape that we can all understand what we are doing. It is only right that a privilege should be given the workingmen, but I think it would be unwise to pass this Bill, without having before us the exact wording of the section as it has been reported by the committee. It would be a misfortune if the Bill properly drawn should not become law, but it would be a greater misfortune if it should become law and then deprive the artisan class of the protection which the law in several of the Provinces gives it. In the Province of Quebec they have a wider privilege than this section gives them. And, if the effect of the law as adopted here will be to over-ride the provisions of the common law in the Province of Quebec, I think it would be a matter of serious importance, and, therefore, I should think that, although it may jeopardise the passage of the Bill, which I should be sorry for, it would be much wiser that the report of the sub-committee should be printed and we should have it before us so that we might study it before the measure passes the House. Although it is a small Bill, containing only one section, it affects the interest of a very large class of the people in this country, and we are bound to consider carefully what we are doing before we adopt it.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The principle of the Bill commended itself to the committee, as I have no doubt it will commend itself to this committee to-night. The general opinion of the lawyers, I think, was that it would not affect prejudicially the interests of the clerks or workingmen to put the clause in the shape in which it now appears. I am not prepared to offer any legal opinion, but I, like the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), should be very sorry if the effect of the amendment made by the Committee on Banking and Commerce should be to restrict the privileges of those persons whose interests it is intended to promote by the passage of this Bill.

Mr. WELDON. The principle of the Bill was accepted by Parliament and by the Committee. It was, however, questioned whether persons who were not in the employment of the company at the time of the insolvency would be entitled to a lien, and my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Beaty) suggested an amendment which has been put in. The principle of the Bill remains as it was when it was introduced, and the only alteration is to allow persons who had been previously in the employment of the company to have the lien limited to the same extent as those who were in the employment of the company at the time of winding-up. The latter portion of the amendment is unnecessary, because a person employed by the liquidators would of course be paid out of the estate, but the intention was to protect the employees of an insolvent corporation, not only at the time of the insolvency but within three months before it. I should be sorry to see any obstacles thrown in the way of the passage of the Bill, as I think it is only an act of justice to those persons, and I think it would be sufficient, as has been suggested, if the Bill were reprinted before the third reading.

Mr. BOWELL. Would it not have the effect without the addition at all?

Mr. WELDON. No. For instance, if a company got into difficulties and discharged their servants, and a week or two afterwards were put into insolvency, a question would arise whether those employees could get their wages. The object of the amendment was to protect these individuals, as it would be hard for a person employed up to within a week of the insolvency to be deprived of his wages in that way.

Mr. BOWELL. Is not that covered by the words "is or has been"?

Mr. WELDON. Yes, that is the amendment.

Mr. BOWELL. You might strike out the rest.

Mr. EDGAR. I am perfectly in accord with the Minister of Customs on that point, and the members for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) and North Renfrew (Mr. White), appear to be of the same opinion. The committee thought it would be going too far to give the three months' arrears, as provided by the Bill when introduced, unless they were limited to the three months previous to the insolvency. To meet the views of the Minister of Customs, with which I accord, I beg to move that all the words after the words "exceeding" in the Bill as amended be struck out, and the words "three months of such arrears" be inserted in the place thereof. That leaves the Bill as it was before the last amendment was put in.

Mr. IVES. This is amending an amendment which we have not now before us.

Mr. MACMASTER. It is very difficult to understand what is being done, and I think these amendments should be printed in order that the House may understand what it is doing. It was difficult to come to an understanding in the quiet deliberation of the committee; and it is much more difficult here.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that that would bring up the original difficulty in the Bill, and I agree with the suggestion of the member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) that it would be much better if the Bill was reprinted as amended and laid before the House, so that it might be understood.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Bill, as introduced, gave to these "clerks and other persons in the employ of the company in or about its business or trade" the privilege of being "collocated in the dividend sheet for any arrears of salary or wages due and unpaid to them at the time of the making of the winding-up order, not exceeding three months of such arrears." The committee, after examining the matter, thought that, instead of saying that, it should be "not exceeding the arrears which have accrued to them during the three months next previous to the date of such order." The hon. gentleman wants now to put aside the amendment of the committee, which was no doubt well weighed and considered, and to reinstate the clause, so far as it goes, as it was before. Well the committee thought that the arrears should be limited to the three months next previous to the date in such order, that is to say, that if previous to the date of the order the arrears amount only to two months, the clerk, or other person, would be paid for those two months, or if the period was only one month, he would be paid for only one month. But by this, the hon. gentleman wishes that the clerk or other person should be paid for three months, whether those three months have accrued at the time of the date of the order, or whether they extend beyond it.

Mr. EDGAR. At any time previous to it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think this is a very important amendment, and it comes into antagonism with a very important committee, one of the standing committees of the House, and I would suggest that the hon. gentleman move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again, and let the Bill be reprinted. In making this suggestion, the Government have no intention to let the Bill be lost. We will take care that the Bill comes back to the House, and has a chance to be discussed, and passed, if the House wishes. I think the Bill should be reprinted, and then when the hon. gentleman brings up his amendment, the committee will know exactly what is intended to be done, because we cannot at present understand the Bill we have in our hands. Not only have these words, "three months of such arrears," been amended by the committee, but eight or nine lines of the clause have disappeared. Unless we go to the Table and look at the Bill, which all the members of the committee cannot do, we cannot understand it. Therefore I make this suggestion to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. EDGAR. I am glad the leader of the House sees the importance of this Bill; and after his assurance that the Government will give the House full opportunity to consider the Bill, of course I adopt his suggestion. I suppose the Government will either put it on their Orders or——

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We will see that it comes up.

Mr. EDGAR. I beg leave to withdraw the amendment, and move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES OF ANIMALS.

Mr. MULOCK moved the consideration of Bill (No. 19) to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I have had a conference with the Minister of Justice in reference to the point that I had mentioned, and he seems to think that it would be difficult to frame a clause that would meet the difficulty I pointed out; and that, perhaps, it can be accomplished better through the regulations that the Bill empowers the Governor in Council to make.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I do not propose to discuss the amendment that I intend to offer when this Bill comes up for its third reading, but I think it is well that I should indicate to the Minister of Agriculture now what the amendment is. It may be remembered that when this Bill was under discussion last Session the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Harley), moved an amendment which excluded horses from the operations of the Bill. I objected to the passage of that amendment at the time, and gave my reasons. I pointed out that in my own county a great many instances had occurred of the spread of the disease known as glanders, from horses affected being put into stables without the proprietors of the stables knowing that the horses were thus affected. It is a fact, I believe, that in two cases, at all events, in my county, not only has this disease been productive of great loss in causing the death of animals, but it was strongly suspected that deaths of human beings also occurred through the same cause. I find in a local paper published in my county only a few days ago, this paragraph:

"A sad case is reported from Admaston, a few miles below Douglas. Robert Ross, jun., a young man, was driving up to the shanty with produce, shortly before Christmas. In the party was a team that had the glanders. Ross had a cut on the cheek into which some virus of the diseased animal seems to have become deposited. The disease has thus been communicated to the poor fellow, and now he lies at death's door, beyond the help of medical skill, with no hope of more than a few days' existence."

Under these circumstances, I conceive it to be my duty, when this Bill comes up for its third reading, to move it back into committee for the purpose of inserting a clause that will restore to its provisions the class of animals to which I refer. It was stated in the discussion which took place last Session, that a Bill passed by the Legislature of the Province of Ontario would provide the remedy which I seek; but so far I have been unable to find a single case where the provisions of that Bill have been put into operation. Certain machinery is required, and certain information must be laid under the provisions of that Bill, to enable it to be put into operation. As I pointed out, it is almost impossible for the Act of the Local Legislature to be put into operation, and for that reason I intend to move the amendment of which I now give notice.

Mr. IVES. I would like to ask some explanation from the hon. gentleman who moved the second reading of this Bill, of the relative value of sub-sections a, b and c. I find that sub-section a provides for the case of an animal affected with rinderpest being slaughtered. The Minister of Railways informs me that this clause has been taken out of the Bill. The only ground upon which the country can fairly be asked to pay compensation to farmers, is when the animals have not shown symptoms of disease, but when they are slaughtered for the public good. I never could understand upon what principle an animal which had already contracted disease, should be paid for by the Government. The owners and breeders of live stock have to take their chances like other business men, and it would be rather an unusual thing for a merchant to come to Parliament and ask it to adopt a measure which would grant compensation to merchants for goods burnt by fire, although the fire occurred by the carelessness of a neighbor. The only thing that could possibly justify the principle of having the public contribute to pay the value of animals, is when animals have been killed in order to prevent disease from spreading to neighboring cattle, and more particularly in cases where animals are healthy to all appearances and have not contracted disease, but where possibly they might have been in contact with infected cattle, and were slaughtered for the purpose of destroying all infection that might exist. It might be fairly argued that where cattle are healthy and a neighbor's cattle are sick with contagious disease, and when a Government officer visits the place and from his experience decides that the healthy cattle should be slaughtered in the public interest, the owner should be compensated; but that is the only case in which I would be in favor of giving any compensation, and that should be limited to the value of the cattle. The word thoroughbred pedigree cattle is a very wide term, and pedigree simply means father and mother. The clause does not state that the cattle have to be registered in a herd book, or that they have to have a certain number of registered sires and dams in a herd book, but it simply says that they must be thoroughbred pedigree cattle. The question as to being thoroughbred is a matter of opinion and hearsay; and as to the pedigree, it simply means that they have a sire and dam.

Amendments concurred in.

Mr. MULOCK moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew) moved in amendment:

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions to amend the Bill by adding the following as the first clause: "Paragraph b of section two of the Animals Contagious Diseases Act, forty-eight and forty-nine Victoria, chapter seventy, is hereby amended by striking out the word 'only' where specially mentioned."

Mr. POPE. The reason I was willing and consented to that clause being struck out last year was this: By the operation of this Bill it is intended to preserve the trade of this country so far as sheep and cattle are concerned, and those animals that we export from the country and to keep them from being scheduled if possible. So far as dealing with horses is concerned, that is quite a different matter. I believe that in no country are horses scheduled, and it would not interfere at all with the trade of this country whether they are in or out, as the hon. gentleman proposes to put it. I have always been of the opinion, and I am still of the opinion, that so far as possible matters of this kind relating to the public health, should be left to be dealt with by the Local Legislatures. Where they have exported animals that are not liable to be scheduled, I thought it was a safe thing to accept the proposition of my hon. friend on the other side, and perhaps it could be better done by these Local Governments than by this Government. It is an extremely difficult thing for this Government to deal with matters of this kind in distant places like British Columbia and Manitoba, to say nothing of the question of the expense of doing so. In Manitoba they passed a similar Bill to the one which is now on the Statute-book here, and they also passed one in Ontario, though I am not sure that compensation is allowed for animals killed in either of those Bills.

Mr. BLAKE. I hope the hon. gentleman will not press his amendment after the explanation of the late Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Pope), and under any circumstances I think it would be better, if he does insist on pressing it, that it should not be disposed of this evening. The subject was discussed on several occasions last Session. It excited a considerable amount of interest, and it was not until after a good deal of deliberation that the solution was reached which the Minister has stated. I think, under these circumstances, when an amendment is moved without notice, the House having had no opportunity of considering it fully, it would not be satisfactory to dispose of it at once. If the hon. gentleman is bound to press the amendment, if the hon. gentleman is not satisfied with the explanation of the Minister, I would suggest that the discussion of the amendment be reserved until the third reading, which should not take place to-night, and that the hon. gentleman should give notice on the paper. My hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), I think, led the opposition to the hon. gentleman's clause, but of course he has not had an opportunity of being aware that the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White) was proposing to reverse the judgment of the House to-night.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The arguments of the ex-Minister of Agriculture have not convinced me that I am wrong in pressing this matter on the House. I pressed it last Session, on the grounds which I then stated, and the same argument which is now adduced by the Minister of Railways, with reference to the trade of the country, was brought forward last year. I pointed out then that we had a large export trade from Canada in horses, and although those horses have not been scheduled in other countries so far, the time may come when owing to the progress of this disease through the country they may be scheduled; and if they are so scheduled, I think the Minister of Railways will come to the conclusion that it would have been in the public interest that he should not have excluded this class of animals from the Bill. In addition to the fact that it is possible that our horses may be scheduled in other countries through its becoming known that this disease is prevalent in this country, I think the Minister of Agriculture should take into consideration the question of the health of those animals in this country itself. There is no doubt a great deal of loss has been sustained by owners of horses throughout the country from the prevalence of this disease, and I think it is just as important that the Minister of Agriculture should be in a position to schedule a locality where this disease prevails, as that he should be in a position to schedule the localities in which rinderpest, sheep-rot, or other diseases of that nature prevail.

Mr. HICKEY moved the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. MULOCK. I think it is scarcely proper that that motion should be pressed at this late stage of the Session. If the hon. member desires to defeat the Bill, it had better be defeated to-night, and if it is only to postpone the third reading for the purpose of considering this point, it will simply involve a delay without our being likely to arrive at a different conclusion than the one we may arrive at to-night.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I do not press the adjournment.

Mr. MULOCK. Why not take the sense of the House on the amendment to-night. The House is in quite as good a position to decide the matter to-night as it will be when this Bill comes up again, if it does.

Mr. POPE. I may mention another reason why horses were not included, and that is that we followed pretty much the English practice, and there horses are not mentioned at all.

Motion (Mr. Hickey) negatived.

House divided on amendment of Mr. White (Renfrew).

LAW OF EVIDENCE.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 3) for the further amendment of the Law of Evidence in certain cases.—(Mr. Robertson, Hamilton.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. THOMPSON. Hon. members who have objected to the preceding clauses could hardly have attended to the reading of this clause, which contains a different principle. It is simply to require that judicial notice be taken of provincial statutes. It applies only, as printed, to criminal proceedings, but I wish to amend it by adding the following words, "or any civil proceeding, in respect of which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction in this behalf," striking out the words, "by Her Majesty or by any of her royal predecessors."

Mr. AMYOT. By the constitution, evidence in civil matters is settled by the Local Governments, and I do not believe this House has any right to interfere.

Mr. THOMPSON. There are certain matters in respect of which we have the right to legislate as to evidence, and the amendment is confined to those cases.

Mr. AMYOT. My contention is that the rules of evidence are settled by the Local Government, and in vain will this Government try to radicalise them. They may pass laws to abolish God if they like, but they will not abolish the power of the Local Legislatures.

Mr. THOMPSON. I should be very sorry to abolish either, but I presume we are not now dealing either with religion or with the powers of the Local Legislatures. The hon. gentleman will remember there are certain proceedings, such as proceedings in insolvency, which are not of a criminal nature, in respect of which this Parliament has a right to prescribe the procedure, and the principle which is consented to as regards criminal proceedings is to be extended to the civil proceedings over which we have control. If we have not control over any civil proceedings the amendment will not do any harm, but if we have it is fair the principle of the Bill should be extended to them.

The committee rose and reported.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I beg to move the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I propose in amendment that the Bill be not now read the third time, but this day six months.

THE VACANT SEAT FOR HALDIMAND.

Mr. LANDERKIN moved:

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION LANDS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 120) to make further provision respecting the administration of the public lands of Canada in British Columbia. He said: The object of this Act is to bring the lands which belong to us within the railway belt on the mainland within the jurisdiction of the Dominion Lands Board. Up to this time they have been practically administered by Mr. Trutch, the agent of the Government, but, as he will cease to hold that office after the end of this year, and we have now railway communication which will enable us to reach British Columbia easily, the purpose is to put the administration of the lands under the Dominion Lands Board. I have ordered the agents who have hitherto been in Victoria to move at once to the mainland, in order to give greater facility to the people who desire to enter their lands.

Mr. MITCHELL. I heartily congratulate the Government upon taking the step they propose, and so will all who know the circumstances connected with the management of lands in British Columbia and the administration of Mr. Trutch. I am sure the change will be a great improvement, and will give general satisfaction.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SEIZURE OF THE SCHOONER LYLIAN.

Mr. VAIL asked, What was the sum collected from the master and owners of the schooner Lylian, seized at Halifax in 1885, for a breach of the revenue laws?

Mr. BOWELL. There was no sum collected from the owners of the schooner Lylian. Upon investigation, it was found that there was no evidence of her having smuggled, and consequently she was released.

APPOINTMENT OF THE HON. J. S. C. WURTELE AS JUDGE.

Mr. LANGELIER asked, Why the appointment of the Hon. J. S. C. Wurtele as a Judge of the Superior Court for the Province of Quebec was not published in the Canada Gazette in like manner as those of the three other judges appointed at the same time as he? 2nd. When the Government propose to publish the said appointment? 3rd. Whether the commission of the said Hon. J. S. C. Wurtele has been despatched; and if not, why, and when will it be despatched? 4th. Whether the said Hon. J. S. C. Wurtele has been informed of his appointment, and when? If he has not been so informed, when he will be so?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The appointment has not been published, because the acceptance of the office has not been received. The Government will publish it as soon as it is received. The answer to the third question is the same as that to the first and second. The Hon. Mr. Wurtele was informed some days ago, and I expect his commission will be sent in a few days.

THE CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT.

Mr. ORTON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to ask the Government whether, in view of the fact that the Canada Temperance Act will be enforced on the 1st May next in a large number of counties, and that the operation of said Act will virtually render valueless millions of dollars worth of property, an opportunity will be given during the present Session, to consider the various Acts amending or otherwise affecting the operation of said Canada Temperance Act.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Bills to which the hon. gentleman alludes are on the list of public Orders, and it is not for the Government to state in what order they shall be taken up. There are several other Bills before the Bill of the hon. gentleman, and of course it depends on the disposition of hon. members who have charge of those Bills, whether they will allow the hon. gentleman to take up his Bill first. So far as the Government is concerned, of course we have no objection to his Bill having precedence over the others, but we are not in a position to give this or any other Bill the precedence.

FUTURE GOVERNMENT MEASURES.

Mr. BLAKE. I desire to call the attention of the Government to the fact that, in the Speech from the Throne, it was stated that we would be asked to consider the expediency of improving the judiciary system which obtains in the North-West Territories; also, to consider the propriety of amending the law relating to the business of the office of Queen's Printer, and of providing for the more satisfactory working of the present system of Government and parliamentary printing; also, that other measures would be laid before us, among them being a Bill for providing a better mode of trial of claims against the Crown, and some other measures to which I need not refer. We are now in the ninth week of the Session, and none of those measures have yet been proposed to be introduced. I would ask when it is proposed to introduce them?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The Bill for the establishment of a public Printing Bureau is now prepared and printed, and will be introduced to-morrow, I hope.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Bill with respect to the Judiciary in the North-West Territories has been prepared, and I am merely waiting for the resolutions to be drafted which require to be moved in Committee of the Whole House. The Bill respecting claims against the Crown, which stands on the Notice paper at present, we are not prepared to go on with this Session.

BONDS OF THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. McLELAN moved that to-morrow the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that if, after the Canadian Pacific Railway shall have been constructed and duly placed in operation to its terminus on the seaboard in the Province of British Columbia, it shall be established to the satisfaction of the Government that the retention of the amount of $5,000,000 in bonds under the provisions of the construction contract, as security for the operation of the railway, is no longer necessary in the public interest, the Governor in Council may order that the said bonds be released and delivered to the company.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 84) to make further provision respecting Summary Proceedings before Justices and other Magistrates. —(Mr. Thompson.)

THE DOMINION LANDS ACT.

House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 94) further to amend the Dominion Lands Act, 1883.—(Mr. White, Cardwell.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. CHARLTON. For what sub-sections are those substituted?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The only change is simply adding the words "superintendent of mines" to the Land Board. In the second case it is simply to require that all records and documents shall be attested by the Minister of the Interior or the Secretary of the Department of Interior, and that documents in the Dominion Lands Office in Manitoba shall be attested by the Secretary of the Dominion Land Board or other officer in charge of such office.

On section 5,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The only change is to authorise the entry to be made before the senior clerk, in the absence of the agent. This will be for the convenience of settlers who sometimes come to the office when the agent is absent, and under the present law the entry must be made before the agent.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I see no reason why the entry should not be made before any clerk of the office, all of whom are responsible for the proper discharge of their duties.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). It is desirable to have the work by some particular officer who will be at all times in the office, and it is therefore provided that when the Dominion Land Agent is absent, the senior clerk performing his duty shall act.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain the change proposed.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The change proposed is a very important one. It is proposed to authorise persons who may be engaged in towns, or on the railways, or any other way, and who desire to secure for themselves a home in the North-West, perhaps in the same neighborhood with their friends, to have two years in which they can reside off the land and make a little money to enable them to go on and work their land afterwards, but they still require to have a period of three years' residence on the land before getting their patents.

Mr. BLAKE. There are cases, with the precise details of which I am not sufficiently acquainted at present, in which persons are complaining that the more rigid provisions which subsist at present as to residence have prevented them from obtaining homesteads, though they have substantially complied with the provisions. I presume from what the hon. gentleman has explained that the rigidity of the regulations as to residents is now to be somewhat relaxed. It would not seem to be unreasonable that persons who have been engaged in acquiring homesteads under the old regulations should be enabled to avail themselves of the greater elasticity which it is proposed to allow, and if their cases fall within the law, the Department should be in a position to give it to them. I doubt, however, that would be the result of the amendment without a special declaration of that kind.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I may say, though I do not know whether we have quite the power to do it, yet it has been the practice of the Dominion Board and the Department as well, to apply the amendment of 1884 to the Act as to residents within two miles, in the case of those persons who are really bond fide settlers; that is, if they have resided within the two-mile limit, and are prepared in good faith to comply with the other provisions as to residents, they get their patents. I do not know whether it would be advisable to put in a special provision of that kind or not, but we can understand that if Parliament assents to the proposition it would apply to every one who was prepared to show that he was bond fide in occupation of the land.

Mr. BLAKE. The question is whether the course which has been pursued, and is proposed to be pursued, is a lawful course. It is not wise deliberately to break the law, and it is particularly unwise on the part of those who are responsible for making the law, and who are supposed to be responsible for its administration. I am not prepared to say whether the course is lawful or not,and I think the hon. gentleman had better consult the legal adviser of the Government before the third reading and ascertain whether he is clothed with the proper legal authority. There is another point which has been presented to me, and which, more or less, comes within the provisions of this clause. It has been stated that there are a very large number of persons who find themselves unable to comply with the conditions as to pre-emptions. I am not expressing any opinion as to the merits of the suggestion, but it has been suggested within a day or two that it would be a proper provision to extend, not as to the future, but as to the past, to cases in which there has been a large and meritorious cultivation, the same provisions with reference to pre emptions as those which apply to homesteads.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Some such suggestions have been made, in fact no suggestion was more frequently made than this one with regard to persons who have pre-emptions and who find it difficult to comply with the conditions. The matter is at this moment very seriously engaging the attention of the Government, and would have been settled earlier, but for the unfortunate illness of the First Minister, who has not been able to give his presence at Council as frequently as all of us could desire. Having been connected with the Department before, the hon. gentleman can quite understand that we see the importance of not deciding upon a matter of the kind without his attention having been engaged upon it. I do not think it is necessary, however, that the matter should be done by an Act of Parliament in any way, for the reason that the price of the pre-emption is not fixed by Act of Parliament. We have the authority; all that we are bound by is that we shall not sell the land at less than $1 per acre. That is the only provision by Statute in regard to it, and therefore the matter could be fixed by Order in Council and regulation—at least, I am so advised, and it probably will be fixed in some such way as to give reasonable facilities to persons who are already in the country to meet their pre-emption claims.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know, I am sure, whether the hon. gentleman has, under the power which enables him to sell at not less than $1 per acre, the authority to make rebates of this description, but I should think that on an important matter of that kind Parliament should have an opportunity of pronouncing upon it. I think it is a very important step, which should be explained, and the principles upon which it should be applied, which may be complicated and varying in detail, ought to be given to us. It is important that these matters should be dealt with on a general principle, and not separately by Orders in Council in each particular case. In a word, it is important that we should retain, in some measure, our power over the Government in the administration of these North-West lands.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that Parliament ought to be well informed on these matters, and should have the opportunity, if it desires, of expressing its opinion upon them. I may say that several proposals have been made. One is that the second homestead should be allowed on the pre-emption, thus practically giving 320 acres instead of 160. Another is that the settler who lives three years longer on his land, and performs certain duties, shall receive a rebate of one-half of his pre emption on the performance of those duties; and still another is that there shall be allowed an extension of time of three years, without interest, for the payment of the money. These are some of the proposals which have been made, and they are now engaging the attention of the Government. If a decision is come to within a few days, as I hope there will be, I shall be glad to communicate it to the House before the third reading, as I think it is right that Parliament should be informed of the decision when it is arrived at.

Mr. WATSON. I am glad that the Government have under consideration some change with regard to pre-emptions and their payment. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the settlers throughout a great portion of the North-West do not feel themselves in a fit position to pay the price at $2 or $2.50 per acre for pre emptions. I believe that the most popular movement, and one which would be most in the interest of the country, would be for the Government to allow the homesteader to make a second homestead of his pre-emption, as this would ensure the settlement of the country. As the Minister of the Interior is probably aware, there are numbers who have to borrow money to pay for the pre emption and have no money to improve their farms with. It is almost impossible for many settlers to comply with the conditions at $2 and $2.50 per acre without involving themselves in debt. I should like also to see the Minister go so far as to provide for homesteading on the condition of cultivation alone as well as for a homestead on conditions of settlement. Let the amount of cultivation be large. The only way our country can become wealthy is by raising grain and exporting it; and if you can induce workingmen and others to put their surplus earnings into the cultivation of the soil, I think it would be of advantage to the country. Homesteading by six months' residence in the year has in many cases proven to be a mere farce; I have no doubt the Minister of the Interior found that to be the case when he visited the North-West. I am satisfied that 50 per cent. of the patents granted by the Crown were granted for homesteads on which there were not $150 worth of improvements. I think homesteading on conditions of large cultivation would lead to far better results. The First Minister stated, when this Bill was first under discussion in 1883, that if an Irishman cultivated only half an acre with a spade, he would be as much entitled to a patent as the man who cultivated 160 acres. I think that is a wrong view to take of the matter. I believe the more land that is cultivated the better for the country, and I hope some provision will be made in the Bill for granting homesteads on conditions of cultivation.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I am afraid I cannot concur in the views of the hon. gentleman. I look upon homesteading in its proper sense—residence on the land—as one of the conditions we ought to adhere to very closely. The object is not to place land in the hands of people in the cities and towns, who might send people out to cultivate it, while they held the land for speculative purposes. What is wanted is people living on the land. I think it would be a great misfortune if we relaxed in any degree the conditions of residence for obtaining a patent. With regard to pre-emptions, I may say that there is a good deal of discussion in the North-West to-day as to whether 320 acres are not too much for a man to cultivate, and whether the 160 acres are not quite enough for a homestead. I have had the views of practical farmers from Ontario, who have been in the North-West some years, and who, with their strong common sense, applied to the conditions of a new country, are able to give practical advice on the subject. There are strong opinions on both sides, but I think the general opinion, except as to those who want to get a second homestead, is that 160 acres are sufficient. I know the argument on the other side. It is this: In that country, where mixed farming is necessary, it is somewhat difficult to raise artificial grasses, and there is no doubt that 160 acres kept as prairie, form a capital pasture ground for cattle; and farmers with 160 acres besides for cultivation can successfully follow mixed farming. That is the argument. But I am certainly much opposed to giving a second homestead on a pre-emption, and thus giving 320 acres instead of 160. If we treat our people liberally otherwise, 160 acres as a free homestead is a very liberal grant. As to the conditions of cultivation, under the law at present they are undefined, and it is left largely for the Dominion Lands Board to determine what extent is sufficient to justify the granting of a patent. Fifteen acres of cultivation is held to be sufficient generally; but the assumption is that if a man goes on a homestead to make it his home, he will cultivate as much as possible, so as to increase the value of his farm, and in a great number of cases more than fifteen acres are cultivated. As the country grows, and as greater prosperity comes to it, I am satisfied that the settlers will cultivate still more.

Mr. WATSON. In 1883 I moved an amendment to the Land Bill embodying provisions like these: that in the first year the settler should break twenty acres; that in the second year he should have twenty acres in crop and thirty additional acres broken; that in the third year he should have fifty acres in crop and thirty acres additional broken; and that in the fourth year he should have buildings erected to the value of $600, and should live at least three months on his homestead previous to completing his entry. That would be more in the interest of the settlement of the country than granting a homestead on merely six months' residence, with nothing more than nominal improvements. The Minister says that he requires fifteen acres to be broken, which is worth about $75. If the improvements required were greater, some person would be obliged to live on the land and cultivate the soil. There is no room for speculation in the proposal I make. If a man puts his earnings into the cultivation of the soil, he should be considered entitled to a quarter-section of land, and if you require him to make improvements on the land he will, as a rule, live on his farm after the fourth year. A great many young men go into the country with little or no means; they have to work in the summer, and in the winter they put up a little house on their homestead to fulfil the conditions of residence, and do nothing more. That is of no benefit to the country, and it is a bad thing to encourage. If there were homesteading on the condition of cultivation, a great many young men without means could take up a quarter-section for themselves and could work on neighboring farms in order to earn money to enable them to make improvements on their own homesteads. I believe a great number would avail themselves of this privilege if it were allowed. With regard to the price of pre-emptions, I believe a great many will forfeit their pre-emptions if the price is not reduced from $2 to $1 an acre, and if there are no means by which they can get a second homestead, it will be a great hardship. If the Minister does not make the reduction general, I hope he will take into consideration the special district where settlers have been induced to settle under promise of railway facilities. They have been expecting railway facilities for the last five or six years, but up to this time they have not got them, and they made nothing out of the land. In the first few years they spent all the means they had, and then merely eked out a sort of miserable existence, making no money, because they are too far from railway communication. Where lands are taken up in such districts the Government ought to make special provisions that they will be received at $1 per acre pre emption. Most of the people who settled in the north-western portion of Manitoba went in expecting to have railway communication, which would enable them to pay $2 or $2.50 pre-emption. They took up pre-emption lands, and have simply been spending since the little money they had trying to hold on to their land, whilst some who went in a few months previous received their pre-emptions at $1 per acre, and others in Hamilton township, around Birtle, who went in at the same time, received land at $1 per acre. I think the Government should make a special case in the interests of those people who resided there so long and are building up the country.

Mr. SPROULE. It would be a great mistake if the Government were to take into consideration any such suggestion. If cases of that kind were considered as special cases, similar exceptions would be presented from all parts of the country. It is no great hardship to a settler, when he gets 160 acres for nothing, to have to pay $2.50 an acre, if he wants 160 more. I believe a smaller homestead and pre-emption would be better than to enlarge it, or to allow any special exceptions. In reference to allowing cultivation homesteads, public opinion is against that, as the tendency would be to induce those living in villages to take up homesteads and pre-emption all over the country, thus rendering it impossible to build roads and keep up schools and churches, etc. Everywhere throughout the country the complaint is made that the settlements are too sparse to enable the settlers to cope successfully with the difficulties of pioneer life, as there are too few settlers in the townships to build the roads and keep up schools. Where there are schools, they are at a great distance from the settlements, so that it is almost impossible for many of the farmers to use them, and this difficulty would increase tenfold were the suggestion of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) to gain footing and cultivation homesteads allowed to be taken up. It would be in the interests of the settlers if the size of homesteads and pre-emptions were reduced instead of being enlarged.

Mr. WATSON. It is true, as the hon. member says, that settlements are sparse, but that is due to the checker-board system, by which every other section in Manitoba is reserved for railway purposes. I notice, however, in some public prints, that the Government intend, in the future, to reserve townships instead of sections, and I believe it is a good move. That is the principal reason why settlement is so sparse. Those lands have been sold to speculators at public competition, when they should have been reserved either in blocks or the land placed in the hands of homesteaders.

On section 6,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The object of this is simply to enable the Homestead Inspector, the moment a notice is given, to examine the improvements and report. In the United States, at least in some parts, they are obliged to give notice in a newspaper by advertisement when they intend to apply for patents, but there is no proposal to do anything of the kind here. This is strongly urged by the Dominion Lands Board, who have the practical working of the matter.

Mr. BLAKE. The practical result of the section will be that it postpones unnecessarily for six months the right to make application for the patent.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is not the intention.

Mr. BLAKE. It says: "Every person who has acquired a right and purposes to apply shall give six months' notice." It is after he has acquired the right he has to give notice.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I see the force of the objection, and as we will have to go into committee on the Bill again, because I want to give notice of one or two other amendments which I propose to make, I would ask that this section be allowed to stand over.

Mr. BLAKE. I would make this suggestion to the hon. gentleman: I am not well aware what the provisions of the law are as to its becoming public, when such a condition of things has been reached with reference to land in the North-West Territory, that they are subject to municipal taxation. But if the provisions of the law do not contain full arrangements for that becoming public, it is clear that the grievances under which the people in many sections of that country are laboring may be continued and even enlarged. If these provisions are not fully satisfactory, there ought to be some public notice to the municipal officers, or some public notice from which they can derive knowledge that a state of things has been reached in which the land has become taxable. It is little likely that the individual settler will escape; as he is there and is known, he will be assessed; but the man who has obtained under former regulations, or some existing regulations, the right to the land without any visible occupation, the speculator or purchaser without conditions of settlement, is the person who has the opportunity for, and interest in the process of escaping municipal taxation as long as he can. Since the period when I addressed an enquiry on this head to the hon. gentleman, I have received from different quarters of the North-West Territory —from points at considerable distances from each other, and from persons who spoke for many more than themselves, without the knowledge that I had made an enquiry—strong expressions of the grievances they labored under with reference to the lands sold by the Canadian Pacific Railway to the north-western corporation. The hon. gentleman knows that the provision of the bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was that the lands should be free from taxation for twenty years or until sold. It was not intended that the moment the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had acquired from the Government a right to any specific lands and had alienated those lands, that exemption should cease; but if, by the operations of the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company together, there exists no means by which the municipal officers can be made aware of what specific lands have been sold to this corporation or the other, to individuals or to corporations to whom the company may sell, it is clear that practically the exemption is kept up. I may observe that the hon. gentleman will not very much surprise the North-West Land Corporation if he does something or other to facilitate the people of the North-West having justice at their hands. I observe, from the last report of that company, presented only a few days ago at their annual meeting—I have not got it here, but I give the purport—they state that they have not been taxed hitherto, but that it might be expected that they would soon be taxed. I think there would be very considerable difficulty in taxing them, unless the hon. gentleman makes some arrangement—and I observe that he is proposing to make a trifling arrangement or two with the company which may facilitate his making this arrangement—to have some certainty, as to all the lands left to them, that the moment the lands are sold the fact shall be known to the people that they are sold, and the lots so sold shall become subject to taxation if there be a municipal corporation in the neighborhood which has the power of taxation. These people say they feel it doubly because they settled in that part of the country at a time when it was by no means expected by anybody that the odd lots would be sold to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Of course, it was lawful for the Government to sell them under the law, but it was certainly not expected at that time that they would be sold at a period when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had not earned their lands, and were not entitled to the whole extent of the lands along their line. They say they had the right to expect that those lands would not be subject to exemption at all, but they are subject to the exemption, and, having been sold, to a great extent, in a territory in which the sale was not anticipated, I think the least these people are entitled to claim from the Government is that they shall have some special consideration, as far as the power and good will of the Government can give it to them, in order to have it practically known that sales take place by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, so that, at any rate from that time, the lands may be taxed.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The difficulty is in carrying that out; I mean the method of doing it. We give these twenty-five million acres of land, or whatever quantity is given, to the Canadian Pacific Railway. As soon as it is earned by them, it becomes their property. How we are going to control their sales I cannot quite understand. We have no power to demand that they shall give us notice when they make a sale, and that we shall make publication of that. The moment the land is sold and becomes occupied it is open to taxation, and I think the municipal authorities may very well know when land is sold by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and when, therefore, it becomes subject to taxation. I quite understand that this question of municipal taxation is a very serious one, not only as to these lands, but as to the lands of many of the settlers themselves, who, I am sorry to say, in many cases, appear anxious to escape the payment of taxes. The land, as a general principle, perhaps it may be said, though I speak without legal knowledge, is not liable to taxation, or rather cannot be sold for taxes, until the patent is issued, until it has become the property of some holder other than the Crown. That moment it does become subject to taxation, but up to that time, at all events in the first three years, when the settler is earning his patent, that land is not liable to taxation, in the sense that it cannot be sold for taxes; although I have urged upon settlers who have written to me—and many of them have written to me—that, as they live in a community which depends for support, in regard to its roads and bridges, and education, and other things, upon the taxes, they ought in honor to pay them. Then, the Local Government of Manitoba have unfortunately exempted all the ordinary goods and chattels of the settler from seizure for taxes, so that there is practically nothing to be seized for taxes until the settler receives his patent. I was unconsciously guilty of an expression in conversation with some gentlemen in the North-West, which has been repeated a great deal, and letters have reached me upon the subject nearly a thousand miles from the place where the conversation took place. I happened to say, referring to the municipal law which exists in Manitoba, that a man was almost a fool who paid taxes, that is, as a business proposition, though as a matter of honor he ought to pay them, because the lands were not liable to be sold for taxes and the chattels were exempt from seizure. That conversation, which occurred in a drawing room, and seems to have been talked of outside, was repeated everywhere; and I was reported as having said that the settlers in the North-West were not liable to taxation. As a matter of fact they are, and they ought to pay their taxes. But I quite concur in the opinion that the Canadian Pacific Railway ought not to be permitted to transfer its exemption to parties who purchase from it, and that everything should be done to prevent that. I can only say that, as far as I have any control in the matter, everything will be done to prevent it; because, the moment they sell their lands, the land should be subject to taxation the same as any other land.

Mr. BLAKE. The cases of the settlers whom I have referred to are not the cases of those who are seeking to evade the payment of taxes like those to whom the hon. gentleman unconsciously tendered that piece of advice which he now appears to regret having given, but cases of settlers who are paying taxes and who find that the adjoining land of proprietors who are holding it for speculation is being improved at their expense, and that they cannot get taxes out of that land. The hon. gentleman's promise to do all in his power to alter these results would be more satisfactory if he had not prefaced it by stating that he had nothing in his power.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I did not say that.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, he commenced by saying: "The Government cannot do anything, what can we do?" I say that, finding that something ought to be done and being powerless now to do it, he ought to clothe himself with the power necessary to the accomplishment of his good wishes and good intentions; else, as soon as the happy day of prorogation arrives, his good wishes and intentions will be quite useless. The truth is that his land is liable to taxation under the law. The difficulty is that, as long as the law remains so imperfect that the company is not compelled to divulge what lands it has sold and has so rendered liable to taxation, it escapes its liability. The law makes it liable, but the law is imperfect by not providing the machinery by which the circumstances under which it becomes liable shall be known, and what we want is a provision in the law to make it a condition of the company making the sales that they shall publish the sales, so that we shall know when the exemption ceases. Else, for twenty years to come, or until the time when the corporation to which the company sells makes a sale, it will not be known, and the land will be free from taxation.

Mr. WATSON. Not only is the land of the Canadian Pacific Railway in this position but other lands. As the Minister has stated, unless a Crown patent is issued, the land cannot be sold for taxes. There are a great many municipalities in Manitoba to-day in a very awkward position. They have taxed those lands because there were settlers on them, and it has been stated that $500 worth of goods are exempt, and I believe they are trying to pass an Act through the Local House at present which practically exempts from sale all the chattels on lands. A year ago an Act was passed which prevented the sale of chattels except for the lands on which the chattels were found. Previous to that, they could be sold for vacant lands and lands in a similar position; and now they are trying to exempt even the chattels on the land, and that being the case many municipalities are in a very bad position, because they have been assessing those lands and taxing them. They have gone on with improvements, and they found out when the time for the tax sale came round, that no person would buy those lands because the municipality had no right to sell them on account of their not being patented. Now, if there could be some provision made whereby the taxes against those lands with a settler on them would stand against the land when the patents issued, then the municipality would be all right. In some cases parties who had homesteads have left them, and in that case, of course, the municipality is out entirely. Now, it appears to me these Crown lands must be improved by the money that is spent by the municipality in making roads and other improvements of that description, and, therefore, the amount that is against those lands for taxes imposed by the municipality should stand against them even if they are Crown lands. There should be some provisions whereby the municipality might be recouped for the outlay they have made in figuring on collecting so much taxes. There are a great number of instances such as I have described, with respect both to Canadian Pacific Railway lands and Crown lands.

Mr. SPROULE. Could not the Canadian Pacific Railway Company be requested to make out an annual return, something the same as the Canada Company does in Ontario, as to what lands have been sold and what lands are yet unsold? With reference to the taxes standing against the land, I think it is much the same in Manitoba as in Ontario. If you buy unpatented lands to-day in Ontario for taxes, you are still obliged to pay the amounts held against them by the Crown, and I suppose the same provisions exist in Manitoba. I think the company should be requested to make an annual return the same as the land company in Ontario.

Mr. MILLS. I think the hon. gentleman will require to make further provision in this Bill than he has already done. It will be necessary to amend the law by providing that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall report their sales annually to the Government so as to make those lands taxable, and it will be also necessary that the Government should do what has been done in Ontario, and I suppose in the other Provinces, that is, to make the interest of the settler in the lands liable to sale for the purpose of meeting any taxation that may be imposed by the municipality, otherwise it would be impossible for the municipality to enforce any provision for taxation to meet its liability, and to pay for the improvements that have been made, certainly while the municipality incurs expense by way of improving the municipality generally, the lands, although they may be still lands of the Crown, have, to a certain extent, partaken in the advantages of those improvements, and it is not an unreasonable thing to provide that, in so far as those lands are occupied by the settler, his interest in them shall be liable for the taxation that shall be incurred. But I wished to call the hon. gentleman's attention to section 6. I do not think it meets the object which he has in view. The section provides that the party is to communicate his intention to make such application six months before the application is made. Now, this imposes the duty, first, to give notice that the party intends to apply for a patent, and afterwards to make application for a patent. The hon. gentleman will see that that is wholly unnecessary; it is only necessary that the party in occupation should give notice for a patent —that is all that is required—and then, that notice being given, the commissioner can direct the inspector to examine the lands and to see whether the homestead conditions are complied with. The two applications are altogether unnecessary. The application for a patent is all that is required, and the section should be amended accordingly.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman understands we are leaving this section in the meantime, but I am obliged to him for the suggestion. With regard to taxes, I find that the complaint is with regard to cancelled homesteads, as I found when I was in the west. I accordingly gave instructions that, in case of cancelled homesteads, notice shall be sent to the municipal clerk to obtain from him a statement of the taxes against that land, and the first charge upon the improvement is the municipal taxes that are due; that goes first to the clerk, and then the balance, if any, will go to the original settler or the Government.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman will see that if he takes authority to do that, and it ought to be provided for by law, it would only meet the case of the homesteads; but how about the case of pre-emption? If it is the intention of the Government that these lands shall be charged with the municipal taxes, so that, if the homestead is cancelled, the party acquiring it shall know that there is a lien upon the land to the amount of the taxation, will that apply to the pre-emption law as well as to the homestead?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman will see that so far as pre-emption is concerned, the pre-emption does not belong to the man until six months after getting his patent out, all he does with regard to his pre-emption is to signify his intention of taking it out; but he may not take it out at all, therefore we cannot possibly deal with that.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Why should he not pay his taxes when he has indicated his intention?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I was going to state that the arrangement I made was this: Whatever is due on a property, whether it be a homestead or a homestead and pre-emption, whatever appears by the municipal clerk's book to be taxed against that man's property, shall be the first charge upon the improvements he has made, in the case of cancelled homesteads—for that applied equally to pre-emptions and homesteads. That is all the taxes that can be levied.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I would ask the hon. gentleman what provision there is now for taxing the owner of the land before the patent is issued, either the homestead or the pre-emption? What provision is there for assessing the land, and, in the case of non-payment, for disposing of the land in order to cover the taxes?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is a matter that we certainly have nothing to do with. Local taxation is a matter for the municipal authorities to deal with.

Mr. CAMERON. (Huron). True; but they have no power, as I understand, to collect taxes on a homestead or pre-emption; they have no lien upon the land for unpaid taxes, and there ought to be some provision for that. It is perfectly useless, so far as the municipality is concerned, to say that they can assess if there is no power to collect. As I understand it, there is no power to collect now, just as there was not in the old Province of Ontario, until a law was made. At one time they could not collect taxes for unpatented land out of the land, and the law was altered in that respect so as to enable the municipalities to sell the unpatented land for arrears of taxes. The case in the North-West is the same, and unless you enable the municipalities to sell the unpatented lands for taxes, it is useless to give the power to assess the land, for there is no way of collecting. Now, a man is not bound to take his patent out when he has complied with his settlement duties. He may let it stand for years, and during all these years he can hold his lands, and he need not pay taxes, and the municipalities cannot collect the taxes, simply because they cannot sell. As the law is now in Ontario, you can sell a man's interest in it, whatever it is, and it ought to be the same there. The municipalities ought to have the power of disposing of the interest of the locatee in the land for arrears of taxes, and the purchaser, under tax sales, should stand in the position of the original locatee.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). It seems to me that the municipal authorities there can do exactly the same as is done in Ontario, where they can sell a man's interest.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). No, they could not do it here until they got power by law to do it; and the Local Legislature cannot grant the power to do it because it is Crown property.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is a matter for municipal arrangement altogether, and I do not think we have power to legislate. I have no hesitation in saying that I should regret to see it done, for the reason that no greater evil has occurred in Ontario than the obtainment by speculators of large tracts of land at taxation sales which they hold to-day, and it has been a very serious injury to the country, and it would be precisely the same in the North-West. It is not for me to criticise an act of the Local Legislature, but the matter rests with the people themselves. The real difficulty rests with the people themselves. If the Local Legislature will simply do away with special exemptions from taxation, then they can collect the taxes. The people have power to elect their own representatives, and, if they find this difficulty about collecting taxes to be an injury, all they have to do is to instruct their representatives to vote for the repeal of the exemption clause, and the moment they do so the chattels will be there to pay the taxes year after year, and the taxes will be paid. That is the simple way of dealing with the matter.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell).

Mr. TROW. There is one thing the Government could do and should do. If they have any control over the Canadian Pacific Railway they should see that the company make annual or quarterly returns of all lands sold by them, in order to give the municipalities of Manitoba the right to tax the property of the then holders. It is bad enough that the Syndicate should be exempt from taxation for a long series of years. The very life of a municipality is that all the lands within its boundaries are liable to an equitable rate of taxation. While it is true that the Syndicate have exemption from taxation on their land, I do not know whether municipalities would have the power to sell for taxes the right of the occupant of the land bought from them. I am inclined to think they have that right. It is, however, a matter belonging to themselves, and if they have not the right they should obtain it.

Mr. MILLS. I have no doubt that the Minister of the Interior is correct in saying that if the exemption of personal property were done away with the evil would be to some extent cured. But the evil he mentioned of the lands falling into the hands of speculators could not take place in regard to homesteads, for all who procure the right to homestead were obliged to conform to the provisions of the law with respect to homesteading, and therefore a large number of homesteads could never pass into the hands of an individual.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I think the suggestion thrown out should commend itself to the judgment of the members of the House, namely, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should furnish returns of all lands that they sell. There is what is called the North-West Land Company that bought a very large number of acres from the Canadian Pacific Railway. We do not know how much they bought —we are kept in the dark.

An hon. MEMBER. They are liable to taxation.

Mr. WOODWORTH. The lands are not taxed. That is what we complain of; and there is no return made. Some lands are taxed, but a great deal escapes taxation; and it is not an answer for this Parliament to give the people of Canada to say that we have nothing to do with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and have no power over them. We brought them into being; they live, move and have their being here; and I am quite sure that the created is not greater than the creator, and that we have the power to oblige them — when there is not a Session in which they do not come here for some concessions to be made to them—to do justice and make any returns asked for, especially when the undertaking is so intimately connected with the public affairs of the country. When the taxation of the country has largely gone in keeping the company in existence, to say that we have no power over them, that we must allow them to act according to their own sweet will, and that when any action on their part is required we must go hat in hand and ask them pleasantly if they will be kind enough to make certain returns, is an argument I cannot agree with. This Parliament should have great power over the company, and can compel it to make returns. It is a reasonable request that the Minister of the Interior, and the Government of which he is a member, should see that provisions are placed in the law so as to compel returns to be given.

Mr. TROW. When any patent is given from the Indian Department, the returns are made direct from the Department to the registry officer. It is the same in Ontario with regard to Crown lands. The moment lands vested in the Crown are patented, the returns are made to the registrar of the county where the lands are located; and this plan could easily be applied with respect to the Syndicate lands.

Mr. WATSON. While this matter is being discussed, I desire to mention for the consideration of the Minister of Interior—if the hon. gentleman intends to make a requisition for returns from the Canadian Pacific Railway—that large quantities of lands were sold by the Syndicate to different parties during the "boom" in the North-West, which lands are now again in the hands of the Syndicate. Those lands have been subject to taxation for a year or two by the municipalities, and some improvements were made, but unfortunately the people were unable to comply with the conditions, and the lands have fallen back into the hands of the Syndicate. In case the Government ask the Syndicate to make returns as suggested, there should be some provision by which the amount of money standing against those lands, in the books of the municipalities, should be paid from the sale of the lands, because the Syndicate has benefited by the payments made and forfeited by the purchasers. If the Syndicate has received certain payments on lands which have fallen back into their hands, and are now free from taxation, it certainly ought to pay the taxes of the municipality out of the amount received from the re-sale.

On section 8,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). This clause is one of considerable importance. So far as my own experience and observation are concerned, and the opinion of the great mass of the people in the North-West whom I have met there, there is really—speaking in the general—but one opinion as to the importance of doing away with the second homestead.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I think this clause should not have effect on those persons who at the present time, or at the passage of this Act, had received the certificate mentioned in clause 37, or who have been recommended for patents, or who have applied for a second entry. I do not think these people should be debarred from obtaining the second entry, but there is no provision here which will prevent them from being debarred. I do not think that the Bill should be retrospective, and I should suggest an amendment of this kind:

But this clause shall not affect the right, at present existing, of any person to a second homestead entry, who, at the time of passing this Act, shall have been granted a certificate as above mentioned, or who has been recommended for patent, or who has already applied for second homestead entry.

Mr. TROW. I do not think we should prevent a man from obtaining a second homestead. The new settlers, as a rule, are the pioneers of the country, and many of them, after making some improvements on their homesteads, can sell them to advantage to new settlers, and then proceed westward. They require another homestead and they place a good homesteader in their old position, and so are the means of settling the country. This is the case in Ontario and Manitoba, and I think it is wrong on the part of the Government to deprive anyone of a second homestead under such circumstances. For instance, it often happens that immigrants come in from the Old Country with $300 or $400 who have families in charge, and are not prepared to travel far in search of homesteads. They come to these places which are partially improved and squat down on them while the other proceeds westward. I have known parties of that description, after making small improvements, go on 100 miles further west, and then after a few years proceed still further west. I think they are a class of settlers who should be encouraged.

Mr. MILLS. I agree in the view of the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Trow). There are many parties who are good pioneer settlers, who are not very thrifty or prosperous; they become involved; they find they can sell their homesteads to advantage after acquiring them, and begin anew. I think, so far as the Government and the country are concerned, when they have sold out, we have just as much interest in securing them by giving them additional homesteads as if they were applicants for the first time; otherwise, when they sell they will cross the border.

Mr. TROW. I am prepared to state that one-half of the Canadian settlers who have left our North-West and gone to Montana, Dakota and Minnesota are of that class who have sold out in Manitoba; and finding they could not get a second homestead, have travelled a few miles across the border, and obtained homesteads in the United States.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The only difficulty in the statement of the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Trow), whose opinions on North-West matters I value highly, is that these people have the opportunity of getting a second homestead in the North-West, and it is difficult to see how that could be their reason for leaving it.

Mr. TROW. Only very lately.

Mr. BLAKE. During the great bulk of the settlement there was not the right to the second homestead.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There was for a good many years.

Mr. TROW. For about two years.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I may say that there are parts of the country which have been very seriously injured by settlers performing their duties in a very perfunctory way, with no other idea when they got their patents than not to sell their land but to go further west and obtain another homestead. The first address with which I was honored when I went to the North-West was at Minnedosa, and the first clause of that address was a very strong one recommending the abolition of the principle of a second homestead, as having been found to be exceedingly injurious to that part of the country. No doubt the principle upon which the second homestead provision was adopted, was exceedingly plausible, that is, that a settler coming in accustomed to pioneer work would make some improvements, put up a house and do some cultivation, and then that the new settler coming in, generally from the Old Country, unaccustomed to pioneer methods, finding such a place would purchase it, while the old settler with his pioneer methods would go further west and get another. If that had been found to be the practical result, there would have been something to justify the principle, but as a matter of fact that has not been the general experience. You will find in the Rapid City settlement, and in many other portions of Manitoba and the North-West, that the old homesteads taken up by the original settlers have really no improvements upon them, that they are worse instead of better, by the so-called improvements that have been made upon them, than they were in the original prairie, because it is well known that by breaking up the prairie soil and leaving it and allowing weeds to grow up in it, it becomes much more difficult of cultivation and much less valuable than the original prairie was. That has been the practical effect of allowing the second homestead. The fact has been that people go into the North-West with land-hunger strong upon them; that is one of the incidents of settlement in the North-West country; they go in with the intention of getting a first homestead, of performing the duties in the most perfunctory way, and then going on further west and taking up another and make some more improvements there. But it is three years taken out of their lives, and many of these men who took their second homesteads told me that they would have been infinitely better off if they had remained at the first homestead and cultivated it in the way they cultivated the second. The effect has been injurious to these men themselves, and injurious especially to the part of the country they leave—not selling their homesteads, but leaving them in the hope that they will become valuable by settlement around them, and that they will get a better price by-and-bye. I know that a large number of the newspapers of the North-West were at one time strongly in favor of the second homestead principle, but I know that they have practically admitted that experience has led them to change their minds, and they now hold the very opposite view. Some of the most influential journals have changed their minds on this subject, as the result of the practical experience of the operation of what appeared to be a most plausible system in the first instance; and if the hon. gentleman will take the trouble to examine the records of the land department in the United States—if he looks at the last volume issued under the title of the "Public Domain," he will find a number of very plausible schemes, which were adopted for the purpose of facilitating the settlement of the country, but almost every one of which has been afterwards, as the result of experience, protested against very strongly by the officer specially charged with the administration of the laws. He prays Congress to repeal them, but the complaint there is that Congress cannot be moved to deal with these matters. Probably if the heads of Departments were Ministers, with the responsibility of Ministers, these things would have been changed in the United States long ago. The danger in all these cases is in taking an individual case, which seems to be perfectly plausible, and drafting on that a general system, which proves to be disastrous to the people who avail themselves of it, as well as to the country at large. There is a good deal of force in the amendment the hon. gentleman has proposed, and I do not think I have any objection to accepting it.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Certainly the hon. gentleman has made out a very plausible case. But two things have to exist to induce a man to go further west; either his land is no good, and it is not worth his while to settle upon it, or else he can sell it to advantage. If the latter is the case, the country loses nothing; it merely gets a new settler, and the man has gone further west, perhaps to catch up with some of his relatives or friends who have come from the Old Country or from the east, and whom he wants to associate with. But if the land is no good, are you going to compel him by Statute to stay there and reap thistles every year? Suppose he goes to a part that is arid or that has not good water, but which looks pleasant to the eye, and he finds, after he has been two or three years there, that the longer he stays the poorer he becomes, are you going to oblige him to stay there or leave the country, as the hon. member for South Perth says, and go to Dakota? The Minister says he had an address presented to him at Minnedosa, one of the clauses of which favored this change; but it may be that that was a temporary and isolated case on which he was drafting a system. But we here, as representatives, knowing something about the North-West and about the settlement of lands, ought to consider this matter carefully, and ought, as legislators, to pass laws in the interest of the whole country.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course we are now endeavoring to profit by the lessons of an experience of considerable length as to the progress of settlement in the North-West under existing regulations. Two years ago we agreed to the proposition of second homesteads. The hon. gentleman says the experience of the last two years has proven that that was a mistake, and it may well have been the case; I have no means of forming a judgment except from what I hear in this place. But when we are asked to act on the experience of two years as to a change which it was thought would largely facilitate the settlement of the country, it would be well that we should have a little more information than the hon. gentleman has yet communicated to us as to that basis of practical experience on which he asks us to act. He has said some things which was not very pleasant to hear, about the condition of the homesteads left by the homesteaders in many cases. I did not understand whether the homesteads to which he referred were abandoned homesteads.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). They were abandoned in the sense of being the first patented.

Mr. BLAKE. They are left unoccupied?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. I can well understand a certain amount of disinclination, in portions of that vast territory, amongst those who remain, at seeing a process going on, under which some of their neighbors leave their lands and go to other lands. I think it just possible that the memorial the hon. gentleman refers to was to some extent instigated by a feeling of that kind; and those people may wish to have a law which by a gentle constraint would make it less easy for people to leave their homesteads, so that they would have their pleasant companionship still. It may be that that is quite right. But there is obviously a bias of self-interest in that view. The hon. gentleman says there are many cases in which men have declared that had they worked on their original homesteads in the manner in which they have worked on their second homesteads, they would now be well off, and he attributes to this plan a practical operation which I do not think it possible in the nature of things that it could have had, for the reason that the right of second homestead has only existed two years, and the people who spoke thus must have done their work under the impression that they would have no right to a second homestead at all.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). It was done by the Act of 1883.

Mr. BLAKE. It was only about two years after the Act was passed that he had the interview with these gentlemen.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Practically nothing is done in the first year.

Mr. BLAKE. But these are cases, I apprehend, in which a good deal of work had been done before it was the law that there might be a second homestead. Now, I do not, of course, object to our listening to the lessons of experience, but when there is a considerable opinion that this proposal would be an advantage, we ought to know a little more of the evil and the good, if there is any, which has resulted from the operations of the change. Does the hon. gentleman know in how many cases the privilege of the second homestead has been availed of? How many cases have there been of pioneer settlers, men who have a certain aptitude or liking for making first improvements, but who are not, perhaps, very skilled farmers, and who, after making the first improvements, abandon their homesteads and take up new ones further west? They are in this way useful members of society whom we ought not to discourage. The suggestion has been thrown out this afternoon that the main object of this section would be accomplished by a limitation which would prevent to a considerable extent the evil to which the hon. gentleman has referred; that is by coupling as a condition for the privilege of a second homestead, that the first homestead must previously be sold. There you would have the certainty that the pioneer was accomplishing his object of opening up new country; but even without this proviso, it is questionable whether the evil referred to could exist to any extent, since he who is a pioneer is little likely to be able to cultivate two homesteads, apart from each other, in remote sections of the country. It would be well to know to what extent the privilege of a second homestead has been availed of, and to what extent it has been coupled with the sale or retention of the original homestead.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I cannot give the precise information on this point. I have arrived at my opinion more from conversations with settlers and from conferences with them at public meetings in the North-West—and I have had about twenty public meetings, or rather conferences, with them during my visit to the North-West—than from any other source. In every meeting the question of second homesteading was discussed; and in no case was there an opinion adverse to, but, on the contrary, a strong expression of opinion in favor of the policy of abolishing the second homestead. I arrived therefore at the conclusion to abolish second homesteading, from the statements of these men who had practical experience of its operation. No doubt what the hon. gentleman says is quite true, that, so far as the feeling in Manitoba is concerned, it is due to the fact that as the settlers leave, the advantages the community expected to get from their presence—advantages of a social, religious and educational character—are lost, and it is that fact which undoubtedly, to a large extent, in the western part of Manitoba, causes so strong a feeling. That feeling is not confined to western Manitoba, but obtains very largely in the North-West Territory as well. No doubt we could ascertain, without very much trouble, the number of second homesteads taken up; but the hon. gentleman will see the law has been in operation but for three years, and the number in itself would be a very imperfect test by which to judge of the failure, or otherwise of the system. The practical experience of the people who are in daily contact with it is of greater value. As to the suggestion that we should limit second homesteading to cases where the original homestead is sold, I have discussed that point with some of the officers of the Department, and others as well. The practical difficulty of carrying it out is this: You have given a second homestead, and you have no security that the new resident on the old homestead will remain, or is in fact a bond fide resident. The new purchaser may hold it as did the original homesteader until it increases in price. One of the difficulties is, the system of alternate sections, a difficulty, of course, which time will remove as each section is taken up and settled upon; but we would increase the difficulty if, in addition, we offered an incentive to settlers to leave as soon as they have obtained their patents, with the view of getting other sections further west, and holding them for a higher price.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not see that the difficulties would subsist to any great extent if the condition of granting a second homestead was the prior alienation of the first. I attach the greatest weight to the unanimity of feeling which prevails among the people. The hon. gentleman saw, subject to this observation, that Parliament is entitled to know, not merely that these gentlemen thought so and so, but the reasons why.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I explained the reasons as they told them to me.

Mr. BLAKE. I heard only this reason, as I apprehend it. The hon. gentleman says he will get—and I am sure he will—the number of cases in which this practice has been followed. I do not agree with him in the view that it is entirely immaterial how many or how few cases there were. If there have been only a few cases, it is impossible there can be a number of grievances growing from this system If it is the opinion of the people that there would be grievances rather than that they have had practical experience of grievances, we ought to know it.

Mr. TROW. The experience of the hon. Minister in the North-West has, no doubt, given him many practical ideas, but he has been misinformed with reference to the evil results of seconding homesteading. There are various reasons to show the benefit of second homesteading. I have known settlers in Manitoba, the first settlers from Ontario, who returned to Ontario and induced a number of their friends to come out with them and settle in their section of country, but on reaching there they found they could make no purchases of land from the adjoining settlers, and the result was that the first settlers, who had been residing for years in Manitoba, sold out and went with their friends further west to the Birtle district, where they formed quite a nucleus from the older Provinces. Under the rule now proposed, they would have had to remain in Manitoba, because they could not have got a second homestead elsewhere, and would thus have been isolated from their friends. As regards the remarks of the hon. Minister with reference to the settlement of the Western States, my opinion is the reverse of his. I know that a large portion of Illinois was settled from Ohio, that a large portion of Wisconsin was settled from Illinois, and that a very large number of settlers, who had been for years in Wisconsin, removed to Minnesota, and then, following the line of railway, went still further west, many of them, with whom I am acquainted, going to Bismarck, and others still travelling west. The settlers to whom the Minister refers, might be a number of half breeds who left the Assiniboia after they had sold out there.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No.

Mr. TROW. And who were not, in many instances, practical farmers, and in as good circumstances as when on their previous old homesteads. I know many people who have settled further west, where they are doing better than they did in their old settlements.

Mr. WATSON. As one who strongly advocated the granting of a second homestead when the Land Bill was passed in 1883, I regret with others that that provision has not proved as great a success as we thought it would. At that time there was need of this provision, as I knew hundreds of people who had sold out their land, and not being able to receive second homesteads went to the States. Southern Manitoba, in consequence of this, was almost depopulated. There are numbers of them from southern Manitoba, and in fact they left Southern Manitoba almost depopulated. I cannot say it is the fault of the Act or of the provision in the Act, but these unfortunate circumstances have been brought about by our having had practically few or no immigrants into the North-West during the last two or three years. I believe, if the immigrants were coming into the North-West as they were in 1880, 1881 and 1882, we would not have the state of affairs which now exists, and would not find the vacant homesteads that have been abandoned. Of course, the people avail themselves of the opportunity of taking second homesteads. I would suggest a remedy to the Minister if he intends to do away with these second homesteads, as he proposes in this Bill. He refers to the petitions and representations made to him at Minnedosa, and Birtle, and other points, as to the settlers leaving. It was stated to him that the operation of the Act was not in the best interests of the country, and also that pre-emptions should be given for the second homestead. Now, if he would allow the homesteader to take up his pre-emption as a second homestead, he would overcome all these grievances in these two instances, the settlement would go on, the settler would get benefits and would remain in the district. As the Minister has seen fit to allow one clause to stand, I think it would be well to allow this clause also to stand. I think with a little consideration some provision might be made by which this clause would not be wiped out entirely, and yet the interests of the older settlements would be protected. I think also that it would be an improvement to allow homesteading under conditions of cultivation. If this land had improvements on it, that would be a sufficient inducement to a settler to locate on that land, and someone would be residing on it instead of its being vacant. The system of giving patents for lands with little or no improvements on them has been the greatest possible curse to the country.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it would be a great mistake to allow that to be carried out, because the homesteaders would simply move from the homesteads to the pre-emptions, would leave one lot vacant and occupy the other. One of the most fruitful sources of the desire to select another homestead in the west was, that the original settlers there, who, perhaps, brought a young family from Ontario or some of the other Provinces, found that in the meantime they had grown up, and there was an ambition to go west, so that their family might settle around them. I think the aim was a good one. I know a great many in southern Manitoba expressed a desire to go west for that reason, and of course they are always better fitted for pioneers than others from a different country. I would ask the Minister if there is any provision whereby a homesteader, in the event of his finding the surroundings were such as to make it impossible to get along, might, before he took out a patent, abandon his homestead and select another somewhere else. I think some cases of that kind have come before the Minister of the Interior or his predecessors, with which they have had to deal, where it seemed almost absolutely necessary to have some provision or some power vested in the Governor in Council to allow of this change being made.

Mr. MULOCK. I can hardly follow the reasoning of the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) when he says that to allow the pre-emptions to be paid for at an earlier date would facilitate a change on the part of the settler. He says the settler would abandon his homestead for the pre-emption quarter-section adjoining. I cannot understand on what ground a settler would abandon a free grant of land and move to the adjoining section which he has to pay for.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me. I said if it was allowed for a settler to select his pre-emption as a homestead after having completed his entry on the homestead.

Mr. MULOCK. And select his homestead too?

Mr. FAIRBANK. I would not for a moment underestimate the value to the North-West of the trip of the Minister of the Interior. I think it a great misfortune to the whole country that similar trips had not been made by his predecessor, and the information that a man gets on the grounds, the practical information, is vastly better than any theoretical. But I would ask the Minister of the Interior if, in the consideration of this question, he has given due weight to what he has himself mentioned, the hunger for land which seems to influence men when first arriving, and the disposition to take up the first piece of land that comes in their way. We know that, during the boom, there was great anxiety all over the country that in a very short time there would be no more land in the world anywhere, and it was very necessary to grapple on to the first piece that was within reach. Again, if it would not be considered treason to the North-West, I almost tremble to make the remark, experience has developed that certain sections there are more exposed to frost than others, that the season is held in pretty closely by two frost walls, and it required pretty active attention to avoid grazing upon the one or the other. In case such a circumstance has been developed—I do not say it has—and the man has taken up his claim on one, is he to be forever debarred from taking up his claim on another? Again, has the Minister given due weight to a disposition of the business men of Manitoba to speak against and discourage any emigration from there? The business men—I speak of them all—of course are very anxious for people to remain there, and will speak very ill of any disposition to change from one locality to another. Again, in hearing the information he did, he must have necessarily heard it very largely from those who remained, and not from those who went away. Again, I am sure he must have observed in that country that one of the great drawbacks is the loneliness. I shall never forget the answer I received to an enquiry from a settler's wife near Regina, who had left my own county, who had gone there very strong, in having four or five grown-up boys. They had very large fields of wheat, and had made a great deal of improvement. I asked the lady if she was ever lonesome. The look she gave me I shall never forget. She said: "There are times when I feel I must leave here immediately, but I have come for a certain purpose, and I am going to remain," alluding to the settlement of her sons. She said: "However, we have retained our old place upon the Sydenham, and perhaps we shall return to it." I hope the Minister of the Interior will grapple with the question which is known as the chequer-board question, and if possible obviate the difficulties which arise from it. Again, I would ask whether he gave due weight to the fact that some of these settlers have pitched their tent in the expectation of speedy railway accommodation, in which they have been disappointed. I admit it is a large question, and one, which I presume, he has given his full attention to. He has seen much more of it than I have, and I would not set up my judgment against his in this particular. Yet it does seem, in theory at all events, that there are certain irreconcilable difficulties in saying to a man who has acquired his patent, and wishes to change, that he is forever debarred from becoming again a homesteader.

Mr. CAMERON (Middlesex). I think the number of those settlers who favor the proposition which is now under discussion by the committee, is not as large as we have been given to understand by the statement of the Minister of the Interior. I have a letter from the North-West Territory which states that at a recent meeting the proposition to abandon second homesteading was protested against, and I am given to understand in that letter that the determination of the meeting was communicated to the Minister of Interior. The statement is that at that meeting it was unanimously resolved that the resolution to abandon second homesteading, so far as the present settlers were concerned, at least, was a breach of faith with those who had already taken up homesteads, and it was urged that the tacit agreement made between themselves and the country when they took up those homesteads, should be respected, and that they, at least, should be exempted from any change in the Act. I am given to understand that at a largely attended meeting of the settlers in the neighborhood of Moose Jaw, such a resolution was also unanimously adopted. This shows clearly that the proposition to which second homesteading is not unanimously commended, and that possibly some of the reasons given in favor of such abolition elsewhere are largely local ones. Those who have had experience in the early settlement of Ontario know that the pioneer was a very valuable individual, but he gradually receded on the fringe of civilisation. Perhaps other reasons, largely the incident of the movement that occurred in 1881-82, may account for the desertion of homesteads that has been spoken of, to an extent that is scarcely creditable. I am unable to speak from personal experience, and consequently will pay every deference to the opinion of those who have been up there, and I would have said nothing whatever but that I feel that these resolutions which have been communicated to me, show that the second homesteading is not looked on with so much disfavor by settlers in many sections as we have been given to understand; but, at any rate, I would urge upon the Minister the propriety of giving some consideration to the case of those who have been induced to take up homesteads since we conceded the right of second homesteading.

Clearly these men are entitled to consideration in any alteration of the law that is being made, and I think the proposition of the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth), meets the circumstances of these individuals to some extent.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). In answer to the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), who asked me about the number of second homesteads, Mr. Burgess has handed me a memorandum in which he says that by the report of 1884-85 it appears that 141 second homestead entries had been then made, comprising 29,879 acres. The number is not in the last report, and I am told it would take some trouble to go through all the entries and find out the exact number. But that is at the commencement, and I am inclined to think there was a larger number last year than the year before.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry that the course of the Department of the Interior in this, and, I am afraid, in some other respects, is rather to give us less information from year to year in their report, instead of more. They begin by giving us the number of homestead entries, and in the second report they do not give it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is proposed to amend this clause as follows:—

That such report shall not take away the right of any person who, before the passing of this Act, had received such certificate, or a recommendation for a patent.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. WATSON. It might be in the interest of those parties who have received these benefits, and the interest of the settlement, that they should not have to go forty miles away from the previous homestead to take up a second one. That is one of the reasons why some sections of the country have been depopulated, to a certain extent. An Order in Council was passed that forty miles was the nearest distance within which they could take up a second homestead, and if they are to avail themselves of that, they have got to leave the section of country they are in.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I will consider the suggestion of the hon. gentleman. I think that can be done by departmental action; I think the forty-mile provision was made by an Order in Council.

Mr. WATSON. Does the Minister propose doing away with that?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I will think about it, I cannot promise now.

On section 9,

Mr. BLAKE. Why should the Minister of the Interior take this power?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I desire that that clause should stand, because the amendments I referred to just now related to the original clause. I may say the reason the Minister takes that power is that it required an Order in Council in every case of a colonisation company, or anyone else, to put settlers upon the land; it required an Order in Council to get authority to make the amount they had granted to the settler a lien upon the land when the patent issued.

On section 10,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The Act provides now a means by which a patent obtained through fraud or error, upon reference to the proper tribunal, can be cancelled, but no means by which a homestead entry obtained by fraud or error can be cancelled. Once the entry is made it is irrevocable, and the object of this is simply to enable that to be done by the Dominion Land Board.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that there have been no cases in which homestead entries or pre-emption entries have been passed on this ground?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). None that I am aware of. I am so informed.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it proposed that this authority shall be given to the Land Board? Of course, this may involve serious and complicated questions of law. Are patents liable to be cancelled by the Land Board?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No. This provision deals with homestead entries, and the object is to cancel without delay any entries that have evidently been obtained by fraud.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the Land Board be empowered to take evidence under oath?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). They have power to take evidence under oath on everything connected with land matters. If a case occurred where it is desirable to take evidence, it would be taken under oath.

Mr. MULOCK. There is no provision in the Bill to that effect.

Mr. BLAKE. To what class of cases is this section intended to apply? Is it intended to apply to a case where a man has already obtained a homestead and is not entitled to a second homestead?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That would be one of the classes of cases. I will give the hon. gentleman one case that occurred in Regina a short time ago, as illustrating the difficulties connected with the matter. A homestead entry was given by error on what turned out to be an Indian reserve. It was not marked on the map of the local agent as being an Indian reserve, and so he gave the entry. The agent found out two days afterwards that he had made an error; but the man for some time insisted on keeping it. In that particular case the matter was arranged and the party eventually took another homestead. In that case the Dominion Land Board could have interfered and cancelled the entry if this provision had been in force.

Mr. BLAKE. There might be no particular hardship in that case as the error was discovered within two days. But suppose one or two years elapsed before an error of that kind was discovered, and in the meantime the homesteader spends his time and money in improvements, and meanwhile his chance of getting an available location is diminished, it would be an extraordinary state of affairs to permit the cancellation of the entry, which had not been made by fraud on his part but through the error of the Government agent or officer, at all events without proper compensation being made to the individual.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). That is almost an impossible case. Cases do occur where men obtain entries through fraud or misrepresentation. The land may be land already taken and the former entry was, perhaps, omitted to be looked up; it might be land occupied by someone else and fraud and misrepresentation might be made in regard to it. Cases of this kind do not often occur, but I am told by the commissioner that one or two have occurred, and it is desirable that the proposed provision should be made. If there is fraud in case of a patent there are means by which the patent can be set aside; so when an erroneous or improper entry is made, and where it is not desirable to go through the forms of trial before a law court on matters of small moment, the Department wants power to cancel it.

Mr. LANGELIER. I do not see any procedure indicated for the cancellation of the entries. I see only this provided: That in all cases of proved fraud or error entries may be cancelled by the Dominion Land Board. That is a very useful provision provided there are the necessary precautions taken. On a previous occasion the hon. gentleman made some remarks about something that took place in the Province of Quebec, and a paper supporting his party made much of the cancellations that had been made by the Department of Crown Lands in that Province. A provision of the same kind exists and has existed there since 1872. Here is the defect that was found to exist in that law: There was no protection given to the settler. The Department of Crown Lands was at liberty to cancel location tickets. I understand the entry is practically the same as a location ticket. The Minister of Crown Lands could cancel any location ticket without giving notice to the settler, without giving him any chance of producing proof that there had been no fraud or infringement of the rules of the Department. When I was Commissioner of Crown Lands in Quebec, in 1878, I had the law amended in order to give a chance to the settler to be heard. I remember, when the law was discussed in 1872, my hon. friend from Quebec East most strenuously opposed a provision of the same kind as that now before the House, and he predicted, with remarkable foresight, exactly what took place not long afterwards, and he wound up a very eloquent speech by addressing the then Prime Minister, Mr. Chauveau, to the following effect: He said if this provision remained in the law, not long hereafter the Government will see a great many emigrants leaving the country for the United States, and they would be in a position to go to the First Minister and say: Migraturi te salutant. It was most extraordinary that what had been predicted by the hon. member for Quebec East took place within three years. A great many settlers were deprived of their lands without any chance whatever being afforded them to protect their rights. Other parties who wanted to secure those lands or who entertained some spite, political or otherwise, against them, denounced them in the Department of Crown Lands for a so-called infringement of the conditions of the location ticket. When those settlers were deprived of their lands, that was the first time they knew they had violated the conditions of the location ticket, and they had no chance whatever to defend themselves against the charges brought against them.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Would not the point be met if we added the words: "After due notice to all parties concerned."

Mr. LANGELIER. What form of notice is provided? I introduced a provision which was found very effective, and since that time there has been no trouble whatever. The provision I introduced concerning the management of Crown lands was that notice should be published in the Official Gazette, giving the number of each lot in each township that was proposed to be cancelled, and that notice must be published sixty days before cancellation was made. I found that this notice would even prove inefficient, and so it was provided that printed notice must be sent by post card or registered letter—post card will do—to the party interested, at his last known post office address. This even was not found sufficient. Another provision has been introduced, which I admit might be difficult to apply to the present case, and under it that notice must be posted at the church door, or at the door of any other public place in the locality where the land is situated, stating that such cancellation is going to take place. After all those proceedings have been taken and cancellation is made, still the settler has another resource. He has a right to appeal from the cancellation within sixty days after cancellation has taken place. We found in the Province of Quebec that this was necessary to protect the settler, because, in many cases, the Department might be deceived by parties who had some aims with respect to the land, and unless those precautions were taken it would only be after the poor settler had been deprived of his land that it would be discovered the Department had been deceived. In order to protect the settler in the North-West it is necessary that some provision should be inserted in the law to give sufficient notice to the settler, in order that he might defend himself before the Department, and if he is charged with having committed a fraud, or having done something which makes the entry illegal, he should be notified of those charges in order to have the opportunity of defending himself.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The cases which the hon. gentleman mentions are not at all analogous. The cases in the Province of Quebec, with which the hon. gentleman and his successors had something to do, in the county of Mégantic, as well as in the county of Ottawa, were cases in which there were a large number of settlers whose lands were to be cancelled for non-performance of duties and obligations. That is not at all the case here. Publication of a notice in a newspaper, in the case of a settler whose title had been cancelled, owing to improvidence or error, would be entirely unnecessary, and would, besides, be very expensive. I think it is better to leave it in its present form so as to ensure a personal notice, which will answer the purpose far better than a notice in a newspaper.

Mr. BLAKE. My difficulty goes further than that which my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Langelier), has very rightly pointed out. Fraud is one thing, and, no doubt, if a man obtains an entry through fraud there should be proper machinery for meeting such a case, but I do not see that the error or the improvidence which the hon. gentleman makes the ground for cancellation may be merely the error or the improvidence of the settler. It may be that there will be improvident or erroneous acts on the part of the Crown. For instance, a man may buy a piece of land and the Crown, after it has fully considered of the matter, may think it more suitable to be reserved for say a public park, or hot wells may be discovered upon it. They have found out its value in this way, and I am not objecting to the cancellation taking place, but there may be a case in which the man, knowing that these lands are set out for homestead purposes, knowing that he is entitled to ask for such lands, knowing perhaps that there are incidental advantages, applies for the land; you give it to him; he complies with the terms, and goes on bonâ fide and makes his improvements, and yet at any time until he gets the patent you have the right to assert: "I, the Department, acted erroneously or improvidently in granting the land, and therefore I will undo my act without making any compensation for the loss of time and labor on the part of the applicant." Now, that is an arbitrary power, which I do not think should be capable of being exercised in its naked form. It is true that the Department might not exercise it in a harsh manner; still the conditions upon which they should turn a man out should be definite, and they should not involve the man in loss of time or labor through the error of the Department. While I want to secure that no advantage should be taken of the State, yet we want to make the tenure of the man who proposes to settle in the North-West just as certain as we can, if he honestly complies with the conditions, and we want therefore not to put a clause in the Statute in which it may be said to him: It is quite uncertain whether you will get your land; they may tell you years hence that there was a mistake, and the Land Board will adjudicate on the matter and cancel your entry, and the terms are dependent on the good will and the tender feeling of the Department.

The Committee rose, and it being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Referring to clause 10, I think it would be desirable to let it stand until we go into committee again, and I will endeavor to get specific information as to cases which are liable to arise, and possibly in that case I may recast the clause so as to meet the objections which were made.

On section 11,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). This clause simply extends the privilege of pre-emption, which will expire this year, until 1890.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain the reasons for this change?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Under the law as it stands to-day the privilege of pre-emption expires at the end of this year, and we propose to allow it to continue until 1890.

Mr. BLAKE. I am aware that is the proposal, but I asked for the reason.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). We do not propose in the meantime to deprive the people of the privilege of pre-emption, that is all.

Mr. BLAKE. The present law ends this privilege at a particular period, and the hon. gentleman proposes to extend it. Is this upon some representation made from the North-West, or upon what ground?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Simply because we believe the general feeling in the meantime is in favor of pre-emption.

On section 13,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). These clauses have relation to surveys. The first one would have the effect of leaving out Provincial land surveyors admitted before 1872, who have not practised since.

Mr. MILLS. What reason is there for making this alteration? It seems to me if no abuse has grown up in the Provinces, if it is not found that any but parties qualified to make surveys are admitted to practice, there is no reason for depriving them of the right to do so.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Under the present law, as I understand it, no person can be employed as a Dominion land surveyor who has not passed an examination. The Board of Dominion land surveyors, who have urged the adoption of these clauses, think that if a person admitted before 1872 has not practised since that time, he ought not to be continued. If he has been employed as a Dominion land surveyor since that time, then the power goes on as before.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Suppose a person has been engaged as a Provincial land surveyor. If there has been no work for him to do for the Dominion up to the 1st of January, 1886, why should he be deprived of the right to be employed hereafter?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). He can become a Dominion land surveyor any time he likes by passing the examination.

Mr. LANGELIER. It appears to me that this clause does an injustice to Provincial land surveyors who were admitted before 1872. It will deprive them of a right they have been enjoying for several years without giving them any notice. I do not see any reason why they should be deprived of that right, if there has been no grievance under the operation of the present law, and I do not know of any.

Mr. BLAKE. If a man has ceased to practice after 1872, he must pass a skilled examination?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. The rule has been, with regard to persons who have passed a skilled examination, that the longer time that has elapsed since they have passed it, the more reluctant such bodies are to impose examinations on them at a later date. Here the hon. gentleman proposes that Dominion land surveyors shall not be qualified unless they do so. I wonder how many there are whom it is proposed to disqualify under the proposed law, and who they are; because under the existing law they are qualified, and now it is proposed to take their rights away.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not know their names; I daresay if I did, the hon. gentleman would say I had some motive for disqualifying them. I have no motive one way or the other in regard to this matter. The Dominion land surveyors are very much like the profession the hon. gentleman belongs to, and the Dominion Land Board is very much like the benchers. That body has made changes from time to time which have borne heavily on some people, and they have had no difficulty in inducing Parliament to grant them what changes they ask. These amendments come from that body. If Parliament thinks this ought not to be done, as a matter of course the clause will be dropped; but I think a body of that kind might fairly have the opportunity of getting what they ask.

Mr. BLAKE. I think Parliament ought to be very cautious about taking away a right which it has itself conferred on a body of men without knowing who the persons are, or what the reasons are; because the hon. gentleman has given us neither the names nor the number of the persons proposed to be deprived of this right, nor any reason why they are to be deprived. A former Parliament gave them the right to practice. It is now proposed to deprive them of that right, simply because some board or other thinks it proper that that should be done. He, without getting from them the reasons why, adopts every view and every conclusion of theirs.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not say that. The reason they give is this, that persons who were old Provincial land surveyors, at a time when the question of land surveying was much less guarded than it is to-day—persons who, in 1872, were Provincial land surveyors, and who have not been appointed Dominion land surveyors since, are not qualified. That is a fair presumption.

Mr. BLAKE. Just suppose that a land surveyor has been employed to survey one lot in the North-West between 1882 and 1886, how much better qualified is he to survey to-day than the man who had not his good fortune? The body to which the hon. gentleman refers never dreamed of such a step being taken as that which he proposes to-night, that is, to take away the right to practice from anyone who had got the right, although he had not the opportunity of practising for a number of years. I never heard of such a thing being suggested before in any legislative body.

Mr. MILLS. No doubt the persons to be affected by this change in the law will be very large in number. In many of the towns and villages of the country, there is a large number of persons qualified as Provincial land surveyors, who have never been employed by the Government to survey lands in the Territories. Those who had the good fortune to be employed would, no doubt, approve of the provisions of the Bill, because it, in fact, greatly limits the number of those who might seek employment at the hands of the Government without having to undergo a new examination. I do not object to the standard qualifications being made higher in the future, if it is thought desirable. Higher scientific attainments, more acurate knowledge of the higher departments of mathematics, are no doubt valuable acquisitions for persons engaged in geodetic and topographic surveying, but the hon. gentleman knows that to raise the standard of qualification with regard to those who are to be admitted to practice land surveying in the future, and to deprive those of the right to practice, who have already undergone their examination, and have been engaged for years in the services of the Provinces, if not of that of the Dominion, is a wholly different proceeding. As the provision now stands, a large number of persons, who are by law qualified, although they may not have had the good fortune to have practically surveyed, ought not to be deprived of the right which has been secured to them by law. The Board of Examiners have erred in proposing this particular provision of the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. The board want to examine as many people as they can. They magnify their office. Because a surveyor was not lucky enough to get employment in the North-West, the hon. gentleman wants to exclude him from the practice of his profession there. "From him that hath not, shall be taken away even that which he hath."

Mr. WOODWORTH. The Board of Examiners passed a resolution which reminds me of that passed by the body of men who crossed the Atlantic in the Mayflower. "The saints," said they, "inherit the earth, and we are the saints, consequently we inherit the earth." The board made a resolution to shut out anybody who was not one of themselves.

Mr. BLAKE. They are going to survey the earth instead of inheriting it.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Yes; they are monarchs of all they survey. This will militate against some of the surveyors of Nova Scotia, where I come from.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then of course it cannot pass.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I am from that Province, and no pent-up Utica contracts my powers. Charity commences at home, and if this Bill affects my Province I intend to draw attention to that fact, and let others speak for their Provinces. With me the Province of Nova Scotia has the first claim on my attention. I believe this clause will militate against the surveyors there. I have some little experience of those cases, where men arrogate to themselves certain privileges and rights, and are very conservative when they once get in, and should be looked upon with a good deal of suspicion. The lust of power is quite human, and it is not confined to the Government or to bodies of as grave and exalted and august character as they. It extends beyond, and I believe this little coterie called the Board of Examiners have in view the perpetuation of their own power, and their present action should be looked upon with a good deal, I will not say suspicion, but with a critical eye, and if good reasons are not given for passing this, we should not pass it. If you do injustice to this proposition to any one surveyor in any portion of the Provinces, without benefiting the whole of Canada, on general principles, we ought not to pass this clause.

Mr. TROW. By passing this clause we will do a great injustice to very competent surveyors who have not been employed heretofore by the Government. The number employed by the Government is very little compared with the number not so favored. You are quite aware, Sir, how a very large number of the surveyors got their situations in the North-West. In some instances they might not have been altogether competent, but succeeded in getting positions through their influence with members of Parliament and others. No doubt many such got positions, while others more capable did not succeed through the want of that influence. You will do away with competition, if you confine surveyors to the limited number heretofore employed.

Mr. BLAKE. Can the hon. gentleman say how many have been employed in the Dominion service, whose titl to such employment depends upon the old law he is altering, and how many Provincial land surveyors he is debarring from work by this Bill?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I cannot give the information asked for. I think it is important, and I will get it.

Mr. BLAKE. The great bulk of surveyors in the North-West have been engaged under the auspices of hon. gentlemen opposite. They made their arrangements, partly by the employment of persons they deemed competent, and partly, at one time, by competition. A great number of Provincial land surveyors would not, I presume, think of tendering for that particular class of work, as they are in a large way of business in their own localities, and not desirous of taking a contract for the survey of townships in the North-West; and they may be more competent than a good many who got contracts in the North-West, and are consequently qualified. I do not wish to depreciate in the slightest degree the qualities of those gentlemen, but I must say, if I am rightly informed, a good deal of the work was done very imperfectly indeed; and yet the circumstance, that, by favor or good fortune, or by tendering low for the discharge of the work, or by the fact that the other party was not a competitor being sufficiently employed at home, one party got the work—the circumstance is to give those fortunate enough to get work from the Government a qualification which the others are to be deprived of. Both are now, no doubt, at work in country towns and villages, &c., and both are entitled to the title of Dominion land surveyor as well as Provincial land surveyor. To-morrow, the one who happens to have surveyed a township in the North-West, no matter how badly, will continue to be a Dominion land surveyor, but his neighbor, however qualified he may be, must pull his sign down and will be relegated to the position of a Provincial land surveyor. I think better reasons than the Minister has given should be produced for the adoption of this provision.

Mr. FAIRBANK. The question arises, what is all this about anyway? Have all the surveyors who have been employed in the North-West proved themselves so thoroughly efficient that no other surveyors in the Dominion of Canada are to be considered qualified? I think the records of the Department will prove the contrary. Of my own knowledge, men have been employed in the North-West whom certainly the Department will not employ again. Why this blow should be struck at the land surveyors of Canada, as a class, I cannot for the life of me understand. Not only must they have been surveyors before 1872, but they must actually have done work in the North-West during this time. I think it is anything but a compliment to the surveyors of Canada.

Mr. TROW. The system of surveys heretofore, or for a number of years, has certainly been very erroneous. The men were paid for the amount of work they performed, so that it was to their interest to make as many timber limits as they could. I find, on examining the field notes in the volume published by the Minister of the Interior last year, that there are many townships described there as valuable timber lands, in some of which I will guarantee that there is not a stick of timber.

Mr. BLAKE. Occasionally, I believe, a surveyor went out to the North-West under a Government commission and with instructions from the Government to survey townships, but he also had private commissions to find timber lands for gentlemen of influence with the Government, and to report upon available and good lands. We know there was a great deal of patronage connected with these appointments. These men had passed, or at least they had their title and were qualified as Dominion land surveyors under the general law, so that in that respect the Government were not choosing ineligible persons, though perhaps they did not take the most eligible persons; but is it not enough that they got this advantage without depriving their less fortunate colleagues of the oppportunity of serving as Dominion land surveyors?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The statement just made by the hon. gentleman, if I rightly understood him, is, I think, a very serious charge, which he should not lightly make, unless he is prepared to give the names. He states, as I understand, that surveyors were sent out to survey land under instructions from the Government, and also with instructions from the Government to look out——

Mr. BLAKE. No, I did not say so.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Then I certainly misunderstood the hon. gentleman, and I am glad I gave him the opportunity of making the correction. I frankly admit that all these clauses relating to the surveys are the work of a body for whom I have the greatest respect, because they have charge of this particular work, and know a great deal more about it than I do. This particular matter does not in any way affect the general provisions of the law with regard to examinations and matters of that kind which follow, and, if there is a feeling against it, I should be disposed to drop the clause.

Section 87 struck out.

On section 88,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The explanation I have is that the present dates of the meetings of the Board of Examiners, May and November, have been found inconvenient. Those members of the profession who are employed in surveying Dominion lands are required to be in the field before or very soon after the second Monday of May, and very often young gentlemen who are under articles, and who would present themselves for examination in November, are prevented because their work in the field is not completed in time. It is therefore proposed to empower the Minister of the Interior to call the board together when he may find it in the public interest to do so. On account of an amendment proposed to be made to another sub-clause of this clause of the Act, under which sub-examiners can conduct examinations somewhat after the manner in which the Civil Service examinations are conducted, meetings of the full board need only take place henceforward at headquarters. Hitherto, the full board has been required to meet to conduct these examinations, and it has been a source of expense and trouble. The members of the board are scattered over the western part of the Dominion, and it is now proposed that the examination can take place before one member, and the papers be sent in to the board here in Ottawa. It is proposed to provide that the swearing in may take place before a judge of the Supreme Court. This system will be less expensive than the system of local boards and will tend to a greater uniformity in the standard of examination.

Mr. BLAKE. At present the examination has to take place before more than one of the board. Is it before the full board?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Before a quorum, I think; that is, a majority. Three would be a quorum.

Mr. BLAKE. Now, it is proposed that the examination may take place before one only?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes, the result being sent in.

Mr. BLAKE. I think from the explanation of the Minister, there ought, perhaps, to be a greater facility given than at present exists, but the hon. gentleman will readily understand that it is extremely difficult to get an equality in the actual test applied to the qualifications of the candidate if you have the examinations taking place before a single member of the board, and practically finally at his disposition. It is almost essential for that purpose that more than one of those who belong to the board should deal with the case. There is such a variety of temperament, apart from the accuracy of views as to the answers, and so forth, amongst men, that it really is extremely difficult to handle the case with a correct result, as applicable to the different people, if you have only one at each place.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Such examination is to be subject to the rules and regulations made by the board and the results are to be approved by the board.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, but unless it is put upon a certain set of questions and the answers are in writing and the whole result is submitted to the board——

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think that is what is intended.

Mr. BLAKE. It does not say so. There is nothing here about a written examination.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). It leaves the board to adopt rules and regulations.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me the board should prepare the questions at each period of the examination, and that all parties, in whatever part of the Dominion they may be examined, should be subject to the same examination and at the same time, and that the value of the answers given ought to be determined by a committee of the board here, instead of by the individual examiner before whom the party is examined.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think that might fairly be left to the regulations to be made by the Board itself. We know, the clause we have just dropped shows the disposition on the part of all boards, representing a profession of that kind, to restrict as much as possible the number of those who are in. The tendency in all these examinations—I think the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) will admit it is the case in matters of law—is rather to strengthen the character of the examination than otherwise, and it may fairly be left to the board to see that the examination is not too lax, and that too many people do not get in under such a lax examination.

Mr. BLAKE. If I rightly recollect the system which has been adopted for Civil Service examinations it is analogous to that which my hon. friend has referred to.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). It is.

Mr. BLAKE. I think that the Civil Service system is one of written examinations, the papers being prepared by the central authority, and local examiners being appointed to conduct the examination. Of course that is a mere qualifying examination, of a comparatively low grade as compared with the scientific examination which ought to prevail in cases of this kind. Therefore, the precautions which Parliament thought proper to take in the case of a comparatively low grade of Civil Service examination, might very properly be introduced into this. The hon. gentleman leaves everything to the board, but I have not such great confidence in boards as he has—speaking of boards generally.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think the tendency of examining boards is rather to restrict than to widen the door of admission. But the case here is not precisely like the case of Civil Service examinations. These people are not confined to the employment of the Government; in fact, very few of them are in the employ of the Government. They take the degree of D.L.S., as giving them a certain status in their profession, which, I think, might be fairly left to a board of that kind. I do not think the Provincial law, for instance, defines the exact regulations under which students in the profession of law are examined; that is left to the bar, and I think we might leave this matter to a body of that kind, who, on the whole, are more competent to deal with it than we are.

On new section 88,

Mr. MILLS In this clause the hon. gentleman has provided for the appointment of certain parties, but he does not state for what time, whether they are appointed for one examination or whether the appointment is permanent; are the appointees to hold their appointment at pleasure, or during good behavior, as members of this examining body?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). It is during pleasure, undoubtedly. If it was during good behavior, it would be so stated.

On new section 89,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). This simply proposes certain subjects for the preliminary examination. It is to give an advantage to young fellows just coming from school, who are better qualified to pass this examination than after they have been at work in the field for some time. We give them an opportunity of passing this examination just when they have left college, and are in a position to do so. It simply changes the time in which they may do it.

On new section 91,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). This is to remedy a defect in the original Act which did not define the time of service required. It requires twelve months actual practice in the field.

Mr. MILLS. I think this is a very doubtful provision. Suppose a Frenchman, or a German, comes out to this country, are you going to deprive him of the right of practising his profession, although he may be very well qualified, and is ready to take an examination, simply because he has not had a training under a Dominion land surveyor? I remember we had a case something like this some years ago. Two young gentlemen from Aylmer came before the board for examination, and one of them was admitted; the other passed an admirable examination, but it was ascertained that he had studied for the profession of surveyor at an institution in the State of New York. Some members of the board were disposed to object to him, not because he was not well qualified, for the Surveyor General said he passed a most admirable examination, but because he had not acquired his knowledge in Canada. The gentleman I refer to is a Mr. Aylmer, son of Judge Aylmer, I think.

Mr. LANGELIER. I might mention a stronger case in point, that is, the present Surveyor General. He never had been admitted as a Dominion land surveyor, though he has been found able enough to be appointed chief surveyor of the Dominion. Before coming to the Department of the Interior he had been employed in Quebec for some years as inspector of cadastral surveys, and before that he had been an officer in the French navy, and yet he could not have been admitted as a Dominion land surveyor under this regulation. It would be much to be regretted if men of his ability should be deprived of the right to enter the service until they had served a regular apprenticeship of three years. I think this clause should be amended.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The requirement of three years service is the law as it now stands. We do not propose to amend that part. The only thing we propose to do is this, that three years being required, one of these years should be in the field. Capt. Deville, to whom my hon. friend refers, is himself very strongly in favor of this clause, and the object was merely to ensure that a portion of that service, at any rate, shall be in the field, where a practical knowledge can be obtained.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell).

Mr. BLAKE. There are two points to which I wish to allude. One is that this additional provision ought not, according to general principles, to be applied so as to injuriously affect those who may be just about approaching the expiration of their term of service under the existing regulations. Supposing a man by the 24th May would have finished his three years service, it would be rather unreasonable to say that he should be required practically to have four years service, because he had not served twelve months consecutively in the field, which up to this moment has not been required. Unless we are going to have very extensive surveys in the North-West the general results of the Dominion service will not be continual service in the field. It will rather be work among surveyed lands. You must not make a permanent law with respect to a somewhat exceptional state of things. You should not require that the men in order to be examined should have been at work on some of the large Dominion surveys, which are now being undertaken to a more limited extent than formerly, and of course there will be a much smaller number of persons employed on them.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman will observe that mention is made of three years, in which period the twelve months will be included. I take it that the meaning is twelve months active work in the field spread over the three years. The hon. gentleman appears to think that the surveys would necessarily take place in the North-West. The work may be done anywhere.

Mr. BLAKE. I pointed out that the work was not in the nature of continuous work such as there would be on a large survey. The hon. gentleman has not answered the point with regard to persons about completing their course of study under the existing law.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I will make enquiries as to how that would apply, and will consider the matter.

On section 16,

Mr. MILLS. Will the hon. gentleman explain the change proposed.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Provincial land surveyors commissioned after 14th April, 1872, are now entitled to obtain a certificate as Dominion land surveyors without examination, other than with respect to the system of survey of Dominion lands. The standard of qualification is different in all the Provinces, Quebec and Ontario only having the standard at all similar to the Dominion standard. The clause is proposed to be amended so as to require that Provincial land surveyors shall pass a similar examination to Dominion land surveyors, in order to obtain certificates as Dominion land surveyors.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it proposed that those persons shall pass a general examination as well as a specific examination in regard to Dominion lands surveys?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes.

On sub-section 2,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). This clause of the Act as it now stands provides for the admission of surveyors of three years' service in any part of Her Majesty's dominions other than the Provinces of Canada. It is pointed out by the Board of Examiners that a man may go to the Maritime Provinces and obtain, without the requisite certificate, a Provincial certificate and present himself for examination as a Dominion land surveyor; and the amendment is intended to prevent this.

On sub-section 3,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The memorandum I have is that this is to confine the privilege of examination after one year's service to civil engineers and graduates of the Royal Military College. The amendment places it in the discretion of the Board of Examiners to say whether the instruction in any college or university is of the kind required by the Act. The statement that no college or university except the Royal Military College furnishes that instruction is, I think, wrong, because the technical department of McGill does so—I do not know how it is at Toronto University—and we must, therefore, take care that this privilege is not restricted to any one college.

Mr. MILLS. The information on which this clause is based is erroneous. There is special instruction given at Toronto University on this subject, and also in McGill College, and I believe also in Victoria; and that being the case, it seems to me this is merely an attempt to make a close guild, and thus prevent the admission of others as Dominion land surveyors. The whole of these clauses are objectionable. They constitute a departure from the principle that should be observed in granting certificates as Dominion land surveyors. It is no doubt right and proper for the Government to constitute a board to see that those who engage in the business of Dominion land surveying are persons possessing the necessary scientific attainments; but I do not think beyond that the Government should go. I do not think, for instance, in a country like this, where we are seeking to encourage immigration and additions to our population, that we ought to say to all parties when they come here from abroad, that unless you are prepared to become hewers of wood and drawers of water we do not want you; that if you are educated men and men of scientific attainments you have no business here. I do not think that is the policy we should adopt in this Parliament, and it is a policy, I can assure the hon. gentleman, which is practically being adopted by these provisions of the Bill. It does not matter how or where he obtains his knowledge, or how long he was in obtaining it, what we want to know is if he possesses the knowledge, and if he does, he should be at liberty to apply it quite as readily as any person born in the country. I am certain that so long as we adopt the policy of trying to exclude educated men and make this profession a close guild, we are not likely to secure any other class. The admission of educated men from abroad to participate in those professions which belong to educated men, will largely contribute to bring others of a different class into the country. I am sure the hon. gentleman has not been well advised with regard to this clause. I remember that, in 1879, when the Surveyor General, acting under the instructions of the board, of which he was the head, was anxious that provisions of this sort should be adopted at that time; but I objected very strongly, because I believed that the principle was an unsound one, and I think the hon. gentleman is making a mistake in pressing these particular clauses. The changes should be in the opposite direction.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not think the hon. gentleman's interpretation of the clause is correct. It seems to me it must be a matter of great consequence to us to encourage in every way in all the professions, and this along with others, the obtaining of a liberal education in connection with them. No one can doubt that a four years' course in the Royal Military College or a two years' course in the technical branch of any university or college where engineering is taught, is better than two years' service in the office of a Dominion land surveyor. Now, the only effect of this clause is to substitute either a four years' course in the Royal Military College or a two years' course in any university or college—not merely in Canada but wherever it may be situated—the certificate that they have taken the degree of civil engineer in those colleges, for two years' service in a Dominion land surveyor's office. A year's service in the field is required the same as in the other; we do not propose to restrict that in the least; and I think, having regard to the importance of getting educated men into the professions, the provision is a good one and one which does not bear the restrictions which the hon. gentleman has mentioned.

Mr. BLAKE. The clause which it is proposed to amend did not include specifically the graduates of the Royal Military College. There was an attempt made at one time, I remember, to include them preferentially, but that attempt was resisted, and to some extent resented, by those who represented other institutions which were not included. I see no reason, having regard to the course pursued in the Royal Military College, why the graduates of that institution should not be placed on precisely the same footing which the law proposes to place the graduates of other institutions which deal with this subject, as, for instance, the University of Toronto where there is a course specially devoted to this matter, under the authority of the Provincial Government, and I believe also in McGill College. But I think they may object, and not unreasonably, to the proposed re-introduction of a sort of preferential statement in connection with the graduates of the Royal Military College. You assert by Act of Parliament that the board shall have no right to discuss the question whether the course of the Royal Military College is adequate or not. It has the right to deal with the question as to all the others; I do not complain of that; but I see no reason why you should place the Royal Military College in a different position. We trust to the board, and we are told we ought to leave a great deal to the board, and what we do not leave to them we should take in trust from them, and therefore I think we might leave this to them as well as the others.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The Royal Military College is an institution under the direct control of the Dominion Parliament and Government. We fix the studies; we have the whole control of it; it is sustained at great expense for the purpose of specially training young men in engineering, civil and military; that is the special object of that college, and we really require a four years' term there, while we only require a two years' course in the others. We mention the Royal Military College simply because it is not a university, but an institution which we have ourselves established for the special purpose of training young men for this profession, and I do not think it is unreasonable that we should mention a certificate from that college as being taken in lieu of two years' service in the office of a Dominion land surveyor. We also say that two years' service in any branch of a university which has a branch dealing with this particular subject shall have the same effect.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman makes a little too much of the four years' course. The hon. gentleman knows that the law is not so regardless of the facts as he puts it, because he acknowledges that he puts in two years' course for the other universities. The young man at the Royal Military College begins as a boy, and he has to study a great deal more than surveying and engineering. He is engaged in the ordinary studies of youth for a considerable portion of the time——

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Not for a long time.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, I have seen the course of studies, and I think most of the ordinary studies of youth are pursued, with the exception of Latin.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The others are largely optional.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, two years compared with the four years in the sense in which the two years are put in the one institution and the four years in the other, do not make as great a difference practically as the hon. gentleman implies.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not attach much importance to the question of four years or two, but what I do attach importance to is that we have established by Parliament and have voted large sums to a college specially devoted to these very studies, and therefore when we are dealing with that profession it is not too much to name that college and to say that taking a course in it shall stand in lieu of the two years' service in a surveyor's office, or a two years' course in any college in which these subjects are taught.

Mr. DAWSON. With reference to what the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has said, while there can be no objection to admitting foreigners and professional men generally, still as regards surveying, no matter what the surveyor's attainments may be, practice in the field is as essential to proficiency as any course in any university whatever. It is a necessary part of his training.

On section 17,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). In a previous clause we added to the preliminary examination certain subjects which under the old law belonged to the final examination. We here deduct them from the final examination. The rest of the new clause 99 is substantially the same as before.

Mr. BLAKE. I must say that for my part I have very great objection to the system of examining everybody upon oath. I think the hon. gentleman had better reconsider the new clause 100, which makes such a provision.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). What is the objection?

Mr. BLAKE. My opinion is that you are lowering the general standard of morality and truth in the country when you are continually calling upon people to be examined on oath, implying that you cannot take their word.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). In that view I quite concur with the hon. gentleman. I think if oaths could be abolished, except in rare cases, and with surroundings of special solemnity, it would be of great advantage. I will drop this clause.

Mr. MILLS. The clause in the Act as it stands, makes a similar provision, and the hon. gentleman should declare that section 100 is hereby repealed.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think we had better not repeal it until I speak to the Surveyor General to see if any general cases have rendered this necessary.

On section 18,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). As proposed to be amended, the new clause 101 would permit a surveyor to be sworn in before a judge of any superior court, instead of requiring him to come to Ottawa to be sworn in before the board as at present.

On section 19,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The arrangement of subjects in this clause has been altered, and some changes have been made in the wording, but that is all.

On section 20,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The only change proposed in this clause is that a fee of $2 shall be paid to the secretary of the board by each surveyor who receives a certificate as a topographical surveyor, and also that a fee of $2 shall be paid for testing a surveyor's standard of length.

Mr. BLAKE. Are these fees for the use of the board?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No; they are paid to the Minister of Finance and the Receiver General.

Mr. BLAKE. That is provided in sub-clause 6, but it does not appear in sub-clauses 7 and 8. I think the board has rather come it over the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Not very seriously.

Mr. BLAKE. No; it is something for "the boy." How is the secretary paid, and did he draw these sub-clauses?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). He gets no salary. These are fees by which he is paid.

Mr. BLAKE. How has he subsisted up to this time? I think before we fix these commissions, if this secretary has been serving the public up to this time gratuitously, and is now to be paid by fees, we ought to know what his duties are, and what the result of the fees will be.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I will try and get the hon. gentleman all the information. I have been told that he has been paid nothing, and as to how much the fees will amount to in the future, I cannot give that information, because it will depend on the number who will apply for examination as Dominion land surveyors.

Mr. BLAKE. But we can ascertain how many have been examined for some years back, and we can apply the ordinary methods of averages and calculation.

On section 2,

Mr. BLAKE. Is the secretary to attend the examination?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). He attends every meeting of the board.

Mr. BLAKE. This is an additional emolument for the secretary. I thought he was going to have nothing but the former fees, but he is to receive a certain sum for each day's sitting. May I ask who is the secretary?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Mr. Symes of the Surveyor General's office, is the secretary. Hitherto he has been receiving fees for ordinary Dominion land surveyors' examinations, but these fees are for those who go up for examination in the higher branches, such as topography, and they average from $100 to $150 a year.

The committee rose and reported progress.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider certain proposed resolutions (p. 662) respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. BLAKE. Surely the hon. gentleman is going to make some explanation of this.

Mr. McLELAN. In moving that you, Mr. Speaker, do now leave the Chair, I do not consider it necessary to enter very largely into an explanation of the matter, as the resolutions very fully explain the object in view, which is unlike other propositions that have been made to the House respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway for very many years, and upon which there has been very lengthy, and sometimes very fierce discussion. I think that the proposal submitted in these resolutions is one that will commend itself to the House and to the country at large. The object in view is to enable the Government to make a settlement in full with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, to receive back the $20,000,000 secured by bonds, and to make a settlement for the amount that remains secured upon the lands of the company. In 1881, Parliament was called upon and confirmed the contract entered into by the Government for the construction of the Pacific Railway, giving the company for that work $25,000,000 in cash and 25,000,000 acres of land as the subsidy, and agreeing to complete certain portions of the road. The company entered upon the work, and prosecuted it with great vigor and energy, and came to us in 1884 with the proposition that, if we advanced or loaned to them $2,500,000 and $7,500,000, in round numbers $30,000,000, they would complete the road five years earlier than the time named in the contract. The House, after a lengthy discussion, agreed to that proposition, with the expectation of receiving the road five years in advance of the time mentioned in the contract, the contract being for 1891, and the proposition being that, if they received the loan of money, they would give us the road in 1886, the present year. This proposition required that the rate of progress should be very active. That rate of progress necessitated a very much larger outlay than would have been necessary had the company consumed the five years additional in completing their contract. Every man who has been connected with public works, who has had any experience of them, knows that a great deal depends upon the rate of progress and the time which is given to the accomplishment of the contract. Shortening the period by five years necessitated a very much larger outlay by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company than if they had consumed the whole ten years in the construction of the road. The objects to be obtained by the Dominion in securing the road five years earlier than originally proposed were sufficient to induce the Government to accept their proposition, and the $30,000,000 was loaned. At the time they made this proposition, the Government had made a very large expenditure—somewhere near $50,000,000 in subsidy to the company, in payments to contractors for the portions executed by the Government, in the surveys, and in various subsidies to other lines. In making that expenditure, the Government believed that, at some time, when the road was running, we should receive at the least what was equivalent to the interest on that outlay, not directly, but indirectly; that is, that, in the general benefits to the country at large, there would be a return at least equivalent to the interest on that outlay. Otherwise, I assume that the Government would not undertake an expenditure for the construction of a work if they had not expectation that, either directly or indirectly, there would be a return equivalent to the interest upon the expenditure. Now, if we take that view of the case, we find that we have received the advantages and the benefits of an expenditure of nearly $50,000,000 five years in advance of the time specified in the contract with the company. The value of that to us, as a mere matter of interest, assuming that the indirect advantages of having that road running is equivalent only to the interest upon the money, amounts to a saving to us of from $9,000,000 to $10,000,000 by getting the running of it and the advantages of it five years earlier than the time mentioned in the contract. We have been the gainers in this respect, while the company has incurred a very much larger expenditure by hastening the construction so much sooner than was contemplated by the contract. In 1885, the company came again to us and said: You see that we have made very rapid progress with the work; it is very near completion; but the money which you, under the Bill of 1884, agreed to advance us, is not quite sufficient to complete all our undertakings in respect to that road and its equipment; and they asked us to modify the condition of things which were accorded under the Bill of 1884. Their proposition in 1885, as the House remembers, was that we should divide the indebtedness, that $20,000,000 should be payable to us in cash, secured by $20,000,000 in bonds, that $9,889,000 should be secured upon the lands of the company alone, and that we should advance them a further sum of $5,000,000. This was agreed to by the House, the $5,000,000 were granted, making the total amount advanced to the company, $35,000,000. The undertaking of the company, in floating a portion of the $35,000,000 of the last year's arrangement, was successful, and the $5,000,000 were returned to the Government. They come now with a proposition to re-pay to us the $20,000,000 secured by the $20,000,000 in bonds, and that we shall set apart a portion of land for the $9,889,000 that was secured under last year's arrangement upon the whole lands of the company. The amount that has been drawn of the $20,000,000 secured upon bonds is $19,150,700, the interest upon which has been paid up to the 21st January last. There remains, then, as secured upon the lands under the Act of last year, $9,880,912, upon which there has been no interest paid since the 20th July last. The proposition is that we shall take for that sum and the interest up to the 1st May, amounting in all to $10,189,000, lands at $1.50 per acre; that would amount to 6,793,014 acres. The amount of lands under the original contract to be given to them was 25,000,000 acres. Of these there have been sold 3 465,385 acres, and there remains unearned, of the original 25,000,000, 600,988 acres, leaving as earned by the company and unsold, 20,933,647 acres. The proposition is made that we take the land at $1.50 per acre, and that would leave with us 6,793,000 acres, and the company would have 14,140,633 acres, that are at present earned, and when the whole 25,000,000 are earned there would still remain with them, after what has been sold and what will be set apart to settle the lien we have upon the land—there would still be in the hands of the company 14,741,821 acres. The proposition is to pay us the $20,000,000 five years before it is actually due. The House will remember that the rate of interest they are paying to us upon the $20,000,000 is 4 per cent., while the bonds that have been issued are bearing 5 per cent. interest. The inducement of the company to change a 4 per cent. for a 5 per cent. bond, is, as claimed, in the benefit that will accrue to them from having entire control, with the exception of the lien, of the land grant bonds that have been issued of 14,750,000 acres of land. The company have represented to us that a large amount of capital is still necessary to put the road in such a position that it may compete with all the American roads, and that will be sufficient for the traffic that they believe will come to it from both the east and the west, their desire to make it a road second to none on the continent; a road that will be calculated, in its connections east and west, to draw to this continent and to the Dominion of Canada a very large trade and traffic through it, and they claim that it is necessary they should have control of as much of the land as possible, which remains the only means they have of raising the necessary capital to carry out their undertaking. The Government believe it to be desirable, first, to secure the $20,000,000 cash—very desirable indeed, as it would prevent us again from going into the money market to borrow to pay off the floating indebtedness of the Government at the present time. If we had gone into the market and could have borrowed on terms as favorable as Sir Leonard Tilley borrowed last year, it would have cost us nearly a quarter of a million; that is, the continual payment of commissions and the payment of interest on the other side, would have amounted to nearly a quarter of a million dollars more, as compared with receiving twenty millions in cash at the present time. There would then be, supposing we could float a loan upon the same terms as Sir Leonard Tilley floated his loan last year, a saving of over $200,000 in getting ready cash from the company. In respect to the $10,000,000 that is laid upon the land only in the first place, I have stated to the House that we have not been receiving interest upon that since last July. Under the arrangement of last year the interest is to be paid from the sales of land, and in default of payment of interest from the sales of land, an authority was given to the Government to order the land to be sold to meet that interest. This would continually have brought us into conflict with the company; to have forced the sales of these Dominion lands would have depreciated the value of the land in the markets of the world and would have been a damage both to the Government and to the company. We have, then, considered that it was both in the interest of the company and the Government in respect to the land upon which the ten million are held as a mortgage, that we should take sufficient of the land at $1.50 per acre to meet that amount of capital and the interest up to the 1st May, and that we should be free to dispose of them as we thought best, and that the company should be free to dispose of the other portions as they thought best, in order to raise sufficient capital to enable the company to complete their undertakings in connection with this great work. Of the $20,000,000 secured by the bonds $19,150,700 have been drawn, leaving unpaid $849,300 and there is yet unearned $708,400. Of the original subsidy there remains unpaid $600,988 and of land 600,988 acres. It is estimated by the engineers that there is required to complete the contract on the eastern section $25,000, on the central section $284,000, in all $309,000; for which there remains of the original subsidy $600,000 in round figures, and of lands 600,000 acres. The unpaid money of the original subsidy and the unearned land of the original grant is held to be more than sufficient to guarantee the completion of the road which is estimated to cost $309,000. In addition, there has been a temporary structure made somewhere in the mountains, and it is estimated that the unearned subsidy and unearned lands will be more than sufficient to complete both. Under the original contract power was given to the company to issue $25,000,000 worth of mortgage bonds upon the land to be handed over to them and issued as the land was earned. $5,000,000, of the $25,000,000 was held by the Government as a guarantee for the running of the road after completion; $8,996,000 are still held by the Government and $3,568,000 are in the hands of the public. It is proposed that the $8,996,000 in the hands of the Government shall be cancelled and that as far as possible those in the hands of the public shall be cancelled and exchanged for new bonds, to be issued upon the land that will remain with the company after setting apart $6,000,000 odd in liquidation of the $9,000,000 that lies as a mortgage upon the whole. It is proposed in the resolutions that the company shall have power to issue new land grant bonds and to such an amount per acre as shall be approved by the Governor in Council, not exceeding $2 per acre, and these shall be in substitution of the land grant bonds that are now out and issued under the old and original arrangement. And it is proposed that the $5,000,000 in the hands of the Government as security for the running of the road may be exchanged for a like amount of the new issue. It it asked in these resolutions that the Government shall have the right to mortgage the Algoma Branch. Under the original arrangement that right was taken away from the company, but under the proposition of last year it was given back to the company that it might mortgage the branch for the extension of the branch itself. It is proposed in these resolutions to restore the power to mortgage that branch and to return to them, upon settlement of the accounts, certain bonds held of the Ontario and Quebec Railway. In fact it is proposed simply by these resolutions that we shall receive back $20,000,000 in cash, that we shall take sufficient lands of the original land grant to set against $9,889,000, which is the mortgage upon them; that we shall settle up all accounts with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and that we shall enable them to proceed entirely, or as far as possible, independently of the Government and work out their own destiny. These are the propositions contained in the resolutions before the House, and I assume that more particular details may be given in committee. In general terms this is the nature of the propositions which are submitted and contained in the resolutions before the House.

Mr. BLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that these proposals should have been laid before the House, but I cannot say I am surprised, for I never believed that the loan which the Government invited us to contribute to the Canadian Pacific Railway would be paid in full. I feared that their promises, which they made in 1884, would be broken. I suspected that preparations were being made for the breaking of them in 1885; and my fears of 1884 and my suspicions of 1885 are realised to-night in 1886. What is the nature of the proposals before us? The Canadian Pacific Railway Company's shareholders have paid into that company $29,500,000 for their stock. At the recent prices of that stock, prices which prevailed within a short period, though they may not be the prices of the moment, it was worth in the market about $43,500,000. That is an advance of $13,000,000 or 44 per cent. upon the average price which the company themselves realised for the stock. Thus, for each $100 which the shareholders paid into the company they can get on the market $144 at recent prices, and in addition they have received very large dividends upon their investment, from the time that investment was made up to the present time. That is the financial position of the company's stockholders in whose favor we are asked to make this arrangement to-day. Only two years ago we loaned that company an enormous sum of money, about $30,000,000, the greater proportion of which was practically loaned them in order to secure their own dividends. That was the purpose of more than half the loan. They were to repay us this money, both that which was to secure their dividends and that which was to be used in the work, with interest at 5 per cent. That was the bargain of two years ago. And now we are asked to give up our claim to the repayment of ten millions of this money, to add ten millions to our net debt, to add over $400,000 a year to our interest charge in order to relieve these shareholders from the payment of that $400,000 a year, with which they are onerated, although under the less advantageous arrangement of 1885, onerated in a manner inferior to that under the original arrangements. It is proposed in effect to add $400,000 to the profits of the shareholders of that company, and the taxpayers of Canada are asked to accomplish this result. The company in the announcement they made on the recent issue of the balance of the $35,000,000 of their debenture debt, declared that notwithstanding the disadvantages under which they labored through the non-completion of the system, they have earned a net profit over the fixed charges of $100,000 last year. The fixed charges include the payment of interest, include the interest on the Government debt, and therefore it is proposed to add $400,000 to the sum of the net profits already realised by the company. Now, it is to be remembered that the company and the Government declared that the disconnection, the non-completion of the system is a great obstacle to the creation of more profits. I know they told us other stories in former times, but of late years this has been their story, and they say that on its completion it will become an immediately profitable enterprise. The First Minister declared, in his place in Parliament, that the ends of the road would be the most profitable, that that had been demonstrated, and therefore it is an enterprise of this description which is to make such vast profits, which is now on the eve of completion—sometimes we are told it is finished, sometimes that it is just about finished, and sometimes hon. gentlemen tell us, when occasion requires, that it will cost a great deal more to finish it, and that we must enlarge the capital account for that purpose—but just about finished, we will say, and therefore ready to enter on its career of large profits; it is with reference to that enterprise that the taxpayers of Canada are invited to contribute $400,000 to add to their profits and to make us that much poorer. Now, I should have been glad, if I could at all possibly consistently with the truth, to find myself able to acknowledge to-night that in the forecasts which the Government has made from time to time, when they were inviting this House to enter on the Canadian Pacific Railway policy, in the forecasts they made as to the results of that policy—with reference to the railway itself, with reference to the North-West immigration, with reference to North-West settlement, with reference to the North-West lands, with reference to the loans and advances which were made to the company—I say I should be delighted if I were able, consistently with the truth, to acknowledge that the forecast of hon. gentlemen had been accurate and that my own more gloomy views had turned out to be incorrect. I am not able to acknowledge that, and I can hardly be called on to acknowledge it, when I heard the Finance Minister make a moment ago such a complete travesty of what some of those expectations were, when he declared the modest views of what the expectations of the Government were in incurring this expenditure—that they hoped in some indirect way to obtain something equivalent to the interest of 4 per cent. on $50,000,000—I shall have to point out, in view of that declaration, what the expectations of the Government really were, what their pledges to Parliament really were, what they stated was to be the result of the policy of which we are discussing another phase and another development to-night. In considering that subject, I wish to point out first of all that the Ministers pledged themselves most absolutely to the finality of the obligations under the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, and arrangements which they proposed to us; secondly, that they promised us as the result of the active Canadian Pacific Railway policy which they proposed in the spring of 1880, and enlarged in the winter of 1880-81, enormous advantages from the rapid construction of the road through the great development by immigration to the North-West, and the introduction in great numbers from the old world of new taxpayers into our North-West dominions; next, that they declared that the Canadian Pacific Railway policy which they proposed to us would result in the very rapid sale of the Crown lands; so that every cent of our expenditure in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, with the interest, would be paid to us out of the sales of those lands, and no burden would be imposed on the country at all; next, that they declared that the railway company would itself build branches all over the North-West with a view to utilising its land grant, and that as a result of the subsidy in land and money, which we gave in the year 1881, we would secure not merely the construction of the main line but also the construction, free of cost to us, whether in land or in money, of the branches and feeders which were admitted then, as they are admitted now, to be absolutely essential to the development of the North-West; next, that they declared that the railway company was going to do the immigration work which otherwise we would have to do, and so that a large saving of expense would be obtained by the Government; and further, that the monopoly which they proposed would not affect—could not affect—Manitoba, and would not injuriously affect the other Territories; and lastly, that they would secure—and they professed they had secured—arrangements for fair play and free competition between the different eastern portions of the Dominion, notably the Province of Ontario and the Province of Quebec, by the conditions which they imposed on the Canadian Pacific Railway as to the rates of freight to the neutral point, Callander, as between the roads constructed or projected in the Province of Ontario and the Province of Quebec. Now, Sir, on all these points the forecasts and pledges of hon. gentlemen have been falsified by events. First of all, as to the finality of the bargain. You recollect that the subventions which we were asked to give in the year 1881, were then denominated by the Ministry as large, ample, liberal, and the hon. gentleman who now leads the House specially declared that they were so of set purpose, in order to avoid what might otherwise happen—the company coming to us again Session after Session for further aids. They said we want at once to make this final, to get the business ended by giving large and liberal subventions at first so that there may be no further demands upon Parliament. What they said I wanted, was, that the subventions should be so pared down that the Government would come and say, we did not give them enough and we must give them more. In 1884, having made in 1881 these final arrangements, the element of finality having been so specially dwelt upon by the then Minister of Railways (Sir Charles Tupper) by the First Minister, by the Minister of Public Works, as the great joy of the occasion, as the thing upon which we should congratulate ourselves in 1881, in 1884, they came to us and asked us to lend $30,000,000 to make the final agreement finally final. We were told then that it was a profitable 5 per cent. investment. If I recollect aright, the present Minister of the Interior pointed out that there was really a gain to be made, that it was a prudent investment; we were borrowing money at 4 per cent. and were going to lend it to the railway company at 5 per cent.; and yet the hon. gentleman to-night talked about this being a losing transaction! And as to there being any risk of the principal and interest at 5 per cent. not being repaid to us, the idea was scouted by the Government and their supporters. It was calculated that we were going to get back our principal and our interest at 5 per cent, and so make a very good thing out of this loan. We were also told that this loan was to provide ample funds; that the road was being built a little faster than originally intended; but it was obvious that there would be a severe competition between this and other transcontinental highways, notably the Northern Pacific; and it was necessary that we should have a first-class outfit for our road in order that it might compete on good terms; and so we were to lend the money necessary—a good investment, sure to be returned with 5 per cent.—to put the road in a first-class position; and the arrangement was to be finally final. We were also asked during the same Session, and partly in a previous Session, to engage for about $12,000,000 more in connection with the completion of the work, in accordance with the enlarged ideas—in connection with the settlement with British Columbia in the west, and in connection with the arrangements for finding an Atlantic port, and, also, for the relief of the Province of Quebec from its contribution towards the extension into that Province. We were told that all these arrangements were ample for these purposes, and the finally final arrangement was finally final for just one year. For, in the year 1885, we were asked to add some millions more to these eastern engagements, because they were found inadequate. We were also asked to lower the rate of interest on the loan from 5 per cent. to 4 per cent. The somewhat hard-headed and close-handed views of hon. gentlemen when they were persuading us to lend the $30,000,000, had changed in the course of twelve short months, and it was thought rather a mean thing to ask the railway company for 5 per cent. They forgot that it was they who were mean, for it was they who had made the bargain; but they thought that the Dominion of Canada ought to be above asking more than 4 per cent., as we were told that was all that the money cost us; though now we hear the Minister of Finance saying that we are paying commissions when we borrow the money, and paying commissions when we pay the interest and when we get the loan back, so that the money is costing us more than 4 per cent., and it is really paying us to get back the loan. It is really difficult to follow the hon. gentleman's calculations, and derive any particular result from the calculations of more than one occasion. We were also asked at that time, in 1885, to enlarge the borrowing powers of the company to a considerable extent. We were told that further demands were made upon the company's resources, with the view of making the complete equipment, and the admirable road, more complete and more admirable still; and a sum of $15,000,000 more was wanted. We re-adjusted the security system of the company, with the view of enabling it to get from the public $15,000,000 more money, which it did get, in order that its equipment might be made ample, and its construction perfect. We were also then asked to impair our securities on which the interest had been lowered to 4 per cent.—to impair them as to the bulk and as to the $10,000,000, roundly speaking, which it is now proposed to adjust by these resolutions. So that our position was that the arrangement which was final in the year 1881, and which was made finally final in the year 1884, was proposed to be altered again in order that it might be made finally finally final in the year 1885 in those various matters. But there was one thing, Sir, that we were not asked to do; we were not asked to buy back our own land grant in order to supply the company with further resources Parliament was not asked to do that; the company asked the Government to do it, but the Government—as I thought then and said, and as I think now, though they have changed their minds—wisely declined. They declined the proposal made to them by the company that they should take back a portion of the land grant, and release a portion of this obligation. They declared that they would not ask Parliament to agree to these terms; they declared they would still insist on the debt being continued and being paid; but they professed to be anxious that it should be secured on the remaining land grant of the company, being far the largest proportion of its 21,500,000 acres, subject to a comparatively small portion of outstanding bonds—because for this purpose I may set aside the 5,000,000 of bonds held as security for operation—I say that the 21,500,000 acres were referred to us as good security for the $10,000,000 upon which it was to be placed. We pointed out the inconveniences of this arrangement. The hon. gentleman is painfully alive to those inconveniences to-night. He has urged how inconvenient the situation is. He says, here we are, we have not had any interest since the 1st of July last; we cannot get it; the lands have not produced it. We told him last Session they would not, but he did not believe it then. He says it is rather awkward for us to force a sale of lands—it would depreciate the price of the other Dominion lands if we do. We told him last Session that this would be his situation, but he did not believe it then, and he comes to us to-night saying, I have made such a bad arrangement, contrary to your advice last Session, that now, to get out of this hobble, we must buy back some of the lands absolutely and give up the debt pro tanto. This is a more rapid step in the direction of the result which was predicted last Session than a good many people expected. We were not asked to do this then, but we are asked to do it now. We were told then that this arrangement of 1885 would provide ample funds for every purpose—that the company would be free to accomplish the great and enlarged objects which had been set before the country by the Government and the company as to be accomplished by means of the new arrangement. Now, in the year 1886, we are told that that again is a mistake, and that further large sums are required by the company, and that it is necessary to give them further relief in order that those sums may be obtained and those results attained. We are asked by the Government now to do what the Government refused to submit to us for our approval or consideration last year. The company then made this proposal to them, but they would not even bring it down, because they said they did not intend to agree to it. They waited until they could make other terms with the company, and those other terms they brought down. Now, the terms are that this $10,000,000 is to be added to our net debt, that this $400,000 a year is to be added to our interest charge, and that the capital account of the company is to be swollen by an indefinite number of millions more, to be borrowed, in order to make the bargain finally, finally, finally final until the next year or the year after. So much for the pledge of finality; so much for the assurances given to us in the year 1881 that the matter was satisfactorily gone and done with by the arrangement for $25,000,000 and 25,000,000 acres of land. Then, with reference to the predictions and pledges of the Government, as to the result of their rapid Canadian Pacific Railway policy on the increase of population in the North-West, a vital subject to us in more ways than one—a vital subject to us with reference to the making of this nation; a vital subject to us with reference to the financial strength of this people; a vital subject to us with reference to the cost and outcome of the undertaking into which we launched, upon the faith of these predictions, which have been so woefully falsified—the First Minister, in the earlier part of 1880, promised, as a result of the land and Canadian Pacific Railway policy which was then brought down, a great immigration. He went into detailed figures and calculations, which he declared were most moderate and the result of which could be relied upon, as the outcome of the policy on which he was going to embark. The official figures, up to the year 1879 allowing the estimates which I have made of 4,000 for the North-West Territory population in the year 1870, and of 1,000 for the immigration into the whole North-West, including Manitoba, in 1870, for which two points there are no official figures—allowing 5,000 for these two, and adding them to the official figures, the population of the country would stand at 53,500 in 1879, apart from the natural increase. The First Minister promised us an immigration of 245,000 between 1879 and 1885, to which add the estimate for natural increase from the earlier period up to 1885, say 15,000, and you get a total population, exclusive of Indians, in 1885, of 313 500, composed of these three elements: the first is the official figures up to the year in which the Minister made his statement, adding only 5,000 for the two items I have mentioned; the second element is the Minister's figure of population for the six years following; the third element is the natural increase. Now, he declared that to these figures there would be added by immigration, from 1885 to 1890, 325,000, to which, if you add for natural increase on the whole, 44,000, you would get as a result a population in 1890 of 680,000. Sir Charles Tupper declared that no intelligent man could doubt the accuracy of this statement; hon. gentlemen opposite swallowed it, and they acted upon that view. The Minister based these figures of his upon the results in some of the Western States, and he cited the statistics in Minnesota, Kansas, and in several other States in which he declared the rate of progress had been most remarkable, and he stated that we would achieve in the various years for which he gave his figures similar results. In answer to these statements I pointed out what the rate and the resources of increase in the Western Territories and States of the United States had been. I pointed out the case of a group of twelve of these States and Territories, the acreage of which was 634,000,000, and showed that they had a population in 1860 of 5,600,000; in 1870 of 8,640,000, making an increase of 3,040,000 on the population of 1860. Of that population which was there in 1870, there were born in that group no less than 4,390,000 or 50 per cent.; there were born in other portions of the United States 2,500,000 or over 29 per cent., and there were foreign born 1,750,000 or 20½ per cent. There were thus, as I have shown, three great sources of increase which had produced the results to which the First Minister appealed as the basis of his calculation; first, the natural rapid increase in a fertile and sparsely settled country, while we, in our case, had at that time no substantial nucleus from which to produce a natural rapid increase; secondly, the great immigration from the Eastern to the Western States, while we had only one-fourth in round figures of their reserve store of settled population from which a surplus might be expected to flow—in round figures we stood 4,000,000 to about 40,000,000; third, the enormous foreign immigration to the States, in part direct to the western districts and in large part to the east, having however the very important result of setting free the flow of emigration from the east to the west of the native population of the States. As to this last source I pointed out that we, for several reasons, largely political, could not hope, early or largely, to divert the current of immigration either of Europeans generally or Irish Catholics specially from the United States, so long as those States had, as at that time they still continued to have, very considerable reserves of cheap and fertile lands. Now, the general census for the States for the later decennial period was not then available, and both sides had to resort to the States' censuses in the west for information as to that period. I referred myself to two States to which hon. gentlemen had referred, and upon which they had relied as showing marks of the greatest progress and prosperity; the States of Kansas and Nebraska. I showed what their progress to 1879 had been, and that, remarkable as that progress unquestionably was, it did not furnish a ground for the estimates of hon. gentlemen as applied to our condition. Well, a few months passed over from the period of these estimates of the Government, and they then brought down an altered Canadian Pacific Railway policy, under which the work was to be done, partly by the company, partly by the Government, and in a still much shorter time, taken as whole, than was proposed in the early part of 1880. They declared that the altered policy, with the stimulus to be produced by the more rapid execution of the work, and by the great efforts and expenditure of the company, which they were to make in the immigration field, would have the effect of largely accelerating the settlement of the North-West beyond their former expectations; that it would tend further to brighten the prospects, so bright already, which they had set before us a few months previous. Then, in 1883 or 1884, it was arranged that the work should be still further accelerated, that is, it should be finished in five years from that time; and the Minister once again declared, and the Minister of Finance again reiterated, that this acceleration of the work would still further benefit Canada. The declaration was that it should increase the volume and quicken the flow of immigration, and every effort was made by hon. gentlemen to verify these predictions. The declarations which they made were of the strongest character, and they announced some time afterwards that the facts were going to be as good or better than they had stated they would be. Now, even during the years which had even preceded this acceleration, the year 1881, and particularly the years 1882 and 1883, the Ministers were declaring that these predictions to which I have referred were fulfilled and more than fulfilled, that they had been better than their word. They were booming the North-West to the utmost of their power. They regret the boom now; they sometimes say it did a great deal of harm; they speak of that regrettable inflation, the unfortunate results which have happened, and so forth; but they did all they could to produce it, and they are mainly responsible for its production and for the disastrous results which have flowed from it. They gave official figures of these alleged results of theirs. The official returns of the actual immigration to the North-West, carrying on the official figures from the year 1879, which I gave a while ago, would give, for the immigration to that country, up to the year 1885, 237,000 souls, to which, if you add 13,000 for natural increase, you will get a total of 250,000 as those who ought to be in the territory in the year 1885, always excluding the Indians. Now, I am not speaking—it is as well it should be understood—of the estimates of the hon. Minister now the Minister of Railways. We know what his estimates were. Why, I recollect one time when he told us—I forget the figures exactly, but something equivalent to about twice the whole immigration which has taken place from foreign parts, apart from the Irish immigration, as that which he expected in one season.

Mr. POPE. I only spoke of one season, and we got them.

Mr. BLAKE. No; I asked him on several occasions what the expected immigration was to be; and he gave that. But I am not speaking of the estimates. I am speaking of the official declarations as to the immigrants that actually came in, and it is by these declarations I am proposing now to judge the situation; and by these, taking up to the year 1879, the figures to which I have referred, you find that we ought to have had 250,000 souls in the North-West in the year 1885. These official returns gave us for the year 1881, in round numbers, 22,000; for 1882, 50,800; for 1883, 42,800; and for 1884, 24,400—or a total of 148,000 immigrant settlers into that country in four consecutive years, more than every white soul that is there to-day. I do not believe that there are many more than 125,000 whites in Manitoba and the North-West Territories at this time, only about two out of five of the results of the First Minister's statement of what ought to be there, only about one out of two of the Minister's statements of those who actually did settle there. Now, what has become of them? Where are they? Did they ever go in, or, if they did go in, where are they gone to? Because we find the official figures which indicate to us that they went in, and I am quite convinced they are not to be found there now. But still more, of those settlers, when the calculations were presented to us of the accession of strength and wealth to Canada, the representation was that the great bulk would be from abroad. It was foreign immigration and immigration from the British Isles to the North-West which we were to count upon mainly. In those early years, little, indeed hardly anything was said of immigration from one part of Canada to the other. But, when you look at results, you find under the territorial census over 60 per cent. of the white settlers are Canadian born, and less than 40 per cent. came from abroad; and of those who came from abroad, a considerable proportion may have been, some I believe were, persons who, although they did come from abroad, had been settlers in the older parts of Canada before they went to the North-West. On the same ratio, which is perhaps too favorable, there would be only about 50,000 immigrants from abroad—from the States, from the British Isles, from the continent of Europe, from abroad, in a word foreign-born—out of the whole immigration into that country. Now, that is the result. We were abused for suggesting that these estimates and these official returns did not represent, in the first case the probability, in the second case the actual fact. We were told that we were decrying the country; we were told that we were underestimating the prospects and the results, in order to produce evil effects; but to-day you find the situation altogether changed; to-day you find the principal organ of the Government discussing this very question in very different language. In the Mail newspaper of the 5th of this month is an article upon the North-West, from which I quote an extract or two:

"We have repeated boom estimates and quoted boomsters' figures"—

Who made the boom estimates, and whose were the boomsters' figures?

"We have repeated boom estimates and quoted boomsters' figures about everything until we have created in our minds the vision of a region which does not exist anywhere on earth; and now that it has been shattered by the prosaic revelations of the census, we are weak enough to feel sorry at being undeceived."

Again:

"The truth is that, all things considered, the population of Manitoba and the Territories is quite as large, placing it at 125,000 whites, as we had any right to expect it to be. It must be remembered that in all the new regions in the United States, the large part of the population is American born, hailing from the older States. There is no exception to this rule. In Dakota, for example, according to the special census taken in that territory last June, 269,700 settlers, out of a total of 415,000, 75 per cent. were native Americans, leaving only 35 per cent., or 145,000, to the credit of immigration. The same strange ethnic process is at work in our Territories, for by the census just taken it appears that of a white population of 23,000, no fewer than 14,200, or a little over 60 per cent. are of Canadian origin. But if we must assume, in accordance with this law, that the greater part of the future population of the North-West is to consist of the overflow from the older Provinces, then it is evident that the increase in population is sure to be slow as compared with the increase in the newer regions across the line, since our reservoir of population is but a-tenth as large as theirs. Moreover, it is well known that those immigrants who, next to the native-born settlers, have helped to develop Dakota and Minnesota, viz., the Scandinavians and Germans, are not to be procured for our North-West just now. They avoid our Territory because they do not approve of our political institutions. This is an unpalatable truth, but there it is, and we must take account of it. The nativity tables of the foreign-born population in Dakota have not yet been compiled in detail, but the Swedes and Norwegians rank first in number, and the Germans are well up. So that, being practically cut off from German and Scandinavian immigration, and having, as compared with the Americans, but a small overflow from native sources, it is manifestly absurd to expect any tremendous rate of development in our North-West just at present. Our time will come when the homestead lands in the United States are exhausted."

The article then proceeds to point out the last report of the Commissioner at Washington, showing that these reserves have shrunk to comparatively small proportions, and, after a quotation of that kind, the article proceeds:

"In the course of a few years Dakota will be out of the field. The immigration bureau of that territory says, in one of its monthly publications (that for February), that at the end of 1885 the area of vacant Government land, rated as agricultural land and open to settlement, was estimated at 20,000,000 acres, of which 18,000,000 lay in northern Dakota. For the six months ending 31st December, the area of land entered on or filed was 1,524,000 acres—say 3,000,000 a year. At this rate the vacant land will be pretty well exhausted in seven years, and a most formidable competitor to Manitoba and the Territories disposed of. Canada may then surely reckon on an immigration from the continent of Europe, provided efforts are made beforehand to make the people acquainted with the wealth of our resources. Meanwhile we probably need not look for any miraculous development of the North-West. There will be a steady influx of settlers from the United Kingdom, with a sprinkling from the continent of Europe; but the main stream of immigration will doubtless consist of young Canadians who, but for our enterprise in opening up this great region, would find their way to the United States, where so many thousands of our people settled in the days when we had no free prairie homesteads to offer."

That is the present view of those who thought we were going to have this enormous immigration from across the seas into the North-West in the last few years, and in the few years which are to expire before 1891. Now, Sir, I think it very plain that in these respects upon which the country was asked to embark on a scheme of rapid construction and enormous expenditure, with the promise of immediate and tangible results of the most valuable character, events have already shown how false were the predictions and how untrustworthy the guides who led the country into this enterprise after this fashion. Now, then let me take the next point: it is the promise that our lands would be settled fast, and that out of them every cent of our Canadian Pacific Railway obligations and interest would be met. I do not go back before the year 1880; it is not necessary to advert to the older statements. In 1880 the First Minister used these words:

"For the purpose of relieving the people of Canada from the burden of taxation, which the work would otherwise entail, we have offered every second lot at an upset price, so that the road may be eventually built without costing the people one single farthing which will not be recouped. I believe that land can be made productive under the terms of the resolution to complete the whole of that road, to open that immense country, and give us a magnificent railway from sea to sea, without adding to the burdens of the people or without causing any necessity for an increase of taxation. We can do it all by the sale of the lands which we hold as a sacred trust for the purpose of defraying the whole expense of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway."

Again he says:

"As the road progresses, the annual sale of lands will be more than sufficient to meet all possible cost of the railway."

Again:

"The proceeds of the sale of the lands will meet our engagements as the work progresses, including claims for interest."

The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), in an amendment to the motion of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), in the same Session, moved, and the House resolved, at his instance:

"That the policy of the Government for the disposal of the public land in Manitoba and the North West, is well calculated to promote the rapid settlement of that region, and to raise the moneys required for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway without further burdening the people, and that it deserves the support and approval of this House."

Well, Sir, in the same Session the First Minister declared that we would sell, from 1880 to 1885 inclusive, 28,000 pre-emptions, and for the year 1885, 6,250; that we would make other sales, from 1880 to 1885, 14,000 in number and in the year 1885, 3,125 in number. The results have been: Pre-emptions from 1880 to 1885, 15,275, of which I am afraid a great many will be cancelled or abandoned, instead of 28,000; and for the year 1885, 663 instead of 6,250. There were sales from 1880 to 1885, 9,634, instead of 14,000: and for the year 1885, 785 instead of 3,125. He estimated in the years 1885 to 1889, 40,625 pre-emptions and 20,313 sales. What are the estimates to-day, I wonder? We have settled just 138 homesteaders up to the 31st December, on 400 miles of the forty-eight mile belt of the Canadian Pacific Railway. In the same year, 1880, the First Minister estimated the cash proceeds of the lands actually to be received from that year to 1890 inclusive, at $38,600,000. The amount which was to be then due but not payable, but still a mortgage on the lands, and as good as cash, bearing interest, was to be $32,700,000, or an aggregate of received and due of $71,300,000. He estimated the cost of survey and the administration of those lands at $2,400,000, and he brought down a handsome balance of net results of $68,900,000 before the year 1890. In reply to that estimate I pointed out that the group of Western States to which I referred had, in 1850, taken up per head of the population twelve and one-half acres, and had improved per head of the population five acres; that in 1860 they had taken up per head of the population twelve acres, and had improved six and one-third acres; that in 1870 they had taken up per head of the population ten and one-half acres, and had improved six and one-half acres. Well, the Minister calculated upon an immigration of 550,000, taking up no less than fifty-nine acres per head; and Sir Charles Tupper, somewhat later, calculated that 100,000 farmers in the North-West would produce 640,000,000 bushels of wheat in one year. You may combine these calculations and you find, Sir, the First Minister calculated that the taking up of land would be in the proportion of fifty-nine acres per soul of the population, and the Minister of Railways declared that 100,000 families would produce 640,000,000 bushels of wheat, and you see by what follies the people of this country have been gulled into the position in which they are placed to-day. I admitted, Sir, that it was probable that a very considerably larger area per head would be taken up in the North-West, under our land regulations and with reference to modern methods of cultivation, than in the earlier period in the Western States, but I declared then, and I repeat the statement now, that the suggestion of fifty-nine acres per head was, and is nothing less than ridiculous. You find to-day the Minister in charge of the Department saying that there is a very strong opinion amongst the population that 160 acres is as much as a man ought to have—as the average farmer ought to have—and still the hon. gentleman proposed at that early date that about sixty acres per head of the population, or, if you count five to a family, 300 acres per head, was about the calculation for all, including those who lived in towns and villages—merchants, mechanics, farm servants—the whole population. Then, again, as to the proceeds of the sales. I pointed out that the United States, in the eighty-three years preceding 1879, had received, gross, $204,500,000 from their public lands, or $2,460,000 a year; that in the twenty years before 1879, they had received $30,350,000; or for eleven years, about $16,500,000, while we were told to expect a receipt of $38,500,000 in cash in eleven years, and $32,700,000 as good as gold, in mortgages upon the land. I declared then that these calculations were wholly visionary, and I begged the House not to enter into large engagements upon such calculations. A few months later came the bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Government then promised that the sales of land would recoup all our expenditure, and they persuaded the House and the country to agree to the bargain upon that specific pledge. Well, Sir, we then declared that that pledge would be broken; we declared that the country would not be recouped out of those lands for the money which it was expending, and was called upon to expend. You have, to-day, the statement of the Finance Minister, from which you can judge whether our forecasts or those of gentlemen opposite were the more correct. We asked the House to adopt the policy of proceeding as rapidly as required, even in advance of the demands of settlement, in the development of the railway facilities for the North West, but to keep down the unnecessary cost of very rapid construction of portions of the road not then urgently needed, and not to plunge into this enormous expenditure upon fallacious estimates. The delusions upon which hon. gentlemen opposite invited the House and the country to agree to their policy were kept up by them for years. I need not quote their utterances during the year 1881 because I shall show you, Mr. Speaker, that all along after that, and to within a very short space of time, those utterances were repeated and re-affirmed by Ministers. On 10th February, 1882, the First Minister made this statement:

"We have not forgotten the promise made by the Government that they would make the land in that country recoup to the Dominion the $25,000,000 that we have promised the Syndicate, and what the Dominion has already spent, or is spending, on the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is no reason in the world, as I have urged again and again, why the people of the older Provinces should put their hands in their pockets and settle that country and improve it, and build railways at their expense. That country, which is going to reap the advantage of those railways should provide the cost of the improvements, and the North-West, I am happy to say, is so rich, and will be so sought for, that what was a reasonable proposition at the beginning is now a certainty, namely, that it will be able to sell sufficient land, that while preserving the homesteading right, it would be able to repay to those who have contributed to the taxes necessary in connection with building the road the money with interest added."

The Finance Minister to-night has talked about our reaping some indirect advantage equal to 4 per cent. on $50,000,000 or $2,000,000 a year. He was careful to repeat the word "indirect," and he proceeded with a sort of hocus pocus calculation, which I would have been better pleased had he used before he was Finance Minister than which he occupies that position, that we had received that return from the accelerated rapidity of construction and the earlier period at which the money was spent. That was not the promise made to us—not that which the Finance Minister has stated to us in terms which I think will become historical. But the promise was that we would get out of the land in hard cash the money we were contributing to the company and putting into the road, with interest added thereto. And that was the promise as late as 1882—not merely the promise, but we had the allegation that that which had been a promise and a pledge in 1880 had become a certainty in 1882. Well, then, on 2nd April, 1882, not the 1st, the First Minister said this:

"It was the policy of the Government that that country should eventually pay for its own railway."

Again:

"75,000,000 acres are to be sold—they are not to be sold for homestead purposes—for the purpose of relieving the people of the older Provinces who, on the faith of this assurance and promise—and on this promise only—accepted the burden, and have at the polls recorded their sanction of this policy. * * * They endorsed this policy on the understanding that, eventually, that country would pay the whole of the expense."

There I have the statement of the hon. gentleman that it was upon the promise that we were to be recouped in cash out of the lands that Parliament, and afterwards the people, accepted the bargain and endorsed the policy—on that promise and on that promise only. Who is bold enough to declare now that that promise has not been broken?—that policy which the people they confess endorsed on the understanding that eventually the country would pay the whole of the expense? Again:

"It is safe, it is certainly beyond the possibility of doubt to say that every farthing and every cent and every dollar that has been or will be expended in building the Canadian Pacific Railway, not one shilling of this burden will fall on our shoulders, or on the shoulders of the generation that will succeed us. We will be free from the whole amount of that debt."

Again:

"$750,000 was paid in in one day from the recent sales—this is a very substantial commencement of the fund which is to pay off the $25,000,000. It will be put to the credit of the fund and invested at interest for the purpose of paying off the whole of this $25,000,000."

Now, perhaps, the hon. Finance Minister knows, what he did not know when he made his late Budget speech, and when he told us he was ignorant why Sir Leonard Tilley, his predecessor, had actually put those moneys received from the lands to a sort of separate capital account. That is how the matter stood; the Minister of Finance, however, thought he did not suppose it would be of much consequence as the Government then had a surplus, but now times have changed and the amount, although very small, makes a difference, and the hon. gentleman is going to put it to revenue. I point out to him that, in a light and easy way, he is brushing away a promise, a pledge and engagement, that the money would be placed to capital account and invested at interest, and used to repay the debt. Again:

"By this year then there will be 10,000,000 acres granted to colonisation companies under plan No. 1, which means the eventual payment of $10,000,000 into the Treasury."

And again:

"That will be $10,000,000, and with the sales that will take place of railway lands in other portions, we will have, either in money, or in what is as good as money, solid mortgages on every one of these colonisation tracts an amount equal to $12,500,000; so that in one year we may fairly say we have got half of the whole, $25,000,000."

Where is it now? Then on 12th April, 1882, Sir Charles Tupper said:

"The lands have so increased in value as to warrant us in the statement, and to warrant the conviction in the mind of every intelligent man, that at an early date we will not only have the $25,000,000 recouped to the Treasury, but we will go on; and if we have not wiped out our other responsibilities we will soon be in a condition to wipe out the engagements thrown upon us by the late Government, as well as those incurred by our own in reference to the work."

I think I have shown the House what the situation was in 1882. Let me now come to 1883. In that year Sir Charles Tupper declared that our secured receipts from transactions already effected in the three previous years, 1880, '81 and '82, would be by 1885 a trifle over $10,000,000, apart from all new transactions such as railway grants and further sales; they were actual receipts to come in by the year 1885 from the transactions already accomplished in 1880-81-82. That period has now expired. We declared, on those occasions, that the general result would be that the country would not realise, out of North-West lands, anything appreciable in excess of the cost of the administration, having regard to certain charges which were properly charges upon that administration, charges for police, for Indians, for immigration and for local government; and that if you omitted all those, and took only what the Government called charges of administration, there would not be very much to go towards interest on what we would borrow, and nothing whatever towards the principal. That was the declaration we made. The hon. gentleman declared to the House and the people that those enormous sums would be realised, and would go to a reduction of the principal, and that the interest would be paid also. Which has turned out correct? What are the actual receipts from all sources, not for the transactions of 1880-81-82, but all receipts from 1880 to 1885. The receipts were $4,052,000, and the expenditures for surveys and land officers and that class of expenditure, was $3,320,000, leaving a balance of $732,000. From this you have, in my view, still to deduct certain charges. For example, I estimate that at least one-half of the cost of the Department of the Interior under the old system, before the hon. gentleman enlarged it, is fairly to be chargeable to the land branch of that Department. Of course the Indian branch is a separate branch, and I am speaking of the Interior by itself. Now, half the cost of the Interior under the old scale for the last six years would give you $133,000, and then I take the whole excessive cost of the Interior, beyond the cost in the old time, the cost of the hon. gentleman's policy, as attributable to the lands, and that is $225,000 more in the six years, making an aggregate of $338,000, leaving, as a net result, $374,000, without saying a word about the Indians, about immigration, about mounted police, about local government, or any of those charges. So you may practically say that there has been nothing net out of the lands of the North-West for these years during which hon. gentlemen declared so large a sum would be realised as to recoup us pro tanto for the expenditure on the Canadian Pacific Railway. And this is not an increasing ratio; it included the boom, the speculative period, the period in which they sold in a day to speculators large quantities of land, in which they realised from colonisation companies a considerable sum, the colonisation bubble, the speculative bubble, the town site bubble. Of late years there has been a positive loss, and you can judge that from a statement of the annual receipts. In 1880 the gross receipts were $155,000; in 1881, $164,000; in 1882, $1,727,000; in 1883, $928,000; in 1884, $788,000; and in 1885, $288,000; so that our over expenditure last year was over $223,000, apart from the cost of the land part of the Interior Department, which would show, if you added it, a total deficit of about $300,000 for that year. It is true this expenditure includes a great deal of surveying; we have surveyed a great deal of land—more than we wanted. A large portion of the work was ill-done and expensively done, from the expedition with which it was done; a good deal of it has to be done over again. They had not time to survey where surveys ought to have been made, where the people and the settlements were. They had no time to give to such work, they had to go on surveying by the tens of millions of acres, in places that will not be filled for many years to come. It was announced in the blue-books; the complaints of the settlers on the Saskatchewan were referred to there as well as by the Minister in answer to me. They said we cannot attend to this; we are engaged in a great work; we are developing the North-West; we are building the Canadian Pacific Railway; we are floating colonisation companies, and we have to survey millions of acres; we have not time to attend to the settlers there, and they went on in this wild goose chase of theirs with the melancholy results which I hope we have not yet quite forgotten. But we were also receiving exceptional sums through the boom, and we made exceptional and foolish expenditures with enormous rapidity in useless surveys, and with this result, that they received only $4,050,000 gross and a few hundred thousand dollars net, during this period, and the Minister of Finance tells us that for the future, as the receipts have now grown so small, he does not intend to put them to capital but to revenue account, so that you can judge we are not to be furnished with boom estimates for some time to come, or until some other purpose is to be served. How much is to be netted now by 1890, in view of the $69,000,000 which was to be obtained in cash or mortgage by the estimate of 1880? Will the hon. gentleman say one-half that amount? Will he say one-tenth that amount? I do not believe he will. In 1883 the late Minister of Finance estimated our cash receipts from land in the North-West for 1884 in round numbers at $2,250,000; in 1885, $2,000,000; in 1886, $2,000,000; total, $6,250,000, for those three years. We have actually received in gross for 1884, $788,000; for 1885, $288,000, or for those two years $1,076,000. I do not know how much the hon. gentleman estimated for revenue out of lands of the North-West this year; he did not particularise, but he gave us the gross sum of seven or eight millions of revenue without stating details apart from the Customs or Excise, and we did not get the particulars. I daresay that from this source it was not more than $300,000; I daresay that $1,300,000 or $1,400,000 is the projected result of those three years, in which by the estimate of three years ago we were to have got $6,250,000, resulting in there being no net whatever, and a loss instead of a profit after expenses are paid, for the years in which, according to the view of three years ago, we should have had at least $5,000,000 net profit in cash. In 1883 the Minister of Railways estimated as the cash results of colonisation companies for four years, $2,562,000. The actual results were for the first of these years, $248,500; for 1884, $223,700; for 1885, $1,200, making a total of $503,400 for three out of those four years. I do not believe that the year 1886 will materially increase the receipts, and the result therefore will be about one fifth of the hon. gentleman's estimate. In the same year, 1883, the Government estimated that we would net many millions out of the branch railway lands. We were to sell them to the companies at $1.06 per acre, and after that they were to make large profits—enough to make a basis out of which the roads were to be built. There would be about four or five millions in that way, and it was capable of a large increase. A little later they found that they had been too extravagant; they found that they had been giving the branch railways too large a margin of profit; they were to make too much money out of the North-West lands given to them at $1.06 per acre and they passed an Order in Council declaring that for the future they would not give them to railway companies for less than $1.50, in order that the country might have a fair share of the profits. A few months after the bubble burst altogether, and since then they have remitted not only the extra half dollar of 1883, but the original dollar, and the land grants are free to the branch railways, resulting in free grants of, as far as I can judge, seven or eight millions of acres given, or to be given immediately, for the construction of branch railways which were to have been built by the Canadian Pacific Railway practically out of its land grant. You can judge what the results of that operation are upon the values of land in the North-West Territories. In 1883 the Department of the Interior reported, in addition to the actual payments which had been made, that there would accrue due for the next three years in pre-emptions and time sales $4,393,070. Now, that was for the years 1884, 1885 and 1886. I wonder how much we shall get? I wonder what the Minister of Interior will say now as to the accuracy of that estimate? In that year, to cap the climax, the Department of the Interior presented, and the then Minister of Railways (Sir Charles Tupper) read a statement to the House, on the 4th day of May, 1883, and this is the statement:

"SIR,—Having given the subject my best and fullest consideration, I estimate that the receipt of this Department from the sale of agricultural and coal lands, timber dues, rents of grazing lands, and sales of mineral lands, other than coal, with the royalties from the minerals between the 1st of January, 1883, and the 31st of December, 1891, both days inclusive, will amount to not less than $58,000,000."

That was as late as the 4th of May, 1883. What will be said on this 30th of April, 1886, as to the result by the 31st of December, 1891? We have been asking ever since for the production of the details, the rivulets, of this golden stream, this stream of Pactolus which the railway was going to throw into the Treasury. And the Minister actually tells us he is not going to put all that to capital account it is not worth while; but he is going to put it into the revenue. A year or two ago this House passed an order for the details of this. We want to see them, to gloat over them, to rejoice over them—to verify not only the results in gross, but the parts in detail—to see how this grand prophecy was going to be fulfilled. The House has ordered them, but the Department has not furnished them, it is ashamed to furnish them; it dare not furnish them; and we are kept in the dark as to that. I think I have shown you that the promises of this Government were precise, clear, emphatic, superabundant, as to what they would do, and what they had made practically a matter of certainty with reference to the lands in the North-West, namely, that all the expenditure they called on us to incur would be repaid to us rapidly, principal and interest, out of the sale of those lands. I think I have shown the calculations on which they based these estimates, and that events have wholly falsified the accuracy of those estimates. Then, with regard to branch railways, if you compare the promises of the Government and company with their performances, you find the results early in the history of the company. They made claims on the Government for large reserves of land in various parts of the country, and laid before them plans of various branch railways that they were going to build. I think that in one year no less than 1,500 miles of branch railways were projected to be constructed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the North-West. But you know what they have done, and what we have done. We have had to sell at a low price, and afterwards to give for nothing millions of acres of public lands; many municipalities have been called upon to grant bonuses out of their scanty means; the Legislature of the Province of Manitoba has been asked to issue bonds based on the limited resources of that Province, in order to get these branch lines built; and Parliament will probably have to give seven or eight million acres more free, in order to secure that very thing which we were told we were going to secure by the original subvention to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. And we have to give this in part for building through a large part of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's own land grant; for if you examine the land grant to the Qu'Appelle and Long Lake Railway, you will find that the Government declined to give a land grant, because they said it was going to be built through Canadian Pacific Railway lands, and therefore the Canadian Pacific Railway Company ought to build the line. The company declined to build it, but they said you build it through, and it will increase the value of our lands; you build and we will get the benefit. Then it was said that we were going to save a great deal of money by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company undertaking a portion of the burden which would otherwise have fallen upon us with reference to immigration expenditure. I need not say much about that. You know the enormous expenditure incurred for immigration purposes for years past, and the beggarly results derived from it; and I am sorry to say that the census of the North-West Territories shows how little productive that expenditure has been. Instead of a reduction, there has been an enormous increase in the expenditure for immigration; the economy promised as a result of the arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has not been produced. The official statistics deceive us no longer. We do not appear to have done much more than, if we have done as much, to retain our natural increase with all this immense expenditure. We have brought in many persons unsuited to the country, and many more to compete with mechanics who were already hard pressed. We hope for some better fruit in future from this enormous expenditure; but so far it seems mostly to have helped only party hacks and party newspapers with printing jobs. As to the monopoly, you know that the pledges as to Manitoba have been absolutely violated by the exercise of the power of disallowance, that great discontent has been engendered there and elsewhere, and that relief has been sought at great expense by that Province by the proposed construction of Hudson Bay Railway. The success of the undertaking is said to be doubtful; but its success, though desired as a relief from monopoly, would damage eastern connections, and turn another way the course of trade, so that many of the predictions hon. gentlemen have made as to the results that would flow to Canada from the construction of the Pacific Railway would not follow. Then, you find another evidence of the anxiety to obtain relief from monopoly in the revival of the Red River boats. They have been revived during the last year in order to provide another outlet to the south. Then, you find the feeling of grievance of being locked in all along the line. Then, there is the other grievance, which I have pointed out before, as to fair proportionate mileage rates to places in Ontario, as compared with those to places in Quebec. We do not find that that has been accomplished. A resolution was passed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in fulfilment of the pledges given to Parliament. That resolution seemed to be based on what were fair grounds, that each locality would get under it a just charge, but we do not find that any security had been taken or any arrangement made from which these results are to flow. If I am rightly informed, it has been hinted that the policy of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as to its through traffic with the North-West is to make one rate for all points for Ontario and Montreal, so that whether it is farther or nearer Callander, the same price is to be paid. I say the charge ought to have regard for the neutral point to which freight is carried. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company is bound, and the Government is bound, to enforce the rule that freight carried from a point one or two hundred miles beyond Callander may be carried cheaper than freight from a point two or three hundred miles beyond Callander. Now, I maintain that the policy hon. gentlemen have advocated, and the pledges they have made, upon which they obtained the assent of the House and the country, have failed. We have paid enormously; a vast capital account has been created, which will burden for many generations the finances of the country. The policy of boom, the policy of expenditure, the policy of unprecedented rapid construction, has not produced those tangible results that were promised to us. It has been accompanied by a great increase of cost to this country without the return it was pledged to us would take place from the sales of lands, without the prospect of that return, and without those other advantages it was said would flow from it. We have paid for the Canadian Pacific Railway, including surveys and the Canada Central subsidy, about $60,000,000; the company has realised from our lands, sites and bonuses about $11,000,000; we are about to give them for land merely, over $10,000,000; thus their receipts from public resources foot up to about $81,000,000, apart from 14,750,000 acres of land which are to remain with the company, and $12,000,000 or $14,000,000 engaged in extension schemes. Besides these, the company has borrowed from the public, on debentures, $35,000,000, making a total in cash and works of $116,000,000 which the company has received without touching a dollar of capital stock. Then there is the issue of capital stock to the amount of $65,000,000, for which the company received $29,500,000, making a total received of $145,500,000, which has been expended in some way, and the company is now asking to borrow something approximating to $29,000,000 more, because the borrowing power is to be $2 an acre on its remaining land grant, although out of that are to be paid those land grant bonds which are outstanding. How much more is to be expended we know not; we have no scheme, we have no statement, but we learn that a large increase of capital is wanted and we are asked to authorise that increase. Formerly we were furnished statements, returns, accounts, but that has all passed away now. We are simply told they want more money, and we are asked to authorise an increase of capital. Where has all this money gone? An enormous sum has gone to dividend; large sums have gone in needless, reckless, hasty and premature construction. To dividends has gone, paid and secured, about $21,000,000. The Algoma branch, which was built, as everybody now knows, entirely prematurely, because it has never been completed, and is lying there with the rails rusting and unused, cost $2,500,000, entailing a charge on the shareholders of the company of some 11 or 12 per cent. per annum; and the main line has been built at greatly enhanced cost in consequence of the speed. I remember having been ridiculed when I said that speed meant cost; even the company repudiated the notion that the speed would entail any additional expenditure, but now the hon. the Minister of Finance, as an excuse, declares the road could not be built at this rate of speed without costing much more. I recollect well an official statement from the company and one from the chief official engineer of the Government, which amounted to the declaration that the piece of permanent line in British Columbia, to which the hon. gentleman referred as being a charge on the unearned subsidy, had been estimated in the company's estimate to cost 50 per cent. more than it would if built slower. Under these circumstances, we find the Government coming down to-day, with all their promises as to the results of their land grant policy, all their promises as to the result of their immigration policy and their railway construction policy, falsified by events, with an empty exchequer, having abandoned the prospect of recouping the people for the expenditure on the Canadian Pacific Railway out of the North-West land—we find them coming down with this proposition. The hon. gentleman says it is different from former propositions and need not involve a great deal of discussion. True, we were told every cent of the loan would be repaid, and now we are asked to compromise by accepting 66⅔ cents cash and our own land for the balance; but still the hon. gentleman says the proposition is an advantageous one. Why, he says, it has been proved that the security on the land is admirable. The hon. gentleman has realised his interest out of it and is able to realise more, and therefore he thinks the land is paying so well that, instead of holding a mortgage on it, on which he can only get his money, he had better have the profits of its proprietorship and make $15,000,000 instead of $10,000 000! No, it is advantageous; but the advantage is to the shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway, because you substitute for the charge upon them and their enterprise of $400,000 a year interest and the ultimate payment of $10,000,000, the re-transfer to the country of the claim of the Canadian Pacific Railway to some 6,000,000 or 7,000,000 acres of land. The hon. gentleman cannot sell his land just now, and he cannot give it away, he has been able to put no more than 138 homesteaders on 400 miles of the forty-eight mile belt of the Canadian Pacific Railway up to the 31st December last, and as he cannot sell the millions of acres and cannot give the land away, he must engage in some land operation, so he buys land back at $1.50 an acre, and says: "This is so clearly in the interests of the country, that we need not debate it." No; the shareholders want a larger share of profits; they want the $400,000 a year which otherwise they would have to pay, and the capital of which would have to be paid some day or other by them, and as it is now plain they cannot get the amount out of the lands, because the land security which the Government took on the whole land grant is not adequate to produce 4 per cent. on the $10,000,000, we are to take over this fraction absolutely in lieu of the $10,000,000 and to provide the interest thereon. I said I suspected this was contemplated. The method which hon. gentlemen have pursued gave ground for suspicion. When they wanted to persuade us to lend the Canadian Pacific Railway Company $20,000,000, they offered us, they said, undoubted security for the interest at 5 per cent. They got the money on those terms and then asked us to reduce the rate to 4 per cent. And having succeeded in getting the rate reduced, their next step, one no doubt secretly agreed upon with the company, was to bring down the proposition before us. I was inclined to suspect they would do this. I was inclined to suspect that having told us we had a mortgage on the land, that it was admirable security, that we were going to get principal and interest, we would find the Finance Minister standing up and saying: This is really costing us more than 4 per cent., we are actually losing money, and there is a great deal of difficulty about the land grant arrangements; they may interfere with the sale of the Dominion lands and with the prospects of the North-West; having accustomed us to these things by degrees, what the Government could not do the year before they deem themselves able to do now. And so they bring down the proposition to-day which they were afraid, or which they did not choose to bring down, a year ago. I do not intend to enter upon some of the details upon which the hon. gentleman said he would give explanations in the committee. It seems to me that the proposal, in the condition of the lands of the North-West, in the condition which is proclaimed of this company, that the people of Canada should retake six or seven millions of acres of this land of theirs at this price, and incur this increase in our net debt and this increase in our annual charge, is one that ought not to commend itself to the House or to the people. There is one other topic not immediately connected with the other topics contained in these resolutions, though flowing, I judge, in the Minister's opinion, from them, to which I wish to address myself for a moment or two before I sit down. I refer to the removal of the shareholders' disqualification for seats in Parliament. Does the hon. gentleman think the shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are not powerful enough in this House as it is? Does he think it absolutely necessary to give them the additional power which would be involved in the members of this House being shareholders in this company? This has also been pressed for some time past upon the Government by the company. This company is going for some years to come to have questions between it and the country for settlement, questions connected with its tariff, very important questions connected with its capital account, questions connected with the monopoly policy, questions connected with the extension policy, questions connected with the grants of various kinds, and all these questions have to be settled, I hope, upon just and equitable terms between the country and the railway company; but they are not questions a just or equitable adjustment of which will be facilitated or furthered by making this a Parliament of Canadian Pacific Railway shareholders. I do not believe that this is at all a time to relax the stringency of the laws regulating the independence of Parliament. If any change were proper to be made in those safeguards, it would be one to increase them very largely. Our institutions in this regard are very much upon their trial; and for my part I shall not record a vote to diminish in any degree the present securities for the independence of Parliament by agreeing that the shareholders in this great corporation, who will for many years have so much to do of an important and vital character with the Government and the people of Canada, shall sit in Parliament and vote upon matters in which they are so much concerned.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On resolution 1,

Mr. BLAKE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that there was a certain sum still held of the subsidy money as distinguished from the loan money, but I did not exactly catch the figure.

Mr. McLELAN. About $600,000 of the original subsidy money is still undrawn; and there is $800,000 of the loan.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, but that is cancelled by this arrangement.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. So what we have to deal with as an asset against the completion of the line will be simply the two items of the unearned subsidy and the unearned lands?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. And what was the quantity of lands the hon. gentleman stated was unearned?

Mr McLELAN. There will be the same number of acres as of dollars.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the hon. gentleman stated that the engineer had estimated some $309,000 as required to complete the road, apart from the temporary work which has been referred to.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman say in what part of the central section the $284,000 is required?

Mr. McLELAN. He does not give that. On the eastern section $35,000 and on the central section $284,000 are required, making $309,000, but there is no statement of the places. I assume it is where they are working now.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the estimate which the engineer now makes of the amount required to make permanent the temporary line in the Rockies?

Mr. McLELAN. From $800,000 to $1,000,000, to cover it fully. That is the tunnel. Of course it will depend a good deal on the time given to complete it. The hon. gentleman has estimated that it would cost 50 per cent. more to do the work in a limited time than in a longer time, and it will take from three-quarters to a million dollars according to the time. Against that, you have the balance of the original subsidy, and the balance of the land, and $5,000,000 of land grant bonds in the hands of the Government for the completion of the road.

Mr. BLAKE. No, those are security for operation, not for completion. Then, I understand the completion of the temporary line will cost a minimum of $700,000, to which is to be added the $309,000, so that $1,050,000 to $1,250,000 is required in order to complete the road.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. And the security for that is the unearned subsidy of $600,000, I think he said.

Mr. McLELAN. $600,000 and 600,000 acres.

Mr. BLAKE. Has there been any statement made in this connection as to what the plan is as to the completion, how soon it is intended to complete that temporary portion?

Mr. McLELAN. I have not got from the company any particulars as to that, but I understand that the engines they have working upon the heavy grade now are doing very well, and they may not for some little time make the tunnel as proposed.

Mr. BLAKE. And in this same connection, I have asked several times with reference to the questions of snow fall and slides, gravel and snow slides, and the Minister of Railways informed me that observations had been directed to be taken the season before last, and I presume they were continued last season. I should like to know whether the result is such as to satisfy the Government with the location of the line all through the mountains as it now exists, or whether they contemplate any further changes.

Mr. McLELAN. I have not the information in regard to that. The Minister of Railways is not here. Of course he will be here to give the information before concurrence.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course it is quite obvious that we are dealing with a proposition which involves the handing over of the security for the construction of the road, and it is of great consequence to understand what the condition of the enterprise is, and the hon. gentleman should give a general statement about that.

On resolution 2,

Mr. BLAKE. What is the process by which it is intended to ascertain, as between the company and the Government, what lands the Government shall retain, and what lands the company?

Mr. McLELAN. The plan is not quite yet settled upon, but it is specified here that they shall take just an average quality of the land that may be earned by them.

Mr. BLAKE. I see what is stated. It is a very admirable result to arrive at, but perhaps not extremely easy. We find the plan, which was very excellent last Session, has been found to involve difficulties which require a change this Session. We would like to investigate this a little bit.

Mr. McLELAN. I see that in certain sections of the country the surveyors have reported as to the qualities of certain tracts of land. There are so many million acres in that tract and so many in another, and they report upon the quality of the land that will go to the company and so on, wherever the company's land may be. We look over the reports of the surveyors and see the quality of land they give, and take the proportion out of each one of the tracts.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As a matter of fact, have the company selected their land?

Mr. McLELAN. No, they have not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much have they selected, for instance, south of the Canadian Pacific Railway tract?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think none have been selected south of the railway belt proper, connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway. The selections so far have been within the railway belt.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much has been selected within that?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think somewhere between eight and nine million acres, speaking from memory. The exact figures cannot be given now.

Mr. BLAKE. This question really is one which is likely to give rise, unless the mode of that adjustment be defined, to very great risk, that the Government may impose upon the company inferior lands, and that they will take the price of the land for themselves. In the interest of the company, therefore, I suggest that justice and fair play demand something which will secure their change.

Mr. McLELAN. If the company has selected 6,250,000 acres in the south, that is a-fourth of the whole 25,000,000, we will take our proportion out of that. And if they select another 6,000,000 in the poorer sections of the country where the land is not so good, we will take our proportion out of that; but on concurrence we will be able to give you particulars as to where they have selected.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In point of fact the hon. gentleman has made this arrangement, that wherever the company goes he goes, and takes his proportion. Is that the arrangement?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes, a fair average over the whole.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You will take, therefore, about 27,000,000 acres. The company have disposed of 4,000,000, I understand, so that you will have to take one-third everywhere—is that the idea?

Mr. McLELAN. That is the idea.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Whether it be south or whether it be north?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; wherever it is.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That includes what they have already selected, and everything that they have not sold?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes; the lands unsold.

On resolution 3,

Mr. BLAKE. Is it intended under this that the mortgage of the Algoma branch shall be for another purpose than that which is defined in that former Act? The hon. gentleman will recollect that the former Act permitted a mortgage of the Algoma branch for the specific purpose of taking this road to the Sault. I do not know whether it included bridge powers or not. By this I judge that it is proposed to increase the power of mortgaging to a larger amount per mile than is now permitted, but is it to be for any other purpose than that?

Mr. McLELAN. Under the Act of last year, the hon. gentleman will remember, we agreed that if it was necessary for the company to extend the Algoma branch, although he held it as part of the security for our general debt, we should allow them to mortgage it for the extension of the branch. Well, when we have received our money, and when we have settled for the $9,000,000 by taking, in round numbers, the seven million acres of land, and they have paid us all off, then we give them up the right to mortgage the Algoma branch for such purposes as they desire. We had taken from them the power to mortgage that.

Mr. BLAKE. We had not taken from them the power to mortgage that; we only gave that power for a specific purpose. As I understand, at the present moment, we have arrangements under which, if the Algoma branch is mortgaged, it will be mortgaged only to secure the completion of the road to the Sault; and it is now proposed to give the company power to mortgage that for an increase of land per mile, and for any purpose they please, so that they need not go to the extension to the Sault.

Mr. McLELAN. It is put in the position of the main line.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell).

Mr. DAWSON. It is understood the Algoma branch will go on.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, everything is understood. But the best security for the Algoma branch going on is to provide a fund for the construction of the Algoma branch.

On resolution 4,

Mr. BLAKE. This clause divides itself into two parts. One is as to the question of accepting in exchange for $5,000,000 a like amount of the new issue. That is of little practical consequence in view of the notice which the hon. gentleman has on the notice paper, which I presume means that not many months after the House is prorogued the bonds will be handed over to the company, and therefore that part is hardly worth while talking about and is only waste paper. The other part involves a question of public credit, and is of a rather serious character. The existing land grant bonds in the hands of the public are secured by thoroughly adequate security. Nor do I mean to say that although the security is very much diminished by this proposed change, inasmuch as there are those $7,000,000 taken away from it, nor do I mean to say for the smaller amount of the land grant bonds remaining the lands are not quite good security. But we have no right to impair in any degree the security of any one of the land grant bondholders without the Government of the country, at all events, becoming directly responsible for the amount, or arranging that it will reserve funds for that land grant bondholder and hold them for him. The hon. gentleman provides, and very properly so, that there shall be an exchange, that there shall be a cancellation of all land grant bonds obtainable; but he says there may be some not obtainable. I may have a land grant bond which I do not choose to sell, and in some cases the addresses of the holders may not be obtainable. If the company is unable to obtain all of them from the holders we have no right to alter their security in any shape or way, at all events until we see money placed in the hands of the Government to pay them their half years' interest and ultimately the principal. This proposal is setting a very bad example.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman will bear in mind that we hold now $9,000,000, in round numbers, of land grant bonds in connection with those outstanding in the hands of the company, while $25,000,000 are in our hands or in the hands of the public, and have been cancelled and paid off. Then we cancel $9,000,000 of those bonds, and the company make a new issue of $9,000,000 that we are now holding, and they make an exchange with the public, so far as it is possible to do so, and they leave in the hands of the Government an equal value.

Mr. BLAKE. No. At present there are outstanding, I forget how much——

Mr. McLELAN. Between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Say between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000; I did not think the amount was so much. But of that a very considerable proportion is covered by sales actually made to parties. At all events, such was the statement made last year, and we have heard nothing lately. The Government have $9,000,000 more in their hands.

Mr. McLELAN. And we have the $5,000,000.

Mr. BLAKE. We will put that on one side.

Mr. McLELAN. It is $5,000,000 nevertheless.

Mr. BLAKE. We will put that $5,000,000 on one side and consider it by itself. There might be $9,000,000 issued by the company, or by the Government, at the instance of the company, and there are $12,000,000 or $13,000,000 out on 23,500,000 acres of land. You now propose to give authority to the company to mortgage a less quantity of land, to mortgage what remains of the land, 14,750,000 acres, at $2 an acre, making something over $29,000,000. And what you say is this: The company will pay all the bondholders they can pay, and those who do not choose to take their money will receive an equivalent amount of lands. But it is not equivalent.

Mr. McLELAN. Bonds of equal value.

Mr. BLAKE. How are you going to estimate the value?

Mr. McLELAN They are now put at $1 an acre, and if the lands increase in value they may bear a larger amount.

Mr. BLAKE. It must be remembered that a parliamentary and public contract has been made with the holders of those land grant bonds that the product of the sale of those 22,500,000 acres of Canadian Pacific Railway lands should be applied to the payment of their debt. Trusts have been created, and all the proceeds are to go into the hands of the trustees, there is to be a drawing of the bonds and they are to be cancelled. Now Parliament is asked to say that we will take on ourselves to cancel the whole security and issue a new set of securities of unquestionably and admittedly less value.

Mr. McLELAN. We do not admit that we exchange them for securities of less value.

Mr. BLAKE. The securities are of less value because there are more dollars estimated as to the value of the lands, and we declare that we will judge for outstanding parties what they think would be a fair proportion of land to hold for them as their security. We have no right to interfere with the interests of persons in that way. The only method we could adopt would be this: If the Canadian Pacific Railway Company pays in cash the amount required to redeem those land grant bonds, we will hold it for them and pay the holders in cash; or for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to place in the hands of a trustee an amount representing the value of the bonds. But for the Government to be the judge as to whether the new security is equal to the old and to decide for those holders who do not choose to accept the new securities, is to introduce a new doctrine.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman seems to forget that there are outstanding bonds on lands estimated at $1 an acre. There are $9,000,000 in our hands. We hold them as security for the $9,000,000 that is upon the land. We now take the land at the rate of $1.50 an acre in extinguishing $9,000,000 worth of land grant bonds in our hands. We therefore increase the value of the other securities in consequence of taking 7,000,000 acres of land at $1.50 an acre and extinguishing $9,000,000 of land grant bonds, leaving the rest.

Mr. BLAKE. What will happen? There are 14,000,000 acres of land left, that you are proposing to authorise the company to issue securities upon, and that to the extent of $2 an acre, and you therefore issue about $29,000,000 on 14,500,000 acres, and you say if the company cannot obtain some of these outstanding bonds you reserve them from the new issue. That is, you arbitrarily proceed by an Act of Parliament to alter the contract made between you, the bondholders, and the company.

Mr. McCARTHY. Surely the hon. gentleman will not say that there is anything in this resolution which deprives the bondholders of the first issue of any security they have already. We have the bonds issued under the authority of the charter, and we have the authority of the mortgage deed which gives to them in pursuance of the charter the proceeds of the land which are sold until the bonds are paid off. The result, as I understand, will be this. There are already some seven or eight millions of dollars of the bonds paid for by the sales of the land. There are $5,000,000 in the hands of the Government, which the hon. gentleman says are to be wiped out by-and-bye, but for the purpose of these resolutions it is to be exchanged for $5,000,000 of the new issue. Then there are still nine or ten millions dollars which represent the debt that will be wiped out; so much of the land will be given, and therefore the bonds are reduced to the other three or four millions of dollars which the public hold. They still retain their position—if not it should be made clear—they still retain their position as being of the first issue, and the result will be that the bondholders will hold as security the lands ahead of and before the bondholders of the second issue, so that parties holding any of the second issue will be second encumbrances on the whole of the lands. The money which the hon. gentleman spoke of just now is in the hands of trustees for the payment of those bonds, and it must be appropriated to the payment of those bonds. The clause to which the hon. gentleman refers, and which I read at first as my hon. friend did, is a limitation of the power of the company to issue bonds. It provides that the bonds are to be held in the hands of the trustees and those trustees will retain a sufficient amount of them, not to be sold until the other bonds are taken up, so that there shall not be on the same quantity of land a double issue of bonds. I think, if the hon. gentleman reads it, he will find it is so. Nothing here purports to take away, and I doubt if this Parliament could take away the vested rights of the bondholders of the first issue. That vested right is to be found under the terms of an Act of Parliament which gives them a first charge on all the company's lands, and that is made more clear by the mortgage deed which was executed at the time, and by the appointment of trustees who sell the lands and receive the proceeds of the sales, who are bound to apply the money to the redemption of those bonds, and whose position is not at all affected by the power now given to the company to issue a second series of bonds, not in exchange for the first, unless at the will of the bondholder, but to be placed on the market as the old bonds are wiped away.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, if that is the true construction, the hon. gentleman is quite right in saying that no interference is effected with the bondholders, but it is a question whether that is the true construction. The Minister of Finance did not certainly place that construction upon it. We are now upon clause 4 of the agreement which we are asked to confirm, and of course, when it is cited in the paper itself, it has an important bearing upon what the meaning of the subsequent clause will be. That is the clause in the criticism of which I have been engaged, and I think it has a very important bearing on the meaning—otherwise perhaps ambiguous—of the subsequent clause. That clause refers to these bonds as first mortgage bonds. They are, therefore, first and not second—not bonds subject to the land grant, but first mortgage bonds. Then if the scheme were one such as the hon. gentleman indicates, it would not require to reserve any portion of these mortgage bonds to pay off the first mortgage bonds.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is a limitation.

Mr. BLAKE. I say you would not require it. When you are authorising a company or an individual to make a second mortgage, you do not require to provide that out of the second he shall pay off the first, or in this case that all outstanding land grant bonds are to be first duly cancelled. Now, why this provision, if they are to be second mortgage bonds. What have we to do with the land grant bonds if this security is to be entirely subject to them? It is clear that the scheme is a substitutionary one. It says that such and such things should be done with those in the hands of the Government and so on, and it is substituting one security for another, nolens volens.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman will not pretend to say as a lawyer that there is anything in this clause which compels the first bondholder to accept a second bond in place of it. It is true they are called first mortgage bonds, as I may call any second mortgage bond a first mortgage bond, but that does not affect the security. I understand that this is not an uncommon term to apply to such bonds. The mortgage bonds which have been sold recently by this company are, I believe, called first mortgage bonds, but they are nevertheless subject to prior charges on two portions of the road. If the hon. gentleman will read the clause again, he will see that if any person chooses to come and take his money, and if the trustees have the money in hand to apply in the redemption of these bonds, they are to be obtained. They have the right in the first place to issue $29,000,000 bonds; that amount is to be placed in the hands of trustees. If a certain amount which the public hold of the three or four millions of dollars is not obtained, the trustees are to retain the new issue, the result being that the new issue will not be placed on the market. It does not affect the question of the security of the first bondholders; but it does prevent the company taking so much of the second bond issue and selling it. If the company have chosen to agree to that, or the Government have chosen to impose these terms, while it looks like a scheme of substitution, I do not think my hon. friend will pledge his reputation as a lawyer to the proposition that it does in any way affect the security of the first bonds. If it did, I would quite agree with him that we should do nothing to affect in the slightest degree the position of the public creditor.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not make any distinction between my opinion as a lawyer, as a member of Parliament or as a man. I think this scheme is a scheme of substitutionary security. I think it quite possible that a critical examination of this second clause may indicate that the words are not quite strong enough to enable the company to do what the Government give them power to do, to grant first mortgage bonds to the detriment of the existing bondholders; but the scheme is such, and the Minister of Finance acknowledged that that was the intention.

Mr. McLELAN. I did not acknowledge that it was the intention to weaken the security of any man, and we believe that the resolution does not do so.

Mr. BLAKE. That declaration from the hon. gentleman removes all difficulty, because all we have to do now is to make it secure by an express declaration that nothing in this is to affect the rights of the outstanding bondholders, but this clause as it stands does not make that clear.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I am face to face with this question personally, because the moment I go home, I shall be met with the question from one of these bondholders, a lady friend, whether this proposition affects the value of the bonds held by her. The investment was made in these bonds because they ran for forty years, and the first question I shall be asked will be, is it desirable that she should give up these bonds or not. If these $3,000,000 of bonds are exchanged for the bonds now proposed to be issued to the extent of $2,000,000, or if the bondholders do not choose to do that, what will the result be? But if they rank in their own original position, then I say every dollar of the bonds you cancel makes their security better, and I shall be in a position to advise my lady friend to hold on to her bonds; but if they are only to rank with these securities you are now proposing to issue, I shall be compelled to say to her, I think you had better take your money and do something else with it. I should like to know from the Finance Minister absolutely whether they retain their position, whether the old bonds take precedence of the new issue, or whether the new ones shall be equal to the old ones.

Mr. McLELAN. I may repeat that we do not intend to weaken the security of any person who has invested in the present land grant bonds, and if the language of the resolution be not sufficient to bear that construction, it can be amended so as to make that certain. Nor do we propose to diminish or increase the security that any person who has invested in these land grant bonds shall have.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). My own impression, on reading the resolution, was that their security would be to a certain extent impaired.

Mr. BLAKE. I think, on further consideration, the hon. gentleman will find that the effect of this resolution will not be either to increase or diminish the security of the present land grant bondholders. I think it will be found to have one or other effect.

Mr. McLELAN. We do not propose to cancel $9,000,000 of land grant bonds and let the $3,000,000 remain on the same security.

Mr. BLAKE. Then you do propose to alter the contract?

Mr. McLELAN. No, we propose to leave the security the same.

On resolution 5, paragraph 2,

Mr. BLAKE. That proviso is a modification of the agreement.

Mr. McLELAN. When that was put in, it was uncertain whether the agents on the other side would agree to issue the bonds before the Act was passed or not; but it was found afterwards that they consented to the issue and the money has been raised.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the proviso is not necessary now.

Mr. McLELAN. In practice it might not be necessary, but it was put in for that reason, that they might not be paid exactly on the 1st of May, but that the time might be extended.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The whole is to be paid by the 1st of July.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

On paragraph (b.),

Mr. BLAKE. This hardly bears out the brief explanation the hon. Minister gave of the purpose of the Government in making this modification, because instead of embracing the mortgage on this branch in the general mortgage, it is proposed to make it a specific mortgage on the branch line; yet while it is to be a mortgage on the branch and extension line, the proceeds, instead of being devoted to the completion of the Algoma branch, may be used for other purposes. I may point out another difficulty which arises in this clause. We have created a mortgage for $35,000,000, in favor of the public, which covers rolling stock and tolls and revenues, but this clause seems to give the contractors the power of allocating a certain portion of the stock and defining what they believe are the tolls and revenues of the branch line given as securities for the mortgage. They ought to have no power to take a portion of the stock, and say: This stock is applicable to the branch and another portion to the main line; nor ought they to have any power to define, adversely to the mortgagees of the other parts of the system, what are the revenues which are proper to be allocated to the branch line as distinguished from the general system. The mortgagees of the main line have a direct interest in ascertain ing what proportion of the tolls and revenues of the main system shall be allocated to the branch.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman has stated we are going further in relation to the mortgage upon the Algoma branch than we went last year. We had last year a greater interest in limiting the proceeds of the mortgage than we have at present. We had a better right to control it. It was part of our security, and we agreed we should give up the security, provided the company mortgaged it for the purpose of completing the branch; but at present, when they have paid us our debtedness, we have not the same right to dictate to the company that they shall make only mortgages for the extension of the Algoma branch, although it is intended that shall be the purpose.

Mr. DAWSON. I think the resolution provides as strongly as language can for the construction of the Algoma branch. The words are:

May issue mortgage bonds secured upon the branch of the said railway known as the Algoma branch, constructed and to be hereafter constructed, completing the connection between the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the River Ste. Marie."

There can be no doubt that it is the intention to build the Algoma branch, and that this resolution ensures the construction of that line. What value would a mortgage on that branch be if it were not to be completed? Who would advance anything by mortgage on a branch which is only partly completed, and can be of no value until it is? I am very glad to see this resolution, because this branch, when completed, will add an immense deal to the Canadian Pacific Railway, connecting it with American lines at Sault Ste. Marie, and bringing the traffic of a great portion of the Western States through by that direction, and above all bringing a great deal of traffic over the line to Montreal. It will complete the system of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and be of vast advantage to the district I have the honor to represent. I can see nothing in the resolution to give occasion for the slightest doubt that the line will be completed. It is put as clear as words can put it, that the money raised on the mortgage on that line is to be applied to the construction and completion of the Algoma branch.

Mr. BLAKE. All I can say is that the hon. member for Algoma has heard the Minister of Finance declare it is not proposed to limit the company in that way, that there was a reason for doing so last year, but that now, as they are going to pay us off in full, we have no longer right to limit them. The hon. gentleman's faith in the interpretation of the clause is stronger than his confidence in the Minister. The hon. Minister has not answered the question as to the power given the company to deal with the rolling stock and with the revenues?

Mr. McCARTHY. I think it is important, and I am quite sure the hon. member for Algoma will agree with me, that there should be no doubt about it. If the language of the clause is not sufficiently definite, it ought to be made definite, so that the proceeds of the mortgage should be applied to the equipment of the branch and its completion,

Mr. McLELAN. The company had no objections to that being stated. I do not see we have a right to demand that, but the company is perfectly willing that it should be embodied in the resolutions and expressed in the Bill. The object in taking power to mortgage that was for the extension of it, but I stated some time ago that I did not think we had the right to compel them to expend the money for the extension of it, but they were willing to do it, and, if it is any satisfaction to my hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Dawson), that it should be expressed more clearly in the Bill than it is here, it will be done.

Mr. DAWSON. I think it would be more satisfactory that it should be done. It is quite strong now, but, as the hon. Minister suggests, I think it would be well to have it stronger.

Mr. BLAKE. I have twice appealed to the Minister with reference to the rolling stock and tolls.

Mr. McLELAN. It says: "And such rolling stock and plant appertaining thereto." That is, as much as may be fairly provided for the branch. The holders of the $35,000,000 have already a lien upon the rolling stock and plant appertaining to the main line, and the company cannot mortgage it again for the Algoma branch.

Mr. BLAKE. And about the tolls and revenues?

Mr. McLELAN. They cannot mortgage the tolls of the main line for the Algoma Branch, but only the tolls and the rolling stock of the branch.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will perceive in a moment, I think, that, when the Algoma branch is to be worked by the same company that is working the main line, it is a simple question, unless some protecting clause is inserted, what proportion of tolls they choose to allocate to that line, and what proportion of their traffic they appropriate to the Algoma branch. They may starve the Algoma branch for the benefit of the main, or they may starve the main for the benefit of the Algoma branch, by a simple, easy, and not at all unknown process of bookkeeping. If the hon. gentleman will look at the course the two great American Pacific roads have taken, their course as to the administration of the branches as compared with the main line, and the amount of traffic they have put on the branches as compared with the main lines, he will understand what I mean. Having already created a mortgage on the main line for $35,000,000, it ought not to be put into the hands of the directors, as this proposes to put it, to arrange their traffic for the benefit of the branch.

Mr. McCARTHY. Is not my hon. friend a little hypercritical? Does he not see that it is clearly provided "without interfering with the rights of the holders of other securities of the company?"

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. McCARTHY. Pardon me, it does, and further it says, "such by-laws to be submitted for approval to the Governor in Council." I do not know what more could be done. It is provided that this mortgage is to be upon the tolls, revenue, equipment and so on, without interfering with the rights of the holders of other securities, and that the by-laws are to be submitted to the Governor in Council for approval. Of course, when we come to deal with the Bill, we can take care, if it is necessary, that the other creditors are not interfered with, but, I think, in a resolution like this, the provision is quite sufficient.

Mr. DAWSON. To return to the Algoma branch, I think it would be well if the words suggested by the hon. gentleman were put in. There is nothing like making assurance doubly sure.

Resolution ordered to be reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 12.50 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 121) to regulate the employment of children, young persons and women, in the workshops, mills and factories of the Dominion of Canada.—(Mr. Bergin.)

PROTECTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. FOSTER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 96) respecting the protection of navigable waters.

Mr. BLAKE. Is there no explanation ?

Mr. FOSTER. In introducing the Bill, I think I explained it pretty fully. It is an adaptation of the present law, with some changes in the verbiage and some new sections. In section 2 there is an addition, which makes it necessary for the owner of the obstruction, whatever it may be, when it shall have sunk, or is lying ashore or grounded, to place on it by day a signal, and a light at night, so that ships may avoid it. Section 3 is new, and provides that in case the owner does not put a signal upon it by day or a light by night, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries may be empowered to do so. In section 4 there is a provision which enables the Department to take the expenses incurred in placing and maintaining such signal or light out of the proceeds of the sale, if the obstruction has to be sold. Section 5 is the same as in the present law, with the exception that in case the wreck, when taken out by the Department and sold, does not bring sufficient to pay expenses, the Government is empowered to come upon the owner for such deficiency. At present the law does not give the Department that right. Section 7 is a remodelling of the old section with reference to throwing out mill refuse, sawdust and the like, into navigable waters. The change in the Bill is that navigable waters are taken instead of navigable streams. The old clause simply gave authority to prevent refuse being thrown into navigable streams; it did not give any authority to prevent the throwing of rubbish, sawmill refuse and the like, into other navigable waters than streams. A case has recently been tried in Ontario, in which our fishery inspector prosecuted a sawmill owner, I think it was for throwing rubbish and sawmill refuse into a little bay which is a very valuable fishing ground, the refuse being injurious to the fishing,as well as obstructing navigation by filling up the bay. It was decided that under the present law there was no authority for the fishery inspector to bring such a suit or obtain the penalty. That is the addition in section 7. Sub-section 2 of section 7 is the same as at present.

Mr. WELDON. The word "owner" should not be confined to registered owners, because the register does not necessarily show the ownership. With respect to the second section I would suggest that where an obstruction is caused in a navigable stream by the foundering of a vessel, the Department should at once place a light there and make payment of the cost obligatory on the owner. That course would be the better one, for otherwise serious injury might arise to a vessel, and the penalty recoverable is very small, $10 a day. With respect to the seventh section I think the provision covers streams not formerly provided for. But in the old Act it provides ,that no refuse shall be thrown into any river or stream, whether above or below the navigable point. The hon. gentleman has omitted those words in this section, and I would suggest whether it is not advisable to continue them. The words now proposed in regard to a stream are "any part of which is navigable;" and that might not cover a part that is not navigable. With respect to the third sub-section, that is the same as the last Act. I question very much whether any person acquainted with the streams of New Brunswick, and the great obstructions in them, is not of the opinion that any stream should be exempted. I do not see any advantage to be gained by allowing parties to throw mill refuse or rubbish into any stream. It may not cause injury for a time, but it will eventually. Therefore I would like to see a law framed so that no stream would be exempted from the operation of the Act.

Mr. COOK. I understand the Ottawa River is exempt from the seventh clause. The case referred to by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was that of Campbell & Co., on Georgian Bay, who were prosecuted by the fishery inspector once, twice or thrice. There was a hardship in that case. The Messrs. Campbell have a mill on a waterfall. The fish cannot get beyond the mill, and the water below the fall is an arm of the lake. The lumber is thrown from the mill on scows; it is taken down the arm of the lake for some distance and is dried previous to shipment. I think this case is a pretty hard one. I have no sympathy with Mr. Campbell politically—in fact, he is one of the hon. gentleman's political friends—but in that case there was a good deal of animus shown by the fishery inspector. The same state of things might exist on different waters on Georgian Bay. Most of the mills are on inlets, where there is some protection from the lake, and it is impossible to build and operate a mill, particularly a water mill, without depositing some refuse in the water, and if the fishery inspector has a grudge against the mill owner he can give him any amount of trouble. Mr. Campbell was talking the other day to me and asked me to draw the attention of Ministers to these facts. He said he did not think they quite understood the position of mills in that part of the country, and a great deal of hardship would ensue if the Act was carried out, and therefore it should be well considered. I think it is a matter which should be well considered. For instance, not only is a great deal of damage done to the fish and to navigation by this sawdust and refuse being thrown into these waters, but it is well known that the sawdust sinks to the bottom, gas accumulates in it and explosions take place, by which boats are sometimes wrecked. If the Government are going to legislate on this subject at all, they should not legislate in the interests of the strong and the powerful—the men who have political influence. Such men are generally able to protect themselves, and the Government should rather legislate in the interests of the weak, than exempt certain portions of the community from the operations of the Act simply because they possess a little more political influence than others. I hope the Minister will enter into the matter more carefully before legislating in this way, and I hope that he will deal fairly by all classes of the community.

Mr. GILLMOR. I think it is a wise provision that the Governor in Council should, under certain circumstances, regulate this matter, and I do not see how it can be done in any other way. Of course the fishing interest is important, but the lumber interest is also important. I differ entirely from my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Weldon), because there are many streams upon which mills are erected where investigation would show that it is not of importance to the fishing interest that the sawdust and other refuse should be kept out of them. As a rule it is better for streams and harbors that it should be kept out, but there are others where it does not injuriously affect the fish, and some in which there are no fish. I am under the impression that it does not injuriously affect the fish here in the Ottawa River. Many of the old styles of water mills are so constructed that it would be quite impossible for them to take care of this sawdust, and though, of course, the public interest may require in certain cases that they should reconstruct the mills, that is something which should not be done without enquiry by the proper officials under the Governor in Council. I think, therefore, it is in the public interest that the Government should have power to look into the circumstances of each locality, and ascertain how far the fishing interests may be injured by the refuse from these mills, before ordering that they should be taken down and new ones erected.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me that the Minister proposes by the seventh section of this Act to go a great deal beyond the jurisdiction of this Parliament. The fish and the fisheries of Canada are under the control of the Government and the Parliament of Canada, so long as they are within their jurisdiction. They may make such regulations as they see proper within their own jurisdiction, but fish, like wild animals, are not under the control of the Government, if they leave the coast of Canada and go to the coast of the United States. The hon. gentleman should not follow the wise legislator who declared that they were British fish; and so, too, when these fish go out of the waters that are under the immediate control of the Government of Canada into waters that are under the control of the Provinces they are as much in foreign jurisdiction as if they had gone to the coasts of the United States. Now, the hon. gentleman proposes not merely to make regulations applicable to the waters of Canada, but to make regulations which are applicable to the waters of the Provinces. The hon. gentleman knows that there is a decision in the Supreme Court recognising the old common law rule of England that the fish belong to the Riparian proprietors, where the boundary is drawn in the middle of the stream, and in all streams not regarded as navigable streams. Those fisheries are not under the control of this Parliament. The Local Legislatures may make such regulations as they see proper with regard to them. For instance, the Government of Ontario have its own policy with regard to mills and mill sites. If they sell timber limits, the value of those timber limits and the amount which the Government receives for the sale of timber may depend on the regulations which they may choose to make or to allow for the regulation of the mills which are erected on those streams. Now, the hon. gentleman comes here with a Bill and says: "I am not going to recognise the policy of the Local Government within its own jurisdiction, and with reference to waters under its jurisdiction, but I am going to make the regulations; there is a remote possibility of injury, and I am going to legislate with reference to that remote possibility; I am going to extend my authority and the authority of Parliament for the purpose of more effectively carrying out my policy; I propose to extend that authority beyond the waters under the control of the Parliament of Canada, into the waters under the control of the various Provinces. That is the provision which the hon. gentleman proposes. Now, if the hon. gentleman proposed to make regulations with reference to the navigable waters of Canada, if he proposed to say that mills should be built in a certain way, and that sawdust and refuse should not be thrown into these nevigable streams, he would be acting within his authority; the question of policy alone would be before us for consideration. But by this clause he does not stop at that point He goes further, and proposes to regulate small streams which are not navigable, which are no more under the control of the hon. gentleman than the Crown Lands of the Provinces are under his control. The hon. gentleman could not say, for instance, that a man should not be allowed to cut down trees on his land and fall timber into those streams. It may be that the falling of certain kinds of timber might be injurious to these streams, for the purpose of the fish ascending them to deposit their spawn; yet the hon. gentleman could not say that a man engaged in clearing his land should not fall his timber into the stream, that he should not be at liberty to obstruct it; that he should not use his land as he pleased. He can no more do that than the Government at Washington can do it. The boundaries between the local and the Dominion authorities are as clearly defined as if they were landmarks made by international regulation, or by the surveyors' posts. They are marked out here by the British North America Act, and, under the provisions of that Act, it is clear the Local Legislatures may say whether timber should be fallen into streams or not—whether obstructions should be removed which may be an impediment to fish ascending the streams or not. All those regulations fall within the domain of another Government, and the authority must be exercised by another Government and Legislature. The hon. gentleman proposes not only to legislate for those waters which are under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada, but for those waters which are beyond its jurisdiction. It is true that the policy the Local Governments may pursue with regard to non-navigable streams may not be favorable to the fisheries; it may be true that the policy pursued by our neighbors in Michigan may not be favorable to the fisheries that lie between the two countries; but that if we had power to legislate, we might legislate for the interests of both, is no reason why we should undertake to exercise that power. It is not a question of convenience or advantage, but a question of jurisdiction, and as such it is perfectly clear that the hon. gentleman proposes to do what he has no power to do. The question of policy is therefore excluded to a large degree, because it is hardly worth our while to discuss whether the proposal is wise or unwise if it lies beyond the limits of our jurisdiction. I, therefore, think that certain provisions of this clause should be struck out. If the hon. gentleman thinks there should be a change, he might communicate with the various Local Legislatures to obtain it, but we ought not to undertake to legislate on the subject here.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). The question my hon. friend from Bothwell has raised is a very important one, and deserves very serious consideration. For my part, I desire that this Parliament should go as far as it legally and properly can in legislating to prevent sawdust being thrown into rivers and streams, and thereby destroying the fish in them, and seriously impeding navigation. In my own county and in other counties that I am familiar with, I have heard constant and reiterated complaints against the destruction of navigation and fish in rivers by saw millers throwing sawdust into them, when by the expenditure of a reasonable amount of money they could consume the sawdust or otherwise dispose of it. But I must confess that there is a great deal of force in the objection taken by the hon. member for Bothwell to this Bill, that it proposes to legislate on a matter beyond our jurisdiction. I think it is quite within our functions to declare that no sawdust shall be thrown into any navigable stream; but when we propose to legislate as to streams which flow into any navigable water, we clearly, to my mind, go beyond our jurisdiction. In doing that, we assume power to legislate for every little stream or creek on which there happens to be mill-power. I think the clause should be amended by striking out the words, "or which flows into any navigable water." While I should be glad that the suggestion of the hon. member for Bothwell should be taken, that there should be some communication with the local Governments with the view of obtaining some legislation as to streams and waters that are not navigable, I think we ought to confine our legislation to navigable waters only.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The difficulty in the Act as it formerly stood, so far as I understand, was that there was no provision preventing sawdust being thrown into water that was not a stream. In the case referred to by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Cook) as the occasion of this clause, the mill was on the edge of a stream and also on the edge of the lake, and the space between the stream flowing into the waters of the Georgian Bay and the water of the bay itself is so slight that the fishery officer was not aware that the sawdust actually went into the Georgian Bay, and consequently the injunction was set aside. For that reason it was very evident than an alteration of the law was required, because it was just as mischievous, in the interest of navigation and fishing, to put sawdust into the inlet as into the stream that ran into the inlet.

Mr. COOK. No one uses that stream except the parties interested in the mill.

Mr. O'BRIEN. That may be but the hon. gentleman knows that the navigation of almost every harbor in the Georgian Bay has been affected for several years past by sawdust being thrown into the water. In the harbor of Parry Sound the depth of the water has been so reduced that a vessel that formerly took a full load at the wharves can now only take a partial load. That is the case in a number of other harbors; and although this provision may only affect persons owning mills at present, I do not know what right they have to make permanent obstructions in the water, which will be injuriously felt in the future. It does seem to me a curious thing that while mill owners on the rivers emptying into the Georgian Bay are compelled by law to do what most of them have done, erect extensive furnaces for sawdust, the owners of mills on the Ottawa river are permitted to throw their sawdust into the water without let or hindrance. Anyone who notices how this magnificent river is being destroyed through the operation of mill owners, must feel that this is really more than a local matter—must feel that it is a national injury. The great trouble with this legislation is that it is about 25 years too late. A great deal of mischief has been done, and I think it is the duty of the Department to prevent further mischief as far as possible by carrying out the law strictly. The fisheries have not only been injured and are being injured every day, but the navigation of the waters of Georgian Bay have been very seriously interfered with. If there is any question as to the wording of the clause, it can easily be amended, but the great thing is to make it criminal to put sawdust into a lake or inlet as well as into a stream.

Mr. ABBOTT. It seems to me that we are running some risk of frittering away the jurisdiction of this House almost infinitesimally. I understand that the object of this Bill is to prevent the filling up of rivers with sawdust. The question whether sawdust is to be put into a navigable water by being conveyed in a cart and put into it, or being carried to it in a small stream, does not seem to me to be important. It might as well be argued that we cannot say that sawdust shall not be carted to a navigable river, because we have no jurisdiction over the carts in the Provinces, as that we cannot prohibit it being conveyed thither by a small stream. The pretension that we cannot prohibit sawdust being put in a stream which flows into a navigable river would be as absurd as to say we could not prevent it being carted into a navigable river. We have jurisdiction sufficient to protect our navigable waters from injury, and we may as effectually prohibit the transmission of sawdust into navigable waters, by means of floating it down streams, as to prevent it being put in by means of an elevator or conductor in the sawmill or from a waggon on the road.

Mr. COCKBURN. I think the Bill is in the right direction, but it does not go far enough. It is desirable that a penalty should be inflicted for the obstruction of navigation, not only by this means, but also by means of floating logs, rafts and booms. In the west men have gone to great expense in building burners for the destruction of sawdust, thus preventing it floating into rivers to the injury of navigation and the destruction of fish as well. I hope when we go into committee that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will extend the clause to make it apply to cases of obstruction by booms, rafts and logs. The only remedy at present, the lawyers say, is to get out an injunction in Chancery to prevent the impeding of navigation from which private individuals have suffered to a great extent, or by civil action to recover damages; but that is not sufficient, and I hope a penalty will be provided in this Bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. Whether the Bill goes far enough or too far, I beg to add my concurrence to what has been said by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Abbott). The purpose of the Bill being to protect navigation, this Parliament has the right to legislate in respect to the tributary waters which are supposed to carry the obstruction into the navigable waters, and the right to legislate for that purpose can only be in this Parliament.

Mr. MILLS. Suppose that in ploughing a field, the wash of the field carries the sand and subsoil into the river, to the obstruction of navigation, would the Legislature have the right to determine how the field should be ploughed?

Mr. THOMPSON. Of course a very extreme case can be suggested.

Mr. MILLS. It is a practical case.

Mr. THOMPSON. As regards any matter even of purely police control, in respect of which there may be obstruction of navigation, this Parliament has undoubtedly the right to interfere with the civil rights, police matters and local regulations, provided it is in good faith, dealing with a subject which is within the control of this Parliament.

Mr. McCALLUM. We need only look at the Ottawa River to show the necessity for this Bill. As to sawdust running into navigable rivers, I have known it to float twenty miles and then collect into a harbor, and the Government is paying a large amount of money yearly to dredge sawdust out of our harbors. It accumulates with dirt, from time to time, sinks to the bottom, and there forms a bar. At Port Colborne, for instance, there are large banks of sawdust, and what happens there must happen elsewhere. The question is one of navigation rather than of the preservation of fish. A large expenditure would be saved, which is now made in keeping harbors clear, by preventing the emptying of sawdust or the floating of sawdust into navigable rivers, and we have a very good chance to show the good results of such a policy by commencing right away with the sawdust which is allowed to float into the Ottawa River.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is a subject which has occupied public attention for many years. When I was Minister of Marine and Fisheries, it was agitated a great deal, and steps were taken to try and prevent the evil. I am in entire accord with the hon. Minister in his efforts to get additional powers in relation to this matter. It is painful to see the way the Ottawa River is being destroyed, not only by sawdust, but by the slabs, refuse and bark thrown into it. The latter are quite as, if not more, injurious than the sawdust. When you reach Carillon or Grenville by steamer, in order to take the cars there, you will see, at either place, forty or fifty acres of sawdust banks, the accumulation of refuse from the Ottawa mills. That should be put a stop to. In other portions of the country it is not allowed to exist. Take one of our greatest lumbering and manufacturing sections, that of Miramichi, from which I come, every mill owner there has his furnace for burning up sawdust and the refuse from his mills, and by that means we have kept them out of our rivers, and our navigation, such as it is, has been largely preserved by the regulations established by the Department for the purpose of preventing sawdust and refuse being thrown into the river. It is iniquitous the way in which the Ottawa River is being destroyed, and I am in entire accord with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in his endeavor to get additional powers in this respect.

Mr. DESJARDINS. The hon. Minister of Justice has admitted he has no control whatever over unnavigable rivers, and yet, in order to bring in legislation, which I admit is a benefit to the country, he puts aside the control of the Provinces and legislates how these rivers will be controlled. I think there is no more right for him to legislate on unnavigable rivers flowing into the navigable ones than he would have if any river coming from the United States should enter into our navigable rivers, and bring sawdust, as it does in some of our rivers. I think that is a matter of arrangement between the Provincial bodies and the Federal one, and not of simple legislation by the Federal overpowering the Provincial rights. I think the objection taken by my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Cameron) is good, and ought to be admitted.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew.) I am glad to see that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has reserved to himself the right of exempting from the provisions of this clause in cases where it may be deemed not against the public interest to allow sawdust to be conveyed into streams. Some reference has been made to the fact that sawdust is allowed to be conveyed into the Ottawa by mills in this vicinity. There are two sides to this question. There is the question of navigation, which is a very important one, and which ought to be paramount, but there is also the question of the interest of those people who have a very large amount of capital invested in the construction of sawmills, giving employment to a large number of persons, who would be subjected to enormous cost and great inconvenience, especially in a place like the city of Ottawa, in disposing of their sawdust in any other way than that in which it is now disposed of. This is not a new question. It engaged the attention of the Government of the hon. member for East York, when he was leader of the Government and Minister of Public Works, and, if I understand aright, a commission was appointed, either in 1876 or 1877, to enquire into the question of the obstruction of the Ottawa River by the depositing of this mill refuse, and, as the result of the investigations of that commission, the practice was allowed to be continued under certain conditions and restrictions—one of the conditions being that all the slabs and edgings had to be converted into small chips or pieces by machinery placed in the mills. It would be a great and serious inconvenience and a great loss to the laboring population of this locality, if the power were taken away from the Minister to exempt certain localities from the provisions of this Act, if, in the wisdom of the Governor in Council, it was deemed expedient and proper that those localities should be so exempted. It is quite true that there have been banks of sawdust formed in the Ottawa below the mills; but, as far as my observation has enabled me to judge, those banks have accumulated, not in the navigable portions of the stream, not in the deep water, but along the shores and in the eddies, and so they have not obstructed the navigation to any appreciable extent, though they show themselves in passing down the Ottawa. I venture to express the hope, and to concur with the opinion of the member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor), that this portion of the Act shall not be expunged from it, but that the power shall be continued to the Governor in Council to make exemption where it is thought necessary to do so.

Mr. HILLIARD. I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. member who has last spoken. There are two sides to this question. There are rights which should be regarded to a certain extent. There are mills in operation which were built before the passage of the present Act, and when no provision was made for keeping the sawdust out, and which cannot keep it out. With respect to the mills in this city, I should like to have a suggestion from any member who has spoken of any plan to keep the sawdust out, short of rebuilding the mill from foundation to superstructure. Where there is direct action with the water wheel it is impossible to keep it out, and the mills on the Ottawa are built on that plan, and it is impossible to keep it out without raising the water wheel, and even then I do not see how it is to be done. The result would be to put certain mills to an expense altogether inadequate to the damage done. With respect to the damage on the Ottawa River, I find, from a report of Mr. Mathers, who was appointed by the Government, in 1873 or 1874 to investigate the matter, that the damage was not done on the Ottawa by the sawdust alone going in, but in the early history of the lumbering interests of this country by the unwarrantable practice of throwing slabs and edgings in, which formed a network which caught this sawdust, but after the mills ceased to put in whole slabs and edgings the damage was almost completely neutralised. While I agree that something should be done as far as possible to prevent this thing, at the same time the interests of the mills, which were built without any regard to the keeping out of sawdust, and when it was not compulsory to keep it out, should be protected. If this Act were enforced in its entirety, it would be tantamount to closing down these mills. Is it right that these people, who have invested in good faith, should lose their investment? In regard to another point, I think there is one part of the Bill which should be amended somewhat, the clause referred to by the member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron), prohibiting the throwing of sawdust, etc., into rivers, streams or other waters, any part of which is navigable or which flow into navigable waters. I venture to say we have not a rivulet in the Province of Ontario that does not flow into a navigable water. I think that should be modified, and certainly there should be some provision made for the protection of vested rights.

Mr. KAULBACH. The proposal of the Minister of Marine is a step in the right direction, the object being to protect the navigable waters of rivers, but, while protecting the navigable waters of rivers, it interferes very largely with mills already erected on the tributaries of these rivers. I find that to be the case on a certain river in the county that I represent. The injury done to the navigable waters of that river is simply from mills erected immediately on the river or a short distance up the stream. The smaller mills remote from navigable waters cause no injury whatever. I feel satisfied that some effort should be made by the Minister to avoid causing inconvenience to the small mill owners which they might sustain by the enforcement of this Act. To enforce the law upon these small mill owners who have already erected their mills, and find it a great inconvenience to arrange a different machinery in order to consume sawdust, would be a hardship for them. If the Minister could in any way arrange so that the overseer of fisheries might protect the small mill owners from injury, I would support the Bill cheerfully.

Mr. VAIL. The question raised by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is a very important one, and if he is right, then all our legislation in regard to this matter has been wrong. I understand him to say that the Dominion of Canada has no authority to interfere with waters above high-water mark, as concerns putting anything in the stream. Without arguing that point, I wish to say that if Parliament has not that authority it ought to have it; it ought to have the power to take all necessary measures to protect the fisheries, which are so important an industry in this country. The object of the Bill is to make the law more stringent, and I understand the effect of the change will be that no mill owner on any stream can deposit sawdust or anything of that kind in a river, because every mill erected on any navigable river in Canada, impedes it to some extent, and therefore the Bill gives the Minister power to prevent sawdust being put into any navigable stream. Now that, I think, is going a little beyond what is necessary for the protection of the fisheries. I think the law was quite stringent enough before in that respect, but the trouble has been that the law has not been carried out. I have found often that mill owners point to the Ottawa River opposite this city, which is a navigable river, and they say that if the Government, within sight of the Parliament Buildings of Canada, allow the law, as it was originally intended, to be set aside, they see no reason why they should be bound to obey the law. It is clear that you have made one law for the rich, and for the people who have invested largely in mills on the Ottawa, and you have made another law for the poor people who have small mills, and who would be put to great inconvenience if they were obliged to burn their sawdust and edgings coming from the mills. I am rather opposed to the last clause, and I think this law would be much more effective if it did not give this power to the Dominion Government to exempt any stream from its operation. If the law is good, it is good for everybody, and if it is bad, it ought not to be on the Statute book. I am in favor of doing away with this clause which gives the Government power to exempt any stream; then there would be no difficulty in carrying out the law, and no one would be in a position to say that he ought not to be bound by a law that was violated within sight of the Parliament Buildings.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section b,

Mr. WELDON. I suggested to the Minister the doubt whether it was well to make the expression "owner" mean the registered owner, because the real owner may not be the registered owner. Frequently vessels are passed into the hands of other persons and are registered in their name for various reasons—as security for a mortgage, for instance.

Mr. FOSTER. It is placed in the Act to meet difficulties that have arisen. There was the case of a steamer wrecked in the River St. Lawrence above Quebec. It was impossible to get at the registered owner, and the result was that the Department was put to an expense of some $7,000 in order to raise the wreck. It is thought that the registered owner, in the majority of cases, will be the more responsible man.

On section 2,

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend from St John suggested that it might be better for the Department to take authority to place the light at once. That is very well from one point of view, but it often happens that the owners would rather place the light themselves, thinking that they could do it more cheaply. I have a case in my mind now of a small vessel wrecked in the western part of Ontario, where the Department placed a light and kept it for a number of weeks. When the charge was made the owner objected to it, saying that he could have put a light there for some dollars per day less. This gives the option to the owner to do it himself, if he prefers, and of using the lights or small boats he may have.

Mr. COCKBURN. Can the Minister do anything with respect to other obstructions, such as rafts and booms?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see that anything that sinks, or lies ashore, or grounds, is taken under this Act. I think we have an Act outside of this that relates to slides, booms and dams, which is carried out by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Minister of Public Works conjointly; but anything that proves an obstruction to navigation in that way is covered.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I do not think the Act to which the Minister refers, as giving the Government control over the interruption of navigable streams by rafts and logs, goes far enough; the machinery is too slow and tedious, practically, to remedy the grievance often suffered. A suit was brought some few years ago by the owner of a steamboat against a man who was bringing a large raft of logs down a river in my constituency, and who for about six weeks kept the logs in a boom, completely obstructing the navigation for about three-quarters of a mile, so that the steamboat owner could not get up to the people of the village, and the public were inconvenienced by having to drive or walk three-quarters of a mile down the stream to a very uncomfortable place for embarkation and debarkation. The people suffered inconvenience and the steamboat owner suffered loss. An action was brought and the right of the steamboat owner and the public to navigate the river was established; but it turned out afterwards, when the Government sought to deal with the matter, that the only direction in which they had power was to order that certain booms be placed so as to keep the logs within certain limits and leave navigation open. While that was all very well as a remedy for the future, it was useless as a remedy for the present; and the question is, whether the Government ought not to have power, when a person drives a raft of logs so that he will necessarily impede navigation, to interfere in some summary mode and prevent him, which I do not think at present the Government have the power to do. Persons who drive those logs, moreover, are usually responsible men, foremen for lumbermen and raftsmen, and they do the work by contract. The owner of the logs is not answerable, and any person bringing a civil action does so against men from whom he can recover nothing, and the party with a grievance simply goes to the Government and asks them that hereafter a boom shall be placed in such a way as to prevent a recurrence of the trouble. If the Government had power to interfere summarily and prevent the obstruction of navigation, and some provisions were inserted in the Act of a similar character to those dealing with wrecks, the case would be met. I was not aware that the question was coming up to-day, but I throw out these suggestions to the Minister in order that he may be impressed with the necessity of extending the powers of the Government in the way of preventing, and immediately preventing, by some summary process, such troubles, instead of leaving persons aggrieved, as they are now, to recourse by civil action, and to see other persons at a future time relieved from the inconvenience which they themselves had to redress. If the Minister looks into the subject he will find that the Government have not clothed themselves with sufficient power to meet the grievances to which I have referred.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is quite true. I do not think the Act has reference to that point. I suppose in few instances rafting takes place on navigable streams, but the driving of logs is on streams not navigable, and it is a difficult matter to interfere in any way with the timber or logs which are being taken down. I quite understand that in some cases it might be very prejudicial to navigation.

Mr. COCKBURN. There have been cases where whole rivers have been boomed from shore to shore, and it is a very dangerous thing to open one of such booms or to cut a boom. I remember a man had a narrow escape from going to the penitentiary, although the village was blocked for several weeks. Of course there was recourse to civil damages, but it is difficult to obtain them. Such action should be made a misdemeanor, as well as the parties aggrieved having recourse to civil action.

Mr. COOK. In that case you will stop the lumbering business. In some cases it is impossible to do anything else than block small rivers, if a man is bringing down a large quantity of timber. In the case referred to in the county of Ontario, it could not be avoided. It must be remembered that over $22,000,000 revenue are derived from the lumbering industry. Are the Government going to stop a revenue of that kind for the sake of running two or three mud-boats up a river occasionally. I think that would not be very much in the interests of the country. As regards the driving of logs down rivers, I think the lumbermen as a rule facilitate the navigation of rivers. I do not believe the Government should attempt to cripple so important an industry.

Mr. COCKBURN. I was not referring to particular cases, for I am aware there are numerous cases throughout the country. There have been cases in a dozen constituencies. The hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron) knows of a case in his county and others elsewhere. What I wish to bring before the House is the high-handed manner in which some lumbermen block navigation, to the injury of villages. I know an important village which was blockaded for two or three weeks, and that could have been avoided by dividing the river and booming it. Some remedy should be provided and some penalty imposed, besides leaving the party the right of obtaining civil damages in cases where the trouble could be avoided. There are undoubtedly some cases where the lumbermen must block streams for a short time. I fully realise the importance of the lumber trade as much as does the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Cook). In regard to mud-boats, the remark is not very complimentary to the navigation interests, and particularly when the hon. gentleman is himself a director of a line of fine steamers. If the hon. gentleman calls them mud-boats, we must expel him from the directorate.

Mr. HILLIARD. I think this is a matter of such importance that it should be referred to a committee, on which there should be some lumbermen, in order to consider the difficulties in framing legislation. In my section of the country we come into contact with steamboats navigating the waters, and the idea of dividing the channel with booms is a perfect absurdity. In my vicinity an endeavor is now being made to divide a stream for five miles, and the plan adopted is worse than useless. It will actually intercept both the navigation and the transportation of logs to a very serious extent. I am satisfied myself that the money is completely thrown away and that the booms and piers will have to be removed. This is a matter that requires a little consideration. There are points on many navigable streams where the logs cannot be controlled; they can be managed through the still water, but while they are passing rapids it is utterly impossible to control their action. Some plan should be arrived at by which both interests would be served. It would be unfair to say that the great lumbering interest should give way to the navigation interest. In many cases the navigation interest is a mere bagatelle, whereas the lumbering interest is of great importance. No doubt there are grievances in many quarters, and it is desirable, in order to overcome them, that there should be some plan adopted whereby the interest of both industries would be secured.

Mr. COCKBURN. My hon. friend from West Peterboro' (Mr. Hilliard) has misunderstood me, as what I meant was to divide the river at the mouth, the lumbermen taking one half and the steamboats the other. I did not propose to divide the river for five miles or so, nor did I object to floating logs. What I did object to was booms running from shore to shore. There are cases where the navigation men and the other parties interested have compromised the matter by arranging that the lumbermen and the owners of the booms may run time-about—for certain portions of days or night, but in some instances the lumbermen make the excuse that the action of the wind prevents their moving their logs, and thus navigation is closed sometimes for several days. Mention has been made here of the fishery overseer in connection with these rivers, and we might arrange matters in that way with reference to navigation, the Government holding the balance between the lumbermen and the vessel owners and seeing that each should get fair play.

Mr. HILLIARD. I agree with my hon. friend from Ontario (Mr. Cockburn) that both should have fair play, but I want that one should have as fair play as the other. The difficulty arises from the fact a lot of logs may be kept in one position for three or four days at a time owing to the pressure of the wind—the wind driving them together in spite of the efforts of the men in charge. In these cases they are not under the control of the lumbermen, and the lumbermen should not be held responsible for the action of the elements. These are matters which should be fully considered in the making of these regulations, and I believe that the idea of dividing the stream, even in comparatively still water, would be an utter failure, as the action of the wind on those large masses of logs would frequently stop them completely in their course. For these reasons I think the matter should be referred to a committee in which there should be some practical lumbermen who have had experience in driving logs.

Mr. COOK. I quite agree with my hon. friend from West Peterboro' (Mr. Hilliard) that it would be an unfortunate thing if decisions on matters of this kind should be arrived at by a fishery inspector, who may not know a saw log from——

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). From a sucker.

Mr. COOK. From a steamboat. I know some of these officers who are about as intelligent as that. I know some streams where the driving of logs is affected very much by the wind, as mentioned by the hon. member for West Peterboro' (Mr. Hilliard), and they sometimes remain in one place for weeks, to the serious loss of the owner, who has to keep his men all the time. The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cockburn), no doubt, refers very largely to the waters running into Lake Muskoka from Bracebridge. There was an arrangement made between the lumbermen and the steamboat company, which the lumbermen carried out as far as possible. They were allowed to get their logs over the slide at a certain time of the night, but when the wind arose there was a block, and for that the lumbermen were not to blame. I want to assure my hon. friend from Ontario that when I referred to mud-boats I did not refer to the magnificent line of steamers of which he is manager and of which I have the honor to be one of the directors, as I certainly would not disparage any company that I happened to be connected with. I had reference to some boats on Rice Lake, and some other waters I might mention.

Mr. FOSTER. I would point out that there is nothing in this clause with reference to rafts, and that unless some hon. member proposes to move an amendment dealing with them, we are rather spending our time to no purpose in this discussion.

On section 7,

Mr. GIROUARD. In order to meet the objection raised by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron), and also the observations made by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Abbott), I move:

That the words "any river, stream, or other water, any part of which is navigable, or which flows into any navigable water," be struck out, and the following substituted therefor: "Any navigable river, stream, or other water, whereby the same is carried into any navigable water."

The purport of this amendment is, that whenever the saw-dust is thrown into any non-navigable water, and is carried into a navigable water, it shall be an offence.

Mr. WELDON. I hope the clause will be allowed to stand as it is. I am satisfied that the power rests entirely with this Parliament. I do not think the objection raised by the hon. member for Bothwell and the hon. member for Victoria has any force. The Supreme Court decided merely the question of the right of riparian proprietors with regard to non-navigable streams. The property in the right to the fisheries was extended to the owners of the land, and therefore the power of dealing with this property was not vested in the Parliament of Canada, but the power of this Parliament to regulate the fisheries was never interfered with. The court held that this power was given the Parliament of Canada, and everything is incident to that, among other things the protection of fish. This is a power that can be exercised by this Parliament, and is entirely within its jurisdiction.

Mr. MILLS. I have listened to the observations of my hon. friend and others who have taken a different view from that which I have expressed, but I am still of opinion this clause is ultra vires. While we have the right to legislate for the protection of our fisheries to a reasonable extent, we have not the right to legislate in a way that practically interferes with the expressed powers reserved to the exclusive jurisdiction of the local Parliament. In the decision, in the Queen against Robertson, Mr. Justice Strong said:

"Under this provision Parliament may enact laws for regulating and restricting the right of fishing in the waters belonging to the Dominion, such as public harbors, the beds of which have been lately determined by this court to be vested in the Crown in right of the Dominion, and also for regulating the public inland fisheries of the Dominion, such as those of the great lakes, and possibly also those of navigable non-tidal rivers. There is, therefore, no unreasonable restriction of the power of Parliament in construing the twelfth sub-section as I do."

He further observes:

"These fisheries, although often in practice not conserved by the Provinces, are certainly not public fisheries open of common rights to all who may choose to avail themselves of them, as is the case with regard to the fisheries in tidal waters and the great lakes; but the Provincial Government may, without special legislation, and in exercise of their rights of property, restrict their use in any manner which may seem expedient, just as freely as private owners might do."

I pointed out the logical inference that would be drawn from the observations of the Minister of Justice. He took the position, that if sawdust which might fall into a non-navigable river or stream, no matter how remote, was ultimately carried down the stream in such a way as to impair its navigation, this Parliament would have the right to legislate in such a way as to regulate those streams, and it might be for the purpose of enabling fish to ascend those non-navigable streams to the same extent as it might be for the purpose of navigation. I put this extreme case. I pointed out that in some of our western rivers which flow through alluvial countries, there are a hundred thousand cubic yards of earth carried down and deposited in navigable rivers. Take, for instance, the "Thames." Every few years it has to be dredged for the purpose of removing the bar thus formed at the mouth of the river. If the hon. gentleman can legislate on non-navigable streams for the purpose of protecting the fisheries or navigation, he might on the same grounds control the cultivation of lands along the banks of the River Thames or of any other river that flows through an alluvial country. There is no difference between the obstruction of navigation by the deposit of mud and its obstruction by the deposit of sawdust. Look at the facts Here, in the Province of Ontario, and I daresay the same is true of New Brunswick, there are hundreds of non-navigable streams flowing through well wooded districts. The Local Government authorise the construction of dams to deepen the water, so that the streams may be made floatable for logs. Can the Government here declare at any time that no timber shall be carried down those streams, but that they shall be kept open? Can the Government declare that no timber shall be floated down those streams because that would interfere with the fish reaching their spawning grounds? If the hon. gentleman is right, it would be in the power of this Parliament to legislate in such a way as to interfere with the lumber trade in every lumber district in the Dominion. I say this Parliament has not the right to so legislate, I say that nothing is more clearly set out than the right of the Provinces to legislate with regard to property and civil rights. Property in non navigable streams is absolutely under the jurisdiction of the Provinces, and the Parliament of this Dominion must exercise its legislative authority in such a way as not to interfere with the authority conferred upon the Provincial Legislatures. Each one is in the enjoyment of liberty, and has the right to exercise it in a way perfectly consistent with the liberty of another, but he has not in the assertion of his right to liberty and freedom the right to impair or interfere with the liberty and freedom of others. The rule is the same with regard to jurisdiction. We have certain powers and the Local Legislatures have certain powers, and we cannot exercise our powers in such a way as to impair or interfere with the powers of the Local Legislatures. There is no paramount authority vested in this Parliament. Its power to legislate is derived from the British North America Act, and the Provinces derive their power from the same high source. The one is as sovereign in its sphere as the other. When the hon. gentleman proposes to provide that:

No owner or tenant of any saw mill, or any workman therein or other person, shall throw or cause to be thrown, or suffer or permit to be thrown, any saw-dust, edgings, slabs, bark or rubbish of any description whatever, into any river, stream or other water, any part of which is navigable, or which flows into any navigable water.

He is going beyond his power. Take this case: Here are numerous streams in which logs are put for the purpose of being floated to mills, they are carried hundreds of miles, and may not reach the mills in the same season. The bark is all knocked off by the time they get to the mills, and if the hon. gentleman is right, this Parliament might say that the bark from those logs is as injurious as saw-dust to the use of those rivers as fisheries, and enact that no log shall be put into any non-navigable stream lest the bark may be deposited and interfere with the use of those streams as fisheries or lest it may ultimately be carried down to navigable waters, and may seriously interfere with or obstruct navigation. Where are you going to draw the line upon the theory you start out with? If you legislate with regard to saw-dust, you can legislate with regard to mud coming from the farmers' fields; you may legislate in regard to the bark taken off the logs. It is perfectly clear that the hon. gentleman lays down a rule, which gives to this Government the absolute property or control over the non-navigable streams or rivers of the country, and yet it is clear that the absolute property in these non-navigable streams is in the Crown as represented by the several Provinces. It is so declared. The proprietors have only a fee, not the absolute property. The residue, after the fee is parted with, still rests in the Crown as represented by the various Provinces. I say the hon. gentleman does propose legislation which is here ultra vires. We have a right to legislate for the purpose of protecting the fisheries, but we must legislate in such a way as not to interfere with, to impair or to derogate from the rights of the Provinces of this Dominion.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not a lawyer, but I think I have a little bit of common sense left, and I do not understand at all how my friend who has just sat down found out or can establish the parallels he attempted to draw before this House. One of his parallels was, that if we have a right to stop a man from putting saw-dust into a stream which runs into navigable waters and thus becomes prejudicial to the fish or to navigation, we have just as much right to punish him if he cut down a tree on his own land which casts a shade on the water, if we could trace, that by the shade being taken away by the action of the man, there might be something prejudicial to the cultivation of the fish in that stream. His other parallel was even more absurd. A man owns a farm, he puts his plough into it, he ploughs his fields, the forces of nature operate, a large rainfall takes place, and the water goes down the gully carrying with it a certain amount of debris from the land the farmer ploughs, and that goes into the river. He makes this a parallel to the case of a man building a mill in or over a stream and of his own motion allowing the saw-dust to fall into the stream when it is perfectly competent for him to carry it off in some other way. The other is simply an operation of nature. If the hon. gentleman carries his logic so far, I must say that I cannot go with him. But he cut out the pegs from under himself a moment afterwards. He says: You may have the right to a certain liberty, but, if that interferes with or restricts the liberty of another, you have no right to go so far; you may have a certain privilege, but if that privilege restricts or interferes with the privileges of others, you must not exercise it. Let the gentleman, with his logical mind, apply this to the case in hand. If you are at liberty to build a saw mill just above where a stream is navigable, and if, for your own personal gains and ends, you cut up the logs, and, because of a little expense to you, allow the saw-dust to go into a navigable stream, where it interferes with the rights of all who are interested in the navigation of that stream, and with the fish that live in that stream, and with the people who use the fish, you are plainly, in exercising this liberty, interfering with the liberties and privileges of others. The hon. gentleman has thus cut the ground from under his own feet when he declared that he must not use his liberty if to any large extent he thereby interferes with the liberties of others. I may not know a cent's worth of constitutional law, but I have common sense enough to know that it is not a fair parallel.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman certainly has not paid very close attention to the observations I made.

Mr. FOSTER. I did.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. gentleman has undertaken to put a construction upon my words which I think they will not bear. I said nothing about the shadow of trees falling on a stream; I said nothing about a party not being at liberty to cut and take away the timber; but I say the authority which the hon. gentleman claims by this Bill to say that a party shall not build a mill or make saw-dust to fall into a non-navigable stream, however remote from one that is navigable, will also prevent him from cutting down timber which will fall into the stream. On the same ground he must not fall timber into a stream which will obstruct the fish. Is there any difference between obstructing by saw-dust and obstructing by a fallen tree?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. MILLS. There may be a physical difference, but there is certainly no legal difference in the obstruction, no matter how it is brought about. Then I pointed out that, if you cannot obstruct a non-navigable stream by saw-dust, neither may you obstruct it by putting in logs, of which the bark may come off before they are taken out. The hon. gentleman has only to go to anyone of the lumber mills and he will see thousands of logs without bark. They had bark when they were put into the stream in the first instance. Is there any difference between the obstruction by the deposit of bark and the obstruction by the deposit of saw-dust? If he has the power to legislate as he proposes, he has also the power to say that no logs shall be put into any of these streams; he may prohibit the use of these streams by the lumbermen, he has as much right to say a log shall not be put in as to say that no saw-dust shall fall in, the principle is the same. I put that extreme case for the purpose of showing that Parliament had not the power the hon. gentleman was claiming for it by this Bill. I say the control over these non-navigable streams, the property of which is vested in the riparian proprietors, belongs to the Local Government, and the hon. gentleman cannot ask Parliament properly, under the pretence of protecting navigation or of protecting the fisheries, to legislate so as to assume control over property which belongs to the Provinces.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman says we have a right to legislate to a reasonable extent for the protection of the fish, but he objects to legislating to prevent the saw-dust being put into the rivers to poison the fish. Would we have a right to allow a manufacturer to put a poisonous acid or to empty lime into a stream?

Mr. AMYOT. That would be a crime.

Mr. McNEILL. It would be the natural result of his operations. It has been done in England in many cases.

Mr. DAVIES. I do not concur in the conclusion my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has arrived at. It seems to be clear that we must have this power. He says the Local Legislatures have control over property and civil rights. So they have, but their right is subject to the paramount right which is given to this Parliament where special subjects are relegated to it; and I think my learned friend will see that, if the subject of the sea coast and inland fisheries is expressly relegated to this Parliament by the sub-section of the 91st section, we have therefore the right to pass laws on this subject, and, if we interfere with civil rights in passing those laws, we do no more than we do in fifty other cases where the power is given to us to legislate upon certain matters, but in the exercise of our power we interfere with civil rights. He quoted some remarks made by Mr. Justice Strong in the case of the Queen vs. Robertson. I have looked at that case, and the decision of the Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Strong and other judges, clearly go to show that we have the power beyond all doubt. Justice Strong says in that case:

"I am of opinion, therefore, that the thirteenth enumeration of section 91, by the single expression 'inland fisheries,' conferred upon Parliament no power of taking away exclusive rights of fishery vested in the private proprietors of non-navigable rivers, and that such exclusive rights, being in every sense of the word 'property,' can only be interfered with by the Provincial Legislatures in exercise of the powers given them by the provision of section 92 before referred to. This does not by any means leave the sub-clause referred to in section 91 without effect, for it may well be considered as authorising Parliament to pass laws for the regulation and conservation of all fisheries, inland as well as sea coast, by enacting, for instance, that fish shall not be taken during particular seasons, in order that protection may be afforded whilst breeding; prohibiting obstructions in ascending rivers from the sea; preventing the undue destruction of fish by taking them in a peculiar manner, or with forbidden engines, and in many other ways providing for what may be called the police of the fisheries."

Now I think that phrase gives the key to the extent to which we may go, and where we may stop. If our regulations may properly be construed as in the nature of police regulations for the control of the fisheries, we are within our lines; if we go beyond that in extreme cases, then we may be going outside of our power. I will trouble the House with one observation of the learned Chief Justice in that case of the Queen vs. Robertson, which seems to me to be equally as strong. He says:

"Such being the state of matters at the time of the Confederation, I am of opinion that the legislation in regard to inland and sea fisheries contemplated by the British North America Act was not in reference to property and civil rights—that is to say, not as to the ownership of the beds of the rivers, or of the fisheries, or the rights of individuals therein but to subjects affecting the fisheries generally, tending to their regulations, protections and preservation, matters of a national and general concern and important to the public, such as to the forbidding fish to be taken at improper seasons in an improper manner, or with destructive instruments, laws with reference to the improvement and increase of the fisheries; in other words, all such general laws as enure as well to the benefit of the owners of the fisheries as to the public at large, who are interested in the fisheries as a source of national or provincial wealth; in other words, laws in relation to the fisheries, such as those which the Local Legislatures were, previously to, and at the time of Confederation, in the habit of enacting for their regulation, preservation and protection."

Now the observation made by the learned Chief Justice seems to meet that particular point. Then he goes on to use the following general words, which seem to me to be à propos of this discussion:—

"To all general laws passed by the Dominion of Canada regulating 'sea coast and inland fisheries' all must submit, but such law must not conflict or compete with the legislative power of the Local Legislatures over property and civil rights, beyond what may be necessary for legislating generally and effectually for the regulation, protection and preservation of the fisheries in the interests of the public at large."

Therefore we have clearly, according to Mr. Justice Strong's opinion, the right to legislate generally and effectually for the regulation, protection and preservation of the fisheries, and it seems to me that the clause before us is just such a regulation as may well come within the meaning of the phrase used by Justice Strong, as a police regulation.

Mr. MILLS. I certainly am not aware of there being any such thing as paramount authority in this Parliament. I understand that there is a division of power. There is exclusive jurisdiction on certain subjects vested in the Local Legislatures, and there is exclusive jurisdiction over certain other subjects vested in the Parliament of Canada. These are complementary of each other; but one is not paramount to the other. They stand upon a footing of perfect equality. There is one clause in the British North America Act relating to agriculture, providing that in certain specific and mentioned cases where the Parliament of Canada legislates, this legislation shall supersede that of the Provinces. That is the only case, but in every other case it is a question of jurisdiction, whether the power is vested in this Parliament or in the local legislatures. It is not possible for this Parliament to legislate in such a way as to obtain control over any subject that is within the exclusive jurisdiction of any of the Provinces. Take, for instance, the regulation of the fisheries. The hon. gentleman has read statements of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court; I am not questioning the accuracy of the decision, I would not pretend to do so. There is no doubt that the Government of Canada declare that a certain season shall be a close season, but that is a wholly different thing to making a declaration that shall interfere with the right of any party. They do not take from the Local Legislature any right that the Local Legislature possesses. But if they go up a non-navigable stream and say that a dam shall not be put across that stream, or that no mill shall be built upon it, that the water shall not be deepened over a rapid for the purpose of floating logs, because by doing so they would obstruct the use of the stream as a spawning place for fish

—I say in doing that they are not merely making regulations under the authority of the British North America Act in reference to inland fisheries, but they are interfering with property that is exclusively vested in the local body. The authority of the Legislature here is not more specific, it is not more absolute over the subject of the inland fisheries, than that of the Province is over this subject of property that is specifically vested in the Local Legislature; and you can no more obliterate the authority of the Province over property, than you can obliterate the authority of this Legislature over the subject of the fisheries, by the extreme extension of that authority. Well, Sir, that is what the Government propose to do. I say that my hon. friend has not undertaken to answer my objection, that if for the purpose of protecting navigation, they may legislate in such a way as to declare that logs shall not be put into a stream, or that saw-dust shall not be put into a stream, because the bark of those logs may fall off and may obstruct navigation, or interfere with the ascension of fish in the river. Now I say that in making such a regulation they are going beyond the authority they have. It is perfectly true that were there no power conferred upon another Legislature, there would be no limitation, because there would be no boundary drawn, but whenever this Legislature, in the exercise of its authority, undertakes to encroach on the authority of another Legislature, then it is going beyond the powers conferred upon it by the British North America Act, and that is precisely what is done in this particular section.

Mr. WELDON. I think the language of Chief Justice Ritchie entirely confirms the opinion of my hon. friend alongside of me, where he says:

"While the Local Legislatures have no right to pass any laws interfering with the regulation and protection of the fisheries, as they might have passed before Confederation, they, in my opinion, clearly have a right to pass any laws affecting the property in those fisheries, or the transfer or transmission of such property, under the power conferred on them to deal with property and civil rights in the Province, inasmuch as such laws need have no connection or interference with the right of the Dominion Parliament to deal with the regulation and protection of the fisheries, a matter wholly separate and distinct from the properties in the fisheries, by which means the general jurisdiction over the fisheries is secured to the Parliament of the Dominion, whereby they are enabled to pass all laws necessary to their preservation and protection, this being the only matter of general public interest in which the whole Dominion is interested, in connection with river fisheries in fresh water, non-tidal rivers or streams such as that now being considered, while at the same time, exclusive jurisdiction over property and civil rights in such fisheries is preserved to the Provincial Legislature, thus satisfactorily, to my mind, reconciling the powers of both Legislatures, without infringing upon either."

It seems to me there was a clear, broad distinction pointed out, and this was the question argued in this case: That while the Dominion Parliament had no power to deal with the property of the fisheries, they had power to make necessary regulations for the preservation of the fisheries, which necessarily involves their protection, not only in navigable streams, but in non-navigable waters.

Mr. O'BRIEN. This discussion, interesting and valuable as it is, might as well have not taken place. The object of the alteration of this clause was not intended to affect the streams at all. There is no necessity whatever for it, because the Fishery Act gives the Government all the power requisite for the protection of fisheries in streams. This clause would answer all purposes if the latter words were left out, "falling into any navigable stream." That is not necessary to accomplish the object of the Bill; it is altogether apart from the question, apart from the constitutionality of it. The Minister would have all the power necessary if those words had never been inserted, because, as I have said, the Fishery Act gives power.

Mr. COCKBURN. I desire to make an explanation. Speaking in regard to obstructions placed in streams, the House would naturally be inclined to think that this is a question between steamboat men and lumbermen. I rose to speak with an entirely different view. I had in my mind when I spoke the interests of the people who are affected. Trade is very often diverted owing to obstructions on a stream, and hardship is caused to settlers. I was speaking in my capacity as a representative of the people and not as a steamboat man, because steamboat owners can obtain protection and damages. I wish to make it distinctly understood that I spoke as a representative of the people.

Mr. COOK. I should like to address the Minister as to one point. I can tell him how to get over the difficulty as to the constitutional question very easily; it is by striking out entirely clause 7, for which there is no necessity whatever and which is not contained in the old Act. If this clause is to apply to bark, the running of logs will be entirely prevented. If there happens to be a crank of a fishing inspector on the river, and he has a grudge against any lumberman, he will have power to prevent that man getting his logs down the stream because some bark may fall into the water. There is no necessity whatever for this clause. I have no interest personally to serve in this matter of depositing refuse at the mill. All the mills I am connected with have large iron furnaces which consume all the refuse. Of course we cannot prevent the bark falling off saw logs coming down stream; and yet, if this clause is allowed to pass it will prevent lumbermen driving, unless they obtain the consent of the Government. I do not like that feature. The Dominion Government is not very favorably inclined to a man like myself who opposes them. There are many instances in my recollection where this Government has been very harsh with political opponents, and at the same time they have assisted their friends. I have in my mind's eye an incident which I am going to tell the House. Some few years ago a vessel ran into a bridge on the Welland Canal and damaged the bridge. The damages were estimated from $1,200 to $1,500. There was damage done to public works years and years before by vessels of the Richelieu Navigation Company, to the extent of $100,000. Yet because there was one man who was connected with this vesssel in question, who happened to be a Reformer and a somewhat prominent one in his way, he was compelled to pay the damage, although the vessels belonging to that company were allowed to go scot free. How are they going to do in this case? Suppose there was a man in the lumber trade who was opposed to them, what would they do? I have no more confidence in them when dealing with a case under this Bill than in the case I have mentioned. I might have some more confidence in the Minister of Marine because he is not so hardened in the sins and iniquities of the Tory party, as he has not been in it so long. I desire to say something about the fishery question on Georgian Bay. The only commercial fisheries of the lakes are those of whitefish and salmon trout. Those fish do not go up rivers to spawn, they spawn in the lake. The only fish that go up to spawn are black suckers and pike and pickerel. But suppose the fish in the rivers were killed it would not be a great injury to the country; if it would only kill suckers, pike and pickerel not much damage would be done. I know there are black bass, but they are caught by sportsmen and are not a commercial fish. There are also speckled trout. It is strange if the rivers are to be set apart for fishing at the expense of the lumber trade. The particular case that induced the Minister to introduce this clause was that of A. H. Campbell & Son. The hon. gentleman stated that case in his opening remarks. I think the Campbells were right. It is a rock-bound country where they are; no other persons go there but themselves; they own the property, and it cannot be any injury to any person except themselves if the navigation is obstructed. A hardship was done them, and I say so although Mr. Campbell is a political opponent and a respectable man, which cannot be said of many of the Tories in Ontario. It is not a very wise act to pass a clause to cover this one case.

Mr. FOSTER. The section was placed in the Bill before I heard anything of that case.

Mr. COOK. I had supposed that that was the reason the amendment was proposed. Mr. Campbell thinks so; he thinks it was drawn with the special purpose of meeting his case.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me say that in the last clause we have the same power given to the Governor in Council.

Mr. COOK. I do not want to give that power to the Government. They have too much power already; I do not believe in giving that power to twelve or thirteen men. If it is desirable, let it be put on the Statute-books and made law and not used in every shape and way. It may be used for political purposes by the Government. I know cases just as bad if not worse than this when power has been so used, and this House should not permit thirteen gentlemen to say what four and a half millions of people should do or what one man should do. The matter should not be left in the hands of the Governor in Council, that is where I take objection to the hon. gentleman's proposed legislation.

Mr. McMULLEN. After hearing the discussion on the question and the difference of opinion expressed, I think it would be a wise course to adopt for the hon. gentleman to send the Bill to Mr. Mowat, and no doubt he would set hon. gentlemen opposite right. That gentleman has taken considerable trouble during many years to set hon. gentlemen opposite right when they were wrong, and I think the wisest course for them to pursue would be to ask his opinion on the subject.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman has so little faith in the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills).

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Cook) is rather inconsistent. He started out by saying that he had no personal interest in the matter, because he had a furnace in which he burned the refuse, but he says now that if this Bill interferes with respect to the rubbish off logs, he is interested in the matter. He went on to say that there was no need for protecting the fish in the streams or rivers; but, if that is so, why should we have an army of fish inspectors appointed by the late Government for the purpose of protecting those fish. He assumes that there are no fish of any value to be protected, but in my part of the country they are considered of great value. There are speckled trout in the streams all over that part of country, and we have inspectors there to prevent fishing in the close season, and also to prevent saw-dust or other destructive matter from being thrown into the stream. I think it would be an act of great folly to appoint men to discharge certain duties without putting a law on the Statute-book giving them authority to perform those duties. If this Parliament has not that authority, then we should discharge those men and not assign them duties which they have not authority to carry out.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. AMYOT. I think the amendment is an infringement of the rights of the Local Legislatures. It is evident from the 91st clause of the British North America Act that this Government has the right to control fisheries like those of the gulf, the sea fisheries or the large lake fisheries. But this Government has no right to interfere with the fisheries in non-navigable rivers.

The CHAIRMAN. I would just point out to the hon. gentleman that I declared the amendment lost. The clause is now before the committee.

Mr. AMYOT. I am against the clause too, for I defy any one to find a river in this country which does not flow into navigable water, and by the very words of this clause you take possession of the whole of the rivers of this country, and you assume power to legislate upon them. If that is not an infringement. I do not see how you can infringe in any case. You take possession of every river, small or great, navigable or non-navigable, and you say that on those rivers you shall not do certain things. If you have a right to say that with respect to the fish you have the right to say it with respect to anything else—the using of the waters for mills, for the carrying of timber, for the use of the soil near the water—you will have the right to deal with those rivers in any way whatever. When the Confederation was formed it was understood that each Province would settle those questions as to the non-navigable rivers. The reason is obvious. The Province of Quebec may not judge its interests in that point in the same way as the Provinces of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. It has been settled that the majority of each Province shall deal with those matters and when the majority of the Dominion Legislature deals with them, it is an infringement of the spirit of the Confederation, and it is our right as well as our duty to protest against the infringement. There might be a way to give this jurisdiction if you should say that the doing of such and such things was a crime or a misdemeanor. But when that part of our legislation was given to this Parliament defining of crimes and misdemeanors, it was understood that a certain discretion would be used, and I do not suppose that it has been found just or fair to decide that throwing saw-dust, &c., into rivers would amount to a crime. If the hon. Minister of Justice thinks it is a crime against good order, or against morals, or the high principles which govern society, let him say so, but up to the present it has been only a matter of municipal order and that is dealt with by the Local Government. I think that the Local Legislatures would be very glad to come to an understanding with this Government, and propose legislation which would be combined with our legislation here, in connection with non-navigable rivers, but in fairness to the Provinces and considering the importance of the principles which we have to lay down here, I would ask from the Minister of Justice, who I have reason to believe is animated by right motives and a fair interpretation of the law, to consider this clause a second time and not to press on this legislation without such consideration. It would expose us to the liability of having this clause declared illegal by the courts, which would not be very flattering to this House. I think we should respect the privileges of each Parliament. Let us legislate to protect the fisheries in navigable waters, and if we want legislation to protect them on other waters let us apply to the Local Legislatures, who I am sure will gladly do it.

Mr. THOMPSON. After what the hon. gentleman has said it is only courteous that I should again express the opinion I entertain on this subject, and that my learned friends on the other side have stated as fully and as forcibly as I possibly can. Admitting that the decisions and principles referred to by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) go to the full extent that he seemed to argue, that is to say, that these non-navigable rivers and fisheries are private property, we clearly have the right to say that no man shall use his private property in such a way as to destroy navigation, and inasmuch as the protection of navigation and fisheries is vested in this Parliament, it is as clearly within our power to legislate in this direction as it would be to legislate that it would be a crime. It would be equally infringing the right of private property to declare it to be a misdemeanor, but since we are legislating for the purpose of effectually protecting navigation it seems to me to be no answer to say that we are to some extent invading what would otherwise be the private rights of property. I do not agree with the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) that the two spheres of jurisdiction are entirely distinct and exclusive. I think that in dealing with questions that are relegated to us we nearly always have, for the purpose of effectually legislating upon them, to infringe to some extent on matters within the jurisdiction of the Local Legislatures. In criminal matters we deal with civil rights; so with bills of exchange, insurance and other matters of that kind. The principle is well established, as cited by my hon. friend opposite, that we have the right to do it for the purpose of legislating effectively on matters in which we have the power to legislate.

Mr. COOK. Will the Minister consent to strike out the word "bark" in this clause. Bark is not injurious to the fish, but it is the saw-dust which gets into their gills that injures them.

Mr. FOSTER. Don't bark.

Mr. McNEILL. This is not dealing with bark which falls off logs but only with that which is thrown into the streams.

Mr. COOK. Yes, I know.

Mr. McNEILL. I understood the hon. gentleman to speak of the danger and injury that would accrue to lumbermen by bark falling off the logs into the stream. This relates to bark thrown into the stream.

Mr. MILLS. The hon. Minister of Justice says we have a right to protect navigable streams; but he proposes to protect navigable streams by going into streams that are under the jurisdiction of another Legislature. If the hon. gentleman may do this, he may go further. Let me give an instance which I have seen myself. An artesian salt well is sunk; the water from it flows into a small stream or river, and destroys all the fish in it. Would the hon. gentleman under the pretence of regulating the fisheries, close up that salt well? If the hon. gentleman's contention is right, the assumption in the case of McLaren vs. Caldwell is all wrong. If the hon. gentleman is right, for the purpose of protecting a fishery that might not be worth $1,000, he would have a right to destroy a lumber trade that might be worth a million. I maintain that that is not a well founded contention.

Mr. THOMPSON. We may have the right, although it may be very improper to exercise it.

Mr. MILLS. Well, the hon. gentleman will admit that the right to say whether the stream shall or shall not be made navigable rests with the Local Legislature. Suppose that a Local Legislature, with the view of making a stream navigable, builds a dam across it, or constructs a canal around some rapid; it might, by so doing, absolutely destroy the usefulness of that stream as a fishery. The hon. gentleman assumes that it has not the power to do so, but that this Legislature at any time could remove the dam. I contend that in navigable waters this Parliament would have that right, and anything done by a Local Legislature could be superseded by the action of this Parliament; but within its own jurisdiction the right of the Local Legislature is paramount. We have discussed the question of fisheries, but this is not an Act relating to the fisheries; it is an Act for the protection of navigable streams, and for the purpose of protecting them he proposes to assume jurisdiction over non-navigable streams and to state how they may be used. I contend that we have not the power to do so.

Committee rose and reported.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 70) respecting the Manitoba and North-Western Railway Company of Canada.—(Mr. Ross.)

STE. URSULE, MATTAWIN AND LAKE TEMISCAMINGUE RAILWAY COMPANY.

The House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 74) to incorporate the Ste. Ursule, Mattawin and Lake Temiscamingue Railway Campany.—(Mr. Hurteau.)

Bill reported.

Mr. HURTEAU moved for third reading of the Bill.

Mr. DAWSON. Before the Bill is read the third time, I wish to make a few remarks. I think this is one of the most important Bills that have been put before the House this Session. The railway will pass through a country with which I am well acquainted, from along the Mattawin, a tributary of the St. Maurice, to the north of Lake St. Peter, thence to Lake Temiscamingue and then south-westerly until it joins the Pacific Railway at or near another Mattawan, a tributary of the upper Ottawa. This road will be a means of leading settlement to a very important country, where there is an immense deal of good land and good timber. It is very important to Lower Canada especially, that some way should be found to lead settlement into the interior, and this road will be the means of drawing settlement from the densely populated districts on the St. Lawrence away back to the interior, and opening a field for colonisation, thus preventing the people going to other lands to seek homes. If this road can be carried out, and I hope the promoters will be able to find the necessary capital, it will be one of the grandest and best schemes brought before the House this Session. I could not let this opportunity pass without expressing my opinion of the importance of this work and I hope its promoters will meet with every encouragement from the Government.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

SECOND READINGS—IN COMMITTEE.

Bill (No. 105) to amend the Act to provide for the granting of a subsidy to the Chignecto Marine Transport Railway Company.—(Mr. Pope.)

Bill (No. 108) to amend the Adulteration Act.—(Mr. Costigan.)

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 109) in further amendment of the Weights and Measures Act of 1879.

Mr. WELDON. What is the object of this Bill?

Mr. COSTIGAN. When I moved the resolutions upon which this Bill is based, I gave explanations why this short Bill was introduced. I stated that it was to remove doubts as to whether the Governor in Council had power to determine what weights and balances should be verified, and what should not be verified. Dr. Wilson, the law clerk who prepares these Bills, gives it as his opinion that the Act does not really give the power. When I gave that explanation before to the hon. member for West Durham (Mr Blake), I stated that the Government had acted upon the supposition that it had the power since 1879. I might have gone further, and said it was the policy of the former Government from 1874, because I have looked up the Orders in Council passed since the Weights and Measures Act came into operation; and I find the same principle has been acted upon all through by both Governments. Here is an Order in Council passed in 1875, which declares:

"The following balances are to be admitted for verification:—(a) Balances having equal arms; (b) balances commonly known as steelyards or Roman balances having unequal arms; (c) weigh bridges."

Then the last paragraph in the regulations states that no other balances are to be stamped, thus taking power to exclude all others. This is a short clause to give the power which it was supposed the Act gave, but which the law clerk thinks it did not.

Mr. VAIL. Does that give you power to change from time to time?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes, we have exercised that power constantly.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in Committee and reported.

INSURANCE AMENDMENTS.

Mr. THOMPSON, in moving the second reading of Bill (No 111) respecting insurance, said: The object of this Bill is principally to consolidate the laws with respect to insurance and to embody in those laws the amendments which were suggested by the revisors of the Statutes. Substantially the Bill before the House will be the Bill as printed in the dratt of the revisors. Two or three amendments are made which I do not think it necessary to discuss at this stage, because I propose that the Bill shall go before the Committee of Banking and Commerce for thorough investigation and explanation. I think that course will meet with the approbation of the House, and it has been desired by several gentlemen who are particularly interested in the subject of insurance and desire to have the amendment which they will propose, thoroughly considered.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

RELIEF OF THE TOWN OF COBOURG.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider a certain proposed resolution (page 866) for the relief of the corporation of the town of Cobourg. He said: The object of this resolution is to effect a settlement with the town of Cobourg. In 1850 the Port Hope and Rice Lake Road was sold to the corporation of the town of Cobourg for the sum of £4,600, interest at 5 per cent. to be paid annually, and the Cobourg harbor was also sold to them in May, 1850, for £4,000, at 6 per cent. interest until paid off. The interest fell in arrears, and in 1859 a re-arrangement was made for the principal and the accrued interest, and debentures were issued on account of the Port Hope and Rice Lake road for $23,587, and for the harbor, $21,210, making the amount of the whole indebtedness of the town of Cobourg, for the road and for the harbor, $44,798. In 1876-77 a proposition was made to construct a harbor of refuge at the port of Cobourg, and a grant was made by the Government for that purpose, the town of Cobourg contributing $25,000, which was paid in. The Government has continued the work at that harbor, and has made an expenditure altogether of $139,687, upon the consideration that it is a work of public importance, being the only harbor of refuge, with any considerable depth of water on the whole coast between Kingston and Dalhousie, a distance of two or three hundred miles. The town of Cobourg view the expenditure upon the harbor as of a public character, and more beneficial to the public than the town itself, there being very little shipping owned in the port, I think something less than 1,000 tons, including schooners and small vessels. They have represented to us that if we will give them credit for the amount they contributed towards the construction of the harbor of refuge, they will pay off the balance of the indebtedness of $44,000; and to effect the settlement, feeling there is considerable justice in their claim, it is proposed to ask the House to pass this measure. Credit will be given for the amount they contributed, $25,507, and there will remain a balance of $19,270, which the town proposes to pay to the Government, and to receive the bonds now held by the Government from the town of Cobourg.

Mr. VAIL. I should like the Finance Minister to explain to the House the difference between the position of this harbor and the position of almost every breakwater in the Province of Nova Scotia. The breakwaters along the shores of our Province are of general advantage to Canada. They have been built largely by private means; in a great many instances the Government contributed a certain amount, in some instances nothing at all, and the Government have taken charge of the property. If it is the policy of the Government to refund the sums paid in Ontario, I think surely the Minister of Finance should be prepared to bring down a measure that would enable him to repay amounts to Nova Scotia and deal out the same even-handed justice to the Maritime Provinces as he proposes to do to Ontario in this particular instance. I can see no difference in the two cases. If the people of Ontario have contributed under the circumstances referred to, and the amount is to be refunded, in all justice the hon. gentleman should at all events make early enquiry as to what sum of money has been spent on public works in Nova Scotia, and be prepared to do equal justice to contributors to public works there.

Motion agreed to, and resolution concurred in.

Mr. McLELAN introduced Bill (No. 122) for the relief of the corporation of the town of Cobourg.

Bill read the first time.

COMMISSIONS TO PUBLIC OFFICERS.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved the second reading of Bill (No. 110) respecting commissions to public officers of Canada. He said: The Bill is only intended to enable the Government to issue commissions to a certain number of officers who do not at present receive them. Since Confederation two Departments have been created, and the custom which has been followed from time immemorial to issue commissions has not been followed in regard to certain officers in the Departments so created. For instance, collectors of Inland Revenue and inspectors of Inland Revenue do not receive commissions, while the corresponding officers in the Customs do. This Bill is to allow the Government to make regulations to issue commissions when it may be thought proper.

Mr. MILLS. I do not think this Bill is a satisfactory Bill, although it is upon the line of a great many Government measures. It provides that the Governor in Council shall declare to what parties commissions shall issue. This is practically placing the regulation of the matter in the hands of the Governor in Council. What the advisers of the Crown should have done was to consider carefully to what parties commissions ought to issue, and instead of coming down to Parliament and asking from Parliament power by Order in Council to determine the matter, the Government should have settled upon what general principles they propose to act, to what class of public officers commissions should issue, and thus have provided for the matter by Act of Parliament instead of by Order in Council. The whole tendency at the present time is, instead of carefully thinking out the principles and proposing an Act for the purpose of giving effect to them, to give the minds of Ministers a holiday and allow them to come here and ask power to do work by Order in Council. The effect of this has been to transfer from Parliament to the Governor in Council a large portion of legislative business which properly belongs to Parliament. The hon. gentleman will see that this is not a mere ministerial Act; it is a legislative Act. It is a proposal to declare to what particular class of officers commissions shall issue. That ought to be done by Bill, but instead of doing so by Bill it is proposed to delegate the power of Parliament to the Governor in Council, and that the power that should be exercised by the three branches of the Legislature, should be transferred to one. I think that is an objectionable mode of procedure, and the hon. gentleman ought, instead of proposing to confer power on the Governor in Council, to have clearly laid down the lines upon which action is proposed in the Bill and have submitted a Bill to give effect to that decision.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. This measure is introduced so as to allow the Government to regulate the fee in case of minor commissions and commissions similar to those already issued. That power is already in the hands of the Government. In regard to large and important offices it is always provided by a Bill that commissions shall issue, and as regards minor offices this power has been exercised by the Government; and this Bill will allow them to regulate the fees to be paid hereafter on those commissions.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. MILLS. Will the hon. gentleman indicate what classes of persons he proposes to appoint by commission under the great seal. We know that Ministers of the Crown, judges of courts of record, and Lieutenant Governors, are so appointed, but I think, as the hon. gentleman has probably considered what other classes of officers he proposes to appoint in this way, he should give us some idea of what officers they are.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I might mention that at Confederation several of the old Departments of the Civil Service were divided and new ones created, and although many of the old officers received commissions and continued to receive them, no provision was made for issuing commissions to the officers of the new Departements excepting the Deputy Heads. Hence in the Customs Department, commissions are issued to collectors, inspectors, landing waiters, &c., but in the Inland Revenue Department, which before Confederation formed a portion of the Customs Department, no commissions were issued to collectors, inspectors, and preventive officers. This also applied to officers in the Marine and Fisheries Department. It has also been deemed advisable for the sake of uniformity to include among those officers receiving commissions certain other officers of the same grade and of equal importance. This would take in post office inspectors, post masters of cities and towns, wardens of penitentiaries, chiefs of Departments, Dominion lands officers, officers of the Indian Department, immigration agents, assistant receivers general, savings bank agents, officers commanding Government vessels, &c., The greatest publicity will be given to them because it is provided in the Bill that each commission shall be advertised in the Canada Gazette. I would have no objection to adding a clause to the Bill that within fifteen days after the opening of the Session of Parliament a list of the new commissions issued during recess shall be laid before the House.

Mr. MILLS. I think it would be advantageous if that were done, but I think it would be still better that the hon. gentleman should provide generally by a Bill relating to all public officers whom it was proposed to appoint under the great seal. If the hon. gentleman proposed to make any minor appointments by Order in Council, it seems to me that those lines of distinction would have been easily drawn and that we should know what classes of persons were to be appointed regularly under the great seal and what classes appointed in some other manner.

Mr. VAIL. I think we should know how far the Secretary of State intends to go in making these appointments under the great seal. Surely he does not intend to appoint all the fishery wardens and overseers receiving $40 or $50 a year under the great seal.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No more than we do with respect to third-class clerks, landing waiters, &c.

Mr. VAIL. I think we should know how far it is intended to go, especially as I cannot see that giving a man an appointment under the great seal would confer any more authority upon him than if he were appointed in the usual way, unless it is intended simply for the purpose of raising small fees from such appointments.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I cannot see that there is any objectiong to these men contributing a small fee to the revenue to pay for the expense of issuing the commission.

Mr. VAIL. I object to it on the ground that other Civil servants are not obliged to pay a fee when taking out commissions.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. They will be hereafter.

Mr. MILLS. I would ask whether it is proposed to appoint some special officer to prepare the patents.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No, it is not; and if the hon. gentleman cares to see how the work is done, I will deposit a copy on the Table of the House.

On section 2,

Mr. VAIL. I would like to know from the Secretary of State whether it is intended that these provisions shall apply to officers already in the service, or only to those hereafter to be appointed.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It will apply to new officers of such rank as I have described.

On section 3,

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I move to add the following words to this section: "and a list of such commissions issued during the year shall be laid before Parliament within the first fifteen days of the then next ensuing Session.

Amendment agreed to, and Bill reported.

MANITOBA CLAIMS SETTLEMENT.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider a certain proposed resolution respecting the removal of doubts arising under the Act for the final settlement of the claims of Manitoba on the Dominion (page 866). He said: In the agreement entered into between the delegates from Manitoba and the Dominion Government in 1885, on the application of the Province for better terms, it was agreed that the estimated population upon which the Province should receive a per capita allowance should be increased from 17,000, the number fixed upon when the Province was formed, to 125,000. In the Bill passed last year to carry out that agreement, it was omitted to state that there had been two allotments to Manitoba upon that population of 17,000. When Manitoba was created a Province, the same sum per capita was allowed to her as was allowed to the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, amounting to a capital sum of $472,000; and in 1873, as the House will remember, it was agreed to assume $10,000,000 of the debts of the old Provinces of Quebec and Ontario, and to give to all the other Provinces a proportionate sum according to their population. That arrangement yielded to the Province of Manitoba $70,000, which was added to the capital sum upon which her first allowance was based. That made a difference to her of something over $4 per head. In the Bill of last year, for carrying out this arrangement, reference was made only to the original Act, the later addition of $70,000 being omitted. The object of this resolution is to correct this omission, and to specify that what is intended is that the Province of Manitoba shall receive an allowance based upon a population of 125,000 at the larger rate per capita.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do I understand that the sum total in dispute amounts to $70,000 only?

Mr. McLELAN. No. The capital sum of the Province was calculated upon an estimated population of 17,000 originally, and she was given the same rate per head as the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, namely, $27.77. Then in 1873 the same sum per head was added to Manitoba as was added to all the other Provinces, amounting to about $70,000 more, making a total of $551,477, which made the per capita allowance $32.44; this is to be calculated on a population of 125,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So that the amount involved is about half a million?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the exact sum now to the credit of Manitoba, on which we shall pay interest?

Mr. McLELAN. I have not the figures here, but the increase makes a total capital sum of $4,055,000 from which is to be deducted the sums which have been advanced to Manitoba and have been spent for strictly local objects.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. Minister intend us to understand this is a final settlement with Manitoba? That it covers all the claims advanced by the Government of that Province?

Mr. McLELAN. That is as we understand it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There has been some dispute in the Manitoba Legislature as to whether this is to be taken as an instalment or as payment in full, and it would be interesting to know whether we are going to get a receipt in full of all claims on this account.

Mr. McLELAN. On the first visit of the delegates, they reported the settlement which was then made and which was concluded by the words "settlement in full." In the Manitoba Legislature objections were made, and it was not accepted. The delegates came back and modified that in some slight degree, and it has been accepted by Manitoba on the understanding, they reading it, as we now propose to make it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You mean as a discharge in full?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can you state exactly what you have to pay them now.

Mr. McLELAN. I have not the figures.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You are not going to take a second reading?

Mr. McLELAN. I propose to introduce the Bill, and on the second reading I will give the details required as to how the account stands.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In our account, the only late accounts we have, apparently all that is allowed Manitoba is $170,000 for subsidy allowance, $225,000 for public lands, and a very small sum as interest.

Mr. McLELAN. They have drawn nearly the whole half million dollars placed to their credit in capital account.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Very little indeed of the $4,000,000, which is now allowed them, will remain.

Mr. McLELAN. A settlement is to be arrived at as to what might be termed strictly local, as chargeable against them, and then what they have drawn as capital. There will necessarily be a settlement between the two Governments, as to what will be charged against them as strictly local.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman will give us the details of the present account?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes, I will.

Resolution reported.

Mr. WATSON. I would ask the Minister of Finance to bring down with the other information he has promised, information as to what quantity of land will be transferred to Manitoba under these very terms. Last year there was no definitive amount arranged, and it was a matter of conjecture between the Local Legislature and the Dominion Government as to what should be termed swamp land and what quality should be transferred to the province. I hope we will get information as to the quantity.

Mr. McLELAN. I will make enquires of the Department of Interior and see what steps can be taken to ascertain the quantity.

Resolution concurred in.

Mr. McLELAN introduced Bill (No. 123) to explain the Act 48-49 Victoria, chap. 50, intituled: An Act for the final settlement of claims made by the Province of Manitoba on the Dominion.

Bill read the first time.

EXPERIMENTAL FARM STATIONS.

Mr. CARLING moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider a certain proposed resolution (page 866) respecting the establishment of experimental farm stations. He said: It will be remembered that two years ago a committee was appointed by the House to examine into the working of agricultural interests in the Dominion. That committee, after very careful enquiry and investigation into the different interests of the different Provinces, made a very full and elaborate report which was received and ordered to be printed by the House. The hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Gigault) was chairman of the committee. Last Session a sum of $20,000 was apportioned towards the inauguration of the scheme with the view of establishing an experimental farm as recommended by that committee. To obtain further information Professor Saunders was appointed to visit the different institutions in the United States, and to enquire into their working in order to ascertain the quantity of land, the annual expenditure, and the general results of their experimental farm stations, and he was also requested to enquire into the working of similar institutions in England, Germany, Russia and France. His report was made to me early in the year, and has been distributed in the House, and I think is in the hands of all the members at present. It is the intention to establish an experimental farm or station in the neighborhood of the capital, as this is considered to be an average climate of the Dominion. Tests, &c., will be made here of all the different seeds, and experiments made as to the raising of cattle, tree planting and fruit culture, and the analysing of different kinds of artificial manures; and the results of such experiments will be made known by monthly bulletins through the press or otherwise. It is found that those experimental stations have worked very satisfactorily in the States and in Europe, and, as the agricultural interest of Canada is the greatest, it is very important that we should do everything that is possible to assist in advancing that interest, and I feel confident that, if the resolution which I have placed in your hands is adopted, and the experimenal farm stations are established, that is the central one and the stations which are suggested in the different Provinces, it will greatly tend towards the prosperity of the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no doubt that these stations, properly conducted, are capable of being of great service, but I did not understand from the hon. Minister exactly where he proposed to establish them. He spoke of establishing one here, and one, do I understand, in every one of the other Provinces; or how many does the hon. gentleman propose to establish, and generally what amount of money does he expect will be required for the conduct of each farm? These things, if done at all, I would remind the hon. Minister, must be done thoroughly well. The agricultural institutions which have been established in England and Ireland, although they have been undoubtedly useful, have required a considerable sum of money, and therefore it is desirable that we should know at starting what the intentions of the Government are, and in particular how many farms they propose to establish, and what they think would be the cost of them.

Mr. CARLING. The intention is to establish a farm of 400 or 500 acres in the vicinity of the capital. No particular site has been selected, but I should think within five or ten miles of the capital would be suitable. It is intended to erect farm buildings, propagating houses and apartments for testing the different varieties of seeds and various breeds of stock, and making all the experiments usually made at stations of that kind. I think the total expenditure on that central farm would be something like $120,000. The proposition is—whether it will be all carried out at the present time or not is not finally decided—to establish an experimental station in the Lower Provinces, one for the three Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, one in Manitoba, one in the North-West Territories, and one in British Columbia. The total expenditure, if all were fully carried out, would be something like $240,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have you made any calculation as to the annual expenditure.

Mr. CARLING. Yes, the estimated annual expenditure for the central station and the other stations, if carried out, is from $30,000 to $35,000.

Mr. CHARLTON. Has any selection been made of the site where this farm is to be located?

Mr. CARLING. No; no selection has been made.

Mr. WALLACE (York). I think no measure has been brought before the present Parliament of such an important character as the one now submitted by the Minister of Agriculture. When we consider the vast strides that have been and are being made throughout the Dominion of Canada in the agricultural products, I think a measure such as is now proposed by the Minister of Agriculture to increase our products, to give a greater scientific knowledge to the farming community, to correct many errors into which they have fallen, and to give them necessary information, will meet with the approval of every class of people in the country. I have some figures here to show the vast increase in the exports of the products of the farm in the last nine years. In 1876, our exports of horses amounted to $443,000; in 1885, it has increased almost four-fold, to $1,640,000. Our export of cattle in 1876 was $600,000, and in 1885 $7,500,000. Our export of sheep during 1876 amounted to $507,000, while during 1885 it reached the value of $1,264,000. Our export of butter during the year 1876 was $2,504,000, and during 1885 it head fallen off nearly a million dollars, being only $1,577,000, while cheese had increased from $3,700,000 in 1876 to $8,900,000 in 1885. Our export of eggs was $580,000 in 1876, and $1,830,000 in 1885. Our export of poultry increased in the same years from $74,317 to $175,000. Our export of fruit was $170,000 in 1876, and in 1885 it had increased almost fourfold, being $640,000. This makes a total in these products for the year 1876 of $8,500,000, while in 1885 it amounted to $23,540,000. I think it is worthy of consideration that, as those gentlemen on the opposite side would say, with a decrease or a very small increase in the population, the farming community have increased their exports in those nine years by the enormous amount of about $15,000,000; and we must further take into consideration that the people have increased in prosperity in this country during these years, and have been better able to buy and consume the products of the farm, and that there has been a very much larger consumption of these articles in the country in 1885 than in 1876. We have in the Province of Ontario a model farm which, in many respects, may, perhaps, be doing a very good work. We are told, on good authority, that for the variety and excellence of their stock they cannot be excelled, perhaps, by any farm of the kind in any of the States of the Union, or in any of the countries of Europe? But there are many respects in which that farm is not doing the work which this experimental farm will do and which the interests of the country, I think, require should be done. For instance, they spend a great deal of time and a great deal of money in educating men to the business of farming. I think that is a great mistake, and I hope in this Bill too much attention will not be paid to teaching people farming. My own impression is that the best way to teach a young man farming is to let him go to a good farm where a prosperous and successful farmer is carrying on his business, and he will there learn better and in a shorter time how to make farming pay and how to do it successfully. So I think too much attention should not be given to teaching young men how to farm, but the object should be to carry out the scheme of making experiments, letting the public know the results fully and promptly by the issuing of bulletins, weekly or monthly as may be necessary. I think there is no part of this Dominion where such experiments are required so much as in our North-West. That is a new country, and the people who go up there are too busy trying to make a living and struggling with difficulties to have much time to spend in making experiments. I therefore think that the Minister of Agriculture should establish two or three of these experimental stations in Manitoba and the North-West Territories. As an instance of the good they would do, I may mention that last year a considerable portion of the wheat crop of the North-West was injured or destroyed by frost, and it has been discovered since that a great portion of that wheat could have been cut much earlier than it was, if the farmers had only been aware of the fact that wheat will ripen very much in the shook, and will be at least as merchantable as wheat for flour as if it had ripened on the straw in the field; and although it would not be as good an article for seed it makes as good if not a better quality of flour. I know an instance myself where a man, in order to be a little ahead of his neighbors in the North-West cut two or three shocks of wheat before he considered it ripe and the frost came a day or two afterwards and destroyed all the rest of his crop. He took the wheat he had cut and, as an experiment, threshed it out and sent it down to Winnipeg, and it sampled there as "No. 1, Northern," an excellent quality of merchantable wheat, whereas the rest of his wheat was almost totally destroyed by the frost. Now, the stations proposed to be established might conduct such an experiment as this and be the means of great benefit to the people of the North-West, and conduce largely to their prosperity. Another thing that I would recommend the Minister of Agriculture to consider is the question of forestry, not only in the North-West but also in the older Provinces. This is a very important question. A few years ago the great ambition was to chop down the trees, now the great desire is to have them grow up again; and in the North-West, perhaps, more especially it will be necessary to make experiments in growing trees to find out what kinds are best adapted for shelter, what other kinds are the most rapid growers, so as to be useful for timber, and what kinds make the best fuel. Another thing that a great attention should be paid to, is to find out the kind and quality of fruits that are best adapted to for the North-West. I find in the report of the Minister of Agriculture an account of two eminent scientists who travelled over a large portion of the Russian Empire and went very far northward, to find out what kind and quality of fruits, and especially of apples, are adapted to the various climates of that vast empire. I think that they collected samples of cuttings and specimens of apples and plums, and they find that they can cultivate apples and cherries in Russia very far northward. Those same fruits might be brought into our North-West and be grown there with equal success. I will say in conclusion that I hope the Minister of Agriculture will push on his policy of establishing these experimental stations, not only in the older Provinces, but in the North-West, and I feel assured that nothing will more conduce to the prosperity of this country than the proposal now before the House.

Mr. WATSON. I approve of the proposition of the Minister to establish experimental farms. If properly managed, I think they will prove of great benefit to the country, especially in the North-West, which is just being opened up. For my part, I have thought in the past that the Local Government should establish such a farm, but they have not the means to do so, and we would be very glad to have the Dominion Government take it up at present. Every farmer in the North-West has to be an experimental farmer himself, and if it can all be done on one farm, and reports sent out through the country, I think it will be a great benefit. For instance, if it were known what variety of fruits can be most successfully grown in and ripen in the various sections of the country, it would be a great benefit to the farmers if they could know also where to get them. I believe, also, that a great deal could be done by importing certain variety of wheats, say, from Russia, where they grow hard wheats that ripen successfully, and which might be successfully grown in the North-West. While we have got to look for wheat that will ripen in short seasons in some sections of Manitoba and the North-West Territories, we have also got to look for a quality of wheat for milling purposes. While every farmer is anxious to grow hard red Fyfe wheat, it is found by experience that in some sections of the North-West it is impossible to grow that variety of wheat, as it takes, probably, longer to ripen than any other variety. I was a little amused to hear the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, when he stated that wheat that was cut before it was ripe would make first-class flour, but would not make good seed. I have had a little experience in both farming and milling, and I am under the impression that the hon. gentleman ought to serve his time on one of these experimental farms. I know no wheat that has not matured sufficiently to grow again, that will make good flour, and I can assure him that it will not.

Mr. MILLS. I do not propose to oppose the proposition of the hon. gentleman, but I think it is not in the public interest that such a policy should be pursued. I think that the line of distinction between the functions of the Administration here and the Administration in the different Provinces, is very clearly drawn, and I do not believe that it would be for the interest of the Provinces of the Dominion and certainly not in the interest of the Treasury, that experimental farms should be established all over this Dominion. I do not think it would be possible for the Government to exercise effective control over them. I can well understand how an experimental farm in any one of the Provinces might be properly conducted by a local Administration. The Local Government would know that the institution was supported out of the revenues of the Province, and care would be taken to administer it economically, and fair results might be obtained for the work done. There may be something said, also, for the establishment of experimental farms in the North-West Territories, if we did not know what were the conditions of the country. But we have there a fair population who are carrying on farming operations in their own particular way, and who will not, for many years to come, be able to avail themselves of any high order of scientific farming, who, in a great measure, must make use of their limited resources and avail themselves of the most advantageous circumstances in their locality. I confess I do not see in what way the hon. gentleman is going to confer any advantage upon the agricultural population of this country by his proposal. We have in Ontario and, I suppose there are in the other Provinces, agricultural colleges; there are experiments carried on at these institutions at the public expense. There are professors who have done something for the organisation of farmers institutes, and have discussed the various means employed to ascertain the best results which can be obtained from the capital and labor applied to agriculture. The hon. gentleman may establish other farmers institutes, but they will simply be doing work already done by those institutes. He may employ other professors of agriculture, but if he does they will do the same work and give the public the same results they now obtain. Looking at the circumstances, looking at the functions of this Government and at the functions of the Local Governments, at the sphere in which their respective operations are being carried on, it seems to me that the proposal of the hon. gentleman, while it may place some burden upon the public Treasury, is not going to be of any particular advantage to the agriculturist. I think there are other means of promoting the interests of the farmers, of protecting them against mischievous effects in their business other than those which the hon. gentleman has proposed. It seems to me, therefore, that if the Government were to propose to establish institutions of this sort, and place them under the control of the Local Legislatures and local Administrations, that of itself would certainly be a better proposal than that of the hon. gentleman. I will mention this case: Suppose the hon. gentleman was to establish an experimental farm in British Columbia, does he think it is possible to exercise that supervision over it; to see to its operations; to profit by the work done to the same extent as if it were carried on under the control of the Government of the Province? Does he not think the Government of British Columbia would be in a better position to watch the operations of the farmers; would not the Ministers and all the parties connected with the Government and Legislature be better prepared to exercise an efficient supervision over it, and obtain more useful results, than a Government 4,000 miles away would be able to accomplish? Such an experiment tried in British Columbia—and I do not say but that such an institution might not do much good in that Province—an institution established under the control of the Department here, would be no more under its real control than if the establishment were at Simla, at the base of the Himalaya Mountains.

Mr. HESSON. I sympathise with the movement now before the House, and I think every hon. member should do so. I feel it is one of the most important measures before the House this Session. There is no industry in which we are all so deeply interested as that of agriculture, and we feel that everything which can be done for the farmers should be done by this Parliament. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) would be glad to shirk the responsibility devolving on members of this House and throw it back on members of the various Provincial Governments. We know perfectly well from experience that, with the single exception of Ontario, nothing in that direction has been done.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. HESSON. We have, at all events, heard very little of any other enterprise of that kind, and a long time would have to elapse before anything of that sort would be done by Provincial Governments in the North-West and British Columbia. I will take the hon. gentleman's own words. He said that farmers there will not for many years to come engage largely in experiments, or enter upon what might be called scientific farming. That of itself is a reason why the undertaking should not be delayed, and why we should not shirk the responsibility of endeavoring, as far as possible, to make those experiments for the poor farmers who are unable to do so and who have to take the chance of the results of experiments made in their own behalf. It is the duty of the Government to do this. If the farmers' interests are worth protecting, preserving and encouraging, it becomes the duty of this Government, above all others, to enable them as far as possible to reach that high state of perfection to which they desire to attain. The movement suggested by the Minister of Agriculture is in the right direction. A great deal possibly is still to be considered as to how far we should go in the way of training up young farmers scientifically. I quite agree with what was said by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), that the best training young men could have was probably to be put practically to work with a skilled farmer, and experiment in the way in which the farmer himself has to experiment. What is more particularly required on the part of the Government is to see that various kinds of seed, plants, trees, shrubs, fruits of all kinds, are so tested and so experimented with that the farmers will realise the advantage of experiment and experience without having to meet the disappointments which must inevitably result from time to time from making experiments. We know that very many well intentioned farmers with probably limited means desire to make some advance in that direction, but if they make one or two failures they are deterred from making other attempts; whereas the Government might go on experimenting under the same circumstances, in the same country, with the same climate and soil and make trials in the interest of all. I quite understand that the Minister of Agriculture will be most anxious that the experiment should be made in the North-West as soon as possible. Nothing would do more to encourage immigration there than to show the results of such efforts made by the Government, as similar experiments made by the Canadian Pacific Railway which showed that in what was considered a desert tract there could be successful farming in the North-West. I think, then, it is the duty of this Government especially to make a very early effort to remove this difficulty. There are many people who go into that country who know nothing about the varieties of soil, the soil and climate, and the Government might very well in a year or two be able to issue information to the people by a system of bulletins—which I understand is in operation in many of the American experimental farms—giving valuable information to the people generally as to the success of any particular experiment they may have made. I am satisfied there is no proposal that would meet the wishes of the farming community of Canada more thoroughly than to pay some little attention to the great difficulties always surrounding their particular business, and those who have often to labor under very great disadvantage. I am sure hon. gentlemen should sympathise with the movement and should congratulate the Minister on undertaking such a work. It is not the first time he has embarked in enterprises of very great advantage to the country. When the hon. gentleman had the honor of filling the position of Commissioner of Agriculture in Ontario, he brought in more than one measure of very great importance to the farmers. He it was who first proposed the model farm, which is now such a success in the Province, and I am glad to say it is a success in very many directions indeed, and it has done very much to inform the people, not only as to the quality of stock, but as the state of perfection that can be attained in other branches of agriculture. I trust that the House will aid the Minister in every way to carry out this enterprise, and that he will get the credit that he honestly deserves for undertaking it.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) thinks there is no need for establishing these experimental farms in the North-West, because, he says, the farmer there conducts his farming operations after his own methods, and he thinks that is the best mode for us to deal with this question—to let each farmer farm as he thinks best. I entirely differ from that view of the question. I think that just the very object which the Minister of Agriculture has in view is the object of counteracting that diversity of method—the object of assisting the farmers—of preventing their being obliged to experiment for themselves, and of having some system of experiment conducted, to which the farmer can refer and refer to with security, as being something that he can depend upon. I think, from what has fallen from two hon. members, in the course of this short debate, we see the great necessity for the establishment of some system of thoroughly reliable experiments in the North-West. My hon. friend from York (Mr. Wallace) told us it was very important that wheat should be cut before it was fully matured. An hon. member on the other side gets up immediately afterwards and says no greater mistake could be made. Now, you see at once the importance of having some authority to refer to on this subject. For my own part having some little experience in farming, I agree with my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Wallace). I think from what I have gathered, that a great mistake is made even in the Province of Ontario by our farmers leaving their wheat too long on the ground. I believe that if wheat is cut when most farmers would consider it is green, it will be found to produce a much better milling wheat than if it is left until they would consider it thoroughly ripe and a great deal of the grain has turned into bran.

Mr. WATSON. I said that it should be matured well enough to make good flour. I agree that it should be cut on the green side. But not so green that it would not be liable to grow again.

Mr. McNEILL. I think the hon. gentleman expresses fairly what he said, but he said also that he considered that wheat might make better milling wheat if it was cut on the green side, but if it was cut so green as not to be so good for seed it would not be equally good for milling. Now, I doubt if the hon. gentleman ever made an experiment of that kind.

Mr. WATSON. Yes, I have.

Mr. McNEILL. But how much too green was it cut? that is exactly what we want to know, because there is no question of more vital importance to the farmers of this country than the question of at what stage their wheat, oats, peas, and other grain, should be cut. If these experimental farms were properly to elucidate that one question alone, they would be of immense value to the farming interests of the country. But there are very many other matters, as has already been stated, as to which these farms would be most valuable. Nothing is more important in connection with the North-West than that we should discover some kind of wheat which will mature rapidly. The seasons there are short, and if we can produce seed grain which will mature a week or so more rapidly, which will require to be a week or so less time in the ground than the wheat used at present, it may make all the difference in a season between a great success in farming and a failure. So, too, we require information with regard to other seed, with regard to the forest trees which will grow best there, and with regard to fruit trees. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) so far as I could follow him, if he pushed his argument to its logical conclusion, would do away with the Minister of Agriculture altogether. I do not see that, taking his view of the case, we require a Minister of Agriculture at all; we should simply leave the matter to the Provinces. It seems to me that whenever anything is proposed by the Government of the country, dealing with the general interests of the people of this country, whether it be a question with reference to agriculture such as we are dealing with now, or a question with reference to the preservation of our fisheries such as we were dealing with this afternoon, or whether it be a question with reference to the adulteration of food, the hon. member for Bothwell comes with a wet blanket and endeavors to smother the whole thing and say that we had better leave it alone, or leave it to somebody else. Now, it seems to me that what we have to do here is to legislate for the benefit of the people, and it is time enough for us to hold our hands when the legal tribunals of the empire decide that we have gone too far. It is best to be on the safe side, and in this case the safe side is to legislate for the benefit of the people. It is a very good direction in which to go too far, to legislate for the benefit of the country.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. McNeill), has misunderstood the position of the hon. gentleman for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), with regard to this proposal to establish an experimental farm. I did not understand the hon. gentleman for Bothwell to oppose the proposal. He pointed out to the Government what I think was perfectly proper, that if it were practicable it would be better to establish these farms by the Local Government, and have local supervision, on the ground that the experiments would be more efficient, but I did not understand him to oppose the principle of the establishment of these farms. I think the agriculturists are entitled to every consideration from this House and the country. They pay the great bulk of the taxes, and these taxes, I am sorry to say, are often expended for worse purposes than the establishment of experimental farms. I hope, however that the Minister of Agriculture will remember that the finances of the country are not in the most flourishing condition that we could desire, and that he will exercise a due economy in putting the scheme in operation, that he will be specially careful as to the character of the purchase he may make near this city, that he will select a suitable site and take care that an extravagant price is not paid for it. It is probable that the operations of an experimental farm, in so far as they would be really beneficial to the people, would be rather limited in their character. It is not necessary to establish one to show the people what is the right stage at which to cut their wheat, whether it is better to cut it a little green or a little ripe. The intelligent agriculturist has ascertained that information for himself; he knows it already. It is unnecessary for an experimental farm to inform him on that point. With regard to forestry, which was alluded to by my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) I apprehend that a model farm will do very little towards renewing the forests of this country, and that that question will have to be dealt with in another way. With regard to the introduction of hardy fruits from cold countries such as Russia, that, too, I have no doubt, is a matter which will be coped with quite as satisfactorily by private enterprise as by an experimental farm; in fact, the question is pretty well understood already. Intelligent and enterprising nurserymen have introduced Russian fruits, and they are offered for sale in great quantity—fruits suited for extremely cold countries like the North-West. Of course the Government can experiment in these matters, but I doubt whether it is absolutely essential to the farming interests of the North-West that the Government should expend a large amount of money in this direction. I am glad to hear the admission made by my hon. friend from North Perth (Mr. Hesson), with regard to the Ontario model farm. His eulogy upon the management of that institution, and his eulogy upon the Minister of Agriculture who, he says, had the honor of founding that institution, may be taken as a very graceful compliment to the Government of Ontario, coming from the source it does. We have all noticed in past years how the management of that farm and the character of its operations have been bitterly assailed by the Opposition in the Ontario Legislature; and when we hear from a disinterested witness like the hon. member for North Perth the truth of the matter, it is very gratifying to this side of the House, and I am sure will be to Mr. Mowat and his associates. I am told that the Minister of Agriculture had the credit of purchasing the Mimico farm, which proved to be utterly worthless, and unsuited for the object in view, and that the present farm was purchased when Mr. Mowat came into office.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman is quite incorrect. The Mimico farm was approved of as an excellent farm for the purpose.

Mr. MILLS. Three hundred acres of Canada thistles.

Mr. CARLING. I beg pardon; 600 acres were purchased at Mimico, and the farm was highly recommended by Prof. Buckland, a man of great experience and integrity, as the best selection that could be made.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would not attribute to the Minister of Agriculture anything wrong in the purchase of the Mimico farm. It seems, however, that it was found unsuitable; and the location was changed to Guelph.

Mr. CARLING. Not at all.

Mr. CHARLTON. However, it is not a matter having any bearing on the present subject. I have only to repeat that the country is somewhat impecunious at present; and that I hope the hon. gentleman will not go too fast in establishing these farms, and will see that they are efficient.

Mr. McCALLUM. This is an important subject. As a practical farmer I do not think the Government could better spend some of the public money than in teaching the people of this country how to pursue agriculture in a more efficient and scientific manner than they do now. If they spent the money on forestry alone, it would pay, as we are destroying our forests very rapidly. An hon. gentleman opposite intimates that this work should be done by the Local Governments; but how about the North-West? There could be no better investment made by the Government than to spend a quarter of a million in planting trees in the North-West. If that were done, I believe it would very greatly change the climate and character of the country. Then, there is the question in raising wheat, as hon. members say on the other side of the House, whether it should be cut green or ripe, because if you cut it too green it is useless, and if you cut too ripe it will shell out. The farmers know when to cut their wheat without any further knowledge on that question. Then, there is the subject of seed; if you could obtain for the farmers of this country a proper seed that will stand the climate and give a good return, that alone would justify the expenditure of a large amount of money. This House is always ready to vote money for other purposes and why not for the improvement of agriculture? We have been told that the land might yield twice as much as it does if we seeded it down with the proper kind of grasses; and the Government might do something to teach farmers how to establish permanent pastures. No individual effort in forestry can be of much advantage, It is estimated by competent parties that a piece of land planted with walnut trees and kept 40 years, will yield more than it will if cropped every year, in addition to the benefit the trees would confer in the way of shelter and in improving the climate. It is only the Government of the country that can afford to wait so long for a return. What the North-West most stands in need of is the planting of timber which would act as shelter and as wind breaks for cattle and for settlers. There are thousands of acres in that country now that are hardly fit for settlement, but that will grow timber that would add largely to the revenue in the future. I am glad the Government have taken a step in this direction.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). Whether this subject comes within the jurisdiction of this Parliament or that of the Local Legislatures, certainly the hon. Minister who has introduced it is deserving of the gratitude of the agriculturists of this country. I believe he was the founder of the experimental farm of the Province of Ontario, and he has brought into this House the principles he then pursued. There is no doubt that the agricultural interests of this country are not second, but first of all the interests in the country. We have labored much in this House, and we have spent much in legislating on the subjects of trade and commerce; but, Sir, the foundation of all trade and commerce is agriculture, and it is the duty of this House and this Government to see that a certain amount of our money and attention are devoted to the interest that forms so large a share both of the capital and industry of this country. It is the duty of this House and this Government to see that the agriculturists of the country are furnished with the greatest possible facilities for gaining information on scientific agriculture. Until the present time this was not so necessary. The original fertility of the soil led farmers to depend largely upon simply sowing and reaping; but that time has passed by. The agriculturist has found that something more must be done, that he must know the nature of the soil, what it contains, what the food of plants is, what are the elements of this food in order to keep the land in a good and proper condition. As the hon. member for Monck

(Mr. McCallum) has said, it is impossible for an individual to arrive at this knowledge; experiments are too expensive. It must be done in a united way by a united people, and I cannot see any better way in which it can be done than by the Parliament of the country and the expenditure borne by it. The farmer must be taught, and there is no other way in which he can be taught than by experimental farms of this kind. He must be taught what is or what is not contained in the soil that is necessary for the production of a peculiar and particular kind of grain or fruit; he ought to be taught what the mineral elements of the soil are which are required for the production of wheat, oats and barley; he ought to be able to have the soil analysed at a minumum or no cost at all, and rely on the expenditure of the Government to see whether it contains these elements or not. If it does not, he has information that will guide him as to what kind of grain he should sow on that soil. Not only that, but the duty of the Government is to ascertain where these elements can be obtained, if not in the soil, in order that the farmer may be able to obtain them and return them to the soil. In the first place he must be taught what kind of mineral food is necessary for the production of grain, and, as I said before, whether the soil contains that food. He ought to be taught also, and he can only be taught this by bulletins issued from an experimental farm, whether his farm contains these elements or not. It is a very simple calculation for a scientific man to enter into, but very difficult for a man without the means of investigation to ascertain. Perhaps not one in a thousand agriculturists in this country know what the mineral food of plants is; perhaps not one agriculturist out of a thousand knows what amount of this mineral food is obtained in the average soil of the country. I could give you the amount of this mineral food that is contained in the average soils of the country, but it would take too long. If the farmer has already the amount of mineral food contained in the land, and the amount of mineral food each crop of wheat, oats and barley extracted from the land, it is only a matter of simple arithmetic to ascertain the number of crops he can raise from that soil in order to entirely exhaust it of that food; and as soon as it is exhausted, the soil becomes useless almost exclusively and entirely. It requires different food for wheat, barley and oats, and different elements to produce hay to what is required to produce wheat and barley. It is the duty of the Government to afford the farmers the greatest possible facility for obtaining this knowledge, and as soon as it is obtained he can pursue his vocation, not only with profit to himself, but with great advantage to the country. A great many of the farmers of the country believe that they can restore to the soil all the elements required, by returning the barnyard manures to the land. I can point out and will use this as an illustration to show how necessary it is for the farmer to be untaught this. Take land that produces wheat. We find that the ash of wheat is composed of 7 per cent. phosphoric acid; we find phosphates enter largely into the bones of animals and wheat; we all know as a matter of fact that the wheat of nearly every farm in the country is sold off the land never to be returned; we know that the bones of animals raised on that land are sold off, never to be returned. Then it is a question of arithmetic to ascertain how many crops of wheat and bones of animals can be sold off land to exhaust it of phosphoric acid. The reason why the wheat of the older Provinces is of a soft character and does not yield that good flour that was produced from the wheat in the earlier history of the country, is that the soil is exhausted of phosphoric acid, and the reason why the wheat of Manitoba and the North-West Territories, as well as Minnesota, is worth 10 cents per bushel more than the wheat of Ontario, and will produce a better quality of flour, is because the land is new and contains a large proportion of phosphoric acid. This is a matter of exact certain calculation from a scientific standpoint. It is then the duty of the Government to conduct experiments, because no individual can conduct them at his own expense, for he has not the knowledge or facilities for doing it. The Government should supply the farmers with that information in order that they may carry on their avocation with profit to themselves and the country at large. I will not go into the chemical analysis of soils, or into the chemical analysis of grains, as probably I might show the great importance of this measure. I will take it for granted the House is thoroughly convinced of its importance, and will only say again that the thanks of this House and of the farmers of this country are due to the Minister of Agriculture for introducing the subject to this House.

Mr. WIGLE. Representing as I do an agricultural constituency, I feel I would not be doing my duty to my constituents if I did not stand up here and endorse the action of the Government on this occasion. One reason why I have every confidence in the establishment of experimental stations in the different Provinces, is because I know their establishment is left in the right hands. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carling) was Minister of Agriculture in the Sandfield-Macdonald Government of Ontario, he established a farm near Toronto. I had occasion to look into the matter and I found it was a better farm than is the Agricultural College and the farm of Guelph to-day. He purchased some 600 acres within seven miles of the city of Toronto, located near the line of the Great Western Railway, so that it could be easily visited in ten minutes by parties coming to the capital of Ontario, but for party purposes and the satisfaction of good Reformers near Guelph, the Mowat Government appointed a commission, and one of the greatest reasons why the commission recommended that the Stone farm should be purchased was because there were too many Canada thistles on the other. Then it would not be practicable as a model farm, and they reported that the Ontario Government should purchase the Stone farm, because there were no Canada thistles on it, and it would make a model farm from the start. I took occasion to go into that matter at one time, and I found in the report of Mr. Johnston, who was the manager of the Stone farm which was run by the Mowat Government and was bought because there were no Canada thistles on it, the statement that field so and so, and field so and so grew nothing that year because there were so many Canada thistles on them that they could not grow anything. They bought that farm because there were no Canada thistles on it, and in a few years they could not grow anything because of the Canada thistles. That don't show the right kind of farming. I remember seeing in the Farmers' Advocate, published in the city of London where the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) lives, a statement that the roads around the model farm at Guelph were so polluted with thistles that they were interfering with the farmers all round them, and that the farms in the vicinity of that institution were not worth so much as they were before it was established. I have every confidenec in the Minister of Agriculture in establishing these farms. I believe he will establish them for the best interests of this country, and I believe he will not carry on a college with the farm as they do in the Province of Ontario. While the Province of Ontario's farm may be very well, if it were managed properly it would be still better for that Province than it is at present. There is one thing which I believe the farmers of this country are deeply interested in, and that is fencing. I am satisfied that in the older Provinces rail timber is about exhausted. We find the fences in this country are about rotted down, and it would be a great thing to experiment as to what kinds of hedges would be the best to plant out in the different Provinces. In the county where I live we are growing the Osage orange to a great extent just now. That might not do further north here. It might freeze, and it would be a good thing to experiment which would be the best kind of hedges, for I believe one of the greatest expense to the farmer to-day is keeping up his fences, and the first thing I would recommend the Minister of Agriculture to do would be to buy a fine farm near this capital of Ottawa, as he did near the capital of Ontario, and fence that in with orange and other kinds of shrubbery and find out the best kind of fencing for the people of this country. In that matter alone, it would doubly pay for the cost of establishing the farm. Another thing is finding out the best kinds of seeds for permanent pastures. A man may buy half a dozen kinds of seeds for permanent pastures, but his neighbor three or four miles off would not be likely to know the result of his investigation; but in this case, the agricultural station will test the best kinds of seeds, how much it will cost per acre, and so on, and will send the result all over the Dominion, and we will be doubly paid in two or three matters of this kind for the expense. I am satisfied that this will be carried out. It is in the hands of a good, honorable gentleman, and in the hands of a good Government. The hon. gentleman says it will only cost about $240,000, and from $30,000 to $35,000 a year to run these stations. In the Province of Ontario, we find it costs about $20,000 or $21,000 a year to run that institution over and above the revenue they derive. They buy eggs for the use of the farm, they buy their own butter, they buy their corn stocks to winter their cattle. They do not grow enough to feed their cattle, because they are not carrying it on on a proper principle. We find the class of young men who are sent there to learn agriculture are young men whose parents would not trust them in a business of their own, who are wild and whose parents would not establish them in business, but send them to the Agricultural College to learn farming. The result is that not one out of a dozen have gone into farming after they leave there, and if they did, they were not successful. They were taught there that it cost $1.75 to raise a bushel of wheat, and that they only got 80 cents for it, they cannot farm practically on that basis. I intend to support the Minister of Agriculture, and I am satisfied that this resolution will be carried by a large majority.

Mr. McMULLEN. I was rather pleased with the remarks of the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) with regard to the model farm of the Province of Ontario. I think that model farm has been a decided success, and I was rather disappointed to hear the remarks of my hon. friend who has just sat down. I know, and I think he knows, that for the last number of years from several of the United States delegations have come to visit that farm, and on every occasion they have complimented the Province of Ontario on the very excellent model farm we have, and have complimented the managers upon the manner in which they have managed it. I am satisfied that this is true and I can prove by records in my possession that it is true. I do not think it is fair here to decry an institution of that kind, which is in its infancy, but unfortunately it has been vigorously opposed by the Opposition in the Local House who are the friends of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. Notwithstanding that, it is progressing and continually improving, and it is an honor and a credit to the Province of Ontario and to the Government which has brought it to the position in which it is now. The hon. gentleman said it was highly desirable that the Government should take steps to secure to the farmers of the Dominion a cheaper kind of fencing. I remind him that a few nights ago, when the hon. Minister was delivering his Budget speech, we added an increased duty to wire, which is the very thing which would tend to cheapen fencing to the farmers of the Dominion. It is a pity that on that occasion he did not draw the Finance Minister's attention to the necessity of keeping the duty off wire. I believe my friend in front of me made a motion in behalf of the people of the North-West, urging that the increased duty should not be put on, as wire was the only thing they had to fence with there; but, notwithstanding that, the duty has gone on wire, and the people of the west will have to pay for it. I am very glad to know that something is to be done in the interest of the farmer. I am quite willing to support and assist in establishing these farms if they are to be a benefit to the farmers of the Dominion. Anything which will tend to improve their position shall have my assistance. But, in 1878, loud professions were made, when the National Policy was introduced, as to what was to be done for the farmers. They were to have a home market provided for their surplus products, they were all to be made rich, and the operation of that policy was to make them prosperous. They have found, to their sorrow, that it has not had the effect which was promised, and now, at the end of seven or eight years, the Government feel that, unless they can show the farmers on an approaching occasion that they are going to do something for them, they have been so disgusted with the results of the National Policy that the Government will not be able to whip them into line and make them vote again as they did in 1878. That is their object, and they are going to show that they are going to establish model farms and experiment on certain kinds of seeds. They are going to purchase a certain kind of tree, and a certain kind of fruit, and do everything else for them if they will only renew their confidence in another election. If the farmers will give the present Government their support once more, the Government are going to take them out of the mire and the troubles in which the National Policy has landed them. I shall be glad if the establishment of these farms do any good. For if there is a class in this Dominion, at the present time, that requires the serious attention of every man in this House, that requires aid and assistance, it is the farming community of this Dominion. They have undoubtedly suffered seriously in the past through loss of crops, through the increased price of everything they consume, and to-day they stand in a worse condition than they have for several years past. With regard to a remark that fell from my hon. friend who has just sat down. He thought he had made a strong point when he said that in order to please some Grits in Centre Wellington, a farm belonging to a certain Grit friend of the Government, was selected for the model farm. Well, Sir, that gentleman is not very well posted. He should remember that Mr. Stone, the man he referred to, is a strong Conservative, and always has been, and in the last election he was nominated in the Conservative interest. You find that the Ontario Government, when they want to acquire a property for Provincial purposes, do not ask whether the owner is a Conservative or a Grit, but if it suits their purpose they buy it and pay for it. But hon. gentlemen opposite, if they want a piece of property for Dominion purposes, generaly try to hunt up a Tory that has got a property to sell, and buy it from him. I would just say in conclusion, that as far as I am concerned I shall give the proposition of the Minister of Agriculture my hearty support, and if it will do anything at all in the interest of the farming community, I shall be glad to assist it in any way I can, but I am afraid that it is a second edition of the humbug practised on the farmers in 1878.

Mr. COCHRANE. As I represent an agricultural constituency I feel disposed to say a few words on this subject, although pretty nearly all that can be said on it has been said. I am sorry that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) cannot discuss any question without dragging in other questions that do not pertain to it at all. I do not see any connection between the National Policy and an agricultural farm. He made an assertion that I deny. He says that everything the farmer uses to-day is dearer than it ever was before, that they have been humbugged by the Conservative party, who led the farmers to believe that they were going to make them wealthy. Sir, the Conservative party never made any such promises, but they did lead the farmers to believe, and I believe they were correct, that they would have the advantage of their own market, that when there was a surplus of production in this country the people of Canada would get the advantage of it, that if the supply in Ontario was not equal to the demands in the Maritime Provinces, the grain would be kept out of this country which was formerly supplied by the Americans, and we had the benefit of the protection. That is what we advocated, and what we accomplished. What we advocated in reference to the National Policy has been more than fulfilled in this country.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman must confine himself to the subject before the House.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am answering the question the hon. gentleman raised.

Mr. SPEAKER. At this rate we will never get through the discussion.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then you should not have allowed him to raise the question of the National Policy. He said everything was dearer in this country than it was before, and I will not allow any gentleman, in my presence, in this House, to try to force that down my throat, because he knows as well as I do that it is not a fact.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. COCHRANE. There never was a time in this country when machinery was so cheap as to-day.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman has now denied the assertion of the hon. member, and I hope he will confine himself to the subject under discussion.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well, it is very strange if you allow an hon. gentleman to make use of those arguments and will not allow me to answer him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, chair.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is all very well to cry "chair," but you don't like to hear the truth. I am a farmer, and I know what I say. These gentlemen, lawyers and money-shavers, can draw fine distinctions in law which nobody else can understand, but when it comes to farming they don't know what they are talking about. An hon. gentleman says that he knows all about cutting wheat, whether it is green or ripe; I doubt very much whether he knows anything about it, I doubt if he would know a field of wheat if he saw it, but there is a larger question even there, there are very few men in this country who know when to cut their wheat, or, if they do, do not do it in proper time. In my opinion, the farmers lose a large amount every year by letting their wheat get too ripe. There is a great question in reference to artificial manures which the farmers of this country have been humbugged into using, and for which they have wasted a large amount of money in purchasing. Would not the farmers of this country be more than recouped for the money expended in the establishment of an agricultural farm if it could test the value of the artificial manure that so many of them have been using? And then there is the question of the most suitable kinds of soils for the different crops, the analysis of the soils, also, to show what is necessary to make the soil productive. We have all read that a man who makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before, is a public benefactor. That is what we are going to accomplish by this farm. We shall know what to use and what to put on the soil to make it most productive. It will also be useful in testing seeds. Few farmers in this country have got money to spend in experimenting in seeds. There has been a great deal of money taken out of the farmers in the purchase of seed grain. In our section of the country large sums of money have been paid for certain kinds of wheat that were brought into the county and represented to be just the kinds that would grow best, and when we came to test it for ourselves, we found it was not the wheat we wanted at all. An agricultural farm could test the seeds for us, and in that way there would be a great benefit to the country. There is also the question of butter and a thousand other subjects that will come under the attention of the Minister of Agriculture, and I am satisfied that everything will be done for the best interest of the community. I think the farmers should have some consideration. There is no class in the community that pays so high direct taxes as the farmer. They have to pay the most indirect taxes. Notwithstanding the glowing colors in which the Ontario Government has been painted by hon. gentlemen opposite, they have never raised a finger to equalise taxation in the Province of Ontario. The farmer pays taxes on his farm or the money that is invested in it. If he improves the farm the assessor comes round and raises the value of the farm by adding the value of the improvements and his labors, and he pays taxes on that. But do these business men do that? Does the money shaver do that? No, Sir, he can go to the village and hang out his sign, "Money to Loan," and he only pays interest on the income. Has Mr. Mowat done anything to equalise the taxation of the Province of Ontario? No. We want something established that will give the farmers of Ontario and the Dominion some return for the amount of money paid into the Treasury by them.

Mr. IRVINE. I find we are all friends of the farmer to-night. I should like to be a friend of the farmer too. I am not specially so. I claim to be a friend of the manufacturer and of the professional man and I wish success to all classes with one exception, and that is the legal profession. I would send a portion of them to grass; but to all the rest of the people I wish success, and I am not specially a friend of the farmer more than of the others. I love my country, and I do not think any hon. gentleman can say that although I come from the small Province of New Brunswick, which appears small in the eyes of some, he ever heard me utter a disrespectful word of the West and of our country, either in this House or out of it. I say I love my country, I love the farmers and I wish them success; I wish success to traders, merchants and laboring men, because I was once a laboring man myself. It is only to the lawyers I do not wish success. In this House we do not need of lawyers more than a Minister of Justice and one hon. gentleman on the other side to watch him. We have heard agriculture discussed in its various phases. We have had a lecture on agricultural chemistry. And I am very sure if that hon. gentleman had an opportunity of addressing an assembly of agriculturists the very first question put to him would be give us a market for the produce we raise, the soil and climate of the country answer our purposes. The farmers would turn to the hon. gentlemen and say: How do you think we can live in the North-West with wheat at 45 or 40 cents a bushel? How can we live in the East with oats at 25 cents a bushel as they were last fall? How can we live with butter selling last fall at 12 or 13 cents a lb.? What difference does it make to learn of what the soil is composed when the farmer is unable to get sufficient for his produce? Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that by raising wool at 18 cents a lb. the farm can pay? What is the use of telling the farmers that we will build agricultural colleges, and tell them the properties of the soil, and that they are not raising as much out of the soil as they should do. Men with ordinary common sense will say that it is a market they want. We want money in exchange for our produce, and our farmers understand well how to till the soil. But the hon. gentleman has given us a lesson in harvesting wheat. Go to any practical agriculturist, and what will he say? He will say that we have the elements to contend with in harvesting our wheat. Sometimes when we know wheat is ripe for the sickle we have a week of fine weather and sometimes we have the reverse. Practical men understand this; but hon. gentlemen who have been talking on the subject are not practical farmers, if they are they have been talking in a very unpractical way. I am of opinion, notwithstanding the declaration of the last speaker, that our farmers as a body are intelligent and know precisely what to do in their business, that they understand when wheat is ripe and should be cut, and how to market it. All they want is a price for their wheat. Would any practical man say, as an hon. gentleman told me he heard a farmer near Ottawa say, that he could make a living by raising cattle and selling them at 3½ cents per lb., live weight. The truth is our farmers are raising too much and they are not paid enough for what they raise. The soil is productive and the climate is good, but we want a market, and we want the Government to turn their attention in that direction. Hon. gentlemen opposite promised a market—they promised us bread and gave us a stone. I am not opposed to the present proposal; but I will relate the saying of a member of the grange which I heard when I sat on the committee that reported on this subject now before the House. Various phases of agriculture were being discussed and a member of the grange, who was a delegate from Ontario, and was an intelligent man, said in regard to skilled agriculture that the most successful agriculturist he ever saw in New Brunswick was a man who signed his name with a cross. In all my travels at home and abroad I have found that whether an agriculturist is educated or uneducated he soon learns to till the soil, to take care of his farm, to know what it is capable of producing, and those crops which will tend to make the family as happy and comfortable as the market prices obtained will permit. But I will say this: That I fully concur not in what hon. gentlemen have said about the colleges or model farms in various parts of the country, but in regard to the proposal as it was submitted to the committee. As submitted to the committee it was understood to be a proposal to establish a small farm where experiments would be made in various kinds of grains, seeds, shrubs and trees, fruit, ornamental and forest. That would not be a very extensive undertaking; but if it means the establishment of a college here and of a model farm there, which would involve an enormous expense, I am decidedly opposed to the arrangement. I do not believe that we, with a population of less than 5,000,000 would be justified in incurring such an enormous expenditure; but I think, on the other hand, that something like what was proposed before the committee which reported on the subject ought to be beneficial to the people and in the interests of the agriculturists. Now, of course, I have not a quarrel with any of those hon. gentlemen and I do not want to go any further on this subject than I have. I am willing to do anything that I can by word or deed to benefit any portion of the community, any trade or calling in this country, not merely the farming community, but any other trade or industry in the country. I should be glad to coincide with the hon. gentleman on the other side in that way, and to build up any trade or calling in a legitimate way, but not at the expense of any other. I do not want to build up the agriculturists of this country at the expense of any other calling. I am one of them, and I think they are able to take care of themselves; I am satisfied that all they want is a fair field and no favor.

Mr. IRVINE.

They have not received that from the Government of this country in my judgment. They were promised under the National Policy——

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think the hon. gentleman should refer to the National Policy.

Mr. FARROW. I desire to say a few words on this important question. I think a more important question could not be raised for consideration in this House than the one we have before us. If we look abroad through the length and breadth of the country, from the east to the west and from the north to the south, we are an agricultural people. Probably Ontario bears the palm so far as regards agriculture, not because she is the oldest Province, but probably the land is on the whole somewhat better than that of the others—I am now speaking of the older Provinces—with the exception of Manitoba and the North-West. Some of the members on the other side who have spoken seem to have a particular pick at my friend who sits beside me (Mr. Hesson) because he said the Agricultural College at Guelph was a success. Well I think it is a success in some points. It is a success in spending money. It is a success in bringing foreigners from other countries into its halls to learn agriculture. I think the practical farmers in Ontario are on the whole opposed to the Agricultural College as it exists at present. I say this advisedly; I say it because they have told me so. For my own part, I look upon the Agricultural College at Guelph as doing very good work. I think during the past three or four years it has done much better work than it did formerly, and I think the reason is that the Government of Ontario is listening to the Opposition a little more. Some things that the Opposition proposed several years ago, the Government have adopted during the last Session. I think the professors in that college have been doing good work, by going outside of the college and travelling through the districts of Ontario, giving lectures. I know that great interest has been created all through our part of the country, by these lectures. The farmers would flock to central parts, where these men were to give lectures and hold farmers' institutes, where they would receive a great deal of valuable information, such as I suppose this experimental farm is intended to give. They would receive instruction in farming generally, in stock raising, in butter making and in cheese making. I think one of the most important subjects they have introduced during the past winter, was permanent pastures. One of our friends said, the man who could cause two blades of grass to grow where only one grew before, was a benefactor to his race. Well I believe these permanent pastures will be more than that. I think Prof. Brown has given it as his experience that if we put down permanent pastures, we could feed three head of cattle where we feed only one now. Now what does that mean in Ontario? It means a vast amount of good beef extra, and it means a vast amount of hard cash in the farmer's pockets. What I find fault with, and what I will find fault with, in these experimental farms which are to be established, if they go on as the Agricultural College at Guelph has gone on, is the spending of too much money to very little purpose. The idea that they should have 500 or 600 acres of good land and men to work it, and yet cannot make both ends meet is absurd. What would the farmer be thought of in any part of Ontario who would come out $7,000 worse than nothing at the end of the year? Is that the kind of example we should set before our farmers in Canada? The Ontario college is bankrupt every year; $22,000 expenditure and only $14,000 receipts, or nearly $8,000 of a deficit. That is a state of things that should not be. In this new central institution which is to be situated near the capital and is to do, as it were, for Quebec and Ontario—if the institution is conducted properly, if those experimental farms are to give information to the people of the country, respecting different subjects pertaining to farming, I think it would be a very good thing. But as an hon. friend opposite said, if they launch out into a large amount of money, with a professor for this and a professor for that, and probably nearly a dozen professors doing very little and costing the country a great deal of money, I believe the farming community will condemn them. Now, what we want is this: We want an experimental farm conducted with as little cost as possible, and giving the greatest amount of information. Who is the best farmer in Canada? It is that man who can raise the most off the land and leave it in a good condition? Some men will live on a farm where others will starve, just by better management. We want experimental farms, and I will tell you why. What is doing more for arable land in Ontario to-day than anything else? It is draining. In some parts of the country drains are made with stone, in some parts with boards, and in some parts with tiles. Some men will tell you that you are to sink a drain three feet deep; another man will come along and say two and a-half feet is deep enough; a third will come along and say that is too deep, two feet is plenty. All these men are right, but it is not every farmer who knows it; the depth just depends on the kind of soil. It is not every man who can build a stone drain; I have built stone drains with my own hands, but there is a great deal that I do not know about draining, and I would like this experimental farm to tell us all about it. Then, we in the west have lately been troubled a great deal with a little midge in the clover. We used to make large amounts of money from clover seed, which we sold for $7 or $8 a bushel; but of late years the midge has been destroying the seed. Might there not be an experiment in that direction to tell us how to prevent the operations of this midge? We have found out a little ourselves. All who have pastured their clover until about the 10th of June, and have then left it to go to seed, have raised a good crop of clover seed. That brings the seed just at the right time to miss the midge; but the men who cut the hay and then depend on getting a crop of clover seed miss it. There is another thing about which this experimental farm might do a great deal of good; that is the blight on fruit trees. Farmers have lost hundreds of thousands of dollars during the past five years by the loss of apple trees especially. I got a batch last year that cost me about $20. Last summer a man came along and wanted me to give him an order for some more, and I took him into my orchard and told him to look at these. First a little blackness started on the tree, and then it spread till nearly all the trees were killed; and I said: "It is of no use getting any more apple trees." He said: "These are going to be better," and at last I gave him an order. If this experimental farm would tell us what to wash that spot with when it first appears, and kill the insect or whatever it is, tens of thousands of dollars would be saved to the farmers. If the Minister will inaugurate colleges which will give us practical information of this kind without costing very much, then I will be well satisfied with experimental farms.

Mr. IRVINE. Any standard author on entomology will tell you that; you can get it for a couple of dollars.

Mr. FARROW. I understood that the hon. gentleman came from a country where they could not write, and where they signed their names with a cross. I was going to say——

An hon. MEMBER. Tell us about that apple tree.

Mr. FARROW. I agree with the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Irvine) that we have too many lawyers in this House. I think it would be better if we had a few more practical farmers that understood hard work, that understood what it is to earn their living by the sweat of their brow. It appears that the hon. member who has spoken of apple trees does not know much about farming. I suppose he would not care if the farmer lost all his trees so long as he got plenty of law suits. I do not think we have enough farmers in this House, but you are going to have more farmers here by-and-bye. I will tell you why. The farmers are beginning to say that they are just as good as the lawyers and just as level-headed as the doctors. Another farmer says: Well, if I have not, my boys are coming that have. There are John and Charles, they have a pretty good common school education, they can do a little more than make a cross, they have been to a grammar school, and you will find these boys in these halls by-and-bye, and these farmers' sons will be able to cope with your lawyers, day in and day out. You will have more farmers in these halls than you have had in the past, depend upon it; but to the question. What we want is an experimental farm so that we may learn how to deal with a great many subjects about which we know nothing at present. Take the trouble we had last year from Ottawa to Sarnia and inland through the potato rot. It is my opinion that if we had had an experimental farm, we would have had a great deal of information as to planting this spring, and I am glad to see the Agricultural College of Guelph has issued some instructions which, if the farmers apply them, will make them comparatively free of the potato rot this coming season. We want an experimental farm with reference to fertilisers. When the Agricultural Committee was sitting, one of its members told me that in the Province of Quebec they had been more humbugged about fertilisers than almost anything else by laying out large amounts for something that was utterly worthless. It has been so, undoubtedly, to a great extent all through Ontario, and we want an experimental farm to direct that. We also want an experimental farm to tell us the utility of farming implements. Suppose a man gets a bad self-binder, which costs him $210, suppose he gets a meanly constructed binder, why he is half ruined. Suppose he gets a miserable mower or reaper, he suffers great loss. Now the experimental farm ought to try these articles and tell the people which is worth buying, and if they would only do that hundreds of thousands of dollars would be saved to the farmers. It will also give us undoubtedly a great deal of accurate knowledge about the rotation of crops. If there is anything that people are ignorant about more than anything else, it is the rotation of crops. There is very little system in Ontario as to what they shall sow. A man sows wheat this year and right away sows wheat again. That ought not to be so, but if he was correctly informed about the rotation of crops it would be of great advantage to him. I think an experimental farm in Manitoba and the North-West would do a vast amount of good. I think on the whole these experimental farms would be of great advantage to the country, and I intend to give them now my hearty support; but depend upon this that if they go on spending money, doing no good from year to year, I will be down upon them.

Mr. SPROULE. At this late hour of the night, I feel reluctant to detain the House, but the importance of this question is the only excuse I offer for saying a few words on this subject. We are in an enlightened age, in an age in which it has been demonstrated knowledge is advancing very rapidly, and those who attain to the highest standard of knowledge receive the largest return for their labor. It is said that the professional man who is able to reach the highest rung in the ladder is always sure to succeed no matter where he may settle, and to receive the largest return. This is the case also with every class of men, with every community, and with every country. Those who have attained the most advanced intelligence are the most likely to succeed in life. For the last few years there has been a strong agitation going on all over the world with reference to what may be done for the advancement of that very large class of people represented by the agriculturists of the country. It is not alone in the Dominion this question is attracting public attention. It is not alone in the United States that the great scientists of the age are giving attention in this direction, because we find European countries are directing their attention largely towards the matter. It is only within the last few years it has obtained its importance; it is scarcely more than eight or ten years ago, at the latest, since the principle of experimental farms in the different countries of Europe was established as one of the important necessities of the age, and, perhaps, on an average, it is not more than six years since the first farm was established on the continent of America. To-day we find the subject is considered of so much importance that almost every State in the Union is possessed of an experimental farm. I have a list of a large number of States that have adopted this system of diffusing a better knowledge amongst the agriculturalists. They are Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Georgia, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Oregon, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, South Carolina, Ohio, Michigan, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, Wisconsin. All of these States have adopted the system of advancing the intelligence of agriculturists; and not alone in America, but in Europe also the attention of agriculturists has been directed to this question. In England these experimental stations have been established eight or ten years; in France, Germany, Belgium, Russia, China, and in various other countries, they are established; and in Ontario, which may be called one of the first Provinces, an agricultural college was, I am happy to say, first introduced by the Minister of Agriculture who to-day is moving in the same direction, but only in a wider field—the Dominion. The hon. Minister who is to-day initiating the system here, is entitled to the thanks and congratulations of the agriculturists for endeavoring to promote this system to-day. When he introduced it into Ontario some years ago, he was cried down in the country, but to-day the mass of the people of Ontario will admit there is great good being done in the Province by that establishment. And, while I believe that years of labor have been practically wasted, that a great deal of time that might have been turned to useful advantage has been wasted in connection with that institution, I am glad to find that the advanced intelligence of the present day has developed a system that is very much in harmony with the system which is intended to be inaugurated in connection with this work, and a system which I believe will prove of incalculable benefit to the agriculturists of Ontario. While I am rather inclined to the opinion that these experimental stations or agricultural colleges would be better suited as provincial institutions, still I am far from believing that a great good cannot be accomplished and a wider range taken by a Dominion institution than by provincial ones. I am led to believe that, while provincial institutions may, in their limited capacity, do good in the localities where they are situated, I believe that knowledge emanating from a central authority like the capital of the Dominion of Canada can be more extensively circulated and can do a good in proportion to the size of the country that is quite equal to the good which is being accomplished by the provincial institutions. By looking over the history of the various experimental farms which have been established in other countries, which is given in this report laid upon the Table and which is a very valuable and practical document, in which we have condensed information gathered not only on the continent of America but on the continent of Europe, we may gain information of a very valuable character which we may bring to bear on the pursuits of our people, and by which we may work out some of the difficult problems of life to the advantage of our agriculturists. That report tells us that the people of foreign countries, as well as our own, are spending their labor for what might be termed a half-return, that they are following agricultural pursuits, in a great number of cases, not intelligently but very much on the principle of the intelligence that was represented by the anecdote told by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Irvine), with an intelligence which is not even beyond, perhaps, the mark that is indicative of what may be called from a literal standpoint, the lowest intelligence of man. I thought, when he referred to the granger who made the remark that the best agriculturist of his county was obliged to sign his name with a cross, he forgot to add that that very man, when he came before a committee here, in reference to the interest of the agriculturist, strongly advocated the establishment of agricultural colleges, believing it to be very important in the interests of the country that a more extensive knowledge of the better class should be diffused among the agriculturists. The history of the grangers of this country goes a long way to prove the importance of these institutions. The object of the grangers has been to acquire more extensive, practical and scientific knowledge in reference to the pursuits in which they are engaged. I am far from believing that it is essentially necessary to have a scientific knowledge in all cases for farming, but I believe that it is important to be possessed of at least a good rudimentary knowledge in reference to analytical chemistry, in reference to the nature and adaptability of different grains to different soils, in reference to the importance of manures and the kind of manures to be used, in reference to the necessity of a rotation of crops so as not to divest the soil of those elements which are the source of the crops, and in connection with that the importance of the grasses which may be used in order to yield the largest return and the kind of food which may be used in order to give the largest return to the stock raiser who is preparing his stock for foreign markets. The member for Carleton said what the agriculturists want to-day is a market for what they raise, not so much to know how to raise more. I wonder if this hon. gentleman knows anything of the experience of the farmers in his country, because I believe it is the same as the experience of the farmers in our country. We know that soil which a few years ago would yield twenty-five to thirty-five bushels an acre will not to-day yield more than ten or twelve. If a scientific knowledge can be brought into use so as to enable the agriculturist to improve his soil in such a way that it will return to its previous condition and again yield twenty-five bushels, can he not see that, although he sold that grain for 50 cents a bushel, it would yield as much as if he sold half the quantity at $1 a bushel? It is important that both these matters should be considered. While I believe the Government are doing everything they can to open up new and better markets for the agriculturists, I believe it is as important to diffuse a better knowledge, and enable every farmer to raise two bushels where to-day he is only raising one. As to the agricultural colleges, we have a pretty good knowledge of their uses and of the uses to which they may be turned in the interests of the agriculturists. It appears to me that the history of those institutions, not only in America but in European countries, the consensus of information which has been received proves that what is asked for by the agriculturists of this country to-day can be accomplished. Subjects have been brought before the farmers' institutes of Ontario, when the professors of the Agricultural Colleges mix up with them, and endeavor to give them an enlightened knowledge of their own pursuits. What were the important subjects brought up? The agriculturists said: We want to know the best kind of manures, so that we may not waste a year or two by putting on something which is practically useless. We want to know whether a rotation of crops is the best means of maintaining the virgin strength of the soil; we want to know whether the class of grain that we are sowing can be exchanged for others, which will yield better flour and a larger return. In some parts of our country, at least I know that, where better grains have been introduced, the experience has been of the best kind, and the parties who have introduced them, having fields alongside of each other, one with the improved quality of grain, and the other with the older quality, have been able to raise nearly double the number of bushels per acre, with the improved grain, that they could with the other. Is it not then important to endeavor to obtain these grains, and to ascertain, by experimental farms, which kind of grains is most needed? It is unfortunate that every step in knowledge to the agriculturist must mean a year's labor or a year's profit lost. If a farmer sows grain, which is not adapted to the soil and the climate, he must not only waste a year before receiving the intelligence which the experiment can give him, but he must also waste the labor of that year. In view of that, how important it is that these stations should be founded, and the experience gained by the few, and given out to the many, so as to economise the labor of the mass of the people, and economise their time, and put in their hands information of the most valuable character that can be turned to the best possible account. In connection with stock-raising, the same rule applies. We know that a very large percentage of farmers are wasting their time in relation to stock. They are raising stock which is not suited to the market in which they must sell, stock that requires a large amount of feeding, and yet when sold give no adequate return for the outlay. It is an acknowledged fact that it is just as easy to raise an animal that will sell for $50 as one that will sell for $30; and if the agriculturists can so improve their stock by means of the practical experience gained at a central point, we can easily understand the immense benefit that will accrue to the country. If they can sell their animals for 30 or 40 per cent. higher. I remember only two years ago there were professors devoting their attention to the dairy interest, and they gave it as their opinion that the butter produced in this country was depreciated at least one-fifth in value by reason of the improper methods taken in producing it. It was calculated, also, that the same rule would hold good in reference to cattle. Now, when we remember that the farm exports last year represented something like $35,000,000, a saving of one-fifth of that would represent $7,000,000 saved to the people. I think the Minister of Agriculture deserves the thanks of the people of this country for his efforts in favor of agriculture, and I am satisfied that his name is a sufficient guarantee that this agricultural farm will be conducted so successfully that the people will regret that the system had not been adopted earlier. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) appears never to be at home unless he can drag politics into the discussion of every question, and he endeavors to find fault with everything coming from the present Government. I am sorry that so many hon. gentlemen opposed to this Government, whilst admitting their desire to support a measure in the interests of the agriculturist, still endeavor to throw cold water on this scheme, while they admit in the same breath that great good is going to be accomplished by it. If those hon. gentlemen would only show a greater desire to work in harmony with the Government in its efforts to advance the interests of the farming community, I think their constituents would feel more grateful to them. There is not a single page in this report of the Minister of Agriculture that is not full of information that gives the strongest assurance that the effect of the proposed institution will be of great practical benefit. We find that one of these farms in England was established by Sir J. B. Lawes, and in reference to fertilisers he says that by nineteen repeated applications the exact effect of every fertiliser was obtained, and a most instructive series of specimens secured. Speaking in reference to grain, he says the unmanured examples show about half the size and weight of the manured. Now if this applies to grain, it applies with equal force to every line represented in the pursuits of the agriculturist. He says that the relative yield was about twice as much by keeping the ground cultivated, manured, and by a rotation of crops. Now this system could be practised in this proposed establishment, and the farmers could ascertain how to get the most value from their crops. I have no doubt at all that the country will receive greater benefit from this institution than we anticipate, and that in the future the name of the Minister of Agriculture, who has to-day inaugurated this scheme, will be handed down in history through the ages as one of the great benefactors of the people of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. IRVINE. I rise to a personal explanation. I understood by the hon. member who followed me that he stated that the man who made his cross was a New Brunswicker. I did not intend any offence toward any Province in what I said. What I said was that a Dominion granger from Ontario made a statement before the committee, upon whose report the action of the Government is based in this instance, that the most successful farmer he ever met in his life was a gentleman who signed his name with a cross. If I said any Province, I did not mean it.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I have considerable sympathy with you to-night, Mr. Speaker, if you know anything of farming, because it reminds me a good deal of the old times when we used to have an election campaign, and people from the city came down to talk to us in the country. We were then assured that farming was an important interest, that the horny-handed sons of toil were the back-bone of the country, that they could not do anything without them, that they bore the burdens, and that sort of thing. Those olden times came back to me, when we used to listen to the orations of those gentlemen who wanted our votes. I suppose farming is like other things in this House, it has got to have its innings. There is one thing we are certain of, that whether we get a successful experimental farm or not, we may make up our mind that so far as expense goes, we will have a thoroughly successful institution. I have not a bit of doubt but that after our friends have tried it, they will have the experience of other States and Provinces with reference to experimental farming, and we will find out that we have got a tolerably costly thing, and that it is much easier to start an institution than to make it successful afterwards. We have heard a few bitter criticisms on the operation of the Ontario Agricultural College and experimental farm this evening, and I did think, when I heard the hon. member for Essex delivering his bitter diatribes, against the management of that college, that if he had been as familiar with it as I was, perhaps he would have moderated his statements a little with reference to the condition in which that farm is. We have been accustomed to just such attacks upon the management of that college throught the Province of Ontario for many years past. I believe, upon the whole, the college has been an advantage to the people of Ontario, and the best evidence of that is that it has been adopted as the example upon which this Government now propose to establish similar institutions in view of the time when they will present themselves to the electorate of this country and ask them for their vote. It occurred to me when heard some of these gentlemen that they had been present at some of the farmers' institutes held by the professors of that college, because some of their speeches sounded to me very like what I have heard on previous occasion in connection with these farmer's institutes; and as I said before, I think the best evidence that that college has been successful is the fact that these gentlemen now find it necessary to take an interest in the farmers and make a move in the same direction. An hon. gentleman said this evening that it was a serious ground of complaint to spend $20,000 a year in its annual administration and only succeed in earning $14,000, and that any farmer that pursued that policy would naturally become bankrupt. Well, I could not help thinking of the operations of one hon. gentleman here in administering one of our public Departments, which it seemed to me was a much worse position. It strikes me that if we were to foot up the receipts and expenditures we would find that the income of the Department of Railways had not been quite equal to the outlay, without looking at the original cost involved; and yet that hon. gentleman did not seem to see anything wrong there, although there was no pretense made that the Intercolonial or any of the other railways were being operated for the purpose of diffusing intelligence through the country, and at some future day we would be recouped in the general good conferred on the country. No, the hon. gentleman seemed to forget that in operating such an institution as that under discussion, experiments must necessarily be conducted at a certain amount of loss, because some of them must be unsuccessful; and the best test you can give to a great many plausible theories is to put them in practice, and see how they will work. I have one thing to say with respect to the experience to be gained from the history of agricultural colleges, not only in Ontario, but in the United States that should serve as a warning beacon to us in establishing a new Dominion institution. It is this: That if we undertake to equip a large and thoroughly furnished experimental farm, and a large agricultural college here, for the purpose of teaching farming as a scientific study, and demonstrate it in operation, we will realise a gigantic failure, in so far as the financial administration is concerned. I believe the history of the Royal Agricultural College of England will, to a large extent, apply to our college, if we start an institution of that class. If you reflect for a moment upon the extent, resources and varied position of the several Provinces and the fact that one central institution representing the whole Dominion will naturally attract the attention of everyone who looks at things from a theoretical standpoint, you will find the difficulties the same as those of which the hon. gentleman complained with respect to the Ontario model farm, that of attracting men from foreign countries and thus losing the labor that ought to be bestowed on our own people, and expending our resources in cultivating men who will not be farmers in our midst. That evil will apply in a tenfold degree to any institution that will be established in this centre of the Dominion with that object in view. There is this additional difficulty, that however thoroughly equipped and satisfactory a great many of the experiments may be, especially at this particular locality and particular climate, they will be utterly unavailing when carried into the more distant Provinces that form the Confederation. I believe the only successful way in which those things can be carried out is either by each Province conducting the experiments for itself, or if the Central Government will conduct the experiments, when they should be conducted on a thoroughly careful basis, in the various localities representing the different degrees of climate and conditions under which our agricultural population is placed in the various portions of the Dominion. It seems utterly preposterous to think for a moment that a series of experiments upon soil and climate at this central college would be of any material advantage to the farmers of the North-West Territories, of Manitoba or of the Province of British Columbia; and yet it is plain on the face of it that unless our central organisation is simply used for the purpose of being a centre to direct well conducted experiments at those various outlying points, we will only expend a large amount of money and secure very unsatisfactory and barren results, and that an administration of that kind can only result in conspicuous failure and to be open to the charge of spending a very large sum of money without doing any benefit except to a few individuals in the immediate locality. The changes that have transpired in the mode in which agricultural operations are being carried on during the last few years make it imperative on any Government establishing a new institution of that kind to look well at the class of men placed in charge of it. I have no hesitation in saying that if you get men settled down into the old grooves and routines of an agricultural college, there will be a conspicuous failure. The history of the Agricultural College in Ontario has not been a history of unvaried and satisfactory success. It was only when the college came into the hands of energetical and practical as well as scientific men that it began to take hold of the agricultural population of the Province and became thoroughly useful for the purpose for which it was originally established. It is the easiest thing in the world to secure a large staff of professors and establish a certain round of expenditure, which will be presented very nicely rounded up in the annual reports, but which will present very unsatisfactory results when applied to the farmers and the farming operations of the country. It is desirable that we should take some steps in this matter, more especally with a view to securing for the great North-West, to which we look forward as being the future back-bone and centre of this Dominion, for that particular climate and particular condition of soil to which the production of this country are exposed seeds and plants that will be adapted to a severe climate and a short season in which to ripen, and unless those experiments are conducted on the spot and with a degree of care and attention that is somewhat rare, I fancy the school would only end in conspicious failure. While I hope for better things, yet at the same time I do not feel very enthusiastic over the proposition to establish an agricultural central college with various branches at this centre. I fear, unless more than average care is displayed, we will find that we have got a huge machine on which must be expended a large sum of money, and so far as the farmers are concerned the results will not be satisfactory.

Mr. CARLING. I think the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat is under a wrong impression in thinking that we propose to establish a huge agricultural college. It is not intended to establish a college at all. The intention is to establish an experimental farm and station, and make experiments without having a college as they have at Guelph. The Ontario Government has made a mistake, I think, in the very great expense incurred in carrying on the college and bringing young men to learn agriculture. It is not intended to do so at this experimental farm or experimental stations; but everyone who goes there will be paid his days' wages. But the idea is to make the experiments, and distribute the results throughout the country in the shape of bulletins, once a month or oftener if necessary. Now it has been stated here to-night by the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) and other gentlemen, who I do not think have any desire to mislead the people of this country, that every article that the farmer purchases or consumes is dearer now than it was some years ago. Now I think the House will bear with me for a few minutes if I state what I have ascertained to be the prices which are paid now and in 1878 for articles which the farmers and the mechanics use and consume. I have a letter here from the proprietor of the Grimsby agricultural works, in which he says:

"Machinery of all kinds, mowers, reapers, ploughs, cultivators, rakes, drills, &c., are fully 25 per cent. cheaper than ten years ago, but this does not mean that the manufacturer is losing it altogether. Expenses of selling are higher, but the improvements in manufacturing enable all these goods to be made much cheaper than formerly. Iron, steel, &c., are all considered to be down to bed rock prices, but labor is higher."

This is from a firm who carry on a large agricultural implement establishment in Grimsby. Then with regard to other goods, I have here a list of prices which were paid for dry goods in 1878 and the prices paid at the present time. These figures were furnished to me by Messrs. A. B. Powell & Co., of London, Ont., and are thoroughly reliable. Men's Canadian tweed suits which sold in 1878 for $10, now sell for $7; those at $12.54 in 1878 sell for $10 now; those at $18 in 1878, $12 now; men's overcoats that sold for $10.50 in 1878 sell for $7 now; $15 in 1878, $9 now. Men's all wool undershirts that sold for $1 in 1878 sell for 65 cents now; those that sold at $1.12 in 1878 sell for 75 cents now; at $1.25 in 1878, 90 cents now. Boys' all wool undershirts that sold for 65 cents in 1878, sell for 45 cents now; those that sold for 75 cents in 1878 sell for 50 cents now; those that sold for $1 in 1878 sell for 75 cents now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I rise to order. You called an hon. gentleman to order before for indulging in a most irrelevant discussion, as this appears to be.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think this refers to the experimental farm.

Mr. CARLING. Then I shall not go on. The hon. member for Wellington stated that all articles that the farmer consumes or uses were much higher in price now than they were some years ago.

Mr. IRVINE. Have you the price of wool?

Mr. CARLING. Perhaps I have, if the hon. gentleman will allow me to go on. If I have not the price of wool; I have the price of manufactured woollen goods. Wool is not consumed or used in its raw state.

Mr. KIRK. I would like to ask the Minister whether he intends that this model farm shall conduct experiments in live stock as well as in seed and grain.

Mr. CARLING. That is the intention.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee).

On section 1,

Mr. CARLING. Now, if I am in order, I will continue the prices I was about to give.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have not the slightest objection, except that it is now twelve o'clock, and if the hon. gentleman goes on there will be a long discussion. Besides, it has already been ruled out of order.

Mr. CARLING. It will not take me more than a few minutes. Boys' union underwear that sold in 1878 for 35 cents now sells for 20; that which sold for 50 cents in 1878 now sells for 35.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think this is relevant to the question before the Committee.

Resolution concurred in.

Mr. CARLING introduced Bill (No. 124) relating to experimental farm stations.

Bill read the first time.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 117) to amend an Act to authorise the granting of subsidies in land to certain railway companies.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). This is simply to authorise the giving of subsidies in block instead of in alternate sections. I think everybody is in favor of it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I have not read the Bill but I was under the impression that it was perhaps making a change with reference to all the lands in alternate townships, but I understand not. This is for future grants.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes, and there is one given to the Galt Railway Company in townships, subject to the action of Parliament.

On section 2,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). This is merely to include the statutory allowance for roads. It is necessary to do that when the grant is made in blocks.

Bill reported.

SALARY OF A JUDGE.

Mr. THOMPSON moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions respecting the salary of an additional judge of the Chancery division of the High Court of Justice for Ontario (page 877).

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose this is in accordance with a demand of the Ontario Legislature?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes. In the Session of 1885 the Legislature passed an Act reducing the number of judges of the court of appeal, and providing that the next appointment should be to the chancery division instead. The salary in the estimates is transferred from the appeal court to the chancery division.

Mr. McCARTHY. A matter that perhaps can be spoken of later is the question of the salaries of the judges. This question was brought up two Sessions ago, and the Government promised that it would be dealt with, I think before this Session. I do not intend to do more to-night than simply to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the subject. I may bring it up again at a future stage.

Resolution concurred in.

Mr. THOMPSON introduced Bill (No. 125) to amend the law relating to the salaries of certain judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature of Ontario.

Bill read the first time.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 12.20 a.m., Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 3rd May, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CROWN CASES RESERVED.

Mr. THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 126) to amend the law respecting Crown cases reserved. He said: What is known as the Speedy Trials Act, applying to three or four Provinces of this Dominion, contains a provision that in the Province of Ontario the county judge who exercises the jurisdiction conferred by that Act, may state a case for the opinion of the court in the nature of a Crown case reserved, and may so obtain a review of the legal questions arising on the trial. A similar provision exists with regard to certain judges in the Province of Quebec who exercise the jurisdiction under that Act; but it is desired in the Province of Quebec that the right of so stating a case should be extended to other judges, and this Bill provides that all judges who exercise the authority conferred by that Act shall have power to state such a case.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BOUNDARIES OF KEEWATIN.

Mr. THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 127) to extend the boundaries of the district of Keewatin, and to amend the law respecting such district. He said: The object of the Bill is to provide a system of law in the territories of Canada, outside of the territories known as the North-West Territories and Keewatin, by extending the district of Keewatin so as to include the territories not at present included.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DEBTS OF ONTARIO AND QUEBEC.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance if he is able to state whether any progress has been made with respect to the debts of Ontario and Quebec. The hon. gentleman knows that for a couple of years we have been in constant expectations of having that matter settled. I think there have been several conferences, either under him or under his predecessor, with respect to the relative claims of Ontario and Quebec. I should be glad to know how the matter stands, and whether the hon. Minister has, or expects to have, any communication to make to the House about it within a week or two.

Mr. McLELAN. I think that before my predecessor left office the matter was narrowed down to one or two points that remained unsettled, and before the House rises it is probable that these may be in a shape for settlement.

NORTH-WEST CENTRAL RAILWAY.

Mr. BEATY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 17) to amend the Act respecting the North-West Central Railway Company.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Before that motion is adopted I should like to offer a few remarks to the House. I think it is due, Sir, that a statement should be made by me in regard to this matter, which has been more or less commented upon by the public press of the country and by public men. I did not know that the measure was coming up to-day until a very few moments ago; but although somewhat surprised at its coming up so soon after its passage through the Committee on Railways and Canals, I think it my duty to state that I believe this Bill should not be committed to a committee of the House, and should not have a passage through this House. The statement has been made, which hon. members are perfectly familiar with, that this Bill is merely a re enactment of the old Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway charter, which lapsed by effluxion of time. The North-West Central Railway Bill was passed through this House in the Session of 1884, and became law. I introduced the Bill to this House and promoted it in committee. I may say it was the first railway Bill that ever I did promote, and I think it will be the last that I will promote for a railway company in which I am a director while being a member of this House. I was not aware, Sir, when I promoted this Bill, nor am I yet aware, but that it was the general custom of members of Parliament to be interested in railway charters if they pleased, just as if they were not members of Parliament; and believing that, I went into this matter the same as though I were not a member of Parliament. I never had a thought that it would be commented upon unfavorably, that because I was a member of Parliament I should not be one of the charterers, and for a very good reason—because there is not a Session of this House in which more or less Bills are not passed, of which members of the House are promoters as members of the company chartered. Before this measure was introduced by me, the member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) came to me and asked me to join him in introducing the Bill, to promote the Bill, to introduce it, and to manage it through the House and the committee; and there were certain conditions which he said would follow—that both of us were to be mutually interested in the Bill—in its franchises, and in everything that pertained to it. As I say, I was quite unsophisticated in reference to railway charters, and hardly knew what the duties were. All I knew was that I was to be equally interested with him in whatever the undertaking might bring forth. After the Bill was passed, and became law, the member for West Toronto went home. I remained here to obtain, if possible, 6,400 acres a mile, the amount granted to other railways in like manner situated. I remained here, at the instigation of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty), for some weeks after the Session of 1884 had prorogued. After that the member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) went to England to get the money for the road. He came back and stated that there was no doubt he had the money to build the road. During the Session of 1885 he went to New York, and on his return said he had found some parties there to build the road. I interrogated him, and then went to New York on the Friday, arriving back on the Monday following, and I found that the company in New York was a myth. I forget their names—Herbert, I think, was one—but, at all events, they were men of straw. They were brokers in a certain way, but they had no money, and could not build the road. They said, however, they hoped to sell the bonds in England. I told the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) that had he told me the truth I would not have gone to New York. There were other contractors here, Canadian contractors, who wanted to build the road, and I was anxious they should have the contract; but the member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty), for some reasons or other, which I knew not then but which I have had since developed, would not hold any conversation with me, and avoided me. I then, in my seat here, wrote him a letter, a copy of which I did not keep. I wrote it hastily, and the main facts of the agreement between us are in that letter, namely, that after $50,000, if the road could be made to pay that, was divided among the other directors, whatever franchises were left we were to be mutually interested in. I did not know that there would be $5 or $1 left, but whatever was left we were to be mutually interested in. That letter he never replied to. I wrote him another asking him to reply to the first, but he did not reply, and I found out afterwards that he had taken those letters, while ostensibly a member of the same party to which I belong—if I belong to any party—and showed them to members of the party opposed to him, if he belongs to the Conservative party; I found that, without being accosted by the reporters of the Reform press, he interviewed them, and made statements to them with regard to his connection and mine with the road. He even went so far as, when I came into the building and he was talking to a Mr. McNee, the reporter of the Winnipeg Free Press, to ask Mr. McNee to come out into the corridors, as he did not wish to talk before me. After having filled the ears of the members of the Opposition and the correspondents of the Reform press, he went to New York and attempted to make another agreement. When this Session opened, the member for West Toronto introduced a Bill to amend the North-West Central Railway Act. I looked at the Bill, and found that all the guards, all the checks, ensuring payment to the workmen upon the road, the old Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway, of which this was a revival, had been left out I found that, in so many words—and I have the Bill here—he introduced his measure, leaving out those clauses, without which the North-West Central Railway Act would not have passed in 1884. When that Bill came before the Committee of Railways and Canals I objected to it, and in the course of my objection I made, in substance, the statements which I have just made in the beginning of the few remarks I am addressing to the House. The committee at once, almost unanimously —I think quite so, with the exception of the member for West Toronto and two or three of his co-directors—struck out all these objectionable clauses, and left the Bill merely an extension of time; but then they told the member for West Toronto that they would give him certain time to produce evidence of his ability to build the road. The committee adjourned, and when they met again the member for West Toronto could not show any ability to build the road, but said he expected the papers that night, and asked the committee to be kind enough to adjourn again. The committee adjourned for a week, and I think there was another adjournment, besides, to give him time. There were three adjournments altogether, and when the committee met last Friday, they met for the purpose of enabling the member for West Toronto to show his ability to build the road, because the statements made during the meetings of the committee at different times seemed to me to indicate the feeling of the whole committee that the present promoters of that charter, notably the member for West Toronto, as its president, should not be allowed to go on. That was the unanimous feeling of the committee, but when we met last Friday we were informed that it was determined this Bill should pass, extending the time, and if the promoters did not show their ability to build the road by the first of June next, when the proclamation would issue, bringing into effect the charter, the Government would take upon themselves the responsibility of adopting such measures as would ensure the building of the road. That was certainly not what the committee expected. I am sure I was never more surprised in my life than when that announcement was made, because I thought we had been adjourning from time to time to give the member for West Toronto an opportunity to show that he was able to build this road. However, when it came to this announcement, which was an entirely different matter altogether, the member for West Toronto sat there and never opened his lips. The remarks were all made by the hon. Minister of Interior in the favor of the member for West Toronto, and perhaps some other hon. gentleman made remarks as to the position of members of Parliament; but the Minister of the Interior made the defence. Now, during those meetings of the committee, that had been adjourned from time to time, to which I alluded, I made the statement, as I told you, at the first meeting of the committee, that we were mutually interested in the road. The member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) got up and denied it in toto; he said there was not a word of truth in the statement. Well, I said, I have your letters—I had one which I had not handed over—and I have given them to the hon. the Minister of Finance; I gave them to him last summer, and I said they will prove my statement. I was there in the presence of my peers, I was there in the presence of almost the whole Parliament—160 members formed that committee—and, having made the statement that I did and having it denied by the member for West Toronto, I found myself uncorroborated; and when I made the statement that the Minister of Finance had letters which would prove it, I was asked to produce those letters. I wrote to the Minister of Finance and asked him to produce them. The Minister of Finance replied what has been in the papers, but, as it was done before a committee, of course it was not taken down in the Hansard. The Minister of Finance replied to me that he could not find my letters, that he had mislaid them in shifting his office from the Ministry of Marine and Fisheries, but that the impression made upon his mind by reading the letters, which he had done, was that the member for West Toronto and myself were mutually interested in the road and all connected therewith. Therefore, I was enabled, although my letters were not forthcoming by no fault of mine, to prove from the Finance Minister of Canada, my statement made before that committee and most solemnly and positively denied by the member for West Toronto in the presence of the chairman of the committee, in the presence of the leader of the Opposition, in the presence of every member of that committee—and it was filled to overflowing—notwithstanding his denial. After another adjournment, I stated to that committee that I had a letter to show that the member for West Toronto had demanded as his share of the profit in building that read, from a contractor whom he wished to undertake the work, the modest sum of $675,000. I read that letter. That was denied, as my statement had been denied to which I have alluded as corroborated by the Finance Minister. At a subsequent meeting I read a letter from another man whose name I forget now, saying he was present when the member for West Toronto saw the man to whom I have referred as writing the first letter, and that he heard the member for West Toronto demand that as the modest sum he wanted for what he called "the boy." That was also denied. Now I have in my hand another piece of evidence of the member for West Toronto endeavoring to sell this charter, for it is nothing but that. There was no honest attempt made to build one foot of this road. There was not an honest attempt to put a theodolite on the road, to take a measurement, to take a level, to do anything, to go out there even, as I understand, to put a foot on the road, but merely to hawk the road, not from Dan to Beersheba, which were the old Palestine distances, but from America to the continent of Europe, to hawk it about; and had there been an honest attempt, and had there been a spade stuck in the ground in order to build the road, or anything given excepting wind, which always was given, I would never have been heard from in regard to this Bill, we never would have had this Bill introduced into this House to amend the North-West Central Railway Company's charter. We might have had one for an extension, but we would not have had one with the obnoxious clauses to which I have referred, and which the committee at once unanimously struck out. I say this was a charter selling, and nothing else, and no honest attempt to build the road. Here is a copy of an agreement which I shall read in support of the contention I make. It is signed

"James Beaty, President N.-W. C. Ry. Co," and dated Toronto, 17th October, 1885:

"The undersigned, president of the North-West Central Railway Company, duly authorised by the board of directors, do hereby declare that I will let the contract to Alexander Macdonald, to build the line from Brandon to Battleford, in accordance with the Acts and Orders in Council on the following terms, and on the condition hereafter mentioned. These terms are as follows:—

"1st. That Macdonald will get bonds to the value of $25,000 per mile, one quarter of the company's capital stock, bonuses and town sites.

"2nd. That the bonds for each one hundred miles be deposited in advance of construction into a bank to be named by him, to be sold by English friends of his, and replaced in the bank by the cash realised by their sale, which shall be held by the bank and paid out only on the engineer's certificates as the work is done and the material furnished; the stock to be transferred when the first fifty miles is completed, the bonuses as they are acquired and the town sites as they are located.

"3rd. That Macdonald will allow at the rate of $1,600 per mile to be deducted each monthly estimate, which will be paid over by the bank to the company, and will pay one quarter of the company's old indebtedness for work done on the old grade. Macdonald will pay for working up bonuses all places but Brandon. He will also locate and pay for laying out the town sites. Macdonald will furnish a bank guarantee for the interest on the whole of the bonds for two years from the date of their issue.

"The condition above mentioned is that Macdonald will prove soon that he has money deposited to begin the work and grade this fall twenty-three miles, that is to say, from Brandon to Rapid City. On that condition, I will let the contract to Macdonald, as aforesaid."

Now, I stated before the committee that I had letters to prove that the member for West Toronto, and president of this company, Mr. Beaty, wanted the sum of $675,000—$1,500 per mile—which he denied, although there were two letters, both saying the writers were prepared to swear to the truth of their assertions; but this document, signed by the member for West Toronto's own hand, says that Macdonald will allow at the rate of $1,600 per mile, to be deducted from each monthly estimate, which will be paid over by the bank to the company, and will pay one-quarter of the company's old indebtedness for work done. But Macdonald will also provide for working up bonuses, and will furnish a bank guarantee for the interest on the bonds. Macdonald is to furnish the interest for two years on the bonds, in addition to giving $1,600 per mile. Now, who owned most of the stock of this company? The member for West Toronto. Before the committee, at our first meeting, while he was in the mood of being loquacious, and before he had become suddenly silent and allowed other people to do his work for him, he confessed that he had $386,000 of the stock, upon which 10 per cent was paid, and he had never paid a dollar himself. I stated to him then that I believed it could be proved—at least, I told him that I wanted his denial of it—that he had sold thousands of dollars worth of the old stock, at what figures I did not know, had put the proceeds in his pocket, and had travelled around the country and lived on it. I have had no denial, and this House has had no denial, of that statement up to this hour. Now, Sir, I say that in presence of these facts, I think the committee took an extraordinary course when they passed this Bill. It was very easy to charter another company; notice had been given, and had passed through the Standing Orders Committee, and a Bill could have been brought into the House and passed in an hour, figuratively speaking, giving to an entirely distinct and new company, after these revelations had been made, power to build this road; but that had not been done, for what reasons I do not know. The committee changed its tune all of a sudden, and those who affected to be shocked and revolted at the statements made, were the first to jump on their feet and say: "Let us pass the Bill." What had occurred, Sir, between the first meeting, when they struck out those objectionable clauses, and only allowed the extension to stand? If the president could not show his ability to build the road—what had occurred from that first meeting up to last Friday, to make the committee change its base in that manner? Who had done it? What occult influence was there? I stated, and I state now, that I held not a word of communication with members of the Government in regard to it, I did not know what they were going to do, and I was certainly surprised when I found what was being done. My name, of course, has been used in connection with this matter from different standpoints. I know to-day of no wrong act I have done in connection with this matter. I did not know then, I do not know now, what profits were to be had. I never attempted to sell the charter; I never attempted to hawk it about. My intention was to have the road built, after $50,000 were got out of it to give to the directors. But that was in 1884. I knew nothing of what was in it. I never knew until lately of the president attempting to hawk that charter about and attempting to sell it, as it has been proved that he did. Therefore it comes down to this fact that I, as a member of Parliament, was in a railway charter. Well, Sir, I have had noble precedents before me; this House was teeming with them, and I do not think I should be made the scapegoat for what hundreds have done. Therefore, I cannot see in what respect I am blameable in regard to this matter. It may be, Sir, that I did very wrong when this Bill, without the slightest notice, was brought up in the committee, and when I had been struck off the board by this mighty magician of railways, when he had put a younger man, a more influential and abler man in my place, without either of them saying, by your leave, Sir. When they had done that, of course, I suppose I did a grievous wrong, a heinous and unpardonable sin, when I dared to assert in committee that the Bill should not pass, first, because of its objectionable clauses, and secondly, owing to the personal conduct of the president of the road. I succeeded in my first demand that the objectionable clauses should not pass. In the second, it is true that I succeeded for a while; the scales remained pretty evenly balanced for some time, and all at once, Sir, I kicked the beam and down went the president, outweighing me. All right; he outweighed me, what weights were used, how I was handicapped, and what false weights were put in, I do not know; but I did not have a fair race; I know that. Now, Sir, I say that it was obligatory upon me to make this statement. It has been charged, again, that a free grant was given to this road, and I cannot see, for the life of me, any objection to that. I quite agree with the Minister of Interior in that respect, because I want to deal fairly in this matter, and I think that any attempt to make capital out of the assertion that a free grant was got by members using undue influence, cannot be substantiated in this case, and I will tell you why. Members on both sides of this House, and the press throughout the country on both sides of politics, demanded that a free grant should be given to this road. That is undeniable, and it is too late, after all that had been done before a free grant was given, for any person in this House, or outside of it, to say that undue influence was exercised with the Government in getting a free grant. That is not the trouble with this charter; it is what was done after the free grant was given and the object of getting a free grant. Allow me to read, in support of my contention, from the Winnipeg Free Press of 9th October, 1884. Everybody knows that that paper is one of the most pronounced Reform papers in the country, and here is what it says in an editorial:

"BRANCH LINES AT LAST.

"An Ottawa telegram states that 'the scheme' proposed by Sir David Macpherson to give free grants of lands to North-West Railways has been submitted to the Cabinet, who approve of it.

"We congratulate the Cabinet on the good judgment they have displayed in approving of the proposal submitted to them by Sir David. We also congratulate Sir David on his ability to perceive and his willingness to be guided by good advice.

"This scheme for aiding branch railways which, as presented by Sir David, has so commended itself to the Government that they have determined to act upon it, was first proposed by the Free Press last winter.

"It also received the endorsation of the Winnipeg Board of Trade."

So a free grant was demanded by that staunch Reform paper and its friends. I have further evidence. The Globe of September 12th, 1884, says in a leading editorial :

"BRANCH LINES IN THE NORTH-WEST.

"Sir Richard Cartwright, speaking in Winnipeg some days ago, said, that the construction of branch railways is one of the means by which the depression in the North-West could be removed and its progress assured, and he suggested that the construction of such roads would be greatly encouraged by giving the 6,400 acres of land per mile free to the companies instead of charging them a dollar an acre, but on such conditions as would prevent the lands being locked up for speculation and would promote their settlement.

"This proposal found such favor with the people of the North-West that the Government suddenly felt themselves impelled almost irresistibly to accept the advice and follow the lead of the Liberal leaders in this as in so many other instances."

On October 8th, 1884, the Globe had another editorial article headed "Land grants to railways; the Globe has again triumphed." Again, on October 14th, the Globe had another leading article, all taking credit to the Opposition for obtaining free grants. As I told my friends in the House and out of it, the land grant to this railway was urged before it was given by the Reform members of the House, notably by the member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright), and the press supporting the Reform party, or at all events the leading papers. And nothing, therefore, can be made of this cry of undue influence. But what I complain of is the mode in which the charter was handled or attempted to be handled. The railway is an absolute necessity for the opening of that country. Not only that, but the settlers who have gone in, long expected it. Not only that, but men have given their time, their produce, their materials, who have spent themselves and their goods and their cattle in trying to build a few miles of railway, and have not received one dollar of compensation. Those people find it hard that they have not got the road when this free land grant was given, and as the member for South Huron properly said that it should not be given to be locked up, but for the purpose of building a railway. That was not done, but the charter was hawked about from Dan to Beersheba, as I said before, and the president did not attempt to build the road, but endeavored to secure two-thirds or over one-half of the stock, for which not one dollar had been paid, and to see how best he could put into the pockets of himself and his friends the money which should have gone towards building the railway. I have read letters before, and they are in the newspapers, to show that the great builder of railways, the member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty), did not believe in building the railway first and selling the bonds afterwards. I have a mass of documents here. I have the letters here which will prove the facts, if a committee is granted as I asked for in another place, to which I will not allude. Instead of attempting to build the road the president and his friends attempted to put the money in their pockets; they sought to sell the road, and when a member of a syndicate in New York wrote that the proper way—and he had been engaged in railways—was to first build a portion, say fifty miles, and afterwards sell some of the bonds, the member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) said: No, sell the bonds first and build the road afterwards. He had the president before his eye all the time; it was the "ego sum;" he took care of himself. From the day the road was chartered nothing has been done. It is an easy road to build. Fifty miles can be graded for $2,000 or $3,000. Yes, with the appliances they have for grading railways to-day; not the old style of scraper, but the new mode of constructing railways, by which they throw up grades almost by magic, as has been done by the Canadian Pacific Railway and other roads. I heard a member of a contracting firm, who were out of a job and who possessed some hundreds of horses and mules, say, last fall, that he wished the president would let him build fifty miles of road, and he would complete it before winter. So, if the company had commenced in the fall, fifty miles would have been graded and hope held out to the people of the district. That did not, however, suit the president. It suited him better to hawk round the charter and get possession of a majority of the stock, for which he never paid anything, and get power of attorney from other directors, and get his brother on the Board and his relatives there, and then come down here, not for the purpose of securing an extension of the charter so much, as for the purpose of shutting out the claims he would have to pay to honest laborers. But I feel that I have taken up the time of the House sufficiently long to give an exposition of this affair. I do not feel as if I had done a single wrong act in this matter; I am quite conscious of that myself. Any member of the House will do me a kindness in pointing out where I have overstepped the bounds of proper conduct in this matter. I do not at this moment know where I have done so. I promoted the road all I could. I was anxious the road should be built, and every one who knows me is aware that I am not very much of a sluggard; that I would not, if I attempted to build a railway, allow the work to lie idle for years and not put a spade into the ground; and that for the miserable ducats I might be able to put in my pocket I would not allow the people of the country to go without their road all this time. It has been said in a portion of the public press that I was an avaricious man, that I was seeking after unholy gains. Well, my answer to that is, that the people who know me best, the boys who have grown to manhood by my side in my own home, would laugh to scorn such a statement whether made by the hon. member for West Toronto or anyone else. If I err at all, perhaps, it is the other way. I did not feel, that after being treated in the manner I have been treated, I should sit idly by and see those clauses wiped out and the charter extended for the purpose of putting $675,000 into the pockets of the president and his relatives. I do not think the Bill should go into committee. I think it is the duty of the Government—I never advised them before in my life and I presume they will not take this advice, but it is wholesome and manly advice—after the revelations made, after the statements made in the committee by the president, and which were proved by one of his own colleagues to be untrue—after the statements made by other people, who say they are prepared to prove their statement on oath, that the charter was being bartered and sold—I say it is the Government's duty to take power themselves to build the road, and not extend the charter, for the purpose of giving the president of the road, although he is a supporter of the Government, and some of his friends who are supporters of the Government, a chance, not to build the road, but to see if they can sell the charter. For we have no criterion for the future but the history of the past, and if their conduct in the future is similar to what it has been in the past, they do not intend to build one foot of the road. I therefore say it would be the manly course for the Government not to allow this Bill to go into committee, but to take power to themselves to build the road, and, if necessary, allow all the facts connected with the matter to come out in evidence, and then act upon them. There is no necessity for this Bill being pressed forward into committee. It cannot become law until the Governor General has put his sign manual to it, and that will not be for some time. Why, then hurry it through; why not endeavor to get at the bottom of the whole thing and act in a manly and proper way in regard to it? The Minister of the Interior knows—I did not know until I saw the Mail that he said so much in Committee the other day—that this company came, that some of the directors came here and asked for an extension of the land grant after they had shown their inability to construct a mile of the road. After the charter had lapsed, because the company could not build the number of miles required in the charter, they came to Ottawa, and the Government extended the land grant while the charter was defunct. Why was it done to this company particularly? While they did that, there were two notices in the Canada Gazette by companies asking incorporation in order to build this very line of railway. Thus there was no necessity to charter this particular company in the interests of the people of that section; there was no necessity for extending the grant in the interests of those people; the only reason for extending the grant was in the interests of the then corporators of the North-West Central Railway Company, and I do not know what particular or special rights they possess, and the Government, I think, as stated before, should pause—I do not know whether they will or not—but I think they should pause after the statements I have made, after the statements I have been able to prove—statements every word of which I can prove to be correct, and I do say that this Bill should not go before the committee, or receive the sanction of this House.

Mr. MITCHELL. When this matter was up in the Railway Committee, I found, from the statements and developments which were elicited there, very much in substance as they have been stated by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth) to-day, that the character of the transaction was not such as it appears to me should have been sanctioned by a committee of this House. I heard the statements and the recriminations which were indulged in by the promoters of the Bill, and I called the attention of the Minister of the Cabinet who presided over that committee to the facts which had been brought out, and I stated to him that I thought, after the developments which had been elicited, that that committee ought not to pass the Bill without consideration, and I asked what action the Government would take upon it. Sir, as stated by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth), the committee adjourned on three different occasions to enable Mr. Beaty to show the bonâ fides of the men who were behind him to construct this road. It appeared that the discussion was going entirely on the bonâ fides of the people who were aiding Mr. Beaty in the construction of the road, but I called the attention of the Committee to the fact that there was a deeper question than all that in it; that there was behind this question of bonâ fides the question of the statements which had been made by the member for King's (Mr. Woodworth) and which were partially admitted by the member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty)—that these statements were such that they developed transactions of charter trading and speculation in relation to the public domain which I thought ought to be dealt with by the committee, and especially dealt with by the Government. Sir, I do not know what the opinion of members of this House may be about these transactions, but I know what my own is. Canada has a noble domain out in the North-West. She is proud of it; and for the last few Sessions of this Parliament, and during the preceding Parliament, we have been endeavoring so to develop that immense territory that we would in the first place attract immigration into it, and settle as much as we could and as rapidly as we could. In order to do that it has been a recognised fact that we must subsidise railways and endeavor by the construction of roads to do as they did in the Western States—to let the railways precede the settlement of the country, if possible. This Government, I say it to their credit, have done much to develop the settlement of Canada. They have gone beyond what, in the opinion of hon. gentlemen opposite, they ought to have done; they have surprised Europe as well as America by the success which has resulted in the promotion of railway development throughout this continent; and, Sir, having accomplished the great object of building a road from the Atlantic to the Pacific, it was their next desire—it was their duty, and they realised that duty and acted upon it—to endeavor by a system of subsidising local roads to open up and develop side connections with the great artery which they had already contracted to build, and that they proposed doing. Sir, as I understand it, some four or five years ago, when this Souris and Rocky Mountain charter was granted, the object was to develop a fertile portion of that North-West which it was claimed could not be settled satisfactorily unless it had railways. It was stated at that time, and it has been frequently stated since in connection with that scheme—of which this North-West road is the outcome and the successor—that there were a number of settlers in the portion of the country through which this road would go, to whom it was necessary—in order that they should compete on even terms with other settlers in the North-West who had a certain amount of railway communication—that they should have a railway through that portion of the country. The Government granted the necessary bonus to enable that road to be built. It got into the hands, in the first instance, of speculators, who, as I understand, did very little but speculate in the sale of the charter. Some work was done in grading the road, but the charter lapsed and a new company came in. I am not going to enter into the difficulties between the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth) and the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty). I divest myself entirely of the difficulties with which they have surrounded this matter. But, Sir, I take this stand: that when the Parliament of this country vote that a portion of the domain of the country shall be granted to the enormous extent that it has been granted in this case, for the purpose of developing that portion of the country, the spirit as well as the letter of the charter demands that if it is developed during the discussion, during the procedure, that the object of these men is charter selling—trading in charters—trading on the generosity of the Parliament of Canada, it is the duty of this Parliament to put their hands upon it, and say: We will not allow these men to come here for that charter. It is true they have failed to carry it out; they got the bonus granted by Order in Council conceding them 6,400 acres of land per mile for some 450 miles of territory—an enormous grant, a grant which, if land in that country is worth anything—and everybody who has travelled over it knows it to be very valuable—is worth a great deal of money; they got the Order in Council passed granting this land to that road, if within a certain time they were able to build the road. Since that time they have failed to build the road, and they have forfeited their charter. They have failed to build the road, and this Government has granted an extension of time for the land grant. We know we have had appeals from the Parliament of Manitoba. They have asked by three successive telegrams received by the chairman of the Railway Committee, Sir Hector Langevin, that no charter shall be granted except to persons who are competent to carry out the scheme and build the road. Sir, that touches upon the competency of the men who are behind the member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty). That hon. gentleman asked three successive adjournments of the Railway Committee, but he has entirely failed to bring any evidence before the Railway Committee to satisfy them that these men who were behind him were competent to build the road. Sir, the Minister who presided over the committee had to admit that fact, although the hon. gentleman was a friend of the Government, although his co-charterers were friends of the Government, although the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Riopel) and the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Billy)—the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) had retired from the charter much to his credit—but the hon. Premier for Manitoba, and I am told also the hon. Speaker of the Legislature of Manitoba, who sent these successive telegrams, had their names on that charter. Not one of these men has come forward and satisfied the committee or this House, or the Government whom they support, that they had anything of a bonâ fide character behind them which would warrant this House in confirming an extension of time, to enable them to go any further in disappointing the people of that section of the country in their just expectations. The object of granting these bonuses is not to enable men who happen to be friends of the Administration to go into the markets of Europe and America and discredit the Parliament of Canada, and decry and run down, as their acts do decry and run down, the conduct of the men who form this Parliament. The object of Parliament in granting charters and these munificent donations is to get railroads built; but the object of the gentlemen who are now asking for a renewal of this charter and an extension of the time for building this road, is to speculate in their charter, and to get out of it an enormous sum of money irrespective of whether the road is built or not. Sir, these are bold statements to make, but they are made on the evidence that came out before the committee; and they stand uncontradicted. Whether they are true or untrue I do not know; but, from the evidence that came out before the committee, from the statements of Mr. Woodworth as to letters which he had handed over to the Minister of Finance, then the Minister of Marine, and which letters were mislaid, I will say that the statements of Mr. Woodworth have been sustained, and the statements of Mr. Beaty have not been sustained. Sir, the Minister of Finance wrote a letter which was laid before that committee. Mr. Beaty had stated that Mr. Woodworth held no letters which gave him a right to a division of the spoils. Between these two gentlemen I am not going to interfere; that is a matter for themselves; but when they are washing this dirty linen before Parliament, it behooves us as the representatives of the people, to refuse to take upon ourselves the responsibility for transactions which this Parlitment ought not to sanction. The Minister of Finance, in a letter which was read before the Railway Committee, stated that the statement made by Mr. Woodworth, that Mr. Beaty was to divide the swag—excuse me for using the term—to divide the profits between them—was correct. If that is true, I am bound to accept the statement of the Minister of Finance, then I think this Parliament ought not to extend the charter to enable any further charter selling to be carried on at the expense of the credit and reputation and success of the enterprises of Canada in the North-West. These facts were brought out before the Railway Committee; and I did think, on the first occasion the committee sat, that the feeling of the committee was to reject the Bill and refuse to extend the charter. But, Sir, there were some influences; I will not say what they were; I will not even suggest to this House what I myself believe them to be; but I have my own convictions and conclusions about them, and I will say that much to my surprise it was announced at the last meeting of the Railway Committee, that the Government were determined to call on their friends to sustain them, and they did sustain them, in assuming the responsibility of these scandals, and they passed the Bill through the committee. Sir, I felt it to be my duty as an independent man in that committee, to endeavor to have an investigation. I felt that if an investigation were had, there would have been developments as to this matter that the public did not know of. I have myself some personal information, which is not in such a position that I can present it to this House, which leads me to believe that there are scandals behind this thing. I am not able to prove it; but I think if we had a committee of this House to investigate the matter, we would find that the gentlemen who voted against my resolution in the committee the other day would hesitate before they extend this charter and give the enormous bonus asked for. Does any man believe, when Mr. Beaty demands that he should have $600,000 profits for a railway in the North-West, and that a majority of the stock should be given to him, that that is a transaction which this House ought to sanction? After the grave statements that were made on the responsibility of a member of this House, statements sustained to a certain extent by written evidence, and after the correspondence with regard to a division of spoils that had taken place, was it the duty of the Government to bring to the aid of the promoters of this Bill their great majority, and all the forces they possess, in order to prevent us getting a committee of enquiry appointed? I moved before that a committee should be appointed to investigate this matter. Objection was taken to that motion by the hon. Minister of the Interior in a very able, and eloquent speech—and the hon. gentleman, when it suits his purpose, is always able and eloquent; but the main feature of the question, the immorality of the whole thing, was scarcely touched upon. Now, Sir, I feel that the Government have assumed the responsibility of these scandals; they have refused to enquire into them, and have determined to give their sanction to Mr. Beaty getting an extension of his charter; they have already passed an Order in Council to enable him to get his land grant. All these things place upon them the responsibility of this act. It is not yet too late, however, for them to retrace their steps, and I hope the leader of this House, the hon. Minister of Public Works, will take upon himself the responsibility, before this Bill goes a single further stage in this House, of moving for a committee of enquiry to look into the whole transaction, and if it is found to be a transaction which has anything shady in its character, which reflects discredit on Canada, which will retard the settlement of the North-West and prevent the construction of the road, this House should at once refuse to sanction it. I, at all events, have determined to wash my hands of the responsibility of this matter. I have framed a resolution, upon which I propose to divide this House, if I can get four other members to join me. It is this:

"That the House do not now go into committee on this Bill, but go into committee upon it this day three months."

That is my motion, if any one will second it—I have not asked anybody.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I will second it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would just like to ask the leader of this House to relieve himself of the responsibility, and say to his followers that the Government do not make this a party question, but leave it open to every one to vote as he likes; then he will see what a vote there will be.

Mr. BLAKE. I am simply amazed that we should not have heard from the Treasury benches on this question. I regard it as one of the most important questions that can possibly come before us. It is important in every aspect of it; it is important in the various aspects presented by the two hon. members who have spoken; and the decision we arrive at upon it to-day will very materially affect the credit and reputation of this Parliament and this country throughout the world at large, in so far as the world at large takes any interest in us and our concerns. This corporation is the continuation of an older one, and at a particular period of its existence, as it appears, it was thought expedient, in order that its interest might be promoted, that the complexion of its directorate should be to some extent changed. That was the period at which the hon. member for West Toronto obtained that share in the directorate which he has since retained. The corporation had not got on very fast or very far in the way of getting that assistance and recognition at the hands of the Government and of Parliament, which were thought important to its success. And being up to that time, as far as I could judge, a directorate of business men, it was converted very largely into a directorate of politicians and members of Parliament. Amongst the papers which were brought down to Parliament last Session, is an application to the Government to accord to this particular railway the privilege of acquiring lands at the price which was at that time stipulated as the price for railway grant lands. It will be remembered that in those days of boom and expansion, it was believed that a grant to a railway of railway lands at $1.06 per acre would be a very good thing for the railway as well as for the country, that it would afford a large margin of profit and of credit to the company, thus strengthening the basis for construction, in addition to the intrinsic merits of the enterprise itself. The Government took the power to give to such railways as they thought fit, this opportunity, by selling them lands at $1.06 an acre. An application was therefore then made by the political directorate of this railway, which I read in the committee, praying the Government to grant to this particular enterprise the usual grant of 6,400 acres a mile at the usual price of $1 per acre and 6 cents per acre for surveying, and that application was signed by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty), the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Riopel), the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Billy), the hon. member for King's, Nova Scotia (Mr. Woodworth), and Mr. Bunting, a gentleman who, though not at that time a member, had been for some years in Parliament, and who then occupied and occupies still a very important political position in the ranks of hon. gentlemen opposite as the manager or editor, or as having some very intimate relation with their chief organ in the Province of Ontario. It was also mentioned in that paper that Mr. Norquay, the Prime Minister of Manitoba, was another director. Thus, you see, the political directorate was composed largely of members of Parliament, and you will find that it was able to accomplish what had not been accomplished by the business men, who had, up to that time, been engaged in the enterprise. The Government looked favorably on their request, and granted them, by Order in Council, the privilege of purchasing this land. Very soon afterwards there came the rumor that the Government policy was about to be enlarged and that the Government were about to propose to Parliament free grants to railways instead of grants at a price. I need hardly say that that made the position of the corporators who had obtained Orders in Council, and of those who might expect them, infinitely better, provided the Government should decide to submit to the Legislature the names of their enterprises as worthy of this additional favor; because if it was possible to obtain a basis of credit upon the merits of an enterprise, with a grant of 6,400 acres a mile at $1 per acre, the credit was just $6,400 a mile better when the $1 was removed. Under these circumstances, the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty), in his capacity as president of the company, pressed the Government, as appears by papers which are upon the Table, pressed the Minister of the Interior and the First Minister, to recognise the rights or the claims of his company—I may call it his company, I think, in a very peculiar and special sense, under the circumstances—to be amongst those which should receive this favor that the Government proposed to ask the Legislature of this country to grant to railways, namely, 6,400 acres a mile free. Well, the Government came down with their policy to this Parliament, they brought down proposals in reference to several railway companies to give them free grants to the public domain, in furtherance of the new policy, but they did not bring down any grant for the North-West Central Company, and we can now partly conjecture the reasons why. But the pressure continued, and was, after the Session, successful. The hon. gentleman obtained an Order in Council for the free grant, subject, of course, to the ratification of Parliament, so that the Legislature was to be invited by the Government to agree to this. In the meantime, as appears very plainly, the hon. gentleman was not, any more than any of his political colleagues, a railway builder; he was not engaged in that trade or occupation. I believe that the hon. gentleman belongs to the same profession as that to which I belong, and that this is his vocation in life as a business man, but he certainly was not a railway builder, and no more, as far as I know, were his political colleagues. It has been made very plain that their purpose was to make money out of this contract, to sell this charter, and that the efforts which had been made in England, in New York, and elsewhere, had been efforts to sell this charter, at a price and under circumstances which might put large sums of money into the hands of the hon. gentleman, and certain sums of money, in all probability, into the hands of his colleagues. I think it would be very unfair, from any evidence that has appeared before the committee, or any facts that have come to my knowledge, to impute to the hon. gentleman the slightest design of selling his company. I do not think there is any evidence to show that he intended to get a private advantage to himself personally, and fraudulently to represent to his co-directors that he had sold the charter less advantageously that he did, or made an arrangement less advantageous than that which he really did make.

Mr. BEATY. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAKE. I state that, because I heard the hon. gentleman repudiate in the committee, and repudiate it, I thought, unnecessarily, because I had not heard him accused of it. But since he did repudiate it, I at once say I have heard nothing to justify such a charge, if one were made. The hon. gentleman's position, in fact, was so fortunate, as he has declared in committee, that it was hardly to be expected he would propose a private advantage to himself, if that could be consistent with honor and honesty, which considerations, I have no doubt, although we not altogether agree about what those principles require, would have prevented the hon. gentleman taking such a course. It appears that out of $750,000 of stock, he is the holder of $368,000 worth, which, he stated to the committee, on my declaring I thought there was some dispute as to his holding part of it on account of others, he held entirely himself. He therefore was the holder, according to his own account, of more than one-half the whole stock, and, according to the information, the inaccurate information, it seems, I had received, the holder, not of so large, but still of a very enormous proportion of it. You see, therefore, if he could make a very handsome bargain by which the charter could be sold, the larger proportion of the profits would go into his pocket, without the necessity for his resorting to any such unworthy practice between himself and his co-directors, as that which he very properly repudiated, if he supposed any one charged him with it. If, therefore, an ultimate gain of $750,000 were made out of the transaction, the hon. gentleman would have become hereafter tolerably independent of the electors of West Toronto, with his share, whatever that might be. Now, here is the case which we have to consider: Whether it is to the credit and respectability of the Legislature and of this country, that such relations, when they come up, when they are made apparent between members of Parliament and the Executive, shall be countenanced by the Legislature, shall be approved of, shall be ratified, by our granting that vitality to this charter which but for our act it cannot have. We are called upon to say whether we will give it life, and, if it be unworthy to have that life, then we ought not to give it that life which is asked. I ask you if it is consistent with the independence and respectability of this Legislature that the practice should grow up of these enterprises being taken up by members of Parliament who are not concerned in them in their profession or walk in life at all, taken up as the intermediaries between the Executive of the country and the Parliament of the country in order to procure grants of money or of land, public advantages, the larger share of which will in all probability go into their own pockets. That is the first question we have to answer. I ask any sensible and candid man, what degree of independence can be expected of a member of Parliament who is suing and soliciting, first the Administration of the day, and afterwards the Parliament of the day, to make a grant of money or of land, tens of thousands or hundreds of thousands of dollars of which he expects practically to pocket if he is successful. He expects to place himself in a position in which he will be enriched by means of the greater degree of strength and availability which is to belong to the enterprise by virtue of the public domain. Now, you find this matter before us in this plain example. You find it a case in which it is impossible for any sensible person, who does not impute to members of Parliament a moral stature altogether different from that which they would have if they were not in this House, to say that their independence of character here can consist with their being allowed to assume unrebuked and approved of by this House such relations to the Executive and to the Legislature of the country. What degree of independence can the man have who knows that, if he stands up and opposes the Government upon any public question, the Government, which holds in the hollow of its hand the question whether it will make the grant or will submit it to Parliament, without which it cannot be made, will turn round and say: We support our supporters? What independence can you expect if these relations are allowed to grow up between members of Parliament and the Government? I was quite rejoiced to hear the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth) open his observations by saying that, after the developments which had been made in this case, he felt disposed to come to the conclusion that he, at any rate, would not be any longer a promoter of railway enterprises in this Parliament. I believe that was a wise and just view of the hon. gentleman's. I admit with him that the practice has become largely common. It has been objected to on this side of the House; it has been objected to by us in the country; we have pointed out what the fruits would probably be, and the hon. gentleman now perceives that it is at any rate liable to abuse. I go further and say it has been shamefully abused, and I say it will be in the most marked manner shamefully abused if we agree to grant this Bill under the circumstances which have here been developed. Now, what good will we do the country if we consecrate this principle of members of Parliament having to do with grants through the Executive of money or of lands out of which they may personally profit? We will do a great evil. What good will we do the country if we approve, adverting to the particular ground that the member for King's took, of the principle of charter selling anyway? I say it is a wrong principle. I fully supposed, after the hon. member for West Toronto declared to us that he was prepared, or rather would be prepared, to lay before us the proof of ability to construct, that we were going to have had the opportunity of seeing what that proof was. I thought it was for that we were waiting. We were told we were to have it; we adjourned twice for it, and we were told it had been actually despatched prior to the last adjournment and would be received in a day or two. We gave a long time in order that we might be quite certain that the proof would be here. I say we have no right, irrespective of any other consideration, to grant charters to people in order that they may speculate in them. It is on the presumption that they are persons prepared to go on with the building of the road that we grant them. In this case, the hon. member for West Toronto has $386,000 of this stock upon which 10 per cent. has been paid by some body else, and he does not pretend that it is proposed to call up the stock or to put a dollar in that way into the enterprise. The proposition is to sell the charter, not merely in order to build the road, but in order to make something good out of it for the company of which he forms so large a part. Now, if there was anything to be made by the stockholders, it ought to be made out of the stock, by reason of the substantial character of the enterprise, after the road had been built on the cheapest and best terms on which the road could be built. It is said to be quite a cheap road to build. The evidences of that are before Parliament. They are contained in statements which the hon. gentleman himself submitted to the Government, and which have been laid on the Table of the House, from which it appears that the road ought not to cost more than $15,000 a mile to build. It is through a settled country, a country so very largely settled for the first 100 or 150 miles that the promoters say its operation will, from the very beginning, be profitable from the local trade. I have before said, and I repeat, it is of the last consequence to the future of the North West that we should take care that the country is not burdened unnecessarily by having to pay tolls upon too high a capital account for the construction of its branch railways. That would be a public and permanent burden, and, when you find this sort of arrangement, that bonds to the extent of $25,000 a mile are to be issued, besides a large quantity of stock, to build a $15,000 road, although 6,400 acres a mile have been granted to aid it, you then want to know what is to become of the difference. You want to know where the excess between the $15,000 and the $25,000 is to go. I know a considerable portion will go in discount on bonds, and in that private account which I am told some railway corporations keep under the name of "oil and waste." But there is a large margin between fifteen and twenty-five, and I believe that, if you were to investigate the matter, it would be found that this arrangement partakes in some shape or form of the character of former arrangements such as the hon. member for King's read a while ago, by which there is to be a reservation out of the money paid to the contractors to go into the pockets of the members of the company. That is so much charge upon the North-West country for the benefit of a few members of Parliament and others. It is just that. I have understood, and I believe the committee understood, that to us, who were asked to consider whether we should extend this charter, would be submitted the evidence of the ability at any rate of the people to build, and the Legislature of Manitoba called upon us not to do anything which might practically throw the road over by continuing the charter to those who had not the ability; and their last telegram was very strong, in truth, against granting it to this corporation at all—at least, so I interpreted the words. Instead of that, when the matter came up the last time, I find by the reports—I was unfortunately unable to remain in attendance—and I find by the clause in the Bill itself that, so far from the ability of the company being pretended to be proved, the clause introduced into the Bill is an express statement, to which the House is asked to assent, that it is not proved, that it has to be proved at some future time, that therefore this company which is to obtain in this extension is to obtain it not having proved, though the member for West Toronto told us most emphatically he would prove, its ability to go on. There is, therefore, to be a further attempt to sell this charter, to speculate in this charter for a short time, and then the Government of the country, it is proposed, shall intervene. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that these transactions are such as we ought to approve of. I think this Bill is an unclean thing, and that we ought to reject it.

Mr. BEATY. I only propose to make a few words of explanation of certain points which have been raised in this discussion and I do it for the purpose of placing on record a few facts which, I think, can be corroborated by the fullest evidence. In reference to the stock which has been mentioned, I state this simple fact, that that stock was assigned to me absolutely, but with the view of controlling and managing the company for the purpose of carrying out the enterprise of the shareholders. That was the whole object and purpose. The purposes of the stock were settled upon, and afterwards those who assigned it said: What we wish to be done with that stock in the future, is so and so; that is another matter altogether. But that is the object of the assignment of that stock, so that when I went to England or the United States I might make such a contract as could be carried out on the best terms possible. That is the only object I have had in this matter. I have had no object, but the usual business object of a personal character, contrary to any interest which has been committed to me in this matter. Now, I have only to reiterate what I have already said in reference to the allegations of the hon. member for King's, N. S. (Mr. Woodworth), as to the arrangement said to be made with him. I can only say now, and I can say it anywhere and under any circumstances, that never was such an arrangement thought of, suggested, or agreed to, by him or me, and I have never had the matter presented to me in that light by him, until I read his letter of the 19th May, 1885. There was no arrangement as to the directors getting $50,000, or any sum, nor myself getting $50,000 or any sum. There was no such arrangement with any person, or with any director, or any shareholder, or any contractor. I have no interest with the present contract, not one dollar's worth. I have always repeated what I said in that letter I wrote to Mr. Eccles, who was recommended to me, in Toronto, as a person who could negotiate a contract of this kind. I wrote to him that I must stand on one side and the contractors on the other, and I have held that position from beginning to end, and that is the position in which the matter stands to-day. The arrangement, therefore, I simply say, never took place. There was no such understanding, no such agreement. The simple fact was that when that letter was read to a meeting of the shareholders, they dropped the hon. member for King's and elected another director. That is the whole story, and one must understand that they would do so under the circumstances. That he and I, if such were the fact, two against seven directors, that we should act so absurdly, so stupidly, and, if I could put it in any other way, I should say, so dishonestly, as to say that two directors could plunder the seven other directors, and all the shareholders. The thing is utterly absurd and never occurred. Now, I have also to refer to this matter of Mr. Macdonald, which has been referred to; that is a fact. Mr. Macdonald was the contractor of the old company, the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway Company, and did that grading, or whatever there was under his direction, at all events, from Melbourne to Rapid City, forty-three miles. That grading was done under the circumstances which have been generally stated, and pretty well understood, but I had then nothing to do with the company, or knew anything about it. I offered, when the matter was first presented to the Railway Committee, that the debts in respect to the work done, the material supplied and the money paid on that grading, should be paid by this company, and I have stuck to that ever since. And it is one of the greatest obstacles I have had to contend with in floating the matter, because the directors had to pay that in some form or another, and they felt that it was an obligation imposed upon them entirely outside, and which should never have been imposed upon them. The directors undertook the new enterprise, and it is a great difficulty, whatever any hon. gentleman may say of the ease of doing these things, and how they could manage it themselves, how they could build railways—it is the greatest difficulty in the world to get persons of railway skill and experience, of financial capacity and ability, to undertake a new enterprise under circumstances of this character. There is no doubt whatever about that. Until the fall of 1885, in November, we had the charge upon that land of $1.06 an acre, amounting to nearly $7,000 which had to be paid by the contractors before that land would enure to their own benefit as a security. Now, I say, it was impossible, and I found it impossible, to contract for the purpose of building that road unless that was removed. It was removed, but it was not removed at our instance. It was simply a general, public, open policy. It went on step by step with the Manitoba and North-Western, with the Manitoba and South-Western, with the Long Lake Road, with the road known as Sir Alexander Galt's road. We went on step by step with those roads which had no relation to us. It was adopted, too, when I was in England, and I had no direct interference with it, though I made the application before I left, pressing the matter, and explaining that it was impossible to carry on those roads unless some such policy was adopted. There is no doubt about that; and my judgment has been fully established and confirmed by the fact that until this free grant was obtained, these roads could not be built successfully. It was not only the policy of this company, it was a policy for all companies, and it is a policy for any company who can build a road, that they should have this security for the purpose of floating their bonds. Now, this free grant was given, I think, in November, 1885. Up to that it was next to impossible to obtain the money to build the road. There is no great time lost since then. A few months have elapsed in which, I am perfectly satisfied now, we have obtained the men, a syndicate in New York city, who are competent to build this road, and if this Bill is passed this road will be built, fifty miles of it by the 1st December, 1886. There is no doubt about that, in my mind, at all events because the gentlemen who have undertaken this, after eight months from August, 1885, have given attention to this matter, have gone to the trouble and expended money for consulting their own engineers, have obtained their own information, and have enquired into every circumstance—gentlemen who have built the Chicago and Indianapolis Air Line Railway, who built railways in various parts of the United States, who are building a road now in connection with the Kansas Pacific, and who are men represented to me as worth not less than fifteen or twenty millions, and I believe that can be demonstrated, men who are in dead earnest in reference to this matter. They have proposed to build this road, and will construct it on the most reasonable terms possible. Under these circumstances I come to this House for the purpose of asking an extension of time. I think, therefore, that I have good grounds, I have solid grounds, for asking this House to sanction this measure so that all this labor, all this time, and all this work, shall not be lost, that this Parliament shall give to thousands of people in the North-West who have petitioned for the road, and the thousands interested in it from Halifax to Vancouver—certainly numbers of persons, representing hundreds, are writing to me wanting this road to go on, because of their interest in the great North-West country, and of the immense advantages the road will be to those pioneers who went in there from six to nine years ago, expecting the Canadian Pacific Railway would pass through those Territories and they have been disappointed ever since, and their hopes are well nigh crushed out now because of the insane opposition which has been offered to this scheme in connection with the allegations which have been made. I say, therefore, that this road ought to be built. Now in regard to the evidence, which is said to have been produced here? Has not every man in this House heard of Mr. Pew? In the late case of Pew vs. Schultz, eight men were brought from his own town of Welland, and every one of them swore that they would not believe him on his oath. A man named McConachie was represented to me as a millionaire, and that was the only reason in the world why I ever listened to him for a moment. This stranger, this traveller and millionaire, was brought to me, and I found out that he was Mr. Pew's clerk and was not worth a thousand dollars, and that he just did and talked as Pew ordered him. That was proved in the case of Pew vs. Schultz. This is the kind of evidence with which I have to be slandered, with which this Parliament is to be outraged, with which this country is to be agitated, for the purpose of damaging a political opponent. That is the effect of it and that is the design. I say it is an outrage on public decency that such witnesses should be introduced for the purpose of damaging a man appreciated in his own city, a man who never had to blush for shame on account of any charge brought against him. The allegation is laid and repeated without a tittle of evidence being adduced in support of it, that there has been charter selling. There is not a word of truth in that statement, from whatever quarter it may come. I deny that I have ever offered the charter for sale; the charter is not sold, and will not be sold, as I have stated again and again. I have said so to the men with whom have been dealing. I could have sold it.

An hon. MEMBER. For how much?

Mr. BEATY. For as much money as would buy some hon. members, but it did not buy me. Why? Because I had interests entrusted to me which I would not betray, and I would not allow any private interest whatever to interfere with those interests so entrusted to me. That was the reason the charter was not sold. It never has been offered for sale; it never has been arranged or negotiated for sale, and it never will be while it is under my control.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope it will not be.

Mr. BEATY. The hon. member need not hope anything about it. Whatever he might do if he held it, he need not fear as to what I will do. Then observations have been made in regard to what took place in the case of Mr. Macdonald, who wrote me a letter offering to do the work. I said: Certainly if you can do it, take your opportunity for doing it, and it will afford a chance for paying you the old debts. That has always been one of the objects of the company. But how could we pay the claim made in court for $140,000 unless we got the money out of the contract? And that is what I am providing for. Notwithstanding what has been said by the member for King's, N.S. (Mr. Woodworth), in regard to this matter, when the Bill was first presented to the House I introduced a clause providing that all workmen and claimants for work done, for material supplied or money paid should be reimbursed. That is substantially the clause which is now introduced, and which is clause 3:

"The company shall remain liable for all debts due for the construction of the railway, and if such debts are due to contractors, shall cause all just claims for labor, board and building material in respect of such construction to be paid by such contractors, and in default thereof shall be directly liable to the persons having such claims."

In those words the company were to pay the old claims for work done, material supplied and money expended on the old grading, not one foot of which we would use in the present construction, because that grading was between Melbourne and Rapid City, and our line goes from Brandon to Rapid City; and yet we made provisions to pay for the work done. The amount claimed is $140,000. I repeat, how was that to be paid? And that question was one of the greatest difficulties in all arrangements in connection with entering into a contract. The clause is inserted with the object of paying that debt—and I regret there are yet men who are not paid, but with that matter I have nothing to do, as the undertaking was entered into in 1882-83, and I had nothing to do with the road until the winter of 1884—and it is for the purpose of paying those debts that the money is asked. Is it not reasonable, just and fair that the farmers, workmen and merchants in Winnipeg and elsewhere who have not been paid should be paid, and that I should see they are paid? I said I would do so in the first instance, I have wished to do so ever since, and I propose to do that so long as I have anything to do with the road. This is the original clause:

"The said North-West Central Railway Company shall not be chargeable with any liability of the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway Company, except for actual work done or material supplied in the grading between Melbourne and Rapid City, which shall be payable directly to the several workmen and claimants respectively, on account of such work or supplies."

Then I added: "or money paid." Is that not substantially the same clause we introduced to carry out the purpose and object I have mentioned? Whatever may be said in regard to a member of Parliament having a charter of this kind, I and you, Mr. Speaker, know that this has been done during the last thirty years.

Mr. MITCHELL. There has been too much of it.

Mr. BEATY. That may be. But why make me the scapegoat? I might say so myself now; but again I ask why make me the scapegoat in regard to this matter? Why not refer to other hon. members of the House, to the hon. member for Northumberland, or some other hon. member? Why not have all matters connected with railwas charters opened up?

Mr. MITCHELL. Do you intend to imply that I was ever connected with any railway charter? If so you say that which is not true.

Mr. BEATY. If the hon. gentleman says he has not been so connected, I accept his statement. If there is any objection to members of Parliament having charters, let a Bill be introduced setting forth that members of Parliament shall have no share in companies, banks or institutions of any kind which have dealings with the Government, and I will support and vote for such a Bill. But is it not the express law that members of Parliament may hold shares in all companies having relations with the Government? Has it not been passed over by all Administrations for years and years, and I am told the Reform party enacted the law. If that is so, why should I be made a scapegoat in regard to this matter, when I positively and unhesitatingly deny that there is anything whatever in the transaction that cannot be announced from the housetops of the world, and no transaction which is not honest and honorable in every respect.

Mr. LISTER. Then let it go to a committee.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. leader of the Opposition stated just now in his remarks that we had three telegrams or communications from the Legislature of Manitoba about this road, and the inference he drew from those communications, especially from the last, was that the Manitoba Legislature was not favorable to this company and wished another company to be incorporated. I am sorry I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman. The inference I drew from those communications was not to that effect; but it was this: That the Legislature of Manitoba wished to have the road built, and fifty miles built if possible this season; and they asked us to see that the present company, or another company to be incorporated, should show they had ability and means to build the railway. It was with that view that the Railway Committee considered the matter; it was in that light that the Government thought they would consider this charter and see whether they could meet the wishes of the Manitoba Legislature and of the people of the North-West who are so much interested in the building of the railway, and whether Parliament could do this by giving the company an extension of time. The hon. gentleman said a great deal about the position of members of Parliament as directors of companies or promoters of railway companies, especially of companies which receive grants of money or of land from Parliament. I must say that this comes a little late in the day, because we have done it on both sides of the House. Governments and Parliaments which have succeeded one another have incorporated companies, on the directorates of which members of Parliament held places. We have only to open the Statutes of last Session and the previous Session, or for the last ten years, to find the names of members of Parliament on companies incorporated by this Parliament, and therefore that has been the settled policy of Parliament. If Parliament wishes after this Session to turn over a new leaf and to say that a member of Parliament shall have nothing to do with charters of this kind, or—as the hon. gentleman said just now—with banks, or any other corporations receiving their life from this Parliament, that is another question altogether. But in the present case, the company has already had two charters from this Parliament. They have incurred a great deal of labor, and, I have no doubt, a great deal of expense; they have been unable to build the road, and they say: Give us an extension of time. I do not think the Bill, as introduced by the member for Toronto (Mr. Beaty), is the one which we had at first, because we changed it, and we passed it with the provisos which I shall mention hereafter. But that company is in this position: They say, give us an extension of time so that we may carry into effect the object for which Parliament has incorporated us. More than that, this company came at the last meeting of the committee, and they laid before us, as they had laid before the Government, in the person of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, a contract by which eminent contractors have engaged to build this road. When the Government saw this, we said we cannot grant an extension of time unless the company show that not only have they good contractors, but they have the ability, the means of carrying the contract into effect; therefore, in order to save time—this company is already formed; they have been at work trying to begin the road, trying to build it; they have a contract now ready; the contractors and the company have signed the contract; in order to save time, we said we will ask Parliament to give an extension of time. But the charter will have no effect until a certain day, not later than the 1st of June next, during which period they must show to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that they have the means of carrying into effect the charter we are giving them. If by that time they cannot show that they have those means, and are in a position to carry on that road, then the proclamation of the Governor, which would otherwise issue, will not issue; the charter will be waste paper and the Government will, with the sanction of Parliament, take power to incorporate another company which will have the means and the ability to build the road as intended. That is the position. The hon. gentleman has stated to this House that it is very strange that the first corporators of that company were not members of Parliament—at all events not all of them, and that they had been replaced by members of Parliament since that. Well, the hon. gentleman should remember, and I have no doubt he does remember, that there were two charters. There was the charter of the Souris Company, which was replaced by the present company, and then the directorate was changed. The inference which the hon. gentleman would wish Parliament and the country to draw is that, because there were members of Parliament on that directorate, the Government gave to that company advantages which they would not have given, and had not given, to any other company.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Well, on behalf of the Government I say that is not the fact. There were other companies that had obtained those advantages previous to this company obtaining them, and the hon gentlemen should remember that the Opposition at the last Session were very loud in calling upon the Government not to be stingy about the lands of the North-West, but to give a proper bonus in land to the company—I think it was the South-Western Company. Hon. gentlemen wished that to be done; we have done it during the recess, and we did it I think for another company, the North-Western Company, I believe. Those companies have had the advantage of having the lands, not at $1.06 per acre, but at 10 cents per acre, that is to pay the surveys. But the hon. gentleman also says that this is a company that should not be incorporated in that way, because we are giving too much to the company to build the road. Well, what are we giving to that company? The hon. gentleman says that by their charter they had the right to issue $25,000 in bonds on the road; and besides that he goes on to say that the Government gives to that company 6,400 acres of land per mile, and he said that was enormous. The hon. gentleman should remember, and I have no doubt he does remember, that the $25,000 in bonds could not sell, and would not sell, if we had not granted the 6,400 acres of land, and therefore the mainstay of that road is the grant of land we are giving to that company, the same as we gave to other companies. I have not looked at the charters of the South-Western and North-Western, but I am pretty sure that they had the same right to issue bonds as this company. Therefore, they are all on the same footing; at all events in the Railway Committee, as the hon. gentleman knows, he being an assiduous member of that committee, we always try to put all the companies on the same footing, and if we have allowed them to issue bonds to the extent of $25,000 a mile it is because we granted the same privilege to others. The hon. gentleman must remember also that there was a period in 1874 when hon. gentlemen offered, I think, 25,000 acres of land and $10,000 in cash per mile to build a certain railway, and they could not succeed; those who had that railway in hand could not succeed, even with this grant. If that is the case with regard to that road, how can we find fault with this other company because we gave them $25,000, not in cash, but allowed them to issue $25,000 in bonds to be offered to the public, and 6,400 acres of land per mile? How can we say that this company asks a great deal too much, when hon. gentlemen in their day gave over 20,000 acres of land, plus $10,000 per mile to build a road? What did we give the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to build their road? We gave them $12,500 per mile in cash, and 12,500 acres of land per mile; and yet what was the value of their bonds? Their bonds were sold at hardly more than 50 per cent. If that company were not able to do better than that with such assistance, how can this company be considered to have a great deal too much when we are giving them only 6,400 acres per mile, and leaving them to issue their own bonds?

Mr. BLAKE. The bonds were sold at 98, not at 50.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I mean the stock. The hon. gentleman knows that the stock of the company, which hon. gentlemen opposite said would enrich these men and would sell at such a high price, went down as low as 37. Therefore, I think, the hon. gentleman cannot contend that we are giving too much to this company. I wonder if the hon. gentleman would invest much money in the bonds that this company will issue, although the road will run through a good country?

Mr. BLAKE. I would not accept them under the present directorate.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps not; but if the hon. gentleman had made an offer, I have no doubt there might have been a complete change of directors. But I think the Government have taken the proper course in asking the committee to allow the Bill to go through with the proviso that the charter would not take effect until the 1st of June, until the company showed that they had the ability and the means to carry on the undertaking. If they are not able to do that, we will ask Parliament to give us power to incorporate another company, as we have done in other cases. But we thought it best under the circumstances that this company, having given their attention to this work, should have an extension of time, especially when they showed us that they had a contract already signed a few days ago, and in order that they might be enabled to show us whether or not they had the means to carry on the work. I hope, therefore, that this Bill will go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WATSON. As the hon. Minister who leads the House has made a reference to the last telegram received from the Local Legislature of Manitoba, I would just trouble the House by reading it. That telegram to my mind states clearly that it is the opinion of that Legislature that the charter should be taken from the present holders. The telegram is in the proceedings of the 29th of April, as follows:—

"That as the question of the Manitoba Central Railway comes for final discussion before the Railway Committee to-morrow, it is the duty of this House to again express its views; the more especially as by the despatch of the 2nd April, 1884, the fact of the Dominion having devoted lands to aid railway construction in Manitoba is given as a reason why the House should not press its claim for the public lands in the Province. By the terms of the Order in Council of 23rd January, 1885, the proposal of the 20th of May is incorporated with modifications; consequently it becomes the duty of the House to watch the administration of the railway grants by the Parliament of Canada, who are practically trustees for Manitoba, it having been urged that these lands were set apart for her benefit.

"This House, therefore, as a matter of right, urges that the land grant should be at once placed in the hands of parties able, by constructing and putting into operation fifty miles of road this year, to give the people the benefit of one of the valuable considerations set forth in the above cited documents; and that unless the company now incorporated, or any company to be incorporated during the present Session, are able to show their ability to build the said fifty miles, then that Parliament be asked to give power to the Governor General in Council to incorporate any company by letters patent which may be formed to the satisfaction of the Government during the prorogation of Parliament for the purpose of building said road; and further this House expresses the hope that unless the present holders of the land grant satisfy the Railway Committee to-morrow, the committee will advise the summary cancellation of the Order in Council granting them, and this House feels it its duty to lay their views strongly before the committee, as the people of Manitoba, and more especially those directly interested, have vital interests at home.

"And be it further resolved, that Mr. Speaker be requested to wire the above to the Chairman of the Railway Committee of the House of Commons."

In support of this motion, Mr. Laycock, the mover of the resolution stated:

"Mr. Laycock said that the people in his district were perfectly sick at the way this matter had been treated at Ottawa. The speaker was a Conservative. He was taunted with being such, but he had no hesitation to say that it was time that the people had some redress. They needed railway communication, and men like Mr. Beaty and others, who had done what they had to prevent railway legislation, should be taught a lesson. He would raise his voice against the way the people of this Province had been treated. Such men as Mr. Beaty had gone to New York to traffic on the railway charter. The lands had been given to the people for railway purposes, to give railway communication, and he wanted to see no more humbug about it."

That resolution was carried unanimously by the Local Legislature of Manitoba; and such being the case, I feel myself bound in order to carry out the wishes expressed in that resolution, to vote for the amendment of the hon. member for Northumberland. In the Railway Committee I expressed the opinion that this company should not be granted another month's delay. They have had the last two years in which to carry out the terms of their charter, and they have made no progress. If Mr. Beaty had shown his ability to construct this road as the Government requested him to do at the last meeting of the committee, I would certainly have been in favor of his retaining the charter and having another month's time. But he has had this charter long enough, and as one of the members of the Local House stated the people of that section of the country have been humbugged long enough. They have had repeated telegrams from the president of the company that he would soon be on the ground and turn the first sod on two or three different occasions; and as hope deferred makes the heart sick, those people are sick of waiting for this company to begin operations, and I think it is time now that the franchises held by them, to enable them to build the road, should be given to some company who would show their ability to do it, without any further delay. I think a month is too long a time to grant to this company; if the Government had given them a week or two, I think it would have been long enough. Mr. Beaty said the company were in a position to construct the work; if they are, why does he not show it at once. We have the Minister of Railway's report to the committee, that Mr. Beaty had not shown him, to his satisfaction, that his company was in a position to construct the work, and therefore it was necessary to give him a month's extension. As I am strongly in favor of the road being built, and that at an early date, I will vote for the amendment, as moved by my hon. friend, believing that parties are in a position and ready and willing to take the franchise and construct the road at once.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. IVES. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) who lives near the locality where this proposed railway is to be built, and who ought, therefore, to know something of its merits, informed the House that this enterprise is one of great importance and of great necessity, both to the settlers in that section and the North-West at large. He also tells us that he considers its construction has been too long delayed, and he fears that the present promoters of the enterprise, the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty), the president of the company, and the other members of the directorate, are not the men who are likely to make an arrangement for its construction. With him it seems to be a question, not of the suitability of these persons, not the question which the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) raised, as to the character of the directorate; not the question which the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) raised, as to the propriety of members of Parliament being directors on a railway board; but the vital question with the hon. member for Marquette is the importance of constructing the railway, coupled with the doubt whether this company have the capacity to effect an arrangement which will result in its construction. That being the position of the case, I find it very difficult to understand the conclusion at which he arrives. He says that if it were proposed to delay the consideration of this matter for a week, or possibly two weeks, he would consent to that, but he thinks it quite too long to defer the matter for a month; and because it is too long to defer it for a month, he declares that he is prepared to vote for the three months' hoist. In other words, with respect to an enterprise of vital importance to his section of the country, the construction of which has been too long deferred already, which it is very important should be constructed, and about the construction of which he has doubts as to the capacity of the present board of directors, he willingly would give two weeks to see whether they could make an arrangement; but he is prepared, seeing a month is proposed, to vote the three months' hoist. I cannot look at the question from that point of view. If the railway is an important enterprise, if its construction has already been too long delayed, if, as announced by the leader of the House, a contract has already been signed and exhibited to the Government—a contract apparently made in good faith by capitalists able to perform their contract—and if it is only necessary a short delay should be given in order that these gentlemen should satisfy the Government that they really mean to carry out their contract, it does seem to me impossible to come to the conclusion which the hon. member for Marquette has reached, namely, to hoist the Bill, to throw out all chance of this company doing anything, to throw overboard the contract made with the New York capitalists, and to put it entirely out of the power of any private individual to obtain an act of incorporation or charter a company to do the work during the present Session. To vote for the three months' hoist would simply put it out of the power of Parliament to clothe any association of men with the power to go on with the construction of the railway, except by the direct action of the Government. Admitting that the construction of the railway is important, as stated by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), and the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), it seems to me we should look at this matter as a matter of business rather than as a matter of party. A contract has been actually entered into by persons who, we have reason to suppose, are able to build this railway, and we are asked to give the Government power, in case they are satisfied by the directors of their capacity to build the road, to proclaim the charter and allow this company to go on. It seems to me we are likely to obtain the construction of the road much sooner by permitting this company to go on than we would by killing the charter, throwing up the signed contract, and leaving it an entirely open question for future consideration. If the Government were prepared to go further than they do, if they were prepared to say, that in case the present company do not build the road, they, as a Government, are prepared to advise the House to construct it as a Government work, there would be more force in the position the hon. member for Marquette takes with reference to the action of the House upon the motion and the amendment. What are the reasons urged against our going into committee on this Bill? First, there is the political aspect of the case, which is raised by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), that members of this House ought not to be directors in railway charters. That is an important general question, but it does not apply to this particular case any more than to many other cases, both during the present and preceding Sessions of this House; and I doubt very much whether the hon. member for West Durham would be inclined to advise his friends or the House to throw up a good contract, supposing this contract which has been made to be a good reliable contract, and leave the whole thing in a state of chaos to the chances of future combinations, unless the Government are prepared to advise the House to undertake the construction of the railway as a Government work. I am not going to take up the time of the House with discussing the political aspect of the case, as to whether members of Parliament should be promoters of railway or other charters granted by the House or not. That is a question which could, as the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) said, be more fitly discussed upon a substantive proposition that hereafter members of Parliament should not be competent to be directors in railway charters. The other question raised is that of the character of the directors and the character of the transactions which are alleged to have taken place among different members of the directorate. Now, it was alleged in committee, and the statement has gone through the country by means of the press, that there was an arrangement between the hon. member for King's, N.S. (Mr. Woodworth) and the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty), that the ordinary directors of the company—these two gentlemen being extraordinay directors—were to have a bonus of $50,000 divided among them, and that the hon. member for West Toronto and the hon. member for King's were to divide equally between them the surplus of profits. I can only say that there has been no evidence of any satisfactory character to establish that allegation; there has been nothing to justify a section of the press of this country in the course they have taken with reference to that allegation. The hon. member for West Toronto emphatically denies it; the others or ordinary directors emphatically deny it. The proof, or supposed proof, is contained in letters which have been mislaid, which, unfortunately for the hon. member for King's, he is not able to produce, and the only thing he does produce is the letter from the Finance Minister stating his impression is, that the arrangement was that the hon. member for West Toronto and the hon. member for King's were mutually interested in the enterprise. That is a very different thing from the allegation that the ordinary directors were to receive $50,000 and those two were to divide the surplus of the profits. Therefore the charge as originally made in the committee, the charge that has gone over the country, that has been circulated by a section of the press of the country, rests entirely without proof, rests on no proof whatever. That was not the statement either of the hon. member for King's to-day. He said to-day, without making any allusion to the $50,000, that he and the member for West Toronto were mutually interested, were equally interested in this charter, and that would seem to be borne out by the impression the Finance Minister would seem to have gathered from his recollection of the letters. Taking that statement, I do not see that there is anything particularly improper in it, anything in it which would justify this House in refusing to go into committee upon this Bill. Suppose, for instance, it were clearly established that the hon. member for King's and the hon. member for West Toronto were to be mutually interested in this undertaking, is anyone in this House so silly as to suppose that any board of directors are to undertake the labor and anxiety and trouble, and incur the expense necessary to float a scheme of this kind, to build the railway and manage it afterwards, and pay the bondholders their annual interest, without any compensation whatever for it? Does any one suppose that any member of this House or any business man in this country does this sort of thing entirely for the fun of it, and lives on air in the meantime? I need not dwell upon that point very long. I believe it was perfectly legitimate, as long as the House permits members of Parliament to be promoters of railway schemes, for these two hon. gentlemen, these two members of this board, to expect to make something for their time and trouble and expense for the prosecution of this work. It is said there was charter selling, that there was an endeavor to sell this charter. There is no evidence of this fact. There is no proof whatever that the charter was ever offered for sale or was ever peddled from Dan to Beersheba, or through the continent of Europe and America.

Mr. MITCHELL. Hold on now; are you blind?

Mr. IVES. I will hear the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MITCHELL. Are you blind or deaf?

Mr. IVES. I am neither blind nor deaf, nor am I going to speak so long but that you will have an opportunity in a few moments. I have heard no evidence that there was an effort to dispose of or to sell this charter. The hon. gentleman from King's adduced as his evidence to-day a supposed contract between a Mr. Macdonald and Mr. Beaty. Certainly the proof he adduced was no proof whatever. The contract was one under which Macdonald was to take the bonds, and I presume the land grant, and build the road, and pay $1,500 a mile to the company out of the proceeds of the bonds and land grant. That is all there is in it. There was no proposition to sell the charter. There was no understanding that Macdonald was to assume the organisation of the company and to carry on the organisation of the company hereafter, that these directors were to be discharged from responsibility in the company, that Mr. Beaty was to cease to be president or that the member for King's was to cease to be a director. What was to be done with this road after it was built? Was it to run alone? Was there to be no general manager? Was there to be no treasurer? Was there to be no one to receive the proceeds of the freight and passenger traffic, no one to pay the interest on these bonds? Who was to furnish the rolling stock and pay the interest on these bonds? If you take this sum of $1,500 which, the impression was sought to be conveyed, was intended as a spoil to be divided among the directors, you find it is only one year's interest on $25,000 a mile at 6 per cent., and much less would it buy the rolling stock. This $1,500 a mile will be paraded before the country as what these gentlemen were to divide among themselves. Now, out of that they would have to pay the interest on these bonds for one or two years during construction, and the interest for one year at 6 per cent. on $25,000 a mile would be $1,500 a mile. There was the rolling stock to be provided, there were the old debts of the former company to be paid, or rather three-fourths of them, because one-fourth was provided for under the arrangement; and yet it was said this was trafficking in the charter, this was a sale of the charter, without a word being said as to the capital stock or passing over the organisation of the company to Macdonald or anyone else. But it will be urged that it was a sale of the charter. I contend that it was not, but was simply a contract with Macdonald to build the railway; and it is easy to understand many ways in which this $1,500 would be used and expended without supposing anything improper in the intentions or objects which Mr. Beaty had in view in stipulating for the payment of that $1,500.

Mr. MILLS. What was the dispute about?

Mr. IVES. Dispute about what?

Mr. MILLS. Between the hon. member for King's and the hon. member for West Toronto.

Mr. IVES. The dispute between the hon. member for King's and the hon. member for West Toronto is a matter which does not affect the public interest in any way whatever. It is either important or it is not important that this railway should be constructed. The importance of its construction is not lessened or increased in the slightest degree by Mr. Beaty being the general manager of that road and its president, or by Mr. Woodworth being the general manager of that road or its president. It is not at all, in the public interest, a matter of any consequence whether these two men agreed or disagreed. It is an unfortunate matter because it will require the united energies of both, perhaps, to complete the undertaking. It is unfortunate that they did not agree——

Mr. COOK. Yes, it let the cat out of the bag.

Mr. IVES. But whether they did or not is a matter of no consequence. The hon. gentleman says it let the cat out of the bag. There is only one advantage that hon. members opposite have—they agree so well together that they never split on one another.

Mr. COOK. There is nothing to split on.

Mr. IVES. Then a great deal is made of the fact that the hon. member for West Toronto had assigned to him absolutely a controlling interest in this charter, or in other words that a majority of the capital stock was transferred to him. Now, what does that mean? If you were to listen to some of the hon. gentlemen who addressed the Railway Committee you would suppose that that $386,000 in stock was absolutely convertible any moment into $386,000 in cash. All I can say is that perhaps that stock may be as good as money if you do not need the money, but, if you do need the money and were to offer it for sale, you would find it absolutely worthless. What does that $386,000 mean? It means simply that the man who has it has the control of that charter, and he has the opportunity of going from Dan to Beersheba, taking the words of the hon. member for King's, in the search of somebody who will put money into this land grant and into this railway and construct it. That is what it means, because, whenever you find capitalists who will undertake to put money into the construction of that road or any other similar enterprise, you will find that they will demand a controlling interest in the organisation or company. When a railway company that has money to pay its contractor goes to contractors and makes an arrangement for the construction of a railway, the contractors do not enquire as to who owns the controlling interest in the stock, nor do they trouble themselves as to the stock. But when a company has absolutely no money, which has nothing but the chance to build the road, and the chance to receive 6,400 acres of land, after they have completed the work, when that kind of a company goes before a capitalist, the contractor must be a capitalist in that case, when he goes to a capitalist contractor and asks him to build the railway, the first question the capitalist contractor asks is: Who has the controlling interest in the stock of this company, and can you hand over to me, when the work is completed, the controlling interest? Now, this $386,000 which is talked of as if it were so much money, which appeared in the newspapers as being an enormous find, an enormous swag, made by the member for West Toronto, is simply so much absolutely worthless property, until the railway is completed, and perhaps then worthless except to him who controls the organisation of the railway, and which it was absolutely necessary he should control, before he could possibly undertake to make any arrangements for the construction of this road. Now, I said in the Railway Committee on a previous occasion, and I desire to say here, that I think if, in enterprises of this kind, the capital stock were made to be of much less amount, perhaps confined to a thousand dollars a mile, or something of that kind, the issue made so much less so that it could be paid up by the promoters of the railway and form a fund for surveys and preliminary expenses, it would be much preferable to the present plan of setting these companies on foot. We now allow a railway to issue a capital stock of about $20,000 per mile. Well, as a rule, that capital stock will not be subscribed, and it will not be paid, because bonds must be issued, and they are preferential to the stock, and the result is that the stock will not be subscribed, and will not be paid up, and still it must be subscribed in order to obtain control of the organisation. No one will invest their money as contractors in the construction, until they know where the controlling interest in the capital stock lies, and therefore such measures have to be resorted to as were resorted to in this case. Stock has to be issued absolutely to someone as a trustee to hold it. This is the position in which Mr. Beaty stands in this matter. To him, as the active promoter of this road, the company, his brother directors, issued a controlling interest in order that he might go into the world to find somebody who would put their money into this undertaking. In another particular the newspapers and some hon. members have been exceedingly unfair, and have given a very unfair impression with regard to the position of Mr. Beaty and his brother directors, and that is, as to the amount which was to be paid to the contractors, or which was available for the construction of this railway. Why, you would think, to hear hon. gentlemen opposite talk, that there was an enormous amount of money available. First there is the $20,000 stock; that is as good as gold. Then there is the $25,000 in bonds, that is $25,000. Then there is the land grand of 6,400 acres, that ought to be worth $1.50 to $2; there is $12,000 or $15,000 more. Why, you would fancy, to hear people talk, that the promoters of this railway had a perfect bonanza. What are the facts? Simply these, that all you have got is 6,400 acres of land, and the chances that the road may pay something more than its operating expenses after it is built. What are these bonds? These bonds are simply obligations of the company they are not assets of the company, but they are merely obligations of the company. What is the stock? The stock is a mere nominal thing which nobody would pay a cent for, which nobody probably has paid a cent for. So when you come to scrutinise the matter you have this 6,400 acres of land, and that is all; so the contractors who undertake the construction of this road have simply 6,400 acres of land per mile and the chances of the enterprise becoming a paying one, that is all there is in it. It is perfectly certain that the attacks which have been made upon the promoters of this road, and the inferences that have been sought to be drawn, and the impression created that there was a bonanza in this thing, are entirely unfair and unjust. Why, what has been the experience of the other Manitoba railways, the South-Western and the North-Western? The Government did for them precisely what they have promised to do for this company, that is to say, to give them 6,400 acres per mile; and these companies, at the head of which were some of our best financial men in Canada—I am speaking particularly of the North-Western—were obliged, before they could get a single dollar in money, to obtain the guarantee of the Province of Manitoba to their bonds. Notwithstanding they had the 6,400 acres, notwithstanding they had the same bonding power, notwithstanding they had the same capital stock to issue, not a single inch could they move until they had obtained from the Province of Manitoba a guarantee of their bonds before they could build a mile of railway, and yet it is said that the member for West Toronto has been dilatory, that he has been trying to sell his charter, that he has not been reasonably active in organising the company, simply because he had not succeeded in doing what such men as Andrew Allan and others, who are interested in railway charters in Manitoba, could not do until they had obtained a guarantee of the Manitoba Legislature. I undertake to say that the charges, so far as the Government is concerned, it appears to me are frivolous and unfounded. This company has not received a single advantage that other companies had not previously received, in which there were no members of Parliament as directors. Thiswas not the first company that got a free land grant. This was not the first company that got a land grant of $1.06 an acre. This company got a free land grant after other companies had received it, and there is not a tittle of evidence that any partiality whatever has been shown to the directors of this company. Now this matter presents itself as a matter of business. I do not look upon it as a matter of party politics at all. This is a private Bill; it is a question whether we should continue the life of a railway company which has already made a firm contract with New York men, supposed to be good, for the construction of a railway of undoubted importance, as hon. gentlemen on both sides seem to be agreed should be constructed immediately. On the one hand it is proposed to throw up this charter, to kill this company, to kill this contract, to throw the matter into chaos, and leave it entirely in the hands of Parliament to organise a company during the present Session, because, at this hour, no private member could carry a Bill through Parliament against the opposition of the Government—and leave the matter entirely in a chaotic state; on the other hand there is a proposition to leave it in the hands of the Government for a month, to proclaim this charter, if these men who have made this contract, satisfy the Government of their capacity and bond fide. Now this seems to me simply a matter of business, and there can be no question whatever that this House ought to permit this company to keep the contract it has made, certainly until a reasonable time has been allowed to the Government to satisfy themselves that the parties who have made this contract really mean to construct the railway.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not being a member of the Railway Committee, I am not familiar with what may have occurred in relation to this matter. I can only judge of this question in the light of the statements that have been made this afternoon, and also from some printed documents, which I suppose are correct, which have found their way into the newspapers. Now, Sir, I cannot at all agree with the last speaker that the only question before this House is whether or not this railway is to be constructed. I agree that it is a matter of importance that every possible step should be taken for the purpose of developing the North-West, and in that light I should be glad to facilitate the passage of any measure, this or any other, likely to open up any considerable portion of that territory. But there is another question which, in my judgment, is much more important than whether fifty miles of railway are to be built in the North-West or not, and that question is, briefly, whether members of this House are to be allowed to use their positions for the purpose of putting money in their pockets by trafficking in charters. This afternoon we have had on this subject three different statements from members of this House. One hon. gentleman, the hon. member for King's, N.S. (Mr. Woodworth), declared explicitly in his place for the information of the Government, that he was prepared to prove, as I understand him, that the member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) had been trafficking in this charter. That I understood to be the declaration of the hon. member for King's. And that declaration was, to say the least, supported, more than supported impliedly by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), who intimated that he had reason to believe that the hon. members were going to traffic in this particular charter. Under the circumstances, when we have one hon. gentleman on the floor of this House making a charge of this nature, and another hon. gentleman in the position of the hon. member for Northumberland, supporting that charge, and when we have, further, a statement made by the member for King's (Mr. Woodworth), and not contradicted to the effect that documentary evidence proving his case had been placed in the hands of a prominent member of the Government, the Minister of Finance, and we have the evidence of the Minister of Finance published in the newspapers, and not contradicted by him, admitting that those documents had been placed in his possession, I say that there is much more than a primâ facie case to require an investigation into the truth of the allegations made by those two hon. gentlemen before the House proceeds to confide to the member for West Toronto the charge of this important enterprise. I cannot conceive how this House, with due regard for its own dignity and the great trust which the public has confided to it, can, after such statements have been made publicly on the floor of the House, refuse to grant delay and refuse to grant an investigation, unless indeed the Ministers are prepared to take the stand that they pay no attention whatever to the statements made by the hon. member for King's and supported by the hon. member for Northumberland. If that is their position, let them say so and take the responsibility. Let them say they have themselves examined the documents and evidence offered to be produced by those hon. gentlemen and they believe the hon. member for West Toronto is perfectly correct and those two hon. gentlemen are utterly and entirely in the wrong. But I do not understand that such is the state of the case. On the contrary,

I believe I am correct in saying that a motion made by the member for Northumberland to have this matter investigated before a sub-committee was voted down by the Government, and that being the case, I think that now those statements have been made on the floor of the House, the House is bound to order an investigation. With respect to some of the other statements that have been made, I would desire to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to this very important fact. It is quite true I have no doubt that in past years a great number of railway charters may have been conceded to members of this House. But—and this makes all the difference—it was before it was the policy of the Government, formally announced and declared, to aid those railway companies by gifts of money or land from the public resources. And that I say is what makes all the difference between the cases which have come up within the last few years, after that policy was adopted by the Government, and former proceedings in this House. Were there no public interests involved, were there no grants of public money, were there no land grants to those railway enterprises, I do not know that we should condemn very severely the practice of hon. gentlemen taking an interest in those roads. But what I say is this, that this particular instance shows in the clearest light the extremely vicious nature of the practice which has grown up amongst us. So soon as the Government began to give grants from the public Treasury, began to give grants of land from the public domain to railway companies, then, according to every principle of equity and natural justice members of this House being trustees of the people ought to have kept themselves entirely aloof from such enterprises. That is the doctrine which I think will commend itself to every unprejudiced man and mind throughout the Dominion. At this very moment there is an Act on our Statute-books which forbids members of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company from being members of this House on the simple ground that we gave large grants of money and land to that railway, and by implication we ought equally to deny to hon. gentlemen in this House, and more particularly I think to hon. members supporting the Government, the right of becoming members of railway corporations which are applicants for or which may expect to receive large donations from the public chest. The hon. Minister of Public Works alluded to the case of the Manitoba and South-Western Railways. He said, and he said correctly enough, that those railways had received grants of land on similar conditions, but he ought to have told the House that those two railways to which he alluded had expended large sums of money, had built a considerable number of miles of railway in each case, and were I think in actual running operation as far as the end of the track before the Government made that concession. The truth is, as the hon. gentleman who last spoke said, that there are certain companies which have only a chance to build the railway; and those companies which put no money into the enterprise and do not propose to put money into it, but merely design to do the best they can, which I suppose means to make the most profit they can out of the enterprise, are very dubious objects for legislative assistance, and in every case it is a very doubtful thing that members of the House should connect themselves with such enterprises. I can conceive nothing which is more certain to destroy the independence of any member of this House than that he should be a promoter of railway enterprises which can make no way whatever without receiving subsidies in money or lands from the Government. And such was emphatically, according to the testimony of the last speaker, the position of this particular railway company. It had, as he correctly said, no chance whatever, except by aid of the 6,400 acres of land per mile of building the railway, except by virtue of a Government grant, it had no way of making a profit for its promoters, that I can see—unless they were prepared to put their hands in their pocket and spend a considerable sum of their own money—other than by in one shape or other sell out the charter. The House will do well to recollect that the granting of a railway charter, which is in all cases a sort of a monopoly, is a very important thing. If you give to any particular company, corporation or body of men, with a view to open a large tract of country, a railway charter running for one, two or three years as the case may be, and if parties in that country are desirous of causing this railway to be carried out, and if they find a wild cat company standing in the way, if they find that men of no means or resources, or men who are not going to put in their means or resources into its construction, stand there with the power to keep back that tract of country for several years together, everybody knows that nothing has been more common in past railway history, nothing is likely to be more common, than for those persons who are interested in promoting those enterprises to have to pay out large sums by way of black mail to the parties who have possession of the charters, for leave to go on and build the railway. The real objection to allowing men of straw or companies of straw to get possession of the charters is this: That they will not part, as the hon. gentleman who just spoke correctly enough mentioned, with their power, their claim, their right to the charter, and consequently, before the railway is constructed, the usual result is that a large sum of money, which ought to have gone to construct the railway, has to be paid to those parties for leave to build the railway; and there is reason, I fear, to suspect that something of this kind was in danger of occurring in this instance. The member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) himself admitted that such a thing was possible, and he also stated that in his judgment such a thing was wrong. He told the House, if I remember him correctly, that he could have sold the charter, although he intimated that he had no intention of doing it, but he admitted it was quite possible that this charter had a money value, that it was quite possible for him and others, having got possession of it to dispose of it, and it is quite apparent from the statements made by the Ministers themselves that these gentlemen had of their own resources no means whatever to go on with the construction of the road. They depended wholly and entirely on the Government grant. And now I think there are two conclusions, and two only, which should be drawn from this. One is, that since the Government had chosen to make it a part of their policy to make grants of land and money to railways—under such circumstances no members of Parliament ought to be allowed to meddle and dabble in these things at all; and the second, I think, is, that particularly after the disclosures which have occurred it becomes the duty of the Government to see to it that for the future railway charters shall not be given without full precautions being taken in the general public interest, to see that the parties who get these charters are men of substance and able to proceed with their road. Now I am not disposed at this moment to complicate the question by discussing the best mode of producing this result, but I say that in the minds of the public this whole course of trafficking in railway charters is becoming a crying scandal. I will not venture to say of my own knowledge how many members of this House may be concerned in these matters, but I do say that it is a matter of public notoriety, that meets one at every street corner, that there are members of this House who are supposed, and I fear with too great reason, to be making a regular matter of business of procuring charters and disposing of them to the best bidders for what they will bring. I can conceive of no practice more degrading or dishonoring to Parliament, or likely to do more mischief to the body politic than such acts; and if instead of fifty miles to be constructed within a year the question was to construct 500 miles of railway within a year, I say that the true interest of the public requires that no step be taken before an investigation should be had into the charges preferred by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth), and as I observe, sustained by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) and ascertain whether this was a case of the kind or not.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. member who has just spoken has, I suspect, created the impression, by his utterances, that I had some knowledge—that there were some papers lodged with me that gave me the information that the gentlemen holding this charter had it for sale and were endeavoring to sell it—that they were trafficking in the charter of the company. I desire in that sense to say that there were no such papers lodged with me, that I never had any information, any suspicion, that they were trying to sell that charter, but I had the most direct information that I could receive from the gentlemen themselves, from the delegates from Rapid City, from Winnipeg, from the Manitoba Government, and from various other localities, that they were most anxious that these gentlemen—that this company—should receive the same terms in respect to the grant of land as had been given to other companies. This company, if I understand it, had a charter before that policy was adopted by the Government. They had a charter at the time when it was proposed by the Government to give 6,400 acres of land per mile at $1.06 per acre. That policy was subsequently changed, and changed, I know, with the assent and approval of gentlemen opposite and their organs, and the policy was adopted of giving the land as a free grant. After that policy was adopted, and while I was acting for the then Minister of the Interior, application was made that they should be treated on the same terms as we had treated other companies, and given that land grant free. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), I think, interviewed me several times in respect to that matter, and urged that we should treat this company the same as others had been treated; and, as I said before, the delegates from the Manitoba Government and from Rapid City and other localities, waited upon me and urged most strongly that the same policy should be adopted towards this company as had been adopted towards others, that we should give them the land grant free, in order to enable that company to construct the railway. That is my knowledge of the position of affairs. That I do know. From the letters which my friend (Mr. Woodworth) gave me, I believed from them that he and Mr. Beaty had mutually promoted that company; that they had obtained a charter for that company, and had been equally interested in promoting it and in endeavoring to raise the means in order to construct the railway. That is all I know about it, and I have no knowledge whatever, and never had any knowledge, that they were endeavoring to traffic in that charter, in the sense that they were selling it for their own personal interest, and without constructing the railway. They gave me the impression, from the communications from Mr. Beaty and those connected with him, that they were most anxious to have the railway constructed, as were all those in the section of country through which the road was to pass.

Mr. SPROULE. It may seem a little out of place for me to occupy the time of the House in the discussion of this question, but I deem it my duty to say a few words, seeing that I have received a number of letters from residents of the locality interested, urging a rapid building of the road, and also other letters from many of those who are creditors of this road, through the company having assumed the liabilities of the Souris and Rocky Mountain road for work done on that line. One crowd are urging on me to assist in every way in securing the early building of the road, the other crowd are urging that their rights should be secured and that the money should be forthcoming to the poor unfortunate laborers who put their labor into the old road some time ago, in hopes of an early return from it no matter what company should build the road. There are, I think, under these circumstances, two questions in connection with this matter which we should not lose sight of. The first is how can we best, in the interests of the settlers, accomplish the early building of the road, and the second is in accomplishing that, how shall we secure payment of this large amount of money with which this road is handicapped, that has been spent in building the first fifty miles of the Souris and Rocky Mountain road. Now, hon. gentlemen, including the last hon. gentleman who spoke, have contended that there is a very important question in connection with this case—the question whether it is right to allow members of Parliament to be presidents or stockholders of railways that are bonused by the Government of Canada. In reference to that, I think I need say very little, because I apprehend that the arguments of hon. gentlemen who have already dealt with that question have been strong and conclusive. If I could lead myself to believe that this company got any better terms, any more land mile for mile, or any greater advantages of any sort, because they were connected with this Parliament, then I would hold that to be a wrong; but until I can bring myself to believe that, I must assume that there is nothing wrong being done in supporting hon. members who are pushing this Bill through the House, seeing the important objects they have in view. We all remember that a few years ago a great many petitions were sent to this House from settlers along the line of this road, urging in the strongest language that this Government should assist any company that would promise to build that road at an early date. Both sides of the House joined in that effort; both agreed that the land grant should be free instead of being placed at $1.06 an acre; and in answer to the prayer of the petitioners, this Government decided to adopt the policy of giving free grants of lands to railways in the North-West Territories, and this road received only what was given to other companies. Consequently, I apprehend that no advantage was given to them, nothwithstanding that they happened to be members of this Parliament. We had also petitions just as urgent from those poor unfortunate laborers, who claimed that they had forfeited a year's labor, for which they had received no return, in connection with the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway. We were then anxious to see any company come forward and assume the liabilities of the Souris and Rocky Mountain Company, and give some assurance that the road would be built at an early date. Unfortunately, handicapped as the company was with a claim of about $100,000 standing against it, the promoters of the scheme have been unable to organise a company and go on and build the railway; and we cannot wonder at it when we know that it is so difficult to raise money for building railways in that country, notwithstanding all the advantages it offers. When the liabilities of the old company were assumed by the present company, we were in hopes that those unfortunate laborers would be paid; and when an extension of time was asked for the charter, we supported it, with the understanding that the claims these men had upon the old company should not be prejudiced. That condition has been maintained up to the present time, and I am credibly informed by legal gentlemen that there is nothing in this Bill to prejudice their claims; and it gives the strongest assurance that that road will be built by this company, that the wages of these men will be paid at an early date. What is the position of this question to-day? I have said that the object is the early construction of the road. If the Government took the charter out of the hands of the company, what would be the result? This company have been trying, not only on the continent of Europe, but also in America, to float this scheme, and no doubt it is a well-known scheme in financial circles to-day, and if they have been unsuccessful up to the present time, notwithstanding the strong commercial and financial interests engaged in the scheme, how much more reasonable is it to suppose that it would be unsuccessful for a length of time in the future if it was placed in the hands of the Government, and a Bill were passed committing the work to any person at all; because the old saying, what is everybody's business is nobody's business, would apply to this scheme. If men of enterprise and ability have been unable to carry the scheme through up to the present time, is it reasonable to suppose that some other company, that we know nothing of, would take hold of it and would build fifty miles by next December? This company gives reasonable assurance that this may be accomplished by it; and we have reason to believe from the external evidence we have of the ability of the company, that that may be accomplished; and if it is accomplished, it will give the very strongest assurance that the whole road will be built in the interest of the settlers, and that those poor unfortunate laborers who lost their all in the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway will be paid at an early day. In view of these considerations, and remembering that there has been no documentary or other evidence adduced showing that anything wrong has been done by the promoters of this company, we have a right to grant this Bill. A great deal is made out of the fact that the principal promoter of the Bill was handed $386,000 of Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway stock; but what did that represent? With the liabilities standing against the old company of $140,000, it represented that he assumed those liabilities, without receiving anything in return, not even a single foot of land; and he took that stock over, although there was only 10 per cent. paid on it, and thereby assumed the liability of 90 cents on the dollar for every dollar of the stock, to those parties who are now in litigation, endeavoring to recover their claims against the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway Company. It was not only a very hazardous, but a very critical obligation—an obligation that very few men would assume; and it cannot be claimed in all fairness that there was any advantage coming to him in assuming that stock. Now, I say this House has a reasonable hope that that railway will be pushed forward rapidly at an early date, giving the settlers what they want, and securing the payment of those unfortunate laborers. Therefore, I say that we are in duty bound to grant this Bill, to extend the time asked for, and to renew the charter; and in doing that we shall be violating no principle of the independence of Parliament. The only result will be a good to the country, and a good to the parties most interested.

Mr. CHARLTON. To me, Sir, it is an astounding fact, that the Government of Canada, after all the revelations that have been made in regard to the transaction now under the consideration of the House, should insist on granting this charter. The hon. Minister of Finance tells us that he has been waited upon by delegations from the North-West, and has been urged by the hon. member for Marquette to grant this company the charter. Well, I suppose the hon. member for Marquette, and the delegations from the North-West, were influenced by the belief that the promoters of this scheme were acting in good faith—that they intended to build the road, and had the means to build it. The hon. Minister of Finance also tells us he had no knowledge at that time that they were trafficking in the charter. Can he tell us that is the case to-day? He does not say he believes at present they were trafficking in that charter, and the very fact, admitted by the promoters of the road, that they are seeking men of capital to build the road, is an admission that they cannot and do not intend to build it. They obtained the charter without the purpose or expectation of building the road themselves; it was a purely speculative transaction on their part. They obtained the charter expecting they would be able to induce men of capital to take it off their hands. They have admitted they are traffickers in this charter and are looking for men of means to purchase it from them. The Minister of Public Works practically condemns this whole business as wrong. He tells us, if we think best to turn over a new leaf, impliedly admitting it is better we should do so, that he will do so next Session, but to pass this measure now. Well, if the character of this business is such as to render it advisable for Parliament to turn over a new leaf, is there a better time to do so than now? If this transaction is of such a nature as to compel the Minister of Public Works to admit that a new leaf should be turned over, why should he and how can he urge that there should be any delay in taking that necessary and proper step? This business of contract and charter brokerage is a disgrace to this Parliament. A great number of members are admittedly engaged in promoting railway schemes; there are members in this House who have urged the granting of bonuses by, and have received bonuses from, this Government to advance railway schemes in which they are interested, and their conduct is morally just the same as if they had induced the Government to grant them money to put into their own pockets. The whole system is one that ought to be abolished. We have in this case a member of this House in the possession of $386,000 worth of capital stock, which he admits, and which his hon. friend from Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) admits, has not cost him a cent. The stock has been issued to him, not for the purpose of building the road, but for the purpose of controlling the road. That hon. gentleman has got the capital stock in his possession, not because he has advanced the money to pay for it, not that the capital stock represents actual capital, but he has got this fictitious capital into his possession for the purpose of controlling the enterprise, and having obtained it, he is using it in manipulating the concern for the advancement of his own pecuniary interests. That is admitted, no man in this House can doubt it, the circumstances of the case prove it. What those manipulations may be, what is concealed under the surface, I do not know. We are told he has made a contract, but we are not informed what its character or nature is. I am in ignorance as to whom it is made with, as to what the terms are, as to what the hon. member is likely to make out of the transaction in which he has invested no money, in which he has invested nothing but a little time and trouble. The hon. gentleman, in his speech, has made a pitiful appeal to this House not to make him the scapegoat for the sins perpetrated by other members. He does not deny he has perpetrated a sin, and deserves punishment, but he beseeches us not to select him as an example, not to make him a scapegoat for a state of things which has existed for years. It is high time somebody should be made a scapegoat; it is high time we should retrace our steps; it is high time that the independence of Parliament should be more strictly guarded than it has been for some years passed. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) said he would not take up the political aspect of the case. In that he showed a great amount of discretion. The political aspect of the case is the important one; it is that which makes this transaction and transactions of this nature dangerous to the country. Here is a Parliament elected by the people to guard their rights and to look after their interests, but in this Parliament, there are a certain number of members who are looking after their own interests. Now, we have a Statute which imposes a fine of $2,000 on every member of the House for every day he sits in the House, while he has a contract with the Government.

Will anyone assert, that if a member of Parliament has entered into a contract with the Crown for the performance of certain work, he is an offender greater than those who deal in charters, who enter into speculative arrangements, who get land grants from the Government, not in good faith, nor for the purpose of carrying out a contract, but for the purpose of enriching themselves by means of this contract brokerage? So long as this state of things exists, this independence of Parliament is a mockery. This state of things that is countenanced by the Government, and which they ask us to support by our votes in this House to-night, is even more reprehensible than any violation of the Independence of Parliament Act could be. The business of dabbling in charters by members of this House should be summarily ended. No man should be allowed to obtain a charter for a railway who does not obtain it in good faith, and who does not give evidence and pledge of his intention, or the intention of those associated with him, to proceed in the construction of the work for which he asks the charter. Not one charter intended is obtained in this House under any such circumstance. Hon. members obtain charters confessedly and avowedly for the purpose of selling them and making profit out of them. In 1695, when Sir John Trover, speaking of the House of Commons of England, was expelled for promoting a Bill, what would the House have thought of him if in addition to promoting a bill he had got a charter for his own speculative purposes, and got $386,000 of the capital stock into his hands for the purpose of controlling the company, manipulating the concern, and putting into his pocket all the bonuses granted and gain made out of it. Not only would they have expelled him from the House, but they would have sent him to the Tower. We are asked to sanction a state of things entirely subversive of the independence of Parliament, a state of things which ought to be ended summarily, and I will vote for the motion to give the Bill the three months' hoist, and shall oppose on every occasion the permitting of the existence of any such transactions as those which have been shown in this matter to have taken place among the parties interested.

Mr. ORTON. I am considerably amused at hon gentlemen opposite assuming to be extremely virtuous upon this question of giving aid to railways and allowing members of Parliament to become contractors and active promoters of railway enterprises. If my recollection is correct, I remember years ago, when the leader of the present Opposition in this House was the leader of the Government in the Province of Ontario, he inaugurated a scheme by which Government aid, to a very large extent, was given by the Province of Ontario to railway enterprises in that Province, and by means of that scheme, which he inaugurated, and for the purposes of which $1,900,000 provincial money was devoted, and the Province of Ontario mortgaged for a further sum of $100,000 a year for 20 years, members of the Local Legislature of the Province of Ontario were directly influenced. It is within the memory of members of this House that the late Sandfield Macdonald was defeated by only one of a majority; and how did the then leader of the Opposition obtain the majority which enabled him to remain in power so long in that Province? Simply by operating that scheme of giving aid to railways, and there was not a portion of Ontario but had a railway scheme of some kind. Hon. members of the Local Legislature understood this aid was to give them grants of money for their sections, and members of that House, who were elected to support the late Sandfield Macdonald's Administration, turned round directly and supported the Administration of the leader of the Opposition. And yet we hear the hon. gentleman getting up here and denouncing this system of members of Parliament becoming directors of railways.

Mr. CHARLTON.

Mr. McCRANEY. Name one member of the Local Legislature.

Mr. ORTON. I can name any number of members of the Local Legislature——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name one——

Mr. ORTON—that were elected to support the Sandfield Macdonald Administration, and it is within the recollection, I am sure, of every hon. member here who is old enough to remember the political events of that time that the late Sandfield Macdonald's Administration was only defeated by one of a majority, and, in a very few months, a very few days I may say, after the inauguration of that log rolling system which was inaugurated by the leader of the Opposition, his following in that House was largely increased.

Mr. McCRANEY. Name one member.

Mr. ORTON. I have already stated the broad fact which is within the recollection, not only of every member in this House from the Province of Ontario, but of every elector who took an interest in the political affairs of the country at that day. But, perhaps, after all, this system, which I say was inaugurated by the leader of the Opposition, may be a wrong one. He was certainly the first to inaugurate that system of aid to railways projected by members of Parliament, and, if the present Government are wrong, they are wrong because they have followed in the course which was inaugurated by him. Perhaps the day has arrived, I believe the day has arrived, when some measure ought to be introduced into this House to prevent hon. members from becoming directors of railways, but at the same time I agree that this is not the time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. ORTON. Why? The hon. gentlemen say "hear hear." I will give the reason why, because the railway under discussion is one of vast importance to the North-West, and, knowing as I do the character of the country through which it runs and the hardships which have been endured by the settlers, the hardy pioneers who went up to settle that country, I believe all consideration ought to be set aside at the present time in order to assist in the early construction of that railway as far as this House can possibly do. While upon that point, I desire to call the attention of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) to the very erroneous course he has taken for the interests of the people he represents, and I hope for his own sake he will reconsider the course he is about to take and will not vote for the three months' hoist of this bill, which means virtually that there shall be no effort made to construct this important railway and give the people of his own county the accommodation they have so long and so anxiously waited for. The hon. member for South Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright) also in his first remarks stated that he was a very earnest advocate of railway construction in the North-West and desired to see that country developed, but he went on to say that this charter should not be given, but this railway should be delayed for another year in order that an investigation should take place. I see no earthly reason why this charter should be delayed, or the apparent early opportunity of constructing that railway should be delayed in order to have an investigation. If the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) has acted in a manner improper for a member of this House, there is every opportunity for hon. gentlemen opposite to have an investigation without mixing it up with this charter. I think, after the assurance from the Government, that if in one month they find the hon. member for West Toronto, in the contract his company have made with these contractors, cannot show that it is made with men able to build that road, they will themselves take power to incorporate a company and see that the road is rapidly constructed, there is no hon. member in this House who desires to see the railway built this year and the people of that country get the accommodation they have so long waited for who can possibly vote for the amendment of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). I hope this Bill will receive no further opposition from members of this House. It is true there are some points that do not meet my approval in the course the hon. member for West Toronto has taken in this matter, and I cannot feel entirely in sympathy with him in regard to it. And I must state that the feeling prevails very largely throughout the North-West and Manitoba that the hon. member has perhaps used the position he occupies as president of this road in a manner that may possibly have delayed the construction of that railway. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) stated that he held the position, in consequence of the stock he held, of saying to any contractors: I have got what will give you control of that railway; and that is where the point comes in, and where the question arises in my mind whether the member for Toronto has not held his price too high for that control.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. ORTON. Hon. members may say "hear, hear." I quite agree with hon. gentlemen on that point, and I do honestly believe there must have been something to quarrel about, and I am not going to spare the hon. gentleman in that matter, but I desire to see the road constructed and no obstacles placed in the way. The feeling, howeveer, does prevail, notwithstanding the remarks of the hon. member for West Toronto, and I have just as much right to believe the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth), and I think the hon. member for King's has, perhaps, not been fairly treated in this matter. I think he has shown his position to be equally as good in this transaction as has the hon. member for West Toronto, and I would like to have seen the Government appoint trustees at once, after giving to the hon. member a just return for the exertions he had made and the expense he had undergone and the loss of time, for I do believe that hon. gentlemen cannot possibly go into the propagation of a railway scheme like that without expecting to receive some reward. I would feel far better satisfied if some trustee were appointed by the Government, at any rate to see that nothing more than a fair amount, a fair consideration, was received by the gentlemen who hold that charter. At the same time, I cannot possibly vote for the amendment of the hon. member for Northumberland, simply because it will delay, to an uncertain time, the construction of that very important railway.

Mr LISTER. The only true thing the hon. gentleman who has just sat down has said is, that the difficulty about this matter is that the price was too high.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. I think the hon. gentleman should not say it is the only true thing.

Mr. LISTER. One of the true things and probably the truest thing is, that the price of the charter has been too high. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty), as it appears, controlled this charter for some time, and for some reason which has not been explained here to-night, this road has not been built. I think I echo the feelings of every hon. gentleman on this side of the House, as well as on the other side, when I say that there is no person in this House but desires to see that road built, no person who does not desire to see the settlers in the North-West country relieved from the difficulties and disabilities under which they now labor, and who would not hail, I am sure, with pleasure any company that would be prepared to undertake the speedy construction of that road; but I say the Government are not discharging their duty in leaving the construction of the road in the hands of the men who now have it. I say, that in view of the disclosures which have been made here to-night, and which have been made in the committee room for two or three weeks or more, it will be scandalous if the Government permits the gentlemen who now control this road to retain control of it. We find the hon. member for West Toronto and his friends on the directorate are not railway builders at all, that they never had anything to do with railways. Most of them, I believe, are lawyers practicing in the city of Toronto. They never did know anything about railways, and I do not suppose they desire to know anything except to get rid of this railway. Now, we have this hon. gentleman supporting the Government, coming to the Government and getting from it the grant of this land, and we have the Government in defiance of their own promise made in the committee room, in defiance of their own demands made in the committee room, requiring that hon. gentleman to present to the committee proofs that he had the ability to construct the road, now asking Parliament to allow him to retain control of the road and to extend the time for completing it. I say, Sir, that it is a monstrous thing that members of Parliament, sitting here representing the people, are permitted to traffic in railway charters. It is a well known fact, that many hon. gentlemen opposite have received favors of this kind from the Government, and I repeat, it is a scandal, it is a burning disgrace upon this Legislature, that such a thing should be permitted. If the Government do not now take this matter up when it has been brought to their notice on evidence that cannot be contradicted, if they do not purge this House of the wrong that has been done by the hon. member for West Toronto, they will be equally guilty with him in the eyes of the people of this country. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman for Wellington to charge that the Local Legislature did this. No charge can be made against hon. gentlemen opposite, but some of them jump up and say: "Oh, but you did something of the same kind." Now, I challenge that hon. gentleman to mention one single member of the Local Legislature, who was a promoter of a railway company, receiving subsidies from the Local Legislature during the time my hon. leader was leading that House, or since. Sir, we all know that but for the hon. leader of the Opposition the Province of Ontario would have been badly off for railways. It was felt that the Province being rich, it was the duty of the Government to expend its surplus moneys in opening up that country. It was a wise policy, and time has proved it. The assessment rolls throughout that country will show it. There was nothing wrong in that; there is no hon. gentleman on this side of the House that objects to railways being subsidised. But what we do object to is that members of Parliament will come into this House and seek favors from the Government, which must inevitably handicap them, which must necessarily destroy the independence which they ought to have when they come here to represent their constituents. I say that is a thing which should be stamped out. It is a national disgrace that men should sit in this House who receive from the Government subsidies in money and lands for the construction of railways, who seek to get charters from this Parliament only for the purpose of trafficing in them. The evidence given is that this charter was obtained for that purpose only, and I must repeat the statement of my leader, that this House should stamp out this unclean thing, it should refuse to continue this charter. If the Government wish the construction of this road, they have the power to secure it. Let them do as they did when they gave a charter to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It is not necessary that a Bill should be passed here; the Government has an inherent power to grant a charter by letters patent to any company they think proper. There is no difficulty in the way of constructing this road, and at the same time Parliament can purge itself of this unrighteous act, and an act which degrades Parliament in the eyes of the public. Sir, it will afford me much pleasure to vote for the amendment, and I sincerely hope that it will be carried.

Mr. HESSON. About a year ago, it was my privilege to present petitions from Manitoba and the North-West in reference to the charter which is now under discussion in this House, calling upon the Government to assist a company which at that time were in possession of the charter, and to give them aid to enable them to make a contract to construct this road. The petition set forth the grievances under which the people suffered, the necessity there was that they should reach a market, and pointed out that they had been misled some years ago when the line of railway was diverted from the original survey, and that their circumstances were now such that unless some relief was granted them they would find it necessary to remove from the place they had settled in. I presented these petitions to the House, numerously signed by the old residents of my own county who had gone up to that new land. I took a deep interest in that matter, and the Government finally consented to give the same privileges to that road which they had given to the Manitoba and North-Western and to the Manitoba and South-Western. I understand in connection with the history of this road that in 1882 a charter was given to the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway, a contract was made and a certain amount of grading done from a place called Melbourne to Rapid City. The people were jubilant over the prospect of a railway, but for want of sufficient means the road was not constructed. The money that had been expended was lost, the work that had been done was not paid for, and the people were in a worse position than they had been before, from the contractors being unable to carry out the contract. The present company, the North-West Central, I understand, obtained a charter in 1884 and became possessors of the franchise of that road. In 1884 they were in the position of not having the same privileges, the same aid afforded them, that were afforded to other roads. The people, in Manitoba, therefore, had a perfect right to ask the Government to come to the assistance of this road, and I myself exerted my influence with the Government and members of this House, and presented petitions in favor of that project. I think one-third of my correspondence came from people in that region, urging me to use my influence in favor of that road. Now that was the policy of this Government and of this Parliament, and it was even supported by the leader of the Opposition and his friends. A deputation came down from Manitoba headed by the member from Minnedosa in the Local Legislature, and one or two other gentlemen of importance. That gentleman, Dr. Harrison, came here and remained some time endeavoring to induce the Government to get a free grant of land, as was done in the case of the other roads. But at that period it was impossible for the gentlemen holding the franchise to make a contract. It was impossible to get parties to undertake to build the railway. They required at least as good a foundation for raising money in the markets of the world as had other roads that were being constructed in that country. That free grant, I believe, was obtained sometime from the Government in the fall of 1885. It was charged against the member for West Toronto that he had not pushed sufficiently in the money market to obtain a contract for the construction of the road. It appears to me very plain that until he obtained the consent of the Government that they would put that road on the same footing as all other roads under construction in Manitoba and the North-West, he was absolutely incapacitated from obtaining parties to furnish money to carry out the work. He obtained from the Government an Order in Council for a free grant to be made to that company, except the expense of surveying. So far as I understand, the member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty), as president of the company, made every effort to obtain parties to enter into a contract to construct the road. It seems he made several trips to New York, and I think he crossed the Atlantic once or twice, and I am sure he has not been dilatory in the matter, but has always expressed himself most anxious to secure parties to build the railway. He was aware that the people of the North-West would not submit to any delay arising on his part, and feeling that he did all in his power I am not prepared to say that he has neglected any opportunity to make a contract for the construction of the road. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has taken a most peculiar course as the representative of that part of the country more specially interested. If the hon. gentleman was as anxious this year as he was last that the work should be constructed, that the line should be built rapi ly, he has taken a most peculiar position to-day in being prepared to grant only two weeks in order to allow the present company to establish the fact to the satisfaction of the Government that the present contractors are capable of carrying out the work and have means to complete it; but so strange is his conduct that he is yet in favor of voting for the three months' hoist, which will virtually kill the Bill. The hon. gentleman must have great confidence in the Government for he is willing that they should undertake the work and find a company that will construct it more rapidly than the company now under consideration, and yet within the next few days we may be assured the contractors will proceed with the work energetically and complete it at a much earlier period than the Government could do. It is not very long from now to the 1st of June, when, if the charter is extended to that time, the Government will by proclamation or otherwise, if satisfied of the ability of the contractors, give the charter effect. If not, we shall be in no worse position than we would be if the amendment of the member for Northumberland was adopted. I cannot believe the hon. member for Marquette is at all serious in his proposal. I am afraid he has made a very strange departure from the position he took in this House and the great efforts he made last year, if he seeks in any way to attempt or embarrass the Government in their desire to carry out this great work. I have such confidence in the Government—and the hon. gentleman has quite as much confidence, for he desired to give them full control of the work and put the present Bill aside—that I am satisfied to leave it to them to ascertain whether the contractors have sufficient means to carry out the work before they, the Government, complete the charter by issuing a proclamation. The Government have great responsibility resting upon them and I am prepared to trust them with that responsibility and am not disposed to interfere with the personal differences on the board of directors, and they should not be permitted to interfere with the success of this great enterprise. It is the imperative duty of the Government, understanding all the facts, not to be diverted by any personal disagreement on the board from what is their proper course towards this desirable road. I hope, therefore, in the interest of those for whom I speak, those from whom I have presented petitions and taken an interest in this matter and interviewed with other members of the Government from time to time asking them to place this company in the same position as other companies—and I claim I have a right to speak for those people—I hope the Government will take very good care that neither the quarrels with individual directors nor any other motive except that of the public interest will influence them in prosecuting and completing this important and necessary work at an early day.

Mr. FAIRBANK. The last three speakers on the opposite side of the House, namely, the member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), the member for Wellington (Mr. Orton), and the member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson), have evidently been endeavoring to place the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) in a position which he does not occupy. The arguments of those hon. gentlemen may have no weight in this Chamber, but they may have weight outside, where the question may not be thoroughly understood. They have endeavored to represent the member for Marquette as urging three months' delay. Such is not his position; such was not his position as a member of the Railway Committee. This proposition to renew the charter comes after a year's delay. No member in this Chamber, I venture to say, is more anxious for the railway, and feels that it will give the people who need it so much, and have waited for it so long, than the hon. member for Marquette. At the last session of the committee he asked if the promoter of the measure, the member for West Toronto, could not give satisfactory evidence of the ability of the company to do something within a short period. The Minister of Public Works informed the committee that they had not given such evidence. The member for Richmond and Wolfe has laid great stress upon the fact that a contract had been signed. Of the real metallic value of that contract we can form a pretty accurate estimation from the value which the Ministers themselves have placed upon it. So much value did they place upon it that the Minister of Public Works did not know who it was signed by, and had great difficulty in deciphering the names. This shows the value they themselves placed upon the contract, which the member for Richmond and Wolfe offers to this House as a voucher of their ability to do this work. This is not a matter of yesterday or of last week. The land subsidy has been a matter standing now for nearly one year. And I can well understand the objection of the member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) in regard to this matter being put beyond the control of this Parliament absolutely. He has shown no indication of wishing to delay the matter, or even opposition to the present promoters of the road, but instead he has been anxious that the matter should not be indefinitely delayed. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) has well asked what the stock amounts to. Stock, indeed, in the hands of inexperienced men, stock that is not all paid for, amounts to very little so far as finishing the road is concerned, but it may amount to considerable, and it has been shown in this instance to amount to considerable, in blocking the railway. The air brake is a very useful thing indeed on a railway after it is constructed, but brakes and delays are very little use until the railway is constructed. If I heard rightly, an attempt has been made to intimate that the leader of the Opposition considered the grants to this railway too large. I understood him to say nothing of the kind. I believe he did offer some objection to the large bonding power, but not to the grant given to the railway, and what weight the argument of the Minister Public Works had in answer to the Leader of the Opposition, that much larger grants were given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, I cannot understand. It is well within his knowledge, as it is within the knowledge of every hon. member of this House, that there are single miles of the Canadian Pacific Railway which cost more to construct than fifty miles of this road, because we have in the drawback against this undertaking, in the cost of the abandoned grade, an indication of the cost of grading, of about $2,000 a mile. It seems that during the enjoyment of these privileges and powers, absolutely nothing has been done by the company towards the construction of the railway. We were informed this afternoon that not a single shovel of earth has been turned over, and I think it is high time we should have some definite proof of the ability of the company to carry forward this most desirable undertaking, or failing that, we should put the charter in the hands of men who will build it.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There are one or two points to which I desire very briefly to call the attention of the House before the vote is taken. We have heard a great deal to night in relation to the disclosures which have been made. Hon. gentlemen opposite appear to have used that expression as if there was a certain state of facts established beyond the possibility of controversy. Now, let us look for a moment at what the disclosures—as they are called—happen to be in this case. The origin of all these disclosures, the first step in all these disclosures, was the statement by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth), that the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty), president, of the railway company, of which the hon. member for King's was a director, had not dealt fairly with him, that the understanding between those two gentlemen, as stated by the hon member for King's (Mr. Woodworth), was that out of the profits of this road, whatever they might be, the other members of the company were to get $50,000, and the balance, whatever it might be, was to be divided between those two gentlemen. That is the statement made by the hon member for King's (Mr. Woodworth). It implied, as you can readily understand, that these two gentlemen had entered into a conspiracy for the purpose of dividing a large share of the profits, after giving to their co directors a smaller share, whatever that might be. The best answer to this charge, so far as this particular debate is concerned, is to be found in the frank admission of the leader of the Opposition, who said after having heard what was stated in another place as well as here, that he came to the conclusion, which he frankly stated, that he saw nothing and had heard nothing which justified him in believing that the hon member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) was dealing unfairly or dishonorably by his colleagues on the board. The charge, if it meant anything, meant that he was so dealing dishonorably, and therefore, I think, we may take the statement of the leader of the Opposition as the best answer, so far as the evidence goes, to that statement made in the first instance. Then, Sir, the next statement we have is that the member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) was waited upon by a couple of gentlemen—if one may use that term in referring to either of them—in relation to this matter, and that they offered a contract to the member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) as president of this railway, and that he insisted as a condition precedent to anything being done that provision should be made for some $650,000 to go to him, who, in that letter, was described as "the boy." Now, Sir, these two gentlemen—these two persons—Mr. Pew, and his clerk, I believe, McConachie, who masqueraded for the moment in the character of a millionaire—these two persons, whose statement, if made in the most formal way against that hon. member or any hon. gentleman as a mere verbal statement, I venture to say no man in this House who knows them would take. Mr. Pew is well known by his connection with the Manitoba and South Western, and his conduct in connection with that road, the revelations made in the courts, and the expressions used toward him by the judges, all show that he is not a man upon whose statement, in relation to a matter of this kind, any gentleman should be put on his trial. And, Sir, the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth), after reading Mr. McConachie's letter in another place—and I may say we have been referring all evening not strictly within the rules of Parliament to what has been going on in another place—after reading this statement of Mr. McConachie, read what he said was going to be confirmatory evidence of that statement, in the form of a letter from Mr. Beaty himself. What was that letter? Certainly not a letter demanding any $650,000; not a letter demanding any advantage for himself or his company, but a distinct statement that the company should be kept distinct from the contractors—that the contractors should build the railway, and that the only object that he had in view was the construction of the railway. That was the statement made in that letter, a reasonable letter—a letter which any president of a railway company might write to any person with the most perfect innocence and propriety—might write to any person proposing to become a contractor for the construction of a railway in which his company was interested. That was the evidence given in proof of this statement of Mr. Pew, sustained as it was by this Mr. McConachie. Well, Sir, that is one disclosure which we have heard to-night. Then we had another statement which was that the member for West Toronto, as president of this company, was willing to enter into a contract with Mr. Macdonald, who, I believe, was the contractor in the original Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway, and who is to-day, I believe, very properly a claimant under this particular arrangement for work done on some fifty miles of that railway in grading it. Well, Sir, that particular contract simply showed that Mr. Macdonald was to build the railway, and the company were to have out of the proceeds of the bonds and subsidies and grants given to them, $1,500 a mile which was to go to the ordinary operations of the company—not to the member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty)—but to the ordinary operations of the company connected with the equipment of the road, the working and running of the road, and all the incidents which everyone knows are connected with a railway after it passes from the hands of the contractor into the hands of the company. Anyone who knows anything of railways knows that there are enormous expenses connected with the construction of railways after they have passed from the hands of the contractors into the hands of the company. That was the proposal made; what was there wrong in it? Nothing wrong of any kind—nothing justifying the expressions used by hon. gentlemen opposite about disclosures, as if there were something which had been proved against the hon. member for West Toronto which would not only justify the refusal of this charter to him, but justify his expulsion from this House, if these statements were exactly as they were put by hon. gentlemen opposite, rather by suggestion and insinuation, rather by the use of the expression "after the disclosures we have heard," than by any specific charge they have ventured to make. Now, Sir, these are the disclosures about which we have heard so much. Then, the hon. gentleman who has just sat down said that a form of contract had been submitted to the Railway Committee, but that it was so utterly insufficient, so utterly unworthy of credit, that the hon. gentleman who leads the House at this moment was unable to read the name attached to it. Well, I remember being up in West Northumberland, I think, when the first election took place of the hon. gentleman who now represents that constituency in this House. There were a number of my old friends there. I remember one of them showing me a letter written to him urging him strongly to support the liberal candidate, and asking me whom the letter came from. I said I could not make out the signature; the letter was then passed around the room, but no one could make it out; and then it came out that it was the signature of the hon. member for West Durham. Yet nobody would say for a moment that because there was a difficulty in making out his signature, therefore he is a most insignificant person, who is not to be considered in any matter in which he may be interested. That is the newest doctrine I have heard, that the difficulty of reading a signature is proof that the signer is unworthy of credit or consideration; and yet that is the argument put forth to prove that this form of contract submitted to the committee was unworthy of consideration. Then, Sir, we are told that it is unworthy of a member of Parliament to be connected with railways that receive subsidies from the Government. Well, Sir, that is a broad question, a large question, one that may fairly be dealt with on its merits. It has not been held to be unworthy in the past, at any rate, and no hon. gentleman has a right to charge any hon. member with unworthiness, with disgracing his position, or with bringing the character of Parliament in contempt, because he does that which members of Parliament, up to this time, have been doing with the most perfect impunity. I referred in another place to a remarkable illustration which we have at this moment before Parliament; I mean the Hudson Bay Railway Company, of which the hon. member for Selkirk, Mr. Sutherland, is the president. That hon. gentleman is in England at this moment promoting that railway. That railway has received large subsidies from the Government—larger subsidies, I am inclined to think, than any of the other branch railways—double the area in land of any other branch railway that has been subsidised in the North-West. Its president, who is a member of this House, is an hon. gentleman, who is not a friend of the Government, who was elected as an opponent to the Government. I made this statement in another place, and the hon. member for Northumberland thought he had me; in fact, he has told me two or three times, in his own good natured way, that he had a fair shot at me when he pointed out that Mr. Sutherland's conduct in the House indicated that he had been influenced somewhat by the fact that he was the president of a company which had been the recipient of a large subsidy from the Government. That hon. gentleman has not been in this House during this Session except two or three times; although, I venture to think, that his constituents feel that he is employed much more in their interests in England than if he were here. But he was in this House last Session at times. He did not vote very often, it is true; he was away a good deal, I believe, in connection with this enterprise. The only party vote I have been able to find at which he was present, on the 10th of April, was a direct vote of want of confidence in the Government in amendment to going into Committee of Supply, and the hon. gentleman on that occasion voted with the Opposition against the Government. That is the only vote he gave last Session of a party character. He voted two or three times on question on which the votes were scattered, members on both sides being so mixed up that one could not tell from their votes their party proclivities.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does not that rather sustain my position that he did not often vote against the Government.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). He voted against the Government whenever he was here, except in connection with Pacific Railway matters; and if hon. gentlemen opposite are prepared to say that Mr. Sutherland, whom they supported at the last election, whom they did their very best to elect, and upon whom when in power they lavished all kinds of favors, is a man who sold himself, prostituted his position and violated his pledges to his constituents, for the sake of a subsidy, let them say so; yet that record of last year remains. Well, Sir, what have we been doing? Have we been saying, in connection with the Hudson Bay Railway, that we regard it as something to be deprecated and opposed, that a member of Parliament should be a member of a railway company receiving subsidies from the Government? Why, Sir, so far from that, Mr. Sutherland has sent to this country from England a cablegram in which he asked certain amendments to be made to his charter in order that he may more successfully float his scheme—a scheme based upon those subsidies; and this House has actually suspended its rules in order that the petition in favor of those amendments may be received, and that the necessary Bill may be carried through, so little does this House consider it derogatory to a member of Parliament to be president of a railway company receiving a subsidy from the Government. I think, therefore, judging from the conduct of this Parliament, I may fairly say that there is no ground for the attacks made on the hon. member for West Toronto.

Mr. MITCHELL. Oh, oh.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Not a bit of ground; and if the hon. gentleman whose pure soul I know is terribly horrified at the idea of a public man making the slightest use of his public position for his private objects—if the hon. gentleman says so, I am bound to accept his statement, but I would hardly have expected him to say so, from his general idea how public companies are organised and carried on.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is a wonderful statement, I can scarcely grasp it. State it plainly.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). If the hon. gentleman wants my reason, I will give it. An hon. gentleman who has sat in this House for sessions past, who has made use of his position in this House against a public corporation in this country, and who has openly avowed that he has done it because the manager of that corporation did not pay him the sum that he thought his services to that corporation were worth, it does not suit that hon. gentleman well to assume the high tone he has taken and exhibit the pure soul he has exhibited to-day.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad the hon. gentleman has got something specific. Go on, now.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Then, the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) was good enough to say what we had to guard against in this connection was the over-charging of these railways with capital account, and in consequence the imposing on the people too high tariffs in order to meet these charges. What is the fact? The first, the only fixed charge, practically, on these railway corporations, is the bonded debt. Parliament fixes the limitation of the amount of the bonded debt, and in this case, if I remember rightly, the bonded debt was limited to $20,000 a mile.

Mr. BLAKE. Put on another five.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Whether the amount be $20,000 or $25,000, the argument is precisely the same. The hon gentleman, as a member of this House, has, if I mistake not, not offered any opposition to this amount. It is quite true, the hon. gentleman is a member of the Railway Committee, but he has practically abdicated his function as a member of the committee, unless there is a party advantage to be gained, for we have never the advantage of seeing him at the meetings, except when an opportunity presents itself for party advantage, and then he always turns up. But it was his business to attend the meetings of the committee and oppose this amount being fixed, if he thought it was too high. It was not opposed, it was granted by the Railway Committee without opposition; it was assented to by Parliament without opposition, and therefore it is the limit fixed by Parliament, to which the fixed charges on that railway can be raised. It is therefore simply childish to talk about our having to be careful about the fixed charges, in view of the fact that they are within the purview of Parliament, that they have been fixed by Parliament, and may be guarded by Parliament in the future. Then, as to the grant of subsidy by the Government. There is not a dollar of subsidy granted by the Government or an acre of land, which is not dependent on the construction of the railway. Why do we give a grant? We give it that the people in that district may have the advantage of a railway running through it; and in this particular case we have declared that not an acre of land shall be given before fifty miles of the road are constructed, and then the balance of the subsidy shall only be given as the road is constructed, from time to time, on a fixed mileage. Under those circumstances, the subsidy which we give is one that must be earned before it can be received. It cannot be trafficked in, except upon the basis of the construction of the road; and the construction of the road is what is desired, when this Parliament gives a subsidy. Is there anyone opposed to the granting of a subsidy towards this road? Nobody, I have heard, has ventured to say the Government did not act wisely in granting the subsidy. Everybody admits the road runs through an important section of the country, and therefore deserves to be subsidised and assisted out of the public domain. We have had votes from the people of Manitoba, and from members of Parliament on both sides, in favor of granting a subsidy. There is no question whatever about that; and when we grant it in such a way that not one single acre will be given until fifty miles of the road are built, the only way in which trafficking can take place in reference to this charter is on the basis of the construction of the railway, thus giving the people the advantage of railway connection under the fixed charge agreed to by Parliament. We are told, however, that members of Parliament ought not in any way to be interested in railway charters. There are more ways than one in which a member of Parliament may be interested in a railway corporation. Suppose we declare that members shall not be so interested. I know there have been cases in which prominent members of Parliament were counsel for railway corporations. I know that presidents of important railway corporations in England have announced the opinions they had from counsel in Canada, members of Parliament, and even declared the amount, $2,000, which they paid for the opinion. That, of course, would not influence the particular gentleman who received it, in his parliamentary course, although it may be regarded as a somewhat significant fact that everything the corporation opposed in Parliament that hon. gentleman opposed as well. I do not say the two things are in any way connected, but if I were disposed to deal with the question in the spirit of hon. gentlemen opposite, I might assume that what is possible must be true. I might very well connect the two things together, and point out that a prominent member of this House could be connected with and influenced by a railway corporation just as easily and as well as if his name were in the charter and he was getting advantages as the result of his name being in the charter.

Mr. LANDERKIN. By printing contracts, for instance.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). In this particular case what we have to do is to see, if possible, that this railway is built. I believe its construction would have been commenced before this, but for the preliminary charge against the road for the fifty miles of grading done on the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway. It is a serious matter to ask contractors or capitalists to enter upon an enterprise of this kind with a first charge upon it of $100,000 to $125,000 for which they received nothing, since it is not as if this road had been graded on the present line and the company were to get the advantage of the work done, but they have to pay the amount on a piece of road which they are not permitted to use at all. That has been one of the difficulties to be contended with. The Railway Committee properly determined that these people should be paid, and so reported to this House, and this House is now asked simply this: that certain negotiations having taken place, certain progress having been made in the negotiations for the construction of the road, we shall not interrupt those negotiations until, at any rate, a reasonable time has elapsed in which it may be shown that they are negotiations looking to the construction of the railway or that they are not of a serious character. If we find that the company are unable to construct the railway; if we find that the president is unable to submit a substantial contract for its construction, the Government may be empowered to incorporate any other company that may undertake to build it. I wish most sincerely I could feel certain that in that event another corporation would come forward to build the railway.

Mr. MITCHELL. Amen.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I fear very much that the result of the defeat of this measure, whether it be defeated here or by the failure of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Beaty) to submit his contract to the Government by the 1st of June, will mean the postponement for a considerable time of the construction of that road, to the serious drawback to that part of the country. In the meantime we ought reasonably to give to the company the opportunity of submitting to the Government such a contract as will secure the construction of the road, and thus secure to the people of that section the advantage of its construction.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Before the motion is carried, I would like to make a few observations. I may say at the outset I am satisfied the practice of members of this House acting as presidents or contractors of railways, is contrary to the true spirit of the Independence of Parliament Act. I believe the time has arrived in the history of this country when such a state of things shall not be permitted longer to exist. The hon. the Minister of the Interior says, and he no doubt well knows, that it may be possible for members in the House, whose names do not appear as contractors in railway companies, to evade the law. He, I suppose, states of his own experience in connection with the Gazette Printing Company that it is possible for him not to appear as a member of that company, when every person in this country feels and believes that he is. He is but speaking his own experience that, while he is able to receive public money as sitting in this House, he is able to render nugatory the Independence of Parliament Act and draw large sums of money for work which he has never performed. Now, with that allusion to that hon. gentleman, I will proceed to state that the system pursued by the Government of Ontario in constructing the great network of railways that permeates every part of the Province of Ontario has been very different to that which has been pursued in regard to Manitoba. Is there any man in this House who has studied the railway system that was inaugurated by my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition in the year 1871, who will stand up to-day and state upon his reputation that the money that was then appropriated for railway aid was not judicious, and that it has not been well expended?

Mr. McCALLUM. For political purposes.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to know if the hon. member for Monck (Mr. McCallum) can state one single instance where an appropriation has been made without its being submitted to Parliament. It has been in the public interest; it has been expended in the public interest; it has contributed to the development and to the welfare of the Province of Ontario very materially. There is scarcely a county that has not been aided, and with all the progress and the enterprise which has characterised the Administration in the Province of Ontario ever since the hon. the leader of the Opposition inaugurated that system, it has been marked by progress, and they have had railways built, long lines of railways stretching from one portion of the country to the other, which have received aid from the Province and have been a great benefit in developing it. I state here in my place in the House that I do not believe that the principle is right of allowing members of this House to act as directors of railways that approach this House for public aid. I do not believe that any gentleman in this House should be a member of any company, whether it is a railway company, a newspaper company or any other company, that receives public aid from this House. I believe the principle has a tendency to demoralisation. I do not say that it always produces such results, but I do say that it has the appearance of evil and should be shunned. It matters not to me whether some members on this side of the House in the last fifty years have chanced to be directors of a railway company. I do not admire the principle any more for that, and it is high time that the people of the country should know who are those in this House who are directors or presidents of railways. Fancy, for instance, the Minister of Railways being a president of a railway company, being a member of the Government, coming to the Government and asking them to aid that railway scheme. Why, in the noon-day of the nineteenth century, it would appear improbable that, in a British House, a member of the Government should be found so barefaced and so shameless as to come to Parliament, where he was a member of the Government, and ask for aid to a railway in where he was interested. The principle will lead to nothing but demoralisation. It will lead the people of this country to look at this House as being composed of placemen, who are sitting here and are maintained here by the public money. It is a position that is beneath the dignity of this House. Since this matter came up, a serious question has arisen in connection with it, and I have looked through the "Parliamentary Companion" and ascertained how the House is composed. It may not be a pleasing duty, it may be a disagreeable duty, but I feel it is a duty I owe to myself to state what is there stated by the members, I suppose, in giving their reports to the author of this book; and I find that we have in this House a great many who are connected with different railways in this country, and I regret to say there are a great many there who have come to this House and asked for public money to aid the railways with which they were connected. It is a direct blow, a direct violation of the independence of Parliament. It is as much so as the case of a member of a printing company or a newspaper company who manages to evade the Independence of Parliament Act by keeping his name out of the company, though he says it can be done. He knows it can be done, and the people of the country know it can be done, and know it has been done, and that public money has been paid to that gentleman and the firm to which he belongs, for work he never performed. Prices fourteen times higher than should have been paid, were paid to that member and his firm for printing on behalf of this House. I have looked through this list and I will let you know what I find. I find that the member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) is a president of a railway company, and that that company has received a large grant of land from the Government of this country. I think that is indecent. Can it be said they have no railway men in Manitoba? Can it be said that, from one end to the other of this broad Dominion, there are no men capable of building a railway, that there are no railway contractors, that they have to go to West Toronto, and get a lawyer, who perhaps does not know a railway locomotive from a steamboat, to go there and construct their railway; and the Government find this a pressing emergency when this Bill cannot be delayed any longer, though I believe the charter was granted three years ago, and, in order to get this lawyer to teach the railway men how to build railways in the North-West, they grant him this money. He will be a pretty independent man. He will be most likely to vote against the motion of my hon. friend from Northumberland. He received 6,400 acres per mile for building this road. He has never built any of the road yet, although he is a lawyer and gets great credit for his efforts on behalf of this road, and we have it stated to-day that he had not put in one spade in the construction of this road. We find that he is associated with other members in this House. It is really an alarming state of things that railway men are so scarce in this country, and that there is not enough enterprise outside of this House, but that they are obliged to come into this House to get gentlemen to construct these railways. When they built the Canadian Pacific Railway, did they take members in this House to construct the railway? Did not that road go speedily enough to suit the country? Did they then plead that it was a necessity, that they could not get anyone outside of the House to build that railway? That great railway they gave to gentlemen outside this House, but in this instance they are obliged to act in the interests of Manitoba. The hon. member for Perth (Mr. Hesson) spoke of the burning necessity of that road, and of the commendable enterprise manifested by the member for West Toronto in going up into the North-West and building that road for these people. They knew nothing, apparently, about building railways, and were obliged to come to the hon. member for West Toronto, to take a lawyer to construct the road. Now has it not a peculiar look about it?

Mr. MITCHELL. It looks funny.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. member has associated with him the member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Hay). Well, it is very nice to see the members for Toronto West and Centre united and pressing together so energetically in getting railway facilities for Manitoba. They have associated with them the member for Bonaventure (Mr. Riopel), the member for Rimouski (Mr. Billy), and I believe the member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) is also on that board. Well, it is a gratifying thing to the people of Manitoba to know that there are such benevolent members in this House who are prepared to sacrifice their comforts to construct railways for the people of Manitoba, and who receive 6,400 acres of land per mile, when the construction of it, perhaps, is not worth more than 640. Why, in Ontario there were many railways where the engineering difficulty was very much greater, and where the obstacles were very much greater, as in the case of the Stratford and Lake Huron Railway, which was built for something like $3,000 a mile.

Mr. IVES. Tell us what the rails cost.

Mr. LANDERKIN. If the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe will bear with me, I will come to him presently.

Mr. IVES. But tell us what the rails and the ties cost that were put on this $3,000 a mile railway?

Mr. MITCHELL. Dry up, Ives. Give him a chance.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I will tell you just as much about rails and ties before I am done, as you will want to hear.

Mr. IVES. You don't know anything about it. You know more about physic.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. gentleman says I know nothing about it. The hon. member knows about cattle, because he has a ranche down in Texas. He is one of these patriots.

Mr. IVES. Now he is going to be amusing.

Mr. LANDERKIN. He is one of those patriots, one of those loyalists——

Mr. IVES. Who don't take up land in the North West.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I must condemn this. I do not care who the man is, I condemn that principle, I believe it tends to demoralise this Legislature; I believe it tends to degrade this Legislature. I find again that the hon. member for North Hastings, who is the Minister of Customs in this House, thought it not beneath him to approach this Legislature for a railway of which he was president, the North Hastings Railway which received from this House $1,500 a mile, or $10,500.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman should stick as near to the truth as possible. I was president of that road four or five years ago. I have had nothing to do with it for that length of time, neither do I own a single dollar's worth of stock at the present moment.

Mr. LANDERKIN. We may just as well take the statements as they fly.

Mr. BOWELL. I admit I was president of the road, but not when that application was made.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I get my information from the "Parliamentary Companion," and the hon. gentleman when he stands up——

Mr. BOWELL. I know the hon. gentleman does not wish to misrepresent me. I stated that when that application was made to the Grand Trunk on behalf of that company for aid, in order to enable them to complete it, I had nothing whatever to do with that road, and have not had for some years. I think the "Parliamentary Companion" says I was, not that I am.

Mr. MITCHELL I notice you helped the Grand Trunk.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; and I will be glad to do so again.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I want to put this matter right. I do not want to be accused by any member of this House as standing up and making statements that are untrue. I do not care who the member is, I want him to understand I am not in the habit of doing so. I read my information from the "Parliamentary Companion:"

"He was for eight years Grand Master of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Orangemen, is president of the Belleville and North Hastings Railway, was editor and proprietor of the Belleville daily and weekly Intelligencer newspaper for a lengthened period."

But it appears that he has not discovered the way to utilise it like the Minister of the Interior, who was younger in the House, but older in the arts. Well, the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Bryson) is a director of the Pontiac and Pacific Junction Railway. I see he is not in the House, but I would not fear to make the statement if he were here. I make it from the "Parliamentary Companion," and I presume he is responsible for the statements contained therein. That road received $3,200 per mile, or a total of $272,000. I would like to know how he votes. I understand that his father is a good Reformer, that his brother is a good Reformer, and I will leave it to you, Mr. Speaker, to this House and the country to say whether this has anything to do with the way he votes. The hon. gentleman for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) is President of the Caraquet Railway.

Mr. BLAKE. Gloucester.

Mr. LANDERKIN. He received $3,200, or a total of $76,800. Now, I do not say that this is all that has been voted to that railway, but that is all that was voted in one year. I see that the Secretary of State, the member for Terrebonne, is also director of a railway, and I presume that he will look after the interests of that railway.

Mr. MITCHILL. He is getting a pretty good slice of that railway.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I see that the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby)—and it is a strong sense of public duty that leads me to speak of this hon. member, for I have the highest respect for him—I am sorry to see that he acts as a director of a railway that has received public aid, though, I will not say that the railway for which he is acting receives aid now, he is a director of the Massawippi Railway, and of the Waterloo and Magog Railway that have got public money, but I have not had time to search the railway subsidies all through, nor do I know that these railways are now getting aid. I find that my hon. friend from Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall) is president of the Massawippi Railway, and he is a director of the Quebec Central. I find that in 1884 this House voted to that railway $211,200.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is only an instalment.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think that the hon. member for Sherbrooke has since been more solid than he used to be. I find that the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Hay)—I have the greatest respect for that gentleman. He certainly should know better, because he was brought up a good Reformer, but when they get out of the ranks, how soon they get into ways that are dark—I see that he is a director of the Credit Valley Railway.

Mr. HAY. Ten years ago.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Now I will speak of the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), he was a director, as stated in the "Parliamentary Companion," of the International Railway, and received a very modest amount. He received in a year only $170,000.

Mr. IVES. I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentlemen's story, but I never was a director of the International Railway.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Then you had better change the "Companion." You had better get out of that company altogether. I am very glad that you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, are in the Chair because I am going to refer to the Speaker of the House. The hon. member for Frontenac, I observe, is a director of the Kingston and Pembroke Railway, and received $3,200 per mile, amounting to $48,000. I see the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Mackintosh) is not left out. He is president of the Ottawa Colonisation Company and Gatineau Railway Company and has received $320,000.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I never got one dollar; I am sorry to say.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It was voted to the hon. gentleman. It may be all spent by this time, and I will give the hon. gentleman credit for his statement that he has not a dollar of it now. I come now to the hon. member for Compton, the Minister of Railways. He is president of the International Railway, which runs from Montreal through the State of Maine. I wonder how the hon. member for North Perth and the hon. member for North Huron like the idea of our money being spent in the State of Maine, in order to make the Minister of Railways probably a millionaire. Those hon. gentlemen will go and talk to the farmers about how they are abused and about how they stood up for the farmers; nevertheless they assisted in granting that sum to the Minister of Railways and the member for Richmond and Wolfe. The member for Compton received in one year $156,000, no doubt principally to be expended in the State of Maine. In another year he had voted, and I believe both those hon. gentlemen voted for it, $170,000 a year for fifteen years, a total of $2,550,000.

Mr. HESSON. Did any hon. gentleman on the Opposition side of the House vote for that grant?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I pity them if they did. The Hudson Bay Railway has been spoken of by the Minister of the Interior. That appears to be a national railway. It is projected by a gentleman who lives in Manitoba; he has got the money, and I hope that hon. gentleman will not allow any grant that has been made to that railway to change his principles. He is doing a great work for the country, as the Minister of the Interior bears testimony, and I hope he will remain solid, although he gets aid to complete a national undertaking. I see the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Wallace), is director of the Albert Southern Railway. I do not suppose it had any influence upon him; he is generally pretty stable. I do not see the name of the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) figuring in connection with railway companies, but he is president of the York Farmers' Colonisation Company, and I suppose that is something about as handsome as a railway grant. I see the member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) is director of the Pontiac and Pacific Junction Railway Company.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is a fat thing.

Mr. LANDERKIN. He received $32,000 a mile or $272,000. He is generally pretty solid, and when the division bell rings he is on hand.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). What about the hon. member for Queen's.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I have only given one instalment, and I will not take up the time by going through more names. The picture is a sad one to contemplate. If the people really understood the true inwardness of the working of Parliament they would come to the conclusion that the members elected come here to serve their own special interests, and neglect the general interests. It is contrary to the idea of representative government that on almost every page you find violations of the spirit of the Independence of Parliament Act on the part of most of those who support the Government of the day, and it looks bad. If the Government felt their responsibility, and had a higher sense of the dignity and honor devolving on them, they would not allow their followers to be placed in such a position. The dignity and honor and the future of this country demand that this state of things should cease, and I hope when the people thoroughly and fully understand the matter they will put an end to this system, and that at the close of this Parliament.

Mr. BOWELL. I desire to acquit the hon. gentleman of any intention to misrepresent the position I hold in regard to any railways, because the "Parliamentary Companion," and that for 1885, states that I am connected with a railway; it says "is president of the Belleville and North Hastings Railway." If it had said "was" it would have been strictly correct. That railway now forms a part of the whole Midland system and has been owned by and in possession of the Grand Trunk Railway Company for some years, and I have had nothing to do with it directly or indirectly since, nor for some time before it passed into the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You got the money.

Mr. BOWELL. That is not the point. The Grand Trunk Company has not accepted the money. I exceedingly regret the company did not accept the money and complete the road, extending four or five miles, and connect the Ontario Central with the Midland system that has been built running south and east.

Mr. MITCHELL. I rise to a personal explanation. The Minister of the Interior made some reference to me, in fact he slightly went out of his way, as I thought, to refer to my conduct in connection with the Grand Trunk, and those to refer to a debate which I think is entirely out of place on this occasion. I may say to the hon. gentleman that if he wishes to attack me about my public acts or conduct he will find me ready to meet him at any time. That hon. gentleman has chosen to say that I have boasted that I brought before Parliament a private grievance and assailed the Grand Trunk because of that private grievance. I deny it; it is not true. I have never done so. I have never boasted in this Parliament that I brought the Grand Trunk before Parliament for the purpose of ventilating any private grievance I have had with them. That hon. gentleman, and those who are associated with him, and the tools of the Grand Trunk in this House and elsewhere——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MITCHELL. You shut up with your order. He has chosen to try to assail me because I had independence enough, when the Grand Trunk Company attempted to override this House, when the hon. gentleman presiding over what he professed to call the leading organ——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MITCHELL. Where am I out of order? Let any of the hon. gentlemen who are cackling behind on the back benches state where I am out of order. I will keep in order, and I am in order when I say that the hon. gentleman who presided over what he called——

Mr. McCALLUM. I rise to order. I do not think the hon. gentleman is in order when he calls the members of this House tools of the Government.

Mr. BLAKE. He said that hon. gentleman behind him were cackling.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must confine himself to a personal explanation.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, the hon. gentleman who poses in a public position——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MITCHELL.—chose to step out of his way and attack me, who have occupied an independent position in this House——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MITCHELL. If I could get my eye on the fellow on those back benches who is calling order, I would deal with him. The hon. gentleman has chosen to attack me because he says I have introduced into the discussions of this House my personal grievances against a public company. I challenge him to point out where I have ever done so. I have known occasions where that gentleman and the like of him have attempted——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman must confine himself to the explanation.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am giving the explanation, and I appeal to this House whether I am not justified in——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear; chair, chair.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not going to allow any man to attack me and impute motives to me, and assail my reputation and public character, a public character that stands as well as that of any man in this House. No man is going to do that with impunity, and the man who does it has to take what he gets. I say that while that gentleman, the Minister of the Interior, before he occupied that position, claimed, as he did, that he presided over the most important paper—the most important public journal in Quebec——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MITCHELL—that that railway company——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is not a personal explanation.

Mr. MITCHELL. Excuse me, Sir, I am in my right.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order; chair, chair.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am in my right. I say that hon. gentleman has charged me ——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order; chair, chair.

Mr. MITCHELL. That hon. gentleman has charged me with assailing the Grand Trunk Company. He has imputed motives to me and, Sir, they are not true. He has charged me with doing in my public capacity what I have never done, but I will tell you what I have done and what he has not dared to do, because his bread and butter depended on it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MITCHELL. When the Grand Trunk Company through their president, their active manager, Mr. Hickson, wrote a letter threatening this Government and Parliament three years ago, that if they dared to give legislation to the Canadian Pacific Railway they would bring condign punishment on the Government, when the hon. member over there, the hon. gentleman who poses now as an independent man, as a member of the Cabinet, did he dare——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like to see the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Townshend) who is calling order, come down here and face me himself.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have asked the hon. gentleman to confine himself to a personal explanation.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am defending myself.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think you are. That is the decision of the Chair, and I hope the hon. gentleman will accept it. If he has any personal explanation the House, I am sure, will listen to him, but he cannot go beyond it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am endeavoring to confine myself to a personal explanation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to say that I said nothing whatever, and while I quite agree with those who did call him to order, I did not myself call him to order.

Mr. MITCHELL. I accept the hon. gentleman's explanation—I was going to say apology, but I thought he was the hon. gentleman who made the noise. What the Minister of the Interior said was this, that I had made use of my position to assail the Grand Trunk Railway Company and to gratify personal grievances. He said I boasted in this House that I had done so. Now, Sir, I never boasted in this House that I had done so; and I tell that hon. gentleman that when he stated that, he stated what he knew was not correct, because I had never done so; whatever might be my private feelings, I had never boasted of it. I have the courage of the convictions I entertain; and, as I stated, when he imputes that motive to me, I state to this House, and I am in order in stating, some of the reasons which influenced him; and when Mr. Hickson openly threatened this House and Parliament, and this country; when he and his officers openly outraged this Parliament by stealing legislation through it; when I assailed him and brought him almost to the bar of the House; and when the Government of the country had to put a notice on the paper to withdraw the legislation which he stole through Parliament, that hon. gentleman who occupies the position of Minister of the Interior did not dare to resent the insult which was thrown upon this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; order.

Mr. MITCHELL. What is out of order?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman can make a personal explanation.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am making a personal explanation, and I am making a pretty stringent personal explanation, too. I wish to say one word more.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order, order. The hon. gentleman will please sit down when the Chair rises. The hon. gentleman is entitled, as I said before, to make a personal explanation, but in doing so he is not entitled to make attacks on others.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) allow me to interpose for a moment? I might suggest to the hon. gentleman, upon whom certainly a severe attack has been made, that after the ruling of the Chair, it would perhaps be better that he should make his explanation on a motion for adjournment—I have no doubt any hon. gentleman will move the adjournment of the debate and give him the opportunity to reply.

Mr. MITCHELL. As, Sir, you have ruled that I can only confine myself to a personal explanation, as I thought I was only doing that, and as it seems to be the impression that I should not go as far as I am going, I will reserve my remarks for the present. I want to give this hon. Minister just a bit of my mind.

Mr. McCALLUM. I wish to make a few remarks with regard to some of the expressions which have been used by hon. gentlemen opposite. A good deal has been said about the independence of Parliament. I am a pretty old man, and I have lived a good while. I have got a good memory and I know, Sir, that from 1867 to 1872 these gentlemen on the other side were then, as they are now, always crying out for the independence of Parliament. It was one of the planks in their platform that they should keep the people's representatives free from favors from the Crown. But, Sir, when they crossed to the other side they forgot all their pledges; they scattered their principles to the four winds of heaven. When they talk about the independence of Parliament, the electors of the country know well what they mean. They know they are using that cry as the means of getting into power. No sooner did they get into office than they let contracts and gave employment to members of this House and members of the Government. They had a contract with the Speaker in the Chair, and he farmed it out. Now they tell us about the independence of Parliament, and that no man should be a director of a railway; and the member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin) spoke to-night about the railway grants in the Province of Ontario. The hon. member for Grey spoke about the purity of the grants to railways in the Province of Ontario. I had the honor of a seat in that House at the time those grants were made, and they were made on a different principle from what the grants have been made here. I am sustained in the language I used in this House on former occasions by no less a gentleman than the present Prime Minister of Ontario in reference to those grants. How were those grants made? Sandfield Macdonald's Government was turned out of power because it gave as much as $1,500,000 to aid railways in the thinly settled districts of the Province; but when the hon. member for West Durham came into power, he found that that was not sufficient to control the House, and he added $400,000 more to it. He set up $2,000,000 as a bribe, as a railway fund, and he said: "Send a man to support me, and I will give him a railway grant." I can remember a few who went back on their party in order to get railway grants. Now, there was a difference between the hon. member for West Durham and myself last year, when I said that when he brought down the resolutions, we were to have five days time to consider them.

Mr. MITCHELL. I rise to a question of order. What have we to do with all this ancient history of quarrels in Ontario ten years ago? I ask the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. The debate has wandered off a good deal to the question of the independence of Parliament. I hope the hon. gentleman will try to confine himself as much as possible to the question of the railway charter.

Mr. McCALLUM. I do not think any action of any member of this House in promoting a railway will affect his vote in the House. Does the hon. member for Grey mean to say that the hon. member for Pontiac, or the hon. member for West Toronto, has been influenced in their votes in this House by grants given to railways in which they have been interested? Does he mean to say that the action of the Government in giving lands to assist in the construction of railways in the North-West has anything to do with the way hon. members vote in this House? It is too ridiculous. If there is anything the so-called Reform party has admired the hon. member for West Durham for, it has been his action in reference to railway assistance, because it has had the effect of controlling the Province of Ontario to this day. They may talk about the independence of Parliament. If the House will permit me, I will read the words of the present Premier of Ontario at the London banquet, where the leader of the Opposition was called the uncrowned king. This is what Mr. Mowat said:

"We have been able to maintain the Liberal party in power for thirteen or fourteen years, and I rejoice to know that we are not ashamed of the record, and I do not forget, and the people of this country will not forget, during that time we have held the fort, and the Liberal party has been in power in Ontario, it is owing to our distinguished guest. He has fought the battle by which the Ontario Parliament has held power, and I am convinced has spared no effort to retain it. He entered upon that task under circumstances of great discouragement. Our friend was then a new man in parliamentary life. He had opposed to him an old parliamentarian. He had opposed to him the whole Tory party of this country, and likewise a large portion of the Reform. Mr. Mackenzie had the affection of a large number of the Reformers. Mr. Blake had to contend with those who had the support of the whole Conservative party, and a large section of our own party, but he struggled with a wisdom and ability that could not be surpassed, and after the first general election he changed condition with the parties, and he found himself with a majority in the first instance of one."

There is the point where the hon. member for West Durham and I disagree. I said that he made that into a majority of twenty-five with the railway swag, but he denied it and said it was nine.

Mr. BLAKE. Nineteen.

Mr. McCALLUM. I leave you and Mr. Mowat to settle it between you. Mr. Mowat added:

"But that majority soon became a wise majority under his management, and the result was a strong Government to which we have succeeded."

What does that mean? Does it not mean that the majority jumped to the side the corn was on? That is the way the so called Reform party in the Province of Ontario has been able to hold that Province for some time. But that is nothing new to those hon. gentlemen. When on that side of the House from 1867 to 1872 they talked about purity, but when they get over here it was corruption in many branches of the public service, and the electors of this country know it. They used to cry that the Conservative party of this country was corrupt, but when the Grit Government went before the electors in 1878, they were soon turned out. When we come to the question before the House, I say the hon. member for West Toronto has been laboring hard in this matter; he has given two years of his valuable time, and spent some money, and what has he got in return? He has got $380,000 of the old stock, on which 10 per cent. has been paid. Can any man tell me of the first subscribed stock of any railway in this country, except the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is worth 2 cents on the $1 to-day. I do not know of one except the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) has spent two years of valuable time and some money in crossing to England, going to the United States several times, and working up this scheme to a certain point. Hon. gentlemen say he should not have an hour's delay, but that we should cut off his head at once. But, why this precipitated action? Have we not the authority of the Government that if he does not show his ability to go on with the work by the month of June, the Government will charter another company to construct the road? Should we not give the hon. gentleman another chance, now that it appears there is every probability of a company being secured by him who will build the road. I am not going to go back on the interests of that section, simply because there happens to be a difference of opinion between the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty), and the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth). Let them settle their own difficulties, I have nothing to do with them. What I look to is the construction of this railway, and I intend to give my vote, in the interest of the country, in the way I think best calculated to secure its construction. Hon. gentlemen opposite raise the same cry to-day about the independence of Parliament and the purity of elections that they did formerly when in opposition, but they showed their hands afterwards, and they are at the same business now. The electors of the country know what they were before and what they may expect of them now, and have no confidence to-day any more than they had formerly, because these hon. gentlemen have been tried by the people and found wanting. I remember that hon. gentlemen opposite, when in opposition in former years, stated that they could not get through the corridors with contractors and expectant contractors, but the right hon. the First Minister, then member for Kingston, kept the contractors in the corridors. He did not do, as hon. gentlemen opposite did, take them into the House, and put a contractor in the Speaker's chair. That is the difference between the two parties.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). As this is an important question and the hour is late I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the debate is adjourned, I wish to make a few observations in relation to a personal matter, which I was prevented from making by the Deputy Speaker a few minutes ago. If I understood the Minister of Interior rightly, he went out of his way to make a personal attack on myself, by stating that I had made use of my position and boasted of it in this House, to punish the manager of the Grand Trunk Railway Company for a personal grievance. Whatever my motives may have been, that is a matter for myself, and not for the hon. gentleman who made a personal reference to me. I never boasted in this House of doing what the hon. gentleman stated I did. It is true that on one occasion, in the Railway Committee, that gentleman, aided and abetted by some others who were only too ready to help him, who were the partisans of the Grand Trunk Railway, and whom I charged at the time with being partisans of the Grand Trunk Railway, did try to fix upon me that my motives for attacking the Grand Trunk Railway policy were of a personal character.

Mr. POPE. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear."

Mr. POPE. And you have said it twenty times yourself.

Mr. MITCHELL. I tell the hon. gentleman, too, he may just as well keep quiet about me. Whatever my motive may have been that is for myself to consider. I have never denied, and I do not now deny that I have received from the general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway treatment which is unjust and dishonest, and that I told him that I would have satisfaction out of him, and I have had it in many ways, but I have never boasted in the House that I would, in my position here, have satisfaction out of him. Whatever I may have done outside, I am responsible for not to this House, not to the Minister of the Interior, not to the Minister of Railways; and the Minister of Interior had no right to assail me in the way he did.

Mr. POPE. Yes, he had.

Mr. MITCHELL. I say he had not.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. MITCHELL. I know people not to tell the truth some times.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think it was the place of the hon. the Minister of the Interior to attack me about my course towards the Grand Trunk. If he wanted to find reasons for my attacking the Grand Trunk Railway, he could very easily have found them. When the general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway wrote a letter to this Government, three years ago, threatening the Government of the day, threatening the Parliament of Canada, threatening all Canada, that if they dared to pass a certain legislation, then under the consideration of the House, the vengeance of that company would come down upon them. Did the gallant and brave Minister of the Interior, who is so ready to air his eloquence, come out then in the defence of the Administration of which he has the honor to be a member? Did that hon. gentleman come out and defend the country against the attacks of the general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway? No, Sir. I will not say why, but I will say this, that that champion newspaper, which they claim is the leading organ of public opinion defending the Administration of the day in the Province of Quebec, was the recipient of a very large amount of publishing and advertising patronage from the Grand Trunk Railway. Perhaps that had something to do with the silence of the hon. gentleman; perhaps it had not. Of that I leave the hon. gentleman to judge. When the honor of Parliament was attacked by Mr. Hickson, who, through his agents, smuggled legislation through the Senate of Canada, when that legislation was got through so surreptitiously, and when I brought the matter before this Parliament and arraigned the Grand Trunk Railway in so serious a manner that the First Minister felt it to be due to the honor of the Parliament of Canada that he should place a motion on the paper to recall that legislation, did we find the eloquent and hon. gentleman, the Minister of Interior, getting up and resenting an insult of that kind to the Parliament of Canada? No, Sir; the hon. gentleman, as characteristic of him, was on that occasion silent; it was probably his interest to be silent; I have not the slightest doubt it was. These are two or three instances in which I think the hon. gentleman, if he choses to compare his public conduct in Parliament with my own, might very fairly not claim to be the aggressor in an attack upon me. My public character in Parliament is not like that of the hon. gentleman. I have not been subservient, I have not been desirous to crawl into power by scratching anybody's back like the hon. gentleman, I have endeavored to pursue such a course as would command the respect of the country, I have endeavored to express my views independently and fearlessly, and I have done so. I am neither afraid of the hon. gentleman,——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. MITCHELL—nor of those on my left who are pulled up and down with a string,——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. MITCHELL—nor of those on the other side who frequently attack me. I am neither afraid of the one nor the other.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have said what I have got to say.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). You will not expect me, Sir, to make a serious reply to the speech of the hon. gentleman. The statement I made was simply this, that the hon. gentleman, who poses in this particular debate as the guardian of the honor of Parliament, as one whose pure soul is horrified at the idea of any member of Parliament using his position in Parliament to further his private ends, or feelings, or spite out of Parliament, was not altogether free from that offence, and I gave simply as one illustration that he had been opposed to the Grand Trunk Railway in Parliament in a very violent manner, in a manner so violent that the mention of "Grand Trunk" by him invariably created a burst of laughter from both sides of the House. It was looked upon as a matter of course that the hon. gentleman was opposed to the Grand Trunk Railway, and I said it was well known that the hon. gentleman had stated, not in the House, but out of the House, and that was my information, that, if Mr. Hickson would settle with him in a matter of $10,000 which he claimed Mr. Hickson owed him for service in getting the purchase of the Riviere du Loup Branch by the Government, he would cry quits with him.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is not true; that is what I say.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I am bound in this House to accept that statement. It is the duty of a member of Parliament, and I do it promptly. I only say that I regret that so many people's ears should have deceived them outside of Parliament in a matter of that kind Of course their ears must have deceived them, because the hon. gentleman says so here. As to his attack upon me, I do not think it necessary to make any reply, not by any means that I do not think an attack from the hon. gentleman deserves a reply; because I would be sorry to say anything implying that disrespect for him; but because I do not think it necessary to interpose in this debate a controversy as to our relative actions in matters of this kind. As to the letter of Mr. Hickson, in relation to which he spoke, I may say that I did not vote in Parliament in accordance with the letter of Mr. Hickson, but against it.

Mr. BLAKE. If the hon. gentleman thinks it is not worth while replying to the hon. member's attack, I think he should have reflected before he made the attack which provoked the reply of the hon. gentleman. I am only surprised at the hon. member for Northumberland being provoked by an attack from the hon. gentleman. He ought to have remembered the hon. gentleman's code of political ethics, and should have reflected that political exigencies this evening are very overwhelming.

Mr. MITCHELL. I rise to explain. The hon. gentleman has renewed the attack upon me by making another statement, by stating that I had said that if Mr. Hickson—

Mr. SPEAKER. He has accepted the hon. gentleman's statement.

Mr. MITCHELL. No, but I have a right——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. MITCHELL.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think it is unfair to attempt to prevent my putting myself right. He has taken advantage of replying to me to make a fresh statement in regard to me, which is also untrue. I never said anything of the kind. There is no place in which I said so. What I did say was that Mr. Hickson cheated me out of $10,000, and I repeat it; I repeat that he cheated me, and it stands just in that way. What I might have done, if he had made an honest man of himself, is quite another thing.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, it is true at all events.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion is on the question to adjourn the debate.

Mr. WATSON. As this opportunity presents itself, I should like to take the opportunity of explaining why I intend to vote for the amendment. Some of the members on the other side appear to think it very strange that I should pursue that course. I pursue the course which I think is the only consistent course I should pursue as a well-wisher of the citizens of that section of country through which this road is to be built. The member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) seemed to think it very strange that I should pursue this course; and he has quoted Dr. Harrison, the Local member for Minnedosa, as his authority for the needs of the people in that section. I call attention to the fact that Dr. Harrison, who he thinks knows the interests of the people there, and who must have the interest of that section at heart, for this road passes through his property, is the seconder of the resolution I read before six o'clock, in which it is stated:

"This House expresses the hope that, unless the present holders of the land grant satisfy the railway company to-morrow, the committee will advise the summary cancellation of the Order in Council granted them."

Now, I think that, with the confidence which the hon. gentleman has in Dr. Harrison as a wide-awake representative of that section of the country, and seeing that this is Dr. Harrison's resolution, and that it is his particular wish, he being on the ground, that the grant to Mr. Beaty's line should be cancelled, the hon. gentleman will vote as I vote for the amendment.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman will allow me to correct him. I stated that Dr. Harrison was the head of a deputation which was here last year to assist in carrying that free grant for the North-West Central Railway. I did not say what his feelings or views were now, but only that he was here promoting that grant, and was interested with many others in that matter.

Mr. WATSON. Dr. Harrison, as the Minister of Finance has well stated, was one of the deputation, and he also stated that I, as a member of this House, had repeatedly interviewed him and pressed upon him the importance of a land grant for this road; but a year has elapsed since Dr. Harrison and I asked him to give a free grant to this company, and they have done nothing, and Dr. Harrison as well as myself now thinks it should be taken out of the hands of the present company and placed in the hands of those who will build the road. I believe it is of such a character that it can be built for the grant. The member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), was also grieved at my inconsistent course. My course is quite consistent, and it is in the interests of the people of that section that I vote for the amendment. I may further state for the information of the member for North Perth that one of the directors of this company, the hon. John Norquay, Premier of the Province of Manitoba, was present in the House when this resolution was forwarded to Ottawa. I have sufficient confidence in the Government of the day to believe that, when they state they will see the road is built, when they know the House is unanimous—I do not know a gentleman in this House who is opposed to the construction of the road or to the aid for the construction—they will see fit to place the franchise in the hands of those who will construct the road. Therefore, I consider my course is quite consistent. As the debate has continued to a great length I do not think it well to prolong it. I intended to refer to the different Orders in Council passed at different dates giving these aids, and to the opinions of the Minister of the Interior in asking Council to grant them, but, as the hour is late and members must be tired of this discussion, I will defer it for the present.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I would not give the vote I am about to give in favor of the amendment of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) if I thought it would retard for one hour the building of this road, but knowing the history of this charter since the president had control of the majority of the stock, I sincerely believe, and indeed I cannot see how any unprejudiced mind in this House can believe otherwise, that if the charter is granted him, there will be greater delays than if it is refused, for this reason—the present president of this road has, as I showed this afternoon, had two years in which to do something to this road besides talk, and he has done nothing. I think myself, if the Government takes power to themselves now to build this road, they can construct it. There are parties outside of this House, there are parties in Canada, there are parties in the United States, who are ready to build this road. Everybody knows it is going to be a paying road. I have heard statements made here this afternoon, for the first time, that it was not going to be a very paying road. We who know something about it, know it is to be a paying road, that for hundreds of miles it goes through places which are already settled, and therefore it will pay capitalists to build the road. If I thought that by my vote I would retard building the road, I would not give it. The hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), and several other hon. members, and notably the Minister of the Interior, thought that, if we voted for this amendment, it would retard the building of the road. Why, the best of evidence, in the hands of the Government, is that if the charter is extended, the same things will occur that have occurred in the past. The object has not been to build this road. I am sorry that this matter ever got here at all. I am sorry this dispute has arisen. I, Sir, did not seek it. If some hon. gentleman in this House who have spoken upon this subject had been as determined to see right and justice done, and this road built before this question got here, last spring, last fall, the first of this Session, as they have evinced in this House to-day, this question never would have got here at all. The Minister of Interior has stated that it was owing to some statement made by me that this dispute has arisen. He certainly does not remember the history of the way it got here. Did he not know that the member for West Toronto, was at the elbow and at the ear of nearly every member of this House, and especially of members opposed to the Government, giving them his version of the story, and showing them private letters? I am sure the Minister of Interior did know, he knows it now. He don't know? Has he not the papers in his office? He shakes his head. Then he did not consult the files of papers in his office on the North-West Central Railway, when he reported to the Council in favor of the extension of the land grant. Everybody knows that every head of a Department keeps his papers on any subject on a certain file; he has not them scattered all over the office, and he can place his hand upon that file by touching his bell at any moment, and if he did that he would really find there statements in regard to this matter which surely would have apprised him that there was something wrong about it. I say, then, that these members all know that the president of this road was seeking out members of Parliament to give them his version of the story, and it has come out in evidence, and never been disputed that the editor of the Winnipeg Free Press, the correspondent in this House, and the correspondent of the Globe, stated in letters to the leader of the Opposition, that the president of the board sought them out and voluntered these statements which have been published by the press. Mr. Beaty, a member of the Conservative party, a supporter of the Conservative Government, takes a private letter from a co-director, not only a co-director, but the promoter and the manager of the Bill through this Parliament and the Railway Committee in 1884, and goes quietly to the Toronto Globe correspondent, to the correspondent of the Chronicle of Halifax, Nova Scotia, to the correspondent of the Winnipeg Free Press, and he tells them, according to themselves, that he does not want to speak in Mr. Woodworth's presence. When Mr. Woodworth arrives in the building, while he is whispering to them, he takes them out into the corridor and talks to them there, and they herald all through the country—and they had a right to do it to make a point against a political opponent—the statements made by this loyal Conservative president of the North-West Central Railway in regard to a brother member in this House, who has been voting on the same side as he has. The hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) and other gentlemen have taken this immaculate being to their bosom. They have no words of condemnation for him. The hon. member for North Perth knows, for he told me so, that he (Mr. Beaty) went to him with a letter last spring, and he has not a word to say about this—he, the staunch, steadfast, iron-bound, copper-fastened Liberal-Conservative in this House, the man who never was known to flinch in any dark hours of the Government's necessity, he, knowing that this, in a battalion, would, on the field of battle, entail death on the man who did it, knowing that it was an act as disloyal as anything that could be done in the world, as black, as indecent, as could be done—he has taken him to his bosom, he has surrounded him, and some of his friends with him, with their arms of love. And the member for Monck (Mr. McCallum), for whom everybody entertains a great respect on account of his age and experience, and his good common sense, did not see anything wrong. He says: What has the poor man done for two years? He had not a word to say about the violation of the principles of party fealty, of party fidelity, that has been winked out of sight. I am the aggressor, says the Minister of the Interior. Through what spectacles does the Minister of Interior look? Whose spectacles is he holding? Well, all I have got to say is, I hope they will become him better when he is older as a Minister than they do to-night. What kind of scales, what kind of weights, has he been using that he could not see no beam in the president's eye, but that he could see the mote in mine? I cannot understand such measure being meted out. I tell the Conservative Government here, I tell them now to their faces, there are fourteen of them, that, if such party infidelity, if such party treason, is not only condoned but is made much of, is commended, if the perpetrator is patted on the back, they will have very little party left and very little respect in this country or elsewhere. Does not everybody know it? Had I been guilty of that heinous offence that has been committed here in the light of day and not denied, Sir, there would not have been any punishment too great to be meted out to me, but, I, who have fought their battles on many a dark day, and many a dark night, in the hours of their darkest trial, when I gave all my profession, all the little ability that God has given me, what little strength God had given me, and with industry that knew no tiring, I gave all to them when they were on their backs and could not help themselves; and the reward I get from them is this reward here to-night. Sir, all the presidents of the north-western railways that could fill this House, with the meanness, the avarice and cupidity of a certain member of a certain company, could not and would not, if they had the will to do it, have helped the Conservative party one tithe as much as I helped them, and they know it, and my reward has been such as it is to-night. Now, Sir, so much for that. The only member who had the manliness —I won't say that—who had the kindness of heart, to stand upon his feet and give one grain of comfort to me, was the member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton), and he, steadfast and loyal as he is, thought that it was a little too much when he found the Minister of the Interior and the members of the House supporting the Conservative party, having nothing but dry herbs, vinegar and the sponge for the member for King's (Mr. Woodworth), while they have honey and wine and everything nice for the president of the North-Western Railway. Sir, I did not intend to go into this matter. But I am prepared to go into it at any moment. I do not have to go to the Library to search any books. On the tablet of my memory are written indelibly that which I can collect in a moment. I do not wish to go into altercations of that kind. But I tell the Minister of the Interior here, and his Government, that when they think that by any side issue, by any slight, or by any intended insult, they can place me in a false position for one week, they are very much mistaken, they are much mistaken indeed. The member for West Toronto made a speech here this afternoon. His speech was not thought sufficient, however, and hon. gentlemen have rushed to his rescue The member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) made a nice mess of it. He spoke like a lawyer who had got the wrong brief. Some one had given him some statements and he sought to make the best use of them. Everybody knows he is clever, but he did not understand the subject. Among other statements he made was one that he would like to know how the president got the capital stock. He said his brother directors gave him the stock in order to give him control. Did he know anything about his co-directors having no stock except what they got from the great Mikado of the whole thing? Where did he get the stock? Did the hon. gentleman not know he was talking nonsense? Where did the president of the railway get the stock? He got not a cent and not a piece of paper from his co-directors. He gave them what he liked. He got the old Souris and Rocky Mountain stock. The member for West Toronto did something with that stock. I stated in the committee that he sold some of the stock. I stated that upon information received by me. I said I had understood such to be the case, and I invited that gentleman to deny it. To this hour he has never denied it. I said that the amount was in the thousands; I did not know the exact figures. This is my answer to the question—what did he get after two years? He got the Souris and Rocky Mountain stock —but not from his brother director—amounting to $386,000, 10 per cent. paid up, and the statement has been made in the presence of the president of the North-West Central that he had sold the stock and pocketed the money and had been living on it for two years. That statement has been made. Has it been denied? No. The Minister of the Interior has said there is not the slightest charge against the hon. member for West Toronto. If that were done in England—if before ever a spade was put into the ground, before a level was ran, one man got hold of the stock and put the money in his pocket and did nothing for two years, how long would be retain his seat in Parliament? How long would he sit as an alderman, or as town clerk, or in some more humble position? Not one hour. Yet the Minister of the Interior, who can make a specious and plausible speech on almost any subject, told the House, told you, Mr. Speaker, and told me to my face, that there was not one word or tittle of a charge against the great and good president of the North-West Central Railway. Let them answer that one charge and see if it is true, for it has never been denied and it has been made over and over again by me. If it is said that it is not true, I say that I am informed and believe that I can produce witnesses to swear to it, and I believe the witnesses are in this city to-day. If it is true, what about the Minister of the Interior's white-washing of the president of the North-West Central Railway? What is the good of his brush; what is the good of his wash? The Minister of the Interior has really come to the rescue and made the best defence put forward to-night. It is a cunning, clear and plausible defence; but it lacks the essential element: he has left out of sight certain facts and put other facts very prominently forward, and on the whole he made a plausible and good case. But the hon. gentleman said: What is the evidence? The evidence is that he (Mr. Beaty) attempted to get $675,000 for the charter. We all know that companies pay contractors to build railways and contractors do not pay companies. Did it ever occur to the Minister that it is an unusual thing for companies to receive money from contractors to build a railway? I always thought a company paid contractors and got them to build a railway. But they have reversed this in the new order of things. But what is the evidence, says the Minister of the Interior. There is the evidence of a man by the name of Pew, of New York, whom the Minister says he will not believe, and he is cheered in that statement by the member of North Perth and some more of the friends. But I said there was a man by the name of McConachie. He says he will swear that he was present at the time. But the Minister of the Interior will not accept him. You can get plenty of men to swear against a member of this House for $5,000. You can get men, if they be men, that wear clothes and look like men, to swear against other men they hate. I do not know anything about McConachie, but I would see that a negro had fair play in this House, even if I did not know it. I do not know anything about McConachie, as I have said, but he cannot be condemned because some men say they will not believe him. That is no proof against him.

Mr. KIRK. Where are the letters?

Mr. WOODWORTH. But Mr. Beaty—I forgot the rules in naming him, but the debate has taken that turn—has been with Mr. Pew, and yet he denounces him now. He was worthy of being talked to, worthy of being negotiated with, but all at once he is a man not to be believed. I have here a letter from McConachie. The Minister of the Interior says that he knows that a man of that name is in the case; but he says McConachie masqueraded as a millionaire. How did he know? He did not tell the House he heard it. I never saw that man in my life; but the Minister, speaking ex cathedra, as Ministers always speak, said he masqueraded as a millionaire. How did he hear that, except from the president of the North-Western Central Railway? Is it thus men's characters are to be bandied about without a tittle of evidence being forth coming. Let me read McConachie's letter, and let hon. members say if he is not a man capable of writing a good letter, and from all we know is a reliable man. It is said that he had something to do with Mr. Pew, and that therefore he is bad. Yet Mr. Pew has had to do with thousands of men, and you will find hundreds of persons ready to say he is a fair man; of course he has his friends and his enemies. But Mr. McConachie was said to have been a clerk—I do not know whether he was a clerk or not. Why should he not be believed? Is it because he referred to the conduct of the member for West Toronto? I say as a member of this House that when an hon. member makes a statement I am prepared to accept it in preference to a statement made by a person outside of this House, but at the same time I am prepared to give other men fair play. If they were members of this House their word would be taken without abuse of this kind. They did not happen to be members of the House, but yet they were men. This is the letter. It is dated Hamilton, 29th April, 1886, and is addressed to me. It reads:

"SIR,—Since my name has been freely mentioned in connection with the North-West Central Railway matter, at present under discussion, it is reasonable for me to state the facts so far as I am concerned.

"During the summer of last year I was in conference with certain capitalists, prominent among whom was Jesse Farewell, Esq., of Detroit, in reference to procuring the contract to build said railway, and the terms having been fully agreed upon, I was authorised to visit Toronto and submit a proposition for building said road to the president, James Beaty, M.P. In consequence of this understanding, I went to Toronto on 16th September last, for the purpose of interviewing Mr. Beaty in the premises, and if possible to procure the contract to build the road. I met with E. A. C. Pew, Esq., in Toronto, and that gentleman accompanied me to Mr. Beaty's office and introduced me to Mr. Beaty. I at once stated the object of my visit to Mr. Beaty. A general conversation ensued, during which I submitted to Mr. Beaty, for his consideration, a type-written form of contract and particulars, which had been agreed upon between myself and friends. After engaging to submit said contract to such of the board of directors as were then in Toronto, he made an appointment to meet me at his office again. Subsequently, upon the same day, I called at Mr. Beaty's office and submitted to him my proposition in writing, definitely stating what I was prepared to do in respect to building the road (a copy of said proposition is attached hereto). Mr. Pew was present at the time I submitted said proposition to Mr. Beaty. Mr. Beaty read the said proposition carefully and then said: 'This is all very good, but you see there is nothing in it for the boy.' He then told an anecdote which was apparently intended to illustrate his remarks and give me to understand that 'the boy' represented himself, and possibly his associates on the board of directors. I then understood Mr. Beaty's personal intentions. Mr. Beaty then demanded $1,500 cash bonus per mile, together with all municipal bonuses which might be granted in favor of the board, and also he (Mr. Beaty) must retain the management by holding a majority of the stock of the company. To this I was not prepared to assent, &c."

And I have a letter here showing that Mr. Beaty was introduced as a member of the Government, and he did not deny it, and at another time he said he expected to be sworn in Minister of Justice right away. That, of course, has nothing to do with the question, but the president of the North-West Central Railway says this letter is not true. I am going to accept his statement as a member of Parliament, but I am also going to give fair play to the men who made these statements, whoever they are. Mr. Pew's letter is in print, in which he states: Mr. Beaty demanded $1,500 a mile, and that there was nothing for "the boy." Mr. Pew makes that statement, and says he is prepared to swear to it, and this man McConachie winds up his letter by stating this:

"You may consider the foregoing to be my sworn testimony, and make any proper use of it you think necessary."

Mr. Pew does the same, and he writes from New York, and this man writes from Hamilton. So much for those two. I said: "Well, you are selling a charter." The Minister of Interior, who comes to the rescue, says there is not a word—I took down his language—not a bit of ground for the attack of the member for West Toronto; not the head of a pin—nothing. Now, Sir, the member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) says Mr. Pew and Mr. McConachie are both perjurers, and the Minister of Interior says the same. But I have got now a statement to which I am sure the Minister of Interior made no reference, although I alluded to it this afternoon. He made no reference to it; whether he thought I had forgotten it, or that I had spoken once and could not speak again, I do not know; but, at any rate, he did not allude to it, after declaring that these men were perjurers, following in the wake of the hon. member for West Toronto. I read this afternoon a document which the member for West Toronto signed by his own sign manual: "James Beaty."

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Is that the Macdonald contract.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Yes.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I referred to it.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I was listening to him; I accept his correction, but he must have made a very slight reference to it. That Macdonald will allow the rate of $1,600 per mile to be deducted each monthly estimate. They would not allow him to go six weeks, or five weeks, or even four weeks and one day. No, Sir; monthly estimates, and they must have their tithe—$1,600 per mile, which shall be paid over by the company. I beg the pardon of the Minister of the Interior; I find he did allude to this as I have it in my notes. He says this money will go to the ordinary expenditure. He says what about the rolling stock? Everybody knows that $1,600 per mile will put on the rolling stock and build every car and engine. I know it. I know the locality, and I know what they are built for. The grading of that road will not cost over $3,000 per mile. Where is the rest of that $12,000 for rolling stock, and how could the Minister of the Interior make this statement, except by doing like the hon. member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives), only a little more speciously—"by rushing in where angels fear to tread." All I can say is I never want him to make for me a defence like that. Do you suppose this company—do you suppose this open-hearted, generous, large minded president, who is always known amongst his fellows and everywhere as an open-hearted man, as a great philanthropist, as a sort of John Howard—do you suppose he would take that money for anything else than put in his pocket? He is the company; he controls the company. His friends said that he had a right to control it. They did not call him by his christian name, but they said: "You keep it." He said: "I want $1,500 put in the bank," but he never thought of saying what others said for him, he never dreamed of saying—it was the ingenious man, the old veteran who has fought many a well fought field, that found out the specious excuse. Why, said the Minister of Interior, this was for expenditure on roads and things. I know the member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) felt like going and hugging him—if it had been parliamentary—for making such an excuse, which he did not think of himself, for the hon. gentleman is not fertile in expedients. Well it was not to pay the interest on the bonds but what else?

"And will pay one-quarter of the company's old indebtedness for work done on the old grade. Macdonald will pay for working up bonuses in all places but Brandon. He will also locate and pay for laying out the town sites. Macdonald will furnish a bank guarantee for the interest for the whole of the bonds for two years from the date of their issue."

Well, if I calculate aright, if they built 200 miles at $1,600 a mile, they will have $320,000, and in two years they could have had that done. That is what they were promising; they were backward at first, but they were going to rush things. They were going to have $320,000 right away—for expenses and things. Now, I would like to know what legal mind in this House will defend the action of the hon. member for West Toronto. The Minister of Justice has a subtle legal mind; but he has gone out; he has not wrestled with this subject. Only the Minister of the Interior has wrestled with it; no other Minister dared to touch it; but he took it up, turned it around, and looked at it, and excited the envy of everyone who heard him, and the undying admiration and love of the hon. member for West Toronto. I have shown that "the boy" wanted $1,600 a mile, and that he never pretended that he wanted it for things, or for anything but himself; but, said the Minister of the Interior, won't the company be liable for all time? Where is the company when he gets $320,000, and puts it into his pocket? Why, it was thought necessary to put a clause in the Canadian Pacific Railway charter to bind the company to operate the railway for ten years for fear they would back out. But where is the clause to say that the hon. member for West Toronto shall stay in the company one hour more than he wants to? Yet the Minister of the Interior talking to men with more experience in railway matters than I have, deliberately told them, with all the oratorical and graceful flourishes that he is capable of, that the bonds are not on the company, but on the road, and that therefore nobody can touch them; and yet the men now in the company can kick the road and go to heaven if they like. The Minister of the Interior knows that, or he is not the man to give free grants to railways; but he seems to be very much in love with this subject; and he will excuse me if I read the recommendation he made to the Council. I know how hurriedly he made it, how his bedroom was infested with these people, almost alive with them, and a short hand reporter took his thoughts down and put them into good English. This is a copy of a report of a Committee of the Honorable the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General in Council on the 27th of November, 1885; and the Minister of the Interior said this:

"The Minister further submits an application from the company that the time for the construction and equipment of the first fifty miles of the railroad be extended to the 1st October, 1886, and he, the Minister, recognising the beneficial results likely to arise from the speedy construction of a line of railway through the district traversed by the proposed location of the North-West Central Railway, and being satisfied of the intention of this company, in good faith, to prosecute their undertaking, recommends as follows."

And yet for two years the president had never been in the country, or did the first earthly thing, except attempt to sell this charter, and the Minister, without any logical premises or deductions being laid before him, extended that land grant to the men whose charter had run out. He knew that this was the last of November; he new that in that country you cannot get a spade into the soil at that period, the 10th of November being the usual time for the frosts to come, and when it freezes it freezes quickly and hard and fast; and before his eyes at that time in the Canada Gazette, were the notices of two companies that wished to be incorporated to build this very road. I suppose he will say, as about other papers, that he didn't see them; but Ministers are Argus-eyed, they are supposed to see everything, and these two notices were before his eyes. And yet this president who had left those people in misery, who had never tried to pay them a dollar for their oats and barley and hay, or for the work they had put in there—I understand that some of them were without the necessaries of life—was running around with a silk hat and polished boots, carrying around and selling the stock of the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway, living on it and travelling over Europe on it. And yet the hon. Minister of the Interior signs that recommendation, and says he is satisfied that they are going on in good faith to build the road. I cannot understand it; if the Minister can explain it, I suppose he can explain anything; and I have asked that the rules of the House be suspended to allow him to explain it. Now, I think I have proved my case. I have taken as my text what the Minister has said, that there was not one bit of a charge against the hon. member for West Toronto. I have shown that Mr. Pew and Mr. McConachie said that he wanted $1,500 a mile for "the boy;" that is denied. Then I hold up Mr Beaty's own written contract with Mr. Macdonald stipulating that he should receive $1,600 a mile, to be paid monthly. I want to know whether there is any bit of a charge about that. I want to know if they can go back on their signatures. I do not like a fight, but when I get into it, I am there for all day; and when I made the statement in the committee, the Minister charged me with altering it, but I repudiated the charge, and I will prove that I did not alter a word in sense. I stated in the committee that Mr. Beaty agreed with me, as the old Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway Company was dead and buried, that we should resuscitate it, under a new name; and after making certain stipulations as to certain payments, if there was anything in it—I did not know—it was the first charter I had anything to do with—we should divide the profits equally between us; and I said that Mr. Beaty agreed to that. I was met with a flat denial. The Minister of the Interior has told the House that my charge in this matter is not borne out by the facts. Another meeting took place in the committee at which I produced the letter of the Minister of Finance. I will read to you, Sir, my own letter to that hon. gentleman and his reply:

"OTTAWA, 5th April, 1886.

"Hon. A. W. McLELAN,
Finance Minister.

"DEAR SIR,—Soon after the prorogation of the past Parliament I gave into your hand five or six letters addressed to me by Mr. James Beaty, Q.C., M.P., upon the subject of the North-West Central Railway and in his handwriting, for the purpose of your perusal. I am informed that you cannot find them. They are very necessary to me just now. I have not seen them since I gave them to you, but I remember their purport perfectly well—but this is not enough. I am very anxious to have the letters so that they can speak for themselves. If you cannot find them please give me a letter stating the facts and what your recollection of the contents of the letters of Mr. Beaty is.

"I have the honor to be,
"Yours truly,
(Signed) "D. B. WOODWORTH."

This is the answer:

"MY DEAR SIR,—I am in receipt of yours of the 5th, again asking for the return of Mr. Beaty's letters to you in re North-West Central Railway. I have had another and diligent search made for them but without success. In the removal of my papers from Marine and Fisheries Department they have, I presume, been mislaid. I will have the search continued as I fancy that they are now to you an additional importance, owing to the position in which that question stands before the Railway Committee. My recollection of all the contents is indistinct, but my impression from reading them was that you and Mr. Beaty[—not 'is' as the hon. member for East Grey says, but 'was,' at the time of reading them—] were the original promoters of that road, with equal interests in all that was connected therewith.

"I am, yours, very truly,
"A. W. McLELAN."

What had the hon. member for West Toronto to say to that? He said there was not a word of truth in it, and he said, according to the report in the Citizen, which cannot be accused of any great friendship towards me at least:

"He never wrote any letter which came under the observation of Mr. McLelan that would prove such negotiations had taken place, and that gentleman could not therefore produce any such letters. He asked for a delay of two weeks."

Well, I did not get the letters. I know the hon. Minister of Finance had not them. I know that in this matter the Minister of Finance has acted as he always has, ever since I have known him, honorably and fairly, but he took no particular interest in this matter, and I gave him the letters to read because Mr. Beaty was making the same statements he had made to the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) to Mr. Gorman, of the Globe, and Mr. McNee, of the Winnipeg Free Press. When I gave the letters to Mr. McLelan —I beg his pardon for mentioning his name—I asked him, shortly after he had read them, if they bore out my contentions. He said they did, and he knows what my contention was, as I made it in the committee. And what does the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) say in reply to my contention. He says there is not a word of truth, either in my statement or in that of the Minister of Finance, who declared my statement to be true, yet the Minister of the Interior, the colleague of the Minister of Finance, says that there is no foundation for the charge against the member for West Toronto. Let the Minister of the Interior put himself in my place for a few moments. Let him imagine that he has made a statement, which is corroborated by a member of the Cabinet; let him then imagine that he made other statements, in support of which he produced letters from Mr. Pew and Mr. McConachie, and then that he was told by another member of the Cabinet that there was not a particle of proof for any of his assertions. The hon. gentleman would never forget it; and yet, for what reason I do not know, what Egyptian darkness has come over his mind I cannot conceive, he has allowed himself to become as blind and as obtuse to the real facts as though their recollection had entirely departed from his memory. I think I am making a case in which there is sufficient proof, and I am content to let this go upon Hansard, as I know my case cannot be answered. Mr. Beaty says he never sold the charter, he says he is as innocent as a butterfly; yes, as a little butterfly. He says he has been very much maligned. Why, he says: "I could have sold it, but I did not; I would not do such a thing." Well, the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) is not unknown to fame, as the hon. Minister of the Interior knows, who had something to do with writing about the Pacific scandal, so-called, and who was said to be not very consistent, no doubt, by some ungenerous, uncharitable people—people who charged him with writing at one time against it and with saying at another time it was all right. But, of course, they are very uncharitable and unfair people. As I have said, the member for West Toronto was not unknown to fame. He did not sell the charter. Why? He says he is an innocent man, who, in his own town, never blushed. I do not suppose he did, nor do I suppose anybody ever charged him with blushing. He says he was never known to have the blush of shame brought to his face; no one denies that. He says: "I could have sold the charter, but did not;" and his friends back him up. He was a good man; he was mayor of his town; he placed himself upon record as a man who had great aims in life, and always did the right and proper thing; he had a large grasp of affairs, and he would not do it. But I have again, not Mr. Pew, not Mr. McConachie, not any of the witnesses who can be called perjurers here, because members of Parliament are protected by their privilege, but I have Mr. Beaty's own letters to people in the United States, written and signed by himself, and I think upon that occasion the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Blake) called Mr. Beaty the minor villain of the plot. That shows he is not the quiet, inoffensive, little butterfly man you would suppose him to be who did everything in the light of day. Let us see for a moment. I have a confidential communication, which was written on 17th July, 1881, by Mr. James Beaty, member for West Toronto.

Mr. SPEAKER. That has nothing to do with the question.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I beg your pardon, I am ready for that question of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think it has.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I will hear your decision, Sir, and reply to it. It has been charged here by Mr. Beaty and his friends that he has been telling what was absolutely true about this while I have not.

Mr. SPEAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I beg your pardon. It has been insinuated and almost in so many words stated. Hon. gentlemen have taken the character of Mr. Beaty for probity and honor, and made it the pivot upon which the whole case turns, and I say if I can establish that Mr. Beaty was not the innocent man he is represented to be—I know it is hard, but who brought this case up? Who took the man to their bosom because it was brought up? I am in order in doing this. I am not to be denied the right to reply, the right of showing that I can sweep away the whole cobweb of sophistry which has been wound round this case.

Mr. SPEAKER. You cannot go back to 1881 to show anything connected with the chartering of this road.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I beg your pardon, I can, if I can connect it with this subject.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I know the rules of debate, and am ready to abide by them. I have been in Parliament before, and gentlemen have no need to call me to order. I wish to reiterate and amplify what I have already said. I have made a statement here which has been denied by the hon. member of West Toronto, on the ground of character, and the Minister of the Interior and some of his friends have come to the rescue of Mr. Beaty by declaring that he was incapable of doing a wrong act. That he would not think of such a thing, that he would not sell the charter, that he was interested in this road for the purpose of building it; and I say that, if I can prove that he offered to take $100,000 from New York men to buy a charter, the same man can sell one. I say it is fair reasoning. I say it would be fair reasoning in a court of justice, and your Honor would not shut me out from doing what I can do in a court of justice. The rules of this House are not more stringent than the rules of a court of justice, and, if the question of character comes here, I can prove that the hon. gentleman who says he was incapable of selling a charter, was willing to buy one if he had $100,000 deposited in the Bank of Toronto in his name. Now, I find: "Some"——

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope that is not the letter. I have ruled on that.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Then I appeal from your Honor's decision to this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think it is in order to read anything of that kind.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Your Honor has not been in this House while the debate has been going on. I think it is unfair, when there is a dual Speaker here, when your Honor is out, that your Honor shall come in here and shut me off from debate. I appeal to the sense of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope the hon. gentleman will accept my ruling. We are not trying the characters of hon. members here, and I do not think a letter written in 1881 can be brought in to prove anything in connection with this charge, or can have anything to do with whether this Act should be put through Parliament now or this day three months. I hope the hon. gentleman will accept my ruling. He has stated a great deal of the letter.

Mr. WOODWORTH. The last thing I wish to do is to dissent obtrusively or obstinately from the ruling of the Speaker. I recognise that order and decorum are necessary in a Parliament like this, and I would be the last to refuse to accept a decision, even if I thought the Speaker was a little wrong, which I confess I do just now. I will abide by your decision, and it will go very hard with me if I cannot get it in some other time. Perhaps I will not, because I do not like this business, and I shall not refer to it again if I can help it, but, if I find it necessary, I shall refer to it.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. member might hand it to the reporter as did the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. WOODWORTH. The member for West Toronto has made one statement, and it has been reiterated in a modified form by some of his friends. How he got them as friends I do not know. They look pleasant and modest, and virtuous and kind, but how they got here as friends I do not know. Perhaps it is an illustration of the old couplet:

> "Vice is a monster of such frightful mien,
> That to be hated needs but to be seen;
> But, seen too oft, familiar with his face,
> We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

The member for West Toronto said, and he has been industriously circulating this among the members, for I have heard him: "How absurd, how could I, without the consent of the other directors, make an agreement with Mr. Woodworth?" The member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) took it up: "Look at the other directors; he could not do it behind their back." Did not the member for West Toronto know that, when the charter was issued here, there was not a man's name in it at all?

Does he not know that we proceeded to the Library and stated who the directors should be? Does he not know that the agreement was made before the charter was introduced into the House at all? And, then, where was the member for Pictou; where was the member for Toronto Centre, and the other gentlemen, whose names are here, that I forget just now, and the brother of the member for West Toronto, in Toronto? Where were they then? In this charter? No. The member for West Toronto knows that he went into the Library with me after we made the agreement, and we sat down and said who the directors should be. I want to know, if that be true, what the statement reiterated with such gusto by the Minister of the Interior and other members of the House, following in the wake of the member for West Toronto, is worth? The hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Riopel) said in committee that the other directors had to be consulted. Why, he was not in existence, he was not spoken of until we were in the Library. That is as true as anything I have read out of these papers, and I ask intelligent members of this House, I would ask any intelligent jury, what becomes of the statement that this agreement between us could not be and was not made, because the other directors would stand in the way, when they were not in existence? That is as plain, I presume, as I can make it. That is true. That is correct. I hated to make a second speech; I hated to make the first. It is a very unpleasant subject. I did not introduce it until I found myself hounded by this Conservative member of the House, and, when I find that the Government has taken him under their shield, when I have done as faithfully as I have, I say it was unfair treatment to me. The world will say so; the Province from which I come will say so; any Province will say so, where I have been and spoken, and where I intend to speak again. It was unfair treatment. It was not fair treatment between two members of the same party. One had been guilty of gross violation of fealty and party fidelity, and had taken advantage of the other, and the Ministry had no word of condemnation, they and their supporters. I do not blame some of them; they can hardly help it; but it was unfair and unjust, and I feel it most keenly. It was not a very pleasant subject when I got up in that committee, knowing that the wings of the press would take it almost over the four corners of the globe, at all events, would take it all over Canada and over part of the United States as well, when I got up and had to make this charge, when they came with this Bill before the committee, striking out every clause for the protection of the workingmen. There was the Bill that was sought to be introduced, and what does it say:

"The said Act 47 Vic., Chap. 72, and the said several Acts therein mentioned are hereby continued in full force and effect of law, except the 7th section of the said first cited act, which is hereby repealed."

What was the 7th section which was to be repealed:

"The existing liabilities of the company for work done for the said company shall be a first charge on the undertaking."

What did the member for West Toronto tell the committee? He told them he did not know how the clause got there originally. He told the House to-night: "Did I not protect the workingman and have in the Bill a clause protecting him such as is mentioned there?" And yet it was I who introduced that clause, and the member for West Toronto told the Committee on Railways and Canals that he did not know how it got there, and he took credit to-night for having put it there. Now, the 5th clause that the member for West Toronto introduced into this Bill, when we first went before the committee, was this:

"The mortgage and bonds authorised by the said Act to be executed and issued shall be the first preferential charge and lien, and shall have priority as such, on the railway and lands and assets of the said North-West Central Railway Company, as described and charged in the said mortgage."

Mr. WOODWORTH.

Then, with the $25,000 bonds they were going to issue, as I have proved, where would the working people have got their pay, putting in this clause and striking out the other clause? And yet, in a letter signed by Mr. Beaty's hand, which I read in the committee, directed to William Eccles, and dated the 13th March, 1885, he says:

"The Act does not throw upon the North-West Central Railway Company any obligations of the Souris and Rocky Mountain Railway Company. They are not revived."

And yet he knew they were revived, and, since, he has come into the committee and into this House to wipe out all the clauses, so that the workmen would never get their pay. I understand that there was some members of the company who did not want that done and others who did want it done, and I have their names. I think it was a most unfair thing for the workingman, and if it had not been for the revelations made in that committee, this clause would not have been struck out, and we would not have the Bill as it is now, merely extending the charter. Mr. Beaty was forced to abandon his prey on that occasion. Unpleasant as the subject is, I had to stand in that Committee and protest against that Bill. I say that after the revelations made by me, which I have proved, this House should reject this Bill and let the Government take the power, as they can without the delay of a week, and build this road. There are men ready and willing to build this road. I know they are ready to do it for the grant that you have so generously given, and are only waiting the opportunity. I know this for a fact. The hon. member for Monck says: "Give them another chance." I say this company has had that chance, and having failed to take the opportunity afforded them by Parliament and the terms of their charter, they cannot come to this Parliament and ask for a continuance of it. Every hon. member who votes for the amendment, is voting for a precedent, by which members hereafter who take charters from this Parliament, will, at least, honestly try to execute their provisions; but if you pass this Act as it is now, after these revelations of delay, and of the attempts to sell the charter for the purpose of putting money into the pockets of the president, you will have established a precedent for all time, that everybody can come and do likewise, and they have only to get some friends to surround them and it will be carried through Parliament. It is a dangerous precedent. Sir, what is the object of punishing crime? Not to punish the criminal, but to deter others from committing a like offence. This is an offence; it is an offence against the people out there; it is an offence in the attempt of parties to put money in their pockets at the expense of the country. Teach these parties a lesson by relegating them back to where they were before they got this extension of the land grant, and a company will be here at the doors of Parliament in a week. They are now asking for permission to build this road, having all the capital they want. I am sorry I have had to detain the House, but it was a matter in which I got mixed up myself. I have got abused where I did not deserve it. As I said before, I have committed no violation of my independence as a member of Parliament, I have got nothing from the Government that was a concession. I am as independent as the day I entered Parliament. Certainly I owe the Government nothing but that respect which is due from subjects to lords and masters. Having made the explanation that I desired, I hope the Government will consider anew this subject, and come to a different conclusion from that which was intimated here this afternoon.

Amendment to the amendment, to adjourn debate, negatived.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Mitchell.

Fortin,	Moffat,

Mr. CASEY. I observe that the member for Bonaventure (Mr. Riopel) has voted. I wish to ask whether he is a director of this company that is asking for a grant?

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. member has no direct pecuniary interest in the passage of the Bill, he has a right to vote. If he has an immediate interest in the passage of the Bill, he ought not to vote.

Mr. BLAKE. He is a director of the company.

Mr. SPEAKER. Has the hon. member a direct pecuniary interest in the passage of the Bill?

Mr. RIOPEL. I am a director in that company, but I have no direct pecuniary interest in it.

Mr. CASEY. I observed the hon. gentleman for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty), has not voted. I would like to ask why he has not voted.

Mr. BEATY. I just wish to be excused, that is all. I ask to be allowed not to vote.

Mr. SPEAKER. He can ask to be excused; the rule is that no person who has a direct pecuniary interest in the passage of the Bill is entitled to vote. If he votes, his vote is disallowed; but if a member is doubtful as to whether he has that interest he may ask to be excused.

Mr. CASEY. I object to his being excused unless he states that he has a direct pecuniary interest in the passage of this Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. On what ground does the hon. gentleman ask to be excused?

Mr. BEATY. In consequence of the peculiar nature of this case, and the fact that I am president of the company, and a shareholder. And, of course, it is possible that some time or other, notwithstanding what has been said, I may have a pecuniary interest.

On the main motion,

Mr. MULOCK. During the progress of this debate, certain statements have been made by hon. members from their places in this House which, if established before the passage of this Bill, would, I think, materially affect the action of this House in dealing with this measure. The hon. member for King's, N. S. (Mr. Woodworth), in the course of his address at the opening of the debate, and during the progress of the debate, stated, if I may summarise his statements, to the following effect: He said that the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) had never made any honest attempt to build one foot of the line, had simply been endeavoring to sell the charter, and that this was still his sole and only object. He further stated that there was an agreement that the sum of $50,000 was to be divided between certain of the directors of the road. He further stated that the member for West Toronto had endeavored to sell this charter, or to make a contract whereby the member for West Toronto might be able to place in his own pocket the sum of $1,500 for every mile of road, or in all, the sum of $675,000. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) also intimated that he had received information of a private character which disclosed to him matters that he intimated were of a very improper nature, and that, were an investigation had, evidence would be supplied whereby the judgment of this House in dealing with this measure would be very materially affected. Under these circumstances I would suggest whether we are not proceeding prematurely to-night in deciding finally how we will deal with this charter before disposing of those various charges. Hon. gentlemen have argued as if we had conclusive evidence, all the possible evidence as to those various charges. I ask the member for Richmond and Wolfe (Mr. Ives) what would his judgment be if those charges were established? I ask the Minister of the Interior, the trustee of the domain of Canada, what would his judgment be if those charges were established? If it is true that a large portion of the money that is to be the outcome of this public aid is to go into the pockets of members of the House, if the Government were aware of that fact before agreeing to the passage of this bill. I do not know the nature of the disclosures which the member for Northumberland is likely to make, but still it is due I think to an hon. member when he makes a grave charge of this kind that he should have an opportunity of making it good or having it displaced by evidence. I am surprised, and I express my surprise with the utmost regret, that of all Ministers of the Crown, the Minister of the Interior, who is specially charged with the custody of the public money and public property proposed to be transferred on this occasion, should be the first during the progress of this discussion to permit the handing over of this vast amount of property without proper investigation, when there is grave doubt cast on the bonâ fides of the whole transaction. The hon. member for West Toronto stated that recently a change in the directorate had taken place; that in the summer of 1885 several members of this House were placed on the directorate. If we look at the proceedings of the Government during the summer of 1885, what do we find? We find that on 29th July, 1885, an Order in Council was passed handing over to this company 2,880,000 acres of land belonging to the people of Canada for the purpose of constructing this road. We find that later on, in August, another Order in Council was passed on the recommendation of the then Minister of the Interior, now the Minister of Finance, confirming that grant with certain modifications; and later on we find that the present Minister of the Interior, in November, 1885, recommended the Governor in Council to pass, and the Governor in Council did pass, an Order in Council granting further modifications, all to the advantage of this company. Now, to-day we find these grave charges made against the personnel comprising and controlling this company; and it appears to me, that as trustees of the property of the people of Canada, we are not justified in handing over the property to this particular company, until these grave charges are investigated and disproved, and if not disproved, then in not refusing to make such a grant. The member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty), stated that he did not desire to be the first to suffer by a stringent rule. Is there any rule clearer and better understood by men of honor, than that a trustee must not commit a breach of trust? Who are the people's representatives and trustees of the public wealth of Canada, but the Parliament of Canada? The hon. member for West Toronto is one of those trustees. He says: Introduce a Bill, and say it shall be unlawful hereafter for members to commit breaches of trust, so that hereafter it will be unlawful for me to commit a fraud on those I represent here, and I will vote for such a measure. But the hon. gentleman says, you have not shown me such a measure in black and white as being on the Statute-book, and therefore I insist on retaining for the present the fruits of this breach of trust. I would deplore it if public opinion in Canada should ever become so degraded that we would find it necessary to pass an Act of Parliament declaring that members shall not be guilty of—shall I say stealing the public property. I would ask those hon. gentlemen why did we not have this investigation before the Bill was passed in the House to its present stage? When it was before the Railway Committee an investigation was moved for by the hon. member for Northumberland, and had that motion been carried the charges made would have been investigated, and if proved untrue—and I would be glad if they could be proved untrue—then we would have had no difficulty in dealing with this case to-day, for there would have been no conflict of testimony on the subject. But now if called on to vote on this measure these charges remain unproved or uncontradicted, and we are doing what clearly we have no right to do, because we have due notice from two hon. members that there are circumstances in connection with the transaction which, if their statements are true, should make us refuse to give this grant. Under these circumstances it appears to me that we have but one course open to us. If we propose to carefully guard the public domain we should investigate these charges. We should give those hon. gentlemen an opportunity to make good their charges. If we cannot make them good it will be to the advantage of those who are at present affected by them. I am surprised the Government is not the first to ask for the investigation. I was amazed that the Government, when the matter was brought before them in the Railway Committee, voted against an investigation. I was surprised that hon. gentlemen whose characters are affected by these insinuations and charges did not rise in their places with indignation and demand an investigation before progress was made with the measure. But Sir, they have not done so. They have had every opportunity, and late as it is, I would be glad to give way on this occasion and allow the Government to adopt the suggestion I am about to make, and have the Bill referred to committee for the purpose of enquiring into these matters. But, Sir, should the Government not see fit to do so, I beg leave to move the following motion. I may say if you refer to the Bill which is before the House, you will find in section 3 the names of the directors, and as has been stated before, amongst those names are the names of four members of this House. If these charges are true, if those hon. members are parties to those charges, they are not to be trusted with this land. The Minister of the Interior, with sophistry, said he thought they could do no harm with this land. But, Sir, if these charges are true, they can do harm with this land. If these charges are true they could lock up or misapply the proceeds of this land. These charges are that these gentlemen are not engaged in a bonâ fide enterprise in building the railway, but for the purpose of speculating in the grant which is proposed to be given. Supposing those hon. gentlemen were to stand up and admit the truth of those charges, would the House grant that land? If it would not grant it then, it cannot grant it if the charges are true in spite of the admissions. Would the House grant that aid if those hon. gentlemen should stand up and admit that they were to receive a bonus of $50,000 amongst themselves? They have not admitted it; I hope it cannot be proved, but if it were proved would the House still grant public money with which to pay such bonuses? If, as the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth) says, the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Beaty) still stipulates that they were to be paid $675,000 to be derived from the land which is proposed to be given, would under these circumstances, Parliament grant this land for such a purpose? If any such charge can be proved, the House would not be justified in making such a grant. I take no responsibility in connection with these charges. I know nothing about whether they are true or not. I have doubts as to whether some of them can be established; but having been made by some hon. members it is the duty of the House to hold those hon. gentlemen responsible for those charges and give them an opportunity of proving them before a proper committee under the control of this House. Therefore, I submit that before passing to the final stage of dealing with this Bill, we should have the charges thoroughly sifted and investigated, and then, and not till then, will the House be in a position to pass a proper judgment on the merits of this measure. I, therefore, move:

That the Bill be not now considered in Committee of the Whole, but that it be referred back to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, having regard to the Orders in Council for grants of land to the company, to enquire into the relations of certain alleged directors of the company, being members of this House, namely: James Beaty, member for West Toronto; L. A. Billy, member for Rimouski; C. H. Tupper, member for Pictou; L. J. Riopel, member for Bonaventure—to the company, and into any provisional contract which may have been entered into for the construction of the road, or any portion thereof.

In conclusion, I can only add that I hope the Government will see their way in adopting a motion to the effect of the one I have just read, to have a proper investigation made. Nothing will afford me greater pleasure than to withdraw my motion in favor of such a motion by the Government.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Mulock.

Mr. CASEY. It has been already held, on the admission of the hon. member for West Toronto himself, that he had a direct pecuniary interest in this motion, and that he could not vote upon it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. CASEY. If the hon. gentleman does not make that admission, I insist on his voting.

Mr. SPEAKER. What is the question of order?

Mr. CASEY. The question of order is this: If the hon. gentleman is not capable of voting on this motion, is he capable of moving it?

Mr. SPEAKER:

"A member interested in a Bill may take part in a debate thereon, or propose a motion or an amendment in relation thereto."

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 4,

Mr. WATSON. I move that a clause be added as clause 5 to insert the words in section 1, of 47 Vic., chap. 72, "not farther west than Brandon." That simply places the starting point of this road at a point not farther west than Brandon. As the House is aware, it started at Melbourne, but the Government have seen fit to make the land grant start from Brandon. I wish also to add after the word "council" in the ninth line of the 1st section the words, "and from thence to the town of Rapid City, in the Province of Manitoba." I understood from some members of the Government, and from the promoter of this Bill, that there are no objections to these amendments.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Lost.

Mr. WATSON. I hope the Government will accept these amendments. If they will not, I would like to know the reason why. Hon. members may laugh, but this is a serious matter. This road was started at Melbourne, and was to be run to Rapid City. The road is graded to Rapid City, and I simply want this provision to make sure that the road will run to that town. It has bonused the road, and it has been waiting for five or six years to get it; and if the Government intend to do what is right for the settlers along that line of railway, they will adopt these amendments. I think the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson), who knows that country, should use his influence in favor of them. I understood from the promoter of the Bill that if the members of the Government had no objection to them, he had none; and I interviewed the hon. Minister of the Interior, the hon. Minister of Public Works and the hon. Minister of Railways this afternoon, and none of them appeared to give any reason why these amendments should not be made, and I took it for granted that they were favorable to them.

Mr. HESSON. Had the hon. gentleman been with the deputation at the time they visited the Government, he would have learned that the Government determined that the land grant could not be made from Melbourne for the reason that the line ran parallel to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and would be a competitor for at least 20 miles, and therefore it must start from Brandon or some point west. As the hon. gentleman who has just proposed this motion had the audacity or the courage to vote against the Bill altogether, it is rather a strong point for him now to dictate to the Government. I prefer that the matter should be left in the hands of the Government to deal with. I think it is perfectly safe with them.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. member's remarks are quite uncalled for. If I had the audacity to vote for the three months' hoist, I was simply acting on the resolution passed unanimously by the Legislature of Manitoba; and if the hon. gentleman had seen fit to act upon the sentiments of the hon. member of that House who seconded the resolution, he ought to support these provisions I propose. I have no doubt as to what my duty was here to-night; my duty was clear and straight, and I acted upon it. I only hope the present company, seeing the Government has determined to stand by them, will be able to construct the road, and I had hoped from the statements of the hon. Minister of Public Works, as chairman of the Railway Committee, that he would have seen that the present company was in a position to do so before he extended the time.

Amendment negatived.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

REPRESENTATION OF THE N. W. T.—ADDRESS TO HER MAJESTY.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that this House do concur in the address of the Senate to His Excellency the Governor General by filling up the blank therein with the word "Commons."

Motion agreed to.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honors that the House will agree to the address to His Excellency the Governor General praying him to submit the joint address to Her Majesty the Queen, in relation to the representation in the Parliament of Canada of the several Te ritories forming part thereof, but not included within the limits of any Province.

Motion agreed to.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 1:55 a.m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 4th May, 1886.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 128) to incorporate the Northumberland Straits Tunnel Co.—(Mr. Hackett.)

RELIEF OF FLORA BIRRELL.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton) moved the first reading of Bill (No. 129) for the relief of Flora Birrell.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not ask for a division on this motion, but will ask it on the second reading, so that you will be kind enough to declare it now carried on a division.

Motion agreed to on a division, and Bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that, for the remainder of the Session, Government business shall have precedence on Wednesday after routine proceedings.

Mr. BLAKE. This motion is based upon that which I have ventured to object to at an earlier period of the Session —that the late period at which the Government has called us together renders it almost unavoidable that more time than ought to be taken at this period should be taken from private members' business and devoted to the business of the Government. On the whole, having regard to the general business of the Session, I believe that less public evil will be caused by our devoting that time to the Government business, and to that extent depriving private members of their advantages, than by adopting any other course. In that point of view it is not my intention to resist the motion, although, as I say, private members have not had this Session the advantages they ought to have had, owing to the character of the circumstances at the beginning of the Session, and the lateness at which the House was called together. I would submit, however, that questions ought to be allowed to precede, as on former occasions, on Wednesdays. I would also make this suggestion, which indeed, I may say, is a result of a conference I had with the hon. gentleman, whether it would not be for the convenience of the House and the discharge of private business that we should adopt as part of this motion that the order of business on Mondays should be for the future Wednesday's order, which will give private members an opportunity of dealing with motions up to six o'clock, and public Bills and orders after six o'clock, instead of absorbing the whole time with motions. There are some important Bills on the paper—several with reference to the question on Temperance, and so forth—and probably it would be more important to give an opportunity for them to be dealt with than to deal with the other motions. I think, however, that we should have another opportunity of clearing the paper of the undisputed notices, and we might take a part of the first Wednesday for this work. I propose, permanently, that we should have questions on Wednesdays, and that on Mondays, after private Bills, the Order of the Day should be the order of Wednesdays.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman speaks of the lateness of the Session. This Session was certainly called later than usual; but the hon. gentleman should not forget that instead of ending the Session in May last year, we ended it about the 20th of July. Therefore it was foreseen that the House could not be called so early this year as it was in previous years. However, I do not think the business in the hands of private members has suffered much. On the contrary, during the two months that have elapsed I think private members have had every opportunity to bring their measures before the House; and we have done, during these two months, a great deal more work than is generally done during the first two months of the Session. However, I have no objection, if the House agrees to my motion, that on Wednesday questions by members should come first, and that on the first Wednesday we should go over the list of notices of motions and adopt those that are unopposed. Then, as to Monday, I think the suggestion about which the hon. gentleman had spoken to me, as he says, would meet the views of the members generally. That would give hon. gentlemen on Monday from three to six, first for questions and then for notices of motions, and after 8 o'clock private Bills for an hour, and then public Bills, thus covering the different classes of work in the hands of the ordinary members of the House. If the House will allow me, I will modify my motion accordingly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I must say I do not at all agree with the hon. the acting leader of the Government in this matter. I do not think the opportunity for carrying on private business has been given to members, as he states. It will be in the recollection of the House that while the debate on the North-West matter was going on, about four weeks ago, I suggested that the unopposed motions should be taken up and gone through with, in order that gentlemen who desired papers to be prepared should have an opportunity of getting them brought down in time to be available when they wished to make use of them. Now, we have only one day in the week left for private business, although there are notices standing on the paper, some of which have been there for a month, and hon. gentlemen are unable to obtain the papers for which they desired to move. When I made the suggestion to which I refer, the acting leader of the Government intimated that he would be prepared to consider the suggestion, I thought to consider it favorably; but it has passed over, and the private members have not had the chance of getting the papers and correspondence which they desire. However, we must endeavor to remedy the difficulty as best we can, and if the unopposed motions are taken up, that in part meets the difficulty, though late in the day. I also opposed the Government taking all the private days for the Riel debate, instead of allowing papers to be moved for and brought down. However, we have to deal with matters as we find them; and next Session, if we are here, we should pursue a different course, and get the motions for papers put through at an early stage of the Session, so that the papers may be brought down in time for members to deal with them.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is mistaken about the promise I made that on a certain day, with the consent of the House, we should go over the notices of motions, and adopt those that were unopposed. It is not so late in the day as the hon. gentleman says. I am afraid that on that day he was not here when the proceedings commenced, but that was not our fault. He may be assured that the promise made by me was fulfilled to the letter.

Mr. MITCHELL. Though I was not here, as important business kept me away that day, I had placed my business in the hands of an hon. gentleman who was here, and he informed me that that course was not pursued; and when I came back, I found the Order paper full.

Mr. BLAKE. I must corroborate the hon. Minister's statement. My hon. friend's informant was in error. It is quite true that the hon. Minister of Public Works rigidly observed the arrangement that was made; but that was of less advantage than it would have been, because very few members were here to avail themselves of it, which was not, of course, the Minister's fault. I would suggest that private Bills should be the first order after questions on Mondays. You might have such a dispute about a private Bill as you had yesterday, and it might require the whole day to get through with it; so that if you only gave an hour for private Bills after recess, all a man would have to do to defeat a Bill would be to talk for the hour.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have no objection to providing in the motion that private Bills shall be first.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

SUPREME COURT—NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. THOMPSON moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:—

1st. That it is expedient further to amend the law respecting the North-West Territories, to provide for the repeal of the enactments now in force respecting Stipendiary Magistrates therein, and for the establishment of a Supreme Court of civil and criminal jurisdiction in and for the said Territories, to consist of five judges.

2nd. That it is expedient to provide for the payment to each of the said judges, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, of a yearly salary of four thousand dollars, with travelling allowances, to be fixed by the Governor in Council, and a retiring annuity equal to two-thirds of such salary, on conditions similar to those applicable to like cases in the Provinces of the Dominion.

3rd. That it is expedient to empower the Governor in Council to divide the said Territories into five judicial districts, and to appoint for each a sheriff and a clerk of the said court. Each sheriff to be paid out of the said Consolidated Revenue Fund a yearly salary of five hundred dollars and to receive such fees as the Lieutenant-Governor prescribes. Each such clerk to be paid by fees to be fixed in like manner.

4th. That the mover have leave to bring in a Bill founded on the foregoing resolutions, and to come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation under an Order of the Governor in Council.

Motion agreed to.

REAL PROPERTY—NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. THOMPSON moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:—

That it is expedient to provide in Committee of the Whole, under Bill No. 10 of this Session intituled: "An Act respecting Real Property in the North-West Territories":

1. That the salaries of Registrars, Deputy Registrars and other necessary officers, and such incidental expenses of carrying the said Act into effect as are sanctioned by the Governor in Council, shall be paid out of moneys to be provided by Parliament for the purpose.

2. That a proper building may, under orders of the Governor in Council, be provided and maintained at the public expense in each registration district for the deposit and safe-keeping of documents connected with the registration of titles under the Act.

3. That the Governor in Council may, from time to time, provide the necessary books and forms, provide any additional forms he deems necessary, and make such rules and regulations as are necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the said Act, and make such rules and regulations as to him appear necessary for giving effect to the Act, in cases unprovided for, according to its true intent and purpose.

4. That all fees payable under the said Act or in connection therewith shall be settled by tariff made by the Governor in Council.

5. That the Registrar may demand and receive the fees so settled, and perform the duties for which they are made payable, on payment thereof, and shall keep a correct account of all moneys received by him under the said Act and pay over the same to the Minister of Finance and Receiver-General, as shall be directed by the Governor in Council.

Motion agreed to.

HALDIMAND—ISSUE OF WRIT.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to direct the attention of the Government to a motion I made a week ago with reference to the issue of a writ for the electoral district of Haldimand. To-day I called upon the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and ascertained that the warrant had been received by him, but that the writ had not been issued, owing to the fact that the Government had not nominated a returning officer. I would ask if the Government have decided on a returning officer, and when the writ will be issued?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government has not yet appointed a returning officer.

PROTECTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. FOSTER moved the third reading of Bill (No. 96) respecting the protection of navigable waters.

Mr. DAVIES. In view of the provisions which the Bill contains relating to fisheries, I think we should amend the title. The title is "protection of navigable waters" alone, and there are provisions in the Bill referring to the protection of fisheries in waters not navigable. In view of the fact that there are serious doubts raised as to the constitutionality of the Bill, the title should be made sufficient to cover all the purposes of the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. The title is that of the law at present existing, and although the Bill goes a little further, its purpose is really to protect navigable waters into which the other flow. The provisions with reference to fishery clauses is not an essential part of the Bill, as far as the enactments go, but simply provides that the officers shall have power to enforce the Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

CHIGNECTO MARINE TRANSPORT RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. POPE moved the third reading of Bill (No. 105) to amend the Act to provide for the granting of a subsidy to the Chignecto Marine Transport Railway Company, Limited.

Motion agreed to on a division, and Bill read the third time and passed.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 108) to amend the Adulteration Act.—(Mr. Costigan.)

Bill (No. 109) in further amendment of the Weights and Measures Act.—(Mr. Costigan.)

Bill (No. 110) an Act respecting Commissions to Public Officers of Canada.—(Mr. Thompson.)

LAND SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 117) to amend an Act to authorise the granting of subsidies in land to certain railway companies.

Mr. BLAKE. I was not able to be present when the Bill was discussed in its earlier stages, but I observe some provisions in it which, it seems to me, require some consideration. The proposal is that the principle of township grants instead of alternate sections shall be or may be adopted in the grant of subsidies to railways, but the arrangement is conditional upon an arrangement for the Hudson's Bay Company's reservation being first of all settled. Now, of course, we could not propose to take the township and, with the Hudson's Bay Company's reservation unsettled, hand it over, but it does not seem to me that the proposal, if it is one advantageous to the public interests, is at all necessarily dependent upon an arrangement being made with the Hudson's Bay Company, because the alternative power might be granted to the Government to give the township subject to the Hudson's Bay Company's lot, or after arrangements were made with the Hudson's Bay Company for the exchange of the lot, else the whole policy of the measure is made dependent on the bargain which may be made with the Hudson's Bay Company, because you cannot grant the townships at all unless you can make an arrangement with them as to their property. The substance of the proposal can be carried out, though not perhaps so effectually, by granting the township exclusive of the Hudson's Bay Company's lot. That is the first observation I have to make. The second one is that this proposal is in its terms susceptible of being carried out with reference to lands wherever they may be granted in the North-West Territory as railway aid, and therefore in that portion of the country which is suitable for settlement —I mean for agricultural settlement as distinguished from ranche and pasture lands—and yet the provision is that:

"The grants of land so made shall include the statutory allowance for roads between sections in the townships and fractional parts of townships so granted, but shall be subject to a reserve of one acre out of every one hundred acres for the establishment of trails, with convenient watering places, for the purpose of driving and watering cattle."

Well, that is a proposal that there shall be a departure from the general system of survey and such advantages as may belong to the adjoining townships through the North-West Territories from the continuous system of roads. The railway company is given the benefit of all the allowances, and only one acre in one hundred is to be reserved for trails. You may find, therefore, applied as extensively as this provision may be applied, provisions which in their terms would appear to me to be applicable only to ranching and grazing districts, and not at all to districts which are capable of being settled; I do not mean those districts which are now used as ranching and grazing districts, for I am told of many of them it is said they are quite capable of being settled; and therefore I go beyond those districts which are now used for ranching and grazing, and I say that, instead of this being confined to these lands, it is extended to lands which are suitable for agricultural settlement. Well, if it be an advantage, if it be in the public interest that lands which are susceptible of being settled in the ordinary way in the North-West should be utilised by abolishing the system of the road allowances and granting the road allowances to a private corporation, substituting only a reservation for trails, I want to know why it is not adopted generally, why it is good for the blocks of land granted to the railway company and not for the general public? But you do not propose to extend it generally, and therefore you acknowledge that it is not good for the general public, and, if it is not, it should not be done to benefit the railway company. These observations occurred to me, and it is possible some of them may have been explained by the hon. gentleman and the force of them removed during my unavoidable absence from the House, but, not having heard such explanations, I thought it was not right that the Bill should pass without having ventured to submit them.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). As to the first objection of the hon. gentleman, that with regard to the Hudson's Bay Company's sections, if I understand the Bill the provision is that the Hudson's Bay Company shall be consenting parties to the grant of a whole township in lieu of the sections they are entitled to. Under the existing law, they take substantially two sections out of each township. Under the particular case through which this arose, the railway ordinarily known as the Galt Railway, running from Dunmore to Lethbridge, they are consenting parties to it, and have agreed to take their lands in a distinct block. So much for that principle in regard to the Hudson's Bay sections. Then, with regard to the other suggestion of the hon. gentleman, the particular district through which this railway runs is peculiarly adapted for ranching purposes, and the railway company desire to use it for ranching purposes in the meantime, and I believe they are proposing to lease their lands for those purposes at the same rate as the Government are leasing their lands, that is at 2 cents an acre, so that ranchemen who choose to get their lands from the Government may have the adjoining lands also from the company. The road allowance belongs to them in that way, reserving the right for tracks; but, if the land is fit for settlement, it is clear that it would be more valuable to a railway company of that kind to have settlers there than to have ranchemen; and, inasmuch as the survey has been made, which is not at all altered by the proposal now made, they have their road allowances if they choose to use them, and I think the company may be safely trusted to look after their own interests in that matter. So far as the alternate blocks belonging to the Government are concerned, there is no interference with them. They are reserved for settlement in the usual way, if settlers choose to go upon them.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes; but does not the hon. gentleman see that if there be a township belonging to the public on which there are ordinary settlers, and then a railway company's block, and then another township with settlers beyond, the means of communication to the settlers in the two townships are going to be seriously interfered with if only a trail is to be reserved for the purposes of driving and watering cattle, instead of the present highway arrangements.

Mr. MILLS. I do not see why there should be a provision of this sort at all. The Hudson's Bay Company are entitled to one-twentieth of the lands in the North-West set out for settlement for fifty years—that is, up to the year 1920. If lands are set out for settlement after that period they will not be entitled to share in them. By a subsequent arrangement with the company, to which they assented at the time the first Dominion Lands Act was carried, they agreed to take certain specific sections in each township set out for settlement, two sections in most of the townships. I do not see why the hon. gentleman wants to interfere with that arrangement at all. Suppose a township is reserved for a railway company, that you grant alternate townships instead of alternate sections, the company would take those townships, subject to the deduction of the school lands and the lands which are set out to which the Hudson Company would be entitled, just the same as if no special provision was made on the subject. The hon. gentleman will find this to be the case by making a provision of this sort in the Bill, that he enormously increases the difficulty of administration. If the law is allowed to operate, the railway company know, when they receive a particular township, that there are two sections to come out of that township for the Hudson's Bay Company and two others that are reserved for school purposes. They go on these sections, and the moment the township is subdivided and set out for settlement, the company take thirty-two out of thirty-six sections. The quarter-sections are reserved in this particular way. Now, if the hon. gentleman proposes to provide that the whole township may pass to the railway company, and that the Hudson's Bay Company may be satisfied with lands given elsewhere, he will find that in every instance the company will insist on having lands which are at least as good as those which they have surrendered to the Government for the use of the railway company that is to receive a particular township, and there will always be a difficulty in satisfying the company that the lands you propose to give them elsewhere are of equal value to the lands you have taken from them to hand over to the railway corporation. You will have endless difficulties, negotiations and delays in settlement of the land claimed by the company that will fall into the hands of the actual settlers; then the settlers will require to be dealt with, and so the work of the Department will practically fall behind the necessities of the case. Now, I think the hon. gentleman will not interfere at all with the chance of effectively aiding railways, if he reserves to the Hudson's Bay Company the lands they are actually entitled to under the existing arrangements. The hon. gentleman knows that under the law, as it now stands, the legal titles to these particular sections are vested in the company, not by the patent of the Crown, but by operation of Statute. You may, for the purpose of convenience, issue a patent to the Hudson's Bay Company, but the legal title is vested in them the moment the lands are set out for settlement, by operation of law. Then, why undertake to divest them of that title by a provision of this sort? If the hon. gentleman will allow the law to operate, will amend this law, so as to protect the school sections and the Hudson Bay sections, he will greatly lessen the difficulties of the Department, and he will confer quite as great a service upon the railway corporation.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). It is a little singular to find the hon. gentleman who has for years past been urging a system of alternate blocks rather than alternate sections, because of the injury done to settlement by these sections within townships, separating the settlers one from another, now objecting to the principle by which that may be avoided. As a matter of fact, no arrangement of this kind can be made without the consent of the Hudson's Bay Company. They have to be assenting parties to the taking of their land away out of the township and accepting land elsewhere. Therefore the two things must go together, the section of the land which they will receive at the moment these lands are taken from them, and the giving them to the railway company. Therefore I do not think there can be any possible difficulty in relation to that, and by no other means could we adopt the principle that is sought to be adopted in this Bill.

Mr. IVES. So far as the ranching companies are concerned, it is no doubt very important to provide facilities for the company to control the whole block, without having small portions here and there dotted through it which are not under their control. Many of the difficulties which have arisen in the United States between ranching companies and others, has resulted from the plan of railway companies receiving lands in alternate sections while the remaining sections of school lands were open for settlement. Now, these sections of school lands, although not fit for cultivation, are in many cases taken up, and settled upon, and homesteaded by people who did not intend to farm, but who went there for the purpose merely of taking up a section and turning on a larger number of cattle than their homestead will sustain, more than could be maintained upon their own sections, and trusting to the grass on the adjoining lands. The result is that the railway company's lessees, to protect themselves against these small homesteaders on the school section, have been obliged to fence around their own sections at their own expense. That forced the party who had the school section, and who had a great many more cattle than he could keep upon it, and who expected to pirate upon other lands that did not belong to him, to cut the fence, and that has led to innumerable difficulties. Of course, I am speaking of lands that are not fit for settlement but are simply fit for grazing purposes. I think it would be desirable that these lands should be made valuable as fast as possible, and I am quite sure that they would be made more valuable by giving to whoever owned the bulk of the land the control of the whole quantity. It does seem to me, however, that the provision which enables a railway company that receives a grant, to acquire the Hudson Bay sections, could be brought about by agreement without this Statute as well as with it. There can be no possible objection to the provision however. When it comes to the road allowance there is a serious objection. I do not see why the road allowance might not be left, instead of the provision as proposed. It is certain that nobody will go there and make roads unless they are needed. There will only be the ordinary trail through such a country as that, such a trail as the necessities of the ranchmen, and perhaps the settlers, may require. But I think the idea which is evidently aimed at in the Bill is a good one, that of putting the ranching country in such a shape that the whole of it may be utilised. I am quite sure that you will find in future, if the country is stocked with cattle, that you will avoid a great deal of difficulty by removing it from the power of people to go and homestead on sections that are within a large block of grazing country, because I am sure the same thing will happen here that has taken place in the United States—people going there, not to farm, but to turn out great numbers of cattle, and in that way seek, by paying a very small amount, to obtain the grant of a large amount of useful land, and you will have trouble and difficulty, as they have had in various States.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY—RELEASE OF BONDS.

Mr. McLELAN moved:

That the House resolve itself into committee to consider a certain proposed resolution (page 913) respecting the release to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company of the amount of $5,000,000 in bonds under the provisions of the construction contract as security for the operation of the railway.

He said: It is proposed to ask the House to give the Government this power, so that when the road is built and in running order and when the Government shall be satisfied thereof, and that it is likely to continue, they shall have the power to release $5,000,000 worth of bonds now held by the Government as security.

Mr. BLAKE. This power of releasing this security at present, of course, pertains to Parliament. The security is by the contract made permanent, unless and until Parliament thinks fit to release it. This is a proposal that the whole matter shall be handed over to the Government and they shall have authority on their own judgment to decide when the securities shall be handed over. I think no inconvenience whatever can arise from our forming a judgment ourselves as to the circumstances under which, if at all, it may be expedient to release this security. We meet once a year, and if in a year it be the opinion of the Government that Parliament may properly be called upon to agree that the security be released, a proposal can be laid before Parliament and its decision can be obtained. There is serious objection to handing this power over to the Government, and I interpret the meaning of the proposal to be this: before we meet next year the security will be released.

Motion agreed to, on a division, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think, before asking us to place in the hands of the Government the power to release the security, we ought to know something as to when the Government themselves expect the road to be in complete running order, and, also, we ought to obtain some estimate of the exact condition and working of the road.

Under the returns which have been brought down to the House, we remain in blessed ignorance of what is doing, or even what is expected to be done, by the company on that very important section of the road running from Callander station to Port Moody. The returns brought down contain a number of details, which, I suppose, are accurate in a sense, but they do not show in the least what is the amount of traffic, what is the condition of the road along the 2,400 or 2,500 miles which form the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not think the House could be asked to pronounce on that important question in more utter and sublime ignorance of the traffic and condition of the 2,400 miles than we are in. We have obtained some information as to what are the receipts and expenditures over the Canadian Pacific Railway system, covering the Ontario and Quebec lines, the lines they have acquired from the Province of Quebec and the lines in western Ontario; but as to the present condition, the present prospects of the main line, we positively know nothing—at all events, we know nothing on this side of the House; the Government may be better informed. We were told, when the railway was in process of construction, that one reason for giving those extraordinary bonuses was that it was going to be a very difficult thing, and a very costly thing to work the main line; and as the House, I hope, will meet within seven or eight months, in January, or at least in February next, it will be utterly impossible for the Government to have had the experience of even a single year's working of the whole line of the railway. I must say that I think, before we are asked to consider the present proposal, the Government should place us in the position, or cause the company to place us in the position, of having fuller details about the main line of railway than we now possess. I do not know whether the Government have them, but certainly the House is not in possession of any of those details.

Mr. McLELAN. I gave the House an estimate that had been prepared by the engineers of the cost of completing the line on the central and eastern sections. I have not obtained full figures respecting the working of the road upon each particular section. The company and the Government thought it desirable that in the public interest there should be at as early a date as possible a final settlement, or, as the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) called it, a final finality, between Parliament and the company; and we concluded to ask Parliament to give us power that, when the road shall have been completed and in good running order, and we are satisfied that it will be continued to be operated, we shall have power, without coming to Parliament, without raising a Canadian Pacific Railway discussion in the House, to release those bonds. It will, no doubt, be desirable in the interests of the company to do so to enable them to raise money upon the land that remains to them. They represent that with that extent of road on their hands and in order to complete the connections, it will be desirable, in their interest and in the interest of the country, that they should be able to raise a considerable amount of money. On all railways when contracts are considered to be completed and the road to be in perfect running order, there are always additions to be made and additional amounts expended on capital account. There is hardly a road on this continent but where there is a continual increase of capital account for the purpose of extending and improving the road, the rolling stock and connections, and the Canadian Pacific Railway will, no doubt, desire, indeed they will be compelled, in order to keep up with the progress of the railways of the continent, to raise a very large amount to complete the connections and continue the road in perfect order. It will be desirable for them as well as for the country that the company should have the means of raising money upon the lands on the best terms. After the road has been completed, after it is in perfect running order, to the entire satisfaction of the public and the Government, it is desirable at the earliest possible day that the company should be released as regards those bonds, because so long as they remain on the road after it is in perfect running order and satisfactory to the public, they will be considered by capitalists and investors as showing that there is still a dread on the part of the Government that the whole thing may collapse and break down. If it is possible to obtain some figures before the final stage, I will submit them; I have not got them at present.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman seems to think that it is bad policy now to retain the security which it was good policy to obtain originally. A great deal was said when the contract was made of the circumstance that the Government was going to have good security for the road being completed and operated. The hon. gentleman's statement now is that as soon as the Government are satisfied that the road is in running order the security should be released.

Mr. McLELAN. And that it will continue.

Mr. BLAKE. How are we going to be satisfied that it is to be continued? Is it to be by the result of one year's traffic? I do not believe the hon. gentleman is going to wait for the year's traffic. He says it might be better for the company and the country too, to place the question of releasing the security in the hands of the Government, in order to prevent another Canadian Pacific Railway discussion in Parliament. I call the attention of hon. gentlemen to one of the motives which the Minister offers as a reason for this action—that it would be better to prevent another Canadian Pacific Railway discussion in Parliament, which would be necessary if the question had to be decided by Parliament—and so, in order to prevent Parliament from discharging its duty and coming to the conclusion upon that which at present belongs to it, that it is better that Parliament should abdicate its functions and place them in the hands of the Government, where the Canadian Pacific Railway discussion will take place between the thirteen or fourteen gentlemen representing the Government—not in open day, not with the benefit of publicity, but in secret conclave, and under the sanction of an oath as to the silence and secrecy which is to prevail in those deliberations. That is the alternative which the hon. gentleman presents to Parliament as superior to the exercise by them of their proper functions. Now, there should be no inconvenience to a Canadian Pacific Railway discussion on this question in Parliament, if it were not that the hon. gentleman thought it was possible that the Government might propose to deal with the power which is to be handed to it, on grounds which would not be agreeable to Parliament or to the public. Then the hon. gentleman says it is well to do it at once. It is well to do it as soon as possible, after the road is thoroughly completed, after the road is throughout equipped and opened—as soon as we are satisfied that they are going to continue. Now, when we made the contract we said: We are going to assure the continuance of the operation of this road, so far as security goes, by taking a security of $5,000,000. Now the hon. gentleman says, in effect, I propose to alter that—to abandon that proposition. Well, this is not a novel view on the part of the company. They took this view, and presented it to the hon. gentleman, somewhat in the terms he has used to-day, two or three years ago. In their statement they told him it was damaging to the prospects of the company, that the country should continue to retain the security for the operation which the country had stipulated for, and they asked the Government to agree that the security should be surrendered. The Government declined; they said: We are determined to keep the security just as it was—not to modify it even by saying that we ask Parliament to give us power to surrender it at the time we are satisfied that it is no longer required; but we will keep it just as it was, without change or alteration. That was the position in which they invited us to modify, once or twice, the arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway. This has remained undisposed of; it was one of those things which was to be disposed of, I suppose, as soon as the Canadian Pacific Railway wished—at a more convenient season. It was to be taken by degrees—one thing at one Session, another at another Session, and the third at the next Session after that. They thought that was the best way—that the people could be induced to take by degrees a proposition which, taken altogether, would be of a startling character. Now, I heartily agree with that part of the remarks of the hon. member for Huron in which he spoke of the utter absence of information as to the working of the road, the character of the road and the prospects of the road. We should have reports on these subjects. Last Session, before calling for a statement of the grades and curves on the Canadian Pacific Railway, I found that the table which is customarily made in all railway enterprises of this description had not been made, but I got a considerable amount of information from the Minister of Railways, and certain plans and profiles from which, with considerable difficulty and the use of experts to assist, I obtained a certain amount of information as to the grades and curves on certain portions of the line. Later on, I enquired whether the Government had obtained—as they ought to have obtained, as was obtained before the final location of that portion of the route selected by my hon. friend for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) through the mountains, as are published in our blue books—the tables of grades and curvatures. I asked whether they had obtained it. Mark you, the location of my hon. friend was established on such principles that he brought down to Parliament contemporaneously with the location of which he asked approval—he brought down the evidence, in the form of these tables of grades and curves, showing the character of the road. But after the hon. gentleman had approved the thing, after the work had to a large extent been completed—to the extent, at any rate, of the rails being laid in great part and the location fixed throughout—the Government had not up to that time got before them the tables of grades and curves which would give them that information. The hon. gentleman said they were in course of preparation, and now to-day we are told that connection has been made, that the road is to be opened in a few days, and the Government has not yet thought fit to bring down to us the tables of grades and curves which would show the condition of things with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, Mr. Chairman, I made a statement last Session with reference to the results of an imperfect examination, of the imperfect information which was given to me. That statement was not challenged in this House, but a considerable time afterwards, when the measure came before the other branch of the Legislature, it was challenged to a certain extent, and obviously on information supplied by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in another place by the leader of the other branch of the Legislature, on behalf of the Government, and different views were expressed from those which I had stated. But I say the information which will enable us to see how far either of us was correct, and which will enable us to do what is far more important in a question of this kind—to see what really the standard of this road is, particularly through the mountains, and over the north shore of Lake Superior—the common customary arrangements, the arrangements you will find with reference to any of the principal lines and many of the inferior lines given to the public—is not yet communicated to the people of the country, and that in the case of a road on which we had certain stipulations as to the character of that road. Now, there is nothing which will do more to remove the false impressions—if they be false impressions—which have been created with reference to the character of the grades and curves on the Canadian Pacific Railway, than just the plain production of the table of grades and curves as they are on the road. Yet, in the absence of the information and the other information referred to by the hon. member for South Huron, we are asked to pass this measure, which, if we do pass it, means practically that Parliament assents to this security being released before next Session.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think even the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat believes that the road is not going to be run for ten years, or for many years. We can all remember that at the time this precautionary measure was taken of preserving the security, it was considered very doubtful after its completion that it should be put in operation after it was finished. That doubt was felt very generally, and it was said especially, even after the completion of the road to the north of Lake Superior, that it would never be run—that the traffic would not pay the grease on the wheels of the locomotives. That feeling has all disappeared. Everybody knows that the road is practically finished, and will be in operation during the course of this month or next, from sea to sea, running as a completed road. No one can suppose for any moment that, under the present circumstances, that road will not be run. Such a thing as the abandonment of the road, or any portion of it, and the forfeiture of their charter, any such an abandonment is out of the question. There are $65,000,000 of stock held, both in Europe and America; there is $35,000,000 of bonds, making $100,000,000 of money held by capitalists in both hemispheres who would run the risk of losing all their investment, if there was a failure of the contract made between the Dominion of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. So that it is certainly not for any useful purpose that these five millions are reserved and locked up; and, therefore, being of no value, there being no possibility really of the road being abandoned or stopped, or not put into operation and kept in operation for ten years, then why keep this reservation, which is not needed as security for the people of Canada, while it is important to the company that this $5,000,000 should be released? While the company have performed their contract in their wonderful way and in an unprecedentedly short period, we know that a road of that description must require continual addition to its capital for very many years. The hon. gentleman says that my hon. friend, in speaking of this resolution, has stated that it is advisable to avoid further discussions on the Canadian Pacific Railway in this House, and that that proposition plainly means that the $5,000,000 will be given up before another Session. Well, Mr. Speaker, I may say for one that I hope it will be so. I hope the company will immediately give such satisfactory proof to the Government of Canada that the road is finished, that they will feel themselves justified in giving up these $5,000,000. The power certainly is conferred upon the Government; but the Government in all circumstances must ex necessitate as an executive having the confidence of Parliament, decide when the company have faithfully performed their contract; therefore, if they must have that power ex necessitate, there can be no objection to their having the further power of saying when and for what it is desirable that this security of $5,000,000 should be given up. And why, it will be asked, do the company desire to get the control of this $5,000,000? Because they want further capital immediately. They require it for the development of the road, for the increase of their rolling stock, for the purpose of completing those portions of other roads connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway which are necessary to perfect it in all its great purposes. They will require capital, for instance, to assist in completing the short line to Halifax; they will require it for the purpose of aiding in connecting England and Canada on the Atlantic, and Canada and China on the Pacific. They will require all the money they can get, and much more in the course of a few years—much more than they will be able to raise upon the security of their lands; and they want to raise that money at once. It is the peculiar credit and glory of this company that they have finished the road so speedily. They are now carrying out the same policy. They desire to finish it in all its dimensions, so far as they can generate capital, as speedily as possible. They want to make the termini of the line, as has been stated already several times, Liverpool and Hong Kong. They desire to assist in all the branch lines which will aid in the carrying out of the great design. They will go into the market with their lands. They will say: We wish to borrow so much upon those lands. Well, what do you want for the lands, and what amount of bonds are to be issued? will be asked by the capitalists of Europe. They will be obliged to say: There are $5,000,000 of those bonds held back by the Canadian Government; and why are they held back? Because the Canadian Government and Parliament and people do not think there is sufficient security that the road will be run for ten years. The very distrust created by this reservation of $5,000,000 of bonds will greatly diminish the company's chances of disposing of the remainder of the bonds. It is evident that the question must be asked: What is the total issue of bonds? what is the total acreage secured on those bonds? why are these $5,000,000 held back by the Government of Canada? you have performed your contract with Canada; you have finished the road; Canada admits that the road is finished, and that the company have performed their contract; and why do they hold back these $5,000,000? Oh, Canada is afraid that the road won't be run for ten years. That must be the answer that they will honestly have to give; and what will be the consequence of that answer? The consequence will be that it will lessen the value of the bonds, and greatly diminish the chances of those bonds being put on the market. We will have all those other enterprises kept back and impeded, the capital diminished, the means of the company to carry out their grand projects, if not altogether destroyed, greatly injured; and why should we want that, unless we honestly and conscientiously believe that the road will not be run for ten years? But if we know, as we all know, that the road will be run for ten years, that there is not the remotest chance of failure in that, why should we injure the company by this distrust, for which there is no reason? Just the same common-sense caution which induced the Parliament of Canada to insist on this security in the inception of the road, and in the doubtful stage of its successful completion, should influence us now, when the company come forward after all they have done, and say: Give us all these bonds; you do not want to hold them locked up for ten years; let us have the advantage of them; we will spend that money in the development of this great Canadian road. And mind you, this resolution is not compulsory; it is optional with the Government; and the Government will insist, as they have done before, that the company will show them the purposes for which the $5,000,000 will be expended. These are the reasons why the Government come forward and ask the House to avoid crippling or injuring the chances of the company going into the English market and making a successful loan upon the security of the lands which they still retain, when we know that the Government will insist on that money being expended on the railway or in the development of its communications with the various parts of the country or with other parts of the world.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman suggested that as the Government must have the confidence of Parliament, therefore, it was not much more to say that the Government should have the power of doing this without the consent of Parliament. On the same principle the hon. gentleman had better let us pass an Act to allow him to legislate for us and to spend all our money; as the Government must have the confidence of Parliament, it is not much more to allow the Government to do everything else at their own sweet will. These are the constitutional doctrines which the hon. gentleman as leader of this House sets up. These are the relations which he proposes should subsist between the Executive and the Administration and a free and independent Parliament, if that is the proper term to apply to this Parliament, at this time of day. The next thing he said is that there is no doubt the road will be run. Well, there are all sorts of ways of operating railways. A portion of this railway is operated at present three times a week, a portion every second day, a portion once a week, and the security we have is security for the efficient operation of the railway, with such number of trains as the public convenience might require, although it might not pay well, because the expectation was that in the early period of the enterprise its operation would be accompanied by an inordinate expense compared with the traffic. That was the statement of hon. gentlemen opposite; they said the large price was mainly because the company was going to operate the road at a considerable expense in the early period. It is easy for the company to save expense at considerable inconvenience and determent to the development of the country, by diminishing the frequency of the trains, and I do not think much of that railway accommodation, which is to be obtained three times or once a week, as a very efficient agent for the development of the trade or passenger traffic of the country. Therefore, it is important for us to have a practical leverage which will enable us to insist, under a considerable penalty, upon, not merely the road being kept open, but also upon its being efficiently operated as we consider the public interests require it to be operated, although that may involve more frequent running of trains than the interests of the company would suggest. The hon. gentlemen says it is just as much a piece of plain common sense and prudence that we should surrender the security now as that we should take it when the bargain was made. When the bargain was made, we thought it necessary to take security for the efficient operation of the road for ten years. Having done so, and the road being quite completed, the hon. gentleman says it is quite as cautious and as prudent and as long-headed that we should surrender the security just when the road is about to be operated in its whole extent, as that we should take the security when the contract was made. Then the hon. gentleman says, if we do not surrender the security, it will interfere with the sale of the bonds, because the first thing people will say is: "Oh, they are only using so many bonds, what about the other bonds?" and they will come to the conclusion that the Government of Canada hold these other bonds because, as the hon. gentleman put it in his extravagant fashion, they are doubtful whether the road will be kept open. No; the only conclusion that can be come to is that which appears on the face of the transaction, namely, that the Parliament required the security for the efficent operation of the road for ten years. The company can answer well by saying: "When we made the contract with the Government, the Government and Parliament made it a condition that we should give $5,000,000 security for the efficient operation of the road for ten years. That was a part of our bargain; we have built the road, and we do not propose to ask the Government and Parliament to give up that security, which we agreed to give and did give, until the time arrives when, under the terms of our contract, we will be entitled to demand it. If the company said that they would stand in a stronger position than they will by going across and saying: Yes, there was a bargain of that kind, but we told the Government and the people of Canada that you would distrust very much the enterprise and the value of our land if they continued to hold us to our bargain, and we asked the Government and Parliament, as a mark of confidence in us, and to prevent that feeling of distrust being created, to give up the security. This they consented to do, and having shown their confidence in us in that marked manner, we ask you to treat us with the same confidence, and buy our bonds at a higher rate." The hon. gentleman says again that the money is wanted, and he hopes this will be done before next Session. What he has power to do and hopes will be done will, no doubt, be accomplished, and, as I said, when he moved the Speaker out of the Chair, that was equivalent to its being actually done. There are many things, he says, for which this money is wanted. It is wanted to span the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans with steamers; it is wanted to build a short line and branch railways. All or some of these objects may be highly praiseworthy, but mark you, Sir, all of them are increasing the capital account of the Canadian Pacific Railway, on which, so long as this monopoly exists, the interest or profit must, in some shape, be paid at the expense of the people; and while I am not averse to the expenditure of further capital prudently, I say that in the interests of the people, both of the North-West and the older parts of Canada, we ought to consider what those expenditures are which are increasing that capital account, and how far it may turn out afterwards that the cost of those expenditures will be taken out of the pockets of the people of the North-West in exchange for very inferior and inadequate service. Parliament, while asked to carry out this operation, which is a part of the larger operation which the hon gentleman proposed in the other resolution, is asked to consent to a large increase of the capital account of the company. This is a dangerous business. You find the First Minister coming down and telling us, before the road is opened, that there is capital money outstanding now to the extent of $100,000,000, invested by capitalists in the bonds and stock of the railway. That is the statement of the hon. gentleman. It goes forth as the word of the leader of the Government, which the hon. gentleman says has so much the confidence of Parliament that we may surrender, and ought to surrender, to it our proper functions. He says there is a hundred millions of money invested. What is the fact? The fact is that there were $29,500,000 cash invested for the $65,000,000 of stock which the hon. gentleman counts as if it were all solid cash. Add the $35,000,000 bonds, and you find the amount invested to be $64,500,000. From that deduct the $21,000,000 paid and appropriated in dividends already, and you have $43,500,000 as the net amount which is said to have gone into the road, instead of $100,000,000. This is important, because the power of the company, with its monopoly powers, to raise tariffs, the obligations in which we have engaged not to diminish the tariffs, are all largely dependent on the question of capital account; and it is therefore unfortunate that the hon. gentleman should, contrary to former statements made by him, when he differed from Sir Charles Tupper, then Minister of Railways, should now declare that there are a hundred million dollars invested in the road, when we all know the most is $64,500,000, from which may be fairly deducted the very considerable proportion that went and are going into the pockets of the shareholders as dividends, and did not go into the road at all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is another important consideration. Neither of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken has given the slightest idea as to whether the Government have had any information as to the condition or working of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That road was to be furnished according to a certain standard, and I do not observe that either the Minister of Finance or the First Minister intimated that the Government engineers had as yet examined this road from end to end, and were satisfied it was completed in accordance with the standard. We are in such ignorance about these matters that we are not even prepared to say it was not according to the standard, although, if the statements put forward in the newspapers be correct, more especially as regards the Columbia section, a great deal has to be done in that quarter, at any rate, before the road can be considered as having at all approximated to or equalled the standard provided. Apparently the Government do not know anything more than we do as to the main line. The papers they have brought down do not make any distinction or give any practical information at all. We know perfectly well that when a road is in the process of construction, it is a very easy thing to manipulate accounts and make them show a profit which does not really exist; and the least the Government and the company may do, when they come to the representatives of the people, after having just received a gift, practically, of $10,000,000 money more, because our accepting $20,000,000 in place of the $30,000,000 the company promised to return us, is, to all intents and purposes, very nearly a free gift. I say that they ought to have given the House, that they ought to have put the Government in possession of very much fuller details on this subject than they have chosen to do, and it is making the reference to this House a farce to take the course which the First Minister has done. As my hon. friend remarked very justly, it would be better at once to pass an Act throwing the responsibility of all legislation on the First Minister and his colleagues, and not trouble ourselves to come here and spend our time at all in discussing these matters.

Mr. MILLS. I am sure the House could not help being struck with the observations made by the First Minister, who informed us that it was prudent to require this security in the first instance, a security that has no force and can have no force until the road is completed; and yet, without the House being informed as to the progress of the work and the present state of the road, the right hon. gentleman proposes that the security shall be given up. Well, if his present position is right, certainly the Government were altogether wrong in demanding any security of this sort. The hon. gentleman says, at the very moment that this security is to have any force at all, that it must be abandoned. Now, I do not think the House is possessed of information to know how far the company are likely to operate the road, as the hon. gentleman says. I believe that the Government were to construct a very considerable section of road in British Columbia, and when it was completed to hand it over to the company. There was a contract between the Government and the company as to the character of the work to be done by the Government on behalf of the company. I understand that that work has proved to be very much more heavy and more serious than was at first contemplated, and that the present contractors who have been performing that work for the Government claim at least a million and a half for the extra work done on that particular section. I have been informed also that the company are of opinion that the character of this work is not at all such as it really was to be, that in fact the Government have built a section of road which by the terms of the contract they are to hand over to the company, and that that road is altogether inferior to the road the Government contracted to build on behalf of the company, and that the railway company estimate that it will require a sum in the neighborhood of two and a-half millions of dollars to make this a section of road such as the road was to be. If this be so, it will require at least $4,000,000 of further expenditure on the part of the public to complete that section of road and make it such as the Government contracted it should be when it became the property of the company. We have no information on that subject. Let me suppose for a moment that a dispute should arise between the Government and the company, as to the section of the road which was to be built by the Government, on behalf of the company in British Columbia. Suppose the company were to say the grades are heavier and the curves are shorter than the road the Government were to construct, that it is impossible to operate this road profitably; that, until the Government put the road in such a condition as to make it conform to their contract with the company, the company will not feel bound to operate the road. What security have the Government that the road will be operated when they abandon these $5,000,000 of bonds? Why, I believe that the road constructed by the Government through British Columbia, as far as I can ascertain, is not such as the company were to build, that it is a road of altogether inferior character, that it will be exceedingly difficult to operate, and, so far as we are yet able to learn, there is nothing to show that a serious loss will not be entailed upon the company in the operation of that road. Now, every member who now sits in this House, who was here in 1881, when this contract was entered into with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, knows that the right hon. gentleman told the House that we were giving to the company a very large subsidy, larger than they would actually require to enable them to go forward with the construction of the road; that a part of this subsidy was paid to them to cover anticipated losses that would arise from the operation of the road. Does anyone suppose that this company will be prepared to sustain these losses, if by any possibility they can be avoided? Is this company going to incur the serious losses which the hon. gentleman assured Parliament would certainly arise for some time after the completion if by any possibility they can get rid of the burdens which will be entailed upon them beyond their earnings? No one can for a moment suppose that will be the case, and yet the hon. gentleman proposes that Parliament shall give up to the company the only security it has for the due fulfilment of the company's obligations. Now, I am not complaining of what I believe the company will do if the opportunity occurs to them. They will carry on the operation on commercial principles. They will economise as far as they can; they will not incur losses for the mere purpose of affording accommodation to the public on grounds of public policy, and not on grounds of commercial advantage to the rail way corporation; and the Government, as trustees of the people, as guardians of the people's interests, after having called upon Parliament and induced Parliament on behalf of the public, to pay to the company first a large sum in the form of subsidy to aid in the construction of the road, and a further sum to cover any losses the company might sustain in the operation of the road after it was completed, propose to abandon the only security they have for the payment of this additional sum. The hon. gentleman has spoken of the western terminus of this road being at Hong Kong and the eastern terminus at Liverpool. Everyone knows, while that may be a very fine and magniloquent term to use, that it is a myth. The hon. gentleman knows that there is no such thing as an Asiatic traffic. I will do the hon. gentleman the credit to say that I do not believe he thinks for a moment there can be anything like an extensive traffic carried on over this road between Asia and Europe. There was a railway constructed from San Francisco to New York which might have had a monopoly of that traffic, if there had been a traffic of that kind. It was in operation for years without a rival railway across this continent; and I would like the hon. gentleman to inform the House how much that railway carried from San Francisco to New York that was on its way to Liverpool. Why, the whole of the supplies from Asia and India which are consumed in the United States reach New York and the United States by way of the Suez Canal; they do not come by San Francisco. We know, as far as the trade of the American railways are concerned, that it is trade which springs up along the line of the railway; it is trade which is due to the industry of the population settled along the line of railway; it is the traffic and the travel of the population along the section of country the railway is to accommodate. The hon. gentleman knows there will be no such traffic. If a line of steamers were put on between Hong Kong and Victoria or New Westminster, there would be nothing for them to do. A steamer that would carry 5,000 or 6,000 tons would perhaps carry all the Asiatic traffic that this road would have an opportunity of carrying during twelve months in the year. We are bound to look at the circumstances of the country and the condition of the railway itself. The hon. gentleman has not given us the information that we are entitled to in regard to the present condition of this road. We do not know anything about its grades and curves. We have no opportunity of comparing the actual condition of the road at the present time with the terms of the contract into which the Government on behalf of the country entered. I say that we are entitled to it, and until we have information to show that there is a fair and reasonable prospect that this road will do a business that will at least pay its running expenses, we are guilty of a breach of trust to the people of this country in abandoning the security we have. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman told us that this road would not pay, that it could not pay, for many years, that it would be run at a serious loss. Has he changed his views on this question?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Entirely.

Mr. MILLS. He was mistaken.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I was mistaken.

Mr. MILLS. He has had more light.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. More light.

Mr. MILLS. Well, Sir, I hope the hon. gentleman will illuminate this House, for he has so far not succeeded in giving us that light which has wrought such a radical change in the hon. gentleman's own views.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not a radical change but a complete change.

Mr. MILLS. Is it the increased population of British Columbia that has wrought that change? Is it the increased population west of Calgary? What is it that has transpired to show that this railway, which the hon. gentleman formerly supposed would be run at a loss, has now so far improved its position that it is going to be run at a profit, and that, therefore, the House may safely abandon its security and give up the control it has at this moment?

Resolution to be reported.

SUPPLY—HOME RULE FOR IRELAND.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BLAKE. I rise for a moment to intercept that question, in order to bring before the House another, in which the last House showed a deep concern—I mean the Irish question. In 1880, I spoke my views upon this subject, and expressed my belief and hope that we should at no distant day see a measure of Home Rule granted to Ireland. In the year 1882, the question was moved on the other side of this House. At that time we, on this side, heartily co-operated in order to give the greatest possible weight to the proposed action. Then I spoke at length my opinions upon the whole question, which saves me from the necessity of trespassing now upon the time of this House, and since that time, to the best of my humble power, here and elsewhere, I have aided in the advancement of that cause. Since then a new Canadian House of Commons has been elected, which House has not yet spoken upon the question. Since then great events have transpired in the United Kingdom itself. The people, both of Ireland and Great Britain, have received for the first time a very full measure of representation in Parliament. The Irish people, under that measure of representation, have, by an enormous, an overwhelming majority, pronounced in favor of Home Rule, and the great statesman who leads Her Majesty's Government has recognised the vital necessity of grappling at once with the question; and Her Majesty's Government have, as I ventured to suggest on a former occasion, seen the propriety of themselves formulating a plan for the settlement of that question. Now, Sir, a controversy has arisen on some of the more important details of that measure. I do not, myself, admire all those details. For example, admitting the great difficulties, I should yet prefer, to the present plan for the exclusion of Ireland from the management of Imperial affairs in which she is interested, her continued representation for those Imperial purposes in an Imperial Parliamen—I should prefer the plan, notwithstanding its great difficulty, of her retaining that share of control. But it needs not to discuss this or any other matters of detail, because it has been expressly and authoritatively stated that none of these points are considered in any way vital to the question which is now before England and before the world. The vital principle now at stake is that of self-government for Ireland in local affairs. This was stated by Mr. Gladstone in his reply to the criticisms on the first reading of the Bill, and he has further and authoritatively declared it by his recent manifesto, which was transmitted to us only yesterday. In that manifesto, he thus speaks:

"As for the means we take the establishment in Dublin of a legislative body, empowered to make laws for Irish, as contra-distinguished from Imperial, affairs. It is with this that we are now busied, and not with details and particulars; their time will come."

He adds:

"We are not debating the amount of Irish contributions to the Empire, of the composition of the legislative body, or the maintenance of representative connection with Westminster. On these questions and many more we may and we may not be at odds, but what we are at this moment debating is the large and far larger question which includes, and I think absorbs, them all—the question whether you will or will not have regard to the prayer of Ireland for the management by herself of affairs specifically and exclusively her own. This and no other is the matter which the House of Commons has at once to decide. If on this matter it speaks with a clear and intelligible voice, I feel the strongest assurance that the others, difficult as some of them are, will, nevertheless, with the aid of full discussion and with the aid of a wise and conciliatory spirit, be found capable of a rational and tolerable settlement."

Now, Sir, that Bill to which this manifesto refers, stands for a second reading in a few days, and then that vital question is to be decided. A great excitement has arisen; the Empire has been aroused, not merely the Kingdom, but the Empire. The emotion has passed beyond the seas; it has passed beyond the Empire; the English speaking people outside the bounds of the Empire have been aroused, nay more, the free nations all over the world have been moved. Every eye is at this moment bent on Westminister, and every ear is strained to catch the echoes when they come of the great debate, and to learn the issue of the mighty struggle from beyond. Under these circumstances, marks of sympathy and of admiration have been cabled to the First Minister, and he has responded to them in such a sort as proves conclusively that he regards them, as they must be, helpful to him in the enormous task he has undertaken. We know as well as if we had received it already, what the tone of the reply will be to any such communication as we have on a former occasion addressed, or as other large bodies have addressed, upon this subject. The circumstances are, of course, changed; they are changed since the day we addressed Her Majesty; they are changed as to the position of the question; but they are changed in this particular also, to which I call your special attention. At that time we assumed—and I suppose we are not now prepared to resile; I am not, at any rate, prepared to resile from the assumption of our right respectfully to approach the Throne with a view to tender our humble advice and hopes upon a subject of such vital importance to the whole Empire, and to Canada as a part of the Empire. But, Sir, at this time, not merely in other particulars are the circumstances changed, but they are changed in this: That whereas when we were asked to accede to the view that we should assume the responsibility of respectfully tendering that advice and opinion to Her Majesty's Government, that Government had not acted; now we can say that Her Majesty's Government, whether upon that advice or not, have acted in accordance with the spirit of that advice, and that we are no longer called upon by any sense of duty, and it is unnecessary that we should tender them any advice; what we are called upon now to do, under the present circumstance, is to assist them, so far as we can, by giving them our moral support in furtherance of the views which they have expressed, and in the adoption of the principle of the scheme now before Parliament. The answers which have been given to the communications which have been received show their helpfulness. To the Speaker of the Quebec Assembly, in response to their resolution, Mr. Gladstone writes:

"I am deeply grateful at the resolution adopted by your honorable body. It is my belief that the people of England, who have partial responsibility for the old misdeeds of the British Government, and the people of Ireland who have really none, will concur in the wise and liberal view entertained by the Quebec Assembly."

To the Mayor of Boston, in answer to the resolution of the city, he cabled:

"I feel that American opinion, allied as it is with a regard and affection for the Old Country, affords Her Majesty's Government a powerful moral support."

Then, shall we be slack to-day? Shall we be silent now who spoke before? I say, no. We are bound to speak and to speak now. Else it will be said of us: "You spoke ere the question was ripe, when your words embarrassed; now that it is near, even at the doors, you withhold your help." Else it will be inferred that we have changed our minds, and that no longer does the House of Commons approve of local self-government for Ireland. Our silence to-day will be as positively hurtful as our speech to-day would be helpful. It was but yesterday that we were, in effect, appealed to. Listen to the words of Mr. Gladstone's manifesto. He appeals, indeed, directly, in the words which I am about to read, to the masses of the population of Great Britain; and this is what he says:

"Watching from day to day the movement of the currents of opinion during the present conflict, more and more I find it vital to observe the point at which the dividing lines are drawn on the side adverse to the Government. They are found, as I sorrowfully admit, in profuse abundance, in station, title, wealth, social influence and the professions, and the large majority of them in the world, spirit and power of class. These are the main body of the opposing host. Nor is this all. As knights of old had squires, so in the great army of class each enrolled soldier has a roll of dependents. The adverse host, then, consists of class and dependents of class; but this formidable army is the bulk of its constituents, part of the same, though now enriched at our cost, with a valuable contingent of recruits that has fought in every Government the greatest political battles of the last sixty years, and has been defeated. We have a great aim. For us now it is to restore your parliamentary efficiency, by dividing and by removing obstacles to its work, to treat the Irish question with due regard to its specialties, but with the same thoroughness of method by which we have solved colonial problems, that fifty years back were hardly, if at all, less formidable. To give heed to the voice of the people speaking in tones of moderation, by the mouth of the vast majority of those whom we ourselves have made its constitutional representatives, and thus to strengthen and consolidate the Empire on the basis of mutual benefit and hearty loyalty."

I ask whether we, too, though that appeal is not a direct appeal to us, we too, a democratic people, kinsmen of those he addresses, of that very mass of the population to which Mr. Gladstone speaks, shall not echo and further his appeal. He describes in the same manifesto the response from the world. Thus he speaks:

"Never have I known an occasion when a parliamentary event so rang through the world as the introduction of this Bill, under the auspices of the British Government. From public meetings and from the highest authorities in the Colonies, from capitals such as Washington, Cincinnati, Boston, Quebec, and from the remotest districts lying beyond the reach of all ordinary political excitement, I receive the conclusive assurance that kindred people regard it with warm and fraternal sympathy. Our present effort is to settle, on an adequate scale, and once for all, the long-vexed and troubled relations between England and Ireland, which exhibit to us the one and only conspicuous failure of the political genius of our race, to confront and master a difficulty, and to obtain in a reasonable degree the main ends of civilised life."

I ask, under those circumstances, and when the highest testimony is given to those resolutions from various quarters, and their utility, shall Canada, who was earliest in the field, be dumb to-day? Shall her voice, so loud before, be silent now? Shall we not listen to that mute appeal and cause our names to be enrolled amongst those who constitute the forces of the great public opinion throughout the world, giving an added impulse to the progress of this great measure? I dare not be silent longer. I do not bring this as a party question. I have waited till the last moment, hoping that some one on the other side of the House would move. That hope I have been obliged to abandon. I see that the Minister of Inland Revenue has declined to move, and has cabled for himself and for the Irish representatives in Parliament the assurance of his and their adhesion to the address of 1882. I do not undervalue his assurance. But it is not the assurance required. What is required is the assurance, not of one, but of all classes; not of a section, but of the people; not of a Minister of the Crown, but of the Commons of Canada; not of the Irish Catholic members, but of the French and English, Scotch, Irish and German, of all creeds and of all nationalities. To substitute the hon. gentleman's assurance for our voice would be to acknowledge that we do not choose now to speak in the sense in which we spoke then, and in which he declares his own readiness to speak again. I therefore speak, but not as a Reformer, or as a party leader; I speak as a Canadian and citizen of the Empire to brother Canadians and fellow-citizens of the Empire. This is not a Protestant or a Catholic question; they are enemies of their country who would make it so. It should not be, in Canada at all events, a Conservative or a Reform measure. I regard those as the enemies of their country who would try to make it so. I hope that we may, by our own action this day, show ourselves united in the redress of wrongs and in the advancement of the cause of liberty. For my part I should feel myself nothing less than a coward and a criminal should we, without any effort of mine, stand passive to-day and fail to lend our help at this critical moment to the cause of freedom and local self-government for the Irish people. I, therefore, move to leave out all the words after "that" and insert the following:—

Mr. BLAKE.

An humble address be presented to Her Majesty to respectfully assure Her Majesty that the interest and concern felt by the Commons of Canada, and the people whom they represent, in the condition of Ireland, and their desire that some means may be found of meeting the expressed wishes of so many of Her Majesty's Irish subjects for the grant to Ireland of a measure of local self-government still continue as warm and earnest as in the year 1882, when they were humbly signified to Her Majesty by an address to the terms to which this House affirms its abiding adhesion.

Humbly to inform Her Majesty that this House hails with joy the submission by Her Majesty's Government to the Parliament of the United Kingdom of a measure recognising the principle of local self-government for Ireland."

And humbly to express to Her Majesty the earnest hope of this House that the principle of the said measure may be affirmed, and that it may form the basis for such a settlement of this great question as shall conduce to the peace, happiness and prosperity of the Empire.

Sir JOHN A. MACDNALD. I wish to say only a few words on the motion which the hon. gentleman has made. The hon. gentleman stated that he has not moved in this matter from any political consideration. He does not speak as a partisan—no, not he; he does not speak as a Reformer—no, not he. He speaks from the fullness of his heart, and because he had committed himself with the rest of the members of this House in the last Parliament on this question. But if it is not to be considered a political matter, why did he wait so long? Why did he say that he expected somebody to speak on this side? Why did he expect that such a motion must come from the Conservative party, and that only on the failure of the Ministry to bring in such a motion, did he at the last moment—the other side, the other party, having failed in their duty—did he feel it to be his duty—not as a party man, not in any way as a party man—to make this motion? All I have to say about this matter is this, if the hon. gentleman is sincere—I do not doubt his sincerity—but if he is sincere why is it that he has taken the course least likely to aid in the cause which he has so much at heart, by moving his motion on going into Supply? If the hon. gentleman desired to bring this up he should have moved it after full notice; he should have given this House an opportunity of considering what his motion was, what he wished to convey, what he wished this House to agree to. He should not have done it without full notice, so that every man in this House would come fully charged with the meaning, the intention and the scope of every sentence of the hon. gentleman's motion, so that they would all have come ready to give their opinions, according to their several and individual consciences, as to what was the best course in the interest of Ireland, in the interest of the Empire, and in the interests of Canada. By moving it in this way as a matter of surprise—for it is nothing more nor less than a matter of surprise—he has taken a course which compels me to say to him that I will not vote for his resolution now, but that if he will give notice or take this as a notice—we will give him a day, we will set aside all Government business, we will set aside everything, as this question is brought up and is before us—we will give him any day he chooses between now and prorogation, when we will discuss the question fully and fairly, and vote after fully considering the scope, meaning and intention of the speech of the hon. gentleman. I therefore ask this House to vote against this resolution, and at the same time I tell the hon. gentleman that we will discuss it—not to-morrow, because we must have more than one night—but next day, or any day afterwards he likes, and we will discuss it fully and fairly and come to such a conclusion as we think best for the great interests involved—the interests, as I have already said, not only of the United Kingdom, not only of Ireland, but also of the Empire and of this Dominion of Canada.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I feel very much pleased at the announcement made by the leader of the Government. In the first place it is my duty to refer shortly to some of the remarks made by the hon. member who has moved the resolution now before the House. That hon. gentleman has stated that he felt it to be his duty, that he would have felt himself to be a coward and criminal if he had not moved such a motion, that he waited until he found there was no sign of a movement of the kind on this side of the House, in order to spring this motion on the House in the manner he did. Mr. Speaker, on a former occasion, when this same subject was discussed before this Parliament, no man who sat in this Chamber, and listened to the hon. gentleman when he spoke on that occasion, admired him more sincerely than I did, or was more ready to congratulate him upon the very able speech he delivered on that occasion. But I wish to recall to the House the course pursued on that occasion, and contrast it with the course pursued on this occasion. If my hon. friend, bursting with enthusiasm for the old sod, for the people who are struggling for self-government in that country, if he had a feeling of anxiety to strengthen the hands of those who are fighting the battle in that country, he might have solicited the opinions and advice, perhaps—if it would not be saying too much—but at least the opinions of those who might be supposed to partake in some small degree, if not so eminently and so interestedly as the hon. gentleman can, in a feeling of that kind; he might have remembered that there were other Irishmen in this House who, perhaps, felt as deep an interest as he felt in that question. What was my course when I was called upon by Liberal and Conservative Irishmen in the city of Ottawa on a former occasion, to act in this matter? They came to me representing both sides of politics in this country. They asked my opinion as to whether such a motion would meet with success in the Parliament of Canada. They admitted the difficulties; they had grave doubts as to whether it would receive any considerable support, and I am free to confess that no man at that time believed that it would get the support of a majority of this Parliament; but they believed it would get such a support as would attract the attention of public men on the other side of the water, and I was asked if I would move in the matter. I said that I would willingly undertake the task, no matter what the consequences might be; but that before doing so, I must be placed in the position of being free from the accusation of acting the part of a demagogue. I said, communicate with the different Irish societies throughout Canada, and if they say that in their opinion a motion of this kind should be brought forward, and that I should do it, I shall be willing to undertake the duty, and devote to it what ability God has given me, honestly and faithfully. They did so communicate with the different Irish societies throughout the Dominion. Most of the societies responded, expressing in plain and unqualified terms their opinion that such a motion should be proposed before Parliament, and hoping that Parliament would receive it favorably. I did not then spring my motion on the House. I made it my duty to call together all the Irishmen in this Parliament, except the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. leader of the Government; we left those two hon. gentlemen out because they were the leaders, but we invited every Irish gentleman in this House and in the other Chamber to a meeting to discuss what resolutions might be submitted to Parliament. We had a meeting, at which it was thought proper to appoint a committee to draft the resolutions. I was appointed chairman of that committee, and as I thought it desirable that the hon. Mr. Anglin, then a very prominent member of this House, should be on the committee, and as unfortunately he and I were not on speaking terms, I suggested to one of my friends, who I dare say would have done it of his own accord, to propose Mr. Anglin as a member of this committee. He did so, but Mr. Anglin declined to act. I tried to show a desire to meet him in as friendly a way on that occasion as I could, and I expressed the hope that he would consent to act on the committee, as he could render very great service from his intimate knowledge of Irish history, as well as from his attainments as an educated man. Still he declined to act, although I refused to place any person in his stead. That committee met and framed resolutions which were moved in this House by myself; and as I stated before, the hon. gentleman who has moved the present amendment seconded my efforts in a very able speech, one of the ablest speeches, I think, which he has delivered in this Parliament. This House unanimously adopted the resolutions; and the other Chamber adopted them almost unanimously, a very small minority dissenting. An address based on the resolutions was sent home to the Imperial Government. What was the result? This is the reply which was sent to the Marquis of Lorne:

"My Lord,—I have received and laid before the Queen the address to Her Majesty from the Senate and House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled, which was transmitted in your Lordship's despatch of the 16th of May.

"I am commanded by Her Majesty to request that you will convey to the Senate and House of Commons her appreciation of the renewed expression of their unswerving loyalty and devotion to Her Majesty's person and Government.

"Her Majesty will always gladly receive the advice of the Parliament of Canada on all matters relating to the Dominion and the administration of its affairs; but with respect to the questions referred to in the address, Her Majesty will, in accordance with the constitution of this country, have regard to the advice of the Imperial Parliament and Ministers, to which all matters relating to the affairs of the United Kingdom exclusively appertain."

This is signed by the Earl of Kimberley, who I believe was a member of the Gladstone Government at that time. That reply did not change my opinion at all. I agree with the hon. gentleman in thinking that we had a perfect right to send the address we did send. It was couched in respectful language; it was moderate in its tone; it covered the principle involved; and as we took the ground that the question affected our interests in this country, we felt that we were acting within our clear right. But I am now showing the view that was taken of our act by that Government, to which the hon. gentleman thinks the changed circumstances would now justify us in sending another address. I have no right to impute wrong motives to the hon. gentleman, or to question his sincerity, and I will not do so. I do not wish to introduce into this debate anything that he or any one else might consider unpleasant. I think it is a very important subject—a subject that touches very deeply the sympathies of a large portion of the people of this and every other civilised country in the world—and I am as thoroughly in sympathy with the movement in favor of Home Rule as ever I was, and as honestly convinced of the righteousness of the cause that has been pleaded by the able leader of the Irish people in the British Parliament, Mr. Parnell. I do question the propriety of the present motion, and that is what I wish to come to. I am glad the right. hon. leader of the Government has made the proposition he has, because I would much prefer that this motion should not be voted on at all. I would prefer that the hon. gentleman should withdraw this motion, having received from the First Minister the assurance that every opportunity will be afforded him to move the resolution in a regular way. The only plea for moving the resolution in the manner in which the hon. gentleman has now moved it is that he might not have an opportunity later of doing so; but after the assurance of the hon. First Minister that that opportunity will be given, I do not think he should press it now. Of course, it is in amendment to going into Supply, without any arrangement with the Government, and without any notice having been given. Therefore I think the hon. gentleman should withdraw it. Then there would be an opportunity given to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, who, he thinks, have been lax in their duty, to consult with him. We do not claim that anything we may say will influence his views; we do not pretend to hope that; but I think we are entitled to say to him that, feeling as much interest as he possibly can in this question, it might be possible for us to agree upon a motion that would be passed unanimously by this House. We might possibly agree upon a motion to be submitted to the House and passed unanimously, and I am sure the hon. gentleman will agree with me that such a motion would be of more value than one which necessitated a division. I am not here to discuss what changes we might ask for; that could be discussed among those specially interested, and to whom the matter might be referred. If the hon. gentleman thinks that would at all meet his views, and that we could come to such an understanding, I will not continue my remarks; but if he thinks my request is one he cannot entertain, I will have to crave the indulgence of the House while I make further remarks on this subject.

Mr. BLAKE. I rose at the time the hon gentleman rose in order to defer to the hon. First Minister's proposition. I have no right to answer any of the observations of the hon. gentleman other than just so far as they relate to the question. After the statement the First Minister made, though I think it might have been made in a better spirit, and after the statement of the Minister of Inland Revenue, though I think it might have been made in a little better spirit, I may at once say I am quite willing that whatever time is reasonable and consistent with the object of the resolution should be given at once to carry out the suggestion of those hon. gentlemen. My object is just what the hon. gentleman's is, to procure a unanimous motion; and because he tells me he expects, by the course he proposes, to produce such a result, I am all the more ready to agree to that course. I do not, however, agree that we should, without considering the circumstances, postpone taking action any longer than to-morrow, because, as far as I can learn, the second reading of the Bill is fixed for Thursday, and that is why I call this the last moment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is fixed for the 10th.

Mr. BLAKE. No, for the 6th.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It has been altered to the 10th, because on the 6th a tragic event took place in Dublin.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has, no doubt, later information than I. I took mine from the statement in to-day's papers, contained in Mr. Justin McCarthy's letter; but after the statement of the hon. gentleman, I will take Thursday instead of Wednesday. As to the form of the motion, I, too, shall take just the same opportunity as the hon. gentleman took, when he moved his motion; that is, the opportunity of the House going into Supply. In the meantime, as to the form in which the motion shall be presented, I shall only be too glad to meet the hon. gentleman, or any other hon. member, with the view of settling that point.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman says he will take the same course as that which I took on a former occasion. It is impossible for the hon. gentleman to take that course.

Mr. BLAKE I did not say I will take the same course; I said I would take the same opportunity, which is the motion to go into Supply.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman has taken that opportunity, but not in the same way. He knows that the opportunity I took, in moving my resolution as an amendment to the motion to go into Supply, was taken after consultation with both sides of the House, and with the consent of the Government that it should be moved in that particular way, just as the hon. gentleman now agrees to a particular day. We knew what the motion was; hon. members had seen it and were prepared to deal with it.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. COSTIGAN.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman put his notice on the paper. I came that day prepared to discuss that notice, and the motion of the hon. gentleman was different altogether from the notice on the paper. It was a motion of which we had no notice, except those whom the hon. gentleman may have privately consulted. The majority of members had not heard of it, and we were called on to dispose of it without having been given any opportunity of making any suggestion as to its form or its terms.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will give my version, and let the hon. gentleman's version stand.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not know that I have a great deal to say in addition to the few words I said before recess. If the proposition made by the First Minister meets with no favor from the mover of the amendment before the House, I think the only course will be, as a matter of self respect, so far as I am personally concerned, to indicate to the hon. the leader of the Opposition that I protest against his constituting himself the sole judge of what course we should take.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh! Oh!

Mr. COSTIGAN. Hon. gentlemen opposite may not approve of what I say; I do not expect they will. I have made a fair proposition; the First Minister has made a fair proposition.

Mr. BLAKE. Which is accepted.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Well, it will be accepted, perhaps, before a great while, and it may be accepted by every reasonably-minded man that both suggestions were fair and reasonable. What can be the object of moving a resolution of this kind? Is it to strengthen the hands of the First Minister of the Imperial Government? If that be the case, the stronger the vote the better, the stronger the expression from this House the better; and whether the suggestion comes from one side of the House or the other, there are grounds, perhaps, upon which we can unite, and the suggestion that we should agree on a resolution, is worthy of fair consideration.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. COSTIGAN. And I think that the hon. gentleman who refuses that must assume considerable responsibility, if the vote is not as large as it might be made by a fair discussion of our views on the subject.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear," but he has stated he does not agree with the proposition of the First Minister or the suggestion of myself, and insists upon adhering to his right to move his resolution as an amendment to the motion to go into Supply. There is no reason or excuse for the hon. member moving for a vote, which he professes himself is not of a political character; to which he wishes distinctly to be understood, he does not give a political character at all, as a vote of want of confidence.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Why move it in that shape?

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The only justification the hon. gentleman could have for moving it in that shape would be that at this late stage of the Session, he might be afraid he could not move it in any other way; but he cannot consistently say, after the proposition that has been made to him, that he has no political motive in proposing this motion as an amendment to Supply.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Hon. gentlemen opposite may cheer, but what is the haste in moving this motion?

Mr. LISTER. Because you would not move it?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Why should not the proposition I have made be accepted? Is it because hon. gentlemen opposite have seen in the Citizen that a message has been sent on behalf of Irish representatives, and do they wish to repudiate it or the authority from which it emanated? The Minister of Inland Revenue sent the telegram across the water, not on his own responsibility, but after meeting Irishmen and the descendants of Irishmen in this Parliament, who are equally responsible for it, and desired to repeat, as far as they could, the sentiments expressed in the resolution passed by this Parliament in 1882. The hon. gentleman says that has no force. If he says so on this side of the water perhaps his authority will be considered on the other side as weakening, whatever value it was intended the message should have. The hon. gentleman quoted also the address of the leader of the present Government, whose serious attention is now called to this question, and what does that indicate? Mr. Gladstone refers to the congratulations and the suggestions he has received from the old capital of Quebec, and from several municipal authorities all through the United States. Has he forgotten that the Parliament of Canada, before any of these bodies took up the question at all, sent to his Government their opinion and the opinion of the Canadian people expressed through them in reference to the benefit of the system of Government for which the Irish people are asking? Had he forgotten that, or might he not have included at that time the Parliament of Canada as well as the Legislature of Quebec? But perhaps he thought he could not very well make a reference to the Parliament of Canada after the snubs he had administered to us for the respectful address he was forwarded. I do not intend to follow up the discussion now, as I expect to have another opportunity of speaking more fully upon it. I assume the responsibility of the position I take, and I expect every hon. gentleman to assume the responsibility of his course. I take a share of the credit with the other hon. gentlemen who are interested in the question for having obtained from the Parliament of Canada a unanimous expression in favor of the principle which is now under discussion. The Parliament of Canada having given that opinion, I do not think that an address should be asked for now to repeat that opinion in the same direction in which it was given before, without some indication that Parliament has changed his policy or the people of this country had changed their views since that time. The hon. gentleman himself in his motion perhaps would create a necessity, so far as asking the Parliament to reaffirm its principles, because he doubts the rights of the Irish representatives in Parliament and myself, quoting that last decision of Parliament in his speech to-night. That is the only argument in favor of asking this House to reaffirm what it had already passed. The hon. gentleman thinks a day could not be lost. What is the great haste for a day or two, that is considering that the First Minister had assured the hon. gentleman and this House that he will see that the time and opportunity are allowed him to move that resolution and to have a full discussion on it? Is it possible that some of the hon. gentleman's friends, having read the Citizen this morning, having seen that this cablegram had gone forth, having seen that, notwithstanding the misrepresentations which were made of myself and of my friends on the question, as well as on every other question which can be turned to political account, thought that this would meet the reasonable wishes and expectation of our friends, and would perhaps remove from those who are seeking to find fault with us any just cause of complaint, and that the only thing to do in order to counteract that good effect was to raise anew the discussion here in the House of Commons. Perhaps that may have been one of the grounds which influenced some of the gentlemen who are so anxious to have this discussion now. I stated before, and I repeat now that, so far as that principle is concerned, the hon. gentleman knows that there is no change on my part or on the part of my friends. We believe now, as we believed then, in the principles we voted for, in the principles which we supported then and which we are prepared to support now, but, unless the hon. gentleman will consent to the offer made to him to-night, I will accept the offer of the leader of the Government, and will find an opportunity, if not through myself, through some of the Irish representatives in this House, who feel as deep an interest in this matter as the hon. the leader of the Opposition, and will ask the House to express its opinion on a substantive motion, not moved as a vote of want of confidence, but in such a way as to give everyone a fair opportunity of expressing his views, and then I may have something more to say about it.

Mr. CASEY. I do not intend, any more than the hon. Minister who has just sat down to discuss the question of Home Rule. I merely have a few remarks to make as to what has fallen from that hon. Minister and from the hon. the Premier. I am sorry to find that, on this occasion as on others, the Premier appears to consider the sneering and flippant tone which he used towards the leader of the Opposition the proper tone and the proper manner in which to discuss great and important questions. He sneered at the assurance given by the hon. the leader of the Opposition that he was not moved by political motives. He said: "Oh, no, he is not moved by political motives; of course not; no one would think that of him!" and went on in that tone, and charged that hon gentleman with having possibly injured the cause of Home Rule by the manner in which he had brought forward this motion. Now, the fallacy of that charge I hope to make plain a little later on, but I think it is very clear that the statement he uses in a mistaken manner, to say the least of it, in regard to my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, is a true statement in regard to his own remarks. For, if anything could injure the prospects that this resolution, or some similar resolution, would be unanimously adopted by the House, it was the tone and the substance of those remarks—the tone of his remarks, in the first place, as indicating a possibility of political difference on a matter where no such possibility had before been suggested; the substance of his remarks, in that he threw some doubt, by asking for delay, by declaring that he could not now vote for the motion, on the likelihood of this motion being accepted in principle by the whole House. There was no reason for this in the wording of the motion itself; there has been no reason in any expression of public opinion in Canada to cause any doubt to exist that this House is as unanimous now in favor of Home Rule as it was in 1882. There was no hint of such a thing until that hint was given by the leader of the House himself; and, if any utterance could be more calculated to throw cold water on the resolution and encourage people to find difficulties in the way of passing it than the language of the First Minister, I cannot imagine it, short indeed of a direct refusal to allow such a motion to pass. He urged that this motion should not come up as an amendment on going into Supply. The hon. the Minister who has just spoken has strongly concurred in that objection. Without arguing the question as to the propriety of bringing it up in that manner, I wish to quote a precedent or two—one precedent at least which I think ought to be conclusive and satisfactory to the leader of the House, whether it be satisfactory or not to his follower, who has sometimes been known to differ from him. I refer to the authority of the hon. the Premier of the House himself, and the occasion was the motion he proposed in regard to Mr. Letellier de St. Just, then Lieutenant Governor of Quebec. That resolution was proposed in the Session of 1878. The hon. gentleman, then leader of the Opposition as he is now leader of the House, did give a general notice that he was going to bring up a motion of that sort, and offered to communicate with the leader of the House about it. He said on 9th April, 1878:

"Before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to state to the House and the hon. Minister at the head of the Government—as I have already done to him privately—that it is my intention to move, on going into Supply, at an early date, a motion, in order to bring under the attention of the House the late occurrence in Quebec. The resolution which I intend to move, I shall, in the course of the afternoon, communicate to the hon. gentleman at the head of Government. I would like a day fixed for the purpose of discussing this very important question. I would suppose that the hon. gentleman would allow it, by general consent, to be brought out upon going into Supply on Thursday, and I shall then move my resolution on the motion that the Speaker do now leave the Chair. I intend to bring up the constitutional question, as much as possible on its own merits, and try to raise the question out of the slough of party."

Exactly what has been proposed in regard to this resolution—that it should be discussed on its merits, and not be allowed to drop into the slough of party. The then leader of the House suggested what could be done, he said:

"I think that the proper course for the hon. gentleman would be to bring it up as a substantive motion, and I shall afford every facility for doing so on Thursday. If it is intended, however, to move an amendment, of course the hon. gentleman will see that he is confining it in such a position that it is quite impossible to avoid the conclusion that there is something political in it."

Exactly the same sort of argument that has been urged to-night in a stronger form. To that the then leader of the Opposition replied:

"I would have no objection to this proposition, but for this fact: I desire to make a certain proposition to this House and to have it discussed on its own merits, but if I make a separate and independent motion it can always be avoided by a motion for the previous question, or a motion in amendment, giving the go-by to the principle laid down in the resolution, and passing to the order of the day. Anything of this kind can be done; and, therefore, as it is a well known principle that a motion which in no way affects the Government of the day in its terms, as it is not a vote of want of confidence, or censure from any point of view."

I think that description will apply to the present resolution also.

"It is a grievance that should be made on going into Supply, which is the proper constitutional period for making such a motion. I shall then be obliged to move it. I will communicate this resolution to the hon gentleman, and if he makes any suggestion to alter and amend it, on which we can agree, I shall be most happy to settle the resolution, so that we can have it discussed on its own merits."

Just what the leader of the Opposition is offering to do now in regard to this motion of the Minister of Inland Revenue.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not at all.

Mr. CASEY. Oh yes. The hon. gentleman's ears are at fault. The leader of the Opposition did offer to consult with him in regard to the terms of this resolution.

"But the hon. gentleman cannot engage for the House that no amendment will be made, even if he and I agree upon a proposition. He cannot control the House, and any member can make a motion which will prevent or intercept the consideration of the constitutional proposition which I desire to make. I, therefore, feel myself bound to move it on going into Supply."

Now, Sir, I fancy my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, is in the same situation as was the then leader of the Opposition, that in order to prevent the possibility of intercepting the consideration of the constitutional proposition which he is about to make, he must make it upon going into Committee of Supply. It was contended, at that time, by the present leader of the Government, and no doubt will be contended by him still, that such a motion was not necessarily one of want of confidence. Perhaps a point will be made by him, as was attempted by the Minister of Inland Revenue, out of the notice that was given of the latter's resolution in 1882, and the notice that was given in the Letellier case. Now, Sir, I have quoted the leader of the Government against himself, and I intend to quote the Minister of Inland Revenue against himself. He did give notice of a resolution in 1882, and he did, as he stated this afternoon, obtain the advice of other representative Irishmen in preparing that resolution. He did not follow their advice in every particular, but he did ask the advice of many, and obtained the advice of some; and with their assistance he prepared the resolution, but when it came to be moved in the House we found that it varied materially from the resolution of which he had given notice, and we were just so much worse off instead of being better prepared for the consideration of the question by having had notice of a resolution which was not the one actually proposed. We were not allowed to discuss the notice which had appeared on the paper, but were compelled to discuss another resolution different in many vital particulars. To show you how different they were, I will read a few extracts from both. I have here a volume of the Votes and Proceedings for 1882, and also of the Journals of that year. The first two or three paragraphs do not differ materially, except for the omission of certain words from the third paragraph, casting the responsibility for the existing state of affairs in Ireland upon the Imperial Government. But in the 5th paragraph we found the following words in the notice of motion:

"We should most respectfully pray, may it please Your Majesty that some such form of local self-government may be extended to Ireland, as is now enjoyed by the Provinces comprising this Dominion of Canada, and under which your Majesty's Canadian subjects have prospered exceedingly so that Ireland may become a source of strength to your Majesty's Empire, and that your Majesty's Empire and that your Majesty's Irish subjects, at home and abroad, may feel the same pride in the greatness of your Majesty's Empire, the same veneration for the justice of your Majesty's rule and the same devotion to, and affection for your common flag which are now felt by all classes of your Majesty's loyal subjects in the Dominion."

Substituted for that clause, which was settled with the advice and consent of representative Irishmen in the House, was the following, when the Minister of Inland Revenue came to make his motion:—

"We desire to respectfully to suggest to your Majesty, that Canada and its inhabitants have prospered exceedingly under a Federal system, allowing to each Province of the Dominion considerable powers of self-government, and would venture to express a hope that if consistent with the integrity and well-being of the Empire, and if the rights and status of the minority are fully protected and secured, some means may be found of meeting the express desire of so many of your Irish subjects in that regard, so that Ireland may become a source of strength to your Majesty's Empire, and that your Majesty's Irish subjects, at home and abroad, may feel the same pride in the greatness of your Majesty's Empire."

and so on. Now, there is a great difference between these two. The original clause, which was wast these gentlemen who consulted with the hon. member expected he would introduce, asked for the granting of some sort of Federal Oovernment to Ireland; the other merely called attention to the success of Federal Government in Canada, and made a very namby-pamby, weak, wishy-washy suggestion of some concessions to the Irish. Then further. At that time there were certain persons in custody in Ireland under the suspension of Habeas Corpus, or the Coercion Act, and the representative Irishmen who consulted with the hon. member agreed that he should propose this:

"We would further respectfully pray that your Majesty would be graciously pleased to take into your Majesty's favorable consideration the cases of those persons who are now suffering imprisonment in Ireland charged with political offences, with a view to extending to them your Most Gracious Majesty's royal clemency, so that with their release, the inestimable blessings of civil liberty may be once more restored to all parts of your Majesty's Empire."

Clearly this last prayer for the restoration of civil liberty to Ireland was a prayer for the suspension or repeal of the Coercion Act. Now, Sir, in the motion that was actually proposed, we find this:

"We would further express the hope that the time has come when Your Majesty's clemency may, without injury to the interests of the United Kingdom, be extended to those persons who are now imprisoned in Ireland charged with political offences only, and the inestimable blessings of personal liberty restored to them."

This was merely a request that Her Majesty would be pleased to exercise clemency to those individuals who were imprisoned, and justly so, so far as you could infer from the words of the motion itself. The leader of the Opposition objected to these changes of wording. He said:

"Now, I heard the hon. gentleman's resolution with some regret, for one reason that I find it emasculated. I find it very much weaker than the resolution which he put on the paper in the first instance. In some particulars it does not legislatively suit my view. He has fallen into something like the error ascribed to Mr. Gladstone, and not willing myself to repeat that error, I would prefer to vote for the best resolution we can get. Yet, I will vote with reluctance for the measure which hypothetically refers to the grant of a measure of self-government to Ireland. The hon. gentleman says, in his altered resolution:

"'And we would venture to express a hope that if consistent with the integrity and well-being of the Empire, and if the rights and status of the minority are fully protected and secured, sure means may be found of meeting the express desire of so many of your Irish subjects in that regard.

"'We would further express a hope that the time has come when Your Majesty's clemency may, without injury to the interests of the United Kingdom, be extended to those persons who are now imprisoned in Ireland, charged with political offences only, and the inestimable blessing of personal liberty restored to them."

"We have no idea that the rights and interests of the minority will be other than fully protected and secured. I believe that its best security is to be found in a united Irish people, managing their own affairs. I say that the possession of such a measure is essential to the maintenance of the Empire. There ought to be no ifs or ands in the expression of the views of the Canadian people upon this most important subject. It is only upon the theory, only upon the strong view that the possession of such a law is essential to the integrity of the Empire that we can agitate or act with effect in dealing with this matter. I am not disposed to deal with this question with ifs and ands. I am willing to advise conciliatory measures and ample justice to Ireland. I should like the Canadian people, through their representatives in Parliament, to say to the Imperial Government politely, that in their opinion, as four millions of British subjects, they believe that the integrity of the Empire demands self-government for Ireland."

So much in reference to the people who were imprisoned. The leader of the Opposition objected to acting hypothetically in regard to them, urging that the right of habeas corpus should be recognised by this House. I have proven by the authority of the leader of the House, that a motion to go into Committee of Supply is not a proper occasion to bring up a motion of this kind. I have proven, by the authority of the Minister of Inland Revenue, that it is proper to propose to this House, not only a motion of which no notice has been given, but still more, a motion different from that of which notice had been given, and therefore a much greater surprise to the House than a totally new motion could be. But then the hon. gentleman (Mr. Costigan) has declared that this motion is brought up for political purposes. If the Minister of Inland Revenue will admit that he was moved by political motives when he introduced his resolution in 1882, then he may agree that we have political motives in bringing up this question now. If the hon. gentleman is not willing to admit that he cannot charge anyone on this side with that offence, for it is absurd to say such a motion must necessarily be made for political purposes. This is not a party question, it is not a national question; it is a question just as vital to the people of Canada, just as germane to their interests as to those of the people of Ireland, and it is just as natural for a motion in regard to it to come from a Canadian as from an Irishman. It is not an Irish motion. The Minister of Inland Revenue has tried to make it an Irish motion, and has endeavored to constitute himself the head and front of the movement in favor of Home Rule in Ireland, and he considers it should be necessarily conducted and supported by Irishmen. It is a Canadian national movement; it is just as much a Canadian movement as an Irish movement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CASEY. I notice a few hon. members on the other side of the House make remarks suggesting dissent from what I say. If they wish to say they are not in favor of Home Rule, I deny their right to call themselves loyal Canadians. I deny the right of any man in Canada who is not in favor of Home Rule to call himself a loyal Canadian.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CASEY. Some hon. gentlemen are again making dulcet noises, but the only inference I can draw is, that they do not think Home Rule is a necessary belief for a Canadian. I hope they will prove my mistake in that respect on a later occasion, if I have made a mistake. I cannot resume my seat without referring to a statement made by the Minister of Inland Revenue in regard to his telegram. He said by that telegram he had made every Irishman in the House responsible for and as giving their adhesion to and re-endorsation of his former resolution. What Irishmen on this side did he consult about that telegram? He never consulted me.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I did not say that I made every hon. gentleman responsible. I said I presumed to act on the authority of every Irishman.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman had no right to presume to act for any Irishman he had not consulted. I have declared, and I will declare on Thursday, my endorsation of the resolution; but I dispute the right of any hon. gentleman to speak for all Irishmen as to the terms in which a message of that kind is conveyed until the hon. gentleman has consulted those members. No doubt he consulted with his friends on that side of the House as to the terms of that telegram. Why didn't he ask those whom he had asked to advise on the former resolution, to advise him in framing the terms of that telegram, and advise as to whether such a telegram should be sent? I argue that an expression of this House, composed of men of all nationalities, will have infinitely greater weight than even the representations of the Minister of Inland Revenue, and that the telegram of any individual Minister, is not the sort of manifesto that we should send to the representatives of the people of England. I argue that a motion is a better way of acting than by telegram. He wants to know what was the great haste. He suggests that it is because of his telegram that we are in such a hurry to take up this matter. Well, I am afraid that he is attaching too much importance in his own mind to that telegram. I have no doubt the minds of these members of the Liberal party who intended to support a motion of this kind was made up long before they heard of that telegram.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Then if it was not a political move, why were we not informed of it, if you made up your minds long ago?

Mr. CASEY. I did not say that we had made up our minds long ago to propose a resolution. I said that the minds of the members of the Liberal party were quite as clearly made up to support a motion of this kind as they were to-day, and it is quite as evident that the hon. gentleman's mind is not as clear with reference to this matter just now as it was some time ago. He says there is no change in him since 1882, but it looks as if there was. He was then eager to rush into the fray, to ask the advice of hon. gentlemen on both sides, and I do him the credit that he did ask the advice: he was eager to have a motion passed on this subject. Is there no change in the mind of a man who was then so eager to have a motion of this kind proposed, and who now refuses to propose such a motion? I believe the hon. gentleman is unchanged in his adherence to the principle of Home Rule, though he has lost his courage. I hope matters will be so arranged that we will have a full, free and untrammelled discussion of the proposition we have before us on a subsequent and early day. There is need for haste, even although the Bill should not come up in the English House of Commons until the 10th, as the Premier says. We cannot expect that a resolution of this kind will take effect immediately; there should be some time for it to sink into the minds of the English House of Commons, and affect them, as we hope it will, and, therefore, the day on which we are to discuss this question should be as early as possible.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I may say to remove any misapprehension that my proposition was a plain and simple one, and it was this, that if this motion was withdrawn we would give the hon. gentleman an early opportunity—any day after to-morrow he chooses—to move it as a substantive motion.

M. BLAKE. I did not understand the hon. gentleman to say that. I understood the hon. gentleman's only objection to be the fact that he had not notice. I naturally supposed after his making a statement of the kind he has made here, after his making it in that clear manner, that this motion should be moved in the same manner and under the same circumstances in which the motion was made in 1882, with his approval and consent and in the same manner and circumstances under which he moved his motion on the grave constitutional question in the Letellier case on going into Supply, with the object which the hon. gentleman clearly stated in answer to the hon. member for East York, as a reason why it was preferable to take that course. My hon. friend from Elgin has read the First Minister's statement of those reasons which he smiles at now, though he then thought, and I still think, they were very good and fair reasons. I could hardly have supposed, having regard to these two important precedents, the one of the hon. gentleman himself when leader of the Opposition, and the other of the hon. member for Victoria, the Minister of Inland Revenue, under his auspices and with his assent as the leader of the Government, that he was objecting to the same form of discussion in the same circumstances. I certainly understood him to be proposing that I should have the same opportunity as I have to-night, on Thursday or on any day but Wednesday. It now turns out that there was a misunderstanding and that the hon. gentleman's proposal was that this motion should be exposed to the perils which he described so graphically on the occasion of his refusal to submit his motion to similar perils in the Letellier case. I am placed therefore in an awkward position, having, as I say, a very great deal of respect for the reasons and the views he then pressed. But I have to add to the consideration of the case the magnitude of this cause, the great importance of it and the earnest desire which I entertain that that result will be accomplished which the Minister of Inland Revenue foreshadowed as possible, of obtaining a unanimous vote, and that cause being dearer to me than any other thing, I am determined to encounter all those risks and disasters, and therefore I accept the hon. gentleman's proposal, and with the leave of the House, will withdraw my motion, on the understanding that it stands as a notice of motion, to be the first notice for Thursday, the day the hon. gentleman fixed; and I add to that, in response to the statement of the Minister of Inland Revenue, and to the suggestion rather than the statement of the First Minister, that if there be any opportunity in the meantime to accommodate members with reference to the form of expression of that motion, I shall be only too glad to facilitate such a happy result.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am glad the hon. gentleman has taken my advice in the matter, and has agreed to withdraw his motion. But I do not like the hon. gentleman. I am rather surprised at the hon. gentleman's statement that he did not gather from me that I desired that it should be withdrawn for the purpose of its being made a substantive motion, for if I did not use plain words on that occasion then I never used plain words. I used the word substantive, and I said if the hon. gentleman will move it any day he likes, or give notice, or will accept notice now—for that purpose I will agree as leader of the Government to set aside every Government measure; and if that is so, he could not move it on going into Supply.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If it is not out of order I wish to say a few words. Whatever difference of opinion may exist between the hon. gentleman and myself, I feel much pleased that he has taken this course, as I think it is the wisest course and one calculated to bring about, if possible, a solution of this question. I am glad the hon. gentleman has taken the course he has.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose that on the adjournment the hon. gentleman will make a motion that this shall stand as the first order on Thursday.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Amendment withdrawn.

TIMBER LICENSES, &c., IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before you leave the Chair I desire to place in your hands a resolution expressing regret that the independence of this Parliament has been impaired by the conduct of the Government in various respects, in its administration of the public trusts of this country. A government, Sir, under free institutions, rules by the consent of the governed. The members of the administration of a country are the stewards of the people, and as stewards should discharge their trust with an eye to the interest of the whole body of the people. As agents they are not entitled to embezzle or misappropriate the public funds or public property, but they are bound to conserve the interests of their principals, and administer their trusts honestly, and in the interest of the people. For instance, the duty of a government with regard to levying taxes is to require from the people, the payment of so much money as may be necessary for the economical and efficient administration of the public affairs of the country. When this limit is exceeded and when larger sums are wrung from the people in the form of taxation, and the money so paid by the people is expended recklessly, extravagantly or corruptly, then the government fails to discharge its duty as the public steward, and is guilty of an act that should receive the condemnation of the people. So, Sir, with regard to public property, the government is the custodian of a great variety of interests. The Government of this country, in addition to its functions in levying taxes, is in possession of a great public domain. It administers the landed estates of this nation, one of the greatest public domains possessed by any people in the world, it administers the timber domains of this country; and these various trusts which are entrusted to the care of the Government, should be dealt with by it in a spirit of honesty, in a spirit designed to secure the advantage, not of favorites or friends of the Government, but the advantage of the whole people to whom this property belongs, and for whom the Government is administering it. The stewards who embezzle for their own benefit, and in their own behalf, the public property, will not be likely to raise objections to the embezzlement of public property by others. If a member of Parliament accepts for himself an unjust advantage, the cost of that unjust advantage in his own case is a loss to the country: for, having accepted himself, he is not in a position to raise the voice of protest, though every man in the House should be a transgressor in the same line. For this reason the people's interest demands that their representatives in Parliament should be truly independent men. It has been found in the history of free governments that the importance of having independent members of Parliament, members free from the control of the government, members honest in the discharge of their duties, cannot be overestimated. In fact, Sir, without an independent Parliament, it is impossible to maintain free institutions. The fact that a Parliament is under corrupting influences is a menace to the liberties of the people whose interests are in the hands of that Parliament. But, Sir, a corrupt government cannot carry on its operations with a free and independent Parliament; it is essential to a corrupt government that it should be supported by a servile Parliament; and for that reason all corrupt governments have found it necessary, in order to carry on their operations, to debase and corrupt Parliament, to impair its independence by the use of corrupting measures and means. Now, when this policy is adopted, the country adopting it has at once yawning before it an immeasurable abyss of concession and demand—of concession on the part of the government for the purpose of debauching Parliament, and of demand on the part of corrupted members for favors from the government. If we look back for a moment over past history, we shall find that the disregard of the people's rights in England ought to possess for us at this juncture great interest. When Charles I sought to subvert the liberties of England, he strove to get along without the use of a Parliament at all. Under Strafford, with his policy of Thorough, the attempt was made to organise and maintain a standing army, and to raise the revenue necessary for this purpose without calling on Parliament to impose taxes. Various schemes and devices were resorted to to raise taxes without the intervention of Parliament, such as ship money. When John Hampden resisted the payment of a few shillings of unjust taxes, and carried his case to the highest courts of England, and spent thousands of pounds in fighting the king and his unjust exactions, he was thought by Strafford to be a fanatic, and Strafford expressed a desire that all individuals like Hampden should be whipped into a sense of their duty. The result of this struggle was that Parliament triumphed; the attempt to rule England without a Parliament was a failure; Strafford was executed, Archbishop Laud met with a fate that is a warning to all prelates of his character, and Charles I was himself brought to the block; and the right of Parliament in England to levy taxes, and to exercise its functions within its own legitimate sphere, was vindicated and maintained. Then, Sir, more refined methods were resorted to. Charles II, surrounded by worthless men and more worthless women, resorted to the policy of corrupting Parliament by direct bribes to members of money and offices of profit. This evil went on increasing until, after the revolution of 1690, a great popular ferment broke out in consequence of placemen being in Parliament, in consequence of corruption, in consequence of the House of Commons becoming a mere junto to record the decrees of the court. In 1695 an investigation was demanded. A parliamentary committee, headed by Thomas Wharton, investigated the affairs of Parliament. Sir John Trevor was expelled for receiving money, not to promote Bills in his own behalf, as is done in this Parliament, but for receiving money to promote Bills for others. The Duke of Leeds was impeached, and died in disgrace for exercising similar tactics to those that have been exercised since nearer to us, I venture to say, than the British House of Commons. After that came the corruption that existed in the days of Walpole and in the days of Newcastle; and at last an Independence of Parliament Act was passed which forbade any members of the House of Commons receiving emoluments from the Crown except as a Minister of the Crown. We have an Independence of Parliament Act of the same character. We have an Act on our Statute-book which provides that any member of this House entering into a contract with the Crown and receiving emoluments from the Crown, shall be liable to a fine of $2,000 for every day he sits and votes in this House. Will any man of this House venture to say that the spirit of that Independence Act is not daily violated in this House? Will any member venture to say that infractions of the spirit of that law are not of daily occurrence, and that hon. members who occupy seats here are not guilty of greater infractions of that law in its spirit than if they had contracts with the Government for public works. Will we be told that the member who receives a timber limit, that the member who receives a colonisation grant, that the member who receives a coal land lease, that the member who receives a pasture land lease, that the member who receives a railway charter, and then goes hawking that charter about, seeking parties who will build the road and pay him a handsome price for his influence and his charter—will any member say that these men are not guilty of violations of the spirit of the Independence of Parliament Act, and that members of Parliament can be guilty of these acts and at the same time retain a spirit of independence and act as independent members of Parliament? We have in this House, I will not venture to say how many members who are interested in railway subsidies, or in railways that have received subsidies, and who have voted for these subsidies.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name.

M. CHARLTON. You will have the names in good time. There are Ministers of the Crown in this House, there are private members here, who are interested in railways that have received government bonuses; millions of dollars have been voted, which are devoted to advancing the interests of members of this House, associated with other individuals in promoting railway enterprises. We have members here forming railway companies; we have had recently transactions revealed in regard to a road, of which the president, and every member of the directorate, is a member of this House, in which there is not a dollar of capital invested, of which the stock is bogus stock, placed in the hands of the president to enable him to manipulate the concern. These members received a charter from the Government, carrying with it a land grant of 6,400 acres per mile. Was that not engaging in a contract with the Government more nefarious than if they had made a contract to perform a public work? This case is but a type of many others. Members of this House are engaged in procuring speculative charters, without the intention or the purpose or the ability to construct one mile of road, and placing these charters upon the market, hawking them about, resorting to the usual low, disreputable methods connected with railway steals. There is not a greater depth of infamy in business transactions in America than the infamy connected with railway construction, and members of this House are engaged in railway brokerage of a nature as infamous as any in the history of railway manipulations.

An hon. MEMBER. Steel rails.

Mr. CHARLTON. And we have had here very recently the open washing of dirty linen. We have had exposed a quarrel over the subsidies connected with one of these railway corporations; and we have had what is worse. We have had the Government taking part in this quarrel, giving sanction to this crime, selecting its favorites out of the number of those engaged in the quarrel, and carrying his interest through this House upon a division. The spectacle of the Government of this country sullying its reputation by associating itself with a transaction of this kind, is indeed a most lamentable spectacle. It is said in Holy Writ——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not wonder that any reference to Holy Writ should provoke derisive cheers and laughter from the other side.

An hon. MEMBER. Coming from that source.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is said in Holy Writ that "wherever the carcase is, thither will the eagles be gathered." It is the nation that is the prey in this case, around which the eagles are gathered. What are they engaged in doing? They are engaged in squandering millions of public money; they are engaged in piling up a gigantic debt which reaches to-day at least $250,000,000, or double that of the United States per capita, a debt that has increased 250 per cent. since the Confederation of the Provinces, while our population has increased but 38 per cent.; they have been engaged in running up the expenditure of the country from $13,000,000 to $35,000,000, or an increase of 250 per cent. against an increase in population of 38 per cent. And while we have a deficit staring us in the face of many millions, these gentlemen have imposed on the country a measure which will cost annually from $500,000 to $750,000 for the purpose of so arranging the electoral list of the country so as to retain themselves in power. They have spent millions in railway subsidies, granted mainly to their favorites; they have granted pasture land leases at one cent an acre; they have granted coal land leases and monopolies to their favorites, following the train of which will be dear fuel for the settler, and large dividends for their friends; they have made colonisation grants at half price, practically, to their friends, while the settler is required to pay the full price; and they have granted timber limits, year after year, without competition. The applicants for timber limits have come in swarms; they have flown like doves to the window from which the favors of the Government have been dispensed. Members of Parliament, brothers of members of Parliament, sons of members of Parliament, nephews of members of Parliament, cousins of members of Parliament—the faithful and deserving of every kind, every station, and every degree, have been the recipients of those favors at the hands of the Government; and hundreds, I had almost said thousands, of limits have been granted to the faithful without competition. In secret an empire has been bartered away, a great trust placed in the hands of the Administration has been squandered for political purposes and bestowed upon political favorites. These gentlemen have an eagle eye for the prey, and the nation's property, I repeat, is the carcase about which the eagles are gathered. The honor of the country, even quotations from Holy Writ, are the laughing stock of these gentlemen; and it is but natural such should be the case. Now, in every part of the Government's policy—in its policy with regard to timber limits; in its policy with regard to railway bonuses granted to members; in its policy with regard to pasture land leases; in its policy with regard to coal land leases, to colonisation grants—in all these things the policy of the Government will be defended. The Minister of the Interior will rise in his place ere long, and defend the Government in all these things; others upon that side will defend them. I wonder if Solomon, long ago, with his prophetic eye, had our Parliament in view when he penned that memorable phrase: "Such is the way with the adulterous woman; she eateth and wipeth her mouth, and sayeth I have done no wickedness." So with these hon. gentlemen. They will eat the substance of the nation, they will wipe their mouth and get up in the House of Commons and say we have done no wickedness.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. CHARLTON. You will. They believe the apathy of the nation is so great that they can outrage decency in any manner they please. The scenes that transpired here last night would seem to indicate that they believe the nation cannot be aroused, that they can venture to do anything, and their followers will follow them with blind devotion. Yes, Sir, they imagine that the nation is dead, dead under the beaks of the eagles that are gathered together to the prey; and I often wonder may not this be the case? Will neither shame for the shameless conduct of this Government, nor interest in our own behalf as a people, interest in having our property preserved for us and our rights respected, nor regard for the glorious past through which our ancestors have vindicated their right to be a free people, nor hope for the future that lies before us; will none of these things induce the people of Canada to rouse themselves from their lethargy, to rouse themselves from their apathy, and rebuke the men who have for years, in this House of Commons, in administering the affairs of this country, done despite to every principle of justice and to every principle of decency in the management of public affairs. Now, in dealing with the timber limit question, it will be charged, no doubt——

Mr. ORTON. Give some instances?

Mr. CHARLTON. I will give some instances, and the name of the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Orton) will figure among the instances; they are coming. It will be charged, no doubt, that the Mackenzie Government gave licenses without competition.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. I heard that responded to by the "hear, hear" on the opposite side. Well, we must bear in mind, in examining this question, that the circumstances of the case between 1874 and 1878 and the circumstances of the case at the present day in the North-West differ widely. The policy of granting timber limits in the North-West under the Mackenzie Government was avowedly a temporary policy, and it was resorted to because competition could not be obtained. The propriety of competition was fully recognised by the Mackenzie Government, it was attempted to obtain competition, and the licenses granted by that Government were strictly limited to the needs of the country, and were granted only to those who were prepared to produce lumber for the settlers of the North-West. Not a speculative license was granted, not one. The licenses, I repeat, were bonâ fide licenses, granted to individuals who wished to commence the production of lumber for the settlers of the North-West. But, when railways reached the North-West, when the settlement of that country had fairly commenced, the conditions of the country, it is obvious to any hon. gentleman in this House, were changed, and, with the opening up of the country, with the change of government, the policy of making grants of timber licenses or limits was no longer confined, as under the Mackenzie Administration, to the actual requirements of the country. In place of limiting the licenses granted to men who actually designed entering upon the business of producing lumber, licenses were granted to speculators, knowingly granted to speculators. The Government knew it was granting licenses and Orders in Council, in ten instances at least, to speculators, where it was issuing licenses to produce lumber in one instance. It knew that its friends were coming to it in hundreds, in order to obtain Orders in Council without the intention of erecting mills or producing lumber. Now, if we had been left without action on the part of the Reform party during the interim between Mr. Mackenzie's retirement from the Government and the present day, the plea might be set up with great plausibility. I admit, that the course of the Mackenzie Government gave a precedent to this Government for the course it has adopted; but the Reform party in his House and in this country took a position that left no doubt of their policy upon this question. The leader of this party, with characteristic prescience, in March, 1832, as will be found recorded in the Votes and Proceedings of 1782, page 278, introduced into this House the following resolution:—

"Moved by Mr. Blake, that in the opinion of this House the existing system of granting timber limits is liable to result in gross abuse, and in the cession of valuable interests in the public domain for inadequate consideration to favored individuals; that it is expedient to apply the just principle of public competition to the granting of timber limits."

This motion was moved on the 27th March, 1832. The time had come, in the opinion of the leader of the Opposition in this House, to define what the Reform party considered to be the true and proper policy with regard to timber limits. The Reform party took the proper ground. They took that ground whenever the evil became apparent that there was a speculative movement in timber limits. The Tory party also deliberately chose its own position. It did not accord with the principles of the Reform party, as formulated by this resolution of its leader, but it opposed this resolution, and voted it down by a strict party vote. There are clearly laid down the respective principles of the two parties: the principle of the Reform party, embodied in the resolution of its leader, and the principle of the Tory party, embodied in its action in voting down that resolution by a strict party vote. Since that action, no question can be raised as to the respective principles of these two parties. Since that resolution was moved in the House of Commons in 1882, the Reform party stands squarely and broadly on the principle that public competition should be invited in all cases where the public domain or timber limits are to be dealt with.

In parcelling out these timber limits, the Government, after the disputed territory had been awarded to the Province of Ontario, divided up and parcelled out the entire area of that disputed territory to its favorites, and the most of this plunder for you can characterise it by no other name, was granted after Mr. Blake's motion in 1882. It was the evident, and in fact the avowed design of this Government to deprive the people of Ontario of their property; not only to adopt a policy which would rob the people at large of a large portion of their property in timber, but also to rob one of the Provinces of this Dominion of its right to a property which had been awarded to it. Sir John A. Macdonald said not a stick of that timber should go to Ontario, said this after the award, after he knew that this public domain belonged to Ontario; and the design of the Government was clearly evinced and acted upon to give that property, the timber resources of Ontario, so far as they pertained to the disputed territory, to its own favorites, and rob the Province of Ontario of it.

This mad policy of squandering this portion of the public domain has continued from the day this Government took office to the present moment, and, down to the year 1885—we have no returns of a later period than February, 1885, though one was promised this Session which has not come down yet—in round numbers 25,000 square miles of the timber area of this Dominion had been granted to the favorites of this Government without competition; and this had been done in spite of and in the face of the continued remonstrance of the Reformers in this House and in this country. At every step the Government has taken in this matter, the Liberal party in this House has protested against its action and has pointed out the evil results which would flow from this betrayal of its trusts. Yet the party persists in its course. Now I suppose my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior will lay stress upon the fact that there has been competition, that there has been private competition, that in cases where two or more friends of the Government applied for the same limit, the Government has permitted these applicants to have a private shake amongst themselves, to see which would give the most for the limit, in order to placate its friends and settle the question amicably. Well, that is a kind of competition that does not fill the bill. Three or four men apply for the same limit, and arrange among themselves who may have it. I find, in looking at the bonuses for limits granted under such circumstances, that they are usually insignificant, perhaps a dollar a mile, and in some case rising to $5 a mile; and the only case in which respectable bonuses have been given, so far as I have noticed, were some nine or ten limits in the Bow River district, taken by Americans. As they did not belong to the family compact, they were permitted to pay something like $110 or $120 a mile, but wherever the bidding was between friends of the Government, they were enabled to secure these limits at very little cost.

It will also be urged, I have no doubt, that the Government regulations with regard to timber limits, are much more favorable to the country than the regulations of either Quebec or Ontario; that the ground rent is higher; that while the ground rent in Ontario and Quebec is $2 per mile, the Dominion licenses are $5 per mile. It will also be urged that the Crown dues are higher, that 5 per cent. upon the value of the lumber produced is more than 75 cents or $1 per thousand specific due. Now, the question is not what the regulations are, no fault has been found with the regulations. The issue is: Ought the Government—as has been done by the Governments of Ontario and Quebec, having fixed regulations that apply to these timber limits—to have put these limits upon the market subject to these regulations, and ask competition, and for the highest bidder, for these limits? Ought it to have invited public competition, or ought it to have distributed these limits, as it has done, upon private application from its friends? I maintain that these limits ought, as in the case of Ontario, to have been put up at public auction; the regulations applied uniformly to all limits granted, whatever their location or advantages. One would probably be worth more than another; one would have a greater amount of timber than another; one would have a more favorable situation than another; one limit might fetch but a small bonus, and another might fetch a large bonus, and the Government in refusing to place these limits at competition, has deprived itself of a large revenue. Have we any proofs of that? I think we have. We have the case of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), who obtained a limit, as he says for friends, in the Cypress Hills, for $250, and straightway sold it for $100,000. If that limit had been put up at auction the Government, in place of receiving $250 would have received $100,000. We have the case of some limits on Hunter's Island that were sold to Chicago parties for $650,000, and that cost the holders $7,500. I think we have a case in which the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) is interested in some limits on Red Deer River, where one of the confederates received a power of attorney to sell these limits, four I believe in number, and did sell them, as is reported, for $100,000, and put the proceeds in his own pocket, and a suit is now pending, it is said, in the courts of Minnesota in which the members for Middlesex (Mr. Macmillan) and Victoria are plaintiffs, and their confederate, a gentleman by the name of Dawes, is the respondent. Whether this is true or not, I do not know. Now, I have in my hand a return brought down this Session consisting of about 12,000 pages of foolscap, mostly correspondence in connection with the granting of timber licenses. It is rather larger than the one the hon. gentleman for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) piled on my seat last Session—about four times as large. I have gone through it carefully, and some of the results of that investigation I will give to the House later on. But with regard to the assignment of leases, with regard to the question as to whether the Government, in refusing to put these limits up at competition, has neglected the interests of the country and lost revenue, I call attention to some statements made in this return. Here are the names of a few assigners and assignors, with the consideration granted:

Assignor.	Assignee.	Consideration.
Donald Gunne.	E. P. Leacock.	$ 4,300 00
E. P. Leacock.	Thomas Renwick.	25,000 00
James Kent.	H. S. Strathy.	not given
Joseph Shareman.	A. W. Ross.	300 00
E. P. Leacock.	Thomas Renwick.	25,000 00
A. W. Ross.	H. S. Strathy.	75,000 00
D. McFadden.	Germyn & Bolton.	9,000 00
Thomas Wells.	H. B. Beard.	8,000 00
Jos. G. Dawes.	Andrew R. Potter.	8,000 00
John Taylor, Smith & Muir.	Wm. J. Bishopp.	10,000 00
	Keewatin Lumbering and Manufacturing Company, Limited.	1,000 00

There are a lot of transactions where the licenses were transferred for $1 and "other valuable considerations." That is the character of most of these returns, the probability being that these gentlemen thought it expedient to conceal the amount received or paid, consequently making their entry of the assignment as if for $1 "and other valuable considerations." Here are cases, one for $75,000, two for $25,000, one for $11,960, for $9,000, for $8,000 in two cases, and so on. These cases are contained in this one return where limits granted by the Government at $5 per mile have changed hands for these large sums. There is the case I have referred to of the member for Lincoln getting a $100,000 limit for $250; the case on Hunter's Island, a limit worth $650,000 being got for $7,500. In most cases the character and amount paid in these transactions are concealed, but these glimpses we are permitted to have are enough to convince this House, if it is open to conviction, are enough to convince this country, that the policy of the Government with regard to timber limits has not been in the public interest, and has not been an honest policy. Now, Sir, look for a moment at the contrast between the policy of this Government and that of the Province of Ontario Since 1870 that Province has placed 7,986 miles of timber territory under license, and it has received bonuses on those transactions as follows: In 1871, 467 miles brought bonuses of $117,000; in 1872, 4,592 miles brought bonuses of $531,000; in 1877, 438 miles brought bonuses of $78,136; in 1881, 1,412 miles brought $730,000; in 1885, 1,057 miles brought $326,000, or 7,986 miles brought bonuses of $1,785,000. Under Orders in Council this Dominion has placed under license over three times that amount of land, and has received bonuses scarcely amounting practically to nothing. This is a sufficient commentary upon the failure of hon. gentlemen opposite to discharge their trust properly, in refusing the demand of the motion made by the leader of the Opposition in this House, in March, 1882, when he declared that the policy of granting timber limits without competition was a vicious one and ought to be abandoned. Now, Sir, my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. Orton), a few moments ago, wanted to know some of the names. As I do not desire to place a whole return in Hansard I have prepared a short statement containing a few of the entries for timber limits, amounting to 600, that I have culled from three returns, and there is yet one year to be heard from, and that, probably, one of the worst years, namely, from February, 1885, to February, 1886:

C. E. HICKEY, M.P. (co-applicant with Wm. Brodeur)—
O. C. for self and partner, 50 miles, Lake Kogwankok, Man., April 30, 1884.

OSCAR FULTON, ex-M.P.—
O. C. 50 miles, N. Saskatchewan, March 24, 1884.

When I spoke in Milton last January I referred to Mr. Blain in this connection, and he denounced me as a liar for having said that he had obtained an Order in Council. I find, however, as follows:—

DAVID BLAIN, ex-M.P.—
Application for self, March 12, 1885. O. C. for self, 50 miles, Hunter's Island, Aug. 1, 1885. License issued to Blain, Oct. 24, 1884. Recorded in Liber A, folio 127 and 128.

L. H. MASSUE, M.P.—
O.C. for self, 50 miles, Lake Dauphin, Man., Feb. 3, 1883.

Here are eighteen members of the House of Commons who have Orders in Council—honest members of the House who have had the honesty to face the music themselves, who made application and got their Order in Council like little men. There are others who have used stool pigeons and obtained orders in other names. I have traced one or two, and I am satisfied there are a good many more. We now come to—

Members of Local Legislatures who have received Orders in Council for themselves.

H. ROBILLARD, M.P.P.—
O.C for self, 50 miles, Keewatin, Aug. 24, 1883.

LOUIS DUHAMEL, M.P.P., Hull, Que.—

A. T. ROSS, M.P.P., Cornwall—

Then there is a long list—

Members of the House of Commons and Senate who have applied for Limits successfully in behalf of friends.

S. R. HESSON, M.P.—

Mr. MACKINTOSH. Was I a member of the House when I made that recommendation.

Mr. CHARLTON. The application was dated 9th May, 1882.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I was not even nominated then. I would not do it now.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am quite willing to give the hon. gentleman credit for having seen the error of his ways and turned to a better course. That is one of the most severe rebukes the Government have received this Session.

HECTOR CAMERON, M.P.—

Mr. BERGIN. I may as well give the hon. gentleman the information that Mrs. Howlan's name was not Dwyer.

Mr. CHARLTON. Was it McGilvary?

Mr. BERGIN. No.

Mr. CHARLTON. Then I suppose that he had not that reason for making the application. I will hand in the dates of these applications, &c., to the Hansard reporters without reading them all.

That is the list of the members of Parliament, brought down to February, 1885—nothing is known of the transactions which have taken place since that time—and including members of the last Parliament. Now I will read a summary of the results:

Number of members of Senate and House of Commons who received Orders in Council for Timber Limits to themselves, 17.

Number of members of Senate and House of Commons who secured Orders in Council for themselves and for friends, 45.

Total number of members of Senate and House of Commons who applied for lands for themselves and friends, 56.

Total number of Orders in Council passed upon recommendation of members of the Senate and House of Commons, so far as made public by the records, 115.

Number of applications made by members of the Senate and House of Commons, for timber lands, and refused for the reason that pasture leases, previous Orders in Council, &c., covered the areas applied for, 86.

Total number of timber limits applied for by members of the Senate and House of Commons for themselves and friends, 201.

Now, these are a few only of the names. The total number of Orders in Council granting limits, to February, 1885, was 550, so far as I have examined the records. The number not given in foregoing list is 338. The total number of square miles granted to February, 1885, is 25,300, and the total number of acres, 16,192,200, making a quantity two-thirds as great as the total amount of the cultivated land in the Dominion in 1881; and it is possible, if we had last year's record, from February, 1885, to the present time, we would find the Government had issued Orders in Council covering an area of timber limits equal to the entire amount of cultivated land in the Dominion in 1881.

Mr. ORTON. How much money was received?

Mr. CHARLTON. $5 a mile.

An hon. MEMBER. How much did you expect to receive?

Mr. CHARLTON. I can give you a little correspondence, but I shall not read it all. Here is the correspondence of Mr. Royal. I do not know that he wants to have it read, nor does the House care. There is nothing very important in it. In one place, he says, 17th November, 1882:

"Referring to your favor, No. 4,194, of 30th ultimo, I beg to state that the applications in question, so strongly and so justly recommended by me, was filed with the agent of the Timber office here."

I suppose these gentlemen found it necessary they should be strongly recommended.

Mr. ROYAL. Whose application is that?

Mr. CHARLTON. The Order in Council following this is to Robert and Peter George.

Mr. ROYAL. Two Grits.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentleman is a very disinterested member of Parliament, no doubt. Here is a telegram from the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), dated Ottawa, 5th July, 1882:

"Will you please push through Order in Council for coal licenses and that limit for Orr?"

(Signed) "J. C. RYKERT."

There is another letter from the hon. member for Lincoln urging that a certain supporter of my hon. friend for Monck, should receive timber limits; Mr. James Mitchell, of Castorville, is anxious to get a limit to cut timber in the North-West.

Mr. MCCALLUM. He is not in my county at all.

Mr. CHARLTON. I said that Mr. James Mitchell, of Castorville, a friend and supporter of Mr. McCallum, is anxious to get a permit to cut timber in the North-West. The letter is signed, J. C. Rykert.

Mr. MCCALLUM. I have lots of friends in this country.

Mr. BLAKE. Have they all got timber limits?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No, nor harbor contracts either.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it usual to get them at the price?

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Pope, the Minister of Agriculture, sends his private secretary to obtain an answer to the following memorandum to the Hon. D. L. Macpherson:—

"1st. T. P. Buck applies for timber berth on Porcupine Hill near Fort McLeod. Can he obtain it?

"2nd. H. Bailey applies for a timber permit in the disputed territory. What answer can Mr. Pope give him?

"3rd. A. Herme & Co., of Galt, ask a free grant of land on which to erect flouring mills. Would the Minister of Interior accord this?"

This was signed by Mr. Lindsay Russell. We have here correspondence from Mr. McMillen with relation to J. G. Dawes; correspondence from Dr. Orton, M.P., with an application for George D. Farmer; correspondence from D. Macmillan, M.P., making an application for himself; correspondence from Thomas Scott, M.P., and Joseph Tassé, M.P., supporting George H. Bradbury, a strong supporter of the Government; correspondence from Adolphe Caron, M.P.:

"DEAR MR. MACPHERSON,—May I ask you to hurry up the granting of the license applied for by Mr. William Sharples on the Red Deer River."

And it was hurried up, and Mr. Sharples, who is a brother-in-law of Sir Adolphe, got his license. Correspondence from S. R. Hesson, for his son-in-law, Mr. Symons:

"Some time ago I wrote you on behalf of Harry Symons, Esq., of Toronto, for timber limits on the Saskatchewan. Your reply was that a previous application was in for same. Will you now do me the favor of changing that application to Cedar Lake, as Mr. Symons is the only applicant now for that place. I hope you will enter his name at once, and he will complete the application forthwith. As Mr. S. is a particular friend of mine, I hope you will see to this at once."

Mr. HESSON. Anything wrong about that?

Mr. CHARLTON. I think not. I think that was very paternal. Here is also an application from Mr. Hesson for Mr. James Robb, setting forth that he had been editor of a local paper, and that, if he got the limit, he would not be ungrateful. Here is an application from S. R. Hesson for J. P. Woods; an application from Mr. Hesson for J. Grayson Smith; an application from T. N. Gibbs and S. R. Hesson for T. H. Tuller; an application from Mr. H. Cameron for reputed partner of his, Mr. William Mackenzie. I shall not trouble the House with any further reference to this correspondences, as the hour is growing late.

Mr. HESSON. Give us a little history from Michigan.

Mr. CHARLTON. I might. People who obtain timber limits in Michigan pay for them like honest men, and obtain them in competition with other men, they will not get a paternal Government to give them a limit for $250 which they can sell for $100,000.

I now propose to refer briefly to ranche companies and to the policy of the Government in placing pasture lands under lease at one cent an acre, without competition, receiving at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum on 16 cents an acre for pasture lands; and the only limitation has been that no friend of the Government could receive more than 100,000 acres. These lands, as this return will show, have been leased far in advance of the requirements of stock owners. I find, by the return which was laid on the Table of the House a few days ago, which brings down the statistics in regard to the ranche companies to the 1st March, 1886, that the number of acres under lease was 2,452,610; acres having cattle on them, 1,592,290; acres without cattle 860,320; number of companies who have cattle on ranches, 38; number without cattle, 20; number of companies having more than 1,000 animals on ranche, 15; total revenue from grazing lands up to 1st March, 1886, $66,255.50 for this enormous area of land; total number of cattle, horses and sheep on all these ranches, 63,714, or one horse, sheep, or cow or animal to each thirty-eight acres. Thirty-eight acres for one animal! Nothing could show more strikingly than this fact that these lands have been leased far in advance of the requirments of stock growers. It cost so little, only $1 annually for a farm of 100 acres, or $10 for a 1,000 acres These leases have been granted to friends in advance of the requirements of the trade, in advance of the requirements of those who had stock to put on them. These men have acquired these 2,450,000 acres, this vast quantity of land, and they have only 63,714 head of cattle on them. The amount of the annual rental if paid, is $24,526, amounting, as I said before, at one cent an acre, to the interest at 6 per cent. on 16 cents an acre. There is something wrong in this. So much land ought not to have been leased, land put under lease without competition, which, after the system has been in operation for four years, carries one head of cattle for thirty-eight acres. Who knows, if this land had been put up to competition and bids had been invited, that it might not have brought 10 cents an acre. The Government were bound, if they were governed by considerations of the public interest and not by the interest of their friends, to offer these lands to the competition of the public and to secure the highest price they could for them, instead of passing them round to their friends with no limitation whatever except that no good boy should receive more than 100,000 acres. And the policy with regard to coal lands has been equally reprehensible. I have here a summary of a return brought down to February, 1883, which shows that 449 applications have been made for coal leases, and the following members of Parliament had made applications: J. C. Patterson, M.P., four applications; C. C. Colby, M.P., seven applications; John Haggart, M.P., one application; A. Boultbee, M.P., one application; Thos. Scott, M.P, three applications; Hon. T. N. Gibbs, M.P., one application; Hon. John Ogilvie, one application.

Mr. HAGGART. An application that I made? For what?

Mr. CHARLTON. A coal lease.

Mr. HAGGART. No, I did not.

Mr. CHARLTON. I found your name in the returns.

Mr. HAGGART. No, you did not.

Mr. CHARLTON. Well, we will hunt it up. Hector Cameron, M.P., one application; J. G. Blanchet, M.P., one application; Dalton McCarthy, M.P., one application.

Mr. McCARTHY. No.

Mr. CHARLTON. J. C. Rykert, M.P., one application; R. Doull, M.P., one application; Robert Hay, M.P., one application; George Hilliard, M.P., one application; Sir A. T. Galt—he is not a member—two applications; Hon. John Norquay, two applications; Nicholas Flood Davin, one application; Edward Farrer, one application. Now, these are all friends of the Government, no competition was invited for these leases. These applications, if granted, were granted without competition and on certain fixed terms.

Mr. McCARTHY. Do you say they were granted?

Mr. CHARLTON. The policy of the Government with regard to the coal lands of the North-West was not one in the interest of the settler. It was not to the interest of the settler that a coal mining monopoly should be granted, and that the Government should second efforts to take the coal lands of the North-West and put them in a few hands who might monopolise the business of mining and compel the people to pay so much more for their fuel, which is so necessary in a cold climate like that.

Mr. McCARTHY. Does the hon. gentleman say these were granted?

Mr. CHARLTON. I did not. I say they were applications.

Mr. BOWELL. How could they be monopolies?

Mr. CHARLTON. No return has been brought down in reference to coal leases subsequent to 1883, and what number of these applications were favorably acted upon I am unable to say, but I give the applications.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no application from me anyway.

Mr. McCARTHY. Nor from me.

Mr. CHARLTON. Coming to other parts of the Government policy, I refer to colonisation plan No. 1. That plan was adopted on 23rd December, 1881. It was adopted just upon the eve of a dissolution of this House. Whether it was adopted expressly for the purpose of attaching to the Government a large speculative interest, I am unable to say, but whatever might have been the intention of the Government, the result was to attach to the interest of the Government a very great and powerful speculative interest in land. The results, of course, of these investments in colonisation lands have not been as favorable as those who invested anticipated. This has been largely due, perhaps, to the fact that the Government granted these lands to speculators. Nothing perhaps has had a more unfavorable influence upon the settlement of the North-West than the fact that the Government acted upon applications for blocks of land which were to be given to speculators, if they conformed to the conditions, at half the price the settler had to pay for the land. The rush under this plan No. 1 was something phenominal. The order was issued on the 23rd of December, 1881. I see by returns that on the 1st January, 1883, one year and eight days after that order had been issued, after the colonisation plan had been made, and the number of applications made during that time was 251, and they covered 2,295 townships of land. The members who applied for colonisation land in that brief period were as follows:—

Mr. CHARLTON. This is taken from the Sessional Papers of 1883, Volume 16, No. 12, Return No. 84.

Mr. GAULT. I never spent one cent, and had nothing to do with any territory in the North-West. I went up there to buy land, but I saw so much of it that I came away.

Mr. CHARLTON. This refers to the applications. I will read on:

Here are the names of twenty-one members of Parliament making applications for land to the Government, to be received on conditions so favorable that they expected to secure these lands at half price, or $1 an acre. In addition, Sir A. T. Galt applied for fifty townships, and that gentleman was allowed $1,500 from the Treasury of Canada to pay his expenses while he went to the North-West to select his land. Here are other names:

Wm. Sharples,	applied for	2	Townships.

Now, Sir, these applications, made in the space of one year and eight days, covered 2,295 townships in the North-West; and the effect, I repeat, of this scheme upon the elections of 1882, was very marked indeed. Every speculator who embarked in this speculation, covering this vast area, was a friend of the Government; it was in his interest that the Government should be maintained, that the regulations by which he was to receive land at half price, should not be rescinded by another Government adopting an honest policy; and for that reason no more potent factor in the elections of 1882 exerted its influence upon that result, than the policy of the Government with regard to the colonisation plan No 1, so called. And the Government, now that that the result has hardly been as those gentlemen anticipated, are adopting a plan to let them out as easily as possible; those who have taken blocks of townships and have made partial payments, are to be permitted to consolidate their interest, to select such parts of the township as they may choose—and, of course, they will select the cream of the thing - and the payments made covering the whole tract are permitted to be concentrated upon the best portions of the township, and they will receive land in accordance with the payments made, be it more or less, and their interests so far as the Government can care for them, will be carefully guarded.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have spoken rather longer than I anticipated. Fearing that the list I had got would not go into the Hansard, I have read the most of it. I have but to recapitulate, I have to say that the policy of this Government, first, with regard to railway bonuses, voting away here in one Session the sum of $8,000,000 to bribe members of this House, and voting $22,500,000 more for another purpose; these bonuses in the aggregate amounted to over $8,000,000, a large proportion of this sum being granted to railway corporations in which members of this House had a direct pecuniary interest; and if the truth could be known a considerable number of the members of this House did, in effect, in sustaining and supporting that resolution with regard to railway bonuses, put money into their own pockets. It was an infringement on the independence of Parliament. Any member interested in a road that received aid from the Government in that scheme, was not in a condition to exercise the function of an independent member of Parliament. With regard to timber limits, I have shown the enormous areas granted without competition. The Government granted them to their own favorites, to their own supporters in this House; granted them without adequate consideration, and we have seen vast gains accruing to friends of the Government, to the loss of the country to whom the land belongs. We have had pasture leases to the extent of 2,500,000 acres granted at 1 cent an acre without competition, granted in advance of the requirements of the public, so that to-day, after years have elapsed since the policy was inaugurated, there is not one head of cattle to 38 acres upon that land grant, and granted to speculators, in a great number of instances without competition, and presumably to favorites of the Government. We find again the Government favoring its friends in the matter of coal land leases, making the path to fortune easy to them, and acting in a way which they must have known would result in fortune to their friends and indear coal to the people of the North-West. We find colonisation land applications pouring in upon the Government for 2,300 townships in one year, grants made to their friends wherever the grants do not conflict with each other, and a middleman class created by the Government, that curse of the settler and of the pioneer—a middleman class created by the Government, receiving his land for half price, and placed in a position where he could turn and sell to the settler, under some circumstances, land for ten times the price he paid for it. Did the Government, in adopting this policy, have an eye to the interest of the settlers who are looking to the North-West? Was it governed by that principle that has governed the policy upon this side of the House—the land for the people and the people for the land? No, Sir; and when we lament the condition of the North-West, the slow movement of the population into that country, the development of that country retarded by various causes, we may attribute nearly all the results which we have to deplore in the North-West to the policy of the Government.

In all these matters to which I have referred members of this House have had the inside track. They have had the ear of the Government; they have known what the Government plans were. They could go to the various Departments and lay their case before the Government, and they always found in those Departments friends willing to oblige them. They were in point of fact invited to ask favors of the Government, and they never came to the Government and asked a favor in vain. Mr. Speaker, I have approached this subject with personal regret. Whether hon. gentlemen opposite will believe me or not, it is not a task congenial to me to probe this matter and expose these irregularities upon the part of the Government. The task has fallen upon me, and I have endeavored to discharge it in a spirit of fairness and as temperately as possible. No doubt many hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House, probably all hon. gentlemen opposite, feel they have pursued a proper course in these matters, and do not see anything irregular in receiving bonuses from the Government for their private aims and purposes, in receiving timber limits from the Government for themselves and their friends without the limits being put up to competition, and in making $100,000 out of $250 in one extreme case. They may have such peculiar views about political and moral ethics as to see nothing wrong in these transactions. But I am unable to agree with them, and I conceive it to be part of my duty as an independent member of Parliament, who desires the good of his country, to denounce such conduct. The whole system is subversive of the independence of Parliament. It is incompatible with a nice sense of political honor; it is calculated to control action and conciliate support by the use of corrupt methods, and it is a system that should excite alarm in the breast of every member of this House and every citizen of Canada for the future of this country. I beg to move in amendment thereto to leave out all the words after the word "that," and add the following instead thereof:—

The practice of members of the House applying for and becoming personally interested in the disposal by the Crown of those public resources, which are dealt with by the Executive, or by Parliament on its recommendation, has grown to alarming proportions, is in its nature liable to abuse, has in fact been abused, and should be checked, in order to avoid lasting injury to the public interest and to restore and maintain the independence of this House.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Mr. Speaker, before I venture very briefly to refer to the speech which the hon. gentleman has just delivered I desire to call his attention to what seems to me to have been a breach of arrangement of which he has been guilty. I owe him the duty of saying that last week he was kind enough to intimate to me that he intended to bring up this general question to-night, and it was understood at that time that we would endeavor to get into Supply at as early an hour as possible in order that he might make his speech and that the reply might come within a reasonable hour at all events, and if possible a vote be had on the same evening. I know the hon. gentleman was engaged to-day in connection with a duty in which he takes a great deal of interest in connection with his own church, and this afternoon I received from him the following note, which I had torn up never imagining it was necessary to keep anything of that kind, but the pieces of which have been picked up since, after the manner of picking up another famous document that had some influence in public matters in olden times, and put together.

Mr. COOK. Spittoon.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I shall deal with the hon. member for Simcoe before I get through with my speech—I promise him that. The note is to this effect:

"THURSDAY, 4th May, 1886.

"MY DEAR MR. WHITE,—I shall be unable to leave my committee this afternoon, as it would be deemed a lack of courtesy to its members, and neglect of my own duty in the premises. I hope this will make no difference to you, and that we shall be able to proceed with the matter to-morrow.

"Yours truly,

"JOHN CHARLTON."

I got that note this afternoon. A number of hon. members asked me whether this question was coming up to-day—gentlemen whose names have been mentioned by the hon. gentleman in speeches out of this House, and by another hon. gentleman in speeches out of this House—and I told them it was not. After dinner I saw the hon. gentleman again. I spoke to him about the matter. It was then agreed that this debate should come up to-morrow, and not to-day. I had left the Chamber, and was engaged in other duties when, to my astonishment, a page was sent to tell me that Mr. Charlton had commenced his arraignment of the Government.

Mr. CHARLTON. I desire to make a personal explanation. When I sent the hon. gentleman a note from Knox's Church, I did not anticipate being here this afternoon, and I considered, as a matter of course, that no opportunity would occur to go on with the question until to-morrow. There is a misunderstanding between the hon. gentleman and myself as to what passed between us after dinner. I understood the hon. gentleman to express a preference to go on with the question to-morrow. The debate on the Home Rule matter was then in progress, and I did not anticipate myself there would be any opportunity to go into this subject, to-night; but I asked the hon. gentleman what was his preference, but I made, as I understood, no statement of my own. I should have preferred going on with the question to-morrow, but certain circumstances render it desirable that I should leave the city. My father is very ill, and I have been detained here against my will and am anxious to leave; and for that reason, believing it would make no difference to the Minister of the Interior, not knowing that the matter could go on, when a conclusion was unexpectedly reached to the debate on Home Rule, I took the floor.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). All I can say is that I have very great sympathy with the hon. gentleman in the cause which is likely to lead him to leave town. But I am very glad indeed that the matter of the arrangement as to the first part is in writing, because after I had spoken to him, and it was perfectly understood since dinner that this subject would not come up to-day, the hon. gentleman approached the leader of the Opposition and spoke to him, whether on this subject or another I cannot say, but the probability is that the leader of the Opposition told him to go on to-night. That is briefly what really occurred, notwithstanding the arrangement to which I have referred.

Mr. CHARLTON. I propose a solution of the difficulty by the hon. gentleman adjourning the House, and he can go on to-morrow.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I propose to do nothing of the kind. I have no objection to going on, and I would just as readily have gone on to-night if the hon. gentleman had frankly said so when he returned, because I took the trouble to go and speak to him. The only thing I object to is that, when arrangements are made between hon. gentlemen on both sides they should be broken; the question of whether or not arrangements at all should be made is within the option of either side. In view of the fact that this is a question affecting the personal character of a number of members of this House, who had a right to some information as to when it was to be brought up, I think it was hardly fair on the part of the hon. gentleman, after having made the arrangement, that he should have gone on with the matter to-night. That is, however, a matter of no great consequence affecting the question itself. The hon. gentleman commenced his speech by referring to what he feared was the condition of public sentiment in this country. He feared very much that the public conscience was being blunted, and that the public estimate of wrong-doing was becoming lessened in consequence of the general corruption which prevailed in our public life. All I have to say to the hon. gentleman is this, that if that is the case in any way whatever, it is just such speeches as he delivered to-night that is producing that result. When the public find that the charges which are hurled against hon. gentlemen on this side have no better foundation than the mere fact that they write a letter to the Department asking for something for a friend which that friend had a right, under the law, to get, when the hon. gentleman lays it down as a sin, as a corrupt act, as something to be denounced, and in relation to which the public conscience should be roused, that such letters as he quoted to-night are offences against propriety, I do not wonder that the public conscience becomes indifferent to the charges which come from that side of the House, and that there is danger, as undoubtedly there is, of the public conscience becoming blunted in regard to even more serious matters. Sir, I recognise as much as anybody can do the importance of the public conscience in relation to the conduct of public men. I recognise as much as anyone can do the importance of every public man feeling that upon his personal character must depend the confidence in which he will be held by the people outside; and I deplore as much as anyone can do that by the system which the hon. gentlemen opposite are pursuing, and of which to-night we had a notable example, the public character, the characters of public men are becoming of no account whatever, and that the only test of merit is the side of the House upon which an hon. gentleman may happen to sit. There is no more dangerous condition of things than that, and when the hon. gentleman reads us, as he has read to-night, the letters of members of Parliament whose only offence is that they have done what I know hon. gentlemen on that side are doing with the most perfect propriety, writing to the Department of the Interior in relation to the interests of friends who may be affected by the Department, when he reads a list of names and charges that the gentlemen who wrote the letters are guilty of corruption and are to be condemned, he simply attempts to make an offence out of what every honest man, every man of common sense, knows is no offence, and he lessens to that extent the public sense of the enormity of serious charges, when serious charges may be made against gentlemen on either side. Sir, it is no trifling matter, looked at in the character of our public life, that this kind of charges should be made, and that the mere incidents of our public position, the fact that we represent constituencies and that we have to write to the Departments in relation to matters in which our constituents or our friends may be interested—that these are to be held to be offences to be punished by the censure of Parliament, and pronounced to be acts which are blunting the public conscience and rendering the public life of the country corrupt. Now, what are the charges which the hon. gentleman has made, and what has been the policy of this Government in relation to the several subjects to which he has referred? He referred in the first instance to the question of timber limits, and he declared that the policy of this Government in relation to timber limits had been a policy of corruption, a policy of giving away the public domain for the benefit of the supporters of the Government and that it had been a policy subversive of the duty of the Government to husband the resources of the country, and get from those resources the largest possible return that can be obtained for them from the people. Now, will you allow me for a moment to state what has been the policy of the two parties respectively in relation to timber limits. In the Session of 1872 the Conservative Government then in power introduced into Parliament and passed into law an Act of which the following is section 50:—

"The right of cutting timber on such timber limits shall be put up at a bonus per square mile, varying according to the situation and value of the limit and sold to the highest bidder by competition either by tender or at public auction."

That was the law passed in the year 1872, when the Conservative party began to deal with matters in the North-West after we had acquired that territory. The Liberal party came into power in the fall of 1873, and in their very first Session they repealed that section and substituted in the stead of it this:

"Provided further, that in cases where application may be made for limits on which to cut timber in unsurveyed territory, the Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister of the Interior, authorise the same to be leased for such bonus as may be deemed fair and reasonable, such leases to be subject nevertheless to the foregoing conditions in this section, except as to that part of sub-section 1, which provides for the erection of mills, which provision in respect to limits in unsurveyed territories, may, if considered expedient by the Minister of the Interior, be dispensed with."

So that at the very first Session of Parliament after they came into power they repealed the Act which they found on the Statute-book, which required the timber limits of the North-West to be given by public competition, and assumed the right to give these timber limits by mere Orders in Council; and they went so far in unsurveyed territory—which at that time included practically the whole of the Territory—that even the condition that a mill should be built might be dispensed with by the Governor in Council. During the time those hon. gentlemen were in office some 605 square miles in all were granted, and not a single rood was let by public competition. Every single acre of that land was given by Order in Council, and given to gentlemen who certainly were not political opponents of theirs, whatever their politics may have been. Now, Sir, since this Government came into power what has been the result? The result has been that one-third of all the territory for which timber licenses have been granted, was put up and disposed of at public auction, the policy being that whenever there were two applicants for the same territory, it would be put up at public competition, and the highest bidder would get the grant. Now, Sir, let me point out another fact. The hon. gentleman says—and he is right— that the duty of the Government is to husband the resources of the country, and to obtain for the people the largest amount that can be obtained. Well, Sir, during the five years his friends were in office, while they had given timber limits for 605 square miles, all the money they received for dues, ground rents, bonuses—no, there were no bonuses, because they put up nothing at public competition—was $6,160; while, during the last five years, this Government has received from timber limits in the North-West for ground rents, bonuses, dues and royalties, no less a sum than $539,433. And yet the hon. gentleman tells us that the policy of this party bears an unfavorable contrast, forsooth, to the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite; because, after the law had been altered, after they had taken advantage of it for five years, and after they found themselves again in the cold shades of opposition, they moved a resolution that the policy of 1872 was after all the best policy—a resolution practically of censure on themselves for having repealed the Act, and in a favor of a policy which would have continued to be the policy if they had never occupied seats on the Treasury benches. The hon. gentleman has talked of this granting of timber limits as a matter of party advantage, used by this Government for corrupt purposes, in order that their friends might be advantaged, in return for their support. Why, Sir, after they were beaten at the polls—I have referred to it before, but it is worth referring to again—when they had no longer a right to deal with the public domain, on the 7th of October, 1878, the very day before they resigned the seals of office, they passed an Order in Council granting, without competition, without the suggestion of competition, but simply as a favor, to Messrs. Cook & Sutherland, gentlemen who certainly were not Tories, whatever else they were, no less than 200 square miles, not all in one block, but in areas of twenty square miles, wherever they might select them all over the northern part of the Territories. And yet Sir, these hon. gentlemen rise in their places here and charge this Government, forsooth, with having used the public domain for political purposes, when their last act before leaving office—done, I suppose, on the principle on which governments in England are supposed to create peerages for their friends before they leave office, although they have been beaten—was the act I have described. Yes, and they gave these gentlemen, as my hon. friend suggests to me, in the Order in Council three years within which to make the selections of the twenty-mile blocks, without any undertaking to cut timber, without in fact any obligation except to make all the money they could out of the timber limits they thus obtained.

Mr. COOK. Your statement is not true, Sir.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). So much for the general question of the policy of the two parties. Now, let me point out to you for a moment what has really been the operation connected with the sale of timber limits with this Government. It is quite true that there were a large number of applications. The regulations fixed the terms upon which applications could be made, and under which grants could be given. The law fixed the lines which had been considered by hon. gentlemen opposite the proper lines on which people could obtain limits; and surely it was not an offence for anyone to make an application for a timber limit under regulations open to the world, known to everybody, and under which everybody had the opportunity of making an application. If the hon. gentleman could point out a case in which a Liberal applied for a timber limit, and a Conservative applied for the same timber limit, and the Liberal's application was set aside, and the timber limit was given to the Conservative without competition, then he would have a case; but in that speech of his—which exceeded somewhat his own limits of what should be a proper speech, for, I believe, he enjoined the hon. member for Ottawa County (Mr. Wright) to give him a gentle reminder when he went beyond an hour and six minutes—in that speech, he never ventured to make a suggestion, among all the charges he had to make, that the Government had in any one case given a Conservative a timber limit without competition for which a Liberal had applied or was applying; but, on the contrary, wherever there were two applications, the limit was given to the highest bidder, and where there was only one applicant, it was given to him on condition of his fulfilling the conditions required, whether he was a Liberal or a Conservative. Let the hon. gentleman put his hand upon a single case of a Liberal having been, because of his politics, refused a timber limit by this Government. Now, Sir, what has been the practical result? There were no less than 2,029 applications for licenses; the time of boom brought numerous applications. But, Sir, an application was not of any value; it gave no one anything except the privilege of making it, and the trouble to the Department of filing it; there was no money in the application, that is quite certain. I am speaking now of the applications up to the 1st of May of this year; and out of the 2,029 applications there were 568 Orders in Council authorising licenses to issue. But, Sir, the Order in Council did nothing; it did not authorise anyone except under permit to cut timber. In four cases in all, I believe persons have been permitted to cut timber under Order in Council. A license was required before anyone could cut timber; and, Sir, we find that, before the licenses were issued, after the mere passage of the Orders in Council, the result has been no profit to the people who applied, but this remarkble fact, that for ground rents alone, which did not give anyone a right to cut one stick of timber, the country received $24,062.27. Did that look like favoritism to anyone? Now, let us see what the country received for bonuses under this system under which we are told the Government gave away these timber limits in order to provide for their friends. In these cases, recollect, where no licenses were ever issued, the country received $21,226.25 from persons who were competing for the right to obtain licenses; and for royalties, in the four cases to which I have referred, in which timber was permitted to be cut, we received $8,587.92, so that for these cases where Orders in Council were passed, but no licenses were issued, the country received $54,176.44; and only in relation to $8,500 of that was there a right, on the part of a single person paying the money, to cut a single stick of timber. Yet that was the kind of favoritism and corruption bestowed on our friends—the corruption of letting them apply for licenses and giving them Orders in Council compelling them to pay the ground rent; and if they did not go further, if they did not make a survey, if they did not put up a mill and get out a license, they got nothing else and the country got the money. Now the total number of yearly licenses issued altogether was 96 and the total number of twenty-one years leases, and of these more than one-half, I believe, were got after public competition, was eleven. So that of leases of every kind, the total number issued, of yearly licenses and twenty-one years leases, was 107. The hon. gentleman has made the statement that Orders in Council were passed in favor of certain members of Parliament who applied for limits. Let me say that the question as to whether a gentleman, who is a member of Parliament, may apply to the Department for that which is open to the world to apply for, which is embodied in public regulations, which everyone can take advantage of, is one, perhaps, open to discussion, but certainly not open to the denunciation in which the hon. gentleman indulged. Then, he tells us, there were 17 altogether, members of the Senate and House of Commons, in whose behalf Orders in Council were passed. I presume that the $250, the first year's rental, was paid in every one of these cases, but I know, as a matter of fact, there were only three persons to whom leases were actually granted, and who, therefore, in virtue of those leases, were in a position to cut timber. These were, Mr. M. K. Dickinson, who is a lumberman, and whose business is to cut timber. Are we to be told that a lumber merchant, because he is in this Parliament, is to be deprived of the privilege of applying to Parliament to get that which any man can get? If it be shown that advantages were given to him which were not given to others, there might be some question as to his treatment, but in Ontario nobody ever objects to members of the Local Legislature getting timber limits from the Province of Ontario.

Mr. COOK. Does that apply to other lumbermen besides Mr. Dickinson?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Does what apply?

Mr. COOK. That he is a lumberman and has a right to get timber limits?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do not know what the hon. gentleman is talking about. Mr. Dickinson was one, the other was Mr. Rykert, not acting for himself at all but as a trustee for Mr. John Adam; and the third was Mr. Hugh Sutherland, who is certainly, as I said on a former occasion, not a friend of this Government, who is certainly a member of the party opposite, but who took the same advantage everybody could take by applying for a timber berth and operating it in the way required by the regulations. There was, undoubtedly, a large number of permits issued, and a good deal has been made of their issue. No less than 6,837 permits were issued, but when I tell you that 4,581 of those were free permits, issued to settlers under the regulations of settlement, to enable them to obtain cordwood, it will be said that, at any rate, was not an act of corruption on the part of the Government. I say 4,581 were issued to settlers free of charge. Then the number of permits issued to cut timber for railway construction purposes, by promoters and others, amounted to 25. Then to cut cordwood upon berths along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, east of Monmouth Station, 30 miles east of Winnipeg, about 33 permits were issued, and everyone was obtained after public competition. Then there were permits for the cutting of logs and manufacturing them into lumber, under a policy which enabled the person to get a permit instead of a license. There were 43 of these permits, out of which the holders of only about 13 cut a large quantity. Of the remainder of those 6,837 permits, 2,000 were given to settlers and others to cut cordwood, house logs, &c., when they required more than they could obtain under the ordinary free permits given to homesteaders. That is the whole history of these timber limits, these licenses and permits; and I will ask hon. gentlemen in this House to contrast the actual facts, as given to me by the officers of the Department to-date, to the first of May, with the arraignment of the hon. gentleman. He has been good enough to refer to letters, and to one written by myself, which I confess, had passed out of my mind until I heard it quoted either by the hon. gentleman himself or his coadjutor in this work, the member from Huron. It was a letter written on behalf of Mr. T. H. Schneider, who was formerly a resident of Montreal. Now, to show how little politics there was in this application, I may say that Mr. Schneider was the gentleman in whose office was held the caucus, at which the late Mr. Holton presided, when I was a candidate for Montreal West against Mr. Mackenzie, and at which the arrangement was made that I was to be beaten, by Mr. Mackenzie being made the temperance candidate. Mr. Schneider was the gentleman who went round Argenteuil, carrying, although he was a temperance advocate, the jar which went round for the benefit of the late Mr. Cushing at the time he defeated Mr. Abbott, and who was afterwards disqualified for eight years for the conduct chiefly of Mr. Schneider who was a prominent Liberal. My connection with him arose through the friendship which springs up very often in such cases. He and I were brother vestrymen of the same church in Montreal, St. George's Church, of which he was a prominent member, and when he removed to Winnipeg he wrote to me saying he was applying to the Department in connection with some timber limits, and he wanted something done, and asked me to write to the Department to urge action. That feeling of friendship, notwithstanding our political differences, induced me to send the letter referred to. I never knew what was done in that matter until somebody else intervened, and that was done which my letter failed to do. Among other names was that of Mr. R. S. White, who, I am told, got a timber limit in the North-West, and who is said to be editor of the Montreal Gazette. I was astonished to hear this. I know Mr. R. S. White as well as most people, and the last thing I ever dreamed of his going into, was timber limits or anything else outside his ordinary business. He sticks to his desk and attends to his work, and does not bother his head very much about matters outside. I dropped him a line to the gallery to know if he had a timber limit—it was an astonishing revelation to me—and I had this letter in return:

"Magee asked me in 1882 to apply for timber limit for him. The application was granted, but not a cent was paid thereon, and the whole thing lapsed. I had no interest good, bad, or indifferent in it, and had no intention otherwise than that of promoting his object. I was informed by a notice from the Department, a year or thereabouts after the application, that some money was due on the limit and tore up the paper at once. I never had a word of intercourse with any member of the Government on the subject, and no interest direct or remote in the matter."

Now, that is the result of that letter. Then he gave other letters, but surely hon. gentlemen opposite are not going to say that the writing of a letter to a Minister is an offence which is to be condemned, an offence which is to justify the passage of a resolution such as that which has been put in your hands. Who does not remember the very famous letter, which I have no doubt the gentleman who wrote it was very indignant to think got on to the file, as private letters sometimes do, the famous letter addressed to the late Premier by the leader of the Opposition, in which it was announced that "my friend Moore" wanted a contract for the Goderich harbor, and which recommended "my friend Moore" to the favorable consideration of the Minister. Now, in that particular case there was this difference. No one has pretended to say, the hon. gentleman has not pretended to say that anyone of these letters which he has recited here produced any result, that is to say, that it secured for the applicant anything which under the law he was not entitled to as applying for it; but in that case we know what did occur, the giving of the contract to the person in whose interest the hon. the leader of the Opposition wrote this timely and private letter, at a very much higher price than a good contractor had offered to do the work for.

Mr. McCALLUM. $30,000.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Oh, no; surely not $30,000.

An hon. MEMBER. $29,000.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think that was about it—$29,000 lost to the country as the result of a private letter written by the leader of this hon. gentleman, who is horrified that anything of this kind should happen, that members should write letters to a Department in matters of this kind. So much for this matter. Then the hon. gentleman referred to the subject of grazing leases; and he told us that we had given away an enormous area of land at 1 cent an acre, which he said was 6 per cent. on 16 cents an acre for grazing purposes in the North-West; and he hinted, although curiously enough he did not name the people in this case, that these must all have been given to friends of the Government. All I know is, that all the recent applications, or the great majority of the applications that I have seen, are from Montana ranchemen, who are going to move their herds over to our side of the line, because they believe that our side is, on the whole, better suited for ranching than theirs. Some of them are from persons who are driven off the United States ranches in consequence of the recent action of President Cleveland in connection with Indian reserves, and they are coming over and bringing their herds to establish their ranche business on our side. But the hon. gentleman says we have given lands far in advance of the requirements of the country. The applications which we are receiving from ranchemen, from Americans who have nothing whatever to do with our politics, who do not care anything for our politics, are of a character which indicate that we are not going in advance of the wants of the country, or of those who are disposed to establish that business in the North-West. He tells us that we have to-day cattle only to the extent of one for every 38 acres. That, perhaps, as a general statement, may appear to be an extraordinary fact, but, when you know that the rule is that there shall be one for every 10 acres, that it requires 10 acres of ranche country for the grazing of a single animal, I think you will agree with me that, in view of the fact that many of these leases have been granted within the last year or two years, and that these people have three years within which to complete the filling up of their ranches, tolerable progress has been made in connection with them. We have adopted the plan now, in consequence of the numerous applications which are being received, not from Canadians but from Americans who are coming over to our side and bringing their herds, of charging two cents, and the greatest possible pressure is being brought to bear on the Department by interests that are intimately connected with the North-West, not in any sense political, but connected with the ranche business, representing that we are charging too much, and ought to revert to the one cent an acre. For myself, I do not think we ought, and I believe it is the intention of the Government to adhere to the policy we have adopted of charging two cents. But the hon. gentleman says we have sold these lands—that is practically the statement—at 16 cents an acre, the one cent rental being 6 per cent. on that. What do we give these people? We give them the right to graze their cattle upon a certain area of land, but we reserve to the settler the right of going into that country; and every even-numbered section in that whole ranche country is as open to-day for settlement as if there were no cattle grazing upon it. These people run the risk, therefore, if they get a good ranche, with a good deal of bottom lands upon it, of having settlers crowding in upon them; and, after they get their cattle there, they may find the settlers crowding in to such an extent that they are seriously inconvenienced in the work they have specially set for themselves. So that we have not locked up the land from settlement, but on the contrary have reserved for the settler, that being the first consideration, the right to go in there and settle. We have received already on account of these ranche lands, an amount which would not have been received at all, of which we would not have seen a dollar, of $76,53 .29. But that is not all. What is the result in another sense? As the result of this ranche business, as the result of encouraging people to come in here and bring their herds and raise cattle in the country, we are able to supply our Mounted Police and our Indians at a far lower price than we could have done otherwise. In connection with the North-West Mounted Police we have the cost of beef supplied during the last three years, $95,540, and, under the contract we are just letting in the Indian Department to persons within the country and whose cattle are within the country, we would at their prices get the same supply for $54,917.52, or about $41,000 of a saving upon the three years' operations in connection with the beef supply of the North-West Mounted Police. Then I find that, with regard to the Indian supply, taking the supply of last year at the price we paid for it and taking that same quantity at the price for which we are now letting contracts as the result of this ranche business being carried on within the country, the saving to the country would be $ 0,500, or on these two items alone over $120,000, which may fairly be added in the meantime to the amount we have received for the ranches themselves as showing what the advantage to the country has been. Does the hon. gentleman pretend to say that we should not have adopted the ranche principle? Does he pretend to say that we should not have encouraged the herding of cattle in our North-Western prairies, which are so well adapted for grazing purposes, so well adapted that they are attracting at this moment the attention of Americans who are bringing their cattle over from the other side? No, Sir; I venture to say that if we had not done this, if we had allowed this land to lie fallow, and made no effort to utilise it to the public advantage, while not interfering with the settlement of the country, the first person to attack us would have been the hon. gentleman opposite, who would have pointed out that we were recreant to our duty in not securing the revenue to the country from this land which a wise policy would have enabled us to realise. In the United States they do not adopt this plan. There, a ranchman and a number of his cow-boys take up homesteads near together, they get four, or five, or six thousand acres in a block in that way. They make that their headquarters, it is their own land; they get it under the ordinary homestead and pre-emption system that prevails in the United States, and then their cattle graze over the whole country without their paying to the Government a sixpence of rental of any kind whatever. It seems to me we have adopted a wiser principle in dealing with ranches. Then the hon. gentleman tells us that we are giving coal areas to people; but he did not name the people who had got the coal areas. He made the extraordinary statement that the result of our policy was to make fuel dearer to the people of the North West. Why, the hon. gentleman has never been in the North-West, I believe? The hon. gentleman who seconds his motion has been there, and has made considerable profit out of the North-West. He is one of those land speculators, one of those men, who, at the moment when a system was adopted by which land was given at $1 an acre with a payment of 10 cents down, rushed in and took some 60,000 acres of land which he holds now, and which makes him a millionaire, and makes him better able to carry his election the next time on the same principle on which he has carried his elections in the past. But the hon. gentleman who moved this motion, I suppose, has never been in the North-West, and he did not know, therefore, much about the question of fuel. I believe I am right in saying that the result of opening up those coal areas under the policy adopted by the Government, has been to reduce the price of coal in Winnipeg from $17 to $7 a ton. Therefore, if it be true that we have given these coal areas, even if it be to friends, we have at least the satisfaction of knowing that we have made fuel cheaper to the settlers of the North-West, that we had, in fact, reduced the price by considerably more than one-half, because, as you go further west and get nearer the coal areas, you will find that the price now is, I have no hesitation in saying, at least one-third what it was before. Now, with regard to these coal areas, we have adopted precisely the same policy as that adopted by the United States; and I confess I was rather astonished when, in the one particular in which we have slavishly followed the American system, after the hon. gentleman has been parading the American system, has been calling upon us every Session, to take a leaf out of the book of our friends on the other side of the border, yet, when we have done it in this particular case, still the hon. gentleman is not pleased, still he thinks we should have adopted some other plan. He says we ought to offer these to public competition. Why, Sir, how could we offer them to public competition? Coal underlies the whole North-West, and you can hardly tell where it may not be found. The policy we adopted is, that where there is a coal area we fix the price, as they do in the United States under similar conditions, at $10 an acre, or, if it be anthracite coal, such as is found in the mountains, where the price was formerly $20 an acre, we have reduced it down to $12.50, upon the representation of the Inspector of Mines, that the cost of mining was so great that it was better to reduce it to $12.50 in order to ensure the development of the anthracite mines to be found in the mountains. Now, any one can go in and get a coal area if he knows where to select it. He comes to the Department and pays his $10 an acre, and then he can go back and open the seam and supply the people with coal, and so ensure cheap fuel for the people of the North-West. Then again, with regard to this matter of grazing lands, the hon. gentleman has been dealing considerably with the question of members of Parliament being interested in this matter. If I may refer to a previous debate which took place last night—although I know it is not in order—a member of this House was attacked because he had ranches in Texas. But what is he to do? If he had taken a ranche in Canada and put his cattle upon it in exactly the same way, he would have been attacked just the same, because it would then have been said that he was a mere pensioner upon the Government and could not therefore give an independent vote. When he goes to Texas he is attacked because he has gone away from the country and established a ranche in a foreign country. Now, Sir, as to this question of competition; the hon. gentleman has referred to an alleged fact—although it is not a fact—that some of these timber limits were sold by their holders at enormous prices to outside people. Now, there is not one of these outside people who could not have applied for his timber limit and who could not have obtained it by ordinary competition, if there were two persons who wanted it. But, Sir, we are to be told that the fact that people outside will sometimes purchase from a man who gets possession of a limit, is an evidence that the man in the first instance has got it improperly? What shall we say, then, of a celebrated lumber company with which, if I mistake not, that gentleman from Simcoe has something to do? What are we to say of that company? It is quite true that the unfortunate people which put their money into it did not find that it was quite as valuable as they were led to believe when they invested. But, Mr. Speaker, they could have come to Canada if they had thought proper under this magnificent Ontario system, they could have got their timber limits in the ordinary way; but they seemed to have preferred to purchase from the hon. gentleman opposite, on his representations, though God knows what there was in him to commend him to them. They seemed to prefer to take his recommendation, and they gave him an enormous sum of money for the limits he controlled. Now that was a transaction where the money really passed.

Mr. COOK. I just wish to correct the hon. gentleman. The statement that he is making is false.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Well, Mr. Speaker, I will not answer that. The hon. gentleman's business matters are not matters that concern me; but I do not think his statement that that is false will go down outside this House—of course here it must be accepted. Then finally we had the colonisation companies referred to. We were told those companies were an enormous source of corruption in connection with this Government, and the extraordinary thing is that we were told that those companies had actually obstructed settlement in the North West. The hon. gentleman ought to have known, and could have known if he had made enquiries or had visited the country, that but for the colonisation companies the settlers to be found on those tracts never would have been there. The result in connection with those companies has been this: In that case, as in the case of the timber limits, there were a large number of applications for colonisation companies, a large number of applicants for the privilege—for that is all they obtained—of placing settlers in the North-West, and obtaining payment for doing that by a grant of land at a lower price than the ordinary price. Let me say this—that hon. gentlemen opposite adopted this principle; they recognised the importance of securing outside influence in settling the country to such an extent that they actually passed an Order in Council by which they gave to people 80 acres of land for every settler they brought into the North-West and put upon a homestead. That is the policy they adopted; that is to say, taking the land at $2 an acre, they gave $160 for every settler brought into the North-West. There were, as I have said, a large number of applications for colonisation companies, no less than 260 applications, of which only 117 were authorised by Order in Council. But, as in the case of the timber licenses and timber limits, the Order in Council did nothing. It required before anything was done that a contract should be signed by the company under which they undertook to perform the duties imposed on them; and the number of contracts entered into, that is the number of colonisation companies which actually went into operation, was 28 out of 260 applications. I do not think those gentlemen ought to be charged with anything wrong in having applied for the privilege of colonising the North-West. That certainly is not the ground of complaint made against them. The number of contracts, I say, is 28, and the number of members of the House of Commons whose names appear as incorporators or shareholders of those companies is, so far as the records of the Department show, six; and curiously enough they are equally divided between the two sides of the House, three to each. And if my friends on this side will not consider that I reflect unduly on them, I venture to say that the great influence was on the other side of the House. I find that one of those members was Hon. Alexander Mackenzie; and yet the hon. gentleman not satisfied with having turned the hon. member for East York out of the leadership, not satisfied with having brought him down to sorrow and to what I fear is very nearly his grave, he insults him in this House to-night by intimating that his joining a colonisation company was an act of corruption of which no public man should be guilty. Who is the next? A gentleman who is held in the highest respect by both sides of the House, an intimate friend of your own, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Gunn, of Kingston. The third was a gentleman who, I am bound to say, turns up in pretty nearly everything, Mr. Hugh Sutherland. On this side of the House we had Mr. Small, Mr. Wallace (York), and another gentleman whose name I cannot distinctly make out as it is written in a very small hand. These are the only members of the House in connection with the colonisation companies.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are there any in connection with printing companies?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There were five Senators. They were, the late colleague of the hon. gentleman opposite, and present leader of the Liberal party in the Senate, Hon. R. W. Scott, Hon. Mr. Reesor, Hon. Thomas Ryan, Hon. A. W. Ogilvie and the late Mr. Gibbs. So altogether there were eleven members of Parliament, Senate and Commons, and of those six were Conservatives and five Reformers, including among the Reformers the leader of the late Government and the leader in the Senate of the late Government. That is perhaps the best answer that can be given to the charge that being connected with a colonisation company unfits a man for a seat in Parliament, and lays him open to the suspicion of being influenced by corrupt motives. Those colonisation companies, moreover, did not simply get their contracts and do nothing. The Government received from those companies $760,253 in hard cash, evidence, I think, and pretty strong evidence of the good spirit with which they went in to complete the work they had undertaken when they entered into the contract. One company alone, the Saskatchewan Homestead Company, paid $156,000 to the Government. In addition to that we have the sworn statement of their auditors, after an examination of their books, that the company had expended in securing settlement, in aiding settlers, in putting them upon the land, in erecting mills in some cases, in building roads, in supplying the settlers with seed grain and in assisting them in every possible way, not less than $367,932, in addition to the amount paid to the Government. Yet we are to be told that the policy which induced numbers of persons, men outside Parliament altogether, for the number of members of Parliament was infinitesimally small, to undertake the colonisation of the North-West, is to be denounced by hon. gentlemen opposite as if it was a violation of the duty of the Government and reflected in some way upon the character of members of this House. I do not think it is necessary I should say more in relation to the arraignment of the Government by the hon. gentleman opposite. I have dealt with the several points to which he referred. I have shown you, Sir, that as to the timber limits any man could come in and get them under the regulations; that the policy of competition is now the absolute policy, and that as to one-third of the cases where limits were given since 1878, they were let by public competition. As to the coal areas, I have shown that they are open to anyone to go in and take a coal area, by paying his $10, and that the result has been largely to reduce the price of fuel. I have shown that as to the grazing lands, we have received an enormous amount in actual cash, and that we have the advantage of a lower price for the food supplied to the Indians and the Mounted Police. I have shown as to the colonisation companies that we have secured through their instrumentality and the work they have done, important settlements in the North-West country which would not have been there to-day without their exertions; that the country has received a large sum of money—over $750,000; that there has been received in connection with the settlement of the North-West $365,000 outside of that; and that all that has been done under the operation of a policy open to everybody, which everybody can take advantage of, and that in relation to it not a single member on that side has ventured to say that a Liberal was refused what a Conservative was given; but that any man on either side can get what could be got under the ordinary public regulations of the Department, adopted with a view to the development of the North-West Territories. Under these circumstances, I believe the House will reject the resolution.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to ask for information if those colonisation companies were all outside the present limits of Manitoba?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). No, all of them are not—I think the Shell River Company is not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The bulk of them are?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes, I think so.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The hon. gentleman appeared to be apprehensive in his opening remarks, that the tone of public morality would be lowered.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I am not surprised that hon. gentlemen howl. They have had a good deal to howl about for the last few days, and they shall have a good deal more to howl about before this Parliament is over, and therefore it does not surprise me that they howl now. I say that the hon. gentleman appeared in his opening remarks to be apprehensive that the tone of public morality would be lowered, because the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) charged that members of Parliament had been in the constant habit of communicating with the Government on behalf of their political friends, and asking favors at the hands of the Government for their political friends. Now, Sir, I do not understand that the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) charges it as a crime against the Government, or against members of Parliament, that they had so communicated with the Government. Had the hon. gentleman done so I for one am free to confess that I would not have agreed with my hon. friend for North Norfolk. The Government have enough sins to answer for without being responsible for the sin, if it is one, of members of Parliament, or the public generally, communicating with them upon matters relating to public affairs. Had the matter ended with communications from members of Parliament, as far as I am concerned, at all events, I would have made no complaint. The complaint is not that members of Parliament have communicated with the Government, seeking favors at the hands of the Government for their friends, but the complaint is and the charge is that the Government have yielded to those demands, not only when made by members of Parliament for themselves, but when made by members of Parliament for their friends. The charge is that members of Parliament have used their political power and influence in Parliament for the purpose of securing these advantages, and the charge is that not only have members of Parliament done so but that members of the Administration, gentlemen sitting on the Treasury benches, have so done. When we find that one Minister of the Crown, while he was a Minister of the Crown, secured a large bonus for a railway of which he was the head, the middle and the tail; when we find that the Minister of Railways appeals to the Minister of Railways, and the Minister of Railways appeals to the Government of the country to secure a bonus on behalf of his own railway, and secures it; when we find that the Secretary of State appeals to the Government of which he is a member, in order that a bonus should be granted of the people's money to the railway in which he has a controlling interest and secures it; when we find that a member of Parliament, who is now a Minister of the Crown, secures of the public domain a very considerable slice for himself and his family, when we find that a member of Parliament, who controlled a leading newspaper supporting the Administration, converted that newspaper into a joint-stock company, to evade the Independence of Parliament Act, and when he became a Minister of the Crown, nominally severed his connection with that newspaper, and when we find that that newspaper received public money, to the extent of $18,000 to $20,000 a year—when we find these things, one is not surprised that public morality should be considerably lowered; one is not surprised, when such things are done by Ministers of the Crown, that members of Parliament think they have the right to do the same thing. Now, Sir, the defence of the hon. gentleman, in my judgment, is an extraordinary defence. He first states that the policy of the Conservative Government, before the Liberals assumed office in 1873, was that the public domain should be disposed of by public competition; that the Liberals changed that, and that their policy has continued since, as the Liberals created it after they assumed office. All I can say is, and I am prepared to establish it by the blue-books I hold in my hand, that whatever the law may have been on this subject, the policy of the Conservative Government, before 1873 and in 1873, before the Liberals assumed office, was to grant the public domain, without tender and without competition; and before I resume my seat, I shall establish that fact without peradventure, notwithstanding the statements of the Minister of the Interior. The hon. gentleman complains that while the Liberal Administration were in power they granted of timber limits 605 square miles. Sir, if that is a ground of complaint what shall be said of this Administration which have granted of the public domain to their political friends, in Parliament and out of Parliament, not less than 25,000 square miles of the public domain in the short period of seven years? The hon. gentleman says: Can it be shown that any Liberal in Parliament or out of Parliament applied for a timber limit, and that the timber limit was refused to him and given to a Conservative? I am not prepared to say, but on reference to the Sessional Papers I find is one of the returns brought down some very extraordinary comments and remarks made by the deputy, or whoever prepared the return. For instance you will find this state of things. A. B. makes application for a timber limit. The answer is you cannot have it—reserved. C. D. makes application for a timber limit. The answer is you cannot have it—already granted. E. F. makes application for a timber limit, and the answer is cannot have it; it is embraced within another limit, and so on, until in one return you find some 40 or 50 cases of that kind. And singularly enough, if you will read them over, you will find that many of those applicants so treated are Liberals. Now, in regard to this timber limit business, if everybody was placed on the same footing, if the Liberals were dealt with as the Conservatives were dealt with, it is extraordinary that out of the hundreds of applications that have been granted, both in the North-West Territories and in what is called the disputed territory, not more than half a dozen were granted to men who, in so far as I can discover, can be claimed as Liberals All the grants of the public domain which have been made by this Administration have been made to supporters of themselves, either in or out of Parliament. But, Sir, that does not make the matter any better or any worse. What the Liberal party has always complained of is that the public domain should be given away without notice and without competition to favorites of the Government or to those whom they expected to seduce into allegiance. The country suffers all the same, whether the grant is made to a Liberal or a Conservative. The hon. gentleman further thinks to justify the position of the Government by reference to a matter which he has brought up in the House a score of times—a letter written by the hon. member for West Durham to a person of the name of Moore, by which he alleges that some $29,000 was lost to the Dominion of Canada; but he says not a word about the contract on the Canadian Pacific Railway which was given to the second lowest tenderer, by the late Minister of Railways, on the ground that the cheque sent in by the lowest tenderer as security for the completion of the contract was irregular, although in one hour he could have found out whether it was good or not by communicating with the Bank of Montreal, and although as a matter of fact, the Secretary of the Minister of Railways had notice from the Bank of Montreal that the cheque was perfectly good, by which transaction $214,000 of public money was stolen out of the public exchequer. The hon. gentleman forgot that another noted friend of the Administration, Mr. Onderdonk, who was not the lowest tenderer, got another contract on the Canadian Pacific Railway at a sum $209,000 above the lowest tenderer. The hon. gentleman forgot to mention that on the Carillon Canal the second lowest tenderer got a contract at an advance of $49,000 over the lowest. Then the hon. gentleman undertook to justify the Government by an allusion to a small speculation I made in the North-West. He said the hon. member for West Huron rushed to the North-West when he could get land at $1 an acre, bought it, and sold it at a profit. I bought nothing from the Government of Mr. Mackenzie; what I bought was while the Tory Government was in power; but I bought little from the Government; the greater portion of the land I bought was from a son of the Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba and his friends, a late colleague of hon. gentlemen opposite. If hon. gentlemen can make any capital out of that, they are entirely welcome to do it, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. FARROW. You made money out of it.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Yes, I made money, but I did not use my influence as you did to get offices and land from the Government for your brother and your friends.

Mr. COOK. What have you to say to that?

Mr. FARROW. I will tell you if you let me.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). You will have a chance when I get through. The hon. member who spoke referred especially to the disposal by the Government of the public domain in the North-West Territories. I discussed, not so much the disposal of that as the disposal of the public domain in the disputed territory. The hon. Minister of the Interior and myself have not exactly agreed upon the facts. To-night I propose to do as I have done elsewhere, prove from the blue-books every statement I make. In the month of December last, I charged this Administration with having partitioned a large portion of the timber limits in the disputed territory, pending the settlement of the northern and western boundary of Ontario, among their camp followers in Parliament and their party hacks out of it, and I gave the names of thirty-three followers of this Administration who were so favored by them. Now, Sir, as it is important that the names of these beneficiaries of this benevolent Administration should reach the public, not simply to the limited extent that my speech made in December last reached them, but should reach every portion of the wide Dominion, I propose to-night to repeat every name I gave in that speech. I charge that the following corporations and individuals obtained limits in the disputed territory, all of them friends of the Administration:—

	Acres.
The St. Catharines Milling & Lumbering Company, President of the Co., Capt. Murray, of St. Catharines, who is also President of the Conservative Association for the County of Lincoln; P. H. Chabot, an Ottawa Tory heeler; J. C. Gouin, the Tory Postmaster at Ottawa, and H A. Costigan, a son of the Minister of Inland Revenue, are all corporators of this Company which obtained of Ontario timber limits	32,000
C. J. Campbell of Toronto, the Tory brother of the Tory Postmaster General	32,000
Hugh Macdonald, a Toronto Tory	32,000
Henry O'Brien, the Tory brother of the Tory member for Muskoka, obtained	32,000

Hon. John Costigan, Minister of Inland Revenue, did not think it inconsistent to secure for himself 50 square miles, and so he promptly makes the haul.

I observe that in the whole list, there is just one mistake as to the politics of the individuals. I refer to Mr. John Mather and his son, and I tender my humble apologies to them for placing them in such company. In that list, every single man, except the Mathers, is a Conservative. Of these names, few, if any, are in the list of my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) though some of them have obtained limits, not only in the North-West Territories but in the disputed territories as well, so that their names appear twice, they having obtained Orders in Council twice. I at once admit that the charges I have made elsewhere, and that I make here, are grave and serious charges to formulate against this or any Administration, and that such charges should not be made unless well founded. No public man, in or out of Parliament, ought to frame these charges against this or any other Administration unless upon evidence sufficiently clear to establish the truth of his charges. I admit at once the responsibility any public man assumes when he charges the Government with wholesale plundering of the public domain, and especially when that public domain does not belong to the Government. If the charges I have made against the Administration to-night are true, and if the charges made by my hon. friend from North Norfolk are true, the Government deserve at the hands of Parliament the severest condemnation ; on the other hand, if the indictment preferred by the hon. member for North Norfolk and myself be untrue we both deserve to be censured by the people. A member of the Government, out of Parliament, undertook to challenge the correctness of the statements which I have made out of Parliament, and which are practically those I have made in Parliament to-night. He challenged me to formulate these charges upon the floor of Parliament, and promised that if I did he would meet them fully. I appeal to any intelligent man, who is not completely encrusted in party prejudice, to say if the answer made by the Minister of the Interior to-night is satisfactory.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes, yes.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I know it is satisfactory to everybody who has got a timber limit, to every hon. member who has got a railway bonus, to every one who has got a printing contract, but these are not independent men and ought not to be called on as jurors to decide whether this Government is guilty or not of the high crimes and misdemeanors with which the hon. member for North Norfolk has charged it. The hon. the Minister of the Interior, at Dunnville, on the 28th January, 1886, in reply to the charges I made against his Administration, said :

"It is charged that members of Parliament have been interested in these limits. My answer to that is that in the great majority of cases cited by Mr. Cameron there is not a word of truth in the charge."

And further :

"Members of Parliament, at the request of their constituents and others, frequently write letters to the Department in regard to timber limits as well as in regard to any other matters of business in which their constituents may be interested, and it is a new doctrine that they are to be assumed to have a personal interest because they do write. But if they were all interested, and obtained their limits under the regulations, they are entirely within their rights and are not to be condemned."

I made no charges against the Administration, because members of Parliament have written to the Government making demands on the Government. The charge I make against them is that they are guilty, because they have parcelled out the public domain among their own followers. The Minister of the Interior, in a speech delivered at St. Thomas, on the 8th of January, 1886, as reported in the Daily Times of the 9th of January, 1886, said :

"Mr. Cameron said that thirty-four of the Premier's friends had each been awarded fifty square miles of timber limits, and besides that thirty-two permits had been issued, in addition to these thirty-four special licenses. It is true that there were permits issued to parties to cut firewood and to take out railroad ties, and there were permits issued during Mr. Mackenzie's regime as well. It was alleged by Mr. Cameron that the Hon. John Costigan secured from the Government fifty square miles of these timber limits. As a matter of fact Mr. Costigan never applied for and never received one mile of timber limits in the disputed territory. This strikes off only thirty-four and leaves thirty-three remaining. Of this latter number eleven never had a license, never applied for permits, and could not cut timber. Sixteen of the other licenses expired a year ago, so that there are just six licenses in existence at the present time." (Cheers.)

Now, I observe that these statements of the Minister of the Interior were lustily cheered by his admirers at St. Thomas and elsewhere. If the Minister's answers were true then I admit that the Tories were fairly entitled to the enjoyment of this crumb of comfort. But were they true ? Let us see whether they are true or not. Bear in mind that the charge I levelled against the Administration then and which I make against them now is that, pending the settlement of the western and north-western boundary of Ontario, this Administration parcelled out among their camp followers, thirty three of them, a large portion of the timber limits in the disputed territory. I gave their names upon the occasion I referred to, and I have given them again to-night. I further charged that thirty-three others whose names I did not give shared in the spoils this Government placed at their disposal. Now, it must not be forgotten that the award—and I am now dealing entirely with the disputed territory, some of my friends will deal with the balance of the answer of the Minister of the Interior—was executed by the arbitrators on the 3rd August, 1878. Bear also in mind—and it is an important element in discussing and considering how far this Administration is responsible to the charge I made against them—that the judgment of the Lords of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council affirming, the boundary fixed by the arbitrators, was delivered on the 11th August, 1884. I know, as my hon. friend said, that this is not a very gracious task. I know that, when you begin to touch members of Parliament in Parliament, and the friends of members of Parliament, there is a howl on the other side of the House and there is a howl in the country; but my sense of public duty will never prevent me, by the howls of the hon. gentlemen or the squealings of hon. gentlemen, from discharging my duties in Parliament and out of Parliament. I know an hon. member in this House the other night declared that :

"The hon. member for West Huron has indulged on former occasions as well as upon the present in such wild extravagance of statement and such violence of language as to place himself beyond the pale of that intercourse which should exist between one member and another."

That to me was not, as the hon. gentleman intended it should be, a terrible infliction. I can stand it. I think I can bear it. The sentence passed upon me of perpetual exclusion from the social Tory circle, is a sentence that does not affect me very seriously; and I can say that it shall not deter me from exposing what I conceive to be the maladministration of the Department of the Interior, in Parliament and out of Parliament; and it shall never prevent me from exposing what I believe to be the misconduct of this Administration, either upon the floors of Parliament or outside of Parliament. All the same, it will not prevent me from so doing, fearful and terrible as the consequences may be to myself of perpetual exclusion from the Tory social circle. Now, I have already proved out of Parliament, I shall prove to-night in Parliament, every single charge I made against this Administration in the speech I made at Bruceville, which was commented on so vigorously by the Minister of the Interior. I charged that, pending the settlement of the western boundary of Ontario, this Administration granted to their political friends and followers, in and out of Parliament, a large portion of the timber limits in the disputed territory. I shall prove it out of the mouth of the Minister of the Interior, I shall prove it by the returns brought down to Parliament, I shall prove it by the blue-books that are within my control here. My charge was that the Government has parcelled out among sixty-seven of their camp followers a large portion of the timber limits of the disputed territory. Why, the hon. Minister of the Interior, in reply to a question put to the Government by the member for West York admitted that, between the date of the award fixing the western boundary of Ontario and the date of the judgment of the Lords of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council affirming that boundary, this Government passed no less than 111 Orders in Council disposing of timber limits in the disputed territory. He also admitted that, since 1881, the Government had granted sixty-three permits to sixty-three different individuals to cut timber in the disputed territory. In other words, the Minister of the Interior, although out of Parliament and on the public platform stated that the charges I made against the Government were, in the great majority of cases, incorrect and untrue, in his own place in Parliament, with the documents before him and better informed on the subject had to admit that, after the boundary award was made, this Administration has granted by Orders in Council and by permits the right to cut timber in the disputed territory in 174 different cases.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Nothing of the kind.

Mr. FARROW. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Who says "nothing of the kind?"

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I do.

Mr. FARROW. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. COOK. What do you know about it?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I will show it is so. I will prove it. I have the documents, and I will prove it before I sit down.

Mr. FARROW. Prove it now. Your tongue goes too fast.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). In some of the cases the Orders in Council authorised the issue of licenses; in others permits were granted without Orders in Council; but, so far as the public are concerned, or so far as the public interest is concerned, it makes no kind of difference whether the right to cut timber is obtained by an Order in Council, a license or a permit; the country suffers all the same. I, with extreme moderation, only placed the number at 67. The Minister of the Interior puts both classes at 174. Does he still adhere to the statement he made which I quoted from——

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The statement he made at St. Thomas that, in the great majority of cases cited by Mr. Cameron, there is not a word of truth?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). He does adhere to it, does he? Then, if he does, I desire to quote the Minister of the Interior in the House against the Hon. Mr. White out of the House, and I shall do so in a few minutes. But, in case the people of this country—I do not mean this House; I do not know that any arguments any man could use in the House would affect members in this House; it is not in the nature of things that you could expect that hon. gentlemen who have been sharing in these spoils are in a position to give an independent opinion—as the hon. the Minister of the Interior out of Parliament and in Parliament may not be considered a very reliable witness, even when he gives evidence in support of an Administration of which he is so distinguished a member, I intend not to take the words of the Minister of the Interior, but to refer to the returns brought down to Parliament and the blue-books submitted to Parliament. I will take the Sessional Papers of 1882, No. 30.

Mr. COOK. Yell now, why don't you?

Mr. FARROW. Two hundred square miles.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). You will find in this Sessional Paper a return submitted on the 8th March, 1882. In that Sessional Paper you will find the name of Turner & Co., of Germain & Co., of J. Bergin & Co.—perhaps the hon. member for Cornwall knows something of that—who received each a yearly license to cut timber in the disputed territory. You will also find in the same return the name of Joseph Whitehead, of W. J. Macaulay, of Stephen H. Fowler, of R. Fuller & Co., of Macaulay, Ginty & Sprague, each of whom obtained a license to cut timber for twenty-one years in the disputed territory. You will find in the Sessional Papers for 1883, No. 118, another return submitted to Parliament, and this return is entitled as follows:—

"Permits granted on lands within the territory now in dispute with Ontario from August, 1878, to March, 1883."

In that return there are the names of thirty-five individuals, each of whom obtained permits to cut timber in this disputed territory. The list embraces the following names:—R. J. Short, who was a partner of the Hon. John Costigan, now Minister of Inland Revenue. R. J. Short obtained a second and third permit. Costigan & Short, the Minister of Inland Revenue and his Conservative partner, also obtained a permit to cut timber in the disputed territory. So did John Lewis, a friend of the Minister of Inland Revenue—as you will find in the correspondence here in my hand, letters from John Costigan, addressed to the Department begging the Department to give his friend Lewis a permit to cut timber. You will find H. Bulmer, a partner of the nephew of the Minister of Railways, got a permit, and John Lewis got a second permit.

An hon. MEMBER. Why not?

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Does the hon. Minister deny it? He stated at St. Thomas that the statements made by me were not true. I am within the mark when I say that I did not give one-third of the names of parties who had permits from this Administration to cut timber in the disputed territory. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company that rules this Government, had a permit. Patrick Macdonald had a permit, and so on through the list of 35 individuals, and I venture to state that in the whole list there are not four individuals who ever pretended to be Liberals. In the first list I read there are the names of seven who obtained permits to cut timber, and in the next list there were 35 persons who obtained permits to cut timber after the boundary award was executed by the arbitrators. I hold in my hands a statement the original of which was prepared in the Department of the Interior, and I challenge the hon. gentleman as to its correctness. It is a statement of the permits granted by this Administration to their political friends after the boundary award was made. That statement is entitled:

Schedule showing the names of persons who cut timber under permits in that part of the Dominion of Canada declared by an Order of the Queen's Council to be within the Province of Ontario.

That list of names is as follows:—

"R. J. Short, Jno. Lewis, J. W. Macdonald, R. J. Short, Costigan & Short, H. H. Bailey, H. Bulmer, jr., John Lewis, H. R. McDonald, R. J. Short, Clifford Lewis, W. L. Baker, Frank Gardner, Mrs. J. Genaghty, P. MacDonald, D. Carmichael, A. D. MacDonald, Jas. Baston, N. D. Coates, John Culbert, Jno. Short, Geo. Munroe, Geo. Myers, Wm McKinnon, E. A. Sharpe, C. Kobold, A. Mulligan, J. Hennessy, Jno. Ward, E. M. Ridout, Jno. O. Miller, R. H. Bunting, R. J. Short, Angus MacDonald, Jacob Rose, Dick, Banning & Co., Jno. McLeod, C. W. Chadwick, Mrs. McKenna, Ste. Catharines Lumber Co. Rainy Lake Lumber Co, W. Cameron, T. W. Dobbie, Jacob Smith, Jno W. Colcleugh, Robt. Bunting. C. S. Hoare, Frank Gardner, Julius Colombe, Geo. Gagnon, Pat. Fitzgerald, Thompson & Palmer J. W. P. Witten. Chas. Ward, Frank Ward. Jos. McCracken, Wm. Zippell, Jno. Ward, A. E. Mulligan, John Thompson, M. Ritchie."

Most of these names are perfectly familiar to hon. gentlemen in this House, especially familiar to members of the Administration. Now, Sir, the Minister of the Interior, at St. Thomas, told the electors there a further story to which I wish to refer. He said permits were given to parties to cut firewood and railway ties, and the impression he left upon the audience, the impression he intended to leave upon the audience, was that the Government gave permits in the disputed territory for no other purposes, except to cut firewood and railway ties. I say that is not correct. A reference to the returns I have referred to, shows that in eight different cases, the Government gave permits to cut poles, ties, lumber and square timber. The Minister went further, and in undertaking to answer the charges that had been made against this Administration, said that permits to cut timber were issued during Mr. Mackenzie's regime—and bear in mind he was then discussing the timber limits in the disputed territory, and that only. He was attempting to answer the charge I had made in December last against the Administration. I say it is not true that Mr. Mackenzie, during his regime, granted permits to cut timber in the disputed territory. No permits appear during that period in the returns submitted to Parliament; no permits appear in the blue-book during that period; no permit existed anywhere, except in the fertile brain of the Minister of the Interior; and I will prove that out of his own mouth. He said, in reply to the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), not long ago, that no permits were issued to cut timber in this territory prior to the year 1881. Then, if that is the case, how could the hon. gentleman at St. Thomas say that the Mackenzie Administration granted permits likewise?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The hon. gentleman is so reported in the Tory organ, and he now takes the convenient way of denying the correctness of the report.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman had referred, in a speech which he made, to 34 cases in which licenses were granted. I dealt simply with those 34 cases, and nothing more. I pointed out that as to those cases, two or three of them, I forget which, were issued by Orders in Council, passed in the Mackenzie Administration.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I know the hon. gentleman was dealing with my charges against the Government for parcelling out timber limits in the disputed territory, and in order to justify his Administration he said the Mackenzie Government had likewise granted permits to cut timber in that territory. He is so reported in the St. Thomas Times, and I have no doubt the hon. gentleman did say so, and would admit it, if he would only charge his recollections with it. If he said so, the statement is utterly incorrect. The hon. gentleman at St. Thomas stated further:

"Now, as to the last charge, I may say that some permits were issued to settlers to cut fire wood and to persons to get out ties for railways. But the last permit expired on 1st May, 1884, nearly two years ago, three months before the judgment of the Privy Council, and no permit has since been granted."

I do not object to a Minister of the Crown travelling round the country and making public speeches; it is his duty to do so; it is in the interest of the public, and the public will always be delighted to hear him. But what I do object to is, that a Minister should not adhere to the facts contained in returns brought down to Parliament and to the blue-books of his own Departments when he undertakes to instruct the free and independent electors of the country; and what I charge is, that the hon. gentleman did not, in his speech at St. Thomas, adhere to the record when he made those statements. The hon. gentleman said that the last permit expired on 1st May, 1884. The returns of his own Department and his own blue-books show that he is a year astray. The last permit expired on 1st May, 1885. If the hon. gentleman will refer to his own Department, to his deputy and clerks, he will find that the last permit expired only a short time before he made the speech. The hon. gentleman declared that no permit had been granted since 1st May, 1884. The hon. gentleman was again astray. A Minister of the Crown, with all the responsibility of a Minister resting upon his shoulders misled—I do not say intentionally, but all the same he misled—the electors of that section of the country and the electors all over the Dominion, because that speech was published and scattered broadcast throughout the country. The Government granted eight permits after the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had settled the western boundary of Ontario. It is an extraordinary circumstance. The hon. gentleman must have had the books before him—his speech was evidently carefully prepared, he had figures and dates, and it is extraordinary that the hon. gentleman should have been so far astray, for it appears that the Government of which he is a member granted eight permits two months after the Government were aware that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had finally settled the western boundary of Ontario. On the other hand, the hon. gentleman wanted the people to believe that no permit had been granted for two years before he delivered that speech at St. Thomas. I go a step further. I find by a statement which I hold in my hand, the original of which was prepared in the Department of the Interior and of which this is a true copy, that 111 Orders in Council were passed by the Administration after the arbitrators had made their award settling the western boundary of Ontario—and that in each of the 111 Orders 32,000 acres of timber lands were granted in the disputed territory. The statement is as follows:—

Now, Sir, of these 115 applicants for timber limits in the disputed territories who obtained Orders in Council after the boundary award was made, I venture to say that there are not more than five or six of them who can be claimed to be Liberals. The Minister of the Interior told us that the Government were not open to blame because the timber limits were open to Liberals as well as Conservatives, but it is an extraordinary thing that in the whole list of returns to Parliament and in the blue books, I am within the mark when I say that nineteen-twentieths are pronounced Conservatives and friends of the present Administration. I say that every man I mention in the list from which I have just read, except three or four, obtained permission from this Administration to cut timber each on 32,000 acres in the disputed territory. The Minister takes credit to himself and the Government for the fact, that under these Orders in Council only twenty-three licenses had been taken out. Well, Sir, that is an extraordinary defence. Whose fault is it that they were not taken out? The Government put in the power of these men to avail themselves of these limits for their own purposes; they passed Orders in Council; they gave these 111 individuals permission to obtain licenses for 111 holdings, and if they did not take them out it was not the fault of the Administration. And besides all that, this Administration, after the judgment of the Lords of the Judicial Committee on the boundary award was pronounced, passed twenty Orders in Council disposing of the timber limits in the disputed territory to their own favorites. I say that the Administration deliberately and coolly set to work, with full knowledge of the fact that the timber they were granting to their friends was not the property of the Government of Canada to grant; they coolly set to work and partitioned amongst their camp followers, in Parliament and out of it, a large portion of the timber in the disputed territory, and they take credit to themselves because their friends did not avail themselves of the opportunity which was given to them and despoil the Province of Ontario of these timber limits. Sir, I say that as well might the thief who committed robbery claim exemption for his offence because, after having been arrested, the goods were restored to the true owner, as this Administration claim to be relieved from the odium and responsibility for their conduct, simply because some of their followers did not take out licenses under the Orders in Council. The Government deserve no credit for that. The fact that the Orders in Council were passed, though licenses did not issue, is not because the Government were not willing they should not issue. The fact that some had not been taken out is not owing to the conduct of the Government, but owing entirely to the sturdy and unbending Premier of the Province of Ontario, who found it necessary, in order to stay the hands of the present Administration from despoiling the domain of Ontario, to appeal to the Court of Chancery in the Province of Ontario, and the Premier of Ontario obtained from the Court of Chancery, I think in seven or eight instances, injunctions restraining these licensees from cutting timber in the disputed territory. Judgment was rendered in that matter not long ago by the Court of Appeal in Ontario, holding that this Administration had no power to grant limits in the disputed territory. I say that the people of Ontario and the people of this Dominion are under a debt of lasting gratitude to the Hon. Oliver Mowat, for the stand he has taken, on behalf of Provincial rights, and to that firm and manly stand the people of Ontario are indebted for the fact that there remains a single foot of the timber limits in the disputed territory which has not been gobbled up by the licensees of the present Administration which would thus be carrying out the policy of the First Minister, when he declared in his place in Parliament that not one ounce of mineral, a foot of land or a stick of timber would belong to the Province of Ontario. The Government have been consistent in their policy from beginning to end, and that policy has been put a stop to by the action of the Province of Ontario, and by the voice of public opinion which has been denouncing this Administration for the last six months for their misconduct. Let me deal further with the Minister of the Interior. He contended that the policy of the Conservative Government prior to the assumption by Mr. Mackenzie of the reins of office in 1873, was to dispose of timber limits by competition, and that Mr. Mackenzie changed that policy. I say that prior to the assumption of office by Mr. Mackenzie, that was not the policy of the Conservative Government. I say that prior to that time this Government granted timber limits without notice or competition in the disputed territory and elsewhere.

Mr. MILLS. Contrary to law.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Contrary to law, as the hon. gentleman says. I make no statement which I cannot establish from the blue-books of the Department of the Interior. Take the Sessional Papers for 1872, No. 30, page 92, and it will be found that on the 30th October and 1st November before Mr. Mackenzie assumed office, as the Tories were going out of office, they granted to Mr. Fowler a timber limit of 100 miles on Rainy River. By the Sessional Papers of 1882, No. 30, page 20, you will find that on the 22nd of January, 1873, an Order in Council was passed granting to Mr. Fuller a timber limit on the east side of Lake Manitoba, near Swan Creek. Their policy was not limited to one section; it applied to every section. By an Order in Council dated the 17th of February, 1873, several islands lying to the north of the Narrows of the Lake of the Woods were granted to Mr. Fuller in place of the limit near Swan Creek, without competition and without notice. By the Sessional Papers of 1882, No. 30, page 24, it will be found that the Conservative Government passed an Order in Council granting to Messrs. Macauley & Ginty a timber limit on the Roseau River on the 30th of January, 1873. and that without competition and without public notice. By Order in Council of the 7th July, 1873, they changed that limit for a limit on the Winnipeg River. I have another word to say to the Minister of the Interior. I charge that the Hon. Mr. Costigan, before he became Minister of Inland Revenue, obtained the right to cut timber in the disputed territory. The hon. gentleman answered me by saying that Mr. Costigan never applied for and never received one mile of timber limits in the disputed territory. Let us see whether he did or not; let us see who is right, the Minister of the Intorior or I. In the Sessional Papers of 1883, No. 118, the names of R. J. Short, and Short & Costigan, partners in business, appear not less than six times as holders of permits to cut timber in the disputed territory. In the Sessional Papers of 1885, No. 53, you will find a return headed thus:

"Schedule showing the names of parties from whom dues have been collected for timber cut in that part of the Dominion of Canada lately declared by the Order of the Queen in Council to be within the Province of Ontario, and the several amounts collected, in compliance with an Order of the House of Commons."

In that return Short and Short & Costigan are credited with over $21,000 for dues paid on timber cut by them in the disputed territory. And yet the Minister of the Interior told the people of St. Thomas, and the people of this country, that Mr. Costigan never received a mile of timber limits in that territory. You will find in this return letters which show that Short & Costigan were partners, in the following words:—

Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

"WINNIPEG, 27th September, 1881.

"SIR,—We beg leave to apply for permission to cut railway timber for the South-Western Railway Company, on the lands in the Lake of the Woods, which lie south of Mr. Mather's limit in Whitefish Bay. Parties are cutting for the Canadian Pacific Railway on the main shore of said bay, and we trust we may be allowed to cut on the islands of that bay.

We have the honor to be, Sir, your obedient servants,

"JOHN COSTIGAN,
"R. J. SHORT.

"Rt. Hon. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD."

You will find also the following letter:—

"OTTAWA, 28th October, 1881.

"SIR,—As the lands in Whitefish Bay of the Lake of the Woods, on which we asked permission to cut railway timber, appeared to be included in a lease to the Keewatin Lumbering Company, we beg leave now to ask permission to cut 50,000 ties on that part of the main shore of the aforesaid company, on the west shore of Whitefish. Bay, said permit to have a depth of three miles back from the shore.

"We have the honor to be, Sir, your obedient servants,

"J. COSTIGAN,
"R. J. SHORT.

"Rt. Hon. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, Minister of the Interior."

That the Hon. John Costigan applied for and obtained a permit is quite clear from the following letter, also addressed to Sir John A. Macdonald:

"OTTAWA, 12th October, 1881.

"Have purchased some ties on Lake of the Woods to fill my contract with Manitoba South-Western Railway Company for 25,000 ties to be delivered this month, and a like quantity next month. Can I have permission to cut balance of said contract next to Mather's limit at Pipestone, Lake of the Woods? Just heard my men are ordered off grounds by instruction from your Department. Surely I may claim your favorable consideration in this case. Unless you wire me favorable reply I will fail in my contract.

"JOHN COSTIGAN."

Yet we are told that Mr. Costigan applied for nothing. But Short & Costigan were hunting in couples over these timber lands is still further clear from the following letter:—

"HOUSE OF COMMONS, 15th May, 1882.

"SIR,—I beg leave to say on behalf of R. J. Short, of Winnipeg, that in addition to the ties and piles he asked liberty to cut on permit applied for east of Turtle Portage, he wants to cut 4,000,000 feet of logs of dimension timber for the C. P. Railway.

"He has already asked for a renewal of the permit he held last year on Whitefish Bay and Pipestone for ties and piles, and for lumber cut on which he has made prompt and regular payments.

"I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

"JOHN COSTIGAN.

"Hon. Minister of the Interior."

And that his demands were acceded to is quite manifest from the following reply:—

"CROWN TIMBER OFFICE, WINNIPEG, 29th May, 1882.

"SIR,—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your T 3061, Ref. No. 322, instructing me to issue a permit to Mr. R. J. Short to cut 1,000,000 feet of lumber, 40,000 ties and 1,000 piles on a berth of fifty square miles, situate north of Sabaskong Bay, Lake of the Woods.

"I have the honor to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

"E. T. STEPHENSON,

"Surveyor General, Ottawa." "Crown Timber Agent.

Now, Sir, I ask you, I ask the people of this country who read the speech of the hon. Minister of the Interior, whether there was any justification in the returns and in the blue-books of Parliament for the statements which he made at St. Thomas, but which he has not ventured to make on the floor of Parliament.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I make the same statement here that I made at St. Thomas, and that is that the Hon. John Costigan, as I am informed by Mr. Ryley, of the Crown timber branch of the Department, never applied for and never obtained a timber license.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I read the letters.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). You read the letters of John Costigan, not Hon. John Costigan, who is the Minister of Inland Revenue.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The hon. gentleman knows that John and Hon. John Costigan is the same man; his son's name is not only John. He has a middle name. Does the hon. gentleman expect to escape through that small knot-hole? It will not go down. It is just because Ministers of the Crown set the example of sharing in the public spoils, that their followers have done likewise. But John or the Hon. John obtained other loot from the public resources. On the 20th of July, 1882, John Costigan and three others, obtained from the Government 59,000 acres of grazing lands, on Mountain Creek. Mr. Costigan's son was a partner in the St. Catharines' Lumber Company, and this company obtained 32,000 acres of timber lands in the disputed territory. Now, Sir, I say I have shown clearly, out of the mouth of the Minister of the Interior; from the returns brought down to Parliament, and from the blue-books submitted to Parliament, that every charge levelled against the Administration, especially with reference to the disposal of timber limits in the North-West and in the disputed territory, has been proved to the very letter; and I challenge any man, whose mind is not biased by a share of the spoils, to investigate these returns and blue books, and arrive at any other conclusion than that the charges made against the Administration have been proved. I have no controversy with the Minister of the Interior personally; many of these grants, if not all, took place before he assumed office. The hon. gentleman's controversy is not with me; it is with the returns and the blue-books submitted to Parliament, and all I can say on that point is that if he can successfully overcome the facts shown in the returns for his own Department and in the blue-books, he is eminently qualified to fill the highest position in this Administration. Believing as I do that the policy of this Administration, not only with refereuce to timber limits, but with reference to the disposal of the public resources, is a vicious and bad policy; believing as I do that a bad example is being set, not only to the members of the House, but to the people of the country, by their misconduct; believing, as I do, that the action of the Administration in parcelling out and dividing up, among their camp followers in and out of Parliament, a large portion of the public domain and the resources of this country, deserves the condemnation of Parliament, as I am sure it will receive the condemnation of the people. I shall support the motion of the hon. member for North Norfolk.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have no desire to prolong this debate, but in justice to myself, in justice to the hon. members who sit on this side, with whom I associate, and in justice to my constituents, I feel it to be my duty to repudiate the slander made against me at a place called Wingham, in Ontario, by a person named M. C. Cameron, in a speech which he delivered there, and which was reported in the Globe of 12th January last. It reads as follows:—

"George Taylor represents in the Conservative interest South Leeds. He, too, cast longing eyes on the vast coal and timber lands of the North-West. He accordingly applied to this Government, who distribute with no sparing hand the public estate among their followers, for both coal lands and timber limits. This did not exactly gratify the ambitious views of Mr. Taylor He lives in Gananoque, a small town and with a limited population In the Conservative interest he persuaded the Government to build, at the public expense, costly public buildings in this country village. This is not all. Last Session Parliament voted a sum of $20,000 to dam the Rideau Canal in order to supply water to the mills and factories in Gananoque in which Mr. Taylor and his constituents are deeply interested. George Taylor is the bond slave of Sir John, and dare not vote against the Government."

In answer to which I can only say that I have no interest in any timber limits, or coal lands, or grazing lands in either Manitoba or the North-West Territories, that I never applied for either coal lands or timber limits or grazing lands in the North-West Territory or Manitoba, and that I have no interest, individually, or am I associated with any other party who has any interest in said lands or limits. This fellow Cameron, who made that statement, knew when he made it that it was a malicious falsehood. I say that that statement was manufactured out of whole cloth. I say that there was no foundation for it. I expect this fellow Cameron is the paid agent of the Grit party to go round the country abusing—what he cannot call himself—a gentleman. When I read that article, I wrote the following letter to the Minister of the Interior:—

"GANANOQUE 14th January, 1886.

"MY DEAR SIR,—Please let me know what applications I have made for either coal lands or timber limits in Manitoba or the North-West, if any either since or before June, 1882, and if any were allotted to me, and on what terms, and oblige,

"Yours faithfully,
"GEO. TAYLOR.

"Hon. T. WHITE, Esq., Minister of the Interior."

To which I received the following reply:—

"OTTAWA, 19th January, 1886.

"MY DEAR TAYLOR,—I have your note of the 14th asking what applications you had made to the Department for either coal or timber lands. I handed it to Mr. Ryley, the clerk who has charge of these matters, and I send you herewith his memorandum.

"Yours truly,
"THOS. WHITE."

"GEORGE TAYLOR, Esq. M.P.,
"Gananoque, Ont."

(Memo.)

"DEPATMENT OF THE INTERIOR, DOMINION LANDS OFFICE,
"OTTAWA, 15th January, 1886.

"There is no record in this Department of an application having been received from Mr George Taylor, of Gananoque, for either coal or timbered lands in Manitoba or the North-West Territories.

"There is, however, a letter from him dated the 3rd October, 1883, in which he states that a friend asked him to enquire upon what terms the Department would grant a certain timber limit in the Pasquia Hills. In reply to which letter he was sent a copy of the regulations governing disposal of timber in Manitoba and the North-West Territories. No further correspondence upon the subject referred to in that letter.

"Respectfully submitted,
"G. U. RYLEY."

I may say that the friend referred to in that letter was a gentleman by the name of Mr. Henry Ruttle, who removed from my county to the Prince Albert country, and wrote me to know if he could secure timber land, as he was erecting a flour and sawmill in that section. I sent the letter to the Department and received the answer I have given. This wholly proves my statement that the charge preferred against me by that gentleman is a wilful falsehood. If the party who made this statement is the party who represents West Huron I must express my regret that a gentleman aspiring to the position of a statesman should stoop so low as to go round the country slandering those who honestly differ with him on political questions. I will just keep the House for a few minutes, while I show how this hon. gentleman stands in his dealings with the Department with reference to lands in the North-West. Here is a letter written from Winnipeg which throws some light on that point:

"WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, 14th July, 1882.

"LINDSAY RUSSELL, Esq., Department of the Interior, Ottawa.

"DEAR SIR,—We beg to enclose you a list of some lands lately purchased by us through a Mr. Gray, from Sir Richard Cartwright and from Mr. Cameron, the payments for which have been fully made to the Government. We should look upon it as a very great favor if you would very kindly give instructions for the issue of these patents with as little delay as possible.

"Very truly yours,
(Signed) "BOYLE, CAMPBELL & CO."

I have the following detailed statement which I will read to the House:—

Making a total of 13,920 acres, equal to twenty-one and three-quarter sections. Now, these do not include the lands to which the hon. gentleman referred a few moments ago as having been purchased from some son of some Lieutenant Governor, as that does not appear on this list. These are applications that no doubt were put in in the names of this hon. gentleman's sons, his daughters, his aunts his uncles, his employés, and his wife, and the patents were issued to himself. If any hon. gentleman on this side of the House could be charged with anything approaching that, I am sure he could honestly be called a land grabber. I would like to ask when these lands were bargained for, when the arrangements were made for securing them? Was it not when the hon. gentleman's friends were in power; and had they not been turned out of power when they were, no doubt the hon. gentleman's friends would have gobbled up the great share of the North-West, according to what we see here. This hon. gentleman not only makes a false charge that I was an applicant; he goes further and makes other charges. He says I am the bond slave of the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald. All I can say in reference to that is, that I have 277 good reasons for supporting that hon. gentleman. I have the honor to represent South Leeds, a constituency containing a population of 25,000, who are as healthy, as wealthy, as honest, and far more intelligent than the electors that the hon. gentleman has the honor to represent. Those people sent me here by a majority of 277 to support the present Government. I said that the electors of South Leeds were more intelligent than those the hon. gentleman represents, and I think I am justified in saying that, from the fact that I support the present Government and was sent here for that purpose, while the hon. gentleman who made the charge against me has nothing else to do but prefer charges against every hon. gentleman in this House The Government he calls hangmen, and charges them with everything that is corrupt, and I think the electors of South Leeds showed they were much more intelligent people than the electors of West Huron. This hon. gentleman is not satisfied with abusing the country, with abusing the institutions of the country, and the representative men of the country, but he singles out the country into locality, and has a pick at a locality. He singles out Gananoque and calls it a small country village. All I can say in reference to Gananoque is that it is not an incorporated town like the town of Goderich, but it contains a population about equal to the town of Goderich, and is of far more importance to this country than the town the hon. gentleman hails from, as I will show before I get through. By the Trade and Navigation Returns of 1884, there was collected in Customs duty at this country village, $15,505.04, while at the town of Goderich there was collected $6,256.81 or $2.50 in Customs duties at Gananoque for every dollar collected at Goderich; while it costs, according to the Public Accounts for that year, to collect that $15,505 the sum of $900, and at Goderich it costs $1,700 to collect $6,256. I find further that for the last three years the exports from Gananoque were $295,751, and from Goderich $214,204; the imports to Gananoque were $364,201, and to Goderich $157,604; there was entered for consumption in Gananoque $363,936, and in Goderich $104,849; the duty collected at Gananoque in the last three years amounted to $43,106.70, and at Goderich to $14,322.56.

Mr. BECHARD. I think the hon. gentleman should confine himself to the question before the House, at this hour in the morning, nearly two o'clock.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman who spoke before wandered from Dan to Beersheba, and made a charge against me. If the Speaker rules against me, I will ask some friend to move the adjournment of the debate. I am going to clear up these charges if it takes till midsummer. I find by another return that, during the last fiscal year, there were entered at the Custom house of this country village of Gananoque, 628 steamers and 124 sailing vessels, making a total of 752.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman is going very far from the question.

Mr. TAYLOR. I just intended to say that 136 vessels entered the port of Goderich in the same time, on which port, while the hon. gentleman's friends were in power, they spent half a million of money, I presume in purchasing his support, and making him the bond slave of the hon. member for East York. Now, this hon. gentleman said that he made no statement that he could not establish. I charge him with having made this statement at Wingham, that he has not and cannot establish. The speech of the Minister of the Interior is, to my mind, unanswerable, and proves conclusively how well this Government has guarded the interests of our great domain as compared with the régime of hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. gentleman said that no public man should make a statement which he could not corroborate. I presume that the thirty-nine other thieves whom he arraigned with me in Wingham, have just as good a case as I have. I am not going to fight their battles, but I want to repudiate the foul slander on my own behalf. A Grit lawyer was in my town on Saturday from near this locality, and repeated the charge made against me in the speech of M. C. Cameron, and I now take this opportunity of throwing that slander back into the teeth of that hon. gentleman, and I challenge him to prove it.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I desire to say a few words before the close of this debate, on the subject of scandals generally, and on this one in particular. I am not interested in any timber limits, I did not apply for any for myself, nor for anybody else, and I do not think that anybody else applied for timber limits for me. I believe that applications were made by honest persons for timber limits for themselves, and I also believe that honest people applied for timber limits for others. I do not think there is any great scandal in such a transaction. I observe that the Opposition has at last discovered a policy; they have at last conceived the idea of floating into power on scandals. I find that although I have no interest in land grants or coal areas, Grit writers in the Lower Provinces fancy that they have obtained a little scandal against me and two other gentlemen from Cape Breton. Notices of motion have been put on the paper for the purpose of giving food to our political opponents for digestion during the recess, although it is utterly impossible to reach them this Session. I find one notice placed upon the paper by the leader of the Opposition in reference to two hon. gentlemen from Cape Breton, in reference to which the Pictou News, a good Grit paper, on the 30th May last, says:

"The Ottawa representatives from the Island of Cape Breton appear to be distinguishing themselves at the capital. Messrs Dodd and McDougall have been arraigned before the House charged with threatening an elector at the last election in Cape Breton county, with dismissal from the position of pilot if he voted against Mr. McDougall, and with afterwards inducing the Government to effect such dismissal."

There is no truth in the allegation that the pilot was dismissed from office; there is no truth in the allegation that he lost anything by having been placed on the new board. I find also that reference has been made to the member for Richmond (Mr. Paint), in a most scandalous manner. I find also that my own name has been used by this Grit sheet in the following language:—

"Dr. Cameron, of Inverness, has been court-martialled before the House and one of the committees, for getting bogus reports of his speeches in Parliament issued through the means of the Hansard reporters."

It is not enough for them to slander myself, but they had to slander the Hansard reporters, with a view of making a case against the Government. I find, also, that use has been made of another notice of motion given by the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk).

Mr. CHARLTON. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is not referring to the question under discussion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I ask your ruling on that point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understood the hon. gentleman to be speaking about the dismissal of some persons from the pilotage board.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Yes, but I will come to the timber limits.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the motion before the Chair is in reference to members of Parliament receiving favors from the Executive. I do not think the hon. gentleman should discuss the question of the dismissal of any member from the pilotage board.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I submit with pleasure to the ruling of the Chair, and I shall therefore confine myself as closely as possible to timber limits. At this early hour in the morning I presume there are some other hon. members who desire to speak on the subject, and I will conclude by referring to an idea which I gather from a contribution to a contemporary periodical, which happily hits off the modern Grit, who imagines that the times are out of joint, and that his mission is to set them right. This has particular reference to the timber limits in the North-West and to coal areas, which were not all disposed off in the interest of the Conservative party but of which all may obtain a slice. The writer says:

"We feel thankful that the Sun and Moon
Are set so very high,
That no presuming hand can reach
To pluck them from the sky.
For were they not, there is no doubt,
That some Reforming ass,
Would soon propose to snuff them out,
And light the world with gas."

If they fail to illuminate this Dominion with scandalising gas I fail to see that any other politicians, past, present or future, can realise the attainment of the power. Yet I apprehend that our masters throughout the Dominion, the electors who have sent us here, begin to realise the fact that there is too little reality and too much gas about all this scandal which is submitted to the consideration of Parliament by the Opposition in this House.

Mr. HESSON. I will not occupy more than a short period of time, and I think I may be pardoned for doing so, as I have been frequently referred to in this connection in this debate, as well as on a former occasion, during my absence, when the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) then, as now, undertook to lecture hon. members as to what their duty was to the country and to this House. The hon. gentleman did not attempt to make charges against me. I defy him to make any charge on account of which I should hang down my head or apologise either to my constituents or to the House. The hon. gentleman has been very assiduous in endeavoring, if possible, to eliminate from the voluminous returns called for by him, at an enormous cost to the country—one return covering something like 20,000 pages—such information as he hoped would damage the character of hon. members in this House. He calls himself an honorable man, probably he is; and probably he may have a right in his own judgment to use that term; but I do not think his talents are so well directed as they might be when they are directed simply to endeavoring, if possible, by hook or crook, by any method, to bring forward statements in this House and place them before the country, as being evidence sufficient to convict hon. members elected here by the independent electors to represent their views and act for them, of transactions which will damage their character. The hon. gentleman's record may be clean—I hope it is clean. With respect to timber limits, I am not in a position to trace him. He has carried on his work outside this country; he has gone elsewhere, with his labor and his money, to develop another country than his own. That may possibly be right in his view, because I think his connection with that country in the past, would lead the House to believe that he was more interested in that country than in this. He has taken, as I have said, his great energy, industry and wealth outside this country to develop another, and he has gone into timber limit speculations elsewhere, and it is not our privilege to follow him there, as we might possibly do if we possessed the same facilities he has to reach files of documents. I say that in all the communications I have had with the Department of the Interior, there is not one document that I would have the slightest hesitation in having spread on the Table of this House as being of such a character as not to be a proper and fair one from a member representing a constituency of some 25,000 or 30,000 people. It is my duty, as the representative of my county, to facilitate in every possible way the interests of my constituents, and the Government policy is of that character to be open and free to all who may take an interest in helping to develop the great North-West—and that is the object they have mainly in view, for it is not that they might benefit individual gentlemen—and they had a great public duty to discharge in developing the new territory which had been lying for centuries a perfect wilderness and would have been allowed to lie for more centuries if its development had rested with hon. gentlemen opposite. What is the evidence presented to this House, that with the single exception of the two gentlemen whose names have been mentioned, who have taken some interest in the country, who have made some wealth in it—and I congratulate them upon it—the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) and the hon. member for Centre Huron (Sir Richard Cartwright); these two gentleman have been successful; they have invested largely, they took an interest in the country, and they went into that market and made their purchases. But when the hon. member for West Huron, represening as he does a constituency himself, rises in his place time after time and endeavors to damage the character of men who are just as respectable and intelligent as himself, while he claims the privilege of associating with gentlemen on the floor of this House, when the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) read a lis , which if he had been in the House ought to have caused him to hold his head down and blush, —I say that it is out of place for that hon. gentleman and he should be the last man to make these charges against those who stand equally as respectable as he does, who have simply written a few letters on behalf of constituents who are asking for that which they have a perfect right to obtain, under the law of the land. With regard to myself, I may say that I have no favors to ask of them; it requires no favor from them to make me a Conservative or a supporters of the Government. I am a Conservative by birth, education and instinct. I am a Conservative because I believe that the policy of the Conservative party is the best for this country, and if any requests I have made had been refused I would still be a Conservative and support the Government in their policy. He contended that hon. gentlemen are influenced in this House simply, because they are taking the Government at its word, simply because the Government have been placed in circumstances in which they have been called upon to open up that great territory and assist in developing the country; simply because we have assisted others to go there and invest their money, as I have done myself in some town speculations that have not turned out well and, as has been stated by the Minister of the Interior, in almost every one of those cases the Government have received large sums of money into the Treasury from the Conservative party because hon. gentlemen opposite repudiated having done anything in that country by either taking advantage of the Government regulations or attempting anything or doing anything in that country. The policy of gentlemen opposite has not been to direct their energies to the development of the country but to devote their energies in that direction to countries other than their own. Yet we are charged with plundering the country, simply because we have asked on behalf of our constituents that they shall receive such terms and conditions as the Government are by law prepared to give to other individuals. I might go into the history of some of these transactions with which my name has been identified as having made applications for timber limits in that country. I have not been connected with grazing lands, though I have been requested by respectable gentlemen on the other side to enter into such speculations—these gentlemen endeavoring to induce me to take an interest in them because, I suppose, they thought they could trap me into it, and it would be a sort of salvage for them to be able to say the hon. member for North Perth should be interested in these transactions. My hands, I say, are free, and I have no transaction to the extent of a single dollar with them, either in the North-West or elsewhere, and I am determined that I shall not have any. My letters on behalf of my son-in-law, a lawyer practising in the city of Toronto, have been referred to. He, I presume, represented some other gentleman there. He made application on one occasion for six or seven townships for colonisation purposes on the terms that the Government were offering. He did that on behalf of the Commercial Travellers Association, of which he was solicitor. He had already in this House obtained an Act of Parliament incorporating them. They had a large surplus which they wished to invest during the time of the boom, and they thought they could make a good investment in the North-West, and they proposed to take up certain tracts of land for the purpose of colonisation. When they investigated the Government conditions, they found them too severe, and they would not take the Government grant. They went to Montreal and they made arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway and bought land in the neighborhood of Regina—some eight or ten townships—and they paid cash and had no transactions with the Government at all. They considered the Government terms too straight and they took no investment in them. I considered the same and I took no steps in that direction. I want to say one or two words about another matter. The hon. member for Simcoe has been charged with having had a timber limit granted to him on a certain occasion. Now I happen to know something about that timber limit, not that I was interested in it, but some of my constituents were, and the hon. gentleman will not deny that an Order in Council was passed and that he had the privilege, as the last dying kick of that party, to have that 200 square miles so granted to him as a timber limit, and he had three years to make the selection throughout the country in tracts of 20 square miles—a little here or there as it was best. I wish to explain what I know about the matter of the interest and the credit of the Conservative party which came in power in 1878. Two gentlemen, constituents of my own, who resided in the same town, one now dead, were met by the hon. gentleman, and were told that he could not get this grant confirmed by this Government and get the license required. He knew that he occupied such a position that he could not possibly do that, but he had no hesitation in making terms with these two gentlemen, one of them Mr. Daly, now dead, and the other Mr. Jarvis, and they came here and spent about a whole week endeavoring to impress the Government, and to the credit of the Conservative party and the Government they refused and cancelled the order, although these two gentlemen would have received large advantages from this hon. gentleman, who proposed to erect a mill and give them a liberal interest in it. So much for the hon. member for Simcoe in connection with this matter. I do not wish to take up the time of the House with any further reference to these matters. There is much that could be said with reference to the hon. member for West Huron, who has made his attacks on hon. members on this side and upon their characters. I think it comes with a very bad grace from that gentleman, above all others on that side, that he should attack the reputation of hon. gentlemen on this side, who stand as well here and as well before the electorate of Canada as the hon. gentleman himself does. It is well known that the hon. gentleman found his way into this House by ways that are dark and ways that are devious.

Mr. COOK. I am going to remain here. I have been here a long time.

Mr. HESSON. I was referring to the hon. member for West Huron, although it seems that the boot fits the foot of the hon. member for Simcoe. Now, I would just say that I am not in the slightest degree influenced in my support of the Government by any favors that I have ever received by the Government party. If it should come to that, that my constituents required me to support the policy of the Opposition at any time, I will resign my seat not only in this House, but in the country itself, because I could not follow or work with such a party having such a policy, if they have a policy at all. Now, I wish to illustrate the position the hon. gentleman places some of his own friends in by the course he is pursuing to-night. The Halifax Chronicle, a strong supporter of the party opposite, contains this despatch, sent by some person in Ottawa:

"OTTAWA, Ont., 26th April. Col. Ray and Messrs. Forbes, Kirk, Robertson and McIntyre, members of the House of Commons, have addressed a petition to the Minister of Railways asking that a subsidy of $3,200 a mile, granted two years ago by the Dominion Parliament, towards the completion of the railway from Annapolis to Digby be renewed and increased to $6,400 per mile. Col. Ray had an interview with the Minister on the matter a few days ago, and it is probable that the prayer of the petition will be complied with."

Now, hon. gentlemen opposite have friends who have been hawking around this petition—I myself had some knowledge of it—requesting the Government to grant this subsidy. We are not going to say that this is going to influence the action of these gentlemen; that it is going to purchase or bribe them; it may be too small a sum to purchase their support permanently for the Government; but their signatures to that petition will secure their votes for aid to this railway, so that on that question at all events their votes will be influenced. Now, what is the difference between receiving such aid from the Government as a cash subsidy and having an interest in some timber limit or some cattle or grazing lands, on the conditions which are open to everybody. Are these gentlemen who support the grant to this railway going to be forever damaged in their reputations on that account? I leave it to hon. gentlemen opposite to say; I do not say that hon. gentlemen opposite will be influenced in that direction; but as the hon. member for West Huron has pointed out in two cases of gentlemen who had formerly been strong Reformers becoming supporters of this Government, it simply shows that when the amount is large enough you could buy the whole of the hon. gentlemen on the same terms.

Mr. LISTER. I shall ask the indulgence of the House for a very few moments. I intended to speak earlier, but hon. gentlemen seem desirous of putting themselves right before the House and the country, and I have no desire to interfere with their efforts in that respect. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) took considerable time o show that the hon. member for West Huron had become a purchaser of certain lands in the Province of Manitoba. Now, I do not know that any person ever thought it was a crime in a member of this House or anybody else to buy lands from the Government in the usual course, or to buy them from third parties. So far as I was able to make out, the list the hon. gentleman read proved, if it proved anything, that the lands mentioned in that list were purchased from some third parties. Be that as it may, there is no law in this country to prevent him from buying from the Government or from anyone else and paying his money, and there can be no wrong doing about it. The complaint made by the hon. member for West Huron is that the members of this House have used their positions as supporters of the Government to get for their friends and associates advantages from the Government that the outside public have not been able to get. It is a remarkable fact that in the instances given by the Minister of the Interior, he could only point out three Reformers among all the hundreds who applied for colonisation lands. It is extraordinary that in the election of 1882, in almost every county of Ontario, leading supporters of the Government gave it to be understood that they had some unusually rich thing on hand; and it is remarkable that in my own county, and in some other counties I know of, leading Reformers were seduced by some of these colonisation companies into a partial desertion of the party with which they had been allied before. But I say that that is not the effect. The charge is that members of this House have used their influence with the Government to advance their own interests; and I care not whether they were successful or not in making money out of those lands, the crime, if it be a crime, was the same. When they applied for those lands, they did so with the expectation that they were going to make enormous fortunes; and if their expectations have not been fulfilled, it is the fault of fortune and not theirs. A great deal has been said to my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Cook) by hon. gentlemen opposite. The Minister of the Interior did not think it beneath the dignity of his position to attack the hon. member who has not spoken in this debate, in an unmanly, cowardly way about some transaction that occurred in the past—something about a timber limit granted to him by Mr. Mackenzie previous to his going out of office. Hon. gentlemen opposite are always ready to have their nick at my hon. friend; they are always ready to charge him with having been peculiarly favored in being allowed to select timber limits where he thought proper, in quantities of not less than 20 miles; but I can tell the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) that the hon. gentleman whom he now follows with such ostentatious zeal granted, previous to going out of office in 1873, licenses to people to cut timber in the North-West Territories, allowing them to select their grants in areas as small as three square miles; and Mr. Mackenzie, in granting to my hon. friend the limit spoken of, only did what the hon. gentleman who had preceded him had done, and what hon. gentlemen opposite now claim Mr. Mackenzie was wrong in doing. I am not here to justify my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie) or his Government, but I must say, in simple justice to my hon. friend and his Administration, that hon. gentlemen opposite have no right to make such a charge. Under the Administration of these hon. gentlemen, in 1882, lawyers, doctors, shoemakers, tailors, every other thing but lumber merchants, were found applying to the Government for timber limits. How was it lumbermen became so numerous in this House and throughout the country? Not one per cent. of the applicants for limits knew anything about saw logs or lumber, with the exception, perhaps, of occasionally purchasing a little for their own use. Why were these men so anxious to get timber limits? Why are hon. gentlemen opposite so anxious to secure limits through their influence with the Government? It is plain, members of this House not interested in timber limits themselves, hope, by the influence they can exercise on the Government, to secure a power and support they had not before. Men who are getting these limits believe that the acquisition of one means untold wealth to those who hold it. I am not here to speak as to the quantity of timber limits granted, bad though that system is, but to speak of the manner in which the Government has used its power for the purpose of keeping itself in office. The Government has granted with a lavish hand the timber limits of this country, which we ought to husband for those who are to come after us; it has granted our lands with a lavish hand; it has given away recklessly coal lands, the fuel that ought to be preserved for ourselves and future generations. Not only that, but it has placed its hands in the public Treasury to pay out money to one of the greatest monopolies in the North-West, Sir A T. Galt's coal monopoly. Bad as those things are, calculated as they are to destroy the independence of Parliament, these are not the only actions for which the Government must be held responsible. So far as the railway policy is concerned, it has been infinitely worse. Hon. members opposite are directly interested in millions of dollars granted by this Government for the purpose of promoting railways in which they themselves are interested. The disclosure made yesterday in reference to a railway under discussion must have shocked any person who heard them. We had letters produced here in which the hon. member for West Toronto is called "the boy," and in which it is stated he was looking for $640,000 for himself. We have another "boy," according to all rumors, in a gentleman who sits in this House, the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). On turning up the reports, I find that he is one of the corporators of the Northern and Pacific Junction Railway. I find that that road was bonused, while the hon. gentleman was a member of this House; I find that he, a corporator of that company, was an applicant to the Government to grant the road $12,000 per mile, the first grant being $6,000, and that being supplemented by another of $6,000 per mile. I find the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) was interested in shares of the stock of that railway company, I believe, of the majority of the stock. The Hon. Frank Smith, Senator, the Hon. James Turner, Senator, and Mr. Dalton McCarthy, member for North Simcoe, are upon the list of shareholders of that company. The Hon. Frank Smith, the Hon James Turner, Mr. McCarthy and Mr. John Stewart, appeared to hold shares to the extent of 1,820 out of 2,000, so that the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and his friends controlled entirely the Northern Pacific Junction Railway, and the hon. gentleman not only controls the stock of that road, but he is sitting in this House to-day as a member and as the president of the railway which has been bonused to this enormous extent. And, if I am correctly informed, there has never been a cent put into the road, except the bonuses granted by this Government. I believe it is a fact that the directors of the company are attempting to sell the bonds of the road, having authority, I believe, to bond it to the extent of $25,000 a mile. I am informed that the bonds, when sold, added to the bonus given by this Government, will more than pay for the construction of the road. I am told, whether correctly or not, that there was $100,000 in that road for the promoters. I would ask that hon. gentleman, if the rumor is true, which is circulated throughout the country, that he and his associates will make at least $500,000 out of the road. That is the statement made. It may not be impossible in the opinion of the hon. gentleman, but I say it is impossible to believe that an hon. gentleman occupying the position he does in this House can be otherwise than under the influence of the Government, under such circumstances. I find that the International Railway Company has upon its stock list the Hon. E. T. Brooks, the Hon. John Henry Pope, Minister of Railways, the Hon. M.H. Cochrane and my hon. friend (Mr. Ives). These gentlemen are the stockholders of this road. I find that another road, bonused to a very considerable extent, and in which Mr. Pope is interested, received at one time $175,000 of the people's money. I say it is a position which no man in this country ought to occupy, that the Minister of Railways, a member of the Government, charged with the care, to a certain extent, of the moneys of the people, a member of this House should vote to himself and the road he is directly interested in $175,000 of the people's money. Another hon. gentleman, his son-in-law, Mr. Ives sits in this House also and he no doubt participates, because he is a stockholder in the road and shares in the profits which, no doubt, must be paid from that railway. I find that the road has been further bonused to the extent of $2,550,000 for the construction of a road from Montreal to the road in which Mr. Pope is interested, and which will form a link of the new road. I say it is a disgrace to this country that a Minister of Railways, owning the International Road, which he had owned for nine or ten years, which this country owed nothing to, should come to this House and ask this Parliament to give him the enormous sum of $146,000 for placing iron upon the road owned by him and built years before, and which there was no reason in the wide world for assisting by bonus or by anything else. I find these two gentlemen are stockholders in that road. They are, as my hon. friend from Huron said, the head, body and tail of the whole concern. I go further and I find that the Pontiac and Pacific Junction Railway from Aylmer to Pembroke was bonused to the extent of $270,000. This road is owned by the Secretary of State. He is a stockholder and the real owner of the road, and it is owned by Senator Ogilvie and the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White). These are the stockholders in the road. Does anyone tell me that, under those circumstances, it is a small thing for three hon. members of this House, one of them a Minister of the Crown, to come to Parliament and ask this Parliament to give them $270,000. It is a monstrous and disgraceful thing that any member of Parliament should be a corporator in a railway seeking aid from this Government. I can understand hon. gentlemen assisting and promoting a railway passing through their county as far as they can, but they have no right to become corporators, and they have no right to place themselves in the position of receiving a direct benefit from the moneys which may be granted by the Government. I find the Gatineau Railway Company was bonused to the extent of $160,000, and I find that the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Mackintosh), the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Bryson), and Mr. Alonzo Wright are the stockholders of that company. Of course these hon. gentleman are perfectly independent. Of course they will condemn the Government when it is wrong, just as if they had never got a bonus for their road. The Montreal and Western Railway was bonused to the extent of $160,000; and, again, I find the Hon. Mr. Chapleau, Mr. J. J. C. Abbott and Mr. Joseph Tassé, member for Ottawa, are the corporators of that company. The Secretary of State and two members of Parliament are the corporators in that company, which has upon the Statute-book the right to draw $160,000 of the money of the people of this country. I find again that the Miramichi Railway is entitled to a bonus of $128,000 voted by this Government, and that Mr. Temple, the member for York, is deeply interested in that railway.

Mr. TEMPLE. I beg your pardon; I am not interested in any shape or form in that railway, not in the slightest.

Mr. LISTER. If the hon. gentleman says he is not interested in the road, of course I gladly take the word of the hon. gentleman, but, as far as my investigation has gone,

I had such facts as satisfied me, until the hon. gentleman made the statement now, that he was interested in the road. The St. Louis and Richibucto Road was bonused to the extent of $22,400, and I find that the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Landry) is a stockholder in that road. It is a little road six miles long running through the county of Kent in the village of St. Louis, and is bonused as well by the Local Government. The hon. gentleman's name appears upon the stock list as a stockholder to the extent of $2,000. There is also the Hopewell and Alma Railway, which had a bonus of $51,200. That is a short local road, and it was secured I believe by the member for Albert (Mr. Wallace.) I am unable to say whether he is a stockholder in that road or a corporator.

Mr. WALLACE. I am not a corporator or a stockholder.

Mr. LISTER. The Caraquet Railway——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take that back.

Mr. LISTER. I said I did not know whether he had any interest in it or not.

Mr. FARROW. What is the question before the House?

Mr. SPEAKER. It is quite in order. It is about the resources dealt with by Parliament or by the Executive.

Mr. LISTER. I find the Caraquet Railway in New Brunswick was bonused to the extent of $176,000. From all the information that I have been able to get, it is a purely local road, and it was a road built by the hon. member for Gloucester, (Mr. Burns). The member for Gloucester, a member of this House, is the whole company with the exception of giving stock sufficient to other directors to qualify them upon the board. That hon. member for Gloucester pocketed $176,000 of the money of the people of this country. Of course that gentleman is an independent man, of course that gentleman is free of the Government. And he is conductor of the road as well.

Mr. BOWELL. Is he the fireman too?

Mr. LISTER. It cannot be charged that he can be influenced in the support he gives to this Government. I find the road from Metapedia was also bonused to the extent of $300,000 and that this road runs through the county of Bonaventure and benefits Mr. Riopel and Mr. McGreevy, the member for Quebec. I find that another road, the Erie and Huron Road, was bonused to the extent of $96,000. I am informed that a member of this House received and charged for getting the bonus from the Government 10 per cent upon the amount so received.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name.

Mr. LISTER. Perhaps it would not be as well.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name.

Mr. LISTER. The Ontario and Pacific——

Mr. HAGGART. I ask that the words of the hon. member be taken down.

Mr. LISTER. The Ontario and Pacific Railway——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. What is the question?

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. member stated that a member of this House had received 10 per cent.——

Mr. LISTER. No.

Mr. HAGGART—of the amount of money given to that road.

Mr. LISTER. I said nothing of the kind. What I said was this. I said I was informed that an hon. member of this House had agreed he should receive 10 per cent. upon the bonds received.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is a very serious charge to make against any member.

Mr. BOWELL. Let the official reporter state the words.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is a very serious charge made against any member of the House, and, if the name is asked for, I think some definite charge should be made, because it is a statement against every member until the member is named. I hope the hon. gentleman will withdraw the statement.

Mr. LISTER. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the statement in the meantime.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. LISTER Hon. gentlemen will probably have an opportunity to laugh another way. Very well, I withdraw the statement in the meantime, in deference to the Speaker I find, Sir, that the Ontario and Pacific Railway, running through Cornwall to Perth, has been bonused to the extent of $262,400, and that the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) and the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White) are stockholders in that company. Yet these hon. gentlemen think that it is quite consistent with their position as members of Parliament.

Mr. BERGIN. Allow me to correct the hon. gentleman. As far as I am myself concerned, it is all right; but so far as the hon. member for North Renfrew is concerned, it is a pity that a Grit should be charged with anything so abominable as being director of a railway company.

Mr. LISTER. I mean Mr. White, as the member for Renfrew. I find, Sir, that in 1885, this Parliament granted to the Ottawa, Waddington and Northern Transportation Railway $166,000, and that the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White), the hon. members for Ottawa (Mr. Tassé and Mr. Mackintosh), are stockholders in the company. I find that the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island Railway Company, which runs through the county of Westmoreland, represented in this House by the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood), was bonused to the extent of $118,400. I find that the Montreal and Champlain Railway was bonused to the extent of $300,000, and that the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Montplaisir). is a stockholder, I believe, in that road. I find the Long Sault Railway was bonused to the extent of $25,600, and the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Bryson) is a stockholder in that road. I find that the Gatineau Railway Company has been incorporated by this House, and that the hon. member for Ottawa County (Mr. Wright), and the two hon. members for Ottawa city, and the hon. member for Pontiac, are stockholders.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. Did I understand the hon. member to state that the Ottawa and Gatineau Railway Company was incorporated by charter from this Parliament?

Mr. LISTER. I did not say it was incorporated by a charter from this Parliament; I said it was bonused by this Parliament, and I think to the extent of $300,000.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I misunderstood t hon. gentleman.

Mr. LISTER. Well, is that right?

Mr. MACKINTOSH. It is your business to find out.

Mr. LISTER. I find that the Rivière du Loup and Edmundston Railway is bonused to the extent of $498,000, and I am informed that the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Grandbois) and the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, are stockholders. The Stellarton Railway to Pictou has been bonused by this Parliament to a very considerable extent, and the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) is, I am informed, one of the stockholders of this road or, at all events, a promoter of it. We also find that the railway we were speaking about yesterday, has for one of its directors the hon. member for Pictou, along with the hon. gentleman for West Toronto. Now, Sir, I have only taken the returns for the past two years, and with the exception of the last mentioned railway, I have confined myself to the Provinces of Quebec, Ontario and the Lower Provinces, and I find, according to the records, that a large number of the members of this House are not only corporators, but stockholders in roads which have been largely bonused by the people of this country. I have observed, yesterday and to-day, that hon. gentlemen readily jump up and deny that they have any interest in these matters, and some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are frank enough to admit that this state of things which have been going on in the past, should be put an end to. Sir, if it is wrong, as has been stated in this House, to receive a trifling sum of money under a contract, it is infinitely a greater violation of the Independence of Parliament Act, that hon. gentlemen should hold seats in this House while they receive benefits from the Government by being interested in railways bonused by this Government. Hon. gentlemen evade the independence of Parliament Act by having their businesses made into joint-stock concerns, such as the Montreal Gazette, and other concerns, as otherwise they would not have a right to sit here. If that Act is not sufficiently broad to take in these cases, then it should be amended. I say it is a disgrace to this country. There is not another Legislature in the world, not excepting Central and South America, where members of the Legislature can be charged with being so directly under the influence of the Government as can be charged against members sitting in this House. Corrupt as we are in the habit of calling the United States, I say that if hon. gentlemen occupied similar positions in the State Legislatures to the position they occupy here, public opinion would soon drive them from public life. Sir, I think the time is coming rapidly when the people of Canada will, in unmistakable language, say that this sort of things must be stopped, and they will say to the hon. gentlemen in this House who have been guilty of trafficking in railways, of benefiting from bonuses granted to railways, that they can no longer hold seats in this House, that they must give up the one position or the other. I say it is not safe, under these circumstances, for the people to allow such men to represent them. If a man wants to invest in railways, and wants to make a rapid fortune, let him resign his position in this House, or not come here at all. We cannot condemn this thing too strongly; and I believe that unless the people awaken to a sense of what is proper and right, there is danger in the future. I would say with the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), that we are fast drifting into a state of despotism. We all know what history has told us, that before despotism is born, corruption has to wipe out the institutions of the people, and we are fast drifting into that condition to-day, when men will be found to justify almost any act of corruption in this House. All hon. gentlemen admit this is not right, yet are they prepared to support legislation to prevent it in future? If they are, it is the duty of the Government to bring in such legislation as will forever prevent any hon. member holding a seat in this House who receives from the Government any direct or indirect advantages, further than the pay he is entitled to draw as a member of this House.

Mr. FOSTER. I call the attention of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat to what I am sure was an unintentional omission. In his list of martyrology which he has held up to us, I am afraid he has forgotten to include among those guilty of such infamous and unworthy acts, two hon. gentlemen who sit on his own side of the House. I think, if I mistake not, $128,000 have been voted to the Central Railway which run through a portion of Queen's and King's counties, and if I mistake not, two of the hon. gentlemen who are trusted by my hon. friend who has just sat down, the member for Queen's and the member for Sunbury, have been guilty of the infamous conduct of being directors of that road.

Mr. LANDRY (Kent). I will not impose a speech on the House, but as my name has been mentioned in connection with railways in New Brunswick I desire to offer a few words of explanation. If the hon. gentleman who a few moments ago made such a violent speech is as far astray in regard to the other names he has used in his conclusions—not in the fact of my being a stockholder—as he has with respect to myself, his speech will not be worth much where those gentlemen are known. So far as I am concerned, whatever effect it may have in Ontario, whatever prejudice it may arouse against me where I am not known, where the enterprise is not known, and the circumstances are not known, I cannot avoid. It may be that with the hon. gentleman's loud voice and violent denunciation of members where I am not known, prejudice may serve him in running an election. But in the county I represent, and where this enterprise is known, I do not fear his criticism, and he may send down his speech by bushels if he desires. The St. Louis Branch is a branch of railway that runs entirely through the county I represent. The company was incorporated, not by charter granted by this House but by a charter of the Legislature of New Brunswick. In that county as in other parts of New Brunswick it is not an easy matter to build a railway, and find a sufficient number of stockholders to interest themselves in the undertaking by taking stock and making themselves liable for payments on it without expecting to ever receive a cent on the road. And therefore when this stock list was opened my friends and those who were anxious to see the road built came and asked me to take stock for the purpose of encouraging the undertaking. I did so without expecting to obtain the return of a single cent. I never became a director and never handled a cent directly or indirectly; no money has passed through my hands down to the present time, and I never expect to get a cent. I became a stockholder either just before I became a member of Parliament or immediately I had been elected, and the people thought that, as representative of the county I could more efficiently serve them and give the enterprise more support by having my name on the stock list—not support in this House, but at home—as the representative of the county than otherwise, and I could not very well refuse in view of the law which did not prevent members of Parliament becoming stockholders. But since the discussion took place before the Railway Committee, and objections have been taken, I have thought it better to withdraw entirely from the road; and I have done so. I have written to the board of directors, asking them to have my name struck off the stock list and my stock cancelled so far as I am concerned. I have written the president, among other things, as follows:—

"I do this in view of the discussion had here on the general subject and to silence adverse criticism. As you know I never benefited in a pecuniary way by being a stockholder, nor did I ever expect to; yet I desire to wipe out even the suspicion of my being pecuniarily interested while a member of Parliament. The branch will still have my best wishes and my best efforts for its success."

I repeat that I never made one cent out of the railway, I never handled any money, I never knew anything particular about it beyond the fact that the directors had entered into a contract for building the road by which they gave all the bonuses, both local and federal, to the contractors, and that I do not expect to ever receive one cent. That is about the way I have been influenced by my connection with this railway. If other hon. members are similarly situated all I can say is that the charges made will not affect them very much where they are known.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I do not, of course, desire to detain the House, but in view of the charges made against hon. members, some withdrawn so soon as questioned, I think it due to myself and due to the constituency I represent to offer a few remarks regarding the insinuations, if not charges, made against me. This discussion commenced on the subject of timber limits; it has gradually drifted into a question of railway subsidies, a question fully discussed yesterday and just as fully discussed to-night. My friend, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) proceeded, without investigating the subject, without giving notice to those he intended to charge with high crimes and misdemeanors—although I do not believe any hon. gentleman has been guilty of those crimes and misdemeanors—without any notice whatever to charge me with having, as a member of Parliament, degraded Parliament by personal application to the Government of a party which I have supported since 1867—benefited by my position as a supporter of the Government by securing a grant of timber limits.

Mr. CHARLTON. No.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I can only say that never since I entered Parliament have I made application to the Government for a timber limit or for a colonisation land reserve. In 1882, before I was returned to Parliament, several friends of mine wished to get a timber limit, and they asked me if I could apply and assist them. I did so. Where that timber limit was I have no idea. I simply recommended them, and immediately on being elected to Parliament wrote refusing to have anything to do with the matter. The lease has expired, and I never received a dollar of profit out of it. So far as the colonisation company is concerned, in May, 1882, I was asked by a gentleman named Moore, and two or three others in this city to assist them in getting a grant of land in the Prince Albert district. Shortly after, I was asked to give up any right in favor of the Press Colonisation Company, which I did willingly. I do not remember the numbers of the lots, and almost forget the circumstances, and even what officer of that company it was who asked if I had any objection to giving up our claim. I said I had no desire or interest in preventing it, and that we would surrender it with the greatest pleasure. There is all the profit and the emolument that I received in connection with lands in the North-West prior to entering this Parliament. I never received a dollar from any man since I entered this Parliament or before I entered, for advocating his interests in connection with North-West lands or colonisation companies, or for surrendering any right or claim I had. Now, Sir, my hon. friend for West Wellington has stated in his place that the hon. member for Ottawa County has benefited as a member of Parliament by being a promoter of the Gatineau Railway. This is absolutely wrong. That company was organised under a provincial charter. I was then mayor of the city of Ottawa, and the City Council requested me as mayor to do all I could to advance the interests of that enterprise. At that time I had no idea of entering Parliament: I think it was in the fall of 1881. I did all I possibly could to advance the interests of that enterprise; my late lamented friend Mr. Currier was then the member for the city, and applied to the Government in 1882 for a bonus towards assisting in the building of that road. The Government at that time, and before I entered Parliament, promised through Sir Charles Tupper, then Minister of Railways, to grant a bonus the next Session which was done. So far as the Gatineau Railway is concerned, I have not got a dollar from it; I put my money into it honestly and honorably and have made an offer to those who are interested in it to return the money which I put in the enterprise and that if they did that I would only be too glad to be relieved of it. The people of Ottawa who know me are aware that I have not trafficked in that enterprise, that I have not made money out of it and have never used it for the purpose of benefiting myself, but that I became connected with it when mayor of Ottawa and felt I was in duty bound, in justice to myself and my reputation, and in justice to the city of Ottawa, to take the course which I did, and all the sneers and charges of hon. gentlemen will not deter me from pursuing the strict path which I have marked out for myself. We have heard a good deal on the other side of this House about endeavoring to justify our conduct by referring to what Reformers did in the past. The reason I have always adopted that policy is that hon. gentlemen paraded the country endeavoring to make people believe that of all men they were of the kingdon of heaven, they were of all men most desirous for the independence of Parliament, they were the purest of the pure. Hon. gentlemen know me well enough to be aware that I am perfectly conversant with their record, and I assert that no party ever existed since Confederation, or since responsible government was introduced, who have degraded themselves as hon. gentlemen have, and yet they have the audacity to charge——

Mr. McMULLEN. What about Mr. Whitehead?

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I cannot hear what the hon. gentleman says, but certainly desire him to speak if he wishes.

An hon. MEMBER. He wants to know about Whitehead.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. And perhaps you want to know something about Glasgow where you degraded the name of Canada? I will tell you about that presently. So far as I am concerned with regard to the matter to which my hon. friend for West Wellington has referred, I say that before a commission I have shown that I was agent for Mr. Whitehead when the Reform party were in power, and was the man who advised Mr. Whitehead to save his own credit and stop giving money to assist in the elections of hon. gentlemen on that side of the House. I have the documents to prove, if they desire, my connection with Mr. Whitehead. It is an old, old story, threadbare through age, but all I can say is that I sold the only property I had in Ottawa to pay notes in the banks in Ottawa in connection with that matter, and the hon. gentleman knows that, or else if he does not know it he should not say without being conversant with the facts.

Mr. McMULLEN. What did the judges say about it?

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I am interrupted, but if the hon. gentleman wants to know what the judge said it was this that no proof was adduced to show that I exercised any influence, direct or indirect, in order to get exclusive privileges for Joseph Whitehead. Now, what does the hon. gentleman say? When interrupted, I was proceeding to say that those opposite had, notwithstanding their record, the audacity to charge Conservaties with corruption. As hon. gentlemen contend that we have no right to justify everything we do by references to their action, I will give them the maxim of their old leader, the gentleman whom they deposed, the gentleman whom my hon. friend from Simcoe could tell something about, in these very Glasgow transactions, if he desired. He said in 1877, when he was then Premier of this country, addressing an audience at Unionville:
